ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This research project was conducted from October 10, 1977 to April 7, 1978 under the supervision of Mr. Richard W. Dexter, Environmental Review Coordinator, Historic Preservation Division, State Historical Society of Wisconsin.

Dr. Joan E. Freeman, State Archeologist of Wisconsin, provided research space in the Anthropology Office at the State Historical Society to accommodate an abundance of site records, maps, and other reference material used during this records and literature search.

Teri Casady assisted in the early data-gathering phase of this project and typed all of the site cards for the Wisconsin Inventory of Historic Places. Kris Barton typed all of the site cards for the Wisconsin Archeological Codification Files.

I also wish to acknowledge the cooperation and interest shown in this project by the following individuals:

Mr. Ed Aschenbach, Sheboygan County Historical Society Museum
Mr. M. Richard Borneman, Kenosha
Mr. Robert G. Carroon, Curator of Research and Collections, Milwaukee County Historical Society
Mr. Duane Ebert, President, Oconto County Historical Society
Mr. Al Harlow, Kewaunee County Jail Museum
Mrs. Barbara F. Kelley, Director, Manitowoc Public Library
Mr. Michael Fox, Curator of Maps, Archives Division, State Historical Society of Wisconsin
Mr. Joseph Hutchison, former Director, Rahr-West Public Museum and Civic Center, Manitowoc
Ms. Ruth DeYoung Kohler, Director, John Michael Kohler Arts Center, Sheboygan
Dr. Nancie O. Lurie, Curator of Anthropology, Milwaukee Public Museum
Ms. Judy Marrick, Preparator, Racine County Historical Society Museum
Mr. Gary Marx, Registrar Curator, John Michael Kohler Arts Center, Sheboygan

Dr. Carol I. Mason, Archeologist, UWC-Fox Valley, Menasha
Dr. Ronald J. Mason, Archeologist, Lawrence University, Appleton
Dr. David F. Overstreet, Archeologist, Great Lakes Archeological Research Center, Inc., Waukesha
Mr. Richard Quick, Museum Assistant, Rahr-West Public Museum and Civic Center, Manitowoc
Mr. James L. Quinn, Director, Neville Public Museum, Green Bay
Dr. Robert J. Salzer, Archeologist, Logan Museum, Beloit College
Ms. Lois L. Schreiter, President, South Milwaukee Historical Society
Mr. Steve Schwartz, Director, Kenosha Public Museum
Ms. Wilma Thompson, Microfilm Librarian, State Historical Society of Wisconsin
Mr. and Mrs. Ray Van Handel, Sheboygan
Mrs. Barbara Walter, President, Racine County Historical Society
Mrs. John D. West, Rahr-West Public Museum and Civic Center, Manitowoc
Mr. and Mrs. Paul Zechel, Manitowoc

These individuals responded to a letter requesting site information in their areas, identified additional references dealing with Wisconsin archeology, made available unpublished manuscripts, artifact collections, and other reference material, and reported additional archeological sites.

I would also like to acknowledge the assistance provided by the County Register of Deeds Offices at Kewaunee, Manitowoc, and Sheboygan and the reference librarians at the Brown County Public Library, Green Bay; Burlington Public Library; Gilbert M. Simmons Public Library, Kenosha; Joseph Mann Public Library, Two Rivers; Kewaunee Public Library; Manitowoc Public Library; Mead Public Library, Sheboygan; W. J. Neiderkorn Library, Port Washington; Racine Public Library; and the State Historical Society Library, Madison.

Finally, my special thanks to Delores Ducklow, Donna Kallas, and Carolyn Matney for typing correspondence and the interim and final reports for this project.

INTRODUCTION

This report is the summation of an extensive records and literature search to locate information on known archeological sites in the Lake Michigan counties of Wisconsin (Fig. 1). The report is submitted to the Wisconsin Coastal Management Program in accordance with the November 16, 1977 Cooperative Agreement between the State of Wisconsin, Department of Administration and the State Historical Society of Wisconsin.

The objective of this grant was to compile, systematize, and update all existing information on archeological sites in Wisconsin counties located within the Lake Michigan coastal zone. This information will be used to improve the State Historical Society's implementation of existing state statutes and federal laws and procedures dealing with historic preservation.

Specifically, this research added archeological site cards to the Wisconsin Inventory of Historic Places and the Wisconsin Archeological Codification Files housed at the State Historical Society of Wisconsin, thus providing more data by which the Historic Preservation Division can evaluate the effects of proposed local, state, and federal projects on archeological resources in the Lake Michigan counties of Wisconsin.

This basic inventory represents a first step in fulfilling the major coastal management objective of identifying and managing significant coastal resources, which include archeological sites, so that an important part of Wisconsin's rich cultural heritage is preserved.

LAKE MICHIGAN COASTAL ZONE COUNTIES IN WISCONSIN

METHODOLOGY

The first half of this project was focused on gathering and updating all available information on known archeological sites in the Lake Michigan counties of Wisconsin. Virtually all known site information was reviewed for all of Wisconsin's coastal counties, except Milwaukee. Milwaukee County was eliminated due to the density of recorded sites and the fact that at least ten weeks of research time was needed to adequately review the available literature and site records.

An exhaustive records and literature search was conducted to locate site information in each coastal county. All articles published in The Wisconsin Archeologist from 1901 to 1978 were consulted and all site information, whether detailed or vague, was recorded on 3"x5" index cards for later reference. Other published sources, including archeological, historical, and scientific journals, county histories, and newspapers were also examined. Many of these sources were known to contain pertinent information relating to sites located in the coastal counties. Unpublished sources, which were also reviewed, include site records, inventory files, and a number of archeological survey reports. In addition, an assortment of maps, artifact collections, and government land survey notes were examined. A partially annotated bibliography was prepared to clarify the contents of these sources and to provide a basic reference guide to available sources dealing with the archeology of the Lake Michigan counties of Wisconsin.

All information recorded on site cards contained in the Wisconsin Archeological Codification Files was double-checked for accuracy and updated. The sequential ordering of site numbers within each county was checked for duplication and error and all information was thoroughly investigated prior to assigning codification numbers to newly identified archeological sites.

The names and addresses of former property owners and areas of reported site locations were located in maps, atlases, and plat books on file in the Archives Division of the State Historical Society. These sources proved invaluable for relocating both natural and artificial features marking site boundaries and describing site areas. All known site locations were marked on U.S.G.S. topographic maps to provide a visual representation of site distribution in the coastal counties and to make the review of environmental impact statements by the Historic Preservation Division more efficient.

Letters of inquiry were sent out at the beginning of the project to county and local historical societies, museums, libraries, and several individuals in order to identify additional sources of information, not already available at the State Historical Society. The information obtained from this inquiry is significant since it described Many archeological sites, identified 20 additional reference sources that were examined, and provided the names and addresses of 10 local collectors who were contacted during the project. Furthermore, all information obtained from this inquiry was incorporated into the Wisconsin Inventory of Historic Places and the Wisconsin Archeological Codification Files.

After all basic data located at the State Historical Society was reviewed, research time was spent examining county historical society and other museum collections, investigating reference material available at public libraries, and conducting interviews with local collectors. During February of 1978 sources of information were examined at Green Bay, Kewaunee, Manitowoc, Two Rivers, Sheboygan, Port Washington, Kenosha, Racine, and Burlington. In all, a total of 7 museums, 10 libraries, 3 County Register of Deeds' offices, and 3 local collectors were visited.

The final weeks of the project were spent checking local histories, codifying additional site locations, writing the final report, and typing the remaining inventory cards for the Wisconsin Inventory of Historic Places and the Wisconsin Archeological Codification Files.

All survey notes, site records, index cards, maps and letters of correspondence compiled during this project are on file in the Historic Preservation Division of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin.

SUMMARY OF RESULTS

A total of 604 new archeological site locations were identified during this records and literature search, increasing the total number of known archeological sites in the Lake Michigan counties of Wisconsin from 751 to 1,313. This represents an increase of 74.8% in the total number of sites reported in the ten coastal counties (Table 1).

INVENTORY OF KNOWN ARCHEOLOGICAL SITES
IN THE LAKE MICHIGAN COUNTIES OF WISCONSIN

Substantial site increases occurred in each of the coastal counties, ranging from 15 newly identified sites in Kewaunee County to a high of 137 sites in Manitowoc County. As a result, the number of newly identified archeological sites in each coastal county increased by at least 50%.

The 604 new archeological site locations were identified from four major sources. A total of 144 sites, or 23.8%, were located in back issues of The Wisconsin Archeologist, especially volumes prior to 1925; 147 sites (24.3%) were shown on the Wisconsin Archeological Atlas; 93 sites (15.4%) were described in the Charles E. Brown Manuscripts; and the remaining 220 sites (36.4%) represent site locations described in other sources. These latter sources are summarized in Table 2.

The number and types of new sites compiled during this project are summarized in Table 3. A total of 406 habitation sites (i.e., villages and campsites) comprises 67.2% of the newly reported sites. Other types of sites include: 61 cemeteries, "burials," and Indian graves (10.1%); 57 mounds, mound groups, and "earthenworks" (9.4%); 23 planting grounds (i.e., garden beds and corn hills) (3.8%); 20 provision and implement caches (3.3%); 11 trade posts (1.8%); 5 worksites (.8%); 4 Indian Missions (.6%); 1 set of petroglyphs (.16%); 1 quarry site (.16%); 1 rockshelter (.16%); and 14 other known evidences of past human activity (i.e., shell heaps, dance rings, fish weirs, and historic building foundations) (2.3%).

Types of New Reported Sites
in the Lake Michigan Counties of Wisconsin

One of the major accomplishments of this project has been to update all information previously recorded in the Wisconsin Archeological Codification Files. As a result, a total of 42 codification cards, describing previously reported archeological sites, were found to be redundant, inaacurate, or vague, and therefore, eliminated; 31 sites were found to be recorded in the wrong township; 1 site was recorded in the wrong county; and 1 site, belonging in the State of Michigan, was erroneously assigned a site number in Marinette County. Site cards for all newly identified archeological sites were incorporated into the Wisconsin Archeological Codification Files and the Wisconsin Inventory of Historic Places.

In addition, a list of 89 site references, which were vague or ambiguous, was compiled. Although none of this information was incorporated into the Wisconsin Archeological Codification Files and the Wisconsin Inventory of Historic Places, it was felt that information of this caliber should not be neglected and discarded. Many of these references cannot be used to locate sites at the present time because the names of property owners could not be located in the available plat books and maps. Others contain ambiguous site descriptions, such as "found near to...," "not far from...," "along the shore of...," and "in the Town of...," and are of no immediate use. Although these types of descriptions do not specifically locate archeological site areas, they do provide generalized descriptions and information relating to "finds" and "Indian relics" in the coastal counties. Hopefully, further investigations, including a records search of tax rolls and land documents available at County Register of Deeds' offices, will enhance the value of this data.

AVAILABLE REFERENCE MATERIAL AND SOURCES OF INFORMATION

PUBLISHED SOURCES OF INFORMATION

Published sources of information dealing with the archeology of the Lake Michigan counties of Wisconsin that were examined during this records and literature search include The Wisconsin Archeologist; publications of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin; professional archeological, historical, and scientific journals and books; Wisconsin newspapers; and an assortment of magazines, pamphlets, and county historical society publications. Most published sources were located at the State Historical Society Library; others were found in public library collections.

The Wisconsin Archeologist

The Wisconsin Archeologist is by far the most comprehensive record of anthropology (ethnology, physical anthropology, archeology) in Wisconsin. Most significant are the volumes published prior to 1925 which provide compilations of "Wisconsin antiquities" and describe the results of the earliest site surveys in Wisconsin.

Publications of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin

Publications of the State Historical Society that were examined include the Wisconsin Historical Collections (1903-1911) and the Proceedings of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin (1875-1951). These sources contain the letters and narratives of many early explorers, travelers, and settlers in Wisconsin who observed and recorded the location of early Historic Indian villages, campsites, planting and burial grounds. These sources should be examined more closely.

Wisconsin Newspapers

Newspapers are an important medium for informing the general public of local "digs," "finds," and "Indian relics." Those newspaper references listed in the bibliography were located in pamphlet and newspaper clip files available at public libraries and county historical society museums. Many newspaper articles, describing Indian history and archeology in eastern Wisconsin, are located in the Charles E. Brown Manuscripts but no attempt was made to index these sources. The Library Division of the State Historical Society has an extensive microfilm collection of Wisconsin newspapers published since 1833.

Other Published Sources of Information

A number of scholarly books and professional archeological and scientific journal articles contain references to archeological sites in Wisconsin. Only those references previously listed on the site cards were examined. Several magazines, pamphlets, county historical society newsletters, bulletins, and county histories are also available to the general reader.

Published Sources of Information Not Reviewed

The following list of published sources was not examined as part of this records and literature search and may contain references to archeological sites located in coastal zone counties. These include: the Michigan Archeologist publication series, Yearbooks of the Milwaukee Public Museum, Wisconsin Magazine of History, and the Wisconsin Geological and Natural History Survey Bulletins. In addition, many ethnographic accounts and historical documents that contain pertinent early Historic Indian site data were not reviewed.

UNPUBLISHED SITE RECORDS, INVENTORY FILES, AND SURVEY REPORTS

A number of unpublished site records, inventory site files, and archeological survey reports on file at the State Historical Society were examined to check recorded site information. Sources consulted include: The Wisconsin Archeological Codification Files, Wisconsin Archeological Atlas, Historic Indian Site Cards, Wisconsin County Site Files, W.P.A. Site Cards, the Wisconsin Inventory of Historic Places, and a number of archeological and environmental impact survey reports. All of this recorded information has been consolidated and incorporated into the Wisconsin Archeological Codification Files and the Wisconsin Inventory of Historic Places.

Wisconsin Archeological Codification Files

The Wisconsin Archeological Codification Files are an inventory of known archeological sites in Wisconsin reported by various universities, professional and amateur archeologists, and preservation-minded individuals from around the state. The codification cards were organized in the early 1960's and are filed alphabetically by county and civil township, and then sequentially by section number. Information recorded is brief and includes site typology, description, geographical locations and property owner name. Space is provided for recording published references, the locations of artifact collections from the site, and other important site data. The codification cards are on file in the Anthropology Offices of the Milwaukee Public Museum and the State Historical Society of Wisconsin. The latter acts as a clearing house for investigating the accuracy of reported site locations, assigning new site numbers, and maintaining the continuity of site numberings.

Wisconsin Archeological Atlas

The Wisconsin Archeological Atlas shows the approximate locations of known archeological sites marked on c. 1924 W. W. Hixson & Company county and township highway maps of Wisconsin. The maps were prepared under the direction of Charles E. Brown during his term as Director of the State Historical Society Museum from 1929-1944. The "Brown Atlas" is filed by county and is available through the Archives Division of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin.

Historic Indian Site Cards

The Historic Indian Site Cards record nearly 200 known site locations of historic Indian villages, campsites, planting grounds, and cemeteries in Wisconsin mentioned primarily in volumes of the Proceedings of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin, the Wisconsin Historical Collections, Bulletins of the Bureau of American Ethonology, and in "The Antiquities of Wisconsin" (Lapham 1855).

Wisconsin County Site Files

The Wisconsin County Site Files contain a number of completed site survey forms, site maps, letters of correspondence, and newspaper articles describing archeological site locations in Wisconsin. The majority of the information contained in these files dates to the 1950's and 1960's but recently reported site information is also available. The site files are arranged alphabetically by county and are located in the Anthropology Office of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin.

W.P.A. Site Cards

The W.P.A. Site Cards represent the earliest attempt in Wisconsin to systematize and record Indian trails and known archeological sites. These 3" x 5" index cards were compiled during the Works Progress Administration period of the 1930's and record site information mentioned in published articles from The Wisconsin Archeologist, BAE Bulletins, Lapham's "The Antiquities of Wisconsin," and other sources of information.

Wisconsin Inventory of Historic Places

The Wisconsin Inventory of Historic Places is a state-wide inventory of known cultural resources in Wisconsin. The inventory contains information on archeological sites as well as historic buildings, objects, and districts. The WIHP is an important planning tool for preservation, research and environmental review purposes. The inventory files are located at the Historic Preservation Division of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin.

Unpublished Archeological and Environmental Impact Survey Reports

These reports describe the results of systematic archeological surveys conducted in compliance with the National Historic Preservation Act to assess the potential environmental effects of development projects on cultural resources in Wisconsin. These reports also identify and evaluate all properties included in or determined eligible for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places and recommend methods and procedures whereby adverse effects to such properties can be avoided or mitigated. These technical reports are often the only available source of information on a known archeological site. Reports are on file in the Historic Preservation Division of the State Historical Society.

UNPUBLISHED MANUSCRIPTS

A number of unpublished manuscripts describe the results of archeological excavations, site surveys, and artifact collections from sites in the Lake Michigan counties of Wisconsin. These sources are available to researchers at the State Historical Society and at various museums and public libraries.

Charles E. Brown Manuscripts

The Charles E. Brown Manuscripts are a collection of letters, survey notes, site maps, illustrations, and articles dealing with Wisconsin archeology and Indian history. The manuscript collection was compiled by Charles E. Brown of the State Historical Museum from 1929-1944. A total of 1,544 items in this collection were examined. The manuscripts are filed by county and are housed at the State Historical Society.

Other Unpublished Manuscripts

Other unpublished manuscripts, such as personal letters, typed manuscripts, master theses, and doctoral dissertations, are located at museums and public libraries. Also available are private scrapbooks and site files belonging to individuals residing in the Lake Michigan counties of Wisconsin. Not all of these sources are readily available for examination.

Unpublished Sources of Information Not Reviewed

Museum catalogue cards and accession books sometimes contain provenience data and site information describing both archeological and ethnographic material. Although no attempt was made to systematically check these sources due to the large amount of time needed to adequately examine them, these sources should be thoroughly reviewed to glean any site information that they might contain. Museums where these sources are located include: the Logan Museum, Beloit; Neville Public Museum, Green Bay; and the State Historical Society of Wisconsin Museum, Madison.

GOVERNMENT LAND SURVEYS

The original United States government land survey maps and field notes describe a number of historic Indian trails, portage routes, villages, sugar-making campsites, cemeteries, and planting grounds observed by the early land surveyors in Wisconsin. Copies of these documents are available in County Register of Deeds' offices, at the Land Trust Office in Madison, and at the State Historical Society of Wisconsin.

Another excellent source of information is the Trygg Composite Maps of United States Land Surveyors' Original Plats and Field Notes. These maps are the result of 40 years of research involving the compilation of both natural features (i.e., prairie, swamp, river, soil conditions) and artificial features (i.e., roads, houses and buildings, mills, Indian villages, camps) mentioned in the original U.S. land survey records. Maps in this series cover only the northern and southwestern parts of Wisconsin. Sheets 11, 12, and 13 deal specifically with Door, Oconto, Marinette, and parts of Brown and Kewaunee Counties. Map series are also available for the states of Minnesota, Michigan, and Iowa. Copies of the Trygg Maps are available at the State Historical Society of Wisconsin.

No attempt was made to systematically review all of the Trygg Maps and the government land survey notes. As a result, these sources should be more closely reviewed.

ARTIFACT COLLECTIONS

A number of artifact collections belonging to public museums and local individuals were examined to identify additional site areas of prehistoric and historic Indian occupation. The following collections were examined:

1. Henry Baumeister Collection, Kewaunee Public Library. Consists primarily of projectile points and contains no recorded site proveniences.

2. Alphonse Gerend Collection, Sheboygan County Historical Society Museum. An extensive collection of archeological material from Sheboygan County, particularly the Sheboygan Marsh area. Material is catalogued and contains site proveniences.

3. Rudolph Kuehne Collection, John Michael Kohler Arts Center, Sheboygan. An extremely large collection of ceramic and lithic material collected from sites in Sheboygan County. Material is catalogued and indexed, but contains no site provenience data.

4. H. George Schuette Collection, Rahr-West Public Museum and Civic Center, Manitowoc. Contains copper and lithic artifacts collected from sites in Manitowoc County. Detailed survey notes (1894), a sketchbook (1902), and artifacts are on exhibit in the museum's "Schuette Room" of Indian Artifacts.

5. Private Collection, Manitowoc. Contains archeological material collected from sites in Door and Manitowoc Counties and the Lake Poygan region.

Other artifact collections were located during the course of this records and literature search but could not be examined due to scheduling problems and the fact that many of the museums containing artifact collections were closed for the winter months. The following collections should be systematically reviewed to glean additional site information:

1. Edward Decker Collection, Kewaunee County Jail Museum

2. Lohman Collection of points, Rahr-West Public Museum and Civic Center, Manitowoc

3. A "display of Indian artifacts" at the Burlington Historical Society Museum

4. Private collections

MAPS

A total of 117 maps, atlases and plat books, which were used during the course of this project are listed by county in the bibliography.

Plat books are invaluable sources of information for locating former property owners, special features (i.e., churches, schools, businesses, cemeteries, streets, city blocks, property lots) and natural features (i.e., rivers, streams, lakes, and marshes). These sources helped do much of the "detective" work associated with this project. Sources which proved to be invaluable include:

1. Plat books, particularly those published during the years 1876-1936;
2. Sanborn-Perris Co., Ltd. Insurance Maps, Chicago and New York; and
3. Wisconsin Archeological Atlas prepared by Charles E. Brown.

In addition, 7.5 and 15 minute series United State Geological Survey topographic maps for Wisconsin were used to mark site locations and to compare past and present site conditions.

CONCLUSIONS

A records and literature search to locate informaton on known archeological sites in the Lake Michigan counties of Wisconsin has resulted in the identification of 604 new sites. Published and unpublished sources of information were reviewed, reference material at libraries and museums was examined, and interviews with local collectors were conducted. All site information obtained during this project was incorporated into the Wisconsin Archeological Codification Files and the Wisconsin Inventory of Historic Places and will be used to access the effects of local, state, and federal projects on archeological resources within the coastal counties of Lake Michigan.

This records search identified additional reference material that needs to be examined more closely. These sources include: professional, historical, and scientific journals; unpublished manuscripts; reference material, such as pamphlet files, available at libraries; artifact collections housed at museums and belonging to private collectors; museum accession books and catalogue cards; and U. S. government land survey records. Additional research needs to be conducted, particularly in the northeastern and southeastern coastal counties of Wisconsin.

This report will serve as a guide for future records and literature searches that may be conducted in other areas of Wisconsin. This report also represents a first step in fulfilling the major coastal management objective of identifying significant coastal resources in Wisconsin.

The management of archeological sites in the coastal zone of Wisconsin should continue to follow established policies and procedures in compliance with state and federal laws and guidelines on historic preservation. Public awareness of the need for the preservation and protection of cultural resources, in combination with comprehensive planning strategies and systematic archeological site surveys to verify the locations and conditions of all site areas identified during this project, will slow the rate of archeological site destruction and enhance our knowledge and understanding of Wisconsin's past.

In order to make the bibliography more helpful, reference sources have been divided into four categories: published sources, unpublished sources, government documents, and maps. Most reference entries are accompanied by a brief explanatory statement. While this bibliography is reasonably complete, it is not exhaustive. Many ethnographic accounts and early documentary records of exploration and settlement were not reviewed.
