REAUTHORIZATION OF THE VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN ACT

TUESDAY, JULY 19, 2005

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D.C.

The Committee met, pursuant to notice, at 11:00 a.m., in Room 226, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Hon. Arlen Specter [Chairman of the Committee] presiding.

Present: Senators Specter, Hatch, Sessions, Leahy, Biden, and Schumer.

OPENING STATEMENT OF HON. ARLEN SPECTER, A U.S. SENATOR FROM THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA

Chairman SPECTER. It is 11 o'clock and time to start this hearing, but my colleagues are on their way, so we are going to wait just a moment or two.

Let me express my regrets that we had no idea how many people would want to attend this hearing. As I walked through the hall, there was a long line on one corridor, and turning the other corridor, there was another long line. I have reason to believe they are all taxpayers—

[Laughter.]

Chairman SPECTER. There are rooms which could accommodate more people, so it is unexpected to have this kind of a turnout. I am sorry people are in the hallways. The next time we reauthorize this bill, in 2010, we will have a different room.

[Laughter.]

Chairman SPECTER. We will begin in just a moment or two.

[Pause.]

Chairman SPECTER. The Committee on the Judiciary will now proceed with our hearing on legislation to protect women against violence.

At the outset, I commend my ranking member, Senator Leahy, for the close cooperation which he and I have enjoyed during the first seven months of this year as we look at some very daunting tasks in the immediate days ahead with the prospect of a Supreme Court nominee to replace Justice O'Connor and we are trying to bring the asbestos reform bill to the floor next week. We have a hearing on reporter's privilege tomorrow, and on Thursday, we will be taking up the PATRIOT Act.

The legislation which we are considering today is of vital importance to America and marks a very decisive shift on the way the law treats and protects women against violence. Ten years ago, when I cosponsored the bill with Senator Biden, and I am pleased to be a cosponsor again with Senator Biden and Senator Hatch on the Biden-Hatch-Specter-Leahy-et cetera bill.

A great deal has happened to improve the situation, the way women are treated in America.

Joe, I was just saying nice things about you before you came.

Senator BIDEN. Well, I was just saying nice things about you to Ms. Hayek here.

Chairman SPECTER. In that event, I will let you go first.

[Laughter.]

Chairman SPECTER. I was saying that when the Act was first introduced ten years ago, it was a Biden-Specter bill. There have been very decisive improvements in what has happened.

We find today that there are almost four million American women, victims of physical abuse a year, and another almost 21 million verbally or emotionally abused by their spouse or partner. Since 1995, when the Violence Against Women Act was first introduced, it has enjoyed significant success, contributing to a 50 percent decrease in overall family violence and a 22 percent decrease in the number of women who are killed by abuse.

This legislation will provide for a substantial increase in funding from the $693 million currently authorized annually to some $794 million annually, and the breadth of activity of the statute will be significantly enhanced.

Just a word or two on a personal level, recollecting the way women were treated not too long ago when I became an Assistant District Attorney in Philadelphia. We had a Magistrate's Court in existence which heard cases within 24 hours after the incident, and one of the first cases that I had as a fledgling Assistant District Attorney involved an assault by a common law husband against a woman who had a cut running from her forehead down her head, down her neck, and all the way to her waist. I had quite a tussle with her that morning as to whether she would testify. That was the first case I lost. She wouldn't testify, notwithstanding my explanation to her that it wasn't a case of her against him, but it was a case of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the public dignity and interest, but I could not persuade her to testify. The mentality was very, very different.

When I became District Attorney, I had long seen the detectives question 20 people in a room with the desks all there and a woman came in with a rape complaint was just one in a line of a long sequence of witnesses. Immediately, everybody turned to listen. That was changed so that interviews were conducted in private to the extent possible by women questioners, and women were taken to the hospitals for photographs and brushing and the preservation of evidence.

I am down to 34 seconds, so I am going to conclude at this point. We have a very impressive array of witnesses, which we will come to in due course after we have had opening statements.

I yield now to my distinguished Ranking Member, Senator Leahy.

STATEMENT OF HON. PATRICK J. LEAHY, A U.S. SENATOR FROM THE STATE OF VERMONT

Senator LEAHY. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I couldn't help but notice that there was some comment in the press today about the possibility of a nomination to the Supreme Court, some passing interest. Having this hearing is a reason why that choice is so important. As I will say in my full statement, a very, very activist Supreme Court, actually the most activist Supreme Court in my lifetime, struck down part of the Violence Against Women Act on the basis that in the hour or so of debate in the Supreme Court, they understood the reasons of the Act far more than the months and months of hearings and debates that you and Senator Biden and I and others had on this.

I felt that the enactment of the Violence Against Women Act over a decade ago marked an important national commitment to survivors of domestic violence, and, of course, the bipartisan testimony we will hear today, I hope will help our goal of ending domestic violence and dating violence and sexual assault and stalking. I am proud to join you and Senator Biden and Senator Hatch as an original cosponsor of this, and I especially want to recognize Senator Biden for his commitment to ending violence against women and children. Like the Chairman, I served as a prosecutor and I know how terrible these acts of violence can be.

We have an extraordinary panel of witnesses. We have Diane Stuart, who is, of course, the Director of the Office on Violence Against Women at the Justice Department. Ms. Stuart, we are so glad to have you here. A number of leading advocates are here, and I salute all of them.

The kind of violence we are talking about affects people in every gender, race, culture, age, class. It goes across all spectrums and it is a crime. It is always wrong, whether the abuser is a family member or someone the victim is dating, a current or past spouse, boyfriend, girlfriend, acquaintance, stranger. We see it everywhere.

I mean, those that think it never happens in my community, it never happens in my neighborhood, let me tell you, and everybody in law enforcement will tell you, it happens in your community. It happens in your neighborhood. It happens all the time.

And included in the VAWA 2005 are reauthorizations for two programs I initially authored to help rural communities battle domestic violence. I come from rural America, and I know that as bucolic and wonderful as rural America is, with its privacy and its often isolation, that same privacy and isolation can make it more difficult for both victims and law enforcement. In a State like mine, the State of Vermont, our local law enforcement agencies rely heavily on cooperative interagency efforts combatting this crime. That is why I include the Rural Domestic Violence Child Victimization Enforcement Grant Program as part of the original VAWA. It makes services available to rural victims and children.

The other one is the Transitional Housing Assistance Grants. We know that in a time when the availability of affordable housing has sunk to record lows, transitional housing for victims is especially needed. It is one thing when you have the victim. Oftentimes, you have got to get them somewhere safe. Fifty percent of homeless individuals are women and children fleeing domestic violence. They may have come from a comfortable surrounding. Suddenly, they are fleeing domestic violence and this program, transitional housing, is part of that solution.

I have talked about the activist Supreme Court. In the United States v. Morrison, the Supreme Court struck down portions of the Act. That case involved a young woman who was allegedly raped by two classmates while attending college. Our law allowed a victim of violence to seek civil remedies when the violence was motivated by gender-based animus and we showed in our findings, Congress did, that justice is too often denied to women and a majority of States supported our law and supported the civil remedy provided. By a narrow five-to-four vote, the Supreme Court struck down this portion of the Violence Against Women Act. I think what they were doing, as I said, in their hour of debate on it, they second-guessed the majority of States who had looked at it and Republicans and Democrats who had worked very hard on it in Congress.

So that is why it is not only important to this law, it is important to all of us, the Supreme Court nominations, of course. But I think we have to increase our awareness of the problems of violence to save the lives of battered women and rape victims and children.

I still have nightmares occasionally when I think of some of the cases I handled. I am sure every one of us who have been prosecutors, who are in law enforcement, on this Committee know this is important legislation, and Mr. Chairman, I commend you for going forward with it.

Chairman SPECTER. Thank you very much, Senator Leahy.

[The prepared statement of Senator Leahy appears as a submission for the record.]

Chairman SPECTER. We will turn now to Senator Biden, himself a former Chairman of this Committee, as is Senator Leahy a former Chairman. I am the only member of the panel today who is not a former Chairman.

Senator LEAHY. But you have got the one that counts.

[Laughter.]

Senator BIDEN. Mr. Chairman, for real, I don't want—

Chairman SPECTER. I again commend my colleague, Senator Biden, for his leadership in this field for more than a decade and for his presence here. As an appropriator, I can tell you that he is always after Senator Leahy and me and the other appropriators to release more money, which we have. Senator Biden?

STATEMENT OF HON. JOSEPH R. BIDEN, JR., A U.S. SENATOR FROM THE STATE OF DELAWARE

Senator BIDEN. Mr. Chairman, you know the reason why this hearing is so important, but we are into what we call reauthorizing. I know that is kind of a technical term. A lot of the folks here lobby the Congress, but a lot of folks don't know. Reauthorization just means this law is—we want it to continue and we put our stamp on it. If we don't reauthorize, then we leave it to the vagaries of appropriators everywhere whether to fund or not fund this.

What I worry about is our success. Our success has been so stark and our success has been so significant that there are those out there saying, why do we have to do more of this? I mean, haven't we kind of tackled this thing? It is like cutting grass. You have got to cut it once, and that doesn't end it for the summer. You have got to go out and cut it every week.

We have a whole new crop of prosecutors, a whole new crop of judges, a whole new crop of providers out there, and the money in this legislation, which is better than the last piece of legislation, which I am most proud of anything I have ever done in my entire life as a legislator was that 1994 passage of this bill. We just have to do it again. Failure to reauthorize this would be an incredible statement that, in fact, we are backing away from what was an historic commitment we made.

You know, there is no such thing as domestic violence. I hate that term, because when we talk about domestic violence, it is like people think of a domesticated cat. This is raw, raw, raw violence, the worst kind of violence that exists, because in almost all those instances, it takes a woman—and sometimes a man is the victim—it puts them in a position where someone they trusted and loved or are beholden to has abused them.

People always ask me why I am so passionate about this for the last 20 years. My dad, God love him, was a general and a graceful man, and from the time—he has passed away now, and Arlen knew him—from the time I grew up, he had a refrain. He talked about—he would say, “No man has a right to raise his hand to a woman or a child.” There is no circumstance, none, zero, none, other than self-defense, no matter what, no matter what the challenge is. And part of our psyche, we are just beginning to explore here.

Since 1994, we just began for the first time. Do you remember why this didn't pass at first? It didn't pass because people said, this is a family matter. This is a private matter. It was private.

Some of the women who helped me get this passed in the audience will recall, they are the ones that know what rule of thumb means. Rule of thumb comes back from the 14th century, when in the common law courts of England a man was able to beat his wife with a rod as long as it did not exceed the circumference of his thumb.

We have a lot more to go. We have 72 days to authorize this. We have 42 cosponsors. But the reason we do is this man right here, this man right here. I want to remind everybody, back when this passed—what is that old expression, failure is an orphan, has an orphan for a father or mother, and success has a thousand parents? Well, everybody now thinks this is great, but he was one of seven people, one of seven people who stood up to pass this bill the first time. Had he not stood up and taken the heat, it wouldn't have happened.

And then, as the appropriator, he not only gave what we asked for, he added monies. He added monies for shelter. He added monies for women who are abused. He added a way—because they are in prison. This is prison. It is the ultimate prison. You are in your own home. It is a prison. You can't leave. You can't take your children away. You don't have any money. This is the man who has made it happen.

So I just want to personally thank him, and only the pros out here in the press will understand this. Can you think of anything, a major piece of legislation that has been reintroduced or introduced that a Republican has had a Democrat's name go first? Can you think of it? That is the measure of this guy. I am serious. I am not joking. That is the measure of this guy.

This isn't a Democrat bill or a Republican bill. I bore my colleagues to death because of my passion for this the last 15 years. I know I am like a broken record. But thank God, thank God there are guys like Specter who step up.

This is about men and women who are abused. Women overwhelmingly fall in that category. We are making progress. We have so much further to go. I hope, Mr. Chairman, with your leadership, and it will be your leadership, it won't be mine, that we are able to convince this to be brought up on the docket and get this moving, and I personally thank you for your gumption and your commitment.

Chairman SPECTER. Thank you very much, Senator Biden, for those extraordinary comments, but as I said in my statement, all the credit goes to you.

Senator Sessions, would you care to make an opening comment?

STATEMENT OF HON. JEFF SESSIONS, A U.S. SENATOR FROM THE STATE OF ALABAMA

Senator SESSIONS. As Reagan said, no matter how far you can go if you don't worry about who gets the credit. Sometimes that is a good rule for us all to live by.

Chairman SPECTER. Good point.

Senator SESSIONS. Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure for me to recognize one of Alabama's finest law enforcement officers, Ted Sexton. I have known him for many years, know his family. He is a progressive, innovative, forceful leader for law enforcement in the State. He understands the issues that we are dealing with today and others, also. He is Vice President of the National Sheriffs' Association, now been elected to the Presidency of that Association, 3,000 sheriffs, over 24,000 members across this nation. So it is a real thrill for me to, Ted, have you here before us testifying.

I know that it is your officers and those police officers you work with every day that are going into homes, dealing with situations where there is violence that may appear in one circumstance to be under control, and who knows, may flare right back up and somebody's life be in danger in very short order. We also know our law enforcement officers often find themselves at greater risk in dealing with family violence than most any other kind of violence they deal with.

We have a sheriff here, Mr. Chairman, that is personally experienced. He personally runs a first-rate department and one of the best in the State, if not the best. He probably thinks it is the best. He has got a first-rate jail that he manages in the highest order and I am just impressed with what he has done. He has got a number of creative law enforcement programs, the Amber plan, the CONES project, Life Savers, school resource deputies, and other things that he does to make his sheriff's department one of the best in the country.

Thank you for giving me that opportunity and for your leadership on this important issue.

Chairman SPECTER. Thank you very much, Senator Sessions.

Chairman SPECTER. We now turn to our first witness, the Honorable Diane Stuart, Director of the Office on Violence Against Women at the Department of Justice. She has an undergraduate degree from the University of Pittsburgh, a Master's of Science in family and human development from Utah State University. She has written extensively and heads a very, very important office in our Federal Government.

Thank you for joining us, Ms. Stuart. In accordance with our custom, the statements are limited to five minutes. All witness statements will be made a part of the record in full. We are giving you as much time as we give the panel members, five minutes, so the floor is yours and we look forward to your testimony.

STATEMENT OF DIANE M. STUART, DIRECTOR, OFFICE ON VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN, U.S. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, WASHINGTON, D.C.

Ms. STUART. Thank you, Chairman Specter. I truly appreciate that and the opportunity to be here this morning. Thanks also to members of Congress for the opportunity to speak to you today.

As a representative of the Department of Justice, I am here primarily to urge Congress to reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act. The Act should be renewed, and important improvements should be made so that our communities can expand their prevention efforts, ensure the safety of more victims, as has been said before, and hold perpetrators accountable for their crimes.

The mission of the Office on Violence Against Women is to provide national leadership in helping communities build capacity to reduce violence against women. We administer financial and technical assistance to communities around the country that are working to end domestic violence, sexual assault, dating violence, and stalking.

The response to the spirit of the Violence Against Women Act, specifically of 1994 and 2000, is so, so strong. Since its passage, there has been a paradigm shift in how we approach and respond to violence against women. That change can be seen in what is called a local coordinated community response. This is a victim-centered approach rooted in the belief that criminal justice officials, victim advocates, community leaders, health workers, and others must work in collaboration to respond to violence against women.

One excellent example of a coordinated community response is the Family Justice Center. This is a center where the majority of services for domestic violence victims are co-located under one roof. In 2004, we funded the development of 15 Family Justice Centers under President Bush's Family Justice Center Initiative, and I am pleased to announce today that the first of these centers is opening tomorrow in Brooklyn, New York. The centers in San Antonio, Texas, and Alameda County, California, will be opening very soon and others shortly thereafter.

Through the spirit of the Act, the coordinated community response, we have learned that victims are safer and justice is better served when a shelter worker has a strong working relationship with law enforcement and the district attorney, when an emergency room nurse knows to call an advocate when treating a sexual assault victim, when a prosecutor works with law enforcement to build an evidence-based case against a domestic violence offender, when a judge, working with probation, requires frequent judicial review, supervision, and batterer intervention for the abuser in a domestic violence case, and when an advocate trains a member of the clergy on the dynamics of domestic violence and sexual assault. All of these are what make a coordinated community response.

Through the Office on Violence Against Women's data collection efforts, we know that VAWA funds are helping communities create these effective coordinated community responses. For example, under one of our grant programs, just one, in a six-month period of time, we know that more than 50,000 victims were served. We know that more than 120,000 services were provided to those victims. We know that nearly 24,000 individuals were trained. One program, six months. And more than 2,600 individuals were arrested for violation of protection orders. It is working. This information illustrates the reach of VAWA funding in a very, very, very short period of time.

Congress should act now to reauthorize and enhance VAWA with the following key measures. Number one, reauthorize critical grant programs through fiscal year 2010.

Two, create a new program for tribes by combining the tribal set-asides established for the STOP, Arrest, Rural, Safe Havens, and Transitional Housing programs. Based on our experience in administering grants to tribes, we recommend combining the tribal set-asides to form one tribal grant program. As tribes have few resources and little infrastructure, this would eliminate an immense administrative burden by creating an application process based specifically on unique tribal needs.

Number three, add a provision to all OVW grant programs requiring grantees and sub-grantees to maintain confidentiality of identifying information about victims served with OVW funds.

Number four, ensure that no victim pays for a forensic exam, even if she or he decides not to cooperate with law enforcement.

And number five, permit grantees to use funds to address sexual assault and stalking by amending the Arrest and the Rural program statutes.

I would like to leave you with a quote from the Executive Director of a shelter in Tallahassee, Florida, and I quote, "We have been able to move the issues of sexual assault and domestic violence into the community consciousness. The money has changed the way that communities address the issues of sexual assault and domestic violence. You cannot put a price tag on that. You leave the community forever changed," end quote.

Thank you. I would be happy to take any questions.

Chairman SPECTER. Thank you very much, Director Stuart.

[The prepared statement of Ms. Stuart appears as a submission for the record.]

Chairman SPECTER. We turn now to Mr. Ted Sexton, who has already been eloquently introduced by Senator Sessions, both being Alabamians, but I will add just a word or two. Mr. Sexton is President of the National Sheriffs' Association. He is Sheriff of Tuscaloosa County. His numerous professional schools include the FBI National Academy and the U.S. Secret Service Dignitary Protection Seminar and the National Sheriff's Institute.

Thank you for joining us, Sheriff Sexton, and we look forward to your testimony.

STATEMENT OF EDMUND M. "TED" SEXTON, SR., SHERIFF, TUSCALOOSA COUNTY, ALABAMA, AND PRESIDENT, NA-TIONAL SHERIFFS' ASSOCIATION

Sheriff SEXTON. Thank you, sir. Thank you for your kind invitation to appear before you today to testify about the Violence Against Women Act. I am pleased to be in such distinguished company on this panel and offer the views of our nation's 3,086 sheriffs.

As you know, the National Sheriffs' Association strongly supports the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act for the simple reason that the problem of domestic violence continues to be a concern to the law enforcement community. I am proud to say that just one month ago, we sent a letter to Senator Biden expressing our strong support of his legislation to renew the Violence Against Women Act. In that letter, we not only indicated our support for this Act, but also stated that the sheriffs were particularly pleased to see authorized amounts for Services and Training for Officers and Prosecutors, STOP, and Grants to Encourage Arrest and Enforcement of Prosecution Order Improvements increased. It is my hope that the Committee will move quickly on this measure, since this Act sunsets at the end of September.

Since the initial passage of this Act, law enforcement agencies across the country have made much progress, but there is still so much more that we can do. As this Committee knows so well, NSA plays a key role in this Act's mandated coordinated community response to prevent, investigate, and prosecute crimes of violence against women.

With the help from organizations such as NSA, law enforcement has created valuable training courses to teach the front-line officers how to deal more effectively with the crime as they encounter it. NSA's rural areas program in particular focuses on rural domestic violence. These rural areas present difficult issues and the support structures needed to help victims may not be as robust as those in major urban areas.

Additionally, we have recently expanded this training to include dispatchers who are required to assess situations before officers can arrive on the scene. Often, a law enforcement dispatcher is the victim's first contact with someone who can help. It is essential that they be highly trained and prepared to help, reassure, and comfort that scared, lonely voice on the other end of the telephone line.

We have been the cornerstone of efforts to bring awareness, as well as resources, to confronting the crime. As a result of proactive law enforcement addressing this type of crime, we have instilled confidence in women who are victims. The confidence that the criminal justice system will compassionately address their concerns has encouraged more women to call for needed help to break the circle of victim.

Mr. Chairman, my own community of Tuscaloosa County has a population of approximately 180,000 and we have seen the number of domestic violence cases rise from 3,800 cases in 1997 to almost 5,600 cases last year. That increase is not a result of abusers seeking haven in Alabama, but rather a direct result of support systems that this Act provides to victims through community groups, law enforcement, prosecutors, and victims' advocates. It is a result of a system that empowers the victim with the support and the confidence they need to report the crime and take action to protect themselves from further abuse. In other words, the Violence Against Women Act works.

As a first responder, law enforcement officers need the tools to effectively assess and diffuse domestic violence situations. The responding officers are also the ones who have to initiate contact with the victims' service agencies and many times the medical services. It is the uniformed officer who arrives on the scene that must set the tone of the subsequent interaction between the victims of violence, the criminal justice system, and the victims' service agencies. The victims who have had their self-esteem damaged by the crime of violence lean on the uniformed officer to help them in an often intimidating first step of finding a way out of the situation.

In addition and perhaps more frustrating to the front-line officer, he is the individual who is called upon repeatedly to answer the calls of domestic violence. The first officer on the scene is with the victim as she negotiates the criminal justice system.

Like many areas of government, law enforcement is called upon to provide more services with fewer resources. Domestic violence is an area where our communities cannot afford to lose our vigilance. Quoting the DOJ statistics, intimate partner violence made up 20 percent of all non-fatal violence against females in 2001. Among women who report having been raped, physically assaulted, or stalked since they were 18 years old, 60 percent were victimized by a husband, cohabitating partner, boyfriend, or date. The FBI has documented that since 1976 to 2002, one-third of all female murder victims were killed by an intimate partner. In my county, almost half the murders committed last year were related to domestic violence. That is unacceptable and why we need the continuing support of this Act.

The National Sheriffs' Association recognizes that violence against children is a growing problem, as well. Again, speaking from the experience of my agency, we have responded to horrific crimes. One that I will never forget is a case where a man shot three infant children in the head and then turned the gun on their mother before killing himself. Another that I will not forget is a case where a boyfriend of a young mother fired shots at her before barricading himself in the house and shooting her teenage daughter as she hid in a closet. These are scenes that no law enforcement officer who responded will ever forget, and they are scenes that unfortunately are being played out every day throughout this country.

One continuing frustration that NSA has been attempting to address is the interoperability of information sources. A fully functioning system would allow deputies to access information regarding restraining orders and orders of protection from abuse issued in other States. This so-called data interoperability will also allow deputies to better assess whether children passing through the State in the custody of an adult are in danger. With so many missing children reports, Amber alerts, any tool that can help law enforcement is most welcome.

Most areas of the country are now faced with a multicultural and usually multi-lingual community. This raises a new issue for law enforcement, how to deal with violence against women among an immigrant population unfamiliar with our legal system, unsure of local law enforcement, and completely unprepared to leave their spouse or partner for fear that they will have no assistance whatsoever. Reaching this growing number of women is the challenge that faces us in coming years. Training programs that address this particular issue are needed to help us prepare to meet the challenge.

The work and training of these law enforcement first responders requires a financial commitment. The reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act means that needed funds will be appropriated to assist law enforcement and others to deal effectively with this terrible crime of violence.

Chairman SPECTER. Thank you very much, Sheriff Sexton.

[The prepared statement of Sheriff Sexton appears as a submission for the record.]

Chairman SPECTER. Director Stuart, in your testimony, you note the importance of biennial reporting, but our records show that only one of the nine required reports have been submitted by your office. Let me ask you, how soon do you think you could submit the other eight reports?

Ms. STUART. I thank you for that, Senator. I want to reassure you that we are working on them very steadily. There are many that are in the process of—some that have left our office—

Chairman SPECTER. Director Stuart, how soon?

Ms. STUART. How soon? Very soon.

Chairman SPECTER. Well, I will not ask you a third time, but it is, candidly, a little disconcerting when we all know the importance of the reports and only one of nine has been submitted. See if you can let us have them within the next 30 days.

Ms. STUART. We will certainly do our best. Thank you.

Chairman SPECTER. Director Stuart, I note the very heavy incidence of battering of Indian women. Almost one out of three Indian women will be raped. Indian women are shown to be three times as likely as non-Natives to be battered. And I am pleased to note, again through Senator Biden's leadership, that this reauthorization creates a Deputy Director of Tribal Affairs within your office.

A two-part question. Why are the Indian women so much at risk, and what will this new office enable you to do about it?

Ms. STUART. We are presently, I think, trying to respond to that unbelievably difficult problem. It is a fact—

Chairman SPECTER. What accounts for it?

Ms. STUART. Probably many things, certainly isolation, certainly the inability of individuals to find out information of where to go—

Chairman SPECTER. And what is your plan of attack with this new office?

Ms. STUART. Well, in several ways. First of all, as I mentioned in my opening statement, to combine the tribal programs into one program, I think would really help tribes who are seeking out to try to figure out how to end this problem and who want to do what they can but don't either, A, know how, or B, have too many restrictions to follow. So this one program would pull together and help them ease the way so they could get the resources that they need. There is certainly lack of resources within tribal nations and within reservations.

Chairman SPECTER. Let me skip to another subject, Director Stuart, because of our limited time. The most recent report from the Bureau of Justice Statistics shows that 15 percent of intimate partner violence is defined as non-violent victimizations against men. As Senator Biden has noted, the Violence Against Women Act applies to domestic violence irrespective of gender. What efforts are being made by your Department to protect men as well as women?

Ms. STUART. Certainly, men are eligible for services provided under the grant programs within the Office on Violence Against Women. Approximately 12 percent of our victims, according to the statistics that we are getting in now, are men, and more than half—well, no, the majority of our grant programs, certainly more than half, are serving men. So men are being served and they are receiving those services through our grant programs as we speak.

Chairman SPECTER. Sheriff Sexton, I note your testimony about the number of domestic violence cases has increased enormously in your jurisdiction from 1997 to the year 2004, and you attribute that to greater sensitivity so that women will report what has happened.

Sheriff SEXTON. Yes, sir.

Chairman SPECTER. I am pleased to see you attribute that in part to the statute which we have. I am pleased to see so much media attention here today, because a big part of this issue is letting women know that they do have rights—

Ms. STUART. That is right.

Chairman SPECTER.—and that they can respond and that there are agencies which are available to protect them. Do you think any increase in domestic violence has been occasioned by the fact that Jeffrey Sessions is no longer Attorney General of Alabama but has been spending his time as Senator in Washington, D.C.?

Sheriff SEXTON. He has trained some very able individuals to follow behind him, sir, one that now serves on the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Chairman SPECTER. Well, we are glad he is here, although we don't want to see these murder rates and these violence cases spiral.

My red light is about to go on. I yield now to my colleague, Senator Biden.

Senator BIDEN. Thank you very much.

If there is any regret I have about this legislation, it is that so many men think that it doesn't apply to them. There is a very active gentleman in my state who has been on a crusade—I say that positively, not negatively—to, quote, “include men.” Men are included. Men are covered in this legislation. I think part of the problem is that it is part of a culture among men not to report, as well. So I think we should be making that more attractive for men to understand they can access these same services. I am going to, for the record, submit a much longer statement on that, Mr. Chairman.

But one of the areas that we go back and focus on, this is—we are trying not to commit the sin we all commit when we are here long enough, and that is if it was invented by you, you stay with it and you don't change it. We are trying to figure out what portions of the Act we can make work better, what portions of the Act in the past weren't that useful, and we have, in effect, retrofitted this. This is a new, improved version of what we passed before, and there are a couple of provisions, and I just, in the brief time we have, I want to pursue with you, Ms. Stuart, and that is in the area of stalking.

The jurisdictions in the States where they have stalking laws that say the burden is on—if there is a “stay away” order issued by a State, and the stalking, the person is told to stay away, meaning it can be, depending on the order, you can't come within 1,000 feet or you can't come within a certain amount of space of the person who you have been stalking, if, in fact, it occurs in some States, the man or the woman, whoever is doing the stalking, automatically gets thrown in jail, bingo. The burden is on them to prove that they weren't attempting to intimidate.

Federal law doesn't say that, and the amendment that was incorporated in the Violence Against Women Act, and he is not here, but Secretary Cohen, our former Secretary of Defense, was a major player in helping me formulate this portion of the legislation in the past.

What we do here is we change, because the number of stalkings that occur across State lines, which give it Federal jurisdiction—a “stay away” order in Delaware, the person works in Pennsylvania, the stalker moves from Wilmington, Delaware, across the State line to Pennsylvania and intimidates or stalks that person, the States get into who has jurisdiction. This gives you jurisdiction.

And so my question is, if you haven't looked at it already, I would like you to look specifically at the provision in the bill to make sure you guys are signed on to the heightened standard or the change in standard we placed in the bill, okay?

Ms. STUART. You have tapped on, Senator, an unbelievably difficult problem. How do you show that the stalking has been happening? And it has been mentioned earlier that people just don't have the information that they need, well, to, one, recognize they are being stalked. I mean, how many times someone would say, you know, that behavior is stalking behavior and we need to do something about it. They are just being annoyed. They are just being harassed, and it is stalking and we need to look at it very, very seriously. I appreciate the fact that you have brought it up.

Senator BIDEN. Well, Senator Specter and I changed the language in the bill slightly. I won't, in the interest of time, go into it now. I would appreciate the Department making sure they scrub it so we don't get to the floor and find out there is some objection to that.

Secondly, with regard to the Sheriff, and by the way, Jeff Sessions obviously is right. He knows you well. I have gotten to know you, as well. The sheriffs, more than any other law enforcement agency, are the folks who everybody in the neighborhood and the community knows, and most of you stand for election and you are known and it is a big deal that you would take this kind of leadership here. I want to tell you how much I appreciate it.

But tell me about why you think, if you can in a moment—my time is up—the funds allowing you to train your personnel in this area are useful or important.

Sheriff SEXTON. The simple fact is we still lose a lot of police officers every year to responding to domestic violence calls. This is an extremely dangerous call for us, and as you mentioned earlier, the cycle continues. You cut your grass one week—we have new officers coming in constantly. We have the older officers that go to investigations come back. So the training that our officers receive nationwide is extremely important, but this is still one of the most deadly calls that our officers go on. To be able to expand the training to the dispatchers to be able to tell us, then give us more specific information about what is going on and the ability of many CAD systems to be able to know the call history, that is all important information to us, weapons and the history of abuse that has been prior to, as well as one of those issues you just talked about that we are having a problem with, which is the interstate protective orders or the protection from abuse. That is a major issue for us.

Senator BIDEN. Thank you very much. My time is up. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Chairman SPECTER. Thank you, Senator Biden.

Senator SESSIONS?

Senator SESSIONS. Thank you. Senator Biden, those were some excellent points.

With regard, Mr. Sexton, to how your officers respond to a domestic violence situation, hasn't it been true in the past that sometimes in the emotion of the moment or the fear of an officer that the woman might say, if she is the victim, "Well, don't arrest my husband and don't do anything. It is going to be all right." How are you now training your officers to handle that situation?

Sheriff SEXTON. Senator Sessions, I believe you helped write the bill in Alabama, but in Alabama, if there is a probable cause for the officer to believe that domestic violence has occurred, it is a mandatory arrest of—Senator SESSIONS. And so you have trained your officers now that if the victim is backing back and doesn't want to press charges, that they should press charges.

Director Stuart, how has the Act helped in encouraging women to report violence and do you think—I think that has been a critical part of the success that we have seen, is women's ability to report and the fact that a police officer doesn't walk away even if the victim is maybe suggesting no prosecution is in order.

Sheriff SEXTON. Sir, a report will at least be made, and if there is any probable cause to believe that she was abused, there will be a mandatory arrest.

Ms. STUART. Senator, I think the spirit of the Violence Against Women Act, which is, as I mentioned in my opening statement, a coordinated community response, is part of the way or the method or the vehicle by which women are becoming aware that they can report. In other words, it is not just, I am going to go to a law enforcement officer and I am going to tell him about what happened to me, but I also have an advocate on my side who is helping me understand what his system is and what his system does. And I am going to go to the medical facility and I am going to tell a doctor what happened because I have an advocate on my side that is going to help me through all that.

So it is the advocate talking to the law enforcement officer, talking to the prosecutor, even talking to the judge and bringing everybody together so that she is, the person that has been victimized understands that they have the resources out there. I mean, Senator Specter said it. There are laws that can help and it is a crime. So with someone on her side, she is able to go through that system, whatever it is, and know to expect what is going to happen in the court session, how is it going to happen, is he going to go to jail, how am I going to be safe, who is going to help me stay safe, the transitional housing that Senator Leahy mentioned. All of these things come in. And when a community brings all of the elements together, then, frankly, individuals are safer.

Senator SESSIONS. I visited such a coalition in southeast Alabama a couple years ago, and you had mental health people there, you had the law enforcement, the prosecutors, the judge, one of the district judges was there, hospital people, the human services counselors and those kind of people, in addition to the safe house, private contributions that have been raised in the community to create a safe house for women so they do have a place to go, which they haven't had in the past.

I think a lot of progress has been made. I just want to dig into these numbers a little bit, Director Stuart. Sheriff Sexton noted that his arrests are up. His complaints are up. And we had over a half-a-million victims last year of domestic violence and almost 2,000 rapes and assaults were reported. However, you note that in the past 10 years, the rate of domestic violence, according to the, I believe it is the victims' survey, is that—

Ms. STUART. The Crime Victimization Survey, yes.

Senator SESSIONS. —the Crime Victimization Survey, which many say is the best survey rather than just arrests, and we will get at that subject right now. It surveys all over America to ask who has been victimized in the last year. It showed a domestic violence decline rate of 59 percent and a rape and sexual assault decline rate of 68 percent. That is pretty dramatic.

Do you think that this effort that has been ongoing here as part of the Act that Senator Biden and Senator Specter and others have moved and the information that is out there, the safe houses that are out there, the fact that police officers now are not walking away from scenes but actually arresting people, taking them to jail, that this has actually resulted in a real decline in some of these assaults?

Ms. STUART. Certainly, all of those factors come together, and when they all come together, the end result is that more are reporting and more arrests are being made, more orders of protection are being enforced. It can't be any one thing. Not one person is responsible for making an end to violence against women. It is everybody doing their part, and so it is all of these factors coming in.

Certainly, the Act has been a strong leader, standing up there, showing the Nation that this is the way we need to go and we need to work together to end violence against women. So I think it is many things. But certainly the Act has been the leader.

Senator SESSIONS. I don't think there is any doubt that the combination of the fact that judges, a lot of them were insensitive in the past. Fewer of them are insensitive today. Most sheriffs and chiefs of police have been trained in how to handle these situations. The situation is much kinder. They have safe houses and places that women can go. I just think the prosecutors are more attuned to it and the laws are better. So I think a lot of these things that have occurred have helped actually make a reduction in some of these terrible crimes and I salute everybody who has been a part of it. It is something that we too often fail to celebrate, the progress that gets made.

Ms. STUART. I agree.

Chairman SPECTER. Thank you very much, Senator Sessions.

Thank you, Director Stuart and Sheriff Sexton. We appreciate your being here, and thank you for your testimony.

Chairman SPECTER. We turn now to our second panel and our first witness is Ms. Lynn Rosenthal, the Executive Director of the National Network to End Domestic Violence, a nationwide organization of State domestic violence coalitions which supports more than 2,500 local service providers. Ms. Rosenthal was recently named President of the National Network to End Domestic Violence, which has enabled her to travel around the country with community leaders, advocates, and survivors. It certainly gives her hands-on experience with this pressing problem.

Ms. Rosenthal, I know we have rushed you to the witness table, but if you are ready to begin, or if you want a moment to collect yourself—

Ms. ROSENTHAL. I am ready, Senator.

Chairman SPECTER. Okay. Thank you for being here, and the floor is yours.

STATEMENT OF LYNN ROSENTHAL, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, NATIONAL NETWORK TO END DOMESTIC VIOLENCE, WASHINGTON, D.C.

Ms. ROSENTHAL. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, Senator Biden, and members of the Committee. Thank you for inviting me here today to talk about the successes and the future of the Violence Against Women Act.

I was a shelter director in 1993, right before VAWA first passed Congress, and I never could have imagined the changes that were about to occur. I never could have imagined the local sheriff who would go from saying there was no domestic violence in his county to asking what he could do to be a leader in the fight to stop it. I never could have imagined that law enforcement officers, prosecutors, victim advocates, and survivors would sit down at the table together to develop model policies to address domestic violence. Yet all this happened and more. But still, our shelters are full, our hotlines are ringing off the hook, and just one day's look at the headlines tells us that this problem is still with us.

From the workplace to the schoolyard, violence against women spills out into our streets and local communities. The tremendous needs uncovered by this Committee more than a decade ago have begun to be addressed, but now is not the time to retreat. The issues that we face at the State and local level have become more, and not less, complex.

So I recommend that you do three things in VAWA reauthorization. First, shore up existing services and programs. The STOP grants are the centerpiece of existing VAWA programs. These formula grants to the States bring together law enforcement, prosecutors, victim advocates, and the courts to develop a coordinated response to the violence.

For example, in Wisconsin, STOP grant funds helped support 50 community response teams, and one advocate in Wisconsin said that because of STOP grants, the doors were literally thrown open so that victim advocates and law enforcement could work together to better serve victims.

But one of the problems I see when I travel around the country is that VAWA really trained this whole generation of leaders—police officers, judges, shelter workers—but those folks are now leaving the system, just normal attrition, but as they leave, we are in real danger that the guiding principles of VAWA, victim safety and offender accountability, will leave with them. So this next round of VAWA really has to be about institutionalizing the best practices that have evolved over the past decade.

Second, we ask that you ensure that the needs of uniquely vulnerable populations are being addressed. In rural communities, a victim might live hundreds of miles from the closest courthouse, shelter, hospital emergency room. VAWA funding has helped address these challenges.

I worked on a VAWA grant in rural north Florida and we started 17 domestic violence task forces in counties that previously had no services at all. In Iowa, Texas, Pennsylvania, Nebraska, and Vermont, VAWA funding has dramatically improved the services available to victims in rural communities. But it is not just rural victims who need help. Older women, disabled individuals, native women, immigrants, these are all individuals who face additional barriers in addressing domestic violence.

Third, we ask that you provide opportunities for victims to rebuild their lives. Although domestic violence is fundamentally a criminal justice system problem, the criminal justice system alone cannot help victims gain long-term security for themselves and their children, and we can't talk about long-term security unless we talk about the dramatic connection between domestic violence and homelessness.

A staggering 92 percent of homeless women have been victims of severe physical or sexual abuse at some time in their lives. The U.S. Conference on Mayors has identified domestic violence as a leading cause of homelessness among women. And women themselves tell us time and time again that they stay in a dangerous situation because they simply have no place else to go.

And it is not just lack of housing resources, although that is a significant problem. It is also housing policies themselves that put victims in additional danger. Just last month, Dorteia Thomas was shot by her ex-boyfriend in her apartment in Jacksonville, North Carolina. After being shot once, she tried to escape by hurling herself from the second story balcony. Her boyfriend shot her five more times. And she came home from the hospital five days later to a notice from her landlord that she had violated her lease by being too loud.

Women are being evicted or denied housing for calling the police, filing protective orders, or even simply calling for help, and this brings us right back to the criminal justice system. If victims are afraid to reach out for help for fear of losing their housing, our efforts to strengthen the criminal justice protections of VAWA are undermined.

It is VAWA 2005 that can change these dangerous practices and bring justice to victims. Thank you very much.

Chairman SPECTER. Thank you very much, Ms. Rosenthal.

[The prepared statement of Ms. Rosenthal appears as a submission for the record.]

Chairman SPECTER. We now turn to Ms. Mary Lou Leary, Director of the National Center for Victims. Her extensive experience in the field has been U.S. Attorney for the District of Columbia, served as Acting Assistant Attorney General of the Office of Justice Programs, and oversaw the U.S. Department of Justice's Office for Victims of Crime and Office of Violence Against Women. She has a law degree from Northeastern University, a Master's from Ohio State, and a Bachelor's degree from Syracuse.

Thank you very much for coming in today, Ms. Leary. We look forward to your testimony.

STATEMENT OF MARY LOU LEARY, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, NATIONAL CENTER FOR VICTIMS OF CRIME, WASHINGTON, D.C.

Ms. LEARY. Thank you very much, Senator Specter. Good morning to you, Chairman Specter, and to the other members of the Committee. On behalf of the National Center for Victims of Crime, we really appreciate this opportunity to talk to you about this very important piece of legislation.

The National Center has over 20 years of experience working on violence against women issues. Approximately 50 percent of all the calls that come to our national toll-free help line involve sexual assault, stalking, domestic and dating violence.

Our Stalking Resource Center, which is funded by the Department of Justice Office on Violence Against Women, has trained thousands of criminal justice officials and victim service providers on how best to combat the deadly crime of stalking.

Let me tell you, when you want to understand the impact of VAWA, I think it can best be illustrated through the lives that it has changed, including the life of Donna, an incredibly courageous woman with whom the National Center works. Donna was a victim of stalking, marital rape, and horrific domestic violence for over a decade. Her story, which is detailed in my written testimony, gives a dramatic before and after picture of the impact of VAWA.

Before VAWA, the system simply failed Donna. But VAWA has transformed our country's response to victims and today, as a result of that, Donna is safe, she is strong, and, in fact, she is the founder of the country's first support group for stalking victims, and she also happens to be one of the best trainers we have working with our Stalking Resource Center.

Because you have heard from others today about the impact of VAWA on domestic and dating violence, I am going to focus my remarks on stalking and sexual assault. In that regard, VAWA has encouraged great collaborations between criminal justice, victims' service, health care, and other professionals. It has trained thousands of front-line professionals about sexual violence and stalking. It has funded special prosecutors and police units to respond to sexual assault and stalking. And it has funded rape prevention and education programs.

VAWA 2005 would reauthorize these successful programs, but even more importantly, it would provide a more comprehensive approach to violence against women.

Two years ago, the National Center and some of our colleagues conducted a survey and examined the gaps in services to victims of sexual assault. We surveyed the field, and overwhelmingly, sexual assault programs told us that they were desperately short of the funds that they need to help victims.

We heard about waiting lists for counseling in Illinois, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, and many other States. In some places, victims are actually being placed in group counseling just to give them some kind of support while they are waiting for the availability of individual counseling. We have to make sure that when victims of sexual assault reach out to us, they find the help they need.

Many of this Committee's members come from States that have large rural areas, and we heard Senator Biden speak about that before. Rape crisis centers in such areas across the country are really struggling to serve multiple counties with very little staff. Many rural areas have no services at all. In some parts of Arizona, rape victims have to travel an average of 250 miles to get to the closest rape crisis center. And in Iowa, they are traveling for over 100 miles just to get services after that kind of trauma. In many places, victims simply cannot make that trip, so they suffer alone.

Rape crisis centers also told us that while their communities include many underserved populations, such as racial and ethnic minorities, victims with disabilities, they have no funds at all to extend their outreach or to develop specialized services.

In response to this overwhelming need, VAWA 2005 would provide increased resources to serve sexual assault victims. For instance, for the first time, a dedicated Federal funding stream for sexual assault programs through the proposed Sexual Assault Services Act, SASA, that would provide direct services for sexual assault victims, would also promote targeted services to reach these special underserved populations. It would also help the Native American community, where, as we heard before, Native American women experience sexual assault at a rate nearly double that of other women. But services for them are sorely lacking.

VAWA would also include a set-aside for services to rural sexual assault victims. It would improve our response to stalking by amending two Federal code provisions used to prosecute them. And those amendments would allow prosecutors to keep pace with changing technology and would redefine the harm a victim must sustain before the Act constitutes stalking.

My time today does not allow me to touch on all of the many other important provisions of the bill that you and your colleagues have crafted so carefully, but the National Center wants to commend this Committee for its continuing dedication to ending violence against women. We especially thank Chairman Specter, Senators Biden and Hatch for their longstanding commitment to this issue.

I really believe that with the support of Congress and particularly with the front-line work of thousands of advocates and criminal justice professionals across this country, Americans can be confident that we will build on the success, expand our reach, and work to end sexual assault, stalking, and domestic violence in this country. Thank you.

Chairman SPECTER. Thank you, Ms. Leary.

[The prepared statement of Ms. Leary appears as a submission for the record.]

Chairman SPECTER. We have been joined by Senator Hatch, himself the former Chairman of this Committee. It is worth noting that we have many Committees meeting simultaneously, so it is just not possible for all Senators to be present at all hearings. I would like to yield now to Senator Hatch for an opening statement. He is the principal cosponsor of the legislation.

STATEMENT OF HON. ORRIN G. HATCH, A U.S. SENATOR FROM THE STATE OF UTAH

Senator HATCH. Thank you so much, Mr. Chairman. I welcome all of you to the Committee and I apologize I couldn't be here right off the bat because I was over in the energy conference over in the House. I did have to appear there for a while, and I got here as soon as I could.

But I want to thank you, Mr. Chairman, for holding this hearing. This is a very important hearing, as far as I am concerned. I would like to say just a few words on behalf of this legislation.

I would also like to thank my dear colleague, Senator Biden from Delaware, without whose leadership we wouldn't be as far along as we are and maybe this Act would never have become law if it hadn't been for his leadership, so I am very grateful to him and for all that he has done. We have had a great relationship and a friendship through all these years and we are both going to continue to fight together, along with our distinguished Chairman who also is a strong supporter of this legislation.

I might add that Senator Biden's advocacy has raised the national awareness of these issues very, very much. I proudly cosponsored this legislation with him and have helped to fight it through back in 1994 and the year 2000, and because of its successes, we worked to reauthorize VAWA as two people, along with a lot of others in the Senate and House who really believe in this work.

VAWA has succeeded for two very important reasons. First, it sends a powerful message that domestic violence is a national problem. And second, it provides a coordinated approach to domestic violence, one respectful of State authority that brings together Federal agencies with local law enforcement and service providers.

Prior to VAWA, domestic violence and sexual assault were under-reported and under-enforced. These were under-reported and under-enforced crimes, and I am pleased that VAWA has helped to turn that around. It really has made a great difference. I am convinced of that. In short, VAWA has contributed to a sea change in our attitude toward these crimes.

The most recent National Crime Victimization Survey showed that non-fatal violent victimizations declined by 49 percent for women between 1993 and 2001. Incidents of rape were down 60 percent since 1992, and attempted rape is down by 57 percent. I recognize that there are probably a number of factors that have contributed to these steep declines, but there is no doubt in my mind that VAWA has been an important one of those factors.

In my own home State of Utah, our Domestic Violence Council recently reported that the State now has 22 local coalitions or coordinating councils addressing domestic violence and covering every county in our State. There are now 16 shelter programs and 40 domestic violence victim advocate programs in my State of Utah. We now have 59 licensed domestic violence treatment providers, and in 2004, there were 38 separate programs in Utah supported by VAWA funding. In some of the small communities in my State, even limited VAWA assistance can mean the difference between staying in a violent home or being able to go to a shelter for the night.

I started what is known as the Utah Families Foundation. We have given millions of dollars over the years to every program for women in jeopardy and battered women's shelter in Utah, as well as children's programs. I feel so deeply about this.

I have seen what VAWA is capable of doing in my own home State and I am convinced that this legislation is deserving of reauthorization and expansion for another five years. But in my opinion, we still have a long way to go. According to the recent Bureau of Justice Statistics report, 40 percent of domestic violence cases go unreported. And in Utah in 2004, 1,592 families requesting shelter had to be referred to other communities because the local shelter was full.

In spite of all of our efforts, in 2004, 23 Utah citizens lost their lives to family or dating violence. Now, that is simply unacceptable.

We have turned the corner, but there is still no doubt in my mind there is much heavy lifting to do, and I understand that there are some who remain critical of VAWA. They believe that this is a State issue. I understand this belief, but I respectfully have to disagree. As a conservative, I understand the limits on Federal power. I not only believe that the reach of the Federal Government is limited by the Constitution, but I also understand that, as a practical matter, the Federal Government is not capable of remedying every social ill. Domestic violence remains a State crime that requires a local approach and the role of the Federal Government is necessarily limited. But domestic violence remains a serious criminal issue that demands a limited Federal response.

When people live in fear, when they are not safe in their own homes, when they have to worry about their children growing up in a violent atmosphere, we do not keep the promise of America. We cannot turn our backs on these vulnerable communities and we should never turn our backs on the small or weak.

That being said, I welcome other voices into this debate. VAWA has always been bipartisan legislation, but when it first became law, there was not as much conservative engagement with the issue as there is today. I am glad to see that groups of varying political stripes are becoming involved in this issue.

Domestic violence is not something that can be solved by any one approach. As with most policies, a wide array of ideas contributes to better legislation. I welcome, personally, all voices in making VAWA a better bill and its programs more effective.

Finally, I want to welcome all of those testifying today, but I do want to single out Diane Stuart. Today, she is the Director of the Office of Violence Against Women, but her roots are in Utah. Prior to her appointment, Ms. Stuart was the State Coordinator for the Utah Domestic Violence Cabinet Council. She has worked as a domestic violence victim advocacy specialist in the Division of Child and Family Services for the State of Utah and is the Executive Director of the Battered Women's Shelter and Rape Crisis Center in Logan, Utah, where she had hands-on experience. She worked in the trenches trying to combat domestic violence, and I am proud of the work that she has done in Utah and nationally.

I just want to say I am also proud of you, Ms. Rosenthal, for the work you are doing, you, Ms. Leary, for the tremendous work you are doing, Mr. Carr, all of the law enforcement people who are appearing today, and Salma Hayek. I have been a fan for a long time. I just want you to know that it makes a real difference to these issues when people like yourself, who are well known, well loved, and well respected take the time to come and become an advocate for women. So I am grateful to have you here and just want you to know that we appreciate you coming, and I am appreciative of you, Mr. Chairman, for giving me this time.

Chairman SPECTER. Thank you very much, Senator Hatch.

We now turn to Mr. M.L. Carr, former NBA player and coach, currently President and CEO of the youth foundation called WARM2Kids, a charitable foundation which offers unique celebrity visits and lessons for life and rewards for team role models with scholarship opportunities. He is also a board member of the Family Violence Prevention Fund.

Thank you for coming today, Mr. Carr, and we look forward to your testimony.

Senator HATCH. Mr. Chairman, can I just say one thing? I have been a big fan for years, and I will tell you, you have made such a big difference in so many lives. I have watched you a lot of times and just want you to know that.

STATEMENT OF M.L. CARR, PRESIDENT AND CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER, WARM2KIDS, AND SPOKESPERSON, FAMILY VIOLENCE PREVENTION FUND, SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA

Mr. CARR. Thank you so much. That is great coming from somebody from Utah.

[Laughter.]

Senator HATCH. What do you mean by that? You are not against the Jazz, are you?

Mr. CARR. I thought there would be a comment about Malone—

[Laughter.]

Mr. CARR. Thank you so much for that. Good morning. My name is M.L. Carr and I would like to thank you, Chairman Specter and Senator Biden, for holding this hearing and for allowing me to address this critically important issue.

I greatly appreciate your efforts, combined with the efforts of you, Senator Hatch, to introduce the Violence Against Women Act of 2005. I commend all of you on your longstanding commitment to ending violence against women.

Some of you may recognize me from my days with the Champion Boston Celtics, but today, I speak to you as President and CEO of a company called WARM2Kids. WARM2Kids is an online educational tool based on youth development and mentoring programs. Our focus on prevention and active discussion is what brings me here.

Today, I also speak to you on behalf of the Family Violence Prevention Fund. As a board member, I have learned so much about the ever-present issue of violence against women.

WARM2Kids works with Family Violence Prevention Fund and the National High School Athletic Coaches Association to create the "Coaching Boys Into Men Playbook," a book that details the activism called for in the Coaching Boys Into Men public service campaign, developed in partnership with the Advertising Council and the Waitt Family Foundation.

My focal points today are several new provisions in the Violence Against Women Act of 2005, especially those focusing on prevention and the ways in which adults, particularly men, can serve as role models to other men and young boys. There are two main ideas that seem prominent to me in the new provisions, and they are prevention, which I believe means opening active dialogue about an issue before it becomes a problem, and adults, especially men, as role models.

The name of my company, WARM2Kids, is an acronym for We are All Role Models to Kids. I truly believe that, and that is also why I am here today. Some of us have had a greater opportunity to shape the lives of young people. As a professional basketball player and coach, I saw firsthand the opportunity that sports figures and coaches can have to influence youth, and I saw what can happen when they do not have positive role models. VAWA 2005 aims to open the necessary dialogue and extends the opportunity to shape the lives of our children's future to every concerned adult.

See, basketball is all about numbers. If you don't put up impressive numbers, you are not going to be champions. Here are some numbers I want to leave with you. Up to ten million children witness domestic violence annually, with tragic results. They are much more likely to become both victims and perpetrators of violence. They also experience notably increased rates of depression, suicide, drug and alcohol use, as well as a higher rate of incarceration. Two-thirds of all sexual assaults happen against children under the age of 18. The highest rate of domestic violence exists among young people between the ages of 16 and 24. These are not good numbers that you want to have up on your board. We should find, and we need to find champions, like all the people behind VAWA, to work against these statistics.

Our young people are witnessing violence, experiencing violence, and in many cases, growing up to perpetrate the same violence they witness in their families and in their communities. We can no longer be satisfied with locking people up and saying they didn't get away with it. If the violent act did happen, then they have already gotten away with it, according to the victim. We must end violence before it starts.

The new VAWA helps us to do that. It provides program funding for children who have grown up witnessing violence, support for families at risk for violence, and for the first time, it targets resources toward men and boys to help change the behavior and attitude of other young men.

See, this is my life's work. The mission of my company, WARM2Kids, is to inform, instruct, and inspire our youth to make positive life decisions. But today, you are my focus. We can inform the world that violence can be prevented. The Family Violence Prevention Fund is here because VAWA provides a means to instruct all of us in the development and support of innovative programs that make the connection between adults and children. Together, we can inspire our youth and our nation to stop the violence.

Lives will be changed when we get behind this effort. Let me give you some more numbers. In November 2001, 29 percent of men were talking to their sons about violence against women. That number has increased to 41 percent today. The progress shows that efforts like VAWA are working, but no one, not one of us that are speaking here today, will rest until that championship number is attained, 100 percent.

We need VAWA to target specific programs to young people and give adults in their lives—parents, teachers, coaches, mentors—the tools to teach alternatives to violence. Teachers and principals are telling us that they don't know what to do when they witness a violent dating relationship. Parents are telling us that they want to talk to their kids, but don't know how. That isn't good enough. We can no longer ignore the trend.

I am going to leave you with a few more numbers. Nineteen-ninety-four, the original legislation was introduced and you got behind it. Two-thousand, adding services for people with disabilities, immigrants, rural and elderly women, once again, you got behind it. The most important number, 2005—this is your chance to become a champion.

I urge you to get behind the Violence Against Women Act of 2005. Get behind this once again. You are all role models, and I thank you for allowing me to come speak.

Chairman SPECTER. Thank you very much, Mr. Carr.

[The prepared statement of Mr. Carr appears as a submission for the record.]

Senator BIDEN. Mr. Chairman, three seconds. I don't know whether you are a Democrat or a Republican, but I hope you choose to come up here some day.

[Laughter.]

Mr. CARR. I was hoping to run for Vice President along with you.

Senator BIDEN. Oh.

[Laughter.]

Mr. CARR. Thank you for that nice comment. Thank you.

Chairman SPECTER. Senator Biden has opened the door, Mr. Carr. Are you a resident of Massachusetts, before I endorse you?
Mr. CARR. I am a resident of Massachusetts.

Chairman SPECTER. Well, let me second Senator Biden's endorsement.

[Laughter.]

Mr. CARR. You have two very able Senators in Senator Kennedy and Senator Kerry.

Chairman SPECTER. We will now turn to our final witness, Ms. Salma Hayek, a celebrity, actress, 20 films, an Oscar nomination for her performance in "Friday." She has utilized her status to be an advocate in the fight against violent crime. Working with the Avon Foundation on the Speak Out Against Domestic Violence Program, she has helped the awareness and prevention and support for victims.

Thank you for joining us, Ms. Hayek, and we look forward to your testimony.

STATEMENT OF SALMA HAYEK, AVON FOUNDATION, NEW YORK, NEW YORK

Ms. HAYEK. Thank you very much. Good morning. First of all, I would like to say I am an actress and I really want to thank you, Chairman Specter and Senator Biden, for including my voice in this hearing.

Not too long ago, a couple of months ago, I had to do some research for a part and I went to a women's jail in California. I talked to 13 women that were in jail for life. They had a lifetime sentence. And my research had nothing to do with domestic violence at all. I was trying to get a little bit in the psychology of a criminal mind and murder, all this. And I was very surprised to see how crucial it was for every single one of these women, their background in domestic violence and sexual abuse—in most cases, both—how important those episodes of their lives were in them taking the journey that got them there. And I was completely distracted from my research because sitting with them personally, hearing them out, it was so moving and compelling.

And then I asked myself, why am I surprised? I have been working with domestic violence for several years now. As you said, right now, I am part of the Avon Foundation in Speak Out Against Domestic Violence. I hear these numbers all the time. I know about these issues. Over 90 percent of women in jail are victims of domestic violence or sexual abuse. Over 80 percent of men in jail have a background of domestic violence.

But certainly we hear the numbers, but when we think about domestic violence, the picture in our head, it is a battered woman. It is a broken home, a victim that has been beat up many times to death. I believe that this is the wrong image for domestic violence because the effect of what happens in that house, the violence spreads much further than the walls that contain that home.

A lot of us think, you know—I, personally, I am not a victim of domestic violence. It is not in my background. But I care profoundly about this issue because we are all victims of this horrible epidemic as long as we live in a society that has such high numbers. One out of every three women has been a victim of domestic violence. Imagine how many American families are participating in this epidemic.

So I am a victim. Everybody can be a victim because what these kids learn in those homes, what they see, the association with violence and how it becomes part of their normality and later on part of their expression of themselves in society affects all of us. You don't know if your child is going to be walking down the street and is going to be killed by somebody who had this unfortunate background.

I believe that America very strongly strives to be a nation of security, safety, so that we hear about safety all the time. Safety, progress, and family values. However, one out of three women—

Chairman SPECTER. Ms. Hayek, may I interrupt you for just a moment? They just started a vote, but I think our proceedings will be most orderly if I excuse myself and go to vote and return.

Ms. HAYEK. Yes.

Chairman SPECTER. Let me yield to Senator Hatch to conduct the hearing, calling next on Senator Biden and then Senator Hatch for questioning, and I will return momentarily.

Senator BIDEN. But you can keep going.

Ms. HAYEK. All right. Thank you.

How can we feel safe if such a high percentage of American families don't feel safe in their own home? What kind of values can the children of America's future learn in a home where their mothers are broken down to lose completely their self-esteem, they are living in fear. Self-dignity, self-respect, and respect for others—these are not values that are taught in these homes. And how can they be productive to society when they are part of this background? So what I am saying has a lot to do with what you are saying, and how can we progress as a country?

So I think that it is very important that we all participate in the fight against domestic violence, that we make these people know that we care. The private sector is doing its part and the nonprofit organizations are doing their part. It is so important that the government continues to do their part, because I see these as a tripod. We need to work in unity to keep it stable and balanced.

If the government takes away one leg, the efforts of so many people and so much money that has gone in it will fall apart. Without the financial backing of the government, VAWA not only cannot continue to manage this crisis, but most importantly, it cannot transform it into productivity and progress.

So I believe that to support American families' right to stability and safety and hope and love, we must renew and continue to improve the Violence Against Women Act. Thank you very much.

Senator HATCH. [Presiding.] Thank you so much.

[The prepared statement of Ms. Hayek appears as a submission for the record.]

Senator HATCH. We will turn to Senator Biden for any questions he might have.

Senator BIDEN. Thank you. I have a couple questions, but I will be very brief because your collective testimony was as good as I have heard on this subject.

Salma, your testimony is compelling. At the risk of getting in a little bit of trouble, we always welcome the input of celebrities because it attracts attention to our issues that we care deeply about. But from my getting a chance to know you a little bit and hearing you today, it is obvious it means a great deal to you, and there is a big difference, a stark difference between a celebrity using their celebrity because they generically want to help and someone who feels it in their gut. I want to personally thank you.

And M.L., you have had a heck of a career, and for you to take on this new effort, it is obviously not what you might call a big money maker and it is not something that is done for any other reason than your observation of what happens.

The thing that you both said was your recognition of the direct connection between living in a home where violence is a daily practice and it becoming a learned behavior. Other than the Lord coming down and changing our brains so that they are not able to be stimulated by drugs, the most significant thing that could happen to change the culture of violence in the world, and I say the world because we have an international treaty which you have been pushing, which I won't get to—

Ms. HAYEK. Yes.

Senator BIDEN.—that is in my other hat, my other Committee. But it is if we were able to change the circumstances in the home, literally. I think you both laid out how clearly there is a correlation between us being victims, those of us who, thank God, never were personally victims, we are all victims of this violence.

But let me turn to the two folks I refer to as pros here. I just think your testimony about the change that has taken place since 1994 when you were doing this is really compelling. I would like you both, and Mary Lou, you, as well, in the two-and-a-half minutes I have left, yield to you to speak to me a little bit about the stalking issue.

Now, I know there are 100 issues we could talk about, and by the way, thank you for your help on the hotline and everything else you are doing, but talk to me about stalking, and if you have any examples based on States that you have worked in—you have worked in all 50—where there may be a better mousetrap that has been built than somewhere else and whether or not you think we address it sufficiently in this legislation, and I will yield.

Ms. LEARY. I will speak to that, especially since the National Center has a Stalking Resource Center. We do a lot of work in this area. You know that one in 12 American women and one in 45 men will be stalked in their lifetime. It is really quite astounding.

I can tell you that oftentimes when victims or concerned friends or family members call our help line, they describe behavior that makes them anxious, depressed, sick, worried, but they don't understand what is really happening. They don't understand that what is happening to them is stalking behavior and it is a crime.

It is just amazing to me how often when we say, this sounds like stalking, a victim will say, "Really? What is that?" in terms of a legal definition. It is quite astounding.

I will say that we have also learned that stalking is so much more than the ex-boyfriend or girlfriend following an individual victim around, trying to reengage them in the relationship. It takes many insidious forms, and increasingly, it has—stalkers are using very sophisticated technology in order to stalk—installing spyware on your computer so that they can track all of your interactions on the Internet, your purchases, your e-mails and so forth, and then using that against you, forwarding e-mails to people at your job, broadcasting your whereabouts, your purchases, your reading habits and so on, or installing GPS in your car so that you will show up at the grocery store, at your local church, wherever and there is the stalker and you can't imagine how the stalker knew that you were going to be there.

It is really terrifying, and I will tell you that as a prosecutor for many, many years, I always felt that those criminals were way ahead of law enforcement in terms of their sophisticated use of technology. We are particularly seeing that in stalking. So I am happy that this legislation amends the statute so that prosecutors have more effective tools, I think, to address technology through VAWA 2005.

And I am also pleased to see that substantial emotional harm to the victim has been added, because it has been my experience, both as a prosecutor and a victim advocate, that stalking does take many insidious forms, that a victim's life may be totally disrupted to the point where the victim has to move. Fifty percent of stalking victims take pretty dramatic physical action in response to stalking, like moving to another place, changing jobs, going to a different church, altering all of their routines. They don't necessarily fear death or bodily harm, and sometimes, in fact, in the average case, stalking goes on for almost two years. It goes on and on, and they don't necessarily fear death, but their lives are totally disrupted and they are interfered with in the most insidious and frightening ways.

So just because you don't fear death or serious bodily harm does not mean that you are not a victim. You are being victimized in a very serious, disruptive, and harmful way, and so I am glad to see that the statute has been amended to allow prosecutors to deal with the problem before it gets to the lethality stage.

Senator BIDEN. Ten more seconds, Mr. Chairman, with your permission. You know, lots of times, men say to me, aren't you going overboard on the stalking area? I say, when you were in sixth grade and you got on the school bus and you knew the bully was waiting for you in the schoolyard, how did you act, you horse's tail? How did you do it? This is real simple human psychology that is devastating many people's lives.

My time is up, but Lynn, I guess I have run over the time so you can't respond at this point, but I will ask you later.

Senator HATCH. Thank you, Joe.

Before I turn to Senator Schumer, let me just compliment all four of you. You have been tremendous witnesses here today. It has meant a lot to us and we will pay strict attention to it and I believe we will get this bill through, as usual. In fact, they had better stay out of our way. We are going to get this through, it is just that simple. I just admire each of you for the work that you are doing. You are all pros, as far as I am concerned. And frankly, M.L., to see you doing this is a wonderful thing. We need more men like you in our society, and we could use a good guard out there in Utah right now. We have got a couple young guys that are going to be real great someday.

[Laughter.]

Senator HATCH. Ms. Hayek, we are grateful for you for your very scintillating testimony. It was great testimony that you gave.

Ms. HAYEK. Thank you very much.

Senator HATCH. You two have done such great work. We just want to pay as much respect to you as we possibly can. We are grateful to you. We are grateful for what you do. We are grateful for the way that you are advocating these issues that are very important to all of us, and God bless all four of you.

I am going to turn to Senator Schumer. Joe and I are going to have to go vote, and Senator, you will hold the fort until Senator Specter returns.

Senator Schumer. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have not voted, either, so I am going to have to be brief.

Senator HATCH. Oh, I am sorry.

Senator Schumer. I just wanted to thank all of you for being here, Ms. Hayek, a New Yorker, and just—or at least representing a foundation in New York—

[Laughter.]

Senator SCHUMER.—Avon Foundation.

I just wanted to say this. Your being here, just talking about this problem thoroughly and openly, which always is swept under the rug, has huge significance. So many people—I know people who lived in households where their mom was abused, and when you can't talk about it and you live with it inside you, you are just locked in. The fact that you are all here and the fact that we talk about it openly, the great work Senator Biden did in the Senate. I carried the bill in the House, although I have to say it was his brainchild more than anybody else's. It is just amazing.

I just point out, I am from Brooklyn. We had two famous Brooklynites write about their experiences just recently that was shocking. Joe Torre, the great coach of the New York Yankees, the manager, said when he—and he lived a few blocks from me. And when he would walk up to his house and see that the car was home, he would go back. He wouldn't go in his house because he knew his father was home and might be beating his mom.

And we had Joe Hines, who is now our District Attorney and has done a great job about this, talk about when he was about ten or 11 years old, he had to tell his father he was going to call the police unless the father stopped beating up his mother.

Ms. HAYEK. We are opening the first Justice Center in Brooklyn.

Senator SCHUMER. Which is so important. So I am not going to ask questions. I will submit them in writing. I want to thank all of our witnesses for being here. But just keep talking about this, because that is, in part, how we solve the problem. Thank you.

Senator BIDEN. Mr. Chairman, with your permission, one more comment.

Senator HATCH. Sure. Go ahead.

Senator BIDEN. The famous Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes once said, and it applies here more than any other place, I think, the best disinfectant is sunlight. This is what you are doing. It is a big deal. Thanks.

Senator HATCH. Thank you so much.

Ms. HAYEK. Thank you so much.

Senator HATCH. I am not sure Senator Specter is going to be back here, so I think what we will do is end the hearing and thank you all for your participation.

Senator BIDEN. Thanks for your help.

Senator HATCH. Thank you.

[Whereupon, at 12:41 p.m., the Committee was adjourned.]

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

U.S. Department of Justice
Office of Legislative Affairs

Washington, D.C. 20530

February 22, 2006

The Honorable Arlen Specter
Chairman
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Mr. Chairman:

Please find enclosed responses to questions arising from the appearance of Diane Stuart, Director of the Office on Violence Against Women, at the Committee's July 19, 2005, hearing concerning reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act. We hope the Committee finds this information useful.

Thank you for the opportunity to present our views. Please do not hesitate to call upon us if we may be of additional assistance. The Office of Management and Budget has advised us that from the perspective of the Administration's program, there is no objection to submission of this letter.

Sincerely,

Diane Stuart Questions

1. In your testimony, you noted the importance of the biennial reporting requirement in encouraging your office to develop its own "Measuring Effectiveness Initiative." Despite your recognition of the existing requirement that the Office on Violence Against Women report on the status and effectiveness of its programs, only one of the nine required reports have been submitted. The reports still owed to Congress under VAWA 2000 are:

- Annual Report on Effectiveness of STOP Program
- Biennial Report on Effectiveness of all VAWA Programs
- Annual Report on Campus Programs
- Annual Stalking Report
- Report on Effects of Parental Kidnapping
- Report on Workplace Effects from Violence Against Women
- Report on Standards, Practice and Training for Sexual Assault Forensic Examinations
- Biennial Safe Havens for Children Pilot Program Report
- Annual Transitional Housing Program

The Department's failure to report on these issues is of great concern. Can you give me an understanding of the reasons that these reports have not been submitted to Congress and what can be done in the future to ensure that we are able to learn from the Office on Violence Against Women's studies, experience, and expertise in these areas?

Director Stuart's Response to Question 1The Status of Office on Violence Against Women Reports to Congress

The Office on Violence Against Women (OVW) takes very seriously the statutory reporting requirements in the Violence Against Women Act of 1994 (VAWA 1994) and the Violence Against Women Act of 2000 (VAWA 2000). Several of the required reports listed above had been submitted to Congress prior to the Senate Judiciary Committee hearing regarding reauthorization of VAWA on July 19, 2005. Copies of each of those reports are enclosed. Several other reports were under development and have been submitted to Congress since that time. The status of each of the Congressionally mandated reports required since the passage of VAWA 2000 is shown below.¹

Office on Violence Against Women Reports to Congress, October 2000 - present
Report	Status
Annual Report on Effectiveness of STOP Program	Annual Reports have been submitted on the following dates: 1) 2001 Report September 2001 2) 2002 Report June 2004 3) 2003 Report April 2005 4) 2004 Report September 14, 2005 5) 2005 Report Under development – collection and analysis of grantee and subgrantee reports are currently underway.
Biennial Report on Effectiveness of all VAWA Programs	The Biennial Reports for 2002 and 2004 were submitted to Congress on September 13, 2005. Please see the discussion below regarding OVW efforts to implement new grantee reporting systems to respond to this reporting requirement.
Annual Report on Campus Programs	Annual Reports have been submitted on the following dates: 1) 2001 Report March 29, 2001 2) 2002 Report June 9, 2003 3) 2003 Report February 7, 2005 4) 2004 Report September 13, 2005
Annual Stalking Report	This report on the incidence of stalking and domestic violence and State anti-stalking efforts and legislation includes an annual update on changes in State anti-stalking legislation. The following reports have been submitted: 1) 2001 Report - Submitted May 2001 (State legislation update for 1998 – 2000) 2) 2002 – 2004 Report - Submitted September 13, 2005 (State legislation updates for 2001-2004)
Report on Effects of Parental Kidnapping	OVW recently received the results of the required study of Federal and State laws relating to child custody as well as jurisdictional laws relating to custody cases and the effects of these laws on cases in which domestic violence is a factor. The report was submitted in September 14, 2005.
Report on Workplace Effects from Violence Against Women	Submitted to Congress on May 4, 2005.
Report on Standards, Practice and Training for Sexual Assault Forensic Examinations	Submitted to Congress on June 3, 2004.
Biennial Safe Havens for Children Pilot Program Report	OVW is reviewing the results of the national survey of supervised visitation centers required to compile the data for this report. In September 13, 2005, OVW submitted a Report to Congress on the status of OVW efforts to conduct the national survey and to implement Safe Havens grantee reporting requirements. OVW currently is finalizing a report on the results of the survey and on data submitted by grantees.
Annual Transitional Housing	The PROTECT Act of 2003 requires the Attorney General to

Program	annually submit a report to Congress on the information reported by Transitional Housing Program grantees.² On September 12, 2005, the Department announced the award of its first grants under this program, using FY 2004 and FY 2005 funds. Therefore, recipients of this new funding neither have completed any grant activities nor submitted any progress reports. OVW is developing a report for Congress on the implementation of this grant program and the development of grantee reporting tools that will provide the data for future annual reports. We anticipate submitting this report by early 2006.
---------	---

As indicated above, OVW has responded to numerous statutory reporting requirements since the passage of VAWA 2000. However, I acknowledge and regret that there have been delays in the submission of certain reports. Several factors have contributed to these delays. New statutory reporting requirements and the need to improve our management of VAWA-funded programs led OVW to develop or revise grantee reporting tools in each of the eleven discretionary and one formula grant programs that the Office administers. As addressed in the testimony that I submitted to the Committee, OVW responded to this challenge by entering into a cooperative agreement with the Muskie School of Public Service at the University of Southern Maine (Muskie School) to:

- consult with national experts and grantees on the best approaches to assess the effectiveness of grant programs,
- to develop and pilot test reporting tools specific to the statutory program purposes in each grant program, and
- to analyze the program data submitted by thousands of OVW grantees.

Once new grantee progress reporting forms were completed, OVW worked with the Office of Management and Budget to receive approval to use the forms and with the Office of Justice Programs to develop a computerized system to enable grantees to submit the new reports through the Grants Management System. The Office has faced numerous external delays and pitfalls in the implementation of this automated reporting system. In addition, it has sometimes been necessary to conduct national surveys to gather the information required for specific reports. In some cases, the collection of national survey data delayed report submission.

Additional Measures to Ensure Timely Submission of Congressional Reports

OVW has taken several steps to ensure timely submission of required reports to Congress in the future. All OVW grantees must now submit Semi-Annual (discretionary grant programs) or Annual (STOP Violence Against Women Formula Grant Program) Progress

² VAWA 2000 authorized a transitional housing program to be administered by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, for which funds were never appropriated. The PROTECT Act authorized a similar program under the aegis of the Attorney General. Funds for this program were first appropriated in FY 2004.

Reports through the automated Grants Management System. This process provides OVW with regular, timely, and consistent information on grant activities and program effectiveness. Through an ongoing cooperative agreement with the Muskie School, data from grantee reports are compiled, analyzed and summarized for inclusion in reports to Congress. The routine collection of grant program information will allow OVW to compile required reports without conducting additional surveys or studies to collect data, thereby expediting the reporting process. Furthermore, in recognition of the need to manage and report on program data, I have established a dedicated staff position to develop and track required reports, oversee the collection and dissemination of grant program data, and submit regular performance measurement data to the Department of Justice and Congress.

- 2. The most recent report from the Bureau of Justice Statistics shows that 15% of intimate partner violence, which is defined as "nonfatal violent victimizations committed by current or former spouses, boyfriends, or girlfriends of the victims" is perpetrated against men. Professor Straus, of the University of New Hampshire, has published a paper indicating that the percentage of intimate partner violence carried out against men could be close to half. Regardless of the divergence in views as to the size of the problem, domestic violence of any sort, against any victim, whether it be a woman, a man, or a child, is a problem that we as Congress seek to address. Indeed, as Senator Biden has said, "the Violence Against Women Act applies to all victims of domestic violence irrespective of their gender" and does not "den[y] services, programs, funding or assistance to male victims of violence." Is it your understanding that the programs of the Violence Against Women Act, despite its title, are able to serve male victims of domestic violence? What measures, if any, have been taken to ensure that VAWA grantees are able to reach the needs of men who may be victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault or stalking? Has your office done any work to understand the scope of intimate partner violence against men or the ways in which VAWA funding might be best used to address this issue? Is that something you might be able to report on in the future?

Director Stuart's Response to Question 2

Programs funded by OVW under the Violence Against Women Act are able to serve male victims of domestic violence. Although certain of the VAWA's statutory provisions have gender-specific language such that grantees under those programs must focus their projects on female victims, grantees should provide services to a male victim in need who requests services. Guidance and training provided by the Office consistently has directed State STOP Administrators of our formula grant funds and other grantees that male victims can and should be served. Grantee reporting indicates that, in fact, the majority of our grantees and subgrantees do serve male victims. For example, in 2003, STOP subgrantees reported serving a total of 73,799 men – and this does not include men who were served by batterer intervention programs. In the six-month period between January 1 and June 30, 2004, grantees from our discretionary grant programs reported servicing 10,630 men. Based on this recent grantee reporting, it appears that approximately 12 percent of all victims receiving OVW-funded services during that time period were men.

OVW has not undertaken formal efforts to target the issue of intimate partner violence against men. As indicated below, in response to questions 1.b. and 1.c. from Senator Coburn, the Bureau of Justice Statistics' National Crime Victimization Survey provides some, limited information regarding the scope of intimate partner violence against men.

Certainly this is an area where further, rigorous research is warranted. In fact, the National Institute of Justice has funded three studies regarding women's use of violence and the measurement of coercive control. We look forward to reviewing the results of these studies.

- 3. Statistics have shown that 1 in 3 Indian women will be raped during their lifetime and that Indian women are almost 3 times as likely as a nonnative to be battered. Exacerbating this problem are a number of obstacles, such as geographic isolation, and a unique place in the federal criminal justice system, which hamper native communities' ability to address problems of domestic violence. VAWA 2005 seeks to address this problem by creating a Deputy Director of Tribal Affairs within the Office of Violence Against Women and directing more federal funding directly to native communities. In what ways will these changes improve the way the Office of Violence Against Women handles the problems facing native women?

Director Stuart's Response to Question 3

In the Violence Against Women and Department of Justice Reauthorization Act of 2005, Congress has authorized a consolidated program tailored to the needs of the tribes. OVW strongly supported the creation of this program and looks forward to implementing and administering it. We agree that it is vitally important to provide tribes and those entities that serve tribes with adequate criminal justice and victim services resources to respond to crime against Indian women. It is also important to ease the administrative burden that tribes and tribal organizations face when they seek federal funding. The new tribal program incorporates purpose areas from seven existing programs so that tribes that seek funding for activities currently covered under different programs will only need to submit one grant application. In addition, applicants to the new tribal program will not be subject to certain eligibility and other requirements that previously have hampered the ability of tribes to seek VAWA funding.

The Act also creates a new Deputy Director for Tribal Affairs within OVW. OVW currently has a Tribal Unit staffed by grant specialists with expertise on tribal issues, including a newly hired Native American staff member. I anticipate that this unit will be managed by the Deputy Director, who will also oversee the implementation of the new tribal grant program.

4. In your written testimony, you state that VAWA 2000's requirement that the Office on Violence Against Women submit biennial reports to Congress has prompted your office to undertake a "Measuring Effectiveness Initiative" which assesses the value of VAWA programs to the communities they serve. You also pointed to a number of specific success stories, which gave us an indication that at least some of the VAWA programs use resources efficiently and effectively. What would be most helpful, however is an aggregate understanding of how well all these programs work together to address the nationwide problems of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking. Are you able to quantify or describe the larger picture question of how effective all the VAWA programs administered by the Department of Justice are or have been?

Director Stuart's Response to Question 4

Measuring the effectiveness of programs to address domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking is a uniquely challenging task. Because most programs addressing violence against women are fewer than thirty years old, efforts to evaluate these programs only began in earnest during the past seven to ten years. In a specialized field that is itself still in the early stages of development, with multiple disciplines involved in program responses, meaningful measures of effectiveness can be elusive. The Measuring Effectiveness Initiative was charged with meeting this challenge – by creating effective measurement tools that enable grantees to specifically and consistently describe the wide range of services provided with VAWA funds, and the differences these funds have made in their communities and in the lives of the people they serve.

Previous OVW grantee progress reports only provided narrative accounts of grant activities and failed to provide consistent quantitative data that could be aggregated and compared across time, across communities, and across grant programs. The new Progress Report forms developed under the Initiative, collect quantitative data on staffing, victim services, criminal justice case processing, and other grant program services unique to each VAWA-funded grant program. These reports also collect qualitative data on the status of grantee progress on project goals and objectives, and the grantees' assessments of changes that have resulted from VAWA-funded projects in their communities. In addition, the Measuring Effectiveness Initiative conducts ten site visits each year and produces State site visit summary reports with rich descriptions of how VAWA grantees have implemented diverse and complementary policy changes, victim services, and criminal justice interventions to improve responses to domestic violence, sexual assault, dating violence, and stalking. The combination of these quantitative and qualitative data provide OVW with the data necessary to compile aggregate statistics that describe the activities conducted with VAWA grant funding and grant specific examples of how the twelve VAWA grant programs work together in communities to change policies and practices, enhance victims services, and improve criminal justice case processing.

In the aggregate, we have learned from the Progress Reports submitted by OVW discretionary grantees that:

- ◆ In the most recent six month reporting period, January 2004 - June 2004, 100,000 victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking received services through projects funded by OVW discretionary grant programs. These services included victim advocacy, civil legal advocacy, supervised visitation or exchange, and criminal justice legal advocacy. During the same period, 5,535 victims could not be served, primarily because victims did not meet eligibility requirements or programs reached their capacity.³ (Note: Reporting from 2003 and earlier years indicate that each year recipients of VAWA formula grants serve an additional 1,000,000 victims of these crimes.)
- ◆ From July 2003 through June 2004, more than 205,000 individuals, including law enforcement officers, victim advocates, attorneys, court personnel, and prosecutors, received professional training to improve coordinated community responses to domestic violence, sexual assault, and stalking.
- ◆ In one year, victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, and/or stalking received legal assistance to address 92,379 issues such as obtaining protection orders, custody, visitation, divorce, or other civil matters related to the abuse they experienced.
- ◆ In VAWA-funded jurisdictions, law enforcement personnel recorded nearly 125,000 incident reports in response to 190,089 calls for assistance with domestic violence, sexual assault, or stalking in one year.
- ◆ Prosecutors in VAWA-funded jurisdictions filed 110,316 charges (13% felonies) in cases of domestic violence from July 2003 through June 2004.
- ◆ Probation officers in VAWA-funded jurisdictions enhanced supervision in cases of domestic violence by conducting nearly 50,000 face-to-face, telephone, or surveillance monitoring contacts in the most recent six month reporting period. In addition, probation officers had 4,473 contacts with victims in these cases over the same period.
- ◆ In jurisdictions receiving VAWA discretionary funding, 346,374 temporary or permanent orders of protection were granted in one year to enhance the safety of victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, and/or stalking.

- ◆ Arrest Program funds supported professional training in approximately 125 jurisdictions. In a one year period, 49,077 individuals were trained, primarily law enforcement, victim advocacy staff, and court personnel. Training focused on professional responses to domestic violence, safety planning for victims, domestic violence statutes and codes, the issuance and enforcement of protection orders, and coordinated community responses to domestic violence.

We recognize that much of the performance data collected by OVW grantees focuses on grant outputs rather than long-term outcomes. However, OVW and Initiative staff carefully crafted the measurement tools to collect information about promising approaches in the field that have a demonstrated impact on victim safety and offender accountability. For instance, research has demonstrated that victim advocacy services increase victims' access to services and promote safety.⁴ Therefore, grantees receiving funding for victim services report on the number of victim advocates funded through the grant, and the types of victim advocacy services provided. The forms also track practices known to improve the processing of domestic violence, sexual assault or stalking cases through the criminal justice system, such as specialized units of law enforcement, prosecutors, or victim advocates.

Four additional measures that speak to the effectiveness of the VAWA are addressed below: 1) coordinated community response; 2) victims served and range of services; 3) law enforcement training and services; and 4) specialized units.

Coordinated Community Response

Victims of sexual assault, domestic violence, and stalking often need a myriad of community services and support to successfully establish lives free from violence. Current research indicates that most victims of sexual and domestic violence do not access mainstream shelter services but instead identify themselves through friends, churches, health care providers, and very often, the criminal justice system.⁵ This data supports the need for an effective, coordinated response involving numerous social and criminal justice arenas, and that "...if we are serious about helping millions of women and their children who are abused, we have to consider multiple ways of reaching them. Collaborating is essential to get the work done."⁶

One of the cornerstones of the VAWA is the requirement for funding that various stakeholders in each community must come together and create a coordinated community response to violence against women. This brings victims service providers to the table with criminal justice entities and results in cross-training, increased victim support, and enhanced offender accountability. All OVW grant programs require coordination and collaboration between grantee and community partners involved in responding to violence against women. Funded organizations must also enter into memoranda of understanding (MOUs) with specific other organizations when applying for funding. Following are statistics representing the nature and frequency of those interactions, as reported by 643 grantees (representing 7 discretionary grant programs) between January through June, 2004.

- 416 grantees make/receive daily or weekly victim referrals from/to domestic violence programs. There were at least 10,000 referrals made between grantees and domestic violence programs every 6 months.

- 352 grantees meet with law enforcement monthly or quarterly. Grantees held at least 1,400 meetings every 6 months to coordinate with law enforcement.

A woman who benefited from collaborative services provided by VAWA grant recipients in Eugene, OR described how services had changed as a result of collaborative efforts in her community since 1996:

The Golden Chain—She had come to the domestic violence shelter in 1996 and the only service available was the shelter, which provided her a safe place for a few weeks but without the full range of services she needed to escape her violent relationship permanently. Two or three years later, after VAWA funding, she returned to the program. At this time she found a plethora of resources. Sitting in the room filled with over 30 community partners, she looked around and identified every one of them: the advocate, the attorney, the guardian ad litem, the prosecutor, the judge, etc. Each of these community partners had been there for her and made it possible for her to finally live a life free from violence: “I clearly see the full circle of [VAWA-funded] agencies that have been there for me, and survivors like me. It is a powerful feeling being amongst all of the different people in Eugene who connect with each other on a regular basis and work together for a common goal...it's like a golden chain. If any of the links had been broken I might have gone back.”

Victim Services

The number and type of victim services funded by the Office on Violence Against Women evolved and expanded since the original Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), which was authorized in 1994. As the minimum basic needs such as shelter and orders of protection from abuse began to be met, it became clear that there were many more crucial services needed in order to keep women safe, and to help them escape the violence in their lives. Significant expansion of both the number of programs, and the range of services provided within them occurred with the reauthorization of VAWA in 2000, and included funding for programs that serve women with disabilities, older women, supervised visitation services for families in which domestic violence has occurred, and transitional housing for women seeking to permanently leave their abusive situation.

As mentioned previously, during the last reporting period, discretionary grantees reported that more than 100,000 victims received the service(s) they needed. VAWA grantees⁷ from discretionary grant programs provided services to persons from over 300 tribes across the country and provided services to approximately 58,280 victims and children from diverse racial and ethnic backgrounds. Grantees provided multiple services to victims:

Type of Service	Number of Victims
Victim advocacy	67,997
Hotline calls	42,444
Civil legal advocacy	31,305
Criminal justice legal advocacy	29,431
Supervised visitation and exchange	29,111
Crisis intervention	26,347
Victim witness notification	26,114
Support group/ counseling services	22,420
Civil legal assistance	2,990

Criminal Justice Training and Specialized Units

There has been a consistent move towards integrated and collaborative training practices in the field of violence against women. Between July 2003 and June 2004, VAWA funds were used to train 27,474 law enforcement officers, 3,286 prosecutors, 5,215 court personnel and 627 corrections staff. Between 1999 and 2003, using STOP Program funds, 45% (4,725 of 10,426) subgrantees reported that they had developed, delivered, or received training. These subgrantees provided training to 1,294,523 individuals and conducted 77,278 training sessions. Training brings together sexual assault and domestic violence advocates and criminal justice personnel, who have historically not worked together, and given them a common language and understanding.

A grantee describes the impact of law enforcement training as follows:

The change in attitude of police officers is hard to quantify, but is reflected from initial contact with victims through testimony in court. Advocates note dramatic changes in police officers' approach to victims when officers and investigators work closely with advocates and gain a better understanding of the dynamics of domestic violence. Prosecutors note the increased quality of cases presented for charging, strengthening the motivation for good police work, leading to more charges, prosecutions and stronger sentences. (City of Minneapolis)

⁷ Grantees include: Campus, Rural, Supervised Visitation, LAV, Arrest and STOP VAIW for the January to June 2004 reporting period.

Specialized Units

VAWA funds are used to create, support, or expand special units of law enforcement officers, prosecutors, judges, and other court personnel specifically targeting violent crimes against women, including the crimes of sexual assault, domestic violence, and stalking. Specialized units increased victims' willingness to report violence, and researchers suggest that this may be attributed to improved confidence in police operating with a community policing philosophy.⁸

Between 1999 and 2003, 31% percent (3,259 of 10,426) of STOP Formula Program subgrantees that submitted data reported using STOP Program funds to staff, create, or expand special units to address violence against women. Forty-seven percent of the units were located in prosecution agencies and 44% in law enforcement.

The following example illustrates how a STOP Formula Program-funded specialized unit enhanced the enforcement of pro-arrest policies in domestic violence cases:

The Domestic Violence Intervention Unit (DVIU) pilot program of the New York State Police experienced an increase of 30% in reported felony offenses (73 in FY1999 to 95 in FY2002), with an arrest rate of 97% (363 of 375 offenses). For reported misdemeanor offenses, there was a 90% increase (515 in FY1999 to 979 in FY2002), with an arrest rate of 77% (2,431 of 3,142 offenses). These units are supervised by Troop Coordinators who participate in coordinated community response, provide training to supervisors and troopers, and review all Domestic Incidence Reports. (New York)

In summary, the program effectiveness data collected through the Measuring Effectiveness Initiative serves several purposes by : 1) allowing OVW to assess how VAWA funds are expended by grantees; 2) providing indicators of program effectiveness; 3) providing grant performance data for reporting to Congress, the Department, and the public; 4) tracking trends in victim services, criminal justice and other grant activities; and, 5) providing a baseline of program services data for future targeted research or program evaluation. Through the combination of aggregate program data, grantee assessment of their effectiveness, and on-site visits, OVW is able to illustrate the link between grant program activities and effective intervention in domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking.

Senator Tom Coburn's Follow-up Questions for Diane M. Stuart, Lynn Rosenthal, and Mary Lou Leary:

1. Each of you stated that 1 in 4 women experiences domestic violence at some point in her life. Please provide:
 - a. The definition of the term: "domestic violence" as used to arrive at this statistic;
 - b. The actual number of men that experience domestic violence each year;
 - c. The actual number of women that experience domestic violence each year;
 - d. The number of women each year that stay at a government-funded safe house exceeding 30 days (not counting multiple visits by individuals);
 - e. The number of women who experienced domestic violence in 1994 (that arrives at the statistic that domestic violence has decreased almost 60% since VAWA was enacted); a. While my testimony did not include the remark mentioned above, the other witnesses at the hearing may have been referring to the National Violence Against Women Survey.⁹ According to the National Violence Against Women Survey, 22.1 percent of women reported that, during their lifetime, they were physically assaulted by a current or former spouse, cohabiting partner, boyfriend or girlfriend, or date. Data on the prevalence and incidence of domestic violence differ depending upon the definition of domestic violence used in the study and the methodology. The definition of physical assault used in the Violence Against Women Survey included "behaviors that threaten, attempt, or actually inflict physical harm." According to the Survey, this definition is "roughly equivalent to what is referred to as simple and aggravated assault." This definition would have excluded reports of other forms of domestic violence such as controlling and verbally abusive behavior.

Director Stuart Response to Question 1

b. According to the Bureau of Justice Statistics' (BJS) National Crime Victimization Survey (NCVS), from 2000 to 2003, there was an annual average of 87,910 violent victimizations of men where the perpetrator was a spouse, ex-spouse, boyfriend/girlfriend or ex-boyfriend/girlfriend.¹⁰

c. From 2000 to 2003, there was an annual average of 541,830 violent victimizations of women where the perpetrator was a spouse, ex-spouse, boyfriend/girlfriend or ex-boyfriend/girlfriend.¹¹

d. The majority of safehouses, or shelters for victims of domestic violence are funded by a number of private and public funding sources with various reporting requirements. I am not aware of any statistics on residence at federally funded safe houses in excess of thirty days.

e. The BJS reported that in 1994, there were 1,001,780 violent victimizations of women where the perpetrator was a spouse, ex-spouse, boyfriend/girlfriend or ex-boyfriend/girlfriend.¹² Director Stuart's testimony referred to the decline from 1993 to 2003 in the rate of intimate partner violence committed against females ages 12 and over. The reference to a 59% decline in domestic violence was based upon data provided by the BJS on August 25, 2004 showing the rate of intimate partner violence against female victims declining from 9.8/1,000 to 4.0/1,000. According to the most recent BJS data, that rate declined from 9.8/1,000 to 4.3/1,000, a 57% decline.

2. How often is alcohol and/or drug abuse involved in domestic violence? How many abusers have an alcohol and/or drug abuse problem?

Director Stuart Response to Question 2

While alcohol or other drugs are not the cause of domestic violence, there appears to be a significant relationship between male perpetrator problem drinking and violence against intimate female partners. In a study published by the National Institute of Justice, Sharps, et al found that severe problem drinking of alcohol increases the risk for lethal and violent victimization of women in violent intimate partner relationships.¹³ More than two-thirds of the homicide and attempted homicide offenders in this study used alcohol, drugs, or both during the incident; less than one-fourth of the victims did so. The study examined the connection between intimate partner violence and alcohol and drug use and found that increased substance use results in more severe violence, male perpetrators were more often problem drinkers, and female victims were less likely to use alcohol.

Tjaden & Thoennes also reported that the risk of injury for female physical assault victims were increased by a number of factors. The injury risk increased if "the perpetrator was a current or former partner, if the perpetrator threatened to harm or kill them or someone close to them, and if the perpetrator used drugs and/or alcohol at the time of the incident."¹⁴

A Bureau of Justice Statistics study of State prison inmates incarcerated for serious crimes examined drug and alcohol use by family violence offenders. They found that in crimes in which the victim was the offender's spouse/girlfriend 27%/32% were using alcohol at the time of the incident; 5%/4% were using drugs; and 14%/16% were using alcohol and drugs. In comparison, among all violent crimes, offenders used alcohol in 23% of the incidents; drugs in 10% of incidents; and alcohol and drugs in 20% of violent incidents.¹⁵

Senator Tom Coburn's Follow-up Questions for Diane M. Stuart, Director, Office on Violence Against Women, Department of Justice

1. Please submit a list of all of the grantees, subgrantees, and contractors that have received funds (grants) pursuant to the Violence Against Women Act.

Director Stuart Response to Question 1

Please see the two attached lists.

2. I appreciate Chairman Specter's request for the other 8 reports due to Congress and I second that request.

Director Stuart Response to Question 2

Thank you. Please see response to Senator Specter's Question #1.

3. You said that 12% of your funds go to males experiencing domestic violence. Twelve percent equals how many people? How many men have been denied services?

Director Stuart Response to Question 3

As mentioned earlier, in 2003, STOP subgrantees reported serving a total of 73,799 men – this does not include men who were served by batterer intervention programs. In the six-month period between January 1 and June 30, 2004, grantees from our discretionary grant programs reported serving 10,630 men. Grantees collect demographic data on all victims who receive services. Data on the demographics of victims who could not be served are not available. The primary reasons that victims could not be served were that they did not meet eligibility or statutory requirements or because of limited program resources. For example, statutory requirements/eligibility requirements might prevent a victim from being served if she/he lives outside of the jurisdiction's boundaries and is ineligible to apply for a protection order. Also, limited program services might cause a victim to be placed on a waiting list for legal services if the program reaches capacity.

Violence Against Women Act of 2005

Lenora M. Lapidus, Director
ACLU Women's Rights Project

The ACLU is a national, nonpartisan public interest organization of more than 400,000 members, dedicated to protecting the constitutional rights of individuals. Through its Women's Rights Project, founded in 1972 by Ruth Bader Ginsburg, the ACLU has long been a leader in the legal battles to ensure women's full equality. This commitment includes fighting for equal housing and employment opportunities for women and working to protect the rights of battered women. In recent years, the ACLU Women's Rights Project has taken a leading role at the local, state, and national levels in working to ensure safety and improve access to housing and employment opportunities for survivors of domestic violence and their children. Through these efforts, the ACLU has been at the forefront of efforts to establish that discrimination against domestic violence victims is a form of gender discrimination.

The ACLU offers its full support for the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) of 2005. VAWA 2005 reauthorizes VAWA 1994, a strikingly effective piece of legislation enacted to end domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking. VAWA 1994 has dramatically improved law enforcement's response to violence against women and has provided critical services necessary to support women and their children in their struggle to overcome and escape domestic abuse. Because VAWA remains an essential tool for combating domestic violence, it is important for Congress to continue programs established under VAWA 1994 and to build upon the success of the law by passing VAWA 2005. Indeed, the very lives of women and children are dependent on the Senate's reauthorization of this important legislation.

The ACLU's work on behalf of battered women and their families has focused on securing safe housing, employment opportunities, and responsive police procedures for survivors of domestic violence. A woman's ability to escape an abusive relationship will often depend on socio-economic factors such as her success in finding and keeping a job and in obtaining a home that provides safety to her and her children. Obstacles to obtaining adequate employment and affordable housing leave women more vulnerable to domestic violence, because these obstacles constrict their economic independence and limit their choices. Once in a violent relationship, lack of housing options or living wage employment can make it all but impossible for women to escape the abuse and achieve independence, even when their lives and the lives of their children are in danger. Victims of domestic violence face further obstacles to escaping a violent relationship and ensuring their physical safety when the broader community, including law enforcement, fails to provide an adequate response or appropriate resources to address the violence. Poor women and immigrant women are especially vulnerable to being trapped in cycles of abuse because of inadequate housing, employment, and community resources. VAWA 2005 effectively addresses these barriers faced by survivors of domestic violence as they seek to escape abusive relationships and protect themselves and their children from further violence.

Studies show that domestic violence is the immediate cause of homelessness for between 22 and 57 percent of homeless women.¹ Some women and children lose their homes when they flee abuse and cannot subsequently find affordable transitional or long-term housing at a time when housing for low-income individuals and families is increasingly scarce. Other domestic violence survivors become homeless as the result of “zero tolerance” housing policies that permit the eviction of all members of the household when any crime occurs in the home, without regard to whether the tenant was victim or perpetrator.¹ Such policies are too often misapplied to evict innocent victims of domestic violence from public and federally-subsidized housing, thus punishing them for being battered. Victims of domestic violence are thus forced to choose between keeping the abuse secret and risking homelessness. Such housing discrimination against domestic violence survivors undermines a battered woman’s efforts to successfully separate herself from the abuse and enhances the danger to her and her children.

Employers also frequently demonstrate “zero tolerance” for victims of domestic violence, especially victims in low-wage positions. Some employers fire women because of the violence against them. In fact, three studies collected by the U.S. General Accounting Office found that 52 percent of victims of domestic violence reported that they were either fired or had to quit their jobs as a result of the abuse they experienced.² Many employers refuse to accommodate survivors’ need for time off to attend court dates or doctors’ appointments, thus making it all but impossible for survivors to address the violence in their lives while maintaining the income they need to support themselves independently. Domestic violence thus renders women economically vulnerable. Indeed, studies indicate that a sizeable proportion of welfare recipients have been or are victims of abuse by an intimate partner.³

When landlords and employers deny housing and jobs to domestic violence survivors, battered women are forced to make the difficult choice between suffering in silence and risking loss of their homes and jobs. Victims of domestic violence are thus discouraged from reporting their abuse or otherwise taking steps to protect themselves. Battered women are further isolated and endangered when law enforcement and other community agencies fail to respond appropriately to protect them from their abusers. Through its housing, employment, and police responsiveness provisions, VAWA 2005 takes important steps toward removing these obstacles to safety for domestic violence survivors.

Below we elaborate on five sections of VAWA that are particularly important to the work of the ACLU and the women and children whom we serve.

VAWA 2005 Expands Housing Opportunities and Safety for Battered Women and Their Children

Title VI of VAWA 2005 will offer substantial assistance to domestic violence survivors attempting to obtain and keep safe, secure, and affordable housing and will eliminate many of the obstacles that survivors of domestic violence currently face in attempting to reach this goal. As a crucial part of this effort, Title VI prohibits public housing authorities and Section 8 voucher landlords from discriminating against, and thus revictimizing, battered women and their children by evicting them from their homes on the basis of the violence against them. Such provisions are an important and much-needed step toward addressing the profound impact of the current nationwide housing crisis on victims of domestic violence.

Specifically, Title VI would amend the Low Income Housing Assistance Voucher Program and the Public Housing program to specify that a victim of domestic violence may not be evicted, denied program assistance, or have her lease terminated simply because of the violence against her. In addition, these sections make clear that if a voucher holder must flee her home in violation of her lease because her safety is threatened by domestic violence, she may take her voucher to another jurisdiction in order to protect her safety. VAWA 2005 thus recognizes that individuals should not face homelessness merely because they have been the victims of crime. Title VI makes clear, however, that public housing authorities and Section 8 voucher landlords may terminate assistance to or evict an abuser based on his violent acts. Moreover, in order to ensure that the protection from eviction offered by these provisions goes only to individuals who are in fact victims of domestic violence and their dependents, a public housing authority or landlord can require an individual to provide documentation of the abuse, such as a police report or a statement from a victim advocate. See §§ 606,607.

The ACLU offers its strongest support for these provisions. Too many of our clients have been evicted from public housing or had their Section 8 leases terminated after they have reported domestic abuse to the police, sought civil protection orders against their abusers, or taken other protective measures encouraged by VAWA.

For instance, the ACLU of Michigan represented Aaronica Warren, a single mother and VISTA worker who lived in public housing operated by the Ypsilanti Housing Commission in Ypsilanti, Michigan. One evening in 2000, an ex-boyfriend appeared at her door after she put her son to bed and immediately became argumentative and abusive. He threw Ms. Warren into her entertainment center, picked her off the ground, dragged her outside, and threw her face first onto the pavement. Thereafter he fled, and Ms. Warren called the police. When the Ypsilanti Housing Commission learned about the violence, instead of seeking to assist Ms. Warren by banning her abuser from the property, or perhaps relocating her to another unit in order to help her evade her abuser, the Housing Commission sought to evict Ms. Warren and her son based on the "one strike" provision in Ms. Warren's lease. As a result of the ACLU's involvement, Ms. Warren was permitted to remain in her home and the Ypsilanti Housing Commission ultimately agreed in 2003 to stop enforcing the one-strike provision against domestic violence victims. Ms. Warren, however, was among the fortunate few. Her case demonstrates the risk of homelessness too often faced by victims of domestic violence in public housing.

Unfortunately, Ms. Warren's story is not unique. The ACLU currently represents "Tina," a woman living in public housing with her three children in St. Louis, Missouri. Tina is currently facing eviction because her physically abusive ex-boyfriend is stalking her and has repeatedly broken her apartment windows from the outside. Although Tina has called the police each time her home has been vandalized, filed complaints against her ex-boyfriend, sought and obtained civil protective orders barring him from the property, reported each incident to apartment management, and requested that she be moved to a different unit in order to conceal her location from her ex-boyfriend, the public housing authority is still seeking to evict Tina, claiming that the ex-boyfriend that she barred from her home was her "guest," and that she is therefore responsible for his actions.

Similarly, previously this year, the ACLU represented "Denise," who lived in an apartment in Cincinnati, Ohio, subsidized by a Section 8 housing voucher. In 2004, the Cincinnati Metropolitan Housing Authority (CMHA) terminated her voucher, rendering her homeless. CMHA reasoned that although Denise was the victim of repeated attacks by her ex-boyfriend, and although he was ultimately jailed for domestic abuse, she had disturbed the "peaceful enjoyment of neighbors" and should thus be terminated from the Section 8 voucher program. We have also recently consulted on a similar case in Baltimore, where in 2004 a voucher recipient called the police for assistance on multiple occasions in response to repeated violence by her abuser. Her landlord complained to the housing authority about the police visits, and as a result, the woman lost her voucher and thus her home.

Sometimes, a public housing authority endangers victims of domestic violence by requiring unreasonable levels of documentation to prove that violence is occurring in the household. For instance, the ACLU represented Rubi Hernandez, who lived in Modesto, California with her children in public housing operated by the Housing Authority of the County of Stanislaus. When her abusive estranged husband repeatedly physically attacked her, Ms. Hernandez fled to an emergency shelter with her children and obtained a protective order. She then sought from the housing authority an emergency transfer to alternative housing, in an attempt to flee her husband. The housing authority refused the request, saying that despite Ms. Hernandez's protective order and the fact that she had fled to shelter, she had failed to prove that she was in danger from her husband because she did not have a police report documenting her ex-husband's violation of the protective order. In fact, Ms. Hernandez had deliberately not called the police to report her husband's abusive behavior, which she knew violated the protective order, for several reasons. First, her husband had pulled the phones out of the wall and had taken Ms. Hernandez's cell phone away from her. Additionally, Ms. Hernandez knew from experience that the local police often responded slowly to domestic violence calls. Finally, she feared her husband would violently retaliate against her or their children for making the violence public. After the ACLU's intervention in the case, the housing authority agreed that its initial denial was inappropriate and helpfully cooperated in finding a solution that protected Ms. Hernandez's safety. Ms. Hernandez's case, however, demonstrates the danger posed when housing authorities demand unreasonable levels of documentation to prove that domestic violence is occurring in the household.

These cases are only the tip of a much larger iceberg. In the past six months alone, the ACLU has consulted on similar cases involving domestic violence victims threatened with the loss of public and subsidized housing in Illinois, Texas, Michigan, Delaware, and Arizona. Legal services attorneys report that they see such cases on a regular basis. Title VI of VAWA 2005 thus fills an important gap by granting housing security to poor victims of domestic violence otherwise faced with the impossible choice between living in terror at home and living homeless on the streets.

Moreover, the other provisions of Title VI also importantly serve this goal. VAWA 2005 would provide $10 million for public and Indian housing authorities and federally-subsidized housing providers to take appropriate action to address domestic violence, thus enhancing public and subsidized housing responsiveness to the needs of survivors consistent with guidance promulgated by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) in 2003.¹ Grants would be available to provide education and training to agency staff, promote the development of improved housing admission and occupancy policies and "best practices," enhance collaboration with victim service providers, and reduce evictions and denials of housing to victims based on crimes committed by their abusers. The best practices enabled by Title VI will serve as important models to public and subsidized housing providers across the country. See § 41405.

Title VI of VAWA 2004 would also provide $10 million to the Department of Health and Human Services to fund local collaboratives to develop long-term housing solutions for domestic violence survivors. These funds would provide battered women and their children with assistance in their search for housing; financial assistance for security deposits and utilities; transportation, child care, and counseling services; and funds for purchasing, building, or renovating affordable housing units. Such support is crucial for efforts to help women and their children establish lives free from abuse. See § 41404.

Title VI would also expand the current transitional housing options available to victims and increase the funding for transitional housing programs from $30 million to $40 million. Individuals who must flee their homes because of domestic abuse but have no immediate permanent housing options overwhelmingly depend on emergency shelters and other transitional housing options. Due to limited funds, however, emergency shelters have been unable to satisfy the dire need for transitional housing. In 2004, for example, 32 percent of homeless families that requested emergency shelter were unsuccessful in obtaining it.² Title VI appropriately responds to this need. See § 602.

² U.S. Conference of Mayors, A Status Report on Hunger and Homelessness in America's Cities: A 27-City Survey (December 2004).

Title VI would also amend HUD's planning requirements for public housing authorities, thus ensuring that public housing authorities formally address domestic violence and the needs of victims of domestic violence in their regular planning processes. Public and Indian housing authorities would be required to include in their consolidated plans and five-year plans a statement of the goals, objectives, policies, or programs that would enable the housing authority to serve the needs of victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking. Such planning provisions are particularly valuable given the requirement that the community have the opportunity to review and comment on these plans. Requiring housing authorities to address domestic violence during the planning process thus provides valuable transparency and an important opportunity for community collaboration with victim service providers and others in addressing these issues. See §§ 603 and 604.

VAWA 2005 Improves Economic Security for Victims

The fear of job loss and resulting economic instability prevents many battered women from escaping abusive relationships. Title VII of VAWA 2005 would provide victims with emergency benefits and leave in order to address domestic or sexual violence in their lives. This is an important first step toward ensuring victims the economic security they need to leave their abusers.

Specifically, Title VII would permit eligible employees to take up to 10 days of unpaid leave in a 12-month period to address domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, or stalking. Leave is permitted to seek medical or psychological attention, obtain emergency housing, or seek legal or law enforcement assistance. The provision makes clear that an employee would be required to provide reasonable notice to his or her employer, along with certification that the employee or his or her family member is a victim of domestic or sexual violence and that the requested leave is for one of the aforementioned purposes. Employers who refuse to grant the required leave or who retaliate against employees who seek such leave, by firing them or otherwise penalizing them, would be subject to a civil action for monetary damages, such as lost wages, employee benefits, public assistance, or other actual monetary losses sustained by the employee as a direct result of the violation. Employees would also be entitled to equitable relief, such as job reinstatement, in appropriate cases. See §§ 41504, 41505.

In order to lessen the economic burden that taking unpaid leave might place on families, Title VII also permits states to use Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF) dollars to provide nonrecurring short-term emergency benefits to an individual for the duration of leave described above. See § 41506.

Finally, Title VII provides $10 million toward the establishment and operation of a national clearinghouse and resource center designed to provide information and assistance to employers, labor organizations, and advocates to aid victims of domestic and sexual violence in their efforts to maintain their employment in the face of violence. Such information is central to efforts to create and expand employer programs to address the needs of employees threatened with abuse. See § 702.

Through these provisions, Title VII of VAWA 2005 would enhance survivors' economic security and their ability to address the violence in their lives. For example, the ACLU is currently working with "Louise," who was recently fired from her position as a teaching assistant at a New York City public school. Although Louise had performed well in her position throughout her 10-year tenure, she was recently fired because she had missed several days of work due to domestic violence in her life. After Louise's husband battered her last year, she had several appointments with doctors, prosecutors, police officers, lawyers, and therapists. Never before had Louise experienced domestic violence, and she was struggling to keep her life together in the midst of this crisis. Having lost her job as the result of her domestic violence related absences, she is now struggling to avoid homelessness and to pay the medical bills associated with the domestic violence. Out of financial necessity, she has sent her son to live in a different city with his grandfather. VAWA 2005 would assist women like Louise to avoid being financially devastated by the violence against them.

VAWA 2005 Enhances Victims' Privacy Protections

For survivors of domestic violence, the need for informational privacy is particularly acute. Often the safety of a domestic violence victim who has escaped from her abuser hinges on her ability to keep her identity and location confidential. An abuser can use insecure information to track down and further victimize a survivor, and this risk of exposure and retaliation may make survivors less likely to access emergency housing, health care, and other supportive services. Homeless Management Information Systems (HMIS) is a program recently mandated by HUD to track the use of shelters and services by homeless persons, with the result that anyone who has access to local and regional HMIS databases may be able to gain information on the location and movements of a woman who is homeless because she is fleeing abuse. We are gravely concerned that this collection and dissemination of identifying information presents serious safety hazards for survivors of domestic violence.

VAWA 2005 directly responds to these concerns by providing resources to enhance privacy protections for victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual violence, and stalking. These protections range from improvements in protocols, procedures, and policies, to incentives to develop more advanced technology and database systems to protect personally identifying information. See § 106.

Similarly, Title VI of VAWA addresses HMIS's impact on victims of domestic violence by amending the McKinney-Vento Homeless Assistance Act to protect the confidentiality of victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking who are seeking housing. Title VI instructs HUD grantees not to disclose personally identifying information about these individuals in HMIS databases. See § 605.

VAWA 2005 Broadens Services and Outreach to Victims of Domestic Violence

VAWA 2005 makes it possible for victims of domestic violence and sexual assault to gain access to the services they need to escape from violence. It promotes a coordinated approach to domestic violence that brings together federal, state, and local law enforcement agencies and service providers. Specifically, Title II of VAWA 2005 would provide education, training, and enhanced services to end violence against immigrant, rural, disabled, and older women. These segments of the population are particularly vulnerable to violence due to several factors: geographic isolation and resulting inability to access victim services; physical, economic, social, or psychological dependence on others; and language barriers. Title II also increases the resources allocated to support the national domestic violence hotline. See §§ 203-206.

In addition, Title I of VAWA 2005 continues the STOP (Services and Training for Officers and Prosecutors) grants program, which brings police, prosecutors, and victim service providers into close collaboration with one another and works to ensure increased victim safety and support. Title I also provides grants to police departments for the enforcement of protection orders, a proven and necessary tool for increasing victim safety. And, in order to ensure that domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking victims have adequate legal representation, VAWA 2005 would increase support for programs that provide such legal assistance. See §§ 101-103.

Such efforts to enhance police and community responsiveness to domestic violence are especially necessary in the aftermath of the Supreme Court's recent decision in Town of Castle Rock v. Gonzales. Jessica Gonzales lived in Castle Rock, Colorado, and had a protective order against her estranged husband that ordered him to stay away from her and their three daughters. When her daughters disappeared while playing outside one afternoon, she immediately knew that her husband had taken them, and called the police to seek their help in enforcing the protective order. Despite state law requiring them to make an arrest or seek an arrest warrant in this situation, the police did nothing in response to her repeated, increasingly panicked requests for assistance, even when Ms. Gonzales learned where her husband had taken the girls and informed the police of their location. Instead, the police urged her to wait to see if her daughters would return. Late that night, her husband appeared at the police station, opened fire, and was killed. The bodies of Ms. Gonzales's three daughters were found in his truck; he had murdered them earlier that evening.

Last month, the Supreme Court held that the police department's inaction in the face of state law requiring them to enforce protective orders did not violate the U.S. Constitution. Given this holding, and the lack of police accountability to victims of domestic violence under the Constitution, the importance of efforts pursuant to VAWA to enhance law enforcement and community response to domestic violence has never been greater. These life saving programs must not be permitted to expire.

VAWA 2005 Provides Crucial Protections for Immigrant Victims

Immigrants who are victims of domestic violence face tremendous obstacles when they attempt to flee abusive relationships. The situation is exacerbated when the abusive partner controls the immigration status of the family and uses the threat of deportation to prevent battered immigrant women from seeking help. Recognizing the multiple problems faced by immigrant domestic violence victims, Congress included immigration provisions in VAWA 1994 and VAWA 2000. These provisions were designed to remove obstacles presented by immigration law that prevent immigrant victims from safely fleeing domestic violence. Crucially, VAWA 2000 allowed victims to obtain immigration relief without their abusers' cooperation or knowledge in certain instances. Although these changes in the law have helped to reduce violence against immigrant women, more remains to be done to prevent VAWA-eligible victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, child abuse, or human trafficking from being deported and to provide an economic safety net for those immigrant victims trying to escape violent situations. Title VII of VAWA 2005 proposes changes to enhance the effectiveness of the immigration relief provided to victims under VAWA 2000. These provisions would implement policies to stop the deportation of immigrant victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, and human trafficking; extend immigration relief to all victims of family violence; guarantee economic security for immigrant victims and their children; and provide an economic safety net for trafficking victims. See §§ 801-820.

Conclusion

VAWA 2005 is a landmark piece of legislation that makes great inroads toward ending violence against women. We strongly urge you to support the Violence Against Women Act of 2005. The lives of many battered women and children may depend on your support of this important legislation.

Dear Senator Specter, Senator Biden and Senator Hatch:

As a judge, I am writing in support of the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (S.R. 1197) and particularly to urge your support for Title VII, which would promote the economic security of victims by providing unpaid emergency leave to allow victims of domestic violence to go to court, obtain medical treatment, or do safety planning without losing their jobs and establishing a clearinghouse to promote best practices by businesses.

New Hampshire law currently provides access to unemployment insurance to victims of domestic abuse if they are unable to return to work due to relocation to protect themselves from their abuser (RSA 282-A:32(I)(a)(3)). This law has protected New Hampshire victims of violence successfully from the financial difficulties that may otherwise have prevented them from leaving their abusers. I urge you to include similar provisions in VAWA to permit victims who leave their jobs because of domestic or sexual violence to receive unemployment insurance benefits.

Further, New Hampshire's Executive Order No. 2000-10 explicitly states that discrimination in employment on the basis of domestic violence will not be tolerated in New Hampshire and enables state agencies to take action against those who abuse and harass in the workplace. Victims of domestic violence should not fear retribution from their employers or violence spreading from their homes to their workplaces. I support the VAWA provisions providing for a regional clearinghouse to collect and promote best practices by businesses.

The Honorable Arlen Specter, The Honorable Joseph R. Biden and The Honorable Orrin G. Hatch

Finally, New Hampshire provides Domestic Violence Program Specialists in each office of the Department of Health and Human Services. An internal task force meets regularly to enhance coordination on sexual and domestic violence issues critical to serving the client population and administer grants to support direct client services. I support VAWA provisions that would extend the availability of client services to even more communities and provide grants to local agencies seeking to improve response to domestic violence.

In its first ten years, the Violence Against Women Act has made it possible for countless victims to access emergency shelter services and to use the criminal and civil justice systems to protect themselves. The reauthorization offers the opportunity to build upon that work by ensuring domestic violence victims have the ability to take time from work to access those services without jeopardizing their employment and economic security.

Thank you for allowing me to share my thoughts with you on this topic. If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me at 603-536-7609.

Sincerely,

Susan B. Carbon

Testimony of M.L. Carr
President & CEO, WARM2Kids
Before the Senate Judiciary Committee
Reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act
July 19, 2005

Good morning, my name is M.L. Carr. I would like to thank Chairman Specter and Senator Biden for holding this hearing and for allowing me to address this critically important issue. I greatly appreciate your efforts, combined with the efforts of Senator Hatch, to introduce the Violence Against Women Act of 2005. I commend you all for your longstanding commitment to ending violence against women

Some of you may recognize me from my days with the champion Boston Celtics, but today I speak to you as the President & CEO of a company called WARM2Kids. WARM2Kids is an online educational tool based on youth development and mentoring programs. Our focus on prevention and active discussion is what brings me here.

Today, I also speak to you on behalf of the Family Violence Prevention Fund. As a board member, I have learned so much about the ever-present issue of violence against women. WARM2Kids worked with the Family Violence Prevention Fund and the National High School Athletic Coaches Association to create the Coaching Boys into Men Playbook – a book that details the activism called for in the Coaching Boys into Men public service campaign, developed in partnership with the Advertising Council and the Waitt Family Foundation.

My focal points today are several new provisions in the Violence Against Women Act of 2005 (VAWA 2005), especially those focusing on prevention and the ways in which adults, particularly men, can serve as role models to other men and young boys. There are two main ideas that seem prominent to me in the new provisions and they are prevention – which I believe means opening active dialogue about an issue before it becomes a problem – and adults, especially men, as role models.

The name of my company, WARM2Kids is an acronym for We're All Role Models to Kids. I truly believe this and that is also why I am here today. Some of us have a greater opportunity to shape the lives of young people. As a professional basketball player and coach, I saw firsthand the opportunity that sports figures and coaches have to influence youth and I saw what can happen when young people don't have positive role models. VAWA 2005 aims to open the necessary dialogue and extends the opportunity to shape our children's future to every concerned adult.

Basketball is all about numbers. If you don't put impressive numbers on the board, you don't become champions. Here are some numbers I want to give you: Up to 10 million children witness domestic violence annually – with tragic results. They are much more likely to become both victims and perpetrators of violence. They also experience notably increased rates of depression, suicide, alcohol and drug use as well as higher rates of incarceration. Two-thirds of all sexual assaults happen against children under the age of 18. The highest rates of domestic violence exist among young people between the ages of 16 and 24. These are not good numbers to have up on your board. We need to find champions, like all of the people behind VAWA, to work against these statistics.

Our young people are witnessing violence, experiencing violence and in many cases growing up to perpetrate the same violent patterns found in their families and communities. We can no longer be satisfied with locking people up after the violence and saying, "at least they didn't get away with it." If the violent act has been committed, then they have already gotten away with it as far as the victim is concerned. We must end violence before it starts.

The new VAWA helps us do that. It provides program funding for children who have grown up witnessing violence, support for families at risk of violence, and for the first time, it targets resources toward men and boys to help change the behavior and attitudes of other young men.

This is my life's work. The mission of my company, WARM2Kids, is to inform, instruct and inspire our youth to make positive life decisions, but today you are my focus. We can inform the world that violence can be prevented. The Family Violence Prevention Fund is here because VAWA provides a means to instruct all of us in the development and support of innovative programs that make the connection between adults and children. Together, we can inspire our youth and our nation to stop the violence.

Lives will be changed when we get behind this effort. Let me give you some more numbers: In November 2001, 29 percent of men were talking to their sons about violence against women. That number has increased to 41 percent today. The progress shows that the efforts backed by VAWA are working, but no one who is speaking to you today will rest until that is a championship number...one hundred percent.

We need VAWA to target specific programming to young people and give the adults in their lives – parents, teachers, coaches, and mentors – the tools to teach alternatives to violence. Teachers and principals are telling us that they don't know what to do when they see a violent dating relationship. Parents are telling us they want to talk to their kids but don't know how.

That isn't good enough. We can not ignore this trend. I am going to leave you with a few final numbers: 1994 – the original legislation was introduced and you got behind VAWA then. 2000 – adding services for people with disabilities, immigrants, rural and elderly women – you got behind VAWA again. 2005 – this year is your chance to be a champion. I urge you to get behind the Violence Against Women Act again. Thank you.

Senate Judiciary Hearing on the Violence Against Women Act of 2005

Written Testimony from Marybeth Carter, President
National Alliance to End Sexual Violence

My name is Marybeth Carter. I am Executive Director of the California Coalition Against Sexual Assault and also serve as President of the National Alliance to End Sexual Violence (NAESV). The NAESV represents state coalitions against sexual assault in all 50 states and the territories of the United States. In addition, our Board of Directors consists of leaders of state sexual assault coalitions, law and policy experts who work to promote the organization's mission to advance and strengthen public policy on behalf of state coalitions, individuals, and other entities working to end sexual violence.

I want to thank the Chairman and Members of the Judiciary Committee for beginning the legislative discussion of the Violence Against Women Act of 2005. As you all know, sexual assault, stalking and domestic violence are serious issues that affect Americans from all walks of life. In its first ten years, VAWA has provided much-needed funding and guidance for advocates, police and prosecutors working to end violence in the communities they serve. Most importantly, VAWA has changed the lives of countless victims of violence. Every victim has a different path to healing and justice, and with the help of the Violence Against Women Act, more Americans have made the journey from victim to survivor.

I know that this Committee is very familiar with the importance of a strong, focused response to violent crime. Your work to pass last year's Advancing Justice Through DNA Technology Act is helping forensic professionals reduce the backlog of unprocessed rape kits and helping law enforcement agencies track down and arrest more violent criminals. This Committee has shown a vital commitment to holding offenders accountable for their crimes and to preventing violence from occurring. With the Violence Against Women Act of 2005, you have the opportunity to renew that strong commitment.

I would like to take a moment to discuss the importance of VAWA to the survivors of sexual assault. Sexual violence is a crime that affects children and adults across our country. Approximately 1 in 6 women and 1 in 33 men in America have experienced an attempted or completed rape as a child or adultⁱ. When we hear the word “rape,” many Americans imagine a man in a ski mask lurking in a parking garage, wielding a knife. And while such devastating attacks do occur, more than two-thirds of all sexual assaults are committed by someone the victim knows, and the commonly used weapon is trust.

The realities of sexual assault can be surprising to many of us because so few rapes are ever reported to the police. Unfortunately, rape has been a crime shrouded in secrecy and shame. Only about 20 percent of sexual assault victims ever report their attacks to law enforcement. Sexual assault survivors can experience physical and emotional problems for years including the same type of post-traumatic stress disorder that affects our troops returning from combat service in Iraq and Afghanistan. The resources of the Violence Against Women Act are helping to shine a light on sexual violence and open doors to survivors for assistance in their recovery.

Approximately 1,315 rape crisis centers across the country help victims of rape, sexual assault, sexual abuse, and incest rebuild their lives by providing a range of vital services to survivors. Our centers operate 24-hour hotlines, provide 24-hour accompaniment to law enforcement departments, hospitals, and legal proceedings, and offer short- and long-term individual counseling and support groups for victims and their families. Local programs also assist victims with obtaining compensation and restitution. Rape crisis centers serve all victims of sexual violence, including women who have been raped, child sexual assault and incest survivors, adult survivors of childhood sexual abuse, male victims, persons with disabilities, and victims who experience abuse in later life. They also provide necessary aid to family members and others affected by sexual violence.

I also want to make a special note that services provided by rape crisis centers do not discriminate based on gender and are available to men as well as women, boys as well as girls. Sexual violence is a crime predominantly committed against women and girls, but we know that men and boys are victims, too. In fact, in a recent survey conducted jointly by NAESV, the National Center for Victims of Crime and the Rape, Abuse & Incest National Network (RAINN), 99% of rape crisis centers that responded to the survey reported that they provide services to male victims of any age; 89% said they conduct outreach to male victims; and 97% said they provide specialized training to serve male victims to counselors and advocates.

We know that these services help. Studies have found that services such as those provided by our nation's rape crisis centers can shorten the amount of time a person exhibits symptoms of rape-related posttraumatic stress disorder. Victims who receive information and services also are more likely to participate in the criminal justice process. These essential services would not be available in many communities without the Violence Against Women Act.

VAWA has also provided essential funding for the prevention of sexual assault through the Rape Prevention and Education (RPE) Grant Program. RPE provides opportunities for state and local agencies to address sexual violence as a preventable community problem. RPE funds provide critical support to communities and states as they work toward a future free of sexual violence.

The RPE grant program, created through the Violence Against Women Act of 1994, has been a strategic step toward strengthening national, state and local sexual violence prevention efforts and the operation of rape crisis hotlines. RPE funding provides formula grants to States and Territories to support rape prevention and education programs conducted by rape crisis centers, state sexual assault coalitions and other public and private nonprofit entities. Many promising programs working with youth, young adults and communities have been supported with RPE funds over the past ten years, demonstrating the effectiveness and need for rape prevention programming. These programs and initiatives support the value of funding appropriations at the authorization level and thus achieving the impact of this valuable program of preventing sexual violence before it occurs.

RPE provides vital support for state and local efforts to raise awareness of the silent crime of sexual assault. Education on issues including the use of predatory “date rape” drugs and efforts to prevent sexual assaults from occurring would not be possible without RPE. In 2002, the most recent year for which data is available, more than 1,000 rape crisis centers, 36 state sexual assault coalitions, and 140 other nonprofit and faith-based organizations received funding for prevention and education activities. Through professional education, the RPE Program has helped a wide range of professionals—youth leaders, coaches, teachers, clergy, social service workers, and health care professionals—to better understand sexual violence and the role each can play in prevention. In 2002, more than a quarter of a million professionals received training supported by the Rape Prevention and Education Program. From college campuses to immigrant neighborhoods, RPE is an essential source of support in our efforts to prevent sexual assault in communities across the country. The continued success of the RPE Program depends on the capacity to extend its reach throughout the United States with additional support in VAWA 2005.

Sexual violence is a crime that is pervasive in small town America, as well as in our country's great cities and bedroom communities. Since its enactment in 1994, the Violence Against Women Act has helped communities recognize and respond to the unique needs of rural women and children experiencing domestic violence. Now, with VAWA 2005, we have the opportunity to address the needs of rural victims of sexual assault, stalking and dating violence.

Non-reporting of sexual assault in rural areas is a particular problem because of the high rate of non-stranger sexual assault. The likelihood of the victim and assailant knowing each other, or even being related, in rural communities where “everybody knows everybody” is very high. Studies have shown that in general the closer the relationship between victim and assailant, the less likely the victim is to report the crime.

Many rural states have a handful of rape crisis centers that serve large, multi-county territories as well as they can, but resources are woefully limited. For example, Kansas has 26 crisis programs for 105 counties; Nebraska has 22 crisis programs to serve 93 counties; Texas has 83 crisis programs for 254 counties; Alabama has 15 crisis programs for 67 counties; and Arkansas has 11 programs for 75 counties.

Programs that provide services to rural victims of violence must work to overcome barriers specific to rural communities. These include too few staff and volunteers, lack of financial resources, scarcity of professional and referral resources, limited number of shelters, difficulty garnering acceptance and support from the community, lack of anonymity for staff who often work in isolation, and a scarcity of legal and medical assistance.

VAWA 2005 would reauthorize and expand grants to address the needs of adult and minor victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, dating violence, stalking and child abuse in rural communities by encouraging collaborations between community organizations, law enforcement, the courts and health care providers to identify, assess, and respond appropriately to rural adult and minor victims; establish and expand non-profit, non-governmental services to rural adult and minor victims; and increase the safety of rural adult and minor victims by providing crisis intervention and longer term services, and creating and implementing strategies to increase awareness and prevent sexual assault in rural communities.

And finally, the most exciting new initiative for victims of sexual assault found in Title II, Services and Outreach, of the Violence Against Women Act of 2005 is the Sexual Assault Services Act (SASA). While rape crisis centers, with assistance of VAWA, have made tremendous progress towards assuring that sexual assault victims receive the services they need, many centers' ability to serve the needs of all victims of sexual violence has been hampered by a significant lack of resources. There has never been a federal funding stream dedicated entirely to the provision of direct services for victims of sexual violence. Many state governments facing tight budgets have been forced to cut support to local rape crisis centers. Many programs have had to reduce staff size and ask their remaining employees and volunteers to work longer hours. Rape crisis centers report that they have cut the frequency of counseling sessions with victims and hours of hotline operations, two of the most crucial services rape crisis centers provide. These centers lack the resources to reach many underserved populations, some of which experience sexual assault at a very high rate. Finally, many communities still have no accessible rape crisis services at all. Without a consistent and specialized funding stream for direct services, rape crisis centers face uncertain futures and will struggle to meet the emotional, medical, legal and long-term mental health needs of victims.

The Sexual Assault Services Act will create a much-needed funding stream for direct services for sexual assault victims, as well as provide resources for state sexual assault coalitions, whose assistance is invaluable to service providers nationwide. SASA would authorize the Attorney General to award grants to assist tribes and states in their effort to provide services to adult and minor sexual assault victims and their family and household members. Grants could be used for general intervention and advocacy, including accompaniment through medical, criminal justice, and social support systems, support services, and related assistance.

SASA funds also could be used to provide training and technical assistance to various organizations, including governments, law enforcement, courts, nonprofit organizations, faith-based organizations, and professionals working in legal services, social services, and health care. SASA also would authorize grants for nonprofit organizations that provide culturally-specific intervention and related assistance for victims of sexual assault.

SASA is an essential initiative because our country's rape crisis centers are underfunded and understaffed. They are constantly in a crisis mode, responding to the needs of victims and incapable of undertaking large-scale prevention efforts in their communities.

I wanted to raise these important issues because in the near future, we are going to see even greater stresses on the network of community resources that serve survivors of sexual assault.

Advocacy programs, hospitals and law enforcement should not have to worry about becoming victims of their own successes, but we are doing a better job, as a society of confronting sexual assault. This progress will likely bring victims to our doors. When that happens, we are all going to need your support.

If - hopefully when - we do a better job reaching out to sexual assault survivors, these programs will need greater resources. And even in the current budgetary environment, I would encourage you not to walk away from a growing demand for sexual assault services.

Like other crime victim advocates, we would like nothing better than to work ourselves out of a job and end sexual violence. Based on the commitment to ending sexual violence the Senate has already shown, I am confident that the rape crisis centers that serve our communities will continue to have the support of the Judiciary Committee.

I cannot overstate the importance of passing the Violence Against Women Act of 2005, including its important new Sexual Assault Services Act component. Victim advocates, police and prosecutors are counting on you. And, more importantly, so are the sexual assault survivors who live in your communities.

Thank you very much for your time. We look forward to working with you on this important legislation throughout the 109th Congress.

The Honorable Lucille Roybal-Allard

Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Representative Roybal-Allard:

Thank you for your leadership on the issue of domestic violence. Several of my associates recently met with members of your staff to discuss how we might be able to work together towards our mutual goal of ending violence against women and I hope we can keep the lines of communication open.

As you know, domestic violence (including dating violence, sexual assault and stalking) is a major problem in the United States. According to the most recent report from the Department of Justice, there were almost 700,000 incidents of domestic violence in 2001, and approximately one-third of women who are murdered each year are killed by their current or former husband or partner. Domestic violence not only affects women in the home, but also in the workplace.

In fact, employees in the United States who have been victims of domestic violence too often suffer adverse consequences in the workplace as a result of their victimization. Victims lose 8 million days of paid work each year – the equivalent of 32,000 full-time jobs and 5.6 million days of household productivity. As a result, according to the Bureau of National Affairs, domestic violence costs United States employers an estimated $3 to 5 billion annually in lost time and productivity. Studies have reported that up to fifty-six percent of employed battered women are harassed at work by their abusive partners, and homicide is the leading cause of death for women on the job—fifteen percent of which are committed by husbands, boyfriends, and ex-partners.

Liz Claiborne Inc. believes that domestic violence is a high security concern, and we are proud to support the Security and Financial Empowerment (SAFE) Act (S.1801/H.R.3420). The SAFE ACT would ensure that domestic violence survivors have the economic security they need to escape violent relationships. The legislation would provide victims and their family or members of their household up to 30 days unpaid leave, eligibility for unemployment insurance, reasonable accommodations for violence-related needs, and protection from employment and insurance discrimination. These provisions would help victims stay in the workforce while keeping businesses productive. We would like to thank the many original sponsors of this bill, particularly Senators Murray (D-Wash.), Corzine (D-N.J.), Dayton (D-Minn.), Schumer (D-N.Y.) and Kennedy (D-Mass.), Representative Maloney (D-N.Y) and, of course, you for recognizing the problem and taking the initiative on such important legislation.

But violence not only affects Liz Claiborne as a business, it affects us on a personal level as well. We are a member of the Corporate Alliance to End Partner Violence and have spearheaded a company-wide campaign to battle domestic violence. We offer an environment of support in the workplace where we can accommodate flexible hours, time off to seek safety and protection, and even short-term leaves of absence. For those outside the company, Liz Claiborne Inc. launched the Women's Work program in 1991 as a way to give something of value back to the people who have made us a success over the years. Through this program, we seek to generate awareness, educate the public and in the end, prevent domestic violence.

Such violence has a devastating impact on women's physical health, mental health, and financial security. In addition to supporting SAFE, Liz Claiborne Inc. has commissioned several public service announcements, created a "Love Is Not Abuse" section on our website, and developed several free handbooks addressing relationship violence. While our company provides these services, it is imperative that all employees are legally guaranteed such benefits. Victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, stalking, and other violence are particularly vulnerable to changes in employment, pay, and benefits as a result of their victimizations—and are therefore in need of legal protection. SAFE legislation is a critical juncture where government and business have the opportunity to partner to ensure the economic safety of victims of partner violence.

We look forward to working with you on this and other projects.

Sincerely,

Paul R. Charron

Statement of
ROBERT D. EVANS on behalf of
THE AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION submitted to the JUDICIARY COMMITTEE of the
UNITED STATES SENATE
on the subject of
REAUTHORIZATION OF THE VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN ACT
July 19, 2005

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee:

I am Robert D. Evans, Director of the American Bar Association's Washington Office. I submit this statement at the request of the President of the American Bar Association, Robert J. Grey, Jr., to voice the Association's views with respect to reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act.

The American Bar Association is the world's largest voluntary professional organization with a membership of over 400,000 lawyers, judges, and law students worldwide, including a broad cross-section of family lawyers, advocates for victims of domestic violence, prosecuting attorneys, and judges. The ABA strongly supports reauthorization and strengthening of the Violence Against Women Act ("VAWA") before it expires in September 2005.

I want first to commend the Chairman for his strong leadership over many years and in the present Congress in creating federal policy directed toward reducing violence against women in our society. ABA President Grey expressed our gratitude for your role as well as that of Senator Hatch and Senator Biden in recently introducing legislation to reauthorize and strengthen VAWA, S. 1197. We believe there is a bipartisan consensus in both the House and Senate that reauthorization and strengthening of VAWA is critically important. The ABA shares this view, as evidenced by the action of our Board of Governors earlier this year making reauthorization of VAWA one of our Association's legislative priorities for the 109th Congress.

The programs created with funding from the Violence Against Women Act of 1994 and its reauthorization in 2000 have made a profound difference in the lives of millions of victims of domestic violence and their children as well as their communities and workplaces across the country.

VAWA has also made a difference in the last decade in how our courts and legal system respond to domestic violence and its victims. Some of the most effective tools available to victims of domestic violence to ensure their safety and to reduce violence are remedies obtainable through the legal system, particularly the civil protection order. VAWA-funded programs, including the Civil Legal Assistance and STOP Grants programs, have improved and aided in the prosecution of domestic violence, sexual assault, and child abuse cases; provided necessary training and support for law enforcement personnel; and increased civil legal services for victims of domestic violence, especially in the areas of civil protection orders and family law matters. The value of these programs to victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, and stalking cannot be underestimated. Nonetheless, nearly 70% of victims of domestic violence are without legal representation. VAWA must be reauthorized to ensure that the strides that have been made to make victims safer are continued and reaffirmed.

Moreover, the passage of VAWA and its reauthorization have increased public awareness of domestic violence. Although rates of reported domestic violence have decreased in the last ten years, due in no small part to VAWA, domestic violence remains an epidemic, having a profound impact not only on victims' health and welfare, but those of their children, families, communities, and workplaces. VAWA-funded programs have increased American society's understanding that it takes the coordinated efforts of all members of a community to prevent domestic violence and to stop it once it has begun. For example, the last ten years have seen tremendous strides as domestic violence advocates have worked closely with experts in the fields of civil and criminal justice, health care, children's advocacy, business, welfare, law enforcement, insurance, and housing and homelessness to increase awareness and provide effective and comprehensive services to victims of domestic violence. Today, many employers have adopted domestic violence in the workplace policies that include job-guaranteed leave to employees who are victims of violence to attend court proceedings, as well as assistance to relocate if necessary. Similarly, healthcare providers across the country have begun to incorporate screening for domestic violence into their protocols; hairdressers have integrated questions about domestic violence into their discussions with their clients; and many attorneys have information about domestic violence and the legal remedies available in their waiting rooms. VAWA and its reauthorization has been the impetus for many of these efforts, as well as state legislation addressing these issues, that have literally saved many lives.

We must not let this success fade away, as there is much more that can and must be done to end domestic violence. We believe that S.1197 strikes an appropriate balance between renewing core programs, closing loopholes, expanding successful programs, and developing critically needed initiatives for children and prevention efforts.

In particular, I would like to highlight the provisions in Title I of S.1197, which focuses on the justice system's response to domestic violence. By reaffirming the need for a coordinated community response from victim services agencies, legal aid, law enforcement, prosecution, and the courts, VAWA 2005 increases the likelihood of positive outcomes for victims of domestic violence and their children. S.1197 would continue VAWA's vital role of supporting specialized training for judges and court personnel and efforts to improve court responses to domestic violence through better court case management and other steps. Moreover, we are particularly pleased that your bill would increase funding for the Legal Assistance and STOP Grant programs that provide much needed funding for civil and criminal legal services for victims of domestic violence. These programs are essential, core components of the justice system that victims of domestic violence, sexual assault and stalking have come to rely upon. We cannot afford to see them diminished.

For all of these reasons, the ABA strongly supports S.1197. The ABA appreciates the opportunity to offer its views on this fundamentally important subject. We look forward to working with the Committee achieve a strengthened VAWA as the reauthorization proceeds in coming weeks.

Statement of U.S. Senator Russ Feingold
At the Senate Judiciary Committee Hearing
“Reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act”

July 19, 2005

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank you for holding this hearing. Although Congress passed the Violence Against Women Act (“VAWA”) in 1994 and reauthorized it in 2000, violence against women remains pervasive. Nearly one in four women are physically assaulted by at least one partner during their adult lives. According to the Department of Justice, 20% of violence against women in 2001 was committed by an intimate partner. Only 1 in 7 of these assaults comes to the attention of the police, and the number of sexual assaults reported is even less, with only 1 in 5 of those assaults reported. According to the Center for Disease Control, approximately 1.5 million women are raped and/or physically assaulted by an intimate partner each year. Approximately 3 million children in the United States are exposed to domestic violence in their homes each year, and the National Crime Victimization Survey found that approximately 4 out of 10 victims of domestic violence lived in households with children under 12.

We should all be appalled by these statistics. Unfortunately, these numbers do not even begin to convey the devastating long-term consequences of this violence on the physical, emotional and economic well-being of victims and their families. Clearly, we have a long way to go to eliminate domestic violence in our communities. We can, and we must, do better.

The 2005 VAWA reauthorization introduced by my colleague and friend, Senator Biden, is a very important step in the right direction. It builds on the success of crucial VAWA programs, while adopting a more comprehensive approach to a problem that permeates so many areas of victims’ lives.

The reauthorizing legislation would strengthen existing grant programs, which have proved to be a critical resource for law enforcement and organizations providing services to victims. It also includes important provisions that will address the severe lack of affordable and transitional housing available for victims fleeing an abuser, increase our prevention efforts through early intervention and support services for children, and improve the health care system's response to victims of domestic and sexual violence. And it contains further improvements to provisions aimed at addressing the unique circumstances of disabled, elderly, immigrant, and ethnic minority women, and victims living in rural areas, in addition to a new title devoted to tribal programs.

Mr. Chairman, Senator Biden and his staff have done a great deal of work on this issue over the years, and I commend him for that. In addition, I would like to highlight the work of many organizations in my home state of Wisconsin, including the Center Against Domestic Abuse of Superior, the Task Force on Family Violence of Milwaukee, Unidos Against Domestic Violence of Madison, New Horizons Shelter and Women's Center of Whitehall, Friends Aware of Violent Relationships of Fond du Lac, the Women's Center of Waukesha, Safe Harbor of Sheboygan, Beloit Domestic Violence Center, and the Rainbow House Domestic Abuse Services of Marinette. These tireless advocates are on the frontlines of delivering services to victims and their families. I would like to place letters from these groups in support of VAWA in the record of this hearing.

It is critical that we build on the successes of the programs established by the Violence Against Women Act. The victims and children that these programs are meant to protect will suffer the impact most severely if we do not reauthorize and improve this legislation. I would like to thank the Chairman and the Ranking Member for holding this hearing, and I look forward to supporting this bill when it comes before the Committee.

The Honorable Russell Feingold
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senator Feingold:

Over the past 10 years Congress has responded positively and effectively to help end domestic violence in our communities by funding Violence Against Women Act programs. In recent years the success of these programs has resulted in a growing demand for the life-saving services they provide. However, this increased demand coincides with a series of budget cuts that have crippled many local organizations, and forced others to close completely.

Programs such as the National Domestic Violence Hotline, battered women's shelters, and trainings for police, prosecutors and court officials have all contributed to the decline in domestic violence since VAWA was first authorized in 1994 and reauthorized in 2000. Now, as VAWA is soon scheduled to expire, we hope that you will support its reauthorization once again. VAWA is more than good social policy; it is also good fiscal policy. The first VAWA, authorized in 1994, saved nearly $14.8 billion in net averted social costs. Reauthorization and full funding for all VAWA programs is a crucial investment in our communities, one that saves lives, saves money and saves the future of our nation.

Due to the economic downturn of recent years in the Beloit community, funding for programming at the Beloit Domestic Violence Center continues to be a serious concern. Local entities have continued to offer support in a variety of ways. However, the Center has no guarantee of continued funding from any source. The emergency shelter and collateral programming are deemed to be valuable and necessary by the community for local efforts to address issues resulting from the crime of domestic violence. Victims and child witnesses are afforded opportunities for safety, recovery and empowerment toward futures free of violence in their homes.

Without reauthorization and full funding for VAWA programs, women and children in Beloit, Wisconsin cannot access the services they need to escape from violence. The continued support of Congress is crucial to helping victims and their children find safety and security and build self-sufficiency. On behalf of Beloit Domestic Violence Center, representing the interests of victims of domestic violence in Beloit Wisconsin, we urge you to support the reauthorization of VAWA and full funding for all VAWA.

If you have any questions or need additional information, please contact Corita R. Forster, Program Director at the Beloit Domestic Violence Center, 608-364-1083. We look forward to working with you on these important issues.

Sincerely,

Corita R. Forster

UNITED STATES SENATE
REAUTHORIZATION OF THE VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN ACT
JULY 19, 2005

WRITTEN TESTIMONY OF:
Juley Fulcher & Victoria Sadler
Break the Cycle Washington, DC
P.O. Box 21034
Washington, DC 20009
202.654.4039

I know what it is to be scared every second you exist, to be able to predict if someone is going to hurt you based on the expression on their face, to wash away your own blood every day, and to make peace with death. I am only 21. I met my first love when I was 13 and we dated until I was 20. After I started college, things began to change. Rather than end what had become an unhealthy relationship, we spent more time together. One night we began to argue and he pushed me into a wooden table. In shock and fear, I followed him to his car. We were still for almost a minute, when without a word he grabbed the side of my face and smashed it into the passenger-side window. The pain was horrible and I held my breath until we had driven out of the parking lot, and then I cried like never before. Following this, the violence became easier for him and more confusing for me. I was being punched, slapped, strangled, and kicked. He bit me, broke one of my fingers, and chipped my teeth. He gave me six black eyes in three months. It turned into a whirlwind of pain, mass confusion, denial, and the sensation of trying to climb out of a wet, muddy hole. While experiencing abuse, you are unsure of what to do, where to go or how to get out.

- Veronica, age 21, Los Angeles, CA

The youth of our nation are facing an epidemic of monumental proportions, and they don't know what to do, where to go or how to get out. Many don't even know they should get out. And yet, they are the ones most often faced with unhealthy, violent relationships. The Department of Justice consistently finds that girls and young women between the ages of 16 and 24 experience the highest rate of nonfatal intimate partner violence.¹ The group that most often encounters dating violence lacks answers, resources, and knowledge to end this epidemic while the generation that is supposed to lead them into adulthood stands by, usually unaware of the problem. However, we can no longer afford to pretend dating violence and sexual assault only affects adults. Now is the time to tell the youth of our nation that we are done pretending, that we will lead them into healthy adulthoods, that we won't tolerate violence and neither should they. Now is the time to support the Violence Against Women Act of 2005.

Break the Cycle, Washington, DC is a national nonprofit organization whose mission is to engage, educate, and empower youth to build lives and communities free from dating and domestic violence. We accomplish this goal by providing preventive education, free legal services, advocacy and support to young people between the ages of 12 and 22. Break the Cycle faces young people scarred by domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking daily and, as such, we support S. 1197 as an essential step in ending domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking for children and youth throughout our nation.

The Violence Against Women Acts of 1994 and 2000 as First Steps in Ending Violence

The Violence Against Women Act of 1994 (VAWA) was a momentous step forward for our nation. With its passage, the nation and the federal government finally acknowledged that domestic and sexual violence exists and affects the lives of millions of Americans. For the first time, resources were channeled into helping victims of such violence. VAWA established the National Domestic Violence Hotline, funded training sessions for police, prosecutors and court officials, and established new federal crimes of domestic violence, sexual assault and stalking to fill in jurisdictional gaps in prosecuting these crimes. It provided federal guarantees for Full Faith and Credit (enforcement and recognition of protection orders across state and jurisdictional lines). This landmark legislation that sought to improve criminal justice and community-based responses has affected many programs and communities ranging from domestic violence shelters to campus sexual assault studies to teaching police to uphold protection orders.

Based on the overwhelming success of VAWA, Congress reauthorized it in 2000, thereby continuing to combat domestic and sexual violence by financing services across the nation and adding crucial services for immigrant, rural, disabled and older women. It also recognized that the pattern of domestic violence extends to dating relationships.² Since its inception, VAWA has successfully helped millions of Americans while being cost effective for the nation.³ On September 30, 2005, VAWA expires and with it fades the hopes of many Americans who rely on its programs to escape abusive relationship.

While many families would not have been helped without VAWA, the previous Acts have only been first steps in ending domestic and sexual violence in our nation. The Violence Against Women Acts of 1994 and 2000 focused predominately on violence against adult women. While it has worked effectively to improve services and responses to adult victims, youth and young adults have, unfortunately, been forgotten.

Violence Against Children and Youth: The Problem

Becoming an adult has never been an easy process. Over the years, the nation has recognized the unique needs of this age group that lingers in limbo somewhere between childhood and adulthood. Twelve to twenty-four year olds have many services tailored towards them ranging from doctors who specialize in adolescent care to teen formation and youth ministry in churches to Alateen programs aimed at helping teens deal with alcoholic parents to out-of-school work programs. In so many areas we acknowledge that this age group faces unique problems. However when it comes to dating violence and sexual assault, we largely ignore them.

Dating Violence

My name is José, and my story begins when my girlfriend and I broke up. When I first broke up with her, I was ready to move on because after all, we were only together a few months. A couple of weeks after I ended things with her, she started calling me at my job. I notified my supervisor of the situation and they changed my phone number, but somehow she was able to get the new number as well. She started leaving notes on my car and at my new girlfriend's house, threatening her and begging me to get back with her. At that point, I decided to call the police. When the police got to my house and read the notes, they told me that the notes were annoying but not criminal. The officers advised me to get a restraining order against her because then her harassing notes and calls would be considered criminal. I didn't have a clue how to even begin the process of obtaining a restraining order.

VAWA 1994 cost the nation $1.5 billion over 5 years, but saved the nation $14.8 billion in medical expenses, lost wages, lowered worker productivity, police response, victim services, property losses, emergency shelter costs, reduced quality of life, and mental health treatment. The price tag of VAWA each year is billions cheaper.

Dating violence affects both females and males in heterosexual and homosexual relationships. It affects all races and nationalities, all religions and all neighborhoods. Dating violence is pattern of behaviors in a dating relationship that is physically, sexually, verbally, and/or emotionally abusive. It is usually not a one-time incident, but instead a pattern of abusive incidents that causes fear and/or harm. Fourteen states do not include dating relationships in their definition of domestic violence even though one study of 13 to 18 year olds showed that one in every three teens reports knowing a friend or peer who has been hit, punched, kicked, slapped, or physically hurt by their partner.⁴ That's just the physical violence. The numbers for verbal and emotional abuse are even more staggering. Eighty percent of teens regard verbal abuse as a serious issue for their age group.⁵ More than half of the girls in this study know a friend who has been verbally abused or threatened, as have one third of the boys.⁶

Dating violence is not isolated to a particular region of the country. In 2003, the Center for Disease Control reported results of a study of the percentage of high school students who experienced being hit, slapped or physically hurt on purpose by a boyfriend or girlfriend: over 12 percent of females and 11 percent of males in Chicago, IL; 14 percent of females and 12 percent of males in Dallas, TX; nearly 17 percent of females and 15 percent of males in the District of Columbia; over 11 percent of females and over 12 percent of males in Milwaukee, WI; and, nearly 10 percent of females and 12 percent of males in San Diego, CA.⁷ These numbers should probably be even higher based on the fact that teens often do report violence.

In Arizona, 7.2% of girls and 8.1% of boys experienced dating violence. In Oklahoma, 9.1% of girls and 9.9% of boys. In Philadelphia, 13% of girls and 17.3% of boys. In Boston, 10.1% of girls and 11% of boys. In New York, 6.9% of girls and 7.8% of boys.

Dating violence affects this age group more than it affects adults in relationships. Teens aged 16 to 19 experience the highest rate of intimate partner violence—almost three times that experienced, on average, by all women as a group.⁸ As many as one third of teenage girls report having had a boyfriend who was physically violent towards them.⁹ Many teens are dating for the first time¹⁰ and unsure of the barriers between a healthy relationship and an abusive one. In fact, 25 to 30 percent of teens equate jealousy, possessiveness, and violence with love.¹¹ Teens must be taught that these are signs of an unhealthy relationship.

Sexual Violence

As a 15-year old victim of abuse, I did not know what I could do to feel safe and happy again. My abuser sexually assaulted me, grabbing me and touching me inappropriately. I was too scared to tell my parents because I did not want to burden them. I felt dirty and shameful. Silence seemed like my only option, yet it was not a solution that would give me my life back.

- Angela, age 17, San Francisco, CA

Silence should not be the only option for victims of sexual violence. In fact, silence shifts the burden of guilt from the abuser to the victim. The victim is left with the scar, the abuser walks away free. In one study, one quarter of teen girls who had been in a romantic relationship admitted that they had been pressured to perform oral sex or engage in intercourse when they didn't want to.¹² Seventy percent of sexual assaults reported by adolescent and college-aged women were date rapes; more than one third of these assaulted women were between 14 and 17 years old.¹³

Sexual abuse is any sexual behavior that is unwanted and which interferes with the victim's right to say no to sexual advances. Sexual abuse includes unwanted touching or kissing, date rape, forcing the victim to do some sexual act, and refusing to allow the victim to use either birth control or protection against STDs. Unfortunately, many teens do not know what sexual abuse is or that they have the right to say no. Forty-four percent of teens believed that if a girl and guy have been drinking and are a little bit drunk, then it is not sexual assault if he forces or coerces her to have sex.¹⁴ Nearly half of teens believed that if a girl says yes to sex and then changes her mind and the guy has sex with her anyway, it is not sexual assault.¹⁵ These are two situations we can directly change with education. We must educate our youth of the meaning of sexual assault and remind them that they never have to do anything, whether they started already or are under the influence.

Nearly two million of the 22.3 million adolescents aged 12 to 17 in the United States have been victims of serious sexual assault.¹⁶ Additionally, in one year, over 4,000 incidents of rape and sexual assault occurred in public schools across the country.¹⁷ Those incidents were at school, breaking down the hope that schools can be safe places for teens. In the Center for Disease Control study of high school students who were physically forced to have sexual intercourse, 13 percent of female students in DeKalb County public schools in Georgia, over 14 percent of female students in District of Columbia public schools, and over 14 percent of female students in the Philadelphia school district reported being forced to have intercourse.¹⁸ Again, these percentages only represent the number of female students who reported the forced sexual intercourse; it is most definitely an under representation of the reality teenage girls face. Males in high school, too, face forced sexual intercourse. In Alabama, Idaho, Oklahoma, and Utah, where the percentage of females who are forced ranges from 11 to nearly 16 percent of high school students, males range from 4.5 to 7 percent.¹⁹ Males are even more unlikely to report forced sexual intercourse.

Repercussions for the Victim and Community

Dating violence and sexual assaults can be emotionally and physically painful for its victims. The pain does not end when the violent incident or cycle of incidents ends. In fact, the pain and repercussions can continue and change the victim's life in countless ways.

1. The plague of insecurity and isolation

At the age of 13, I was insecure, trying to find my place in the world, to discover the person I would become. My insecurity allowed for many things: low self-esteem, hatred of my appearance, and worst of all, abuse by my boyfriend. Though I knew abuse was wrong, I told myself that my situation was different because my boyfriend needed to hit me to get through his problems. I forced myself to believe that I was helping him by letting him hurt me. I hated myself because his words made me feel inadequate—as a girlfriend and as a human being. I was incapable of reaching out to anyone because I couldn't see my situation as important. I couldn't see myself as important.

- Jean, age 20, New York, NY

I am an honors student with a supportive family and close friendships. When the person I loved struck me, I couldn't believe it happened to me. I met my ex-boyfriend my freshman year in college. Soon after, we became inseparable and he became abusive. He screened my friends and told me who was acceptable. No one was good enough. The verbal and emotional abuse was devastating. He lashed out and kicked me in the leg. I never understood his behavior. He would hit me and then pull away saying, "I've never done this to anyone. I don't beat women." I wondered whether there was something wrong with me.

- Erika, age 19, Washington, DC

The teenage years are filled with natural insecurity as one's body changes, and the transition to adulthood is filled with new types of relationships, more responsibilities and new possibilities. Because of this, teenagers must be taught what is healthy and what is not and services must be offered to help them through this transition. Abuse feeds off of this insecurity and creates even more. Being in a new relationship can make young people feel good about themselves, worthy of being loved. But, experiencing abuse and violence in that relationship can do the opposite, making a young person feel as if they brought on the violence, like there was something they did to cause it. Moreover, as many as 18 percent of 13 to 18 year olds said a partner had threatened harm to themselves if presented with a break-up.²⁰ So, the victim becomes trapped, fearing they would be responsible if their batterer committed self-harm. Abusers often actively try to shift blame for the abuse onto the victim. They become convinced it is their fault, and they become stuck in the very relationship that is so drastically hurting them.

2. Risky Behavior

As teen victims turn inward trying to figure out what is wrong with them to cause the abuse, many pull away from family and friends. Teens and young adults who are disconnected from social supports such as school, family and work are at particular risk for dating and sexual violence. Children who are exposed to domestic violence are more likely to exhibit behavioral and physical health problems including depression, anxiety and violence toward peers.²¹ They are also more likely to abuse drugs and alcohol, runaway from home, engage in teenage prostitution and commit sexual assault crimes.²² In fact, girls that report being physically and/or sexually abused are in most cases more than twice as likely to report smoking, drinking and using illegal drugs.²³

Teenagers with a history of sexual abuse are significantly more likely than their counterparts to engage in sexual behavior that puts them at risk for HIV infection and other sexually transmitted diseases.²⁴ They are also more likely to have their first intercourse before the age of 15, have multiple partners, and not use condoms.²⁵ By being abused at no fault of their own, victims develop risky behaviors that put themselves at risk for sexually transmitted diseases that could forever alter their lives.

3. Consequences to Health

Being a victim of dating violence leads to many health problems. Weight control behaviors are more and more common amongst teenagers; however, a victim's risk of having weight control behaviors increases with dating violence. Thirty-two percent of girls who had been abused reported bingeing and purging, compared to 12 percent of girls who had not been abused.²⁶ Additionally, children exposed to violence suffer symptoms of post-traumatic stress disorder, such as nightmares, and were at greater risk than their peers of having allergies, asthma, gastrointestinal problems, headaches and flu.²⁷ Women who are abused are also more likely to be diagnosed with migraines, chronic pain, arthritis, and high blood pressure²⁸ and three times more likely to have a gynecological problem including chronic pelvic pain, vaginal bleeding, vaginal infection, painful menstruation, sexual dysfunction, fibroids, pelvic inflammatory disease, painful intercourse, urinary tract infection and infertility.²⁹ These changes to a victim's health could affect his or her lifetime wellness and possibly even shorten life.

Although not directly a detriment to one's health, pregnancy can place a toll on one's body, especially if young. In a study of young mothers aged 12 to 18, one out of every eight pregnant adolescents reported having been physically assaulted by the father of her baby during the preceding 12 months.³⁰ Two-thirds of the young mothers that reported such abuse also reported that their boyfriends sabotaged their birth control efforts either by words or behavior.³¹ Many young women who are victims of domestic violence experience birth control sabotage by their abusive partners. One study found that 66 percent of abused women had experienced birth control sabotage.³² Once pregnant, an abused woman has significantly higher risk of complications including low weight gain, anemia, infections, and first and second trimester bleeding.³³

When I was 15, I met the man of my dreams. He was 23, sweet, understanding and respectful. After a year, I felt physically and emotionally ready to take our relationship to the next level. When I found out I was pregnant, I was happy and excited, in love. When I was six months pregnant, he pressured me into moving in with him. Soon after, I noticed he was changing toward me. He started to ignore me and drink heavily. When we argued, he would slap or punch me and because of this, I had problems during labor and had to have a Cesarean to deliver. On August 23, 1999, I gave birth to a beautiful baby girl. As soon as I got home, my boyfriend told me to clean the house. When I refused, he pulled me by my hair into the room and made me clean it. This was only the beginning. He said that he would take my daughter away if I left him. He forced himself on me and left marks on me so other guys would know I was "taken." One day, he even dragged me into the street half-naked and left me there while my daughter yelled, "Mommy, Mommy," from inside. I begged him to stop, not for me but for the baby.

Young mothers are particularly vulnerable to domestic and sexual violence, with one study finding that 26 percent of new mothers between the ages of 13 and 17 experienced such violence in the three months after the birth of their child.³⁴ The abuse is prevalent at all stages of pregnancy. No fewer than a quarter of teen mothers experience intimate partner violence before, during, or just after their pregnancy, with some studies reporting rates of 50 to 80 percent.³⁵ Intimate partner violence is an onerous problem for pregnant youth while intimate partner violence is linked to adolescent pregnancy. As many as two thirds of young women who become pregnant as adolescents were sexually or physically abused at some point in their lives.³⁶

And if a woman's pregnancy is unplanned, she is two to four times more likely to be abused during the pregnancy than a woman who planned the pregnancy.³⁷

4. Juvenile Delinquency

In addition to psychological changes and changes to health, abused teens may fall into situations that prevent them from becoming successful, independent adults. Youth that either witness or experience domestic or dating violence have higher probabilities of truancy, poor school performance, and trouble concentrating and may have difficulty retaining employment.³⁸ As mentioned earlier, several thousand rapes and sexual assaults occur each year in public schools. With 42 percent of boys and 43 percent of girls aged 13 to 18 reporting that their abuse took place either in a school building or on school grounds³⁹ it is not a surprise that victims either do not show up to school or have trouble performing once there.

Despite the overall decrease in juvenile crime over the past ten years, there has been a quickly growing increase in the number of female juvenile offenders. Between 1989 and 1998, female juvenile delinquency increased by 83 percent.⁴⁰ Estimates show that a large percentage of girls in the juvenile justice system have been victims of prior sexual and physical abuse as compared to the general juvenile population. Such abuse is consistently recognized as the first step in a girl's pathway into the system. About 26 percent of teenage girls in grades 9 through 12 in the general population have been victims of physical abuse, sexual assault or date rape.⁴¹ In comparison, according to surveys taken of girls in detention, about 92% of female juvenile offenders say that they had been a victim of emotional, physical, or sexual abuse before entering the juvenile justice system.⁴² As victims of violence, these girls are more likely to engage in risky activities and are increasingly becoming violent against either their abusers or against other individuals.⁴³ These victims choose to act out rather than admit to experiencing abuse, which is especially common when the abuse is perpetrated by a family member.

Girls who experience such abuse often run away. Runaway girls are more likely than boys to resort to prostitution for either money or drugs in order to survive. It is estimated that 40 to 75 percent of adolescent girl prostitutes have been victims of prior physical or sexual abuse and have run away from home.⁴⁴ What began as just running away to escape the violence often turns into prostitution, drug abuse and other crimes that, ultimately, may lead to a prison sentence forever changing the victim's life, all because she wanted away from the violence.

The Cycle of Violence

Violence has a tendency to move from generation to generation. The only way to end domestic violence once and for all is to halt the progression of the second cycle to further generations. There is no one factor that causes someone to become an abuser. However, children who grow up in homes where domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault or stalking occur are more likely to become victims or perpetrators of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking themselves.⁴⁵ This factor can be eliminated all together by halting the cycle at its origin—the youth and young adults who witness or experience these types of violence. Men who as children were exposed to their parents' domestic violence are twice as likely to abuse their own wives as sons of nonviolent parents.⁴⁶ Is that the legacy we want to leave with our sons? Is the message we want to give to our children one of violence?

Youth won't learn about abuse, the cycle or healthy relationships, from each other, and they're not talking to us about it. According to one study of 13 to 18 year olds, only 33 percent of the nearly 700 respondents who had been in or knew about an abusive relationship said they had told someone about it.⁴⁷ Additionally, 73 percent said that if they were trapped in an abusive relationship, they would talk through the problem with their friends.⁴⁸ This is largely a case of the blind leading the blind. Youth must be taught at every opportunity that abusive relationships are unhealthy and that there are ways out so that they can teach each other when one is in need.

VAWA 2005: A Solution for Children and Youth

The previous Violence Against Women Acts may not have included children and youth specifically, but VAWA 2005 (S. 1197) does. Not only does VAWA 2005 reauthorize existing programs, but it is also amended to afford youth access to services and new programs which specifically target teens. Most notably, VAWA 2005 aims to provide for youth in Title III: Services, Protection and Justice for Young Victims of Violence. This title would create programs to educate people working with youth and young adults on how to recognize, respond to, and provide appropriate services to youth and young adult victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking.

Rape Prevention and Education: Sec. 302

The Rape Prevention and Education program is to be reauthorized and amended in VAWA 2005. These essential grants allow rape prevention organizations to educate teens by staying in touch with the youth culture and responding with information in appropriate mediums whether through using music, magazines, "shout outs", bilingual brochures, and interactive websites. These public awareness campaigns play a critical role in informing teens of their rights and responsibilities with respect to sexual abuse. Part of the funds will support the National Sexual Violence Resource Center, which is a comprehensive collection and distribution center for information and resources related to sexual violence.

Services to Advocate for and Respond to Teens (START): Sec. 303

The START program would provide grants to nonprofit, nongovernmental and community based organizations that provide services to teens and young adult victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking. These grants would aid organizations is responding directly to the needs of abused teens. Without funding, many of these groups are unable to target teenagers. This funding will allow organizations to effectively reach youth and provide them with essential resources. The program focuses on early intervention. Teaching youth about healthy relationships and ending unhealthy relationships early on can help end domestic violence for our youth.

Teens aren't quite children or adults. As such, services targeted at ending dating violence must be geared specifically for their age group. Although violence is widespread in the teen population, and young people are often particularly at risk for abuse in dating relationships, there are limited services specifically intended for adolescents. The vast majority of resources are either child abuse services geared toward young children or domestic violence services focused on adult victims.

In addition to this lack of services, teens face other obstacles to seeking help. They often do not have access to shelter, money or transportation. They must overcome issues such as distrust of adults, lack of knowledge about available resources, or pressure from peers and parents. Confusion about the law adds another layer of difficulty for young people in need. Often teens will not reach out for help because they do not know their rights. They also have fears about lack of confidentiality, mandated child abuse reporting and parental consent laws. Jean, a college student, said she didn't want to get her boyfriend "in trouble" by reporting his violence to someone. The desire for confidentiality and confusion about the law are two of the most significant barriers to youth seeking help with domestic or dating violence.⁴⁹ The START program will allow service providers to reach these youth through programming targeted to their unique needs.

Access to Justice: Sec. 303

The Access to Justice program creates demonstration grants for courts, service providers, and law enforcement agencies to work together. Ending the cycle of violence will take the whole community, and this program has that goal in mind. Too often, youth perpetrators do not get in trouble for the abuse they commit. In many states, youth victims are not eligible for protection orders unless they have had a child with or live with the perpetrator. Very few states specifically allow minors to obtain protection orders. We must hold all abusers accountable for their actions and protect all victims regardless of age. This program aims at bringing systems together in a community to develop a comprehensive response to teen dating and sexual violence. One Break the Cycle client spoke of her frustration:

I talked to my mother about pursuing a restraining order, but she was against it. I got into many arguments with my parents because their idea of what was best for me didn't include legal protection. I felt trapped because I thought I could never get a restraining order unless my parents would agree to get one for me.

- Angela, age 17, San Francisco, CA

Youth do have some rights though and can learn to assert them, in situations like Angela's. The process should not be baffling, should not seem impossible to youth. Access to Justice aims at de-mystifying the legal system for youth, in such ways as creating multi-service facilities where youth can address all needs in one facility. Jennifer, one of our clients, describes her seeking help in this way:

I obtained a messy pile of restraining order forms at school, but the tedious instructions left me confused and discouraged.

- Jennifer, age 21, Los Angeles, CA

It is difficult enough for a teenager to try to get out of his or her violent relationship. Making the process confusing and discouraging is not the message we should be sending our youth. It's great that her school had the restraining order forms, but we hope that with this program, someone would help her make sense of them and walk through the process with her from filling the forms out to walking into court with her. Perhaps some day Santa Clara, California will not be the only county in the nation with a juvenile domestic violence court.⁵⁰ Until then, this bill will ensure confidentiality while continuing to improve responses through networks that include the courts and youth based community groups. Collaboration of such groups will help to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the court in responding to youth cases involving domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking and serve as models for other communities.

Grants for Training and Collaboration on the Intersection between Domestic Violence and Child Maltreatment: Sec. 303

Domestic violence often occurs in homes where child abuse and neglect occur, and, yet, separate entities deal with each area. These grants would enable the development of collaborative responses, services and cross-training so that when a situation arises in a home where both domestic violence and child maltreatment occur, the response is better for all of the victims. This allows for a better use of our limited resources as law enforcement, courts, child welfare agencies, domestic and sexual violence service providers and other community organizations could deal with both problems simultaneously. And, in fact, the two are inextricably linked. The U.S. Advisory Board on Child Abuse suggests that domestic violence may be the single major precursor to child abuse and neglect fatalities in this country.⁵¹ With better training and collaboration, this program will prevent child abuse and neglect fatalities. The program will save children's lives.

Grants to Reduce Violence Against Women on Campus: Sec. 304

The grants to reduce violence on campuses have been very successful over the last few years. VAWA 2005 reauthorizes these grants providing more funding while directing more of the dollars to direct services. Jean's story shows one of the successes of this program:

The turning point for me came with a college advisor, who forced me to confront my situation, who pushed me to recognize that the abuse to my body and mind were not my fault. As more and more time passes, I am learning again to trust myself, to trust others, and to take care of myself. The ability to trust is one that is explicitly human, and one that I lacked for many years after experiencing dating violence. In essence, girls need to be taught to trust, to be able to confront their abuse, to be able to learn to live without it.

—Jean, age 20, New York, NY

⁵¹ U.S. Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect, U.S. Dept of Health and Human Services, A Nation's Shame: Fatal Child Abuse and Neglect in the United States: Fifth Report, 1995.

These grants will help campuses across the nation teach victims lessons far more important than anything they'll learn in earning their degrees. They'll learn that they do not deserve the abuse. Early intervention is essential in preventing these victims from accepting such behavior in future relationships. With these programs, the cycle of violence can be ended before it has time to fester and grow. These grants will also help train campus law enforcement and campus judicial boards to hold young abusers liable for their crimes, to send a message that violence is not acceptable on our campuses.

Juvenile Justice: Sec. 305

With the increase in the number of females entering the juvenile system, gender specific programming is essential. So many are victims of abuse prior to entering the system, and, in fact, their abuse may be a critical factor in their entry into the system. With the rampant rates of abuse, the unique needs of girls must be addressed. Girls need to have experts to provide care management that deals with very specific mental and emotional issues arising from the trauma they have experienced.

This part of S. 1197 would amend the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act and would direct states to include such gender-specific programs as part of their juvenile justice state plans. These provisions will combat the problem by requiring states to provide services that are tailored to the unique needs of girls focusing on their experiences with abuse. It will also help the numerous pregnant girls who enter the system after being abused and provide girls with knowledge to enter healthy relationships after their release. With so many of the girls being abused before entering, we must have an effective means to teach them how not to resort to crime again and how to appropriately deal with the abuse they've experienced.

Safe Havens: Sec. 306

According to one study, 5 percent of abusive fathers threaten during visitation to kill the mother, 34 percent of fathers threaten to kidnap their children, and 25 percent threaten to hurt their children.⁵² The breaking up of a family with separation and divorce is difficult enough on children without the addition of domestic violence, sexual violence, or child abuse. The Safe Haven provision of this bill aims to reduce domestic violence and child abuse during parental visitation and transfer of children for visitation by expanding the availability of supervised visitation centers. This way, children are not alone with an abusive parent, but still are able to visit with their parent. Moreover, adult victims can be kept safe during visitation exchange. This program has a special focus on keeping children and parents who have been abused safe.

Supporting Teens through Education and Protection Act (STEP)

The proposed STEP Act will work to create better responses to middle and high school students who are victims of dating violence, domestic violence, sexual assault and stalking. These grants would help schools develop effective school policies to deal with students experiencing dating and sexual violence. Schools will train teachers, coaches, and administrators to recognize and address issues related to dating violence and sexual assault.

These grants will aid middle and high schools in developing safe, reliable, confidential policies, procedures and response systems. Youth spend at least seven hours a day, 35 hours a week in our nation's schools. For teens in domestic violence homes or relationships, schools can be a safe place and provide a wealth of resources. And yet, right now they are not. S. 1197 does not include the STEP program. The House bill (H.R. 2876), introduced by Mark Green (R-WI) and John Conyers (D-MI) and supported by close to 70 cosponsors, includes this critical program to support our nation's schools and the students who attend them. We strongly encourage the Senate to adopt this essential provision as part of S. 1197 in order to help our schools to protect our youth.

⁵² Joan Zora, Protecting the Children in Custody Disputes When One Parent Abuses the Other, 29 Clearinghouse Rev. 1113, 119 (1996).

Other Provisions of VAWA 2005 to Aid Youth

Minors, under the age of 18, account for 67 percent of all sexual assault victimizations.⁵³ Therefore, the proposed Sexual Assault Services Act (SASA) in Sec. 202 will provide enormous aid to our abused youth. Over the past few years, rape crisis centers have made significant progress in helping victims receive the services they need. But, rape crisis centers are plagued by a lack of resources which has been heightened by the short fall in state budgets recently. SASA creates a federal funding stream dedicated entirely to the provision of direct services for victims of sexual violence. Additionally, resources would be granted to state sexual assault coalitions whose technical assistance is invaluable to service providers nationwide. The focus on emergency and 24 hour services for victims will strengthen the 1,300 rape crisis centers across the nation.

Prevention is key to ending the cycle of violence. Title IV of the proposed law concentrates on prevention strategies in order to strengthen America's families. It would provide services to children growing up in violent homes (Sec. 401). New programs would educate service providers in home visitation programs to enable early intervention (Sec. 401) and would engage men and boys as allies in efforts to end domestic and sexual violence (Sec. 402). Education is critical to halting the cycle of violence and, in fact, 63% of teens said it would be helpful for learn about issues such as abusive relationships in school⁵⁴. With VAWA 2005, educating our youth is possible.

In 1994, it became a federal crime to cross state lines to commit domestic violence.⁵⁵ VAWA 2005 takes this a step further by making it a federal crime to cross state lines to commit dating violence (Sec. 115). Dating violence perpetrators can now be prosecuted for entering another state to abuse a victim.

Support VAWA 2005 for our Children

Dating violence and sexual assault threaten the youth of our nation from coast to coast in astounding numbers. Youth respond to such violence in many ways including silence, telling their friends, running away, and becoming violent. Adults witness the side effects of the violence, but are often unaware of the underlying problem. We as a nation have a duty to support our youth as they transition to adulthood. We have a duty to teach them how to live healthy lives, lives without dating and sexual violence. We see the problem, now it's time to implement a solution.

The Violence against Women Act has proved a successful strategy for combating violence. Millions of women and men have been helped at a substantial financial savings to the nation. But, our children, our successors have been forgotten. VAWA 2005 will bring critical programs and services to our youth specifically targeted at their unique needs. VAWA 2005 strives to end dating and sexual violence before another generation experiences the pain and consequences of such violence. Prevention and early intervention programs promise to reach out to our youth, to provide them with knowledge about healthy relationship, and offer resources to escape abusive relationships. It is time to send a message to our youth that we will help them, that we see them being hurt and it's not tolerable. It is time to address our youth's needs because they are our future. We must immediately pass the Violence Against Women Act of 2005.

Senator Edmonds, Representative Bunker and Members of the Joint Standing Committee on Labor:

I apologize for not being present to deliver this testimony personally, however, business has me out of town for the next few days. On behalf of the Maine State Chamber of Commerce, we would like to voice our support for LD 1960, An Act to Promote Safety of Families through the Workplace, sponsored by Speaker Saxl.

As members of this committee may remember that this legislation first appeared before the 119th Legislature in the form of LD 944, and extended unpaid leave from the workplace for employees in the event they are a victim of violence, assault, sex assaults, stalking or any other act that would support an order of protection.

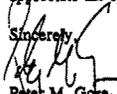

At that time the Maine State Chamber expressed concerns about the bill even though it was greatly altered from its original form and falls under the auspices and rulemaking authority of the Department of Labor.

Despite our original reservations the bill became law and has been in place for the last two years. During this time this organization has heard no complaints or concerns with its implementation. It appears that the bill supporters were correct regarding its application and its impact on the workplace.

It is for this reason we believe it is appropriate to extend the same leave opportunities for parents of children who are unfortunate enough to be victims of violence.

We believe this bill, like the current law, is appropriate given the difficult times we now live in. While we hope that someday we will be in the position that individuals and families do not need to access leave for these very troublesome situations, we recognize that should they need to do so, such leave is appropriate and relatively unburdensome to the workplace. It is for these reasons we would again reiterate our support for LD 1960. I will do my best to be present at the work session on this bill and appreciate the opportunity to provide you with our comments. Thank you very much.

Sincerely,

The Honorable Joseph Biden, Jr.
U.S. Senate
201 Russell Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Chairman Specter and Senator Biden:

I am writing to thank you for your continued leadership and support in the area of domestic violence, particularly the issue of workplace violence. Like you, we at Harman International Industries, Incorporated have been supportive of policies to reduce workplace violence, including the Security and Financial Empowerment (SAFE) Act in the last Congress, and in this Congress as H.R. 3185. Employees in the United States who have been victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, or stalking too often suffer adverse consequences in the workplace as a result of their victimization. We are pleased that your commitment to these issues will continue with the inclusion of an economic security title in legislation to reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) this year, and are a proud corporate sponsor of this initiative.

As you know, domestic violence costs U.S. employers up to $13 billion annually, with 94% of corporate security and safety directors at companies nationwide ranking domestic violence as a high security concern. Between ¼ and ½ of domestic violence victims report that they have lost a job due, at least in part, to domestic violence. In addition, almost half of sexual assault survivors lost their jobs or are forced to quit in aftermath of the crime. Victims of intimate partner violence lose 8,000,000 days of paid work each year—the equivalent of 32,000 full-time jobs and 5,600,000 days of household productivity. Such violence has a devastating impact on women's physical health, mental health, and financial security.

As employers, we realize that while addressing these issues is good for businesses, it is vital for our employees. The Harman International domestic-violence initiative began after a treasured employee was killed by her abusive ex-husband in 2001 after she returned home from work. In response to Terry's tragic death we were determined to create a program that informed all of our employees about the dynamics and consequences of domestic violence, heightened awareness of the issue and its effects in the workplace, provided guidance for employees and managers and reduced the occurrence of violence. In conjunction with the Family Violence Prevention Fund we developed an organizational domestic violence policy and procedures that best support employees affected by domestic violence. In addition we designed and implemented a workplace domestic violence education and awareness training program for all Harman US facilities. The initiative has cost the company less than $125,000.

All 3,257 U.S. Harman employees attended the mandatory education and awareness program. Employees were assured that victims of abuse would not lose their jobs if they came forward to discuss their problems and managers were trained to show sensitivity in handling a potential victim's performance appraisal that might have been affected by their abuse at home and respect privacy. Harman's in-house security staff also reviewed safety standards at each of its facilities to ensure among other things, that there were emergency phone lines, safer parking lots and adequate lighting on the grounds. Safety cards and posters supplied by local domestic-violence agencies were placed in lunch areas and restrooms. The training was completed in June 2002; new hires are required to participate in the program. Harman managers in three of our nine US facilities have handled over eighteen domestic-violence cases since the program began. Prior to 2001, fewer than five Harman employees in all nine divisions had sought assistance. Significantly, many of our employees have told us how proud they are to work in a company that cares enough about their employees to not only recognize domestic violence as a workplace issue but also tries to do something about it.

We believe that employers have a corporate responsibility to maintain a safe environment at work, and are fully supportive of the provisions in the economic security section of the VAWA reauthorization legislation. We are especially proud that our corporate headquarters are in California, which along with 27 other states and the District of Columbia, provides unemployment insurance to people needing to leave their jobs because of violence against them or a family member. We hope that provisions providing this vital type of support will also be included in the VAWA reauthorization legislation. We look forward to working with you on this issue in the 109th Congress.

Sincerely,

Lynn Harman

Good morning, Senators Specter and Biden (and _____). Thank you for inviting me to testify before the Committee on the Judiciary today about domestic violence. I am glad to have an opportunity today to talk with you about violence against women. We cannot tolerate a world in which one in three women is or will be a victim of domestic violence.

Domestic violence, sexual assault, dating violence or stalking shatters our society. Instead of having a relationship of love and respect, the victims of these crimes are betrayed by jealous and controlling violence of their intimate partners. These are stories that should not happen in the United States or anywhere else in the world. The United States has been – and should continue to be – a leader in reducing these crimes.

This is not a subject I had much personal experience with – until I learned that a friend of mine was being beaten by her husband. Though I tried, I was not able to convince her to leave her husband – even though I knew, and she knew, what kind of damage domestic violence was causing her. At the time, I considered that a personal failure.

I was completely outraged – that women could endure such pain. I could not help my friend, but I decided I could help others. I visited domestic violence shelters and listened to the stories of other battered women. I saw the impact that domestic violence had on their children. I began to see why it was so hard for them to leave. So, in 2004, I joined the Avon Foundation in their campaign, Speak Out Against Domestic Violence. Avon has committed more than $1 million to educating communities about the terrible cost of domestic violence. I began speaking in public about this crime because I believe that we all have an obligation to help save our friends' lives.

This country has had a sad history of crimes of violence against intimate partners. Gladys Ricart's story is just one part of that terrible history. She was murdered on her wedding day, September 26, 1999. Her bridegroom, James Preston, wanted to give her a life of love and respect. But a former boyfriend, Agustin Garcia, would not let her have this happiness. She had ended her relationship with Garcia months earlier, because he had been abusive, violent, and had been stalking her. He tried to break into her house one night – and after that, she begged family members to stay with her, because she feared what Garcia might do next. On the happiest day of her life, when Gladys stood radiantly in her wedding dress, surrounded by her bridesmaids, Agustin Garcia pushed his way in and shot her. If he couldn't have her, then nobody else was going to.

Gladys Ricart tried to leave. She did just what we ask all victims of domestic violence to do – and even though she was surrounded by loving and supportive family and friends, she was still killed. Agustin Garcia said he had to shoot her because she “betrayed” him. But it was Garcia who betrayed her. He thought he owned her. When she tried to leave him, his only thought was to regain control over her. This is not love. It is a crime.

I am lucky. I have never been a victim of such abuse. But that's one of the dangers with this issue – most of us just say, “That's not my problem.” In reality, it affects our whole society because we are all connected. Witnessing domestic violence in the childhood home is the most common risk factor for becoming a batterer in adulthood. We cannot afford to raise another generation of abusers. We cannot bear to see any more pictures of young women, like Gladys Ricart, buried in their wedding dresses, their dreams shattered.

I could not change my friend's mind. She stayed. But since then, I have learned why women don't leave their abusive partners. Many women lack the job skills or financial strength to move out on their own, especially if they have children. And if they have children, the abuser is likely to take the victim to court to fight about them -- about who should have primary custody of the children and how the children should be raised. Many abusive partners will keep a victim from seeking help through threats to kill her or threats to kill the children. Studies show that the most dangerous time for a victim of domestic violence is when she attempts to leave the abuser. As the abuser feels control slip away, his threats will escalate, as will his violence. A woman who wants to leave may be convinced that it truly is a matter of life or death -- and that the only way to protect her life or her children's lives is to stay.

And this violence really begins as violence against girls. We know that high school girls experience verbal and physical violence from dating partners and over half of all sexual assaults reported to law enforcement are to minors. We need to support programs that bring services to these girls and prevention programs that help them learn about their right to be safe.

This is why it is so important for victims to know that their friends, family and the community will support them as they struggle to survive the violence. You can't look the other way just because you have not experienced domestic violence with your own flesh. We have a duty to help heal the pain of our sisters and our mothers and our friends.

So many victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking do not know about the many services communities now offer them. It is imperative that we continue to provide public outreach and education—to the many cultures and communities that flourish in the United States – in their own languages and in ways that are respectful of the worlds they inhabit.

We need to make sure that law enforcement and the courts hold every single perpetrator of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking accountable for their crimes. The Violence Against Women Act has done so much to meet this goal. Thousands of police officers, prosecutors, judges, lawyers, victim advocates and social workers have been trained to understand the nature of these crimes – and how best to stop the violence. The Violence Against Women Act has supported the creation of specialized courts and police units. It has funded the shelters and counseling programs that help victims heal. The Violence Against Women Act has changed the mindset of this country. Now, instead of saying, “Perhaps he loved her too much,” we know enough to say, “We cannot let these crimes continue”.

But the work is not yet done. These crimes still occur every day. We must continue training helping professionals to understand how these crimes occur. We must have the protections available to victims that will allow them, finally, to leave in safety.

Your unwavering support for the Violence Against Women Act on behalf of the victims of these crimes has made an enormous difference, Senators Specter and Biden. Your courageous efforts to take on these terrible crimes have put trained police officers in communities that need them. You have supported the work of prosecutors dedicated to holding the perpetrators of these crimes accountable. You have funded programs that bring committed judges to the bench, and you have helped communities in the poorest and sometimes the most remote places to create a sheltering environment for the victims of these crimes. I am very proud that the Avon Let's Talk Beauty Tour is supporting your efforts by collecting cards of support for this Act's renewal from thousands of men and women across the country this summer. This grassroots effort will underscore the importance of renewing and strengthening this pioneer piece of legislation. Your belief in this work means that victims everywhere in this country will someday become survivors.

I said earlier that the most important thing we can do for victims of these crimes is to let them know that their friends care what happens to them. Victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking should have no doubt who their friends are in this room – it is you, because you care enough to keep the good work of the Violence Against Women Act flourishing.

Statement of Senator Edward M. Kennedy
Violence Against Women Reauthorization Act of 2005
July 19, 2005

I strongly support the Violence Against Women Act of 2005, and I commend Senator Biden, Senator Specter, and Senator Hatch for their bipartisan leadership on this major issue. Violence against women is a very real and very serious continuing problem in the United States.

In 1994, Congress allocated funds for a new effort to prevent violence against women and families. The programs established under the Act, and later expanded and reauthorized in 2000, have worked, and so will this legislation.

I'm pleased to be a sponsor of this bill because it takes needed additional steps to prevent domestic violence. It enhances law enforcement and judicial procedures. It reinvigorates programs to help older and disabled victims of domestic violence.

It eases housing problems for battered women. It provides flexibility for victims who need time off from work to obtain medical attention, counseling, and other support.

It includes new funds for training health professionals to recognize and respond to domestic and sexual violence, and to make public health officials more alert to the need as well. The research funds in the bill are vital too, because we need the best possible interventions in health care settings to prevent future violence and help the victims.

Violence against women can occur throughout women's lives, beginning in childhood, continuing in adolescence, and in numerous contexts and settings. It is important for any bill on such violence to focus on girls and young women as well, and this bill does that.

In 1994, we included an important innovative provision in the bill to fund a National Domestic Violence Hotline. When the hotline opened in 1996, victims of domestic violence across the nation finally had help available toll-free, 24-hours a day, 365 days a year. This legislation increases funding for that very important support.

Another important section of the bill provides greater help to immigrant victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, trafficking and similar offenses. This section builds on the current Act and is intended to remove the current obstacles in our immigration laws that prevent these victims from escaping such violence, and to avoid the fear that often prevents them from reporting their abusers.

Eliminating domestic violence is especially challenging in immigrant communities, because victims often face additional cultural, linguistic and other barriers to seeking help. Abusers of immigrant spouses or children are likely to use threats of deportation against them, trapping them in endless years of violence. Congress has done too little to help immigrant victims, and there are still many immigrant women and children whose lives are in danger.

We have a responsibility in Congress to do all we can to eradicate domestic violence. We've learned a great deal from the implementation of the Act over the past decades, and this reauthorization will build on that information. I look forward to our hearing and to the testimony of each of our witnesses.

Dear Senator Feingold:

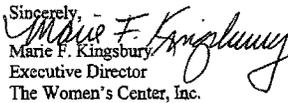

Over the past 10 years Congress has responded positively and effectively to help end domestic violence in our communities by funding Violence Against Women Act programs. In recent years the success of these programs has resulted in a growing demand for the life-saving services they provide. However, this increased demand coincides with a series of budget cuts that have crippled many local organizations, and forced others to close completely.

Programs such as the National Domestic Violence Hotline, battered women's shelters, and trainings for police, prosecutors and court officials have all contributed to the decline in domestic violence since VAWA was first authorized in 1994 and reauthorized in 2000. Now, as VAWA is soon scheduled to expire, we hope that you will support its reauthorization once again. VAWA is more than good social policy; it is also good fiscal policy. The first VAWA, authorized in 1994, saved nearly $14.8 billion in net averted social costs. Reauthorization and full funding for all VAWA programs is a crucial investment in our communities, one that saves lives, saves money and saves the future of our nation.

In the calendar year of 2004, The Women's Center served over 900 victims of domestic violence through our counseling and shelter programs. Cut to VAWA funding would impact our ability to continue serving these women and children from our community. In addition to providing shelter, counseling and support groups, The Women's Center's staff serves as a vital link to educating the community regarding the impact domestic violence has on employers, schools, and families.

Without reauthorization and full funding for VAWA programs, women and children in Waukesha cannot access the services they need to escape from violence. The continued support of Congress is crucial to helping victims and their children find safety and security and build self-sufficiency. On behalf of The Women's Center representing the interests of victims of domestic violence in Waukesha County, we urge you to support the reauthorization of VAWA and full funding for all VAWA.

If you have any questions or need additional information, please contact Marie Kingsbury, Executive Director of The Women's Center at 262-522-3806. We look forward to working with you on these important issues.

Sincerely,

 Marie F. Kingsbury

Statement of Senator Patrick Leahy
Ranking Member, Judiciary Committee
Hearing on the Reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act
July 19, 2005

The enactment of the Violence Against Women Act over a decade ago marked an important national commitment to survivors of domestic violence and sexual assault. The bipartisan legislation on which we will hear testimony today, S. 1197, will further our goal of ending domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking. I am proud to join Senators Biden, Hatch, Specter and others as an original cosponsor of this important measure. I want to especially recognize Senator Biden for his continued commitment to ending violence against women and children.

Along with the Chairman, I welcome today an extraordinary panel of witnesses. With us is Diane Stuart, Director of the Office on Violence Against Women at the Justice Department and a number of leading advocates. They make VAWA work and a reality in the lives of women and children across the country. I thank them and salute them. A number of us fought for a long time to create OVW as an independent office within the Department of Justice. I am happy to note that, once given the opportunity, the office has thrived as an independent entity within the Department.

Earlier in my career as a county prosecutor in Vermont, I witnessed the devastating effects of domestic violence. Violence and abuse affect people of all walks of life every day and regardless of gender, race, culture, age, class or sexuality. Such violence is a crime and it is always wrong, whether the abuser is a family member, someone the victim is dating, a current or past spouse, boyfriend, or girlfriend, an acquaintance or a stranger.

The National Crime Victimization Survey estimates there were 691,710 non-fatal, violent incidents committed against victims by current and former spouses, boyfriends or girlfriends – also known as intimate partners -- during 2001. Of those incidents, 85 percent were against women. The rate of non-fatal intimate partner violence against women has fallen steadily since 1993, when the rate was 9.8 incidents per 1,000 people. In 2001, the number fell to 5.0 incidents per 1,000 people, nearly a 50 percent reduction, but still unacceptably high. Tragically, however, the survey found that 1,600 women were killed in 1976 by a current or former spouse or boyfriend, while in 2000 some 1,247 women were killed by their intimate partners.

Our Nation has made remarkable progress over the past 25 years in recognizing that domestic violence and sexual assault are crimes. We have responded with better laws, social support and coordinated community responses. Millions of women, men, children and families, however, continue to be traumatized by abuse, leading to increased rates of crime, violence and suffering.

The Violence Against Women Act has provided aid to law enforcement officers and prosecutors, helped stem domestic violence and child abuse, established training programs for victim advocates and counselors, and trained probation and parole officers who work with released sex offenders. Over the next few months, Congress has the opportunity to reauthorize VAWA and make improvements to vital core programs, tighten criminal penalties against domestic abusers, and create new solutions to other crucial aspects of domestic violence and sexual assault. This is an opportunity to help treat children like victims of violence, augment health care for rape victims, hold repeat offenders and Internet stalkers accountable, and help domestic violence victims keep their jobs.

Included in VAWA 2005 are reauthorizations of two programs that I initially sponsored that are vital to helping rural communities battle domestic violence in a setting in which isolation can make it more difficult for both victims and law enforcement. In a small, rural state like Vermont, our county and local law enforcement agencies rely heavily on cooperative, interagency efforts to combat and solve significant problems. That is why I sought to include the Rural Domestic Violence and Child Victimization Enforcement Grant Program as part of the original VAWA. This program helps make services available to rural victims and children by encouraging community involvement in developing a coordinated response to combat domestic violence, dating violence and child abuse. Adequate resources combined with sustained commitment will bring about significant improvements in rural areas to the lives of those victimized by domestic and sexual violence.

The Rural Grants Program section of VAWA 2005 reauthorizes and expands the existing education, training and services grant programs that address violence against women in rural areas. This provision renews the rural VAWA program, extends direct grants to state and local governments for services in rural areas and expands areas to include community collaboration projects in rural areas and the creation or expansion of additional victim services. This provision includes new language that expands the program coverage to sexual assault, child sexual assault and stalking. It also expands eligibility from rural states to rural communities, increasing access to rural sections of otherwise highly populated states. This section authorizes $55,000,000 annually for 2006 through 2010, which is an increase of $15 million per year.

The second grant program initiative on which I have focused is the Transitional Housing Assistance Grants for Victims of Domestic Violence, Dating Violence, Sexual Assault or Stalking. This program, which became law as part of the Prosecutorial Remedies and Other Tools to End the Exploitation of Children Today (PROTECT) Act of 2003, authorizes grants for transitional housing and related services for people fleeing domestic violence, sexual assault or stalkers. At a time when the availability of affordable housing has sunk to record lows, transitional housing for victims is especially needed. Today more than 50 percent of homeless individuals are women and children fleeing domestic violence. We have a clear problem that is in dire need of a solution. This program is part of the solution.

Transitional housing allows women to bridge the gap between leaving violence in their homes and becoming self-sufficient. Our bill, VAWA 2005, amends the existing transitional housing program by expanding the current direct-assistance grants to include funds for operational, capital and renovation costs. Other changes include providing services to victims of dating violence, sexual assault and stalking; extending the length of time for receipt of benefits to match that used by Housing and Urban Development transitional housing programs; and updating the existing program to reflect the concerns of the service provision community. The provision would increase the authorized funding for the grant from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000.

The Violence Against Women Act passed the Senate in 1994. We declared that the United States takes the problem of violence against women seriously. The law declared that “[a]ll persons within the United States shall have the right to be free from crimes of violence motivated by gender,” and we enacted meaningful reform. Regrettably, in United States v. Morrison, the Supreme Court struck down portions of the Act. That case involved a young woman who was allegedly raped by two classmates while attending college. Our law allowed a victim of violence to seek civil remedies when the violence was motivated by gender-based animus. Congress showed in its findings that justice is too often denied to women and a majority of states supported our law and the civil remedy it provided. By a narrow 5 to 4 vote, the Supreme Court struck down this portion of the Violence Against Women Act and second-guessed the judgment of Congress on this remedial cause of action.

This is a stark reminder of what is at stake as we soon consider a nomination to fill the current vacancy on the United States Supreme Court. Consistent with our oaths of office and allegiance to the Constitution, a majority of the United States Senate, the House of Representatives, the President of the United States and four of the nine Justices on the Supreme Court thought the remedial action we provided to victims of violence constitutional. Sadly, it was not enough to save this important aspect of our legislative program from a declaration of unconstitutionality by an activist Supreme Court.

Now it is time to strengthen the prevention of violence against women and children and its devastating costs and consequences. This legislation is an important part of our efforts to increase awareness of the problem of violence, to save the lives of battered women, rape victims and children who grow up with violence and to continue progress against the devastating tragedy of domestic violence. I urge prompt action on this legislation.

TESTIMONY OF MARY LOU LEARY
Executive Director
National Center for Victims of Crime

On the Violence Against Women Act of 2005

Good morning, Chairman Specter and Senator Leahy, and other members of the Committee. My name is Mary Lou Leary, and I am the Executive Director of the National Center for Victims of Crime. We appreciate the opportunity to appear before you this morning to talk about this important legislation, the Violence Against Women Act of 2005.

The National Center is one of the leading national advocacy organizations that works to secure rights and resources for victims of crime. We've just marked our 20th anniversary. Since our founding, we have worked with public and nonprofit agencies throughout the country, providing information, support, and technical assistance to thousands of victims, victim service providers, allied professionals, and advocates.

Violence against women is a key focus of our work. Approximately one-half of all calls to our nationwide toll-free Helpline involve sexual assault, stalking, and domestic and dating violence. Dating violence is a priority for the adolescents in our teen victim project, which empowers teens to address the issues that are important to them. Our Stalking Resource Center, funded by the Office on Violence Against Women, has trained thousands of criminal justice officials and victim service providers on how best to combat the deadly crime of stalking. And our groundbreaking 1992 study, Rape in America, provided important information for the first Violence Against Women Act. In short, responding to violence against women is at the heart of the National Center's work.

The prevalence of these crimes ought to shock us; the ramifications ought to alarm us.

- At least twenty-one percent of murder victims were killed by their spouse or intimate partner; seventy-nine percent of those victims were women.¹
- Thirty-three percent of teens report experiencing violence in a dating relationship.²
- One in twelve women and one in forty-five men will be stalked in their lifetime.³
- Nearly five percent of college women are sexually assaulted during any given calendar year.⁴
- Native American women are victims of violence at more than twice the rate of other women.⁵

We know that victims of these crimes experience more anxiety, depression, substance abuse, and thoughts of suicide than non-victims.⁶ Women who were victims of personal violence experience chronic physical symptoms even decades after the crime.⁷ The total cost of sexual assault to victims was $42 million in 2003.⁸ We also know that children who witness domestic violence show higher levels of aggression, disobedience, anxiety, and withdrawal.⁹

The importance of this legislation, therefore, cannot be overstated. First adopted in 1994, and then reauthorized in 2000, the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) represented a great step forward in ending domestic and sexual violence, dating violence, and stalking.

To illustrate the impact of VAWA on the lives of women in this country, I want to tell you about a woman we work with, named Donna. In the mid-80s, Donna's marriage turned violent. Her husband began to beat her regularly. In 1987, after he threatened her with a sawed off shotgun, Donna fled her home and called the police. After an hour, an officer responded to the payphone and, without getting out of his squad car, told her there was nothing he could do. In 1989, after a particularly violent episode, she again called the police. This time, the officers responded to the home. They told her husband to walk around the block, and they left. When her husband returned, he exploded with rage, became very violent, and told Donna if she ever called the police again he'd kill her before they could get there.

Donna and her young children soon left her husband, but he would stalk them and find them each time they moved, and beat or rape her for leaving him. In 1994, she called 911 again, but no one ever responded.

Within two years, he found her again. He beat her, sexually assaulted her, and attempted to smother her while her children were in the next room. Unexpectedly, he demanded that she go to the store to buy him a soda. Convinced she would be killed if she returned home, Donna called the police from the store. This time, things were different.

This time, three deputies arrived and arrested her husband. They gave her information about obtaining a restraining order and legal help. A rape advocate at the hospital provided her guidance and support. A program through the District Attorney's Office and the local women's shelter helped her during the court process. The shelter's legal program also helped her through divorce and restraining order proceedings. Her husband was convicted of spousal rape, spousal abuse, and false imprisonment and sentenced to eight years in prison. He continued to stalk her from prison, violating the restraining order 300 times. In 1998, he was granted a retrial, which meant he would be released from prison. The newly formed and VAWA-funded Domestic Violence Response Team (DVRT) re-arrested him at the prison gates and took him back to county jail to await trial. Donna was provided a body alarm and emergency cell phone, and a legal advocate helped her obtain a lifetime restraining order.

After retrial the perpetrator was again convicted and returned to prison. When he was released in 2000 after serving his sentence, Donna was again provided support and assistance with her safety. Not only was she provided a cell phone and alarm, local police regularly drove by her home to check for anything suspicious.

Donna went on to found one of the country's first support groups for stalking victims, and today is a trainer with our Stalking Resource Center. Her personal story illustrates the dramatic difference VAWA has made to the lives of victims across the country. It has created a sea change in our national response to the crimes of stalking, sexual assault, domestic and dating violence.

VAWA's Achievements

Because you will hear from others about the legislation's impact on domestic and dating violence, I will focus my remarks this morning on VAWA's importance in addressing sexual assault and stalking.

VAWA has encouraged criminal justice, victim service, healthcare, and other professionals to collaborate to improve our response to victims. Through VAWA, especially through STOP grants,¹⁰ jurisdictions have trained thousands of front line professionals about sexual violence and how to coordinate efforts to pursue justice for sexual assault victims. Such training has helped many jurisdictions to form Sexual Assault Response Teams, or SARTs.

SARTs make a world of difference for victims. A sexual assault victim who reports the crime and is met with a well-coordinated and sensitive team of professionals is better able to cooperate with the criminal justice process. SARTs also ensure that crucial evidence is correctly collected and preserved, accurate accounts of the crime are recorded, and services that victims need are offered immediately. This team effort not only improves the chances that offenders will be held accountable, it ensures that survivors of sexual violence are treated with sensitivity and respect as they navigate the criminal justice system.

STOP has also funded special prosecutors and police units for sexual assault and stalking. For example, the anti-stalking program at the Alexandria, Virginia, police department—founded through VAWA dollars—is a model for the country. Significantly, the success of the program has led the mayor to provide local funding for the program, which no longer relies on VAWA dollars. The Alexandria anti-stalking program is one of many true VAWA success stories throughout the country.

VAWA has also funded Rape Prevention and Education grants, which support outreach and training programs to increase understanding of the nature, incidence, and impact of sexual violence. VAWA has changed the way our nation responds to victims of sexual assault and stalking. Because we all are here today to reauthorize and expand this important Act, we know you share our commitment to build on this success.

Ongoing Need

VAWA 2005 would reauthorize these successful programs. But even more importantly, it would provide a more comprehensive response to violence against women. Two years ago, the National Center and our colleagues began to examine gaps in our services to victims of sexual assault. We surveyed the field, and overwhelmingly, sexual assault programs told us they were desperately short of funds to meet the needs of victims.

We heard about waiting lists for counseling in Illinois, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, and other states. In some places, victims are being placed in group counseling to provide them with some form of support while they are waiting for individual counseling. Rape victims deserve better than this. We must make sure that when victims of sexual assault reach out, they find the help they need.

Many of this Committee's members come from rural states, or states with large rural areas. Rape crisis centers in rural areas across the country are struggling to serve multiple counties with very little staff. Many states report that rural areas often have no services at all. For example, the state of Texas has 254 counties: fifty of those counties have no rape crisis services at all. This situation means that victims must travel long distances to meet with a counselor or get other assistance. In some parts of Arizona, rape victims must travel an average of 250 miles to get to the closest crisis center, and in Iowa, up to 100 miles for services. Alabama reports similar difficulty. In many places, victims simply cannot make the trip, so they suffer alone. Programs in rural areas need increased funding to help bring victims to programs, send advocates to victims, develop satellite offices in rural areas, or make other innovations to improve access to services.

Rape crisis centers also told us that while their communities include many underserved populations—including racial and ethnic minorities and victims with disabilities—they have no funds to extend their outreach or develop specialized services. In many places, service providers stated that although there are large ethnic and racial populations within their communities, few victims from those populations are accessing services. The need is great: for example, in San Francisco, more than 100 languages are spoken and in Boston, more than 110 languages and dialects. New York State lacks culturally specific programs to serve its Native American population. Massachusetts has only a handful of certified American Sign Language interpreters, so rape victims who are deaf sometimes must wait months for help filing a police report. More funding is required to meet such needs for targeted services.

VAWA 2005: A Better National Response to Sexual Assault

In response to this overwhelming need, VAWA 2005 would provide increased resources to serve sexual assault victims. It includes, for the first time, a dedicated federal funding stream for sexual assault programs through the proposed Sexual Assault Services Act (SASA). SASA would fund direct services to victims, including general intervention and advocacy, accompaniment through the medical and criminal justice processes, support services, and related assistance. SASA funds could be used by state, territorial, and tribal coalitions to provide technical assistance and training relating to sexual assault.

SASA also promotes targeted services to reach racial and ethnic minorities. Through a funding set-aside, SASA would ensure that culturally-specific community-based organizations are able to craft services for victims that are relevant to their cultural needs. Partnerships with existing organizations will allow for the most effective use of funds.

SASA would also help Native American communities provide services to victims of sexual assault. Native women experience sexual assault at nearly double the rate of other women, but services are sorely lacking.¹¹ SASA sets aside funds for these communities to establish rape crisis services.

SASA is an important new program within VAWA 2005 and a priority for the National Center. But VAWA 2005 includes many other provisions to improve our response to sexual assault victims. It increases funding for assistance to victims in rural areas and includes for the first time a set-aside for services to sexual assault victims. It also promotes systemic improvements for sexual assault victims. The bill would use grant conditions to prohibit the polygraphing of sexual assault victims and to ensure that victims aren't required to seek insurance coverage to pay for their forensic exams.

A Better Response to Stalking

This historic legislation will strengthen our ability to stop stalkers by amending two federal code provisions used to prosecute them. To keep pace with changing technology and to combat stalkers who use that technology to harass their victims, VAWA 2005 expands the Communications Act. That law, which already prohibits harassing communications via telephone, would also prohibit such communications via the Internet.

The bill would also amend the federal interstate stalking law to keep pace with technological developments and our growing understanding of the crime. First, it would expand the definition of prohibited conduct to include surveillance through the use of new technologies. Stalkers can now use global positioning systems, or GPS, to track their victims' every move, but our current federal law does not cover this type of invasive and terrifying surveillance.

Secondly, it redefines the harm a victim must sustain for an act to constitute stalking. Currently, a victim must fear "bodily injury or death" before the law applies. However, the harm victims experience may be varied and complex. Victims may fear they will lose their job or that the stalker will hurt a pet, other people, or property. This fear may be no less life-altering than fearing death or injury. Victims may feel they must relocate or change jobs to escape the stalker, sometimes repeatedly. Given the danger posed by stalkers, the criminal justice system must be able to intervene before the victim fears bodily injury or death. VAWA 2005, therefore, adds "substantial emotional harm" to the list of reactions a victim may have as a result of the stalkers' actions.

VAWA 2005 would also expand several current grant programs to help communities create appropriate responses to stalking. For example, entities could use Grants to Encourage Arrests funds to address all forms of stalking. The bill includes stalking in other appropriate provisions as well, such as the housing initiatives, teen programs, and the rural grants program.

Building a Better Future for Victims

As much as this bill will do for today's victims of sexual assault, domestic and dating violence, and stalking, VAWA 2005 is remarkable for its forward-looking approach to reducing the number of future victims. It includes programs to serve children and teens who witness intimate partner violence or begin to experience violence from their own dating partners. It funds counseling for children exposed to intimate partner violence; training to help youth workers connect young people exposed to violence to programs that can help them; and programs to promote collaboration and cross-training between domestic violence programs and child protective services. It also reauthorizes the Safe Havens program, which prevents violence during child visitation.

My time here today does not allow me to touch on many of the other important provisions of this bill that our colleagues and Senate sponsors have crafted so carefully. These include provisions to protect the economic security of victims, grants to promote a safe and effective response to violence by healthcare professionals, and protections for immigrant victims of violence.

Building on Success

We commend this Committee for its continuing dedication to ending violence against women. We especially thank Chairman Specter and Senators Biden and Hatch for their longstanding commitment to this issue. With the support of Congress and the frontline work of thousands of advocates and criminal justice professionals across the country, Americans can be confident that we will build on our success, expand our reach, and work to end sexual assault, stalking, domestic and dating violence.

In the last 25 years, our nation has made tremendous progress in understanding and addressing domestic violence and sexual abuse. The criminal justice system has been transformed, a nationwide network of shelters and programs has been created, and individuals in diverse communities have been educated about the horrors of abuse. Other systems, such as child welfare, are beginning to address the needs of women victims of family violence as well. That work is essential. It has saved countless lives. It is also unfinished and must be strengthened in the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA).

The tragic effects that violence has on families are indisputable. As a nation, we must fight this epidemic in every way possible. That is why prevention and early identification of violent situations are so important. Much of the focus so far in dealing with violence has been on incarcerating perpetrators and providing resources to victims of battering. This work is absolutely indispensable, but does not offer a complete solution. In order to break the cycle of violence and to keep future generations of women and children safe, we need to dedicate more research, greater attention, and many more resources to preventing violence from taking root and intervening much earlier to address violence.

Because the needs of children and youth have already been thoroughly addressed in other testimony, we choose to focus here on needed efforts within the health care system to address domestic and sexual violence. We strongly believe that significant advancements in training, research and funding in this field would return large dividends in safety and security for women, children and families. That is why we support Title V in the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (S. 1197), which would provide resources to train health care providers and students in the health professions about how to identify, treat, document and refer, where appropriate, victims of domestic and sexual violence.

Health Care System's Role in Ending Violence Against Women and Children

The health care system has always played an important role in identifying and preventing serious public health problems, and we believe it can and must play a unique and pivotal role in domestic and sexual violence prevention and intervention. Virtually every American woman interacts with the health care system at some point in her life - whether it is for routine care, pregnancy, childbirth, illness, injury or to seek care for a child or elder parent. Indeed, many women turn to their health care providers more often and long before they call the police or contact a domestic violence shelter. That is why we, like most of the country's major professional health care associations, such as the American Medical Association, the American Nurses Association, the American Psychological Association, the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, and the American Academy of Pediatrics support screening for and responding to victims of abuse in health care settings. Yet virtually no federal funds are dedicated to enhancing the health care system's response to victims of abuse.

Effects of Violence on Health

Domestic violence is a health care problem of epidemic proportions. In addition to the immediate trauma caused by abuse, domestic violence contributes to a number of chronic health problems that plague our citizens and tax our health care system. These include depression, alcohol and substance abuse, and sexually transmitted diseases such as HIV/AIDS. Domestic violence also often limits the ability of women to manage other chronic illnesses such as diabetes and hypertension.¹ Family violence is directly linked with eight out of 10 of the Healthy People 2010 leading health indicators and is more prevalent than diabetes, breast cancer and cervical cancer ---- conditions that health care providers routinely screen for. Yet few health care providers screen patients for domestic violence. That needs to change.

Women who are abused also frequently seek health care for illnesses and injuries resulting from the violence they face. In fact, a November 1998 report of the National Institute of Justice and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found that women make 693,933 visits to health care providers per year as a result of injuries resulting from physical assault. The majority of these visits are for treatment of injuries that were inflicted by intimate partners.

In 2000, 1,247 women were murdered by their intimate partner – that’s more than three per day.² Pregnant women, in particular, are at risk. Each year, approximately 324,000 pregnant women are battered in the United States,³ and several recent studies have shown that homicide is either the first or second leading cause of death for pregnant women and recently pregnant women. Abused pregnant women also are more likely to have low birth-weight babies and experience other complications in pregnancy.⁴ Since we know that better training and response from health care providers could help reduce these shocking numbers, it is hard to understand why we haven't done more to improve the health care response to domestic and sexual violence. Congress has a chance to correct that when it reauthorizes VAWA this year.

Screening and Identifying Victims of Abuse is Lacking

A recent study showed that 44 percent of victims of domestic violence spoke to someone about the abuse; 37 percent of those women spoke to their health care provider.⁵ While these numbers are encouraging, they are not high enough. In four different studies of survivors of domestic abuse, 70 to 81 percent of patients replied that they would like to have their healthcare providers ask privately about intimate partner violence.^{6,7,8,9} Another study showed that only 10 percent of doctors routinely screen for domestic violence during new patient visits. The number drops to 9 percent for routine screening during periodic checkups.¹⁰ This gap does not represent a failure of the health care system per se, but rather illuminates the need to further educate health care professionals about the benefits of these screenings. Research is establishing that interventions in the health care setting can increase the safety of pregnant, battered women, but more research and resources are needed to educate health care providers about the benefits of these screenings for all women.¹¹

VAWA – Title V

Title V of S. 1197 would do just this. The health care provisions included in the reauthorization of VAWA would train health professional students on how to properly screen, treat, document and refer victims of domestic and sexual violence and would fund partnerships among public health departments, private health insurers and victim service providers to appropriately respond to victims of violence. In addition, it would fund research and evaluation on the most effective interventions within the health care setting to address domestic and sexual violence.

Because domestic violence is so prevalent and has such detrimental health consequences there is an urgent need for more serious and ongoing attention from the health system and from our elected officials. We are heartened by the actions of this committee and the efforts of many Senators on behalf of battered women and their children. Title V of VAWA will make a tremendous difference to victims of abuse. By funding collaborations between public health and advocates for victims of abuse, by ensuring that medical schools include family violence as part of their curricula, and by supporting research on family violence interventions in health care settings this legislation will help ensure that women at risk can receive more support and that a full system of care and services are available to them. It is a critical step in our ongoing efforts to one day end violence against women and children, and it will save countless lives. For this we thank you and offer you our fullest support in passing the Violence Against Women Act of 2005.

Thank you.

Re: Support for VAWA Workplace Provisions

Dear Senators Specter, Biden and Hatch:

The Legal Aid Society-Employment Law Center writes in strong support of adding workplace protections to the VAWA to assist survivors of domestic violence in maintaining employment so critical to family economic stability.

Statistics show that almost half of domestic violence victims in the U.S. lost their jobs because of domestic violence.¹ Maintaining employment is often an unattainable goal for many victims of abuse because the violence in their lives and the injuries that flow from the abuse necessarily affects job performance, as documented in several studies. A 1992 study found that 96% of employed victims of domestic violence surveyed experienced some type of work-related problem, a number that has surely remained high, as more victims are willing to report their experiences.² Many women experience trauma, depression, or other mental or physical disabilities, which can undermine their ability to maintain employment.³ For example, studies of battered women in shelters or receiving other services have found that as many as 60 to 80% of the sample experienced symptoms of post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), which frequently results in job performance problems, such as missed workdays.⁴ A 2004 study released by the Maine Department of Labor and Family Crisis Services revealed that 67% of victims reported being harassed while at work by their abusers; 96% reported that domestic abuse negatively affected their job performance.⁵

As you know, California is one of the few states in the nation with statutory job protection for DV victims who take time off work to comply with a subpoena, obtain a restraining order, or obtain any other injunctive relief that would help ensure the health, safety or welfare of herself or her child or children. California law further provides unpaid, job-protected leave to employees who identify themselves as domestic violence victims and who work for employers with 25 or more employees who take time off to seek medical services and psychological counseling for injuries caused by domestic violence; obtain services from a domestic violence shelter, program or rape crisis center as a result of domestic violence; and to participate in safety planning or take other actions to enhance safety from future domestic violence, including temporary or permanent relocation.

These provisions of the California Labor Code have been in effect for approximately five years. Nevertheless, most employers do not know about their obligations to provide job-protected leaves of absence to victims of domestic violence. Similarly, employees also are unaware of their rights. Although many employers informally accommodate victims of domestic violence, we find that the statutory protections often provide employees with the only avenue to protect their jobs and address the safety concerns of them and their families. Although there are no exact numbers available, our experience shows that only a modest number of employees are even aware of their rights under these laws and therefore, few workers access their leave rights and file complaints of discrimination.

We believe that establishing job-protection for victims of domestic violence at the federal level will enhance our existing state protections and knowledge about these important workplace issues. Please contact me if I can be of any further assistance.

Very truly yours,

Elizabeth Kristen

Introduction:

In 1994, Congress passed the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), which included specific provisions to help battered immigrants escape their abusive U.S. citizen or lawful permanent resident spouses by providing the ability for battered immigrants to 'self-petition' for immigration status. Understanding that the category of immigrant victims helped by VAWA was too limited, Congress in VAWA 2000, expanded this relief to offer help to other immigrant victims of domestic violence (who are not married to U.S. citizen or lawful permanent residents) and to victims of trafficking, rape, sexual assault, child abuse, and other violent crimes who seek help in the justice system.

VAWA's unequivocal intent was to provide immigrant victims of domestic violence, sexual assault and trafficking access to safety and assistance. However, in 1996 when Congress severely restricted the ability of Legal Services Corporation (LSC) funded programs to serve immigrants, many victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, child abuse, trafficking and other crimes were cut off from help from legal services lawyers. LSC funded programs were not permitted to use any of their funds, whether from LSC or other sources, to serve certain categories of immigrants. Congress subsequently permitted LSC programs to use non-LSC funds to provide limited representation to some immigrants who are victims of domestic violence, but only when the abuser was a spouse or parent. This forces LSC funded legal services programs, even when they were the only agency providing legal services to victims in the community or region, to turn away many immigrant victims whose abusers were their boyfriends or other family member or who were victims of sexual assault or stranger rape. In 2000, trafficking victims who qualified to receive a T visa were granted access to legal representation by LSC funded programs. As a result, LSC funded programs that are often the most experienced legal services providers, cannot provide services to many victims who are eligible for immigration protections under VAWA. Everyday immigrant victims of sexual assault and immigrant victims of domestic violence who are not married to their abusers are being turned away from LSC-funded legal services programs.

The following are real-life stories of immigrant victims across the country who currently are not eligible for legal services assistance under the LSC restrictions. Many of these immigrant victims are in areas where the only legal assistance available for low-income individuals are the LSC-funded programs. These stories illustrate the dangers caused to immigrant victims of domestic violence, sexual assault and trafficking when they cannot access help from skilled attorneys who work for LSC programs. Legislation is needed that will guarantee that LSC-funded legal services programs can offer a range of life-saving legal assistance to immigrant victims of domestic violence, sexual assault and trafficking.

Legal Momentum and the National Network to End Violence Against Immigrant Victims are working with Catholic Charities U.S.A., the National Legal Aid and Defender's Association and the Center for Law and Social Policy to obtain legislation that will guarantee that –

- Any LSC funded agency can use any of its funding (LSC/Federal/foundation/private) provide legal representation to any victim of domestic violence, sexual assault, child abuse or trafficking without regard to the victim's immigration status.

ILLINOIS

Chicago

After coming to the United States, Sara met and fell in love with her boyfriend Samuel. They were dating for many years, lived together and over the course of the relationship they had three children together. Throughout the relationship, Samuel routinely physically, sexually and psychologically abused Sara. Samuel would often drink heavily and was particularly abusive when intoxicated. Sara called the police for protection on numerous occasions, but had difficulty communicating with them and when the police arrived Samuel was never arrested. Sara did learn about protection orders and eventually obtained a protection order against Samuel. Samuel ignored the protection order and after the protection order was issued, Samuel's abuse of Sara escalated significantly. The abuse became more severe. Samuel beat Sara on numerous occasions, threatening her if she took more steps to stop his abuse. During one of the more severe incidents, Samuel threatened to kill Sara. As part of a subsequent assault, Samuel held a knife to Sara's stomach, dragged her by the hair, and then raped her.

The worst assault by Samuel on Sara left Sara unconscious in their apartment following a severe beating. Samuel knocked out Sara's front teeth, dragged her and beat her repeatedly. Following this incident Samuel fled from the house. When the police arrived they found Sara lying on the floor unconscious. The police arranged to have Sara admitted to the hospital. Sara had bruises and burns on her arms, back, knees and legs, and was in a coma. Sara spent many days in the Intensive Care Unit of the hospital. She came out of the coma and is still going through a long, physically and emotionally painful recovery. Sara is cooperating with police who are currently pursuing several criminal charges against Samuel. Although Sara was able to find legal help to file her immigration case for a U Visa as a cooperating witness in Samuel's criminal prosecution, she could not receive help from an LSC funded legal services program because her abuser, Samuel, was not her husband. Sara has been granted interim relief by immigration authorities in her U visa case. However, the legal needs of Sara and her three U.S. citizen children extend beyond immigration relief. Sara needs legal assistance to help her obtain legal custody of her children, receive child support, and to help her enforce her protection order. Sara is still looking for legal representation. Because Sara and Samuel never married, she is ineligible to receive LSC-funded assistance, leaving her with few options, if any, to obtain legal representation in her much needed family law case.

Yesenia came to the United States from Mexico along with her mother. When she was 13 years old, living in the United States in her mother's home and attending school, she met and started dating Carlos. Yesenia and Carlos' relationship quickly became sexually and physically abusive. Yesenia's mother did not approve of their relationship, so she kicked Yesenia out of her house. With nowhere to go, facing living homeless on the street, Yesenia moved in with Carlos. Once they began living together, Carlos forbade Yesenia from ever leaving the house. He forced Yesenia to stop attending classes at school. Yesenia became isolated from her family and friends. Her only support came from Carlos. Carlos' sexual abuse of Yesenia escalated. Often Yesenia would try to fight off Carlos' advances, but that only made Carlos angrier. As part of his abuse, Carlos worked to undermine Yesenia's self-esteem. He repeatedly told Yesenia that if she was not with him, no one would have her and she would have no one.

One day following a particularly brutal beating, when Yesenia was 17 years old, she finally found the courage to call the police for help. In that incident Carlos repeatedly struck her on her face and head. He hit her and slapped her so hard that Carlos split Yesenia's lip. The police arrived and immediately arrested Carlos. He was charged with Aggravated Criminal Sexual Assault and Sexual Abuse. Yesenia sought legal assistance to obtain a protection order against Carlos and to file for immigration relief as a crime victim witness under the U visa immigration protections. The LSC funded lawyers were forced due to restrictions to turn her away. Despite not being able to access legal representation from an LSC funded program, Yesenia was able to obtain an order of protection, prohibiting her boyfriend Carlos from coming near her or contacting her at any location including her school and home. Yesenia is back living with her mother she found a non-LSC funded program to assist her in filing for interim relief pursuant to the U Visa and was approved. Yesenia is back in school and is working with her U visa employment authorization. Yesenia is very lucky to receive legal assistance with her U visa because she is ineligible to receive LSC-funded assistance because she is undocumented and was abused by her boyfriend. There are many more immigrant victims who are turned away because of the LSC restrictions. The wait lists at non-LSC funded immigration programs are often months long.

Maria, a woman from Ecuador, met Miguel at the insurance company where they both worked, and shortly after meeting they started dating. After a few months of dating they moved in together and began living together. Maria learned after moving in with Miguel that he had a criminal record, and used and sold marijuana and cocaine. Miguel and Maria were living together for almost five years, but they never married.

Miguel beat Maria almost daily, leaving bruises and marks on her skin that were often so severe that Maria could not go to work without the beatings being discovered. It became hard for Maria to keep her job, particularly so when Miguel sold Maria's car for money to buy drugs, but she continued working when she could. One year on Thanksgiving, Maria wanted to do something nice for Miguel. She surprised Miguel by using money she saved up to buy a turkey and champagne. He was so angry with her for hiding money from him, and he beat her up and took her money to buy marijuana. She called the police, but by the time the police arrived Miguel had left the home and he was not arrested. Several weeks later Miguel asked Maria for money, and when she only had ten dollars, he beat her until she bled. Miguel was arrested and convicted for possession of drugs and guns. Maria cooperated in Miguel's drug and gun conviction. However, Maria was so afraid of Miguel and so ashamed of the abuse that Miguel convinced Maria to drop the domestic battery charges.

When Miguel was released from jail, he attended regular counseling and stopped drinking for a while. Maria really wanted to believe that Miguel would change. Miguel was very convincing and Maria agreed to move in with him again. Soon after, Maria and Miguel reconciled Maria got pregnant and they had a baby girl, Beatrice. However, once Miguel knew that Maria was back for good, the abuse resumed and escalated once again. Now Miguel routinely threatened to take Beatrice away from Maria. Miguel told Maria that he could have her sent back to Ecuador and she would never see Beatrice again. In addition to emotional and physical abuse, Miguel would force

Maria to be present in Miguel's drug selling world. Maria finally decided to leave Miguel when he injured her in a violent attack that included punching her in the eye and twisting her arm. Her injuries were so severe that Maria had to be treated at the hospital. This time Maria agreed to obtain an order of protection. She moved into a domestic violence shelter and prepared to testify against Miguel at his criminal domestic violence trial. Testifying against her boyfriend who was the father of her child was one of the hardest things she ever had to do. Miguel was convicted of domestic battery.

As a cooperating witness in Miguel's criminal domestic violence case, Maria is eligible to apply for U visa interim relief. She has been able to file her U visa case with assistance from non-LSC funded immigration attorneys and is awaiting a decision. Maria also needs civil legal assistance to obtain full, legal custody of Beatrice, as well as child support. Maria does not qualify for LSC-funded assistance and currently cannot find anyone to represent her in her family law case. Maria is on the waiting list for a non-LSC funded legal services program, and is struggling with working and raising Beatrice, while at the same time trying to save money to pay for a private attorney. She is afraid that because Miguel has legal status he will bring a custody case against her and win custody of Beatrice. Maria also wants to ensure that when Miguel is released from jail that he is only granted visitation that is supervised and that will be safe for both Beatrice and Maria.

KANSAS

Kansas City

Juanita is a Mexican German Mennonite woman who was living with her husband Jose in Western Kansas. Juanita was living in America on a visitor's visa. Juanita and Jose were both Mennonites. They lived in an area of Kansas that was highly populated by Mennonites, including a group of Mennonite men who were involved in a large-scale marijuana trafficking ring. Juanita's husband, Jose, had previously been friends with many of these men until he learned of their illegal and dangerous drug trafficking activities. Soon after his discovery of the drug trafficking, Jose began working for the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) as an undercover agent working as an insider in the criminal ring. Juanita often helped Jose with his undercover investigations of the drug traffickers. Juanita used to write down license plate numbers of the men's trucks when they stopped by the house. Throughout this time, the drug traffickers considered Juanita and Jose their friends. The traffickers had no knowledge that both Juanita and Jose were both working with the DEA. Jose received payment for his work.

One day, Jose mysteriously disappeared. Using information that Jose and Juanita had provided, the district attorney was able to get some insight into what happened to Jose. Jose and Juanita's undercover work and the evidence they collected led to the arrest, prosecution and conviction of eighteen members of the trafficking ring. One of these men was a main leader of the group, whose arrest and conviction was a considerable success for the DEA. During one of the trafficker's testimony at the criminal trial, he revealed what happened to Jose. According to him, when the men learned of Jose's involvement with the DEA they kidnapped him. They then tortured him for two weeks before they threw his body in the lake to drown. His body has never been found. Since then Juanita has received threats and rocks have been thrown through her window.

Juanita and her two children are victims of Jose's murder. Juanita qualifies to file for and receive crime victim visas and to cooperate in the prosecution of the traffickers for the murder of Jose.

Currently, Juanita and her two children are struggling to survive on their own without their husband and father, Jose. The trafficking ring has a large network that is very active both in the U.S. and in Juanita's hometown in Mexico. The ongoing threats from the traffickers in the U.S. have terrorized Juanita and her children. She is very afraid of what will happen to herself and her children if she is forced to return to Mexico where U.S. laws cannot protect her against the traffickers Juanita and Jose helped to convict. Juanita is seeking a lawyer who can help her file her U visa case through which she can attain work authorization that will allow her to move away from the dangers in her community in Kansas to a safer location where she can raise her family without fear. Her community is now helping to provide financial and emotional support and Juanita is doing odd jobs around the town to make some money. Despite the great services her husband Juan and she herself provided the government in the drug prosecution, and despite the fact that she qualifies to receive U visa immigration protection as a murder victim, she cannot find legal assistance because of restrictions on Legal Service Corporation funded programs that require that undocumented crime victims must be turned away. There are no exceptions in Legal Service Corporation funding restrictions for U visa eligible crime victims like Juanita. Juanita is looking for a non-LSC funded program to help her but there are very few in the area and those few that exist are extremely overbooked.

Luz is from Mexico and was living in Kansas with her 2 daughters and son, ages 15, 10, and 7 respectively. One day, Luz and her children and a friend were in a Payless Shoe Store together. As they were walking up to the register to purchase their shoes, a man approached them and pulled out a gun. Everyone in the store screamed and the man yelled for all of them to shut up. The man demanded money from the woman at the cash register. Luz was looking right at the robber, she was terrified. The man barked at Luz to stop staring at him. She tried to look away but her head felt frozen. When she didn't move, the man pointed the gun directly at Luz's face. The younger daughter, only ten years old, moved towards her mother out of fear that he would hurt her mom. The man then grabbed the girl and threw her to the ground. Amidst the screaming, the man grabbed the money from the cashier and ran out the door. Once the man left, the friend who was with Luz and was pregnant was rushed to the hospital. She had suffered from a nervous breakdown due to the robbery and nearly lost her unborn child. Luz's eldest daughter described the event as the scariest moment of her life, something she will never be able to forget.

After the robbery, Luz could qualify for U visa interim relief as a robbery victim, due to the threat on her life by the robber with the gun and the assault on her oldest daughter. She is willing to cooperate with the police investigation of the robbery. In order to get the U visa, however, Luz needed legal assistance. She was turned away because she does not qualify for help from the Legal Services Corporation funded program because although she qualifies as a violent crime victim to file for and receive legal immigration status, she is currently undocumented. There are very few non-LSC funded programs in her area. Luckily, Luz did find one organization that was willing to help her apply for the U visa and explain her options. This organization explained that Luz did not have to fear deportation as a consequence of helping the police. Now that Luz did not fear the police coming after her, she and her children were a large help in the criminal investigation. Both Luz and her younger daughter testified in the preliminary hearing and the man was consequently convicted on aggravated assault and armed robbery. Luz needed legal assistance in order to help her family, and in turn, the police. With the doors of the LSC funded program closed to them finding this critical legal assistance is far more difficult for immigrant victims like Luz and her children.

MARYLAND

The following stories illustrate the dangers caused to immigrant victims of domestic violence, sexual assault and trafficking when they cannot access help from skilled attorneys who work for Legal Services Corporation Funded programs. Programs that are not LSC-funded are inundated with cases that legal services-funded agencies are unable to take. In Maryland, immigrant victims have a particularly difficult time obtaining legal representation in family court cases including protection order actions and in contested custody cases in which their abuser is seeking custody of the children, contrary to the children's best interests. Many of these cases are ones that need and deserve the most legal advocacy. Legislation is needed that will guarantee that LSC funded legal services programs can offer a range of life saving legal assistance to immigrant victims of domestic violence, sexual assault and trafficking who turn to LSC funded agencies for help. The proposed legislation will help ensure that in the future immigrant victims of violence against women like those described below can receive the help they need.

Ana is an immigrant from Nicaragua. She met the father of her child, Pedro, on a visit to the United States three years ago. Pedro was very nice to Ana. He took her on dates and showed her around Maryland and Washington, D.C. After her vacation, Ana returned to Nicaragua and soon after learned that she was pregnant with Pedro's child. Ana contacted Pedro to tell him of her pregnancy. Pedro told Ana to return to the United States so that they could have the child together. He promised that he would take care of Ana and the baby. Ana secured another visa and returned to the United States.

Pedro and Ana started living together. It was only then that Ana learned that Pedro was an alcoholic. Pedro came home drunk almost every night. Pedro abused Ana psychologically. He controlled all of Ana's comings and goings. Pedro made Ana work in his family business. He totally isolated her and would not let her communicate or socialize with anyone except himself and his family. When Ana protested about Pedro's control and isolation of her and his drinking, Pedro threatened to call immigration authorities and threatened that if she complained to anyone about his treatment of her he would take away her child after she gave birth and she would never see the child again. This made Ana very afraid. When Ana was about to give birth, she had to get to the hospital alone because Pedro was too drunk to take her. After their daughter, Eva, was born, the abuse escalated to physical assaults. Ana did not want to call the police to report the physical abuse because she believed that Pedro would have her deported and he would keep her from seeing Eva. One night Pedro punched Ana in the face. Ana started bleeding. She was so afraid of Pedro that she called the police to stop his assault. The police came and removed Pedro from the home. Ana called a domestic violence program after hearing an advertisement on Spanish radio. With their help Ana received a protection order against Pedro, but since Ana was not represented by counsel, she did not know that she should request a custody award as part of her protection order. Pedro then went to court and obtained custody of Eva. Eva was unrepresented in the custody case. Pedro has not allowed Ana any visitation with Eva. Ana is receiving counseling and support from the local domestic violence program. They are trying to help Ana find an attorney for her custody case. She has not found anyone. Because Ana was never married to Pedro she is ineligible to receive legal assistance from the local legal services program. Ana desperately needs legal assistance.

Without an attorney, she will permanently lose custody of Eva and Pedro may be successful in cutting off Ana from seeing her child even through visitation.

Montgomery County

Madeline is an immigrant from Nigeria. She came to the United States in search of a better life for herself. She met Michael, a U.S. citizen, shortly after she arrived in Maryland. Michael and Madeline lived together and had one daughter together, Mary. Michael abused drugs and alcohol. He subjected Madeline to severe physical and mental abuse. He beat Madeline almost every other day. Even during her pregnancy, Michael beat Madeline. On one occasion Michael beat Madeline during her pregnancy so severely with punches to her face and body that she almost had a miscarriage. On another occasion, Michael slapped Madeline so hard in the head that she suffered permanent damage to her eardrum.

Things did not get better once their daughter was born. Whenever Mary cried, Michael tried to smother her to stop her from crying. Other times he would turn music up to a painful, unbearable sound level to drown out Mary's cries. The police were called to the home by neighbors during domestic violence incidents on numerous occasions. Madeline was afraid to seek help from the police or others about the domestic abuse because Michael threatened that he would call the immigration authorities on her and have her deported. Finally after a horrendous beating, the police arrested Michael. Madeline entered into a domestic violence shelter with Mary where she received counseling and other services. Madeline was able to receive legal assistance from a program that did not receive LSC funding. LSC restrictions prohibit LSC funded attorneys from representing Madeline because Michael and Madeline never married. With legal representation, Madeline was able to obtain a U visa certification from the police and she applied for U visa immigration relief. Her application contained an abundance of evidence and documentation of the abuse. She was granted U-visa interim relief and has since received employment authorization. She is currently living in a safe location with her daughter. Madeline is lucky to receive legal assistance. There are few places Madeline can access legal services because she is undocumented and was never married to Michael.

NEBRASKA

Omaha

Grace is an eighteen-year-old young girl who has resided with her father in the United States for three years. She came from Mexico with the hopes of helping her family find a better life. In 2003, she left her mother and siblings in Mexico and went to live with her biological father, Pepe, in Utah. In 2004 her father sexually assaulted Grace and raped her for a period of four months. As a result of the multiple rapes by her father Grace got pregnant and now has given birth to a six-month-old daughter. Grace's father fled to Nebraska with Grace and was ultimately reported to police authorities in Nebraska. Upon learning that the police were looking for him with a warrant for his arrest, Pepe, fled Nebraska and law enforcement authorities in neither Nebraska nor Utah have been able to locate him. The prosecution in the rape case therefore remains open until Pepe can be located and captured. Neither Grace, nor her family, knows anything about Pepe's whereabouts.

Grace faces continued harm due to the rape. Her family in Mexico blames her for Pepe's fate; they have isolated her and cut her off. Pepe's financial support to the family in Mexico has stopped. Her family blames Grace fully for the devastating effects of the rape on her. Her mental health and the trauma she sustained being raped and sexually assaulted by her father over a period of months cause her continuing emotional and physical pain and leave her facing burdens and frustrations of having no safe home to return to in Mexico and struggling with the burdens and frustrations of being a teenage mom trying to survive and support herself and her child in the United States. Grace wants to be able to finish high school and to have an opportunity to remain in the U.S. where she can hopefully cooperate someday in Pepe's prosecution and be protected by the U.S. legal system against his retaliation.

Grace has a number of legal needs. She wants to file for U visa immigration protection as a victim of incest and multiple rapes. She also qualifies to obtain a protection order against Pepe and to obtain a child support order against him. Grace is being helped by advocates at the YWCA in Omaha since May of 2004 and has been assisted with case management, counseling, and referrals to community services. Grace needs to apply for a U-visa but the YWCA cannot handle her legal needs. There are three non-LSC funded programs that could handle her domestic violence and immigration legal matters. Only one of these programs has an experienced immigration attorney. There are a number of private immigration attorneys in Omaha, yet not one client of the YWCA has ever been able to afford their services.

Last year the YWCA provided services and assistance to more than two hundred immigrant women many of whom were victims of violence against women – domestic violence and sexual assault in particular. About 70% of these women would not be eligible nor could they afford a private attorney in their immigration and civil cases. If LSC-funded programs could change their eligibility requirements many more immigrant victims in need would be able to obtain services from qualified LSC professional attorneys that could help them access the family court and immigration law relief they need to survive abuse and become self-sufficient and that they are legally entitled to receive.

Ana is an immigrant from Mexico. Ana and her abusive boyfriend, Raul, had been together for fifteen years. They had two children together, Lisa and Richard. Raul has subjected Ana to horrific physical and emotional abuse throughout their relationship. One of Raul's first beatings was when Ana was pregnant with their daughter, Lisa. Raul punched Ana in the face and kicked her in her back. The beating was so severe that Ana was afraid that she might suffer a miscarriage. On another occasion Raul came home very drunk and severely beat Ana, splitting her lip and leaving her nose black and blue. This was one of the worst beatings. Following this beating, Ana fled the house with the help of a neighbor, taking both children, Lisa and Richard, with her. She went to the police station to file a police report. The police took her to the hospital and took x-rays. The doctor said that Raul had broken her nose. The police said they would look for him to arrest him. Raul went into hiding to evade arrest. Raul was an alcoholic and a drug abuser. He would drink a six-pack of beer everyday and use cocaine.

Raul was very jealous and controlling. He frequently wrongly accused Ana of having relationships with other men. On one occasion, he accused her of sleeping with his brother and hit Ana on her head. Raul also accused her of having an affair with her boss. When Ana denied it, Raul tried to force her to have sex with him. Ana tried numerous times to leave Raul. In order to prevent Ana from leaving, he frequently took her and her children's passports and car. On one of the last occasions of abuse between them, Raul grabbed Ana by her hair and threw her against the trunk of the car. She called the police but he got away before they could get to him. Ana finally gathered the courage to leave Raul. Ana's leaving, however, did not stop Raul's violence towards her. Raul has stalked her, broken into her house and stolen her TV, clothes and some money. Since Ana and Raul were never married, Ana did not qualify to receive help from a legal services funded agency although she needed help in obtaining a restraining order to protect herself and her children from Raul's ongoing abuse. She also needed legal assistance in filing for a crime victim visa (U visa) immigration case and in winning permanent legal custody of the children. With legal assistance from another agency, Ana was able to obtain a protection order and recently had her U visa interim relief application granted. Without access to LSC funded attorneys Ana will not be able to obtain the representation she needs to win custody and child support in a contested family law case against Raul. There are very few lawyers who will take Ana's case. She cannot afford a private attorney. Further, the only family lawyers in her community with expertise helping battered women are LSC funded attorneys.

Mona is an immigrant from Bolivia. Mona is divorced from her abuser, Paul. Paul was an alcoholic and cocaine abuser. Mona suffered many incidents of abuse perpetrated against her by her former husband Paul. Just days before she was about to give birth to their daughter, Rita, Paul attempted to force Mona to have sex with him. When she refused he lunged for her and he tried to hit her in the face. Mona fled their home seeking safety with her family members. Paul tracked her down at her mother's house. He kicked down the door of her mother's house and threatened to hurt her and her family members. On one occasion while drunk, Paul beat down their front door and told Mona that he was going to kill her. Somehow scared as she was, Mona convinced him to leave. During the incident of abuse that led Mona to leave him, Paul punched Mona in the head. Mona picked up the phone and called 911. Paul grabbed the phone from Mona and hung it up, but luckily the police were able to register the call and identify the address from which it was made before Paul hung up the phone. The police arrived in time to help Mona. Although LSC funded lawyers could not help her, Mona was able to find legal assistance to help her obtain an order of protection against Paul and Mona recently was granted U visa interim relief and can now work legally to support herself and her daughter Rita. Paul is trying to obtain visitation with Rita and Mona needs help seeking child support. Mona is afraid that Paul will harm Rita during visitation because of his alcohol and drug abuse and that Mona will be subjected to ongoing abuse during custody exchanges with Paul. Mona is currently representing herself in the contested visitation case brought against her by Paul. Mona is ineligible to receive legal assistance from LSC funded lawyers because she no longer is married to Paul. Mona needs an attorney and is currently on a wait list with a pro bono program.

Ines is an immigrant from Mexico. Ines had spent more than ten years in a relationship with the father of her children, Pedro. The abuse started with a slap and soon afterwards escalated. Pedro's abuse was extremely dangerous and caused numerous injuries to Ines. The abuse included an incident in which Pedro fired one gunshot at the ceiling and another near Ines' head. Pedro shot at Ines' head when their two-year-old son was nearby. She would often go to work with black eyes. Pedro would throw furniture and break things when he was high on cocaine. On one occasion he tried to strangle Ines, telling her that the only way she would leave there would be if she were dead. Paul would frequently break Ines' cell phones so that she could not call for help. Other violent incidents included Pedro hitting her with a belt and threatening to throw acid on her face. Over time his abuse expanded beyond Ines to include abuse of their children, including slapping their son. Pedro threatened to set her house on fire in her home country, Mexico. Pedro eventually did burn Ines' house down in Mexico. Thankfully, Ines found a way to escape from Pedro with their children. With help from a non-LSC funded program, Ines received her employment authorization card through the U visa interim relief process as a cooperating witness in Pedro's criminal prosecution. However, Ines now needs to obtain a protection order against Pedro and full custody of their children. The LSC funded program cannot help Ines because she was never married to Pedro.

Marta has been in a relationship with Javier for 2 years during which time he has been increasingly violent. Marta and Javier never married, but Javier is the father of their 1 ½ year old son, Jose. Marta is an undocumented immigrant from Mexico. Javier's assaults against Marta were so frequent and severe that Marta's family intervened to protect her against Javier's assaults. Recently, her family tried to intervene in a dispute between Marta and Javier. Javier turned his attack on Marta's father and assaulted Marta's father so brutally that Javier killed him. Javier was arrested for the murder of Martha's father but was soon let out on bond while awaiting trial. Marta and her family have been devastated and are terrified of Javier's retaliation because he does not want them to testify against him in the murder trial.

Marta could not receive help from the LSC funded legal services program to obtain a protection order against Javier, since she was an undocumented immigrant and was never married to Javier. Marta had to file for an order of protection on her own. Javier appeared at the protection order hearing with a lawyer. Marta does not make enough money to be able to hire a lawyer. Despite the temporary order of protection that the court issued against him, Javier constantly contacted Marta before the hearing. Marta felt helpless and intimidated by the process. In the end not having a lawyer to help her led Marta to cave into Javier's harassment and treats and she dropped her order of protection case. Marta, her child, and her family remain terrified. They need to be able to access help from an LSC funded lawyer to be able to obtain protection against Javier, without this help Marta's safety cannot be assured.

Julia is an undocumented immigrant from Guatemala. After coming to the United States, Julia met and fell in love with John, a lawful permanent resident with whom she had a child, Joey. During their relationship John beat and verbally abused Julia. During the most recent incident of abuse, John slapped Julia so hard that she suffered a split lip and bruising. Julia took their baby Joey and left to stay with friends. John and his family immediately began stalking and threatening Julia. John and his family told Julia that they would take the baby from her and flee out of the country to Guatemala. They would report her to immigration authorities to have her deported back to Guatemala. John began calling the police each night so that they would go to the place where Julia she was staying. John also tried to get the police to take Joey from Julia and give the baby to him. The police visited Julia daily, but they have not taken the child from her. John then filed for an order of protection against Julia and asked for temporary custody. The request for temporary custody was denied; however, the temporary order of protection was granted and a hearing date was set. Since Julia is undocumented and unmarried (although he promised to marry her and petition for her immigration papers, he never did) she has no access to legal counsel. The LSC funded program with the expertise to represent her in what will be a highly contested custody case is legally prohibited from representing Julia. John filed for a protection order against Julia, although none of his allegations in that complaint are true. John has also called immigration authorities to have Julia arrested and deported. Julia desperately needs legal representation to defend her in the protection order case John filed against her, in addition to receiving her own protection order against John. She also needs to file a custody case against John in family court but is afraid to do so unrepresented in a contested case against John's lawyer. Julia has no options for legal assistance aside from the LSC funded program that cannot represent her.

Ramona was the victim of a serious assault perpetrated by Miguel, the father of her youngest daughter, in January 2005. Ramona worked with a victim advocate to file for a protection order against Miguel. The victim advocate helped her and she was granted a temporary protection order against Miguel. Ramona needed help from a lawyer to represent her in the hearing on the full protection order. However, since Ramona was undocumented and not married to Miguel she did not qualify for legal services with the LSC funded agency. Ramona was afraid that she could not represent herself in the full protection order hearing against Miguel who was likely to be represented by counsel and whom she knew would contest custody. Language issues would have made self-representation even more difficult. The victim advocate was able to obtain an agreement with the university law clinic to have a law student, supervised by the clinic attorney supervisor, represent her for the full protection order hearing. However, the law clinic decided to drop the case just one day prior to the hearing on grounds that they did not have enough time to prepare. If Ramona had qualified for representation by the LSC funded legal services program she would not have been placed in this dangerous predicament and the attorneys representing her in the case would have been trained attorneys that specialize in domestic violence cases. Had Ramona qualified for trained, professional legal assistance, she would not have had to confront Miguel directly in court. Access to legal assistance would have made her experience far less traumatic and would have helped assure that Ramona received a just and fair outcome of the case that would best protect her safety and that of her children.

NEW YORK

Lourdes is an undocumented immigrant from Colombia. While living in the United States she met Mike, whom she began dating. During their relationship, Lourdes suffered severe physical and emotional abuse. Mike subjected Lourdes to numerous beatings and verbal attacks almost on a daily basis. Lourdes could not go anywhere without being followed by Mike. He often made scenes in public, which would humiliate and scare Lourdes. She felt as though she was a prisoner. During one particularly violent incident, Mike set fire to Lourdes' car. Lourdes made several calls to the police and filed many police reports about Mike. Lourdes later learned that Mike had an extensive police record, which included many violent incidents.

The violence escalated so much that Lourdes took refuge in a domestic violence shelter. She needed to go in hiding because she feared for her life. She now lives in another state in an undisclosed location because she fears that Mike may stalk her and discover her current location.

Lourdes is undocumented and never married Mike. She qualifies for U visa protection because of her numerous police reports and her willingness to cooperate in prosecution of Mike for the domestic violence incidents he committed against her. Her only option for immigration relief will be the U visa. Under current Legal Services Corporation restrictions, Lourdes cannot receive assistance from LSC funded programs to assist her in filing her U visa or seeking a protection order against Mike. Equinox is assisting her in filing for the U visa. Only one program in Albany can provide assistance to immigrant women like Lourdes and that program is incredibly overburdened. LSC funded programs in the Albany are required to turn away immigrant victims like Lourdes seeking services.

City of New York

Vera is an immigrant from the Philippines. She came to live with her aunt and her aunt's husband, Paolo. Vera feared Paolo. He often made her feel uncomfortable. Sometimes he would make comments about her body and her appearance. One weekend, Vera's aunt left on a business trip, leaving Vera alone with Paolo. Paolo raped and stabbed Vera repeatedly, including stabbing her in the eye. He left her for dead. Despite the odds, Vera survived the attack, and is now blind in one eye. She has mental and physical health care needs as a result of the rape and the physical assault she sustained. Vera is receiving counseling and services from a sexual assault program. Paolo is being prosecuted for his rape and assault of Vera and Vera is willing to cooperate in the prosecution. Vera qualifies for a U visa as a rape victim, but cannot receive assistance from an LSC funded program because the perpetrator of the rape was her aunt's husband not her own husband. The LSC funded program in her community cannot represent her in either her U visa case or any case she needs to bring to keep her uncle from harming her again in the future.

Brooklyn

Eva is from Turkey. Eva was married to Tom with whom she had a child. Tom repeatedly abused Eva during their marriage. Eva and Tom were recently divorced. Despite the divorce the violence has continued. Contact between Eva and Tom is ongoing because they have a child together. There have been numerous incidents of violence including one occasion in which Tom grabbed Eva, pushed her, and slapped her twice in the face so hard that he injured her chin and caused her lip to bleed. Although Eva tried to call the police for help Tom physically stopped her from calling them. Eva is willing to cooperate with law enforcement against Tom and thus qualifies to file for a U visa. She also qualifies for a protection order and to receive an award of legal custody of their child. She cannot receive help from lawyers working at an LSC funded program because she is not married to her abuser Tom.

Jenny is an immigrant from Japan. She met her ex-husband, Mark, while studying in New York. Their courtship lasted over six years, with Mark proposing to Jenny in 2000. It was after they were married that Mark became abusive. Mark started pressuring Jenny into doing sexual acts that she was very uncomfortable with. Jenny would often protest, but when she did Mark turned violent. On one occasion, Mark pulled a knife on Jenny after she refused to have sex. It was not long after when Mark began raping Jenny on a regular basis. In addition to the sexual abuse, Mark constantly berated and verbally abused Jenny. After almost two years of abuse, Jenny eventually became severely depressed and withdrawn. Jenny contemplated leaving Mark. Sensing that Jenny may leave, Mark began threatening to deport Jenny. Jenny did not know about the laws in this country and believed that he had that power. Jenny eventually sought assistance with the New York Asian Women's Center, a domestic violence agency providing counseling and support services to Asian women in New York City. If Jenny were to turn for help to a Legal Services Corporation program she would be turned away because she her abuse is no longer her husband. Jenny should be able to access LSC funded lawyers to help her in the protection order and VAWA immigration case she qualifies to file. She is currently living in a new location and slowly rebuilding her life.

Madeline is a Haitian immigrant with three children. She met her abuser, Henry, while living in Brooklyn. They never married. They had two children together. In the beginning, their relationship started out like any other. Madeline was very happy to meet someone, especially someone like Henry. Henry was educated and also a Haitian immigrant, although he had been living in the United States for many years. Because he was educated and knew about life in the United States, he often used that to insult or demean Madeline. Madeline came from a poor family in Haiti.

Soon after the birth of their first child, Henry became increasingly abusive. He criticized the way she cared for the baby. He called her a "backward immigrant." It wasn't long before Henry became physically abusive. On numerous occasions, Henry punched and kicked Madeline. She required several hospital visits over the course of their relationship. The most serious incident happened when Henry stabbed Madeline in the face. Madeline needed extensive medical care after the incident. She received a three-year order of protection, the maximum allowed. Their relationship spanned over ten years and produced another child. Henry finally left Madeline when he met another woman and moved to Florida. Henry never paid any child support. Henry left Madeline with two small children and no money to help support them. Madeline could not obtain help from a Legal Services Corporation funded program because she had never married Henry. Madeline had to go into Family Court to obtain a child support order on her own. Despite the court order, Henry still did not pay. Madeline was fearful about enforcing the court order. She thought that Henry may come back to harm her, or take the children away.

Henry surprised Madeline when he petitioned the Family Court for custody of their children. He cited that she was unfit to care for the children because of her immigration status and lack of education and employment. By this time, Henry was well-established in Florida and promised the children a better life in Florida. A law guardian for the children was assigned to the case. Madeline attempted to represent herself in court, but found herself at a disadvantage over Henry's attorney and the law guardian who seemed to take Henry's side. Madeline did not understand what was happening during the court process. The legal services restrictions severely limited Madeline's ability to fight to keep custody of the children and prevent the harm that could have been caused to them if they were placed in Henry's custody. She eventually found a non-LSC funded lawyer who fought and won the uphill battle to win Madeline custody. Without representation, Madeline would have surely lost custody of her children. Madeline's case illustrates how the LSC restrictions harm not only immigrant victims of domestic violence and sexual assault but also jeopardize the well being of their U.S. born children.

Nadine was an immigrant from Guyana. She has two children from a previous marriage. Nadine came to New York for a vacation to visit some friends. It was during this vacation that she met her future husband, Neil. Neil was one of her friend's neighbors. Neil was quick to try and romance Nadine. During her vacation he used every opportunity to visit her and show her around New York City. When she returned to Guyana, Neil kept in contact. He wrote her love letters and called her on the phone. He told her that he wanted to meet her children and wanted her to return to New York so they could be together. Nadine was hesitant at first, but felt very happy with Neil.

During another visit to New York, Neil proposed and they were quickly married in a civil ceremony. Nadine was able to also bring her children from Guyana to start a new life in the United States. After a few months of living together, Neil started to become very controlling. Neil did not like it if Nadine went outside of the home without him. He didn't like her socializing. He controlled the finances, so Nadine and the children were dependent on him for money. He started treating the children badly as well. He often berated them and made them feel uncomfortable. Neil eventually became emotionally and physically abusive towards Nadine and the children.

Examples of Neil's violent behavior included locking Nadine into the bathroom and threatening to kill her, stalking, and sexual abuse. On several occasions, Neil raped Nadine. As a result of the physical and sexual assaults and the emotional abuse Nadine suffers from post-traumatic stress disorder. After almost two years of abuse, Nadine, with the help of her family, left Neil. During the separation, Neil became more abusive and continued to stalk her and the children. Nadine eventually sought and obtained an order of protection.

Neil filed for divorce and Nadine was too afraid of Neil to object to the divorce. She thought this was the best thing to do to get him out of her life and her children's lives. Nadine did not know her rights. The fact of the divorce cut Nadine off from being able to be represented by LSC funded programs; however, she was still able to qualify for self-petitioning relief under VAWA so long as she filed for VAWA within two years of the divorce. Nadine had to find a non-LSC funded lawyer to help her file her self-petition within two years of her divorce. She and her children received approved VAWA self-petitions and are now eligible to adjust to lawful permanent residents. Nadine and her children are doing well and are now able put their painful past behind them. However, many immigrant victims in Nadine's position cannot receive the legal assistance they need due to LSC restrictions.

Bronx

Sara is an undocumented immigrant from Venezuela. Sara was abused by her ex-husband Jose, who is also an undocumented immigrant. Sara suffered from severe physical abuse at the hands of Jose. The abuse included threats to kill her, numerous beatings, and emotional abuse. Sara secured numerous orders of protection, and often had to return to Family Court because of repeated violations of the orders. Jose would not stop harassing her and threatening her. Sara tried to call the police to assist her. Sara felt helpless in her attempts to be safe and free from Jose. Nothing seemed to stop him. The police finally arrested him during the Family Court order of protection hearing for contempt.

Because Sara and Jose are undocumented immigrants and because Sara and Jose have divorced, Sara is not eligible for representation from LSC funded programs. Sara is willing to cooperate in Jose's prosecution and is eligible to file for and receive U visa protection. Due to LSC restrictions there is only one program in the Bronx that can assist immigrant victims like Sara, those that this program cannot serve are left without the assistance of any lawyers due to LSC restrictions. Although Jose has been incarcerated for the crimes he committed against Sara, Sara still lives in fear and is making preparations to find a secure location for herself, where she can finally be safe.

Bronx – Impact of LSC Restrictions on Immigrant Victims and Other Community Organizations That Provide Legal Services

The Legal Aid Society in the Bronx is not a LSC-funded organization. The Legal Aid Society receives a Legal Assistance to Victims (LAV) grant from the Office on Violence Against Women, Department of Justice. The grant currently funds one staff attorney for each borough of New York. The Legal Aid Society provides assistance in immigration, family, divorce, housing, and public benefits.

The Legal Aid Society is one of two legal organizations in the Bronx serving the Bronx community. The other organization is Bronx Legal Services, an LSC-funded organization. The LSC restrictions that preclude Bronx Legal Services from helping many immigrant victims of domestic violence, sexual assault and trafficking force the full burden of representation in a range of civil legal cases to fall on the Legal Aid Society. Currently, Bronx Legal Services does not have the capacity to provide immigration assistance to immigrant domestic violence and sexual assault victims who qualify for immigration relief.

The Legal Aid Society becomes overwhelmed with requests for assistance from immigrant victims and is forced to refer clients that they cannot serve to New York citywide organizations for assistance. The waiting lists are often months, sometimes years long, resulting in victims being referred to three, sometime four agencies before being told of the wait time. Unfortunately, many victims who have no place to turn end up returning to their abusers. Other victims go months and months without access to life-saving legal assistance, including protection orders, emergency child support and spousal support orders, custody, and visitation. In other cases, immigrant victims lose their children in custody battles to abusers who are often represented, lose their rights over marital property, which is often the sole source of income or property for the victims, and lose court-ordered protection because they are unable to represent themselves.

OHIO

Cincinnati

Monica is a twenty-two year old Hispanic woman from St. Luis Potosi, Mexico. Monica came into the United States with several other people from her village to find employment. She was brought to Cincinnati by a group of men who promised to find her employment.

The five men who brought her to Cincinnati also allowed her to live with them. Instead of helping her they took advantage of her and raped her repeatedly. They warned her that if she ever told anyone about the sexual assaults, rapes and gang rape they would kill her. One of the men held a gun to her head to prove how serious they were about their threats. Monica was too scared of losing her life or getting deported to report the violence. One of the five men eventually stood up for Monica. He told her that he cared about her and would make her safe by taking her away from the other violent men. He told the others to leave her alone because she belonged to him now. They moved into a separate home together and were living happily together for just a few months before he became angry with her and made her leave the house permanently.

Left without a home, Monica found herself a place to stay with the woman she worked for. While living at her employer's home, Monica, fell in love with and began a relationship with her employer's son, Sam. However, over time this relationship became violent. Sam began physically abusing Monica. He often smacked Monica across the face. He called her names that were demeaning and yelled at her while he smacked her. He routinely forced Monica to have sex with him. Eventually, Sam's repeated sexual assaults led to Monica becoming pregnant. When Monica told Sam about the pregnancy, he told her once the child was born, because she did not have legal immigration status in the United States, he would have the courts give him legal custody of the child. Monica was sick of the years of abuse and was scared of losing her child, so Monica decided to leave her home with Sam and her employer in order to escape this dangerous relationship.

Monica fled Sam and went to stay with a friend in the area. However, Sam stalked Monica, found her and began to threaten and harass the family Monica was staying with. As a result, Monica was asked to leave their home. The social worker at the prenatal clinic she was attending recommended Monica contact the YWCA of Greater Cincinnati's Battered Women's Shelter.

Monica entered into the Battered Women's Shelter on May 13, 2003. She was referred to Legal Aid of Greater Cincinnati for assistance with her immigration the shelter worker helping her. However, since Monica was not married to any of her numerous abusers and she was an undocumented immigrant, she did not qualify for Legal Aid's services. Due to the extensive work of her case manager, Monica did find a pro bono lawyer who was willing to take her case.

Monica soon entered the Transitional Living Program at the YMCA. At this point, Monica had no income, was not eligible for any public benefits, and was not able to work legally. Monica worked with a case manager and the pro bono lawyer to pursue documented status. Monica was informed that she would be eligible for a U Visa due to the crimes committed against her by Sam and because of the multiple crimes of rape she suffered. Victims of multiple violent sexual assault and domestic violence incidents need the support of both trained lawyers and advocates to move forward on their immigration and family law cases. Legal Services Corporation funded programs need to be free to offer what can be life saving legal assistance to immigrant victims like Monica who must overcome what can be years of violent attacks and threats of deportation to move forward with their lives.

Toledo

Gloria is an immigrant from Nicaragua. After coming to the United States, Gloria met Nikko. They fell in love and lived together for seven years. The couple had two children together and lived in an apartment with Nikko's family. Throughout their relationship Nikko constantly verbally and physically abused Gloria. She dreaded him coming home from work at night because the abuse occurred almost every evening. After a bad day at work, he would take out his anger on Gloria. He would yell at her for being stupid and tell her that in the United States she was worthless. As his anger escalated he would hit her. He would slap her across the face and shove her. She often had bruises on her arms from his tight grip. Aside from the verbal and physical abuse, Nikko isolated Gloria from everyone. He did not let Gloria talk to any family or friends and he also threatened to take her children away from her. In addition to the physical and verbal abuse, Nikko subjected Gloria to economic abuse. He had complete control over finances. She was not allowed to work or have any money. Nikko's family turned a blind eye to the abuse.

One night, during a particularly violent episode, Nikko shoved Gloria down a flight of stairs. As a result, Gloria's leg broke in three places. With a broken leg, Gloria was less able to cater to her husband, and as a result, the abuse only got worse. He would hit her as she was completely helpless and unable to defend herself due to her broken leg. She was afraid to go to the police about the abuse because Nikko told her if she did they would have her deported for being undocumented. Despite her fears of the police, Gloria did garner the courage and tried many times to get help from legal services organizations. She lived in Cincinnati, Ohio but could not find any local organization that could help her. Each turned her away based on LSC restrictions. Eventually, she found an organization in Toledo that was not funded by LSC and therefore was willing to help. With help from this organization, Gloria turned her abuser into the police and has the support she needs to cooperate in Nikko's prosecution. She is filing for legal status on her own under the U visa protections for immigrant crime victims.

Thankfully, Gloria got some financial assistance from a church and therefore was able to move into an apartment with her children. She now supports herself by cooking meals and selling them to construction crews. Gloria is much safer now but will have to continue to struggle to find an attorney who will represent her in filing for a Civil Protection Order and fighting for custody of her children. The attorneys helping Gloria with her immigration cases do not have expertise in domestic violence family law and protection order cases. Gloria wants to receive a protection order to help protect her against Nikko's retaliation, particularly in light of the fact that she will be testifying against him in the criminal case.

Rose, a woman from the Dominican Republic, has been victimized by domestic violence more than once. Rose's husband whom she has been separated from for three years used to beat her up on a regular basis. Eventually, Rose escaped from her husband and went into hiding. She knows that her husband tried to file for divorce three times, but she is unclear if the divorce has been finalized. She is afraid to find out on her own, because then her husband will find where she has been hiding.

In her new home, Rose met Luis. Luis was very caring. Rose confided to Luis about the abuse she suffered from her husband. Rose and Luis soon started a romantic relationship. Rose felt safe and thought she was lucky to find love again. However, Luis began to abuse Rose as well. In the beginning, Rose tolerated the abuse because she felt it was normal since it was similar behavior to her former husband. On occasion, Luis would punch Rose in the face, leaving her with bruises. More often, the abuse would involve him pushing her or dragging her by her hair. As he hit her, he would yell at her for being lazy and worthless. One time Luis had been drinking heavily and his abuse was too much for Rose to handle. Rose tried to fight back, and managed to slap Luis on his face. In response, Luis stuck Rose across the face and she fell to the floor. While on the floor, Luis kicked her in the stomach. When she managed to get up, she called the police. When the police arrived however, the situation worsened. It was clear that a scuffle had taken place but Rose could not explain the situation to the police because she did not speak English. There were no visible marks on Rose because the bruises were hidden beneath her clothes. Therefore, when the police arrived and only spoke English, it was up to Luis to describe the situation. Luis told the police that his girlfriend had gone crazy and hit him, and that he was the victim. Due to her Luis' explanation of the event to the police, Rose was arrested. Rose did not understand how her attempt to get help resulted in her own arrest.

Rose is now too afraid to communicate fully with anyone regarding her repeated experience with abuse. Rose cannot receive LSC-funded assistance because she is not married to Luis. Rose's legal needs are extensive. She needs legal representation in what will be a complicated immigration case because of Rose's arrest, in obtaining a protection order against Luis and in her potential divorce from her abusive husband. However, the non-LSC funded program that Rose found to assist her is not qualified to handle all of these issues. In addition, despite the help from the non-LSC funded program, which has offered its services, the traumatic experiences that Rose endured left her terrified, emotionally shut down and frustrated. Currently, the non-LSC funded program is working to get Rose to open up about her experience so that they can try to find a way to help her.

Cynthia is a woman from Venezuela who was living there with her parents and only daughter. One afternoon, a friend of the family's, Patrick, called Cynthia with a proposition. He was from America and he and his wife were unable to have children. They were hoping that if they traveled to Venezuela, Cynthia would donate her egg to the couple. Cynthia's love for her daughter made her sympathize with the difficulties of the couple's situation and so she agreed. A few weeks later, Patrick called again to explain that he and his wife were more comfortable with American medical procedures and therefore they wanted to fly Cynthia to Ohio, where the couple lived, to undergo the procedure there. Feeling bound by her previous agreement, Cynthia agreed and reluctantly came over to America on a tourist visa. Cynthia arrived in America expecting a quick visit but the couple wavered on their decisions and soon enough Cynthia's visa expired without her participating in any egg donation. It was at this point when Cynthia became vulnerable and the danger began.

Cynthia was now living as an undocumented immigrant in the home of Patrick and his wife. She wanted to return to Venezuela but the couple insisted she stay until they completed the medical procedure. Once again, Patrick changed his mind and now wanted Cynthia to carry the child through artificial insemination. Cynthia was absolutely not interested in carrying the couple's child for nine months but Patrick threatened her and made her vulnerable. He told her she could get arrested for being in America illegally and she was being disrespectful to them by not obeying because they had spent so much money on her travels and accommodations. One night, Patrick tried to pressure Cynthia into sleeping with him. Patrick told Cynthia that he and his wife wanted Cynthia to get pregnant in this manner, but Patrick also told Cynthia that thinking about it was too painful for his wife so she was not to say anything to her about it. Cynthia did not believe Patrick's story and did not want to have sex with him. She repeatedly told him no and refused but he persisted. Patrick raped Cynthia that night, and Cynthia got pregnant.

Cynthia has since had her baby boy and is still living with Patrick and his wife as an undocumented immigrant. Cynthia speaks no English and therefore is not aware of the documents the family's lawyer makes her sign. Patrick has explained to her that since she gave birth, one of the many forms she unknowingly signed gave up custody of her child to Patrick and his wife. Cynthia is now stuck living in their home acting as the housekeeper. The family pays for food but Cynthia has no money of her own, they don't provide any transportation for her or let her contact anyone outside their home. Patrick tells her she cannot go home because her family will shun her for abandoning her daughter there and for what has happened in America. Patrick is an engineer and his wife works in the court system and they are an extremely influential family in their community. That community believes Cynthia is nothing more than a hired housekeeper, when in actuality she is the true mother of the child she is raising. Now, if Cynthia were to find a way to get home she would have to choose between leaving her baby boy behind with this dangerous family, or staying as a slave in this American home and leaving her daughter in Venezuela to grow up without her mother.

When both the parents are at work, Cynthia uses the phone to try and get help. No legal services organizations are willing to take her case because her abuser is not her husband. She needs legal help to get custody of her baby boy back so that she can go home to Venezuela and move her family past this terrible incident. She also needs legal assistance in punishing her rapist for his despicable secrets. As of now, due to legal services funding restrictions, Cynthia will not be able to get the help she needs and will remain trapped in her terrible situation.

Mai is an undocumented immigrant from Vietnam. She met her abusive boyfriend, Michael, in the United States. Mai and Michael lived together for almost four years and have a daughter together, Lynn. Michael was an alcoholic and drug abuser. He was drunk or high on drugs almost everyday. Whenever he was high or drunk, he would become physically and emotionally abusive towards Mai. On several occasions, Michael hit Mai in the head. Michael's blows to Mai's head were so severe that she suffers from permanent ear damage. Michael used immigration threats to keep Mai from reporting the domestic violence. Michael threatened to call immigration authorities on Mai and have her deported. He said he would make sure that she would never see Lynn again. Mai could not work because Michael controlled her every movement. Mai was financially dependent on Michael. Sometimes Michael would spend most of the money he earned at his job on his alcohol and drugs, and Mai would have to resort to asking a neighbor for basic necessities for Lynn and herself. The neighbor who helped her was sympathetic to Mai's situation.

One night, Michael began arguing with Mai and pushing her. Michael started getting more aggressive and started punching her in the stomach. The neighbor heard Mai's screams and called the police. Michael was arrested and Mai cooperated in his prosecution. Michael is currently incarcerated. With the help of a non-lawyer advocate, Mai is currently applying for immigration relief under the U visa as a cooperating immigrant crime victim. The U visa will allow her to receive employment authorization so that she can support herself and Lynn. She has tried to seek assistance from legal services, but is ineligible because she never married Michael. Mai has tried to apply for public benefits for Lynn, a U.S. citizen, but was wrongly denied benefits for Lynn because she was undocumented. The denial could have been prevented if Mai could receive help from a legal services lawyer. Mai, with the assistance of a domestic violence advocate, was able to receive a protection order that protects both herself and Lynn against Michael. Mai needs help from legal services in her U visa immigration case, to obtain custody and potentially to enforce her protection order. It's very difficult to find legal assistance. The only option for low-income clients is legal services and Mai does not qualify for assistance.

TEXAS

Marta is a 10 year old undocumented girl from Mexico. She came to Texas with her family. Her parents came to the United States to work and provide a better life for Marta and her siblings. Marta lived in a small house with her parents, siblings, and uncle. She often caught her uncle looking at her. She felt very uncomfortable, but did not really know why. Her uncle often told her that she was very pretty. He told her that one day she would have a boyfriend. Marta did not like being alone in the same room with him.

One morning Marta woke up about 1:00 or 2:00 a.m. with her uncle on top of her. She was frightened. When she was able to get out of bed and she saw a red mark he had left on her neck. She tried to run from her uncle, but he grabbed her and threatened that if she told anyone what had happened he would kill her family. Marta was able to flee to the bathroom. When she returned her uncle was no longer in the bedroom. She took advantage of the opportunity and hid from her uncle in another part of the house. Unable to find Marta when he returned to her room, her uncle went to his own bedroom.

The next morning Marta was scared but she told her mother what had happened, and her mother immediately notified the authorities. Her uncle was arrested that next day and charged with aggravated sexual assault of a child and injury to a child. The emotional damage to Marta was severe and she is still recovering from the attack. Marta and other child abuse victims like her who are sexually and physically abused by family members or other persons who are not their parents, are ineligible to receive LSC-funded legal assistance. Marta was able to find immigration assistance to help her file her U visa immigration case, from the only program in her area that offers this assistance to undocumented immigrants like Martha who do not qualify for representation by LSC funded programs.

Maria met Antonio in Mexico. Antonio brought Maria across the border into the United States and helped her find work once she arrived in Texas. Maria soon realized, however, how costly Antonio's assistance would be. Antonio expected to be paid for his help by requiring that she do anything he desired, sexually and otherwise. He used her ignorance of U.S. law and her desperate situation as an undocumented immigrant to maintain his ability to abuse her physically and sexually. Antonio told Maria that he would have her arrested and deported if she ever reported the abuse she was suffering. Antonio also threatened to kill her two children, whose location he knew in Mexico, if she ever reported him to the police. Trapped, afraid, and alone, Maria stayed with Antonio because she did not believe that she had any other option. Antonio's sexual assaults of Maria resulted in Antonio getting Maria pregnant.

Maria had Antonio's child, Pedro. Antonio's physical and sexual abuse of Maria continued during her pregnancy and after Pedro's birth. Maria finally found the courage to leave Antonio when she realized that he was also abusive towards their child, Pedro. With the help of friends, she sought help from a domestic violence shelter. With the help of advocates there, she filed a police report against Antonio.

Maria is ineligible to receive LSC funded legal assistance, despite her long term victimization by sexual assault that resulted in her having a child in common with Antonio, because she and Antonio were never married. The non-profit legal services program that is not funded by LSC has an enormous case load and long waiting lists so Maria was lucky to receive their help when many immigrant victims are turned away. They are assisting Maria in filing her U visa crime victim case. The lawyers working for the non-profit that are helping Maria with her immigration case do not handle family law cases. Antonio continues to threaten Maria, despite their separation. He is trying to keep her from helping in his criminal cases and may seek custody or visitation with Pedro. Maria wants to obtain a protection order and to initiate a family law case to obtain legal custody of Pedro. She also wants to limit Antonio's ability to obtain unsupervised visitation with Pedro, because she fears that Pedro will continue to be abused by Antonio. The LSC funded legal services program cannot represent Maria in her family law and protection order cases, because of LSC restrictions. The domestic violence program she is working with is still trying to locate a pro bono lawyer for her.

VIRGINIA

Arlington County

Julia and her 12-year old daughter, Andrea, are immigrants from Mexico. After arriving in the United States with Andrea, Julia met Pablo and began a relationship with him. Pablo is not Andrea's father. Pablo and Julia dated for several years. Over the years of her relationship with Pablo, Julia experienced an escalating pattern of abuse perpetrated against her by Pablo. Pablo often beat Julia, slapping and punching her on an almost daily basis. Julia had tried many times to break off the relationship, but Pablo stalked her and always came back. He never wanted Julia to be away from him. One night, Pablo followed Julia to her workplace and kidnapped her while at work. Pablo took Julia to a secluded area of town and severely beat her by slamming her head repeatedly into the ground, causing injuries to her head and face. When Julia finally made it home, Andrea immediately called the police for help. Julia was sent from her rural neighborhood via helicopter to the Shock Trauma Unit in a metropolitan city. Pablo was arrested and sentenced to one month in jail. When he was released from jail, Pablo was furious and determined to take revenge on Andrea for calling the police when she saw the extent of her mother's injuries. Pablo knew where Andrea went to school. Pablo laid in wait for Andrea on her normal route home from school. He kidnapped Andrea and raped her. Andrea became pregnant because of the rape.

Despite the horrors of the crimes committed against them by Pablo and the fact that they are cooperating witnesses in two separate criminal prosecutions against Pablo, neither Julia nor Andrea can receive legal representation by LSC funded lawyers in their cases against Pablo. Julia cannot receive assistance because Pablo was not her husband. Andrea does not qualify for representation because she is a sexual assault victim, although Pablo could seek custody and visitation with the child born of the rape.

Both Julia and Andrea cooperated with the prosecutor and police. Each of them separately qualifies for a crime victim U visa because they each were victims of crimes perpetrated by Pablo. Julia and Andrea were able to find non-LSC funded lawyers to help them file their U visa immigration cases from one of the few non-LSC funded legal services programs in Virginia. However, Julia and Andrea are still in desperate need of representation in family court to obtain protection orders against Pablo and to assure that Pablo never receives custody of the child born of the rape. Immigrant victims, like Julia and Andrea, need access to the expertise of Legal Services lawyers to assist them in these important cases.

Carmen is an elderly woman who moved to Northern Virginia from Bolivia. She is actively involved in her church. Carmen was on her way to church when a stranger approached her, dragged her into the woods along Route 50 in Virginia and brutally raped her. Carmen's injuries from the rape were so severe that she required three days hospitalization. Carmen continues to recuperate from both the physical and emotional consequences of the unspeakable sexual violence she endured. Her recovery is slow, painful and very difficult. Carmen has been so terrorized by the brutal rape that she still cannot bring herself to leave the safety of her home alone. The police continue to investigate the incident, but to date they have not been able to locate Carmen's rapist. Carmen continues to cooperate with the police providing information crucial to the rape investigation and apprehension of the rape perpetrator. An LSC funded organization in Virginia could not represent Carmen in her U visa immigration case, because she was a victim of stranger rape and not domestic violence perpetrated by her spouse. Victims like Carmen need to be able to access LSC funded lawyers who can both help her obtain her crime victim visa under VAWA and also support her in the criminal investigation of her rapist.

Chesterfield County

Lupe and her boyfriend Jose both immigrated separately from Mexico and met in the United States. They both live in Chesterfield County, Virginia. Although they never married, they lived together for many years and have four children together, ages 3, 4, 8, and 9. All of their children were born in the United States. Jose was very controlling and abusive. Jose held Lupe hostage in their home. He isolated her and deprived her of basic necessities so she would not leave. Lupe was fully dependent on Jose for key life necessities for herself and their children – all food, clothing, and shelter. Jose's pattern of abuse included economic isolation and severe sexual abuse. He raped Lupe almost on a weekly basis. Lupe endured this abuse for almost ten years.

Lupe was finally able to contact an Hispanic domestic violence outreach program in Chesterfield County seeking help. Lupe suffered from severe depression and low self-esteem as a result of the abuse. Lupe had no idea until the battered women's advocate told her that locking her in the house, depriving her and the children of food, battering and rape were against the law. The battered women's advocate tried without success to help Lupe find a legal services lawyer from an LSC funded program to represent Lupe in her protection order, custody and immigration cases. Legal Aid was unable to represent her because of her immigration status and because she was not married to Jose. With no other option the advocate herself accompanied Lupe to court to help her obtain a protection order, because it was too dangerous for Lupe to go without one. After receiving a protection order, Lupe still needed a lawyer to represent her in her custody case against Jose. Lupe had no money to pay for a private attorney to represent her. With LSC funded programs shut off to Lupe, the local domestic violence program took up a collection to raise funds to help Lupe hire a private lawyer for her custody case. Lupe now has custody and is currently living free and safe from Jose. Unfortunately, Lupe is a rare case. Most immigrant victims go on without any legal assistance. Many lose child custody and child support and are unable to obtain protection orders because of the lack of legal representation. Further, the attorneys with the most expertise working with domestic violence victims like Lupe in custody cases in most communities work of the LSC funded legal services program. Most private lawyers have not been training on domestic violence issues and as a result can often mishandle the case. Fortunately, this did not happen to Lupe.

The domestic violence program that helped Lupe serves a significant number of Hispanic immigrants. Chesterfield County has the highest population of Hispanic immigrants in the metro-Richmond area. The program provides a range of services to victims of domestic violence, including victim advocacy, referrals, and counseling. What is particularly remarkable about Lupe's story is that she found her way to the one Spanish-speaking counselor in the program.

Abby is an immigrant from Tanzania. She came to the United States on a student visa approximately three years ago. She has a 2-year old daughter, Sylvia, with her boyfriend, Timothy. She met Timothy while in school. Timothy quickly swept Abby off her feet. Abby was lonely and needed the attention. She met only a few people in school and had no family with her in the United States. Timothy soon became controlling. He would not allow Abby to go anywhere without Timothy. He made it difficult for Abby to call her family in Tanzania and eventually forbade any communication with them. It made her studies extremely difficult. She became pregnant and Timothy moved into her apartment. Timothy convinced Abby to quit her studies in order to care for Sylvia. The abuse escalated during the pregnancy to physical violence. Timothy was extremely abusive, subjecting Abby to repeated beatings and violent threats. He often told Abby that he would report her to immigration if she said anything about the abuse to anyone. He told her that he would make sure that she would never see their child again. Abby believed that Timothy would have her deported and she would never be able to see their daughter, Sylvia again. Through the help of Abby's friends and counseling, Abby and Sylvia eventually moved out. Timothy has since filed for custody of Sylvia. Abby is very afraid because she knows that Timothy will try and use her immigration status against her.

Abby sought help from an LSC funded legal services program in West Virginia to help her in the custody case filed against her by Timothy. She is very concerned about how she could protect Sylvia from Timothy's abuse if he is awarded custody of Sylvia. She is afraid Timothy will gain custody because he is a U.S. citizen and she is undocumented. The LSC funded program cannot represent Abby because her abuser, Timothy, is her boyfriend and father of her child, but not her husband. Abby is forced to try to find other legal representation in both her custody case and her domestic violence related immigration case. Other than the LSC funded program that is barred by restrictions from offering help to Abby, there are very few other programs that can help victims like Abby and most of these have little or no experience working with immigrant victims.

Maria is an immigrant from Mexico. She lived with her abuser, Pedro, also from Mexico. Both Pedro and Maria were undocumented. Pedro was very abusive, physically, mentally, and sexually. He slapped and punched Maria almost on a daily basis. He repeatedly forced Maria to engage in sexual relations against her will. His rapes of Maria resulted in her becoming pregnant. Maria feared for her own safety and that of her unborn child. Despite her fears of retribution and violence, Maria found the courage to leave Pedro and the residence they shared together. Maria went to a shelter in a confidential location where she could receive services and support and be safe from Pedro. Although Maria very much wanted to seek a protection order against Pedro from the court, when she sought legal assistance, she had to be turned away from the LSC funded legal services program because she and Pedro were not married and because Maria was undocumented.

Maria's search for an attorney to represent her failed. She was not able to obtain a protection order and feared that it was too dangerous to remain in West Virginia without one. Maria spent a few months in shelter during which time her daughter was born. She was ultimately able to contact relatives in another state with whom she and her newborn daughter could live. At this time Pedro does not know that she has relocated. Unfortunately, lack of access to legal assistance meant that she had to move out of state without first obtaining a protection order against Pedro that could be enforced under the full faith and credit provisions of the Violence Against Women Act if Pedro tried to find her.

WISCONSIN

Currently, only one program provides legal services to immigrant victims of domestic violence for Columbia, Dane, Dodge, Green, Jefferson, Rock and Sauk Counties in Wisconsin. This program is one of the few programs in the state of Wisconsin that provides representation for immigrant victims in protection order, custody, divorce, and immigration cases. This Office on Violence Against Women funded program has only two staff attorneys and is inundated with cases that LSC funded organizations are unable to take. The stories below illustrate examples of immigrant victims who are being turned away from LSC funded programs in Wisconsin.

Sonia is an undocumented immigrant from Honduras living in the United States with her extended family members. She met Jose, another immigrant from Honduras, through family friends. She saw Jose occasionally at church or community functions, but did not think much of him. Jose was a friend of Sonia's cousin-in-law. Sometimes Jose would comment and say that Sonia was pretty, but Sonia was not interested in Jose. Sonia had a boyfriend back in her home country. One day Sonia was alone in her apartment. Her cousin-in-law mentioned that Jose would be stopping by to pick up some CDs. When Jose came over, he again complimented Sonia. Sonia was very uncomfortable. Jose then tried to touch Sonia and kiss her. Sonia refused. It was then that Jose grabbed her and forced himself on Sonia, raping her. Sonia was devastated and ashamed. She did not know what to do. Her cousin, Beatrice, later came home and Sonia told her what happened. Beatrice took Sonia to the hospital and the hospital referred her to the local sexual assault center.

With support from sexual assault victim advocates, Sonia is cooperating with prosecutors and police in Jose's prosecution for rape. Based on this cooperation and the substantial harm caused to Sonia by the rape, Sonia qualifies for protection from deportation under the crime victim visa (U visa) provisions included in VAWA 2000. Despite this fact, Sonia must be turned away from an LSC funded legal services program due to restrictions on representation of immigrants. Sonia should be able to receive legal assistance in her immigration case and any restraining order case she might file from a LSC funded program. Too often rape victims like Sonia are left without any access to legal representation.

Mary is an undocumented immigrant from the Philippines. She lived with her abuser, Paul, for almost four years. They never married. They have a three-year old daughter, Lynn. Mary met Paul through mutual friends. At first Paul was very loving and caring. Sometimes Paul would be jealous of Mary's friends and family, but Mary thought it was only because he loved her so much. Over time, Paul's jealousy and control increased. Paul isolated Mary from almost all of her friends and family. Paul often monitored her phone calls, e-mails, and visits. Mary has been faithful to Paul. Despite that fact, Paul has repeatedly accused Mary of cheating. Paul threatened Mary that if he ever caught her cheating that he would kill her.

Mary worked in her family's dry cleaning business. Paul often came to Mary's work and got jealous any time he saw Maria talking to any male co-worker. Communication with male co-workers is a necessary part of Mary's work. Sometimes Paul followed Mary to work just so he could keep an eye on her. Mary was afraid. Paul had a very violent temper. He believed what he wanted to believe no matter how much she tried to convince him she wasn't cheating.

One night, Mary worked late because of an order she had to finish for the next day. She called home to tell Paul that she would be late, but she was unable to reach him so she left a message. Another worker was working with Mary that night. Later that evening, Paul came charging into the store and confronted Mary. He saw that she was not alone and stabbed Mary and her co-worker numerous times. If it had not been for a passerby who saw Mary and her co-worker bleeding on the floor of the store, Mary and her co-worker would have died from the stabbings.

Mary fully cooperated with the prosecutor and police. Paul was convicted of attempted murder and is currently serving time in the state penitentiary. As a cooperating witness in this criminal prosecution who suffered substantial injury as a result of the attempted murder, Mary qualifies for a crime victim visa (U visa). Mary, however, cannot be represented by an LSC-funded legal services agency in her U visa case or any other court case, including any protection order case she may need in the future. Although Mary did find legal representation in her U-visa application that will help her remain in the United States with her daughter, Lynn, many immigrant victims like Mary will be turned away from LSC funded services and will not be able to find representation

Yolanda is an undocumented migrant farmworker from Mexico who lived in Arizona when she met Miguel. Yolanda worked very long hours and did not know many people outside of the migrant camp in which she lived. Yolanda did not speak any English. Miguel, another migrant farmworker, was her co-worker. Miguel had been working in that camp much longer than Yolanda and Miguel was sometimes responsible for supervising her work. One day Yolanda and Miguel were working alone together in the fields. Miguel approached Yolanda and sexually forced himself on her and raped her. Due to the rape Yolanda sustained physical and emotional injuries. Yolanda told one of her women co-workers living in the migrant farmworker camp about the rape. Her co-worker told Yolanda that if Yolanda went to the hospital for help and treatment of her injuries, the hospital employees would ask her a lot of questions and they may even deport her back to Mexico. Yolanda was bleeding and was injured. It was several days before anyone helped Yolanda get any medical treatment. A few weeks later, Yolanda learned that she was pregnant with Miguel's child. Yolanda was scared and ashamed. The woman in the camp spoke to Miguel and told him to live with Yolanda so that she would not be shamed. Yolanda felt there was no choice for her and her baby but to live with her rapist. When Yolanda and Miguel began living together, Miguel's physical, sexual and emotional abuse continued and escalated. He sexually abused and raped Yolanda whenever he pleased. Yolanda suffered deeply. Sometimes her injuries were so severe that it was very difficult for her to work.

Miguel eventually moved Yolanda and their baby, Carmela, to Wisconsin where Yolanda had no friends, no family and no support system. Miguel continued to rape and physically abuse Yolanda on a weekly basis. One night, a neighbor overheard Yolanda's screams and called the police. The police arrived and arrested Miguel. Yolanda cooperated with police and prosecutors, resulting in Miguel's conviction. Miguel is currently serving a prison term for convictions related to his abuse of Yolanda. Yolanda qualifies for relief under the U visa crime victim provisions of VAWA. Yolanda and Carmela are now living in a shelter in Wisconsin. If Yolanda were to seek legal assistance at an LSC funded program, as a rape victim and as a domestic violence victim, Yolanda could not be represented due to LSC funding restrictions.

U.S. Senate
 224 Dirksen Senate Office Building

Dear Members of the Senate Judiciary Committee:

As men in Georgia who are committed to ending violence in our families and communities, we support the re-authorization of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) in 2005. We believe that men must join together with women to be part of the solution to the problem of family violence. Therefore, we ask you to vote in favor of re-authorizing VAWA and that you ask other members of Congress to do the same.

Re-authorizing VAWA is in men's best interest. We have daughters and mothers and wives and sisters and partners and nieces. On average in the U.S., husbands and boyfriends murder three women every day – women who are just like the women we love. That just isn't right. We don't want any woman or child to have to live in fear of violence anymore.

We support VAWA because it is working. Over the last decade, we have finally begun to make progress as domestic and sexual violence have begun to decline. We need to continue this essential work. If Congress does not re-authorize VAWA, and increase funding, these gains won't continue and may well be reversed.

Men Supporting VAWA is an ad hoc group of Georgia men who care passionately about creating a safer world for women, children, and men who are affected by family violence. We are committed to increasing our numbers and educating other Georgians about the importance of VAWA. We ask you to support the reauthorization of VAWA. Can we count on you to cosign on the bill and vote yes? Can we also count on you to talk with your colleagues to sign onto the bill and support it in its strongest form?

We thank you for your time, leadership and support. It is with the leadership and cooperation of leaders like you that we can truly make a difference in the lives of so many people who are affected by family violence.

Sincerely,

Men Supporting VAWA

Over the past 10 years Congress has responded positively and effectively to help end domestic violence in our communities by funding Violence Against Women Act programs. In recent years the success of these programs has resulted in a growing demand for the life-saving services they provide. However, this increased demand coincides with a series of budget cuts that have crippled many local organizations, and forced others to close completely.

Programs such as the National Domestic Violence Hotline, battered women's shelters, and trainings for police, prosecutors and court officials have all contributed to the decline in domestic violence since VAWA was first authorized in 1994 and reauthorized in 2000. Now, as VAWA is soon scheduled to expire, we hope that you will support its reauthorization once again. VAWA is more than good social policy; it is also good fiscal policy. The first VAWA, authorized in 1994, saved nearly $14.8 billion in net averted social costs. Reauthorization and full funding for all VAWA programs is a crucial investment in our communities, one that saves lives, saves money and saves the future of our nation.

In 2004 the Milwaukee Women's Center Emergency Shelter served 154 women and 167 children in our emergency shelter. 114 women received assistance from the Casemanager in the shelter who helped them get housing, financial assistance, legal and medical care, in order to begin to live a life free from violence. MWC's older Abused Women's Program worked with 107 women 50 years and up to help them escape from violent relationships through casemanagement and support groups. Without the assistance of the casemanagers a lot of women will be forced to return to their abuser.

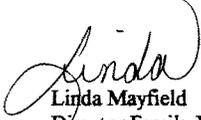

Without reauthorization and full funding for VAWA programs, women and children in Milwaukee WI, cannot access the services they need to escape from violence. The continued support of Congress is crucial to helping victims and their children find safety and security and build self-sufficiency. On behalf of The Milwaukee Women's Center representing the interests of victims of domestic violence in Milwaukee, WI, we urge you to support the reauthorization of VAWA and full funding for all VAWA.

If you have any questions or need additional information, please contact Linda Mayfield, Director Family Violence Services, Milwaukee Women's Center. We look forward to working with you on these important issues.

Dear Mr. Chairman, Senator Biden and Senator Hatch:

I am writing in support of the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (S. 1197) and particularly to urge your support for four sections that propose critical improvements to existing law: Title VII Economic Security, Title III Children and Youth, Title IV Strengthening America's Families by Preventing Violence, and Section 202 of Title II the Sexual Assault Services Program. As Governor of the State of Arizona, former U.S. Attorney for the District of Arizona, and Arizona's former Attorney General, I have always been a champion for the rights of crime victims of all ages and view S.1197 as critically important because it enhances the states' response to victims of violence.

I strongly support the leave measure, along with the other economic security measures in Title VII of VAWA. As Arizona Attorney General, I crafted successful crime victim leave legislation to respond to hardships faced by crime victims in the workplace. In 2001, Arizona became one of the first states in the nation to provide workplace protections for crime victims, requiring employers with 50 or more employees to allow employees who are crime victims to attend court-related proceedings. A.R.S. 13-4439. It is vital that employers support employees who need time to attend court or undertake safety planning, and I applaud your inclusion of these provisions in the bill.

I also urge you to support measures to improve services to victims of sexual assault. As Arizona Attorney General I oversaw the creation of statewide Guidelines for a Coordinated Community Response to Sexual Assault to improve the investigation of sexual assault crimes, as well as how crime victims are treated. The need for a dedicated funding stream for sexual assault services is great in Arizona. Not only will the Sexual Assault Services Program increase victims' opportunity for justice and recovery, it will improve reporting of sexual assault to law enforcement, thereby holding offenders accountable and lowering the incidence of repeat crimes.

Finally, I encourage you to support Title III and IV, which titles focus on children, youth, and prevention. By addressing the needs of younger victims we can halt the cycle of violence at its origin, whether it be domestic violence, dating violence, sexual violence, or stalking. When we help young people to cope with and prevent violence in their lives, we put them on track to be healthy, educated and productive adults.

Your support for S. 1197, particularly for the aforementioned provisions, is vitally important. Women, men, children and youth who are victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual violence and stalking must be given support to recover from the crimes perpetrated against them. Assisting victims where they are—in the home, workplace, schools and other institutions—is one way we can assure their opportunity for healing and survival.

If you have any questions about Arizona's efforts to support crime victims, please do not hesitate to contact my advisor for crime victims Dan Levey at (602) 364-2235. Thank you for your consideration.

Yours very truly,

Janet Napolitano

Dear Chairman Specter,

The National Child Abuse Coalition is pleased to submit testimony for the record of the hearing on July 19, 2005 before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary on the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA).

The Coalition supports S. 1197, the legislation to reauthorize VAWA, with specific attention to promoting collaborations between domestic violence services and child protective services, and at furthering the development of effective prevention programs targeting children who have been exposed to domestic violence, particularly through provisions in S. 1197 which would: enhance responses to families where both child abuse and neglect and domestic violence occur (Sec. 302); support services for children and youth exposed to domestic violence to link them and their families with appropriate assistance (Sec. 41302); develop training material for home visitation programs to recognize and address domestic violence (Sec. 41304); and direct the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to study the best practices for reducing and preventing violence against women and children (Sec. 402).

Child welfare advocates and domestic violence service providers share common goals: end domestic violence and child maltreatment; keep children safe; protect the adult victims; and avoid involving children in the protective services system where possible. The National Child Abuse Coalition and its members look forward to working with you and your colleagues to enact S. 1197 and join together to achieve our shared goal of freeing victims from the violence in their lives. Thank you for your leadership and attention to this important legislation.

Sincerely,

WASHINGTON, D.C.
JULY 19, 2005

The National Child Abuse Coalition, twenty-eight national organizations working together to focus attention on the protection of children and the prevention of child maltreatment, supports the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act of 2005, S. 1197, with specific attention to provisions in the legislation aimed at promoting collaborations between domestic violence services and child protective services, and at furthering the development of effective prevention programs targeting children who have been exposed to domestic violence.

In that regard, S. 1197 would provide support to:

- Child welfare agencies, domestic violence service providers, courts, law enforcement and other community organizations to develop collaborative responses, services and cross-training to enhance responses to families where both child abuse and neglect and domestic violence occur. (Sec. 302)
- Services for children and youth exposed to domestic violence and assist child and youth-serving agencies to identify children in violent homes and link them and their families with appropriate assistance, through the collaborative effort of the U.S. Department of Justice and the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. (Sec. 41302)
- Develop training material for home visitation programs as an important preventive strategy working with pregnant women and new parents in their homes toward the reduction of child maltreatment, to recognize and address domestic violence and link women and children experiencing violence with community resources to help keep them safe, with special attention to improve parenting skills and link new parents with existing community resources. (Sec. 41304)
- Direct the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to study the best practices for reducing and preventing violence against women and children and evaluate the effectiveness of interventions. (Sec. 402)

The Co-Occurrence of Child Maltreatment and Domestic Violence

Each day, the safety and well-being of children in the United States are threatened by child abuse and neglect. According to the most recent report from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, an estimated 906,000 children were victims of abuse or neglect in 2003.¹ Many of these children live in homes that are experiencing domestic violence. It is estimated that between 3.3 and 10 million children witness domestic violence each year.²

Children living in violent homes, who witness domestic violence against others, may suffer emotional abuse and psychological trauma. Frequently these children are also the victims of physical or sexual abuse. Research indicates that children exposed to domestic violence are at an increased risk of being abused or neglected, and that in an estimated 30 to 60 percent of the families where either domestic violence or child maltreatment is identified, it is likely that both forms of abuse exist.³ The U.S. Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect has suggested that domestic violence may be the single major precursor to child abuse and neglect fatalities in this country.⁴

Impact on Children Witnessing Domestic Violence

Children growing up in violent families may suffer emotional abuse and psychological trauma, damage they may carry throughout their adult lives. Children who witness domestic violence are at risk of suffering numerous emotional and behavioral problems including withdrawal, developmental regression, post traumatic stress disorder, anxiety, aggression, temperamental problems, and depression. They may experience physical symptoms of sleep disorders, headaches, stomach aches, diarrhea, ulcers, and asthma in reaction to living in a violent, stressful household.

A child who witnesses domestic violence can suffer poor academic consequences. Children of women who are battered have been found to have high rates of inferior school performance, truancy, absenteeism, and difficulty concentrating. What's more, the impact of witnessing domestic violence has been found to increase the likelihood of aggressive behavior and delinquency. A comparison of delinquent and non-delinquent youths found that a history of family violence or abuse is the single most significant difference between the two groups as to whether they are delinquent.⁵

Growing up in a violent home is the strongest predictor of becoming a batterer in the teen and adult years. Numerous studies have shown that children exposed to domestic violence are more likely to be violent -- and the violence repeats itself: male children who witness violence are at an increased risk of becoming perpetrators, and the perpetrators of domestic violence who were abused as children are more likely to physically harm their children.⁶ Long-term problems from exposure to domestic violence include higher levels of adult depression and trauma symptoms, and an increased tolerance for and use of violence in adult relationships.⁷

It is important to note that the impact of witnessing violence can be moderated by a number of factors, including effective treatment and support from caring adults. Children's reactions to domestic violence vary, where some children show enormous resiliency while others adjust poorly. Protective factors such as social competence, intelligence, high self-esteem, strong sibling and peer relationships, and a supportive relationship with an adult, are thought to be important variables that help protect children from the adverse effects of exposure to domestic violence.⁸

Serving Child Victims of Domestic Violence: Promoting Collaboration

Provisions in S. 1197 would build upon the success of the "Greenbook Project," a federal demonstration project consisting of six pilot sites selected to test and implement the recommendations of the National Council for Juvenile Federal Court Judges' Effective Intervention in Domestic Violence and Child Maltreatment Cases: Guidelines for Policy and Practice. The Greenbook Project offers a set of principles and guidelines for designing comprehensive approaches to co-occurring domestic violence and child abuse, with a focus on three primary systems serving families — juvenile and family courts, child protective services (CPS), and domestic violence programs.

Intervening effectively to serve families where domestic violence and child maltreatment overlap is not the sole responsibility of a single agency; it is a shared community responsibility. Home visitation services for example, which are highlighted in S. 1197, have proven to be an effective violence prevention service with special attention to linking new parents to community services essential to relieve the stresses on parents and families. With the increasingly recognized overlap between domestic violence and child maltreatment, CPS agencies must work more closely with those providing domestic violence services to ensure more comprehensive assistance to both the child and adult victims.

Differences in approach and response have in past times often worked against collaboration between the two fields. For CPS caseworkers, with a legal mandate to protect the abused child, responding to domestic violence has been widely regarded as a peripheral issue. Alternatively, domestic violence service providers have primarily focused on keeping safe and empowering the adult victims.

Despite their differences, child welfare advocates and domestic violence service providers can bridge the gap between them with their common concern to: end domestic violence and child maltreatment; keep children safe; protect the adult victims; and avoid involving children in the protective services system where possible. With effective intervention and a coordinated response to child abuse and domestic violence, battered women advocates, child protective workers, judges and community members can help keep families safer.

Conclusion

Domestic violence and child maltreatment cannot be viewed separately by professionals responding to family violence. The mission of CPS to ensure the safety and well-being of child victims is consistent with the domestic violence field's goal of protecting and empowering victims of abuse. Adult and child victims suffer similarly and often in the same families. CPS caseworkers and domestic violence service providers can and must join together to achieve their shared goal of freeing victims from the violence in their lives.

History of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA)

The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) is a revolutionary piece of legislation that has greatly improved the criminal justice and community-based responses to domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking in the United States. The passage of VAWA in 1994 and its reauthorization in 2000 has dramatically changed the landscape for victims who once suffered in silence. Because of VAWA's programs, victims have been able to access services, and a new generation of families and justice system professionals have come to understand that domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking are crimes that our society will not tolerate.

VAWA 1994 fostered community-coordinated responses that brought together, for the first time, the criminal justice system, social services, and private nonprofit organizations responding to domestic violence and sexual assault. VAWA also provided for Federal prosecution of interstate domestic violence and sexual assault crimes and created Federal guarantees of interstate enforcement of protection orders. In 1994, VAWA provided the first protections for battered immigrant victims who were often deported as a result of their status being revealed by their batterer to the criminal justice officer responding to their cases. Also, VAWA began to focus on underserved populations and Native victims of domestic violence and sexual assault.

The first VAWA provided funding for programs such as:

- STOP (Services/Training/Officers/Prosecutors) Violence Against Women Formula Grant: This cornerstone grant program is designed to encourage communities to develop a collaborative, multi-disciplinary approach to improve responses to violence against women. It is distributed to each state according to a basic formula: each state receives a base amount of $600,000 with remaining funds distributed based on population. Each state must allocate 25% of the money to law enforcement, 25% to prosecutors, 30% to nonprofit victims' services, 5% to state coalitions, 5% to Indian Tribal governments and 5% to court programs.
- Grants to Encourage Arrest Policies and Enforcement of Protection Orders Program: This discretionary grant program establishes and strengthens local programs that encourage police officers to arrest abusers and restraining order violators, and encourage courts and prosecutors to treat domestic violence as a serious crime.
- Rural Domestic Violence and Child Victimization Enforcement Grants: Aimed at the unique needs of rural jurisdictions, this discretionary program helps communities create partnerships to respond to domestic violence, dating violence and child victimization. For purposes of this program, a rural state is one that has a population density of 52 or fewer persons per square mile or a state in which the largest county has fewer than 150,000 people (this includes states like Arkansas, Idaho, Maine, Montana, North Dakota, Vermont and Utah).
- National Stalker and Domestic Violence Reduction Grants: This discretionary grant program assists states and local governments in improving their databases for stalking and domestic violence. To qualify, applicants must show that they contribute information on protection orders, domestic violence convictions and stalking offenses to the National Crime Information Center (NCIC).

- Victims of Child Abuse Programs: There are three programs supported under this grant: (1) court appointed special advocates (known as "CASA programs"), a national program of volunteers who work in the court system with abused and neglected children; (2) child abuse training for court personnel; and (3) testimony of abused children by closed-circuit television in court.
- National Domestic Violence Hotline¹: This program funds a non-profit entity (currently the Texas Council on Family Violence) to operate a national, toll-free hotline that provides confidential information and assistance to victims.

VAWA also reauthorized and increased funding for existing programs under the Department of Health and Human Services. This included the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act, Shelters for Battered Women and Children program. This critical program helps communities create and sustain emergency shelters for battered women and their children. It is a formula grant program with allocations federal funds to each state based on population.

In 2000, Congress reauthorized VAWA providing additional resources and protections for victims of violence. VAWA 2000 identified the additional related crimes of dating violence and stalking, therefore protecting more victims of violence in our communities and providing additional resources to prosecute these crimes and provide services to survivors. VAWA 2000 created the much-needed legal assistance program for victims of domestic violence and sexual assault. These programs continue to face the greatest demand from victims of violence. VAWA 2000 also provided assistance to programs that utilize supervised visitation programs for families experiencing violence during child custody disputes and visitation. The Act also continued to expand protections for battered immigrants experiencing domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking, by establishing U- and T-visas that provide protections to persons trafficked into the U.S.

In 2000, Congress authorized resources for the following additional programs:

- Grants to Reduce Violent Crimes Against Women on Campus: Collaborating with local victim service agencies and criminal justice systems, institutions of higher education use this discretionary grant program to build coordinated responses to violence against women and to engage preventative strategies. To be eligible for the program, institutions must train campus police and judicial disciplinary boards and provide educational programs for in-coming students.
- Legal Assistance for Victims of Domestic Violence, Sexual Assault and Stalking Grant Program: This program helps victims access qualified legal assistance and advocacy services for matters relating to the violence, such as obtaining protection orders and representation at child custody or divorce proceedings. Not included in VAWA 1994, this program did receive funding in 1998 and in continued funding through VAWA reauthorization in 2000.
- Transitional Housing Program: Created in 2000, this HHS program provides grants to establish and support stable housing for women and children escaping violent homes and for whom emergency shelters are unavailable or insufficient. Although authorized in 2000, this program has never received appropriations. Given the dire need for housing, in April 2003, Congress authorized a second transitional housing program, this time to be administered by the Department of Justice.

- Education and Training to End Violence Against Women with Disabilities: This program educates and provides technical assistance to providers on effective ways to meet the needs of disabled women who are victims of sexual assault, domestic violence or stalking.
- Enhancing Protections for Older Women from Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault: This training program aims to help law enforcement, prosecution and court personnel, and advocates better respond to elder abuse, neglect and exploitation.
- Safe Havens for Children Pilot Program: A limited program (it officially expired in 2002 but continues to receive federal funding), Safe Havens reduces the likelihood of violence by providing supervised visitation and exchange of children in safe locations among parents in domestic violence, sexual assault or stalking cases.

How VAWA provides legal services for victims:

"Funding for civil legal assistance has allowed the legal professionals of Center for Community Solutions provide confidential assistance to victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, and stalking for the last five years. Since 2001, when CCS received its first funding through the Legal Assistance for Victims grant from the Office on Violence Against Women, attorneys and advocates of the Legal Department have assisted thousands of victims, allowing them to escape from abusive and violent relationships, achieve safety by breaking the cycle of violence, and access legal and social justice for themselves and their children. The essential life-changing and life-saving services that LAV funding has allowed CCS to provide includes assistance with restraining orders and safety planning, family law matters (divorce, paternity, child custody/support, etc.), court accompaniment (for emotional support), California Safe at Home confidential address program applications, consultations and referrals for battered immigrant spouse petitions and U visa applications, as well as general legal consultations/referrals. The importance of civil legal assistance for victims of domestic violence cannot be overstated. Explaining the recent decline in national domestic violence incidents, the April 2003 issue of the Journal of Contemporary Economic Policy stated that 'the increased provision of legal services for victims of intimate partner abuse' was the single most important factor. In sum, VAWA has saved lives and improved the lives of thousands."

Steve Allen, Counselor at Law Center for Community Solutions San Diego, California

In September 2005, the Violence Against Women Act will expire. Without this critical legislation our communities will lose billions of dollars in Federal resources that not only save lives but promote overall safety and security of our homes and citizens.

Statistics show:

- One in every 4 women will experience domestic violence during her lifetime.²
- Women are almost 6 times as likely as men to be victims of rape or attempted rape in their lifetime.³ While 9 out of 10 rape victims are women, men and boys are also victims of sexual assault.⁴
- 40 to 60% of men who abuse women also abuse children.⁵

- 64% of women who report being raped, physically assaulted, and/or stalked since age 18 were victimized by a current or former intimate partner.⁶
- Women ages 16 to 24 experience the highest per capita rates of intimate violence.⁷
- In 1994, approximately 37% of women seeking injury-related treatment in hospital emergency rooms were there because of injuries inflicted by a current or former spouse or intimate partner.⁸
- One survey found that over 50% of abused women lost at least three days of work each month due to abuse.⁹

This year, Congress has a unique opportunity not only to continue successful and crucial existing VAWA programs, but also to expand on ten years of progress to further the safety and stability of the lives of survivors of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking.

VAWA's 10 Years of Success

The Violence Against Women Act has created innovative, multi-disciplinary, coordinated community responses to domestic violence and sexual assault, which address the many needs and fill in the vast gaps identified by the experts. VAWA has supported police, judges, advocates and victim service providers, VAWA created new federal criminal laws addressing domestic violence and established discretionary grant programs within the Department of Justice and the Department of Health and Human Services for state, local, and Tribal governments and non-profit service organizations. VAWA of 2000 renewed these programs, made targeted improvements to certain provisions and introduced new initiatives. Over the past decade these programs and new laws have proven essential to intervening and preventing intimate partner violence in our communities.

How VAWA training has helped professionals:

"The training that has occurred as a result of VAWA funding has dramatically improved the competence of those working with victims of domestic violence. The change in professional's and advocate's ability to support victims as they move through the criminal justice system is noticeable."

Retired law enforcement officer and current trainer for victim advocates Southern California

VAWA's effectiveness is evident in the progress that has been made since implementation. Local, state, Tribal and national laws are changing to better protect victims and punish offenders. In addition to providing resources and legal change, VAWA has fostered a community spirit that violence in our homes, families and relationships will not be tolerated. For the first time since the beginning of the battered women's movement, a culture of violence prevention and intervention began to solidify with the first passage of VAWA on a scale much larger than ever before. The criminal justice, social service and public health systems began to work together to address domestic violence as a community problem. The issue of intimate partner violence changed from a private, personal matter, where many feared to tread, and developed into an issue critical to protecting our communities, families and loved ones.

Thanks to VAWA, state governments, local communities, businesses, and other services are responding better to victims' needs. Studies show that rates of violence and reporting of crime are changing.

Consider these highlights of successes from the past 10 years of VAWA:

- VAWA created the first federal offense for interstate domestic violence and stalking that imposes up to 20 years for serious injury and life in prison if death results (and additional penalties are possible if a firearm is used during the offense);
- VAWA established a federal offense for interstate violations of protection orders;
- VAWA mandated that states and Tribes fully enforce valid restraining orders issued by another state or Tribe (similar to the law requiring states to enforce child custody orders ordered in other states);
- VAWA doubled federal penalties for repeat sex offenders;
- VAWA authorized pretrial detention of defendants in federal sex offense and interstate domestic violence cases and mandated restitution for victims; and
- VAWA created a new rule of evidence that a victim's past sexual behavior was generally not admissible in federal civil or criminal cases regarding sexual assault.
- VAWA encouraged changes in state law. States passed over 660 new laws to combat domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking.
- Since VAWA all states have passed laws making stalking a crime and changed laws that once treated date or spousal rape as a lesser crime than stranger rape.
- Since 1996, the National Domestic Violence Hotline has answered over 1 million calls. The Hotline answers over 16,000 calls a month and provides access to translators in 139 languages.
- Businesses have joined the national fight against violence. Hundreds of companies, led by the model programs established by Altria, Polaroid, Liz Claiborne, The Body Shop, Blue Shield, Aetna and DuPont, have created excellent Employee Assistance Programs that help victims of domestic violence.
- More victims are reporting violence: among victims of violence by an intimate partner, the percentage of women who reported the crime was greater in 1998 (59%) than in 1993 (48%).

Budget reviews show that VAWA is not only good social policy but also sound fiscal policy. A 2002 university study found that money spent to reduce domestic violence saved nearly ten times the potential costs incurred between 1995 and 2000. During that time, the study found that the Federal government spent $1.6 billion for VAWA programs. An estimated $14.8 billion was saved on medical, legal and other victimization costs that arise from domestic violence. On an individual level, VAWA costs roughly $15.50 per victim in the United States and saves an estimated $159 in services to each victim.¹⁰

Statistics show that VAWA is impacting intimate partner violence:

- The number of women murdered by an intimate partner was steady for two decades but declined by 22% from 1993 to 2001.¹¹
- In Hillsborough County, Florida, law enforcement agencies utilized VAWA monies to build a “Zero Tolerance” program which resulted in an 85% decrease in domestic violence related murders over a 3 year period.
- More than half (53%) of rape victims are now stepping forward and reporting these heinous crimes to the authorities, while from 1993 to 1995 only 30.8% reported their attacks.¹²
- Victims of domestic violence are also stepping forward to report their suffering. The percentage of women who reported the crime in 1998 (59%) was greater than the percentage in 1993 (48%).¹³
- A recent study of immigrant women in Washington, DC found that more than ¼ contacted the police for help with domestic violence at least once.¹⁴
- One study found that with STOP funds, 72% of surveyed victim service organizations were able to bring help to more women, and 70% of surveyed victim service organizations were able to tap into entirely new victim populations.¹⁵

During the past decade, VAWA provided tremendous resources and protections for victims of domestic violence and sexual assault. VAWA programs have provided increased training for police, prosecutors, and court officials, and greatly improved the response of the criminal justice system to victims of domestic violence and sexual assault. These programs have successfully provided victims with emergency shelter, hotlines, and supportive services. Due to VAWA's remarkable accomplishments, many more victims are now referred to services and demand has steadily risen for VAWA programs.

How VAWA has provided services to underserved communities:

“VAWA funding for our Safety Plan Counselor Program has dramatically increased the availability and improved access of victim counseling services for the underserved population in our area, particularly the Russian Immigrant Community and the Iranian Community, all who experience similar barriers to services due to cultural issues and cultural isolation. VAWA funding has been a Godsend!”

Goals of VAWA 2005

VAWA 2005 provides an opportunity to “think outside of the box” and take a more holistic approach to the problems of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking.

VAWA 2005:

- Shifts from a solely criminal justice response to a more holistic community-based response that helps victims become self-sufficient, including housing support and employment protection;
- Continues to improve the criminal and civil judicial response to domestic violence, sexual assault, dating violence and stalking;
- Serves the needs of children exposed to domestic violence and sexual assault;
- Provides additional funding to meet the need for new and expanded services addressing dating violence, sexual assault and stalking;
- Recognizes the specialized needs of communities of color, Native women and victims with disabilities and developing leadership roles for members of these communities in designing and implementing these specialized services;
- Provides training to health care providers and students in health professional schools to identify victims of domestic and sexual violence, ensure their immediate safety, document their injuries and refer them to appropriate services;
- Promotes public health programs that integrate domestic and sexual violence assessment and intervention into basic care, as well as encourage collaborations between health care providers, public health programs, and domestic and sexual violence programs;
- Provides support for young and vulnerable parents to help them strengthen their parenting, promote healthy child development and address past violence so as to break the often intergenerational cycle of violence;
- Focuses on prevention and educating the next generation to promote healthy relationships and a culture of zero tolerance towards violence;
- Engages male allies to prevent violence against women and to encourage positive male roles to young men and boys.

VAWA and Coordinated Community Response

One of the most successful aspects of VAWA was the fostering of coordinated community responses to ending intimate partner violence. VAWA grant programs provide Federal funding to states, not only trains law enforcement and prosecutors, but also sets up special task forces and response teams to better coordinate services between the criminal justice, advocacy and social service systems. For example, on-scene Response Teams are one part of the coordinated community response. These teams allow community and victim services to assist law enforcement in providing services to victims at the scene of an investigation, which allows officers to concentrate on investigation. Better investigations provide better evidence and assisted prosecutors in holding perpetrators accountable. In addition, victims report that having an advocate on the scene provided them with better access to services and “peace of mind” that “someone was there to help” them and not just investigate the situation. With advocates on the scene, victims receive more access to medical care, shelter, and immediate counseling about their options for safety. Children also receive better care from on-scene advocates and law enforcement officers feel they can better do their jobs instead of being “social workers.”

How VAWA helps law enforcement in the field:

"The evolutions of the laws that now exist to protect women from violence have become an essential resource in a police officer's tool box. Years ago, officers in the field were basically helpless to act, where now there is no hesitation to act under the law when they need to. In addition, many police departments have instituted pro-arrest policies that require arrest when the signs of violence or the threat of violence is present."

*Chief of Police John George
City of Davie, Florida*

In addition to immediate coordinated services, VAWA fosters an atmosphere of holding perpetrators accountable without blaming the victim. Before VAWA, prosecutors were more likely to drop charges against a perpetrator if the victim refused to testify. Thanks to VAWA, a system such as "vertical prosecution" was implemented and many prosecutors developed specialized domestic violence units. These vertical prosecution units are generally comprised of specially trained attorneys and staff that understand the dynamics of domestic violence. They understand the dangers that most victims face when testifying and continue prosecuting cases even if victims are not available to testify or provide evidence. These programs have been an effective tool in increasing the number of domestic violence convictions and decreasing in the number of cases that are dismissed or "dropped". Many prosecutors, such as former San Diego City Attorney, Casey Gwinn, call this system "homicide prevention", because fewer victims and perpetrators are murdered as a result of the efforts of specialized prosecution units.

Coordinated community responses often consist of domestic violence task forces, councils or groups of professionals, advocates and citizens who work with domestic violence victims. Community services, local business, local military bases and others may be involved in these groups as well. They meet regularly to discuss their community's response to domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking. These forums provide a mechanism for providers-who otherwise might not meet each other- to discuss successes, issues and plan strategies. To see how these programs have improved the community's response to domestic violence in Hawaii, please see below.

How VAWA has impacted Hawaii:

"VAWA Rural funding has made DRAMATIC improvements in the County of Maui, specifically in the rural communities of East Maui, West Maui and on the island of Lanai. Prior to receiving Rural funding for the creation of a Coordinated Community Response Project, the services to these remote and isolated locations were limited at best. Thanks to the VAWA funding provided over the past five years, there is now a Domestic Violence Task Force on the island of Lanai, in East Maui and the newest task force in West Maui. The work being done in these rural communities by the members of these communities is amazing. For example, the East Maui Domestic Violence Task Force has been up and running for over four years. When the EMDVTF realized that there were no services being provided in their community, they contacted the State of Hawaii to insist that services be provided to Hana people in Hana (otherwise, Hana residents had to drive 3 hours each way to receive assistance with restraining orders, support and batterers intervention groups). They have done extensive outreach using the local media (bulletin boards, etc.) to advertise these services that are now available in Hana. They have done repeated trainings with the law enforcement, teachers and social service providers and have marched in the Aloha Festivals parade to continue their marketing efforts.

The island of Lanai is the smallest of the inhabited islands of Hawaii. The population of Lanai is nearly 3000 residents, many families have been on Lanai for many generations, and the people are all familiar with each other and have deep history with each other. In the last three years of the CCR project, our advocate has worked with over 50 women and their children. She has also created the Lanai DV Task Force combining the efforts of the police, local social service agencies, and local residents. Castle and Cooke, the company that owns most of the island and is the major employer of the island, has been the most significant addition to the task force as they have afforded our advocate with rotating safe homes on the island as needed, a task never before accomplished in our agency's eight year presence on the island.

The West Maui DV Task Force was created in the past year and already this energized and highly motivated group of individuals representing resort hotel security operations, faith based organizations, and community members has created palm cards to hand out to individuals advising them of the services available to residents of the west side. These community organizing accomplishments speak nothing to the incredible levels of case management and advocacy services provided by our CCR advocates. These advocates have taken on the most complicated DV cases and provided systems advocacy, assistance for immigrant women with complicated legal cases and have supported the improvement of the legal system in general as it relates to the safety for battered women and their children."

Stacey Moniz, Executive Director Women Helping Women Wailuku, Hawaii

In 2003, the Bush Administration announced the $20 million Family Justice Center pilot program initiative. Family Justice Centers make a victim's search for help and justice less burdensome by bringing together advocates from victim services organizations, law enforcement officers, prosecutors, probation officers, governmental victim assistants, forensic medical professionals, civil legal attorneys, chaplains, legal advocates and representatives from community-based organizations into one centralized location.

How VAWA saves lives:

"In three years, with VAWA funding in San Diego, we have continued our 20 year decline in DV homicides. Since opening the Family Justice Center, our DV homicides have declined from 9 per year to 1. 20 years ago we had 30 DV homicides per year in San Diego. Our city and other communities, are proof that women are alive today because of VAWA."

San Diego, California*

Domestic Violence and Children

Domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking greatly impact children and youth. They observe the violence by one parent against another and they experience it in their early dating relationships.

Children are aware of domestic violence in their home. 8.8 million children in the United States witness crime in their home each year.¹⁶ Exposure to domestic violence has a detrimental, psychological impact on children and places them in danger of injury. After parental separation, children continue to witness domestic violence during visitation exchanges. According to one study, 5% of abusive fathers threaten during visitation to kill the mother, 34% threaten to kidnap their children, and 25% threaten to hurt their children.¹⁷ Children exposed to domestic violence are more likely to become abusers or victims of abuse.¹⁸ They learn that violence is an effective form of communication and one partner's control over the other is acceptable in intimate relationships. The cycle of control and violence continues when children who witness violence grow up to become perpetrators or victims themselves.

VAWA 2005 offers essential funds to programs that serve children exposed to domestic violence. Through these programs, children and youth exposed to domestic violence receive counseling and advocacy. VAWA provides education to persons working with children to enable them to identify children and families experiencing domestic abuse and to make safe referrals to appropriate service providers. VAWA 2005 provides Safe Havens, or supervised visitation centers used to protect children from further exposure to domestic violence during visitation and parent-child exchanges. Also, VAWA 2005 supports collaborative services for families experiencing both domestic violence and child maltreatment. In addition to the provision of victim services, these programs increase community cross-training to enhance the community's ability to identify domestic violence in child protective cases and to protect the safety of the child and non-abusing parent.

In addition to childhood exposure to domestic violence, youth experience violence in their dating relationships. Women between the ages of 16 and 24 experience the highest rate of non-fatal intimate partner violence, and due to their youth, they experience this abuse in dating relationships.¹⁹ Thirty-eight percent of adolescent women reporting date rape are between the ages of 14 and 17.²⁰ Fourteen states exclude dating violence from their definition of domestic violence, leaving youth victims ineligible for protective orders against perpetrators unless they live with or have a child in common with their abusers. Also, few states allow minors to self-petition for protective orders. A California study indicates that youths do not seek help with domestic or dating violence because they fear a breach of confidentiality or they are confused about the law.²¹

Therefore, it is imperative that youth have access to prevention and intervention services for domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking. VAWA 2005 provides protections for victims of dating violence, including young victims. It offers grants for programs providing counseling, advocacy, and other services to teens and young adults experiencing dating violence. The Access to Justice for Teens program encourages collaboration and cross-training between law enforcement agencies, courts, and victim service providers to develop a community response to domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking among youth. This community response includes education, provision of appropriate victim services, and allocation of appropriate resources in juvenile court matters. Finally, VAWA 2005 offers grants to programs that educate youth about domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking. These community-based programs teach young men and women how to develop mutually respectful and nonviolent relationships.

VAWA 2005 provides essential resources to programs that protect children and youth experiencing domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking. It is crucial that the Senate authorize each of these programs as well as sufficient appropriations to serve children and youth.

Housing Needs of Battered Women

Advocates and survivors constantly report that victims of domestic and sexual violence experience major barriers in obtaining and maintaining housing independent from their abusers. This barrier creates an atmosphere where survivors feel trapped and often fear leaving their abusers for fear of becoming homeless. This fear is validated by the 92% of homeless women who have experienced severe physical or sexual abuse at some point in their lives.²²

Unfortunately, there is a shortage of affordable, permanent housing in most communities. Additionally, the average stay at a battered women's or homeless shelter is 60 days. Many of these programs reach capacity quickly and have waiting lists that cannot accommodate new residents. There are not enough federal housing rent vouchers available to accommodate the number of victims and their children in need. Some people remain on the waiting list for years, while some lists are closed.²³ Request for emergency shelter by homeless families with children increased in 78% of U.S. cities surveyed in 2004.²⁴

Transitional housing programs provide an essential continuum between emergency shelter and independent living. Often these programs provide longer term housing and services that assist victims while they obtain employment, education and more permanent housing. Participation in a transitional housing program averages from three to 18 months. The majority of battered women in transitional housing programs state that had these programs not existed, they would have returned to their abusers.²⁵ VAWA 2005 expands the existing transitional housing program for victims to include funds for creating and operating transitional housing projects and helping victims maintain safety and self-sufficiency. VAWA 2005 creates a $10 million program to fund collaborative efforts to create permanent housing options for victims that help develop communities and leverage private dollars. This program is modeled after extremely successful affordable housing, community development and "housing first" programs across the nation in urban, suburban and rural areas.

Alarming, victims of domestic and sexual violence and their families across the country are being discriminated against, denied access to, and even evicted from public, subsidized, and private housing because of their status as victims of domestic violence or the abuse perpetrated against them.²⁶ Landlords frequently turn away victims who have protection orders or other indications of their status as victims of domestic violence. They threaten victims with penalties or evictions or unfairly hold victims accountable for the behavior of their abusers. Consequently, victims refrain from calling law enforcement if they are in danger because they are concerned they will be evicted.²⁷ Some advocates advise battered women not to seek protection orders because in doing so, they may place their housing in peril.

VAWA 2005 authorizes a $10 million grant program to help public and Indian housing authorities and assisted housing providers respond to domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking in ways that protect victims while holding perpetrators accountable. This program will help housing programs protect the safety and confidentiality of victims within the homeless services system. It will ensure that victims in public and subsidized housing have access to the criminal justice system without jeopardizing their current or future housing.

VAWA 2005 specifically amends the Section 8 and Public Housing statutes to state that an incidence of abuse shall not be good cause for terminating a lease held by the victim, and that the abuser's criminal activity directly related to abuse and beyond control of the victim shall not be grounds for eviction or termination. These amendments clarify the ability of a landlord or housing authority to evict an individual who is a threat to the community or who engages in acts of criminal activity. Victims must provide documentation that they are victims and that the incident in question was a bona fide incident of domestic violence. Nothing prevents a victim who has committed a crime or violated a lease from being evicted or terminated. These amendments will help housing authorities reduce crime and maintain safety for all residents by enabling victims to hold their perpetrators accountable and reach out for help to stop the abuse.

The reauthorization of VAWA, with expanded provisions to protect and provide housing options for victims and their families, will improve safety in housing programs and bring desperately needed resources, collaborations, and protections to help end homelessness and domestic and sexual violence.

Sexual Assault Services Act (SASA)

Currently there are no Federal dollars dedicated or spent on direct services for victims of sexual assault. While rape crisis centers have made tremendous progress to ensure that sexual assault victims receive the services they need, many centers' ability to meet these needs have been hampered by a significant lack of resources. Rape crisis centers report that they have cut the frequency of counseling sessions with victims and hours of hotline operations, two of the most crucial services rape crisis centers provide. These centers lack the resources to reach many underserved populations, some of which experience sexual assault at a very high rate. Finally, many communities still have no accessible rape crisis services at all.

²⁶ National Coalition Against Domestic Violence. Interviews with State Coalitions and Local Shelter Programs. Spring 2003.

Statistics show:

- In America, 1 of 6 women and 1 of 33 men has experienced an attempted or completed rape as a child or adult.²⁸
- Sexual violence affects people through the lifespan, from young children to the elderly.
- Victims of sexual violence experience higher rates of depression; anxiety disorders, mental illness, addiction, eating disorders, suicidality and self-esteem problems than non-victims. These crimes also may negatively affect the emotional well-being of their friends and family.²⁹
- Total costs of rape and sexual assault are estimated to be $127 billion a year in the United States, (excluding the costs of child sexual abuse) including loss of productivity, medical and mental health care, police and fire services, social/victim services, property loss/damage and quality of life issues.³⁰

Without a consistent and specialized funding stream for direct services, rape crisis centers face uncertain futures and will struggle to meet the emotional, medical, legal and long-term mental health needs of victims. The proposed Sexual Assault Services Act (SASA) in the Services and Outreach title of VAWA 2005 will create a desperately needed funding stream for direct services for sexual assault victims, as well as provide resources for state sexual assault coalitions, whose assistance is invaluable to service providers nationwide. SASA authorizes the Attorney General to award grants to assist tribes and states in their effort to provide services to adult and minor sexual assault victims and their family and household members. Grants may be used for general intervention and advocacy, including accompaniment though medical, criminal justice, and social support systems, support services, and related assistance. SASA funds may be used to provide training and technical assistance relating to sexual assault for various organizations, including governments, law enforcement, courts, nonprofit organizations, faith based organizations, and professionals working in legal services, social services, and health care. In addition, SASA authorizes grants for nonprofit organizations that provide culturally-specific intervention and related assistance for victims of sexual assault.

How VAWA can continue to help victims of sexual assault:

"As a Board member for our new, local sexual assault services program, VAWA has most definitely filled a void. Until recently, our rural area had NO services for rape victims, and VAWA funding has been a major part in bringing such services to fruition."

*Pat Peterson
Peace Place Winder, Georgia*

In 1994 and 2000, VAWA reauthorized the Health and Human Services Rape Prevention and Education Program. A part of Preventative Health Services Block Grant funding, this specialized program helps states address sexual assault by funding education and prevention initiatives such as seminars and rape crisis hotlines. This is a formula program available to each state with amounts dependent on population. At least 25% of the funds must be targeted to middle school, junior high and high school students. This program is essential to the reauthorization of VAWA in 2005

Approximately 1,315 rape crisis centers across the country help victims of rape, sexual assault, sexual abuse, and incest rebuild their lives by providing a range of vital services to victims. These centers:

- Operate 24-hour hotlines
- Provide 24-hour accompaniment to law enforcement departments, hospitals, and legal proceedings
- Offer short- and long-term individual counseling and support groups for victims and their families
- Assist victims with obtaining compensation and restitution

Rape crisis centers serve all victims of sexual violence, including women who have been raped, child sexual assault and incest survivors, adult survivors of childhood sexual abuse, male victims, persons with disabilities, and victims who experience abuse in later life. They also provide necessary aid to family members and others affected by sexual violence.

The effectiveness of such supportive interventions has been documented. Studies have found that services such as those provided by our nation's rape crisis centers can shorten the amount of time a person exhibits symptoms of rape-related posttraumatic stress disorder.³¹ In addition, victims who receive information and services are more likely to participate in the criminal justice process.³²

Domestic Violence and the Workplace

Economic security is one of the most formidable obstacles for survivors of domestic violence, sexual violence and stalking. Not only does domestic violence have economic effects on individuals, communities and families, but economic dependence can prohibit victims from seeking safety or services. Many abusers attempt to retain power over their victims through economic control, and will often attempt to sabotage a victim's ability to work productively.

³¹ Zorza, J. Ed. (1997). Study finds rape crisis programs do work. Sexual Assault Report, 1 (2), 17, 30-31.

Recent studies have found that between 35 and 56 percent of employed battered women surveyed were harassed at work by their abusers.³³ A 1998 study by the Government Accountability Office found that between one quarter and one half of domestic violence victims report having lost a job due in part to domestic violence.³⁴ Likewise, almost half of sexual assault survivors lost their jobs or were forced to quit in the aftermath of the crime,³⁵ and more than 35 percent of stalking victims report losing time from work due to the stalking and seven percent never return to work.³⁶

By authorizing Title VII of VAWA 2005, the Senate will help victims maintain their role in the workplace and assist businesses in achieving greater productivity. For example, by providing emergency unpaid leave to victims of domestic violence and sexual assault, Congress can ensure that victims are able to obtain the legal, medical, and social services necessary for them to escape violence. Having a steady source of income can make all the difference in whether a survivor establishes economic independence or returns to their abuser.

Victims report that they have been fired from their jobs for taking time off to obtain an order of protection, attend court proceedings, or find emergency housing. Title VII, which entitles victims to ten days of emergency unpaid leave to attend to these need, will ensure that survivors domestic violence are not forced to choose between retaining employment and escaping violence.

Furthermore, employers will benefit from VAWA 2005 by providing emergency unpaid leave to victims of domestic and sexual violence, employers will face fewer turnovers in the workplace. Currently, victims of intimate partner violence lose 8,000,000 days of paid work each year--the equivalent of over 32,000 full-time jobs and 5,600,000 days of household productivity.³⁷ Unpaid emergency leave would make it more likely that employees could stay at work while they dealt with the violence, or return to work more quickly following the emergency leave. Overall, these provisions would facilitate a net rise in productivity, and businesses would benefit from the increasing rates of return from a safer and more stable workforce.

Ignoring domestic violence comes at a high cost to employers. The Bureau of National Affairs estimates that domestic violence costs United States employers between $3 billion and $5 billion annually in lost time and productivity.³⁸ Other reports have estimated that domestic violence costs United States employers as much as $13 billion annually.³⁹ Title VII of VAWA 2005 addresses these costs by creating a National Clearinghouse on Domestic and Sexual Violence in the Workplace. The National Clearinghouse would work with employers, labor unions, and victim advocates to provide information and training to promote a better understanding of appropriate workplace assistance to victims of domestic or sexual violence. The Clearinghouse would also develop protocols and model workplace policies, provide employer-sponsored and labor organization-sponsored victim assistance and outreach counseling, and conduct assessments of the workplace costs of domestic or sexual violence. By funding the Clearinghouse, the Senate is both acknowledging the financial impact of domestic violence in the workplace, and generating a solution to these losses that will benefit employers and employees alike.

Instances will arise when emergency unpaid leave will not be enough. Sometimes victims must relocate themselves to escape violence. In these cases, victims must leave their jobs, their homes, and their friends, as they move in search of a safe beginning. By providing federal unemployment compensation to victims of domestic and sexual violence, through VAWA 2005, Congress will send a clear message to survivors of abuse that escaping violence is always “good cause.” This provision is imperative for the many survivors who are currently ineligible for unemployment insurance, because relocation as a result of violence is not “good cause” to receive unemployment benefits. While 26 states currently utilize unemployment insurance laws that address domestic or sexual violence, these laws often place an undue burden on victims of violence.⁴⁰ VAWA 2005 will ensure that victims across the country are afforded consistent protection when fleeing violence. Unemployment compensation to survivors of violence will provide these victims with the economic independence necessary to address the effects of violence in their lives and to relocate to a safe space.

Protecting Battered Immigrant Women

In 1994 and 2000, VAWA set out to remove obstacles inadvertently interposed by immigration law that would prevent non-citizen victims from safely escaping domestic violence. Over the past ten years, the immigration provisions in VAWA have helped victims fleeing abusive relationships and have limited the ability of abusers, traffickers, and perpetrators of sexual assault to paralyze their victims with threats of deportation. VAWA 2005 builds upon the already solid foundation established over the past decade and provides expanded improvements and technical corrections to further ensure the safety of non-citizen and trafficked victims of domestic violence.

Research has found that between 34 and 49.5% of immigrant women experience domestic violence over the course of their lifetimes.⁴¹ Immigrant married women experience higher levels of domestic violence (59.5%)⁴² and research has found that over 50% of immigrant women surveyed were still living with their abusers.⁴³ Abused or trafficked non-citizens often face multiple barriers when trying to escape a violent relationship. When attempting to leave some victims face obstacles and complications, such as: a combination of language barriers, cultural differences, citizenship status, and lack of access to services. These barriers all attribute to the fear and frustration that victims face when attempting to leaving an abuser. Because of these complex barriers, non-citizens and trafficked persons are particularly vulnerable to becoming victims of domestic violence.

In 1994, VAWA recognized the special circumstances and hardships that can apply to non-citizen survivors of domestic abuse, and it provided avenues to allow abused spouses and children to leave their abusive families without jeopardizing their immigration status. VAWA 2000 expanded upon those provisions and provided additional relief for non-citizen survivors including new types of visas for survivors of trafficking, sexual assault, and other crimes. The immigration provisions in VAWA 2005 are designed to build upon the successes of VAWA provisions in 1994 and 2000. These provisions provide new forms of immigration relief to domestic abuse and/or trafficking survivors and addressing specialized needs are certain categories of immigrants such as the Nicaraguan Adjustment and Central American Relief Act (NACARA).

VAWA 2005 includes several vital provisions necessary for the protection of battered non-citizens and trafficked victims. VAWA 2005 seeks to prevent the Department of Homeland Security from seizing victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, and trafficking while they seek services at battered women shelters, rape crisis centers and protection order courts. One of the main reasons battered non-citizens refuse to seek assistance is out of fear they will automatically be turned over to immigration authorities. By preventing immigration officials from removing victims from these safe havens, victims will be more likely to seek out such service and receive assistance.

VAWA 2005 protects parents abused by their adult U.S. citizen sons or daughters. Unfortunately many non-citizens who come to the U.S. to assist their citizen children eventually are abused by their children. Many of these victims have no other family or resources available to them and therefore are forced to remain in violent families. Title VIII allows parents of citizens to self petition for citizenship, much the way, VAWA 1994 allowed spouses who could prove abuse by a partner to self petition.

If the provisions set forth in the previous VAWA authorizations are to succeed, it is necessary that victims be allowed to file all applicable forms of immigration relief. VAWA 2005 aims to accomplish this goal by barring the detention and deportation of victims who qualify for VAWA immigration relief. Title VIII provides that victims shall not be deported unless a VAWA self-petition has been denied and all opportunities for appeal have been exhausted. All victims who qualify to apply for VAWA self petitions deserve the right to file those petitions and appeal any denial decision before deportation proceedings commence. Deporting VAWA self petitioners before their appeals are exhausted sends the wrong message and would discourage other victims from coming forward to file such petitions.

VAWA 2005 contains several immigration provisions that pertain to the safety and welfare of immigrant children. Title VIII states that authorities are not required to contact an abusive parent or family member when evaluating an abused, neglected, or abandoned juvenile's application for special immigrant juvenile status. This provision is imperative because seeks to prevent abusive parents from locating their children and preventing an abused or neglected child from contacting authorities. These provisions ensure that children of abused parents receiving VAWA immigration protections also receive those protections. This clarifying language seeks to ensure the safety and stability of families who are fleeing abusive relationships.

Domestic Violence and Communities of Color

Domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking impact people of all ages, cultures, and socio-economic status. Although the Violence Against Women Act has provided increased protection and resources for victims, racial and ethnic minorities often have limited access to these crucial services. VAWA 2005 must support communities of color in their development of culturally and linguistically appropriate services that meet the needs of the community.

Many women of color encounter barriers to accessing appropriate services for domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking. Language barriers and cultural differences prevent many women of color from accessing services that offer protection for them and their children. Frequently, the nearest victim service provider is outside their community and may not embrace the woman's culture or adequately address the woman's safety needs of their communities. Community organizations and domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking organizations must develop culturally-specific services, offered in the victim's native language.

Provisions for culturally-specific services developed within communities of color are included in all titles of VAWA 2005. The definition of underserved communities includes racial and ethnic populations. The bill ensures adequate distribution of funds to programs serving communities of color. VAWA 2005 fosters collaboration between culturally-specific community organizations and domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking organizations. In addition, VAWA 2005 requires grantees to collaborate with representatives from racial, ethnic and other underserved communities to develop and implement new programs. Grant applicants must document their programs' impact on racial, ethnic, and other underserved communities and include this information in plans and reports. Also, this bill allocates a coalition set-aside as well as other funds to organizations within United States Territories that address domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking.

VAWA 2005 supports services that meet the cultural and linguistic needs of communities of color. The bill addresses the needs of immigrant populations through technical corrections to the current immigration law in order to ensure that existing forms of immigration relief are available to victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, and trafficking. In addition, the bill creates housing alternatives within communities of color and addresses the safety needs of survivors of violence in subsidized housing. VAWA 2005 promotes the development of public education to racial, ethnic and immigration communities through cooperation with culturally-specific community organizations. Finally, VAWA 2005 provides for the development of direct sexual assault services by culturally-specific community organizations.

These programs will offer essential services and protections to victims of violence within communities of color. They enable communities of color to develop prevention and intervention services that meet the needs of victims within each community. It is crucial that the Senate authorize each of these programs and allocate sufficient appropriations in order for each program to serve and support survivors of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking.

Domestic Violence and Native Americans

Native women are more likely to be battered, raped, and stalked than any other group of women.⁴⁴ Native women are three times more likely to be physically assaulted than Caucasian women.⁴⁵ Native women experience sexual assault at more than twice the rate of Caucasian women, three times the rate of Hispanic women, and seven times the rate of Asian women.⁴⁶ Authorizing the Tribal programs in VAWA 2005 is of particular importance given the heightened rate of violence against American Indian and Alaska Native women.

To gain a better understanding of these devastating rates of violence, Title IX, authorizes the National Institute of Justice to conduct a study focused on domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, stalking, and murder in Indian country. This comprehensive study will both identify obstacles and make recommendations on how to better prevention efforts, community response and prosecution of these crimes. Upon the study's completion, a task force of tribal leaders and victim's rights advocates will assemble to determine how to best implement the study's recommendations. This research and analysis will provide new direction to the movement to end violence against Native women.

VAWA 2005 will also establish a Deputy Director for Tribal Affairs in the Office on Violence Against Women. The Deputy Director will ensure that a portion of tribal set-aside funds are used to develop and maintain tribal domestic violence shelters or programs for battered Indian women; create new tribal education awareness programs and materials that address violence against Indian women; and to enhance the response of Indian tribes to respond to crimes including legal services for victims and Indian-specific offender programs.

By passing the Title IX, the Senate is affirming its commitment not only to decreasing the incidence of violent crime experienced by Indian women, but also to ensuring that those who perpetrate violent crime against Indian women are held accountable for their behavior. Currently Indian law enforcement agencies are unable to enter and obtain criminal information from Federal criminal databases. Title IX will allow Indian law enforcement to enter information about domestic violence and sexual assault cases into Federal criminal information databases, and to obtain information from these databases. Because nearly 90% of rapes and assaults against Native Women are committed by non-Indian assailants, this information sharing is critical.⁴⁷ These provisions also establish a national tribal sex offender registry and a tribal protection order registry. The protective order registry will improve victim's services by supplying tribal law enforcement with the information necessary to enforce protection orders and protect victims needing assistance.

VAWA 2005 also enhances the authority of Indian law enforcement to better respond to crimes of violence against Native women. Because, three of five Native women will experience physical abuse, this provision is a priority.⁴⁸ VAWA 2005 amends the Indian Law Enforcement Reform Act to allow law enforcement to make an arrest without a warrant for domestic violence offenses committed in Indian country outside of their presence.

Because current jurisdictional limitations have only exacerbated the disproportionate rates of violence, it is essential that the Senate address these loopholes. For example, tribal court convictions do not currently count for purposes of felony prosecution. VAWA 2005 remedies this by creating a new federal offense aimed at repeat domestic violence offenders. The habitual offender provision includes tribal court convictions for purposes of Federal felony prosecution when the perpetrator has at least two separate federal, state or tribal convictions for crimes involving assault, sexual abuse or a violent felony against a spouse or intimate partner. This sends a clear message to offenders that they will receive a sentence appropriate to the crimes of rape and battery whether prosecuted in federal court or in tribal court.

About NCADV

The Mission of the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence is to organize for collective power by advancing transformative work, thinking and leadership of communities and individuals working to end the violence in our lives.

NCADV was formally organized in January 1978 when over 100 battered women's advocates from all parts of the nation attended the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights hearing on battered women in Washington, DC, hoping to address common problems these programs usually faced in isolation. NCADV, having celebrated 25 years in 2003, remains the only national organization of grassroots shelter and service programs for battered women.

In 1970, there was no such thing as a shelter for battered women. Today there are over 2,000 shelter and service programs, forming a national movement based on the belief that women and their children are entitled to a safe environment free from violence and the threat of violence.

NCADV believes violence against women and children results from the use of force or threat to achieve and maintain control over others in intimate relationships, and from societal abuse of power and domination in the forms of sexism, racism, homophobia, classism, anti-Semitism, able-bodyism, ageism and other oppressions. NCADV recognizes that the abuses of power in society foster battering by perpetuating conditions, which condone violence against women and children. Therefore, it is the mission of NCADV to work for major societal changes necessary to eliminate both personal and societal violence against all women and children.

NCADV's work includes coalition building at the local, state, regional and national levels; support for the provision of community-based, non-violent alternatives - such as safe home and shelter programs - for battered women and their children; public education and technical assistance; policy development and innovative legislation; focus on the leadership of NCADV's caucuses and task forces developed to represent the concerns of organizationally under represented groups; and efforts to eradicate social conditions which contribute to violence against women and children.

Established in 1989, the National Law Center on Homelessness & Poverty (NLCHP) is a national, not-for-profit organization devoted to legal advocacy, enforcement of existing laws and policies, and public policy reform related to homelessness and poverty in the U.S. Our programs seek to ensure equity and access to existing services (including housing, education, health care, and income) for low-income families, children, and others lacking permanent and affordable housing. Since the passage of the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act in 1987, NLCHP has been at the forefront of efforts to protect and enhance the legal rights and protections aimed at alleviating the consequences of poverty and preventing homelessness.

The Domestic Violence Program at NLCHP works to improve access to housing for domestic violence survivors and their children. The program engages in federal, state, and local legislative and administrative advocacy and conducts national, regional, and local training, outreach, and technical assistance on domestic violence and housing law to hundreds of legal and social services providers and advocates around the country. In this capacity, the program also serves as a leading legal advisor to the Housing and Homelessness Committee of the National Task Force to End Sexual and Domestic Violence Against Women.

As the Senate considers the Violence Against Women Act of 2005 (S. 1197), we offer our full and unequivocal support for the speedy reauthorization of the law. Since the original enactment of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) in 1994, this critical and life-saving legislation has afforded basic safety and legal protections to millions of victims of domestic violence in the U.S. As advocates for some of the most vulnerable individuals in the country, we see every day the devastating economic impact that domestic violence has on our society.

Indeed, domestic violence is a leading cause of homelessness nationally. Among cities surveyed in 2004, 44% identified domestic violence as a primary cause of local homelessness.¹ In varying regions, between 22% and 57% of homeless women report that domestic violence was the immediate cause of their homelessness.² Ninety-two percent (92%) of homeless women have experienced severe physical or sexual abuse at some point in their lives,³ and 63% have been victims of domestic violence as adults.⁴ Currently, 38% of all domestic violence victims typically become homeless at some point in their lives.⁵ Some victims and their children lose their homes when they flee abuse. Other domestic violence survivors become homeless after being evicted or denied housing as a result of the violence against them.⁶

Exacerbating this crisis is the severe shortage of affordable housing for low-income individuals and families. Over five million households have “worst case” housing needs: living in substandard housing, doubled-up, or paying over one-half of their income for rent, according to a 2003 federal report.⁷ Federal housing assistance programs, including public housing, housing subsidy programs, transitional and supportive housing, and emergency shelter programs, are all under funded, under increasing attack, and insufficient to meet the rapidly growing need. For an individual who is in a violent relationship and already living in poverty, this harsh reality often means that she must choose between life with her abuser or life on the streets.

Housing Opportunities and Safety for Battered Women and Children

Because of our recognized expertise in homelessness and housing law, we focus our written testimony on Title VI of VAWA, “Housing Opportunities and Safety for Battered Women and Children.” We would like to use this opportunity both to describe accurately what is contained in Title VI of S. 1197, as introduced, and to urge your specific support for these badly needed provisions. Title VI improves safety for domestic violence victims in housing and shelter by bringing desperately needed resources, collaborations, and protections to help end homelessness and domestic and sexual violence.

Title VI of the bill acknowledges that the legal protections available under VAWA must extend to homeless victims of domestic and sexual violence, as well as victims living in public and subsidized housing. NLCHP believes that S. 1197 goes a long way towards recognizing and remedying major housing barriers that domestic violence victims and their families face, while also moving in the right direction towards expanding housing rights for this marginalized population. These forward-looking, pragmatic provisions represent ground-breaking inroads for victims whose housing status is vulnerable.

Combating Domestic and Sexual Violence in Public and Assisted Housing

In line with the long-standing history and intent of VAWA, Title VI helps public and Indian housing authorities and federally-assisted housing providers respond appropriately to domestic and sexual violence so that victims living in public and subsidized housing can reap the benefits of VAWA's intended protections. The bill establishes a new grant program to combat domestic and sexual violence in federal public and assisted housing. Designed to ensure that victims receive protection and that perpetrators are held accountable, the program identifies and promotes best practices on domestic and sexual violence in the federal housing programs. The grants will be used for education and training of agency staff, developing improved housing admissions and occupancy policies and best practices, improving collaboration with victim services organizations, and reducing evictions and denials of housing to victims for crimes committed by the perpetrators of violence against them. Administered by the Office on Violence Against Women in the U.S. Department of Justice, this program authorizes $10 million for each of fiscal years 2006 through 2010. See § 41405.

Developing Long-Term Housing Solutions for Victims

Title VI of VAWA takes the lessons learned from extremely successful affordable housing, community development, and "housing first" programs across the nation and uses these local models to fund collaborative local efforts to create long-term housing options for victims. These specialized long-term housing collaborations will develop communities and leverage private dollars in urban, suburban, and rural areas. Administered by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services through the Administration on Children, Youth, and Families, this new grant program authorizes $10 million for each of fiscal years 2005 through 2010. See § 41404.

Improving Transitional Housing Assistance for Victims

Transitional housing resources and services provide an essential continuum for victims between emergency shelter and long-term housing. The severe shortage of safe, affordable, long-term housing relative to the number of victims in need means that emergency shelter resources are stretched thin. For example, 32% of requests for emergency shelter by homeless families went unmet in 2004.⁸ Title VI expands transitional housing options for victims to help them sustain their own safety and self-sufficiency. The majority of victims in transitional housing consistently state that without transitional housing, they would be forced to return to their abusers. Title VI expands and improves the existing transitional housing program for victims that the Office on Violence Against Women of the U.S. Department of Justice administers. See § 602.

Ensuring Safety and Confidentiality for Victims in the Homeless Services System

Title VI protects the safety and confidentiality of victims in the homeless services system by requiring the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development to instruct grantees and sub-grantees under the McKinney-Vento Homeless Assistance Act not to enter personally identifying information into any shared databases, such as the Homeless Management Information System (HMIS). See § 605.

Planning and Reporting on the Needs of Victims in Federal Housing

Local communities and public and Indian housing authorities will be required to include a description of any goals, objectives, policies, or programs in place to serve the housing needs of victims when they are developing their “consolidated plans” and five-year plans. Title VI simply adds the needs of victims for consideration in these long-standing federal housing planning and reporting processes. See §§ 603 and 604.

Ensuring Basic Access to the Criminal Justice System for Victims in Federal Housing

Title VI of S. 1197 also acknowledges the unfortunate and disturbing reality that even in 2005 – over ten years after VAWA’s original enactment in 1994 – many victims of domestic violence across the nation who seek or obtain civil protection orders against their abusers, who summon police in response to domestic violence, or who take other protective measures that VAWA encourages are in fact punished for doing so with the loss of their housing.

Victims who apply for or reside in federal public and subsidized housing are frequently evicted or turned away because of the violence against them. These victims are faced with a choice that no human being should have to make – living with their abusers or living on the streets.

In a recent nationwide survey, local housing and domestic violence attorneys across the country reported 580 documented cases where victims were evicted because of the domestic violence committed against them.⁹ This figure represents about 10% of the total eviction caseload handled by these surveyed service providers. The same providers handled 309 documented cases where victims were denied housing because of the domestic violence committed against them – 29% of their housing denial caseload.¹⁰

For example, “Ronda” in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, obtained federal housing assistance in the form of a Housing Choice Voucher that helped her pay her rent. She lived with her four children and her boyfriend. Her boyfriend assaulted her in July 2001, and she ended her relationship with him. He moved out, and she removed him from her lease. Ten days after the assault, she received notice from the local housing agency that her voucher assistance was being terminated because of her boyfriend’s violent criminal activity against her. With the loss of the voucher assistance, Ronda was suddenly unable to pay her rent.

In another example, a few years ago, “Linda’s” husband assaulted her in their New York City Housing Authority (NYCHA) apartment. He was arrested, and Linda also obtained a civil order of protection excluding him from the residence. She informed NYCHA of what had happened, and NYCHA subsequently moved to evict both Linda and her former husband from the apartment because of his assault against her.

S. 1197 is straightforward in addressing this unfortunate reality. Title VI of the bill amends the federal Public Housing and Housing Choice Voucher Program statutes – two of the largest federal housing programs where these stories continue to occur around the country – to clarify that victims of domestic violence must not lose their housing simply because they are victims. The language clarifies that domestic violence against the victim shall not constitute “good cause” for evicting or terminating assistance to a victim of domestic violence. Several extensive qualifications and exceptions have already been included in the bill, as introduced, solely in response to operational and other concerns of national housing industry groups. See §§ 606 and 607.

These provisions simply seek to ensure that victims of domestic violence have full and equal access to the criminal justice and legal systems – as envisioned by VAWA – without jeopardizing their current or future housing. Victims of domestic violence cannot and must not continue to suffer for the crimes committed against them by their abusers.

Conclusion

Once again, we offer our full and unequivocal support for the speedy passage, in its entirety, of S. 1197, the 2005 reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act. We also must reiterate the desperate need for Title VI of S. 1197 in particular, “Housing Opportunities and Safety for Battered Women and Children.” We urge any members of the Senate with any questions or concerns about Title VI of the bill to review again the carefully and pragmatically drafted proposals that we fully and accurately describe and support above. We know that the timely passage of S. 1197 will have an enormous impact by ensuring that VAWA’s protections reach our nation’s most vulnerable individuals. NLCHP looks forward to continuing to work with you to achieve this goal. We also thank you for the opportunity to submit testimony at this hearing.

The Honorable Senator Feingold
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senator Feingold:

Over the past 10 years Congress has responded positively and effectively to help end domestic violence in our communities by funding Violence Against Women Act programs. In recent years the success of these programs has resulted in a growing demand for the life-saving services they provide. However, this increased demand coincides with a series of budget cuts that have crippled many local organizations, and forced others to close completely.

Programs such as the National Domestic Violence Hotline, battered women's shelters, and trainings for police, prosecutors and court officials have all contributed to the decline in domestic violence since VAWA was first authorized in 1994 and reauthorized in 2000. Now, as VAWA is soon scheduled to expire, we hope that you will support its reauthorization once again. VAWA is more than good social policy; it is also good fiscal policy. The first VAWA, authorized in 1994, saved nearly $14.8 billion in net averted social costs. Reauthorization and full funding for all VAWA programs is a crucial investment in our communities, one that saves lives, saves money and saves the future of our nation.

Trempealeau County was able to utilize a VAWA Grant for a Domestic Violence Liaison who worked in the Sheriff Department to help Deputies and Officers County-wide in enhancing their response to Domestic Violence and Stalking by assisting in follow-ups with victims, job coaching, mentoring, training, and creating better policies and procedures. If VAWA monies do not get reauthorized these kinds of enhancement programming will not be able to continue. This is only a small idea of what VAWA monies are being accessed for in the Trempealeau and La Crosse Counties.

Wisconsin counties are not able to assist local domestic violence programming with funding as the budgets have been cut to a point that counties are having a hard time to just make mandated services exist. Victims need to know that the Federal Government is taking the terroristic threats that they are living with everyday as serious as threats like 9-11. Victims need to know that the government has not forgotten them, and that living in the United States of America is a land of the free and not a place where you are afraid of your own home by someone you love.

Without reauthorization and full funding for VAWA programs, women and children in La Crosse and Trempealeau Counties cannot access the services they need to escape from violence. The continued support of Congress is crucial to helping victims and their children find safety and security and build self-sufficiency. On behalf of New Horizons Shelter and Women's Center and representing the interests of victims of domestic violence in La Crosse and Trempealeau Counties, we urge you to support the reauthorization of VAWA and full funding for all VAWA.

If you have any questions or need additional information, please contact Deb Hansen, Executive Director of New Horizons Shelter and Women's Center for La Crosse and Trempealeau Counties. We look forward to working with you on these important issues.

Sincerely,

Dear Senator Feingold,

I am writing on behalf of Friends Aware of Violent Relationships, a comprehensive domestic violence service agency located in Fond du Lac. As is the case with other domestic violence programs in Wisconsin, we depend on Congress to support our efforts in serving victims of domestic violence by funding the Violence Against Women Act. (VAWA)

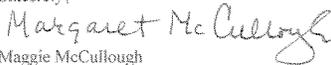

Our work on a national, state and local level does make a difference through programs such as the National Domestic Violence Hotline, battered women's shelters and trainings for police, prosecutors and courts. Many of these activities would not have been possible if not for VAWA. First authorized in 1994 and reauthorized in 2000, VAWA has saved nearly $14.8 billion in net averted social costs. Reauthorization for all VAWA programs is a crucial investment in our communities, one that saves lives, saves money and allows women and children to reestablish stable families after experiencing violence.

Each year FAVR serves approximately 500 victims of domestic violence from Fond du Lac and surrounding counties. Our state and federal grants have either been reduced or have remained static during the past four years. At the same time, the downturn in Wisconsin's economy has made our work harder, as clients face greater barriers to achieving financial stability. Poverty is a major factor in victims needing to seek our services, as they lack the resources to recover when violence breaks up their family and makes them homeless and/or unemployed. We have been increasingly dependent on fundraising activities and local contributions to maintain our basic services. Fixed costs, such as health insurance and utilities eat up a greater percentage of our budget each year, preventing us from expanding services.

Without reauthorization and full funding for VAWA programs, women and children in Fond du Lac County will find it even more difficult to access the services they need to escape from violence. The continued support of Congress is crucial to helping victims and their children find safety, security and build self sufficiency. On behalf of FAVR and the victims we serve in Fond du Lac County, we urge you to support the reauthorization of VAWA and full funding for all VAWA programs

Please feel free to contact me if you have questions or need additional information. I can be reached by phone at 920-923-1743, or email maggiemc@exaccpc.com. All of us at FAVR look forward to working with you on these important issues.

Dear Chairman Specter, Senator Biden, and Senator Hatch:

I am writing to express my support of provisions in Senate version of the Violence Against Women Act reauthorization (S. 1197) providing unpaid emergency leave to allow victims of domestic violence to go to court, obtain medical treatment, or do safety planning without losing their jobs.

The North Carolina Department of Justice has long recognized domestic violence as a workplace issue. In an effort to better understand how those actions impact employers and workers, the Department of Justice has co-hosted a domestic violence in the workplace summit with the North Carolina Coalition Against Domestic Violence, and the North Carolina Council for Women/Domestic Violence Commission in October 2003. We also provided technical assistance and support to companies in North Carolina.

At the Department of Justice, we have also provided a safe harbor for victims through our Address Confidentiality Program for victims of domestic violence, sexual assault and stalking. The program provides public records protection for victims by providing a substitute address in the public records for victims when they have confidentially relocated, and also a mail forwarding service to the survivors' new protected address.

In the last three years, North Carolina has adopted provisions in law, similar to those in the Senate version of the Violence Against Women Act, which addresses the need of some domestic violence victims to take time from work to obtain protective orders, by requiring employers to grant victims reasonable leave for those purposes. We have also passed laws that allows for employers to obtain protective orders on behalf of the victim to protect the workplace, and have made it possible for domestic violence victims to qualify for unemployment insurance while away from work.

Much progress has been made in prevention and treatment services for domestic violence victims in the decade since the Violence Against Women Act was first signed into law. The reauthorization allows for the opportunity to build upon that work by ensuring domestic violence victims have the ability to take time from work to access those services without jeopardizing their employment and economic security.

Thank you for allowing me the opportunity to share with you some of what North Carolina has done to respond to this issue. If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me at (919) 716-6780.

On the provisions in Title VIII of the Violence Against Women Act of 2005, S.1197, that Provide Protection of Battered and Trafficked Immigrant Women

Submitted to the United States Senate Judiciary Committee
Hearing on the "Reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act"

July 26, 2005

Legal Momentum (formerly the NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund) appreciates the opportunity to submit additional testimony for the record on the relief for immigrant victims of violence against women in the Violence Against Women Act of 2005, S 1197. We continue to press for the creation of a legal, institutional, and policy framework that allows immigrant victims to end the destructive role that domestic violence, sexual assault and trafficking play in their lives and allows all immigrant women to achieve economic self-sufficiency. We particularly want to highlight the importance for immigrant victims, for law enforcement and for stopping violence against women in our communities of assuring that the Violence Against Women Act of 2005, like its predecessors in 1994 and 2000, contains improvements in protections for immigrant victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, trafficking and child abuse.

This testimony is being submitted by the Immigrant Women Program of Legal Momentum and the National Network to End Violence Against Immigrant Women (National Network). Legal Momentum, the Family Violence Prevention Fund and Advanced Special Immigrant Survivors Technical Assistance -- ASSISTA -- co-chair the National Network to End Violence Against Immigrant Women whose membership consists of 3,000 organizations working with immigrant victims as victim advocates, lawyers, law enforcement, prosecutors, health care providers, social service providers, researchers and community organizers.

Legal Momentum, the National Network and over 25,000 immigrant victims of violence against women who have benefited by the Violence Against Women Act's immigration protections greatly appreciate the work that many Senators and many members of this Subcommittee have done in past years in supporting legislation offering immigration protections and strengthening access to safety-net services for immigrant victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, and trafficking -- most notably, the immigration protection included in the Violence Against Women Acts of 1994 and 2000 and the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act (IIRAIRA) and the Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act (PRWORA) of 1996.

HISTORY OF CONGRESSIONAL PROTECTIONS FOR IMMIGRANT VICTIMS

Legal protections for immigrant victims of violence against women have expanded greatly since over the past 15 years, as has access to services for immigrant victims and their children. Since 1990, Congress has passed a series of immigration, public benefits, criminal and legal services laws that reflect an evolving understanding of the dangers that domestic violence poses to society as a whole, and to all individual victims – women, children, citizens, and non-citizens alike. This legislation, as outlined below, has sought to reduce domestic violence by simultaneously providing funding for a coordinated network of support to victims of violence against women and crafting a legal infrastructure under which law enforcement can better investigate and prosecute these domestic violence, sexual assault, trafficking and stalking crimes.

The Violence Against Women Act of 1994

The Violence Against Women Act of 1994 (“VAWA 1994”), included as part of the Violent Crime Control Act of 1994, was the first piece of federal legislation in the United States specifically designed to help curb domestic violence. VAWA 1994’s overarching goals were to enhance justice system protection for battered women and to expand collaboration and cooperation between battered women’s supportive services and the criminal and civil justice systems.¹ VAWA sought to improve services to victims and to improve police department and prosecutor’s office procedures for handling domestic violence cases and prosecuting perpetrators. An essential part of this effort to offer protection and enhance the ability of the justice system to hold abusers accountable were VAWA 1994’s special protections for battered immigrant women and children abused by United States citizen or lawful permanent resident spouses or parents.²

Using Immigration Laws to Confront Domestic Violence

In VAWA 1994 Congress recognized that United States immigration laws were part of a larger failure to confront the domestic violence issue. The House of Representatives Committee on the Judiciary found that domestic abuse problems are “terribly exacerbated in marriages where one spouse is not a citizen and the non-citizens’ legal status depends on his or her marriage to the abuser,”³ because it places full and complete control of the alien spouse’s ability to gain legal status in the hands of the citizen or permanent resident.⁴ A battered spouse may be deterred from taking action to protect herself and her children including filing for a civil protection order, filing criminal charges or calling the police because of the threat or fear of deportation.⁵ As a result, many immigrant women live trapped and isolated in violent homes, afraid to talk to anyone about the violence and afraid to turn for anyone for help. Immigrant battered women fear continued abuse if they stay and deportation if they report the abuse and/or attempt to leave.⁶

Other research confirms that an abuser's control over a battered immigrant's immigration status and threats of deportation are very powerful tools that lock battered immigrants in abusive relationships, cut them off from help and enhance the lethality of the violence battered immigrant's experience.

A survey conducted among Latina immigrants in the D.C. area found that 49.3% reported physical abuse by an intimate partner during their lifetimes, 11.4% reported sexual abuse, and 42.1% reported severe physical or sexual abuse.⁷ Among immigrant Latinas who were married or formerly married the lifetime abuse rate raises to 59.5%.⁸ Despite the fact that 50.8% of the battered immigrant participants in the survey were married to citizens or permanent residents who could file immigration papers for them, 72.3% of abusive citizen or resident spouses never file immigration papers for their abused spouses and the 27.7% who do file hold their spouses in the marriage for almost 4 years before filing immigration papers.⁹

Further, this same research found that immigration related abuse, including threats of deportation against an immigrant spouse or intimate partner almost always exists only when physical or sexual abuse is also present.¹⁰ Thus, the existence of immigration related abuse in a relationship provides corroborating evidence of physical or sexual abuse. Further, when immigration related abuse occurs in relationships that do not yet include physical or sexual abuse this factor may be a predictor that the lethality of the violence in the relationship is likely to escalate.¹¹

Immigration Provisions Reduce Violence in Children's Lives

In crafting VAWA 1994's immigration provisions, the impact of domestic abuse on children was of significant concern to Congress.¹² When battered immigrant women are locked by immigration laws in abusive marriages to citizen and permanent resident spouses, they are forced to raise their children in an environment where children learn that violence is an appropriate means of addressing anger and frustration.¹³ Children who witness and experience violence in their home exhibit a greater likelihood of aggressive and antisocial behavior, more traumatic stress, depression, anxiety and slower cognitive development than children who grow up in non-violent homes.¹⁴ The VAWA 1994 immigration provisions involve the federal government in the struggle to counter domestic violence.

Reports by battered mothers show 87% of children witness abuse of mothers. Children from violent homes have higher rates of alcohol and drug abuse. As violence against the mother becomes more severe and more frequent, children experience 300% increase in physical violence by male batterer.

VAWA 1994 contained two provisions designed to help immigrant children living in abusive homes. First, Congress recognized that an abuser's control of the immigration status of the parent of the abused child would inhibit the reporting of child abuse and the removal of the child from the home of the abuser.¹⁵ To address this issue VAWA offered immigration protection both to abused immigrant children and also extended immigration protection to the immigrant parents of child abuse victims.¹⁶ Second, battered immigrant mothers were explicitly authorized to assist their minor children in attaining immigration benefits by including any of their children who were undocumented as derivative applicants in the mothers' VAWA self-petitions.¹⁷

By enacting the VAWA 1994 immigration provisions, Congress intended to provide battered immigrant women and children abused by their United States citizen and lawful permanent resident spouses or parents with a way to attain lawful immigrant status without their abuser's cooperation or knowledge.¹⁸ Congress amended immigration laws to provide battered women and children with a means of escape. VAWA 1994 was also designed to enhance the ability of battered immigrants to help in the prosecution of their abusers, by providing them the protection of legal immigration status.¹⁹ Prior to VAWA 1994, abusers of immigrant women could use control over immigration status and threats of deportation to make themselves immune from any risk of prosecution or punishment. Abusers had the unfettered power to assure that their victims remained forever undocumented and could have their victims deported if they cooperated with authorities.²⁰

The immigrant spouse can file this self-petition, whether or not the immigrant spouse is also being abused. Secondly, VAWA offered suspension of deportation in to these same battered immigrant spouses who needed access to legal immigration status to be able to protect their children from ongoing child abuse. However, VAWA suspension of deportation also offered immigration protection to the immigrant parent of an abused child when the abuser is the child's other citizen or lawful permanent resident parent. VAWA suspension of deportation is available even when that immigrant parent of the abused child is not married to the citizen or lawful permanent resident parent who had committed the child abuse. This guaranteed that battered immigrants could file for relief under VAWA without their abuser's knowledge. IIRAIRA § 384 (1996).

abused immigrant children, whose abusive citizen and permanent resident spouses, or parents, attempted to use their immigration status as a means of inflicting physical, emotional, and economic abuse, to file and to receive lawful immigration status without the approval, assistance, or cooperation of their abusive spouses or parents.²¹ They could either self-petition for lawful permanent resident status or apply for VAWA suspension of deportation.²²

Although the original VAWA 1994 helped significant numbers of battered immigrants, in many respects, the legislative protections for battered immigrants remained incomplete. Immigration and welfare reform laws passed subsequent to VAWA 1994 effectively barred access to VAWA protection for many immigrants and implementation problems continued to plague the VAWA process.²³ As a result, many immigrant domestic violence victims remained trapped in these violent relationships despite the significant gains in VAWA.²⁴ Further, the original VAWA 1994 did not offer any protection to several categories of battered immigrants, including: immigrants abused by citizen and lawful permanent resident boyfriends; immigrant spouses and children of abusive non-immigrant visa holders²⁵ or diplomats, immigrant spouses, children and intimate partners abused by undocumented abusers, and non-citizen spouses and children of abusive United States government employees and military members living abroad. In response, the battered immigrant advocacy community mounted a campaign to seek legislative responses to the problems battered immigrants still faced.

The bipartisan effort that led to the passage of VAWA 2000 included a significant expansion in protections for immigrant victims of domestic violence, sexual assault and trafficking. VAWA 2000's immigration provisions were designed to restore and expand access to a variety of legal protections for battered immigrants by addressing residual immigration law obstacles standing in the path of battered immigrants seeking to free themselves and their children from abusive relationships.²⁶

Congress clarified its intent with regard to these expanded battered immigrant protections in the following way:

[T]he Battered Immigrant Women Protection Act of 2000. . . Title V continues the work of the Violence Against Women Act of 1994 ("VAWA") in removing obstacles inadvertently interposed by our immigration laws that may hinder or prevent battered immigrants from fleeing domestic violence safely and prosecuting their abusers by allowing an abusive citizen or lawful permanent resident spouse to blackmail the abused spouse through threats related to the abused spouse's immigration status. . . *Immigrant Victims of Crime Able to Help Law Enforcement Without Fear of Deportation*²⁸

Advocates and law enforcement had long recognized the power of immigration abuse and the chilling effect such abuse had on the willingness of undocumented victims of crime to report these crimes to authorities. Even if a crime was reported, undocumented victims often hesitated to overtly cooperate with law enforcement in the investigation or prosecution for fear of being reported to immigration authorities by the perpetrator or his/her allies.

III. The Violence Against Women Act of 2005 Must Continue to Protect Immigrant Victims

In 1994 and 2000 Congress included immigration provisions designed to remove obstacles inadvertently imposed by previous immigration laws that prevented immigrant victims from safely fleeing domestic violence and prosecuting their abusers. VAWA 2000 extended immigration relief to immigrant victims of sexual assault, human trafficking and other violent crimes who agree to cooperate in criminal investigations or prosecutions. A key goal of all of the VAWA immigration protections is to cut off the ability of abusers, traffickers and perpetrators of sexual assault to blackmail their victims with threats of deportation and thereby avoid prosecution. VAWA allows immigrant victims to obtain immigration relief without their abusers' cooperation or knowledge. In passing this legislation, Congress understood that if we are to stop violence against women, all victims need protection and assistance without regard to their immigration status.

While VAWA 1994 and 2000 made significant progress in reducing violence against immigrant women, there are still many women and children whose lives are in danger today. Many VAWA-eligible victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, child abuse or trafficking are still being deported. Others remain economically trapped by abusers or traffickers in life-threatening environments. Some needy victims of family violence, including incest survivors and elder abuse victims, are totally cut off from VAWA's immigration protections. Finally, many trafficking victims are afraid to cooperate with law enforcement for fear that traffickers will retaliate against their family members. The Violence Against Women Act of 2005 must include immigration protections designed to address these dangers for immigrant victims and must protect all women from violent abusers.

VAWA 2005 – S 1197 must implement VAWA's original intent by stopping the deportation of immigrant victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, and trafficking

27. Id. at S10,195.

28. See generally INA § 101(a)(15)(U), 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(15)(U).

Over the past few years advocates working with immigrant victims have seen a dramatic increase in immigration enforcement actions initiated against immigrant victims who qualify for relief under VAWA. Despite protections contained in VAWA 1994 and VAWA 2000, eligible immigrant victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, child abuse or trafficking are not adequately protected from deportation. This most often occurs when Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) officers act on a tip that was called in by the victim's abusive husband, a sexually abusive employer, or a trafficker or rapist.

Therefore, S 1197 needs to include protections that help guarantee that immigrant victims are not deported before they can apply for VAWA immigration relief and, ultimately, lawful permanent residency. Any other approach will allow batterers, rapists, traffickers and other perpetrators of violence against women and children to elude prosecution by colluding with or tricking ICE officers into arresting and/or deporting their victims. Handing threats of deportation back to crime perpetrators as a tool they can use against their victims undermines the Violence Against Women Act's purpose of enhancing the ability of states to hold accountable and rid their communities of perpetrators of violence against women and children.

Several provisions of S 1197 are designed to prevent deportation of immigrant victims of domestic violence, sexual assault and trafficking. S 1197 corrects problems that immigrant victims encounter with reinstatement of removal proceedings and removes problems with filing motions to reopen that prevent immigrant victims from accessing VAWA immigration relief from immigration judges. VAWA 2005 also ensures that applicants for VAWA immigration relief, including T or U visas, cannot be removed from the United States unless their petition for VAWA or crime victim related immigration relief is denied. Additionally, S 1197 includes a drafting correction that will implement VAWA 2000 protections to allow immigration judges to waive ineligibility grounds in cancellation of removal and adjustment of status proceedings for some VAWA eligible battered petitioners: those who acted in self defense, violated their own protection order, were involved in a crime that didn't result in serious bodily injury, or were involved in a crime that was connected to their abuse.

Two examples of immigrant victims who desperately need the protections against deportation that VAWA 2005 should offer follow.

Lorena is a victim of horrific long term domestic abuse perpetrated against her in the Untied States by her U.S. citizen husband. Lorena was living in the Untied States with her citizen husband and her non-citizen children. Even though her husband could bring her to the Untied States legally, he had her enter using the visa waiver program. Lorena and her children overstayed their visa waiver. After Lorena filed a VAWA self-petition, her husband reported her to DHS. DHS detained her and her children and placed them in removal proceedings. In this way Lorena's husband could avoid prosecution for his crimes. DHS refused to agree to terminate the removal proceedings so that Lorena and her children could complete the process to adjust to permanent resident status under VAWA immigration relief. Because they entered on visa waivers, Lorena and her children were not eligible for any relief from removal other than asylum. The DHS deported Lorena and her children and considered their VAWA self-petition to be abandoned. As a result of the deportation, they are ineligible for readmission to the country for 10 years from the date of departure; Lorena is also subject to the bar on adjusting status after unlawful presence in the U.S. Lorena and her children are forced to live abroad where her citizen husband can freely travel and where U.S. laws cannot protect them from ongoing abuse. DHS' deportation of this family upends Congress' intent to provide victims of domestic violence committed by U.S. citizens the ability to independently gain legal permanent residence.

Mara married Paul, a U.S. citizen, in 1997. Her daughter from a previous relationship, Ellie, is a U.S. citizen. Mara's husband Paul subjected her to vulgar sexual abuse and conduct, frequently beating her, raping her, and forcing her into isolation by preventing her from leaving the home and forbidding her from opening windows. The violence worsened whenever she tried to escape. Paralyzed by his threats, she became a prisoner in her own home. DHS ordered Mara removed in 2000 and she returned to Mexico.

Paul quickly tracked Mara down in Mexico and forced her to come back to the United States with him, threatening that he would hurt her daughter if she did not return. Mara returned to the United States with Paul, entering without inspection at a border checkpoint. Paul continued to abuse Mara when she returned: he punched her in the stomach, grabbed her, pushed her and continued sexually abusing her. Mara fled to a domestic violence shelter when she learned that Paul had been masturbating in front of Ellie and that he had punched and slapped Ellie in the face, cutting and bruising Ellie's mouth. Mara filed a VAWA self-petition, noting the fact that she entered without inspection when Paul forced her over the border after her removal in 2000. Her VAWA self-petition was approved, but she cannot adjust her status to lawful permanent residency because she re-entered after being deported. Mara and Ellie have fled Paul and are currently living in hiding. Neither Mara nor Ellie can safely travel to or live in Mexico because Paul knows where their family lives in Mexico and could easily track them down. Mara needs to be able to remain in the United States where U.S. laws, including stalking laws, can continue to protect her and Ellie from Paul.

These stories illustrate some of the ways abusers of immigrant victims use a variety of tactics to lock their victims in abusive relationships, to keep them from cooperating with law enforcement, and to keep them from seeking help. Additionally, these stories highlight some important problems that bar access to lawful permanent residency for VAWA eligible immigrant victims. These problems give abusers the ability to trigger their victims' deportation and must be cured in the final version of VAWA 2005. The issues include making sure that the cancellation of removal cap does not apply to immigrant victims, assuring that penalties for failure to voluntarily depart are waivable for both VAWA self-petitioners and T and U visa applicants where there is a connection between the failure to depart and the abuse or victimization. It is also extremely important to assure that immigrant victims are not stopped by public charge inadmissibility for receiving lawful permanent residency based on an approved VAWA self-petition.

While VAWA 2000 barred DHS and State Department officials from denying lawful permanent residency to immigrant victims who have accessed public benefits to escape or survive abuse based on public charge. Some immigration authorities are however still penalizing immigrant victims by applying that they earn levels of income not required by statute to avoid being deemed a public charge and denied adjustment of status to lawful permanent residency. This has the effect of cutting off immigrant victims from VAWA relief because their flight from their abuser has reduces her access to income. Another example is of women harmed by public charged are victims whose abusers have stalked them and forced them to lose their job. VAWA 2005 needs to include provisions exempting VAWA self-petitioners from public charge determinations.

The most significant omission in the current draft of S 1197 is the lack of protection for VAWA self-petitioners from being deemed inadmissible for adjustment to legal permanent residence after having made a false claim of citizenship. Many abusers of immigrant victims force them to sign and use false papers in order to be able to work. Other immigrant victims run into problems with false claims to citizenship as they struggle to survive economically and support their children after fleeing their abusers. Battered immigrants with approved VAWA self-petitions should be able to receive a waiver of inadmissibility and be granted lawful permanent residency if they show a connection between their false claim of citizenship and the abuse. The following story illustrates how false claims of citizenship can become intertwined with abuse and why immigrant victims need to be able to waive the false claims of citizenship inadmissibility ground.

Ana, a Mexican citizen, was extremely physically abused by her husband, Mark, a United States citizen. Mark constantly hit her on the arms, head, chest and ribs. He slapped, kicked, and punched her. When she was nine months pregnant with her second child, he pushed her into the hall closet and beat her. He prevented her from leaving to seek help on this and on many other occasions. Once when Ana tried to seek safety at her parents' house, her father wouldn't speak to her because he was disgraced by her bruised appearance. In one violent incident Mark pushed Ana against the wall. She hit her head and fell to the floor. Mark began to kick her and drag her down the hall. The children were present and witnessed this assault that led to their mother's hospitalization. Mark was arrested for this beating, but was later released and continued to abuse Ana.

Throughout their marriage, Mark constantly delayed and refused to file papers to help Ana gain legal immigration status. In June of 2000, Mark forced Ana and her baby daughter into a trip to Mexico, ordering Ana to say she was a U.S. citizen at the border. On her refusal to make the false claim of citizenship, Mark drove dangerously and threatened to kill them all. When they reached the border, Ana was terrified by Mark's threats and said she was a citizen. After interrogation, she was deported to Mexico, where Mark was waiting for her. After driving her back to the U.S., which they entered without inspection, Mark used Ana's extremely tenuous immigration status to control her. Luckily, Ana found help and now has an approved VAWA self-petition. Yet, she remains unable to adjust her status to lawful permanent residency because of the false claim to U.S. citizenship, even though this false claim of citizenship was directly due to the domestic abuse she suffered.

VAWA 2005 – S 1197 must assure that VAWA Self-petitioners and T and U visa applicants are not deported, removed or detained while their VAWA immigration cases is being processed, and must stop DHS enforcement actions at shelters and domestic violence family court proceedings.

VAWA 2005 – S 1197 includes important protections for immigrant victims designed to assure that immigrant victims with valid VAWA self-petition cases pending are not removed or deported. It is also extremely important that VAWA 2005 assures that immigrant victims who have proven good moral character in their VAWA self-petition applications not be held in detention. There is no reason for detaining immigrant victims who are in the process of resolving their immigration problems through a VAWA immigration case, or a T or U visa application.

Even more egregious are the practices of the Department of Homeland Security, Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) personnel officers in conducting enforcement actions at shelters, domestic violence and rape crisis programs, in protection order courts and family courts in connection with domestic violence cases. VAWA 2005 needs to include provisions designed to effectively deter ICE agents from these enforcement actions. VAWA 2005 prohibits DHS from making arrests at a domestic violence shelter, rape crisis center, family justice center, supervised visitation center or at a courthouse if the victim is therein connection with a protection order case, a custody case or any other domestic violence, sexual assault, trafficking or stalking related criminal or civil case. This protection is vital to ensure that immigrant victims of violence against women are not afraid to access the legal and social services they need – and to which they are legally entitled. In every instance of an enforcement action at one of these sites that has been reported to date, ICE has been sent by the abuser or crime perpetrator to arrest the victim at a shelter or when the abuser knows the victim will be at court seeking a protection order or custody. Two examples of the types of ICE behavior that VAWA 2005 should halt follow:

Natalia is an abused spouse of a U.S. citizen. She has three children, two of whom are U.S. citizens. DHS arrested Natalia on the steps of a NY family courthouse as she was seeking an order of protection against her abusive husband in the middle of a contentious child custody battle. Natalia had an approved VAWA self-petition and had filed for adjustment of status when she was arrested by the DHS. She had first obtained a protection order against her citizen husband in 1997 after he had punched her in the face, bruised her face and lip, broke her eyeglasses, pulled her hair, grabbed her by the neck, spit on her face, called her a “whore” and broke down the door to her home. Natalia obtained new protection orders against him in 1999 and 2000 in response to continued abuse and harassment. Natalia was terrified of her husband and the possibility that he would harm their children: he owned a gun and regularly threatened to have her deported. After her arrest, DHS sent Natalia to a detention center too far away from her home for her children to visit her, and legal custody of their children was awarded to the abusive father because Natalia's detention precluded her from receiving custody of the children and from participating in the custody proceeding.

Carolina, a Mexican born woman, was subjected to multiple incidents of serious physical abuse by John, a U.S. citizen. He frequently threatened to have her deported. Carolina could not file a VAWA self-petition because she was not married to John. Although she was terrified that John would report her to DHS if she left him, the abuse eventually became so severe that Carolina fled to a domestic violence shelter. The shelter advocates helped Carolina make police reports for the most recent abuse as well as for the most severe prior incidents and helped her find an immigration attorney to help her with her U visa crime victim case. John learned where Carolina was and called immigration authorities to report Carolina's undocumented status. Shortly thereafter DHS officials appeared at the shelter and requested entrance. Following federal laws that protect the confidentiality of domestic violence survivors, the shelter director refused. Later, the local police chief called the shelter director to explain that the DHS officials just wanted to talk to Carolina. The shelter director, who had previously had a positive working relationship with the police chief, agreed to let the DHS officials talk to Carolina. However, upon entering the shelter, the DHS officials immediately arrested Carolina and placed her in removal proceedings.

S 1197 enhances the confidentiality protections in VAWA 1994 and 2000 by expanding the categories of victims protected to cover all immigrant victims eligible for immigration relief under VAWA, T, U or battered spouse waiver provisions. It also expands the government agencies that must keep information provided by victims confidential and must take steps to protect against being used by abusers to harm victims. However, as Carolina's case illustrates, it is extremely important that in VAWA 2005 Congress takes the opportunity to help diffuse an abuser's power over an undocumented victim by preventing a woman's abuser using government agencies like DHS to harm his victim. The final version of VAWA 2005 must ensure that DHS cannot rely on information provided by or derived solely from an abuser and that the VAWA confidentiality provisions have a concrete process for enforcement if DHS officers disregard these requirements.

Access to Legal Services for all Immigrant Victims of Domestic Violence, Sexual Assault, and Trafficking

In developing VAWA's immigration protections in 1994 and 2000 and access to benefits for immigrant victims in 1996, Congress' unequivocal intent was to provide immigrant victims of domestic violence, sexual assault and trafficking access to safety and assistance. However, in 1996 when Congress severely restricted the ability of Legal Services Corporation (LSC) funded programs to serve immigrants, many victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, child abuse, trafficking and other crimes were cut off from help from legal services lawyers. LSC funded programs were not permitted to use any of their funds, whether from LSC or other sources, to serve certain categories of immigrants. Congress subsequently permitted LSC programs to use non-LSC funds to provide limited representation to some immigrants who are victims of domestic violence, but only when the abuser was a spouse or parent. This forces LSC funded legal services programs, even when they were the only agency providing legal services to victims in the community or region, to turn away many immigrant victims whose abusers were their boyfriends or other family members or who were victims of sexual assault or stranger rape. In 2000, trafficking victims who qualified to receive a T visa were granted access to legal representation by LSC funded programs. As a result, LSC funded programs that are often the most experienced legal services providers, cannot provide services to many victims who are eligible for immigration protections under VAWA. Everyday immigrant victims of sexual assault and immigrant victims of domestic violence who are not married to their abusers are being turned away from LSC-funded legal services programs.

S 1197 contains life saving provisions that will assure that LSC funded legal services programs can represent any victim of domestic violence, sexual assault, trafficking, and child abuse without regard to the victim's immigration status. This change will not only help victims but will assure that LSC funded programs are no longer disadvantaged in competing for Legal Assistance for Victims (LAV) grant funding from the Department of Justice. Currently, LSC restrictions have the effect of also limiting what agencies are legally able to do with non-LSC dollars including OVW funding. Thus, an LSC funded program in a community with a significant immigration population would be disadvantaged in competing for OVW LAV funds because any program that does not receive LSC funding can serve the entire community and the LSC funded program will have to turn away a significant proportion of immigrant victims who need to access legal services. The attached book of stories "Women With Hope, But No One to Help: Access to Legal Services for Immigrant Victims of Domestic Violence Sexual Assault and Trafficking" illustrates the types of immigrant victims whose safety and lives will be improved by access to LSC funded lawyers.

There is an urgent need to assure access to public benefits for immigrant victims who need access to benefits to escape abuse, overcome victimization and support themselves and their children when they are cooperating witnesses in criminal prosecutions. –

We strongly urge that VAWA 2005 include the 'Women Immigrants Safe Harbor (WISH) Act as an essential remedy to help immigrant victims of sexual assault and domestic violence. Including WISH in VAWA 2005 will allow lawfully present immigrant victims of domestic violence, sexual assault, trafficking, and other violent crimes to access critical assistance that will enable them to escape their abusers and regain their independence.

Under current law, battered immigrants are ineligible for federal safety-net benefits including Medicaid, State Children's Health Insurance Program (SCHIP), food stamps, and Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) during their first five years in the country. The rules governing eligibility for Supplemental Security Income (SSI) are even more restrictive -- rendering most recent immigrants, including domestic violence victims, ineligible for the program.

Additionally, immigrant victims of violent crime, including sexual assault, are ineligible for critical safety-net benefits even though they make our neighborhoods safer by working with law enforcement officials to prosecute those who committed the crime against them. The WISH Act would remove these barriers.

A battered immigrant suffering abuse cannot wait five or more years for federal assistance. Denying victims of domestic violence access to safety net programs undermines the laws established to protect immigrant victims from abuse. While our immigration laws grant these victims relief, our welfare laws force them to choose between safety and destitution. By making victims of abuse eligible for safety-net benefits, the WISH Act would enable them to establish financial independence from their abusers and empower them to move out of violent situations and into safe and productive environments.

Abuse not only affects victims, it also jeopardizes the security of other family members. In one- to two-thirds of the households where one partner is abused, the children are also abused. Several studies show that even when children living in households with domestic violence are not abused, they suffer from mental health problems, engage in violent behavior more frequently, and have a higher incidence of alcohol abuse. Many battered immigrants seek assistance to not only remove themselves from violence, but to protect their children and families as well.

Furthermore, the actual monetary cost of WISH would be minimal. Numbers suggest that even if ALL battered immigrants who would be eligible for public benefits if WISH were passed would apply for benefits; the cost of these benefits would be less than twenty-five million dollars per year for all five programs. This is a small price to pay to ensure the safety of thousands of women and children and is a low-cost way to make a major impact on innocent lives. The financial impact for the state of Pennsylvania, for example, would be no more than $1,000,000. These one million dollars amounts to less than ½ of one percent of the total TANF block grant to the state of Pennsylvania. Current law keeps immigrant victims of crime trapped in dangerous situations that could lead to serious consequences, including death. By ensuring the passage of the WISH Act Congress can help to make certain that no person is forced to continue to endure violence. The following story provides an example how lack of access to benefits enhances danger to immigrant women and their children:

Elisa is a native of Argentina. She came to the U.S. in 1986 with her husband, Nelson also a native of Argentina. She married in April 1997 in Boston, Massachusetts and shortly thereafter she became pregnant. During her pregnancy, Nelson began to abuse Elisa. It began with his refusal to give her money to buy basic things including food or household items. Nelson's behavior grew to include his refusal to permit Elisa to leave the house or talk to others. He began to slap her in the face and push her when she tried to protest.

In late 1998 their son Jorge was born. He was disabled at birth with severe neurological difficulties, and was limited in his basic capacity to walk, breathe or speak. He was in the Intensive Care Unit at Children's Hospital for four months following birth. Thereafter, Elisa tried to carefully attend to their son's various physical, emotional and neurological needs with constant appointments. The abuse continued after the baby's birth however. Nelson blamed Elisa for their child's difficulties, constantly told her she was ugly, and that he regretted marrying her. He refused to let her buy things for the child. When she needed transportation to one of Jorge's many hospital appointments, Nelson refused to take them in his car, leaving them instead to walk long distances in extreme temperatures.

Nelson's physical violence increased as well. In early 2001, Nelson attacked Elisa again. When she told him she was going to leave, he threatened to have her deported and to kill her family in Argentina. Fearful of deportation, and believing she would be without a home or means of support, Elisa remained quiet, and decided not to anger him further. Again in early 2002, Nelson attacked Elisa following an argument. He grabbed her by the hand, slapped in her the face and pushed her into a wall. The neighbors heard their son crying and called police. Nelson was arrested and charged with assault and battery.

Elisa then obtained a restraining order. She was escorted to a battered woman's shelter in the Boston area, where she has obtained shelter and counseling for herself and her son. She was also referred to legal services, where she has obtained advice regarding her options as a U visa applicant. Elisa has already obtained a U visa certification from the local police department and is about to submit her application for U visa relief to the CIS. However, she remains in shelter with her son, who is wheelchair bound, and she is unable to receive food stamps, cash benefits, or housing benefits because these are unavailable to U visa victims. Elisa is struggling with her own needs as a domestic violence victim, and she continues to try to meet her son's specific physical, nutritional and other needs in their current environment. However, Elisa has no access to the public benefits safety net to help her feed, clothe shelter and meet the medical needs of herself and her son, because U visa victims cannot access public benefits -- The WISH Act would make it possible for victims like Elisa to access benefits as a bridge for safety and economic security until Elisa can find employment based on the legal work authorization that will be part of her U visa immigration case.

Granting Access to VAWA Immigration Relief to The Full Range of Immigrant Victims

S 1197 offers critical protection to immigrant victims of violence against women left out of VAWA 1994 and VAWA 2000 immigration protections. Significantly, the bill allows immigrant victims of child abuse up to the age of 25 to file for VAWA immigration relief as VAWA self-petitioners. It also corrects drafting errors in VAWA 2000 that are currently cutting child abuse victims and children of VAWA self-petitioners off from immigration relief. In addition to these protections VAWA 2005 should include protection for noncitizen parents abused by their adult U.S. citizen sons or daughters, self-petitioning for fiancés abused by citizens who brought them into the United States on fiancé visas, protection for abused family members of asylees, and access to work authorization for spouses of H-1B visa holders who are battered or subjected to extreme cruelty. Some additional barriers that should be addressed include: granting visa waiver entrants and J visa holders access to VAWA self-petitioning, and T and U visas

Taking action to end poverty

June 21, 2005

Dear Senators Specter, Hatch and Biden:

I write in support of the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (S. 1197), and particularly to urge you to support the workplace provisions of Title VII of the bill. I am an attorney at the Sargent Shriver National Center on Poverty Law (Shriver Center). Located in Chicago, Illinois, the Shriver Center is a national resource that champions law and policy promoting equal opportunity and support for low-income individuals, families and communities so that they can escape from poverty permanently. Our work includes finding reasonable solutions to issues, such as domestic and sexual violence, that can be barriers to obtaining and maintaining employment.

The Shriver Center supports S. 1197, the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) of 2005. I urge you to support S. 1197, particularly Title VII. Providing Economic Security for Victims of Violence. The leave provisions in Title VII are critically important—working women (and men) who are victims of domestic and sexual violence must be able to take time off to go to court or move to a safe location without jeopardizing their employment. I speak from experience about this issue—Illinois passed its own version of this law in 2003. In fact, the Illinois law goes beyond the current federal proposal, providing up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave. I drafted the language and advocated for its passage in the Illinois legislature. While employers feared the worst when the bill was being debated, there have been no significant problems since enactment. To date, there have been only 30 complaints filed with the Illinois Department of Labor. Further, I have found that many of the complaints stem from employers' lack of knowledge about the law, rather than resistance to the law. That is why most of the cases I see never get to the complaint-filing stage; rather, we are able to help employers understand their obligations under the law and to resolve the matters amicably.

Allowing victims of domestic or sexual violence to take unpaid leave from work so that they may deal with the physical, psychological, housing and legal needs that arise as a result of the violence is essential to their economic security. Many employers understand this already and have implemented creative policies to support their employees who are victims of such violence; others need to be educated on the matter. That is why the workplace clearinghouse provisions of S. 1197 are crucial and also need to be enacted as part of the workplace title of the bill.

Once again, I urge you to support S. 1197 in its entirety, and not weaken the language of Title VII. If you have any questions about the Illinois law, please do not hesitate to contact me at 312-263-3830 ext. 238. Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Wendy Polack

The Honorable Russel Feingold
United States Senate
Washington, DC [20510/20515]

Dear Mr. Russel Feingold:

Over the past 10 years Congress has responded positively and effectively to help end domestic violence in our communities by funding Violence Against Women Act programs. In recent years the success of these programs has resulted in a growing demand for the life-saving services they provide. However, this increased demand coincides with a series of budget cuts that have crippled many local organizations, and forced others to close completely.

Programs such as the National Domestic Violence Hotline, battered women's shelters, and trainings for police, prosecutors and court officials have all contributed to the decline in domestic violence since VAWA was first authorized in 1994 and reauthorized in 2000. Now, as VAWA is soon scheduled to expire, we hope that you will support its reauthorization once again. VAWA is more than good social policy; it is also good fiscal policy. The first VAWA, authorized in 1994, saved nearly $14.8 billion in net averted social costs. Reauthorization and full funding for all VAWA programs is a crucial investment in our communities, one that saves lives, saves money and saves the future of our nation.

It is so very important to be able to provide education, safety and referrals to victims of domestic violence. Our agency, which covers the very rural portion of Northeast Wisconsin's Marinette & Oconto counties, has served over 3,836 victims with advocacy and personal services (information and referrals). We have provided assistance with over 2,640 crisis calls and over 2,917 nights of shelter over the past 2 years. We have seen a 10% increase in all of our services each year.

Without reauthorization and full funding for VAWA programs, women and children in Marinette & Oconto Counties in Wisconsin cannot access the services they need to escape from violence. The continued support of Congress is crucial to helping victims and their children find safety and security and build self-sufficiency. On behalf of Rainbow House Domestic Abuse Services, Inc representing the interests of victims of domestic violence in Marinette & Oconto Counties, Wisconsin, we urge you to support the reauthorization of VAWA and full funding for all VAWA.

If you have any questions or need additional information, please contact Rainbow House Domestic Abuse Services, Inc. We look forward to working with you on these important issues.

Dear Senator Feingold:

Over the past 10 years Congress has responded positively and effectively to help end domestic violence in our communities by funding Violence Against Women Act programs. In recent years the success of these programs has resulted in a growing demand for the life-saving services they provide. However, this increased demand coincides with a series of budget cuts that have crippled many local organizations, and forced others to close completely.

The first VAWA, authorized in 1994, saved nearly $14.8 billion in net averted social costs. Reauthorization and full funding for all VAWA programs is a crucial investment in our communities, one that saves lives, saves money and saves the future of our nation.

UNIDOS Against Domestic Violence is one of the more recent programs that has benefited from VAWA funding. But it is because of cuts in funding that many programs have not been able to extend their services to underserved populations, such as the Latino/Hispanic immigrant victims that we serve. We work with providers statewide, and in Wisconsin, as you know, the Latino/Hispanic population has, at a minimum, doubled in each county. Programs have been unable to keep up with the demand for culturally and linguistically appropriate services.

Without reauthorization and full funding for VAWA programs, women and children in Wisconsin cannot access the services they need to escape from violence. The continued support of Congress is crucial to helping victims and their children find safety and security and build self-sufficiency. On behalf of UNIDOS Against Domestic Violence, representing the interests of victims of domestic violence in Wisconsin, we urge you to support the reauthorization of VAWA and full funding for all VAWA.

Inspiring all girls to be strong,
smart, and boldSM

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, thank you for the opportunity to submit this testimony in support of S. 1197, the Violence Against Women Act of 2005. My name is Joyce Roché, and I am the President and CEO of Girls Incorporated, the national non-profit youth organization that inspires all girls to be strong, smart, and bold. On behalf of Girls Inc., our 80 United States affiliates, and the girls that we serve, I want to thank Chairman Specter and Senators Biden and Hatch for their leadership as original co-sponsors of S. 1197, which brings long-needed attention to violence in girls' lives. I also thank the many members of the committee who have already offered their sponsorship and support for this critical legislation.

Girls Incorporated has become involved in this reauthorization for one simple reason: violence against women often begins as violence against girls. Though we do not like to face this reality, girls are victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking. S. 1197 provides resources to support direct services to young victims of violence, as well as supports for communities to create systemic responses.

We believe in the Girls Inc. Girls' Bill of Rights, which states that all girls have the right to be safe in the world. Unfortunately, we know that this right is frequently violated by violence that girls experience in their schools, communities, homes, and relationships. We consistently hear from girls that they are concerned about violence. Our Girls' Advisory Board—a group of high school and college-aged Girls Inc. alumnae—has identified violence against girls as one of four priority issues. Last year, 81% of girls who responded to an online survey on our website identified violence against girls and women as a very important issue in their lives. And when we listen to their stories, we understand why.

Girls Experience Dating Violence

Formatted

Consider the story of Azyia McLaughlin, a 17-year-old girl who was a program participant at Girls Inc. of Wilmington, NC. Azyia was a senior in high school with incredible promise; she dreamed of attending college and then pharmacy school. In pursuit of these dreams she worked several part time jobs and took a community college course in addition to her regular high-school coursework. But on a Tuesday morning last October, Azyia's dreams ended when her ex-boyfriend came to her house before school and shot and killed her. Like many victims of dating violence, Azyia repeatedly tried to leave what she knew was a controlling and violent relationship. Her boyfriend pursued her relentlessly, even threatening to take his own life if she did not come back to him. As if the loss of this young life weren't terrible enough, Azyia was the third female in three months killed by a former partner in the Wilmington area.

Statistics show that violent dating relationships like Azyia's are prevalent and often begin earlier in the victims' lives than we would like to admit. Although not all of these relationships end so tragically, national research suggests that 1 in 5 high-school girls is physically or sexually abused by a dating partner.¹ The Department of Justice consistently finds that girls and young women between the ages of 16 and 24 experience the highest rate of nonfatal intimate partner violence.² Besides harming their physical well-being and sometimes endangering their lives, this violence has other devastating effects on girls. Girls who are victims of dating violence are significantly more likely to engage in high-risk behaviors, including substance abuse, unhealthy weight control practices, risky sexual behaviors, and delinquency.³ Girls who are victims of dating violence are more likely than those who are not to have low self-esteem and post-traumatic stress disorder.⁴ And while we know that boys can be victims of dating violence, too, in terms of injuries and fear, the consequences of dating violence are more severe for girls and young women than for boys and young men.⁵

Girls also experience high rates of sexual assault with many negative consequences. The age at which a female is at greatest risk for rape or sexual assault is 14.⁶ Over half of all sexual assaults reported to law enforcement are of minors, under the age of 18.⁷ A U.S. Department of Education study found that there were 628 rapes or attempted rapes and 4,261 cases of sexual battery other than rape on public school grounds during the 1999-2000 school year.⁸ This sexual violence is often perpetrated by people whom girls know and trust. A survey of victim-offender relationships of sexual assaults of young women 12-17 years demonstrated that in 86% of the cases the perpetrator was someone known to the victim as an acquaintance, an intimate partner, or a family member.⁹ Sexual violence has incredible reverberations in a girl's life. Girls and young women who report having been raped or sexually assaulted are five times more likely to report depression and substance use and four times more likely to report delinquency than girls and young women who have not been abused.¹⁰

Consider this story, which Girls Inc. member Shannon Eaves shared on Capitol Hill this year:

My friend was raped repeatedly by a trusted adult in her community when she was a young teen. She tried to tell her family and members of the community, but no one believed her. Not even her mother. People called her a liar and took her abuser's side. My friend courageously went to the police, and the man who raped her was put in jail, but not for long. People helped get him out of jail after only a few months. My friend thought she was doing the right thing by ignoring her abuser's threats and speaking out. But she expressed to me that she had feelings of shame, embarrassment, and sadness, even though she was the victim.

As more and more people discovered what happened, her mother started to change. She began to discipline my friend very harshly and eventually kicked her out of her house. Some of my other friends and I put some money together so she could stay in a motel until she found another place to stay. But what if we did not have the resources to help her stay in a motel for a couple nights? I can only imagine how many other girls have experienced acts of violence and had nowhere to turn.

Shannon's story illustrates the difficulty that girls face as victims. Girls find themselves in a different place—developmentally and legally—and like Shannon's friend, many girls who are victims find that there are few, if any, places to turn for help. Few organizations or programs exist to provide services for young victims, and many existing organizations do not have the capacity currently to meet girls' needs. S. 1197 addresses this lack of services by providing competitive grant funding to organizations specifically to address domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking among teens and young adults.

Girls also face difficult legal issues, and confusion about the law is one of the most significant barriers to teens seeking help with domestic and dating violence.¹¹ State laws vary widely, meaning that not all teen victims of dating and domestic violence are able to obtain protection orders. In some states, teens can access the court system, however, they must have an adult petition on their behalf. We are glad to see that S. 1197 will build on the success of the Violence Against Women Act and provide communities with resources to support collaborations between courts, advocates, law enforcement, and other parties to develop systems to respond more effectively to the effects of these types of violence on legal minors.

Girls Are Witness to Domestic Violence

Formatted

We know that young people—girls and boys—are affected by the violence that they witness in their homes. Between 3 and 10 million children in the United States witness crime in the home each year.¹² And nearly half (43%) of the households where domestic violence occurs include at least one child under 12 years of age.¹³ The effects of witnessing such violence are both immediate and long-term. For girls, witnessing violence is associated with multiple problems, including depression and post-traumatic stress disorder, substance abuse, antisocial behavior, and juvenile delinquency.¹⁴ Most importantly, we know that without intervention, children who witness violence in the home grow up to perpetuate these behaviors, creating a cycle of violence in our society. Girls who are exposed to violence in the home are at an increased risk for becoming victims of domestic violence, whereas boys are at an increased risk for becoming perpetrators.¹⁵

I have heard too many stories about girls suffering from family violence and the cycle that develops. One that particularly moved me was from a Girls Inc. member from Holyoke, MA, who at 17 has already witnessed and experienced a great deal of violence in her life. This young woman grew up in a very violent home, where her father regularly abused her mother, herself, and her two younger sisters. She once watched her father beat her mother's head into a door, smashing it so hard that it left a hole in the door. Not surprisingly, this girl grew up to be a victim of violence in her own relationships. At 14, she found herself in an abusive relationship. She had the courage to break up with him, but when she went to retrieve some of her things from his house, he raped and beat her. Her boyfriend assaulted her one other time after that, and whenever he saw her on the street he would harass her. Her story demonstrates how critical it is for us to intervene in this cycle.

S. 1197 does a great deal to intervene and break this cycle of violence. This legislation addresses the needs of girls and boys who witness violence in their homes through support for direct services for these children. In addition, S. 1197 supports violence prevention programs that will reach more girls and boys, helping them be as safe as possible from domestic and sexual violence, and learn to recognize positive, non-violent relationships. Our own experience with Girls Inc. Project BOLD[®], our research-based violence prevention and safety awareness curriculum for girls, has shown the critical importance of providing girls with information, skills, and resources that they need to stay safe and seek help if they experience violence, all delivered by caring adults in a supportive environment.

Girls Are Often Re-traumatized in the Juvenile Justice System

Unfortunately, many girls who experience and witness violence are not receiving help to deal with the consequences, resulting in significant costs to our society. One of the greatest costs is the increased entry of girls into the juvenile justice system. As I mentioned earlier, girls who experience dating violence and sexual assault are more likely to act out and engage in delinquent behavior.

In fact, 40 to 70 percent of girls in the juvenile justice system have been victims of physical or sexual abuse.¹⁶ Often, they are re-traumatized by their entry into the system. If we want to have any hope of rehabilitating these girls, we must ensure that they are receiving the services that they need to deal with the trauma and victimization that they have experienced. Programs that include health and mental-health services and treatment for physical or sexual assault and abuse are necessary to respond to the trauma they have experienced. S. 1197 will restore language in the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act that addressed the influx of girls into the juvenile justice system. This language was embedded in a larger program that was eliminated in the 2002 reauthorization and simply directs states to provide needed services to girls in the system.

There are many more statistics and each has a story behind it. But, in closing, I would like to share the words of Zanae Cook, a 14-year-old member of Girls Inc. of Philadelphia who recently wrote about being harassed by some girls on a city bus and why she understood her peers' violent behavior. She said, "Sometimes it feels as if the whole world is like the adults on that bus, pretending that there's nothing wrong until someone gets hurt. And then there are lots of questions like 'How could this have happened?' and headlines about girls becoming more violent. Adults need to take responsibility and help kids cope with violence, fear and powerlessness."

Too often, girls are left to deal with violence alone, without sufficient programs available to meet their needs. S. 1197 is a huge step toward addressing violence in girls' lives and building a safer world for all girls. Thank you for bringing attention to this issue and taking responsibility for what we as a society must do to respond to violence in girls' lives.

NATIONAL NETWORK TO END DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

SENATE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN ACT OF 2005

INTRODUCTION

The Senate Judiciary Committee's 1992 report, "Violence Against Women: A Week in the Life of American Women" was a watershed event in the history of work to end domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking. That report graphically described 200 incidents of violence that occurred in just one week of just one year in America. It had a profound impact on many individuals working to end violence against women in courthouses, police stations, shelters, and rape crisis centers. It portrayed the world that these helping professionals inhabited, where crimes of violence against women were a daily occurrence and a daily sorrow. It delineated the pain of the many thousands of victims of this violence. But most importantly, it put on the record that this problem was real. For the first time, there was a clear, federal voice speaking the truth about the ravages of domestic violence and sexual assault on our communities.

Thirteen years have passed since the publication of that report. So much has changed. Yet so many problems still remain. Violence against women continues to affect our country in epidemic proportions. The passage of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) brought the nature of this problem to light. VAWA allowed us to train police officers, judges, prosecutors, victim advocates, and child welfare workers across the country. VAWA programs have been established in so many different communities—rural, urban, suburban, racially diverse—enhancing their various degrees of preparedness to deal with violence against women. We talk about domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking differently now: they are crimes, not private family matters. It used to be unthinkable that law enforcement officers, prosecutors, victim advocates, and judges would sit at the same table together to write model policies for addressing domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking. The passage of the Violence Against Women Act in 1994 made so many crucial changes possible.

Most importantly, VAWA has supported the work of the many organizations and agencies dedicated to ending these crimes of violence. VAWA has provided victims with hotlines to call, shelters to provide safety, legal representation, and advocacy. VAWA organizations and agencies are helping to stem the tide of violence.

National Network to End Domestic Violence

In 1994, Congress took a significant step forward in the fight against domestic violence by enacting the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). Today, we ask Congress to take yet another courageous step by reauthorizing VAWA, making it a stronger and more effective tool in the struggle to end domestic violence.

The National Network to End Domestic Violence (NNEDV) is a social change organization representing 53 state domestic violence coalitions dedicated to creating a social, political, and economic environment in which violence against women no longer exists. NNEDV's membership in turn represents over 3,000 domestic violence service providers across the country. We know what the pain of domestic violence feels like. We look at the faces of battered women and their children everyday. We've come a long way since 1994, but our shelters are full and our hotlines are ringing off the hook.

Nearly one in four women experiences at least one physical assault by a partner during adulthood.¹ Of the almost 692,000 victims of intimate partner violence, 85% are women.² Intimate partners are the offender in 20% of violent crime against women.³ And, 33% of female murder victims are killed by an intimate partner.⁴ A recent study further shows that reports of domestic violence are up as much as 51%.⁵

With the help of better trained law enforcement officers and prosecutors, batterers are being held accountable and women are able to escape dangerous situations. VAWA is working to make women safer—but it also encouraging victims who never sought help before to reach out. As our resources become stronger, more victims gain the courage to seek help. Now is not the time to retreat. The work at the state and local level has become more, not less, complex.

And, we all pay for domestic violence. Recent studies indicate that domestic violence costs $5.8 billion per year.⁶ Of those costs, over $4 billion stem from health care related expenditures, while $1.75 billion are lost annually in productivity and lifetime earnings.⁷ Yet the original VAWA, enacted in 1994, is estimated to have saved $14.8 billion in net averted victimization costs (including productivity, medical and mental health care, police and fire services, social and victim services, and property loss and damage).⁸ It is estimated to have cost $15.50 per woman, while it saved $159 per woman.⁹ VAWA was not only the right thing to do, it was also fiscally sound legislation.

That's why S. 1197 – the Violence Against Women Act of 2005 (VAWA 2005) – is so important. The programs and provisions the Committee is proposing will continue the progress made over the past ten years in three ways.

First, it will reinforce existing core programs, which have such an important role to play in reducing the violence and helping victims to heal. VAWA 2005 is crucial to shoring up these core programs. In addition to supporting core programs, we recommend that Congress include strategic improvements crucial to helping victims to escape violence. Core programs, like the STOP grants, have brought communities together to solve the problem of domestic violence. VAWA programs have provided training for hundreds of law enforcement officers on the dynamics of domestic violence. VAWA core programs have created leadership in so many communities, with law enforcement officers, judges, and prosecutors stepping up to engage the system in the fight against domestic violence.

But other issues remain. The attrition rate among these helping professionals is high, and as a communities' leaders move on, there is a danger that the energy propelling the quality and urgency of the work will dissipate. In so many communities, when one judge, police chief, or district attorney retires and moves on, the system is forced to start from scratch. VAWA 2005 needs to provide support for institutionalizing the work so that it is not dependent on one leader.

Second, we ask that Congress ensure that the needs of uniquely vulnerable communities are met. One of the lessons we have learned over the past ten years is that many victims face unique obstacles. For example, the dynamics of small rural communities pose special challenges to intervention. In rural areas, victims may live several hours from the nearest shelter program and may not have access to transportation to this and other needed services. In some Alaska Native villages, for example, law enforcement must fly for an hour or two to reach a crime scene—if the weather permits. VAWA has helped fund specialized services to improve victim safety in rural areas, such as paying for “attorneys on wheels” to help rural women get to court or effective outreach programs in remote communities.

Rural isolation is not the only challenge, however. Many communities are underserved because of other unique situations. VAWA has helped develop and support linguistically accessible programs, so that immigrant women are not trapped in a violent situation because they do not know the English words for help. VAWA 2005 should also address the unique challenges faced by persons with disabilities and elder victims of abuse, by offering services tailored to their circumstances and by educating their communities on how to best provide services.

Third, the Senate's proposed reauthorizing legislation provides greater opportunities for victims to rebuild their lives. While domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking are fundamentally criminal justice problems, the solutions are not to be found in the criminal justice system alone. VAWA 2005 will help victims rebuild their lives and create long term security for themselves and their children. It works to educate health care professionals, child welfare workers, and home visitors on how to identify and serve victims of domestic violence. Further, it provides guidance on preventing violence, rather than reacting to it. VAWA 2005 also creates housing solutions for victims of domestic violence to ensure that they can become independent of their batterers.

My comments focus on the core components of VAWA 2005. Title I addresses coordination among victim service providers, law enforcement officers, prosecutors, legal services, court personnel, and the public. It is this coordination that provides victims' advocates the ability to work within the system to better serve victims and their families and end the cycle of violence. Title II details the need for services and outreach to victims. With VAWA funding, service providers are able to not only serve more victims, but also to better address a full variety of their needs. There is a specific emphasis on services to underserved communities. In addition, I will address Title VI, which aims to tackle the desperate need for housing that many victims face after they escape the violence in their lives.

The goal of ending domestic violence is an ambitious one, but one that can be reached through a coordinated effort to not only serve victims of domestic violence, but also educate communities on how to address victims' needs. The Violence Against Women Act has done a great deal to address the violence, but the work is not yet complete. VAWA 2005 will bring us one step closer to that goal.

I urge Congress to fulfill your commitment to victims of domestic violence by reauthorizing the Violence Against Women Act to ensure that the progress made will continue and that domestic violence will be eradicated within our lifetime.

TITLE I – ENHANCING JUDICIAL AND LAW ENFORCEMENT TOOLS TO COMBAT VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Historically, law enforcement has been hesitant to respond to and act on reports of domestic violence based on the idea that these were private family matters.¹⁰ Prior to VAWA, most police officers were not adequately trained to handle incidents of domestic and sexual violence and would routinely fail to make arrests or collect appropriate evidence.¹¹

VAWA has changed the environment in which these systems now operate with respect to victims of domestic and sexual violence. The primary reason for this change is the delivery of services and education authorized in VAWA. Service providers, law enforcement officers, judicial personnel, and others integral in protecting victims are now encouraged and able to work together to get the job done.

While the situation is improving, there is still a great deal of work to be done in order to ensure appropriate levels of understanding and action on the part of all involved.

STOP Grants

Services, Training, Officers, Prosecutors (STOP) grants are intended to assist state, local, and tribal governments “to develop and strengthen effective law enforcement and prosecution strategies to combat violent crimes against women, and to develop and strengthen victim services in cases involving violent crimes against women.”¹² Positive interactions between victims, service providers, law enforcement, prosecutors, and the courts increase the likelihood of positive outcomes for victims of domestic violence.¹³

According to Evaluation of the STOP Formula Grants to Combat Violence Against Women, a study performed by The Urban Institute, STOP Grants have ensured that “victims are safer, better supported by their communities, and treated more uniformly and sensitively by first-response workers.”¹⁴ Findings from that study show that:

- Forty-four percent of STOP grant recipients added new victim services.
- Sixty-four percent of STOP grant recipients enhanced or improved services they had previously offered.
- Seventy-nine percent reported offering services to victims who would not have received services without the STOP funding.¹⁵

How are STOP Grants Being Used?

Victim Service Programs

A recent study confirms what we already knew: women benefit from the services provided by victim service agencies, and the benefits are enhanced when the service providers work in collaboration with law enforcement and judicial systems.¹⁶ The STOP program has provided victims with the services they need, helping to keep them safe and independent of their abusers.

Law Enforcement and Prosecution Training and Cooperation

STOP grants are helping law enforcement agencies across the country field more calls from victims of domestic and sexual violence and are leading to increased arrests. Prosecutor's offices are using STOP grant funds to change the way they prosecute cases and increase the number of prosecutions and convictions of domestic and sexual abusers. Different facets of the criminal justice system now work together to ensure that victims are treated fairly and batterers are held accountable.

Underserved Communities

Domestic violence occurs across all socio-economic lines. Key to the success of VAWA is allowing different communities to create and provide services, interventions, and preventions themselves. This is undertaken by tailoring efforts to the specific needs of the underserved community, not by simply incorporating those victims into existing services.

Many of the underserved communities are those whose members face language, ethnic, and cultural barriers. Service providers who use STOP grants to serve these victims offer many different services, including English classes, bilingual victim counseling, immigration services, and culturally specific victim support groups.¹⁷

While there has been progress made in serving certain communities—only 31% of subgrantees that identified Pacific Islander women as underserved emphasized services for them.¹⁸ Continuing the STOP grant program will ensure that service providers will be able to continue these vital services and new programs can continue to be developed to serve those communities not yet targeted.

Examples of STOP Funded Services Across America

- With the help of STOP funding, every police officer in Delaware was given basic domestic violence training from 1996–1999. In 1999, this training was expanded to include court

personnel, magistrates, air force base personnel, and corrections and animal control officers.¹⁹

- In Logan, Utah, the enhanced communication and cross-training that came as a result of STOP grant funding increased the participation of the Community Abuse Prevention Services Agency (CAPSA) in mobile crisis team responses, from 35 in the quarter before receiving STOP funding to 101 in one quarter of 1999.²⁰
- In Newburyport, Massachusetts, STOP grants have allowed for first-response collaboration between the Women's Crisis Center and the Salisbury Police Department – providing 24 hour-a-day, 7 day-a-week services to victims of domestic violence.²¹
- In Lakewood, Colorado, STOP grants helped the local police department increase the effectiveness of its mobile response unit. Prior to STOP funding it received 62 calls and 56 requests for referrals; after receiving STOP funds, it received 185 calls and 170 requests for referrals.²²
- In Columbia, South Carolina, STOP grant funds were used by Acercamiento Hispana/Hispanic Outreach to begin a domestic violence program specializing in services for Hispanic victims. The program used its funding to increase the number of women served from 1 prior to 1997 to 119 in 1998.²³
- In Westchester County, New York, the Special Prosecution Division reported more than a 25% increase in the number of domestic violence cases tried and resulting in convictions.²⁴
- From 1996 through 1999, the Domestic Violence Order Monitoring Program in Fayette County, Kentucky, served 790 victims and perpetrators, and in 1998 helped victims obtain over 1,750 emergency protection orders (a 320% increase from 1990).²⁵
- STOP funds helped Kankakee County, Illinois, create the Illinois Sexual Assault Guideline Implementation Team, which resulted in an increase of 280% in active sexual assault prosecution in the first year of its existence.²⁶
- In Salt Lake City, Utah, the YWCA CHOICES for Women of Color Program used its funding to do outreach and advocacy to women of color and went from serving 173 clients in its first year to serving 268 women in its second year, a 155% increase.²⁷
- In Pinehill, New Mexico, the Ramah Navajo School Board instituted a program serving Navajo women that increased the number of victims served by 550% over two years using STOP Grant funding.²⁸
- In New Jersey, Manavi, a victim services organization has used STOP funding to translate materials into five different South Asian languages and open a legal services clinic.²⁹
- Lideres Campasinas (Farmworker Leadership Development Project), in California, used its STOP grant to train 25,000 immigrant and migrant women on domestic violence. Begun as a

covert, volunteer-based program, it now employs a staff of 14 people in 12 different areas and is a model for other communities that want to break down the cultural barriers to ending domestic violence.³⁰

- Domestic violence victims with substance abuse issues are offered the services of a counselor with expertise in both issues in Brockton, Massachusetts. STOP funding is used to pay for the unique services where victims are placed in support groups and are offered a variety of services, including assistance with child custody matters.³¹
- In Calhoun County, West Virginia, STOP funds are used to offer legal advocacy and court accompaniment to victims in this mountainous area with little or no victims' services.³²
- In Granville, New York, a police force with 6 full-time officers and 6 part-time officers, used STOP funding to create a domestic violence unit that increased arrests by 33% between the program's first and second years, and saw a decline in cases from 150 to 97 from before the STOP program was instituted and the second year.³³
- In York County, Pennsylvania, STOP funding helps fund a special assistant district attorney and a police officer trained to handle domestic violence cases and train other officers.³⁴
- Project S.A.R.A.H. (Stop Abusive Relationships At Home), based in Clifton, New Jersey, is a statewide program that provides community education, training, and other direct services to Jewish and Russian-speaking women.³⁵

These studies report that before STOP funding, coordination of services was lacking, but that is changing.³⁶ Further, they recommend that funding for STOP Grants remain at current levels, at a minimum, in order to ensure that services for victims continue the improvements.³⁷

VAWA 2005 will continue and refine these core services by reauthorizing STOP Grant funding at $225 million for five years. Specifically, it will:

- Provide greater support for emergency services, while continuing to encourage the development of innovative practices;
- Strengthen definitions and distribution language to ensure better support for culturally-specific programs;
- Offer new definitions of key crimes and practices for all VAWA grant programs; and,
- Add language to include racial and ethnic minorities in the state planning process.

Legal Assistance Program for Victims

Physical and emotional violence are not the only forms of abuse that a batterer inflicts on a victim of domestic violence. The crime is one of control, and economic security is the first thing that a victim loses when she leaves. Without financial resources, a victim is dependent on others for help, including the legal system. Unfortunately, many battered victims are also victimized by the judicial process. Victims cannot afford to hire adequate legal representation, and without such representation they are unable to obtain protection orders or get custody of their children to keep themselves and their families safe.

The Legal Assistance Program for Victims funds grassroots efforts to meet the broad civil legal assistance needs of victims of domestic violence and sexual assault. This is the only program to offer federal funding designed to meet the legal needs of victims of domestic violence.

- In a study conducted by the New Hampshire state court, in 97% of domestic violence cases, at least one party acts without an attorney.³⁸
- The Alaska Network on Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault's Pro Bono Legal Program provided 2,475 hours of legal representation to 99 women from April 1999 to December 2001.³⁹
- Legal Aid Services of Oregon increased direct representation of domestic violence victims by 32% from the first quarter of 1998 to the last quarter of 1999.⁴⁰
- The Florida Coalition Against Domestic Violence Legal Clearinghouse provided legal assistance to 2,206 victims in a ten month period of 1999.⁴¹
- Acadiana Legal Service Corporation in Lafayette, Louisiana, saw a 195% increase in cases involving domestic violence from 2002, prior to VAWA funding, and 2003.⁴²
- After receiving VAWA funds, Vermont Legal Aid (VLA) saw a 231% increase in victims served from 1996 to 2003. VLA now serves close to 100% of women who are unrepresented in protection order cases where the offender is represented by counsel.⁴³
- Legal Aid Services of Oklahoma increased the number of open cases that were resolved from 86% in 1999 to 99% in 2001.⁴⁴
- Montana Legal Services Association used VAWA funding to establish a Domestic Violence Unit in 1998. The staff divides its time between direct representation, community education, and pro bono attorney recruitment and support.⁴⁵

Reports estimate that upwards of 70% of domestic violence victims are without legal representation.⁴⁶ VAWA 2005 increases Legal Assistance to Victims funding to $65 million over the next five years to help victims with their legal matters. This small increase in funding will be life-saving for victims of domestic violence.

Grants to Encourage Arrest and Enforce Protection Orders

Studies show that batterers who are allowed to walk free are more likely to become repeat offenders⁴⁷ and that suspects who flee are less likely to be arrested unless law enforcement has sufficient specialized staff.⁴⁸ They also show that training for law enforcement officers about the dynamics of domestic violence cases improves officers' interactions with victims and enhances victims' participation with justice system efforts to address violence against women.⁴⁹

The Grants to Encourage Arrests program offers jurisdictions the funding needed to establish programs and policies that favor arrest and prosecution of domestic violence.

- Eighty-two percent of grantees funded domestic violence training—most related to training of law enforcement officers.⁵⁰
- Seventy percent of grantees reported new or improved victim services.⁵¹
- Sixty-seven percent of grantees developed law enforcement policies, including arrest and related procedures, and services for victims and child witnesses.⁵²
- Fifty-two percent developed new prosecution policies, including those related to evidence based prosecution and victim safety planning.⁵³
- Approximately two-thirds created or enhanced either specialized law enforcement or prosecution units.⁵⁴

Is It Working?

- One study reports that warrantless arrests of domestic violence suspects—based on probable cause—increased from 4.1% of all arrests to 15.5 % during the grant period.⁵⁵
- In Queens, New York, the Office of the Borough President uses grant money to fund a unit comprised of additional prosecutors and support staff to prosecute misdemeanor domestic violence cases, and victims' advocates to provide services to victims. They have seen an increase in domestic violence convictions of 100%, and provide counseling to approximately 1000 victims.⁵⁶
- In San Diego County, specialized police units were trained to deal with victims non-judgmentally and sensitively, resulting in greater victim safety. In addition, the implementation of these units increased the number of abuser arrests from 35% to 52%.⁵⁷
- A study of the specialized domestic violence court in Lexington County, South Carolina, noted that the court handled over 2,000 cases from its inception in 1999 to 2003. That study further pointed out that recidivism rates dropped as the number of arrests rose.⁵⁸

- In Austin, Texas, funds were used to create the Family Violence Protection Team, which consisted of detectives and victim witness specialists from the police department and county sheriff's office.⁵⁹

Court Improvement Program

Through the STOP grant program, court systems have received VAWA funding to enact and enhance policies and procedures to deal with domestic violence. This funding has been used to train judges and court staff, to develop judicial resource guides, to support programs for victims, to support specialized courts or dockets, and to hire court staff, including much needed interpreter services.

- In Washington, DC, funding was used to establish two Domestic Violence Intake Centers—one at the courthouse and another in the community—to provide central locations for victims to receive services, including completing petitions for protection orders, safety planning, and social service agency referrals.⁶⁰
- In Baltimore County, Maryland, the Governor's Office of Crime Control & Prevention used VAWA funding to fund a Protective Order Advocacy and Representation Project, providing advocacy and representation to victims of domestic violence.⁶¹
- The State of Michigan has created two benchbooks, dealing with law and procedures in cases of domestic violence and sexual assault. The materials are made available through the state Supreme Court website.⁶²
- A specialized domestic violence court was established in Dallas County, Texas, which handles cases involving domestic violence, stalking, violation of court protective orders, and harassment.⁶³
- In Oregon, the state held five advanced domestic violence trainings with the goal of providing a consistent response to domestic violence in juvenile, criminal, domestic relations, and restraining order dockets.⁶⁴

As part of the STOP program, the court improvements program has been a great success. VAWA 2005 will expand on that by creating a program that focuses specifically on continuing these court successes by: improving court responses to domestic violence through training, improvement of court case management, and the development of best practices; focusing on the improvement of internal court functions in both civil and criminal divisions; providing for victim services within courthouses and educating court personnel; and, proposing the development of a national judicial training curriculum.

TITLE II - IMPROVING SERVICES FOR VICTIMS OF DOMESTIC VIOLENCE, DATING VIOLENCE, SEXUAL ASSAULT, AND STALKING

In the past ten years, we have learned that it is crucial to improve access to the justice system for victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking, but we have also learned that to truly improve outcomes we must help some populations overcome unique obstacles to achieving safety.

- Underreporting of sexual assault in rural communities is a particular problem due to the relationship between victims, abusers, and the community along with the geographic isolation of many victims and their families.
- Elder abuse is primarily a problem of domestic abuse, with 90% of victims battered by family members. Elderly victims are also less able to escape the abuse because of failing health and financial dependence.
- Domestic violence against disabled victims goes highly unreported and untreated because of their increased dependence on their batterers and fears of abandonment and isolation.
- Immigrant women who are victims of domestic violence are also less likely to report attacks and are more difficult to provide services to based on language barriers.
- Services for elderly, disabled, and immigrant victims are sorely lacking and inadequate.

Rural Domestic Violence Programs

Geographic isolation, kinship ties, and other social and cultural pressures work to keep victims of domestic violence in rural areas with their batterers. VAWA's Rural Domestic Violence and Child Abuse Enforcement Assistance program works to provide services by encouraging stronger collaboration between victim services, law enforcement, and others in the community.

- In northwest Iowa, the Greater Rural Access and Intervention Network (GRAIN) has used VAWA funding to create satellite offices in seven rural counties. GRAIN engages in a public awareness campaign to alert women to the issues of domestic violence and to the services they offer.⁶⁵
- In Colorado, the Arkansas Valley Resource Center was able to serve 50% of victims in Bent and Crowley counties, up from 12% prior to VAWA funding, due to the establishment of satellite offices.⁶⁶
- In Sussex County, Delaware's most rural county, The People's Place II developed a new program to help child witnesses of domestic violence.⁶⁷

National Network to End Domestic Violence

- The Refuge House in Tallahassee, Florida, served 1,100 residents in 7 rural counties, an increase of 633% compared to services delivered prior to VAWA.⁶⁸
- In Utah, seven new Rape Crisis Centers have been established in rural communities.⁶⁹
- According to Debbie Bresette, Executive Director of the Bastrop County Women's Center in Bastrop, Texas, the Family Crisis Center saw a 66% increase in services provided, which was "directly relate[d] to the funding from the Rural Domestic Violence and Child Victimization program."
- The Louisiana Coalition Against Domestic Violence used VAWA funding to facilitate the opening of 9 new offices in previously unserved rural parishes. In Cameron Parish, the number of served victims rose from 6 to over 100 after the office was established.⁷⁰
- Women Helping Battered Women in Burlington, Vermont, used rural funding to increase the number of women served 138% from 1993 to 2003. They also saw a 222% increase in the number of women represented.⁷¹

Services for Victims with Disabilities and Victims in Later Life

Funds from these programs are used to train victim service providers, law enforcement officers, court personnel, prosecutors, and others in the criminal justice system to identify and serve victims with disabilities and victims in later life.

Studies show that women with disabilities are more likely to be the victims of abuse and violence than women without disabilities because of their increased physical, economic, social, or psychological dependence on others.⁷² In cases of domestic violence, women with disabilities stay with their batterers almost twice as long as do women without disabilities, because of a fear of abandonment or institutionalization.⁷³

Unfortunately, service providers are not fully equipped to deal with the special circumstances facing victims with disabilities. Only 35% of shelters surveyed have disability awareness training for their staff and only 16% have a dedicated staff person to deliver services to women with disabilities.⁷⁴

Reports show that victims of elder abuse are harmed primarily by family members (89.7%).⁷⁵ Further, reports show that women are the most likely victims of elder abuse (76.3%).⁷⁶ Only 23% of older victims are able to care for themselves.⁷⁷ And, most victims (over 76%) are dependent on others for at least some of their care.⁷⁸ This helps lead to the fact that most elder abuse goes unreported.

National Network to End Domestic Violence

- The Wisconsin Coalition Against Domestic Violence used VAWA funding to grow a statewide system assisting victims of elder abuse into the National Clearinghouse on Abuse in Later Life.⁷⁹
- Since 1995, Project Target in Delaware has provided services to women 50 and over in Kent and New Castle Counties.⁸⁰
- The St. Martin Elderly Abuse Program in Louisiana, provides train-the-trainer sessions on physical and sexual abuse of elderly and disabled victims.⁸¹
- In Austin, Texas, Safe Place uses VAWA funding to run a national training program that trains advocates working with victims of domestic violence and sexual assault who have disabilities.⁸²

VAWA 2005 would focus on the development of collaborative partnerships between victim services organizations and organizations serving individuals with disabilities. It would also add construction and personnel costs for shelters to better serve victims with disabilities and would allocate funding toward the development of model programs that place advocacy and intervention services within organizations serving individuals with disabilities.

VAWA 2005 raises the authorization levels for services provided to elderly victims to $10 million annually. These funds will be used to educate law enforcement, prosecutors, and other relevant government and tribal entities in recognizing the signs of elder abuse and responding accordingly. Funds will also be available to enhance services provided and ensuring physical access to the buildings where services are rendered

National Domestic Violence Hotline

The National Domestic Violence Hotline, housed in Texas, is a 24-hour, national toll free hotline that receives over 500 calls a day from victims and others regarding violence in their lives. Since 1996, the Hotline has responded to more than 1,240,000 calls. It provides invaluable information, crisis counseling, and referrals in 150 languages. Operators at the Hotline use a sophisticated system to directly connect victims with service providers in their immediate areas, wherever they are across the country.

The Hotline has seen an increase of 15% in the number of calls it received in the last year.⁸³ This is a 134% increase over the number of calls the Hotline received in its first years.⁸⁴

The intervention of the National Domestic Violence Hotline made a crucial difference in the lives of the following women, as it has for thousands of others.

One woman called the Hotline from a phone booth. Her partner had beaten her, stolen her vehicle, and then left her stranded on the side of the road. She was covered in blood. She did not want to call the police or go to the hospital—she just wanted to go somewhere safe. The Hotline advocate was able to find her a shelter and connect the call to it directly. The caller had no money and did not know where she was, but the shelter was able to identify her location by a landmark and told her they would come and pick her up. She said that no one but the Hotline advocate had offered to help her. People passed her, saw her drenched in blood, and did nothing.

The Hotline received a call from a woman who fled from her batterer in Florida to Seattle, WA. She originally called the Hotline to be connected to a shelter that was waiting for her to arrive. Three different shelters told her that they were full and would not be able to help her and her child. When the victim contacted the Hotline the fourth time, she was crying and the Hotline advocate offered to stay on the line with her while they tried to get “New Beginnings” on the line. Even though the shelter was full, they agreed to help the victim by taking her and her child in.

VAWA 2005 would increase funding for the National Domestic Violence Hotline from $3.5 million to $5 million over the next five years.

TITLE VI – HOUSING OPPORTUNITIES AND SAFETY FOR BATTERED WOMEN AND CHILDREN

The link between homelessness and domestic violence is both overwhelming and undeniable. A staggering 92% of homeless women have experienced severe physical or sexual abuse at some point in their lives.⁸⁵ Sixty percent of all homeless women and children, have been abused by age 12, and 63% have been victims of intimate partner violence as adults.⁸⁶

Homelessness does not cause domestic violence but rather the opposite—domestic violence frequently forces women into homeless. Fifty percent of homeless women and children are fleeing domestic violence,⁸⁷ and 38% of all victims of domestic violence become homeless at some point in their lives.⁸⁸ Among cities surveyed by the US Conference of Mayors, 44% identified domestic violence as a primary cause of homelessness.⁸⁹

Advocates and victims consistently report that housing is a primary need for victims, and is crucial to the ability of a battered woman and her children to escape an abusive relationship. Unfortunately, victims of domestic and sexual violence experience major barriers in obtaining and maintaining housing, and victims most often return to their abusers because they cannot find long-term housing.⁹⁰ Even worse, victims and their families across the country are being discriminated against, denied access to, and even evicted from public, subsidized, and private housing because of their status as victims of domestic violence or the abuse perpetrated against them.⁹¹

The housing title of the Violence Against Women Act of 2005 will improve safety for victims by bringing desperately needed resources, collaborations, and protections to help end homelessness and domestic and sexual violence. Rather than creating large new programs, VAWA will ensure that existing housing resources are available to victims and will build partnerships that benefit from established connections within the community.

To accomplish this, the housing title of VAWA has two prongs: developing stable housing options for victims and ensuring the accessibility of existing housing resources.

Developing Stable Housing Options for Victims

Helping victims access stable, long-term housing is a critical element of VAWA's approach to reducing homelessness. The average stay at an emergency homeless shelter is 60 days, while the average length of time it takes a homeless family to secure housing is 6–10 months.⁹² Many domestic violence shelters are unable to house families for longer than 30 days, in order to allow space for individuals in immediate danger. However, due to the length of time it takes to find housing, battered women are staying longer in emergency domestic violence shelters, and the shelters are frequently full and must turn families away. Requests for emergency shelter by homeless families with children increased in 78% of U.S. cities surveyed in 2004.⁹³ In the same year, 32% of the requests for shelter by homeless families went unmet due to the lack of emergency shelter beds available.⁹⁴

Transitional and long-term housing options are necessary for many women to move from emergency shelter into permanent housing of their own. Shelters in counties with no transitional housing report that women must often return to the shelter because they are unable to secure housing away from their abusers. Shelters with transitional housing report much lower recidivism rates.⁹⁵ In fact, the majority of battered women in transitional housing programs state that had these programs not existed, they would have returned to their abusers.⁹⁶ When afforded residential stability, homeless persons are considerably less likely to return to emergency shelter.⁹⁷

- Modeled after extremely successful affordable housing, community development, and “housing first” programs across the nation in urban, suburban, and rural areas, VAWA would fund collaborative efforts to create permanent housing options for victims that help develop communities and leverage private dollars.
- VAWA would also expand the existing transitional housing program for domestic violence victims and their children authorized by the PROTECT Act and administered by the Office on Violence Against Women in DOJ.

Ensuring the Accessibility of Existing Housing Resources

Unfortunately, existing housing resources are often not accessible for, and may be denied to, victims of domestic violence. Many victims of domestic violence have been evicted or denied housing due to the crimes committed against them or because of their abuser’s actions.⁹⁸ Landlords often threaten victims with penalties or evictions, or unfairly hold victims accountable for the behavior of their abusers. Consequently, victims express fear of calling law enforcement if they are in danger because they are concerned they will be evicted.⁹⁹ Landlords also frequently turn away victims who have protection orders or other indications of their status as victims of domestic violence. Some advocates advise battered women not to seek protection orders because seeking this legal protection may place their housing in peril.

Domestic violence advocates and legal service providers across the country report these disturbing cases. In a recent nationwide survey, legal service providers reported 580 documented cases where victims were evicted due to the violence committed against them.¹⁰⁰ This represents approximately 10% of the total eviction cases addressed by these providers. The same providers handled 309 documented cases where victims were denied housing because of their status as victims of domestic violence—29% of all their housing denial cases.¹⁰¹

But numbers cannot capture the human tragedy of a woman who is evicted or denied housing because she has been battered or because she has sought help from the criminal justice system in ending the abuse.

Dorothea Thomas, 39, from Jacksonville, North Carolina, dated Tyrone Burks, 45, for about two years, and then broke up with him in March 2005. On June 24, 2005 Tyrone came to Dorothea’s home at Liberty Crossing Apartments and began to shoot at her. After being shot once, Dorothea tried to escape by hurling herself from the second-story balcony of her apartment. The ex-boyfriend then shot her five more times outside her apartment before leaving. Dorothea, who had worked for the Jacksonville Police Department, suffered wounds in her chest, arm, hand, thigh, and buttocks. She also had a foot injury from jumping from the balcony in order to save her life. When Dorothea returned from the hospital on June 29, there was a note on her door from her apartment owners saying that she had violated her lease because she and her uninvited guest had been "too loud" and that they threatened "the rights, comfort, health, safety, or convenience of others in or near the apartment community, disrupting our business operations." Dorothea, her 3-year-old son and 18-year-old niece are currently struggling to maintain their housing.

"Tammy" from Iowa had been staying at the battered women's shelter. She asked the police to "drive-by" her apartment complex (where she had a Section 8 voucher helping her to pay the rent) before she went home to make sure that her abuser was not there. She had a protective order in place. The police found her batterer at the unit and arrested him for violating the protective order. Tammy received a notice from the Public Housing Authority that they were terminating her assistance because the arrest of her abuser broke the lease, which states, "The tenant shall not disturb the peaceful enjoyment of the neighbors." No neighbors had complained.

In June 1988, Deborah O'Neil in was shown a vacant apartment in Salem, Massachusetts. She applied to rent the apartment, was accepted, and, on July 7, she entered into a lease with the owner. That same day, Deborah obtained an order of protection against the father of her children prohibiting him from coming near her or her residence. On July 11, the apartment owner learned of the protective order, and, the next day, decided to no longer rent to Deborah.

On February 29, 2000, Aaronica Warren in Ypsilanti, Michigan, was assaulted in her apartment by a former boyfriend. That same day, she reported the attack to the police. On March 8, 2000, she received a Notice of Termination of Tenancy stating that she was being evicted because of "criminal activity" on the premises of her apartment. The "criminal activity" was her own victimization by domestic violence.

In Manchester, New Hampshire, "Michelle" went on a few dates with a man, but she didn't like him and didn't see him anymore. However, he stalked her and one night, while she was watching a movie with her friend, this man broke into the apartment through the sliding glass door and beat Michelle and her friend severely. The police were called, and Michelle was bleeding and needed to be taken to the hospital. The landlord promptly evicted her, saying that he "didn't want this kind of [explicative deleted]." The police tried to advocate for Michelle, explaining that the incident wasn't her fault, but the landlord said that he didn't care and evicted her.

A few years ago, Linda's husband assaulted her in their New York City Housing Authority (NYHCA) apartment. He was arrested, and Linda obtained a criminal court order of protection excluding him from the residence. She informed NYCHA of what had happened, and NYCHA subsequently moved to evict both Linda and her former husband from the apartment because of the assault.

On the morning of August 2, 1999, Tiffanie Ann Alvera from Portland, Oregon, was physically assaulted by her husband in their government-subsidized two-bedroom apartment. The police arrested her husband, placed him in jail, and charged him with assault, for which he was eventually convicted. That same day, after receiving medical treatment for the injuries her husband inflicted, Tiffanie went to court and obtained a restraining order prohibiting him from coming near her or into the apartment complex where they lived. When she gave the resident manager of the apartment complex a copy of the restraining order, she was told that the management company had decided to evict her as a result of the incident of domestic violence. Two days later, Tiffanie's landlord served her with a 24-hour notice terminating her tenancy. The notice explained that she was being evicted because "[y]ou, someone in your control, or your pet, has seriously threatened immediately to inflict personal injury, or has inflicted personal injury upon the landlord or other tenants." The notice referred to the August 2 incident in which Tiffanie was injured.

"Ronda" in Cedar Rapids, Iowa had a Section 8 voucher that helped her pay her rent. She lived with her four children and her boyfriend. In July 2001, her boyfriend assaulted her, and she ended her relationship with him. He moved out, and she removed him from her lease. Ten days after the assault, she received notice from the local housing agency that her Section 8 assistance was being terminated because of her boyfriend's violent criminal activity. With the loss of the Section 8 assistance, Ronda was unable to pay her rent.

Clarabelle and her abuser were married and lived in his house in New York. When Clarabelle found out she was carrying quadruplets, her husband became abusive and tried to force her to abort three of them. He hit her, forced her to sleep on the floor, and kicked her. He also refused to help her to the hospital when she went into early labor. In late 2002, Clarabelle obtained a protective order against her husband and, after some months, a Section 8 housing voucher. During her search for an apartment in 2003 and 2004, a number of landlords, all on Staten Island, told her that they would not rent to a victim of domestic violence either because they were afraid that her abuser would “cause trouble” and bother the other tenants or because they simply believed that domestic violence victims were not the kinds of people they wanted to have in their neighborhood. One landlord initially said he would accept her Section 8 voucher, but then when she told him why she had been approved for a voucher (due to domestic violence), the landlord refused to rent to her.

In Rockingham County, North Carolina, the police were called to a house for domestic violence, but the perpetrator was not at the house when they arrived. On the second call to the house, no one was present but both the front and back doors were broken in and blood was splattered throughout the house. The victim was finally located, but she was not willing to file any charges or complete an application for a protection order for fear of being evicted. Legal services assisted the victim in finding a donation of two doors to replace the damaged ones. However, her landlord found out about the incident, had the power turned off in the residence, and filed eviction papers.

The housing title of VAWA contains several strategies to protect the housing of victims of domestic violence while allowing the public housing agency or private landlord to hold the abuser accountable and maintain a safe environment for all tenants.

- VAWA provides grants to assist public housing authorities and other housing providers to respond to domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking in a manner consistent with best practices. The grants will be used for education and training, development of policies and practices, collaboration with victim service providers, and capital improvements designed to improve tenant safety, as well as for training for all public housing authorities. These women are faced with a terrible choice—tolerating their abusers in order to maintain housing or risking homelessness by notifying the authorities.
- To ensure that victims of domestic violence have access to the criminal justice system without jeopardizing their current or future housing and are not held accountable for crimes committed against them by their abusers, VAWA 2005 would amend the federal regulations governing the public housing and Section 8 statutes to specify that victims of domestic violence and stalking be treated like other victims of crime and should not lose their housing because of their victimization. It will also help housing authorities reduce crime and maintain safety for all residents by enabling victims to hold their perpetrators accountable and reach out for help in ending the abuse.

The bill states that incidents of abuse shall not be good cause for terminating a lease held by the victim, and that the abuser’s criminal activity directly related to abuse and beyond control of the victim shall not be grounds for eviction or termination. Victims must certify that the incident in question meets the requirements of the statute, and the language clarifies that victims can be evicted for other lease violations or if their continued tenancy poses a threat to the safety of others in the community.

By providing housing resources and protections to victims, Congress has the unique ability to reduce homelessness while also helping to end domestic violence. Rarely does Congress have the opportunity to create such a profound result while spending so little money.

CONCLUSION

The Violence Against Women Act is working. Service providers, law enforcement officers, prosecutors, judges, and others in the continuum of services are coordinating their efforts to ensure that victims and their families are independent and safe. But the job is not done. In order to continue the progress that we've accomplished over the past ten years, we must strengthen VAWA so that it can work for all victims of domestic violence, whether they live in rural or urban areas, whether they are children or elderly victims, whether they speak English or another language—every victim deserves the chance to escape from violence.

Congress has a unique opportunity to make a difference in the lives of so many by reauthorizing the Violence Against Women Act with key and strategic improvements.

TESTIMONY OF PENNSYLVANIA COALITION AGAINST RAPE
ON "REAUTHORIZATION OF THE VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN ACT"

SUBMITTED TO THE UNITED STATES SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Hearing on "Reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act" held on July 19, 2005

Delilah Rumburg, PCAR Testimony on the Reauthorization of VAWA 2005

Chairman Specter, Ranking Member Leahy, and Distinguished Members of the Committee:

The Pennsylvania Coalition Against Rape (PCAR) extends their gratitude for your examination of the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act 2005. On behalf of PCAR, its board of directors and Pennsylvania's 52 sexual violence centers, I appreciate the opportunity to share our views on the reauthorization of this important legislation.

PCAR is an organization working at the state and national levels to prevent sexual violence. Established in 1975, PCAR uses its voice to challenge public attitudes, raise public awareness, and effect critical changes in public policy, protocols, and responses to sexual violence. PCAR works in concert with its statewide network of 52 sexual violence centers to provide quality services to victims/survivors of sexual violence and their significant others. Our centers also work to create public awareness and prevention education within their communities. Together, PCAR and its centers will continue to educate society and its systems about sexual violence and to advocate for better treatment and empowerment of victims/survivors of sexual assault.

PCAR's influence has and continues to be heavily felt at the national level. I was appointed by Secretary Donald Rumsfeld to the Department of Defense Task Force on Sexual Harassment and Violence at the Military Service Academies, where I currently serve as co-chair. In addition, I serve with other distinguished leaders as a member of the National Advisory Council (NAC) on Violence Against Women, co-chaired by Attorney General Alberto Gonzales and Secretary of Health and Human Services Mike Leavitt. I was first appointed to the NAC in 1995 when it was convened under Attorney General Janet Reno and Secretary of Health and Human Services Donna Shalala.

I have helped to shape national policy on violence against women by participating in congressional briefings at the nation's capitol. In addition, I have served as an Advisory Board member of the National Violence Against Women Prevention Research Center and served on the National Victim Standards Consortium. Additionally, I was a member of the Advisory Council of the Joint Center of Violence and Victim Studies at Washburn University.

PCAR's national presence was recognized in 1999 by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, when we were awarded a five-year grant to develop and implement a national resource center to serve as a clearinghouse of information, resources and research related to all aspects of sexual violence. This center, the National Sexual Violence Resource Center (NSVRC), officially opened its doors in July 2000 and began responding and providing services to organizations across the nation.

Since its inception, the NSVRC has been remarkably successful, building upon the experience and strength of PCAR. In six years of operation (the grant was re-awarded in 2004), the NSVRC staff has developed a responsive technical assistance center, extensive resource library, comprehensive web site, several publications and a multi-year public awareness campaign. Their services and programs are utilized by staff from 54 of the 59 state and territory anti-sexual violence coalitions, as well as employees from local rape crisis centers across the country and members of the general public.

The first anti-sexual violence coalition in the nation, PCAR celebrates thirty years of advocacy, action and leadership this year. In reflecting on the strides made by our founding mothers and advocates, we have found it is equally vital to examine next steps in the continued fight to eradicate sexual abuse. Legislation, such as the Violence Against Women Act III, will allow PCAR to not only continue the successful and vital programs already in place, but it will also provide for the development of new initiatives to further the safety and stability of millions of women whose lives have been devastated by sexual violence.

The Impact of VAWA

Since the passage of VAWA in 1994, opportunities for growth and strength abound for advocates working to end violence against women. Small struggling rape crisis centers were infused with new energy, resources and of course, funding. New approaches to combat violence against women were formed and victims of sexual assault had access to better services and improved opportunities for justice.

In essence, VAWA allowed advocates of the anti-sexual violence movement to unite, promote sharing, develop policy and provide a voice. It was also a major catalyst for the development of a national infrastructure as well as significant anti-sexual violence coalition and capacity building.

Specifically, VAWA has enabled PCAR and its 52 community-based sexual violence center subcontractors to ensure the provision of sexual assault services at the state and community level. Through a grant process, made possible by VAWA, PCAR receives funds disbursed by the Pennsylvania Department of Public Welfare by way of the Pennsylvania Department of Health, which is the recipient of the Rape Prevention and Education (RPE) grant dispensed by the CDC's National Center for Injury Prevention.

In the past year, PCAR utilized funds provided by the RPE grant to train professionals to enhance the systems' response to victims of sexual violence and promote referrals to rape crisis centers; educate personnel and students as part of an effort to reduce the incidence of sexual assault at institutions of secondary and higher education; implement public awareness activities to include the preparation and dissemination of educational materials; operate a statewide and local sexual assault hotlines; and enhance outreach and resources for underserved populations.

While the descriptions listed above offer a broad overview of PCAR's use of the RPE grant, it is important to note that the monies provided by the grant have a far greater impact. For example, in the 2004-2005 fiscal year,

- PCAR's 52 sexual violence centers responded to 8,429 hotline calls via their respective 24-hour hotline systems.

Delilah Rumburg, PCAR Testimony on the Reauthorization of VAWA 2005

- PCAR and its 52 sexual violence centers conducted public awareness activities through the development of 293 press releases, public service announcements and media presentations. PCAR broadcasted 2,697 (30-second) commercials on cable and network television over a 6-week period in three major media markets across the state, to include the Philadelphia Hispanic Channel, Telemundo.
- PCAR's 52 sexual violence centers distributed 143,610 educational materials to the public at large.
- PCAR's 52 sexual violence centers facilitated 494 prevention education programs to 13,494 adults representing community groups, churches and synagogues, businesses and industries, social networks, as well as senior citizen groups.
- PCAR's 52 sexual violence centers facilitated 118 educational programs to 3,776 college students and 1,033 educational programs to 24,925 middle, junior and high school aged children.
- To promote victim-sensitivity and enhance victim-response skills, PCAR's 52 sexual violence centers conducted 162 trainings to 3,082 allied professionals representing police, prosecutors, medical personnel and human service representatives.

The past 10 years of VAWA has greatly impacted those doing work on behalf of the anti-sexual violence movement. In one year alone, VAWA enabled PCAR and its subcontractors to offer a tremendous number of outreach opportunities to children, adults, allied partners and the public at large. This vital legislation has increased awareness levels; facilitated the involvement of allied community partners (law enforcement, medical personnel and prosecutors); and changed laws, community response to victims' needs and the rates of violence and reporting of crime. While the success of VAWA has proven that it is possible to combat sexual violence; there is still more work that needs to be done.

Where We Stand

VAWA has made great advancements toward increasing public awareness about violence against women; however, enormous challenges still remain to eliminating sexual assault. The importance of this challenge can be seen in the steady stream of newspaper stories reporting sexual violence.

In Pennsylvania alone, 62 headlines of sexual assaults were reported in newspapers throughout the state from July 10 through July 16, 2005. The following is a sampling of those headlines:

- McKeesport man accused of child sexual assault of infant
- Easton man gets up to 50 years for repeatedly raping girl
- Erie County Prison correctional officer has sued her employers in federal court claiming she was repeatedly sexually harassed
- Retired BU professor admits fondling girl, 12
- Former Scotto's owner accused of rape and sexual assault by job applicant.
- A Franklin man has been charged for having sexual contact with four female children since 1994.

Delilah Rumburg, PCAR Testimony on the Reauthorization of VAWA 2005

- Ex-jail guard sentenced for having sex with four female inmates under his supervision.
- Berwick man pleads guilty to having sex with teen
- Staffer faces molestation charges at Mt. Lebanon group home
- Sex-charge suspect heading to trial for additional child rape
- As trial begins, boy, 13, tells of rape ordeal
- Man gets 25 to 50 years for raping girl; Former Lehigh Valley resident also failed to register as sex offender.
- Former corrections officer pleaded no contest this week to two counts of indecent assault involving an 11-year-old Mercersburg boy.
- A Brookville man has been charged with 28 sex offenses involving one juvenile, and four other offenses for allegedly raping another juvenile last week
- Pennridge teacher convicted of sexual relations with teen
- Man, 71, will stand trial in rape of boy

While these headlines represent a small example of sexual assault cases throughout the country, it is important to note that rape is the most under-reported crime in the United States, with only 30.7% of victims ever reporting the crime.¹

An obvious problem still exists. One study estimated that in one 12 month period 302,091 adult American women experience a completed or attempted rape. And because some persons suffer multiple rapes, it is estimated that 876,064 rapes of adult American women occur annually.²

Rape is a crime. It is motivated by the need to control, humiliate, and harm. It is not motivated by sexual desire. While I applaud the success of VAWA and the progress made since its implementation, further steps must be made to ensure the safety of our nation's woman.

The success of VAWA has proven that combating violence against women is possible. In reviewing the 1994 and 2000 legislation, it is evident that changes are necessary to respond to this ongoing epidemic of violence.

PCAR strongly supports all additions to VAWA 2005 including improving the response of the criminal justice and legal systems; reauthorizing critical programs and developing new services that respond to evolving community needs; creating programs that focus on violence prevention and intervention; developing a comprehensive approach for assisting children, teens and young adults who experience violence; creating solutions to prevent victims and their children from becoming homeless; closing the gap in the delivery of health care to domestic violence and sexual assault survivors; highlighting the needs of underserved populations; and providing funding for rape crisis centers and other agencies to provide advocacy services to victims of sexual assault.

Delilah Rumburg, PCAR Testimony on the Reauthorization of VAWA 2005

However, most important to the continuance of our mission is the Sexual Assault Services Act (SASA) in the Services and Outreach title of VAWA 2005. This Act will create a desperately needed funding stream for direct services for sexual assault victims, as well as provide resources for state sexual assault coalitions, whose assistance is invaluable to service providers nationwide.

There has never been a federal funding stream dedicated entirely to the provision of direct services for victims of sexual violence, and in Pennsylvania this type of funding is critical to furthering the outreach services of our 52 sexual violence centers. As it currently stands, Pennsylvania sexual violence center staff members are stretched to the limit – trying to meet increased demand for services with reduced government funding.

More advocates are needed to handle the vital work of answering calls, accompanying victims to hospitals, courtrooms and also to provide counseling services. Additionally, counselors are needed to eliminate waiting lists and increase individual counseling for victims. Provisionally, center staff members place victims in group counseling to provide them with some level of support while they wait for individual counseling.

More adequate direct services and educational programs to underserved populations are also a growing necessity. To assist these populations, centers need additional staff, translators and cultural sensitivity training. Access to transportation can also be a factor for victims in rural Pennsylvania and those with disabilities. Many centers run satellite offices and/or make transportation arrangements for victims.

For fiscal year 2003/2004, PCAR's sexual violence centers provided 240,839 hours of sexual assault services to 38,089 clients and have 28,821 prevention education programs to 652,578 persons. While I admire those centers for their outstanding efforts, I realize that the number of persons who receive services could increase exponentially with the appropriate funding.

To quote one Pennsylvania center director, "We have never been able to have enough staff to provide all the services that we could with the quality and thoroughness that we would like or continually inform the community of our services and build financial security to weather funding ups and downs. Tragically, there are sexual assault victims in our community that are not getting services, and we do not have the resources to reach out to them and provide those services."

In closing, I think you will join me in agreeing that this nation has tolerated violence against women for far too long. Our mothers, grandmothers, sisters, daughters and nieces have been manipulated by those who assume the only way to gain control and power is through acts of sexual violence. With the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act, Congress has the opportunity to help us end this cycle of abuse.

I. Sacred Circle, National Resource Center to End Violence Against Native Women, provides training, consultation and technical assistance to Indian Nations, tribal organizations, law enforcement agencies, prosecutors and courts to address the safety needs of Native women who are battered, raped and stalked.

For the last decade Sacred Circle has advocated for the safety of American Indian and Alaska Native Women, providing training, consultation and technical assistance on responding to crimes of violence against Native women, particularly domestic violence, sexual assault and stalking. Sacred Circle submits this testimony in strong support of the Violence Against Women Act of 2005 (S.1197). In particular, we welcome the opportunity to commend Senator Specter and Senator Biden on Title IX. Safety for Indian Women.

Over the past ten years we have learned many things about the state of peril confronting Native women. From the oldest to the youngest, Native women are disrespected and treated in the most humiliating fashion, living and dying without justice or the knowledge that their grand daughters will live free of the violence they experienced. This violence destroys the quality of life of Native women and threatens the safety and stability of their families, community and Indian tribes.

Our national work gives us an overview of some of the successes and problem areas in implementing the Violence Against Women Act throughout Indian Country. Sacred Circle is a member of numerous Federal Inter-governmental Committees and various National Task Forces established to address violence against women.¹ On a tribal level, Cangleska, Inc., the mother agency of Sacred Circle, provides advocacy to approximately 3,000 women and children each year and approximately 2,400 men who are on domestic violence probation as ordered by the Oglala Sioux Tribe's Courts. The progress made by the Oglala Sioux Tribe in responding to violence against Oglala women is a direct result of the Violence Against Women Act. However, President of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, The Honorable Cecelia Fire Thunder, cautions that now is not the time to become complacent about the issue. "We have made great strides in responding to this problem. It's essential that we continue aggressive efforts since the future of the Oglala Sioux Tribe depends on the strength of the women. Violence against women is not just a social issue. It even affects our ability to develop economically."

II. The safety of Indian women is dependent upon the response of Indian Nations and the Federal government to crimes of domestic violence, sexual assault, dating violence and stalking. Consultation between the Department of Justice and Indian Nations is essential to the development of respectful effective coordination and management of violent crimes against Native women.

¹ National Task Force to End Sexual and Domestic Violence Against Women; National Congress of American Indians Task Force to End Violence Against Native Women; U.S. Department Of Justice Global Advisory Committee; U.S. Department Of Justice Working Group on Federal Tribal Sexual Assault Response; Full Faith and Credit Project; Federal Law Enforcement Training Center Curriculum Working Group; American Probation and Parole Association Model Protocol Working Group; International Forensic Nurse Examiner's DNA Curriculum Development Working Group.

The unique legal relationship between the United States and Indian Tribes creates a federal responsibility in safeguarding the lives of Native women. Native women are battered, raped and stalked at far greater rates than any other group of women in the United States. The Department of Justice estimates that:

- ◆ more than 1 of 3, 34.1%, American Indian and Alaska Native women will be raped in her lifetime and 3 of 4 will be physically assaulted²;
- ◆ about 9 in 10 American Indian victims of rape or sexual assault were estimated to have assailants who were white or black³; and
- ◆ 17 % of American Indian women, at least twice that of other populations, are stalked each year.⁴

These statistics reflect the horrific levels of violence committed on a daily basis against Native women. While compounded by many social factors research links this level of violence to the vulnerabilities of Native women as a population. The lack of jurisdiction of Indian nations over non-Indian perpetrators and the sentencing limitation placed upon Indian tribes by Congress enhances the vulnerability of Native women and the ability of predators to target Native women as a population. This jurisdictional void furthers the public perception that Native women do not have the same protections that non-Indian women are entitled to receive. The Department of Justice estimation that 75% of sexual assaults committed against Native women are by perpetrators of a different race⁵ is indicative that perpetrators of such violence are aware of this jurisdictional void.

Section 903, will increase the government-to-government relationship between the Department of Justice and Indian Nations. The staggering statistics of violence against Native women requires that the highest levels of government act in coordination to address the escalating crisis in the lives of Native women. The prevalence and severity of violence would be treated as an emergency if committed against any other population of women. Given the crisis in the lives of Native women and the lack of adequate resources⁶ more must be done at every level from funding through the Office on Violence Against Women, handling of cases by the FBI and United States Attorneys, and release of perpetrators by the Bureau of Prisons to improve efforts to create a more responsive criminal justice system. Federal agencies must work on a government-to-government basis with Indian Nations to prosecute such crimes. This cannot be achieved without formal consultation with Indian tribal governments.

- III. Research is necessary to understand the prevalence, unique particularities and estimated cost of crimes of domestic violence, sexual assault, dating violence and stalking occurring against Indian women.

The Department of Justice has issued several reports on violence against women mandated by the Acts of 1994 and 2000. Within these reports, crimes of violence against American Indian and Alaska Native women are given limited attention. Previous research mandated under VAWA did not require in depth research on violence against Indian women. Section 904 will create for the first time in United States history the mandate to research crimes of domestic violence, sexual assault, dating violence, stalking and murder of American Indian women. The unique circumstances created by the jurisdictional void, rural isolation, conflict between Indian tribes and states, and other social factors require such research. It is important to note that violence against Indian women occurs on a continuum of violence from simple assault to murder. Department of Justice research indicates that the vast majority of Indian women victimized by such crimes knew their assailant. Unfortunately this continuum in many cases has resulted in the deaths of women. Murder is the third cause of death for America Indian women.⁷ In addition, an increased number of American Indian women reported missing raises the concern that these reports should be investigated as homicide cases until the woman is located. A national baseline study reviewing the crimes of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, stalking, and murder committed against Indian women is essential to analyzing and creating safety in the lives of Native women. Of critical importance is the establishment of a task force, as provided by Sec. 903(A), of representatives from national domestic violence and sexual assault tribal organizations that have decades of experience in assisting Native women. In addition, Indian Nations are essential as the governments providing the emergency response to such crimes, the daily assistance to Native women, and monitoring of offenders. Indian tribes after tens of thousands of years remain sovereign nations having the authority and responsibility to protect the safety of women and stability of their citizenry. The presence of these representatives will provide the expertise necessary to implementing such a study.

III. The establishment of a Tribal Deputy for Tribal Affairs will increase the ability of the Department of Justice to effectively coordinate on a governmental basis with Indian Nations.

The unique governmental relationship between Indian tribes as the United States is long established by the Constitution, Supreme Court cases, Acts of Congress and Executives Orders of the President. Congress recognized this unique governmental relationship within the Violence Against Women Act by statutorily including Indian tribes within various provisions and defining Indian Tribes as eligible applicants for certain programs under the Act from the Violence Against Women Office within the Department of Justice. The administration of Federal programs to tribal governments must comply with this legal context. The development of policies and grant program guidelines according to state-based models is not only inappropriate, but also, ineffective in the creation of an enhanced response to domestic violence, sexual assault and stalking. Recognizing this complex legal relationship is a necessary component in the proper administration of tribal set aside funds. It is also essential in the development of model codes, protocols, public education awareness materials, research, and training.

One example of this unique governmental relationship is concurrent jurisdiction over violent crimes committed against Native women such as sexual assault. The U.S. Department of Justice has general jurisdiction over felony crimes⁸ by or against Indians, including homicide, rape and aggravated assault. These crimes require a coordinated Tribal-Federal response because of the sentencing limitation placed upon tribal courts of "imposing no more than one year per offense or $5,000. fine."⁹ This sentencing limitation is inappropriate and unless prosecuted by a U.S. Attorney the defendant is not held accountable for the violent crime. In addressing sexual assault of Native women this legal context must be understood and all requirements placed upon Indian tribes should also be placed upon the counterparts handling such cases within the Department. Similarly, the primary healthcare agency handling rape trauma emergency is the Indian Health Services of the Department of Health and Human Services. This agency does not have a formal protocol for sexual assault.

Understanding the complexity of the jurisdictional maze created by Federal Indian Law, the appropriate protocol for implementing government-to-government programmatic and administrative matters, and the management of funds set aside for Indian Nations requires the appropriate Departmental organization of a Tribal Division. The Division requires a Deputy to administer such a Division capable of managing inter-governmental affairs, with expert knowledge of Federal Indian Law, and violence against Native women, and customary responses to violence against Native women.

V. Conclusion.

In 1994, Congress enacted the Violence Against Women Act recognizing the extent and severity of violence against women. The Act has significantly increased the ability of Indian Nations and advocacy organization to assist Native women and hold perpetrators of domestic violence, sexual assault, and stalking accountable for their crimes. We strongly support reauthorization of this life-saving legislation. Title IX will strengthen the gains of the last ten years and further the progress made toward a time when the honored status of Native women is restored and all women will live free of violence.

Dear Senator Feingold:

We need your help to continue to serve the families in Wisconsin and across the nation whose lives have been shattered by domestic violence. We are asking that you support full funding for the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), raising the Victims of Crime Act Fund (VOCA) cap to $675 million, and preserving the balance of the VOCA fund for future victim needs.

We believe full funding of the VAWA programs is good social policy as well as good fiscal policy. Since Congress first authorized the funding of VAWA programs more than 10 years ago, many successful programs were implemented throughout the nation. These include the National Domestic Violence Hotline, training for law enforcement officers, prosecutors and court officials and shelters for battered women and their children. These programs have contributed to improved community response to domestic violence as well as increasing demand for safety and support services from victims. It is estimated that the first VAWA saved nearly $14.8 billion in net averted social costs. Full funding for all VAWA programs is a crucial investment that will save lives, save money and ensure a better future for our communities and our nation.

VOCA is a key, non-taxpayer funding source for services that help victims cope with the trauma and aftermath of violent crime. VOCA funds support domestic abuse shelters and other services for battered women and their children.

Unfortunately, federal budget cuts have had a negative impact on many organizations working to address domestic violence. In the FY05 Federal budget, the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act (FVPSA) received $126.7 million, $48.3 million below the authorized level of $175 million. STOP Grants were reduced by $16.1 million from FY03 amounts. Currently, the VOCA cap is $650 million. This funding simply does not meet the need for victim services. The President's budget would eliminate the balance of the VOCA fund, destabilizing critical services for victims of all types of crime.

Last year, Safe Harbor of Sheboygan County assisted 886 persons whose lives were impacted by domestic violence and sexual assault. These individuals received safety, support, information, and needed resources to begin rebuilding their lives. The economy affected services during 2004 when we provided 2,689 nights of shelter for women and their children. Those women had a more difficult time finding employment and affordable housing which made their shelter stays longer and strained the shelter's operating budget for perishable food, utilities, transportation assistance and other necessities. At the same time we, and 71 other domestic abuse programs in Wisconsin, had our state domestic abuse grants reduced by 3%.

Without full funding for VAWA programs, women and children in Sheboygan County and throughout Wisconsin cannot access the services they need to escape from violence. If the balance of the VOCA fund is eliminated, counties across the state may lose these services entirely. Senator Feingold, please know that Congressional support is vital to helping victims and their children find safety and security, build self-sufficiency and live a peaceful life.

Please support them.

The Honorable Patrick Leahy
Ranking Member
Senate Judiciary Committee
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Senator Leahy:

On behalf of Altria Group, Inc. I am writing to express our support for the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) as contained in S. 1197 recently introduced with broad bipartisan support. As you know, the important life-saving provisions of VAWA are set to expire on September 30 unless reauthorized.

Altria Group, Inc. is committed to ending the cycle of violence against women by raising awareness about domestic violence in communities across the U.S., providing resources to domestic violence service providers that strengthen the safety net available to victims and survivors, and working with other companies, nonprofit groups and local government agencies to address domestic violence. Enactment of S. 1197 would serve to further these goals.

Because domestic violence not only affects women in the home but also in the workplace, we believe the provisions of Title VII of S. 1197 to be particularly important. Victims lose 8 million days of paid work each year or the equivalent of 32,000 full-time jobs and 5.6 million days of household productivity. As a result, according to the Bureau of National Affairs, domestic violence costs U.S. employers an estimated $3 to $5 billion annually in lost time and productivity. Studies have reported that up to 56 percent of employed battered women are harassed at work by abusive partners. The provisions of Title VII would serve to help victims stay in the workforce while keeping businesses productive.

We respectfully request your favorable consideration of S. 1197 to reauthorize critical VAWA services to help end the cycle of violence against women at home and in the workplace.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

John F. Scruggs

The Testimony of Sheriff Ted Sexton
President of the National Sheriffs' Association
Before the
Committee on the Judiciary

REAUTHORIZATION OF THE VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN ACT

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, my name is Ted Sexton, and I am the Sheriff of Tuscaloosa County, Alabama, and currently serve as the President of the National Sheriffs' Association. Thank you for your kind invitation to appear before you today to testify about the Violence Against Women Act. I am pleased to be in such distinguished company on this panel and offer the views of our Nation's 3086 sheriffs.

As you know, NSA strongly supports the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act for the simple reason that the problem of domestic violence continues to be of concern to the law enforcement community. I am proud to say that just one month ago, we sent a letter to Senator Joseph Biden expressing our strong support of his legislation to renew VAWA. In that letter we not only indicated our support for VAWA, but also stated that, sheriffs were particularly pleased to see the authorized amounts for the Services and Training for Officers and Prosecutors (STOP) and the Grants to Encourage Arrest and Enforcement of Protection Order Improvements increased. It is my hope that the Committee will move quickly on this measure as VAWA sunsets at the end of September.

Since the initial passage of the Violence Against Women Act, law enforcement agencies across the country have made much progress, but there is still so much more that we can do. As this committee knows so well, NSA members play a key role in VAWA's mandated coordinated community response to prevent, investigate, and prosecute crimes of violence against women.

With help from organizations such as the NSA, law enforcement have created valuable training courses to teach the front line officers how to deal more effectively with the crime as they encounter it. NSA's program in particular focuses on rural domestic violence. These rural areas present difficult issues and the support structures needed to help victims may not be as robust as those found in major urban areas. Additionally, we have recently expanded this training to include dispatchers who are required to assess situations before officers can arrive on the scene. Often, a law enforcement dispatcher is a victim's first contact with someone who can help. It is essential that they be highly trained and prepared to help, reassure, and comfort that scared and lonely voice on the other end of the telephone line.

We have been the cornerstone of efforts to bring awareness, as well as resources, to confronting the crime. As a result of proactive law enforcement addressing this type of crime, we have instilled confidence in the women who are victims. The confidence that the criminal justice system will compassionately address their concerns has encouraged more women call for needed help to break the circle of violence. Mr. Chairman, my own community of Tuscaloosa County has a population of about 180,000 people, and we have seen the number of domestic violence cases rise from about 3800 cases in 1997 to almost 5600 cases last year. That increase is not the result of abusers looking for a haven in Alabama, but rather a direct result of the support systems that VAWA provides to victims through community groups, law enforcement, prosecutors and victim advocates. It is the result of a system that empowers the victim with the support and confidence they need to report the crime and take action to protect them selves from further abuse. In other words, VAWA works.

As first responders, law enforcement officers need the tools to effectively assess and diffuse domestic violence situations. The responding officers are also often the ones who have to initiate contact with victim service agencies, and many times with medical services. It is the uniformed officer who arrives on the scene that must set the tone of the subsequent interaction between the victims of violence, the criminal justice and victim service agencies. The victims who have had their self esteem damaged by the crime of violence lean on the uniformed officer to help them in the often intimidating first steps of finding a way out of the situation. In addition, and perhaps more frustrating to the front line officers, he is the individual who is called upon to repeatedly to answer the calls of domestic violence. The first officer on the scene is with the victim as she negotiates the criminal justice system.

Like many areas of government, law enforcement is called upon to provide more services with fewer resources. Domestic violence is an area where our communities cannot afford for us to lose our vigilance. According to DOJ statistics, intimate partner violence made up 20% of all non-fatal violence against females in 2001. Among women who report having been raped, physically assaulted, or stalked since they were 18 years old, 60% were victimized by a husband, co-habiting partner, boyfriend, or date. The FBI has documented that between 1976 and 2002 one-third of all female murder victims were killed by an intimate partner. In my county almost half of the murders committed last year were related to domestic violence. That is unacceptable and why we need the continuing support of VAWA.

NSA recognizes that violence against children is a growing problem as well. Again, speaking from the experience of my agency, we have responded to horrific crimes. One that I will never forget is a case where a man who shot three infant children in the head, and then turned the gun on their mother before killing himself. Another that I will never get over is a case where the boyfriend of a young mother fired shots at her, before barricading himself in the house and shooting her teenage daughter as she hid in a closet. These are scenes that no law enforcement officer who responded will ever forget. And they are scenes that are, unfortunately, being played out every day throughout this country.

One continuing frustration that NSA has been attempting to address is the interoperability of information sources. A fully functioning system will allow deputies to access information regarding restraining orders or orders for protection from abuse issued in other states. This so-called data interoperability will also allow deputies to better assess whether children passing through the state in the custody of an adult are in danger. With so many missing children reports and Amber Alerts, any tool that can help law enforcement is most welcome.

Most areas of the country are now faced with a multicultural and usually multi-lingual community. This raises a new issue for law enforcement: how to deal with violence against women among an immigrant population unfamiliar with our legal system, unsure of local law enforcement, and completely unprepared to leave their spouse or partner for fear that they will have no assistance whatsoever. Reaching this growing number of women is the challenge that faces us in the coming years. Training programs that address this particular issue are needed to help us prepare to meet the challenge.

The work, and the training, of these law enforcement first responders requires a financial commitment. The reauthorization of VAWA means that needed funds will be appropriated to assist law enforcement and others deal effectively with this terrible crime of violence.

The Honorable Russell Feingold
506 Hart Senate Office Building
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senator Russell Feingold:

Over the past 10 years, Congress has responded positively and effectively to help end domestic violence in our communities by funding Violence Against Women Act programs. In recent years the success of these programs has resulted in a growing demand for the life-saving services they provide. However, this increased demand coincides with a series of budget cuts that have crippled many local organizations, and forced others to close completely.

Programs such as the National Domestic Violence Hotline, battered women's shelters, and trainings for police, prosecutors and court officials have all contributed to the decline in domestic violence since VAWA was first authorized in 1994 and reauthorized in 2000. Now, as VAWA is soon scheduled to expire, we hope that you will support its reauthorization once again. VAWA is more than good social policy; it is also good fiscal policy. The first VAWA, authorized in 1994, saved nearly $14.8 billion in net averted social costs. Reauthorization and full funding for all VAWA programs is a crucial investment in our communities, one that saves lives, saves money and saves the future of our nation.

At the Center Against Sexual and Domestic Abuse (CASDA), which is located in Superior, at the extreme northern border of Wisconsin, in the year 2004 we provided direct services to 553 (unduplicated) victims of abuse. We provided shelter to 63 women and 66 children for a total of 5,259 days. The shelter was filled to capacity nearly every day in 2004 with the exception of just a few days in December, 2004. The legal program provided assistance and representation to 170 individuals. And our Children's Program Coordinator provided services to 129 children and 80 of their parents or guardians.

In spite of these numbers, we are experiencing cuts in budgets on the state and federal level as well as the local level. These cuts result in having fewer staff, less operating fund, and fewer resources for our clients. In 2004, we had to turn away 236 women and children due to a lack of space in our shelter. Rather than being able to grow and expand our services to meet the need, we will have to cut back due to funding.

Without reauthorization and full funding for VAWA programs, women and children in Douglas County, Wisconsin cannot access the services they need to escape from violence. The continued support of Congress is crucial to helping victims and their children find safety and security and build self-sufficiency. On behalf of the Center Against Sexual and Domestic Abuse (CASDA) representing the interests of victims of domestic violence in Douglas County, Wisconsin, we urge you to support the reauthorization of VAWA and full funding for all VAWA.

Concerning
Reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act

Presented on

Introduction

Thank you, Chairman Specter, Senator Leahy, and members of the Committee for the opportunity to speak with you today. I am here to urge Congress to reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). Congress should not delay. The Act should be renewed and important improvements should be made so that communities and organizations can expand their prevention efforts, ensure the safety of more victims, and hold perpetrators accountable for their crimes.

My name is Diane Stuart and I am the Director of the Department of Justice's Office on Violence Against Women (OVW). Our office administers financial and technical assistance to communities around the country that are creating programs, policies, and practices aimed at ending domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault and stalking. Our mission is to provide national leadership in developing the nation's capacity to reduce violence against women through the implementation of VAWA. Our ultimate goal is to change perceptions around violence against women so that these crimes are considered unacceptable and no longer tolerated in our society.

Background

Almost 11 years ago, Congress passed VAWA – landmark legislation in its scope and in its mission. Through new federal criminal provisions and important grant programs, we have been able to transform our nation's response to domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking. VAWA funds have supported the enforcement of protection orders, legal assistance, intensive training, community education, and local efforts to bring communities together to respond to violence against women.

Since the passage of VAWA, there has been a paradigm shift in how we approach and respond to violence against women. That change can be seen in local "coordinated community responses." It is an approach rooted in the belief that criminal justice officials, victim advocates, community leaders, health workers, elected officials, and others must work in collaboration to respond to violence against women. We know that victims are safer and justice is better served when:

- A law enforcement officer understands full faith and credit of protection orders;
- The shelter worker has a strong working relationship with law enforcement and the district attorney;
- An emergency room nurse knows to call an advocate when treating a sexual assault victim;
- A prosecutor builds an evidence-based case against a domestic violence offender;
- A judge requires frequent judicial review, supervision, and batterer intervention for the abuser in a domestic violence case;
- A civil attorney is trained on options for battered immigrant women;
- A hotline worker has the best technology at his or her fingertips;
- A tribe has the community infrastructure and technical support to adequately respond to victims;
- A dependency court judge and a child protective services official are better informed about the dynamics of domestic violence;
- A rural shelter has the funds to provide transportation for victims living in isolated areas; and
- An employer has company policies on domestic violence, sexual assault, and stalking.

Everyone in the community, including local clergy, business owners, educators, even neighbors, should be part of the response. The coordinated community response also extends to the relationships between other federal agencies that address violence against women issues. OVW works very closely with the Department of Health and Human Services, the Department of Labor, the Department of State, the Department of Homeland Security, the Department of Defense, and the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The Federal government's efforts to reduce violence against women must continue. In the last 10 years, the rate of domestic violence has declined by 59 percent and the rate of rape and sexual assault declined by 68 percent due to a combination of factors. These are dramatic changes by any measure. But, this is only part of a somewhat more sobering picture. Although violent crime has decreased nationwide, it still devastates the lives of many women. According to BJS, in 2003, there were still a half million victims of domestic violence and almost 200,000 rapes and sexual assaults were reported to the National Crime Victimization Survey. Other Department of Justice reports tell us that over one million women are stalked each year and one third of female homicide victims are murdered by their intimate partner. Plainly, we have much more work to do. We recognize the human suffering behind each statistic. As President Bush has said, one victim of violence is one too many---we must continue our focus on crimes of violence against women.

The Office on Violence Against Women

OVW was created in 1995 to implement VAWA and provide national leadership against domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking. OVW administers one formula grant program and eleven discretionary grant programs, which are listed below:

- STOP Violence Against Women Formula Grant Program
- STOP Violence Against Indian Women Discretionary Grants Program
- Grants to Encourage Arrest Policies and Enforcement of Protection Orders
- Education and Technical Assistance Grants to End Violence Against Women with Disabilities
- Legal Assistance for Victims Grant Program
- Grants to State Sexual Assault and Domestic Violence Coalitions Program
- Grants to Tribal Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault Coalitions
- Grants to Reduce Violent Crimes Against Women on Campus
- Training Grants to Stop Abuse and Sexual Assault Against Older Individuals or Individuals with Disabilities
- Rural Domestic Violence and Child Victimization Enforcement Grant Program
- Safe Havens: Supervised Visitation and Safe Exchange Grant Program
- Transitional Housing Assistance Grant Programs

In 2003, OVW became a “separate and distinct” office within the Department of Justice (42 U.S.C. 3796gg-0), with a presidentially-appointed, Senate-confirmed director. Since 2003, OVW has been working closely with the Justice Management Division and the Office of Justice Programs (OJP) to effectively transition OVW into its new role as an “office, board, or division” within DOJ. The transition is near completion, with only minor details still in progress.

Federal Funds Are Making a Difference

Under grant programs established by VAWA, the Violence Against Women Act of 2000 (VAWA 2000), and other legislation, OVW has provided federal grants to help communities across America develop innovative strategies to respond to violence against women. These grant programs are being used to forge focused and effective partnerships among federal, state, local and tribal governments, and between the criminal justice system and victim advocates, and to provide much-needed services to victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking.

During this Administration, OVW has presided over an unprecedented expansion of its grant programs, both in terms of the types of services funded and the level of funding awarded. Since the beginning of FY 2001, OVW has developed and implemented five new grant programs authorized under VAWA 2000. Funding under a sixth new program, which provides transitional housing assistance for victims of domestic violence, will be awarded for the first time in September, 2005. These programs have enabled communities to increase their efforts to help some of the most vulnerable victims, including the elderly and those with disabilities, and to provide supervised visitation services for victims and their children. In addition, through two of these new programs, OVW has supported the vital work that state sexual assault and domestic violence coalitions perform in each state and has fostered the growth of parallel coalitions in tribal communities. Due to statutory changes enacted in VAWA 2000, OVW also has been able to fund community work in new directions, such as help for immigrant victims of abuse and victims of dating violence, training for sexual assault forensic examiners, and improved enforcement of protection orders.

Over the past four years, increased funding for OVW programs also has allowed OVW to provide grants and technical assistance to more communities nationwide than ever before. During this Administration, OVW has awarded nearly $1.25 billion in grants and cooperative agreements. During fiscal years 1997 through 2000, OVW made approximately 1500 such awards; during fiscal years 2001 through 2004, that number grew to nearly 2400.¹ A new round of awards will be made during fiscal year 2005.

Moreover, OVW has focused special attention on communities that face particularly acute challenges in responding to violence against women. For example, in June 2004, OVW convened a two-and-a-half-day summit on violence against women in Alaska. For the first time ever, tribal and state agencies in Alaska convened to discuss strengthening their response to sexual assault of Alaska Native women, who experience alarmingly high rates of sexual assault. Through the Safe Return Initiative, OVW funds community education, training, and on-site assistance to address domestic violence among prisoners leaving correctional facilities.

Measuring Effectiveness of VAWA Programs

Over the past three years, OVW has undertaken a significant effort to implement a system for measuring the effectiveness of projects supported by VAWA grant monies. Two Congressional mandates undergird this effort: a new reporting provision included in VAWA 2000, which requires OVW to prepare biennial reports to Congress that assess the effectiveness of projects supported with our funds, and the Government Performance and Results Act of 1993 (GPRA).

After an extensive process of consultation with OVW grantees and experts in the field, we have developed new progress reporting forms for grantees and subgrantees of OVW's grant programs. Each form is individualized to allow grantees to report on the types of activities – for example, training, criminal justice activities, victim services – they are engaged in with their grant funding. Furthermore, the forms incorporate new GPRA measures to reflect more accurately the goals of OVW grant programs and whether those goals are being achieved. Data from the progress report forms can be used for individual project monitoring, feedback to grantees, and long-term planning, as well as reporting to Congress.

We are very excited about the data that grantees are submitting. For example, under one of our grant programs for just a six-month reporting period we know that:

- More than 50,000 victims were served;
- Over 120,000 services were provided to victims;
- Nearly 24,000 individuals were trained, including law enforcement, victim advocates, health professionals, court-based staff, and faith-based staff;
- 82 percent of cases received by courts resulted in charges being filed or transferred to a higher or lower court; and
- More than 2,600 individuals were arrested for violation of protection orders.

These numbers give us insight into the work of our grantees that we have never had before. We look forward to being able to report on progress on all our grant programs in our biennial reports to Congress.

Special Initiatives

Through grantee feedback and other means, OVW often learns about areas of special need and dedicates resources to filling these gaps and developing enhancements in response. These "special initiatives" range from small pilot projects to large multi-site demonstration programs. They allow OVW to explore different innovations in the violence against women field and share knowledge that can be replicated nationwide.

A selection of OVW special initiatives are presented below.

Family Justice Centers

In October 2003, President Bush announced the creation of the President's Family Justice Center Initiative, a pilot program to develop comprehensive one-stop domestic violence victim service and support centers across the country. This Initiative provides communities with the resources designed to co-locate criminal justice representatives and community and faith-based services to victims of domestic violence in one facility. The goal of a comprehensive Family Justice Center is to make a domestic violence victim's search for help and justice less burdensome and more efficient and effective by bringing professionals who provide an array of necessary services together under one roof.

In July 2004, the Attorney General announced more than $20 million in awards to 15 communities to support the planning and development of Family Justice Centers. Since that time, significant progress has been made. Many of the sites are preparing to open their doors in the next few months. In addition, representatives from all the sites meet routinely to share successes, challenges, and receive technical assistance.

Sexual Assault Forensic Exam Protocol

Under the Violence Against Women Act of 2000, the Attorney General was required to develop a recommended national protocol, and establish a mechanism for its dissemination. As the entity within the Department of Justice tasked with developing the protocol, OVW consulted with national, state, tribal and local experts on rape/sexual assault including rape crisis centers, domestic violence and sexual assault coalitions, and programs for criminal justice, forensic nursing, forensic science, emergency room medicine, law, social services, and sex crimes in underserved communities. The Protocol was released by the Attorney General in September, 2004.

The goals of the Protocol are to ensure that all victims, regardless of differences in background or location of service provision, receive the same high quality medical and forensic exam while being treated with respect and compassion and to improve prosecution of sexual assault cases through the appropriate collection of evidence. The Protocol is intended to supplement but not supercede prior developed protocols and support the use of the coordinated community response.

To enhance the utility of the Protocol, OVW is developing a technical assistance initiative to assist jurisdictions with its implementation. OVW has teamed with a forensic nurses organization to develop a centralized "clearinghouse" that will respond to requests from the field for assistance. Partner organizations representing law enforcement, prosecution, the tribal community, victim advocates and sexual assault coalitions, will contribute to the project.

Violence Against Women in Indian Country

We know that among the many issues facing tribes are pervasive poverty and programs that operate in geographic isolation. Victims often lack the basic resources necessary, such as phones and transportation, to access services. In addition, there are complex jurisdictional difficulties, which vary from state to state. For example, just determining who the responding law enforcement agency should be in a violent situation can often prove frustrating at best.

Fortunately, OVW tribal grantees are reporting that VAWA funds are helping to make significant changes in the response to violence against Indian women. Through our Measuring Effectiveness Initiative, grantees are reporting successes that indicate there is:

- Increased accountability for offenders;
- Increased safety for victims;
- Collaboration between criminal justice and victim services;
- Enhanced training for criminal justice personnel; and
- Heightened awareness of domestic violence, sexual assault, and stalking.

Below are some examples gleaned from information collected through our Measuring Effectiveness Initiative:

- The Emmonak Women's Shelter in Alaska received its first VAWA funds in 2001. Located in the bush, with no connecting roads and a two-hour flight from Anchorage, 62 percent of their travel budget was used for the emergency air transportation of 27 women and 52 children from the surrounding villages to the shelter.
- The Fort Peck Tribes Crisis Center used VAWA funds to strengthen its infrastructure. The Center opened its first and only domestic violence shelter on its isolated reservation in 1999. The executive director remarked, "Before VAWA, domestic violence cases that were prosecuted were few and far between. There were lots of calls for help, but no advocate to respond. The alleged batterer wasn't even arrested...now we are making changes."
- The Hopi Tribe undertook an integrated domestic violence prevention and intervention program in 1998 with the Tribal Court and the Hopi Women's Coalition. Originally, a single prosecutor served victims on the 1.8 million acre reservation. Today there is a coordinated community response that includes a domestic violence program coordinator, a probation officer, a legal advocate, a victim advocate, and a men's education coordinator. Mandatory arrest and no-drop prosecution policies have been implemented. The Tribal Court issued 16 protection orders in the first two years of VAWA funding. The Court now issues an average of 188 protection orders per year.

Recognizing the unique role the federal government plays in enforcing crimes in Indian Country, OVW has begun a special initiative involving several federal agencies including the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms, and the Bureau of Indian Affairs, to develop models for improving the response to sexual assault against Indian women.

The Department of Justice is also working to develop federal strategies to better address the problem of recidivist domestic abusers in Indian Country. The Native American Issues Subcommittee (NAIS) of the Attorney General's Advisor committee (a group of U.S. Attorneys with Indian Country jurisdictional responsibilities) has flagged this issue as a priority for the Department.

Although we have a long way to go, solid progress is being made in many areas. To build upon this progress, I plan to place an even greater emphasis on tribal issues over this next year.

Judicial Institutes

Concerned that judicial training lagged behind other training efforts, OVW launched a significant effort to improve the ways in which courts respond to domestic violence. In 1998, OVW engaged in a cooperative agreement with the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges (NCJFCJ), to develop the National Judicial Institute on Domestic Violence (Judicial Institute). In VAWA 2000, Congress further highlighted the critical role the courts play in responding to violence against women by making courts directly eligible for support under OVW's two largest grant programs. In fiscal year 2003, OVW expanded the reach of the Judicial Institute to include the breadth of judicial officers as well as to reach a greater number of courts and communities.

Through the Judicial Institute, NCJFCJ and its partner organization, the Family Violence Prevention Fund, created a highly interactive three-day seminar on domestic violence that is designed not only to impart needed information on such judicial practice areas as fact-finding and decision-making, but also to change judges' attitudes and values about domestic violence, victims, and perpetrators. Since 2000, more than 1,100 judges from all 50 states and the District of Columbia have been trained. Many of those judges indicated that the education received from the Institute was best they have received on any topic, let alone domestic violence.

In addition to the judges trained at the three-day basic seminar, the Judicial Institute also has trained more than 130 judges in three-day seminars covering a range of issues including the overlap of domestic violence and child maltreatment, working with men who batter, and immigration. Other educational opportunities offered through the Judicial Institute have included training for more than 700 judges on such important domestic violence-related issues as firearms, evidence, and child custody, among others.

The Judicial Institute has done more than train judges; it has created a national community of judges leading the nation in responding to domestic violence. NCJFCJ regularly hear from professionals around the country that the work of the Judicial Institute has significantly improved judicial handling of domestic violence cases in their communities. In addition, OVW has replicated these Institutes for law enforcement and prosecutors.

Research and Evaluation on Violence Against Women

Research plays a vital role in determining the frequency of violent crimes against women, factors related to these crimes, and the impact of interventions designed to protect women and hold offenders accountable. Approximately $5 million of VAWA funding is provided annually to the National Institute of Justice (NIJ) to support research and evaluation efforts on issues related to violence against women.

This investment has yielded useful and practical results. Research on risk assessment instruments has shed light on the accuracy of different approaches to predicting risk of future harm or lethality in domestic violence cases. This research will have immediate use for advocates and others who work with domestic violence victims in developing effective safety plans and on how best to prevent or restrict further abusive behavior. VAWA-funded NIJ research, reported in the Journal of the American Medical Association, has determined the effectiveness of protection orders, concluding that permanent orders are associated with a significant decrease in risk of violence reported to police. Such results can give criminal justice officials greater confidence in granting permanent protection orders, when effectively enforced. VAWA-funded research has also addressed batterer intervention programs, seeking to determine whether or not they have an impact. While programs for batterers may not in themselves reduce domestic violence, we know that in a community with a coordinated approach to domestic violence and strong judicial oversight, these programs are a critical ingredient.

There have also been important research results on sexual violence. NIJ research has found that a sexual assault response team approach greatly enhances the quality of healthcare provided to women who have been sexually assaulted, improves the quality of forensic evidence, improves law enforcement's ability to collect information and to file charges, and increases the likelihood of successful prosecution.

In an effort to gather updated statistics on stalking, OVC has entered into a partnership with the Bureau of Justice Statistics to add a stalking supplement to their National Crime Victimization Survey. This survey will be administered to about 50,000 households during the first six months of 2006. The survey results will yield updated statistics on the frequency of stalking, demographic information on the victims, the police response, and its impact on the victim. During this time, NIJ will invite researchers to submit proposals on stalking research to coincide with the release of the new data in 2007.

Criminal Prosecutions Under VAWA

In addition to ensuring services for victims, VAWA also strives to hold batterers, stalkers, and rapists accountable for their crimes. VAWA supplies federal prosecutors with important tools to combine efforts with state and local prosecutors in their work against domestic violence and stalking. VAWA and subsequent legislation created new federal interstate domestic violence, stalking and firearms crimes, strengthened federal penalties for repeat sex offenders, and required states and territories to enforce protection orders issued by other states, tribes and territories. United States Attorney's Offices have formed partnerships with local law enforcement and prosecutors in a nationwide effort to end violence against women. Since the enactment of VAWA, the Justice Department has prosecuted more than 1,600 cases--cases with some of the most dangerous and determined abusers who have aggressively pursued their victims across state lines. In fiscal year 2004 alone, 324 indictments were filed, the highest amount since the enactment of the statutes. Prior to VAWA, many of these cases might have slipped through the cracks.

Two recent cases from the Sixth Circuit illustrate how VAWA's criminal provisions have allowed federal prosecutors to pursue dangerous criminals. In United States v. Bowker, 372 F.3d 365 (6th Cir. 2004), the court upheld an interstate stalking conviction, which resulted from Bowker's relentless stalking of a television reporter in Ohio and West Virginia. The court also upheld a sentence of 96 months' imprisonment, affirming a 25-month upward sentencing departure for extreme psychological injury to the victim, as the stalking was prolonged, extreme, caused a substantial change in her behavior patterns, and ultimately led her to pursue a different career. In United States v. Cline, 362 F.3d 343 (6th Cir. 2004), the court upheld a conviction under 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)(8), which prohibits the possession of firearms in or affecting commerce by a person subject to a qualifying protection order. The defendant, Cline, had a long history of domestic violence against his wife, which had resulted in the issuance of four protection orders. While one protection order was in effect, Cline pursued his wife and a companion, Luther Smith. Cline tracked them down, beat his wife and Mr. Smith, leaving Smith to die in the road as Cline took Smith's car and drove away with Cline's wife. Cline was convicted on carjacking and section 922(g)(8) charges and sentenced to a 220-month term of imprisonment.

Enhancing the Violence Against Women Act

Congress should act now to reauthorize VAWA with the following key measures to sustain, strengthen, and improve our efforts to combat violence against women:

1. Reauthorize critical OVW grant programs through fiscal year 2010 to support investigating and prosecuting cases of domestic violence, sexual assault and stalking and assisting those victimized.
2. Create a new program for tribes by combining the five percent tribal set-asides established for the STOP, Arrest, Rural and Safe Havens statutes. As tribes have few resources and little infrastructure, this would eliminate an immense administrative burden by reducing the number of times they would have to apply for funding. We therefore propose creating a new program, similar to the Rural Program, which would be tailored to the needs of tribes, rather than echoing a program created for states.
3. Add a provision to all OVW programs requiring grantees and subgrantees to maintain confidentiality of identifying information about victims served with OVW funds. Although some states have confidentiality provisions protecting victim information, not all do. This would ensure that grantees safeguard the confidentiality of victims, which, in turn, improves victim safety.
4. Ensure that no victim pays for a forensic exam, even if he/she decides not to cooperate with law enforcement by amending the STOP Program statute's forensic exam payment certification. To this end, allow states to use STOP funds to pay for forensic exams that are performed by specially trained examiners as long as states do not require victims to seek reimbursement from their private insurance. The proposed amendment would encourage states not to require victims to seek reimbursement from private insurers by permitting states to use STOP funds to pay for forensic exams performed by specially trained examiners. In addition, many states will not pay for the exam unless the victim cooperates with the investigation and reports the crime to law enforcement. If victims are undecided about reporting, they should be encouraged to provide a medical forensic history, undergo the forensic exam, and have evidence collected and stored for a possible future prosecution.

5. Permit grantees to use funds to address sexual assault and stalking by amending the Arrest and Rural Program statutes. Expand the purpose areas of the Grants to Encourage Arrest Policies and Enforcement of Protection Orders Program and the Rural Domestic Violence and Child Victimization Enforcement Grant Program so that grantees can address all instances of sexual assault and stalking.
6. Amend the Rural Domestic Violence and Child Victimization Enforcement Grants Program statute to define "rural" based on region rather than state. The proposed change will enhance OVW's ability to provide funds directly to all rural areas, which are the intended beneficiaries of the Rural Program.
7. Amend the Education and Technical Assistance Grants to End Violence Against Women with Disabilities Grants Program to include caregiver abuse. Without this amendment, our grant program cannot train providers to recognize and respond to this type of abuse, even though it is a common form of abuse against women with disabilities.
8. Amend the Training Grants to Stop Abuse and Sexual Assault Against Older Individuals or Individuals with Disabilities to include Adult Protective Services workers among the potential trainees. Adding APS workers to the statute will not only allow these workers to benefit from grant-funding training but also will improve the training provided to personnel from the criminal justice system.
9. Permit OVW to use up to seven percent of STOP funds for technical assistance. The primary purpose of the OVW Technical Assistance Program is to provide direct assistance to grantees and subgrantees to enhance the success of local projects they are implementing with VAWA grant funds.
10. Amend annual reporting requirements so that they are biennial and due on a consistent schedule. Under the VAWA 2000, OVW is required to report to Congress biennially on the effectiveness of all of our grant programs (42 U.S.C. 3789p). However, several of our programs contain annual reporting requirements.² Having separate and more frequent reporting requirements is financially inefficient and burdensome. In addition, analyzing two years of data at a time for all programs will enable us to better track trends.
11. Amend the Safe Havens: Supervised Visitation and Safe Exchange Program statute to eliminate those portions of the Report to Congress that require national surveys. The statute authorizing the Safe Havens: Supervised Visitation and Safe Exchange Grant Program requires an annual report to Congress (42 U.S.C. 10420(d)). This includes both information about grantees and information regarding individuals served by supervised visitation programs nationwide. To collect this national information, OVW is currently funding a national survey of supervised visitation programs. While this information is valuable in an initial assessment of programs across the nation, repeated annual collection will only deplete resources and not provide additional knowledge for the effectiveness of program execution.

Conclusion

Over the past decade, VAWA funding has changed the course of the Nation's response to violence against women. The message is clear: a coordinated community response is the only way to eradicate the brutal crimes of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking.

When Congress first passed VAWA, there was tremendous optimism that the new law would create unprecedented changes in how the criminal justice system responds to violence against women. We have witnessed these changes first hand and what a difference they have made. Each year our progress grows exponentially: more people are trained, more victims are reached, and more offenders are brought to justice.

By reauthorizing VAWA, Congress will provide the opportunity to make the improvements and enhancements necessary to continue to reduce violence against women. We anxiously await the reauthorization of this most important bill.

The Honorable Russell Feingold
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senator Feingold:

Over the past 10 years Congress has responded positively and effectively to help end domestic violence in our communities by funding Violence Against Women Act programs. In recent years the success of these programs has resulted in a growing demand for the life-saving services they provide. However, this increased demand coincides with a series of budget cuts that have crippled many local organizations, and forced others to close completely.

In 2004, the Task Force on Family Violence (TFFV) served over 6,900 victims of domestic violence and children who had been abused or witnessed violence in their homes. The number of victims needing our help this year is just as great and we are seeing an increase in numbers every month. Securing support is critical to our ability to meet the on-going needs of the people who need our help.

For 30 years, the TFFV has been a leader in addressing the problem of domestic violence and the myriad of needs of survivors in our community. Founded in 1975, the agency is a private, non-profit organization that provides services to all adult victims of abuse, children who have witnessed violence, children who have been physically and/or sexually abused and treatment programs for abusers in our community.

The TFFV provides legal and employment advocacy, education, public policy advocacy and intensive case management services. The TFFV is the largest provider of in person family violence services in Wisconsin and bases all programs upon the needs of the women, men and children we serve. (See attached 2005 goals) At the core of the TFFV services is a commitment to help victims of family violence and their children.

Wisconsin relies on VAWA funding to support services to victims, prosecutors, law enforcement, and training for justice system personnel. Along with these efforts, programs such as the National Domestic Violence Hotline have contributed to the decline in domestic violence since VAWA was first authorized in 1994 and reauthorized in 2000.

Now, as VAWA is soon scheduled to expire, we hope that you will support its reauthorization once again. VAWA is more than good social policy; it is also good fiscal policy. The first VAWA, authorized in 1994, saved nearly $14.8 billion in net averted social costs. Reauthorization and full funding for all VAWA programs is a crucial investment in our communities, one that saves lives, saves money and saves the future of our nation.

Without reauthorization and full funding for VAWA programs, women and children in Milwaukee cannot access the services they need to escape from violence. The continued support of Congress is crucial to helping victims and their children find safety and security and build self-sufficiency. On behalf of Task Force on Family Violence representing the interests of victims of domestic violence in Milwaukee, we thank you for your past support and urge you to support the reauthorization of VAWA and full funding for all VAWA.

We would like you to visit our Courthouse Restraining Order Clinic and learn firsthand about the work that we do for victims. We look forward to working with you on these important issues.

Sincerely,

Agency Mission

The Task Force on Family Violence provides education, advocacy, and access to services with the goal of empowering people to live a life free from domestic violence.

Agency Overview

For 30 years, the TFFV has been a leader in addressing the problem of domestic violence and the myriad of needs of survivors in our community. Our leadership and innovative thinking has created a rich history and strong foundation for the Task Force. Founded in 1975, the agency sponsored the first speak-out on battered women's issues, organized the first Wisconsin Conference on Battered Women, created the Advocates for Battered Women Project and established the Legal Emergency Assistance Project and Child Advocacy Program.

The TFFV is a private, non-profit organization that was originally organized to provide services to battered women. The agency quickly added services for all adult victims of abuse, children who have witnessed violence, and children who have been physically and/or sexually abused. These programs were added as our society began to understand the extensive impact of domestic violence in our community. The TFFV also realized that to end domestic violence, the agency must not only work with victims but also with perpetrators of violence. This realization resulted in the addition of an educational program for batterers to learn new skills for changing their behavior. Services are provided in English, Spanish, and Hmong.

Restraining Order Clinic

Program Description. Located at the Milwaukee County Courthouse, our restraining order clinic serves as the cornerstone program of our agency and fulfills a crucial, unique need in our community. Advocates at the courthouse explain the process of obtaining a legal injunction to protect clients from domestic violence, child abuse, or harassment. They also help victims complete and file paperwork, accompany them to court, and refer them to shelter, counseling, or other required services. In 2004, advocates provided restraining order assistance to more than 4,900 victims from the metropolitan Milwaukee area.

Innovations in 2005

- Work with the Judicial Oversight Initiative to study and improve law enforcement response to domestic abuse and the violation of restraining orders, especially in suburban jurisdictions.
- Develop, with the Office of the District Attorney, materials to help victims recognize stalking and take protective measures when they are being stalked.
- Increase the number of children who are identified as witnesses of violence in the home and provide appropriate referrals to the TFFV Child Advocacy Program and other community services.
- Refine specialized consultation, advocacy and referral services to domestic violence victims who are also sexually assaulted.
- Support volunteer lawyers and student interns who provide legal services at the clinic.

Key Collaborations. Family Court Commissioners, Quarles and Brady, Sheriff's Department, District Attorney's Office, local police departments, universities and colleges.

Children's Advocacy Program

Program Description. Our children's advocates provide assistance to protective parents when their children are direct victims of abuse or have witnessed domestic violence. They provide safety planning, advocacy within the child welfare and legal systems, as well as case management services. Advocates help clients gain access to needed community resources, including legal representation through our partnership with Legal Action of Wisconsin. In 2004, the Children's Advocacy Program served over 1,200 protective parents and their children.

Innovations in 2005

- Provide on-site advocacy at the Child Protection Center.
- Pilot family violence prevention programming with St. Vincent Family Resource Center and the Wisconsin Humane Society (“Building Humane Families”)
- Initiate Child Witness to Domestic Violence Program, wherein we offer developmentally-appropriate support groups to children who have witnessed domestic violence in order to address the effects of trauma and halt the intergenerational cycle of abuse.
- Support the efforts of Milwaukee’s multidisciplinary Child Abuse Review Team through the hiring of an interagency coordinator.
- Work with mental health service providers to establish trainings to support local practitioners who work with children who have witnessed domestic violence.

Key Collaborations. Bureau of Milwaukee Child Welfare, Children’s Hospital of Wisconsin, Legal Action of Wisconsin, Jewish Family Services, Counseling Center of Milwaukee, Wisconsin Infant Mental Health Initiative, St. Vincent Family Resource Center, Wisconsin Humane Society, Milwaukee Public Schools, District Attorney’s office, local police departments.

Legal Emergency Assistance Program (LEAP)

Program Description. Our LEAP advocates specialize in helping clients create comprehensive safety plans as well as access community resources. Advocates assist victims with problems related to shelter, custody, visitation, child support, food shortages, transportation, clothing, housing, employment, health care, and public benefits. Legal emergencies are addressed in collaboration with our partners at Legal Action of Wisconsin. LEAP advocates provided individualized case management to more than 1,000 victims of domestic violence in 2004.

Innovations in 2005

- Offer, in conjunction with the Healing Center, Milwaukee’s first support and education group for survivors of stalking.
- Refine strategies for expanding the program to reach underserved victims. For example, develop a protocol for providing services to survivors with disabilities by participating in the Disability/Abuse Response Committee lead by IndependenceFirst.
- Co-locate an advocate at Aurora Health Care to assist pregnant battered women in the new project “Safe Mom, Safe Baby.”
- Implement more advanced screening and referral for survivors of abuse with mental health concerns. Provide more streamlined referrals with recently-awarded federal funds that support collaborations with Jewish Family Services and the Counseling Center of Milwaukee.

Key Collaborations. Legal Action of Wisconsin, Jewish Family Services, Aurora Health Care, Counseling Center of Milwaukee, the Healing Center, Judicial Oversight Initiative, District Attorney’s office, local police departments.

Ending Violence through Education (EVE)

Program Description. Formerly entitled the Domestic Abuse Intervention Project, this 18-week intervention and education program challenges batterers to take responsibility for their abusive behavior. Through interactive discussion, media, and role-playing, we teach participants to recognize the tactics of power and control that they have used on their partners and family members. In addition, we provide practical tools to change abusive belief systems and behavior. In 2004, we educated more than 500 court-ordered batterers.

The name change to EVE in 2005 reflects a shift toward a two-pronged approach to Ending Violence through Education: while continuing to end violence by addressing it at its source—perpetrators—we will reach out to the partners and children of abusive men and offer them educational programs as well.

Innovations in 2005

- Forge a partnership with the Alma Center, an organization that specializes in working with male batterers. Refer offenders to the Alma Center's Batterers' Intervention Program and related wraparound services.
- Reach out to current or former partners of men enrolled at the Alma Center. Offer them safety planning, details on what the perpetrator is learning in class, and tools to assess whether he is truly changing.
- Evaluate victim safety and offender accountability in weekly case staffings with Alma personnel, especially if a family determines that they wish to stay together.
- Offer ongoing support and education classes for women who wish to heal from the abuse and learn life skills that will aid them in reestablishing their independence.
- Enroll protective parents who seek to understand and ameliorate the effects of violence on their children in a 10-week course, "Parenting after Domestic Violence." Encourage these parents simultaneously to involve their children in the Child Witness to Domestic Violence Program.
- Provide specialized classes that serve the unique needs of female offenders. Since research indicates that 9 out of 10 female perpetrators are actually former or current victims of domestic violence, all classes are co-taught by lecturers with expertise in both perpetrators' and victims' issues.
- Pilot, in conjunction with Milwaukee's Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, and Transgender (LGBT) Community Center, southeastern Wisconsin's first educational class for perpetrators of violence in same-sex relationships.

Key Collaborations. Alma Center, Department of Corrections, Judicial Oversight Initiative, District Attorney's office, LGBT Community Center.

When Family Violence Comes to Work

Program Description. While our other programs assist victims who need employment advocacy, this program provides technical support to employers needing training, consultation about policies, and technical assistance regarding specific situations related to domestic violence in the workplace. These services are available by joining an Employers' Consortium or by purchasing them individually.

Innovations in 2005

- Identify best strategy for maximizing impact of outreach to victims through employment. Distribute victim information posters, recently printed by Aurora Health Care, for employers to use.

Key Collaborations. Aurora Health Care, local Human Resources professionals.

RE: Violence Against Women Act 2005

Dear Mr. Chairman:

I am Edward Reina, Jr. Director of Public Safety for the Tohono O'Odham Nation. I have over thirty years of Tribal law enforcement experience, and worked for five separate Tribal governments. Throughout my career I have been consistently frustrated with the inability of Tribal law enforcements efforts to fully protect our women and children because of inadequate laws and lack of jurisdictional authority. For these reasons I fully support the reauthorization of the 2005 reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act, particularly as it pertains to protection of Indian Women.

I support the act because of its proven success of protecting women and based upon national data that indicates the "rate of violent victimization among American Indian women was more than double that among all women." (American Indians and Crime Dec. 2004 NCJ-203097).

The reauthorization of the 2005 Violence Against Women Act provides Tribal law enforcement with necessary tools that would diminish the tragic consequences that our women and children suffer everyday as victims of violent crime. These include the creation of a Federal offense aimed at repeat offenders of domestic violence and secondly allowing Tribal police the ability to access and enter data into Federal criminal databases (NCIC), a deficiency in the current system.

Should you have any questions please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely,

Edward Reina, Jr., Director

Violence Against Women Act
July 19, 2005

Statement of Melissa Wilt , Director of Public Policy
Men's Health Network

As one of the original co-sponsors of the Department of Justice and American Medical Association National Conference on Family Violence: Health and Justice in 1994, the Men's Health Network welcomes the opportunity to submit testimony regarding the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). We would like to recognize the continued dedication of the committee toward the eradication of domestic and family violence.

Our testimony examines the origins of the legislation, research findings on domestic violence, VAWA and gender neutrality, and VAWA as it pertains to family preservation. We have also recommended several amendments to the committee so that the bill might become gender inclusive and address all facets of family and domestic violence.

Some basic facts about domestic violence:

- Men and women are approximately equal perpetrators of domestic violence (Staus and Gelles)
- Women's violence toward men is a serious social problem (Straus, 2004).
- There are hundreds of programs designed to help women living with a violent, or potentially violent, spouse.
- There are no programs designed to help men living with a violent, or potentially violent, spouse.
- When a child abuser is the parent, 2/3 of the abuse is committed by the mother (Various state Child Protective Services reports).

Some basic facts about VAWA

- VAWA fails to address the findings of the 1994 National Conference on Family Violence: Health and Justice.
- VAWA is gender specific. Based on testimony by NOW-LDEF, gender specific legislation is unconstitutional. (NOW-LDEF to House Ways and Means Committee, Subcommittee on Human Resources, October 4, 1999)
- VAWA distributes funds under a flawed, convoluted grant system and creates barriers for new organizations to receive funds.
- VAWA prohibits programs that would help families where the woman is the violent spouse, or where she needs to learn to solve family disagreements in a socially acceptable manner.
- VAWA's must arrest policy places the most vulnerable of our population, children, at risk for parental abuse.

Legislative Changes Needed to Break the Cycle of Domestic Violence:

- The legislation should be gender inclusive, ensuring that benefits and programs are available to all victims of family violence.
- In order to address the flawed funding system, the Secretary should be given the power to determine which state agency should determine grant recipients and dispense funds.
- Faith based organizations should be eligible for funding.
- New programs should be eligible for funding.
- The legislation must focus on preserving the family as a first option.

Origin of VAWA

In 1994, the Department of Justice, American Medical Association, Men's Health Network and other interested organizations co-sponsored the National Conference on Family Violence: Health and Justice, in an attempt to address this disturbing issue. As stated in the original conference program, the conference was intended to "improve the response of the health and justice systems to family violence and to foster the collaboration between them". Their goals included developing of a "common language" to inform health care professionals, assessing the role of the health and justice systems, examining of programs designed to intervene in and rehabilitate homes where domestic violence is present, analyzing the role of the media, and most importantly, working to prevent future domestic violence.

The resulting legislation was the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), which has continuously failed to address several of those goals.

After the creation of the legislation, Men's Health Network inquired as to the failure to include men in the bill, despite the conference's focus on family violence. Robert McAfee, then acting president of the AMA, addressed MHN's concerns, citing the AMA's Diagnostic and Treatment Guidelines on Domestic Violence.

"Domestic violence, also known as partner abuse, spouse-abuse, or battering, is one facet of the larger problem of family violence.... Most research has focused on women... However the terms of spouse-abuse and partner-abuse reflect an awareness that men also can be abused in intimate relationships" (AMA, 1992).

Dr. McAfee's comments reflect how skewed the legislation has become. VAWA does little to actually remedy the problem of domestic violence and does not address several of the conference's original goals: it is not gender inclusive, allocates funds under a flawed grant system, and ultimately promotes family break-up, not reconciliation.

Research on Domestic Violence

Dr. Murray Straus of the University of New Hampshire has been a pioneer of domestic violence research. Spanning several decades, his findings consistently show that domestic violence is equally perpetrated by both spouses and affects all family members.

In his 2004 study titled "Women's Violence Toward Men Is a Serious Social Problem", Dr. Strauss defines and measures assault as well as examines the rates at which violence is directed toward each sex. Dr. Straus recognizes that physical assaults are not always the most damaging types of abuse and that "one can hurt a partner deeply- even drive them to suicide- without lifting a finger" (Straus, 2004). He finds that despite a much lower probability of physical harm, women do initiate a substantial percentage of domestic violence. Even these minor, perhaps verbal, assaults by women place themselves at a much greater risk of physical retaliation by the man. He writes:

"It will be argued that in order to end "wife beating," it is essential for women also to end what many regard as a "harmless" pattern of slapping, kicking, or throwing something at a male partner who persists in some outrageous behavior and 'won't listen to reason.' (Straus, 2004)"

Dr. Straus is one of many researchers whose research has proven equally perpetrated rates of domestic violence. Also of note, at the University of California, Long Beach, is Dr. Martin Fiebert, who has compiled an annotated bibliography of over 120 scholarly investigations, empirical studies and analysis on domestic violence. His piece titled "References Examining Assaults by Women on Their Spouses or Male Partners: An Annotated Bibliography" consistently demonstrates that women are as physically aggressive, or more aggressive, than men in their relations with their spouses or male partners. The aggregate sample size in the research exceeds 72,000 cases.

Some posit that the actual number of domestic violence cases against men is under reported. Men, who are stereotyped as the physically and emotionally stronger sex, often fail to report incidents because it would be damaging to their egos. There is little societal acceptance for men who are simply not "man enough" to stand up to their wives.

Despite the conclusive evidence, there is still no gender inclusive legislation to help combat domestic violence. Essentially, VAWA currently ignores half of the domestic violence problem.

Gender Neutrality?

Senator Joe Biden, who wrote the original legislation, declares that VAWA is gender neutral. He says "Violence is violence no matter why that gender of the victim. Because of that, the Violence Against Women Act applies to all victims of domestic violence, irrespective of their gender. Nothing in the act denies services, programs, funding, or assistance to male victims of violence." (The News Journal, 2005). While this may be his intention, further analysis of the bill shows that it is not gender neutral and fails to address violence perpetrated by women

VAWA routinely excludes males from receiving benefits and services when the wife is the abusive spouse. The legislation fails to include programs addressing violence perpetrated by women, such as programs are that would teach women how to deal with family disputes without resorting to violence. Additionally, there are no programs that would provide assistance to men and their children who are living with a violent spouse, as a women would receive if the male were the perpetrator

Roy Getting, president of the National Fathers' Resource Center in Dallas, Texas, hoped to take advantage of VAWA funds in order to assist the several hundred local men and children affected by domestic abuse. Despite the need for the services his organization provides, his grant applications have routinely been rejected. The Texas VAWA grant application is quite clear on this issue, stating that "Grant funds may not be used for the following: Services for programs that focus on children and/or men". (See attached)

VAWA comes with a hefty 4 billion dollar price tag and a rather convoluted and decentralized grant system. VAWA grants are controlled by domestic violence coalitions that consist of the same organizations, or their sister organizations, that are recipients of the grants and work to put up barriers to new, outside applicants. Faith based organizations, often those most trusted by communities, are also excluded. In essence, VAWA has created a four billion domestic violence industry.

Family Destruction, not Preservation

Procedures implemented by VAWA funded organizations and by incentives to local law enforcement, work to destroy families, rather than preserve them. This is accomplished by removing a parent (usually the father) from the home when there is a family dispute, placing that person under arrest. The male is then required to pay for a lengthy therapy program even if he was not the originator of the dispute, rather than working with the family to help them solve their disputes, save their marriage, and provide a safe environment for their children. In this respect, VAWA is neither managing --nor solving-- domestic violence in the United States.

Further, VAWA's must arrest policy often leaves children with the parent who initiated the violence, perhaps contributing to the fact that 2/3 of confirmed parent child abuse is committed by the mother, not the father.

Suggested Language Changes

Men's Health Network is dedicated to amending VAWA to ensure that it is gender inclusive upon reauthorization, preserves rather than destroys marriages, and protects children by insuring that the parent originating violence in the home learns to address family disputes in a socially acceptable manner. MHN offers the following suggested language changes:

- Nondiscrimination: The funds made available under this part shall be apportioned and expended under a formula to be developed by the Secretary that assures that substantially equal levels of benefits and services are available for female victims, male victims, and elderly victims of family and domestic violence.

- Each place in the statute where Domestic Violence Coalition appears, replace with: "A State governmental agency operating under guidelines promulgated by the Secretary."

- Faith-based organizations should be eligible for funding.
- Family preservation. Programs should provide counseling to preserve the family following an alleged domestic violence incident.
- Open up grants and funding to new programs, eliminating any provisions that require years of service before becoming eligible for funding.

Concluding Remarks

The solution to the domestic violence epidemic is simply not found in VAWA. Before VAWA can be considered an effective tool to fight domestic violence, numerous modifications must be made. Upon reauthorization it must be made gender inclusive so that funds may be made available for programs that provide services for female victims, male victims, and elderly victims of family and domestic violence. With four billion dollars, VAWA supporters cannot cite poor funding as an excuse not to include both sexes and all ages.

Additionally, faith based and organizations that provide services for men must be eligible to apply for funds under a fair and transparent grant system. Above all, legislators should take a new approach to solving the problem, again stressing family preservation, not destruction. While recognizing that in some cases family members should be estranged from one another, we need to work to make it the last resort, not the first.

Dear Chairwoman Johnson:

I am writing to inform you that portions of the proposed Fathers Count Act of 1999 are unconstitutional as presently drafted. Because they tie the federal benefits available under the Act to gender (i.e., "fatherhood"), these provisions violate the equal protection guarantee of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution. Further, to the extent that Act targets certain grants to state programs offering gender-specific benefits, it would operate to encourage states to violate the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution. As recently set out by the U.S. Supreme Court in Saenz v. Roge, 119 S. Ct. 1518 (1999), Congress cannot authorize states to accomplish indirectly what Congress itself is constitutionally prohibited from doing.

I point out just a few examples of the gender-specific provisions in the Act. Section 442© (2) sets out preferences for awarding matching grants to entities which, inter alia, have obtained a "written commitment . . . that the State will cancel child support arrearages owed to the State in proportion to the length of time that the father maintains a regular child support payment schedule." (Emphasis added). Thus, this provision supports and encourages states to adopt policies that give fathers -- but not mothers -- relief from child support payments under certain circumstances. Similarly, Section 442© (3) of the Act requires that 75 percent of the available grants be awarded to entities that will "suspend all child support arrearages owed to the State by any participating father for so long as the father makes timely payments under a child support order or maintains a marital relationship with the custodial parent involved.” This provision extends only to fathers the opportunity to avoid child support arrearages by making timely child support payments and maintaining a marital relationship. See also Section 442(e) (authorizing exchange of information on fathers).

Sex-based classifications are subject to “skeptical scrutiny,” requiring an “exceedingly persuasive” justification to uphold the distinction. United States v. Virginia, 518 U.S. 515 (1996). Recently, a majority of the Supreme Court indicated that gender-based stereotypes about the respective caregiving roles of fathers and mothers are not a permissible basis for sex-based distinctions in a federal statute. Miller v. Albright, 118 S. Ct. 1428 (1998) (O’Connor, J.; Breyer, J.); see United States v. Ahumada-Aguilar, 1999 U.S. App. LEXIS 20964 (explaining Miller v. Albright). As Justice Breyer noted in Miller, statutory distinctions that “depend for their validity upon the generalization that mothers are significantly more likely than fathers to care for their children” violate constitutional standards. Miller, 118 S. Ct. at 1461. Accord Miller v. Albright, 118 S. Ct. at 1445 (O’Connor, J.) (“It is unlikely . . . that any gender classifications based on stereotypes can survive heightened scrutiny”). See also Califano v. Westcott, 443 U.S. 76 (1979) (striking down sex distinction in AFDC-UF program providing benefits to families with unemployed fathers but not unemployed mothers). Because noncustodial mothers and noncustodial fathers are similarly situated with respect to payment of child support, the provisions of the Fathers Count Act which explicitly favor families with noncustodial fathers violate the constitutional requirement of equal protection.

We are also concerned that the Fathers Count Act incorporates a distinction between noncustodial and custodial parents which operates to disparately harm mothers. Title II of the proposed bill adds a new Section 301(b) to the existing Welfare-to-Work law pertaining to noncustodial parents. This provision would expand availability of funding under the program to projects that serve noncustodial parents who are “unemployed, underemployed, or having difficulty in paying child support obligations.” Section 301(b)(2). In contrast, under this legislation, custodial parents would have to establish that they are “hard to employ” by meeting one or more specific, restrictive criteria.

According to the 1998 Green Book, the overwhelming number of single parent families with children under 18 are maintained by mothers (84%). Green Book, p. 547. Therefore, the proposed conditions for participation in welfare to work programs -- which make funds available to noncustodial parents (fathers) based on broad criteria, while requiring that custodial parents (mothers) meet specific eligibility requirements -- have the effect of prioritizing fathers. Instead of creating separate tracks for custodial and noncustodial parents, the eligibility criteria for these parents should be equivalent.

DALLAS CHAPTER

 P.O. Box 75972
 Washington, DC 20013

Dear Sirs:

You asked about our experiences applying for VAWA funds to address the needs of male victims of domestic violence and their children.

The first year that we applied for funds to aid men and their children we used the Dallas City police statistics to show there was a real need but no adequate services for men provided in the Dallas area. (Dallas County has five women's shelters, but no shelters for men.) We were advised by our North Texas Council of Governments (NTCOG) of the grant process and training sessions that were needed to service persons who have a violent spouse or companion. NTCOG helped review our grant before it was submitted. The grant application was rejected.

After the grant failed to get enough points to advance, I was able to review the score sheets to determine our short fallings. It turned out that the women's shelters scored us at zero while the police agency on the review panel scored us in the 70s.

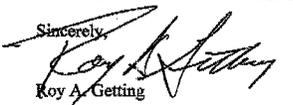

The next year we revised our grant and scored much better. This was due to 1) a better application, and 2) a change in the scoring (an agency could no longer vote on grants that they were also applying for). The grant application was again rejected. We were advised that the funds could not be used for our men and children's domestic violence project because the grant was only available for services for women.

We did not apply during the most recent grant cycle because of the ineligibility requirement that the money is only available to women. This exclusion is stated quite clearly in the State of Texas grant application.

Even using the Department of Justice's figures stating that 34% of the domestic violence is against men (rather than some studies showing almost 50%), Dallas County has several hundred men and children going without help. We had hoped to fill that need.

I believe the intent of the original law was to have the funds available to the entire citizenry not just a portion. I have been advised by our board of directors that as soon as the criteria are changed, we will reapply. Until that time, the board does not wish the staff to expend energy in this area.

Sincerely,

 Roy A. Getting

INTRODUCTION

The Office of the Governor, Criminal Justice Division (CJD) prepares and publishes a number of documents to assist the applicants in applying for and administering grant funds to implement effective programs. The Grant Application Kit, published for each grant program, provides the applicant with everything needed to apply for funds including: a description of the program and uses of the funds, the eligibility and application requirements, and the application forms. These kits are intended to be a resource to apply for funding opportunities offered by the Governor's Office through state or federal funding sources. The grant application kits' user-friendly interface will help the applicant locate and access information for the available funding opportunities.

TOOLS

CJD has greatly improved their grant-application processes to include most of the required forms, attachments, and checklists in a format that is interactive (fill-in-the-blank). Therefore, the user easily navigates through each document with a clear, concise, and time-saving method to complete the application kit. Within the application kit, there are navigational tools to guide the user.

VERSION

The minimum version needed to use the interactive application kit is Microsoft Word & Excel 1997.

STEP 1: DETERMINE ELIGIBILITY

The first step toward applying for a grant is to determine if your agency is an eligible applicant.

Then, determine if the project is eligible under CJD general eligibility requirements.

Primary Mission and Purpose (28 C.F.R., Part 90)
The STOP Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) program provides funds to projects with the primary mission of developing and implementing effective, victim-centered law enforcement, prosecution and court strategies to address violent crimes against women and the development and enhancement of victim services in cases involving violent crimes against women.

Federal Distribution Requirements (28 C.F.R., Part 90 and Division B, VAWA 2000, Section 1102)
According to federal rules, CJD must distribute at least 25% of grant funds for law enforcement programs, 25% for prosecution programs, 30% for victim services programs, and 5% for court programs.

Funding Levels

Minimum Award - $5,000
Maximum Award - $80,000
Maximum Award for Violence Against Women Courts - $250,000

Eligible Applicants (T.A.C., Section 3.905)

- ❖ State Agencies
- ❖ Non-Profit Corporations
- ❖ Indian Tribal Governments
- ❖ Community Supervision & Corrections
- ❖ Councils of Governments
- ❖ Local Units of Government
- ❖ Faith-Based Organizations
- ❖ Crime Control Prevention Districts
- ❖ Universities

Eligible Activities (Purpose Areas) (28 C.F.R., Part 90 and Division B, VAWA 2000, Section 1103)

- ❖ Training
- ❖ Special Units
- ❖ Policies and Protocols
- ❖ Data Collection
- ❖ Victim Services
- ❖ Stalking
- ❖ Indian Tribes
- ❖ Multidisciplinary Efforts
- ❖ SANE Nurses
- ❖ Elder Abuse
- ❖ Immigration

Additional Requirements (State Priorities) (T.A.C., Section 3.903)

- ❖ Priorities for Victim Services Projects
- ❖ Priorities for Law Enforcement Projects

- ❖ Priorities for Prosecution Projects
- ❖ Priorities for Court Projects

General Eligibility Requirements:

Applicants must also comply with the following statements to be eligible for funding:

- ❖ If a local application, the proposed project is in response to priorities set in a community plan. The criminal justice planner at your regional council of governments can help you make this determination and can explain the requirements of the program.
- ❖ A representative of the applicant agency for a local project has attended, or will attend, a mandatory grant application workshop if the regional council of governments requires it.

Ineligible Activities

- ❖ Programs that focus on children and/or men;
- ❖ Legal assistance and representation in civil matter other than protective orders;
- ❖ Cash payment to victims;
- ❖ Employment agency fees;
- ❖ Fund-raising;
- ❖ Liability Insurance on buildings;
- ❖ Major maintenance on buildings;
- ❖ Newsletters, including supplies, printing, postage and time;
- ❖ Legal defense services for perpetrators of violence against women; and
- ❖ Any expense or service that is readily available at no cost to the grant project or that is provided by other federal, state, or local funds, including the Texas Crime Victims Compensation Fund.

STEP 2: WRITE THE PROJECT NARRATIVE ANDSUMMARY

Applications should include narrative information using the format outlined below to explain the purpose, methodology, and evaluation methods for the proposed grant project.

Part 1: Problem Statement and Data

In 40 words or less, provide a statement of the specific problem or problems this project would target. In addition to your 40-word-or-less problem statement, provide data that explain the problem. Use only data that are verifiable and relevant to your target population. For example, do not use statewide data for a local problem statement and do not use national data for a statewide problem statement. Also, provide citations for the sources of these data. Provide only the

This article compares the rate of physical abuse of children and spouses from a 1975 study with the rates from a 1985 replication. Both studies used nationally representative samples (2,143 families in 1975 and 3,520 in 1985), and both found an extremely high incidence of severe physical violence against children ("child abuse") and a high incidence of violence against spouses. However, the 1985 rates, although high, were substantially lower than in 1975: the child abuse rate was 47% lower, and the wife abuse rate was 27% lower. Possible reasons for the lower rates in 1985 are examined and evaluated, including: (a) differences in the methods of the studies, (b) increased reluctance to report, (c) reductions in intrafamily violence due to ten years of prevention and treatment effort, and (d) reductions due to changes in American society and family patterns that would have produced lower rates of intrafamily violence even without ameliorative programs. The policy implications of the decreases and of the continued high rate of child abuse and spouse abuse are discussed.

This paper was presented at the 1985 meeting of the American Society of Criminology. The study reported here is a product of the Family Violence Research Program, University of New Hampshire, Durham, NH 03824.

UNITED STATES SENATE
REAUTHORIZATION OF THE VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN ACT
JULY 19, 2005

PEGGY SANCHEZ MILLS
CEO, YWCA USA

Thank you Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee for providing this opportunity to submit written testimony in support of the Violence Against Women Act of 2005, S.1197. My name is Peggy Sanchez Mills and I am the CEO of the YWCA USA. The YWCA USA is the nation's oldest women's movement and one of the largest providers of battered women's shelters and violence prevention programs and services in the United States. We represent more than 2 million women and girls, and can be found in almost every community. On behalf of our associations, and the many women and children we serve, I would like to thank Chairman Specter and Senators Biden and Hatch for their original co-sponsorship of S.1197. I would also like to thank the many members of this committee who have cosponsored and offered support for this important bill.

Since the creation of the YWCA USA in 1858, we have worked to improve the lives of women and girls. Today, YWCA associations are working to improve the lives of women and their families through our racial justice programs, economic employment programs, child care and early education programs, and especially relevant to our hearing today, our violence prevention and recovery programs.

Throughout the United States, YWCA local associations work to end violence against women by providing needed services including domestic violence and dating violence programs, as well as, programs and services related to sexual assault and stalking. YWCA programs include battered women's shelters, rape prevention programs, programs for children who have experienced or witnessed violence, and mental health and legal services for victims.

The Violence Against Women Act has been fundamental to the YWCA's efforts to prevent and end violence in our communities. Since 1994, VAWA has helped us provide services and programs to millions of women and girls including prevention, crisis intervention, and recovery services and programs. Without VAWA funding, the YWCA would not be able to provide these comprehensive services and programs to prevent and eliminate violence. The YWCA USA strongly supports the reauthorization of this critical piece of legislation.

THE REAUTHORIZATION OF THE VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN ACT

The success of VAWA has proven that it is possible to prevent and end violence against women. Since the passage of VAWA, women and men who once suffered in silence have been able to access services for domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, rape, and stalking, and a new generation of girls and boys have grown up knowing that violence against women and children is a crime that will not be tolerated by our society. Yet, there is much more work that needs to be done, including focusing on preventing violence and providing victims with the programs and services they need to heal from their crimes. Senate bill S.1197 would take the next step in ending violence against women and girls by focusing on violence prevention and recovery. Specifically, S.1197 reauthorizes current programs and contains new provisions focusing on providing services and outreach to specific populations of victims, preventing violence, and providing services and programs that help victims rebuild their lives. The YWCA USA supports the Violence Against Women Act of 2005 (S.1197) and the provisions below.

Title II and Title III

Violence affects all women in the United States, however, many victims do not receive the necessary programs and services they need. Title II and Title III of S. 1197 would provide necessary services and outreach to specific populations of victims including; sexual assault victims, women ages 60 and older, disabled individuals and young women and girls.

Sexual Assault

As providers of sexual assault prevention, crisis intervention and recovery programs, the YWCA USA strongly supports the provision in S. 1197 that recognize and respond to the needs of sexual assault victims and the unique needs of women of color who experience sexual assault. Specifically, the YWCA USA supports the following provisions of S.1197 that would help us meet the needs of victims of sexual assault in our communities:

1. authorizing grants for much needed services for victims of sexual assault and their families
2. authorizing grants for technical assistance and training related to sexual assault

3. authorizing grants for culturally specific sexual assault programs.

Women ages 60 and older, Disabled individuals and Young Women and Girls

As providers of programs, YWCA local associations have a wide variety of experience with preventing and responding to violence against women and girls in their communities. Working directly with victims of violence, the YWCA USA recognizes that each woman experiences unique needs and challenges in receiving services. The YWCA USA supports the provisions in S. 1997 which would help us, and our communities, address the needs and barriers to service that women and girls face including:

1. authorizing grants for services for victims of violence who are disabled, who are 60 years of age or older, or who are aged 12-24
2. authorizing grants for training, consultation and information on violence against women and girls who are disabled
3. authorizing grants for training on recognizing violence against women who are 60 years of age or older
4. authorizing grants for community collaboration in preventing and addressing violence against youth
5. authorizing grants for training and collaboration on the link between domestic violence and child maltreatment.

Title IV

The YWCA USA believes that ending violence should be the ultimate goal of any work focusing on violence against women and girls. To this end, the YWCA local associations provide a wide range of violence prevention programs and services including community forums on dating violence, self-defense programs, and programs focusing on the needs of children who have witnessed or been exposed to violence.

Because of the YWCA's commitment to preventing violence and our work directly with children and youth, the YWCA strongly supports the prevention provision in S. 1197 that would help us address the needs of children and youth who have been exposed to violence. Specifically, Title IV of S. 1197 would authorize grants for services and programs for children exposed to violence and for community collaboration in addressing the exposure of children to violence.

Title VI and VII

Through our programs, YWCA local associations help victims of crime rebuild their lives. Two barriers our clients and other victims of violence often encounter are housing and economic barriers. Title VI of S. 1197 includes provisions that would help YWCA local associations meet the housing and economic needs of victims and their families.

Housing and Economic Needs of Victims

Across the United States, YWCA organizations provide housing to our clients that include battered women's shelters, emergency shelters for women and their families, transitional housing and long-term housing. S. 1197 would assist YWCA local associations in providing housing services to women, girls and their families by:

1. authorizing grants to develop and establish housing for victims of violence and their dependents that are homeless or at-risk of becoming homeless
2. authorizing grants to help organizations assist victims who live in public or assisted housing, or who are in need of housing and housing assistance
3. protecting the confidentiality of victims and their families who reside in homeless and battered women's shelters

4. amending Section 8 and Public Housing statutes to better meet protect and meet the housing needs of victims of violence.

Title VII of S. 1197 also helps the YWCA address the economic needs of victims. Specifically, S. 1197:

1. allows victims' access to emergency leave to address domestic and sexual violence
2. provides short-term emergency benefits for victims
3. creates a national clearinghouse and resource center that would focus on ways employers may assist victims of domestic violence and sexual assault.

Conclusion

The YWCA USA supports Senate Bill S. 1197. S. 1197 would help provide services for women and girls, including YWCA clients, who are victims of violence. It would provide much needed funding for services and programs to help prevent and end sexual assault, and ensure that all women including women over 60 years of age, disabled women, young women, and girls have access to services and programs. This bill also works to prevent violence by focusing on the needs of children who have witnessed violence and contains necessary housing and economic provisions to ensure victims and their families will be able to rebuild their lives. The YWCA USA looks forward to the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act so that we, and many other organizations, may continue to work to end violence against women.
