RETIREMENT DAY

JULY 15, 2010.—Referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed

Mr. OBERSTAR, from the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, submitted the following

R E P O R T

[To accompany H. Res. 1463]

The Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 1463) supporting the goals and ideals of Railroad Retirement Day, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the resolution be agreed to.

PURPOSE OF THE LEGISLATION

H. Res. 1463 supports the goals and ideals of Railroad Retirement Day, as designated by the U.S. Railroad Retirement Board; recognizes the important contributions that the rail industry, rail workers, and retirees make to the national transportation system; and urges the people of the United States to recognize Railroad Retirement Day (August 29, 2010) as an opportunity to celebrate the success and importance of the railroad retirement system to America's working families.

BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

H. Res. 1463 supports the goals and ideals of Railroad Retirement Day, as designated by the U.S. Railroad Retirement Board. Railroad Retirement Day, August 29, 2010, marks the 75th anniversary of the enactment of the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935, as part of President Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal legislation.

Railroad Retirement Day recognizes the 75th anniversary of the creation of a reliable, stable funding system into which all railroads and railroad employees pay. It allows older workers to retire with the promise of a predictable income. This year, nearly 600,000 beneficiaries will receive retirement and survivor benefits and about 42,000 railroad workers will receive unemployment and sickness benefits.

In 1874, the first modern railroad pension system was established in North America by the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada. Its stated purpose was “to help workers worn out from long service to retire.” The American Express Company, then a railroad freight agency, established the first railroad pension system in the United States shortly thereafter, in 1875.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad also created a pension system in 1880; the Pennsylvania Railroad in 1886; and other railroads followed suit. By the late 1920s, more than 80 percent of all railroad workers in the United States were covered by a pension plan, but these plans were generally inadequate, liable to capricious termination, and of little assistance to disabled employees.

The Great Depression, which began with the stock market crash in October 1929, drove the already unstable and inadequate railroad pension systems into a state of crisis.

Since 1910, the number of railroad jobs had leveled off and was in decline. By 1928, more than 250,000 railroad workers had lost their jobs and, by 1931, 16 percent of all railroad employees nationally were laid off.

Older railroad workers eligible for retirement exercised their seniority rights and continued working, deciding that a steady paycheck was preferable to pension systems, which could not meet their obligations. This decimated the ranks of younger workers, affecting the railroad industry for years to come as the labor pool of younger workers disappeared.

Congress took action and passed the Railroad Retirement Act of 1934 “to promote economy, improve employee morale and promote the efficiency and safety of interstate transportation.” This legislation was not only designed to rescue retired workers, but a decaying industry as well. However, after the Railroad Retirement Act became law, the U.S. Supreme Court held that the law was unconstitutional.

In 1935, Congress passed similar legislation, which President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed into law on August 29, 1935. The 1935 law was again challenged in the courts. While the law was being challenged, President Roosevelt urged railroad management and labor to come to the table and resolve their differences, and 11 months after the passage of the 1935 legislation, the first annuity payments were made.

The eventual resolution of differences between railroad management and labor led to the Railroad Retirement and Carriers Taxing Act of 1937 and, in July 1937, the benefit payments of more than 50,000 pensioners was taken over by the Railroad Retirement Board.

Numerous changes to the 1937 law were made over time, which increased benefits for retirees and added benefits for dependents. Amendments enacted in 1946 and 1951 added survivor and spouse benefits, liberalized disability benefit requirements, and established jurisdictional coordination with social security.

Other changes to the law followed, which protected the income of retirees in times of double-digit inflation and the crediting of military service, but the most sweeping changes came in 2001 when Congress enacted the Railroad Retirement and Survivors' Improvement Act of 2001 (P.L. 107–90).

The Railroad Retirement and Survivors' Improvement Act of 2001 liberalized early retirement benefits for 30-year employees and their spouses, eliminated a cap on monthly retirement and disability benefits, and lowered the minimum service requirement from 10 years to five to nine years if at least five years of service occurred after 1995. This was accomplished without a tax increase or a reduction in benefits.

By the beginning of its 75th year, in 2010, railroad retirement benefits had been provided to two million retired employees, 1.1 million spouses, and 2.4 million survivors. Additional unemployment and sickness benefits have been paid to railroad workers who were laid off or injured on the job.

SUMMARY OF THE LEGISLATION

H. Res. 1463 supports the goals and ideals of Railroad Retirement Day as designated by the U.S. Railroad Retirement Board. Railroad Retirement Day will be celebrated on August 29, 2010, the 75th anniversary of the day that the legislation was signed into law by President Franklin D. Roosevelt. Further, the resolution recognizes the important contributions that the rail industry, rail workers, and retirees make to the national transportation system and recognizes the importance of the railroad retirement system to America's working families.
