I. BACKGROUND AND PURPOSE OF THE TRAFFICKING VICTIMS PROTECTION REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 2011

Human trafficking is a modern-day form of slavery involving victims who are forced, defrauded, or coerced into labor or sexual exploitation. As documented in the State Department's annual Trafficking in Persons Report for 2011, millions of children, women, and men throughout the world continue to be trafficked every year, including thousands of victims who are present here in the United States. Traffickers use evolving methods of coercion—whether subtle or overt, physical or psychological—to force victims to work against their will.

In 2000, Congress passed the landmark, bipartisan Trafficking Victims Protection Act (TVPA), which provided law enforcement officials with tools to investigate and prosecute incidents of human trafficking, established severe criminal penalties for defendants convicted of trafficking crimes, enhanced services for human trafficking victims, and expanded prevention and education programs. Championed by the late Senator Paul Wellstone and Senator Sam Brownback, the original Trafficking Victims Protection Act drew upon the work and support of a broad coalition of advocacy organizations from across the political and social spectrum—groups dedicated to children's rights, human rights, and women's rights, as well as many religious organizations. Each subsequent reauthorization of the law—in 2003, 2005, and 2008—has been the product of bipartisan support in Congress.

The success of the original Trafficking Victims Protection Act, and its subsequent reauthorizations over the past decade, is evident not only by the number of criminal convictions secured against human traffickers but also by the number of States that have passed comprehensive anti-trafficking laws. According to a July 2011 study by the Polaris Project, 47 States and the District of Columbia have now passed human trafficking criminal laws.<sup>1</sup> Similarly, countries around the world have followed the lead of the United States and adopted laws and policies to combat human trafficking. Even with these successes, the Committee believes more can and should be done.

The Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2011 reaffirms and augments the United States' commitment to fighting human trafficking. The bipartisan bill reported out of Committee expands enforcement tools and encourages interagency cooperation to identify victims, investigate offenses, and provide victim services. The bill also requires that this important work be done in a cost-effective way with maximum accountability and reporting to ensure that Federal money is being well spent. Despite the difficult cuts to authorization levels, which were made with recognition of the Federal Government's fiscal constraints, the reported bill maintains the core of the Trafficking Victims Protection Act while adding key provisions to strengthen and improve this law.

Among the most significant changes to the law are the creation of new tools and authorities that will enable the State Department to partner with the private sector and foreign governments, as well as promote partnerships between foreign governments and non-governmental entities. These provisions of the bill were drafted in consultation with the Committee on Foreign Relations, and with the input of the Chairman, Senator Kerry of Massachusetts, and its Ranking Member Senator, Senator Lugar of Indiana.

Anti-trafficking efforts have historically focused on the three “P”s, which are prevention of the crime, prosecution of the perpetrators, and protection of the trafficked persons. Increased attention to a fourth “P,” partnership, will better leverage available resources to end trafficking.

The legislation also expands the role that regional bureaus of the State Department will play in anti-trafficking efforts. Although the Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons (G/TIP) is the Department’s lead on anti-trafficking policies and programs, the regional bureaus are uniquely situated to help develop country-specific anti-trafficking strategies and goals with foreign government counterparts. Increased collaboration between regional bureaus and G/TIP, including the appointment of anti-trafficking officers in some U.S. embassies as authorized by the legislation, will improve communication with foreign government counterparts and strengthen diplomatic efforts around trafficking. Although the anti-trafficking officers will serve under Chief of Mission authority, the Committee expects that G/TIP will provide considerable input into their selection. The Committee also expects that the G/TIP office will direct, guide, and communicate with these officials regularly.

The bill also addresses trafficking crimes committed by diplomats serving in other countries, including the United States. Current law requires the Department of State, when compiling the Trafficking in Person Report, to consider “whether the government of the country vigorously investigates, prosecutes, convicts, and sentences public officials who participate in or facilitate severe forms of trafficking in persons.”<sup>2</sup> While the plain meaning of the term “public official” includes diplomats representing the country abroad, the State Department has interpreted it more narrowly and has not included trafficking cases involving diplomats in previous reports. The bill corrects this confusion and explicitly requires reporting on trafficking by “diplomats and soldiers.”<sup>3</sup> It is the Committee’s expectation that action taken by foreign governments, and the United States Government, to respond to allegations of serious trafficking offenses committed by foreign diplomats and military personnel posted abroad will be included in the report in the future.

The bill also makes explicit that a government’s failure to appropriately address public allegations against public officials, especially once such officials have returned to their home countries, shall be considered inaction under the criteria for determining whether the country is meeting minimum standards for eliminating trafficking. Finally, the Committee notes that the Secretary of State has not suspended the issuance of visas to non-citizens seeking to work for officials of a diplomatic mission or an international organization where there are credible allegations of abuse and state or institutional tolerance of those violations. Current law requires the Secretary to suspend these visa programs under such circumstances.<sup>4</sup> The Committee will monitor credible allegations of abuse and expects the Secretary to take actions as required by law.

Notably, the legislation reduces authorization levels for State Department programs, including for section 113(a) of the Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000,<sup>5</sup> which authorizes funds for G/TIP. These reductions are not intended to signal a shift in the Committee's priorities away from trafficking. Rather, they reflect the fact that the State Department receives anti-trafficking funds through the Foreign Assistance Act instead of through this specific authorization. In the decade since the TVPA's enactment in 2000, governments around the world have made great strides in combating trafficking. Much of that success may be attributed to the creation of G/TIP and the annual Trafficking in Persons Report. This Committee strongly supports the work of G/TIP and expects that it will continue to receive funding from the general State Department operating account at current or greater levels in order to fulfill its mandate.

Other significant changes include targeted increases in Federal funding for victim services provided by the Department of Justice, the Department of Health and Human Services, and their grantees. These services provide a lifeline to victims of trafficking who often have no other means to obtain housing, food, medical treatment, and counseling. In addition to meeting the direct needs of victims, these services are a central component in effective law enforcement efforts. As Principal Deputy Assistant Attorney General Mary Lou Leary emphasized in her testimony before the Committee, "victims who receive immediate physical, mental, and emotional support will be much more able and willing to participate in the investigation and prosecution of their traffickers."<sup>6</sup>

This increase in funding also reflects that much of the TVPA's success comes from a multidisciplinary response to human trafficking. That approach encourages close partnerships among victim service providers, State and local law enforcement, and Federal law enforcement, including the Federal Bureau of Investigation, U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, U.S. Customs and Border Protection, U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, the Department of Labor, and Federal prosecutors. These partnerships leverage scarce resources and ensure a coordinated, multi-jurisdictional response. Although these agencies work closely together, the TVPA and its reauthorizations has also put into place structures to ensure that they do not duplicate each other's work. For example, the Senior Policy Operating Group (SPOG), established by statute in 2003, coordinates the work of multiple cabinet agencies to ensure that anti-trafficking efforts are synchronized and that projects avoid duplication.

The Office of Justice Programs (OJP) of the Department of Justice has also put in place additional accountability mechanisms to ensure that grant programs are effectively administered. Although the views offered by Senator Grassley and Senators Kyl, Sessions, Lee, and Coburn focus on a 2008 report by the Department of Justice Inspector General which criticized various aspect of grant management by OJP, they do not mention the Inspector General's subsequent 2011 report that praises OJP for making significant improvements in monitoring and oversight of grants. Most of those improvements have come with the establishment of the Office of Audit, Assessment, and Management (OAAM), which was created in 2005, but was not fully staffed until 2009. The Inspector General found that since OAAM began operating at capacity, OJP has "made significant improvements" and "developed a reasonable process for providing monitoring to a high volume of grants, which have allowed them to monitor grants totaling almost four times the award amount required by law."<sup>7</sup>

To ensure that funding is efficiently and effectively spent, the legislation also includes several accountability measures for programs administered by the Department of Justice. These provisions aim to ensure that grants are awarded to proper recipients, that funds are used as intended to benefit victims of trafficking, and that grants are properly supervised and administered. Among the accountability measures are annual audit requirements for a sample of grant recipients, with consequences for those recipients found to have problems that are not meaningfully addressed; a non-federal matching requirement for all grantees; restrictions on investments, tax status, and lobbying for grantees; and restrictions on administrative expenditures and conferences for the Department of Justice. These provisions were the product of detailed negotiations and careful consideration. They were specifically tailored to the needs and contours of the grant programs authorized under this Act and administered by the Department of Justice. They are intended to ensure that these particular grant programs work as intended, and to improve accountability, without excessively burdening grantees or preventing needed services from reaching victims.

As to accountability, Senators Kyl, Sessions, Lee, and Coburn assert that TVPA grants have been distributed based on faulty priorities and have been poorly managed. In fact, grants awarded pursuant to the TVPA have been effectively used to assist victims and to prevent, prosecute, and deter trafficking domestically and around the world. While the minority views assert that the State Department has not tracked with any precision large numbers of grants awarded, in fact the State Department has tracked those grants comprehensively by project, with grantees reporting on their work regularly. The State Department was only able to give partial responses in the one document cited by the minority views because that document contained responses to questions that called for grants to be classified in different ways than the ways the Department tracks them. The State Department has documented that 90 percent of projects funded by G/TIP included a victim protection component, 61 percent provided victim services, and 52 percent built the capacity of local law enforcement and prosecutors to go after traffickers.<sup>8</sup>

Some awards are also criticized as duplicative when in fact they addressed related but distinct and separate needs.<sup>9</sup> The minority views, in criticizing spending on public awareness campaigns, also ignore the need for any comprehensive anti-trafficking strategy to include a prevention component, which includes public awareness, in addition to victim services, in order to reduce the number of victims going forward.

Nonetheless, it is important that grant programs, particularly those aimed at as important a problem as human trafficking, operate as effectively as possible. To this end, Chairman Leahy and Senator Grassley worked to address in the reported version of the bill the kinds of concerns expressed by Senators Kyl, Sessions, Lee, and Coburn. The reported bill contains new provisions to try to ensure that funds awarded under the TVPA translate to effective prevention, enforcement, and victim services successfully contributing to combating the scourge of human trafficking. The legislation as reported includes significant new accountability measures covering all TVPA grants administered by the Department of Justice. It focuses funding on the most important initiatives while eliminating or reducing funding for those that have been less successful in the past.

The reported bill focuses on domestic trafficking. Spending under the TVPA has been set up to ensure sufficient funding to make significant strides in dealing with domestic trafficking, while also acknowledging the need to address the massive scale of global trafficking and the fact that much domestic trafficking has roots in international trafficking rings. The Committee recognizes the need to ensure that domestic trafficking is sufficiently prioritized. For that reason, the reported bill adjusts authorization levels to increase the funds available for domestic trafficking victims relative to international victims.<sup>10</sup>

The bill improves cooperation between law enforcement agencies and victims. Current law allows the immediate family members of a trafficking victim in the United States to receive nonimmigrant status based on a fear of retaliation from the traffickers. Principal Deputy Assistant Attorney General Leary testified that this provision has proven helpful in stabilizing victims and encouraging them to participate in the criminal prosecution of their trafficker. “Our prosecutors have found that victims are better able to cooperate when their family members are out of the reach of the trafficker,” she said.<sup>11</sup> The Department of Homeland Security shares

<sup>9</sup>Senators Kyl, Sessions, Lee, and Coburn cite grants to two organizations helping to combat trafficking in Chad. One of these grants, to Catholic Relief Services, focused on preventing trafficking of children in three high-risk communities. The second, distinct and complementary, grant to the International Organization for Migration focused on preventing trafficking at the macro level by improving government policy and the ability of non-governmental organizations to protect and provide services to victims. See G/TIP Response to Senator Coburn’s Report, at 8. Similarly, two grants to the International Organization for Migration for a case management database were awarded because the initial grant proved very successful in leading to a tool that helped both with provision of services and with research to inform better policy choices. G/TIP awarded the second grant for expansion of the project. Id. at 8–9.

<sup>10</sup>The Committee also reaffirms, as the Department of Justice has already made clear, that TVPA funds can be used to provide services to domestic trafficking victims.

this position and provided the following example at the Committee's hearing:

In 2010, the Vermont Service Center successfully approved a mother of a sex trafficking survivor based on this new exception, and worked with the Department of State to facilitate her entry into the United States. The mother, who had received death threats by one of her daughter's traffickers, was able to reunite with her daughter and to testify at her daughter's trial."<sup>12</sup>

This legislation modestly augments the list of eligible relatives who may file as a derivative beneficiary of a "T" visa holder. Traffickers seek to control their victims by threatening not just immediate family members, but also grandchildren, step-children, nieces, and nephews. This authorization responds by allowing certain family members to apply to join the trafficking victim in the United States, but only if those family members face a present danger of retaliation in their home country by the traffickers. Family members who do not face retaliation would not be eligible under this modification.

The bill adds "fraud in foreign labor contracting," as defined by 18 U.S.C. § 1351, to the list of crimes for which victims may be eligible to apply for a "U" visa. Fraud in foreign labor contracting is difficult to prosecute because victims are often reluctant to come forward and report the crime for fear of being deported. Including this crime as a qualifying criminal activity for a "U" visa will encourage greater reporting, victim cooperation, and prosecution of this serious offense.

The bill also reduces authorization levels for investigations by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) of severe forms of trafficking in persons. This change is not intended to signal a desire to reduce ICE's role in fighting human trafficking. To the contrary, the Committee believes that ICE, and the Department of Homeland Security as a whole, play a critical role in identifying, investigating, and prosecuting human trafficking cases. That work is done through training with State and local law enforcement partners, victim assistance efforts, and the wide dissemination of information through public awareness campaigns in the United States and in foreign countries with high levels of trafficking. The reduction in authorized funding does not signal a shift in congressional priorities. Rather, it reflects the fact that ICE's anti-human trafficking efforts are funded by its annual appropriations, and not through this specific authorization.

This legislation also amends the information required to be included in the Attorney General's annual report regarding Federal agencies' efforts to implement anti-human trafficking measures. In particular, it adds a requirement to report on the effectiveness of various immigration protections for victims of human trafficking.

One of these immigration protections is Continued Presence (CP). This is a temporary, revocable immigration status provided to individuals identified by law enforcement as victims of human traf-

<sup>12</sup>Testimony of Kelly Ryan, "The Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act: Renewing the Commitment to Victims of Human Trafficking," before the Senate Comm. on the Judiciary, 112th Cong. ficking. This status allows victims of human trafficking to remain in the United States temporarily during the ongoing investigation into the human trafficking-related crimes committed against them.

According to guidelines established by the Department of Homeland Security,<sup>13</sup> CP applications should be submitted immediately upon identification of a victim of human trafficking. A law enforcement officer can make this identification after receiving credible evidence that an alien is a victim of human trafficking. That evidence may consist of a credible victim statement alone.

Despite these widely circulated guidelines, the number of CP applications that have been granted has declined in recent years and is disproportionately small compared to the estimated number of human trafficking victims present in the United States. According to the 2011 State Department's Trafficking in Persons Report, only 186 individuals received Continued Presence in 2010. This was a significant drop from 2009, when 299 individuals received this temporary protection. This decline is troubling, especially in light of the benefits to law enforcement that accrue through CP. The Committee will closely monitor how CP requests are handled in the future and whether the low number of CP grants can be attributed to policy, practice, or some other reason.<sup>14</sup>

The bill includes protections related to unaccompanied immigrant minors. It builds on the successful "Child Advocate Program," which protects child trafficking victims and other children with protection-based claims. The bill also ensures that children who reach the age of maturity while in immigration custody are screened for vulnerabilities prior to being transferred to adult immigration detention. The bill offers a limited level of assistance to minors who were formerly considered unaccompanied minors, but later granted "U" visas because they were victims of crime who assisted law enforcement. The low cost of these programs are offset by the much greater reduction in authorizations contained in the bill.

Other significant changes in this reauthorization include additional law enforcement tools and resources to fight human trafficking crimes. For example, child exploitation laws under 18 U.S.C. § 2423 are strengthened to hold criminally liable those U.S. citizens and lawful permanent residents residing outside of the United States who engage in illicit sexual conduct with a minor. Current law only reaches U.S. citizens and lawful permanent residents who travel abroad in foreign commerce.

The bill adds a new misdemeanor provision as 18 U.S.C. § 1597, which criminalizes the unlawful confiscation or destruction of a person's immigration documents in order to maintain or restrict the labor or services of that person. An analogous felony is found in 18 U.S.C. § 1592, which addresses similar conduct committed in the course of violating specified human trafficking crimes. And the bill expands the definition of a “racketeering activity” for the Racketeer Influenced Corrupt Organizations Act,<sup>15</sup> to include fraud in foreign labor contracting, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 1351.

<sup>14</sup> Contrary to the implication in the Additional Views from Senator Grassley, the Committee Report does not suggest that S. 1301 modifies the legal standard for Continued Presence (CP), nor does the Report suggest that law enforcement officials "do not know how to do their jobs and that Congress and advocates know better." See Additional Views from Senator Grassley, at 23. Rather, the Report articulates the intent of Congress in establishing CP and restates the Department of Homeland Security's implementation guidelines for CP. The discussion of CP above concludes with the Committee's intention to fulfill its oversight obligations with regard to implementation of the statute. In addition, the comments regarding CP are directly related to the new requirement in section 221 of the bill that the Attorney General report on "the number of persons who have been granted continued presence . . . and any efforts being taken to reduce the adjudication and processing time."

The legislation continues to authorize the Attorney General to make grants pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 14044c to State and local law enforcement agencies, and expands the scope to include training and resources to investigate all forms of severe human trafficking, whether sex or labor trafficking, and whether experienced by foreign or domestic, minor or adult victims.

The bill does not reauthorize specific funds for the FBI. That change is not intended to signal a desire to reduce the FBI’s role in fighting human trafficking. Rather, it reflects the fact that the FBI’s anti-human trafficking efforts are funded by its annual appropriations for salaries and expenses, and not through this specific authorization. This Committee strongly supports the critical role the FBI plays in investigating and prosecuting human trafficking cases and expects that it will receive the funding necessary to combat these horrible crimes.

II. HISTORY OF THE BILL AND COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION

B. COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION

1. Hearings

The Senate Committee on the Judiciary held a hearing titled, “The Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act: Renewing the Commitment to Victims of Human Trafficking,” on September 14, 2011. The witnesses at the hearing were Mary Lou Leary, Principal Deputy Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Justice Programs of the Department of Justice; Luis CdeBaca, Ambassador-at-Large for the Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons of the Department of State; and Kelly Ryan, Acting Deputy Assistant Secretary for Immigration and Border Security of the Department of Homeland Security. The witness testimony is available at <http://www.judiciary.senate.gov/hearings/hearing.cfm?id=6344ca9cdcac94c57d1fa7ad3d740a6f>.

2. Executive Business Meetings

The bill was placed on the Committee’s agenda for consideration on October 2, 2011. It was held over on that date.

On October 13, 2011, the Committee on the Judiciary considered S. 1301. Chairman Leahy offered a Leahy-Grassley substitute amendment to the bill. The amendment was adopted by unanimous consent.

Senator Cornyn offered an amendment to strike sections of the bill relating to pilot programs for domestic minor sex trafficking and replace them with the text of the Domestic Minor Sex Trafficking Deterrence and Victims Support Act of 2010. The amendment was rejected by a roll call vote.

The vote record is as follows:

Tally: 7 Yeas, 11 Nays

Yeas (7): Hatch (R-UT), Kyl (R-AZ), Sessions (R-AL), Graham (R-SC), Cornyn (R-TX), Lee (R-UT), Coburn (R-OK).

Nays (11): Kohl (D-WI), Feinstein (D-CA), Schumer (D-NY), Durbin (D-IL), Whitehouse (D-RI), Klobuchar (D-MN), Franken (D-MN), Coons (D-DE), Blumenthal (D-CT), Grassley (R-IA), Leahy (D-VT).

Senator Blumenthal offered an amendment to require enhanced reporting by the Department of Defense of trafficking in persons claims and violations, including claims and violations by contractors. The amendment was accepted by a voice vote.

The Committee then voted to report S. 1301, the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act, as amended, favorably to the Senate. The Committee proceeded by roll call vote as follows:

Tally: 12 Yeas, 6 Nays

III. SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF THE BILL

TITLE I—COMBATING INTERNATIONAL TRAFFICKING IN PERSONS

Sec. 101. Regional strategies for combating trafficking in persons

This section requires regional bureaus of the Department of State to work in conjunction with the Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons to formulate bilateral anti-trafficking goals and objectives. This section aims to ensure that communication with foreign government counterparts on trafficking occurs early in the reporting period and often, that the process is used to increase diplomacy with foreign governments on the issue, and that a uniform practice across bureaus and embassies is established.

Sec. 102. Regional Anti-Trafficking officers

This section authorizes the appointment of anti-trafficking officers based out of U.S. embassies to cover regions where human trafficking is most prevalent and foreign governmental efforts insufficient.

Sec. 103. Partnerships against significant trafficking in persons

This section re-orders existing language from sections 105 and 106 of the Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000 on “partnerships” and provides new tools and authorities for the Department of State to cooperate with the private sector, civil society, and foreign governments to combat human trafficking. It also promotes partnerships between foreign governments and non-governmental entities, and further authorizes the Secretary of State to establish an emergency fund to assist foreign governments in meeting unexpected, urgent needs related to human trafficking. Finally, it authorizes new cooperative funding mechanisms for technical assistance to foreign governments through “Child Protection Compacts” with selected eligible countries. S. 1301 does not increase authorization levels for this mechanism, but the Committee intends that the mechanism be used to partner with foreign governments toward transparent and measurable objectives.

Sec. 104. Protection and assistance for victims of trafficking

This section requires an annual Congressional briefing on State Department and United States Agency for International Development efforts to promote regional inter-governmental cooperation regarding victim protection and assistance, as well as criminal investigations and prosecutions.

Sec. 105. Minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking

This section amends the current minimum standards by which the Department of State measures efforts to eliminate human trafficking by including criteria relating to: (1) preventing human trafficking by nationals deployed in diplomatic missions alongside peacekeeping missions; (2) emphasizing the need for governments to have a transparent system for appropriately addressing a public official’s involvement in human trafficking; (3) increasing inter-governmental cooperation and partnerships on a bilateral, multilateral, or regional basis, and with civil society; and (4) regulating foreign labor recruiters and criminalizing fraudulent recruiting.

Sec. 106. Best practices in trafficking in persons eradication

This section codifies the State Department’s established practice of submitting a comprehensive annual report to Congress on governmental efforts to fight human trafficking, also known as the Trafficking in Persons Report. The Committee intends that the Department continue its practice of including the United States in the annual report. This section also codifies the State Department’s existing practice of publishing on its website the rationale for any exercise of waiver authority under the category of “Countries on the Special Watch List for 2 Consecutive Years.” This section also recommends consistency in the Department’s inclusion of a section in the annual report highlighting exemplary governments and practices in the eradication of human trafficking.

This section also creates a new mechanism whereby countries selected for the “Tier 2” category that have made exemplary progress within this category will be mentioned as such. Wide disparity exists between the achievements of governments selected for Tier 2, and this section provides the Department of State with tools to mention high performing Tier 2 countries, not simply those whose efforts have been notably weak and, consequently, selected for “Tier 2 Watch List.” While such governments progress may not merit inclusion in the “Tier 1” category, the Committee believes it may be beneficial to recognize strong “Tier 2” governments in order to encourage them to continue investing in successful anti-trafficking efforts.

Lastly, this section removes the authorization for the Secretary to produce and publish “interim reports” in order to reduce unnecessary or inefficient reporting.

Sec. 107. Protections for domestic workers and other non-immigrants

This section calls for the creation of an informative video for consular waiting rooms in countries with a high concentration of non-immigrant visa applications in addition to already existing pamphlets. While innovative implementation of this section is welcome, the requirement only applies to consular waiting rooms that currently have video capabilities and could be satisfied with a basic video with voiceovers dubbed in the appropriate language.

Sec. 108. Prevention of child trafficking through child marriage

This section requires the Secretary of State, in consultation with the Administrator of the United States Agency for International Development and relevant offices and bureaus, to formulate and distribute guidance to prevent child marriage and promote the empowerment of girls at risk of child marriage in developing countries. It also requires the annual State Department Country Reports on Human Rights Practices to include reporting on child marriage.

Sec. 109. Child soldiers

This section amends the prohibition on certain funds as established per Section 404(a) of the William Wilberforce Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2008 by adding Peacekeeping Operations funds to existing limitations on providing U.S. security assistance to countries known to use child soldiers. The provision includes a Presidential waiver and exceptions for efforts to professionalize forces and reduce the use of child soldiers within militaries in question.

Sec. 110. Presidential award for technological innovations in trafficking in persons eradication

This section adds “technological innovation” to the bases upon which the President may select an honoree for the “Presidential Award for Extraordinary Efforts to Combat Trafficking in Persons.”

Sec. 111. Contracting requirements

This section helps to prevent labor and sex trafficking by government contractors and subcontractors. It expands an existing provision under the TVPA to require the government to include a condition in every contract, grant, or cooperative agreement that authorizes the Federal department or agency to terminate a contract if the contractor or subcontractor engages in acts related to trafficking, has procured a commercial sex act, or uses forced labor in the performance of the grant, contract, or cooperative agreement.

The Committee recommends that all Federal departments or agencies apply these conditions when negotiating agreements with Non-Appropriated Funding Instrumentalities and Military Morale, Welfare, and Recreation Programs including the Army Air Force Exchange (AAFES) and Navy Exchange.

This section specifically authorizes contract termination in a number of instances, including if an employer destroys or removes an employee's immigration documents without the employee's consent, or fails to assist with repatriation of the employee after the end of employment. This provision is not intended to supplant existing requirements that place full responsibility for employee repatriation on the employer. It also authorizes contract termination if the employer places the recruited employee in a location or work placement different from that promised when the employee is recruited. This provision is intended to both prevent employers from misrepresenting location and occupation information during employee recruitment and to prevent employers from economically coercing recruited individuals to consent to a change in location or occupation after the employee has left his or her host country. This section also authorizes termination of a contract upon the charging of placement fees equal to or greater than the annual salary or half the employee's total anticipated pay, whichever is less. The Committee recognizes that other excessive or exorbitant placement fees may be grounds for contract termination and did not intend to relieve contractors from compliance with host country laws or contract representations and certifications. Finally, the section authorizes termination for any other activities that support or promote trafficking in persons, the procurement of commercial sex, or forced labor in order to give contracting officers greater latitude to terminate a contract for reasons not specifically listed in subsections A–D.

This section also requires contractors to create a compliance plan to prevent activities related to trafficking in persons, procurement of commercial sex, or forced labor, and to certify upon due diligence that neither the contractor nor any subcontractors are engaged in such activities. Upon the receipt of credible reports of noncompliance, the contracting officer is authorized, depending on the extent of the violation, to attempt to resolve the noncompliance, modify the existing agreement, decline to renew the agreement, or terminate the agreement. Credible reports include, but are not limited to, reports from a contracting officer representative, an inspector general, an auditor, or any other official source, which may include a victim of trafficking.

Sec. 112. Department of Defense reporting of trafficking in persons claims and violations

This section requires the Department of Defense to make public information on all known trafficking cases through the annual report to Congress of the Interagency Task Force to Monitor and Combat Trafficking.

TITLE II—COMBATING TRAFFICKING IN PERSONS IN THE UNITED STATES

Subtitle A—Penalties Against Traffickers and Other Crimes

Sec. 201. Criminal trafficking offenses

This section modifies criminal law provisions that address trafficking in persons. First, under the Racketeer Influenced Corrupt Organizations Act (18 U.S.C. §1961), the definition of a “racketeering activity” is expanded to include fraud in foreign labor contracting, pursuant to 18 U.S.C. §1351.

Second, child exploitation laws under 18 U.S.C. §2423 are strengthened to hold criminally liable those U.S. citizens and lawful permanent residents residing outside of the United States who engage in illicit sexual conduct with a minor. Current law only reaches U.S. citizens and lawful permanent residents who travel abroad in foreign commerce.

Third, a new misdemeanor provision is added as 18 U.S.C. §1597, which criminalizes the unlawful confiscation or destruction of a person’s immigration documents in order to maintain or restrict the labor or services of that person. An analogous felony is found in 18 U.S.C. §1592, which addresses similar conduct committed in the course of violating or with intent to violate specified human trafficking crimes.

Sec. 202. Civil remedies, clarifying definition

This section expands civil remedies available to minor victims under 18 U.S.C. §2255. Current law allows minor victims to file suit for damages if the minor was a victim of a sexual abuse or exploitation crime as defined in chapters 109A and 110 of Title 18. The amended section allows minors who were victims of a severe form of trafficking in persons to recover civil damages under this section. It also increases the civil statute of limitations for all minors who file suit under 18 U.S.C. §2255 from six years to ten years. Additionally, the existing criminal law definition of “abuse or threatened abuse of law or legal process” from 18 U.S.C. §§1589 and 1591 is added to the general definitions of the Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000.

Subtitle B—Ensuring Availability of Possible Witnesses and Informants

Sec. 211. Protections for threatened family members of trafficking victims

This section modestly augments the list of eligible relatives who may file as a derivative beneficiary of a “T” visa holder. The section would allow children of certain derivative family members to apply to join the trafficking victim in the United States, but only if those children face a present danger of retaliation in their home country by the traffickers. Children of derivative family members who do not face retaliation would not be eligible.

Sec. 212. Encouraging victims of fraud in foreign labor contracting to assist law enforcement

This section adds “fraud in foreign labor contracting,” as defined by 18 U.S.C. § 1351, to the list of crimes of which victims may be eligible to apply for a “U” visa. (See INA § 101(a)(15)(U); 8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(15)(U). “U” visa recipients must show that they are victims of a qualifying criminal activity, have suffered substantial physical or mental abuse as a result of that crime, and are willing to assist law enforcement or other government officials in the investigation or prosecution of the crime. “U” visa recipients are not eligible for any Federal benefits. Fraud in foreign labor contracting is difficult to prosecute because victims are often reluctant to come forward and report the crime for fear of being deported. Including this crime as a qualifying criminal activity for a “U” visa will encourage greater reporting and prosecution of this offense.

Subtitle C—Ensuring Inter-Agency Coordination and Expanded Reporting

Sec. 221. Reporting requirements by the Attorney General

Under current law, the Attorney General is required to submit an annual report to Congress detailing efforts by Federal agencies to implement the Trafficking Victims Protection Act. In order to more accurately determine the effectiveness of those efforts, this section requires the Attorney General to also report on how efficiently “T” and “U” visas are processed, efforts to train State, Tribal, and local law enforcement on investigating human trafficking crimes, and how Federal programs meet the needs of minor victims of trafficking who are U.S. citizens or lawful permanent residents.

Sec. 222. Reporting requirements by the Secretary of Labor

TVPPRA 2005 required the Department of Labor to monitor and make efforts to combat forced and child labor in foreign countries, including making public a list of foreign goods produced by forced or child labor. This section requires the Secretary of Labor to provide that list to Congress biannually.

Sec. 223. Information sharing to combat child labor and slave labor

In order to assist the Department of Labor in compiling the list of goods produced by forced or child labor referenced in section 223 (above), this section directs the Department of State to provide relevant information to the Department of Labor.

Sec. 224. Government training efforts to include the Department of Labor

This section expands the number of agencies required to be trained in indentifying victims of a severe form of trafficking to include certain personnel from the Department of Labor.

Sec. 225. GAO report on the use of foreign labor contractors

To ensure that foreign workers contracted to work in or for the United States do not suffer abuses or are not fraudulently recruited by third-party brokers or subcontractors, this section directs the GAO to issue a report investigating whether any such foreign workers were subjected to abuse or trafficking. The report would analyze the current contracting system and make recommendations to Federal agencies to rectify any known abuses.

Sec. 226. Oversight of Department of Justice Grant Program

This section adds a number of audits and oversight requirements on grants awarded by the Department of Justice (DOJ). It adds caps on administrative expenses and matching requirements for DOJ grants. It limits conference expenditures and prohibits lobbying from being conducted with government funds, among other measures.

Subtitle D—Enhancing State and Local Efforts to Combat Trafficking in Persons

Sec. 231. Assistance for domestic minor sex trafficking victims

This section replaces a services grant program with a block grant program administered by the Department of Justice to four localities that have demonstrated a comprehensive approach in addressing sex trafficking of minors, including cooperation between law enforcement and social service providers. The localities may distribute the grants to entities that provide, among other things, residential care, emergency social services, and mental health counseling. The authorized appropriations do not change. Additionally, this section saves $5,000,000 by not reauthorizing a pilot program under the Department of Health and Human Services.

Sec. 232. Expanding local law enforcement grants for investigations and prosecutions of sex trafficking

Under current law, 42 U.S.C. § 14044c authorizes the Attorney General to make grants to State and local law enforcement agencies to provide training and resources to investigate trafficking in persons. This section requires the provision to focus on all forms of severe human trafficking. In an effort to attack the demand side of sex trafficking, it also encourages efforts to prosecute individuals who purchase commercial sex acts from minors, along with the traffickers. This section also includes a mandate for GAO to evaluate the program and reduces authorization levels by $10,000,000.

Sec. 233. Model state law protection for child trafficking victims and survivors

This section amends Section 225(b) of the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2008 to encourage the Attorney General to develop model code language for States that would treat children exploited through prostitution as victims, not criminals.

TITLE III—AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS

Sec. 301. Adjust authorization levels of provision of the Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000

This section details the changes to the authorization of appropriations that were originally enacted by the Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000. Overall, S. 1301 reduces authorization levels by more than $60 million annually compared to the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2008. In this section, the authorization levels for the Departments of State, Homeland Secuity, and Labor, as well as the Federal Bureau of Investigation, have been reduced. At the same time, authorization of appropriations for victim benefits and services administered by the Department of Health and Human Services and by the Department of Justice are increased by $3,000,000 and $5,000,000 respectively. Authorizations for additional personnel and reception expenses have been removed.

Sec. 302. Adjust authorization levels of provisions of the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2005

The appropriations listed in this section reduce previously authorized levels of funding for conferences and a pilot program of the U.S. Agency for International Development.

TITLE IV—UNACCOMPANIED ALIEN CHILDREN

Sec. 401. Appropriate custodial settings for unaccompanied minors who reach the age of majority while in Federal custody

This section modifies Section 235(c)(2) of the TVPRA 2008 to address the situation of unaccompanied minors in the custody of the Office of Refugee Resettlement who reach the age of 18 prior to resolution of their immigration case. Such persons are typically transferred to adult immigration detention under the authority of U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE). This section requires the Secretary to consider placement of the individual in the least restrictive setting available after taking into consideration the individual's danger to self, danger to the community, and risk of flight. The Secretary would retain discretion to place an immigrant in a detention facility if deemed necessary for public safety.

Sec. 402. Appointment of child advocates for unaccompanied minors

This section would expand the successful Child Advocate program that was established as a pilot program in 2003. Child Advocates are independent actors who assist trafficking victims and other vulnerable immigrant children by ensuring immediate and long-term welfare and access to protection, consistent with the child's best interests. This section would expand the current Child Advocate program from its current operations (a program in Chicago, IL, and limited offerings in Harlingen, TX) to three additional locations within the next two years, with locations selected based on the greatest need. Within four years, the program can be expanded to an additional three sites. This section requires reporting to Congress by the Secretary of Health and Human Services and a GAO study on the effectiveness of the Child Advocate program. This section authorizes $1,000,000 per year for each of the first two years of the reauthorization and $2,000,000 for each of years three and four of the reauthorization. To ensure effective management of Federal funds, this section imposes a cap of 10% on administrative expenses and also requires the Child Advocate program to match the Federal funds received at a rate of 25%.

Sec. 403. Access to Federal foster care and unaccompanied refugee minor protections for certain U visa recipients

Under current law, when an unaccompanied immigrant minor who was also a victim of crime is awarded a "U" visa, that minor loses eligibility for certain benefits available to children who are considered unaccompanied minors under law. No benefits attach to “U” visa status. This section would make “U” visa recipients who are minors and who were formerly considered unaccompanied minors eligible for Federal foster care and certain benefits available to refugee minors. This provision would not apply to all “U” visa recipients who happen to be minors, but only to the small number of minor victims who were formerly deemed unaccompanied under law.

Sec. 404. Study of the effectiveness of border screenings under section 235(a)(4) of the William Wilberforce Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2008

This section requires GAO to conduct a study on the implementation of provisions of TVPRA 2008 with regard to Department of Homeland Security (DHS) screening of children. For example, GAO will assess whether DHS personnel are adequately screening children to determine whether they may be victims of trafficking or persecution. GAO will also assess whether children are properly cared for while in the custody of the DHS and repatriated in an appropriate manner.

IV. CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE

The cost estimate provided by the Congressional Budget Office pursuant to section 402 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 was not available for inclusion in this report. The estimate will be printed in either a supplemental report or the Congressional Record when it is available.

V. REGULATORY IMPACT EVALUATION

In compliance with rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Committee finds that no significant regulatory impact will result from the enactment of S. 1301.

VI. CONCLUSION

Much progress has been made since the Trafficking Victims Protection Act was signed into law in 2000 to combat the scourge of human trafficking in the United States and around the world. Nonetheless, millions of people worldwide continue to be victimized by this modern form of slavery. The Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2011 reaffirms our country’s commitment to fight modern day slavery and exploitation. It continues and strengthens programs that are working well and gives law enforcement additional tools to target trafficking. It also reduces authorization levels and builds in accountability measures to ensure that scarce Federal funds are being well spent. The Committee believes that Congress should come together, as it has done several times before with overwhelming support, to make progress in the fight against trafficking and pass this important legislation.

VII. ADDITIONAL AND MINORITY VIEWS

ADDITIONAL VIEWS FROM SENATOR GRASSLEY

Federal government efforts to combat human trafficking are worthy and appropriate. Human trafficking is a terrible crime and those who commit this crime must be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. In addressing this topic, Congress passed and President Clinton signed into law the Trafficking Victims Protection Act (TVPA) in 2000. The original TVPA, and the subsequent reauthorizations, have all recognized the horrific nature of these crimes and have received significant bi-partisan support. In this vein, I worked hard to negotiate a bi-partisan compromise with the Chairman to ensure that this important law is reauthorized. The final version of S. 1301 contains a number of changes that I requested and believe strengthen the program while recognizing the difficult financial times the Country faces. These changes help to reduce unnecessary and duplicative expenditures, consolidate funding streams to mirror actual appropriations, and ensure that there is accountability and oversight of grant recipients. Together, these changes will help to ensure the sustainability of funding for prevention of human trafficking.

While I support the final version of the bill, I have some concerns with the interpretations of it as articulated by the Committee report. These additional views represent my understanding of the final compromise reached between the Chairman and myself and offer further details on important provisions I worked to include as part of the final compromise.

Concerns with human trafficking statistics

More than ten years after the passage of TVPA, there is still no reliable information about the scope of this criminal activity. In an audit released in 2006, the Government Accountability Office (GAO) stated, “The U.S. government has not yet established an effective mechanism for estimating the number of victims or for conducting ongoing analysis of trafficking related data that resides within various government agencies.”<sup>1</sup> In the five years since then, there has been no improvement in the government’s ability to quantify the data related to this crime, in particular the number of victims, both in the United States and around the world. Only with valid figures—or at least evidence-based estimates—can we be sure that the funds spent on the fight against trafficking are having the impact they are intended to have.

According to the latest Department of Justice (DOJ) figures available to the Committee, there were only about 2000 victims discovered in the United States from Fiscal Year 2001 to 2009.<sup>2</sup> Figures for FY 2010 are not available because DOJ has still not delivered the statutorily mandated report on efforts to combat trafficking that was due to Congress in May of 2011. Likewise, according to the State Department's annual Trafficking in Persons report, there were only 33,000 victims identified around the world last year.<sup>3</sup> These figures contrast sharply with estimates provided in the past by the Executive Branch and frequently cited by various interest groups and the media such as 14,500 to 17,000 thousand in the United States each year and 600,000 to 800,000 around the globe each year. As the GAO put it in 2006, "There is significant discrepancy between the number of estimated victims and the number of observed victims . . ."<sup>4</sup>

The State Department acknowledged this fact itself in its 2010 Trafficking in Persons Report, where it reported that only 0.4 percent of estimated victims had been identified.<sup>5</sup> While it is reasonable to assume that because of the underground nature of trafficking, many victims are kept hidden from authorities and are difficult to find and rescue, at the same time, the worldwide focus on trafficking for more than 10 years should have led to better identification of victims by now. In particular, the figure for United States victims identified and rescued should be quite high. But, taking the lower end of the estimate of victims in the United States, it is simply not credible that, given the amount of federal resources devoted to the problem, only 2,000 of 150,000 victims, or slightly more than 1 percent, have been found in the last 11 years. Either the government is doing an unconscionably poor job of finding victims or there are not that many total victims in the first place. It is my hope, that this reauthorization will lead to better reporting on the true number of victims and will help jumpstart more accurate reporting on human trafficking statistics to Congress and the American people. At the least, DOJ should be on notice going forward that continuing to turn in reports to Congress months late is unacceptable, especially when Congress is attempting to reauthorize important legislation impacting their operations.

Continued presence

First, it must be clear that this bill makes no changes to the law pertaining to Continued Presence (CP). The law, found in 22 U.S.C. § 7105(c)(3)(A)(i), provides: "[i]f a Federal law enforcement official files an application stating that an alien is a victim of a severe form of trafficking and may be a potential witness to such trafficking, the Secretary of Homeland Security may permit the alien to remain in the United States to facilitate the investigation and prosecution of those responsible for such crime." Any interpretation articulated in the Committee Report cannot affect the current status of the CP law or how it is administered. And, because this leg-isolation in no way alters the current statutory standard for CP, neither the Executive Branch, nor the courts, should view opinions contained in this report as changing the legal standard in any way.

Second, the Committee Report also discusses DHS guidelines describing when CP should be used. It declares that “[t]his decline [in the number of individuals receiving CP] is troubling, especially in light of the benefits to law enforcement that accrue through CP.” The report concludes its discussion of CP by stating: “The Committee will closely monitor how CP requests are handled in the future and whether the low number of CP grants can be attributed to policy, practice, or some other reason.” It appears that these statements are meant to imply that law enforcement and prosecutors do not know how to do their jobs and that Congress and advocates know better. I disagree with this implication.

As the DHS guidelines, relied upon by the report, make clear: “CP is an important tool for federal, state, and local law enforcement in their investigation of human trafficking-related crimes.”<sup>6</sup> Consequently, whether, when, and how often to use CP is a matter for law enforcement and prosecutors to determine on a case-by-case basis, using their expertise. The Committee has not been presented with any evidence that law enforcement officers and prosecutors are not properly enforcing trafficking laws. Nor has the Committee been presented with any evidence that they are not appropriately utilizing CP.

Indeed, on October 3, 2011, the Committee’s majority staff organized a briefing by five local law enforcement officials on the use of U-Visas (for victims of crime), T-Visas (for victims of trafficking) and Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) self-petitions. The declared purpose of the briefing was to provide useful background information to staff as the Committee considered the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act (S. 1301) and the VAWA Reauthorization. The law enforcement officials were described by the majority staff as having significant experience working to fight domestic violence, sexual violence, and trafficking in their communities, and training other law enforcement officers on the use of U visas as a law enforcement tool. During that briefing, none of the officers indicated that there were any problems with the standard for requesting CP or the frequency in which CP requests are made.

Generally speaking, career law enforcement officers and prosecutors know how to do their jobs and do not, as a general matter, need to be told how to fight crime. To date, there has been no evidence presented to suggest that career law enforcement officers and prosecutors are failing to utilize CP as a crime fighting tool.

In the end, the standard for CP is set forth in 22 U.S.C. § 7105(c)(3)(A)(i). The TVPRA does not change that standard. And, interpretations contained in this report cannot and do not change that standard.

Funding provisions of TVPA

Chief among the key provisions of the TVPA has been the authorizations that provide funding to many different programs to combat human trafficking. These provisions have previously authorized funding to the Department of Justice, Department of State, Department of Homeland Security, Department of Labor, Department of Health and Human Services, and the Executive Office of the President. The past versions of TVPA had created approximately twenty-six separate budgetary line items that authorized $191.5 million annually. Because funding for TVPA programs was stretched across so many different accounts, there has been significant duplication, overlap, and unnecessary expenditures under TVPA funded programs.

For example, the 2005 TVPA Reauthorization included a $30 million funding stream for the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) to investigate trafficking in persons.<sup>7</sup> This funding was included to specifically recognize the importance of investigating trafficking in person's cases. While I agree with the goal of this additional funding, to continue this additional authorization, on top of the nearly $7.8 billion the FBI received in Fiscal Year 2011, is duplicative. Further, this provision has never been funded by the appropriators. In fact, the Fiscal Year 2012 Senate Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies Appropriations specifically included language in the Fiscal Year 2012 Committee Report that states, "Within funds provided, the Committee expects the FBI to investigate severe forms of trafficking in persons as authorized by [the TVPA]." This statement essentially indicates that the appropriations staff view the duty to investigate severe forms of trafficking in persons as part of the inherent duty of the FBI that does not require specific, additional funding. Given the unprecedented fiscal situation the federal government faces, along with traditional principles of good government, the compromise version of S. 1301 eliminates the specific line item for additional funds for the FBI.

Following the same principles of good government, and continuing to recognize the extraordinary fiscal times the federal government faces, the final compromise of S. 1301 that I supported reduces the overall funding levels for TVPA programs, from $191.5 million per year to approximately $130 million per year. To achieve this significant reduction, significant time and resources were paid to reviewing each of the programs previously authorized and funded to determine where duplication, overlap, waste, and unnecessary expenditures existed. This review highlighted ten funding streams that were not reauthorized, including the special FBI funding previously discussed. This includes eliminating "reception" expenses at the State Department, two pilot programs that were never funded, two overlapping studies at the Justice Department, funding for research and foreign assistance in the Executive Office of the President that is duplicative and overlaps with State Department funding, and eliminating a local grant program at HHS. Further, the final compromise also significantly reduces, but does not eliminate, expenditures for DHS and the State Department.

While cutting budgets is often difficult given the institutional opposition to eliminating programs, making tough choices in these programs was necessary. Those difficult choices allowed us to increase funding to victims of severe forms of trafficking by increasing funding to the Department of Justice’s victims assistance programs. Taken together, the final compromise strikes the right balance in eliminating duplicative and unappropriated programs while funding programs that are worthy—such as assistance to victims of severe forms of trafficking.

Accountability and transparency measures

Perhaps the most important part of the final compromise of S. 1301 is the inclusion of a strong accountability package to ensure that taxpayer dollars are not subject to fraud, waste, and abuse. By reducing or eliminating fraud, waste, and abuse, we ensure that victims are receiving all of the services and assistance that our authorizations intend. This accountability package, located in section 226, contains a number of different measures that will help eliminate the past abuses of TVPA grant programs.

At the hearing in September, I questioned the Principal Deputy Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Justice Programs—one of two offices that provides grant funding under TVPA programs. During that questioning, I discussed how in the past four years, the Inspector General at the Justice Department has audited seven individual grant recipients under the TVPA. Each of those seven audits contained significant irregularities including unallowable costs, unauthorized expenditures, poor accounting and financial records, failure of programs to meet stated goals, and failure to provide matching funds identified in grant applications. The Inspector General found “systemic weaknesses in [OJP’s] grant implementation,” including “weaknesses in the areas of the established goals and accomplishments for grantees, grant reporting, fund drawdowns, local matching funds, expenditures, indirect costs, and monitoring of subrecipients.”<sup>8</sup> In one instance, a grantee was given nearly $2 million for human trafficking assistance, and the Inspector General questioned nearly $900,000, plus an additional $174,000 in fringe benefits.<sup>9</sup> The Principal Deputy Assistant Attorney General agreed with my analysis that this grant was an example of a spectacular failure on the part of the government to oversee taxpayer dollars.<sup>10</sup> Unfortunately, I was then told what I have been told for years, that the Justice Department has fixed this problem and that it won’t happen again.

Despite repeated assurances that the Justice Department is doing more now than it has in the past to prevent fraud, waste, and abuse of taxpayer dollars, the song remains the same. Grant recipients continue to commit major program violations and yet continue to receive taxpayer dollars year after year. For example, in a January 2008 audit report, the OIG questioned “all expenditures in salaries ($902,122) and in fringe benefits ($174,479) due to the lack of adequate supporting documentation.”<sup>11</sup> The OIG also questioned, “$70,580 for . . . unsupported matching contributions for salary and fringe benefits,” as well as “$63,009 in expenditures that exceeded the maximum daily rate [for pro bono legal service matching requirements].”<sup>12</sup> Another January 2008 audit of a law enforcement task force found “that the grantee generally complied with grant requirements”, but the OIG also “found that an unauthorized position was charged to the grant,” and that the grantee “maintained an accounting system and financial records that did not always account for grant-related expenditures and revenue.”<sup>13</sup> A March 2008 grant audit of a New York-based recipient also found significant weaknesses in grant expenditures. For example, the OIG found that the grantee was “not achieving the objectives pertaining to social services and legal services because it was not serving 100 victims, and did not obtain 80 T-visas for victims on trafficking identified during the project period as budgeted.”<sup>14</sup> The OIG also found weaknesses in how the grantee determined client eligibility for services; identified the number of clients served; failed to provide supporting documentation for housing costs; paying in full for contracts for housing, medical, and legal services for victims despite serving fewer victims than contracted, and complied with the matching requirements. In all, the OIG questioned nearly $500,000 of the original $2 million grant.<sup>15</sup> In addition to these individual audits, the Inspector General has questioned the number of victims that the Office of Justice Program’s anti-trafficking efforts have served.<sup>16</sup> That same audit, found “systematic weaknesses in [OJP’s] grant implementation” citing the need for the Office of Victims of Crime (OVC) and the Bureau of Justice Assistance (BJA) to take “additional actions to ensure that these weaknesses are addressed by all OVC service providers and BJS [Bureau of Justice Statistics] task forces, not just the subjects of the individual audits we conducted.” Thus, not only has the OIG questioned the administration of TVPA grants by individual grant recipients, the OIG has questioned the actual administration of the grant programs both by BJA and OVW.

The GAO has also issued two separate reports criticizing BJA and the entire U.S. Government effort to coordinate programs under TVPA.<sup>17</sup> These audits and evaluations show systemic problems that the OIG and GAO has found in other grant programs administered by OJP and other Justice components. In fact, grant management has been on the OIG’s annual list of major management challenges for DOJ each year for the last ten years. Simply put, these audits are not an isolated incident and appear to be the rule, not the exception. Sadly, given the small sample of actual grantees audited on an annual basis, an accurate total of taxpayer dollars lost to fraud, waste, abuse, or mismanagement of grant programs cannot be calculated.

To combat these repeated negative audit findings, I prepared a significant accountability package that includes a number of measures to ensure that grants are actually audited and those who mismanage taxpayer dollars are held accountable. The final compromise version of S. 1301 includes the following accountability measures: (1) requires an annual audit of 10% of all grantees by the Inspector General, (2) requires a two-year exclusion for any grantee found to have an unresolved audit finding for more than six months, (3) requires the Attorney General to prioritize grants to grantees that do not have a negative audit finding for the last three fiscal years, (4) requires the Attorney General to reimburse the federal treasury if a barred grantee is awarded funds, then seek to recoup funds from the erroneous award to the grantee, (5) requires matching funds from grantees—including a limitation on in-kind contributions, (6) prohibits the Attorney General from awarding grants to any non-profit organization that holds money offshore for the purpose of avoiding unrelated business income tax (UBIT), (7) caps administrative expenses, (8) requires the Deputy Attorney General or Assistant Attorney General to pre-approve conference expenditures and annually report to Congress, (9) prohibits grantees from using taxpayer dollars to lobby for additional taxpayer funds, and (10) requires the Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Justice Programs to annually certify to Congress compliance with the mandatory exclusions and reimbursements contained in the bill.

These requirements are a commonsense proposal to ensure a baseline of accountability for federal grantees receiving funds under the TVPA. They are a response to problems that have arisen in the TVPA administered grant program, in addition to others—including reentry programs funded under the Second Chance Act, victims and law enforcement grants under the Violence Against Women Act, and many other grants administered by the OJP, the OVW, and the Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS). While the Committee Report argues that these accountability provisions are “specifically tailored to the needs and contours of the grant programs authorized under the TVPA”, it is my belief that given the many similarities and overlapping problems with grants administered by DOJ, these accountability provisions cross programmatic boundaries and would establish a minimum baseline of accountability across all DOJ administered grant programs. Given the current fiscal crisis the federal government faces, and the continued findings of the OIG outlining fraud, waste, abuse, and mismanagement of DOJ administered grant programs, it is imperative that the Judiciary Committee undertake a comprehensive effort to include these accountability measures in some form to all reauthorizations of grant programs going forward.

Conclusion

Human trafficking is a horrific crime that requires the attention of the federal government and those who commit this terrible crime should be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. The final Committee reported version of S. 1301 represents a step forward for victims and American taxpayers. By reexamining the existing funding streams and determining where savings could be made, the bill was able to cut spending while simultaneously increase funding for victims. Additionally, by adding a significant accountability package, this bill signals to grant recipients that they too need to increase their efforts to better manage federal government resources in order to serve victims in a more efficient manner.

CHARLES E. GRASSLEY.

MINORITY VIEWS FROM SENATORS KYL, SESSIONS, LEE AND COBURN

Since passage of the Trafficking Victims Protection Act (TVPA) in 2000, Congress has regularly reauthorized and expanded programs to combat human trafficking. Although funding to combat this tragic crime has increased exponentially over the last decade, Congress has failed to provide the necessary oversight to ensure this money is being spent efficiently and effectively. As a direct result of this failure, there is now a growing bureaucracy of anti-trafficking programs that is wasteful, mismanaged, and duplicative. S. 1301, the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act of 2011 (TVPRA), takes admirable steps to curb the amount of spending on anti-trafficking programs in light of the current economic climate; nevertheless, this legislation fails to implement necessary changes in the structure and design of these programs.

The amount of money authorized to combat human trafficking increased from $31.8 million in 2001 to $185.5 million in 2010. At the same time, the number of agencies and programs charged with combating trafficking rose dramatically: eight federal agencies now receive funding under the TVPA,<sup>1</sup> as well as countless programs, funds, and task forces. Unfortunately, Congress continues to neglect its duty to provide proper oversight of these various agencies and programs, and as a result a significant amount of the funding provided under the TVPA is wasted or mismanaged. Even worse, some of the agencies receiving this funding have difficulty merely keeping a proper account of their funds. While S. 1301 takes some initial, positive steps in reining in the waste and mismanagement of the various anti-trafficking programs by reducing their authorizations or eliminating programs that have not been appropriated in the past, the bill as currently written does not ensure we are effectively spending each dollar.

Imbalance between domestic and international program funding

The protection of American citizens from human trafficking, and the prosecution of those who attempt to engage in such trafficking in the United States, was the foremost concern of the initial Trafficking Victims Protection Act. However, the TVPA has evolved over time, and the protection of American citizens is no longer the central focus of the government's anti-trafficking efforts. Instead, U.S. Government programs focus on combating international trafficking and increasing public awareness in foreign countries. In FY2010, domestic anti-trafficking programs received only $24.2 million while international programs received more than $85 million; as a result, international programs accounted for 78% of the U.S. Government's TIP funding.<sup>2</sup> This gap in funding between domestic and international programs has been consistent over time—over the last three years, Congress appropriated $244.9 million to combat international trafficking while only appropriating $67 million to combat domestic trafficking.<sup>3</sup>

Furthermore, there is even confusion as to whether any funds provided under the TVPA may be used to supply direct services to U.S. citizen victims. The Attorney General's Annual Report to Congress and Assessment of U.S. Government Activities to Combat Trafficking in Persons issued on July 2010 states: "The funds provided under the TVPA by the federal government for direct services to victims are dedicated to assist non-U.S. citizen victims and may not be used to assist U.S. citizen victims."<sup>4</sup> In a December 2010 report, the Congressional Research Service noted this lack of clarity, stating: "There is confusion over whether U.S. citizens, as well as noncitizens, are eligible for services under all the anti-trafficking grant programs, and whether Congress has provided funding for programs that target U.S. citizen and LPR (lawful permanent resident) victims." Congress should alleviate this confusion and ensure assistance is being provided to U.S. citizens before providing grants to foreign countries; unfortunately, S. 1301 fails to do so. S. 1301 does not re-direct any funding from international programs to domestic programs, nor does it clarify that U.S. citizen victims may be the recipients of direct services under the TVPA. As a result, the TVPRA continues to disadvantage American citizens in favor of foreign governments.

Waste and duplication in international anti-trafficking programs

The TVPA's focus on international programs is especially problematic in view of these programs' deficiencies. For instance, one of the leading international anti-trafficking programs is the Office to Monitor and Combat Trafficking in Persons (G/TIP), an agency within the Department of State—in Fiscal Year 2010, G/TIP provided more than $33 million for anti-trafficking programs.<sup>5</sup> At the same time, the 2011 Department of State Report to the Senate Appropriations Committee included a startling admission: only 67% of all projects reporting to G/TIP could provide an accurate and detailed accounting of their funding and the proportion of said funding that directly assisted victims of trafficking crimes.<sup>6</sup> This figure becomes even more troubling in view of some of the other programs funded by the Department of State. For instance, the Economic Support Fund allocated $25.3 million for anti-trafficking purposes, but could only account for $18.6 million, while the Assistance for Europe, Eurasia, and Central Asia (AEECA) fund could only account for $6.22 out of the $9.14 million it had allocated for trafficking.<sup>7</sup>

In addition to the funds that simply cannot be accounted for, many of the grants awarded by the State Department appear to be duplicative. For instance, G/TIP awarded $500,000 to Catholic Relief Services and $400,000 to the International Organization for Migration, both for lobbying government officials in Chad to draft laws related to trafficking.<sup>8</sup> G/TIP also awarded a $178,500 grant to the International Organization for Migration to operate a case management database and another $340,000 grant to the same organization to analyze and disseminate the information in the database.<sup>9</sup>

Simply put, waste and duplication among international grants and among various agencies means the funds we are dedicating to this cause are not effectively combating the problems at hand. As the Government Accountability Office noted in its most recent report on human trafficking, “the U.S. government has not developed a coordinated strategy for combating trafficking abroad or developed a way to gauge results and target its overall assistance . . . thus preventing the U.S. government from determining the effectiveness of its efforts or adjusting its assistance to better meet needs.”<sup>10</sup> Yet despite these troubling reports and statistics, S. 1301 makes no provision for increased accountability within G/TIP or any other State Department program, allowing this lack of coordination and accountability to continue unchecked. Further, S. 1301 will likely only exacerbate this problem by expanding the role of regional bureaus of the State Department without providing appropriate safeguards to ensure these bureaus are keeping track of their funding and not duplicating efforts.

Mismanagement of domestic trafficking grants

Funds allocated to fighting international human trafficking are not the only ones being mismanaged. Between April 2007 and March 2008, the DOJ Inspector General randomly audited seven trafficking grants awarded by the Justice Department and found “significant deficiencies” with all of them.<sup>11</sup> There are also performance problems with the task forces the Department of Justice funds around the country that coordinate state and local law enforcement and federal agencies' efforts to combat trafficking. Over a four-year period there were at least 45 federally-funded task forces throughout the United States. Of the 42 task forces that reported one instance of human trafficking or more, 24 of those task forces did not provide individual-level information for at least one suspect or victim to the Department of Justice, indicating a failure of record-keeping.<sup>12</sup> As a result, these 24 task forces were designated "low data quality task forces" by the Office of Justice Programs, and their records were excluded from statistical reports. Thus, these tasks forces were a waste of federal resources.

S. 1301 takes some steps to alleviate these problems by including eleven accountability measures for grants awarded by the Department of Justice. However, these accountability provisions do not apply to the grants awarded by other departments and agencies. Since the authorizations for the Department of Justice in S. 1301 only account for twenty-five percent of the total authorizations, the vast majority of the funds are not affected by these provisions.

Other problematic provisions of the TVPRA

Several other problematic provisions of the TVPA remain unaddressed by S. 1301. First, there is evidence that the Department of Health and Human Services is promoting a pro-abortion agenda through its anti-trafficking grant program. A recent announcement for 2011 grant requests under the National Human Trafficking Victim Assistance Program states: "preference will be given to grantees . . . that will offer all victims referral to medical providers who can provide or refer for provision of treatment for sexually transmitted infections, family planning services and the full range of legally permissible gynecological and obstetric care. . ." <sup>13</sup> "Family planning services and the full range of legally permissible gynecological and obstetric care" means the grantees must be willing to refer victims to medical providers who provide abortion services. Federal agencies should not be allowed to discriminate against programs that oppose abortion and refuse to offer referrals to abortion services, yet S. 1301 takes no steps to forbid this discrimination.

Another concern stems from the amount of anti-trafficking funding that is spent on "public awareness" programs rather than victims' services, prosecutions, or prevention. While these programs may be helpful in preventing future human trafficking, there is no streamlined public awareness model being implemented around the world, which leads to higher costs and uncertainty about its effectiveness. Of the 272 grants awarded by the State Department in 2010, totaling over $108.7 million, more than one-third of them had at least a component for raising awareness of trafficking. There were 50 different grants, totaling $8.25 million, for public awareness in the United States alone.<sup>14</sup> Although the Department of Justice's Office of Justice Programs limits its grantees' public awareness expenditures to 5% of the total grant, no other agency or program limits their grantees in this manner. Too much money is being spent on public awareness given the lack of demonstrable results proving this effort reduces human trafficking. These funds should instead be spent on victims' services and prosecutions of perpetrators of these crimes; once again, S. 1301 does nothing to address this concern.

Conclusion

While S. 1301 includes some improvements over previous TVPA reauthorizations, significant work remains. As mentioned previously, S. 1301 introduces an eleven-point accountability test for all Department of Justice anti-trafficking grantees; however, it fails to extend this test to any other agency's grantees. This accountability is particularly necessary for international grants under the Department of State, as their grants are especially prone to a lack of accountability.

Further, S. 1301 reduces authorizations for anti-trafficking programs to $130 million, which is $10 million below the amount appropriated in FY2010. While this reduction is admirable, it simply does not go far enough in light of the economic climate and our national debt. The federal government could spend far less on anti-trafficking programs, while simultaneously achieving greater success, simply by eliminating wasteful and duplicative programs. Finally, as the majority notes in its views, additional funding to combat human trafficking is being provided to these departments and agencies through other appropriations bills; thus, reducing authorizations in this bill will likely result in departments and agencies directing their energies to seeking additional funds from other sources rather than forcing them to better manage the funds they receive.

Our national debt now exceeds $14 trillion; therefore, we must ensure that our tax dollars are responsibly spent even on the most important areas. Taxpayers expect us to work together to reduce wasteful and unnecessary spending and be more vigilant about how we spend public funds. Before we pass the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act, Congress must ensure our resources are actually combating human trafficking and not being wasted or mismanaged. Unfortunately, the bill as currently written fails to address these issues. Absent significant amendments to correct the problems highlighted, the Senate should reject S. 1301 and work towards crafting a more effective and efficient Trafficking Victims Protection Act.

MINORITY VIEWS FROM SENATORS CORNYN AND KYL

Every year, an estimated 100,000 American juveniles are victimized through domestic child prostitution.<sup>1</sup> In addressing the problem of human trafficking, the sex trafficking of children in the United States should be the government's first priority. S. 1301, however, contains inadequate funding, protections, and law enforcement tools to meet this challenge. The Cornyn/Kyl amendment (ALB 11813) would add the full text of the Domestic Minor Sex Trafficking Deterrence and Victims Support Act (S. 596) to S. 1301, taking a more comprehensive approach to fighting the evils of domestic sex trafficking through both victims' services and law enforcement tools. S. 1301 should not be passed by the Senate without including the language of ALB11813.

Enhanced and targeted grant programs to combat domestic minor sex trafficking

S. 1301 authorizes $8 million per year to be distributed through 4 block grants to state and local governments in order to combat the sex trafficking of minors in the United States. ALB11813 would authorize $14 million for six such block grants, and would require grantees to certify that these funds would only be allocated to serve interstate victims of sex trafficking. The enhanced and targeted grants under ALB11813 would make greater strides in developing a best practices model for nationwide sex trafficking deterrence and would ensure that these funds are directed toward fulfilling the federal government's interstate role in protecting children in the United States from sex traffickers. Additionally, ALB11813 would provide for greater grantee accountability by enacting a 25% grantee match requirement in the first year of the grant. S. 1301 only requires a 15% grantee match during the same period.

Comprehensive law enforcement tools to deter domestic minor sex trafficking

Under S. 1301, block grants to state and local governments to combat the sex trafficking of minors could be used to provide: residential care, emergency social services, daily necessities, case management services, mental health counseling, legal services, and referral services for minor victims of sex trafficking, as well as specialized training for personnel likely to encounter sex trafficking victims and education programs to provide information about the prevention of sex trafficking. ALB11813 would add an enhanced law enforcement component to these authorized uses, including: specialized anti-trafficking training for law enforcement personnel, salaries for law enforcement personnel engaged in trafficking deterrence, investigation expenses for cases involving the sex trafficking of minors, and salaries for prosecutors in sex trafficking cases.

ALB11813 would also grant administrative subpoena power to the U.S. Marshals Service for the sole purpose of investigating unregistered sex offenders. According to the Marshals Service, there are currently more than 100,000 unregistered sex offenders living in the United States.<sup>2</sup> These sex offenders pose a high risk of engaging in illicit sexual conduct,<sup>3</sup> and are often very difficult to track down—moving from place-to-place and traveling under aliases in order to conceal their location and identity.<sup>4</sup> Investigations of fugitive sex offenders therefore repeatedly involve a long and complicated paper trail. This very narrow provision would allow the U.S. Marshals service to investigate these offenders more effectively by quickly seizing items such as rent records and credit card accounts.

ALB11813 would also impose a 1-year federal mandatory minimum sentence for the possession of child pornography depicting a pre-pubescent minor younger than the age of 12. Additionally, it would increase the maximum federal sentence for the possession of such pornography from 10 to 20 years. Many of the children depicted in this form of pornography are actually victims of human trafficking,<sup>5</sup> and criminals who possess this material pose a heightened risk to engage in sexual behavior with children.<sup>6</sup> All too often, however, we have seen federal judges downward depart and hand out lenient sentences for this crime.<sup>7</sup> This provision would send a strong message to child pornographers and traffickers, while providing law enforcement with a valuable tool to deter and punish behavior that directly aids and abets human trafficking.

Protections for children who confront human traffickers in court

ALB11813 would provide protections for child witnesses who choose to cooperate with law enforcement investigations by confronting their traffickers in a court of law. The amendment would add language to 18 U.S.C. 1514 requiring a federal court to issue a protective order prohibiting the harassment or intimidation of a minor victim or witness if the court finds evidence that the conduct at issue is reasonable likely to adversely affect the willingness of the minor victim or witness to testify or otherwise participate in the federal criminal case or investigation. ALB11813 would also provide penalties of up to 5 years in prison for the knowing and intentional violation of a child witness protective order. These provisions would provide strong protections for child witnesses where the attorney of a sex trafficker seeks to intimidate and discourage the testimony of that witness. Because child witnesses are often asked to testify against an alleged sex trafficker, this provision would help to ensure that these traffickers are punished to the full extent of the law.<sup>8</sup>

A bipartisan piece of legislation

ALB11813 is substantially identical to both S. 2925 (111th Congress) and S. 596 (112th Congress). S. 2925 passed the Senate Judiciary Committee unanimously on August 5th, 2010, and proceeded to pass the full Senate by unanimous consent on December 9th, 2010. The bill was sponsored by Senator Wyden, and co-sponsored by four members of the Judiciary Committee: Senators Cornyn, Durbin, Franken and Schumer. S. 596 was introduced on March 16, 2011 by Senator Wyden and co-sponsored by five members of the Judiciary Committee: Senators Cornyn, Kyl, Blumenthal, Klobuchar and Schumer.

Conclusion

The interstate sex trafficking of children in the United States should be the top priority of the federal government in attempting to combat human trafficking. S. 1301, in its current form, contains insufficient law enforcement tools and resources to fulfill this responsibility. Though ALB 11813 is not, itself, sufficient to remedy the evils of domestic minor sex trafficking, it is a substantial step in the right direction. The Senate should not pass S. 1301 without, at the very least, including the language of ALB11813.

SEC. 7106. MINIMUM REQUIREMENTS FOR THE ELIMINATION OF TRAFFICKING.

(a) MINIMUM STANDARDS.—For purposes of this chapter, the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking applicable to the government of a country of origin, transit, or destination for victims of severe forms of trafficking are the following:

(1) The government of the country should prohibit severe forms of trafficking in persons and punish acts of such trafficking.

(2) For the knowing commission of any act of sex trafficking involving force, fraud, coercion, or in which the victim of sex trafficking is a child incapable of giving meaningful consent, or of trafficking which includes rape or kidnapping or which causes a death, the government of the country should prescribe punishment commensurate with that for grave crimes, such as forcible sexual assault.

(3) For the knowing commission of any act of a severe form of trafficking in persons, the government of the country should prescribe punishment that is sufficiently stringent to deter and that adequately reflects the heinous nature of the offense.

(4) The government of the country should make serious and sustained efforts to eliminate severe forms of trafficking in persons.

(b) CRITERIA.—In determinations under subsection (a)(4) of this section, the following factors should be considered as indicia of serious and sustained efforts to eliminate severe forms of trafficking in persons:

(1) Whether the government of the country vigorously investigates and prosecutes acts of severe forms of trafficking in persons, and convicts and sentences persons responsible for such acts, that take place wholly or partly within the territory of the country, including, as appropriate, requiring incarceration of individuals convicted of such acts. For purposes of the preceding sentence, suspended or significantly-reduced sentences for convictions of principal actors in cases of severe forms of trafficking in persons shall be considered, on a case-by-case basis, whether to be considered an indicator of serious and sustained efforts to eliminate severe forms of trafficking in persons. After reasonable requests from the Department of State for data regarding investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and sentences, a government which does not provide such data, consistent with the capacity of such government to obtain such data, shall be presumed not to have vigorously investigated, prosecuted, convicted or sentenced such acts. During the periods prior to the annual report submitted on June 1, 2004, and on June 1, 2005, and the periods afterwards until September 30 of each such year, the Secretary of State may disregard the presumption contained in the preceding sentence if the government has provided some data to the Department of State regarding such acts and the Secretary has determined that the government is making a good faith effort to collect such data.

(2) Whether the government of the country protects victims of severe forms of trafficking in persons and encourages their assistance in the investigation and prosecution of such trafficking, including provisions for legal alternatives to their removal to countries in which they would face retribution or hardship, and ensures that victims are not inappropriately incarcerated, fined, or otherwise penalized solely for unlawful acts as a direct result of being trafficked, including by providing training to law enforcement and immigration officials regarding the identification and treatment of trafficking victims using approaches that focus on the needs of the victims.

(3) Whether the government of the country has adopted measures to prevent severe forms of trafficking in persons, such as measures to inform and educate the public, including potential victims, about the causes and consequences of severe forms of trafficking in persons, measures to establish the identity of local populations, including birth registration, citizenship, and nationality, measures to ensure that its nationals who are deployed abroad as part of a [peacekeeping] diplomatic, peacekeeping, or other similar mission do not engage in or facilitate severe forms of trafficking in persons or exploit victims of such trafficking[, and measures], a transparent system for remediating or punishing such public officials as a deterrent, measures to prevent the use of forced labor or child labor in violation of international standards, effective bilateral, multilateral, or regional information sharing and cooperation arrangements with source, transit, or destination countries in its trafficking route, and effective policies or laws regulating foreign labor recruiters and holding them civilly and criminally liable for fraudulent recruiting.

(4) Whether the government of the country cooperates with other governments in the investigation and prosecution of severe forms of trafficking in persons and has entered into bilateral, multilateral, or regional law enforcement cooperation and coordination arrangements with source, transit, and destination countries in its trafficking route.

(5) Whether the government of the country extradites persons charged with acts of severe forms of trafficking in persons on substantially the same terms and to substantially the same extent as persons charged with other serious crimes (or, to the extent such extradition would be inconsistent with the laws of such country or with international agreements to which the country is a party, whether the government is taking all appropriate measures to modify or replace such laws and treaties so as to permit such extradition).

(6) Whether the government of the country monitors immigration and emigration patterns for evidence of severe forms of trafficking in persons and whether law enforcement agencies of the country respond to any such evidence in a manner that is consistent with the vigorous investigation and prosecution of acts of such trafficking, as well as with the protection of human rights of victims and the internationally recognized human right to leave any country, including one's own, and to return to one's own country.

(7) Whether the government of the country vigorously investigates, prosecutes, convicts, and sentences public officials, including diplomats and soldiers, who participate in or facilitate severe forms of trafficking in persons, including nationals of the country who are deployed abroad as part of a 【peacekeeping】 diplomatic, peacekeeping, or other similar mission who engage in or facilitate severe forms of trafficking in persons or exploit victims of such trafficking, and takes all appropriate measures against officials who condone such trafficking. A government's failure to appropriately address public allegations against such public officials, especially once such officials have returned to their home countries, shall be considered inaction under these criteria. After reasonable requests from the Department of State for data regarding such investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and sentences, a government which does not provide such data consistent with its resources shall be presumed not to have vigorously investigated, prosecuted, convicted, or sentenced such acts. During the periods prior to the annual report submitted on June 1, 2004, and on June 1, 2005, and the periods afterwards until September 30 of each such year, the Secretary of State may disregard the presumption contained in the preceding sentence if the government has provided some data to the Department of State regarding such acts and the Secretary has determined that the government is making a good faith effort to collect such data.

(8) Whether the percentage of victims of severe forms of trafficking in the country that are non-citizens of such countries is insignificant.

(9) Whether the government has entered into transparent partnerships, cooperative arrangements, or agreements with—

(A) domestic civil society organizations or the private sector to assist the government's efforts to prevent trafficking, protect victims, and punish traffickers; or

(B) the United States toward agreed goals and objectives in the collective fight against trafficking.

【(9)】 (10) Whether the government of the country, consistent with the capacity of such government, systematically monitors its efforts to satisfy the criteria described in paragraphs (1) through (8) and makes available publicly a periodic assessment of such efforts.

【(10)】 (11) Whether the government of the country achieves appreciable progress in eliminating severe forms of trafficking when compared to the assessment in the previous year.

【(11)】 (12) Whether the government of the country has made serious and sustained efforts to reduce the demand for—

(A) commercial sex acts; and

(B) participation in international sex tourism by nationals of the country.

SEC. 7107. ACTIONS AGAINST GOVERNMENTS FAILING TO MEET MINIMUM STANDARDS.

【(3)】 (2) SPECIAL WATCH LIST.—

(A) SUBMISSION OF LIST.—Not later than the date on which the determinations described in subsections (c) and (d) of this section are submitted to the appropriate congressional committees in accordance with such subsections, the Secretary of State shall submit to the appropriate congressional committees a list of countries that the Secretary determines requires special scrutiny during the following year. The list shall be composed of the following countries:

(ii) Countries that have been listed pursuant to paragraph (1)(B) pursuant to the current annual report and were listed pursuant to paragraph (1)(C) in the previous annual report.

(D) COUNTRIES ON SPECIAL WATCH LIST FOR 2 CONSECUTIVE YEARS.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided under clause (ii), a country that is included on the special watch list described in subparagraph (A) for 2 consecutive years after December 23, 2008, shall be included on the list of countries described in paragraph (1)(C).

(ii) EXERCISE OF WAIVER AUTHORITY.—The President may waive the application of clause (i) for up to 2 years if the President determines, and reports credible evidence to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, that such a waiver is justified because—

(I) the country has a written plan to begin making significant efforts to bring itself into compliance with the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking;

(II) the plan, if implemented, would constitute making such significant efforts; and

(III) the country is devoting sufficient resources to implement the plan.

(c) NOTIFICATION.—Not less than 45 days or more than 90 days after the submission, on or after January 1, 2003, of an annual report under subsection (b)(1) of this section, or an interim report under subsection (b)(2) of this section, the President shall submit to the appropriate congressional committees a notification of one of the determinations listed in subsection (d) of this section with respect to each foreign country whose government, according to such report—

(1) does not comply with the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking; and

(2) is not making significant efforts to bring itself into compliance, as described in subsection (b)(1)(C) of this section.

(d) PRESIDENTIAL DETERMINATIONS.—The determinations referred to in subsection (c) of this section are the following:

(1) WITHHOLDING OF NONHUMANITARIAN, NONTRADE-RELATED ASSISTANCE.—The President has determined that—

(A)(i) the United States will not provide nonhumanitarian, nontrade-related foreign assistance to the government of the country for the subsequent fiscal year until such government complies with the minimum standards or makes significant efforts to bring itself into compliance; or

(ii) in the case of a country whose government received no nonhumanitarian, nontrade-related foreign assistance from the United States during the previous fiscal year, the United States will not provide such assistance to the government of the country for the subsequent fiscal year and will not provide funding for participation by officials or employees of such governments in educational and cultural exchange programs for the subsequent fiscal year until such government complies with the minimum standards or makes significant efforts to bring itself into compliance; and

(2) ONGOING, MULTIPLE, BROAD-BASED RESTRICTIONS ON ASSISTANCE IN RESPONSE TO HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS.—The President has determined that such country is already subject to multiple, broad-based restrictions on assistance imposed in significant part in response to human rights abuses and such restrictions are ongoing and are comparable to the restrictions provided in paragraph (1). Such determination shall be accompanied by a description of the specific restriction or restrictions that were the basis for making such determination.

(3) SUBSEQUENT COMPLIANCE.—The Secretary of State has determined that the government of the country has come into compliance with the minimum standards or is making significant efforts to bring itself into compliance.

(4) CONTINUATION OF ASSISTANCE IN THE NATIONAL INTEREST.—Notwithstanding the failure of the government of the country to comply with minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking and to make significant efforts to bring itself into compliance, the President has determined that the provision to the country of nonhumanitarian, nontrade-related foreign assistance or funding for participation in educational and cultural exchange programs, or the multilateral assistance described in paragraph (1)(B), or both, would promote the purposes of this chapter or is otherwise in the national interest of the United States.

is intended to be received or used by any agency or official who has participated in, facilitated, or condoned a severe form of trafficking in persons.

(f) After the President has made a determination described in subsection (d)(1) of this section with respect to the government of a country, the President may at any time make a determination described in paragraphs (4) and (5) of subsection (d) of this section to waive, in whole or in part, the measures imposed against the country by the previous determination under subsection (d)(1) of this section.
