ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

ILLICIT DRUGS

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss a vital, bicameral effort to combat drugs in this country. The Task Force on National Drug Policy, of which I am a proud member, was announced today to work to solve a serious problem: narcotics.

Despite efforts by Congress to curtail the flow of drugs into this country and its use by Americans, it seems as though the results have been lost with this administration. The intent of this task force is to focus the White House on a problem that is far from being resolved, and where much attention needs to be paid.

This is particularly important in light of recent studies that have indicated a growing trend in illicit drug use among teenagers. Studies indicate that, despite a decline in drug use among teens during the 1980's, drug use has risen sharply in the past few years. Cocaine use by high school students increased 36 percent since 1991-92, which was the period of lowest use. Marijuana use increased as well. Between the 1990-92 school year and 1994, marijuana use among junior high school students rose 111 percent and rose 67 percent in high schools. Now, one in three high
