

been getting. And what we have been getting is nothing—gridlock, confrontation, yelling at each other, people getting red in the face, and nothing getting done.

I think the American people are fed up with that kind of politics, fed up with that kind of Government. I am fed up with it. It is time to change. We ought to do it now—before it is too late.

I yield the floor.

Mr. THOMAS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, are we in morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair advise the Senator that he may proceed as in morning business.

BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the Chair. I will only take 5 minutes. I wanted to do a couple of things. I want to thank the Senator from Georgia for bringing some discussion today as a follow-up to this vote on the balanced budget amendment. I am very disappointed that that balanced budget amendment to the Constitution did not pass. I think there are obviously reasons that it should have passed. Obviously, it was very close to passage. The reasons, of course, have to do with responsibility, with morality of Government, with fiscal responsibility.

Everyone accepts the idea that we should not be continuously spending more than we take in. It has to do with the historic performance of the Federal Government for 25 years, or more, since we have balanced the budget last. Everybody gets up, and the first thing they say is, "Yes, I am for balancing the budget"—the same people who have been here for 25 years and have never balanced the budget. They say, "We do not need an amendment; we will just do it." Well, we have not just done it.

So I am very disappointed in that. I suspect that we will have some more opportunities to do that.

I come from a State where the constitution provides for a balanced budget. Frankly, it works very well. It is a discipline, and the government works within that discipline. It is one of the elements of good government—one of the elements that says, "All right. We want a program. Here is what it will cost. Are you willing to pay for it?" If you are not, if we are not, if I am not, then we should not do it. That is what this fiscal responsibility is all about.

I think the best instance of that, of course, is a property tax where we live. The school district says, "We need a new science building. Here is what it will cost." Is it worth it? You vote. Are you willing to pay for it, or are not you?

I want to talk about a change that needs to take place in the budget process. Last year we took the whole year and deferred getting the budget finished. Now we are in a year of budgeting, and we are spending such a large amount of our time on the budget. Congress has more responsibilities than simply the budget. Indeed, the budget is very important. The budget is sort of an outline of what we are going to do. But the Congress also has, and the Senate also has, many other responsibilities, such as oversight, such as seeing if bills that have been passed and are up for renewal have, indeed, been effective, whether they need to be changed, whether they need to be renewed. This is a big job, and we are supposed to be doing that. But instead, we are going back and forth spending the whole year practically every year on the budget.

I have a bill that has bipartisan support that asks for reform in budgeting and doing a biennial budget. I think there is a great deal of merit in a biennial budget. No. 1, it is better for the Government. It is better for the agencies. They at least have 2 years of planning for what they can do in their expenditures; 2 years in which they can plan how to manage their dollars. It is much better for the Congress. It is done in most legislative bodies—biennial budgeting. It has been supported by both sides of the aisle.

The resolution that we introduced this year is supported by Senator DOMENICI, who is head of the Budget Committee, and we think we can make this reform next year. I think, as we spend all of this time on budgeting, we spend the whole year practically on budgeting rather than some of the other things that we ought to be doing in addition to budgeting, it makes it more clear that there needs to be some reform. We need to have a biennial budget.

So, Mr. President, obviously, we are not going to get to that this year. There are relatively few working days left. That will not be one of the issues. I am not naive to think that. But I do say to you that I do not think there is anything more important in terms of restructuring our process than to take a look at biennial budgeting. I intend to bring it up again next year. I have been promised support by those who are much more knowledgeable than I about budgeting.

I recognize that there is always resistance from the appropriators. I was on the Appropriations Committee when I was in the legislature. Appropriators have a great deal of influence over all kinds of things because they control spending, and everybody is interested in how spending is done and how it affects their State. So appropriators are reluctant, of course, to lose the authority that they have every year by going through this process. I am sorry for that, but I think they to do a better job if they do it on a biennial basis.

Mr. President, I appreciate the time. I hope we will continue to talk a little bit about how we might change some of the processes in this Congress; that we talk about results rather than procedure; that, instead of saying we have been doing it for 200 years, maybe so, but we ought to see what the results have been for having done that for 200 years. There are some things that should not be changed. There are some fundamentals that should not be changed. But there are some processes that are not producing the results that we want, and one of them is budgeting. The result is a $5 trillion debt, the interest on which is the largest single line item in the budget.

Mr. President, I yield the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent I be allowed to proceed under the 1 hour that has been reserved by the minority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REPUBLICAN GRANDCHILDREN

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I have listened this morning to some of the discussion on the floor of the Senate. I felt I needed to come over and speak, at least for historical records, speak to the Republican grandchildren a bit, because the Republican grandchildren have been spoken to on the floor of the Senate about a range of issues. They have been described on the floor of the Senate as victims of legislative problems created this week by a vote on the constitutional amendment to balance the budget.

All grandchildren are affected by what happens in these Chambers, in the Chambers of the U.S. House and the U.S. Senate. Grandchildren will ask the tough questions in the years ahead about the country in which they live, the country in which they are growing up. They might ask some questions about what has made this a wonderful place. There are some who simply cannot concede this is a worthy place to live. They talk about how awful America is. America has gone to hell in a handbasket, they say. America has gone to the dogs.

It is interesting, we have people talking about building fences to keep people out of America because we have so many people who want to come here. This country is a remarkable place, with enormous challenges, to be sure. We have faced challenges before. We faced a Civil War and survived it and came back together. We faced the threat of Adolph Hitler. We faced the threat of a depression. We have survived all of those threats and all of those challenges. Do we have challenges now? Of course; enormous challenges, substantial challenges. But is this a remarkable, wonderful country that the rest of the world looks up to, the rest of the world wants to come to? Of course it is.
