Ellis said Tuesday from the Chicago headquarters of Farley Foods. “I met the family, and when you stand there and realize that her son’s heart is in your body, well, I just, I get kind of choked up talking about it. I could tell it was the same for her when she looked at me.”

Ellis and the Robisons decided to share their story to help increase awareness during National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week, which began Sunday and runs through Saturday.

Across the United States, transplant centers are suffering a critical shortage of organs and tissue and have launched the first nationwide campaign to increase the number of donors. The coalition on Donation has enlisted Michael J.ordan of the Chicago Bulls as its national spokesman. J.ordan will be featured this week on radio and television commercials, on billboards, transit advertising and through direct mailings throughout the country.

The coalition is a national, non-profit alliance that represents nearly 100 organizations involved in organ and tissue procurement and transplantation. Its thrust is to motivate Americans to discuss with family members their decision to become donors. The coalition estimates that permission from next-of-kin is denied in 50% to 85% of the cases where there is high potential for donation. Discussions prior to death can eliminate confusion and uncertainty so that desire to be a donor and help make it easier for family members to carry out a donor’s wishes, said coalition president Howard Arthur.

More than 45,000 critically ill Americans are on waiting lists for organ transplants, with a new name added every 18 minutes. Last year, nearly 9,000 transplants were performed in the United States. But 3,000 people died while waiting for a suitable donor.

In Utah, 190 people are awaiting vital organ transplants. And many more are in need of tissue such as bone, skin and corneas. During 1995, 207 patients received organ transplants from 57 Utah donors.

Utah Gov. Mike Leavitt is joining the effort by holding a press conference at 10:15 a.m. in the University Hospital in its second-floor conference room. And at noon, Intermountain Organ Recovery System will hold a tree planting ceremony in Canyon Rim Park, 3100 S. 2900 East, in a tribute to donors families and transplant recipients.

The decision to donate was an obvious choice for Tracy and Conan Robison. As a Valley Regional Medical Center, Tracy Robison witnessed miraculous changes in patients’ lives after their diseased organs were replaced by healthy ones. She was working at the hospital on the evening of Sept. 12 when her mother called and said Travis had been hit by a car a half-block from home. “She said he was unconscious and his legs were twisted. I didn’t totally panic at that point because unconscious to me is possibly not as critical,” Robison said. “I think he was a lot better than I thought.”

But then the E.R. got a call from the ambulance en route. “They said they were coming in Code 3, which is the worst you could come in with,” she said. Travis’ pupils were fixed and he was breathing erratically. “The worst insult was to his brain.”

Tests two days later confirmed Robison’s worst fear: Travis was brain dead. Within a few hours, transplant technicians were removing his organs.

In addition to his heart going to Ellis, Travis’ liver went to a father of five in Springville and both kidneys went to two different women in Salt Lake. And his eyes restored sight to two others.

“I really think that somebody else should have the opportunity to improve their life with something that somebody else doesn’t need,” Robison said. “It’s not going to do any good for Travis to keep it. And for me, it has brought an incredible amount of peace and happiness that others have been benefitted.”

When looking at Ellis, she added in a choked voice, “I can see Travis in so many ways. I can’t think of a better person that his little heart could have gone to. Travis had a big heart and Bill does, too.”

300TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FIRST ZIONIST CONGRESS

HON. BRAD SHERMAN OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 16, 1997

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure I rise before you today to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the first Zionist Congress. The first meeting of the Zionist Congress occurred on August 29, 1897 with 204 participants from 17 countries. Now, 100 years later, the anniversary of this important date will be celebrated by Jewish communities across the world.

In 1897, the first Zionist Congress was called in Basle, Switzerland with the purpose of establishing a homeland for the Jewish people under public law. Theodor Herzl emerged as the father of modern Zionism and founder of the World Zionist Organization. He believed a mass exodus to the Jewish homeland was the only response to the anti-Semitism the Jews were facing in Europe. He wrote in his Zionist novel, “If you will it, it is no legend,” a sentiment that became the mantra of the Zionist movement.

Though Herzl never lived to see the establishment of the State of Israel, his legacy lived on through the movement. The Zionists remained committed to their goal throughout several years of turmoil. Despite religious persecution by the Nazi regime in Europe, and an intense struggle with militant Arab opposition, the Jewish initiative prevailed. The Zionists’ goal was finally realized on May 14, 1948 with the U.N. resolution of November 1947, which established the State of Israel. This resolution allowed the Jewish people to live in their historic homeland, free from the religious persecution they were facing in Europe.

Mr. Speaker, distinguished colleagues, please join with me in commemorating the 100th anniversary of the Zionist Congress, an organization which has shown perseverance through adversity and a dedication to the principles of the Judaism.
