

noted, was "faithfulness to the means to overcome it: recitation of the psalms each day, prayer and solitude, and by these means arriving—or hoping to arrive—at a state of well-being." The psalms she found particularly helpful in this regard: "I have stilled and quieted my soul" (Ps. 131), and "Relieve the troubles of my heart" (Ps. 25). She would also quote Saint Paul's Letter to the Romans, chapter 8—"Nothing can separate us from the love of Christ"—and his advice not to judge others or even oneself, for Christ understands our failures: he was, after all, the world's greatest failure.

Among contemporary spiritual writings, she recommended in this regard Dom Hubert van Zeller's Approach to Calvary: "Awoke at 5:30," she penned in 1965. "Usual depression over failures, inefficiency, incapacity to cope. Van Zeller's book invaluable, teaching on how to accept all this discouragement, which he says will increase with age. . . . One must just keep going."

And that connects with the matter of perseverance, a subject on which she corresponded sporadically with Thomas Merton: "I am often full of fear about my final perseverance," she told him in 1960. But then, during his own long struggles with the problem, she advised: Your work "is the work God wants of you, no matter how much you want to run away from it."

She eventually came to terms with the fact that her difficulties were not going to end in this life. In the last book she gave me, Spiritual Autobiography of Charles de Foucauld (she was always giving gifts and books, prayer books and Bibles especially), she had underlined the following passage from de Foucauld: "Our difficulties are not a transitory state of affairs. . . . No, they are the normal state of affairs and we should reckon on being in angustia temporum [in straightness of times, Dan. 9:21] all our lives, so far as the good we want to do is concerned."

In 1960, Dorothy Day commented favorably on a then-current appraisal of the state of the American Catholic church, rendered by the Jesuit theologian, Gustave Weigel. Three things were most needed in the U.S. church, said Weigel: Austerity, preached and lived; a deeper awareness of the reality of God; and a truer and more effective love for all people, including those who are our enemies. One could not find a more succinct summary of Day's own views. In 1968, she complained that the Catholic press in the United States was too much concerned with the problems of authority, birth control, and celibacy, whereas the real problems were "war, race, poverty and wealth, violence, sex, and drugs." Some things change slowly. Or not at all.

Without the saints, Bernanos said fifty years ago, the church is only dead stones: Without them, the very grace lying within the church's institutional and sacramental forms remains fallow. Despite the unparalleled upheavals of our times, grace has not remained hidden. We have been its appealing power.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution and preamble be agreed to en bloc, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating thereto be placed in the RECORD at the appropriate place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

S. RES. 163

Whereas November 8, 1997, marks the 100th anniversary of the birth of Dorothy Day on Pineapple Street in Brooklyn, New York;

Whereas Dorothy Day was a woman who lived a life of voluntary poverty, guided by the principles of social justice and solidarity with the poor;

Whereas in 1933 Dorothy Day and Peter Maurin founded the Catholic Worker Movement and the Catholic Worker newspaper "to realize in the individual and society the express and implied teachings of Christ";

Whereas the Catholic Worker "Houses of Hospitality" founded by Dorothy Day have ministered to the physical and spiritual needs of the poor for over 60 years;

Whereas there are now more than 125 Catholic Worker "Houses of Hospitality" in the United States and throughout the world;

Whereas in 1972 Dorothy Day was awarded the Laetare Medal by the University of Notre Dame for "comforting the afflicted and afflicting the comfortable virtually all of her life";

Whereas upon the death of Dorothy Day in 1980, noted Catholic historian David O'Brien called her "the most significant, interesting, and influential person in the history of American Catholicism";

Whereas His Eminence John Cardinal O'Connor has stated that he is considering recommending Dorothy Day to the Pope for Canonization; and

Whereas Dorothy Day serves as inspiration for those who strive to live their faith: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) expresses deep admiration and respect for the life and work of Dorothy Day;

(2) recognizes that the work of Dorothy Day improved the lives of countless people and that her example has inspired others to follow her in a life of solidarity with the poor;

(3) encourages all Americans to reflect on how they might learn from Dorothy Day's example and continue her work of ministering to the needy; and

(4) designates the week of November 8, 1997, through November 14, 1997, as the "National Week of Recognition for Dorothy Day and Those Whom She Served".
