ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

HARNESSING AMERICAN IDEALS

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I submit an article to be printed in the Record. I thought it would be beneficial for my colleagues to learn about the success that the AmeriCorps program has had among my constituents in Illinois. These are only a few stories about the positive impact that the program has had on people who live in often under served communities in the Chicago area.

The article follows:

From the Chicago Sun-Times, July 3, 1998

By Michael Gillis

In Uptown, they teach immigrants English and help them adjust to life in the United States.

In Ford Heights, they help low-income parents become better teachers of their own children.

In neighborhoods throughout the Chicago area, they teach adults how to read, tutor students after school, counsel battered women, teach first aid and help communities right themselves.

Four years after President Clinton’s AmeriCorps project was launched amid a flurry of publicity, its workers are toiling away in relative obscurity. While some still criticize the program for its cost, supporters say it is changing the city in small, but important, ways.

“We never say we’re going to change a community in a year,” said Craig Huffman, executive director of City Year Chicago, which employed about 50 AmeriCorps workers last year and this week received funding to hire about 55 workers starting in the fall. “But far too many people use the excuse that problems are insurmountable. . . . You have to think about solving a problem, even when everyone else is saying it can’t be solved.”

AmeriCorps workers say they’re more than worth the money they’re paid.

“I realized the impact that one person can have in a lot of lives,” said Lisa Nova, 23, of Flossmoor, who taught CPR and first aid to thousands of Chicago public school students in the last year as one of the 13 AmeriCorps workers for the American Red Cross of Greater Chicago.

That’s the kind of idealism Clinton sought to harness when he proposed the AmeriCorps program in 1993, and Clinton signed the bill using the pens Franklin D. Roosevelt and John F. Kennedy used to create the Civilian Conservation Corps and the Peace Corps.

Under the program, which is run by a public-private partnership called the Corporations for Public Service, $4.725 billion is to apply toward college tuition or student loans by completing a year of community service.
