ART OF THE GOLD RUSH—A FASCINATING AND IMAGINATIVE EXHIBITION AT THE NATIONAL MUSEUM OF AMERICAN ART

HON. TOM LANTOS OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, October 9, 1998

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of my distinguished colleagues in the House to an outstanding exhibition entitled “Art of the Gold Rush,” which will be on display at the Smithsonian Institution’s National Museum of American Art from October 30, 1998 until March 7, 1999. I am pleased that this exhibition was chosen to celebrate the 150th anniversary of this defining moment in the history of Northern California and in the development of the American West in such an appropriate manner.

On January 24, 1848—nine days before California was admitted as a State of the United States by Mexico—an obscure laborer and European immigrant named James W. Marshall discovered a few nuggets of gold in the South Fork of the American River at Sutter’s Mill. He presented his find to his employer, Captain John A. Sutter, who joined Marshall in a fruitless attempt to keep news of the treasure secret.

Slowly, but with unabashed excitement inspired by the hope of a quick fortune, reports of the discovery leaked throughout the Bay Area. Proclaimed the Californian newspaper on May 29: “The whole country from San Francisco to Los Angeles, and from the sea shore to the base of the Sierra Nevadas, resounds with the sordid cry of GOLD, GOLD, GOLD!”

Before long, the gold euphoria spread across the entire country and around the world. Declared President James K. Polk in a message to Congress on December 5: “The accounts of abundance of gold are of such an extraordinary character as would scarcely command belief were they not corroborated by the authentic reports of officers in the public service.” The following year, tens of thousands of adventurers and dreamers descended upon San Francisco, hoping for a “lucky strike” and a lifetime of wealth. In the process, the City by the Bay swelled from a sleepy Spanish settlement to a major city of over 100,000 by the end of the following year. The first public schools, representative government bodies, and cultural institutions in the State of California evolved from this unplanned invasion of explorers, immigrants, and deserting seamen.

“Art of the Gold Rush” highlights the social and cultural transformation wrought by these extraordinary changes. Taking place just a few years after the invention of the daguerreotype (photograph), the Gold Rush was the first major event to be photographed. The “Art of The Gold Rush” captures this historical coincidence skillfully, as emotions such as ambition, disappointment, hope, and confusion can be observed in the 150 rare images featured in the exhibition.

In the context of this bicentennial year, it is especially fitting to celebrate the 50th anniversary of Northern California’s Gold Rush.
