

lot about nuclear and subnuclear physics.

But so what? Well, I will tell my colleagues what is "so what." We have scientists who took those two very esoteric results of basic science, which had no conceivable everyday use and combined them. By using nuclear magnetic resonance and very rapid computerized data gathering and analysis techniques, we developed the MRI, magnetic resonance imaging, which is the greatest breakthrough in diagnostic medicine in a century, likely the greatest step forward in diagnostic medicine since the discovery of X rays, which incidentally also were discovered by a physicist doing basic research.

So the next time someone asks about the importance of basic research, why should we do it, and why should we spend all this money on it, just ask them if they know someone who has had an x-ray or someone who has had an MRI, and ask them if they think this would have occurred if we had not invested money in basic research.

Basic research drives the engine of medicine, it drives the engine of our economy, and it is high time we recognize that investing in basic science is a good investment for the future, with a very good rate of return. Indeed is a very long-term investment, but, nevertheless, has a very good rate of return. And it is something that is very beneficial to our Nation, to our people, and to the peoples throughout the entire world.
