

Members who have stayed long after the legislative business of the House to express their profound respect for the work of BRUCE VENTO in this body, for the friendship that he has meant to each of them.

BRUCE VENTO, like all of us, had great moments in this body, but none was greater than the moment that he took some months ago in the well of this House to address us all about the illness which had afflicted him and which he knew would take his life.

What stands out is that in a time of rancor, in a body where campaigns have moved from the hinterlands to the House floor and have so often spilled over into invective, that was a shining moment for this House, where he spoke of the politics of joy and of hope, of the meaning of public service, and his pride in serving the people of his district, of his State, and of his country.

It was a great moment for the House of Representatives, one that will be enshrined forever, not just in the RECORD, but in the hearts of all of us who were privileged to hear that beautiful outpouring of the meaning of this great deliberative body.

Madam Speaker, I am pleased to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. RAHALL), who sat side by side with BRUCE VENTO throughout all these 12 terms.

Mr. RAHALL. Madam Speaker, I think my friend for yielding time to me.

Indeed, BRUCE VENTO was a dear colleague to me, as well. Having served with him, as well as the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE), side by side, first on the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee, and now on the Committee on Resources for my 24 years in this body, to say that BRUCE VENTO knew what was in every piece of legislation that came before our committee is not an understatement.

As I said, having sat next to him, I could see him and would marvel at the way he would read every piece of bill upon which he were asked to vote, with that red highlight pen underlining the pertinent pieces of every piece of legislation that came before our committee.

Truly, he was a knowledgeable Member of this body. He was dedicated to our environment. He came with me to my district in southern West Virginia, rode on our whitewater rivers, and came back and helped me craft legislation to preserve those rivers for generations to come.

BRUCE was in my class. We came to this body in 1977. Throughout our years together, he was a man who truly lived the words "public servant" to their fullest.

To his wife, to his family, to his friends back in Minnesota who he so ably served, I do say, we shall all miss him. BRUCE VENTO was a dear friend to all of us.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, in the few moments that remain, there was only one other person who in my memory stands out for having taken the well of the House to address his colleagues on the meaning of life and the meaning of legislative service. That was Senator Hubert Humphrey, who was invited by this body to address the House from the Clerk's desk.

Parenthetically, when he arrived there, he looked out over this assembled gathering of Members of the House and Members of the Senate and said, "Oh, you don't know how long I have waited to stand here and make this speech."

BRUCE and I were standing together and marvelled at this wonderful expose of the meaning of the legislative process and of service to humanity. Little did either of us realize years later he, too, would take the well to give a similar civics lesson, one from the heart, on the meaning of comity and of service.

At the fundraising event in BRUCE's honor where funds were raised for a scholarship program for science students, little red pine seedlings were handed out. I took three of those, one for each of his sons, because I had a sense then that we were witnessing a drama that would play itself out in the end of his life in some months.

I planted those seedlings in our backyard. They are thriving. They will get another place where they will get more light, more strength. They will be a symbol to all of us of this recurring resource that BRUCE fought so hard to preserve, to protect: the flora, the fauna, the water, the air, the land.

At the end of life, we will not be judged by how large a surplus we left, how large a nuclear arsenal, how great an Army we left behind us, or by how many bills had been enacted into law. We will be judged by, I was naked and you clothed me; I was hungry and you fed me; I was homeless and you took me in.

When we cloth our fellow human beings in dignity, when we take the homeless into our hearts, into our lives, and when we feed the hungry with the spirit that gives life, we are truly doing the Lord's work in this life. That was BRUCE VENTO. That was all that he committed himself to do in public service.

With Samuel Gompers, BRUCE can say I came into the labor movement with one purpose, to leave it a better place and a better movement than I found it in. BRUCE leaves this body, his city, his district, his constituents these resources of land and air and water and the creatures among them in better condition than he found them in.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Madam Speaker, it is with a heavy heart that I join my colleagues tonight in this tribute to Congressman BRUCE VENTO. We all knew that someday Members of Congress would stand in the well of the House in tribute to BRUCE VENTO's many accomplishments, it is truly sad that this day has come too soon. Since coming to Congress 8 years ago, I have had the pleasure of a close relationship with Congressman VENTO on the Banking Committee.

The Banking Committee deals with some of the most complex issues in all of Congress. Congressman VENTO put in the time, attended all the hearings, and mastered all these complex problems. As a teacher himself prior to coming to Congress, he became a resource to all Committee members, providing counsel on a host of from financial modernization to complex housing programs.

Congressman VENTO served as a tireless advocate for all consumers on the committee. He truly stood up for working people of all stripes time and time again. He made it a focus to make sure that individuals rights are protected by law as they interact with the most powerful financial companies in the world. His legacy on the committee and his impact on consumer banking law will live forward for decades to come.

From timeless issues such as housing for the poor, to newer issues like the protection of consumers' private banking information in the online world, Congressman VENTO was ahead of the curve, and on the people's side. I will truly miss Congressman VENTO, Congress is truly diminished by his absence. Let me convey to Congressman VENTO's family, his dedicated longtime staff here in Washington and Minnesota, and to the people of Congressman VENTO's 4th district my strongest, and heartfelt condolences.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. FOWLER). Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the resolution.

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair announces that she will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 6 of rule XX.

Any record votes on postponed questions will be taken tomorrow.

SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING BURMA

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 328) expressing the sense of the Congress in recognition of the 10th anniversary of the free and fair elections in Burma and the urgent need to improve the democratic and human rights of the people of Burma, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 328

Whereas in 1988 thousands of Burmese citizens called for a democratic change in Burma and participated in peaceful demonstrations to achieve this result;
