

has always been, and continues to be, a defining feature of these colleges and universities in a society that in many ways remains hostile to people of color.”

It is important to note that the founders of these institutions recognized the importance of educating African Americans long before the Supreme Court ruled on the groundbreaking Brown v. Board of Education. Additionally, many of those who were part of the legal team that won that case were educated and trained at Howard University right here in our Nation’s capital.

Were it not for HBCUs, many of the great black minds of our time would not have had access to higher education. And some of the famous graduates include orator Booker T. Washington; civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King; Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall; world renowned opera singer Leontyne Price; entertainer Oprah Winfrey; and former Members of Congress that have already been noted, Kweisi Mfume and Parren Mitchell.

The great State of Ohio boasts two HBCUs, Wilberforce University and Central State University. Named in honor of the great abolitionist William Wilberforce, Wilberforce University was founded prior to the end of slavery in 1856 and is the Nation’s oldest private African American university. Former Congressman Floyd Flake is currently its President. Central State evolved from what was once a State-funded department of Wilberforce University known as the Combined Normal and Industrial Department. In 1941 the department expanded from a 2- to a 4-year program, and in 1947 it legally split from Wilberforce, becoming the College of Education and Industrial Arts at Wilberforce. The name was changed in 1951 to Central State College, and in 1965 the institution achieved its university status. I am the proud owner of an honorary doctorate degree from Central State University.

I am proud to have strong connections to HBCUs. Many of my family members attended, including my late mother, Mary Looney Tubbs, a graduate of Alabama State University; my late sister, Mattie Browder Still, a graduate of Alabama State University; and my sister Barbara Walker, who attended Morris Brown College. Additionally, my cousin Essie Baldwin attended Alabama State and my cousin Joan Wilson attended Morris Brown. Four of my staffers attended HBCUs. District Director Betty Pinkney and my health liaison are proud graduates of Central State. My Communications Director, Nicole Williams, a proud graduate of Spelman College; and my Scheduler, Lalla King, a proud graduate of Morgan State University.

As we continue to celebrate our HBCUs this week, it is my hope that we will begin to look at ways in which we can increase funding and resources for these historic institutions. Sadly, many of the HBCUs remain underfunded in comparison to their predominantly white counterparts. Today I call upon both the Federal and State governments to increase funding to HBCUs so that they can remain competitive and continue to educate the leaders of tomorrow. They are not only part of African American history, they are part of American history, and the treasures they hold should be preserved for generations to come.

HISTORICALLY BLACK COLLEGES

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentlewoman from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am very honored to join in this Special Order, and I salute my colleague the honorable EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON for her wisdom in selecting this time, September 10 through September 16, to be able to honor our historic historically black colleges across America.

Where would we be today if we did not have those refugees that allowed those ex-slaves to be able to come to a place of comfort and seek an educational opportunity? The colleges range throughout America, from New York to North and South Carolina to Georgia to Louisiana to Texas and many other places. They are the places where young people could not be educated elsewhere because of the dual society and the very hostile segregation that existed in America. These historically black colleges created the opportunities for geniuses to be educated.

I am very proud of several of the institutions in our State, and there are so many in the State of Texas, two that happen to be in my jurisdiction that I am particularly proud to mention: Texas Southern University that was created out of the segregated society of Texas. Heman Sweatt, who wanted to attend the University of Texas Law School, could not do so because the doors were closed. So they allowed him to go in the basement of that school but realizing that they could not block Negroes in the 1940s from achieving an education, the birth of Texas Southern University. How proud we are that out of that institution that came out of the ashes of segregation we had the magnificent Members of this body, the honorable Barbara Jordan and Mickey Leland, both graduates of Texas Southern University. Its neighbor just down the street, Prairie View A&M University, has produced some of the outstanding African American engineers who have gone on to NASA and other institutions of engineering prominence to be able to be the scientists, the engineers, and the mathematicians of this day and time.

It is interesting to note that historically black colleges have always been alongside the black church, the place where the fight for segregation to end could find a place of comfort. Many do not know that there were few places that African Americans could meet in the 1800s and certainly in the 1900s. There were few places that African Americans could meet as they began to strategize for the civil rights movement after the Brown v. Topeka Board of Education case of Thurgood Marshall’s. They could meet at historically black colleges. In fact, Howard University is the anchor of civil rights lawyers. The first place that civil rights lawyers could be trained was at Howard University. And major lawyers who, of course, led the way of the civil rights litigation of the 1950s and 1960s, lawyers who protected the rights of civil rights workers in the Deep South, came out of historically black colleges. And they were the places where the civil rights workers could meet, where the civil rights strategists could meet, with the likes of Martin Luther King, with the likes of Julian Bond, with the likes of Andrew Young, could meet and strategize. And, of course, many of them were the products of African American churches and denominations that provided the resources for those institutions.

Let me speak of today because I think there is a challenge for historically black colleges, one, in our recognition, but they should be a challenge in this government. We have to do much better by historically black colleges. If you compare the research grants that have been given to other institutions of learning, the black colleges have not had their equal share. That is patently unfair. And I am delighted that Texas Southern University will be hosting in February of 2007 a major minority institute research conference to focus on that absence of dollars coming from the Federal Government because those colleges are equal too. I know they are equal because they rose to the occasion when the flood waters and winds raged in the Gulf Coast region. Those schools that were devastated were able to seek refuge for their students in other historically black colleges. Dr. Francis, who
