

Like Ms. Farrow, my good friend Pam Omidyar—the founder and chair of the Board of Humanity United—has also fasted for more than a month in solidarity with the Darfurian refugees.

Mia Farrow and Pam Omidyar enjoy liberty and wealth. They do not need to do this. But through their actions, they both so generously speak for those the world ignores.

The terrible situation in Darfur deteriorates with each passing day. But we don't hear much about it. It has long since faded from the front pages in the face of everything else going on in our economy and the two wars we wage in the Middle East.

We cannot ignore this crisis. The United States has officially and appropriately recognized that what is happening in Darfur is genocide. For the more than 2.4 million people who have been displaced against their will, we cannot look the other way and cannot stand idly by.

Most of the people of Darfur depend on international aid to survive day-to-day. The United Nations has agreed to send 26,000 peacekeepers to Darfur, but they face an uphill fight—they have struggled to get the resources they need to ensure the safety of those who live in Darfur and to end this crisis.

Making matters worse, when the International Criminal Court recently issued a warrant to arrest the President of Sudan—President Bashir—for war crimes and crimes against humanity, he responded by expelling 13 non-governmental organizations that had been distributing food and medicine to the people in Darfur.

Because of its economic investments, China has unique leverage with Sudan. It is important that China uses that influence to help the people of Darfur.

I appreciate the work of Major General Jonathan Scott Gration—the President's special envoy to Sudan—but we must do more to put Darfur at the forefront of our foreign-policy agenda. And we must be clear about our objectives.

The Sudanese government has repeatedly proven untrustworthy at the negotiating table. As the administration and our special envoy develop a new policy, we must consider how we can get Khartoum to change its behavior.

There have been too many people in too many camps for too many years—and the world has been silent for far too long.

We have no excuse to do anything short of all we can do to ensure aid groups are on the ground in Darfur, and that they can do their jobs—to ensure a political process is in place, and that it can work—and to help save the lives of millions.

TRIBUTE TO HONOR FLIGHT

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I would like to take a moment to recognize the first Honor Flight from Kentucky for the 2009 operational season.

Many members of this body have had the chance to see their constituents at the World War II Memorial because of the noble work Honor Flight does in transporting surviving World War II veterans from around the country to see their memorial free of charge. I am honored to have been invited to participate in previous flights from the Commonwealth, and I regret that my schedule prevented me from attending the one that took place this past weekend. I hope to have the chance once again to visit with Kentucky Honor Flight participants.

On Saturday, May 16, Honor Flight's Bluegrass Chapter arrived in our Nation's Capital with 79 World War II veterans from my home State of Kentucky to see the memorial which they inspired. It is my hope that these veterans felt a sense of pride in seeing their memorial after all, pride is the very same feeling these men and women inspire in their fellow Americans.

In my previous experiences in meeting with the participants of Honor Flight trips, people of all ages have been humbled by the presence of these veterans at the memorial. School children have shook hands with the men and women who served in World War II and thanked them for their service. Others have asked for the privilege of taking a photo with a real-life American hero. Still more, including myself, have shared stories that have been passed down through generations about how World War II affected their family. In watching these interactions, one thing is clear: the sacrifices that these men and women made will never be forgotten.

I wish to express my sincere gratitude to the Kentucky veterans who were here over the weekend for having served to protect our great nation's principles from the enemies of freedom. I ask unanimous consent that the names of the 79 World War II veterans from the Commonwealth be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WORLD WAR II VETERANS

Allen Courts, Robert Adams, Charles Alessandro, Donald Cobb, Kenneth Gillespie, Guthrie Catlin, Joe Terrell, Donivan Mahuron, George Spaulding, George Schembari, Dale Tinkle, Jack Distler, Walter Pearce, Joseph Crouse, Kathleen Drummond, Clarence Lange, Leroy Lange, Marcus Shearer, Garland Lewis, Gordon Lewis.

Herbert Lewis, William Morris, Dewey Smith, Roy Ricketts, Frank Mellon, Jr., Hugo Becker, Robert Byrum, Carl Kiesler, Nelson Moody, Murrell Ramsey, George Pearl, Chesterfield Pulliam, John Canary, William Grantz, Jack McQuair, William Miller, John Noonan, Irvine Stevens, Joseph Blincoe, Richard Burnett.

Charles Branson, Francis Kindred, Gustave LaFontaine, Carolean MacDonald, Carroll Hackett, Ira Johnston, Billy Turner, William Fender, John Hinkebein, Richard Yann, Edwin Casada, Fitzhugh Roy, Henry Anderson, Marvin Lawson, George Greathouse, Paul Berrier, Sr., Thomas Napier, Thomas Roberts, Ralph Stengel, Chester Sublett.

Frederick Kleinschmidt, James Williams, Elmer Givan, Leslie Powers, Marion Crockett, Edward Goldner, Loren Charley, Edgar Hodges, Joseph Johnson, Alvin Lawyer, Orin Bond, Antonio Martinez, John Eckert, Lee Bumpus, Donald King, Marcus Combs, Norman Miller, Allen Jones, Roy Vance.

CREDIT CARDHOLDERS' BILL OF RIGHTS ACT OF 2009

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I opposed this legislation because it will likely have the unintended consequence of restricting credit to those who need it most. The major economic issue at play is the ability of financial institutions to utilize risk-based pricing to determine how much to charge an individual for credit. Risk-based pricing essentially permits a lender to charge a higher price to individuals who are at a great risk for nonpayment. More sophisticated pricing has also expanded credit to those who otherwise would not be eligible for a credit card.

Financial institutions that offer credit cards face four major risks. One, the lending they provide is not secured by collateral. Two, a creditor has no way of knowing when a cardholder loses his job and the income he would need to repay his debt. Three, a borrower can max out the full amount of his limit without advance notice. And four, unlike other forms of lending, credit cards are relatively more susceptible to fraud.

Since it is impossible for a lender to know when a borrower will default, credit card companies carefully monitor their cardholders' activity. A delinquent payment, exceeding one's credit limit or bouncing a check acts as an early warning sign that help firms identify higher risk cardholders. In order to manage these risks, credit card companies use certain practices to protect themselves from the possibility of default.

Any legislation or regulation that restricts the ability of credit card issuers to adequately price risk could have several unintended consequences. Investors who in the past may have been attracted to the relatively higher returns afforded securitized credit card assets may shift their funds into alternative sources of lending. As a result, credit card companies may increase interest rates on all card holders, increase monthly minimum payments, reduce credit limits or simply issue fewer cards.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, very few people in America today would argue that our health care system is not in need of reform. It is a travesty that in the richest, most powerful country in the world, there are more than 47 million people without health insurance. That is an absolutely shocking number. It represents roughly one in six people who are going without regular trips to the doctor, forgoing needed