

talking about them. I think by reading letters from citizens in Ohio and what they are wrestling with every day, it brings this back down to a level that we need to think of more often when we debate these issues, and that is that every single day, of those 14,000 people who are losing their health insurance, there are many who do confront a health care crisis and lack the ability to respond to it other than showing up in an emergency room or hoping there will be free health care for them because they do not have the capacity to pay for it.

So I appreciate tremendously Senator BROWN's contribution, not only during those long days we spent day in and day out crafting the legislation that is now before us, but now, when we need to do more talking about what is in that bill. Because from a small business perspective, as well as the insured, the prevention, the quality of care, or workforce issues, they are all very significant contributions to our debate.

The Class Act, which allows individual people, at no government expense, to contribute to their own long-term care needs is one of the most innovative and creative ideas in our bill. That will provide not only substantial resources, but the ability of people to lead independent lives who have disabilities under what might otherwise force them to live under more expensive care or tapping into Medicare. In fact, the projections under the Congressional Budget Office is that we have saved $2 billion in Medicare costs just by having the Class Act—that is the long-term care provisions in the bill.

I invite all my colleagues to read the bill and to go to the briefings. I spent a little more than an hour today with my colleague from California, DIANNE FEINSTEIN, who requested that I come by with staff, with her staff, and go through the various sections of the bill and how it would work; how it would affect people in their State; how these various provisions would work.

I don't want to speak for her, but I think she was pleased to hear what we had done. Obviously, there is more to be done out of the Finance Committee, and I don't have answers for that because there is no bill out of the Finance Committee as yet, but on the part of the effort we have made, as our Members and colleagues look at what we have done, I think they will be pleasantly pleased about the efforts we have made to assist the insured with preexisting conditions, the caps, as I have mentioned, the credits we provide to small businesses to allow them to make that health care insurance available to their employees—as many would like to be able to do—at a cost they can afford, without crippling them because one employee ends up with a serious health condition thus raising the cost of every other employee and the cost of overall health care. That is gone as a result of what we have written in our legislation.

So I urge my colleagues to read the bill, to talk with us, to raise the questions you have, particularly over these weeks between now and the time we come back. I think you will again be pleased at the effort our colleagues have made to vastly improve the status quo and, I think, contribute significantly to where we need to be going with regard to health care reform.

So I am very grateful to Senator SHERROD BROWN of Ohio for his contribution.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

HONORING OUR ARMED FORCES

LIEUTENANT BRIAN N. BRADSHAW

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, I rise today to honor the life and selfless commitment of LT Brian N. Bradshaw to the U.S. Army and to our Nation.

Lieutenant Bradshaw died as a result of an improvised explosive device on June 25 in Kheyl, Afghanistan. He was 24 years old.

Coincidentally, Lieutenant Bradshaw's life was taken the same day that pop star Michael Jackson died. A Google News search reveals that the number of news stories in the past month filed about Michael Jackson is 142,929, the number filed about Lieutenant Bradshaw? Twenty-six.

It is time the American people know a bit more about this young man who sacrificed for his country his life, his family, and all his potential, giving up all he had and all he was going to be.

In his youth, Lieutenant Bradshaw served his community in Steilacoom, WA, as a search-and-rescue volunteer, as an altar boy, and as a summer camp counselor. Family and friends describe him as a man with "a wry sense of humor" and a deep love for American history.

He graduated from Pacific Lutheran University in the spring of 2007 and joined the Army and began service in Afghanistan in March of 2009. As a member of the U.S. Army, Lieutenant Bradshaw served in the 1st Battalion, 501st Parachute Infantry Regiment, 4th Airborne Brigade Combat Team, 25th Infantry Division, and was stationed at Fort Richardson, AK.

Described as a man who found more meaning in actions than words, it is no surprise that Lieutenant Bradshaw found meaning in his service in Operation Enduring Freedom. In the course of his deployment, he sought to help the less fortunate people of Afghanistan and to improve life for the children there, frequently writing home for packages of gifts to give to local children.

Lieutenant Bradshaw found his voice in the honor and patriotism of the Army. With a father who is a retired National Guard helicopter pilot and a mother who is a retired Army nurse, Lieutenant Bradshaw was a man with the military in his blood.

Thus, it is only fitting the transfer of his remains on June 25 to Bagram Air Force Base was carried out in a ceremony of honor and patriotism that typifies the ideals of the U.S. Armed Forces.

Sent to retrieve Lieutenant Bradshaw's body were members of the Air National Guard from my home State of Georgia. On their sad mission, they landed their C-130 using night-vision goggles in blackout conditions. What appeared to be hundreds of his fellow soldiers in his company stood in formation in the dark as Lieutenant Bradshaw's body was carried aboard the plane.

In a letter to Lieutenant Bradshaw's family, CPT James Adair and MSG Paul Riley of the Georgia Air National Guard, who were present at the ceremony, described the experience:

Everyone we talked to spoke well of him—his character, his accomplishments and how well they liked him. Before closing up the back of the aircraft, one of Brian's men, with tears running down his face, said, "That's my platoon leader, please take care of him."

The world may have been occupied with other things, the media with other stories. But for one brief moment, the war stopped to honor LT Brian Bradshaw.

Mr. President, it is my honor and privilege today to pay tribute to Lieutenant Bradshaw, who illustrates the commitment to excellence, honor, and courage that exemplifies our Nation. It is thanks to citizens such as him that America has been and will continue to be a great and free Nation.

HEALTH CARE REFORM

Mr. REID. Mr. President, we have come so very far.

But there are some who think we should scrap everything we have accomplished and go back to square one. The truth is that throwing out all the great work we have done until now would be a terrible waste of time, energy and hard work.

There are some who do not think now is the right time to reform health care. In reality, for many who feel that way, there will never be a good time to reform health care.

It is easy to talk only about the part of the road we have yet to cover. As any parent knows, for some, the only question is, "Are we there yet?"

But it would be a mistake not to also acknowledge and appreciate the great distance we have traveled.

For generations, we have been working to fix our broken health care system. This has been the No. 1 issue on our agenda for a long time now. Throughout this year alone, we have explored numerous proposals in numerous bipartisan roundtables, committee hearings and constituent meetings.

Harry Truman recognized long ago that we must do more to make it easier to live a healthy life in America. Shortly after the Second World War, he lamented the fact that millions of our own lack "a full measure of opportunity to achieve and enjoy good health." He knew it was wrong that
