

have happened here on the floor, where we have the authority already in rule XXII. But we have asked our two leaders to clarify and state and notify all of us how we are going to handle issues during this Congress. The way we are going to handle it when it comes to the talking filibuster is we are going to require Senators to be here to object. No more phone-in filibusters. We are going to require Senators to come down and state their objections, to come down and actually speak. If they have a problem with moving forward, they need to come and speak about it. If they want to start a filibuster, they should be here to speak on the floor. What is going to happen is the majority of Senators who want to see legislation get done may have to do a little work and be here late nights, but that is part of it. That is what we signed up for. It is like the Senator from Tennessee said a few moments ago. We all worked very hard to get here, and we came here to work for the country. If we are ever going to have a chance of resolving the big and difficult issues that face our Nation—issues such as our debt and deficit; issues such as the fiscal cliff; a whole set of issues including tax reform, entitlement reform—we can bet our last dollar those things are going to happen in the Senate. That is where things get done.

The fiscal cliff, with all due respect to the House, didn't happen in the House, it happened in the Senate. The minority leader and the Vice President worked it out. That is the way things have always gotten done, for the most part, in American history, and that is the way we need to allow things to get done in this Congress, because we have too many big issues to block everything that is coming through on the Senate floor.

Again, I wish to thank Senator LEVIN and Senator MCCAIN for leading this effort. They are great leaders. I thank Senator Kyl, Senator BARRASSO, Senator ALEXANDER. Participating in those meetings with my Republican colleagues was a great experience, to listen to them, listen to their concerns. I think it was an education for all the Democrats to have that quality time where we did listen and then they listened to us. I think that was very important. We need to do more of that around here. We will get a lot more done if we do.

Also, our Democratic colleagues, of course led by Senator LEVIN, Senator SCHUMER, and Senator CARDIN, everybody contributed, and I think it is something we should be proud of and it is also a great victory for bipartisanship. It is a great victory for bipartisanship. I think that is what the American people are screaming out for: for us to work together to get things done, and this is a good example of that.

EXTENSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the period of morning business be extended until 7:15 p.m. today, and that all provisions of the previous order remain in effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Georgia.

THANKING OUR COLLEAGUES

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, as I walked to the Capitol, I had not intended to speak. But when I came in and started listening to Senator PRYOR and Senator LEVIN, and I listened earlier today to Senator MCCAIN and now Senator ALEXANDER, it made me want to come to the floor and thank them for the effort they have made to hopefully make us a better working body in the next 2 years than we would have been otherwise preceding this agreement.

When Senator ALEXANDER made the remarks about our predecessor, Richard Russell, and when he came home to Georgia after a rigorous debate, an arduous debate, that took place on civil rights, it made me recognize the appreciation and respect our predecessors had for the result of the debating process.

As I listened to Senator PRYOR, I had a flashback to 2 weeks ago when a number of us attended the movie "Lincoln." It was a screening of the movie downstairs, and Steven Spielberg was there. I thought about those great scenes in the movie "Lincoln" where the U.S. Congress debated slavery and whether we were going to abolish it. We came to a decision, we had a vote, we debated it, and the abolition of slavery took place, all because the Congress functioned, all because politicians took the issues to the floor. They challenged one another. They worked hard for what they thought was best for the country. I think tonight when we vote on the changes that will be adopted, we preserve the interests of the minority. We preserve the best heritage of this body. We put ourselves in a state where we will debate on the floor of the Senate and make decisions for the American people, and the result will be a better country and a better product by the U.S. Senate.

So I thank, Senator ALEXANDER, Senator PRYOR, Senator MCCAIN, wherever you might be, and Senator CARL LEVIN, for a job well done.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MERKLEY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. SHAHEEN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MERKLEY. Madam President, I rise to share a few comments on the votes that we are about to take. In particular, I am struck by the enormous amount of conversation over the last few days over how we make this body, our beloved Senate, work more effectively in addressing the big issues facing America.

I think all of us have had the experience of our constituents back home recognizing that the last 2 years, and many years before, were ones that we had a particular growing element of paralysis that we had a responsibility to address. Tonight the Senate is going to be speaking in a bipartisan fashion and saying this cannot continue in the same way; that we need to take steps toward having a more functional Senate.

I don't think it will come as a surprise to anyone in this Chamber that I had hoped we would go a little further in addressing the silent filibuster that has been haunting us in these Halls. But here is the important thing. The important thing is that this Chamber is speaking tonight in a bipartisan voice, in a strong voice, saying we must take steps for this deliberation to work better. I think that message reverberates with the American people who are looking at the many challenges we face as a nation and who have been watching through the courtesy of C-SPAN and seeing that often, when they want us to be addressing these challenges, we are here in quorum calls.

A substantial amount of that can change, both with the modest steps we are taking tonight and, hopefully, in the collaboration between the two parties in the spirit of having a functioning legislature.

I want to thank a number of groups who have worked very hard to bring to us the importance of making change: the Communications Workers of America, the Sierra Club, the Alliance for Justice, the entire Fix the Senate Coalition, Daily Coast, Credo, the Progressive Campaign Committee, and the nearly half million Americans who have signed petitions to say: Please, Dear Senators, work hard on this. It matters. I think their voices were heard.

So I extend my appreciation to the leadership on both sides who have been working so hard to figure out these steps forward, to try to have a series of tools on the motion to proceed, to figure out how we can get more effectively to conference committee with the House, how we can cut down on the number of hours that are often wasted after a cloture vote on a nomination. So there is significant progress in a number of areas.

I certainly pledge to my majority leader and to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to remain engaged in this conversation about the functioning of the Senate. I appreciate the work they have done. I appreciate the steps we are taking tonight. I also appreciate the spirit in which many folks are saying: Let's make these things work. We hope they work. And if they don't get us there, let's return to this conversation because we do have that
