We need to think seriously because this is a major decision we are making. If my colleagues vote for cloture, they are substituting gun control for values, prayer in school, the Ten Commandments, religious expression, and prayers at memorial services. That is what they are substituting, one for the other.

Let's make it clear: If you are for gun control, vote for cloture. If you are for values and prayer and the Ten Commandments in school, vote against cloture.

I yield back the remainder of my time. I thank the minority leader for his courtesy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I will use a few minutes of my leader time to comment.

We intend to support the effort to move this legislation to conference. In fact, I endorse the actions taken by the majority leader in this case in so-called filling the tree. For the purpose of record and drawing a distinction on this bill from other bills where our majority leader has filled the tree prior to the time we have had any debate, this bill, S. 254, has been debated now for 8 days, from May 11 through May 20. We conducted 32 rollover votes. The Senate considered 38 amendments—18 Democratic amendments, 20 Republican amendments. We had 10 Democratic amendments agreed to, 17 Republican amendments agreed to, and then we had 10 Democratic and Republican amendments that were not agreed to, and 1 Republican amendment was withdrawn.

The point I am making is that we have had a very good debate on S. 254. We had that debate. We brought it to conclusion. We had a final vote. Now it is time to move it on to conference. I fully respect the Senator from New Hampshire and his determination to slow this process down because he objects to some of the aspects in this bill, and that is his right. But I will say I support the effort made by the majority leader to move this bill to conference and the method he has employed to do so.

Again, this is not the same as laying a bill down for the first time, filling the tree and precluding Democratic amendments. We have had a very good debate on this bill. We have had an opportunity to offer amendments. I cite S. 254 as the model I wish we would follow on all bills, a model that we historically and traditionally have always followed, which is to lay a bill down, allow it to be subject to amendments, have a good debate on amendments, have the votes, have the final vote, and then go to conference.

I hope we can do more such of this in the future as we consider other authorizing bills. I urge my Democratic colleagues and my Republican colleagues to support the effort this morning to move this legislation forward to conference so we can read what differences there are with the House—and there are many very important differences. I am hopeful we can bring this bill back from conference in time and that we can be as supportive of it as we were of the bill when it passed on May 20.

Mr. President, I encourage my colleagues to be supportive this morning. I yield the floor.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, pursuant to rule XXII, the Chair lays before the Senate the pending cloture motion, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, do hereby move to bring to a close debate on the substitute to Calendar No. 165, H.R. 1501, the juvenile justice bill.

CALL OF THE ROLL

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the mandatory quorum call under the rule has been waived.

VOTE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on the substitute amendment No. 1344 to H.R. 1501, the juvenile justice bill, shall be brought to a close? The yeas and nay are required. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Ohio (Mr. VOINOVICH) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAMS). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 77, nays 22, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 224 Leg.]
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now on amendment 1347. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized for up to 1 hour.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I yield whatever time he may consume to the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I thank my colleague for yielding. It is obvious from the Senate vote we just had that we could only have delayed this process for several days, but we could not have stopped the ultimate result, which would be sending a flawed Senate bill to a conference with the House. Since that is the case, I see no reason to burn up good will by forcing the Senate to vote again and again with the same result on the various procedural steps that lie before us.

If this is where the Senate will ultimately make its stand, I am willing to let the process move forward. However, some may be asking why we even made the attempt to stop this action. Sometimes it can be unclear why a Senator opposes or supports a bill. That’s especially true for procedural votes like the cloture vote we just had. So let me be clear why I voted the way I did—against cloture, against cutting off the debate on this measure, against moving this version of S. 254 to a conference with the House.

It’s not because I oppose the juvenile justice bill. Quite the opposite: it’s because I support good juvenile justice reform.

I support the many provisions of this legislation that truly address criminal violence, such as: Making sure violent juveniles are held accountable for their criminal actions; providing resources to states and localities to combat juvenile crime; toughening enforcement of the laws already on the books; helping communities promote school safety; helping parents and the media do more to limit the exposure of children to violence in the entertainment industry.

I support these reforms, and I could support the version of juvenile justice reform passed by the House.

However, the reason I opposed the Senate bill, and why I voted against cloture just now is because this is not a juvenile justice reform measure. It’s also a gun control measure.

Gun control has nothing to do with stopping youth violence and crime. Gun control of the kind proposed in this bill is not just ineffective—it is counterproductive because it would cut off lawful and beneficial uses of firearms.

And what may be the most important thing for anyone watching this debate to understand: gun control is something the House of Representatives has already said—with a bipartisan vote—it will not accept.

This is a set-up, folks. The House has said it will not accept gun control, and the Clinton-Gore Administration, along with those in Congress, have said they won’t accept a juvenile justice bill without gun control.

Does anybody else see a problem here? The problem is obvious. I don’t see how the conference committee will fashion a version of juvenile justice that both the House and Senate can live with—but I can tell you one thing: whatever comes out of this conference won’t have enough gun control in it for the Clinton-Gore administration.

In fact, I’m going to make a prediction here and now that whatever emerges from the conference committee will instantly be criticized—and maybe even threatened with a veto—because it doesn’t have enough gun control in it for the Clinton-Gore administration.

Does anybody else see a problem here? The problem is obvious. I don’t see how the conference committee will fashion a version of juvenile justice that both the House and Senate can live with—but I can tell you one thing: whatever comes out of this conference won’t have enough gun control in it for the Clinton-Gore administration.

I said, folks, that is “politics,” and I mean it, plain and simple.

Since the day the Senate took its vote, and since the day the House has taken its votes, we have watched the political maneuvering down at the White House and with the Vice President on this issue. Their debate isn’t about controlling violence and violent youth. It is about a narrow political agenda of the far left.

It was a campaign kicked off by the President who blamed the Littleton, Colorado killings on—and I quote from the speech that was later released by the White House and printed on its web page—“the huge hunting and sport shooting culture in America.”

What did the hunting culture and the sport-shooting culture in America have to do with the killings in Littleton, CO? In the mind of this President and this Vice President, it was politics. It was their entry once again into this debate on the agenda of the far left.

That’s right—the President wasn’t talking about the cultural crisis that distresses all of us on all sides of this issue and the breakdown of families, the powerlessness of communities, the alienation of young people, the violence and brutality promoted by the entertainment industry, the breakdown of families, the powerlessness of communities, the alienation of young people, the violence and brutality promoted by the entertainment industry.

It was all politics narrowly focused. No, what the President chose to blame was American hunters and spot shooters.

According to the Clinton-Gore administration, those who lawfully exercise a right protected by the United States Constitution—those people are responsible for the brutal, senseless killings at Columbine High School.

Shame on you, Mr. President. If you are one of the tens of thousands of adult volunteers who have helped train Boy Scouts and other young people in marksmanship, in one of the most successful youth sporting programs in history—according to the President, you’re part of the problem.

If you take your family on an annual hunting trip, a “bonding experience” for yourself and your kids—according to the Clinton-Gore administration, you’re part of the problem.

If you represent the United States of America in the Olympic shooting events, the gun control community wants you to know that you’re part of the problem.

If you hunt for food to put on your table for your family, according to the Clinton and Gore administration, because of Littleton, CO, you are part of the problem.

But it wasn’t enough to insult millions of law-abiding Americans by accusing them of responsibility for what happened in Littleton. The President went a step further to suggest that if these law-abiding citizens don’t go along with his gun control agenda and give up more of their liberty, then they don’t care about it, don’t care about the lives of children.

I find that unbelievable. But that is what was implied very clearly by this President—the leader of the free world accusing those who uphold the law of being responsible for those who break the law, accusing those who would passionately defend their civil liberties as being bad citizens, accusing those who may have a firearm for the sole purpose of recreation or defending themselves and their families, accusing these people of not wanting to save children’s lives.

And since that kickoff back in April, what have we seen?

We have seen an all-out public relations campaign headed by the White House against lawful firearm use.

We have seen political candidates of the left trying to outdo each other on gun control ideas. It is called have a gun control idea a week and somehow it may elect you in November of 2000.

Maybe this political campaign is scoring points with the gun control community. But I can tell you the people who I have been hearing from—the people outside the Capital Beltway who really have to deal with youth violence in their communities and in their schools—are saying gun control misses the point entirely.
July 28, 1999

They say that the solution to youth violence is far more complicated than adding one more layer to the 40,000 gun control laws—40,000, that is—right—that are already on the books.

They are saying they need real help and real ideas from Washington, DC, and not a political placebo for the 2000 election.

They are saying it is time to stop pushing political agendas and start pushing a law enforcement crime control agenda.

The Senate had a choice today between a bill that focused on juvenile justice reform and a bill that serves a political agenda.

I think the Senate’s vote today has made the job of the conference committee harder and perhaps impossible.

My choice would have been a clean bill that prioritized law enforcement and focused on solving the problem of youth violence.

That is the kind of bill I hope to see coming out of the conference. That is the kind of bill I will work for coming out of the conference—the kind of bill that I could support and I believe that America wants.

They don’t want politics in this issue. They want safer schools and safer streets and they want to know their children are safe from violent juveniles who would otherwise make these environments unsafe.

I thank my colleague from New Hampshire for yielding.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, we have had a very unusual set of circumstances this morning.

We had a vote on an issue involving gun control, yet we don’t get to speak until after the vote. Knowing what the result is, it does take out a little bit of the steam.

As most of my colleagues know, and I think most American people know, I have filibustered this bill now for about a week by asking for this cloture vote. As Senator CRAIG said, to simply allow me 3 minutes of his time to do this prior to 9:45 when we had the vote, to point out what we were about to do. Apparently not too many people were listening. I will point out again what we did.

The House passed H.R. 1501 and sent it here. That is a cultural bill that allows the display of the Ten Commandments in schools. It allows individual religious expression. It allows prayer in school memorial services. It allows faith-based groups to compete for Government juvenile justice grants. A good bill.

The purpose of that bill was to make a statement about juveniles that perhaps the issue is not guns but, rather, a cultural problem in our schools that we need to address. It was a well-thought-out bill. When that bill came to the Senate, I tried to get a vote up or down on it. Because of procedures by those who felt the bill could not be passed, I could not do it. I was shut out by the so-called legislative tree, a parliamentary tree, so I could not offer the bill and get a vote on it.

Next comes gun control, the Senate provisions. We have a House bill and a Senate bill. The Senate bill imposes strict limits on gun shows. It requires the sale of trigger locks with guns. It puts new limits on juvenile gun possession, the kinds of juveniles that Senator CRAIG spoke about, young teenagers who perhaps might go hunting or sports shooting. These are needless restrictions on law-abiding American citizens, young and old.

I think it is important to understand what has happened. This was substituted for this as a result of the vote we just had. This bill will go to conference. Someone said quite some time ago: If you shoot, it gets made. If you shoot, it gets made. You would probably get sick and wouldn’t want a part of either.

There is a lot of truth to that. I have never had a lot of confidence in those who say: We will clean this up in conference, or we will get a good bill out of conference, or let the conferees work their will.

We will see what kind of will is worked when this comes back. This is gun control, this is the Second Amendment. We voted by 77-22 to put more gun control on the American people. Call it what it is. When this comes out of conference, it will have gun control.

During the Senate’s consideration of S. 254, I was very upset that the gun control lobby in this country took advantage of a terrible tragedy. They did a good job of it. This was a very emotional time, a horrible tragedy, and the gun control people had a chance to the lid and scared off a lot of people.

What happened at Littleton was a terrible tragedy. People used this on the Senate floor and mounted an unprecedented assault on the second amendment rights of law-abiding American citizens. Not one law-abiding American citizen had anything to do with Columbine, not one. Not one law-abiding American citizen, not one gun owner or juvenile who is a law-abiding citizen had anything to do with Columbine. They were lawbreakers who did that at Columbine. They cast the blame, though, on the law-abiding gun owner, while leaving the movie moguls and video gamemakers who promote violence to children unscathed, with no mention. The problem is guns, they said, not the culture.

It is interesting that we take prayer and values out of the schools. What comes in? Violence, drugs, condoms. Hello, America, wake up.

But it is well orchestrated. It scared off enough people. It scared off the 19 or so votes we needed to block cloture on this bill. The House did the right thing; we did the wrong thing.

They need to take a hard, introspective look at our Nation’s culture. That bill did that. This bill does not do that. We see video games designed for young people that glorify violence. I say to the American people taking a few moments to listen, look at those video games your kids are watching. Take a look at what they are watching on the Internet. Take a look at some of the movies they are bringing home from Erol’s and watching after you go to bed. Parents might want to take a look and see what is going on in their children’s lives.

They glorify violence. They invite children to engage in fantasy killings. They never show the opposite. When somebody is shot in a video game, they don’t mention the fact that the person who was killed may have a family. They don’t talk about that. The only thing shown is the glorification of violence.

We see unconscionably violent movies such as “The Basketball Diaries” in which killings bear a striking resemblance to the Littleton massacre. It doesn’t mean every kid who watches that kind of a movie would do that. Of course it doesn’t. Some kids can handle it, others can’t. Why expose children to this?

We see music such as that of the so-called Marilyn Manson character that glorifies murder, suicide, sodomy. As a matter of fact, Platinum Records has big sales on those records glorifying murder, suicide, and sodomy. Our kids are listening to this in America and we blame guns. We blame guns with this vote.

We see the marketing of violence in many forms over the Internet. As I said, every child is not going to go to school and murder his classmates or his teacher because he watches or plays some video game or listens to violent music. Some will be influenced by that culture.

I have a shotgun next to my bed for as long as I can remember. At 8 or 9 years old, I knew how to use it. I was trained to use it in the proper way. I never thought about going to school and using it on anybody, and neither did my classmates who also had shotguns. I remember hearing it said when I grew up that if you read good books, good things might happen. By the same token, if a young person watches a bad film or plays an evil video game, bad things may happen. Why take a chance? But it is easier to blame the gun. Blame the gun; blame somebody else. Don’t look at what is going on in America. Wake up, America, before it is too late.

This is the second amendment to the Constitution that we just violated. It is not guns that caused this violence.

The first gun came over on a ship probably in 1607. Most likely somebody had a gun coming into Jamestown. For 375 years we had no school shootings, not one. How do we control it? Now the gun control. In America, we have 40,000 laws, according to Senator Craig, and now we have school shootings. Hello. Anybody listening? What is going on here? Is it guns? If it is, how come we didn’t have school shootings for 375 years when everybody had a gun?

I believe we should take a look at the news media. The news media has a distressing tendency to engage in sensationalism, the mindless pursuit of greater ratings. On April 20 this year when the children came tumbling out of Columbine High School with blood on their clothes, some children wounded and crying, what happened? With microphones in their face, they were asked: What was it like to witness your classmate’s death? Did he say anything as he died?

What they needed when they came out of that high school, my fellow Americans, was a hug.

Do you know what would have really made me feel good? If one of those in the news media had laid down the microphone and laid down the camera and walked up to one of those kids and put his arms around them or her arms around them and said, ‘I’m sorry. We love you.’

But, oh, no, we cannot do that. We have to get right in the face with the microphone and the camera and sensationalize this kind of violence. And then we blame guns.

When are we going to wake up, America, before it is too late? This bill addressed this—tried to. You cannot address these kinds of things with laws, but you can at least make an attempt. You take these things out of the school, but don’t have any choice. They can’t pray; they can’t talk about values. If somebody gets killed and the teachers try to comfort their kids by saying a prayer, the teacher gets fired. And we take away guns and blame guns.

H.R. 1301 declares that State and local governments have the power to display the Ten Commandments on public property. This would allow the public schools to post those Ten Commandments. Does anyone seriously argue that the Ten Commandments in a public school wouldn’t help kids at least think a little bit? They do represent the moral foundation of our entire civilization. Does anybody have a problem with, ‘Thou shalt not kill’? Does anybody have a problem with, ‘Thou shalt not steal’? ‘Thou shalt not bear false witness?’ ‘Honor thy father and mother?’ Does anybody have a problem with those? Is that going to threaten Western civilization, to put the wall of the school? Really? Come on.

H.R. 1501, this bill, declares that the expression of religious faith by individual persons is protected by the Constitution of the United States. This provision would allow greater freedom for individual students to express their religious faith, whatever it is, as well as to organize and participate in student-led religious activities in public school.

Does anyone seriously believe that greater religious freedom in the public schools would not improve the cultural environment in these schools? We spend more time in public schools in daily religion and values in our schools than we spend with our own kids. Think about it. If we spent as much time with our kids, loving our kids, as we do trying to deny them these kinds of things, we might have a better America. But let’s go back and blame guns. That is what we did here; we just blamed guns. We put in gun control and substituted it for this.

Faith-based organizations can compete for Government grants under this bill. Does anyone doubt that involving faith-based organizations in juvenile justice would improve our Nation’s juvenile justice system? These cultural approaches to solving the problem of youth violence offer great promise. This bill offers great promise. This bill offers gun control. This is the coward’s way out. This is the ostrich vote. Put your head in the sand. Blame the gun. Don’t deal with this issue. We wouldn’t want to have to do anything as controversial as perhaps putting the Ten Commandments in a school.

I was disappointed during the Senate’s consideration of this bill. I was disappointed with my conservative colleagues in the Senate, some of my pro-gun conservative colleagues in the Senate. I am disappointed. We had a chance to stop this. I spent a great deal of time over the past 2 weeks as we debated 250, arguing privately with these colleagues, trying to persuade them to hold the line against this onslaught of more gun control.

Gun shows, do you know what the goal is here? It is not instant background checks. It is not the elimination of gun shows—eliminate those, don’t allow any gun shows. After all, punish the law-abiding American who comes to a gun show, as millions do all across America every year. Punish them. That is the easy thing to do. Do not deal with the criminal. Punish the people who go to gun shows, the law-abiding American citizens.

You say, what if somebody, a bad person, gets a gun? Bad people are not going to come and get a gun there; they can get it easier somewhere else. Even if they do, if they commit a crime with it, we put them in jail and put them away as we do anybody else who commits a crime.

I am very disappointed about what the Senate did with respect to these gun shows. It seems evident to me, the practical effect of the Lautenberg amendment, adopted when Vice President Gore sat in the chair and proudly wore the tie-breaking vote. This will ruin the gun shows, put them out of business. That is the aim of the amendment, and that is the aim of this legislation that we just substituted in order to send it to conference. Everybody says we will get it out in conference. We will see about that. Don’t hold your breath.

I am very concerned about the effects of this so-called trigger lock amendment. Even though the amendment appears only to require trigger locks to be sold with guns, the legal effect may well do great damage to the second amendment rights of law-abiding gun owners because courts may construe the amendment as creating a new civil negligence standard under which gun owners will be seen as having a legal obligation to use their trigger locks or face legal liability if their gun is misused by some third party. What are we going to create now, a trigger lock inspector? ‘Knock, knock, knock. Hello. I’m the Government trigger lock inspector. I want to see if you have your trigger lock on your weapon.’

Some people say, no, it doesn’t require them to put it on their weapon; it just requires they buy it. Where is individual and personal accountability and responsibility? If you are dumb enough to leave a weapon without a trigger lock lying around where a kid can reach it, then you ought not own the gun. But that is personal responsibility and accountability. It is not the Government’s responsibility. It is certainly not even workable. But maybe it will come to that. We have Government bureaucrats who do just about everything in America. We might as well have 400,000 or 500,000 trigger lock inspectors, and they can knock on the door.

‘Mr. Smith, do you have a gun?’ ‘Yes, but I’m not going to give it to you.’ ‘Well, I wanted to see whether you have a trigger lock on your gun." It may come to that. Don't laugh. If this is such that gun owners have a legal obligation to use these trigger locks, they may be forced to put their safety and that of their families at risk. It is not unreasonable to imagine a single mother of a small child, gun for safety, panic stricken, struggling unsuccessfully with her trigger lock, at night, after hearing a burglar in the house. If she has no trigger lock, and she has that thing up on a 10-foot shelf, that is her choice. The Government tells her she has to use a trigger lock—or buy a trigger lock she doesn't even need.

What in the world is happening to this country, to the second amendment, to the Constitution? It is amazing how we pick some amendments, such as the first amendment, and say we must protect that amendment at all costs, but when it comes to the second amendment, no, we can skip that one. These are examples of the gross harm control amendments adopted by the Senate would do to second amendment rights. When the heat of the moment is gone and the passions so shamelessly stirred up by the gun control lobby have subsided, many of those who have supported these amendments will realize they have done the second amendment serious and lasting harm. But I don't want to see any tears; I don't want to hear any whining; I don't want to hear any, "I'm sorry"; I don't want to hear any, "My gosh, why did I do that? What happened? Where was I when they took the second amendment rights away? Where was I when they took the Constitution?" I don't want to hear it. It is too late.

Great experts have repeatedly shown that criminals do not go to gun stores, complete the necessary forms, and leave with legally purchased weapons. "Hello, I am going to use my gun tonight in an armed robbery. I would like to purchase it, please. Where do I fill out the forms?" Criminals are going to buy their guns on the black market or they are going to steal them. I have had people tell me flat out: I might as well buy guns on the black market. It is a lot safer to me. The Government doesn't know I have it.

That is pretty scary. Gun control has not been shown to reduce crime. Washington, DC, where we are now, has the most crime in all America. The only people who own guns in Washington are the criminals. They have them. You can't go. You are the worst citizen. But they have them. Crime has really gone down dramatically in Washington, hasn't it? Gun control has really worked here. Gun control attacks a serious problem from the wrong angle. Sixty million Americans own 200 million firearms. That is a very interesting statistic. Sixty million Americans own 200 million firearms, including 60 million handguns.

Yet four-tenths of 1 percent of those handguns will be used to commit a crime. So 99.6 percent of all handguns are used legally; 99.6 percent, the good guys. We substituted S. 254 for H.R. 1501, right here on the floor of the Senate.

Some argue the crime problem is the result of too much personal freedom. It is not personal freedom that is the problem. It is moral decadence. This bill tries to at least help us deal with it. It is moral decadence. It is a cultural, moral problem and it is getting worse by the day.

We look, in this body, for any excuse—guns, whatever—to look the other way. Maybe we will have a bill tomorrow to ban knives and then baseball bats, maybe cars. They kill about 45 million people a year. Maybe we ought to ban them.

It is a revolving door criminal system. That is what the problem is. Moral decadence and a revolving door criminal justice system that puts the average murderer on the street in two years. That is right. The average murderer walks out of prison, if he goes to prison—some like Mr. Simpson never go to prison when they should. Yes, that is right, some like Mr. Simpson never go to prison when they should. But the average murderer in this country, if he goes to jail, serves 7 years for murder. But is it the gun's fault, isn't it? We cannot blame the judges, cannot blame the prosecutors, cannot blame the court system. We have to blame guns; blame the peaceful citizen who has the right to own a gun to protect himself.

I am proud I voted the way I did against clouture. I am proud I voted for H.R. 1501 and against S. 254. I am proud I stood up here year after year, month after month, whatever it takes to make this case because I know I am right, and I am going to continue to do it.

When this bill comes out of conference, I am going to filibuster it again for as long as I can. I am going to do everything I can to kill it, whatever I can do. I am only one person. In the movie, "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," another Mr. Smith, Jimmy Stewart, dropped on the floor of the Senate after several hours, 23 I think. I think he even beat Strom Thurmond, if I am not mistaken. The filibuster. He dropped on the floor of the Senate amongst a pile of newspapers. Maybe that is what I have to do. Maybe I will do that. I don't know. I know one thing; S. 254 is wrong and H.R. 1501 is right. I am going to fight to the death to defend the constitutional right of Americans, including the right to keep and bear arms. Many of us who are veterans in the fight to protect the second amendment know the bold and clear words of the second amendment by heart. We cannot say them often enough if we are to educate our fellow citizens about the unmistakable meaning and intent behind those words of that most besieged provision of the Bill of Rights.

It is pretty clear:

A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed.

Tell me where there is anything in that amendment that allows us to do this under the Constitution of the United States of America? I stood right there where the pages are sitting and took the oath twice when I came to the Senate to protect and defend the Constitution. If the Senate after several hours, 23 I supposed I am not allowed to filibuster. He dropped on the floor of the Senate. It is just simply not possible under the second amendment to do in any rational way. Yet many of the self-appointed leading lights of the anti-gun zealots think what they like to call the "public interest" requires it. The public interest is to preserve and protect the Constitution of the United States of America. That is what the public interest is and nothing else. You trample on the Constitution; you trample on the public interest.

Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire has 30 minutes remaining.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. I thank the Chair. Mr. President, these solemn words that all of us revere in the second amendment could not be more clear. There is no discussion about what those words mean. I am fascinated as the days go by, the more I am in politics, the more I read about constitutional scholars making unconstitutional arguments. Frankly, I am sick of it. The more recognition these constitutional scholars get, the more unconstitutional their arguments get.

How can anybody read the second amendment to the Constitution of the United States and come up with gun control? It is just simply not possible to do in any rational way. Yet many of the self-appointed leading lights of constitutional law continue to try to throw the second amendment into oblivion, to throw it on the trash heap.

There are 40,000 gun laws already. We can pass a few more and stop law-abiding Americans from going to gun shows. Let's just keep sitting back, America, keep sitting back on your hands—I might use another word if I were not on the Senate floor—and let it happen. Don’t do anything. Don’t stand up.

You need to start voting, my fellow Americans. You need to start looking at who is doing this to you and to the Constitution of the United States of America, and you need to start throwing those people out of here. That is what you need to do. I do not care with what party they are. It is irrelevant.

These are the same legal scholars who find a constitutional right to abortion, to solicitation, to contributions, to expression, to travel, to privacy, and to a wall of separation between church and state, none of which are mentioned anywhere in the text of that hallowed document. Nowhere. But, oh, they find it. Abortion, where is that in the Constitution?

I do not know if the scholars have read what our founders have said, but somehow I think it is reasonable to accept the premise that those who wrote the Constitution might have known what they were talking about; maybe they knew what they intended; maybe they knew what they intended since they wrote the document.

It is interesting to read some of their words on the second amendment. I am not sure the scholars have read them. If they have, they are not listening. I have read them. Let me quote a few.

The father of the Constitution, James Madison, made absolutely clear what the second amendment means. Mr. Madison declared that the Constitution preserves “the advantage of being armed[,] which Americans possess over the people of almost every other Nation...”

Thomas Jefferson, who wrote the Declaration of Independence, put it this way. Because of the second amendment, Jefferson proclaimed: “No free man shall ever be debarred the use of arms.”

Another Founding Father, George Mason of Virginia, upon whose Virginia Bill of Rights the Federal Bill of Rights was based, explained that the second amendment means that the militia shall “consist now of the whole people, except a few public officials.”

The whole people will now have the right in the case of tyranny to go to their homes and pick up their arms and protect themselves. That is the purpose of the second amendment. It is not about sport shooting. It is not about hunting. It is about protection, the right of a person to protect himself or herself from tyranny, from enemies.

Sadly, the modern day enemies of the second amendment choose to ignore what the founders said. I do not think they do it deliberately. I think they deliberately ignored it. They knew exactly what they were doing.

They are trampling on the Constitution—it is a design—and the American people are going to sit back until it is too late—not if I have anything to do about it; not as long as I have a voice; not as long as I am on the Senate floor I am going to stop it.

Today they are unrelenting in their attacks on the second amendment, and they have a big advantage. They have a huge advantage because they have the major news media solidly on their side. I am not much on polls, but it would be interesting to take a little poll to find out how many of the news media pack a little sidearm somewhere to protect themselves in their homes. Do you want to take any bets?

More than 6 years ago, I was driving to work, coming in here to Washington. I did not have a gun on my person because I am traveling in Washington, DC, where by law I am not allowed to have my home gun. I think it would look good for a Senator to break the law. I do not like that law. I witnessed two people murdered in front of my eyes before the CIA.

When I got back to Washington, the person found out I had witnessed a murder, and the first question was not: Is your son OK? I just dropped him off at school 2 minutes before down the road. Not: How is your son? Is he OK? Is he handling it all right? Not: How are you? Are you OK? No. That was not the first question. That was not the second, either.

The first question was: Have you now changed your position on gun control? I witnessed a murder 20 minutes, 30 minutes before. That was the first question: Well, Senator, you are a conservative Republican, pro-gun. Have you now changed your position on the second amendment? I said: No, I have not. I wish I had had a gun. I might have prevented being murdered by an individual standing in the middle of a highway with an AK-47, shooting innocent people in their cars.

Time and time again, the media has asked me the same question about that very incident. The press have focused on those questions on gun control demonstrating how much the media is in the back pockets of the anti-gun zealots. And they are. They are working together. Frankly, they are winning. If you want to win, you lose. They won here today. They won again. Time and time again—and again and again—we trample on the Constitution of the United States of America.

You know what I said to the media? We ought to stop worrying about the terrorist’s gun and start worrying about tracking him down, trying him, convicting him, and getting rid of him so he can never do it again. Finally, after several years, he was tracked down. He was convicted. He is now on death row.

The man who committed those murders outside the CIA was an alien terrorist who fled overseas. In thinking about the right to keep and bear arms in international terms, I find a certain irony. We live in a time in which nearly all of the totalitarian regimes, which kept all of the guns in the hands of the government and out of the hands of the people they tyrannized, have collapsed—all but not all. Yet their utterly discredited philosophy of gun control still finds a great number of sympathizers and supporters in the world’s oldest democracy.

Two of my close friends escaped Castro’s Cuba in the late 1950s, early 1960s. The first thing Castro did when he took over was go door to door, house, literally, confiscating every weapon he could get. Because once he did that, his people were defenseless, and he knew it.

It is interesting: Tyrannical governments have no guns; Members of the Senate and the media take our guns. A bitter irony, isn’t it?

Seen in the light of the second amendment’s wording, and the meaning of that provision of the Constitution, as illuminated by the comments of our Nation’s founders, it is clear to me that the gun control amendments to S. 254 that were adopted by the Senate are a serious attack on the second amendment rights of all Americans.

It is interesting: Tyrannical governments have no guns; Members of the Senate and the media take our guns. A bitter irony, isn’t it?

The cloture vote we just took bringing debate on this bill to a close—which is what cloture is—shows where the votes are in the Senate. The Senate has sided with gun control, and they went against the cultural approach.

You are not going to cut down a big tree by snipping the leaves off of it. We are not going to solve this problem with gun control. We are going to solve this problem when we understand here in America that we have some severe cultural and moral problems.

We need to put values back in schools. We need to put God back in schools. We need to allow kids to have the right to pray and the right to talk about these things with their teachers so their teachers do not have to worry about being fired for giving comfort. A teacher in, I believe, New York was fired. When her children were agonizing over the fact that one of their classmates had died, and she offered to have them say a little prayer to comfort them, she was fired. The same people who advocated her firing support gun control.

I sought an opportunity to offer an amendment. I wanted to have a vote on H.R. 1501. I was not allowed to get it. All I wanted was a vote. I wanted the House bill. I wanted the Senate to be on record as to whether or not they supported this alternative, H.R. 1501, or this alternative, S. 254.

I stand right here at the desk of Daniel Webster. Webster was in many debates at this desk in the Old Senate Chamber. He was born in New Hampshire and represented New Hampshire in the Congress; and in a moment, I guess, when he wasn’t thinking properly he moved to Massachusetts, and he represented Massachusetts in the Senate. But this desk now for evermore belongs to the senior Senator from New Hampshire.

I can imagine what Webster would think and say in the great eloquence that he was able to deliver so many times on the floor of the Senate at this desk. I think about it often. But I can imagine what he might have thought had he been here in this debate this morning, after a vote, with a bunch of rules that nobody art in the Constitution, with us getting a chance to say why it was a bad vote. I wonder what Webster would have said. Those are the rules.

I wonder also what he would have said if he knew we took away part of the second amendment rights of law-abiding American citizens—probably the same thing he would have said if we tried to take the first amendment rights away or any other rights away under the Constitution. He would be appalled.

I am devastated by this vote personally because I have traveled all over America these past 2 years, and I know what is in the hearts of most of the American people out there because I have talked to them one-on-one, literally one-on-one, from California to Maine, to Florida, to Alabama. You name it, I have probably been in the State. And they are disgusted with what we do here. I am a Member of this body. I am not criticizing colleagues, but they get so sick and tired of it, watching the Constitution get trampled on, watching their taxes go up, watching their rights being taken away, watching 35 million of their fellow citizens aborted and murdered.

When we talk about culture, what do we tell the shooters in Columbine and the kids who do these terrible things? We say kids, do go to school today, be good kids, and while you are gone, we will abort your brothers and your sisters—35 million of them since 1973. We just can’t continue to do this. It will be business as usual. We will kill another 30 million over the next 25 years. It won’t stop.

It is not going to stop, and this isn’t going to stop, until the American people understand fully what is happening. When they do, hopefully, they are going to change the Government and get us back to the Constitution of the United States. That is what we swore on, that is what we took the oath to defend, and that is what we ought to do: Defend it and support it. Anything less than that, I don’t care if it is the 2nd amendment, the 4th amendment, the 16th amendment, the 22nd amendment, or the body of the Constitution itself, we should defend it all, because that is what we are here for.

It is with great sadness and regret that I have to say to the American people, you lost today. The second amendment today took another hit, and it will take many many times before we finally realize that enough is enough and we are going to change the people who do this to us time and time again. I hope it happens before it is too late because once we lose the Constitution and respect for it, we lose America. I had a citizen tell me—I will not mention the name, for obvious reasons—just recently, about a week ago, that he talked to a high-ranking Member in the House of Representatives. I will leave it at that. That high-ranking Member said, in a discussion with that individual: “The Constitution is nothing but a piece of paper.”

If that is true, there is not much hope. The last hope for America is the American people. It is not the Senate; it is not the House; it is the White House; it is the American people.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUTCHINSON). The Senator from California?

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise to claim time to speak on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may speak up to 1 hour.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I thank the Chair. Mr. President, I rise to offer my support to both the majority and the minority leaders in their ongoing efforts to get the juvenile justice bill to conference. I believe it is about time. I was an original cosponsor of the juvenile justice bill and helped write the gang abatement provisions of that bill. These provisions are really designed to provide a helping Federal hand to those State and local efforts, those State, and local efforts to fight those gangs, criminal gangs, who are now crossing State lines and illegally conducting criminal activities in various States all across this great country.

Both Houses of Congress passed this legislation weeks ago. There are a few commonsense measures, targeted and precise, that provide some regulation of firearms in this country. They are not sweeping, they are actually rather small, yet they have become the focus of debate and stopped a good bill from moving further. The issue of the bill has remained essentially in legislative purgatory, and the will of the Congress and the American people has so far been denied.

I will speak for a moment about the few so-called gun pieces that are in this bill. The first is a bill by Senator ASHCROFT in the Senate which essentially says that juveniles can’t possess or buy an assault weapon, assault weapons which were created for military use to kill large numbers of people in close combat—that is the purpose of these weapons, clearly. They were not made for civilian defensive purposes. It is a no-brainer to say that juveniles shouldn’t be able to buy them or possess them.

Secondly, trigger locks should be put on weapons sold to the American public. We know they can be. We know they are not costly, and we know they will save lives in instances such as the one that happened a few weeks ago, where a young teenager picked up a gun, playing a war game with a 7-year-old, and shot the 7-year-old, not knowing the gun was loaded. Again, a no-brainer. Why not sell a gun with a trigger lock if it is going to save innocent lives?

Thirdly, we would close certain gun show loopholes. Does anyone in America really believe that a juvenile should be able to go to a gun show and, unidentified, surreptitiously, buy a gun and not even have a background check? I don’t think so.

Finally, I authored a piece of legislation which to me was another no-brainer. We have in prior legislation prohibited American manufacturers from making the big banana clips, large ammunition-feeding devices, some of them as large as 250 rounds, which are used in the so-called grievance killings, 9 of which have taken place in high schools all across this great country in recent years.

That is the law of the land. You can’t make them domestically. You can’t sell those that are made domestically, and you can’t possess them, if they were made following the assault weapons legislation which became part of the crime bill in 1994.

There is a loophole. The loophole is that they can be imported to this country. Last year alone, from almost 20 different countries, 11.4 million large-capacity, ammunition-feeding devices, over 50,000 of them of more than 250 rounds, came into this country. The President couldn’t stop it by executive order, he had to legislate; and in fact, we did. Twenty Republicans voted for this. We had 59 votes in the Senate.

The chairman of the House Judiciary Committee moved it as an amendment on the floor, which was passed by unanimous consent in the House.

I will talk more about that in a moment because something rather drastically has happened to it.

At Columbine High School earlier this year, 13 innocent children died from gunshot wounds. We were all horrified. Since that time, dozens, if not hundreds, of other children across this Nation have also died from gunshot wounds. Congress has done nothing to solve the problem, no measures to try to prevent this from happening in the future.

On August 16, the children of Columbine will return to the very school that witnessed one of the worst incidents of gun violence this Nation has ever seen. When they return, they are going to be asking themselves, their parents, their teachers, and even us a lot of questions:
What has been done to make our school safer? Is it harder for kids to get guns today?

What has Congress done to help us? And who is really trying to make a difference?

Many of those same children came here last week during this month, and they asked us those same questions. I believe their questions went largely unanswered.

The children received assurances from leadership on both sides of the aisle that Congress is working hard to reduce or eliminate future school shootings and that Members of Congress sympathized with them and would do anything they could to help. But as one child from Littleton put it bluntly: "It is one thing for them to say they sympathized when I was a part of a world that is quite another to look down a gun barrel and think that maybe you are going to die."

This was from a girl just 17 years old, but a girl forced to grow up very quickly. And the reality of this past year is quite the same for many of the students of a very large form of violence every day because of gun violence.

I have asked fourth graders in California schools what is their greatest fear. Do you know what it is? Getting shot on the way to school.

Yet still we wait and we do nothing. We spent more than a week in this body debating and voting on dozens of provisions to stem the tide of youth violence in this country, and—as much as some would still refuse to accept it—to curb the flood of guns reaching criminals and children.

This debate isn't all about just controlling guns. I think this debate really has three pertinent parts to it: One, improving parenting. Parents need to spend more time with their children. They need to set limits and they need to see that they are observed. They need to spend a lot of time with the young people. This has become less and less in a world that requires two parents to work. That is one thing—better parenting.

There is a second thing. Youngsters are more exposed to violence today than I was when I was growing up in this country.

Third, the Nation is awash in guns. These three things make a very combustible mix, and we need to deal with it.

But still we wait and we do nothing.

The debate has come in many forms. As I have said—political maneuvering, parliamentary tactics, and others. Just recently, in a virtually unprecedented move, anti-gun control forces in the House of Representatives raised a last-minute "clip" challenge to the amendment I just voted on, which would stop the importation of these big clips—over 11 million of them last year.

It is my understanding this may have been the first time in history that such a challenge was raised to an amendment under Title 18, the criminal code. The first time in history—but that didn't stop the NRA or its supporters in this Congress.

The clear goal of this amendment, and of the overwhelming majority of Members in both Houses of Congress who voted for it, is to keep those for-ex, high-capacity ammunition clips off our streets and out of the hands of children and criminals. That would do anything they could to help. They are not good for defensive purposes. They are offensive in their use.

For most people, stopping these big clips from flowing into our country and to the hands of children and criminals is simply common sense. But not for the NRA. They have tried to kill this measure for years. They supported the loophole in the first place. This most recent attempt, the blue slip challenge, popped up at the last minute—after the amendment had passed the Senate, after it had passed the House unanimously, and after we had already waited for weeks for a conference to start the juvenile justice bill.

Essentially, the challenge raised to the bill involves the constitutional pre-rogatives of the House of Representa-tives to originate all revenue bills. Several Members of the House argue that because a large-capacity, ammunition-feeding devices creates some revenue for the Treasury, the prohibition of such importation would cost us money, and thus the entire juvenile justice bill becomes a revenue bill. Because no similar measure was in the House bill, it was pro-claimed that the Senate had illegally originated a revenue bill. After little debate and much misinformation, the House voted to send the juvenile jus-tice bill back to the Senate so that we could remove the clipping action.

I don't believe such action was warranted, and I would have liked an opportunity to make my case before the vote took place, but there wasn't time. In the end, I had little choice, and I picked up the telephone and called the Speaker of the House of Representa-tives, who was most gracious. He took my call. He said he did not want to kill the clip ban. He did not believe the House of Representatives—the major-ity—wanted to kill the clip ban, and he would support its reinstatement. I then called the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the very distinguished Henry Hyde of Illinois, and he had made the clip ban amendment on the floor, which passed unanimously in separate legislation. He said he was supportive of the clip ban. He said he would move to put it back in con-ference and that he believed a con-ference committee that he would ap-point on the House side would support its reinsertion into the bill.

Put plainly, we were sideswiped, and we were given no time to recover. But make no mistake, the juvenile justice bill is not a revenue bill, and this chal-lenge, I believe, was simply an attempt to further delay the will of the Amer-ican people.

I want to explain why I don't believe the clip import ban is a revenue meas-ure, as it is meant by the Constitution, despite what the House Parliamen-tarian has said. I want to put my views on the record in the hope that this type of cynical maneuver won't happen again in the future.

I am not a constitutional scholar, but to me, this is simple common sense. In my view, the mere fact that a small part of a very large bill may in-cidentally affect some revenue doesn't make the bill a revenue bill. The Consti-tution states that all bills for rais-ing revenue shall originate in the House. This has been interpreted to mean all bills affecting revenue. I guess, although because the clip ban does not raise revenue, it does affect revenue in a small way by causing the Treasury to lose the proceeds from a 4.2-percent tariff on ammunition clips that are used in certain types of fire-arms—I believe, handguns.

I don't believe the intent of this constitutional provision was to prevent Congress from ever passing a bill that somehow affects revenue. After all, almost everything we do, in some way, affects revenue. We constantly pass bills establishing or eliminating fees. We put new requirements on the executive branch that will clearly lead to increased costs. We establish pro-grams that will bring extra money to the Treasury in ways many people find hard to imagine. Our Founding Fathers wanted the House to originate legis-la- tion that raises taxes, and that I under-stand and concur with. But I don't be-lieve they meant for the House to originate every bill in Congress, which would be the logical extension of the arguments made during this very short debate.

The juvenile justice bill was clearly not a bill for raising revenue, and nei-ther was the clip ban amendment itself. The juvenile justice bill was a bill to stop crime. The clip ban was an amendment to eliminate large-capacity, ammunition-feeding devices from our streets. Any revenue affect was in-consequential. And any claim to the contrary is simply mistaken.

In fact, the revenue effect of this bill was so incidental that nobody even re-alized that tariffs would be lost until a

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

I have contrasted the inaction on the juvenile justice bill with the swift movement on providing special legal protections to certain business interests. In just a few months, big business few short weeks ago. Not when the amendment came to the Senate floor and passed. Not when the amendment came to the House floor and passed. Not during the days and weeks that the juvenile justice bills sat on the calendar.

Only when the pressure was finally getting too great—only when the Senate Majority Leader and the House Speaker promised conferences that week—only then did this issue come up for the first time, at the very last minute, before a rushed vote.

Mr. President, in at least two Supreme Court cases—U.S. versus Munoz in 1990 and another as far back as 1897—the Court has held that “revenue bills are those that levy taxes in the strict sense of the word, and are not bills for other purposes which may incidentally affect revenue.”

Clearly, Mr. President, the juvenile justice bill is not a bill that levies taxes “in the strict sense of the word,” but rather it is precisely the type of bill the Supreme Court agrees is not a revenue bill—one that is, and I quote it again, “for other purposes which may incidentally affect revenue.”

Unfortunately, the House of Representatives never had a chance to review those Court cases, because this issue came up so quickly.

In the end, whether or not a Senate bill is a revenue bill boils down to the opinion of a majority of House Members, and those Members have spoken by returning the juvenile justice bill to us for correction. But I firmly believe that if the House had been given an opportunity to study the facts and review the precedent, the outcome would have been different. Instead, the issue was rushed, the debate cut off, and the outcome predetermined. And I believe that we have now overcome the remaining hurdles and we can quickly move to conference on these bills, because we are running out of time.

With fewer than 8 legislative days left before the children of Columbine High go back to school, the future of this bill rests squarely with the Republican leadership in both the House and Senate. They have said they want to make progress with our gun laws, and they now have it within their power to do so.

I am encouraged that it now appears that the logjam has been broken, but the inventive and imaginative delays we have faced so far leave me wary of future shenanigans.

The question is, Will those who claim to support reasonable gun control finally put their money where their mouths are, or will they continue to use unprecedented parliamentary maneuvering to avoid the issue and give the NRA its very own Christmas in July?

I, for one, certainly hope that the American people win out, and I thank the majority leader for getting this process moving.

I also would like to extend my thanks to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Judiciary Committee for their support. Chairman Hyde was very supportive of the assault weapons legislation, which was moved as an amendment to the crime bill in 1994, and his integrity has remained strong and unchallenged in that regard.

That is the one confidence that I have that this clip ban has a chance to fly once again. That rests on the integrity of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, which I believe is unblemished, and also on the Speaker of the House of Representatives, both of whom have given me their firm assurances.

I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, today we have another opportunity to proceed to conference on the Hatch-Leahy juvenile justice bill. Or today we can be delayed, again, by those who prefer no action to conference to moving forward on the issues of juvenile violence and crime.

I came to the floor this Monday and last Wednesday to demonstrate the seriousness with which Senate Democrats take the matters included in S. 254, the Hatch-Leahy juvenile justice bill.

On Monday the majority leader was able to vitiate the cloture vote that had been scheduled and proceed to take up the House juvenile justice bill, H.R. 1501. He then offered amendment number 1344 to insert the text of S. 254, the Hatch-Leahy juvenile justice bill that passed the Senate after two weeks of open debate and after significant improvements on May 29, by a strong bipartisan vote of 73-25. In blocking the amendment, he struck Title VII of the Senate bill, which contained the amendment on the import ban for high capacity ammunition clips.

It was this provision that the House used to justify its decision to return S. 254 to the Senate on the ground that it contains what they consider a “revenue provision” that did not originate in the House. This, too, is consistent with the unanimous consent request that I first proposed last Wednesday and that the Majority Leader sought last Thursday.

I trust that once we obtain cloture on substituting the Senate bill for the House text, which is standard practice before seeking a conference, that the Majority Leader will move to instruct the conferees to reinsert the language that has been omitted from the Senate text to cure the technical objection of the House. That, too, would be consistent with the unanimous consent previously sought.

We will then be in position to have the Senate request the long-delayed conference and appoint its conferees.

One week ago, I took the extraordinary step of propounding a unanimous consent request to substitute the Senate bill for the House. Senate conference. I talked to the Majority Leader and the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee in advance of making the unanimous consent request. I noted the history of this measure and the need to move to conference expeditiously if we are to have these programs in place before school resumes in the fall in the course of my colloquy with the Majority Leader last week.

Two weeks ago, Republican leaders of the House and Senate were talking about appointing conferees by the end of that week. Instead, they took no action to move us toward a House-Senate conference but, instead, were moving us away from one. By propounding the Senate justice bill, they were beginning to try on behalf of congressional Democrats, to break the logjam. The unanimous consent would have cured the procedural technicality and would have resulted in the Senate requesting conference and appointing conferees without further delay.

While I regret that Republican objection was made to my request last Wednesday, I thank the majority leader for the steps he is taking. Senate Democrats have been ready to go to conference. Unfortunately, objection from the other side of the aisle has extended the normal process from literally seconds into days and possibly weeks before we can conference this important matter.

Today, the Senate takes the second step outlined in my unanimous request, moving toward substituting the Senate bill for the text sent to us by the House. Senators can cooperate in taking the additional steps outlined in conference and appointing conferees and conference expeditiously if we are to have these programs in place before school resumes in the fall.

Alternatively, Senators can exercise their procedural rights to obstruct each step of the way and require a series of cloture petitions and votes. I hope that in the interests of school safety and enacting the many worthwhile programs in the Hatch-Leahy juvenile justice bill, Senators will cooperate. The delay is costing us valuable time to get this juvenile justice legislation enacted before school resumes this fall.

I spoke to the Senate before the July 4th recess about the need to press forward without delay on this bill. I regret that it is beginning to look like I will be repeating that speech again as we approach the August recess and maybe even into September.

successfully lobbied for the passage of legislation to protect themselves against any accountability for actions or losses, or their products making a loss to consumers. This week the Senate is moving rather briskly on corporate welfare and other proposals.

Some on the other side of the aisle are dragging their feet and now actively obstructing the House and Senate from moving to appoint conferees on the juvenile justice bill that can make a difference in the lives of our children and families. New programs and protections for school children could be in place when school resumes this fall. The Hatch-Leahy juvenile justice bill is a firm and significant step in the right direction. The passage of this bill shows that when this body rolls up its sleeves and gets to work, we can make real and effective progress in our schools or in our streets. But we have an opportunity before us to do our part. It is unfortunate that the Senate is not moving full speed ahead to seize this opportunity to act on balanced, effective juvenile justice legislation.

I want to be assured that after the hard work we all put into crafting a good juvenile justice bill, that we can go to a House-Senate conference that is fair. We have worked too hard in the Senate for a strong bipartisan juvenile justice bill to simply shrug our shoulders when a narrow minority in the Senate would rather we do nothing. I urge all Senators to work to make today the day that we finally can request the overdue conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I hope and expect that cloture will be invoked shortly. It is my understanding that we will have then the opportunity to appoint conferees for the juvenile crime bill, which is something I have been working on with the majority leader for some time. I commend the leader for his commitment to this bill, and I thank my colleague from New Hampshire for allowing the Senate to work its will.

I appreciate the arguments my colleagues have made and agree with much of what they said. But, in the end, the House has passed different juvenile crime bills, and it is a conference committee’s task to reconcile those differences. It will be a difficult challenge since the Senate has an obligation to advocate for its position. Yet—at the same time—we must recognize that the House passed a bill that contains important criminal justice reform proposals, less spending, and no gun control provisions. In fact, the House defeated a separate gun control bill.

We must do our best to reconcile these bills. In the end, I hope and trust that this conference committee will produce a vehicle that the House, the Senate, and the President can support. If, however, some in positions of leadership and responsibility are unwilling to search for common ground and are content to simply politicize this issue, the change to do something meaningful for our Nation’s children may slip through our hands. I hope that does not happen and I hope that we can come together for the right reasons.

I want to say yet again that this is one of the most important bills that Congress will consider this year. The Judiciary Committee has worked on juvenile crime legislation for more than two years. The committee marked up the predecessor to S. 254 for nearly two months last Congress. And as you are aware, the Senate spend 2 full weeks this spring debating S. 254.

In 1997, juveniles accounted for nearly one fifth of all criminal arrests in the United States. Juveniles committed 13.5 percent of all murders, more than 17 percent of all rapes, nearly 30 percent of all robberies, and 50 percent of all arsons. In particular, schools are becoming more and more dangerous. Fifteen percent of students have reported being victimized at school. Additionally, more than half of the Nation’s public schools have reported that a crime had been committed on their campus.

Sadly, the killings at Columbine High School last Spring are not an isolated event. Similar shootings have occurred in recent years at schools in Pearl, Mississippi; which left two dead, West Paducah, Kentucky, which left three dead, Jonesboro, Arkansas, which left five dead, Edinboro, Pennsylvania, which left one dead, and Springfield, Oregon, which left two dead.

S. 254 provides an infusion of funds to state and local authorities to combat juvenile crimes and youth violence. While juvenile crime is largely a state and local issue, the federal government can play a valuable role in assisting the States fight juvenile crime and violence through flexible block grants. S. 254 provides $1 billion a year to the States to fight juvenile crime and prevent juvenile delinquency. Specifically, S. 254 includes a $450 million juvenile accountability incentive block grant to the States. States can use this grant to establish, improve, or maintain sanctions; build detention facilities for juvenile offenders; drug test juvenile offenders upon arrest; and require juvenile offenders to complete school or vocational training, among other reforms. S. 254 also includes the “Juvenile Brady” provision, which prohibits the dissemination of a firearm to persons who commit a violent felony as a juvenile and $75 million annually to help States upgrade juvenile felony records and provide school officials access to such juvenile felony records in appropriate circumstances. In addition, S. 254 provides more than $500 million annually to the States for prevention programs, some of which are specifically targeted toward gangs in schools, and it extends the Violent Crime Reduction Trust Fund through 2005 to ensure adequate funding of administration of justice programs.

In closing, I hope that we can proceed to the appointment of conferees. This will give us the opportunity to accomplish a real deal over the August recess, and I believe that it will allow us to approve a conference report the week after Labor Day. It would be fitting for Congress to wrap up this historic juvenile crime legislation when America’s children are returning to school from the summer recess.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be agreed to, the remaining amendments be withdrawn, the bill be advanced to third reading and passage occur, all without intervening action or debate.

I further ask consent that the Senate insist on its amendment, request a conference with the House, the conferees be instructed to include the above described amendment No. 343 in the conference report, and the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Amendment (No. 1344) was agreed to.

The Amendment (Nos. 1345, 1346, 1347, and 1348) were withdrawn.

The Amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H.R. 1501), as amended, was read the third time and passed.

(The text of the amendment No. 1344 was printed in the RECORD of Monday, July 26, 1999.)

Mr. HATCH said: Presiding Officer (Mr. HUTCHINSON) appointed Mr. HATCH, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. SESSIONS, Mr. LEAHY, and Mr. KENNEDY conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LOTT. Before I go to the next unanimous consent request, I again express my appreciation for the patience and for the cooperation of Senator SMITH in working through this process.

Personally, I believe very strongly that we need to have a good juvenile justice bill. It is a lot of very important provisions with regard to how we try juveniles who commit crime, how we incarcerate them, how we deal with school security, including...
Mr. President, I don't think there is anything the Senate consider--the Senate begin consideration of the reconciliation bill, which is the Tax Relief Act, and that the first 3 hours of debate be equally divided in the usual way for purposes of opening statements only.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative assistant read as follows:

A bill (S. 1429) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 101 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2000.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. President, I don't think there is any parent who hasn't had the experience of sending a child into a store with a $20 bill to buy a carton of milk, a loaf of bread, or perhaps a dozen eggs, and that child returns with the few essentials. In a demonstration of maturity and responsibility, the child returns the change to his or her parent. There is no question who the change belongs to. After all, the parent earned the money; it is needed to support the family; the family will certainly have important uses for it later. The child understands this. So does the parent. Most often, the change is returned to the household budget to take care of other important needs.

Washington needs to demonstrate the same responsibility when it comes to determining what to do with the change that is left over from running the government. There are surplus revenues in the Treasury. As with a child emerging from the grocery store, there are change left after Congress has met the necessities of running government.

In trying to balance the budget in 1997, Congress miscalculated the revenues that would be generated by the economy. After the same change—left, after Congress has met the necessities of running government.

Now, as the child returning change for the $20, we must hand back the money. We must do it in a broad-based way that is fair to those who provided the funds to Washington in the first place. We must do it through broad-based tax relief that helps individuals and families at all income levels meet their real needs.

The broad-based tax relief plan that passed out of the Finance Committee with bipartisan support will do just that. It will benefit nearly every working American. It will help restore equity to the Tax Code and provide American families with the resources they need to meet pressing concerns. It will help individuals and families save for self-reliance and retirement. It will help parents prepare for educational needs here is of 2 dependent children, and uninsured the boost they need to pay for health insurance. It will begin to restore fairness to the Tax Code by eliminating the marriage tax penalty.

Let me state exactly how the plan works and why it has received bipartisan support. This tax cut package will provide broad relief by reducing the 15-percent tax bracket that serves as the baseline for all taxpayers to 14 percent. In other words, no matter which tax bracket a family may be in, by cutting the 15-percent bracket, everyone will benefit as they will pay 14 percent on their first portion of taxable income. At the same time, this plan expands the 14 percent bracket, dropping millions of Americans who are now paying taxes at 28 percent down to the lower bracket.

For a middle-income family of four, these changes will mean a tax savings of over $450 a year. And these provisions have already found bipartisan support.

To restore equity to the Tax Code, this plan targets another bipartisan ob-jective by eliminating the marriage tax penalty. For too long, husbands and wives who have worked and paid taxes have been penalized by their dual incomes. I have heard of some couples who have actually chosen not to marry because of the tax penalties their marriage would incur.

This plan will fix that by giving working married couples the option of filing combined returns, using separate schedules to take advantage of the single filer tax rates and the single filer standard deduction.

This is a change that is long overdue. American families have been suffering under the unfair burden of the marriage tax penalty for too long. A simple example shows us why:

Robert and Diane are two single American families who have fallen in love and are planning on marriage. They both make roughly $50,000 a year. Now, under current law—when they get married, they each file separate returns— they each take a personal exemption and the standard deduction, giving them a taxable income of $43,000. After applying the tax rates for singles, they each owe tax of about $8,745.

If, however, Robert and Diane follow their hearts—get married and start a family—they realize that their total combined income would be $100,000. Should they marry, they would no longer be considered middle-class individuals, but many would regard them as a wealthy family, and under current law their combined income would be reduced by their two personal exemptions and by the standard deduction for married couples.

And here is where they would hit their first marriage penalty problem, discovering that their new standard deduction is significantly less than the combination of the two standard deductions they receive as singles.

But the marriage penalty does not end there. In fact, it gets worse. With their combined income, Robert and Diane—now considered by many to be wealthy—would have a taxable income of $87,400. This is where they would hit their second marriage penalty problem. The lowest tax rate bracket for married couples is less than twice as wide as the lowest tax rate bracket for singles. In other words, more of their income would now be taxable at higher rates. The result would be a total tax bill of $18,967, almost $1,500 more than they would have paid as singles. That steep increase would come at a time when they could least afford it, a time when just starting out as a married couple they would be looking to buy a house, raise a family, and save for education.

The legislation we introduce today—this broad-based tax relief—completely eliminates the marriage penalty for Robert and Diane. The Senate Finance Committee bill will allow Robert and Diane to file a joint return, but to calculate the AMT liability as if they had remained single. They would each get the benefit of the more generous standard deduction and of the more generous rate brackets. Under this new approach, they would pay a total tax of $17,490, which is a combination of what they each had paid before. This saves them almost $1,500.

But in restoring equity to the tax code, we do not stop with the marriage penalty. Another important measure contained in this broad-based tax relief plan is the elimination of the alternative minimum tax for middle-income families—families like David and Margaret Klaassen. Most of us know their story. The Tenth Circuit recently affirmed a decision that the Klaassens are required to pay the alternative minimum tax despite the fact that it may not have been Congress’ intent to impact families like the Klaassens when Congress passed the AMT.

David and Margaret Klaassen are the parents of 10 dependent children. They had an adjusted gross income of $83,000 and roughly $19,000 of itemized deductions relating to state and local taxes, medical expenses, interest, and charitable contributions. Their reported adjusted gross income was $63,500, and with 12 personal exemptions their taxable income was $34,000, resulting in a regular tax of $5,100.

That would seem fair. And the Klaassens paid the bill. However, the IRS flagged the return and determined that the family was liable for the alternative minimum tax, a provision in the code that was passed to make sure that wealthy individuals and families do not escape taxes by using tax shelters and other tools they might use to minimize their liability. The IRS determined an AMT deficiency of $1,100. For AMT purposes, the Klaassens are disallowed a $3,300 deduction for State and local taxes.

In addition, $2,100 in medical expenses were disallowed because of the 10-percent floor in AMT purposes. And finally, the Klaassens’ entire $29,000 deduction for personal exemptions was disallowed because of the AMT. These adjustments resulted in alternative minimum taxable income of $68,000—twice the taxable income that the Klaassens had without the AMT.

This simply is not fair. It is not what Congress intended. The Finance Committee bill will help return fairness to the tax code by allowing families to receive the full benefits from their personal exemptions. This will also restore taxpayers’ ability to receive their $500 per child tax credits, and other benefits that were intended to be available to middle-income families.

These are changes that are long overdue. Again, they have strong bipartisan support. But our broad-based Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999 does so much more.

This tax relief bill will help individuals and families find self-reliance and security in retirement through expanded individual retirement accounts, as well as through enhanced 401(k) plans, 403(b) plans and 457 plans. These are critical programs—along with Social Security and personal savings help individuals prepare for their golden years.

For savings through the workplace, there are 401(k) plans, 403(b) plans and 457 plans, each of which can be sponsored by different types of employers. For individual savings, there is either the traditional IRA or the Roth IRA. And all these different savings vehicles have different limits on how much individuals can save. However, our current system can do more, and the limitations that we placed on retirement savings in times of budgetary restraints should be reexamined in light of the current surplus. For example, the IRA contribution limit has not changed since 1982.

Had it simply been indexed for inflation, it would be almost $5,000 today. What an opportunity that would present middle-class families to prepare for their futures. And that’s exactly what benefits from IRAs—middle- and lower-income Americans.

Fifty-two percent of all IRA owners earn less than $50,000. This same group makes about 65 percent of all IRA contributions, and right now they are limited by the $2,000 cap on contributions. IRS statistics also show that the average contribution level in 1993 for people with less than $20,000 in income was $1,500.

Clearly, if the average contribution of modest-income taxpayers is $1,500, this demonstrates that many of these Americans want to make contributions to a tax-favored plan. To that end, the tax relief bill will incrementally increase the IRA contribution limit each year, starting in 1999, so that by 2005 the limit will be $5,000.

In the area of employer-provided savings vehicles, the current maximum pre-tax contribution to a 401(k) plan or a 403(b) annuity is $10,000.

In addition, the maximum contribution to a SIMPLE plan is $6,000. Those limits are indexed for cost-of-living increases.

There has traditionally been a differential in contribution limits among the various types of plans: IRAs having the lowest limits; SIMPLE plans having a greater limit, but not as much as a 401(k) plan; and 401(k) and 403(b) plans having the highest limits, but the greatest number of regulations.

Since the IRA limit will be raised to $5,000, the bill will increase limits for 401(k) and 403(b) plans to $15,000 and for SIMPLE plans to $10,000; thereby continuing the differential. The limit for 457(b) plans for government employees will increase to $10,000.

There is no question, with rising concerns about security and self-reliance in retirement, that these changes are needed. They will help individuals and families achieve their economic goals. But the benefits this legislation has for retirement planning do not stop here.

There are other provisions that will add new retirement vehicles, provide greater ability to transfer retirement savings between plans, promote retirement plans for small businesses, and simplify the retirement plan system for both employers and employees.

One provision will allow employees 50 years old or older to make catch-up contributions to their retirement plans. This will be most important for women, benefiting those who may have started their retirement savings late or who have taken time off to raise children.

Whatever the reason, once these individuals have reached 50, they will be eligible to make additional contributions to their retirement plans that are equal to 25 percent of the maximum allowable contribution. In other words, their total annual contribution could be 150 percent of the normal contribution.

Beyond restoring equity to the tax code and helping Americans prepare for retirement, the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999 will also help individuals and families gain access to health care—particularly those who are self-employed, or who are not covered by their employers—this legislation will enhance the tax deductibility of health insurance. It does this by accelerating the full deductibility for health insurance for the self-employed and by providing the same benefit on a phased-in basis to employees who are not covered by their employers.

In detail, the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999 will provide an above-the-line deduction for health insurance and for long-term care for which the taxpayer pays at least 50 percent of the premium. It will allow long-term care insurance to be offered in cafeteria plans and provide an additional dependency deduction to caretakers of elderly family members. To benefit small businesses, this legislation will accelerate the 100 percent deduction for health insurance of self-employed individuals beginning in 2000.

To help make education more affordable for families and students, the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999 strengthens educational savings opportunities by making college tuition plans tax-free. In other words, families—including grandparents, aunts, and uncles—can invest their after-tax income into a child’s educational future. And when the money is used for the child, it will be tax-free on buildup and withdrawal. This legislation also increases student loan interest deduction income limits for single taxpayers by $10,000.

There is no question, with rising concerns about security and self-reliance in retirement, that these changes are needed. They will help individuals and families achieve their economic goals. But the benefits this legislation has for retirement planning do not stop here.

and adjusts the beginning income limits for married couples filing joint returns to twice that of a single taxpayer. Beyond these important changes, this tax relief plan promotes education by making deductions for employer provided assistance permanent, and by allowing employer assistance to be used for graduate-level courses.

Again, these are necessary changes—changes that will help families meet their priorities.

Another important component of this tax relief package involves its treatment of estate and gift taxes. Here, our objective is to protect families, farmers, and small business men and women who have worked their whole lives to build a future for their posterity. Members of the Senate Finance Committee can recall that the late Thomas A. Hendricks of Indiana, a good Republican, once said, "Law must be administered to all alike, and not to one to promote his hold on power and another to oust him from it."

Here a family works for more than half a century to build a ranch, only to hear the question of the doc-trine. The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOYNIHAN) addressed the Chair.

The Office of Management and Budget, in its fiscal year 2000 edition of "Analytical Perspectives," estimated that the total deficit reduction has been more than twice this. I quote: "The total deficit reduction has been more than twice this—$1.2 trillion." That suggests the extraordinary quality of that moment when we stood on this floor and waited for the final vote that would allow the Vice President to cast the determining vote, 51–50. The act was passed without one Member of the Republican Party of ei-ther House of the Congress.

In 1997, we had a more bipartisan ef-fort in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997.
Again, we see larger revenue benefits than were originally anticipated.

As with the year that ended this September, the OMB projects a budget surplus of $90 billion and the Congressional Budget Office projects a surplus of $120 billion. With the end of the fiscal year just 2 months away, we can expect, with great confidence, a budget surplus for the second consecutive year.

What explains this huge gap, this pleasant surprise between budget expectations and outcomes in recent years? As is often the case in analysis, there are interrelated factors which cannot always easily be disentangled but which provide clues.

To begin with, we appear to be in what has been described by our now-Secretary of the Treasury, Lawrence Summers, at his confirmation hearing as a "virtuous cycle." I put a question to him, and he responded:

Senator, I think it very important that, as you squeeze the national debt by the full amount of the Social Security surpluses, which would continue this virtuous cycle by reducing interest rates, which makes banks more competitive, which makes larger surpluses, which makes smaller debt, which reduces interest rates, which starts the cycle going again. That is an enormously important process.

The Honorable Robert Rubin, who was Mr. Summers' distinguished predecessor, often spoke of a term which is not in ordinary usage, but it is a term known by Secretaries of Treasury and by persons who deal in securities, in markets. Mr. Rubin would use the term the "risk premium on interest rates." That is to say, the extra charge if a person is lending money, if they are not certain of the fiscal stability of the Federal Government, in this case, and, thence, of the economy at large.

It was, first of all, this risk premium that we broke in 1993, the fear that down the road we would be "monetizing" the debt through inflation. We would get rid of it by wiping out the value of the dollar. That is that premium, that risk premium on interest rates.

We began to see this effect. I was here on the Senate floor on February 10, 1995. I remarked:

...the economy performed better than expected, in part, because Congress adopted a credible deficit reduction plan. In part, also, Secretary of the Treasury Rubin remarked to the Finance Committee this Wednesday [that is, Wednesday, February 8, 1995], the deficit reduction program squeezed the risk premium on interest rates out of real long-term interest rates. If financial markets do not believe the deficit is under control, they will levy a risk premium on capital. In 1993 and 1994, we persuasively persuaded the markets that we were finally serious.

From a slightly different perspective, the Congressional Budget Office also focused on the importance of reducing interest rates. For most of the post-World War II period, interest costs have been the second or third largest item in the budget, behind Social Security and national defense.

In commenting on this, the CBO said, of the effects of that 1993 legislation:

Remarkably, the biggest single change lies in . . . interest—now projected at 3.3 percent of GDP in 2003 compared with 4.5 in the earlier report, a testimonial to the efforts to rein in the debt's growth [which had taken place].

For the record, CBO, in its latest budget update issued earlier this month, now projects interest costs at just 1.7 percent of GDP in the year 2003, a reduction from its September 1993 projection when we had just passed that legislation of that year.

Outlays for net interest peaked at $251 billion 2 fiscal years ago. They are now projected to decrease to $222 billion in fiscal year 1999. For purposes of squandering the surplus, we will repay the debt incurred in those years and that interest cost will again go down, almost to disappear.

Now, I do not mean to suggest that the budget outlook is solely due to changes in budget policies. Factors other than deficit reduction are at work, making for a strong, sustained economic expansion. The economy brings higher receipts and lower outlays for unemployment and other such programs that automatically expand in a recession.

Last week, in testimony before the House Committee on Banking and Financial Services, Alan Greenspan, our world-renowned Chairman of the Board of Governors at the Federal Reserve, provided some insights into what is sustaining this period of remarkable growth. Observing the absence of production bottlenecks, shortages, and price pressures that inevitably occur in an expanding economy, he noted a number of the possible explanations for the good fortunes involved: notably, just-in-time inventories and such like; but they have come about fortuitously; and the prospects were much better all around.

The question is, Can we not keep this? Can we not sustain the extraordinary economic expansion on which we have embarked?

Unemployment is now at 4.3 percent. May I say, as someone who in the Kennedy administration was Assistant Secretary of Labor for Policy Planning, we would have said, sir, that a 4.3-percent unemployment rate was unsustainable. It would lead to an outbreak of inflation. Yet here we have it, 4.3 percent, real economic growth at 4 percent. We are in the ninth year of an expansion, and we have no inflation.

This is something that is going to require that the economic textbooks be rewritten. But we did it, and a lot of it comes about from what we did on the Senate floor in August of 1993 and which our great hope on this side of the aisle is that we not undo in this short time that has passed.

Alan Greenspan, in that testimony, was very clear. He said tax cuts are to be reserved for recessions. That will be the most effective means we can have to regenerate the economy and keep the long-term growth path moving high.

The New York Times editorialized this past Sunday, on the Oracle of the Fed:

Mr. Greenspan is treated reverently on Capitol Hill, but it appears that the Republicans do not want to heed his advice to run a surplus and pay down the national debt, while saving a tax cut for when it is needed.

How come this sudden resurgence just now, when it would seem so clear that a quite opposite policy has had such very desirable effects? Well, sir, I do not go back, as I said earlier, to matters of political doctrine.

We don't talk much of doctrine on the Senate floor, but there are times for it. In 1995, for example, we debated a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget. I presented a series of papers in which I tried to describe the idea of "starving the beast," as the term was; that is to say, depriving the Federal Government of the revenues needed, putting it simply, to govern.

The argument is quite simple. It goes back to the 1970s when a number of theorists on the conservative wing of the Republican Party determined that it was not going to be possible for the Federal Government ever to be controlled by its size and its tax revenue, to control the economy.

Mr. Rubin remarked to the Finance Committee this Wednesday [that is, Wednesday, February 8, 1995], the deficit reduction program squeezed the risk premium on interest rates out of real long-term interest rates. If financial markets do not believe the deficit is under control, they will levy a risk premium on capital. In 1993 and 1994, we persuasively persuaded the markets that we were finally serious.

The long-term goal, about which Republican leaders are candid, is to put Government in a fiscal straitjacket for years to come.

In fairness, I think this is more to be encountered on the House side than in this body, but it still would be the cumulative effect, in fact, of the tax cuts that have been proposed in both bodies.

I can remember the onset of this. In the late 1970s, it was clear. One could write about it, and one did. Then came the administration of President Reagan in which, in effect, the policies were carried out—or they began to be carried out. In a television address, 16 days before his inauguration, President Reagan said:
There will always be those who tell us that taxes could not be cut until spending was reduced. Well, you know, we can lecture our children about extravagance until we run out of voice or breath, or we can cut their extravagance by simply reducing their allowance.

There you have President Reagan in his most agreeable and heart-warming day, the House of Representatives de-coming apart already. Just the other programs by 20 percent in real terms can reduce the spending on domestic the Washington Post this morning of this tax cut.

Just the other dominating factor, the that consensus in the Constitution. It have had time. That con-sus is provided in the Constitution. It has taken place every decade since 1790. All of a sudden, we have made it into an emergency.

In this morning’s Washington Post our former majority leader, our beloved colleague, ROBERT C. BYRD, has an article called “Time for Truth In Spending.” He said:

What we need to jettison is the political rhetoric. What we need to impose is truth in spending.
And he set down a few principles. He said:
First, watch our investments carefully and manage them prudently. We should continue our best efforts to manage the economy and watch out for inflation.
Second, do not spend our money before we make it. Before the surplus is spent, whether on tax cuts or continuing important priority programs, wait for the money to be in the bank.

We are proposing to spend a surplus,
sir, that does not exist.
Third, pay our debts. The United States should take advantage of this opportunity to retire the national debt.
Fourth, cover the necessities. Congress should not shortchange the Nation’s core programs, such as education, health care, veterans, and the like.
Fifth, put aside the fact that we need for a rainy day. Congress should take steps to reserve the Social Security and Medicare surpluses exclusively for future costs of those programs.
Sixth, don’t go on a spending spree. Resist the temptation to create costly new government programs.

Finally, take prosperity in measured doses.
Congress should reduce taxes without pulling the rug out from under projected surpluses.
I can think of no wiser counsel.
In that regard, and with great respect for the chairman of the committee, I would suggest that the budget re-colligation process was devised to expedite consideration of deficit reduction measures.

The bill before us uses those same expedited procedures to secure enactment of a deficit-increasing measure.

Section 313(b)(4)(E) of the “Byrd Rule” provides that any provision in any reconciliation bill which would decrease revenues used beyond the budget window—in this case beyond the year 2009—may be automatically stricken from the bill upon a point of order being raised.

Section 1502 of the bill before us provides for permanent continuation of tax cuts in the years beyond 2009, causing revenue losses of hundreds of bil-ions of dollars.

Accordingly, sir, at the appropriate time, I intend to raise the “Byrd Rule” point of order against section 1502 of the bill.

I thank the Chair for his cordial consideration of my remarks.
I see my friend, the chairman of the Budget Committee, is on the floor. I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask the distinguished chairman of the Fi-ces Committee if he will yield up to 20 minutes.

Mr. ROTH. I am happy to yield to the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee up to 20 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sen-dor from New Mexico is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, before my friend, Senator ROTH, leaves the floor, let me say to the Senate that Senator ROTH has come through again for the Senate and for the people of this country.

His tax bill is clearly one that recognizes fairness, that puts the money where it ought to be put, gives back to the American people some of their money, and it does it in a way that clearly is prudent.

It will be very difficult when we are finally finished explaining this bill for the President of the United States to veto this bill.

We’re going to talk about that a little later in the day. Since he has challenged us, we will tell the American people loud and clear what he is going to be doing when he vetoes this bill.

Mr. President, I rise today to discuss the budget blueprint that Congress has passed for the first decade of the 21st century. It embodies three major things: Social Security, first and foremost. Much will be said about it. But nobody can deny that with this refund to the American taxpayers, we have left intact every single penny of surplus that belongs to the Social Secu-ritv trust fund, and we will even debate on the floor locking it up so it is very difficult to spend.

The budget before us and that we adopted demanded that 100 percent of all the funding that Social Security recipients will need will be exclusively set aside for that purpose.

Second, it sets aside enough money to meet the demands of Medicare for the next 10 years. Medicare is fully funded under the budget that was adopted by the Congress this year.
That means there are no cuts. The program is fully funded for the decade. As a matter of fact, the President cut Medicare in the first 5 years of his presidency was cruel. We did not do that. Then we would have a rainy day fund to implement any Medicare reform that Congress might enact. I will allude to that soon.

Third, after all the bills of the decade have been paid, after Social Security recipients have their money set aside, after we have funded every penny anticipated for Medicare, and have an ample rainy day fund available, if we want to do something on prescription drugs, then we would send back the excess to the American taxpayers—to the working families—and those in middle-and low-income brackets will get a very substantial tax reduction.
The budget resolution recognized economic conditions now, and the projected economics including the planning for an inevitable recession that might occur in the future. It outlined a decade-long, phased-in tax cut. Only a very small tax cut was envisioned in the first 2 years of this budget timeframe because the economy is already operating above optimum capacity. We want to keep inflation subdued and interest rates low. The budget expected Congress to pass a tax bill that was very small in the first 2 years and grew as the decade wound its way through into the next millennium.

I congratulate again the chairman of the Finance Committee and the members of that committee for producing the kind of tax cut for our budget for the 21st century. I think it is appropriate now with a surplus. Chairman Ron Paul has produced a tax cut that starts small and ends up larger, reflecting economic conditions. He has produced a tax cut that targets help to those who really need it—those with children in school, those with elderly and ill parents who need long-term care, those who are trying to save for their own retirement instead of Government reliance, and many more items of that nature and of that significance.

Yes. The same old class warfare arguments like tired, defeated soldiers of past wars have begun to stagger across the Senate debate again—and they will be here before us again—that we are only helping the rich. We are told we must spend the surplus. That is essentially the argument against our tax refunds—we must spend the surplus. We must grow Government. It is the same old debate. One party wants to give money to programs. And we want to give money to the people. That is exactly the way it has been, and that is exactly the way it is on this floor.

I believe there is a degree of arrogance in those who argue against tax cuts. They say to working families: I know what to do with your money better than you do. Give it to me so I can spend it.

Can you imagine the arrogance of that position? They have grand schemes now with the surplus. Republicans, through their dedicated efforts, and Dr. Greenspan and his fantastic ability to manage the money supply in our country, and to control interest rates, have given the Nation this enormous surplus. The President of the United States thinks they have the money to implement new, grand schemes and to grow government. That is the issue.

A government big enough to give you everything is a government that takes everything away in the form of high taxes.

I didn't originate that quote. I can't imagine and I can't fathom anything more frightening to the average taxpayer than the sight of a grand government scheme rushing toward a $1 trillion pile of taxpayer dollars.

Republicans say it is the best of times for tax cuts. Democrats say it is the worst of times. Everyone quotes Dr. Alan Greenspan.

The Taxpayers Refund Act before the Senate is the best of plans.

It lowers rates.

It encourages savings.

It eliminates the worst of a bad Tax Code. It eliminates the marriage penalty for many Americans. It begins the death of a death tax. It ends the alternative minimum tax, to rescue the full benefit of child care, foster care, education, and other needed tax credits for families who otherwise unavoidably would end up in the alternative minimum tax. They are worried about it.

You will get more mail on this issue because it is grossly unfair to give credits and then take them away—to run across the land saying: We are delighting in your children's education only to find that middle-income Americans by the hundreds of thousands are falling into this alternative minimum tax trap.

I say: Tax cuts, if not now, when? The Democrats say not now. I say: If not tax cuts now, then what?

The President's answer is: Spend it all. It does not matter what he says he wants to spend it for; he wants to spend it all.

Can you imagine if we did not have this surplus? What will the President be doing—asking for tax increases to pay for these programs he thinks we need? I doubt that. I doubt very much.

I support prudent tax relief, and I must say this is prudent tax relief. It is synchronized to our business cycle and the condition of the economy. It improves our tax policy and moves us toward a system that taxes income that is earned. It moves America toward a tax system that allows business to deduct investments in the year they are made. It encourages investment in retirement, education, and health care.

Congress' budget allocates 75 percent of the surplus to pay down the debt and long-term priorities. If the surplus were a dollar, two quarters would go for Social Security, one quarter for high-priority spending—education, research, and defense—and the remaining quarter for tax cuts.

Without tax cuts, who would spend the surplus?

Not the American people. The Government in Washington would spend it. And spend the tax cuts, we would give to the government. There can be no denial of that. The President plans to grow Government substantially rather than give back anything to the American people.

He now says he would veto a $500 billion tax cut. What about $200. Mr. President? That would give the American people back about 6 cents of the surplus, at $200. Can we afford that? I believe we can afford 25 cents out of every $1 of surplus.

Democrats say the question is: tax cuts versus Social Security. Tax cuts or Medicare. Tax cuts or domestic spending. Tax cut versus debt reduction.

The right answer: It is not "this" versus "that." The correct answer is, we can do all of the above. The size of the surplus lets us do it all. That is the reality. Save Social Security, reform Medicare, provide adequate funding for domestic and defense spending, pay down the debt, and give the American people who earned the money a decent tax cut.

Our national debt will ultimately be paid off, falling dramatically from 40 percent of GDP this year to only 12 percent in 2009. Under the proposal we make, the external debt—the debt to the public—will go from 40 percent of the gross domestic product to only 12 percent by the end of the decade.

I am amazed the President's political advisors allege this budget is reckless. Nothing is reckless about steadily rising surpluses and paying down our debt by more than 50 percent over the next decade. In fact, our plan lowers the level of debt more than the President's plan. Some may wonder why. That is because the President spends heavily in the short term. He now says he would veto a $500 billion tax cut. Do that in a manner that encours more debt than we do at that time, and he cannot make it up in a decade.

I have been amazed by the administration and other opponents who claim our tax cut will lead to higher interest rates because the economy will overheat. That is just not true. The Fed is most concerned not with the economy as it is today but what it will be in 18 months and thereafter. Our tax cut is slow, a total of $28 billion over the next 5 years. Do that in a manner that encours more debt than we do at that time, and he cannot make it up in a decade.

In House testimony last week, Chairman Greenspan cautioned against expecting any rapid stimulus as a result of this tax relief package. I can assure the American people that Congress' tax plan will not overheat the economy. As a matter of fact, Chairman Greenspan cautioned against expecting a rapid stimulus as a result of this package, given the long phase-in of the tax cuts. I can anticipate the response of my Democratic colleagues who are likely to say: If your plan is so ideally suited for the economy, why did Alan Greenspan argue we should let surpluses run for a while before cutting taxes?

Listen carefully. I have two responses. First, I believe the Congress is doing exactly what the Chairman advised. Our budget plan delivers only $28 billion in tax cuts over the next 2 years. Most of that relief is scheduled to arrive only after surpluses have mounted on a consistent basis. Second, and more important, Chairman Greenspan is advising what policies would be best in an ideal world. However, he is fully aware that ideal may not be politically feasible.

Let me read a quote he made last week which I think was insightful:

"There is nothing that I can see that would be lost by allowing the process to delay unless, as I have indicated many times, it appears to me that the surplus is going to become a lightning rod for major increases in outlays. That's the worst of all possible worlds from a fiscal policy point of view. That, under all conditions, should be avoided. I have great sympathy for those who wish to cut taxes now, to pre empt the process. And indeed if it turns out they are right, I would say moving on the tax front makes a good deal of sense to me.

The worst of all fiscal policies will materialize if the President gets his way. His budget proposes to increase spending by more than $1 trillion over the next 10 years. Most of this new spending would go to create 80 new, often repetitious, often local-governm ent- prerogative- infringing government programs, with services already being handled at the local or private sector. The President's spending proposals are the worst of all proposals from the standpoint of what is good for America during the next 2 years. That time horizon must concern the Federal Reserve.

The President proposes to use $53 billion of the surplus for new spending. It is nearly twice as large as our tax cut in the next 2 years. Thus, the President's plan adds more stimulative than the Congress' measured tax cut. I ask my colleagues on the other side of the aisle if they are worried about interest rates rising because the economy is overheating, why support the President's Government-growing agenda over ours? The money is there. We have a surplus.

The last question is the $792 billion question: Who is going to spend it?

When faced with the President, who wants to spend the surplus, Congress has not the Democratic votes. However, we have to be careful. While we are still saving the majority of the surplus for shoring up our long-term fiscal health, we must be careful in that regard.

To sum up, I leave two messages today, our budget is prudent, and it is synchronized for where we are in the business cycle. Be skeptical of the administration's criticism of our tax plan. They want to grow Government well in excess of Congress' tax cut. Most of the spending has nothing to do with Social Security or Medicare. This is what should most concern the American people when faced with the surplus, excluding Social Security funds, and I have already indicated what will happen to the funds. I know taxpayers want to give it back to the people who earned it and worked so hard.

The big question then is, Who is going to spend the surplus?

With tax cuts, the answer is you: without tax cuts, the answer is big government. I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WELLSTONE). The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the minority yields 10 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUNNING). The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, 3 weeks ago, President Clinton visited some of the poorest communities in our country and he spoke eloquently of our obligations to America's most disadvantaged children. Mr. President, when our economy booming and record sur pluses, we have a chance to do better for all of our children. This budget fails America's children. I want to speak as loudly and boldly as I can about this reconciliation bill, first about the Republican proposal, and then about what we are proposing as Democrats.

If you look at the non-Social Security surplus, about three-quarters of it really assumes cuts in future domestic spending. The Republican proposal on the floor does not restore any of these cuts. In fact, they add another cut of roughly $200 billion. The Republican plan would require a 38-percent cut in domestic spending in the year 2009, and the Republican tax bills are loaded with corporate welfare for multinational corporations, banks, insurance companies, Wall Street securities firms, and tax giveaways for the wealthy. That is a disappointment. It is a very harsh budget.

But even the Democratic plan fails to fully fund or restore these cuts. Senate Democrats have reserved $290 billion of the surplus to soften the blow on our discretionary priorities like education, but we still allow cuts of several hundred billion dollars. In our plan, with our $300 billion of tax cuts, we do not make up the assumptions in our domestic priorities either.

Since defense spending will go up, and there will be spending for transportation which also will go up significantly, given the next defense budget, other domestic priorities will be squeezed even more.

How can we, as Democrats, say we are addressing the needs of America's children, for fighting poverty, for fully funding Early Head Start, for making our children in our country—14 million children who are poor in our country—14 million. There are 6.5 million children who live in households with income of one-half the poverty level. Close to one out of every four children in our country under the age of 3 are growing up poor. Close to 50 percent of children of color under the age of 3 are growing up poor. And now we are being told by both parties—the Republican Party much more so than the Democratic Party, to both parties, that we cannot afford to renew our national vow of equal opportunity for every child? Where in these proposals do we, as a Senate representing the United States of America, live up to our national vow of equal opportunity for every child?

Right now, in Early Head Start, for children age 3 or younger, 1 percent of the children who could be helped and given a head start advantage to get this assistance. We are funding this program at a 1 percent level.

For the Republicans, you have $800 billion of tax cuts. You make no investment in any of these areas. Your budget and your proposal will lead to Draconian, really brutal cuts in these programs. Not only will we not be doing anything to make sure poor children have a chance in America, to make sure that there is equal opportunity for every child, but the proposal of the majority party will be making cuts in these programs.

And to the Democratic Party, my party, we have a better proposal. It is less harsh. But there has to be some connection between the convictions we profess and the budgets we propose, and a willingness to fight for them. At some point, the chasm between our words and our actions becomes too wide. If we do not fight hard enough for the things we stand for at some point, we have to recognize we really do not stand for them.
Mr. President, recently both the Office of Management and Budget and the Congressional Budget Office released their so-called “MidSession Reviews” on the state of the Federal budget. These new forecasts project even better performance for the nation’s economy in the coming ten years than they had predicted just a few months ago. In fact, the Congressional Budget Office projects the current fiscal year’s deficit to be only $236 billion, $116 billion less than it predicted just a few months ago. And for the next 10 years, I am happy to say, CBO projects that surpluses will exceed $1 trillion in each of the next 10 years.

Mr. President, consider these facts: CBO’s estimate of revenues over the period 1980 through 1998 was off by an absolute average of $37 billion per year. The estimates were off by an average of $33 billion per year during the period 1980 through 1998. That is a pretty fair piece of change! This isn’t just chicken feed. Some years, the estimates were closer to the projection than other years, but, as I say, the average difference one way or the other was $38 billion per year. Similarly, for outlays, the projections over the past two decades were off the mark by an absolute average of $36 billion per year. The recent projections of the Congressional Budget Office over the period 1980 through 1998 were off by an average of $39 billion per year. Extend that figure over 10 years, and that is what we are doing now in this bill, and we can see that $540 billion of the $1 trillion projected surplus could melt away faster than last year’s snowball.

So what about these latest “rosy” forecasts of budgetary surpluses for the next 10 years? It is obvious that we need to be very careful when relying on such projections to make decisions about whether and if we can afford a tax cut.

CBO officials would be the first to tell you that they have widely missed the mark in their budgetary forecasts, as would the folks at OMB. No one on the face of God’s green Earth can predict accurately for even 1 year, much less for 5 or 10 years, what revenues will come into the Treasury, or what expenditures will go out of the Treasury. That is because no one knows what the unemployment rate will be next year, or the inflation rate, interest rates, whether there will be a recession or the duration or virility of such recession. In virtually every CBO revenue forecast, there may be an infinite curve can be found: “Cyclical disturbances could have a significant effect on the budget at any time during the projection period. A recession would temporarily push down taxable incomes, thus reducing federal revenues. A recession would also cause a boost in spending for unemployment insurance and other benefit programs. CBO estimates that a relatively mild recession (similar to the one in the early 1990s) that began this year could reduce the projected surplus by $55 billion in 2000.”

Mr. President, there is no reason to believe that CBO’s current forecast of the budgetary picture over the next 10 years will be any more accurate than have been its previous forecasts over the past two decades.

With that dose of reality in mind, let’s now turn our attention to the Republican tax cut proposal before the Senate. Earlier in my remarks, I noted that the Congressional Budget Office projects an on-budget surplus of $996 billion over the coming 10 years FY 2000-2009. The on-budget surplus calculations, it should be noted, are the monies not needed for Social Security or the Postal Service, and not otherwise spent. The Republican tax cut plan proposes to use virtually all of these projected on-budget surpluses for tax cuts of $792 billion over the next 10 years.

What happens if we enact cuts of $792 billion and the CBO projections turn out to be wrong? What happens if they turn out to be wrong, as have always been? What will Congress do then? The money will by law be leaving the Treasury everyday in the form of tax cuts but there’s no adequate surplus to cover them. Will Congress repeal the tax cut? It is easy to vote for a tax cut. Will Congress repeal the tax cut? Will it be able to cut spending even further than the Republican budget—which I will say more about later—already calls for? Will it dip into the Social Security trust fund then? Or, will Congress find it easier to revert back into the bad old days of the 1980s and simply run up massive annual deficits? Those are the kind of analyses we will have. All of them are unacceptable. We must not mislead the American people by promising them massive tax cuts which may well be based only on phantom surpluses which never materialize. Even if the surpluses do happen, this Republican tax plan could emasculate national security, public investments, and the operations of government. As this chart shows, these areas of the Federal budget could suffer real cuts each year, beginning in fiscal year 2000, drastically below what would be necessary to continue them at the levels.
provided in fiscal year 1999. In fact, over the whole 10-year period—over the 10-year period—the real reductions would total $775 billion. In other words, the bulk of the $792 billion Republican tax cut is likely, in reality, to be financed by cuts in critical domestic priorities—critical domestic priorities—such as health care, infrastructure, child care, the environment, agriculture—that will affect the people of this country—old, young, white, black, male, female. They will affect you—you—because they will be financed by cuts in critical domestic priorities.

Mr. President, to give the American people some sense of what I am talking about, let me focus on just three critical areas of the Federal budget that would be the most affected. First, however, let me point out that the cuts in these programs are based on the assumption that the Republicans will fund defense at the levels requested by the Clinton budget. That is more than a third—$1.8 trillion—of the total cuts to the VA medical care program. An across-the-board cut of 38 percent—

Again, Mr. President, what does this translate to in services to the American people? Forget the dollars for a moment. As this chart shows, the FBI will need 10,687 agents in each of the next 10 years in order to just continue its current law enforcement efforts. But, that will not be possible if we enact the Republican tax cuts. Instead, we can look forward to progressively—

Sadly, the picture is no better for the veterans' health care under the Republican tax cut plan if these cuts are administered in an across-the-board manner. The cuts will rise from $931 million in fiscal year 2000 to over $11.5 billion in fiscal year 2009. In total, the cumulative cuts to the VA medical program over the next 10 years will be more than $33.5 billion below what it would take to continue current VA medical care services. I might add, as I say, some veterans are already feeling it, and this figure is woefully inadequate. What do those cuts mean in human terms? As we can see from this chart, OMB projects that 3,252,735 veterans—

Mr. President, the budget for the Federal Bureau of Investigation was approximately $3 billion in FY 1999. Paying for the Republican tax cuts would require reductions in the FBI budget below what would be needed to continue current services over each of the next 10 years. Those cuts get progressively worse until in FY 2009, the Republican tax cut would require a cut of almost $1.9 billion below the $4.3 billion that would be necessary just to maintain the same level of service being provided by the FBI in 1999. Over this 10-year period, total cuts to the FBI’s budget would equal almost $9 billion.

That is $9 for every minute since Jesus Christ was born. Nine billion dollars, that is a lot of money!

Again, Mr. President, what does this translate to in services to the American people? Forget the dollars for a moment. As this chart shows, the FBI will need 10,687 agents in each of the next 10 years in order to just continue its current law enforcement efforts. But, that will not be possible if we enact the Republican tax cuts. Instead, we can look forward to progressively—

Let me say that again. The Treasury Department points out that interest on the national debt in the second 10 years caused by the $1.8 trillion in lost revenues would be roughly $1.1 trillion higher. That makes a total cost of the Republican tax cut plan in the years 2010 through 2019 of $2.9 trillion. The increased interest due on the national debt, $1.1 trillion caused by the Republican tax cut plan is greater than the total amount of their tax cut for the first ten years, which was $792 billion. These massive drains on the U.S. Treasury would take place at the very time when the baby-bom generation is retiring in huge numbers and placing a great strain on the Social Security and Medicare trust funds. This tax cut plan, in my view, represents the absolute omega of irresponsibility. It passes on to our children and grandchildren in the years 2010 through 2019 a $2.9 trillion drain on the U.S. Treasury. The Republican tax cut would have us spend $2.9 trillion over the decade 2010 through 2019 right now, regardless of whether that drain makes it impossible for us to meet our Social Security and Medicare obligations for its senior citizens.

Recently the Washington Post carried a political cartoon by Herblock on one of its pages, which I have here on this chart. As one can see, at the top of the cartoon appeared these words: “Back for an indefinite run!”

Let me say that again: “Back for an indefinite run!” “Rosy Scenario”—and her long line of stunning surplus sugarplums.”

The cartoon depicts Rosy—there she is, all ready for the show—in a costume with dancing girls and throwing dollar bills in the air. There is a song, “Pennies from Heaven.” But Mr. President, these are dollar bills! Holy Smoke! Rosy Scenario is throwing them all about us. In front of the theater in which she is appearing, what do we see? We see two eager customers about to buy tickets for the show. One appears to be an elephant; one appears to be a donkey. They are both depicted in business attire. The ticket salesman seems to have a cynical smirk on his face, as though he knows something that the elephant and the donkey, who are waiting for their tickets, don't know.

When I saw this cartoon, it brought back memories about Rosy. She first appeared on the scene in 1981 as a major player in the Reagan revolution. When President Reagan took office, that so-called revolution was based on supply-side economic ideology that called for massive tax cuts. That was before more than two-thirds of the Senators here today arrived—almost two-thirds, to be exact. Sixty-three Senators are here today who were not here when I was majority leader the third time, 1987 and 1988. But we are talking about 1981. Even more Senators were not here then.

That so-called revolution was based on supply-side economic ideology that called, again, for massive tax cuts, a large buildup in defense spending, and balancing the Federal budget; all were going to be done. Those were the principal budgetary concepts the Reagan revolution put forth.

There were many skeptics at the time as to whether those policies would actually work. I was one of those skeptics. The Senate majority leader, Howard Baker, called it a “riverboat gambler.” Nevertheless, in 1981 Congress did enact a huge tax cut, and it did increase defense spending. Entitlement spending also continued to grow. What was the result? The result was an era of the largest Federal deficits by far in history.

Furthermore, “Rosy Scenario” worked her magic numbers in the budget under the direction of President Reagan’s chief financial adviser, OMB Director David Stockman. As a result of the tax cuts, rather than ridding the country of Federal deficits the country saw for the first time in history triple-digit billion dollar deficits in each of Mr. Reagan’s eight years in office.

In fact, the national debt stood at $392 billion on January 20, 1981, the date President Reagan took office. Unfortunately, on the day that President Reagan left office on January 20, 1989, the national debt stood at $2,683,000,000,000.

This chart depicts the major causes of increased Federal debt for fiscal years 1981 through 1991. It shows that the 1981 tax cut over that 10-year period, cost the Treasury $2.1 trillion. Those tax cuts were offset by a series of tax increases that became necessary during the Reagan years in an attempt to decrease Federal deficits. Those tax increases equaled $300 billion. Entitlement and defense spending each grew by $500 billion above inflation over this 10-year period. Interest on the climbing national debt increased by $500 billion. The S&L bailout cost $200 billion. And, domestic spending was cut over that 10-year period by $400 billion below inflation. That was a very unfortunate and difficult period in our national history.

The folly of the Reagan Revolution’s fiscal policies is set forth in great detail in the book entitled, “The Triumph of Politics” by David Stockman. As I previously pointed out, David Stockman was the principal architect of the Reagan budgets until he left the Administration in 1985. Perhaps the best summary of the conclusions reached by Mr. Stockman is found in the epilogue of the book found on pages 378–379.

The fundamental reality of 1981 was not the advent of a new day, but a lapse into fiscal indiscipline on a scale never before experienced in peacetime. There is no basis in economic history or theory for believing that from this massive lending era of prosperity can actually emerge.

Will we never learn! Cicero said, “To be ignorant of what occurred before you were born is to remain always a child. That is the value of history. That is what we are talking about, history, and history is about to repeat itself.

This can be a year of great opportunity for the Nation if Congress and the administration can work together on our budget priorities for the coming decade. I do not think Congress needs to choose an all-or-nothing course of action, but we do need to jettison the political pandering that is going on. This should not be an “us versus them” battle; it is not a “big government versus little people” battle. So what should Congress do? The same as any wise investor would do:

1. watch our investments carefully and manage them prudently, Manage the economy and watch out for inflation;
2. pay down the national debt; 3. cover the necessities. Don’t short change our Nation’s core programs, such as education, health care and the like; 4. put aside what we need to put aside for a rainy day. Reserve the Social Security and Medicare surpluses exclusively for future costs of those programs; 5. take prosperity in measured doses. Ease up on taxes without pulling the rug out from under projected surpluses.

After years of struggling to overcome a sluggish economy and mounting deficits, America is well-launched on an economic renaissance. I hope we in Congress can rise to the challenge and serve as wise stewards of this economic prosperity. I hope we can put aside our political posturing and act in the best interests of the American people and the American Nation.

Before the Congress takes this folly of a plunge, perhaps it is a good time for a bit of a history lesson. It was more than 50 years ago when the Republican-controlled 80th Congress approved a massive $4 billion tax cut. That was a massive tax cut—$4 billion—in those days. President Harry Truman—one of my favorite Presidents— vetoed that tax cut, calling the proposal “bloody minded offices on Wall Street.” I am quoting Mr. Truman as saying that. It took three times, but the Republican majority overturned that veto.

In his nomination speech before the Democratic National Convention, President Truman put forth an idea that we need to recall today. He said that “everybody likes to have low taxes, but we must reduce the national debt in times of prosperity. And when tax relief can be given, it ought to go to those who need it most and not those who need it least, as this Republican rich man’s tax bill did.”

Just as an aside, not only did Mr. Truman upset Mr. Dewey that year, but the Democrats regained control of the Congress. The American people know when the Congress is dealing with them squarely and wisely. They also know when the Congress is playing political games with their futures.

I am reminded, in closing, of the lesson conveyed by Chaucer in “The Parson’s Tale.” Three young men, searching to find and destroy Death, were directed to a tree under which they found bushels of gold coins. They immediately forgot all about their quest to find and murder Death, and they set to plotting how to get the gold safely home. They decided to wait until darkness fell, and they drew lots to see which of the three would be sent into town to buy food and wine for all of them. The youngest was chosen. While he was gone, the other two decided to kill him upon his return so as to keep more of the gold for themselves. In the meanwhile, the youngest, as he went into town, decided to poison the other two so as to keep it all for himself. When he returned, the two waiting men pounced upon him and killed him. And then they drank the poisoned wine and died.

Let us heed the warning of “The Parson’s Tale” and not allow the glitter of gold to blind us to the common good of the Nation. Congress has the ability, the wisdom, and the means to chart a wise budget course for our Nation’s future. Let us hope that Congress can also muster the maturity to put aside rhetoric in favor of sound fiscal policy.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FritzenGerald). The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Delaware, the chairman of the Finance Committee. I rise enthusiastically to support the legislation that is before us, the proposal to give Americans a $700 billion increase in our after-tax income. I want to, first of all, address this question about the size, which is one of the things I hear most about when I go home. Can we afford to do it? The distinguished Senator from West Virginia, ranking Democrat on the Appropriations Committee, has just spoken about that as well.

I believe this is a prudent amount. I do not believe this is going to undo the great progress we have made beginning way back in 1990 and the first balanced budget proposal for which I voted. We had another one in 1993, and another in 1997. Taken together, they have all contributed to the elimination of our deficit and the very strong economic growth which we have to be careful not to undo.

The Congressional Budget Office, though they obviously will from time to time make mistakes, forecasts that there will be $3 trillion more coming in over the next 10 years than we have in obligated expenditures. While I favor significant debt reduction, I think one would have to imagine some pretty unusual economic circumstances to imagine a downturn in the economy that would eliminate the $3 trillion forecast. It is asked: To what level do we have to get? Does it have to be $5 trillion before we can give the American people back some of their money?

This, it seems to me, is a reasonable proposal, a moderate proposal. One could make a case for an even larger cut in taxes, and the best way of illustrating that is if we were to imagine that the budget was balanced and CBO said that over the next 10 years we anticipate exactly the amount of revenue coming in that is needed to meet the expenditures that are forecast, and I walked down here to the floor and offered a piece of legislation to increase taxes $2 trillion, I doubt I would get a single vote.

Well, I would actually have to offer a proposal to increase taxes $2.1 trillion to find myself in a situation where we are today. We are talking about reducing the projected surplus from $2.9 trillion down to $2.1 trillion. This is an increase in the after-tax income for the American household. I calculate that, in Nebraska, it means about $1 billion worth of increased income for households that is not taken into Washington, DC. That is a significant amount of money for

Not only is there broad-based tax relief in here with a reduction in the rate from 15 to 14 percent, but there are a number of other things that will happen that I consider to be good. We have about 130,000 Nebraskans without health insurance. One of the reasons is that our tax policy doesn’t favor an individual who makes a purchase of health insurance. This proposal will enable many of those 130,000 people to be able to purchase it because there is an above-the-line deduction in this proposal for individuals. There are 400,000 households in Nebraska that I estimate will benefit from the savings section in the proposal of the distinguished chairman of our committee—people who are trying to figure out how do I save for my own retirement. I know Social Security doesn’t provide me with everything I need. I know I need some kind of savings or pension.

This has significant reform in our pension laws, making it extremely likely that people right now who don’t have pensions for small businesses will have pensions in companies that employ relatively small numbers of people.

So in addition to providing $4 billion worth of additional after-tax income to the people of the State of Nebraska, this proposal will also help them save for their retirement. It will result in an increasing number of Nebraskans who have health insurance, and, in addition, it is going to make it easier for working-class families to send their children to college.

There is a deduction here for interest on student loans. One of the most alarming things I see today in the State is the amount of debt students are acquiring in order to be able to get a college degree. It will increase the amount of charitable giving in Nebraska. We have a problem with that today. The charitable giving is flat, and we have questions being asked about how we can increase that amount. This proposal will increase the charitable giving.

There are 180,000 Nebraskans who will applaud this piece of legislation because it eliminates the current tax penalty on them as a consequence of their being married.

This is a good proposal.

There is a $3 trillion surplus being forecast over the next 10 years. This is a moderate proposal. One could have argued for a larger one.

Not only did the chairman of our committee put together a piece of legislation that is moderate in size, but he attempts to, in addition, have broad-based tax relief to solve real problems we have in our country—that is, individuals who are struggling to plan for their own retirement, individuals who are trying to purchase health insurance, organizations throughout our State that are trying to solicit charitable contributions, and families who are angry because they pay a penalty once they get married.

This proposal will not result in our undoing the great progress we have made since the first piece of legislation dealing with the deficit was enacted in 1990, followed with the 1993 effort, and followed by the 1997.

This is moderate tax relief. It will be significant for the people of the State of Nebraska. It will not bring back inflation that Mr. Greenspan talked about because of the way the chairman has drawn the bill.

I have been asked by people: How can you possibly do this? It is not even a close call for me. It is not even close.

I feel extremely enthusiastic about this proposal, about both the dollar size and the makeup of the things that are in it.

I think one of the things that would have made this thing very attractive to Senators on this side of the aisle, and I believe many on the Republican side as well, is if we could have found a way to include an increase in the standard deduction—that is in Senator Mow-Nihon’s proposal that he will offer later—that would have taken 3 million people in America completely off the tax rolls. It would take 9 million people that are currently itemizing deductions and put them in a standard deduction category.

The proposal would have made it even better from the standpoint of working families.

No, I don’t think for the amount of time I have remaining, there are three remaining problems this proposal doesn’t even pretend to address and should attempt to address. I have heard people talk about it a lot. Not discretionary spending. This tax cut is not the threat to discretionary spending.

We have tremendous discretionary spending problems right now.

Everybody knows VA-HUD is in trouble.

We have significant cuts to veterans that are not what anybody wants.

We have problems in Labor-HHS as well.

We know we have problems. There is no tax cut that preceded them. What is causing that is the growing cost of mandatory programs that in the budget we passed in 1997 says that between now and 2009, 56 percent of our budget currently going to mandatory programs will grow to 70 percent. The discretionary programs will go from 31 percent to 27 percent, if we are able to reduce the national debt and reduce the net interest figure as well.

That is what is putting pressure on discretionary spending.

I know it is difficult to face it because it means we have to make changes in those mandatory programs to reduce their cost, or you have to come to the floor and propose increased taxes to pay for all of the things we want to pay for.

There is a problem with growing mandatory and declining discretionary program expenditures.

Second, there is a problem with Medicare—not just for the need to modernize the program, not just the need to provide health insurance for prescription benefits, but we should not, with the growing economy—4 percent real growth and 3 percent real growth in quarter after quarter—we should not with growth in the economy see the number of Americans who are uninsured go up.

There are an estimated 41 million Americans without health insurance, and 24 million of them are in the workforce. We tax their wages to pay for health insurance for everybody else, but they don't have it.

That, in my judgment, is the problem with Medicare. It is not just Medicare. It is all health care that needs to be fixed.

Lastly, Social Security. Senator Thompson, I, and others intend to offer an amendment at the appropriate time. We know Social Security needs to be fixed.

This is not like youth violence or Medicare or lots of issues that are extremely complicated—global climate change and others. This is a very straightforward, simple, actuarial problem.

I am astonished that we are able to survive around here without answering the question of, what is going to be done? The 150 million Americans under the age of 45 should not like a delay because every year of delay means you have a larger cut in your benefits as a consequence. That is the result of not doing anything.

Our proposal will cut payroll taxes by $1 trillion and increase the net worth. It fixes Social Security and increases the net wealth and worth of American households by $1.5 trillion over 10 years.

That is the third remaining problem that needs to be addressed. We do not address it by locking the money in a lockbox. That doesn't do anything to extend the solvency of Social Security, and I hope during the progress of this debate we are able to make that clear to the American people.

I yield the floor.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield 14 minutes to the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I thank the Chair. I thank the chairman.

First of all, I want to align myself with the comments of our previous speaker, Senator Kerrey. I think he is right on all points.

I think the question really boils down to a very simple one; that is, whether or not with a $3 trillion surplus it is reckless and dangerous to give 25 percent back to the people who created it. Or stated another way, now that we apparently are going to be in surplus, is this a time for a tax cut or a tax increase.

The President actually over the next 10 years proposes a tax increase and $1 trillion more in spending opposed to the tax cut we have proposed.

So it is really a very basic philosophical difference that we have here.

First of all, I look at the tax burden we have. The reason we have this surplus, of course, is because of unprecedented revenues that are flowing into the Federal Treasury.

The primary reason for that is the unprecedented portion of Federal income taxes that are flowing into the Treasury.

The income tax portion of the gross domestic product has now reached 10 percent, which is an all-time high in the history of the United States of America.

The average two-earner family is paying 38 percent in taxes.

Someone reminded me the other day that even the serfs in feudal times only had to pay a third to their masters, and these families are paying 38 percent.

Tax day now is May 11. We are working for the Government until May 11 of every year. Tax revenue has doubled just since 1987. We have this record level of tax revenues as a share of our gross domestic product.

What is going to happen to that? This hill, first of all, is addressed to the lower and middle-income taxpayer. It is addressed to the small businessperson who is out there working every day to make a living.

It gives some relief to those who want to save. It gives some relief to folks who want to invest. It gives some relief to folks who want to marry. And it gives some relief to folks who maybe after paying taxes all of their lives, when they die, don't want to have the family farm or their business sold just to pay the tax man again.

It gives some relief to all of those folks. It will not hurt the economy, as previous speakers have pointed out. As Chairman Greenspan has pointed out, it is phased in. It is about $38 billion for tax relief for the first 2 years.

The President has more spending in his proposal—over $50 billion during the same period of time. If you worried about the rate of the economy, talk to the President. Don't talk to us about this bill. It reduces the Federal debt more than the President's proposal does.

But in response to this kind of tax burden, and in response to this reasonable—as Senator Kerrey said "no brainer," really not even a close call—response to a situation like that where we have this unprecedented situation, we have seen an unprecedented amount of inside-the-beltway hyperventilation.

The President, the Vice President, and members of the White House have taken to the airwaves wringing their hands, and a different part of the sky has fallen every day. We are going to pollute the streams, our kids are not going to be educated, our military is going to go in disrepair, and the Republicans are not looking out for the military anymore. And, that old reliable standby, "We are going to harm Social Security and Medicare if we have tax cuts."

It is called "dangerous"—a "dangerous tax cut."

I think that assumes a level of ignorance among the American people that does not exist. I don't have time to talk about all of the accusations and charges and points that have been made, but we have to respond. This year, I will disagree for two in the limited amount of time we have. Perhaps we can address the others later.

With regard to Social Security and Medicare, of course we all know it is a problem. Senator Kerrey pointed out the nature of the problem a minute ago again. It is not as if we don't understand the problem. It is not as if we will not have to face up to it. The question is when.

We have a demographic time bomb on our hands that will affect Social Security and Medicare. We are an aging society. Some people say that is not a bad problem, that we are living longer. That is right. However, we have to make some changes precisely because of that if we are not going to ruin our kids and grandkids.

In the year 2030, we will have twice as many people over age 65 as we have today. Currently, we have almost four workers for every retiree; in 2030 we will have two workers for every retiree. After the baby boomer generation we will have a smaller population, and a smaller and smaller workforce, with a doubling of the people drawing out these funds. It will not work.

We have made some progress, at least in advancing the debate on these issues on a bipartisan basis. It is the first time I have seen issues of this magnitude and of this importance seriously addressed on a bipartisan basis. It is very encouraging.

We had a Medicare commission with Democrats and Republicans, chaired by Senator Breaux, that addressed this Medicare problem in a serious fashion. The President's response to that was to scuttle the majority will of that Medicare commission trying to make fundamental reforms because they told us something we already knew; that is, we can't just keep pouring money into a broken, worn out, outdated system.

I think as Senator Breaux once said: You put gasoline into an old, beat up, worn out car and it is still going to be an old, broken down, beat up old car. Instead of pouring more money on top of the system, we need fundamental reform. We tried to do that. The President's response was to scuttle it.

On Social Security, we had bipartisan bills in the Senate, with Democrats and Republicans working together for serious Social Security reform biting the bullet. It is not easy doing things politically, to do but somebody has to do it. The Democrats and Republicans together are doing it.

The President was looked upon to have a little leadership. Perhaps in these last couple of years he will want to exert some leadership when he is not having to run for reelection. His response was not to show leadership, but to back away from serious reform, saying he will put $100 million worth of IOUs into the Social Security trust fund which does nothing to save Social Security, and represents nothing more than a promise to pay, a debt that can strike” and that “this trillion-dollar debt is still being added to the line when those treasuries are redeemed by our kids and grandkids.

While they are saying you can’t have a tax cut, you can’t have a tax cut, we have to save all this money for Social Security and Medicare, at the same time they are doing everything in the world over at the White House to prevent any real reform for Social Security and Medicare.

What about the question should we be saving all of the surplus for Social Security and Medicare and others? The short answer is we are taking 75 percent of these surplus dollars and devoting it to those very areas by means of a lockbox, by means of setting aside Social Security and Medicare, and having some control with regard to the spending priorities. Mr. President, 75 percent goes to those things.

I think the more important point we will hear time and time again is the President and Vice President on the airwaves, hope people will believe we are doing something bad to Social Security and Medicare if we pass a tax cut. The primary point is that these surpluses we are talking about are pretty much irrelevant to Social Security and Medicare. As the Comptroller General pointed out, if we put every penny in savings, if we put every penny of surplus into Social Security and Medicare, it would do nothing to change or rectify the fundamental inherent problems we face with those two programs.

I think we can cite the Comptroller, as well as GAO, in saying the President’s proposal actually makes the Social Security and Medicare situation worse of the deficit problem. If you look at the projected surpluses and the condition of Medicare to start with, but tax cuts have nothing to do with the fundamental problem we are facing.

The only reason I can see for this kind of overreaction to a tax cut with these unprecedented surpluses is that the administration feels like a person who has been wronged, an injustice has been done to them, on the premise that the Government’s money to start with, and somebody has improperly tried to take that money away from them.

For some folks, there will never be a good time for a tax cut. Over the last few years, the President recommended very tax increases in times of deficits. Now we have a time of surpluses and his response is more tax increases. I think it is a debate not just over tax dollars; it is a debate over power. The people in Washington don’t want to give up power. It is a question of who is going to make decisions with regard to people’s lives. Will Washington collect money and dole it out as we see fit? Or are we going to leave it in the taxpayers’ hands, at least 25 percent of the amount of money about which we are talking?

It is not this tax cut that is dangerous. What is dangerous is a government that can never, ever go but in one direction: eating a bigger and bigger percentage of what we produce in this country. What is dangerous is an administration that will use this kind of debate to mask over the fact it is not willing to face up to timely problems. That is what is dangerous. I think the American people see that.

I think the American people support this bill. I support this bill and urge its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. Who yields the floor?

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, how much time is remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 16 minutes.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield all 16 minutes to the Senator from West Virginia, Senator ROCKEFELLER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I am here in the hopes of convincing my colleagues to oppose the $792 billion tax cut proposed by the President which is based on a premise of a projected surplus of $996 billion. We have just heard a speech which basically attacked everything President Clinton has done and stayed away from the tax cut debate itself, and that is shaping up as somewhat of a pattern.

I am also here in the hope of convincing my colleagues that the only prudent fiscal course, the only way you can strike a blow for our constituents and for our country and for our place in this world, is by taking advantage of this, what I consider to be almost certainly a once-in-a-lifetime chance to take the projected surplus and use whatever actually accrues from that to pay down the national debt.

It is very odd to me that the Republican Party and Democratic Party almost seem to have switched. The Democratic Party appears to be the party of fiscal responsibility. The Republican Party wants to be the party of political expediency. That is a political statement on my part. I apologize for that. I should have some understanding of what has happened in the last several years.

I think we should take this money to take down the debt. I think we should use it to save for Medicare and Social Security’s future. I think we should discipline ourselves to be able, as Alan Greenspan has suggested, if we see the surplus coming in the future years in the way that we want, to then do a meaningful tax cut—once we have put our fiscal house in order. Remember all the talk about getting our fiscal house in order? That is all we talked about in 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993. That was the talk—most of it from the other side.

We are almost there. Now we have come to the point where we can actually get over the hump, position America well for the future, and my colleagues, at least some of them, want to blow all of this investment of effort and discipline we have made with a huge tax cut spending spree which the American people do not want, and the American people do not ask for, nor is American business asking for.

First and foremost, let’s recognize the $996 billion surplus only exists—and I hope my colleagues will pay attention to this—only exists if you assume that Congress will cut $775 billion in real dollars over the next 10 years from programs that the American people want and need.

Does that mean we are adding on new programs? No. That is programs that already exist, that are already under the budget caps and already below expenditure levels of where they ought to be. So that surplus exists only if we cut an additional $775 billion from programs, which I will discuss in a minute.

That $775 billion in cuts is itself almost equal to the size of the Republican-proposed tax cut. That should tell you something about the tradeoff here, whether the tax cut numbers really add up, deep, deep cuts would be required in seniors programs, education, transportation, veterans—just about every area of the Government—an average of over 30 percent if we are to enact a $792
By deep cuts I mean the kinds of cuts in programs that provide health care to veterans. People talk about veterans and then run away from their obligations to them. Or child nutrition—we all talk about children. They will have to be cut by more than 40 percent in real terms if the Republican tax cut is enacted. This assumption is ludicrous. It is a sham that a massive tax cut of either $792 billion or, the so-called more moderate approach, the $500 billion—they are both shams. They both have the same results. They both cause us to reverse course on fiscal discipline and responsibility, not just to the American people today but to future generations.

We should all have the courage to admit that those who urge these tax cuts makes a mistake of historic proportions, we are subsuming our responsibility to the social fabric of America as we cast our votes. That kind of debilitating discretionary cuts cannot happen in any country, any for any other country. The American people will not stand for it. I believe the projected $996 billion will not materialize. That is my personal view. I do not believe it will happen. But the tax cuts will kick in and they will be there. I believe once again we will get into the situation of spiraling deficits that we have tried so hard—going back to the structural impediment talks with Japan, and then the discipline the folks on this side of the aisle exercised in 1995—that all of us have tried to exercise.

Fiscal responsibility—corporate America has done it. Now Government is in the process of doing it. We have eliminated the deficits. We have a chance to eliminate the debt, something that we never even dreamt of before. Now we are going to blow it on a Republican tax cut which the people do not ask for.

Well-respected economists estimate that there would be probably cumulative deficits of maybe $232 billion in the non-Social Security budget over the next 10 years if the Senate Finance Committee’s tax packets were enacted. It is a lot less than what is projected. That should be reason enough to rethink a vote for this tax cut package or any tax cut package of such gigantic proportions.

Let me take a minute or two to outline what I think would happen to our economy if a massive tax cut were enacted. Let us consider what would happen if we actually voted to reduce taxes by $792 billion. Forget the inequity of distribution. I can go into that, but I will not now. Forget the cruel, gross, greedy inequity of that distribution. Let us consider what would happen if the lowest quintile, which is, in fact, close to 23 million families, they get less than one-half of 1 percent of this generous Republican tax cut bill.

As far as I figure, it does not add up to the cost of what they will have to pay in higher interest rates that are sure to accompany a huge tax cut. Moreover, many of the people we represent benefit from the programs that will have to be cut. I go back to the 40 percent cut in programs that are now in effect and helping people; not new programs, not new spending, but programs in effect and already under-funded and starving that way through the years 2002. Rather than cut Head Start programs will have significant cuts. We all benefit from a range of basic Government services. The air transportation system is grossly under-funded. We all benefit from that. Not only current but more and more of the American people are flying.

We benefit from what goes on at NIH in biomedical research. Cures for cancer, Alzheimer’s, Parkinson’s, and many other things are on their way. Or the assistance that is provided directly to the States—all of these things will be cut under the Republican tax plan. Not just cut, they have already cut, but they will be cut much more.

The NIH increase this year is minute. It is less than 3 percent. Do people really want to do this? Are my colleagues truly willing to sacrifice those benefits for the American people for a tax cut that disproportionately benefits those who are doing best in our country already?

Three, the Treasury Department just provided us with an analysis of who benefits from the Republican tax cut when it is fully phased in. I point out on the marriage penalty tax cut, there will be no relief for any West Virginians or anybody from any of our States for the first 5 years because it does not kick in. All we do in West Virginia is pay more taxes under a Republican tax cut because of what it inevitably does through the Federal Reserve System.

If my colleagues vote for the Republican tax cut, if they are of such a mind to vote for the Republican tax cut, please understand that Americans in the highest income categories will get 67 percent of the benefit of this bill. Can anyone call that a middle-income tax cut with a straight face? If one divides up the quintiles—America divided into five different income categories—it is gross. It is embarrassing to see what happens in the distributional tables of who benefits from the Republican tax cut.

How much is there for those in the lower brackets doing the best they can? Very little. In fact, for those in the lowest quintile, which is 1 percent of the population of the benefit of this generous Republican tax cut bill.

I suggest my colleagues should be able to answer these questions to themselves before they have to answer them to their constituents.

Equally shocking is the fact that more than 45 million families in the lowest brackets get a tiny percentage from this bill. The 23 million American families right in the middle get only 10 percent of the $792 billion Republican proposal. That means, again, that three-fifths, or a little bit more, get only 15.5 percent of the total benefits in this bill. This is wrong; this is dangerous tax policy. Frankly, it is dangerous social policy which will reverberate for years to come.

Fourth, the Republican tax cut will increase mandatory interest payments on the debt by $141 billion over the next ten years. Mandatory interest payments on the debt are already at about $227 billion. Doesn't that tell you in fairly clear and simple terms why we need to, in fact, pay down the debt to get rid of that obligation, to free up for the capital market this money which is now crowding out private sector investments.

Five, if we spend every dime and more of our available assets in the form of yet unknown surpluses before we preserve Medicare and Social Secu-ritv for the future, there will be no add-
those programs that we know the American people do want, do ask for, do insist on, and do look to us to provide.

Medicare is desperately in need of modernization. It is desperately in need of universal outpatient prescription benefits. Social Security needs to meet the needs of the baby boom generation. People on the other side and some on our side talk about how they in Washington trying to decide what is good for the people as opposed to the people know what is good for the people. The people out there know. Those whom I represent and my colleagues represent know they are not in it for themselves. They are in it for their children and their grandchildren. It is not just what they think might be best for them. They are thinking, yes, what might be good for them, but what is good for their children and grandchildren. That is the way Americans are. That is the way we have always been.

Six, and finally, for your consideration: If my colleagues cast their vote for a $792 billion tax cut predicated on those deep spending cuts, how will my colleagues be viewed in their States?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes off the bill to the Senator from West Virginia.

ator is recognized.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I thank my Democratic chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

If my colleagues vote for this bill, will they be viewed as a leader? Will they be seen as somebody who is thinking for the long-term good? That is what people want. That is what people yearn for, is leadership. Or will they be looked at as somebody who took the easy and easy way out in giving them dollars," or some part of them? Or will they be viewed as somebody who signed up to an economic plan that will limit our ability to protect Medicare and Social Security? My people point that out. Even if they do not know it, even if they are not sure of it, in their own minds, they will wonder whether or not you are exercising leadership responsibilities or political imperatives?

When will these devastating cuts in the important domestic programs affect your constituents? Imagine—how would my colleagues respond to this?
What would my colleagues say to them?
How would they view you when they discover that these things happended and they happened because of a $792 billion vote that you made? What would you hear from your constituents if you agreed to $775 billion in very important discretionary cuts on programs people care about? These are not new programs but programs already reduced, programs to be further diminished by $775 billion. How would they view you then? Would they view you as a leader or as a follower of public opinion that did not exist in that regard?

Here is one example which is shocking to me. I say to the senior Senator from New York. The House is now considering reclaiming $6 billion from the welfare reform money from the States—from the States, not even from us, but from the States—to make up its shortfall on the Labor-HHS budget. It is kind of "reverse Robin Hood"— stealing from the poor to make sure we can provide tax breaks for the wealth-est of Americans.

I conclude my remarks simply by urging my colleagues, in the most sinccere and intense terms, in one of the most important debates—the most important debate I have been associated with in the 15 years I have been in the Senate—to weigh these considerations against the possibility that exists for this country and for our people if we actually pay down the national debt—to accomplish the impossible—to eliminate the budget deficit, to eliminate the national debt, and then to contemplate what kind of country this could be for all of our citizens.

I thank the senior Senator from New York, and I thank our colleagues and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH. I yield 19 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the committee for yielding me so much time and for letting me speak last on our side as we begin the amendment process.

We have heard some awfully strong language here. Our colleague from West Virginia begs us not to give Americans back some of this money that we have taken from them in taxes.

Our Vice President says that the tax cut before us is a "huge, gigantic, risky tax scheme."

This is very extreme language we are hearing. Let me try to explain why it is so shrill. It is shrill for two reasons, really.

No. 1, giving people back their money so they can spend it themselves rather than Government spending it for them hardly seems extreme to the American people. With the projected surplus of $2 trillion, giving about one-fourth of it back 25 cents out of every dollar is too much.

But the other reason the President and his supporters are so shrill is, the President is not telling the truth. Let me explain why.

I have a chart here that has the cover page and one page of text of the analysis of what is called the Mid-Session Review. This is an analysis by the non-partisan Congressional Budget Office that was just completed of the President's budget; that is, what he proposes we do with the surplus, what the budget adopted by the Congress proposes we do with the surplus; and then it compares the two.

This is not me talking, this is not Bill Clinton talking, this is the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office talking.

To listen to the President and to listen to our Democrat colleagues, you get the idea that this is a debate between cutting taxes and paying down debt. The problem is, that is not what the debate is about. This White House has turned misinformation into an art form. Here is the living proof of it.

In the analysis of the Mid-Session Review that was just published by the Congressional Budget Office, the Congressional Budget Office basically has two numbers. One is the President had initially proposed spending some of the Social Security surplus, we have so shamed the administration that they now have agreed with us that the roughly $2 trillion of surplus caused by Social Security should be set aside to pay down debt or to fix Social Security.

It is interesting that we have voted many times on a lockbox procedure to require that that money not be spent, and we have been unable to get the support of the minority in making that the law. But that's precisely the thing that at least to this point we have agreed on.

Where the disagreement is—and the Congressional Budget Office shows it very clearly—is, what do you do with the non-Social Security surplus? Basically, what the Congressional Budget Office finds, that the administration desperately does not want anybody to know, is that their answer is, spend it. They are not paying down any debt with the non-defense discretionary surplus. In fact, over a 10-year period they spend every penny of it. And they spend so much money in their budget that in 3 of the years they have to plunder the Social Security trust fund, basically to pay for what they have committed to do.

In fact, the Congressional Budget Office concludes, in looking at their own budget—and, again, this is the non-partisan CBO—that in total, the President, over the next 10 years, would spend $1.033 trillion of the non-Social Security surplus, which is a little more than the entire surplus.

So when our colleagues are saying, don't give money back to taxpayers, pay down the debt, they are not talking about their program. The problem is, and the frustration is, if the President stood up and told the truth and said, don't give this money back to families, let me spend it, don't give this money back to working couples because they can't do as good a job spending it as the Federal Government could, then we could have a meaningful debate. But it is hard to have a meaningful debate because the administration basically is engaged in a concerted effort to mislead the American public.

But numbers and facts are persistent things. The Congressional Budget Office concludes two things about the Clinton budget that are devastating. No. 1, it would spend an additional $1.033 trillion more than the budget we have adopted and the spending caps to which the President is committed.

Secondly, and equally devastating, despite all this talk about buying down debt, with Chairman Roth's tax cut, the budget adopted by Congress, which includes this tax cut, still pays down the Federal debt $219 billion more than the President's budget. Why? Because Senator Roth's tax cut gives $792 billion back to working families. The President's budget spends $1.033 trillion. As a result, even after the tax cut, the Republican budget reduces debt held by the public by $219 billion more than the President's budget.

So his rhetoric is great. His sound bites are great, but the president is not telling the truth. The reality is, the President proposes to spend every penny of the discretionary surplus on Government programs and plunders Social Security for additional money in 3 out of the next 10 years.

So the question is between reducing debt and cutting taxes. The debate is between letting Government spend the money or letting the taxpayer spend the taxpayer's own money.

But in addition to that, the tax cut that is being called "huge," "vulgar," "dangerous," by President Clinton and his supporters is actually substantially smaller than the massive spending spree the President would take us on with 81 programs.

I ask you, how can it be more dangerous to start to cut taxes by $792 billion with a trillion-dollar surplus than it is to fund 81 programs and spend $1.033 trillion? Obviously, no one can argue that it is even equally dangerous. So what does the President do? He basically does not tell the truth.

Point No. 2, let's talk about: Why a tax cut now?

This chart really shows the highest 7 years in American history, in terms of the tax burden on working American families. The highest Federal tax burden in American history by the Federal Government was in 1945, when Harry Truman was President. By the way, 38 cents out of every dollar earned in America is what we were spending on defense in 1945. That was the highest tax burden in American history.

The second highest tax burden in American history is today. Under President Clinton, in the year 2000—which is the budget year we are considering—the Federal Government will take 20.6 cents out of every dollar earned by every American. That is the second highest Federal tax burden in American history.

The third highest is under President Clinton in 1999.

The fourth highest was under President Clinton in 1998.

The fifth highest was under Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1944, when defense was 37 percent of the economy.

The sixth highest was under Bill Clinton in 1997. Hence, why we have on this chart "Cause of Record Taxes: War and Clinton."

The seventh highest tax burden in American history was the day Ronald Reagan became President. What did we promptly do? We cut taxes by 25 percent. So we have never had, except under President Clinton, tax levels approaching the level we have today.

Now, in terms of this "dangerous" tax cut, this is probably the most telling chart of all. The day Bill Clinton became President, the Federal Government was taking 17.8 cents out of every dollar earned by every American in Federal taxes. Today, we are near an all-time record of 20.6 cents out of every dollar earned by every American. Hence, since Bill Clinton has been President, with the 1993 tax increase as people have moved into higher tax brackets, the tax take on the American people has grown from 17.8 to 20.6 percent.

Now, if we took every penny of the non-Social Security surplus, which is $1 trillion, under current services, actually, bigger if you take a spending freeze, but if we took every penny of that, and we are not proposing that here, we are talking next year, the first year of this tax cut, not over $1 trillion—but if we took the entire trillion and gave it back in tax cuts, 10 years from now, when that tax cut is fully implemented, taxes would still be 18.8 percent of the economy, and taxes would still be substantially above where they were the day Bill Clinton became President.

So when he is calling this tax cut "dangerous and huge," it is a tax cut that would not get us back, in terms of tax burden, to where we were the day Bill Clinton became President. It would still mean the tax burden during the Clinton administration, even with this tax cut, would have grown by more than in any modern time. Let me address the idea that this is a huge, dangerous tax cut. It is very interesting how people make up these things and nobody goes and looks it up. But let me give you some figures.

We are projecting next year, the first year of this tax cut, that revenues are going to be $1.9 trillion. We are going to collect that much in taxes. This tax cut next year is a whopping $4 billion. So out of $1.9 trillion of taxes are going to collect, this would give $4 billion back. That is .21 percent. Now, that is the "huge, dangerous" tax cut about which we are talking. It is implemented over a 10-year period. But over that entire period, what is being called a "dangerous" tax cut would reduce taxes on the American people by 3.48 percent. So it is less than a 3.5-percent reduction in taxes, far less than President Clinton would increase government spending. I remind my colleagues, and somehow that is "dangerous."

Well, it is dangerous if you are Bill Clinton, because if we give this money back to the American people, he can't spend it. There are 81 programs he would like to have that he won't get. What the President should be asking, rather than misleading people, is: Here are my 81 programs. This is what I am going to do for you. I love you and this is what we are going to do for you. And we ought to be forced to say: We are going to give you this tax cut, and we are going to let you decide how to spend it.

Some people could look at the President's 81 programs and look at our tax cut and they can say, "I would rather President Clinton do it," or "I would rather do it myself." That is the legitimate debate we ought to be having. But we are not having it because the White House continues to mislead the American public.

Let me make a few other points. Our colleagues keep talking about tax cuts for the rich. I have noticed there is a code here: Any tax cut is for the rich. Any tax increase is for the poor. Well, so when the Democrats pushed the largest tax increase in American history when they last had a majority, in 1993, that was a tax on the rich. Remember? Well, it raised taxes on gasoline for everybody. Do only rich people drive cars and trucks? I don’t think so. It defined as “rich” anybody who made $25,000 a year or more because that is the tax it put on Social Security. Now, I don’t know about some of the States that people may represent, but where I am from, $25,000 a year is not rich. But to our Democrat colleagues, obviously, since the Clinton tax increase was a tax on the rich, $25,000 in income made you rich.

According to them, our tax cut is for rich people. They get very excited about the fact that they have discovered when you cut taxes, people who don’t pay income taxes don’t get tax cuts. But all point out, of course, the vast majority of people who pay income taxes, which I personally think is an outrage. I think everybody ought to pay something. But the 32 percent of American families pay no income taxes, and their obvious question is: Well, under your tax cut, 32 percent of families don’t get a tax cut; how can that be fair? Let me explain why it is fair. These taxpayers don’t get food stamps, the great majority of them. They don’t get Medicaid. And unless they are elderly, they don’t get Medicare. They don’t qualify for those programs. Our point is that tax cuts are for taxpayers. When we are cutting taxes, if you don’t pay income taxes, you should not expect to get a tax cut.

Some of our colleagues would like you to believe the Roth package benefits the rich to the poor. The plain truth is that the Roth package makes the tax system more progressive, not less progressive. Now, it is true that when you cut taxes, people who don’t pay taxes don’t get a tax cut. But we cut income taxes, the top 50 percent of the income taxes. So is anybody surprised that, when the top 50 percent pay 99 percent of the income taxes, that when you cut income taxes, the top 50 percent tend to get more tax cuts? In fact, our colleagues would like to point out the across-the-board tax cuts by saying, well, a 10-percent tax cut means that Senator Rockefeller, who pays at least 10 times as much in taxes as I do, would get 10 times as big a tax cut. I am not offended by that. If he pays 10 times as much, and we have an across-the-board cut, he would get 10 times as big a tax cut.

Let me run over these figures real quickly so people understand. The top 1 percent of income earners in America pay 99 percent of all the income earned, but they pay 32.3 percent of all the taxes. The top 5 percent earn 30.4 percent of all the income earned, but they pay 50.8 percent of the taxes. The top 10 percent earn 41.6 percent of the income earned, but they pay 62.4 percent of the taxes.

Should anybody be shocked when you cut taxes, when the upper 50 percent of American income earners pay 99 percent of the taxes, and they are going to get most of the tax cut? Just what I would get. Only our Democrat colleagues and the President would be outraged about that. Our view is that tax cuts are for taxpayers. Who is rich? I decided to look at this top 50 percent of income earners and basically ask: Who are these rich people who the Democrats think should not get a tax cut?

Let me go down who they are. They are the 50 percent of people who pay roughly 99 percent of the income taxes. They are 62 percent of all homeowners in America. They are 66 percent of all people between the age of 45 and 64. They are 67 percent of all full-time workers in America. They are 68 percent of all workers who went to college. They are 69 percent of all married couples. And they are 80 percent of all two-earner households in America. These are the people who the Democrats tell us are unworthy and should not get a tax cut. They are the 50 percent of people who pay roughly 99 percent of the income taxes.

and a strong economy have provided a projected surplus that gives us hope we can solve some of the biggest challenges of our time. It is an exciting time to be in the Congress.

But in our excitement about the projected surplus, I am afraid we are acting in haste. And in doing so, we could undermine the hard work we have done to get to this point.

Let me be clear: I support responsible tax relief for the American people.

I support further reform of our nation’s estate tax laws so that the small timberland owner in Mason County, Washington, and the small business owner who sells farm equipment in Moses Lake, Washington, can pass their land and livelihoods on to the next generation.

I support deductibility of health insurance costs so the self-employed owner of a technology start-up company in Seattle can afford health care.

I support the extension of the research and experimentation tax credit so Washington state high-tech and biotech companies have the incentive and the ability to invest in their long-term future and the future of our country.

I support reforming the individual alternative minimum tax so that families all over Washington can “marriage penalty” so that a young married couple in Spokane has more money to purchase their first home or begin saving for retirement.

I support expanding the low income housing tax credit so that we increase the availability of affordable housing for low- and middle-income families, especially in rural and urban areas.

I support the creation of Farm and Ranch Risk Management Accounts so the apple grower in the Yakima Valley will have one more tool to manage the risk inherent in agriculture.

ever implemented by the federal government—Social Security and Medicare. Can you imagine the economic upheaval that the insolvency of Social Security or Medicare would cause? I can assure my colleagues that hard working Americans want economic security in their retirement years, not tax breaks they may never even see or benefit from.

That's an important point, Mr. President. This tax bill, which would do nothing for Federal initiatives—from Social Security to Medicare, from transportation infrastructure to education, from Section 8 housing to clean air and water—that raise the quality of life of low and middle income Americans would then give three-fourths of the benefits in return to the top one-fifth of income earners. The average tax cut for Mr. Right would be $600. The families of Mr. Poor taxpayers—with incomes of $38,200 and below—would be $139 per year. And in return for that tax cut, that same family will have to worry even more about taking care of elderly parents, about where they will find money to help their kids go to college since there are fewer Pell Grants, and about how they get to spend some time with their kids when they are on congested highways for hours each day. And to top it all off, when the family goes on vacation to see our nation's national parks, the gates will be closed.

I will support the alternative drafted by my Democratic friends on the Finance Committee. The alternative would meet many of our priorities for any tax bill we send to the President.

The Democratic alternative would provide broad-based relief to the more than 70 percent of taxpayers claiming the standard deduction. It would remove three million taxpayers from the tax role. It would also provide marriage penalty relief. These are real benefits targeted to precisely the lower and middle Americans that need it the most.

The Democratic alternative would allow 100 percent deductibility of health insurance costs for self-employed individuals and include a 30 percent tax credit for individuals without employer-sponsored plans. Since the Senate failed to pass a strong Patients' Bill of Rights, at least we can do is make health insurance more accessible to all Americans.

The Democratic alternative would make public school modernization a high priority. It would provide $34 billion in modernization bonds. Mr. President, this would send a strong message to students, parents and administrators that this Congress care about providing the education infrastructure we desperately need.

The Democratic alternative would provide tax relief for our nation's struggling farmers and ranchers. It would establish Farm and Ranch Risk Management, FARRM, accounts so that producers could better manage their income to reduce risk. Given that it is unlikely Congress will act to improve the Farm Security net for growers this year. FARRM accounts are the least we can do.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the Democratic alternative. A vote for the Democratic alternative is a vote for responsible tax relief and responsible government. At a time when most Americans do not have much faith in Congress, let us not compound that sentiment with responsible tax policies. We have worked so hard to correct the misguided policies of the past. As we move forward into the next century, let's learn the lessons of the past and reject the Republican tax plan in front of us.

Retirement Security Provisions in the Tax Bill

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I rise to address several important provisions in the tax relief legislation that has been reported out of the Senate Finance Committee.

In the last few years, I have taken an special interest in reforming our federal entitlement programs and our tax policies so as to recognize and to prepare for the retirement of the Baby Boom generation that will begin in 2008. During the last Congress, I was appointed by Majority Leader TRENT LOTT to chair a Senate Republican Task Force on Retirement Security, on which Chairman ROTH served, and provided the benefit of his experience and his enduring commitment to promoting retirement saving. Our task force produced a bill, numbered S. 883 in the last Congress, several provisions of which were included in the 1997 reconciliation bill. I am pleased to see that several of those provisions included in this year's reconciliation bill.

I would like to review several of these provisions and to discuss their significance.

Chairman ROTH has devoted several years of his career to promoting increased personal saving through individual retirement accounts. His IRA legislation, the Roth-Breaux bill, was included in its entirety as the first title of our comprehensive bill. The Chairman succeeded in passing some of the provisions of this legislation during reconciliation last time around, including the back-loaded IRA that has become known as the 'Roth IRA.' This time, the Finance Committee mark moves the bill still further forward on expanding the saving in individual retirement accounts. It increases the contributions that can be made to these accounts, as well as expanding the number of individuals who can participate in them. Now more than ever, with the economy on the brink of retirement, ready to move from being earners and investors to being consumers, "all saving is good saving." It is a very propitious time to propose that individual saving be promoted and encouraged.

That's an important point, Mr. President. I rise to review several of the provisions, for our own accounting purposes, as "revenue losers," but this is misleading. This is not saving that is "lost"—it is only "lost" to the federal government. This saving and investment will result in much-needed contributions to capital formation and to economic growth. This is a far superior use of this money than collecting it to fuel current government consumption.

I was pleased to join in cosponsoring Senator ROTH's legislation to expand IRAs, and am further pleased that this reconciliation bill incorporates a portion of that expansion.

Senator ROTH's IRA legislation was drafted before the task force began work on S. 883 in the last Congress. But that is not because contributions were original to the task force of which I remain very proud, and I am pleased to see that they have received positive attention from the Finance Committee this year.

Both of these is the "SAFE" plan for small businesses. This is a new type of defined benefit plan that we worked to devise in concert with others who also perceived the need to make such pension plans more attractive to small business owners. Right now, it is too often the case that it is not in the interest of a small employer to offer such a pension plan. The nondiscrimination rules are too complex, and the small employer may not feel that they can afford the fiscal commitment of such a size, uncertainty, and duration.

The "SAFE" plan neatly balances the need of employers to have a simplified pension structure, with the desire to give employees fair treatment and that several benefits can be included in this year's reconciliation bill.

I would like to review several of these provisions and to discuss their significance.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, I move to waive the Budget Act for the consideration of S. 1429, and to recognize the chair of the Republican Task Force on Retirement Security, I find it gratifying to see that the chairman placed a significant amount that is critical to their retirement plans. Everyone's interest will be served by allowing these accumulations to roll over into other types of plans. I simply close by again thanking the chair of the Finance Committee for the level of attention that we introduced them separately in the last Congress as the WISE, Women's Investment and Savings Equity bill.

Some of the provisions of WISE were included in last year's reconciliation package, including the liberalization of rules governing contributions by homemakers to IRAs.

We also included another provision aimed at giving stay-at-home spouses a chance to "catch-up" on pension contributions if staying at home to care for a child interrupted their past contributions. We offered a provision allowing "catch-up" opportunities for individuals who had taken maternity or paternity leave. The Finance Committee bill also includes a "catch-up" provision. Though not specific to the case of families caring for children, the provision providing for larger IRA and pension contributions once the individual reaches the age of 50 is intended to serve the same purpose—to recognize that individuals often do not have as much money to put aside in saving until their children are out of the nest. Giving parents a chance to "catch up" for these lost opportunities is a family-friendly reform.

I continue to believe that allowing "catch-up" contributions for individuals who missed out on pension contribution opportunities specifically because of child-rearing is an important idea, which I may still wish to pursue. But I am pleased to see the provision in this legislation and to recognize the chairman's effort to serve the same end.

Finally, a number of other reforms that I and the rest of the task force have sponsored in the past also appear in this bill—including important portability provisions that would allow individuals in public sector employment plans to take their pension benefits with them when they join a private employer. The current situation is an artifact of the undue complexity of our pension law, and the incompatibility of public and private pension regulations that has interfered with such portability until now. Public employees are often afraid to leave public positions because they do not know whether their pension benefits will travel with them, especially once it has accumulated. Everyone's interest will be served by allowing these accumulations to roll over into other types of plans.

I simply close by again thanking the chairman for the level of attention that he has given to retirement saving in the Finance Committee mark. As the chairman for the Republican Task Force on Retirement Security, I find it gratifying to see that the chairman placed such a high priority for these needs among the competing objectives that Senators brought to crafting this tax bill. I hope that indeed "the time has come" for many of these provisions on which we have worked so hard in the past, and I hope that they will be supported throughout this reconciliation process.

I thank my colleagues, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. President, the point of order against section 1502 is in the necessary by the antiquated provision of the Budget Act where provisions were drawn to function in an era of deficits. Even though the Senate instructed the Finance Committee to cut taxes, almost everyone understood those instructions to mean the tax cuts would be permanent.

Nevertheless, we must contend with the language of section 313(b)(1)(e) of the Budget Act which forbids any reconciliation bill from achieving a net reduction in revenue beyond the 10 years for which the committee was instructed.

Of course, achieving a net reduction in revenues is our goal, as well as our instructions.

Moreover, the Budget Act provision in question was not written with this situation in mind. It was not written to hinder refunds of a budget surplus. Rather, it was written to bar creative accounting provisions, such as those offered on this floor to delay the timing of expenditures, or to accelerate the timing of revenue.

These were one-time only provisions designed to occur at the end of the window—not for any policy reason but only to achieve compliance for a moment in time with the relevant instructions.

I remember a military pay installment was once moved from the last day of one fiscal year to the first day of the next year, which was outside the window, to achieve budgetary savings in the earlier years. But no provision of that sort is contained in this bill.

Together, the question is whether any tax relief can be permanent except for a very small percent of tax provisions.

It is a general rule that tax relief is permanent. This was true with the last tax bill, which provided an actual tax cut—the Tax Relief Act of 1997. But that bill was paired with a balanced budget act of the same year, the savings of which far exceeded the tax cut then provided.

Today, we face a new question under the Budget Act because it is unnecessary to pair this tax cut with another bill to cut spending. It is unnecessary because we have already achieved the goal that such a spending bill would hope to achieve, a surplus to fund a tax cut.

In my opinion, the Budget Act provision makes no sense if applied to the current circumstances.

Everything I have said applies in equal measure to the Democratic alternative, and every other tax cut Members are anxious to propose on the floor this week.
In sum, everyone thought we were instructed to achieve permanent tax relief. That was the commonsense issue standing. That is the better tax policy. I urge support for the waiver to protect this legislation against an arcane budget rule never intended to apply to this situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRAPRO). The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. As my good friend knows, at the end of my statement this morning I indicated I would raise this point of order against section 1502 of the bill, which restores the sunsetted provisions of the bill beyond the 10th year. That is clearly a violation of the Byrd rule which deals with increasing the deficit on a reconciliation bill.

I am surprised to find my friend refer to that provision as "antiquated" or "arcane." That provision has not even gone into effect. We have made the point on this floor that we are providing tax reductions that have not occurred and may not occur. It certainly does not exist.

A few days ago, in a letter to the Democratic Members on our side, our dear friend, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, with respect to the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty, used the word "floccinaucinihilipilification," and it was reported in the press this morning. He got that word from the Senator from New York. Floccinaucinihilipilification is now the second longest word in the Oxford Dictionary. It is from a debate in the House of Commons in the 18th century meaning the futility of budgets. They never come out straight.

I had the opportunity to review an autobiography of John Kenneth Galbraith years back in the New Yorker magazine. I added "ism" to refer to the institutional nature of this, so it became floccinaucinihilipilificationism. It is no joke. One never gets it right. It is not because one cannot, one does not try.

"Exogenous": Come in from the outside. Drought, hurricane, Asia goes to pieces. We don’t know what will happen. We have this spent $20 billion tending to control this deficit. We quadrupled the national debt in 12 years, from 1980 to 1992. We have now reversed that. We have made the point on this floor that we are providing tax reductions that have not occurred and may not occur. It certainly does not exist.

vestments we should make—not unwise investments, but investments in education, investments in child care, investments in economic development, investments in urban communities, investments in our rural communities.

This Republican initiative will explode the debt. It is fiscally irresponsible. It will put us in a straitjacket where we as a country will not be able to make any of the wise investments we should make in education for our children and our grandchildren. This is a critically important initiative, I say to the Senator from New York, and I fully support his action. This vote is probably as important a vote as we are going to have over the next couple of days.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I could not more agree with my friend from Minnesota, who has taught political science superbly well. Earlier today, in opening remarks, I commented on a theory that developed on the conservative side of politics in the 1970s which held that the way to control the size of the Federal Government was to starve it of revenue—"starve the beast" was the rather graphic term. It was indeed. That was the effort in the early 1980s until they realized it was not working.

Just yesterday, E.J. Dionne wrote:
The long-time goal about which Republican leaders are candid, is to put Government in a fiscal straitjacket for years to come.

This is an idea with which we are dealing, not a bunch of numbers, a grand strategy, and it will work if, in the second decade, we see a cost of this measure. The Treasury estimate is $3 trillion, and it is, I believe, which will parasite which will put the Government in a straitjacket. We have no right to do that to another generation of Americans. If they wish to do it, that is their right, but it is not surely our option.

Mr. WELLS STONE. Mr. President, I say to my colleague from New York, the point he just made is profoundly important. We do not have a right to make this decision for other Democrats and Republicans who are in the Senate to serve and represent people. This is fiscally irresponsible. It explodes the debt, and it puts us in an absolute straitjacket whereby we will be incapable of making any of the investments we all say we are for to make this a better country.

I yield the floor.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ASHCROFT. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I thank my colleague for this opportunity to address what I consider to be a very important issue. Of all the freedom we have as Americans, I think the freedom to use and to spend and to devote the product of our own hands, the work we do to benefit our own families, is perhaps one of the most cherished freedoms of a free society. In our debates about the theories of government and resources and whether we should have tax cuts or increased taxes, sometimes we forget that it is a fundamental freedom—a cherished opportunity for individuals—to accept the incentive, the opportunity, and the responsibility of providing for themselves.

One of the things we want to provide for ourselves, obviously, is government, so that we have a framework in place for other than for ourselves, or that government should do for us those things we can do for ourselves.

As we think about how we deal with the resources that are generated by the enterprise and the productivity of the American people, we ought to think about the American people and the fact that the fundamental freedom we cherish is being able to work, to produce something, and then to manage that which we produce for our own benefit. If we have been so successful at it that we even are able to be generous with that which we produce. But it is our own generosity. America is the most giving nation in the world. Philanthropy here dwarfs philanthropy in other settings, but it is, in part, because we are allowed to keep that which we produce. Giving is greater here than any place on the planet because we allow people to keep that which they produce, to manage it for their own benefit and for their family, and then to give it according to their desires.

We stand on the threshold of a debate about what happens when a person works hard and creates something, creates resources, earns wages, creates wealth—that is what wages are. People earn that, they create it with work and decide how it will be devoted, what will happen to it.

We have a situation now where our Government has taxed the American people to such an extent that if those taxes are just collected over the next 10 years, we will have collected in that 10-year period about $3.3 trillion that we will not need to spend in that 10-year period. That is why we call it the general surplus, the entire surplus, the entirety of the surplus, the entirety of the surplus.
of that surplus which we will not spend, and that is the part that is the surplus plus Social Security. We said there will be no expenditures of the Social Security surplus. It sounds simple and it sounds like something that should always have been the case, but the truth of the matter is, for the first time in recent history, in memorable history, for the first time we had a budget in this body that said we are not going to spend the Social Security surplus.

Frankly, on this side of the aisle, I am very proud of the fact that we have been able to do that. It was not a budget that was voted for by the people on the other side of the aisle. They did not vote for that. That is not something they have ever done with one of their budgets. There are some things they have done with their leadership, but it is something they fought against. We have done it, and it is now an achievement of the Senate that we have a budget which is designed to protect every dollar of Social Security, none of it to be spent to cover operating budget demands of this Government. That is a major achievement. That is something for which we can be grateful.

Secondly, we have a plan in place, even with the proposed tax relief for the American people, that will cut the national debt, the publicly held debt of America, in half over the next 10 years. That is pretty responsible. They are talking about lots of things, saying we are not addressing the debt properly.

Never have I seen any budget in a previous setting ever purport to move forward to cut the deficit in half in the next 10 years. Very few families will try to pay off one of the things they have done with their leadership, but it is something they fought against. We have done it, and it is now an achievement of the Senate that we have a budget which is designed to protect every dollar of Social Security, none of it to be spent to cover operating budget demands of this Government. That is a major achievement. That is something for which we can be grateful.

The Republican plan simply says a good part of that, some significant part of it, ought to go back to the American people. They should be able to spend it on their families, to do for themselves what they do not need Government to do for them, because the best department of social services is the family, the best department of education is the family. The best department of health is the family.

Let’s let our families operate. Let’s fund families, not just bureaucracies. Let’s fund people in their homes, not the bureaucracy in its Government. That is what the Republican plan is.

There is a lot of debate now: If we can afford a tax cut for the next 10 years, we have to make sure we do not promise the American people we can have tax cuts on a permanent basis.

We are making this tax relief on very modest presumptions regarding the prosperity of this country. We are presuming a very modest growth, very limited. This is conservative. It is not appropriate for us to say we will provide tax relief now and not provide it later. If we repeal the marriage penalty tax now, we should not re- penalize you ten years later. That does not make sense.

We simply ought to put the tax rates where we believe they reflect the integrity of the American people and the productivity of the American people and the fact that the American people are now being asked to pay more than it costs to provide the service. And we ought to reduce them, not to reduce them permanently, not on a piecemeal basis, not with an automatic reinstater of a tax which is the highest in history.

Why is it we are asked to have a tax cut and those on the other side of the aisle want to make sure we cannot make it permanent relief for the people, that we have to promise somehow that the highest rates in history will be revisited after a 10-year lapse? I do not believe that is good judgment. I do not believe that is good judgment.

I believe when lower taxes, when we lower the burden on the American people, we are beginning to direct the assets of the culture to America’s families instead of governmental bureaucracy. It seems to me we ought to do that on a permanent basis.

I do not remember tax increases that have said they only last 10 years. It seems to me that when taxes have been raised in the past, they have not been just raised. I think we would be well served to say we are going to provide a tax structure that respects families. We are not going to say we will take the marriage penalty out of the code for 10 years and then reimposed it.

If we are going to provide tax equity for people so that the lowest-rate taxpayers in America have an even lower rate, and more people are paying at that lower rate, we should not say this is a sale which goes off and later on your taxes will automatically be raised by some Congress in the future or at some certain date in the future.

It is time for us to say that the American people have simply paid in more than it takes to provide the services. When you pay in more than it takes to provide what you are buying, you get change.

I go to the grocery store. When I pay in more than it takes to buy the gallon of milk that I want to buy for my family, they give me change. I tell you what I am going to do for you. I am going to give you a stalk of celery and a bag of broccoli and two boxes of cereal so you use up all the money you paid me. He says: You paid more than is necessary for the services, and you get change. You get a refund. You get relief. You get some of your resource back.

I think that is where we are as a Senate. It is time for us to look at this country, where our cost of government is higher than it has ever been in the history of this Republic, and to say that it is time to give people relief. That relief is appropriate. And it should be permanent, not relief upon which we could not rely, but that it should be relief upon which we can rely, plan, and build for our future.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of our time.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. May I observe in passing, the cost of government is not greater than it ever has been. The revenues are. That is why we have a surplus.

To my good friend, the Senator from North Dakota, I yield 4 minutes to respond; and then the remaining 5 minutes I yield to the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. CONRAD. I thank the Chair and the ranking member, the Senator from New York.

The Senator from Missouri misspoke. He said that those of us on this side have not supported saving every penny of the Social Security surplus for Social Security. He is simply wrong. The budget we offered on our side not only saves every penny of the Social Security surplus for Social Security; in addition, we proposed saving an additional $200 billion over the next 10 years to strengthen and preserve Medicare.

So not only did we propose saving every penny of the Social Security surplus for Social Security, we also proposed taking another $200 billion and using it to preserve and protect Medicare.

The thing that is really jolting about this discussion is what is in this column that I referred to earlier by Robert Samuelson in the Washington Post today. He says:

The wonder is that the Republicans are so wedded to a program that is dubious as to both policy and politics. As Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan noted the other day, tax cuts might someday be justified to revive the economy from a recession or to improve the prospects of a sweeping program of social insurance. But there’s no case for big tax cuts based merely on paper projections of budget surpluses.

Members of the Senate, that is what is so radical about this proposal—radical, dangerous. This proposal not only has massive tax cuts—94 percent of all the non-Social Security surplus over the next 10 years—but it absolutely explodes in the outyears. A tax cut that is $800 billion in the first 10 years becomes $2 trillion and costs an additional $1 trillion or more. That is exactly what the Byrd amendment was designed to prevent. The whole reason there are expedited procedures in budget reconciliation is to reduce deficits.

Ours are on the other side are trying to use those expedited procedures on a measure that would increase deficits—blow a hole in the budget, potentially a hole of over $3 trillion. That is dangerous. That is not conservative. It is radical. It is reckless.

When they say they are only using 25 percent of what is available—nonsence, absolute nonsence. Of the $3 trillion that is projected—and, remember, just as Mr. Samuelson points out—if these projections just change a little bit, as they have over and over and in our history, these projections of surplus could change to projections of deficit, and we will rue the day when we have undermined the dramatic moves we have made toward fiscal responsibility in getting this country back on track.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. The Senator from Montana has expired.

Mr. CONRAD. I just remind my colleagues, the Democratic plan has more debt reduction in it than the Republican plan. That is a fact. It is indisputable. I hope my colleagues will resist this move to override a budget rule that prevent undermining the fiscal integrity of the United States.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. The Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, this debate is almost surreal. We are debating whether to be reckless or not. It comes down to that, whether to be responsible or whether to be reckless. The numbers are clear. They are compelling. The logic is steel-trap logic, with these numbers showing what this Republican majority budget tax proposal will cost—creating recklessness, irresponsibility. The numbers are just black and white clear.

This side has come up with charts, numbers; we have quoted from objective observers, columnists. It all comes out the same. This is extremely irresponsible. Let me remind my colleagues again why.

First of all, this is a column in a recent, very respected paper, the Wall Street Journal, from a day or two ago: "GOP Uses Two Sets of Books. Double-Counting Surplus Keeps Alive the Notion of Being Within Budget." That is from the Wall Street Journal written by David Rogers. No one accuses him of being a biased Democrat. He is a reporter of one of the most respected financial papers in the world, the Wall Street Journal.

This is his conclusion of what is going on: GOP uses two sets of books; double-counting. The Republican Congress was forced to increase taxes. Republican Congress and the President were forced to increase taxes twice—in 1982 and 1984. So I say if we, today, lock in these huge tax cuts for the future, they are going to decide to come back again to recoup it and put it back in place at a future time. I don’t think they want to do that. I urge colleagues to do what is right and not support the majority on this motion.

Mr. CONRAD. The Senator from Delaware controls the remaining time.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield such time as the Senator from Texas needs.

Mr. CONRAD. I just remind my colleagues why.

Mr. BLUM. Mr. President, I think there are a lot of ways you can argue this point. The Byrd rule, as the distinguished Senator from Montana argued, is to try to protect us from provisions that have not been debated, provisions that have not been considered in committee, but provisions that show up in a reconciliation bill where we have rules that are distinctly different from the Senate rules, principally, that you have limited debate for 20 hours and that, therefore, you can’t filibuster it and, therefore, you don’t have to have 60 votes to pass it.

I am a supporter of the Byrd rule. I think it is a good rule, and I think it is a rule aimed at exactly the kind of offense that the Senator from Montana is talking about; that is, issues that have not been widely debated, issues that have not been considered in committee, and issues that have not had a full airing of public opinion.

The President, daily, issues some new statement. Yesterday, it was going to be the end of health care for women in America if we cut taxes. For all I know, by this afternoon there could be a new coming of the bubonic plague if we cut taxes. Daily, the Vice President comments on it.

We have had a running debate now for weeks on this issue. We held extensive hearings in the Finance Committee on the issue. We held a markup. We have had extensive debate. Nobody in America has any doubt as to what we are doing in this bill. So my point is that all the reasons we have the Byrd rule, all the reasons that were adequately explained by the Senator from Montana, are good reasons to strike provisions from a reconciliation bill. And that is, if the provisions have not been widely discussed, if the public is not generally aware of them, if there have not been committee hearings and a markup on them, you don’t want to give them the special privilege of being in a reconciliation bill. But surely I don’t have to make a lengthy argument to convince people that none of those things are really justified.

It is true that our Democrat colleagues, using this technicality, can force us to sunset this tax cut in 10 years. They can do it. And in doing so, we have the tax cut for 10 years. Nobody believes the Congress or the American people will just allow them to fall off the end of the Earth in 10 years. It is not the complete undoing of our tax cut if this point of order should be sustained. I don’t know that it would be of great practical importance. But I simply say that on an issue that is the No. 1 issue in the country, on an issue that has been extensively debated, on an issue where we held hearings and a markup, on an issue where every American knows the subject is—is the No. 1 issue in the country. I hope our Democrat colleagues who are not just hell-bent against a tax cut will vote to waive this point of order so we don’t have the absurdity of adopting a tax cut and have it temporary and have it end in 10 years.

Hopefully, we are going to have an opportunity to improve this during 10 years. I am still for it if it is sunset in 10 years. But I don’t think this is good policy, and I urge my colleagues to rise above the politics of the moment and vote for good policy.

I reserve the remainder of our time.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I know our side is out of time, so I will use leader time to make a couple of remarks with regard to the vote we are to take.

We all are able to use our rhetorical acrobatics from time to time, but I must say, no one is better at it than the distinguished Senator from Texas as we try to define this set of circumstances.

This is a lot more than a technicality. The Byrd rule is there for a reason. I am glad he subscribes to the Byrd rule, but I must say, this goes way beyond the debate we had in committee and the understanding the American people and even Senators have with regard to what is in the bill. This will give the conference, the Congress, the Senate, everybody, carte blanche all the way through the legislative process until this bill goes to the President’s desk. Is that what we want to do? It would be one thing to waive a point of order and do so on the bill alone. That would be understandable. I might add, in that regard, it wasn’t the Democrats who made the point of order: it was the majority leader. The majority leader made his own point of order on this bill. It was the distinguished Chair, the senior Senator from Delaware, who made the motion to waive the point of order. So let’s make sure we have our facts straight. No one here made the point of order. They did.

But the point of order is not just on the bill. The point of order is on the conference report as well. I want somebody to come up and tell me what is going to be in that conference report. There is a huge difference between the Senate version and the House version, even on the Republican side. There are major differences that have to be ironed out and worked out. If anyone here today prepared to waive the point of order on a conference agreement for which there has not been one word written, for which there has not been one meeting, for which really there is no understanding or comprehension today? How could we possibly waive a point of order on something we haven’t done yet? That is what our Republican colleagues are prepared to do.

I hope we would have better sense than that, that we would recognize how ill-founded it would be and what a terrible precedent it would be for us to waive a point of order on actions to be taken at a later date by a conference we haven’t even named. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BREAUX. Will the distinguished chairman yield?

Mr. ROTH. I am happy to yield.

Mr. BREAUX. Following up on the Democratic leader’s question, when we have passed a bill out of the Finance Committee, the Moynihan bill, the Democratic version, and the Roth version, both for permanent tax cuts, different amounts—ours was $235 billion, the chairman’s was $792 billion, but they were both permanent tax cuts—I think the point the Democratic leader makes is a good one. I think I could possibly be for waiving the point of order if it was against this bill that we all know about. But to extend that to a conference report when we do not know what is going to be in that bill I think is probably going further than correct. I would be uncomfortable voting.

If it was limited to the bill that is before the Senate where everybody does know what is in it, I could understand that argument. But to say that all points of order against anything that may come back—and who knows what may come back; I have my ideas about what it should be, and others have different opinions. I don’t know that we can waive points of order against something that we have not even been considering, why does the point of order waiver cover everything that has not yet even been written?

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I say to my distinguished colleague, if we do not waive it with respect to the conference report, then we put the conference in a very difficult position. Should it write a bill for 10 years, or should it write one for a permanent tax cut?

Just let me point out that I don’t know of a single tax cut taking place since we have had the Budget Act that was not permanent. I don’t think there is a single person in the Finance Committee or on the floor who thought otherwise—that when you had tax cuts, it was necessarily going to be permanent. That is just common sense.

We all know that the point of the Byrd rule in this case was to avoid monkey business. We have all seen that happen, where you shift payment from one year to the next by changing it but for 1 day and, by doing that, you assure that you are in compliance with the budget instructions in theory but not in substance.
Now, we are all interested in seeing this economy continue to grow and prosper. One of the purposes of the tax cut is to ensure that it will happen. I am weary of those who are saying, well, this is going to cause inflation, and so forth. That is just plain rubbish. If you look at our tax cut, practically nothing happens the first year—a very small tax cut. For the first 5 years, it is something like $156 billion. So the big tax cut is 5 years off.

Let me make the point: Congress will be in session. People will be here. They will be able to take appropriate action. If it is thought that the tax cut is not desirable, there is nothing to prevent them from changing it. But let me just say, common sense—and that is what the American people want to see displayed here on the Senate floor—common sense is that when you have a tax cut, it is permanent.

Every substitute, every amendment to be offered here is permanent. Even the Democratic substitute is permanent. Every reconciliation before on spending or taxes, whether it was a Republican Congress or a Democratic Congress, has made permanent changes. Every reconciliation bill has depended on projections. There is nothing new about that. This bill is no different. It is not reckless; it is not radical; it is traditional and common sense.

As I said earlier, everyone thought we were instructed to achieve permanent tax relief. That was the common sense. We were instructed to achieve permanent tax relief. That was the common sense. But let me just say, common sense—and that is what the American people want to see displayed here on the Senate floor—common sense is that when you have a tax cut, it is permanent.

The legislative assistant read as follows:

The yeas and nays have been ordered for the consideration of S. 1429. This is on agreeing to the motion to waive unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with. The motion to waive unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with is agreed to. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The yeas and nays result—yeas 51, nays 48, as follows:

NAYS—48

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, might we have order?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, might we have order?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, might we have order?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, might we have order?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, might we have order?
going to allow it for 10 years, and who knows what is going to happen after 10 years.

That is not good public policy; it is not good tax policy, and it points to the problem: the fact that we are bringing up tax legislation in this reconciliation scenario that requires us to operate as we are operating. I suggest to folks on both sides of the aisle, if we can’t make tax laws in this country for more than 10 years, we have done something that is very terrible for this country. I think it is the wrong thing to do.

Let me make a couple of comments on the legislation that is before the Senate. Most countries around the world would love to have the problem we have in this Senate and in this Congress right now. Other countries would want to be able to see if it is possible to have the problem we are facing. We cannot seem to come to an agreement on it. That problem is the United States has about a $1 trillion surplus, and all of us are trying to figure out what to do with the surplus. I suggest if we as a Congress, Republicans and Democrats, cannot come to an agreement on what to do with a $1.1 trillion surplus, we, in effect, have said we are not very good at governing; that we cannot simply come together, make our points, seek legitimate compromise, and figure out what to do with a $1 trillion surplus.

I know there are some who want the President to be in a position to have the Republican tax bill of $796 billion pass and send it down to him at the White House and have a great ceremony vetoing it.

His argument will be that it is too large; it is too irresponsible; it is wasteful; it is going to cause the economy to go south; we are going to have an increase in interest rates. He is going to make a lot of good, solid political points when he has that veto ceremony.

There are those on the Republican side who I think would love that to happen, in fact, because they will be able to say: No, the President, when he had the opportunity, chose not to give the American people a legitimate tax cut, and he turned his back on the American people, the one who is in agreement with that political argument, and we will take that argument into the election.

The American people outside Washington, in my opinion, have come to the conclusion that they are getting very tired of those types of political positions being taken by Members on both sides of the aisle.

Under the current circumstances, we are headed for a financial train wreck because we are taking positions on both sides of the aisle: It is my way or no way.

I suggest that type of position leads to nothing happening. Sure, we will all at the end of the debate have an argument politically about whose fault it was that nothing was done. Some will say it is the Republicans because they didn’t want to give a reasonable tax cut to the American people. We will have good political arguments, but we will have no public policy. We will have good political arguments, but we will be arguing about failure and whose fault it was and whose fault it was that nothing was done. We will not have good public policy, which we were all sent here to craft.

It is clear that in a divided government under which we operate, no party can have their way all the time. If both parties take that position, we will end up getting absolutely nothing done.

There are a number of us who have sought to find a compromise between the $295 billion Democratic proposal and the $796 billion Republican proposal which the President has said he will veto, there has to be some common ground. There has to be a way in which we find what it is that our constituents are asking us to be able to come to an agreement somewhere in the middle and come up with a figure that is reasonable and gives a good tax credit to the American people and, at the same time, uses some of the surplus money, the $1 trillion, to address the very serious needs and shortcomings we have in discretionary programs, such as veterans, health and education, and has some money in it for paying down the national debt, has money in it for Medicare, which is obviously very important.

There should be a way both sides can come together and say: We don’t have everything we want but, yes, this is good public policy.

I suggest the American people are crying out for us to move in that direction.

I and others have joined in offering an amendment, which we hope to offer tomorrow, which tries to take the approach of: All right, let’s take $500 billion of the $1 trillion and give the American people a good, solid tax cut for those who need it the most, increase the standard deduction for hard-working people, increase the amount that you can earn before you are hit by the 28 percent bracket so people can keep a little bit more of their dollars. Yes, let’s fix the marriage penalty that encourages people, who are two single earners in the same family, not to marry only because of the Tax Code. Yes, let’s do something for education and savings, but let’s keep it at a reasonable figure of $500 billion, and then we can have the other $500 billion for things that are necessary or are needed.

The President has put some 320-odd billion dollars into Medicare. I was privileged to chair the Medicare Commission for a year. I will tell you that no one can tell this Congress how much money we need to fix Medicare. No one can make that assessment today because we have not yet reformed Medicare. How can we say how much we need to spend on Medicare until we reform it, which everybody agrees we ought to do?

Yes, ultimately the Roth tax bill will pass the Senate. A similar bill with the same size tax cut has passed in the House. I suggest to our leaders on both sides of the aisle, let’s hold back trying to go to conference. Pass these two bills and hold them in abeyance and let all Members, Republicans and Democrats alike, those in the House and in the Senate, go back to their respective States and respective districts and listen to our constituents and ask them what their priorities are.

Do not look at the polls that Republicans have done and say that is the 1984 scenario that requires us to do something. I suggest you give the American people a legitimate tax cut.
and reserve the other $500 billion for other needs of discretionary spending, to fix Medicare and reform it with prescription drugs that we could not get a strong degree of bipartisan support so we can all work together and hopefully, sometime in September, we can reach an agreement that makes sense and is good public policy. Good public policy, despite what the public polls say, is not going on. We have just seen the painful scene of the House of Representatives providing an emergency appropriations for the year 2000 census, as if to reduce the standard deduction by 60 percent. This would remove more than 3 million taxpayers from the tax rolls and would provide an estimated $9 million more to simply take the standard deduction. It is good tax policy. We believe it certainly is simplification.
We would like to have $27 billion for health care initiatives, including a $1,000 long-term care credit and a 50-percent deduction for long-term health insurance to make health insurance affordable.
We look forward to $17 billion in education initiatives. That would include a large bond program for public school modernization and permanently extending employer-provided tuition assistance for higher education.
If the Senate would indulge me, this latter provision is important. I have seen now 23 years in the Finance Committee, and it seems every other year we recommend extending it instead of making it permanent.
But if ever there was a palpable, de-montestably useful program, it is when employers send employees to receive education at various levels, commonly graduate levels, because they want to acquire new skills for which they will be put to work at higher wages, and for which they will pay more taxes, and that virtuous cycle I was talking about this morning will continue. It is unreal we continue to keep it on a short lifespan. But this gives it a much longer period.
Finally, $31 billion in technological and economic development incentives, including an extension of the research credit. These seem, to us, to be widely based. They are equitable, and I hope they will amend themselves to the Senate.
I see my friend from North Dakota is on the floor, is ready, and I yield him 15 minutes.
Mr. CONRAD addressed the Chair.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.
Mr. CONRAD. I thank the Chair and thank the Senator from New York.
I thought it might be helpful to review the record on how we got to where we are today as we put in context the choices that Senators have to make.
I think it is helpful to go back to 1981, the Reagan administration, and look at what happened to deficits and debt during that period, and compare it to the Bush administration and the Clinton administration, so that we understand how we got to where we are today and what the implications are for the proposals before us.
If we go back to the Reagan administration, I think we all recall the economic history. We had, then, a major tax cut. The results were clear. The deficits exploded. The debt exploded.
Then, in the Bush administration, we saw a further explosion of deficits, until in the last year of the Bush administration we reached a budget def-cit of $290 billion. The national debt had tripled under the Reagan administration.
In 1993, we passed a plan, on the Democratic side, without a single vote from the Republican side, a 5-year plan to reduce the deficits and restore our economic health.
That plan worked and worked beautifully. We saw reductions in the def-cit in every year of this plan. We saw in the first year the deficit go down to $255 billion, and then we saw declines in the deficit until we reach surplus.
That is the record of these three administrations.
In 1993, when we passed a 5-year plan that put us on the path to deficit reduction, we had increased taxes on the wealthiest 1 percent of taxpayers on income taxes and cut spending. That is how we achieved balance.
If we look at it from another vantage point, debt held by the public, we can see during the 1880s the debt held by the public grew dramatically. It was only after we passed the 1993 5-year plan that debt held by the public started coming down.
In fact, here we are today; we have seen significant progress made on debt held by the public being reduced. If we have the wisdom to stay on this course, we will see further declines in the publicly held debt. In fact, we can be on a course to eliminate the publicly held debt in 15 years.
What have been the results of this economic policy? The results have been a resurgence in our national economic lives—the lowest inflation rate in 33 years, the lowest unemployment rate in 41 years, and we have seen the best economic performance since the Johnson administration back in the 1960s.
We can see the rates of growth of various administrations. In the Clinton administration we see an economic growth rate of nearly 4 percent. We compare that to the Bush administration, 1.3 percent; 3 percent under Reagan; the Carter administration, and so on. So we have seen a period of sustained economic growth—in fact, the lowest economic expansion in our history.
In addition to the other positive benefits, we have seen a dramatic reduction in the welfare caseload. This is largely a result of the economy. It is also a result of the welfare reform proposal that we passed a number of years ago. The percentage on welfare is the lowest in 29 years.
All of this is jeopardized. All of this is jeopardized by the risky, radical, reckless proposals that is before us from our friends on the other side of the aisle. Interestingly enough, the very people who are advocating this proposal said, about the 1993 plan that has formed the basis of the deficit reduction and the economic resurgence of this country, that that plan would not work.

The distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee said about the 1993 plan:

It will flatten the economy.

Senator Gramm of Texas, a member of the Finance Committee, said:

We are buying a one-way ticket to recession.

The truth: The economy has reached a new milestone—the longest peace-time expansion on record.

We had a former President who said:

Facts are stubborn things. Indeed, they are. The fact is the 1993 5-year plan, that passed without a single vote on the Republican side, reduced the deficit and formed the basis for an economic resurgence in this country.

Our friends on the other side of the aisle, the very ones who are here with a radical plan today, were the ones who were wrong about the 1993 plan. In fact, Senator Gramm, who was just speaking, said at the time about the 1993 plan:

I want to predict here tonight that if we adopt this bill the American economy is going to get weaker and not stronger, the deficit four years from [now] will be higher than it is today and not lower... when all is said and done, people will pay more taxes, the economy will create fewer jobs, Government will spend more money, and the American people will be worse off.

Senator Gramm was wrong on virtually every count.

The fact is, the 1993 plan reduced the deficit and kicked off this extraordinary economic expansion: the lowest unemployment rate in 41 years, the lowest inflation rate in 33 years. The fact is, the very folks who are now advocating this radical, risky plan were wrong in 1993, and not just a little bit wrong; they were dead wrong.

Now, let’s check their math. It is fascinating what I have heard on the floor today. Over and over the message is the things they want to do with this $870 billion, you are left with $870 billion you are going to give a tax cut of $130 billion to strengthen and protect Medicare, and $290 billion for high-priority domestic needs.

I think it is critically important that people understand when we talk about deficit cutting what we are talking about for the next 10 years? This chart shows what happens if we just have constant buying power over the 10 years, which is represented by this blue line. That is constant buying power.

Our friends on the other side say the Democrats just want to spend money. Let’s look at the Democratic plan.

I have just indicated we want $290 billion for domestic needs. That represents this blue line. That is a cut in buying power for the Federal Government from what we now have. If you just take last year’s spending and add inflation, that is the blue line, constant buying power.

The Democrats are proposing cutting the buying power of the Federal Government. They are proposing cutting spending.

Here is what our Republican friends are talking about in terms of spending cuts, this green line. This green line means dramatic, radical cuts in education, in defense, in parks, in law enforcement. That is what they are talking about. Does anybody believe this is going to happen? Does anybody believe it? It is not even happening this year.

The Wall Street Journal reported yesterday that they are cooking the books on the Republican side because they want to spend more money and want to act as if they are not breaking the caps. At some point we have to face reality and face facts. Facts are stubborn things.

This blue line is constant buying power. The Democratic plan proposes dramatic, draconian cuts, cuts that cannot be sustained, will not be sustained. In fact, they won’t support them for defense, and they shouldn’t. They are living with a fiction, and it is a fiction that is being put forward by the committees of Congress do their work.

Not only should we check their math but we should check the whole basis for the projections that are being made to sustain a tax cut. Let’s remember, the money isn’t in the bank. The money they projected to come in.

I used to be in charge of projecting the revenue for my State of North Dakota. I can tell my colleagues, there is no 10-year projection that anybody can have great confidence in. As Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan noted the other day, tax cuts might some day be justified, but there is no case for big tax cuts based merely on paper projections of budget surpluses.

In fact, he went on to indicate, if there was just a 1-percent change in revenue and expenditure from what is projected, these surpluses would vanish. That is very much in line with what mistakes have been in the past.

This tax cut scheme is not conservative; it is radical. It is risky. It is reckless. It is counterproductive, undermining all of the work we have done to restore the fiscal integrity of this country that has played such a large role in restoring our fiscal health. This is not conservative. It is radical. It is risky. It is reckless. It ought to be stopped.

Now, our friends on the other side of the aisle say tax revenue is the highest it has been in a long time, but they are not telling the whole story. Here is what the revenue and expenditure line of the Federal Government looks like going back to 1980 and carrying through to today.

The blue line is the outlays of the Federal Government, the spending. The red line is the revenues. What we can see is, it has been pretty constant over time. The reason we had a deficit was that the spending line was above the revenue line—pretty basic stuff.

In 1993, when Democrats, without a single Republican vote, passed a plan to balance the budget, we reduced the spending line and we raised the revenue line. That is how we balanced the budget. We cut spending and, yes, we raised income taxes on the wealthiest 1 percent in this country. That is how we balanced the budget. That is how we got the deficit under control. That is how we got the lowest unemployment in 41 years. That is the lowest inflation in 33 years. That is how we got 18 million jobs created. That is how we restored this country to economic health—by cutting spending and raising the revenue to balance the budget.

There is one thing they don’t tell us much about because I don’t think they want to deal with these facts. They are saying the taxes are the highest they have ever been. The tax revenue is the highest it has been in a considerable period. That is what helped us balance the budget, along with cutting spending. But what they have not talked about is what has happened to individual taxes. Most individual taxes in this country have gone down. It might surprise you to hear that after all the rhetoric on the other side. These are not KENT CONRAD’s calculations; these are the calculations of the respected accounting firm, Deloitte and Touche. These are the combined tax rates of income, tax and Social Security taxes. It is very interesting. This is for a working mother, the tax burden, with a family income of just under $20,000 a year. In 1979, their tax rate—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s 15 minutes have expired.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Would the Senator like another 5 minutes?

Mr. CONRAD. I would. I thank the Senator from New York.

It is very interesting; if we study what has happened to the individual tax rates and tax burden of people in this country over 20 years, they have gone down. The Republican rhetoric suggests everybody’s taxes are at record highs. It is not true. It is not true. This is the accounting firm of Deloitte & Touche. They point out that for a working mother with an income of just under $20,000, in 1979, her combined tax rate was 8.6 percent. That has dropped to 5 percent today. Why? Because when the Democrats passed that budget balancing plan in 1993—it is true we raised taxes on the wealthiest 1 percent, but we cut taxes on the vast majority of Americans by expanding the earned-income tax credit.

Look at what happened to a middle-income family earning $35,000 a year. Their taxes have not gone up. They have gone down. Again, this is according to the respected accounting firm of Deloitte & Touche. In 1979, their combined tax rate—income tax and Social Security taxes—was 11.2 percent. That dropped to 10.5 percent in 1999, again, because when the Democrats passed the plan to balance the budget in 1993, we expanded the earned-income tax credit.

Look at a tax burden of a family of four earning $50,000, and look at the last 20 years. Again, their tax burden has been reduced. In 1979, it was 17 percent; it is 16.3 percent today.

Don’t get me wrong. I am not suggesting that people don’t deserve further tax relief. I believe they do. The Democratic proposal provides it. It provides it in a fair and balanced way, in a fiscally responsible way.

That is not the case of the risky, radical scheme of our friends on the other side. Their tax break explodes in the second 10-year period. We have just stopped that, at least momentarily. But this program that they have outlined, $900 billion in tax cuts explodes to $2 trillion, with the additional interest costs that would add another trillion to $3 trillion in the second 10-year period. That is risky. At the very time the baby boomers start to retire, they are going to undermine the fiscal stability of this country.

Those aren’t the only issues that need to be addressed. We have already seen how their tax cut explodes in the outyears, just as the baby boomers retire. But we should also ask ourselves how fair is this tax cut scheme of our friends on the other side.

This shows the House bill that has already passed. Their idea of fairness is to give the top 1 percent of the people in this country 32 percent of the benefit. The top 1 percent get 32 percent of the benefits of the tax cut proposal of the Republicans in the House of Representatives, which has already passed. So for people earning under $38,000 a year, they would get, on average, $99. If you are earning over $300,000 a year, you get $20,000. That is not fair. That should not be the policy of the United States—a tax cut plan that is skewed to the richest and wealthiest among us, that gives 32 percent of the benefit to the richest 1 percent is not fair. It is not wise. It is radical; it is risky; it is reckless.

There is a better way. The Democratic alternative says save Social Security first—every penny of Social Security surplus for Social Security. And then for the non-Social Security surplus, to split it in equal thirds: one-third to protect Medicare, to extend its solvency, and to provide prescription drug coverage. One-third for tax reductions for working families, targeted squarely at the middle-income people in this country, the very ones who need tax relief; and one-third for high-priority domestic needs such as education, agriculture, defense, and law enforcement.

Again, that $290 billion doesn’t even keep pace with inflation. We are cutting Federal spending, in real terms, in the Democratic plan has over $2 trillion of debt reduction. The Republican plan has just under $2 trillion. I suggest to my colleagues that the Democratic plan is superior in every way—greater debt reduction, preserving the Social Security surplus for Social Security, preserving and protecting Medicare, providing for our high-priority domestic needs, and, yes, tax relief targeted at those who deserve it the most—not the wealthiest among us, but middle- and lower-income people who richly deserve some tax relief.

I would like to have them be as bold in reducing taxes as they are bold in their budget of this year to increase spending, but they are very bold in increasing new programs and very bold, without using the words, but saying, in effect, that we in Washington know better how to spend the taxpayers’ money than the taxpayers do.

How they like to quote Chairman Greenspan because of his respect, but he also only like what Chairman Greenspan says. We have had an opportunity, as Senators, to hear Chairman Greenspan in so many different forums this year, just since the first of the year, talk about a surplus and what should be done with it. They would like to have you believe that only thing that Chairman Greenspan says is that he is against any tax cuts. But what he does is give Congress several alternatives. Admittedly, he says that his first choice is to retire debt in the tax cuts.

Next, to give tax reductions, because tax reductions are better than spending the money as the third alternative. And particularly, Chairman Greenspan says, top priority ought to be given to cutting marginal tax rates.

Appearing just last week before the House Budget Committee, Chairman Greenspan reiterated his position by making clear, and I will give you this quote:

"Only if Congress believes that the surplus will be spent rather than saved is a tax cut wise.

I think given the President’s, and his party’s, past and present propensity to want to spend all of the surplus—the President's budget not only spends all the surplus, the President's budget would take $30 billion from Social Security, and they have a $100 billion tax increase as well—with their propensity to spend all of it, and more than the surplus, it should be obvious that the congressional budget plan that is before us by the people on this side of the aisle is aligned very much with Chairman Greenspan's position.

I wish our friends on the other side of the aisle would speak in the same way when they say that this money is not in the bank, that it is only projected income—when they use that as an excuse that you can't give people a tax cut—they ought to not project the expenditure of that money as well. They are willing to be risky when projecting expenditure of this money. But somehow it is wrong to give this money back to the people to spend because if the people keep this money in the first place they don't send it to Washington, and it is going to create more jobs. It is going to turn many times over in the economy than would otherwise be turned over in the economy if it were the money in the White House that was creating jobs and creating wealth, if the taxpayers spend it, and just being poured down the black, bottomless pit if it is spent in Washington, DC.

We had a chart from the other side of the aisle that said what a great deal has happened since 1993 on reducing the deficit. But what is left out of that equation and that presentation is one of the greatest political revolutions that has come from the grassroots of America in an off-year election in the last 60 years. And that was that the people of this country for the first time in 40 years turned both Houses of Congress over to a Republican majority.

It was that Republican majority that was elected that there were dramatic changes in budgeting with the caps, and even with a reduction of taxes in 1997 that brought the changes and the discipline to the Hill—even to the White House as well—that brought us to the place where we are today of talking about surpluses, because in the first 2 years of this administration their own budgets were projecting in the out-year deficits for a long, long time. But all of that was turned around when Republicans took over Congress, and started down the road of bringing surpluses and balancing the budget.

We are here to say that the Democrat tax cut promise of $3.4 trillion compared to our $792 billion is too puny to do the economic good that ought to be done. It is too puny to return political and economic freedom to the taxpayers of this country because the taxpayers will spend it more wisely than if it is sent to Washington.

But we are also here to declare victory in the debate over whether we should give tax relief to the American people because they want us to believe with their amendment that they are for a tax cut. That and how much cut—a very small, puny tax cut. The President says now he is for a tax cut.

We have won somewhat of a victory in this year's debate. The question now is not whether there should be tax relief, but what kind and how much cut. As a Member of the majority party, I can't think of a better problem with which to be confronted. With a tax cut plan before us, we are proposing to finally start sending hard-earned dollars out of Washington and back to the taxpayers.

Most of the provisions of this bill are what the people from the grassroots of America have been telling their Congressmen and Senators they want—cheaper—cheaper, want done—because we include those things in our bill: addressing the marriage penalty; providing health care tax relief; more help for education, pensions and savings; long-term care; child care; estate tax relief, and, most importantly, general middle-income relief for middle-income taxpayers.

Nearly all of the provisions that I and Senator FEINSTEIN introduced in S. 1160 are included in some form in the bill before us. I commend the chairman for taking the initiative and pushing major tax relief that people really want. And, by the way, even some Democrats supported it out of the Finance Committee. The President has only offered modest tax cuts.

This amendment is an example of it. Of course, in the process, as I indicated, he wants to raise taxes $100 billion in other ways in the process of giving a tax cut, because the President of the United States wants it both ways. He wants to take the initiative and put in a tax cut on the one hand while he is raising taxes on the other hand.

Of course, he is sending out all of these frantic, hysterical veto threats. He attacked the House bill, playing the class warfare card that he plays so well, saying that it benefited the rich. Of course, he can't do that with a Senate bill. We saw that was not challenged on this point by people on the other side of the aisle, since 60 percent of the bill before the Senate helps families who are in the middle class and earning $75,000 or less.

Now the President and his minions are saying $792 billion in tax relief to the American people is too much. He is saying that either they don't need it—meaning they don't need the tax decrease—or he might even be saying they don't deserve it. He says this while asking for billions of dollars in new taxes to pay for even more spending while raiding the Social Security trust fund by $30 billion.

That is right. This President and his budget team raids Social Security to pay for more spending. He does this when taxes as a percentage of the Gross Domestic Product are at an all-time high of around 21 percent. Historically, taxes have been around 19 percent of the Gross Domestic Product over the last 30-40 year-period of time. We restore that historical level.

The public at the grassroots has pretty much consented to pay—not every American would agree with that—but over 30 to 40 years, it has been about 18 to 19 percent. But now it is up to 21 percent. We propose that it be more like that historical rate of taxation, as it has been for a long time.

By contrast, the administration, in addition to providing puny tax relief, would have a debt of $200 billion more than what we will have if our budget is adopted.

We also protect Social Security and Medicare.

The congressional budget plan before the Senate provides a blueprint for savings. We are projecting a cumulative surplus of $3.4 trillion. This includes the surplus in the Social Security trust fund as well as the on-budget general fund surplus. Of the diminished $3.4 trillion surplus, Republicans are advocating in this budget saving $1.9 trillion to save Social Security. These are the funds which are estimated to come into the Social Security trust fund from the payroll tax.

Of course, the President of the United States in attacking our budget is dead wrong in saying we put tax cuts before Social Security, because we plan for Social Security very thoroughly. We have been trying to set up a lockbox so no one will be able to get at that money and spend it. However, we have not met with much cooperation from the other side of the aisle on saving Social Security. I have lost track of the number of times since the first of the year we have had cloture votes on our Republican lockbox proposal. This is truly unfortunate. If we don't create a Social Security lockbox, we are going to end up spending the money for everything else but Social Security. Even the President has said he is in favor of a lockbox, but his actions fall far short of his rhetoric.

The tax cut we are talking about today is $792 billion. This is less than 25 percent of the total cumulative surplus of $3.4 trillion. A lot of our taxpayers say even $792 is not a bold enough tax cut. It is even less than the $1 trillion that will accumulate on the on-budget surplus. There is money left over, $505 billion to be exact, to take care of problems with the Medicare system and provide additional funds for discretionary spending.

In our budget resolution, we provide $180 billion for increased discretionary spending after the budget caps expire in the year 2002. That still leaves $325 billion to help solve Medicare problems and spending for domestic priorities.

Over the next 10 years the Federal Government will take in nearly $23 trillion in all taxes. That is a lot of money. This bill gives $792 billion back to the American taxpayers. That still leaves $22 trillion in the hole, which the Government will spend. The tax cut we are talking about is only 3.5 percent. 3.5 pennies out of every $1 coming into the Federal Treasury over the next 10 years. I am a little embarrassed to tell the taxpayers who are only giving a tax cut of 3.5 percent from all the money the Federal Government will take in over the next 10 years. That is three times what the other side of the aisle would return to the taxpayers.

The congressional budget plan will save 75 percent of the surplus projected by the CBO over the next 10 years. In contrast, the President saves only 67 percent. The President is proposing a $351 billion tax increase.

We owe it to the American taxpayers to trust us as legislators. There isn’t a day that goes by without us asking for that support from our constituents. Now it seems to me it is time to return trust to the American taxpayers. It is time to trust the American taxpayers with a little bit of their own money—3.5 percent of all the money coming in over the next 10 years.

The latest challenge from the other side of the aisle is reflected in the Democrat substitute before the Senate. I suppose it could be called a tax “scratch” instead of calling it a tax cut because it is that puny. Even a number of Democrats are scoffing at such a weak effort. It is less than $300 billion over 10 years. It does not even have a rate cut for middle-income taxpayers. It does not even get rid of the unfair marriage penalty that affects millions of taxpayers. Compared to our proposal, the Democrat substitute gives $792 billion back to the American taxpayers. It does not even get rid of the unfair marriage penalty that affects millions of taxpayers. It is time to trust the American taxpayers with a little bit of their own money—3.5 percent of all the money coming in over the next 10 years.

The Democrat plan only provides half of the assistance the Republican plan provides for people who need to purchase their own health insurance. The Clinton-Gore team and their lockstep followers in Congress do not think that the tax rate the average American pays is too much. We all know what their record has been. We all know the Clinton-Gore tax increase of 1993 was the largest ever in the history of the United States. I have heard some Members, in defense of their support of this massive tax increase, try to argue that this is what brought about the current surpluses.

This is a revisionist history that has risen to some sort of art form on the floor of the Senate today. First, the Clinton-Gore tax increase was supposed to raise $240 billion. Of course, this is less than the $250 billion they now say they want to give back in this substitute amendment.

However, the Clinton-Gore tax increase never raised the money it was supposed to raise. The revenue increase that did come in is due to the private sector economic engine and did so despite all of the shackles this administration has placed on business through both tax increases and unprecedented regulation.

In addition, $40 billion of this new revenue can be attributed to the capital gains tax reduction that the Republican Congress passed in 1997. The administration argued this tax reduction would cost revenue, but the Wall Street Journal has said this has brought in $40 billion more. So most of the arguments on the other side of the aisle are just plain wrong.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Abraham). The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield myself 10 minutes.

I begin by asking Members and the public to review the remarks of the Senator from North Dakota, Mr. CONRAD. I yield 15 or 20 minutes ago. It was one of the best summations of the facts and choices we now face that I have ever heard.

Senator CONRAD is a former tax commissioner of the State of North Dakota and is intimately familiar with tax matters. He also is a very senior member on the Budget Committee. He is very deeply involved in all of the tax and spending matters that face our Federal budget. He has reviewed the comments made by the Senator from North Dakota, Mr. CONRAD. They were very much on target. As I said, it was probably the best factual summary of the choices facing Members that I have heard in the entire debate.

Essentially, we have choices that are quite significant. How are we going to manage this additional surplus? I don’t have to tell the Members from North Dakota. It is very unusual for this country to have a budget surplus and be faced with these choices. Not too coincidentally, it is the end of the 1990s that we have the choice, as we face the next century, the millennium. I think the American people sent legislators to the Senate and the Congress to do what is right, to do what is right when we have a big surplus.

It has been stated many times, and I will repeat it. The projections over the next 10 years are for a $3 trillion surplus, $2 trillion out of payroll tax additional revenues because more people are working, the economy is doing so well, the payroll tax revenues increase. We have a $2 trillion surplus. That additional interest on the debt is about $141 billion. If we add the two together, in effect the tax cut offered by the other side really takes $933 billion out of the roughly $1 trillion surplus. That is a huge number. Nobody can deny that. That is a fact.

Then the next question is, does that make sense? Who is helped by that? Who is hurt by that? Given the composition of the tax reduction, those people who are helped tend to be the wealthiest Americans at a period in our American history when our economy is doing very well. Who is hurt? The people hurt by this trend tend to be people who are necessarily going to face very severe reductions in veterans’ benefits. It might be in education provisions, it might be the FBI salaries, Head Start, kids not admitted to the program, and so forth.

Why do I say that? I say that because the budget tax proposal before us, proposed by the other side, assumes we are going to stick with the budget caps on discretionary spending.

My friends around the country watching this ask what in the world are discretionary spending caps? Let me explain to the American public what they are. Essentially, Congress passed a budget, by the other side, entirely by the other side—and by the other side I mean the Republican party—which set very tight budget caps. If those budget caps are projected in the next 10 years, that necessarily means about a $355 billion cut in discretionary spending, which is spending on such things as education, veterans’ benefits, Head Start programs, education programs, and so forth. But to make it even worse, that does not take into consideration the probable scheduled increase in defense spending of about $127 billion, which means if you add the two together, this budget means about $775 billion in real discretionary spending cut. That is necessarily, arithmetically, mathematically, the consequence of this proposal—cuts that deep. That means, if defense is increased $127 billion, all the
I am not saying we should increase these programs above the baseline, although perhaps in some areas we could. But ask the very people we are going to cut by 43 percent, and tell you a little more about that. What does that mean? That means about 1.5 million veterans will be turned away—turned away because of those cuts. It means about 375,000 kids will be out of the Head Start Program, gone—375,000 kids. That is necessary because of a 43-percent cut in all these programs because this budget assumes no increase in discretionary spending caps and probably, if we are realistic with ourselves, it means the other side is going to add back in defense. That nets out at a 43-percent cut.

Let me show another chart. To state it differently, take a dollar bill. This is the line—it is hard to see on this chart—of the tax breaks as a consequence of the bill before us. This is the additional interest payment, which is about $63 billion for everything else, and I have already outlined what the consequences of that are.

The proposal before us is the Democratic alternative. What is it? Basically, we think it is a wiser set of choices. Again, with roughly a $1 trillion surplus that we are debating, the question is what choices are we going to make, and which road do we take? The choice made by the other side is essentially all of it in tax cuts—all of it. Because if you add interest lost, it basically comes to it all going to tax cuts. That is basically what it is.

We say no. First, because that is a projection and we do not know if it will be real; it is so back loaded. You have heard all the arguments. Rather, let’s do a little bit here and a little bit there that protects the future. We say let’s have a $300 billion reduction. Sure, we are for tax cuts. Let’s take $300 billion and reduce it.

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, I yield myself an additional 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields the time?

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield 12 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, as we consider the $792 billion of overpaid taxes we seek to refund in the Taxpayer Refund Act, millions of Americans are deeply concerned about President Clinton’s veto threat. We just heard the statement about we cannot have a “reckless” tax cut, but they want to give back this money to our children and grandchildren and to the American people.

The truth is, our bill is the bill that wants to return this surplus to the taxpayers of the country; the President’s bill cuts taxes. It is very different. Somehow, if we give it back in tax relief, it is reckless because the American people somehow do not know how to spend it, but let us keep it in Washington and let Washington spend it and it is fine. I do not understand that logic.

The President has also threatened to veto a proposal from his own party to provide just $500 billion in tax relief—again, more evidence that they want to spend the money, not give it back, not save it for our children, but spend it on new Washington programs.

The President is hinting at supporting tax relief somewhere in the $250 billion range, but his own budget included only one tax cut, and that could only be used for savings, not to let families decide how to spend their own money, but for Washington, the President, to tell you what you are going to do if he decides to give any of your surplus back.

Take this opportunity to make a few points about why the taxpayers have every right to expect this Congress and the President to return at least $792 billion of overpaid taxes.
First, let me emphasize that this bill is a 10-year $792 billion tax cut plan that benefits all Americans, with a focus deservedly major tax relief for middle-class families. It is not a tax cut for the rich. It is not an unrealistic level of relief. It significantly reduces taxes for millions of American families and individuals, and it is the biggest tax relief we have ever had since President Ronald Reagan cut taxes dramatically in the early 1980s. I again commend Chairman Roth for his leadership and his commitment to providing major tax relief.

We promised to return to American families the non-Social Security tax overcharges they paid to the Government, and we have fulfilled that solemn promise. The proposed tax relief will immediately ease working Americans’ health burden and allow them to keep a little more of their own money and use it on their family priorities—not Washington’s, not President Clinton’s, but their families’ priorities.

This taxpayer relief refund legislation provides middle-class working families at least $450 a year in relief from the tax squeeze. It corrects the injustice of the marriage penalty tax by allowing married couples to file joint returns as if they were single payers of taxes, so 22 million Americans will no longer be penalized simply for the fact they are married.

This legislation also eliminates the alternative minimum tax to permit millions of American families, including farmers, to enjoy the full benefit of tax exemptions and credits such as the $500-per-child tax credit which I championed and the Senate passed back in 1997.

The proposed tax relief includes a reduction in the death tax which will help farmers and small businesses across the country pass on their hard-earned legacies to their children, not to pass it on to the Government but to pass it on to their children and their heirs.

The bill makes health care more affordable for millions of self-employed and uninsured by making their health care costs 100-percent deductible, and it includes my legislation to permit workers without coverage to deduct their health insurance costs and also allows those purchasing long-term care policies to deduct them as well. These measures will allow more people to obtain health care coverage or improve the coverage they already have.

The bill before us also encourages working Americans to save more for their future by expanding IRAs and providing education tax benefits for parents, for students, and for workers.

There is other tax relief for hard-working Americans as well. As we move to control inflation there is still room to improve the legislation, such as to expand the broad-based tax relief and to provide immediate relief of the marriage penalty, this $800 billion package is a clear victory for working Americans.

One of the most important points I have focused repeatedly in this Chamber is that the non-Social Security surplus is the working people’s money, not Washington’s, and the people deserve the refund.

America’s strong economy has turned the ink in Washington’s accounting book black for the first time in 40 years. The budget surplus above and beyond Social Security will top $1 trillion to $1.4 trillion over the next 10 years. The CBO finds the increased revenue is propelled by personal income tax increases, and the CBO cites four sources for this unexpected revenue:

First, the rapid growth of taxable income, which has raised the tax base for personal income tax receipts.

Second, these adjusted gross income, which has grown more rapidly than taxable personal income, mainly through the realization of capital gains. The capital gains tax increased by 150 percent between 1993 and 1997, which helped the growth of tax liability relative to GDP.

Third, rising taxes paid on pension and IRA retirement income.

Fourth, and I think the most important, is the increase in the effective tax rate. As Americans are working harder, as they earn more money, as inflation is there, it pushes more and more of them into the higher tax brackets. The tax rate increase accounts for 40 percent of the tax growth in excess of GDP growth. That is an unfair tax. It has pushed people from one tax bracket into another.

By the way, the CBO also points out the revenue windfall did not result from legislative policy changes. In fact, the CBO says that other than the legislative initiatives taken by the President and by Congress did not generate this surplus.

Clearly, all four reasons we have a surplus are the result of the productivity of working men and women of this country, and it has little or nothing to do with Washington. So why should the President, why should Congress, be at the front of the line to spend this surplus, and why are we hearing claims that the $792 billion of new Federal tax revenue will simply be used to the same cruel tax tactics, we hear them time after time, to turn the ink in Washington’s accounting book black for the second time in 40 years? The answer is that they are not.

I think Americans’ tax burden is growing twice as fast as the income of working Americans. Washington is growing twice as fast as you are getting in your paychecks. With more middle-income workers being thrown into higher tax brackets, the “middle class tax squeeze” has been devastating.

Millions of middle-income Americans, who have worked hard to get ahead, have been pushed from the 15-percent tax bracket up into the 28-percent tax bracket. Hundreds of thousands of others have been pushed from the 28-percent tax bracket into the 31-percent bracket, and so on. More people working explains the surge of the Social Security surplus because payroll taxes are levied against everybody. So part-time, low-income, minimum-wage earners cannot escape the cruel tax bites.

According to the census report, the income of the average American family has grown—get this—the average income of the American family has grown only 6.3 percent, in constant dollars, between 1996 and 1996—6.3 percent, while Federal tax revenues have increased by nearly 800 percent during the same time. Yet I hear my colleagues on the other side of the aisle say Americans aren’t overtaxed; somehow, they are doing fine.

As a result, Americans today are working harder and they are working longer, but they are taking home less money because the Federal Government is taking home more. A larger share of the earned income of working Americans is siphoned off here to Washington, and it isn’t available for families to spend on their priorities.
A recent Census Bureau report finds that 49 million hard-working Americans, including 8 million middle-class Americans, live in a household that has trouble paying for just their basic needs.

President Clinton himself at one time—this was down in Texas during a campaign swing in 1986—admitted to a group of contributors, by the way, that Americans were taxed too much. He said: I might have raised taxes too much in 1993. He said: You might think I did. Well, I think I raised them too much, too.

But today he still refuses to refund overpaid taxes to Americans, because he does not think working Americans are “going to spend it right.” President Clinton believes individuals are not capable of making decisions for themselves and discourages Government action. The only solution, instead, he spends the surplus for Government programs, and he calls meaningful tax relief “fiscally irresponsible.” His priority is to not give tax relief at all. It is “irresponsible” to ease Americans’ tax burdens a little so they can afford basic necessities.

That is the question. Is it irresponsible to even have a family night out once in a while? The family has been, and will continue to be, the bedrock of American society. Strong families make strong communities.Strong communities make a very strong America. But 22 million working American couples have been forced to pay $1,400 a year more, on average, in taxes every year simply for choosing to be married. Is it irresponsible to get rid of an unfair tax policy that discourages marriage?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used his 12 minutes.

Mr. GRAMS. I thank the Senator very much.

So the question I was asking is, Is it irresponsible to get rid of an unfair tax policy that discourages marriage? surplus to Minnesotans in the form of sales tax rebate and across-the-board income tax cuts.

None of those states broke their budgets; instead they produced a robust economy and generated big budget surpluses which allowed them to provide even more tax cuts.

Our neighbor north of the border, in the Province of Ontario, chose to follow New Jersey and cut their income tax by 30 percent in 1995 instead of increasing spending. It generates a very successful economy. This year, Ontario Premier Mike Harris will cut the income tax by another 20 percent. Here is what he says: “the debate is over; tax cuts create jobs.”

Finally, I would like to take a moment to talk again about Social Security, Medicare, and debt reduction.

Republicans are pleased that President Clinton agrees with us that shoring up Social Security and Medicare should be our nation’s top priority. But the difference is President Clinton talks about it; and Republicans act on it.

We are determined to achieve these goals. We have locked in every penny of the $1.9 trillion Social Security surplus over the next 10 years, not for government programs, not for tax cuts, but exclusively to protect all Americans’ retirement.

We have been working hard to reform Medicare to ensure it will be there for seniors. Prescriptions drug coverage for the needy will be part of our commitment to seniors to protect their Medicare benefits. Had the White House and Democrats cooperated with us, we could have fixed Medicare by now.

In any event, we will continue our effort to preserve Medicare as Chairman ROTH reveals his Medicare bill in the near future.

We have reduced the national debt and will continue to dramatically reduce it. Debt held by the public will decrease to $0.9 trillion by 2009. The interest payment to service the debt will drop from $229 billion in 1999 to $71 billion in 2009. We will eliminate the entire debt held by the public by 2012.

As I indicated before, we have not ignored spending needs to focus on tax cuts as has been charged. We not only have funded all the functions of the government, but also significantly increased funding for our budget priorities, such as defense, education, Medicare, agriculture and others.

In fact, as I mentioned earlier, we set aside over $565 billion in non-Social Security surplus to meet these needs and the debate on how these funds is not before us today. But is there to high-light how Republicans can provide $792 billion in tax relief while not ignoring other important priorities.

This major tax relief does not come at the expense of seniors, farmers, women, children or any other deserving group. On the contrary, it benefits all Americans and keeps our economy strong. And most importantly, this tax relief will strengthen the economy, generate renewed productivity, and ended up yielding new revenues for the government by creating new investment, new jobs and more commerce among our people.

President Reagan was right.

I remember vividly that when I first proposed the $500 per child tax cut in 1993, the naysayers called it bad policy, even “dangerous.” Democrats accused us of cutting taxes for the rich. Sound familiar? Some in Congress contended it was too costly, and others argued that we should balance the budget first. I argued repeatedly that we could and should do both. And so we did. As a result, now we have a balanced budget, and the largest surplus in U.S. history. Cutting taxes, reducing the national debt, and reforming and protecting Social Security and Medicare at the same time are all possible. We can do it again. We must do it again.

I urge my colleagues to defeat this amendment and support the $792 billion in tax relief in the Taxpayer Refund Act. I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to my colleague from Nevada who is on the Finance Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. I thank the Senator from New York and the Chair.

Mr. President, I came to the Senate as a new Member in January 1989, at the end of the decade of the 1980s. The fiscal policies the Federal Government pursued during the 1980s resulted in a Federal budget that was awash in red ink.

At the beginning of the 1980s, the end of the national debt—from the time of the ratification of the Constitution up until 1980—was less than $1 trillion. That included the assumption of the Revolutionary War debt, financing a costly and devastating Civil War, two world wars, Korea, Vietnam, and the programs of the Great Depression.

In less than a decade, the national debt tripled to $3 trillion. That is an indictment of the fiscal policies of the 1980s that we ought not to repeat.

Mr. President, we have an opportunity here.

One can debate as to who should take credit for the circumstances which none of us could have foreseen a decade ago. A decade ago it was my fondest hope that somehow we would be able to control the spiraling annual deficits which were hundreds of billions of dollars each year. When asked by my fellow Nevadans, how about the national debt, how are you going to pay that back, my response was: I did not see any realistic like that would occur in my lifetime, certainly not my lifetime as a Member of the Senate.

So today we are in a fortuitous circumstance. As I said, who gets credit for that, that is a matter we can debate at some length. But we have an opportunity to do the responsible thing, and we have the opportunity to do the irresponsible thing.

I think the responsible course of action is to save Social Security, ensure the solvency of Medicare, pay down the national debt, and then provide for a modest and realistic tax cut. That is the responsible thing to do.

In my judgment, the responsible alternative is the Republican tax cut before us.

There have been numbers bandied around, $3 trillion is the projected surplus. With respect to the Social Security surplus, that means Social Security taxes that exceed the amount of the Social Security payments, it is projected over the next decade that that surplus will amount to $1.9 trillion. With respect to that surplus, there is no disagreement. That should be set aside to protect Social Security.

The debate is about the $1 trillion projected surplus that is referred to as on-budget or non-Social Security surplus.

Earlier this morning, as a member of the Senate Banking Committee, we were privileged to have Alan Greenspan, the distinguished and able Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. There are many, Democrats and Republicans alike across the land, who give Alan Greenspan a substantial measure of credit for the reversals in our fortunes at the Federal level in terms of the situation we find ourselves in today, where we are talking about projected surpluses and not projected deficits. I was privileged to have an opportunity to ask him a question.

I said: Mr. Chairman—directed to Mr. Greenspan—given our current economic circumstances, if we had three choices, what choice would you make: Choice No. 1, a substantial tax cut; Choice No. 2, additional spending; Choice No. 3, reducing the debt?

His answer, unequivocal: Reduce the debt. That, he said, would be the most important thing this Congress could do in fiscal policy to continue the extension of the longest economic expansion in our Nation’s history. That comes from Chairman Greenspan.

Now, under the Republican proposal before us, $961 billion is the on-budget surplus. Their proposal would be to reduce taxes by $792 billion.
I understand the instant gratification and I understand that if in a roomful of good and hard-working Americans you wish, you wish to pay less tax, all of us would say yes. Perhaps it is because my wife and I are entering a new period in our lives—we are blessed with three adult children, two of whom have blessed us with grandchildren and a third to bless us with a grandchild to be in a couple of weeks—that my thoughts are not with respect to instant gratification, not the kind of political rhetoric “we want to return your money to you.” What is the responsible thing to do for the country? What about my grandchildren and your grandchildren? Ought we not to think about them? Our generation doesn’t have a particularly impressive track record running up a national debt that tripled in less than a decade. The Republican plan would reduce taxes by $792 billion, would cost $141 billion of additional interest, and would result in a surplus remaining over the 10-year period of $32 billion. This surplus that is projected over 10 years is on a very shaky foundation. I also was able to ask Mr. Greenspan to talk about projections. I said to him: Is it not true, Mr. Chairman, that not even the most able economists—distinguished graduates of the Wharton School of Finance, the Harvard Business School, the Stanford Business School, the most erudite institutions in America—isn’t it true that no one can tell us what the economy is going to be like next year, much less what it is going to be like a decade from now? He opined that that was in fact the case.

So this policy is built upon a house of cards. We are not sure these surpluses will, in fact, materialize. Yet we build in to our legislative actions a $792 billion tax cut. That is because you all in Congress spent recklessly, foolishly, and irresponsibly.

I know that our friends on the other side of the aisle would say that had nothing to do with tax cuts. That is because you all in Congress spent recklessly, foolishly, and irresponsibly.

I was not a part of the Congress at that time. I will not defend all of the expenditures. But I will tell Senators this: If you add what President Reagan requested the Congress to spend in the 8 years he was President and you add up the appropriations that the Congress approved during those 8 years, some of those with a Republican major-ity in the Congress, we approved $13 billion less, $13 billion less than President Reagan requested. So whether you went to school, as I did, with the old math or the new math, those kinds of tax cuts left us with deficits in the trillions of dollars.

Mr. President, I ask the distinguished leader if he would extend me another 5 minutes; is that possible?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Another 5 minutes for my friend from Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAGEL). The time for the gentleman from Nevada is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, there are several assumptions that our Republican colleagues make in reaching the conclusion of a $792 billion tax cut, $141 billion in interest, leaving a $32 billion surplus to take care of Medicare, other priorities, including reducing the debt. It is a very shaky assumption. Mr. Greenspan also told us this morning that history teaches us to be cautious. This surplus may never materialize. No one can predict with certainty whether it will occur or not.

Implicit in this are some other assumptions that are totally unrealistic. One of those assumptions is we will be able to reduce discretionary spending by $700 billion over the next 10 years. Now, there are more people in America who believe there will be a sighting of Elvis than believe that we are going to reduce discretionary spending by $700 billion. We are talking about such programs as veterans’ health, education, what we need to do for agriculture, and any kind of emergencies that might occur as a result of natural calamities or disasters. So the assumption that we can reduce spending by $700 billion in the discretionary accounts, also including national defense, is not realistic.

Indeed, that is premised also upon the spending caps that are in place—next year and the year after it will be even tighter—that we will be able to adhere to. Mr. Chairman of the Banking Committee, as part of his questioning to Mr. Greenspan, indicated that in the House already this year they are talking about emergency spending, which is a vehicle to avoid the spending caps and, in point of fact, is not emergency spending at all—$3.2 billion or $4.5 billion for the census, $3 billion for veterans’ health, $30 billion this year alone. That wipes this out.

The point I am trying to make is this is a highly reckless and irresponsible approach. We ought to do is protect Social Security with the $1.9 trillion surplus, and there is agreement on that. Next, we need to shore up Social Security solvency, pay down that debt, reduce the amount of money we are paying on interest on the national debt, so that we can do some other things with the additional tax cuts or selective spending in terms of veterans’ health, or education, or national defense, whatever we determine the priorities may be, and then a more modest tax cut.

The Democratic alternative, I think, comes pretty close to hitting the mark. Tax cuts of $290 billion, Medicare cuts of $290 billion, domestic needs of $290 billion—that reduces spending in real terms over the next 10 years by about $300 billion—and interest, $126 billion. That is a more responsible approach.

I hope we do not revisit the mistakes of the past. Chairman Greenspan, it seems to me, had a lot of wisdom to offer. History teaches us to be cautious. These surpluses may, indeed, never occur and, indeed, if we can pay down the national debt, would we not be doing something for our children and our grandchildren that is the responsible course of action, something we can all be proud of, and provide a reduction in the interest payments we make each year, which is about $230 billion?

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator ABRAHAM be recognized for the next amendment regarding the Social Security lockbox, and immediately following the reporting by the Clerk, the amendment be temporarily laid aside and Senators BAUCUS or CONRAD be recognized to offer a lockbox amendment.

I further ask unanimous consent that the amendments be debated concurrently for a total of 2 hours to be equally divided between Senators ABRAHAM and BAUCUS, or their designates, and following the conclusion or yielding back of time, the amendments be laid aside.

I further ask unanimous consent that following the debates just described, Senator DASCHLE, or his designee, be recognized to offer an amendment, and following that debate the Senate proceed to a period of morning business.

I further ask unanimous consent that no other amendments be in order prior to the stacked votes and the votes begin in the stacked sequence at 9:30 a.m. on Thursday in the order in which they are offered, with 2 minutes of debate prior to each vote.

Finally, I ask unanimous consent that following those votes, there be 10 hours remaining for the consideration of the bill and Senator GRAMM be immediately recognized to offer his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. I ask also unanimous consent that the next Democratic first-degree amendments be in the following order:

Senator KENNEDY, Senator BINGMAN, Senator KERRY of Massachusetts, and Senator LAUTENBERG.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. Therefore, the next vote in regard to the Democratic alternative is scheduled to occur at approximately 6:30 or 6:35 this evening. It will be the last vote of the evening. The lockbox issue and the Baucus amendment will be debated this evening, with those three votes occurring in the stack sequence at 9:30 on Thursday morning.

As a reminder to Members, a late session is expected Thursday, and votes are expected to occur on Friday, since it appears it may not be possible to finish Thursday night.

I reiterate my commitment that if we find a way to finish the votes on this issue Thursday night, we will not have a session on Friday. If that is not possible, we will go into session Friday and continue voting as is necessary in order to complete this reconciliation tax relief bill.

I yield the floor.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield 14 minutes to the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized for 14 minutes.

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, although I agree with many of the specific provisions in the Democrat alternative tax package, as a few bills that have introduced—I must rise in opposition to this amendment. The plain fact is that the tax cut offered is just too small.

We have budget instructions to cut taxes by $792 billion over the next 10 years, and we should cut taxes by $792 billion.

I am glad I have this opportunity to talk about tax cuts, one of my favorite subjects.

We are in the midst of what should be a very easy task: reducing the tax burden on our citizens by $792 billion over the next ten years. After all, over the next decade, the federal government is on track to collect over $3 trillion dollars more than we have budgeted for spending.

In other words, we will be overcharging the taxpayers by $3 trillion. You would think that the suggestion to return to the taxpayers a mere 25 percent of their hard-earned money. It has even been suggested that the tax burden on our families has been falling. Well, the facts could not be any clearer: the federal government will tax away 20.6 percent of our nation’s gross domestic product this year. That is an all-time, peacetime record, a level that was only exceeded when we mobilized to win World War II.

But even though the tax burden is a record high, even though we will be overcharging the taxpayers by $3 trillion over the next decade, every excuse under the sun is being raised against tax cuts. Some of these arguments are contradictory, and all are wrong.

Some argue, from a Keynesian demand-side perspective, that tax cuts will overstimulate the economy. But every year, $792 billion in tax cuts, the federal government will run up over $2 trillion in surpluses over the next ten years—from a Keynesian viewpoint, $2 trillion in surpluses is not considered a stimulus. And with all of the lags, the delays, and the phase-ins, 80 percent of the tax cuts will not arrive until years 2007, 2008, and 2009.

Can anyone seriously suggest that, in a $9 trillion economy, a $1 billion net tax cut for fiscal year 2000 will overstimulate consumer demand? Or even a $25 billion tax cut in 2001? Would a $39 billion tax cut in 2002 overheat the economy, when this is only .004 percent of projected GDP?

Clearly, the facts do not support the argument that our tax cuts will overheat the economy. In any event, from the demand-side perspective, the tax cut would be irrelevant. If we do not cut taxes by $792 billion, it is safe to say that spending will increase by $792 billion. And when additional billions are added by the government, that is. That is what President Clinton means when he says we cannot afford a tax cut—his bureaucrats are working overtime to dream up new ways to spend the money, as if the government has first claims to the fruits of our citizens’ labor.

What kind of spending initiatives can we expect? A few years back, as many of us recall, President Clinton’s so-called stimulus package included spending on such urgent needs as building parking garages at the beach, resurfacing tennis courts, researching the sicklekinch fish, renovating swimming pools, building golf courses, soccer fields, and softball diamonds, and constructing an ice skating warming hut.

Now, the President is not the only source of such wasteful spending ideas—we in Congress are very susceptible to pressures to spend, spend, spend. But no one here doubts for a moment that if the $792 billion in taxes are instead brought to Washington, the money will all be spent. That is one very good reason why we must keep the money out of Washington in the first place.

The argument is also raised that a $792 billion tax cut leaves no money to meet some other important government goals: debt reduction. But we still have $1.9 trillion in social security surpluses that will be in a ‘lockbox’ to retire debt and shore up our citizens’ retirement security, and another $505 billion in non-social security surpluses that can be used for Medicare, National Defense, and our other priorities. It is my hope that these surpluses will be used for real priorities, not the ice skating warming huts and beach parking garages. It should be clear that this half-trillion dollars is more than enough to cover our priorities.

The rest of the arguments against our tax relief bill are a similar misapprehension. Some people argue that the money is needed to retire publicly-held debt—although, after the tax cut, the remaining 75% of the surplus is available for debt reduction. Even with our tax cut, publicly-held national debt will be reduced from 40% of GDP to just 12% of GDP by 2009.

Other people argue that the Federal Reserve Board would react to the tax cut by tightening the money supply. I have already noted that the very small size of the tax cuts over the next two years—just .0015% of GDP—does not add up to a dramatic increase in consumer demand and, in fact, will not increase demand since government spending would have increased by that same amount were we to collect the taxes. And I will point out that, on many occasion, including today, Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan has stated that he believes that government spending is the worst possible use of the surpluses, and that he would support tax cuts if spending is the alternative. Furthermore, a tax cut that removes government barriers to savings and investment is not an “artificial stimulus” that should worry the Fed one bit. Inflation, after all, is caused by too many dollars chasing too few goods, not by too many investors creating wealth and opportunity. An even stronger economy, fueled by the freedom and enthusiasm of our entrepreneurs, is not something to fear.

It is even argued that a sizable tax cut passed now makes a future economic downturn more hazardous, as if the tax cuts needed for an economic rebound will have already been wasted by our efforts this year. Of course, that argument makes the case for tax cuts, as any tax cuts that would succeed in getting us out of one place should keep us out of one in the first place. That is why former Fed Governor Lawrence Lindsey considers a tax cut a good insurance policy against an economic downturn.

When you consider all of the arguments, there really is no case against cutting taxes by at least $792 billion. Chairman Roth is to be commended for sticking to his guns and reporting out of Committee a bill that cuts taxes by that full amount, despite all of the pressure exerted by all of the advocates of big government, who would rather spend the money.

One final point I want to make is that these abstract discussions tend to obscure the real reason we are here. Tax cuts are not about numbers, they aren’t about aggregate statistics, they aren’t about increasing demand by 4 thousandths of a percentage point—tax cuts are about people. We are cutting taxes because of the 67-year-old owner of a family business in Florida’s panhandle, who is discouraged from reinvesting his hard-earned profits because the specter of the federal death tax is hovering, waiting to swoop down and scoop up 55% of the increased value of his business. We are cutting taxes because of the two-earner family, struggling to make ends meet, that has to pay over $1,000 extra in taxes just because they are married.

We are cutting taxes so that waitresses, truck drivers, teachers and carpenters can put an extra $1,000 in their IRAs each year, to build a better nest egg for retirement. We are cutting taxes to enable a biomedical company to develop new treatments for glaucoma and a cancer cure.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Ohio (Mr. Voinovich) is necessarily absent.

NOT VOTING—1

Voinovich

The amendment (No. 1384) was rejected.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote and I move to lay that motion on the table. The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of a letter from Dan Crippen, Director of the Congressional Budget Office, dated July 26, 1999, be printed in the RECORD. The letter analyzes the legislation before us, the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999

Summary: The Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999 would provide for a phaseout of the surtax on high incomes, and a reduction in capital gains taxes. The act would also provide for the extension of the unemployment insurance benefits.

Basis of estimate: All estimates, with the exception of the following provisions, were prepared by JCT.

- Accelerate the Repeal of the FUTA Surtax. The Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA) imposes an effective tax of 0.8 percent on the first $7,000 in wages paid annually to each employee. This 0.8 percent includes a 0.2 percent surtax scheduled to expire on December 31, 2007. The bill would accelerate the expiration date to December 31, 2004.

- Revenues from the FUTA tax are deposited into federal unemployment trust funds. which are statutorily capped. Under current law, CBO estimates that estimates that the federal trust funds will exceed the caps beginning in 2003. Amounts above the caps are transferred to state unemployment compensation trust funds. Since federal trust funds are included in the unified federal budget, this transfer will have no net budgetary effect. However, CBO expects that states would respond to this transfer by lowering their unemployment taxes so that their trust fund balances would remain constant.

The bill would lower the amount of revenues devoted to the federal trust funds and thus would reduce the amounts flowing to the state funds. CBO assumes that in the year following each lowered transfer, states would respond by not lowering their unemployment taxes as much as they would have, thus increasing revenues relative to current law. CBO estimates that the measure would reduce governmental receipts by $1.092 million in fiscal year 2005 and by lesser amounts in 2006 and 2007. We estimate increases in receipts in fiscal years 2008 and 2009. Over the 2005–2009 period, CBO estimates that the measure would have no net impact on governmental receipts.

IRS User Fees. The bill would adjust and extend the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) to charge taxpayers fees for certain rulings by the Office of the Chief Counsel and by the Office for Employee Plans and Exempt Organizations. The bill would eliminate the fee the IRS currently charges on determination letter requests regarding new small business pension plans beginning on December 31, 2000. The bill also would extend for six years beyond its current expiration date of September 30, 2003, the authority of the IRS to charge taxpayers fees for certain rulings. CBO estimates that the adjustment and extension of IRS fees would increase governmental receipts by $42 million over fiscal years 2001 through 2004 and by $323 million during the 2001–2009 period. Net of income and payroll tax offsets, CBO based its estimate on recent collections data and on information from the IRS.

Federal spending

IRS User Fees. The bill would adjust and extend the authority of the IRS to charge taxpayers fees for certain rulings by the Office of the Chief Counsel and by the Office for Employee Plans and Exempt Organizations. The IRS would be given the authority to retain and spend a small portion of these fees without further appropriation. CBO estimates that the bill would increase the number of participants in plans by 6,000, thus increasing governmental receipts by $42 million over the 2001–2004 period and by $18 million over the 2001–2009 period.

National Vaccine Injury Compensation Fund and Medicaid. The bill would add conjugate vaccines against streptococcus pneumoniae to the list of taxable vaccines and thus would allow for compensation for injuries related to those vaccines from the National Vaccine Injury Compensation Trust Fund. CBO estimates that this provision would increase outlays by $4 million over the 2000–2004 period. This provision would also increase federal Medicaid outlays by $21 million over the 2000–2004 period because Medicaid would be required to pay the excise tax on purchases of vaccines that contain streptococcus pneumoniae. The federal government would purchase about half of all vaccines through its Vaccines for Children program.

In addition, the bill would require the tax rate applicable to all taxable vaccines from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) for sales of vaccines after December 31, 2004. This provision would reduce the amount of tax that the Medicaid program would be required to pay for vaccines purchased through its Vaccines for Children program and would decrease federal outlays after the effective date by about $0.5 million annually.

Also, by adding conjugate vaccines against streptococcus pneumoniae to the list of taxable vaccines, the bill would increase the cost of vaccines purchased through its Vaccines for Children program. The bill would also reduce the variable-rate premium paid by all underfunded plans established by employers with 100 or fewer participants, thus receiving a more generous guarantee than under current law. Majority ownership interest of 50 percent or more would be treated the same as other participants, but receiving a more generous guarantee than under current law. The variable-rate premium would be less than $0.5 million annually. The budgetary impact of this provision would be less than $0.5 million annually. PBGC does not expect a high volume of missing participants or missed contributions, and the administrative costs of expanding the program would not be high. The net budgetary effect of increasing PBGC's premium receipts would also be small. Amounts paid by a pension plan to PBGC for missing participants are held in PBGC's trust fund, which is otherwise unfunded. Amounts paid to PBGC to participants at the time they are located are funded in the same manner as benefit payments to participants in plans for which PBGC is the trustee—partially by the trust fund and partially by on-budget reviving funds.

Rules for Substantial Owner Benefits in Terminated Plans. The legislation would modify existing rules concerning the treatment of participant distributions when plans are terminated so that these rules are similar to the rules applied to terminated plans involving a substantial owner (ownership interest of at least 10 percent). All owners other than majority owners would be subject to simplified special rules. The guarantee for majority owners would be phased in at the rate of 10% per each year that the plan has been in effect, which is faster than the current-law phase-in, but the nonguaranteed benefits of majority owners would be given a lower priority in the allocation of assets. Only one-third of the plans taken over by PBGC involve substantial owners, and the change in benefits paid out by PBGC to owner-employees under this provision would be less than $0.5 million in each year.

Pay-as-you-go considerations: The Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act sets up pay-as-you-go procedures for legislation affecting direct spending or receipts. The net changes in governmental receipts and outlays that are subject to pay-as-you-go procedures are shown in the following table. The bill would reduce the excise tax on purchases of vaccines that contain streptococcus pneumoniae. The federal government would purchase about half of all vaccines through its Vaccines for Children program. The bill would also reduce the variable-rate premium paid by all underfunded plans.

Source: Joint Committee on Taxation.

Estimate prepared by: Federal Revenues: Hester Grippando (for IRS fees) and Noah Meyerson (for FUTA), Federal Spending: Tami Ohler (for pensions), Jeanne De Sa (for National Vaccine Injury Compensation Fund and Medicaid), and John Righter (for IRS fees).

Estimates approved by: Robert A. Sunshine, Deputy Assistant Director for Budget Analysis, G. Thomas Woodward, Assistant Director for Tax Analysis, JCT has determined that 16 provisions in the bill contain private sector mandates. The private-sector mandates in the bill would:

- Add certain vaccines against streptococcus pneumoniae to the list of taxable vaccines.
- Impose a 10 percent vote or value test for real estate investment trusts (REITs);
- Change the treatment of income and services provided by taxable subsidiaries of REITs;
- Modify foreign tax credit carryover rules;
- Require reporting of information regarding cancellation of indebtedness by nonbank financial institutions;
- Limit the use of the nonaccrual experience method of accounting to the amounts to be received for the performance of qualified professional services;
- Impose a limitation on refunding of certain employee benefits;
- Repel the installment method for most taxpayers using the accrual basis;
- Prevent the recognition of ordinary income or short-term capital gains into income eligible for long-term capital gain rates;
- Deny the deduction and impose an excise tax with respect to charitable split-dollar life insurance programs;
- Modify the estimated tax rules of closely held REITs;
- Change the tax treatment of prohibited allocation of stock in an Employee Stock Ownership Plan of a subchapter S corporation;
- Modify anti-abuse rules related to the assumption of liabilities;
- Require consistent treatment and provide an allocation rule for transfers of intangibles in certain nonrecognition transactions;
- Modify the treatment of certain closely held REITs; and
- Provide for a basis reduction to assets of a corporation, if stock in that corporation is distributed by a partnership to a corporate partner.

JCT estimates that the cost of the private-sector mandates would exceed the threshold established in UMRA ($100 million in fiscal year 1999, adjusted for inflation) in each of the fiscal years 2000-2004.

Mr. BAUCUS. Will the Senator inform us as to the nature of the amendment?

Mr. MCCAIN. That is why I asked for 5 minutes, so I can tell the Senator the nature of the amendment.

Mr. BAUCUS. No objection.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, today I am proposing an amendment to authorize a three-year nationwide school choice demonstration program targeted at children from economically disadvantaged families. The program would expand tax credit scholarships for low-income children by providing parents and students the freedom to choose the best school for their unique academic needs, while encouraging schools to be creative and responsive to the needs of all students.

The amendment authorizes $1.8 billion annually for fiscal years 2001 through 2003 to be used to provide school choice vouchers to economically disadvantaged children through the Nation. The funds would be divided among the States based upon the number of children they have enrolled in public schools. Then, each State would conduct a lottery among low-income children who attend the public schools with the lowest academic performance in their State. Each child selected in the lottery would receive $2,000 per year for three years to be used to pay tuition at any school of their choice in the State, including private or religious schools. The money could also be used to pay for transportation to the school or supplementary educational services to meet the unique needs of the individual student.

In total, the amendment authorizes $5.4 billion for the three-year school choice demonstration program, as well as a GAO evaluation of the program upon its completion. The cost of this important test of school vouchers is fully offset by eliminating more than $5.4 billion in unnecessary and inequitable corporate tax loopholes which benefit the ethanol, sugar, gas, and oil industries.

First, the amendment eliminates tax credits for ethanol producers, eliminating a $1.5 billion subsidy. Ethanol is an inefficient, expensive fuel that has not lived up to claims that it would reduce reliance on foreign oil or reduce impacts on the environment. It takes more energy to produce a gallon of ethanol than the amount of energy that gallon of ethanol contains. Ethanol tax credits are simply a subsidy for corn producers, and the amendment ends the taxpayers’ support for this outdated program.
Second, the amendment eliminates three subsidies enjoyed by the oil and gas industry, totaling $3.9 billion. It phases out and reduces special tax allowances for drillers, oil and gas industry employees, and the oil industry's special right to fully deduct capital costs for drilling, exploration and development; eliminates the 15% tax credit for recovering oil using particular methods and ends special right of oil and gas property owners to claim unlimited pass losses under income and alternative minimum tax provisions. Subsidizing the cost of domestic production has not been shown to have reduced reliance on foreign oil or directly contributed to more efficient resource use or domestic productivity. The amendment ends these special tax treatments.

Finally, the amendment eliminates the special loan program for sugar producers to date that our children are provided with the essential academic tools for succeeding professionally, economically and personally. I am sure we all agree that increasing the academic performance and skills of all our nation’s students must be the paramount goal of any education reform we implement. School vouchers are a viable method of allowing all American children access to high-quality schools, including those where qualified schools and parents should be able to obtain the highest quality education for their children, not just the wealthy. Tuition vouchers would provide low-income children trapped in mediocrity, or worse, schools the same educational choices as children of economic privilege. I do not argue that vouchers would divert money away from our nation's public schools and instead of instilling competition into our school systems we should be pouring more and more money into poor performers as schools. I respectfully disagree. While I support strengthening financial support for education in our Nation, the solution to what all our system is not simply pouring more and more money into it. Currently our nation spends significantly more money than most countries and yet our students scored lower than their peers from almost all of the forty countries which participated in the last Third International Mathematics and Science Study. Students in countries which are struggling economically, socially, and politically, such as Russia, outscored U.S. children in math and scored far above them in advanced math and physics. Clearly, we must make significant changes beyond simply pouring more money into the current structure in order to improve our children's academic performance in order to remain a viable force in the world economy. It is shameful that we are failing to provide many of our children with adequate training and quality academic preparation for the real world. The number of college freshmen who require remedial courses in reading, writing, and mathematics when they begin their higher education is unacceptably high. In fact, presently, more than 30 percent of entering freshmen need to enroll in one or more remedial course during their first year in college. In addition, the majority of entering freshmen are not prepared with the basic skills to engage in a competitive global marketplace. I concede that school vouchers are not the magic bullet for eradicating all that is wrong with our current educational system, but they are an important opportunity for providing improved academic opportunities for all children, not just the wealthy. Examination of the limited voucher programs scattered around our country reveal an improvement in student satisfaction, an increase in parental involvement, and a definite improvement in attendance and discipline at the participating schools. Vouchers encourage public and private schools, communities and parents to all work together to raise the level of education for all students. Today, we have the opportunity to replicate these important attributes throughout all our nation's communities.

Mr. ALLARD, Mr. FRIST, and Mr. COVERDELL, from Montana, and I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be withdrawn.

AMENDMENT NO. 1398
(Purpose: To preserve and protect the surpluses of the social security trust funds by reaffirming the exclusion of receipts and disbursement from the budget, by setting a limit on the debt held by the public, and by amending the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 to provide a process to reduce the limit on the debt held by the public)

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, under the unanimous consent agreement which was agreed to earlier, I now send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. ABRAHAM] for himself, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. ASHCROFT, Mr. CRAPO, Mr. ENZI, Mr. SANTORUM, Mr. GRAMS, Ms. ALLARD, Mr. PAUL, and Mr. COVERDELL, proposes an amendment numbered 1396.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mr. ABRAHAM. I believe under the previous order we will now set that amendment aside so that the Senator from Montana may be recognized to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is set aside.
The Senator from Montana is recognized.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT WITH INSTRUCTIONS

Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask unanimous consent that Senators CONRAD and HARKIN be added as co-sponsors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows: The Senator from Montana (Mr. BAUCUS) moves to recommit S. 1429 to the Committee on Finance to report back within 3 days, with an amendment to reduce the tax breaks in the bill by an amount sufficient to allow one hundred percent of the Social Security surplus in each year to be locked away for Social Security, and one-third of the non-Social Security surplus in each year to be locked away for Medicare with an amendment.

Mr. BAUCUS. I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment as follows:

TITLE SOCIAL SECURITY AND MEDICARE SAFE DEPOSIT BOX ACT OF 1999

SEC. 01. SHORT TITLE. This title may be cited as the “Social Security and Medicare Safe Deposit Box Act of 1999.”

Subtitle A—Social Security

SEC. 11. PROTECTION OF SOCIAL SECURITY SURPLUSES.

(a) Points of Order to Protect Social Security Surpluses.—Section 312 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(c) Points of Order to Protect Social Security Surpluses.—

“(1) Concurrent Resolutions on the Budget.—It shall be in order in the House of Representatives or the Senate to consider any concurrent resolution on the budget, or conference report thereon or amendment thereto, that would set forth an on-budget deficit for any fiscal year.

“(2) Subsequent Legislation.—It shall not be in order in the House of Representatives or the Senate to consider any bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report if—

“(A) the enactment of that bill or resolution in the form recommended in that conference report, together with associated interest costs would cause or increase an on-budget deficit for any fiscal year.

“(B) the adoption and enactment of that amendment; or “(C) the enactment of that bill or resolution in the form recommended in that conference report, together with associated interest costs would cause or increase an on-budget deficit for any fiscal year.

“(3) Definition.—In this subsection:

“(A) On-Budget Deficit.—The term ‘on-budget deficit’ when applied to an on-budget deficit for a fiscal year, means causes or increases an on-budget deficit relative to the baseline budget projection.

“(B) Baseline Budget Projection.—The term ‘baseline budget projection’ means the projection described in section 237 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1990, as in effect on October 1, 2002, and for any fiscal year thereafter.

“(C) Budget Resolution Baseline.—A budget resolution would set forth an on-budget deficit for a fiscal year if the resolution sets forth an on-budget deficit and the most recent Congressional Budget Office baseline estimate of the surplus or deficit for such fiscal year projects an on-budget surplus, on-budget balance, or an on-budget deficit that is less than the deficit set forth in the resolution.”

(b) Content of Concurrent Resolution on the Budget.—Section 301(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by redesignating paragraphs (6) and (7) as paragraphs (7) and (8), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (5) the following new paragraph:

“(6) the receipts, outlays, and surplus or deficit in the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, combined, established by title II of the Social Security Act:”.

Subtitle B—Medicare

SEC. 21. DEFINITIONS.

Section 301 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(11) The term ‘Medicare surplus reserve’ means the surplus amounts reserved to strengthen and preserve the Medicare program as calculated in accordance with section 316.”

SEC. 22. MEDICARE SURPLUS RESERVE POIN T OF ORDER.

Section 301 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(J) Medicare Surplus Reserve Point of Order.—It shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any concurrent resolution on the budget (or amendment, motion, or conference report on the resolution) that would decrease the surplus in any of the fiscal years covered by the concurrent resolution below the levels of the Medicare surplus reserve for those fiscal years calculated in accordance with section 316.”

SEC. 23. ENFORCEMENT OF MEDICARE SURPLUS RESERVE.

Section 311(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(4) Enforcement of the Medicare Surplus Reserve.—

“(A) In General.—A concurrent resolution on the budget has been agreed to, it shall not be in order in the House of Representatives or the Senate to consider any bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that together with associated interest costs would decrease the surplus or the Medicare surplus reserve in any fiscal year below the level of the Medicare surplus reserve established by section 316.

“(B) Baseline Budget Projection.—The term ‘baseline budget projection’ means the projection described in section 237 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1990, as in effect on October 1, 2002, and for any fiscal year thereafter.

“(C) Budget Resolution Baseline.—A budget resolution would set forth an on-budget deficit for a fiscal year if the resolution sets forth an on-budget deficit and the most recent Congressional Budget Office baseline estimate of the surplus or deficit for such fiscal year projects an on-budget surplus, on-budget balance, or an on-budget deficit that is less than the deficit set forth in the resolution.”

(b) Waiver.—Subsections (c)(2) and (d)(3) of section 301 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 are amended by inserting after “301(d)(2).” the following: “312(g).”

SEC. 27. ADJUSTMENT OF BUDGET LEVELS AND REPEAL.

Upon the enactment of this subtitle, the Chairmen of the Committees on the Budget shall file with their Houses appropriately revised estimates of discretionary spending levels (including reconciliation levels) under the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 to carry out this subtitle.

SEC. 28. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act shall take effect upon the date of its enactment, and the amendments made by this Act shall apply only to fiscal year 2000 and subsequent fiscal years.

Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. President, this is a motion to recommit the bill and send it back to the Finance Committee with instructions. The instructions would be to change the tax bill to ensure that 100 percent of the off-budget surplus—that is, the Social Security surplus—be set in a lockbox that is in reserve, and it also provides that one-third of the on-budget, or non-Social Security surplus, be set aside for Medicare.

You might remember that although both sides generally agree that of the roughly $3 trillion projected surplus over 10 years, $2 trillion would be reserved for Social Security—that is the Social Security lockbox part of this amendment—we have not reached agreement on the other trillion projected on-budget surplus. And this amendment reserves one-third of that for Medicare.

Why is this amendment so important? Plainly, simply, we believe that a
There are some exceptions for that, but as a basic rule Medicare does not provide for prescription drug coverage for nursing home care unless they are in a hospital. That is a problem. Roughly 30 percent of Americans over age 65 depend entirely on Social Security for their income.

There are a lot of seniors who are not very wealthy. A lot of seniors who desperately look for that Social Security paycheck and who desperately are trying to figure out how to balance their individual or family budget to pay for prescription drugs, to pay for heating bills, to pay for food. This is not some cataclysmic scare tactic. It is not some wild story.

All of us in this Chamber who go to drugstores to get prescription drugs run across an elderly lady or an elderly gentleman—try to balance things out, trying to fill a prescription and trying to find enough money to pay for it all, and asking the druggist, “Well, maybe just half,” because they don’t have enough money. I know it gets very real. Because of the big tax cut, it is not going to be there. It is just a hope and a wish and a prayer. We say we lock it in. That is the difference.

I strongly urge my colleagues to take advantage of this situation by locking in a third of the on-budget surplus for Medicare.

Another reason for doing this is, all of us have heard in the last year, roughly, about how we went too far in 1997 with the Balanced Budget Act provisions which cut providers’ benefits. We have all heard that, that we have cut hospitals, too, that we cut home health care too much, and so forth.

Let me show you on my colleagues’ chart. If they can see this chart, basically it shows that the projected cuts under the BBA 1997 were about $100 billion over 5 years. Now it has turned out that the actual cuts are almost twice that, almost $200 billion over 5 years. We have all heard that.

To be a little more specific, look how big the differential is between anticipated cuts under the BBA 1997 and the actual cuts. In the anticipated cuts, the differential is greatest for home health care—big difference. It turns out that the actual cuts for home health care are more than 20 percent what we anticipated. And the actual cut under skilled nursing homes is about 60 percent more than we anticipated.

So I will summarize and say that the choice between us is very simple. We have two amendments before us. One is the Republican alternative, a lockbox that protects Social Security, that is all and, I might say, in a way which is very dangerous. It will cause train wrecks. It is going to cause the precipitation of confrontations in government. It is very reckless—very reckless. That is one alternative—only Social Security in a reckless way.

The other alternative before us, of the two amendments, is a lockbox that protects Medicare also, but in a non-reckless way.

Those are the two choices. It is very simple. We say that in these times of tremendous projected surpluses, at least a third of the on-budget surplus should be protected for Medicare—at least a third.

I know some on the other side of the aisle say zero—they want to put aside nothing for Medicare. We say a third, and we lock it in. We lock it in to the same degree as both sides want to in some way lock in Social Security protection. We lock it in, and we protect Medicare. We lock it in, and we provide a third of it to meet that problem, but also because the baby boomers are due to reach retirement age at about 2011 and on through to 2030. The baby boomers are going to reach retirement, and that is going to cause much more pressure on the trust fund.

We believe it is prudent today to reserve at least a third of the on-budget surplus for Medicare, not only because the solvency of the trust fund is in a difficult position, but also because the baby boomers are due to reach retirement age at about 2011 and on through to about 2020. The baby boomers are going to reach retirement, and that is going to cause much more pressure on the trust fund.

We believe it is prudent today to reserve a portion of the on-budget surplus—a third of it—to meet that problem, because demographic conditions that is going to occur; namely, more baby boomers. We think it is only prudent to preserve Medicare for that reason.

There is another reason to save for Medicare, and that is very simply to help make it easier for us in the Congress to provide prescription drug coverage for seniors. If we have heard anything lately with respect to Medicare, it is that seniors want and deserve some kind of Medicare prescription drug coverage. Why is that? One reason is that today, essentially, Medicare does not provide for drug coverage out of hospital.
of about $1 trillion over 10 years. It is very simple: Save a third of the surplus for Medicare, for seniors. Help them pay those health care bills. Help them get those prescription drug benefits. Help us relieve the undue pressure we have caused on home health care agencies, on nursing homes, on hospitals, particularly rural hospitals.

This is a no-brainer. Mr. President. This is pretty simple stuff. It is a matter of choices. Do we want to help people on Medicare or do we not? We say yes, we do want to help people on Medicare. We want to help those seniors. This amendment we are offering enables people who are senior citizens to get the health care protection and the health care benefits that we think are so important.

I yield the remainder of my time.

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, because we had a little bit of confusion in the order of speaking, I propose at this point a unanimous consent agreement which would allow first the Senator from Pennsylvania to speak on our amendment, up to 10 minutes, followed by the Senator from Georgia to speak for 5 minutes on the amendment, and then we would go back at that point to the other side. We had thought we would start since we offered the first amendment on this side of the aisle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I yield up to 10 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senator from Michigan and Senator DOMENICI for their great work on the Social Security lockbox issue.

Before I get into our amendment, I will address the Senator from Montana. First he says there is no money, not a penny, not a nickel, available for Medicare under the Republican bill. As the chairman of the Budget Committee will show in his big charts—I don’t have one of those big charts with me, but I have a smaller one—this yellow area is $505 billion for domestic spending programs.

If we want to—and that is the second point I want to make—use the on-budget surplus to fund Medicare, which is not an on-budget program, it is a separate program, a separate lockbox, Social Security separate. That is what the lockbox is trying to do with Social Security. There is money there if we want to take money from the general fund and use it for Medicare.

So the idea that we don’t lock it up is ridiculous. The money is there. Then we can decide where we want to spend that money. It is a matter of priorities.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, are you addressing me?

Mr. ABRAHAM. I don’t know if the Senator from Montana has ever voted to spend general fund money on Medicare. I don’t think there has been a vote I am aware of in the Finance Committee to actually—there have been resolutions, a sense of the Senate, we should save Medicare—fund a Medicare program out of general fund revenues, Medicare Part A Program.

That, to me, is a dangerous precedent. We have a separate dedicated tax for Medicare—a separate tax. What is now being talked about is that we have to grow Medicare by using the on-budget surplus.

Let me say this: If Medicare was a program that was financially sound, that was doing a very solid job in the face of the different services provided, it was the kind of coverage that seniors are really looking for, then you might make the argument that it is a well-run program and is doing everything it should be doing, and instead of raising revenues, we have to lock up Medicare, we should take that money out of the surplus. The problem is, we have a fairly strong bipartisan agreement that there are a lot of problems with Medicare. The Senator from Montana will agree there are serious problems. No. 1, it doesn’t cover even half of their health care costs of seniors. Here is the major health care program for seniors, and it doesn’t even cover half of their costs for health care.

What we are saying is—and we said on a bipartisan basis—let’s fix Medicare, make it more efficient, let it meet the needs of seniors, including prescription drug coverage. Why? Because when Medicare was put together 45 years ago, it was the kind of coverage that seniors found to be common or well used; they were a very different game. Well, today is a very different game. So we need drug therapy as part of a basic benefit because it is the way we treat people more often. So this idea that, somehow or another, our lockbox is not sufficient because we don’t lock up Medicare is ridiculous. We have money to do it. A; and B, we have to question first whether we should throw more money at Medicare before we fix what is fundamentally flawed with Medicare, in making it a better program. Those are the things I would like to address on Medicare.

With respect to our lockbox, I always find it unbelievable that when we have an issue here with broad consensus—in this case, or in most cases, the issues pushed by our side of the aisle—all of a sudden we have agreement. We have agreement in the House, 416-12. The President says he wants a Social Security lockbox. We come to the Senate and we have agreement. Probably if I talk to seniors around the country, the first thing they will tell me is: If you quit raiding that money out of the Social Security trust fund, Social Security would be OK. We have an agreement.

So we come to the floor with an agreement to fix the Social Security problem. Let’s lock that money up so only Social Security money can be used for Social Security. Well, sometimes, as the song in Oklahoma says, a girl can’t say no. This is a girl who can’t say yes on the other side of the aisle. These Democrats just can’t say yes.

We have an agreement, we have something that we all agree on. America is overwhelmingly agreeing with it, but they can’t come around to saying let’s get this done. No, they are going to change the subject. Well, that Social Security thing, we agree with you; but you don’t do enough and therefore we can’t let you do this. We can’t let you do this Social Security thing.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, be-
Garbage. The issue is not Medicare. This is a Social Security lockbox, which the Democrat President—their President and our President—wants. We are ready to give it to him. What is the response from the other side? The response could be, should be: OK, let’s do Social Security. We all agree on it. We have broad bipartisan consensus. We have public approval. Let’s do Social Security.

But, no. Let me tell colleagues on the other side of the aisle, the Medicare issue is going to be here a little while longer. I don’t know of anybody who thinks Medicare is going to go away, or the problems in Medicare are only temporary. That issue will be here, and it is an important issue, one that should be fully debated. But it should not be used to obstruct something that is desperately needed to protect the Social Security trust fund, and that is the political game that is going on. We should call it what it is; it is an absolute red herring.

Social Security can be—should be—protected from raids by the general government and by the very same people, I might add—we saw the Democratic leader come forward this week and say we need $10 billion more for agriculture. May I ask the Senator from Montana where that money is coming from?

Let me answer that question. The Social Security surplus. So is it really that they want to do the Social Security lockbox as they say? Is it really that they want to put all that money aside to make sure Social Security is solvent for the next generation? Or is it really because they just can’t help themselves; they want to spend it?

They don’t want a lockbox because a lockbox keeps their fingers out of the Social Security trust fund, which they love to raid. They just can’t help themselves. They just love to stick their fingers in there and get that money out that is just sitting there. It is just sitting there. It is similar to a sailor on leave, sitting there with a shot on the bar and he is staring at it and he can’t leave it alone.

All I am saying is: Leave Social Security alone. Pass the lockbox.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous question, the Senator from Georgia is recognized for up to 5 minutes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I think it might be useful for anybody listening to the debate to put this in some sequence. When the Nation discovered there would be projected surpluses of amounts that had not been anticipated, they changed all the dynamics of our discussions about budgets and Social Security. When the President gave us his budget, he spent about 40 percent of the Social Security receipts.

If there is one complaint you hear as you travel across the country, it is that people are unhappy when the Congress dips into the Social Security taxes that have been sent, purportedly, to prepare for the retirement of all those who participate. So when this Congress began, we got a budget from the President that spent 40 percent of those Social Security receipts.

Our side of no. We are going to take the President at his admonishment over the years. We are not going to spend any of the Social Security receipts, and we are not going to use it for tax relief. It is going to be set aside and protected. Over the next 10 years, that is almost $2 trillion.

I might add, that does not solve all the issues that deal with Social Security. But it makes a pretty good down-payment on the problem. Everybody in America agrees that ought to be done.

After this debate was floated around the town for a while, I think the President realized it was not going to fly to propose to spend the Social Security receipts. So on 8/23. That is just several weeks ago after being pummeled for 5 weeks that he should not be spending those receipts. He said, “Social Security taxes should be saved for Social Security, period.” He didn’t say, “and something else,” or “Maybe we ought to talk about Medicare.” We will talk about that in a minute. He said, “Social Security taxes should be saved for Social Security, period.” That was a big change.

We had our side of the aisle saying no Social Security receipts for anything but Social Security, and we had the President. They brought it up in the House of Representatives. It was virtually unanimous with 415 votes. We are going to protect all the Social Security receipts. All that has to happen is for that to clear the Senate, and we say to America: We have made a monumental breakthrough.

What happened when it got to the Senate? Filibuster.

We have endeavored to go to the measure to debate it and to amend it five different times. I might add it would be subject to amendments to improve it and to have the ideas heard from the other side of the aisle.

But what was the response? Don’t let the Senate get to the bill. Block it.

The latest ruse, the latest amendment, is to cloud it because they do not want to be responsible for blocking a sound measure to protect Social Security. They don’t want to be responsible for that. They do not want headlines such as the New York Times that says “Republicans Seize the Banner on Social Security.” This has been their purview for years. Suddenly, they are in the position of having to cloud the issue because they do not want to seem as being responsible for leaving all of their money there that could be spent or used for some other issue.

We are prepared to pass a lockbox for Social Security—that none of those receipts would be spent on anything but Social Security, or the pay-down, and that that would not be used for tax relief. It would be a monumental breakthrough.

You can only conclude that, A, they don’t want a lockbox because they want those funds to be available; and, B, that the reason they are coming forth with blocking going to the bill or an amendment—that gets into another subject—is to cloud the issue, which is they are blocking the ability of the Senate to concur with the President of the United States and the House of Representatives and give America a lockbox that protects Social Security. It is not very complicated.

I will say one last thing. When you go to a town hall meeting and you talk to the American people, they do not want Social Security stolen. They just can’t help themselves; they want to spend it?

Mr. President, I yield in accordance with the unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

The Senator from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. ABRAM. Mr. President, at this point, on behalf of myself and the managers of the bill, I yield up to 15 minutes to the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized for up to 15 minutes.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Michigan. I think the President is losing.

Stepping back from what we have been talking about for the last few minutes, I will go back and address the issue at hand concerning the lockbox. I think it is important to keep in mind what we are about here and what the essential question is. The essential question remains whether or not when we are faced with projected substantial surpluses, 25 percent of that amount should be returned to the people who created those surpluses. That is the American taxpayer. I think that question should answer itself.

Another way to put it is whether or not, in view of these surpluses, we need a tax cut or a tax increase. You would think that question would answer itself. You would think that certainly in a surplus situation you would have to seriously consider tax cuts under those circumstances.

We have a tremendous tax burden right now. Taxes are taking a greater and greater share of our economic productivity. Income taxes alone have reached the level of 10 percent of gross domestic product, the highest they have ever been in this country.
A two-earner family nowadays pays 38 percent of their income in taxes. You would think that surely we could reach agreement that now is the time for a decent tax cut for the American people. If not now, when?

Our Democratic colleague, Senator Kerry from Nebraska, put it well earlier to this Congress when he said, "You don't even think it is a close call—that under these circumstances we should have a tax cut."

But what we are dealing with now, with regard to the Democratic amendment, is another reason why they say we should not have a tax cut. The President pulled the rug out from Medicare reform. That would be the nerve and wherewithal to sit down and mental reform. The President recognizes that we have to have fundamental reform of the Medicare system. It is tantamount to saying we are going to pollute the environment; women's health issues are coming into play.

It is substantial overkill, and it is based upon the fact that they are not telling the truth about the elements of what they are trying to do; that is, essentially give us a tax increase instead of a tax cut and spend an additional $1 trillion-plus.

Now what we have as part of the reason why we can't have a tax cut is we want to protect Medicare and Social Security, and, in this particular amendment we are addressing, the question of a Medicare lockbox. I think one of the essential question before this Congress is, What is the responsible way to protect Medicare? We all know we have a substantial problem. We all know we are going to have to address it.

What happened in response to that was a bipartisan effort by the Medicare Commission, chaired by Senator Breaux from Louisiana. They came up with a proposal because everybody knows you can't keep pouring money on top of a system that is broken, that is flawed, that is out of date, that is uneconomical, and that everybody says has to be changed. We can disagree on how to do it, but everybody says and recognizes that we have to have fundamental reform.

The difficulty with that is a political difficulty. It is not one of not knowing what to do; it is having the political nerve and wherewithal to sit down and get the job done.

This commission addressed it. This commission did it, Democrats and Republicans together. But the President pulled the rug out from under that effort. That was a real chance to do some Medicare reform. That would have been the only thing that was going to save Medicare. It is fundamental reform. The President pulled the rug out from that effort.

He says now, since we have this Medicare problem and essentially since they have pulled the rug out from the reform, trying to find something to solve the problem, that we have to look to general revenues. We can't have a tax cut now so we have to take this surplus and dedicate a huge chunk of it for so-called fixing Medicare.

The fact of the matter is that will not fix Medicare. It will not even help Medicare. It will be counterproductive. There will be some transition costs as we move from a failing system—it still does a lot of good, but it is a failing system—to one of real reform. There will be some transition costs. The Republican proposal has over $500 billion of revenues in our proposal that can be used for Medicare or any other reason.

Paying more money in, setting it aside, and calling it a lockbox by the way, nobody goes to jail if they get inside the lockbox—I don't think fools anybody. We are making a commitment to set the money aside and not mess with it. I take that commitment seriously. This Congress has to keep the President from coming from the next day and doing something about it.

The fact of the matter is we are not helping the system by saying we are going to set aside some money for Medicare without addressing fundamental reform. A lot of people want prescription drugs as an additional entitlement. At a time when we have a real fiscal problem with the system itself, laying another entitlement on it will provide additional challenges we will have to meet. However, there is even a way to do that if it is accompanied with fundamental reform.

Instead of doing that, what we have in a proposal similar to the President's proposal, just another variation, is saying and you can forestall real reform by program you can forestall real reform and you can fool the American people into thinking they don't have to make some tough choices and have real reform such as the Medicare Commission came up with. It is making you stand off from the problem and not address the problem.

We are facing a demographic time bomb. In the year 2020 we will have twice as many people over the age of 65. We will have about half as many worker-per-retiree ratio. It will be twice as bad as the year 2000. We know we have to do something.

I am afraid I must conclude that although saving Medicare and Social Security has worked very well for some people who have used it as a way of having to face up to the fundamental problems those two programs present, the real answer to the question that is presented tonight with regard to the Medicare lockbox amendment is that, once again, it is being used as yet another excuse, along with "it will ruin the economy," "it will mess up the military." It is being used simply as another excuse as to why we cannot have a tax cut.

For folks who believe the money ought to come to Washington, there is never a good time for a tax cut. There is never a good time for it. It is about power. It is fundamentally about who makes decisions in our society. Anyone believing Washington should have control of this, thinks even in a surplus situation that 25 percent of it can't be returned to the American people.

I say if not now, when in the world could we ever do it? Certainly, we are not doing Medicare any good. We are not doing Medicare any good by standing here and trying to convince the American people that by setting aside a few more general revenue dollars for this system, when we have failed to reach fundamental reform, that we can do that and we will be doing something good for Medicare or the country.

I don't think that is the answer. If we took all the money and poured it into the programs, we are really not doing very much other than perhaps buying a little bit of additional time to allow us to pour more money into a leaky bucket, when the hole in the bucket at the bottom is getting bigger and bigger, while doing nothing to improve the program's long-term sustainable. Or worse, in adopting changes that may aggravate the long-term financial outlook for the program and the budgets.

The Comptroller is saying we are aggravating the problem. You are actually doing harm if you think by putting a little more money on top of this program you can forestall real reform and you can fool the American people into thinking they don't have to make some tough choices and have real reform such as the Medicare Commission came up with. It is making you stand off from the problem and not address the problem.

Now we have a surplus situation. One would think the answer to that would be a tax cut. Now he comes back and suggests a tax increase. It doesn’t make sense.

I suggest the Medicare lockbox proposal be defeated.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield up to 15 minutes to the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized for up to 15 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask the Presiding Officer to tell me when I have used 10 minutes.

I heard the distinguished Senator from Montana, Mr. BAUCUS, say there is not one nickel for Medicare in this Republican budget. That is absolutely wrong. Perhaps the Senator forgot to include the fact that there is $3.1 trillion in this budget for Medicare, fully funded.

What the Senator should have said was: Shame on the President. He is accusing Republicans, and he underfunded Medicare $31.5 billion on purpose. He did such things in his budget as freezing hospital costs for rural America. Senators, including the distinguished Senator from Montana, are worried about that. The President’s proposal is that it be frozen for another year. That is where he picked up $3.1 billion. Guess what he did with it. He spent it on other domestic programs. That is the stark reality, unequivocal truth.

Having said that, let me start with a quote from the CBO on July 23 of 1999. It has some real application to the so-called Medicare lockbox that is being proposed today to confuse the issue. The issue is putting a lockbox around Social Security. The other side doesn’t want to vote for that for some reason, so they say: Let’s do another lockbox, let’s do Medicare, and we will get credit for reducing the debt.

Here is what they say about it:

The chief criticism that the President—that is, OMB—has of CBO is that, . . . we did not give them credit for $328 billion in transfers from the general fund to the Medicare trust fund.

Then they say,

That’s right, we didn’t, and that’s because transfers from one part of government to another do not reduce the public debt.

The whole argument the President is taking to the American people is that he reduces the debt more than we do. But one of his big-ticket items is this one right here. The Congressional Budget Office says that $328 billion that he wanted to move out of the general fund, so it could not be used for tax cuts, he puts in the Medicare trust fund and wants credit for reducing the debt.

What does the Congressional Budget Office say? Fundamentally the most simple of all propositions: We did not give them credit for that because transfers from one part of Government to another do not reduce public debt. That is the truth.

Then, in addition, we had a very good Senator who does not agree with the Democrats on everything and say—this is BOB KERREY:

The President also has a great deal of pain in his plan, in the form of income tax increases that will be borne by future generations of Americans. He is alluding to the $328 billion which are IOUs, and he says:

I strongly disapprove of a plan that provides a false sense of complacency that Social Security has been saved by this nebulous and vague idea of “saving the surplus” —

The very same thing applies to Medicare— while failing to disclose the real pain that will be incurred.

When they will have to pay for it, is what he is saying. Their income taxes are going to go up by the amount of $328 billion or whatever amount the Democrats allegedly want to secure for Medicare by putting it in some kind of lockbox on-budget trust fund.

I also ask an interesting question: Is there anybody who can stand on the floor of the Senate and suggest that by taking this money away from the tax-payers and shuffling it over into a trust fund extends the date by which we run out of money to pay the Medicare people what they are entitled to? Does it increase any? Not at all. You have to change the payment plan to do that. That is what Medicare reform is all about.

Having said that, I could even quote the President’s own OMB budget about it:

Suffice it to say, anybody who wants to read this can. But even they say, “only in a bookkeeping sense” does this carry any real purpose—in a bookkeeping sense, nothing else. We don’t need bookkeeping; we need to decide what we are going to do with this surplus.

I believe I understand the nature of this surplus. I am working very hard to convince people that we all ought to agree on one set of facts and then see where we are.

So I would like to suggest to the Senate, if they find fault with this, they can do their own. But I submit that we have, if you start with a freeze on domestic spending for the next 10 years— Do not jump up and say we cannot do that. I know we cannot do that. But if we start with that, we have an accumulated surplus of $3.3 trillion. We ought to then talk about how the Republicans plan to use that. Very simply, we take every penny that belongs to Social Security and we say put it in a lockbox. That is the debate tonight. But put it in a real lockbox, don’t put it in a lockbox such as the one that is offered here on the floor tonight. It is unbelievable that the other side would even claim to have a lockbox.

They create another budget point of order on top of at least four that already exist, against a budget resolution that has a surplus or deficit. That is exactly the issue. You can call it Social Security or whatever. There are already four points of order on that. You do not need this new lockbox on Social Security.

But let me suggest, let’s continue on. If this is the way you look at a surplus, then set all the Social Security money aside. Then go and say, What do we do with the rest of it? We submitted the proposal that was put in this budget resolution when we designed it and voted on it for a tax cut over a 10-year period.

People are acting as if we are cutting $792 billion worth of taxes next year. Do you know how much we are cutting taxes? Do you know how much the American economy can absorb it. That is $792 billion. If you want to know the number, that is 23.4 percent of this total surplus.

I have been using a dollar bill. It caught on. The Democrats have used dollar bills, and they get us all confused. They have two different dollar bills, one cut in thirds, one cut some other way. Ours is simple. We have not cut it any way. We say one-quarter of it, 23.4 percent, should go back to the people. It is up to the Congress to believe this, but plain old arithmetic says there is $505 billion left over. The other side says there is not a nickel in this for Medicare.

Before they came to the floor, before this idea that we were not doing anything for Medicare became a political issue, the budget resolution had $90 billion in it for Medicare—the one you voted on, Republicans. It had $90 billion in. Now, look here, there is $505 billion worth of domestic priorities. We submit it is up to the Congress and the President to decide how to use it. But would anybody believe we are not going to use part of it for prescription drugs? Of course we are. And, incidentally, is that enough money?

Do you know how much the President said we need for prescription drugs? And he would have sold this to the American people, except it is impossible. He said $48 billion of that is what you need to fix, reform, and pay for prescription drugs. It turns out he totally underestimated it. It is more like $111 billion—$118 billion. But the truth of the matter is, take $90 billion out of it, take $100 billion out of it;
That leaves $405 billion to add to discretionary. Just in rough numbers, you could add $10 billion a year. If you put $100 billion worth of Medicare, you can add $40 billion a year. Is that enough?

Tomorrow I will put up a chart showing how much discretionary spending has gone up in the last decade. I would be surprised if it went up $40 billion, net increase, in very many of the years.

So essentially we have only one issue here: Do we lock up, in an irrevocable manner, as suggested in the Abraham-Ashcroft-Domenici lockbox, which is really a lockbox—a lockbox that the Secretary of Treasury was even worried that it did not give Government enough flexibility, so we changed it to give them some flexibility. We provide for a tax cut, for any program, in any case of great emergencies, you are not bound by it. We provide some other flexibility.

But the truth of the matter is that this is a prudent way, if you decide you do not want to use the surplus to grow big, big, big, big Government. If you want to grow it, then do it the way the President recommends: Do not have this tax cut in; have a little piece of one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used 10 minutes and has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. DOMENICI. In fact, I am preparing to make a guess, if they want us to settle for $300 billion—and $792 billion, rounded to $300 billion, is almost 25 percent—they would like to give the American taxpayers back less than a dime, it looks to me. So if they have a chart that explains their position and want to use an American dollar, put it up, and then clip it off at 30 percent and say: That is what we would like to give you back because we need all the rest of it because we want to increase spending.

I do not think this applies to the distinguished Senator who is making the argument in behalf of the Democrats. I do not think he would want to spend all that money. But I do believe the President has snookered us all. He has us believing we are really going to harm the American people by not paying for every new program he has in mind and more. And, frankly, that is just not true.

In fact, tomorrow, if I can, I will put up about five of the President’s new programs, I say to Senator ABRAHAM, I will get them on a chart here, and I will ask the American people: Which do you prefer? These five new programs? Or would you prefer to make it easier to pay off student loans? Would you prefer to make it easier to take care of an elderly parent? Would you prefer to stop penalizing marriage? Or would you prefer a new program? It does not matter what new program. New programs are new programs, if they are added to the expenditure of the Federal Government and are making it grow.

We believe it is a pretty good size right now. We believe there is a need for some growth. We believe there is a need in some instances to increase dramatically what we have been spending, and we voted for that in our budget resolution. We said education is one of them, if you will reform the way we give it to the States. Let’s put more money in, not less. We said that. We argued it here on the floor. We propose to stick with that.

But the truth of the matter is that our lockbox will make our tax cut reasonable and plausible and will make sure the Social Security people are safe.

I close tonight by suggesting to everybody who is listening to this debate that we should not do this now. If we do not proceed through, we will obligate all this money one way or another for some American program, and then we will say there is not any money left for tax cuts.

Here is $1.9 trillion waiting for you to tell us how to fix Social Security. Is it so complicated? No, it is not complicated. He prefers the issue to a solution. That is why we are on the floor. He does not want to submit a Social Security reform program. He wants to continue to hoodwink us into thinking if you give the people a tax cut, you cannot fix Social Security.

I will bet the President would not submit a Social Security reform program that would cost so much that it would not leave money for a tax cut out of this surplus. That is absolutely incredible that he would do that. I do not believe he would submit a Medicare reform plan that is so big and so costly that there would not be money for a tax cut. As a matter of fact, he kind of shocked me. He submitted a reform Medicare plan that only costs $48 billion, if he was right in his numbers. It turns out he is not right, but had he been right, he would have been submitting one that cost $48 billion. I submit there is plenty of money left over to do that.

My last argument, and it will take a minute, is there are some suggesting we should not do this now. If we do not do this now, we will never do it because, as a matter of fact, as we proceed through, we will obligate all this money one way or another for some American program, and then we will say there is not any money left for tax cuts.

For those who are so frightened about us having a negative impact on the American economy, let me suggest, for the next 3 years, our impact is insignificant, almost negative. It begins to grow a little bit in the outyears, but even the great doctor—as PHIL GRAMM said today—he is like the Bible, everybody quotes him but nobody reads him.

That is what PHIL GRAMM said today on the floor. Even if he said if you are going to spend it, have a tax cut. He also said the Republican plan is not significant enough in size over a 10-year period or annually to have a negative impact in terms of the American economy.

I think we are on the right track. Will the Senator yield me 1 additional minute?

Mr. ABRAHAM. I yield 1 minute.

Mr. DOMENICI. We are on the right track, and I think the Democrats have missed the boat. They are mixing apples and oranges when they try to confuse us on another lockbox for Medicare. I think tonight we have just about disposed of that as being a ridiculous approach which I call anything but a tax cut approach. Frankly, with what was accomplished Senator over this period of time, I say if you cannot give back a little bit of it to the American people, then what do they elect us for?

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I have heard a lot of words.

Mr. DOMENICI. Good words.

Mr. BAUCUS. My question is, where’s the beef? There is nothing on the other side about what they want to do to help Medicare—nothing. The Senator from Pennsylvania started out by saying: Gee, there’s money for Medicare. Then he shifted his argument to say we should not use general revenue. Then he shifted his argument to say that the amendment we are offering is a charade, a smokescreen. But if you listen to the words, there is not one word of what he wants to do to help Medicare. As a matter of fact, what I hear in the words is, first, we need some kind of structural reform. Let’s get structural reform, but let’s not use general revenue.

There has been reference to the Breaux commission. Mr. BREAUX admits we need resources in addition to structural reform to help solve the Medicare problem. He said that. He is the chairman of the commission. He said we need it. I think he is right. The problems facing Medicare will require both structural reform as well as some additional resources to help solve the problem. At least that is his view, and he is chairman of the Breaux commission. He ought to have some idea of what is necessary.

I also remind my colleagues that structure reform is not easy. I will never forget catastrophic attempts several years ago. That was about $1 on seniors to pay for catastrophic and people went berserk. That thing was repealed faster than a New York minute because of the politics and the difficulty of addressing Medicare reform.

The Breaux commission did not come up with any super-majority recommendations. They could not. It is so difficult, we did not say we should ill from structure reform. Of course, we should work on structural reform, but we also need general funds to help with Medicare.

I was very perplexed when I saw the chart put up by the chairman of the Budget Committee. I want to ask him where he got his numbers. I know where he got his numbers. They are his own numbers, not CBO numbers. For example, the CBO baseline projection over the next 10 years is a surplus of about—it is on the chart—of about $2.896 billion. That is CBO.

If you look closely at the chairman's chart, down below in the corner it says: Source. What is the source? It is CBO and the Senate Budget Committee, not just CBO.

We have the Senate Budget Committee—I am trying to avoid the phrase “cooked the books.” I will tell you what it did not come up with the chart the chairman was showing. Here is what it did:

The Congressional Budget Office said, OK, we are going to freeze the caps as required by the budget through the year 2002. Then CBO said: We are going to assume a baseline at the rate of inflation for the remainder of the term up to about 2009. That is how they got this number, $2.896 billion.

What did the chairman of the Budget Committee do? He said: I know what I am going to do because the Democrats are really right. What I am going to do is come up with a different number to show there are more savings.

How did he do it? He said: OK, I am going to freeze the baseline after the year 2002 for discretionary spending, and that is going to mean that I get to come up with additional—that is the yellow, domestic priorities.

The fact is, that is very unrealistic and it’s not what CBO projects. I think we ought to use the same numbers. A lot of us on our side think CBO is a little tainted; it has become a little political over the years. But I suggest we all start with the same numbers, and the best place to start is CBO. If the Senate Budget Committee majority can come up with its numbers, I suppose the Budget Committee minority can come up with its own numbers. It is no different place where we are.

It is important for Senators to know those are not CBO numbers, those are Senate Budget Committee numbers. Those are the majority’s numbers, not CBO’s numbers.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAUCUS. Just say the yellow is an illusion, it is not there, because most of us, if we are realistic, are going to assume we are going to at least keep up with inflation over those years. If we do not keep up with inflation over those years, then we are going to dramatically cut programs.

How much are we going to cut? The figure is about a 54-percent cut in domestic spending.

By saying there is no inflation rate considered past the year 2002, for the rest of the term, these numbers represent, in effect, a 54-percent cut in discretionary spending. That is what it comes out to. That is pretty big. So that is why I say that yellow is an illusion. It is not going to happen.

If I could address another point. My colleagues on the other side of the aisle made two basic charges. First, they say that this is a smoke screen. That we already have a lockbox, which my good friend, the Senator from New Mexico, said: Well, we have the points of order. It is true, we create an additional point of order, but it is a supermajority point of order—60 votes. It is pretty hard to move more than that around here.

Witness the waiver on the Byrd rule did not get 60 votes. Oh, that side really wanted to waive the Byrd rule. They could not do it. They could not get 60 votes. Sixty votes is a pretty big hurdle.

Make no mistake, we are very serious about protecting medicare. You can also tell that we are serious because we are proposing a lockbox that is very similar to the House lockbox which passed by an overwhelming margin.

Why is the Senate lockbox not a good idea? I will tell you why. Because it says the debt limit has to go down on a step basis, depending upon what CBO’s projections really are for the next 10 years. That is the problem. We are going to force all kinds of votes here to keep the deficit and debt reduction. They are saying the debt limit has to go down on a year by year basis, depending upon what we do in helping protect Social Security and Medicare. We can decide to provide for prescription drug benefits. We can address the problems caused by the balanced budget amendment cut backs. We can extend the solvency of the trust fund. That is what this amendment is all about. It is about reserving the discretionary funds for the future. We do not have the large projected on-budget surplus for prescription drug benefits for our elderly men and women? That is the problem. I urge Senators, cut through all the rhetoric. Listen carefully to the underlying words. Sometimes, what people don’t say is just as telling as what they do say. In this case, our good colleagues make no pretense of guaranteeing funds for Medicare. Whereas we say, very simply, let’s save a third of the surplus each year in a reserve fund. If we need it, fine. If we do not need it, fine—we can reduce the debt and leave our options open.

We have this opportunity because we have the large projected on-budget surplus in the future. We do not have that luxury, do we? Of course not. How many Senators can remember times in the past having a $1 trillion on-budget projected surplus? I can’t. I do not think anyone else can either.

What is the likelihood that is going to continue? What is the likelihood we will have $1 trillion over the next 5 years from now? What is the likelihood we will have it 8, 10 years from now? Pretty slim; not very likely, in my judgment.

So we have an opportunity. We have an opportunity to put aside the funds necessary to extend the solvency of Medicare. We have the opportunity to put aside the funds necessary for structural reforms. We have the opportunity to put aside the funds for a prescription drug benefit. I am saying, let’s preserve this surplus—let’s keep our options open.

Do you know what else our lockbox does? Deficit reduction. People want deficit and debt reduction. They are tired of being saddled with this debt. They don’t want their children similarly constrained. That’s why this lockbox is such a good proposal. If we don’t need the funds for the next, say, 10 years—because the Medicare trust fund will be solvent at least until 2015—that is a $360 billion reduction in the near-term debt. That is what it comes down to.

So, again, I do not hear anything from the other side aside about any guarantees to help Medicare except for words—maybe something in the future about structural reform, but certainly not in the budget tax debate—I repeat again, not one red cent for Medicare. Helping to provide for Medicare is not a smokescreen because we do have a Social Security lockbox that works. Our lockbox is very similar to the one that the House passed. They passed it. If they passed it by such a large margin, providing a supermajority point of order, it makes sense to me that we should do it. But let's go farther and protect Medicare. Let's have both. Let's protect Social Security. Let's also protect Medicare. It is very simple. They are two parts of the same package, if you will, to help the elderly.

We have a lot of very poor elderly. About a third of the American elderly rely solely on Social Security for income—about a third. There are a lot of people who just do not have any money. Virtually one-third are dependent upon it. There are about 44 million people on Social Security including folks with disabilities. The average payment is about $750 a month. That is all. If a third are relying on only $750 a month, that means, clearly, they really need the help. So, again: A lockbox for Social Security that works and a lockbox for Medicare that also works.

I reserve the remainder of my time. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? Mr. BÀUCUS. Mr. President, how much time is remaining on both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 33 1⁄2 minutes; the other side has 17 minutes 20 seconds.

Mr. BÀUCUS. Mr. President, I yield 20 minutes to my good friend, the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LÀUTENBERG. I thank the Senator from Montana. Perhaps I will use less time than that.

Mr. President, I have listened carefully to the debate. I heard comments that I would describe as scornful, derisive, challenging everybody else's honesty. I know one thing. When we are challenging someone else's honesty, it is a good idea to do it in front of a mirror. That way, one gets to see what perhaps one might be saying, and under-standing where one is going, so that when one reviews the argument being made for or against a particular point of view, if they want to talk in terms of dishonesty and in terms of scorn and in terms of derision about what is being said, it invites the same kind of commentary—which gets us nowhere. It doesn't improve the debate. It doesn't make it clearer to the American people. It doesn't establish a framework for really thinking the problem through.

Mr. President, I am the senior Democrat on the Budget Committee. And I want to suggest that my colleagues take a look at an article in the Wall Street Journal, entitled "GOP Uses Two Sets of Books." The article explains that the GOP is using two sets of books—one from the Office of Management and Budget, the other from the Congressional Budget Office. And, by taking the best of each, it's trying to hide the fact that, and I quote, "lawmakers are poised again to raid the very same Social Security funds they have promised to lock away."

Mr. President, I don't accuse our friends on the other side of the aisle of deliberate untruthfulness. But I hope the American people will be able to understand the obligations. When mom has to work and dad has to work and they are either on different shifts or the same shifts, it means one of the parents is not home to be with the children at times when that might provide the kind of encouragement and sustenance for development. There is a price to pay for that.

There is physical fatigue. My mother was a widow at age 36. She worked hard. I was old enough to be in the Army. My sister was only 12 when my father died. But there was exhaustion. It was hard to take care of all of the responsibilities.

When I look at tax cuts, I ask, which Americans need them? The guy making $800,000 a year? I don't think he needs a $23,000 tax cut. But that's what he'd get under this bill. And that's money that we could be using to pay off our national debt.

Mr. President, most Americans, if given the opportunity, would love to pay off their loans and their debts. Their mortgages. Their car loans. Well, that's what we want our nation to do.

But the Republicans, instead, want to use the money to provide massive tax breaks for wealthy individuals and special interests. Oil interests, mineral interests, gun makers. They say: We can pay off our debts and leaving our children free from that obligation, the Republican bill would give that money to these special interests.

As you can tell, Mr. President, I object strongly to the Republican tax bill. This legislation raids surpluses that are needed for Social Security, that sacred covenant we have with people who have my hair that says we want to keep them. It is a commitment we made, a promise we made, as we took the money from their paychecks.

I want to protect Social Security. My conscience calls for it. I have to make sure those who are paying Social Security are going to get the benefits they expected when it comes to retirement time.

Medicare? There are few programs in this country that have the value to people like Medicare, which says that when you reach that age when sickness, when physical problems are not a systematically just when the baby boomers begin to retire. The bill would force drastic cuts in education, environmental protection, other priorities. It could lead to a return of higher interest rates. And it is fundamentally unfair. By the way, all of this is more show business than plain business. It is designed to let the American public think they are going to be generous and they want to return the money, and we are sinners because we say we are going to help pay off the debt that your kids, Mr. and Mrs. America, won't have to worry about.

They say: Who knows better how to spend the money? Is it those bad guys in Washington—bad guys and women; that is the way we are today—those bad people in Washington who want to just take your money? I heard someone say: "Who do you want to give it and spend it?" Take it and spend it, like that is the principal motive. That is the way we are today—those people like Medicare, which says that this country that have the value to them. No one wants to pay for it. No one wants to take care of them. It is a commitment we made, a promise we made, as we took the money from their paychecks.

We want to do the right thing. They want to do the right thing. They just haven't learned how yet. Mr. President, the cost of the tax breaks under their bill would increase federal debt by almost $300 billion in the next 10 years. That's what we need to protect. And those tax breaks would help the rich. The middle class, the people who needed them the most. But we couldn't get the cooperation of our friends on the other side. We won't take funds needed for...
Social Security and Medicare like the Republican bill does. They are willing to take it out of this Social Security trust fund, which I will demonstrate later.

Neither Social Security nor Medicare has enough financing to support the baby boomers in their retirement. We need to extend the solvency of both programs. We need to pay off our debt, which now forces taxpayers to pay $225 billion a year in wasted interest payments. I guess they don’t want to stop that. They don’t want to stop that. They would rather try to dole it out principally to people at the top of the income ladder. They don’t want to reduce that debt.

President Clinton has proposed to reserve all Social Security surpluses for debt reduction as well as another $325 billion after Medicare. The Republicans openly oppose reserving non-Social Security surpluses for Medicare, but they claim their bill reserves all Social Security surpluses for Social Security.

The claim is untrue. The bill before us would raid Social Security surpluses in 5 of the next 10 years. This chart shows the numbers.

Here we are, 2005; that is practically around the corner. What does it say? Red. Everybody knows what red ink means. Minus $12 billion. That is out of the Social Security trust fund. We have no place to get it. So instead of protecting Social Security, we are raiding Social Security because of the tax cut they want to give to the fat cats.

Consider what will happen in 2005. The non-Social Security surplus that year will be $88.6 billion. But this bill would cost $89.9 billion. The bill therefore would directly create Social Security surpluses of $1.3 billion in that year. If you added it all raider Social Security would be much deeper. This legislation would increase debt and lead to higher interest costs. In 2005 alone, these additional interest costs would eat up another $10.9 billion of Social Security surpluses. So the total raid on Social Security would be over $12 billion in 2005.

If you consider both the direct revenue losses and the additional interest costs, this bill would raid the Social Security surplus in each of the second 5 years as well.

Mr. President, I think I know what the Republicans would say about this. They will promise that even if this bill does spend Social Security surpluses, many years from now, Congress will somehow make huge cuts in programs, such as education and the environment, to offset these costs. Unfortunately, it is an empty promise that is completely unenforceable. No credibility.

Consider the depth of the cuts that would be required. If you assume the Republican Congress funds defense programs at the levels presently proposed by President Clinton, by the end of the 10 year period, domestic needs, everything from education and environmental protection, to the FBI, would have to be cut by 40 percent. Is that credible? A 40-percent cut in student aid? A 40-percent cut in health research? A 40-percent cut in veterans’ programs?

That is not going to happen. But that is the pretense under which we are operating.

The Republicans are saying we have to reduce and cut programs. But the American people need to understand what that would mean. Head Start—375,000 preschool children would be denied services that help them come to school ready to learn. The FBI—that is a favorite of all of ours because they do very important work—would have to cut 6,300 agents in order to accommodate this. VA medical care—a promise that was made to veterans, and to me when I enlisted in the Army—they would treat 1.4 million fewer patients.

Superfund—the wonderful program that cleans up industrial waste sites in our society—no funding would be provided for any new cleanups, due to begin in 2009. Are summer jobs important? I think so. But 270,000 young people would lose job training opportunities. The list goes on.

Look how the tax breaks in this bill explode in cost. In the first year, they cost $4.2 billion. By the last year, they cost almost $200 billion. In the following 10 years, these costs explode even more. All of this will be happening when the baby boomers start retiring.

In other words, the Republican plan doesn’t just raid the Social Security trust fund. It undercuts the Government’s revenue base and dramatically increase the chances that Social Security benefits will be cut.

Similarly, this bill proposes a very small increase in the Medicare trust fund is now scheduled to go bankrupt by 2015. President Clinton has proposed a comprehensive reform plan that would extend solvency through 2027, for a dozen years or more. He wants to provide a new prescription drug benefit for older Americans. That is going to come from the surpluses that we enjoy, as long as we don’t give them away.

What does this legislation do for Medicare? Zero. There is not a penny to extend the program’s solvency, and not one penny for prescription drugs.

Another problem with the bill is that it is fundamentally unfair. It is loaded up with various special interest provisions. Meanwhile, ordinary Americans are left with a few crumbs.

If we look at this chart, the top 1 percent of the income earners, earning $837,000, get a $23,944 cut. If you are in the bottom 50 percent, earning below $38,000, you get $141. That is less than 50 cents a day. I hope those people making $38,000 don’t go out and blow that 50 cents a day.

Another problem with this bill, according to an analysis by Citizens for Tax Justice, the top 1 percent of the taxpayers, incomes over $300,000—and the average, as we saw, is $837,000—will get those juicy tax breaks that we see here, while the bottom 60 percent will get that $141.

That is not fair. Beyond the threat to Social Security, Medicare, education, and other priorities, and beyond its fundamental unfairness, this bill also poses a significant risk to our economy.

It would be one thing to call for huge tax cuts if our Nation were in the middle of a recession. Sometimes you need a boost, a stimulus, but today our economy is very strong. In this kind of an environment, a large fiscal stimulus is dangerous.

The Federal Reserve just tightened monetary policy, forcing up interest rates. The timing is not right. Chairman Greenspan suggested last week the Federal Reserve may raise interest rates again to preserve price stability. A huge tax cut in these conditions would be a serious mistake. It could force up interest rates, which could drag down the investment that is driving our economy. As Chairman Greenspan testified, ‘‘The timing is not right.’’

Mr. President, we are doing no favors for middle-class families if we give them a tax break worth less than 50 cents a day and then force them to pay higher interest rates on their mortgages and their car payments.

Mr. President, before I close, I want to take a minute to respond to an analysis released last week by the Congressional Budget Office. That analysis supposedly shows that the President’s bill reduces debt more than the President’s. But the analysis is highly misleading, largely because it is based on questionable assumptions.

For example, the analysis assumes that Congress will cut even further in real terms in each of the following 7 years. Mr. and Mrs. Public, don’t you believe that? Congress is not going to make cuts like that in veterans’ medical care. We are not going to permit Head Start to be decimated. We are not going to cut out programs that people depend on for their very lives.

Mr. President, people really need many of these programs. Most don’t like to depend on government if they can avoid it. My father at the height of the depression was most ashamed of the fact that he had to go to work for

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE 18205

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the principle of the Baucus amendment goes to the heart of this debate. We should not enact tax cuts which will use up virtually the entire surplus before we solve the significant financial problems facing Social Security and Medicare.

Squandering the unique opportunity which the surplus has given us. Social Security and Medicare represent America at its best. They reflect a commitment to every worker that disability and retirement will not mean poverty and untreated illness. They are a compact between the Federal government and its citizens that says: work hard and contribute to the federal government and its citizens that mean poverty and untreated illness. Disability and retirement will not mean poverty and untreated illness. A Republican proposal does absolutely nothing. It does not provide one new dollar to support Social Security or Medicare. It squanders the unique opportunity which the surplus has given us.

Mr. President, CBO is supposed to be objective and fair to both sides. They are just supposed to look at the numbers. That is all.

Mr. President, let me close by just recapping the main problems with the Republican tax cuts.

It leaves nothing for Medicare. Its costs explode in the future, just when the baby boomers will be retiring.

It would force extreme cuts in education, health care, crime fighting, and other priorities.

Its tax breaks are unfair, and give huge benefits to special interests and the wealthiest Americans.

And it’s fiscally irresponsible, risking higher interest rates and a return to the days of red ink and large deficits.

In sum, Mr. President, this is extreme legislation. It may appeal to the far right wing of the Republican Party. But by posing such a direct threat to Social Security and Medicare, it’s inconsistent with the values of mainstream American families.

That’s why this President is determined to veto it the minute it reaches his desk, and he should.

I urge my colleagues to oppose the bill and to support the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Montana.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the principle of the Baucus amendment goes to the heart of this debate. We should not enact tax cuts which will use up virtually the entire surplus before we solve the significant financial problems facing Social Security and Medicare.

Placing Social Security and Medicare on a firm financial footing should be our highest budget priorities. The surplus gives us a unique opportunity to extend the long-term solvency of these two vital programs, without hurting the senior citizens who depend upon them. We should seize that opportunity.

Two-thirds of senior citizens depend on Social Security retirement benefits for more than fifty percent of their annual income. Without it, half of the nation’s elderly would fall below the poverty line. These same retirees rely on Medicare for their only access to needed health care. For all of them, the Republican proposal does absolutely nothing. It does not provide one new dollar to support Social Security or Medicare. It squanders the unique opportunity which the surplus has given us.

Social Security and Medicare represent America at its best. They reflect a commitment to every worker that disability and retirement will not mean poverty and untreated illness. They are a compact between the Federal government and its citizens that says: work hard and contribute to the system when you are young, and we will guarantee your financial security and your health security when you are old.

It has been said that the measure of a society is how well it takes care of its most vulnerable citizens—the very young and the very old. By that standard, Social Security and Medicare are among the finest achievements in all of our history. Because of Social Security and Medicare, millions of senior citizens are able to spend their retirement years in security and dignity. A Republican tax cut of the magnitude proposed here today will put their retirement security in serious jeopardy.

In the first ten years, the Republican tax cut of $792 billion—plus the increased interest on the national debt required by it—will consume all but $25 billion of the $996 billion surplus. The cost of the tax cut alone will mushroom to two trillion dollars between 2011 and 2019, plus hundreds of billions more in additional debt service. There will be no surplus left to strengthen Social Security and Medicare for future generations of retirees. The needs of the millions of Americans who depend on these basic programs for their well-being are ignored.

Democrats propose a very different set of priorities for the surplus. We commit one-third of the surplus—$290 billion over the next decade and more—toward protecting Social Security. And beginning in 2011, we would devote all of the savings which will result from debt reduction to the reduction of Social Security. Today, interest on the debt consumes nearly 13% of the federal budget. Under the President’s plan, all of the annual debt interest expense will be completely eliminated. As a result, between 2011 and 2019, more than a trillion additional dollars will be available to pay future Social Security benefits. We will be meeting our responsibility to future generations of retirees.

In addition, the GOP tax cut is fundamentally unfair in additional ways. It distributes the overwhelming majority of its tax breaks to those with the highest incomes. The authors of the Republican plan highlight the reduction of the 15% tax bracket to 14%. They point to this reduction as middle class tax relief. But that relief is only a small part of the overall tax breaks in their plan. It accounts for only $216 billion of the $792 billion in GOP tax cuts. Most of the remaining provisions are heavily tilted toward the highest income taxpayers.

If the Republican plan is enacted and implemented, nearly 50% of the tax benefits would go to the richest 5% of taxpayers—and more than 75% of the benefits would go to the wealthiest 20%. Those with annual incomes exceeding $300,000 would receive tax breaks of $23,000 a year. By contrast, the lowest 60% of wage-earners would share less than 11% of the total tax cuts—they would receive an average tax cut of only $139 a year.

The choice could not be more stark—between using the entire surplus for enormous tax breaks which overwhelmingly benefits the wealthiest Americans, or using the surplus for modest tax cuts that leave room to preserve Social Security and Medicare for future generations of retirees.
Social Security Trust Fund. That step would extend the life of the Trust Fund by more than a generation, to beyond 2050.

In fact, the Republican plan does not even effectively guarantee that existing payroll tax revenues will be used to pay Social Security benefits. There are trap doors in the Republican "lockbox." A genuine "lockbox" would guarantee that those dollars would be in the Trust Fund when they are needed to pay benefits to future recipients. But that is not what the Republican plan does.

Our Republican friends claim that the enormous tax cuts they have proposed will have no impact on Social Security, because they are not using payroll tax revenues. On the contrary, the fact that the Republican budget commits every last dollar of the on-budget surplus to tax cuts does imperil Social Security.

First, revenue estimates projected ten years into the future are notoriously inaccurate. As the Director of the Congressional Budget Office candidly acknowledged:

Ten year budget projections are highly uncertain. In the space of only six months, CBO’s estimate of the cumulative surplus has increased by nearly $300 billion. Further changes of that or a greater magnitude are likely—in either direction—as a result of economic fluctuations, administrative and judicial actions, and other developments.

Despite this warning, the Republican tax cut leaves no margin for error. If we commit the entire surplus to tax cuts and the full surplus does not materialize, Social Security revenues will be required to cover the shortfall in tax cuts.

Second, even if the projected surplus does materialize, the cost of the Republican budget exceeds the surplus in five of the next ten years—2005, 2006, 2007, 2008 and 2009. Unless the Republican proposal is restructured, Social Security revenues will be required to cover the shortfall in each of those years.

Third, the Republican tax cut leaves no funds to pay for emergency spending, which has averaged $8 billion a year in recent years. Over the next decade, we are likely to need approximately $50 billion to cover emergency needs. That money has to come from somewhere. With the entire surplus spent on tax cuts, the Social Security Trust Fund will have to fund these emergency costs as well.

These three threats to Social Security that I have described are very real. They expose the fundamental flaws that prevent the Republican "lockbox" from being a genuine lockbox for Social Security.

In addition, there is an even greater threat to Social Security in the out-years. Under the President’s plan, the Social Security Trust Fund would receive 543 billion new dollars from the surplus between 2011 and 2014, and it would receive an additional $189 billion each year after that. The Republican tax cut will make the President’s plan imposed costs or projected cost of their tax cut proposal mushroom to over $2 trillion between 2010 and 2019. It will consume all of the surplus dollars which were intended for Social Security.

There will be nothing left for Social Security. All new dollars will flow into the Trust Fund, and the future of Social Security will remain in serious doubt.

MEDICARE

The failures of the Republican plan to preserve and strengthen Medicare is just as serious. Today, Medicare is a lifeline for the 40 million elderly and disabled citizens who depend on it for health care. It is an essential part of our health care system. It allows families to save up and send a child to college instead of saving to send a parent to the hospital. It fulfills its founding promise, in which everyone pays in to Medicare during their working years, and everyone benefits from good health care during retirement.

The Republican budget threatens to destroy Medicare by putting it on a starvation diet. Instead of protecting Medicare in anticipation of the largest demographic challenge in its history, the Republican budget sacrifices Medicare on the altar of tax breaks for the rich. There is not one additional dime for Medicare in the Republican budget, although that budget contains nearly $300 billion in tax breaks that disproportionately benefit the wealthy.

Make no mistake. This budget will determine whether we keep the medical care in Medicare. This budget will determine whether Medicare will continue to guarantee the protections that are so essential for senior citizens in the years ahead.

Unfortunately, the pending bill falls unacceptably short of reaching these important goals. It is, in fact, a thinly veiled assault on an affront to every senior citizen who has earned the right to affordable health care by a lifetime of hard work. It is a bill that says $300 billion of new tax breaks for the rich are more important than preserving Medicare for our senior citizens.

The top priority for the American people is to protect both Social Security and Medicare. But this budget puts tax breaks for the rich first, and Medicare and Social Security last.

Our proposal says: save Social Security and Medicare by devoting all of the Social Security surplus to Social Security, and by reserving one-third of the on-budget surplus for Medicare. It says: extend the solvency of the Medicare Trust Fund, not by raiding Social Security but by assuring that some of the benefits of our booming economy are used to preserve, protect, and strengthen Medicare. It says that we should modernize Medicare to ensure that all senior citizens have access to affordable medications.

Some of the other side contend that we should not provide additional funds for Medicare. They say we should look for additional ways to reduce Medicare spending. But Medicare spending growth is at an all-time low. In fact, evidence is mounting that Congress has already cut too much from Medicare in the last two years to balance the budget in 1997.

While Democrats and Republicans have different opinions about how best to reform Medicare, one fact remains clear: Starting in 2010, the retirement of the baby boom generation will begin in earnest. Without a significant investment now to prepare Medicare for the financial demands of that era, the only options will be to dramatically cut benefits or raise taxes.

According to the most recent projections of the Medicare Trustees, if we do nothing, keeping Medicare solvent for the next 25 years will require benefit cuts of almost 11%—massive cuts of hundreds of billions of dollars—or double-digit payroll tax increases. Keeping Medicare solvent for the next 50 years will require cuts of 25%—or even larger payroll tax increases.

Under the guise of reform, some argue that we should reduce our obligations to support guaranteed benefits. They favor proposals to privatize Medicare, or turn it into little more than a voucher program—leaving senior citizens to the tender mercy of profit-seeking private insurance companies. Nothing could be more devastating for America’s elderly—today and in the future.

We have a clear opportunity to protect Medicare. All we have to do is reserve a fair share of the surplus for Medicare. By protecting Medicare, the pending bill uses $800 billion of the surplus to pay for new tax breaks. You don’t need a degree in higher mathematics to understand what is going on here. This Republican plan breaks Medicare.

Every senior citizen knows—and their children and grandchildren know, too—that the elderly cannot afford cuts in Medicare. They are already stretched to the limit—and often beyond the limit—to purchase the health care they need.

Because of gaps in Medicare and rising health costs, Medicare now covers only about 50% of the health bills of senior citizens. On average, senior citizens spend 19% of their limited incomes to purchase the health care they need—almost as large a proportion as they had to pay before Medicare was enacted 35 years ago. Many income senior citizens have to pay even more as a proportion of their income.

By 2025, if we do nothing, the proportion of out-of-pocket spending devoted to health care expenses will rise to 29%. Too often, even with today’s Medicare benefits, senior citizens have to choose between putting food on the table, paying the rent, or purchasing the health care they need.
The typical Medicare beneficiary is a widow, seventy-six years old, with an annual income of $18,000. She has one or more children. She is a mother and a grandmother. Yet this budget would cut her Medicare benefits in order to pay for new tax breaks for the wealthy. These are women who will be unable to see their doctor, who will go without needed prescription drugs, or without meals or heat, so that wealthy Americans earning hundreds of thousands of dollars a year can have tens of thousands of dollars more a year in additional tax breaks.

This is the wrong priority for spending our hard-earned surplus—and the wrong priority for America. And the American people know it.

As we debate these issues this week, the response of our opponents is predictable. They deny that they have any plans to cut Medicare. But the American people will not be fooled. They know that our plan and the President’s plan will put Medicare on a sound financial basis for the next generation—without benefit cuts, without tax increases, without raising the retirement age, and without privatizing Medicare.

In this debate, we intend to offer Senators a chance to vote on whether they are sincere about protecting both Medicare and Social Security.

Our opponents are already trying to confuse the issue. They say that it is wrong to put the surplus into Medicare.

The workers of this country are the ones who have earned this surplus—and they want to use it to preserve and protect Social Security and Medicare, not use it for new tax breaks for the wealthiest Americans.

Our opponents say that our proposal just puts money into the Trust Fund. Let’s be very clear. There are two ways to restore Medicare’s financial stability. One way is to cut benefits. The other way is to provide new resources. Our proposal puts new resources in the Medicare Trust Fund. It takes funds that would otherwise be used for a tax cut for the wealthy, and uses them instead to maintain the health protection the elderly need and deserve—and have earned. In terms of its effect on Medicare, it is no different from depositing payroll tax receipts in the Trust Fund, as we do today.

Those on the other side of the aisle have tried to conceal their neglect of Medicare. They say that their plan does not cut Medicare. That may be true in a narrow, legalistic sense—but it is fundamentally false in every way that counts.

Between now and 2025, Medicare has a shortfall of almost $1 trillion. If we do nothing to address that shortfall, we are inflicting almost $1 trillion in Medicare cuts, just as surely as if we said so directly in the text of the legislation. No amount of rhetoric can conceal this fundamental fact. The authors of the pending bill had a choice between supporting Medicare or slashing Medicare—and they chose to slash Medicare.

A vote for our alternative is a clear statement that Congress should preserve and protect Medicare for today’s elderly and their children and grandchildren. Rejection of our alternative is an equally clear statement—in favor of new tax cuts for the rich, paid for by harsh and unacceptable cuts in Medicare.

In 1935, when President Franklin Delano Roosevelt signed the Social Security Act, he said it was “a cornerstone in a structure which is being built but is by no means complete.”

The creation of Medicare 30 years later added significantly to that structure. On the threshold of a new century, the time has come to add again to that structure.

We can modernize Medicare and prepare for the 21st century—the century of life sciences. We can prepare for the massive influx of retirees from the baby boom generation, if we devote the resources needed to do so. The surplus was generated in part by Medicare savings, and it is only right that a responsible portion be invested in modernizing and strengthening the Medicare.

We know how the American people want us to vote. Congress should listen to their voice. The opponents of Medicare were wrong in 1965, and they are wrong in 1999.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, thank you very much. I thank the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. President, it would be amusing, if it weren’t tragic, to hear the representations made by those on the other side of the aisle that the Republicans are indifferent to our senior citizens and to Medicare, or indifferent to Social Security.

Let us not forget the Social Security lockbox is a Republican concept. They came to us saying how aggressively they are supporting what happened in the House. It is about time they started to support a lockbox of some sort. They filibustered that at least six times previously to keep it from being here. It is time we have a lockbox.

We enacted a credible lockbox to protect Social Security so our seniors won’t be jeopardized by a reckless sort of effort to spend. There is real distress on the part of our colleagues on the Democrat side of this Chamber who are afraid we are not going to leave enough money to spend. Their spending habit is hard to break.

But I think we ought to understand the American people are paying in over the next 10 years $3.3 trillion of surplus. They don’t want to buy that much more government. They want some change to go to the store.

You by a gallon of milk, and you give them 10 bucks. You don’t expect them to start adding other items to your order to fill up what you could have bought with your 10 bucks. You expect to get your money back when you pay in a surplus, and the American people should do that.

They suggested we don’t have any money to deal with a Medicare problem. It is pretty clear we have $505 billion available to deal with Medicare, if we choose to, over the next 10 years.

Just for example, the President said he could fix it for $38 billion. And $505 billion is 10 times that much. But I don’t recommend that we allocate a specific amount to fix Medicare before we have decided how to reform Medicare.

The Senator from Tennessee eloquently stated the position of the Comptroller General of the United States, our sort of auditor, the person who looks at things and asks: How are you doing? Is this reasonable? Does it make sense?

He indicates that just pouring more money into a system that is broken—well, you know, if you just step on the gas in a car that is going in the wrong direction, it doesn’t get you to your destination any more quickly. The key is to reform Medicare and have a resource available when you reform it. That is the Republican plan.

Are we being irresponsible by taking 23.8 cents out of every surplus dollar and saying to the American people who earned it that we are going to return it?

There is an old slogan in Washington. “You send it; we spend it.” People are a little tired of that.

We have the highest tax rate in the history of the country. Even State and local rates are higher in many cases caused by our mandates on State and local government.

We have a $3.3 trillion surplus, and someone says we should save tax cuts for when it is the right time for tax cuts as if the timing is contingent on the Government.

Tell you. It is the American people’s money. Their timing ought to be considered.

I think the American families need resources to do for themselves now, that they should have the money to do it for themselves and not have to rely on government. We should make that choice.

I rise to say that this business about us not having a regard for Medicare is absurd.

We want to reform Medicare. We don’t want to pour more resources into a bucket, the bottom of which is like a sieve.

We want to reform Medicare. We don’t want to pour more resources into a bucket, the bottom of which is like a sieve.
Sure. We will do what we can to sustain the system. It is sustainable, according to the most recent data until the year 2014. It is good. But we shouldn’t decide to just pour money into that system. We should reform it.

There was a bipartisan commission chaired by Senator Breaux that would have reformed it. The proposed reform led by Senator Breaux wasn’t to take a lot of money. As a matter of fact, it was to save money.

We are willing to make resources available. But the idea that somehow we have to lock up $300 billion in order to make possible a reform of the system when the $300 billion will keep people from wanting to reform it, and just wanting to spend what is there is not the way to handle the problem.

The chairman of the bipartisan commission chaired by the Senator voted. I believe supported that provision when it was before the Finance Committee. I don’t think we should support it now.

But it is time for us to say to the American people what we said in our budget process that the Senate voted. I believe, 99-0 to do; and that is to lock up the Social Security surplus.

It is a program which we promised to the American people. It is a program that can go forward. We ought to have that resource available to them. We agreed on that. The House agreed on that.

Talk about the House agreement on the other side of the aisle, yes. This is what the House agreed to—lock up Social Security. I think that is what we ought to do.

We expect to have $2 trillion in Social Security surpluses over the next 10 years. We ought to make sure we don’t spend it on anything else. That is the Republican plan. It is the Democrat plan. The President agreed to it. He said we needed a durable lockbox, “period.” He didn’t say a lockbox for Social Security and add Medicare. The President didn’t say that. He said we need a Social Security lockbox, period. The “period” was his language, not mine. It is not some Republican plot. The President said it. The House of Representatives said it. The Republican Senate has been asking for it. It is on the other side of the aisle time after time after time after time after time, and now trying to keep us from doing it again.

I think we need to make sure we honor and respect the retirement security of individuals who expect us to protect Social Security.

Having done that, and we find out there is roughly half of the next 10 years’ surplus that is not earmarked for Social Security and it is not paid for Social Security, that money could be divided between tax relief and resources for contingencies that come up in this body, or to the United States Congress. That is why we planned $792 billion in tax relief.

Some say: Is that too much? Is it too little? It is 23-plus percent of the total surplus.

The lion’s share of the total surplus should go right into this lockbox. This proposal that Senator Domenici, Senator Breaux, that other Senators have been talking about, taking Social Security money and earmarking it for Social Security benefits alone, and then reserving the $505 billion that is available in addition to that for future contingencies and needs including, if necessary, transitional costs for reform in Medicare. The Senator from Tennessee eloquently related comments by the Comptroller General of the United States.

This is a resource we now have that we do not have a right to keep, in my judgment. The American people have overpaid their taxes. Like a shopkeeper, who has a responsibility to give back change when they are paid too much for an ordered item, rather than trying to foist off an extra gallon of milk, another ham or another box of cereal, another box of nails or hammer if you are at the hardware store, when a person has paid more for the item than requested, they get their money returned.

Return the money to the American people. The American people earned this money. This is not money that came from Government. This is not from the magic of the Congress. This is not from the creativity of the President. This isn’t the product of the bureaucracy. This is the product of the hard work of American families. In many families, both parents work. In some families, both parents are working two jobs or extra work. They have saved that money.

We have to make a decision. Are we going to fund families in this country or are we going to fund bureaucracy? Are we going to let families have an opportunity to spend the resources which they have created? We must. In order for them to be confident about the fact we are not going away the future, make clear that the President has said we need what the House of Representatives voted 416-12 in favor of, and that is a lockbox to protect Social Security.

With that in mind, I say we have a responsibility to the American people to put the Social Security proceeds in the lockbox, to have a prudent approach to the rest of the expenses. Say to the American people with that $800 billion over the next 10 years: You earned it; we returned it. Let’s end this idea of: You send it; we spent it. Our desire and appetite should not be unlimited.

I thank the Chair for this opportunity to support the concept of a lockbox.

I reserve the remainder of my time.
Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. President, a couple of points. I heard my good friend, the Senator from Missouri say, as has often been stated, they are using only 23 percent of the surplus on tax reduction.

I think it is important to get the facts out so the American public can decide what the truth is. The fact is, about $3 trillion is projected over the next 10 years. Mr. President, $2 trillion off-budget. Social Security surplus; $1 trillion on-budget surplus. No one disputes that.

We also agree that the roughly $2 trillion generated by the payroll tax, the off-budget surplus, should be reserved for Social Security. We all agree to that. What is in dispute is the $1 trillion on-budget surplus.

The Republican tax cut essentially uses it all, roughly $800 billion, plus the interest expense added on because the tax cut will increase interest, which amounts to a 97-percent tax cut of the on-budget surplus.

So that we have our facts straight, it is roughly 25 percent of the total, if we include the $2 trillion for Social Security that we all agree to protect. What is in dispute is how much of the $1 trillion on budget is used for a tax cut. The answer to that is about 97 percent, including the interest. If interest is not included, maybe about 60 or 70 percent of the surplus is used for a tax cut.

Decide which numbers to use. Those are the facts. I will stand here and say it is necessarily 97 percent or it is necessarily 23 percent. I think people should recognize what the truth is.

I have a couple of points. This is about choices. Either we choose to set aside one-third of the on-budget surplus for Medicare for seniors, or we don't. That is the choice. That is the choice we have between the two lockbox amendments. One says lockbox Social Security only; the other says lockbox Social Security and Medicare. We believe the proper choice is to protect Medicare.

There is a deeper choice I want to talk about for a moment. It is a choice that many senior citizens in our country make every day. Do they choose to use their income to pay for drugs or do they choose their income for food, to pay the rent, or to pay for the bus? That is the choice that many senior citizens make each day.

About 16 million Americans are faced with that choice a day. That is, 16 million Americans rely solely on Social Security for their income. About 30 percent of American senior citizens rely solely on Social Security for their income, which comes out to about $750 a month. Seniors with a total income of about $750 a month have to make choices. Choose for drugs, choose to pay the rent, choose to pay the food bill, the bus, taxi service—those are the choices. They have to decide which among the choices to make.

We are saying let's help the seniors with that choice. Let's help seniors pay the drug bill. Let's help seniors pay a little more of the doctor bill. If there is anything that obsesses senior citizens, it is their health.

I will never forget when I was walking across Montana campaigning for Congress 24 years ago, I was walking toward Butte, MT, near Elk Park. I was walking down the highway, and I could see a small building. An older fellow hunched up way off in the distance walking toward his mailbox. I could tell we were going to meet at the mailbox. I had my brochure in my pocket in my campaign for Congress. Sure enough, we met at the mailbox. I pulled out my brochure and said: Sir, I am Max Baucus, I am running for Congress. Is there anything on your mind you want to talk about? Anything that is really bothering you that you want to talk about?

He said: Oh, nothing except the perplexities of health.

It is certainly true for seniors, and he very much was a senior citizen.

In summation, this is about choices. I think the choice is for Medicare, not against Medicare. The choice is also to help those senior citizens pay for their medical benefits. I hope Senators choose for seniors.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. How much time remains?
And we Republicans want to protect Social Security with a tough lockbox, the very lockbox that has frequently been criticized tonight because it is so tough.

The question is, where is the beef? The answer is in our lockbox. It is so tough that in fact we have been criticized for making it too tough. That is where it is. It is in the teeth we have put in the lockbox.

We are going to try again tomorrow. We are going to try tomorrow to pass this lockbox proposal in a form that will absolutely guarantee that Social Security money sent to Washington by people who pay payroll taxes is protected from any spending of any kind.

The budget that has been offered by the President is a budget that actually spends over one trillion new dollars of that sort. When they passed it. And once say those choices, as to how that surplus ought to be spent, should reside in the hands of the people who earned the money and paid the taxes and sent them to Washington. We say take all the Social Security money, protect it in a tough lockbox, and then let's return 25 cents out of every surplus dollar to the men and women in our country who earned those dollars in the first place.

As I have tried to indicate tonight, we have endeavored, on six previous occasions, to try to pass this lockbox. In each case procedural impediments have been placed in our way to prevent it from happening. We would just like to have a chance to have an up-or-down vote. If we have 50-plus votes, then we will have a Social Security lockbox. Hopefully we will get that chance.

Mr. BAUCUS. May I ask the Senator a very gentlemanly, civil question? Mr. BAUCUS. The Senator from Michigan, the lead sponsor of this, has very little time left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. HUTCHISON). Does the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. BAUCUS. I ask the Senator whether he would agree to the lockbox the House passed?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Let me say this. We have offered that to the Senate to be considered. One of the cloture votes which was offered was on the House lockbox. We did not pass it. And once again, on party lines, we came to the well of the Senate and our effort to pass that bill was prevented.

All I am saying is we would like to have a final up-or-down vote on this. That is what we are asking for.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, one more brief question?

Mr. ABRAHAM. I am going take back my time actually, Madam President. I am the only person who has been on the floor tonight who has not spoken. The Senator from Montana had two opportunities to speak. I refrained because we had so many speakers on our side. I would like to summarize. I have a feeling the debate is not over on this topic and we will have other opportunities. I just want to say we brought up the House lockbox on the floor. It was prevented from moving forward. We brought up the tougher version, the Senate version we are offering tonight. We have not had a chance, because of procedural impediments, to vote on it. One proposal I hope might be followed up on is a simple one. Tomorrow maybe neither side should impose procedural impediments, and if one or the other version of this gets a majority of votes in the Senate, then let's move it forward. I suspect that will not happen. I am not going to ask anybody to answer that tonight. But tomorrow I may make a pitch and an appeal to our colleagues to let each side have their vote. If one of these lockboxes gets 51 votes, let's move it forward. Let's give the American people what they want. That is a lockbox to protect Social Security.

Madam President, to me that makes sense. The fact it is simply consistent with what voters in our States want, what people who pay payroll taxes want. It is overdue.

This Senator will come back, if he has to, time after time, well into the night if we have to, to make this case. But it is a simple one—are we or are we not going to really protect the Social Security dollars, that are sent to Washington, from being spent on anything other than Social Security? I say we should. I think we should use a tough lockbox to make sure that happens. We have a chance tomorrow to vote on these two lockbox proposals. I say, if one of them gets 50 votes, that ought to be good enough, if it is true we all want a lockbox. If it is not true, then we will be back again as we have been over the last 3 months, endeavoring to find a way to finally get the American people that which they want.

But, in closing, as we examine this issue, as we consider the next 10 years, if we are really going to have, as current projections indicate, almost $2 trillion in Social Security surpluses, and if we do not do something soon to protect this with a lockbox, those dollars are going to start to be spent. Major efforts made for cutting into portions of it this year and the same will happen next year, as has been happening for so many years already. This Senator is doing everything he can to try to make sure those efforts to take money out of the Social Security trust funds for other programs do not happen any longer.

All this debate which has gone on for 3 months has done nothing more than delay and keep open the possibility that Social Security money would be spent on other things. I do not believe we should let that happen. I think we should pass a lockbox tomorrow. If somebody gets 50 votes for their proposal, then my recommendation is we should not use any procedural impediments to prevent that proposal from happening. The President says he wants it. Even the House has passed a version, not the one we are offering, but they passed one nonetheless. So let's go forward. If somebody gets 50 percent let's move this issue out of the Senate and on towards final completion.

I gather my time is up, and I appreciate the debate that has happened this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and in so doing state to my colleagues the next amendment will be offered by the Senator from Florida. He will be here momentarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Legislative assistant proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. ROBB. I thank the Chair.

AMENDMENT NO. 1401

(Purpose: To delay the effective dates of the provisions of, and amendments made by, the Act until the long-term solvency of Social Security and Medicare programs is ensured)

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that we consider it for debate at this time and that the vote occur on this amendment at the time previously designated under the unanimous consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is so ordered.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBB. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ENZI). Without objection, it is so ordered.
TITTLE XVI—DELAY IN EFFECTIVE DATE

Notwithstanding any other provision of, or amendment to, this Act, no such provision or amendment shall take effect until legislation has been enacted that extends the solvency of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund under section 201 of the Social Security Act through 2075 and the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund under part A of title XVIII of such Act through 2027.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I am pleased to offer this particular amendment with my long-time friend and colleague from Florida, Senator GRAHAM, and others who join us. Both Senator GRAHAM and I served as Governors before coming to this body, and our views on fiscal matters are frequently very much in sync as they are on the amendment we offer this evening. Having served as officers of separate States, we share a somewhat unique perspective, and it is from that particular unique perspective that we offer this amendment.

The amendment simply states that if it is the wish of a majority of the Members of this body to enact the tax cut before us, let’s at least accept responsibility for strengthening Social Security and Medicare first. In short, let’s get our priorities straight.

We all understand the allure of tax cuts. I do not know many Americans who would not like to have a few extra dollars to spend on something, and I do not know many Americans who truly enjoy writing a check to the IRS. Most of us work hard to minimize legally what we have to pay to Uncle Sam to run our Government, and most of us can find areas where we would like to see Government spending cut or eliminated altogether. Sure, we like and, indeed, a great deal of the security and protections Government offers, but we do not like to have to pay for them.

To enact a tax cut of this magnitude at this time when the economy is not in need of an economic stimulus, when we have not fixed Social Security, when we have not fixed Medicare, when we backtrack all of the tough decisions future Congresses will have to make to pay for the cuts, when we frontload only the politically popular promise of more than we are actually delivering, when we know that discretionary spending assumptions are unrealistic and unattainable, when we are already breaking the spending caps we have pledged to adhere to in the Balanced Budget Act we passed just 2 years ago, when we know defense spending is going to have to increase well beyond the current baseline, when we know that correcting a course of action will be far more difficult than anything we are bent on doing with this bill, Mr. President, I submit that to pass this bill at this time without this amendment would be ludicrous. It would be as fiscally irresponsible in the extreme. It would be as fiscally irresponsible as anything Congress has contemplated during the 11 years I have served in this body, and we are doing it all in the face of a certain Presidential veto. Is it any wonder people lose faith in their Government?

Enacting massive tax cuts today before addressing the obligations we now know we have tomorrow is reckless. Those who propose this approach are, in effect, buying political benefits by using our children’s credit cards. We curry favor today and leave the bill for others to pay. A surplus is what is left over after we have met our obligations, and we will not know what our obligations are until we reform Social Security and Medicare.

I am pleased to offer this amendment with my distinguished colleague from Florida, and many others who are acclamation, which has already the spirit of the amendment that we all have enormous respect for the chairman of the committee and the bipartisan effort that has preceded this particular point in the debate. But we are simply—I am simply unwilling—simply unwilling to accept the fact that we should move forward with the tax cuts before the surplus upon which those tax cuts are premised has actually materialized.

Mr. President, I yield the floor to my distinguished colleague from Florida. Mr. GRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, the issue before us with this amendment is what is the proper order of consideration of the issues challenging our Nation? In the Bible it talks about the fact that there is a season for all things. There is a season to plant; there is a season to harvest. The question is, what is the season of America here in late July of 1999?

The position Senator ROBB and I and our cosponsors take is that the season is not for a massive tax cut until we have planted and harvested the seeds of a strengthened Social Security program and a strengthened Medicare program.

The bill that was reported by the Senate Finance Committee and its companion legislation passed in the House of Representatives, would cut taxes by approximately $800 billion over the next 10 years.

Some have claimed—and claimed on this floor earlier today—that a tax cut of $800 billion is the ideal way to usher in a new era of budget surpluses and to maintain the economic growth and prosperity through which we are currently living. I could not disagree more.

With all due respect to my colleagues, the tax cut jeopardizes the long-term solvency of two of the critical programs for millions of Americans—Social Security and Medicare—programs for which there is a solemn contract, a contract between the American people and the American government, a contract which is now in question.

There are a series of rather straightforward questions that lie at the heart of this debate: Do we live for today? Do we consume for tomorrow? Do we support fiscal gluttony or fiscal discipline? The question our children might ask is, do we eat our dessert before or after spinach?

The amendment Senator ROBB offers delays the effective date of any tax cut until after legislation strengthening Social Security and Medicare has been enacted. This proposal, I suggest, is not dissimilar to the approach which has been proposed by the leadership in the House of Representatives. They have agreed that debt reduction, at least as measured by interest expense, should take priority over tax cuts. Under the House proposal, tax cuts would be made if interest payments do not decline.

Similarly, our amendment places the preservation of Social Security and Medicare as higher priorities than tax cuts. The amendment states that before any tax cut proposal can be implemented, Congress must pass, and the President must sign, legislation extending the solvency of Social Security three generations, or to the year 2075. The Congress must also pass, and the President must also sign, legislation that modernizes the Medicare program and extends the solvency of the hospitalization program within Medicare through the year 2027.

Unfortunately, the tax cut proposal on the Senate floor does not just delay our efforts to preserve these important programs for future generations; it brings these efforts to a screeching halt. The $800 billion tax cut in the plan before us represents only 10 percent of the projected non-Social Security surplus over the next 10 years.

I point to this chart, which indicates that through the combination of the tax breaks of $792 billion, and then the interest which we will have to pay—rather than as our budget has been calculated, those $792 billion would have been used to reduce the Federal debt—since that use will now be diverted to tax cuts, that means we will be required to pay out an additional $100 billion in interest during the next 10 years. With the combination of the lost interest savings associated with these tax cuts and the lost revenue from the tax cuts themselves, the surplus disappears completely, leaving us with no resources to strengthen Social Security or modernize Medicare for our Nation’s older citizens.

Although we cannot accurately predict how the economy will perform over the next 10 years, we do know that demographic changes taking place in America will place a tremendous strain on Social Security and Medicare.
Our elderly population is growing quickly. Those seniors are living longer than ever before. As a result, Social Security is projected to run its first ever deficit in the year 2014. It has been stated that all we have to do to save Social Security is to lock up the $1.9 trillion that will be derived by the Social Security surpluses in a lockbox, that we can wipe our hands of any further responsibility for the solvency of Social Security. As you well know, the fact is that that will only extend the Social Security solvency to approximately the year 2034. Yet our commitment is to preserve Social Security for three generations, not only to those who are the current beneficiaries, not only to those who will soon become beneficiaries but to their children and their grandchildren. A three-generation solvency for Social Security cannot be achieved through the singular step of investing all of the Social Security surplus into strengthening the Social Security trust fund.

Even worse than the challenge faced by Social Security is the challenge faced by Medicare. The twin pillars of security for older Americans—financial security through Social Security, health security through Medicare. The trustees of the Medicare fund have reported that Part A, the hospital payments, already exceed the program’s revenue and will do so in each of the next 15 years.

In addition, not only does the program have a serious financial problem, Medicare is an increasingly out-of-date program and one that fails to take advantage of the benefits of modern medical science. We have a program which is from the model year 1965 when we desperately need one worthy of the 21st century.

For example, we should increase the number of important preventive benefits available to Medicare. We should provide for programs such as hypertension, programs like glaucoma, for smoking cessation, for the management of hormones—all of which would extend the quality and the length of life, all of which are within the current extents of modern medicine. Yet the Medicare program does not provide those or many other of the important, preventive measures.

We need to support that preventive effort by extending Medicare to include a prescription drug benefit, which is not only an important part of treating chronic diseases but a critical part of maintaining the health of our older citizens.

Private health care plans long ago recognized that prescription drugs are a vital tool in efforts to save lives, improve health quality, and prevent and treat chronic diseases. Medicare will not be relevant in the 21st century if it does not cover the treatments physicians use and patients require.

Yet the tax plan before us says nothing about preserving Social Security to the year 2027 or protecting and strengthening Medicare for as yet the year 2027. Instead, it blindly devotes virtually all of the non-Social Security surplus to tax cuts without considering the larger budget issues, issues which hang over us like the sword of Damocles.

Despite a record economy, the best fiscal situation since the late 1960s, this tax bill passes on the hard choices, passes on the choices that are going to be important to our children and our grandchildren.

The deficit may be gone, but we are still operating under the same pass-the-buck-to-the-next-generation mentality that created it. Talk of an $800 billion tax cut versus a $500 billion tax cut will not work. All of those miss the fundamental point. The fundamental point is, Congress should not pass any tax cut until we have strengthened Social Security by making it solvent for three generations. We should not pass any tax cut until we modernize Medicare by increasing the number of preventive benefits, incorporating a prescription drug benefit, and securing the program’s fiscal health. Those should be our priorities.

When this amendment was introduced during last week’s Finance Committee markup, it was defeated on a strict party-line vote. It is my hope that bipartisanism, common sense, respect for future generations of Americans will prevent a similar outcome on the Senate floor this week. But if it does not, I am very confident and, frankly, very proud that President Clinton has stated he will veto any tax cut proposal that does not put Social Security and Medicare first. He is in the fiscally responsible position, one that values wise preparation over instant gratification.

Now is the time to extend the life of Medicare and Social Security. Later, if our fiscal situation permits, it might be time to enact tax cuts. But my first priority, shared by Senator Roth, is to my nine grandchildren and the other children of their generation. I hope my colleagues will join me in making this the priority of Congress as well.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Tennessee such time as he may require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. I thank the Chair, and I thank Senator Roth.

It must seem strange to those watching us here that people on both sides who have the same interest come to such different conclusions about how to get where we both say we are trying to go.

There is no controversy with regard to the need to do something about Medicare and Social Security. We all know that. There is a controversy about the need to do something not just for ourselves but the next generation and the next generation after that. I think that is why many of us came to the Congress and to the Senate. We wanted to give back a little bit. We wanted to look forward. We wanted to do some of those tough things that maybe we thought anybody couldn’t do and we could maybe come in for a little while and do that.

Yet here we are, with such diametrically different views as to what will accomplish that. That is what makes good debates, and we have heard a fine presentation with regard to this amendment. But I think it is totally shortsighted and I thank the Chair.

In the first place, let’s not forget what we are about. We are about the question of whether or not we should have a tax cut with a projected $3 trillion surplus. Some people are suspicious of these projections. Whatever you think of these projections, whatever you think of the Social Security trust fund, that values wise preparation over instant gratification. I think that is why many of us came to the Congress and to the Senate. We wanted to give back a little bit. We wanted to look forward. We wanted to do some of those tough things that maybe we thought anybody couldn’t do and we could maybe come in for a little while and do that.

My personal opinion is, we need to put some more money into some things and we need to take some money out of things. The CBO, and everyone else who has taken a look at it basically acknowledged that. But it is suggested that we wait before we have any tax cuts until we pass legislation that will make Medicare and Social Security solvent to the year 2027.

There is no magic to these dates. Where these dates come from is the President of the United States. These are President Clinton's dates. These are the dates to which he says what he is doing will extend Medicare and Social Security. And they won't.

I think that most economists, most objective observers, the Comptroller General, the CBO, and everyone else who has taken a look at it basically acknowledged that. But it is suggested that we wait before we have any tax cuts until we agree on legislation that will solve these problems by those dates. Can you imagine our agreeing on what legislation in effect accomplishes that? I can tell my colleagues—and I think most observers I have read who have a job in looking at these things would conclude—What the President's proposal does not do is that. What the President basically proposes—and he is able to say this with a straight face because it is so complicated; it is difficult to understand—is saying, okay, we have trouble with Medicare and Social Security. For the most part, we have dedicated trust funds, FICA taxes that are set aside to pay off all of that. But we have trouble with that now. So instead of disciplining ourselves, let's go to the general revenue, because we have some extra now, and instead of reforming Medicare and Social Security and doing those things that the Medicare Commission tried to do, instead of doing those things that some bipartisan Senators—the Senator from Virginia is on one bill that I am on—in stead of doing those fundamental things to really solve Medicare and Social Security, let's just transfer some general revenues over into those items to serve as a temporary fix—in Medicare's case, until 2027.

But with regard to Social Security, I think both the majority leader and the Speaker of the House have reserved bill No. 1 on both sides for the President's Social Security bill, where he can submit his legislation that he says will effectuate his plan in order to save Social Security. It hasn't come yet because I think most people realize it is not a serious plan. It is a transfer of trillions of dollars in IOUs in the Social Security trust fund, the creation of a new debt that will constitute a burden on future taxpayers.

So what. Don't we have an obligation to the children and our grandchildren, by transferring trillions of dollars in IOUs that will have to be redeemed some day, to get us that far if we put enough general revenue funds in while we have a surplus? I assume it very well might get us to 2027.

So what? Don't we have an obligation to our Members likes to say, putting more gasoline into an old run down, beat up, decrepit automobile doesn't change the nature of that automobile.

So the President's plan with regard to so-called saving Social Security is not a serious proposal. The President's own budget—the document that he submits, the "Analytical Perspectives of the Budget of the United States Government, Fiscal Year 2000"—says that: Under the proposals in the President's budget, the trust funds balances are estimated to increase by approximately 70 percent by the year 204, raising to $2.8 trillion.

That is the part of the plan the President says will take Social Security out and keep it solvent until the year 2075. But the President's own folks continue:

These balances are available to finance future benefit payments and other trust fund expenditures—but only in a bookkeeping sense. These funds are not set up to be pension funds, as are the funds of private pension plans. They do not consist of real economic assets that can be drawn down in the future to fund benefit payments, but are claims on the Treasury that, when redeemed, will have to be financed by raising taxes, borrowing from the public, or reducing benefits.

So the plan will only carry us so far, they are claims on the Treasury that, when redeemed, will have to be financed by raising taxes, borrowing from the public, or reducing benefits.

Now we have bipartisan legislation over here—the Senator from Virginia and I—on a bill that we think will do that. That is the only kind of thing that will do that. Transferring more general revenue funds—as I put it ear-lier, putting more water into a leaky bucket, when the hole in the bottom of the bucket is getting bigger every day—will only carry us so far, they think until 2027 or 2075 on Social Security. It might. It might, but it will not solve the problems. We need some real revenue funds in while we have a surplus. I assume it very well might get us to 2027.

So what? Don't we have an obligation to our Members? Don't we have an obligation to do something more fundamental? It doesn't take a genius to say you have some extra money, let's just pour it on top of a broken system, or, as one of our Members likes to say, putting more gasoline into an old run down, beat up, decrepit automobile doesn't change the nature of that automobile.
things we can do. I do not believe these other things are serious in the effect they have on what we are doing.

Of course, again—and I mentioned it several times today—we are dependent upon the President’s support, I guess, to pass a bill that will do these things when, on the other hand, he is doing everything he can to prevent reform. We had a bipartisan Medicare commission. We have these bipartisan bills. As far as the commission is concerned, the President did everything he could to defeat the recommendations there. Democrats and Republicans—and Senator Breaux chaired that commission, a Democrat—worked together and came up with solutions. The President would not support it. He would rather have a temporary political issue than a long-term solution to this problem. That is very disappointing. Many of us who were critical of the President some time ago thought that in his last couple of years in office he might want to step forward and do this and leave that kind of legacy. He could have done that. It is a wasted opportunity, and I regret that.

So that is the Social Security plan, one that doesn’t consist of real economic assets and will have to be financed by raising taxes borrowed from the public or reducing benefits.

What about Medicare? As I understand it, the President’s proposal there basically transfers $327 billion from the general revenue. CBO takes a look at it and says it will make Medicare more solvent for several more years. It doesn’t have a number on it. But this is what the professionals who look at this say about that. This is what CBO says about the President’s Medicare financing. Again, is this the solution to the Medicare problem we have? Is this the reason we can’t have tax cuts because this is what we need to do? I don’t think so. Listen: The President is proposing to augment Medicare’s financing by making transfers from the general fund of the U.S. Treasury to the program’s trust funds.

That sounds familiar—Social Security and Medicare.

Consistent with the policy outlined in the President’s budget for fiscal year 2000, CBO estimates that $238 billion would be transferred from the general fund to the Hospital Insurance trust funds over the next decade. That transfer would delay by several years the point at which the HI (Hospital Insurance) trust fund will become insolvent by committing future general revenues to the program. It would do nothing to address the underlying rapid growth in spending for Medicare that will eventually outrun the revenues dedicated to the program.

Just on borrowed time, headed toward a cliff.

This plan does nothing to fundamentally alter that.

The Comptroller General, talking about the President’s proposal—again, this amendment is based upon the numbers, as I understand it—if I am wrong about that, I can be corrected. But they are the same numbers that the President has been using throughout his plan. The Comptroller General says:

I feel that the greatest risk lies in extending the HI trust fund solvency while doing nothing to improve the program’s long-term sustainability. In particular, programs that may result in changes that may aggravate the long-term financial outlook for the program.

What he is talking about is something that might not only not do any good in terms of a fundamental sense but will aggravate the problem. If we deceive ourselves into believing that by using general revenue moneys we are really doing something to solve the Social Security/Medicare problem, it will put off real reform and wind up in an unending cycle with Medicare/Medicaid/Medicare. It encourages us to wait. We can’t afford to wait for fundamental reform.

We have in excess of $500 billion in our proposal that can be spent for transition costs, Medicare, any other discretionary spending proposals that we think will make the program solvency in the Medicare/Medicaid/Medicare. It encourages us to wait. We can’t afford to wait for fundamental reform.

In conclusion, basically we have no legislation before us and no proposal that would effectuate this amendment in terms of what kind of legislation are we talking about to reach these magic dates.

Second, the President’s position, which I think these dates are based upon, is a flawed one for the reason that we have set out. Lastly, not only is this not reform, but it goes against reform. So, indeed, we come full circle.

I agree with my colleagues that my heart is in the same place as theirs. I want to figure out a way for us to come together and really do something about Medicare and Social Security. I want to find a way to do something about not just ourselves up to 2027, or however long some of us might still be around here—not myself, but the next generation and the generation after that.

Let’s look seriously and see whether or not this is the sort of thing that is going to get us there, whether buckling down and doing the hard work, the hard, politically risky work—because if you use the words, you are running some kind of political risk—and not be deceived with as to why we should not have a tax cut.

We have had more reasons in one day than you can shake a stick at as to why the world would come to an end if we had a tax cut. There is no good time for a tax cut for some people because a tax cut has more to do with than just dollars and cents; it has to do with the exercise of who is going to make decisions in this society. Money is power. Where the money lies is where the power lies. Is it going to be in the pockets of the American people, or is it going to be in our pockets?

Some say we have been a little bit too reticent ourselves because we say of the surplus dollar that only 25 percent with the President’s cut, the American people’s pockets. But to call that dangerous, to call that glutonous, to call that selfish greatly exceeds the mark.

I urge the defeat of the amendment. Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I thank you, and I thank the distinguished Senator from Tennessee for his comments. I think he is absolutely correct in that there is much that we agree upon. I would like to commend him for his effort to reach the bipartisan consensus that is going to be required if we are going to solve either challenge that we are discussing this evening.

Social Security will not be saved without a bipartisan effort, and it is going to require the hard, politically risky work that the Senator from Tennessee just alluded to. The same thing with saying that these problems are not easy decisions. That is one of the principal reasons that we are suggesting we ought to address those tough questions first.

Let me suggest I understand in terms of the remarks made by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee that taking on something that is not on the table is effective. But we are not really defending all of the President’s plan in this particular instance. We are using a couple of numbers that happen to coincide with the President’s. It is much simpler and much more specific. We are talking about simply postponing this tax cut.

The Senator from Tennessee made the point that it might be difficult to actually achieve whatever is necessary for some actuary to come to the conclusion that we had in effect saved Social Security or that we had saved Medicare. I would not contest that assertion by the Senator from Tennessee. But we are not saying you can never have a tax cut. We are saying only that we will not have this tax cut, this tax cut that we believe at this time is excessive. It may be that a time will come when tax cuts, particularly targeted tax cuts, are appropriate. I suggest to my friend from Tennessee that while it may be easier to envision in terms of major tax cuts, it seems to me a time that does not dry out for tax cuts is a time when the economy is not in need of the economic stimulus that would come with a tax cut.

The one thing that the Fed seems to suggest to us is that a tax cut could overhear the economy and would have consequences that we are trying to avoid at this particular time. But the bottom line is this: We are not suggesting anything but, hold up. We are saying in effect, what is the hurry? There is no compelling urgency to cut taxes, particularly when we are talking about a tax cut of this magnitude that can be put off until the next year, or the year after, or whenever we find that we can afford to make that kind of a tax cut after meeting our obligations, such as protecting Social Security and Medicare.

That is all we are saying. We are only suggesting that, because of the magnitude of this particular bill, we ought to suspend this particular tax cut until we have achieved those objectives. I suggest that is a relatively modest restraint on our activities, but it is a fiscally responsible approach to take.

I have to tell the distinguished Senator from Tennessee that there are many on this side of the aisle at least who are not all that enamored with some of the suggestions that our brethren have made with respect to tax cuts at this time, and indeed we voted for the Democratic alternative only because it would substitute for the bill that is on the floor today.

But we are not against tax cuts altogether for all time. Indeed, there are some areas where we should provide cuts—the extending, for instance, of the R&D tax credits and others that we know we are going to do anyhow—it is something that would provide a sense of realism and would allow some certainty in terms of planning for those companies that are doing the cutting edge work, that make our economy strong, and that make us a leader in the global economy.

But rushing this tax cut is so big and so difficult to justify that we ought to at least hold up until we have, again, to quote the distinguished Senator, “done the hard, politically risky work” to protect Social Security and Medicare.

Again, I commend the Senator because he is willing to engage. He is willing to roll up his sleeves and engage on a bipartisan basis in trying to make those tough decisions. I wish we could both sides of the aisle who were willing to roll up their sleeves and work on these decisions.

The distinguished Senator from Florida and I are saying, let’s simply not make this tax cut effective until we have solved those problems facing both Medicare and Social Security. I agree with the Senator from Tennessee, we are not solving these problems just by saving some of the surplus generated by Social Security. That does not bring about the systemic change we are going to need to have if we are going to make those long-run solvency question with respect to Social Security. We are not doing that at this point with respect to Medicare. To that extent, I agree with the Senator.

We have the tougher decisions to make. We are saying let’s not take advantage of a projected future surplus since that would, indeed, make all of the other decisions more difficult.

Another point where I differ with the Senator from Tennessee, he says it is always good to go into a deficit, in effect, reverse the decisions; if we cut taxes too deeply, we can turn around and raise taxes. With all due deference and respect, raising taxes is not easy to do. There are very few in this body on either side of the aisle who like to be tagged with either authoring or voting for a tax increase. That is the problem with tax cuts of this magnitude, particularly when they would be so difficult to reverse, and we splurge without making the tough decisions first. In the meantime the current surplus can be used for constructive, long-term debt reduction.

Lastly, I have been concerned about the focus on publicly held debt as opposed to the total debt. We used to be much concerned about the total debt. I have told my friends from the White House and others who have focused on this, I think what we are doing to reduce the public debt is a good thing. However, the plan promises too much. By reducing the total obligation we have simply by making the IOU a statutory obligation instead of having it part of the publicly held dealt. Reducing the publicly held debt does good things. It makes our financial future better. It means we don’t have to go out and borrow on the markets. However, the same obligations we have with respect to Social Security now, with respect to Medicare now, are still there. We are simply transferring them to a different form so our financial picture looks a little better.

I suggest again this is a limited amendment. It is simply saying, what is the hurry with respect to huge tax cuts that may or may not materialize? Let’s do the responsible thing. Let’s do that hard, politically risky work of extending Social Security and Medicare solvency first. Then we can address the question of whether or not we provide additional tax cuts and what form and what magnitude they might take.

I yield the floor.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, in 1983 Alan Greenspan chaired a commission to study the state of Social Security. He began the deliberations of that commission with this admonition: Every judgment of the commission is entitled to their facts.

What are some of the facts that drive this amendment? One, there is a tidal wave of Americans who will reach 65 and become beneficiaries under the Medicare program and the Social Security program beginning in the year 2010. That generation, the generation born immediately after World War II, will more than double the number of current beneficiaries in Social Security and Medicare. That is a fact.

Third, it is a fact that even if we do as is suggested, put all of the Social Security surplus into strengthening the Social Security system primarily by paying down the national debt, even that step will only extend the solvency of Social Security to the year 2034. That happens to be a significant date for me because my youngest daughter will become 65 in the year 2034. I hope she would not necessarily be listening to my remarks, she would not be happy for me to remind her of that.

Fourth, it is a fact that Medicare is a program of the 1960s based on 1960s knowledge of medical science, 1960s concepts of how to provide insurance for health care. With a few exceptions, it is still a 1965 program. It is a program in which the trust funded portions—that is, that relate to hospital services—is already in a negative position. It is a program which will crack under the weight of the beneficiaries who will begin drawing its services in the year 2010.

Finally, it is a fact that the longer we delay dealing with Social Security and Medicare, the more difficult the problem becomes. We may think we have eased our burden by delaying these hard decisions. We may have eased our burden because we may not be here. But the sooner we act for the benefit of all Americans, particularly those Americans who properly are anticipating the contract they have with their Government for the financial security of Social Security and the health security represented by Medicare, their problems, their challenges, grow daily more severe as we delay dealing with those issues.

I want to join my colleague, Senator ROBB, in saying much of what the Senator from Tennessee said was compelling. However, he asked a question:
Mr. GRAHAM. This is the statement of the Concord Coalition. In conclusion it provides:

The bottom line is that, at the moment, political leaders have no idea how to meet the long-term spending promises that have been made for Social Security and Medicare, and no idea how to meet theitous discretionary spending caps on which the baseline surplus is premised. Major tax cuts should await the resolution of these issues. If the politically hard choices are not made before the easy ones, there is a very real danger that we’ll end up spending a surplus we don’t really have.

Let me repeat: If the politically hard choices are not made before the easy ones, there is a very real danger that we’ll end up spending a surplus we don’t really have.

So those are why the issues of sequencing—what do we do first, where do we put our priorities—are central for the fiscal future of this country and the debate we have this week. I will briefly say why I think the proper order is Social Security and Medicare first.

First, the Social Security taxpayers and the Medicare taxpayers, through their payroll taxes, have created the totality of the surplus we have today. There is no other surplus than the Social Security surplus today, and there will only be a meager surplus beyond Social Security for the foreseeable future. So should not the people who created the surplus have some moral standing to be at the front of the line, not the back of the line, when we decide how to spend the surplus?

Second, a substantial amount of the non-Social Security surplus is going to be the result of the Social Security surplus being invested in paying down the debt held by the public and therefore freeing the Federal Government from the onerous interest payments— that $2 trillion of Social Security surplus when it is fully committed to reducing the debt held by the public. Let us say the average interest on the debt of the Federal Government today is 6 percent. With a total surplus from non-Social Security purposes—and we have already agreed we will put all the Social Security surpluses that have given us the Social Security solvency—that is $964 billion over 10 years, meaning the total amount that is left will be $32 billion over 10 years, or a little over $3 billion a year in order to do everything else that we may find needs to be done.

The fact is, once we have committed ourselves to this plan, there are no fiscal resources to either further strengthen Social Security to move beyond the year 2034, or to strengthen Medicare. So there is a fiscal relationship. But beyond the fiscal Siamese twins of these issues, Social Security and Medicare, and this tax cut, is a political reality. There is nothing easier in politics, there is nothing that is less likely to get you a chapter in “Profiles In Courage,” than cutting taxes. Everybody likes to cut taxes. That is the classic case of eating your political desert. The question is, Do you eat your desert before you have had to first eat your vegetables? That is what we are being asked to do by passing this tax cut before we have dealt with the vegetables of Social Security and Medicare.

One of the most responsible groups is a group which is now led by two of our colleagues, former Republican Senator from New Hampshire, Warren Rudman, and Democratic Senator from Georgia, Sam Nunn, the Concord Coalition. The Concord Coalition was one of the driving forces that has given us the Social Security solvency has been historically judged, as a different standard, that is certainly the standard against which all proposals should be judged. I have offered, what the resolution of this issue should be. There are probably a dozen or more good ideas in this Chamber as to how we should strengthen Social Security, how we should strengthen Medicare. What we are saying is there should be a performance standard. The performance standard, I say to the Senator from Tennessee, my good friend, is not one we stole from somebody else. We have been saying for many years that Social Security should be solvent for three generations.

When you apply that three-generational test to 1999, it happens to come out to the year 2075. If somebody has a different standard, they believe Social Security solvency should be judged by, let them come forward and make the case. But I believe we should guarantee this program for current beneficiaries, their children—like my child who, in the year 2034, will start drawing her Social Security benefits and become eligible for Medicare. I am pleased to say that same daughter is now about to make us grandparents, Adele and myself. This will be our 10th grandchild. In November she will have a baby. So we are concerned about the new baby who will soon come into our family. I believe that is a concern all of us share who are or hope soon to be grandparents. So I believe in the three-generational standard, which has been the standard against which Medicare solvency has been historically judged, is a sound one and represents the intergenerational contract.

We are not suggesting how that contract should be fulfilled because there are many ways. But we are saying that is the standard against which all proposals should be judged. Similarly, with Medicare—that is a more difficult proposition because Medicare, unlike Social Security, is not totally funded out of a trust fund but rather a mixture of a trust fund for hospitalization and general revenue, plus premiums by the beneficiaries for the physicians’ portion of Medicare. We are saying that, for the hospitalization plan, we should set as a standard the year 2027 for solvency of that trust fund.

Again, if someone wishes to argue for a different standard, that is certainly their prerogative. But we need to have a measurement. We need to have something like an external audit, some standard to which we can submit our proposals and have them evaluated as to whether they meet the test of the American people.

TAX CUTS SHOULD AVOID HARD CHOICES ON SPENDING

WASHINGTON.—With the House and Senate headed toward passage of a $792 billion, 10-year tax cut, The Concord Coalition today challenged Congress and the President to make the hard choices on discretionary and entitlement spending before enacting a major tax cut.

"Cutting taxes in anticipation of spending cuts that have not been made, and may never be made, is a recipe for the return of the chronic annual budget deficits," said Policy Director Robert Bixby. The Concord Coalition pointed out that Congress and the President have yet to agree on several key responsibilities of this Congress, I thank the Chair.

Mr. ROTH. I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. President, my good friend and colleague, the Senator from Virginia, raised the question as to why a tax cut now, what is the hurry? The economy is doing well. Let me tell you why I think it is critically important that we have a tax cut now. That is because the American family needs it.

In going home and talking to my constituents, talking to many families, whether they are farmers or small businessmen, or whomever, they are finding it hard to face the challenges of today. The cost of sending a child to college is increasing very rapidly and is taxing the typical American family. We provide relief in this package for the American family who is trying to send their children to college. They are trying to send their children to college today, not 5 or 10 years hence.

I point out there is something like 42 million families without health insurance. There is no hurry to try to address that, as we do in this legislation? We provide that someone who is self-employed or an employee who works for a company that has no health insurance can take a tax deduction for their insurance. That is helping to provide access today. None of us know whether we will be sick today, tomorrow, or in a week. There is a need for that today, not 5, 10 years from now.

What about savings? We all agree as to the critical importance of the two domestic programs—Social Security and Medicare. But to retire today, it is important people have savings, and that is the reason we have stressed so much the importance of pensions, the importance of IRAs, because if people are going to retire with dignity, they must have the opportunity to save not tomorrow, not 5 years from now, but today.

Marriage penalty: How many of my colleagues have gone home and talked to people about that? There is concern that taxwise it pays not to marry but to live in so-called sin. We take care of the marriage penalty. It is long overdue. We think there is good reason, if we are going to help the American family, let's help the American family today, not sometime in the distant future.

Chair.

Mr. ROTH. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. President, my good friend and colleague, the Senator from Virginia, raised the question as to why a tax cut now, what is the hurry? The economy is doing well. Let me tell you why I think it is critically important that we have a tax cut now. That is because the American family needs it.

The cost of sending a child to college is increasing very rapidly and is taxing the typical American family. We provide relief in this package for the American family who is trying to send their children to college. They are trying to send their children to college today, not 5 or 10 years hence. That is the reason it is important.

I point out there is something like 42 million families without health insurance. There is no hurry to try to address that, as we do in this legislation? We provide that someone who is self-employed or an employee who works for a company that has no health insurance can take a tax deduction for their insurance. That is helping to provide access today. None of us know whether we will be sick today, tomorrow, or in a week. There is a need for that today, not 5, 10 years from now.

But to retire today, it is important people have savings, and that is the reason we have stressed so much the importance of pensions, the importance of IRAs, because if people are going to retire with dignity, they must have the opportunity to save not tomorrow, not 5 years from now, but today.

Marriage penalty: How many of my colleagues have gone home and talked to people about that? There is concern that taxwise it pays not to marry but to live in so-called sin. We take care of the marriage penalty. It is long overdue. We think there is good reason, if we are going to help the American family, let's help the American family today, not sometime in the distant future.

It intrigues me. People say delay the tax cut, it is not important. But what about spending? My good friend from Wyoming raised that point, and it is a solider one. If we are going to delay tax cuts, why shouldn't we say there can be no increased spending until we solve these two domestic programs? If it is fair for one, why isn't it fair for the other?

Then the point was made this tax cut is inflationary. That is hard to understand. In the year 2000, we are talking about a $4 billion tax cut. That is not very large when you stop and think that our GDP is $9 trillion. It is not very likely our tax cut in the next year or two is going to have a very significant effect on the economy. The larger cuts come down the road in the last 5 years. Sure, we may not like to vote for tax increases, but we have all done it in the past, and we will do it again if it is necessary, but this tax cut is very slow in developing into a major reduction for the American people.

I oppose the legislation for those reasons. I am a strong believer that we can have the tax cut, address the problems of Medicare, as well as Social Security. I say, the new CBO estimate of the on-budget surplus over the next 10 years is $996 billion, while my bill returns most of this overpayment of taxes back to those who sent it to Washington, while at the same time it leaves enough money on the table for Social Security reform, $1.9 trillion, and Medicare reform, $505 billion.

As I said in the Finance Committee, I am committed to moving a Medicare bill through the committee after we return in September. It is my hope that comprehensive Medicare reform can be achieved, including providing for a prescription drug benefit, but it must be on a bipartisan basis and it must be done with White House cooperation.

The chairman's mark complies with the budget resolution. To this committee by reducing on-budget revenues by $792 billion over 10 years. This amount will allow up to $505 billion of the on-budget surplus to be dedicated to Medicare reform. The President's plan costs $118 billion over 10 years. Clearly, the $505 billion left on the table is more than sufficient to reform Medicare with a prescription drug benefit.

The Committee on Finance has held numerous hearings on Social Security over the past few years. Many of the members of the committee have offered comprehensive Social Security reform plans that I, have to say, are quite compelling. I do intend to return to Social Security after this recess and the Senate works its way through Medicare can be.

I oppose this amendment, and I firmly believe we can address all three—a tax cut, Medicare reform, and strengthening Social Security. I yield the floor.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBB. I thank the Chair. Mr. President, I want to respond briefly, if I can, to our distinguished chairman and friend from Delaware with respect to the question of timing.

The distinguished Senator from Delaware mentioned the fact that the tax cut this year is only $4 billion out of some $792 billion that is proposed in the bill. That is about one-half of 1 percent of the total promise that would be incorporated in statutory law if, for any reason, we are wrong. That is what we would have to find a way to change, against all of the forces that are normally arrayed against any tax increase.

Why squander the opportunity to pay down or to begin to pay down the national debt—not just the publicly held debt, the national debt, the national unified debt? This is the first time in well over a generation there has been any opportunity to pay down the debt.

We are not proposing additional spending. I have not checked with my distinguished colleague from Florida for certain, but if the distinguished chairman of the committee were willing to accept an amendment that would suggest some similar restraint on spending which would correspond to the restraint we are attempting to place on cutting taxes, I will suggest to the chairman of the committee, I think we could find a place to make a deal.

We are not suggesting profligate spending. We are suggesting that we put that money in the bank, that we pay down the national debt.

Again, in terms of urgency, one-half of 1 percent is what we would do right now. But the other 49.5 percent would be locked into the law that we would be obligated, by law, to change at the appropriate time. That is the reason we are suggesting that we do not want to rush to judgment with respect to what many of us believe would simply not be a responsible tax cut of this magnitude at this time.

With that, Mr. President, I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

Mr. THOMPSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the chairman will concede me a couple other minutes, just a couple of points.

I have enjoyed this discussion very much. It is a serious discussion about a serious problem. My only real disappointment is to learn that the Senator from Florida has twice as many grandchildren as I have. But all we ask is for an opportunity to catch up.

But I think a lot of things we do agree on. We agree that there is a crisis. We agree that we need fundamental reform in Medicare and Social Security. We agree that the longer we delay in doing that, the worse the problem is going to be.

So the question is, are we doing the right thing by temporarily papering over the problem to extend it a few years, knowing that is not going to fundamentally solve the problem, giving us an excuse not to really address the fundamental problem or should we push and pressure ourselves to go ahead and address the fundamental problem? That is really the issue here today. I think that is where we have a disagreement.

When I said that there is no relationship between this Medicare/Social Security problem on the one hand and tax cuts on the other, I did not mean to say if you keep more of the tax money and pour more of it into Medicare and Social Security, you could not delay it a little longer. That is certainly true, but fundamentally there is no relationship.

The reason I said that was because of what the Comptroller of the United States said. In his testimony in July before the Finance Committee, he said: Even if all future surpluses were saved—

we would nonetheless be saddled with a budget over the longer term that the current tax rates could fund little else but entitlement programs for the elderly population. Reforms reducing the future growth of Medicare, as well as Social Security and Medicaid, are vital under any fiscal and economic scenario to restoring fiscal flexibility for future generations of taxpayers.

That is the reason I say that even if we put all this aside—we are throwing a lot of numbers around here—take all of it, pour it into Medicare and Social Security, so we can tell people we are saving these two programs. We would not address the fundamental problems.

Is it incumbent on us to have a temporary solution or to force ourselves to have a longer-term solution? I think it is the latter. That is kind of what it boils down to.

My friends talk about the size of this tax cut. The economy is projected to be $9 trillion next year. The net tax cuts next year alone are $4 billion, so the tax cuts are less than one-twentieth of 1 percent of the economy next year—less than one-twentieth of 1 percent.

I am told that the tax cuts over the 10-year period would be 3.4 percent of total Federal revenues, and it would be under 1 percent of the gross domestic product. So that is not a huge tax cut if you look at it under those terms, in terms of the share of the economy, especially in light of the fact that taxes, especially Federal taxes—especially Federal income taxes—are mushrooming as a share of our total economy. It is eating up more and more and more as a share of our total economy.

We may have good times now, but that is not guaranteed. We are in a world standing as an island, as it were, at the present time while those all around us have problems. Our friends in Asia, our friends in Japan, some of our friends in Europe, some in South America, all have economic problems. So we have to be mindful of that as we go along.

Quite frankly, there are some who say, when we have a deficit, certainly we can’t afford to cut taxes; we have a deficit. And listening to the debate today, apparently some of our same friends, when we have a surplus, say we can’t cut taxes because we really don’t know whether or not we will have the surplus. So that does not leave us much room for a tax cut.

I have enjoyed the debate. I yield the floor and thank the chairman and my good friends from Florida and Virginia for their preservation of sanity. In responding to the President, I want to respond briefly, if I can, to the President.

Mr. ROBB addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBB. I will just respond to one point made by my distinguished friend from Tennessee. He was suggesting, correctly, that if we were to reserve, save, all of the surplus, we would not save Social Security and we would not save Medicare. We do not disagree. We concede.

Indeed, I suggest that that makes the case for why we believe we ought to save this surplus and, at the very least, not squander it, because it might increase the incentive to make those tough political choices we have not made to protect these two programs.

So saving all of the surplus is not going to save Social Security. It is not going to make Social Security solvent in the near term, but it might make it solvent in the long term.

So the effective date of the tax cuts might give us some incentive, some focus, to conduct that hard, politically risky work that the Senator from Tennessee so accurately described it is going to take if we are to solve this problem with either Social Security or Medicare.

All we are saying is, let’s not squander this money. It isn’t just a matter of correcting it next year, it exacerbates the problem, because it is going to increase the amount of money we are going to have to carry in terms of the debt. So we are saying: Hang on, $4 billion, one-half of 1 percent; it is not worth locking in the kind of a tax cut some are suggesting until we’ve done first things first.

It has been a good debate. I am particularly grateful, first of all, to my friend and colleague from Florida for
congressional record—senate 18219

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to a period of morning business.

IN MEMORY OF KING HASSAN OF MOROCCO

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise to recognize the death of the Arab world’s longest-standing leader, King Hassan II of Morocco, who died last Friday at the age of 70. To his family, and to the people of Morocco, I extend my heartfelt condolences.

King Hassan ruled Morocco for 38 years as only the second King of Morocco in that country’s modern, independent history, having succeeded to the throne after the death of his father, King Mohammed V, in 1961, only five years after Morocco gained its independence from the French.

Morocco, however, is an ancient country and the country with which the United States has its oldest uninterrupted diplomatic relations. Our two countries signed a Treaty of Peace and Friendship in 1786, which the United States ratified the following year. Thus began a relationship that provided our tall ships a haven in the 18th century and developed into a relationship of geostrategic importance in the 20th century.

This special friendship was cherished in modern times by leaders in both of our countries, particularly King Hassan, and I was pleased to see that President Clinton, along with former President Bush, attended King Hassan’s funeral this weekend. America lost a good friend, a wise counsel on the region, and an important and brave promoter for peace in the Middle East.

One of the biggest challenges for the Arab world, as in other parts of the world, has been the challenge of modernization, and how leaders encourage their governments and societies to rise to this challenge.

We have seen several models: secular socialist dictatorships, radical fundamentalist regimes, and traditional authoritarian regimes. King Hassan, whose remarkable career spanned from the era of decolonization to the doorstep of the next century, demonstrated that the traditional model could adapt to the requirements of modernization. He understood that tradition was not the enemy of the modern, but could ease the transition by providing stability and respect for his people while allowing political and economic reforms to unleash the fundamental strengths and dreams of his people.

For his adept stewardship, he earned the deep and sincere affection of the vast majority of Morocco’s nearly 30 million citizens.

Beginning as a traditional authoritarian, the King recognized the importance of constitutional governance early in his reign and expanded political rights through the years. In doing so, he was one of the most successful leaders in the Arab world in reconciling traditional monarchy with the requisites and demands of modernity. King Hassan in recent years had furthered political reform such that, today, the legislature is elected through universal suffrage from a roster of multiple parties, and the governing coalition, including the Prime Minister, is controlled by the opposition.

Concomitant with these political reforms has been a steady improvement in the human rights situation, marked, in some significant cases, by reconciliation with and compensation for victims of the past. While power still resides predominantly with the Crown, King Hassan, by advancing political democracy and the free market, allowed his people and provided his son, King Mohammed VI, with the fundamental platform on which Morocco will proceed confidently into the next century.

Mr. President, no remarks on the legacy of King Hassan can be complete without recognizing his prescient view of reconciliation between Israel and the Arab world. Many note that some of the initial meetings preparing for the signing of the historic Camp David accords occurred with King Hassan in Morocco. The fact is that the King of Morocco had been providing opportunities for encounters and dialogue for years before then, showing that the King had a wise vision for peace as well as a pragmatist’s approach for moving toward this noble goal.

From the 1960s to the late Prime Minister Rabin’s visit to Morocco in 1993—which was, by the way, only the second Arab nation visited by an Israeli leader; after Egypt—King Hassan of Morocco demonstrated that he recognized the permanent role that the Jewish state had to play in the affairs of the Middle East. In this, as in many other areas, King Hassan was a leader among leaders.

Morocco’s new king, King Mohammed VI, has many challenges before him. He, along with King Abdullah of Jordan, represents the new generation of leaders in the region: highly educated, understanding the West, cognizant of the realities of the region, and an important and brave promoter for peace in the Middle East.

The United States should assist in the continuing modernization of Morocco and the continuing cooperation to create a more peaceful Middle East. So should continue a special relationship into the 21st century that began so propitiously in the 18th.

THE DEATH OF KING HASSAN II OF MOROCCO

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today to honor the life of King Hassan II and express my deepest sympathy and condolences to the people of Morocco.

I rise with a great sense of sadness that I learned of the death of King Hassan, a statesman, a peacemaker, and a visionary. The King was beloved not only by the Moroccan people, but by people committed to peace throughout the Middle East and around the world. He was dedicated to this mission for decades, and it is quite unfortunate that he could not live to see the final outcome of his lengthy efforts.

Many in my home State of Michigan and throughout the United States stand with the people of Morocco in mourning the loss of this great leader. My deepest and heartfelt condolences go out to King Mohammed VI, the King’s family and all the people of Morocco in these difficult times.

THE VERY BAD DEBT BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, at the close of business yesterday, Tuesday, July 27, 1999, the Federal debt stood at $5,640,525,290,562.24 (Five trillion, six hundred forty billion, five hundred twenty-five million, two hundred ninety thousand, five hundred sixty-two dollars and twenty-four cents).

One year ago, July 27, 1998, the Federal debt stood at $5,539,293,000,000 (Five trillion, five hundred thirty-nine billion, two hundred ninety-three million).

Five years ago, July 27, 1994, the Federal debt stood at $1,634,715,000,000 (Four trillion, six hundred thirty-four billion, one hundred fifteen million).

Ten years ago, July 27, 1989, the Federal debt stood at $2,602,522,000,000 (Two trillion, eight hundred twenty-two million, two hundred ninety thousand, five hundred sixty-three million, two hundred forty billion, five hundred dollars and twenty-four cents) during the past 15 years.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The following bill was read twice and placed on the calendar:

H.R. 2488. An act to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 105 and 211 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2000.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on July 28, 1999, he had presented to the President of the United States, the following enrolled bills:

FAIRNESS IN TREATMENT—THE DRUG AND ALCOHOL ADDICTION RECOVERY ACT OF 1999

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation that will ensure that private health insurance companies cover the costs for drug and alcohol addiction treatment services at the same level that they pay for treatment for other diseases.

The purpose of this bill is to end discrimination in insurance coverage for drug and alcohol addiction treatment. This bill, entitled Fairness in Treatment: The Drug and Alcohol Addiction Recovery Act of 1999, offers the necessary provisions to provide this assurance.

For too long, the problem of drug and alcohol addiction has been viewed as a moral issue, rather than as a disease. Too often a cloak of secrecy has surrounded this problem, causing people who have this disease to feel ashamed and afraid to seek treatment for their symptoms for fear that they will be seen as admitting to a moral failure, or a weakness in character. We have all seen portrayals of alcoholics and addicts that are intended to be humorous or derogatory, and only reinforce the biases against people who have problems with drug and alcohol addiction. I cannot imagine this type of portrayal of someone who has another kind of chronic illness, a heart problem, or who happens to carry a gene that predisposes them to diabetes.

It has been shown that some forms of addiction have a genetic basis, and yet we still try to deny the serious medical nature of this disease. We think of those with this disease as somehow different from us. We forget that someone who has a problem with drugs or alcohol can look just like the person we see in the mirror, or the person sitting next to us at work or on the subway, or like someone in our own family. In fact, it is likely that most of us know someone who has experienced drug and alcohol addiction, within our families or our circle of friends or coworkers.

Alcoholism and drug addiction are painful, private struggles with staggering public costs. A study prepared by The Lewin Group for the National Institute on Drug Abuse and the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, estimated that the total economic cost of alcohol and drug abuse to be $246 billion for 1992. Of this cost, $38 billion was due to drug addiction to illicit drugs and other drugs taken for non-medical purposes. This estimate includes addiction treatment and prevention costs, as well as costs associated with related illnesses, reduced job productivity or lost earnings, and other costs to society such as crime and social welfare programs. This study also determined that these costs are borne primarily by governments (46 percent), followed by those who abuse drugs and members of their households.
Addiction to alcohol and drugs is a disease that affects the brain, the body, and the spirit. We must provide adequate opportunities for the treatment of addiction in order to help those who are suffering and to prevent the health and social problems that it causes. This legislation will take an important step in this direction by requiring that health insurance plans eliminate discrimination for addiction treatment. The costs for this are very low. A 1999 study by the Rand Corporation found that the cost to managed care health plans is now only about $5 per person per year for unlimited substance abuse treatment benefits to employees of big companies. A 1997 Milliman and Robertson study found that complete substance abuse treatment parity would increase per capita health insurance premiums by only one half of one percent, or less than $1 per member per month—without even considering any of the obvious savings that will result from treatment. Several studies have shown that for every $1 spent on treatment, more than $7 is saved in other health care expenses, and that these savings are in addition to the financial and other benefits of increased productivity, as well as participation in family and community life. Providing treatment for addiction also saves millions of dollars in the criminal justice system. Effective and helpful throughout our society includes private insurance plans—must share this responsibility.

This legislation does not mandate that health insurance offer substance addiction treatment benefits. What it does is prohibit discrimination by health plans who offer substance addiction treatment from placing unfair and life-threatening limitations on caps, access, or financial requirements for addiction treatment that are different from other medical and surgical services.

We must move forward now to vigorously address the serious and life-threatening problem of drug and alcohol addiction in our country. It is long past time that the costs of addictions do their fair share in bearing the responsibility for treating this disease.

I ask that the full text of the bill be printed in the Record.

The bill follows:
§ 2707. PARITY IN THE APPLICATION OF TREATMENT LIMITATIONS AND FINANCIAL REQUIREMENTS TO SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT BENEFITS

(a) In General.—In the case of a group health plan (or health insurance coverage offered in connection with such a plan) that provides both medical and surgical benefits and substance abuse treatment benefits, the plan or coverage shall not impose treatment limitations or financial requirements on the substance abuse treatment benefits unless similar limitations or requirements are imposed for medical and surgical benefits.

(b) Construction.—Nothing in this section shall be construed—

(1) as requiring a group health plan (or health insurance coverage offered in connection with such a plan) to provide any substance abuse treatment benefits; or

(2) to prevent a group health plan or a health insurance issuer offering group health insurance coverage from negotiating the level and type of reimbursement with a provider for care provided in accordance with this section.

(c) Small Employer Exemption.—

(1) In General.—This section shall not apply to any group health plan (and group health insurance coverage offered in connection with such a plan) that offers a participant or beneficiary two or more benefit package options under the plan, the requirements of this section shall be applied separately with respect to each such option.

(2) Definitions.—For purposes of this section—

(1) Treatment limitation.—The term ‘treatment limitation’ means, with respect to benefits under a group health plan or health insurance coverage, any day or visit limits imposed on coverage of benefits under the plan or coverage during a period of time.

(2) Financial requirement.—The term ‘financial requirement’ means, with respect to benefits under a group health plan or health insurance coverage, any deductible, coinsurance, or cost-sharing or an annual or lifetime dollar limit imposed with respect to the benefits under the plan or coverage.

(3) Medical or surgical benefits.—The term ‘medical or surgical benefits’ means benefits with respect to medical or surgical services, as defined under the terms of the plan or coverage, that the case may be, but does not include substance abuse treatment benefits.

(4) Substance abuse treatment benefits.—The term ‘substance abuse treatment benefits’ means benefits with respect to substance abuse treatment services.

(5) Substance abuse treatment services.—The term ‘substance abuse treatment services’ means any of the following items and services provided for the treatment of substance abuse:

(A) Inpatient treatment, including detoxification.

(B) Non-hospital residential treatment.

(C) Outpatient treatment, including screening and assessment, medication management, individual, group, and family counseling; and relapse prevention.

(D) Prevention services, including health education and individual and group counseling to encourage the reduction of risk factors for substance abuse.

(E) Substance abuse.—The term ‘substance abuse’ includes chemical dependency.

(F) Notice.—A group health plan under this part that offers a participant or beneficiary two or more benefit package options under the plan that offers a participant or beneficiary two or more benefit package options under the plan, the requirements of this section shall be applied separately with respect to each such option.

(G) Definitions.—For purposes of this section—

(1) Treatment limitation.—The term ‘treatment limitation’ means, with respect to benefits under a group health plan or health insurance coverage, any day or visit limits imposed on coverage of benefits under the plan or coverage during a period of time.

(2) Financial requirement.—The term ‘financial requirement’ means, with respect to benefits under a group health plan or health insurance coverage, any deductible, coinsurance, or cost-sharing or an annual or lifetime dollar limit imposed with respect to the benefits under the plan or coverage.

(3) Medical or surgical benefits.—The term ‘medical or surgical benefits’ means benefits with respect to medical or surgical services, as defined under the terms of the plan or coverage (as the case may be), but does not include substance abuse treatment benefits.

(4) Substance abuse treatment benefits.—The term ‘substance abuse treatment benefits’ means benefits with respect to substance abuse treatment services.

(5) Substance abuse treatment services.—The term ‘substance abuse treatment services’ means any of the following items and services provided for the treatment of substance abuse:
(a) Inpatient treatment, including detoxification services.

(b) Non-hospital residential treatment.

(c) Outpatient treatment, including screening and assessment, medication management, individual, group, and family counseling, and related services.

(d) Prevention services, including health education and individual and group counseling to encourage the reduction of risk factors for substance abuse.

(1) Substance Abuse.—The term ‘substance abuse’ includes chemical dependency.

(2) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall apply to plan years beginning before the date of enactment of this Act, as if such section applied to such employer and such issuer were a group health plan.

(3) INTERNAL REVENUE CODE AMENDMENTS.—

(A) In general.—Subchapter B of chapter 100 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by inserting after section 100 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 for purposes of sections and subsections of subchapter J pertaining to substance abuse treatment benefits unless limitations or financial requirements on the plan or coverage were not imposed on coverage of benefits under the plan or coverage during a period of time.

(B) Conforming amendments.—The term ‘substance abuse treatment benefits’ means benefits with respect to substance abuse treatment services.

(C) Prevention services, including health education and individual and group counseling to encourage the reduction of risk factors for substance abuse.

(D) Substance abuse.—The term ‘substance abuse’ includes chemical dependency.

For purposes of paragraph (B), any plan amendment made pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement relating to the plan, which amends the plan solely to conform to any requirement added by subsection (a) shall not be treated as a termination of such collective bargaining agreement, even if operated in the individual market on or after January 1, 2000.

(d) CONFORMING REGULATIONS.—Section 1041 of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 is amended by striking ‘‘this subtitle (and the amendments made by this Act)’’ and inserting ‘‘the provisions of part 7 of subtitle B of title II of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, and the provisions of parts 7 and 27 of subtitle B of title II of the Public Health Service Act, and chapter 1000 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986’’.
Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, today I am introducing with Senator Hollandings, Senator Biden, and Senator Graham an important piece of legislation that will help to protect and preserve Medicare. The bill is entitled the Medicare Waste Tax Reduction Act of 1999.

For over ten years now, I have worked to combat fraud, waste and abuse in the Medicare program. As Chairman and now Ranking Minority Member of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee with oversight of the administration of Medicare, I've held hearing after hearing and released reports after report documenting the extent of this problem. While virtually no one was paying attention to our effort for many years, we've succeeded in putting tax on the American people.

Part of our effort has been to try to quantify the scope of the problem. Several years ago, the General Accounting Office reported that up to 10 percent of Medicare funds could be lost to fraud, waste and abuse each year. Many questioned that estimate as too large. They said the problem existed, but it wasn't nearly as big as 10 percent. A few years ago, the Inspector General conducted the first-ever detailed audit of Medicare payments. That Chief Financial Officer Audit found that fully 14 percent of Medicare payments in 1996, or over $23 billion, had been made improperly.

To combat these substantial losses, we have put into place the reforms embodied in the Health Insurance Portability Act and the Balanced Budget Act. HCFA, the Inspector General and the Justice Department also have continued their aggressive enforcement activity to crack down on Medicare fraud, waste, and abuse. As a result, we have seen a dramatic decrease in these improper payments. According to the most recent Inspector General's report, improper payments had been reduced from $23.2 billion in 1996, to $20.3 billion in 1997, to $12.6 billion in 1998.

While I am very pleased with the successful efforts so far in combating fraud, waste, and abuse, that still amounts to a nearly $13 billion annual "waste tax" on the American people. Now is not the time to rest on our laurels. We must now question, what is the best way to move forward and further cut this tax. I know there are no "magic-wand" solutions—this is a complex problem with many components. But basically, you need four things: well thought out laws, adequate resources, effective implementation and the help of seniors and health providers. We've made progress on each of these fronts over the last couple of years, but much more remains to be done.

Mr. President, we have many thousands of dedicated health providers... who work very hard to improve the quality of life for all people. Through their efforts, Americans have the best quality of care in the world. But, unfortunately, there are a small minority of providers who take advantage of our health care system. This legislation is directly designed to deal with those situations. Further, it is clear that many mispayments to Medicare are the result of a simple lack of understanding of our often complex Medicare payment system. This legislation also addresses this problem by providing increased education and assistance for providers and by reducing the paperwork and administrative hassles that can often lead to innocent, but costly, billing errors.

The primary goal of this legislation is simply this—to ensure that Medicare pays for what it should pay for—and only what it should pay for.

The Medicare Waste Tax Reduction Act I am introducing today will take a number of important steps to stop the continued ravaging of Medicare. This bill, for example, would direct HCFA to double and better target audits and reviews to detect and discourage mispayments. Currently only a tiny fraction of Medicare claims are reviewed before being paid and less than 2 percent of providers receive a comprehensive audit annually. We must have the ability to separate needed care from bill padding and abuse.

Our bill would also give Medicare the authority to be a more prudent purchaser. As passed by the Senate, the Balanced Budget Act gave Medicare the authority to quickly reduce Part B payment rates (except those made for physician services) it finds to be grossly excessive when compared to rates paid by other government agencies and the private sector. In conference, the provision was limited to reductions of no more than 15 percent. This bill would restore the original Senate language. In addition, to assure that Medicare gets the price it deserves given its status as by far the largest purchaser of medical supplies and equipment, Medicare would pay no more than any other government program for these items. Finally, overpayments for prescription drugs and biologicals would be eliminated by lowering Medicare’s rate to the lowest of either the actual acquisition cost or 83% of the wholesale cost.

Our bill would also give the Secretary of Health and Human Services greater flexibility in contracting for claims processing and payment functions on behalf of Medicare beneficiaries and providers. It would update Medicare contracting procedures and bring it more in line with standard contract procedures already used across the Federal Government and therefore allow Medicare the ability to get much better value for its contracting dollars.

The Medicare Waste Tax reduction Act of 1999 would also ensure that Medicare does not pay for claims owed by other payers. Medicare pays claims that are owed by private insurers because it has no way of knowing a beneficiary is working and has private insurance that should pay first. This provision would reduce Medicare losses by requiring insurers to report any Medicare beneficiaries they insure. Also, Medicare would be given the authority to recover double the amount owed by insurers who purposely let Medicare pay claims they should have paid.

Additionally, coordination between Medicare and private insurers would be strengthened. Often, those ripping off Medicare are also defrauding private health plans. Yet, too little information Medicare rules is shared between Medicare and private plans. In order to encourage better coordination, health plans and their employees could not be held liable for sharing information with Medicare regarding health care fraud and abuse. The information is not false, or the person providing the information had no reason to believe the information was false.

Our bill would also expand the Medicare Senior Waste Patrol Nationwide. Seniors are our front line of defense against Medicare fraud, waste and abuse. However, too often, seniors don’t have the information they need to detect and report suspected mistakes and fraud. By moving the Waste Patrol nationwide, implementing important BBA provisions and assuring seniors have access to itemized bills we will strike an important blow to Medicare waste.

Another critical component of any successful Medicare plan to cut the Medicare waste tax is to focus on prevention. Most of our efforts now look at finding and rectifying the problems after they occur. While this is important and we need to do even more of it, we all know that prevention is much more cost effective. The old adage “A stitch in time saves nine” was never more true. A major component of an enhanced prevention effort would be the provision of increased assistance and education for providers to comply with Medicare’s rules and regulations.

Further, a great deal of the mis-payments made by Medicare are the result not of fraud or abuse, but of simple misunderstanding of Medicare billing rules by providers. Therefore, this bill provides $10 million a year to fund a major expansion of assistance and education for providers on program integrity requirements. This bill would also ensure the reduction of paperwork and administrative hassle that could prove cumbersome. Health professionals have to spend too much time completing paperwork and dealing with administrative hassles associated with Medicare and private health plans. In order to reduce this hassle and provide more time for patient care, the Institute of Medicine would be charged with developing a comprehensive plan by no later than June 1, 2000. Their recommendations are to include the streamlining of variations between Medicare and other payers.

Mr. President, while we have made changes to Medicare in attempts to extend its solvency thru the next decade, we urgently need to take other steps to protect and preserve the program for the long-term. We should enact the reforms in this bill to weed out waste, fraud and abuse as a first priority in this effort. I urge all my colleagues to review this proposal and hope that they will join me in working to pass it yet this year.

Mr President, I also ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"3502a. Exception of any Office of Inspector General General."
Today, manufactured housing has lowered the threshold to the American Dream of home ownership for millions of American families, including first-time home buyers, senior citizens, young families, and single parents.

With 5.3 million American household, it is imperative to update the laws that regulate the private sector solution to affordable housing. In order for the manufactured housing industry to remain competitive, Congress must modernize the National Manufactured Housing Construction and Safety Standards Act of 1974.

My bill would do just that. MHIA would establish a consensus committee that would submit recommendations to the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) for developing, amending, and revising the Federal Manufactured Home Construction and Safety Standards. In addition, the committee would be authorized to interpret the standards and recommend appropriate regulations. Consumers will still be protected by HUD because the Secretary will have absolute authority to reject any recommendations, for any reason, submitted by the consensus committee.

The Manufactured Housing Improvement Act would authorize the Secretary of HUD to use industry label fees for the administration of the consensus committee and the hiring of additional HUD staff in order to assure adequate consumer protection. The Secretary of HUD would also be authorized to use industry label fees to facilitate the availability and affordability of manufactured homes.

This legislation is a very significant step forward in that both consumer and industry representatives of the Senate Appropriations, 60 Plus, and the Council for Affordable and Rural Housing, the National Association of Affordable Housing Lenders, the National Steel Framing Alliance, and the Community Associations Institute, along with the Manufactured Housing Institute and the Manufactured Housing Association for Regulatory Reform, have endorsed this legislation.

The industry participants have modernized the quality and technology of manufactured housing. It's time for Congress to modernize the laws that regulate the industry that provides affordable housing and contributes more than $33 billion annually to our nation's economy.

Similar legislation passed the House at the end of last Congress on a bipartisan basis under suspension of the rules and has been introduced again this year. I hope this year the Senate will take the lead and send the MHIA to the President as soon as possible.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleague from Alabama, Senator SHELBY, to introduce the Manufactured Housing Improvement Act. This important legislation is designed to ensure that the manufactured housing industry continues to modernize by streamlining the requirements under the National Manufactured Housing Construction and Safety Standards Act of 1974. The bill also provides for the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) with the resources necessary to meet its obligations to manufactured homeowners.

Manufactured housing has evolved significantly in the last twenty-five years; it's no longer the stereotypical mobile home. In fact, the vast majority of manufactured homes installed today are never moved once they have been sited. At an average cost of $40,000 for a new manufactured home, excluding land, manufactured housing is the fastest way to provide homes for a growing industry. One in every four new single family homes sold in the United States is a manufactured home. Manufactured housing provides many American families with the opportunity to not only live in their own home, but to do so in safe, comfortable, and affordable housing.

In addition, improvements in construction have led to the development of aesthetically pleasing homes. Most manufactured homes built today are manufactured to resemble traditional site-built homes and are enjoyed by an array of Americans, including first time home buyers, senior citizens, and single parent families. Manufactured housing is an industry that not only provides affordable housing but also creates jobs. In my home state of Indiana, the manufactured housing industry employs more than 20,000 Hoosiers and has a total economic impact in my state of nearly $3 billion per year.

The Manufactured Housing Program at HUD, which oversees the industry, has faced many administrative challenges in the last decade. Lack of resources has prevented the program from keeping up with the changing needs of manufactured housing. While the industry has voluntarily implemented numerous code changes in recent years, many requests to review standards or regulations currently await action by HUD or have been turned down by HUD because the agency does not have adequate resources at the Department.

Ten years ago, the number of HUD employees assigned to this program was 34. Today, only 8 HUD employees are responsible for this program. With the rapid growth in housing technology, it is imperative that HUD not only address these standards but do so in a timely fashion, allowing the industry to remain competitive while providing homeowners with the most advanced modern housing.

Our legislation will remedy this situation by modernizing the program by implementing procedures in which all proposed construction and safety standards are addressed and considered in a reasonable time frame. The Manufactured Housing Improvement Act requires the Secretary to reject any proposed standard or regulation be taken within one year after it has been proposed to the Secretary. This is an important provision. It requires the Secretary to act, but protects consumers by authorizing the Secretary to reject any proposal which is deemed to be adverse to consumers.

Finally, through the use of industry labeling fees, this legislation provides economic resources to the Secretary for the hiring of additional HUD program staff. The costs of operating this program and the re-staffing of the manufactured housing program will continue to be borne by the manufactured housing industry, not the taxpayers. My bill ensures that best practices are applied to the housing industry and that we support the modernization of housing technology. Manufactured housing is a valuable housing resource and provides access to home ownership for many Americans. I look forward to working with my colleagues to enact this legislation.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, once again, I am joining Senator SHELBY and other colleagues to introduce legislation intended to strengthen the manufactured housing industry. Manufactured housing provides a major source of affordable housing for American families, including seniors. This industry represents almost thirty percent of new single-family homes sold in the United States. In my state of West Virginia, manufactured housing represents over 60 percent of new homes.

Manufactured housing should play a strong role to increase the availability of affordable housing. This issue will be especially important to seniors who, according to a national survey, forty-five percent of households living in manufactured homes are headed by a person over 50 years old.

Manufactured housing is affordable housing, and it is the fastest growing type of housing nationally. The average cost of a new manufactured home without land in 1997 was $38,400, even with land and installation fees this cost is well below the typical costs of a newly constructed site-built home.

But this industry faces challenges. Unlike other housing, manufactured housing is regulated by the 1974 National Manufactured Housing Construction and Safety Standards Act by the Department of Housing and Urban Development, (HUD). Because of reform in HUD management, the federal officials overseeing manufactured housing... have declined from 34 staff members at its peak to less than a dozen professional staff members. This decline in staffing has coincided with the same time that the industry has grown. Unfortunately, due to a lack of staff, HUD cannot keep pace with the need to update the code on a consistent basis and timely manner. In fact, between 1989 and 1996, a consensus committee was established by the United States Senate to come together and develop a new, comprehensive set of safety standards. Consumers will win if safety and standards will be re-tained and improved, not weakened. This is worth our combined effort to provide more affordable housing.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise today as a cosponsor of the Manufactured Housing Improvement Act. This Act has come about as a result of much negotiation between buyers of manufactured housing, the housing and Urban Development Agency and manufacturers and dealers of manufactured housing. I commend the industry for coming to Congress with its plan to modify the Federal Manufactured Home Construction and Safety Standards Act of 1974. Over twenty years has elapsed since we comprehensively addressed the topic of safety and manufactured housing. Manufactured housing has changed significantly in the past twenty years. With the rise in the national trend toward manufactured housing, it is time we ensure that safety standards are up-to-date and adequate to address consumers’ concerns.

The Senate bill has eleven sections that cover everything from the establishment of the Committee to section encouraging secondary market securitization programs for FHA manufactured home loans and other loan programs. The new Consensus Committee will consist of 25 voting members and one non-voting member representing the Secretary of HUD. The Committee will represent a wide spectrum of interested parties, including but not limited to, home producers, retailers, lenders, insurers, consumers, consumer organizations, local public officials, and fire marshals. The Committee will be responsible for recommending amendments to the current safety standards and enforcement regulations to HUD.

Moreover, there is no funding being authorized in this bill. The Secretary of HUD is authorized to use the industry label fees to carry out the responsibilities under the Act and to administer the Consensus Committee.

Not only does manufactured housing provide an affordable housing option for New Mexicans, the overall economic impact of the manufactured housing industry on New Mexico is significant. In 1998, the total economic impact on the state was over $264 million. About 3,157 people are familiar with the 157 retailers in the state, many are not aware that we also have two manufacturers located in the state. Last year, these manufacturers produced over 1,000 homes and the entire industry was responsible for employing more than 2,000 people. Anyone driving the highways of New Mexico is familiar with the site of a manufactured home moving across Interstate 40 or Interstate 25. However, many New Mexicans may not know that almost 7,000 homes were shipped into the state in 1998 alone.

Manufactured housing serves an important role in New Mexico. With the rising cost of homes in the metropolitan areas, and even in the smaller northern communities, manufactured housing that has a median cost of only $24,900 enable many more individuals and families to become homeowners. Currently, 41.8% of the housing in New Mexico is manufactured housing.

I think this bill is important not only to New Mexico but to all owners of manufactured housing. With a focus on construction safety standards, consumers will be safer and more secure in their new homes. Both the manufactured housing industry and the Congress need to take the concerns raised in the survey conducted by the American Association of Retired Persons seriously. The Consensus Committee created by this bill will play an important role in addressing construction and safety. I hope the Committee thoroughly evaluates the construction concerns and safety issues raised by those responding to AARP’s survey. It is critical to the success of this program that the owners, the builders and the regulators work together to achieve a higher level of safety and consumer satisfaction.

I thank Senator SHELBY for introducing this bill and I encourage the Senate to take up this bill and pass this worthwhile legislation.

By Mr. FRIST (for himself, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mr. BROWNBACK, and Mr. LIEBERMAN).

S. 1453. A bill to facilitate relief efforts and a comprehensive solution to the war in Sudan; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, the United States has a tradition of defending our national interests overseas to reflect our values: freedom from persecution, freedom from religious intolerance, and the inalienable rights of self-determination and economic opportunity. In the twentieth century alone, we have sacrificed so much to defend those interests worldwide, based on the belief that freedom is truly an inalienable right, not simply for Americans, but for all peoples. Even now, in Kosovo and in Bosnia, we have been the world leaders in defending against Genocide and oppression, believing that, although far away, injustice must be met with resolve.

Our response to the tragedy and injustice in Sudan has not been quite so aggressive. The radical Islamic regime in power in Sudan has coordinated a systematic campaign of terror against southern Sudan which includes calculated starvation, slavery, and the killing of innocent women and children. The war of low-level ethnic cleansing in Sudan has ground on for 16 years, claiming the lives of nearly 2 million and displacing over 4 million. That staggering number represents more dead than the wars in Bosnia, Kosovo, Somalia, Afghanistan, and Chechnya combined. In terms of loss of life, it has been the costliest war this century since the Second World War. After 10 years of feeding the starving, with the war no closer to resolution than it was in 1983 when it began, we must change our approach. While we have been very generous as a Nation in terms of humanitarian relief, we have done little to address the causes of the war.

Along with my colleagues, Senator Feingold, Senator Brownback, and Senator Lieberman, I am introducing the “Sudan Peace Act,” which aims to strengthen American policy and resolve to end the status quo.

The timing of this initiative is critical. The Government of Sudan has published a policy that would allow the incoming oil revenues to increase the tempo and lethality of the war. An increase in the lethality and tempo of the war would translate into more death and destruction, more shattered lives and more slaves. Thus, time is of the essence in supporting efforts to reach a comprehensive conclusion to the hostilities. Even under such grim circumstances, a glimmer of opportunity to push for a comprehensive solution to the conflict may be at hand. We must take full advantage of that chance, for without the leadership of the United States, the war will certainly drag on for many more years.

International relief operations have been in existence for 10 years with little change. The current arrangement allows Khartoum to manipulate our food donations as a weapon of mass destruction by vetoing United Nations’ relief flight plans in areas of rebel activity. Also, at a cost of over $1 million per day, the Administration is wounded by the potential for extreme donor fatigue.

We need a new policy using all points of pressure and directing all efforts toward a comprehensive negotiated solution. Reinventing and pursuing a peace process based on the Declaration of Principles, signed by the combatants in 1994, is the best means we have to push for a comprehensive solution at this time. So far, the Government of Sudan has refused to negotiate in good faith, choosing instead to continue the brutal war and create political divergence. The legislation does more than simply highlight the shameful lack of resolution internationally. It seeks to change our own policy to address the causes of the famine and the war.

The legislation gives the Secretary of State clear authority to commit all necessary diplomatic efforts toward reinvigorating the Inter-governmental Authority on Development (IGAD) peace process, including any necessary support for implementation of a settlement. It calls upon the leadership of the members of IGAD and the IGAD Partners Forum (IPF—a grouping of donors and multilateral organizations) to give all necessary support.

The combination of a Declaration of Principles on which a peace process should be based and the engagement of the IGAD Partners’ Forum bodes well for a reinvigoration of what has been a foundering process. The fact that IGAD is a credible regional organization adds to its potential success. The Declaration of Principles provides a First critical, measurable step to which the combatants can be held accountable.

The legislation supports the President’s sanctions against Sudan, sanctioning Sudan by designating it as a state sponsoring terrorism and targeting it with the potential for extreme donor fatigue.

We need a new policy using all points of pressure and directing all efforts toward a comprehensive negotiated solution. Reinventing and pursuing a peace process based on the Declaration of Principles, signed by the combatants in 1994, is the best means we have to push for a comprehensive solution at this time. So far, the Government of Sudan has refused to negotiate in good faith, choosing instead to continue the brutal war and create political divergences to any credible, binding process.

With a set of new or strengthened political and humanitarian tools, this legislation aims to push all players toward a comprehensive negotiated solution.

The Government of Sudan has long abetted the practice of slavery. Additionally, it has helped organize and coordinate militia, Popular Defense Forces, and more recently the holy wars ("muraheleen") to terrorize and sometimes enslave traditional agricultural and pastoralist tribes in the south and in the Nuba Mountains.

The legislation condemns the gross violations of human rights in Sudan—including slavery, the use of the denial and科尔结合油资源来增加战争的致命性。战争的致命性和速度的增加意味着更多的死亡和破坏，更多破碎的生活和更多奴隶。因此，时间对支持努力以实现全面和公平的结论至关重要。即使在如此严峻的形势下，仍有可能寻找解决冲突的机会。我们必须充分利用这一机会，因为如果没有美国的领导，战争将持续很久。

国际援助行动已经存在10年，但几乎没有变化。当前的安排允许苏丹操纵我们的粮食捐赠作为大规模破坏的工具，通过否决联合国的援助航班计划在叛军活动区域。此外，每天花费超过100万美元，但美国政府的行动却使潜在的援助疲劳加剧。

to protect current humanitarian operations. Like other capacity building measures in this legislation, enhancing the ability of those in areas outside of government control to defend themselves from government aggression will ultimately help to dissuade the government from continued prosecution of the war and will thus strengthen the ability to engage in a comprehensive peace process.

These are all critical measures and opportunities which the United States must seize. Our policy has not done enough to change the status quo. Our generous response, which began in 1989, has grown and continued to feed more of the starving, yet as a response to the war, it has grown tepid. Unless we do all we can to end the conflict in Sudan, we are part of the problem. For sixteen years we have witnessed the destruction of a nation and the loss of millions of lives, ground into dust as the world misses opportunity after opportunity to stop it.

S. 1454. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to expand the incentives for the construction and renovation of public schools and to provide tax incentives for corporations to participate in cooperative agreements with public schools in distressed areas; to the Committee on Finance.

S. 1454. PUBLIC SCHOOL MODERNIZATION AND OVERCROWDING RELIEF ACT OF 1999

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I have come before this chamber on numerous occasions to urge our colleagues to find a way to give states and localities the additional resources they so urgently need to build and renovate our nation's schools. In January, Senator LAUTENBERG and I, with several other colleagues, introduced the Public School Modernization Act of 1999. In March, Senators LAUTENBERG, HARKIN, and I were successful in offering an amendment to this year's budget resolution which called for $24.9 billion in zero-interest bonds as well as direct grants for school construction and repair. That amendment passed the Senate unanimously. Regrettably the Senate Finance Committee tax bill includes only minimal school infrastructure assistance, despite the opportunity we had in Committee to include much more substantial infrastructure relief.

Proposals regarding school construction have been offered from both sides of the aisle. Unfortunately, however, the debate about education infrastructure needs and the federal role to address those needs has too often been partisan and has been characterized by an inability or an unwillingness to recognize that there is no one-size-fits-all solution to the school construction dilemma facing many of our nation's school districts.

So today, I am pleased to be joined by Senators LAUTENBERG, CONRAD, HARKIN, KENNEDY, DASCHLE, LEVIN, CLELAND, DODD, TORRICELLI, SCHUMER, LINCOLN, JOHN-SON, WELLSTONE, KERRY, KREYER, and AKAKA in introducing legislation designed to combine various bipartisan school construction proposals to create a menu of school construction financing options. The Public School Modernization and Overcrowding Relief Act of 1999 will help school districts build new schools to accommodate the record enrollments of elementary and secondary students, improve learning conditions, and better use existing facilities. It will also help modernize schools to ensure that our children have the benefit of modern technology. And it will help repair old schools which have become outdated and unsafe.

Mr. President, 14 million children attend schools in need of extensive repair or replacement. Twelve million attend schools with leaky roofs, and 7 million attend schools with safety code violations. The President of the Maine Education Association testified before the Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee recently and stated that there are schools in Maine that actually turn the lights out when it rains because the electrical wiring is exposed under their leaky roofs.

Compounding the safety problem is the significant overcrowding in the nation's schools. Across the country, there are thousands and thousands of trailers used for instruction—over 3,000 are in use in Virginia alone. So instead of attending science class equipped with the latest technology to conduct biotechnology experiments, some children are going to class in poorly-ventilated portable trailers that can actually be harmful to their health.

Mr. President, Loudon County, Virginia will need to build 22 new schools over the next six years to accommodate its enormous population growth. Despite the help that our own Virginia General Assembly has approved, the state will only provide two to three percent of Virginia's total school infrastructure needs. This isn't just a Virginia phenomenon; it's a national crisis. The National Center for Education Statistics estimates that by 2003, the nation will need to build 2,400 new schools to accommodate record enrollments in our elementary and secondary schools.

In short, school boards should not be forced to choose between hiring an additional teacher or fixing a leaky roof. School superintendents should be installing computer labs, not basic air

Mr. President, the rapid spread of scholarship scams as such as Christopher step up prosecutions and impose tougher sentences. My legislation would encourage the Justice Department of pur-sure and prosecute more scholarship scam-artists, by providing an additional fines in fraud cases which involve the offering of educational services.

In addition, this legislation would increase the FTC's ability to enforce orders for disgorgement and redress to consumers. Senator FEINGOLD and I have been briefed by the FTC on its current problems enforcing judgments, and one particularly offensive example involves an abuse of consumer bankruptcy protections. Often, scholarship scam-artists use their fraudulent gains to buy expensive homes. When hit with dissetment and redress orders, they file for bankruptcy. And because most states exempt at least a portion of the value of residential property from bankruptcy estates, these con-artists are able to retain their ill-gotten gains in the form of their trophy homes.

After the bankruptcy proceeding clears their debts, the scam-artists may then sell their estates, keeping the money they have defrauded from students.

Our legislation would prevent con-artists from using their technique to avoid paying court judgments in this fashion. Residential property exemptations from bankruptcy are not intented to aid law-abiding people who find themselves in financial difficulty;

they were not meant to help scam-artists launder and protect ill-gotten suffering. And students should atten schools of the future, not relics of the past.

The legislation we offer today will allow school districts to issue tax-exempt bonds for school construction.

Localities will be able to save signifiicant amounts of money on capital improvement projects, as the federal government would give bondholders a tax credit in the amount of the interest that the locality would otherwise be required to pay. The legislation also knocks down a statutory hurdle which currently hinders more private sector involvement in public education by allowing private entities to pool resources with states and localities to build and renovate school buildings.

Furthermore, if a state or locality has previously issued bond, at a time when interest rates were high, this legislation would allow them to essentially refinance that debt to take advantage of today's lower interest rates. The legislation will also make it easier for smaller communities to issue a greater number of bonds without being subject to onerous arbitrage requirements. All of these provisions provide states and localities with choices. Under this legislation, our states and localities will be able to avail themselves of those provisions that best suit their financial needs. The bill creates a menu of options through which states and localties can assemble their own financing packages.

Mr. President, as a former governor,

I acknowledge that education is primarily a state and local responsibility.

The federal government, however, can be a helpful partner in education by helping to defray the cost of capital improvements without interfering with the substantive decisions that states and localities are struggling to make regarding their academic reform efforts. Providing a variety of financing options to fund capital improvements, therefore, is an imminently constructive role for the federal government to play. For our public education system to be the best in the world, all three levels of government—local, state, and federal—will have to work together.

I thank my colleagues who have co-sponsored this legislation, and I look forward to working with them to pass

it. It's flexible. It's sensible. And it provides the most financing options of any school construction proposal to date. I hope this legislation brings us one step closer to the compromise I know we can reach.

A bill to enhance protections against fraud in the offering of financial assistance for college education, and for other purposes.

SEC. 1: FINDINGS.

This section sets out Congressional findings concerning the high level of fraud that occurs in the offering of college education financial assistance services to consumers.

SEC. 2: ENHANCED CRIMINAL PENALTIES FOR COLLEGE EDUCATION FINANCIAL SERVICE FRAUD.

This section amends Chapter 63 of Title 18, United States Code, by adding at the end the following:

1348. Enhanced penalties for college education financial service assistance fraud
  (a) IN GENERAL.—A person who is convicted of an offense under section 1341, 1342, or 1343 of this title in connection with the obtaining or providing of any scholarship, grant, loan, tuition, discount, award, or other financial assistance for purposes of financing an education at an institution of higher education shall be fined under this title, imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.
  (b) OTHER PENALTIES.—Any penalties imposed under this section shall be in addition to any penalties under any of the sections referred to in subsection (a).
  (c) INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION DEFINED.—In the section, the term "institution of higher education" has the meaning given that term in section 101 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001).
  (d) CEREMONIAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of this chapter is amended by adding at the end the following: "1348. Enhanced penalties for college education financial service assistance fraud."

SEC. 3: EXCLUSION OF DEBTS RELATING TO COLLEGE EDUCATION FINANCIAL SERVICE ASSISTANCE FRAUD FROM PERMISSIBLE EXEMPTIONS OF PROPERTY FROM ESTATES IN BANKRUPTCY.

This section amends Section 522(c) of Title 11, United States Code, by adding a section that provides for a five-year, imprisonment not more than 10 years, or both, for college education financial service assistance fraud.

SEC. 4: EXCLUSION OF DEBTS RELATING TO COLLEGE EDUCATION FINANCIAL SERVICE ASSISTANCE FRAUD FROM PERMISSIBLE EXEMPTIONS OF PROPERTY FROM ESTATES IN BANKRUPTCY.

This provision amends Section 522(c) of Title 11 of the United States Code to allow property otherwise exempted in bankruptcy to be subject to disgorgement and redress orders resulting from college financial assistance services fraud.
This section requires the Secretary of Education to maintain a web page listing businesses and organizations offering financial assistance for purposes of financing an education. The section also requires consultation between the Secretary of Education and the Federal Trade Commission to ensure that a listed business is a legitimate offer of services, and specifies the circumstances under which a business or organization would be ineligible to be listed.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

At the request of Mrs. Hutchison, the name of the Senator from Montana (Mr. Burns) was added as a cosponsor of S. 50, a bill to improve options for excellence in education.

At the request of Mrs. Boxer, the name of the Senator from California (Mrs. Feinstein) was added as a cosponsor of S. 345, a bill to amend the Animal Welfare Act to remove the limitation that permits interstate movement of live birds, for the purpose of fighting, to States in which animal fighting is lawful.

At the request of Mr. Allard, the name of the Senator from Ohio (Mr. DeWine) was added as a cosponsor of S. 391, a bill to provide for payments to children's hospitals that operate graduate medical education programs.

At the request of Mr. Cochran, the name of the Senator from Idaho (Mr. Craig) was added as a cosponsor of S. 514, a bill to improve the National Writing Project.

At the request of Mr. Campbell, the names of the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. Frist) and the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Nickles) were added as cosponsors of S. 676, a bill to locate and secure the return of Zachary Baumel, a citizen of the United States, and other Israeli soldiers missing in action.

At the request of Mr. Kyl, the name of the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. Helms) was added as a cosponsor of S. 692, a bill to prohibit Internet gambling, and for other purposes.

At the request of Mr. DeWine, the name of the Senator from California (Mrs. Feinstein) was added as a cosponsor of S. 708, a bill to improve the administrative efficiency and effectiveness of the Nation's abuse and neglect courts and the quality and availability of training for judges, attorneys, and volunteers who work in such courts, and for other purposes consistent with the Adoption and Safe Families Act of 1997.

At the request of Mr. Feingold, the name of the Senator from Arkansas (Ms. Lincoln) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1035, a bill to establish a program to provide grants to expand the availability of public health dentistry programs in medically underserved areas, health professional shortage areas, and other Federally-defined areas that lack primary dental services.

At the request of Mr. Bond, the name of the Senator from Virginia (Mr. Warner) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1070, a bill to require the Secretary of Labor to wait for completion of a National Academy of Sciences study before promulgating a standard, regulation or guideline on ergonomics.

At the request of Mr. Lott, the name of the Senator from Maine (Ms. Collins) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1110, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to establish the National Institute of Biomedical Imaging and Engineering.

At the request of Mr. Voinovich, the name of the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. Torricelli) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1144, a bill to provide increased flexibility in use of highway funding, and for other purposes.

At the request of Mr. Ashcroft, the name of the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. Nickles) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1199, a bill to require the Secretary of State to report on United States citizens injured or killed by terrorist groups.

At the request of Ms. Snowe, the name of the Senator from Florida (Ms. Mikulski) was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 95, a resolution designating August 16, 1999, as "National Airborne Day."

At the request of Mr. Reid, the name of the Senator from Maryland (Ms. Mikulski) was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 99, a resolution designating November 20, 1999, as "National Survivors for Prevention of Suicide Day."

Amendment No. 1099

At the request of Mr. Stevens, the name of the Senator from Alaska (Mr. Murkowski) was added as a cosponsor of amendment No. 1099 intended to be proposed to S. 1233, an original bill making appropriations for Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies programs for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes.

Senate Resolution 168—Paying a Gratuity to Mary Lyda Nance

Mr. Helms (for himself and Mr. Biden) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. 1310

At the request of Ms. Collins, the name of the Senator from Kansas (Mr. Roberts) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1310, a bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to modify the interim payment system for home health services, and for other purposes.

S. 1345

At the request of Mr. Lautenberg, the name of the Senator from Nevada (Mr. Reid) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1345, a bill to amend title 18, United States Code, to prohibit certain interstate conduct relating to exotic animals.

S. 1362

At the request of Mr. Burns, the name of the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Ashcroft) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1362, a bill to establish a commission to study the airline industry and to recommend policies to ensure consumer information and choice.
Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is authorized and directed to pay, from the contingent fund of the Senate, to Mary Lyda Nance, widow of Admiral James W. Nance, an employee of the Senate at the time of his death, the sum of $200,000, that sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2000

CRAPO (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 1372
(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. CRAPO (for himself, Mr. Craig, and Mr. BURNS) submitted an amendment to be proposed by them to the bill (H.R. 2466) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes; as follows:

On page 10, line 16, after “herein,” insert the following: “of which not less than $750,000 shall be available for the development of a voluntary enrollment habitat conservation plan for cold water fish in cooperation with the States of Idaho and Montana (of which $150,000 shall be used to fund full-time positions of personnel to assist in the development of the plan and $300,000 shall be made available to each State for data collection, organizational, and related activities), and of which not more than $64,626,000 shall be available for habitat conservation, and”.

TAXPAYER REFUND ACT OF 1999

BROWNBACK AMENDMENT NO. 1373
(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. BROWNBACK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1429) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 104 of the congressional resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2000; as follows:

Beginning on page 11, strike line 18 and all that follows through page 32, line 14, and insert the following:

SEC. 201. ELIMINATION OF MARRIAGE PENALTY IN STANDARD DEDUCTION

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (2) of section 63(c) (relating to standard deduction) is amended to read as follows:

“(2) Basic standard deduction—For purposes of paragraph (1), the basic standard deduction—

(A) $4,000, plus 28% of the excess over $4,000.

(B) $6,250 in the case of a head of household (as defined in section 2(b)), or

(C) $4,250 in any other case.”

(b) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT TO APPLY IN DETERMINING RATES FOR 2000.—Subsection (f) of section 1 is amended—

(1) by striking “1993” in paragraph (1) and inserting “1997”;

(2) by striking “1992” in paragraph (3)(B) and inserting “1997”, and

(3) by striking paragraph (7).

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) The following provisions are each amended by striking “1992” and inserting “1997” each place it appears:

(A) Section 25A(h).

(B) Sections 23(j)(1)(B), (C) Section 41(e)(3)(C), (D) Section 68(b)(2)(B).

(E) Section 135(b)(2)(B)(i).

(F) Section 151(d)(4).

(G) Section 221(a)(1)(B).

(H) Section 512(d)(2)(B).

(I) Section 513(h)(2)(C)(ii).

(J) Section 871(a)(2).

(K) Sections 221(b)(2)(D)(1)(j)(i).

(L) Section 4001(e)(1)(B).

(M) Section 4261(e)(4)(A)(ii).

(N) Section 6079(d).

(2) Subclause (II) of section 2631(c) is amended by striking “1997” and inserting “1999”.

(3) Subparagraph (B) of section 59(2)(c) is amended by striking “, determined by substituting ‘1997’ for ‘1992’ in subparagraph (B)” therefor.

(4) Subparagraph (B) of section 132(f)(6) is amended by inserting before the period “, determined by substituting ‘calendar year 1997’ for ‘calendar year 1992’ in subparagraph (B)” therefor.

(5) Paragraph (2) of section 220(g) of such Code is amended by striking “by substituting ‘calendar year 1999’ for ‘calendar year 1992’” in subparagraph (B) therefor.

(6) Subparagraph (B) of section 685(c)(3) is amended by striking “by substituting ‘calendar year 1997’ for ‘calendar year 1992’” in subparagraph (B) therefor.

(7) Subparagraph (B) of section 2322A(a)(3) is amended by striking “by substituting ‘calendar year 1999’ for calendar year 1992” in subparagraph (B) therefor.

(8) Subparagraph (B) of section 2503(b)(2) is amended by striking “by substituting ‘calendar year 1997’ for calendar year 1992” in subparagraph (B) therefor.

(9) Paragraph (2) of section 2631(c) is amended by striking “by substituting ‘calendar year 1997’ for calendar year 1992” in subparagraph (B) therefor.

(11) Sections 4681(b)(1), 511(b)(1), 641(a), 641(d)(2)(A), and 685(d) are each amended by striking “section 1(e)” each place it appears and inserting “section 1(d)”.

(12) Sections 1(e)(2) and 904(b)(3)(E)(ii) are each amended by striking “(d), (e)” and inserting “(d)”.

(13) Paragraph (1) of section 1(f) is amended by striking “(d) and (e)” and inserting “(d)”.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1999.
Section 101. Credit for certain energy-efficient property used in business.

(a) In general.—Subpart E of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 relating to rules for computing investment credit) is amended by inserting after section 48 the following:

"SEC. 48A. ENERGY CREDIT."

"(a) In general.—For purposes of section 46, the credit for any taxable year is the sum of—

"(1) the amount equal to the energy percentage of the basis of each energy property placed in service during such taxable year, and

"(2) the credit amount for each qualified hybrid vehicle placed in service during the taxable year.

(b) Energy Percentage.—

"(1) In general.—The energy percentage is—"(A) except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, 10 percent,

"(B) in the case of energy property described in clauses (i), (iii), (vi), (vii), and (viii) of subsection (c)(1)(A), 20 percent,

"(C) in the case of energy property described in subsection (c)(1)(A)(v), 15 percent, and

"(D) in the case of energy property described in subsection (c)(1)(A)(ii) relating to a high risk geothermal well, 20 percent.

(2) Coordination with rehabilitation.—The energy percentage shall not apply to that portion of the basis of any property which is attributable to qualified rehabilitation expenditures.

(c) Energy Property Defined.—

"(1) In general.—For purposes of this subpart, the term ‘energy property’ means any property—

"(A) which is—

"(i) solar energy property,

"(ii) geothermal energy property,

"(iii) energy-efficient building property,

"(iv) combined heat and power system property,

"(v) low core loss distribution transformer property,

"(vi) fuel-efficient farm equipment property,

"(vii) qualified aerobic digester property, or

"(viii) qualified wind energy systems equipment property.

"(B)(i) the construction, reconstruction, or erection of which is completed by the taxpayer,

"(ii) which is acquired by the taxpayer if the original use of such property commences with the taxpayer,

"(C) which can reasonably be expected to remain in operation for at least 5 years.

(2) Deduction for percentage depletion for oil and gas properties.

TITLE VIII—RENEWABLE POWER GENERATION

Sec. 801. Credit for investment in photovoltaic and wind property manufacturing facilities.

Sec. 802. Modifications to credit for electricity produced from renewable resources.

Sec. 803. Proportional credit for producing electricity through co-firing.

Sec. 804. Credit for capital costs of qualified biomass-based generating system.

TITLE IX—STEELMAKING

Sec. 901. Credit for energy-efficient steelmaking capacity.

Sec. 902. Extension of credit for electricity to production from steel cogeneration.

TITLE X—AGRICULTURE

Sec. 1001. Agricultural conservation tax credit.
"(1) Solar Energy Property.—
   "(A) In General.—The term ‘solar energy property’ means general solar energy property, solar water heating property, and photovoltaic property.
   "(B) General Solar Energy Property.—The term ‘general solar energy property’ means property which uses solar energy to generate electricity, to heat or cool a structure, or to provide solar process heat.
   "(C) Solar Water Heating Property.—
      "(i) In General.—The term ‘solar water heating property’ means property which, when installed in connection with a structure, uses solar energy for the purpose of providing hot water for use within such structure.
      "(ii) Limitation on Amount of Credit.—The credit under subsection (a)(1) for the taxable year with respect to solar water heating property shall not exceed $1,000.
      "(iii) Election to Treat Property as Solar Water Heating Property.—Property that is both general solar energy property and solar water heating property shall be treated as general solar energy property for purposes of this section unless the taxpayer elects to treat such property as being only solar water heating property. If such an election is made the energy percentage under subsection (a)(1) shall be 15 percent in lieu of 10 percent.
   "(D) Photovoltaic Property.—
      "(i) In General.—The term ‘photovoltaic property’ means property which, when installed in connection with a structure, uses a solar photovoltaic process to generate electricity for use in such dwelling.
      "(ii) Limitation on Amount of Credit.—The credit under subsection (a)(1) for the taxable year with respect to photovoltaic property shall not exceed $2,000.
   "(E) Swimming Pools, Etc., Used as Storage Medium.—The term ‘solar energy property’ shall not include property with respect to which expenditures are properly allocable to a swimming pool, hot tub, or any other energy storage medium which has a function other than the function of such storage.
   "(F) Solar Panels.—No solar panel or other property installed as a roof (or portion thereof) shall fail to be treated as solar energy property solely because it constitutes a structural component of the structure on which it is installed.
   "(G) Geothermal Energy Property.—
      "(A) In General.—The term ‘geothermal energy property’ means equipment used to produce, distribute, or use energy derived from a geothermal deposit (within the meaning of section 613(e)(2)) which requires high risk drilling techniques. Such deposit may not be located in a State or national park or in an area in which the relevant State park authority or the National Park Service determines the development of such a deposit will negatively impact on a State or national park.
      "(B) High Risk Geothermal Well.—The term ‘high risk geothermal well’ means a geothermal deposit (within the meaning of section 613(e)(2)) which requires high risk drilling techniques. Such deposit may not be located in a State or national park or in an area in which the relevant State park authority or the National Park Service determines the development of such a deposit will negatively impact on a State or national park.
      "(C) Energy-Efficient Building Property.—
         "(i) In General.—The term ‘energy-efficient building property’ means—
             "(i) a fuel cell that—"(I) generates electricity and heat using an electrochemical process,
                 "(II) has an electricity-only generation efficiency greater than 35 percent, and
             "(ii) an electric heat pump hot water heater that—"(I) reduces standby and vent losses, and
                 "(II) has an energy efficiency ratio of 13 or greater,
         "(D) Solar Panels.—No solar panel or other property installed as a roof (or portion thereof) shall fail to be treated as solar energy property solely because it constitutes a structural component of the structure on which it is installed.
      "(E) Low Core Loss Distribution Transformer Property.—The term ‘low core loss distribution transformer property’ means a distribution transformer which has energy savings (from a highly efficient core of at least 20 percent more than the average for power ratings reported by studies required under section 124 of the Energy Policy Act of 1992.
      "(F) Fuel-Efficient Farm Equipment Property.—The term ‘fuel-efficient farm equipment property’ means equipment used in a farming business (as defined in section 263A(e)(4)) which achieves a fuel efficiency level equal to or greater than the 90th percentile of that type of equipment for the year in which such equipment is placed in service.
      "(G) Qualified Aerobic Digester Property.—The term ‘qualified aerobic digester property’ means an aerobic digester for manure or crop waste that achieves at least 65 percent efficiency measured in terms of the fraction of energy input converted to electricity and useful thermal energy.
      "(H) Qualified Wind Energy Systems Equipment Property.—The term ‘qualified wind energy systems equipment property’ means wind energy systems equipment with a turbine size of not more than 50 kilowatts rated capacity.
      "(I) Qualified Hybrid Vehicles.—For purposes of subsection (a)(2)— "(1) Credit Amount.—
             "(A) In General.—The credit for each qualified hybrid vehicle with a rechargeable energy storage system that provides the applicable percentage of the maximum available power shall be the amount specified in the following table:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Applicable percentage</th>
<th>Credit amount in $</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Greater than or equal to 5 percent</td>
<td>$500</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10 percent</td>
<td>$1,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20 percent</td>
<td>$1,500</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>30 percent</td>
<td>$2,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

      "(B) Increase in Credit Amount for Regenerative Braking System.—In the case of a qualified hybrid vehicle that actively employs a regenerative braking system which supplies to the rechargeable energy storage system the applicable percentage of the energy available from braking in a typical 60 miles per hour to 0 miles per hour braking event, the credit amount determined under subparagraph (A) shall be increased by the amount specified in the following table:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Applicable percentage</th>
<th>Credit amount in $</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Greater than or equal to 20 percent</td>
<td>$250</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>40 percent</td>
<td>$500</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>60 percent</td>
<td>$1,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

      "(C) Qualified Hybrid Vehicle.—The term ‘qualified hybrid vehicle means an automobile that meets the applicable requirements and that can draw propulsion energy from both of the following on-board sources of stored energy:
         "(1) A consumable fuel.
         "(2) A rechargeable energy storage system.
      "(D) Maximum Available Power.—The term ‘maximum available power’ means the maximum value of the sum of the heat engine and electric drive system power or other non-heat energy conversion devices available for a driver’s command for maximum acceleration at vehicle speeds under 75 miles per hour.

"(4) AUTOMOBILE.—The term ‘automobile’ has the same meaning as such term in section 4064(b)(1) (without regard to subparagraphs (B) and (C) thereof). A vehicle shall not fail to be treated as an automobile solely by reason of weight if such vehicle is rated at 8,500 pounds gross vehicle weight rating or less.

"(5) DOUBLE BENEFIT: PROPERTY USED OUTSIDE UNITED STATES, ETC., NOT QUALIFIED.—No credit shall be allowed under subsection (a)(2) with respect to—

(A) any property for which a credit is allowed under section 25B or 30,

(B) any property referred to in section 50(b), and

(C) the portion of the amount of any property taken into account under section 179 or 179A.

(6) REGULATIONS.—

(A) TREASURY.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this paragraph.

(B) ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY.—The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this paragraph.

(7) TERMINATION.—Paragraph (2) shall not apply with respect to any vehicle placed in service during a calendar year ending before January 1, 2003, or after December 31, 2003.

(8) SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

(1) SPECIAL RULE FOR PROPERTY FINANCED BY SUBSIDIZED ENERGY FINANCING OR INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BONDS.—

(A) REDUCTION OF BASIS.—For purposes of applying the energy percentage to any property, if such property is financed in whole or in part by—

(i) subsidized energy financing, or

(ii) the proceeds of a private activity bond (within the meaning of section 141) the interest on which is exempt from tax under section 103, the amount taken into account as the basis of such property shall be reduced by the amount which (but for this subparagraph) would be so taken into account multiplied by the fraction determined under subparagraph (B).

(B) DETERMINATION OF FRACTION.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the fraction determined under this subparagraph is reduced by a fraction—

(i) the numerator of which is that portion of the basis of the property which is allocable to such financing or proceeds, and

(ii) the denominator of which is the basis of the property.

(C) SUBSIDIZED ENERGY FINANCING.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term ‘subsidized energy financing’ means financing provided under a Federal, State, or local program, a principal purpose of which is to provide subsidized financing for projects designed to conserve or produce energy.

(2) CONFORMING RULES MADE APPLICABLE.—Rules similar to the rules of subsections (c)(4) and (d) of section 46 (as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of the Revenue Reconciliation Act of 1990) shall apply for purposes of this section.

(9) APPLICATION OF SECTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided by paragraph (2) and subsection (e), this section shall apply to property placed in service after December 31, 1999, and before January 1, 2003.

(2) EXCEPTIONS.—

(A) SOLAR ENERGY, GEOTHERMAL ENERGY, AND LOW CORE LOSS DISTRIBUTION TRANSFORMER PROPERTY.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to substantial solar energy property or geothermal energy property.

(B) PHOTOVOLTAIC PROPERTY.—In the case of photovoltaic property, this section shall apply to property placed in service after December 31, 1999, and before January 1, 2006.

(C) FUEL CELL PROPERTY.—In the case of fuel cell property, this section shall apply to property placed in service after December 31, 1999, and before January 1, 2005.

(3) ENERGY CREDIT ALLOWABLE AGAINST ENTIRE REGULAR TAX AND ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX.—

(I) IN GENERAL.—Section 38(c) (relating to limitation based on amount of tax) is amended by—

(A) redesignating paragraph (3) as paragraph (4) and by inserting after paragraph (2) the following:

(3) SPECIAL RULES FOR ENERGY CREDIT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a C corporation, section 39 shall be applied separately—

(i) with respect to so much of the credit allowed by subsection (a) as is not attributable to the energy credit, and

(ii) with respect to the energy credit.

(B) RULES FOR APPLICATION OF ENERGY CREDIT.—

(I) IN GENERAL.—In the case of the energy credit, of applying the preceding paragraphs of this section, the amount of such credit allowed under subsection (a) for any taxable year shall not exceed the net capital gains tax for the taxable year which is equal to the amount of the credit determined for such taxable year under section 48A(a).

(II) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT.—In the case of a C corporation, this section and section 39 shall be applied separately—

(i) with respect to so much of the credit allowed by subsection (a) as is not attributable to the energy credit, and

(ii) with respect to the energy credit.

(II) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a C corporation for the taxable year for expenses for energy property (determined without regard to section 48A(c)) with respect to the portion of the energy credit which is attributable to the credit described in paragraph (3)(A) of section 48A(f), this section shall apply to property placed in service after December 31, 1999, and before January 1, 2005.

(3) LEASED PROPERTY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Nothing in this section shall apply to property leased after December 31, 1999, by an individual or a C corporation who is treated as owning such property.

(B) EXCEPTIONS.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a C corporation, there shall be allowed as a credit for the taxable year an amount equal to the sum of—

(A) the amount of the credit allowable for the taxable year under section 48A (determined without regard to section 38(c)), excessed by—

(B) the amount allowable as a deduction for the taxable year for expenses for energy property (determined without regard to section 48A(c)) with respect to the portion of such property which is attributable to the credit determined for such taxable year under section 48A(a).
during the taxable year which is a qualified hybrid vehicle (as defined in section 48A(f)(2)), and

"(C) the credit amount specified in the following table for a new, highly energy-efficiency principal residence:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>New, Highly Energy-Efficient Principal Residence</th>
<th>Credit Amount</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Residence:</td>

<tr>
<td>40 percent property</td>
<td>$1,500</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>50 percent property</td>
<td>$2,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

"(2) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—The applicable percentage shall be determined in accordance with the following table:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Percentage of capital cost</th>
<th>Beginning on</th>
<th>Ending on</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>20 percent</td>
<td>1/1/2000</td>

</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

"(B) Periods for which percentage not specified.—In the case of any residential energy property, the applicable percentage shall be zero for any period for which an applicable percentage is not specified for such property under subparagraph (A).

"(B) Maximum Credit.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of property described in the following table, the amount of the credit allowed under subsection (a)(1)(A) for the taxable year for each item of such property with respect to a dwelling unit shall not exceed the amount specified for such property in such table:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>

"(2) Coordination of Limitations.—If a credit is allowed to the taxpayer for any taxable year by reason of an acquisition of a new, highly energy-efficient principal residence, no other credit shall be allowed under subsection (a)(1)(A) with respect to such residence during the 1-taxable year period beginning with such taxable year.

"(3) Definitions.—For purposes of this section:

"(1) Residential Energy Property Expenditures.—The term 'residential energy property expenditures' means expenditures made by the taxpayer for qualified energy property installed on or in connection with a dwelling unit which:

"(A) is located in the United States, and

"(B) is used by the taxpayer as a residence.

Such term includes expenditures for labor costs properly allocable to the onsite preparation, assembly, or original installation of the property.

"(2) Qualified Energy Property.—

"(A) In General.—The term 'qualified energy property' means—

"(i) energy-efficient building property,

"(ii) solar water heating property, and

"(iii) photovoltaic property.

"(B) Swimming Pool, etc., used as Storage Medium.—For purposes of this paragraph, the provisions of subparagraphs (D) and (E) of section 48A(e)(1) shall apply.

"(3) Energy-Efficient Building Property.—

"(A) In General.—The term 'energy-efficient building property' has the meaning given to such term by paragraphs (3) and (4) of section 48A(e).

"(4) Solar Water Heating Property.—The term 'solar water heating property' means property which, when installed in connection with a structure, uses solar energy for the purpose of providing hot water for use within such structure.

"(5) Photovoltaic Property.—The term 'photovoltaic property' has the meaning given to such term by paragraphs (3) and (4) of section 48A(e).

"(B) Coordination of Limitations.—The term 'principal residence' has the same meaning as the term 'principle residence' as determined according to the requirements specified in clause (ii).

"(6) New, Highly Energy-Efficient Principal Residence.—

"(A) In General.—Property is a new, highly energy-efficient principal residence if—"(i) such property is located in the United States,

"(ii) the original use of such property commences with the taxpayer and is, at the time of such use, the principal residence of the taxpayer, and

"(iii) such property is certified before such use commences as being 50 percent property, 40 percent property, or 30 percent property.

"(B) 50, 40, or 30 Percent Property.—

"(1) In General.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), property is 50 percent property, 40 percent property, or 30 percent property if the projected energy usage of such property is reduced by 50 percent, 40 percent, or 30 percent, respectively, compared to the energy usage of a reference house that complies with minimum standard practice, such as the 1998 International Energy Conservation Code of the International Code Council, as determined according to the requirements specified in clause (ii).

"(ii) Procedures.—

"(I) In General.—For purposes of clause (i), energy usage shall be demonstrated either by a component-based approach or a performance-based approach.

"(II) Component Approach.—Compliance by the component approach is achieved when all of the components of the house comply with the requirements of prescriptive packages established by the Secretary of Energy, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, such that they are equivalent to the results of using the performance-based approach of subclause (III) to achieve the required reduction in energy usage.

"(III) Performance-Based Approach.—Performance-based compliance shall be demonstrated in terms of the required percentage reductions in projected energy use. Computer software used in support of performance-based compliance must meet all of the specifications and methods for calculating energy savings reductions that are promulgated by the Secretary of Energy. Such regulations and specifications for software shall be based in the 1998 California Residential Alternative Calculation Method Approval Manual, except that the calculation procedures as shall be developed such that the same energy efficiency measures qualify a home for tax credits regardless of whether the home uses a gas or oil furnace or boiler, or electric heat pump.

"(IV) Approval of Software Submissions.—The Secretary of Energy shall approve software submissions that comply with the calculation requirements of subclause (III).

"(C) Determinations of Compliance.—A determination of compliance made for the purposes of this paragraph shall be filed with the Secretary of Energy within 1 year of the date of such determination and shall include the TIN of the certifier, the address of the certifier's place of business, the date of determination, the person for whom such determination was performed. Determinations of compliance filed with the Secretary of Energy shall be available for inspection by the Secretary.

"(D) Compliance.—

"(1) In General.—The Secretary of Energy in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury shall establish requirements for certification and compliance procedures after examining the requirements for energy compliance and home energy rating systems specified by the Mortgage Industry National Accreditation Procedures for Home Energy Rating Systems.

"(2) Individuals Qualified to Determine Compliance.—Individuals qualified to determine compliance shall be those individuals who are recognized by an organization certified by the Secretary of Energy for such purposes.

"(3) Principal Residence.—The term 'principal residence' shall be based in the 1998 California Residential Alternative Calculation Method Approval Manual, except that the period for which a building is treated as the principal residence of the taxpayer shall also include the 60-day period ending on the 1st day of the 1st month in which it would be a principal residence if this paragraph first be treated as his principal residence.

"(4) Special Rules.—For purposes of this section:

"(1) Dollar Amounts in Case of Joint Occupancy.—In the case of any dwelling unit which if jointly occupied and used during any calendar year as a residence by 2 or more individuals the following shall apply:

(A) The amount of the credit allowable under subsection (a) by such individuals made during such calendar year by any of such individuals with respect to such dwelling unit shall be determined by treating such individuals as 1 taxpayer whose taxable year is such calendar year.

(B) There shall be allowable with respect to such expenditures to each of such individuals, a credit under subsection (a) for the taxable year in which such calendar year ends in an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount determined under subparagraph (A) as the amount of such expenditures made by such individual during such calendar year bears to the aggregate of such expenditures made by all of such individuals during such calendar year.

"(2) Tenant-Stockholder in Cooperative Housing Corporation.—In the case of an individual who is a tenant-stockholder (as defined in section 216) in a cooperative housing corporation (as defined in such section), such individual shall be treated as having made his tenant-stockholder interest in such corporation (as defined in section 216(b)(3)) of any expenditures of such corporation.

"(3) Condominiums.—

"(1) In General.—In the case of an individual who is a member of a condominium association with respect to a condominium which he owns, such individual shall be treated as having made his proportionate share of any expenditures of such association.
(B) CONDOMINIUM MANAGEMENT ASSOCIATION.—In this paragraph, the term ‘condominium management association’ means an organization which meets the requirements of paragraph (1) of section 52(b)(c) (other than subparagraph (E) thereof) with respect to a condominium project substantially all of the units of which are used as residences.

(4) OWNERSHIP OF ENERGY ITEMS.—
"(A) IN GENERAL.—Any expenditure otherwise qualifying as a residential energy property expenditure shall not be treated as failing to qualify merely because such expenditure was made with respect to 2 or more dwelling units.

"(B) LIMITS APPLIED SEPARATELY.—In the case of any expenditure described in subparagraph (A), the amount of the credit allowable under subsection (a) shall (subject to paragraph (1)) be computed separately with respect to the amount of the expenditure made for each dwelling unit.

"(5) ALLOCATION IN CERTAIN CASES.—
"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), if less than 80 percent of the use of an item is for nonbusiness purposes, only that portion of the expenditures for such item which is properly allocable to use for nonbusiness purposes shall be taken into account. For purposes of this paragraph, use for a swimming pool shall be treated as use which is not for nonbusiness purposes.

"(B) PARTIAL USE FOR VEHICLES.—For purposes of this section and section 48A, a vehicle shall be treated as used entirely for business purposes if the majority of the use of such vehicle is for business or nonbusiness purposes, as the case may be.

"(6) DOUBLE BENEFIT; PROPERTY USED OUTSIDE UNITED STATES, ETC., NOT QUALIFIED.—
"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), an expenditure with respect to a condominium project shall be treated as used entirely for business purposes of this paragraph, for purposes of this section and section 48A, a vehicle shall be treated as used entirely for business purposes if the majority of the use of such vehicle is for business or nonbusiness purposes, as the case may be.

"(B) DOUBLE BENEFIT; PROPERTY USED OUTSIDE UNITED STATES, ETC., NOT QUALIFIED.—
"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), an expenditure with respect to a condominium project shall be treated as used entirely for business purposes of this paragraph, for purposes of this section and section 48A, a vehicle shall be treated as used entirely for business purposes if the majority of the use of such vehicle is for business or nonbusiness purposes, as the case may be.

"(7) EXPENDITURE MADE; AMOUNT ON EXPENDITURE.—
"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), an expenditure with respect to a condominium project shall be treated as made when the original installation of the item is completed.

"(B) EXPENDITURES PART OF BUILDING CONSTRUCTION.—In the case of an expenditure in connection with the construction of a structure, such expenditure shall be treated as made when the original use of the constructed structure by the taxpayer begins.

"(C) AMOUNT.—The amount of any expenditure shall be the cost thereof.

"(D) PROPERTY FINANCED BY SUBSIDIZED ENERGY FINANCING.—
"(A) REDUCTION OF EXPENDITURES.—For purposes of determining the amount of residential energy property expenditures made by any individual with respect to any dwelling unit, there shall not be taken in to account expenditures which are made from subsidized energy financing (as defined in section 48A(b)(2)).

"(B) DOLLAR LIMITS REDUCED.—The dollar amounts in the table contained in subsection (b)(1) with respect to each property purchased for a dwelling unit for any taxable year of such taxpayer shall be reduced proportionately by an amount equal to the sum of—

"(i) the amount of the expenditures made by the taxpayer during such taxable year with respect to such dwelling unit and not taken into account by reason of subparagraph (A), and

"(ii) the amount of any Federal, State, or local grant received by the taxpayer during such taxable year which is used to make residential energy property expenditures with respect to the dwelling unit and is not included in the gross income of such taxpayer.

"(B) LIMITS APPLIED SEPARATELY.—For purposes of this paragraph, if a credit is allowed under this section for any expenditure with respect to any property, the increase in the basis of such property which would (but for this subsection) result from such expenditure shall not be reduced by the amount of the credit so allowed.

"(A) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—
"(1) Section 1016(a) is amended by striking “and” at the end of paragraph (26), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (27) and adding, at the end of the following:

‘‘(28) to the extent provided in section 25B(e), in the case of amounts with respect to which a credit has been allowed under section 25B.’’

"(2) The table of subparts for part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 is amended by striking the item relating to section 25A the following:

‘‘Sec. 25B. Nonbusiness energy property.’’

"(C) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to expenditures after December 31, 1999.

TITLE III—ALTERNATIVE FUELS

SEC. 301. ALLOCATION OF ALCOHOL FUELS CREDIT TO PATRONS OF A COOPERATIVE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 40(d)(relating to alcohol used as fuel) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(A) ALLOCATION OF SMALL ETHANOL PRODUCE CREDIT TO PATRONS OF COOPERATIVE.—

"(B) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a cooperative organization described in section 1381(a), any portion of the credit determined under subsection (a)(3) for the taxable year may, at the election of the organization made on a timely filed return (including extensions for such year) in the case of amounts in the table contained in subsection 25(b) of the amount of the expenditures made with respect to a condominium project during the period at the end of paragraph (27) and adding, at the end of the following:

"(2) The table of subparts for part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 is amended by striking the item relating to section 25A the following:

‘‘Sec. 25B. Nonbusiness energy property.’’

"(C) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to property placed in service after the date of the enactment of this Act.

TITLE V—CLEAN COAL TECHNOLOGIES

SEC. 301. CREDIT FOR INVESTMENT IN QUALIFYING CLEAN COAL TECHNOLOGY.

(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—For purposes of section 46 relating to qualified coal technology facility credit, $4B, and section 48A relating to qualified clean coal technology facility credit, section 6(b) relating to qualified coal technology facility credit, section 6(b) relating to qualified clean coal technology facility credit, section 6(b), the term ‘qualified clean coal technology facility’ means a facility of the taxpayer—

"(A)(i) the original use of which commenced with the taxpayer or the reconstruction of which is completed by the taxpayer (but only with respect to that portion of the basis which is properly attributable to such reconstruction.

(2) The Secretary shall provide that—

(ii) that is acquired through purchase (as defined by section 179(d)(2)),

(B) that is depreciable under section 167,

(C) which has a useful life of not less than 4 years, and

(D) that is used for qualifying clean coal technology.

(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR SALE-LEASEBACKS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A) of paragraph (1), in the case of a facility that—

(A) is originally placed in service by a person,

(B) is sold and leased back by such person, or is leased to such person, within 3 months after the date such facility was originally placed in service, for a period of not less than 12 years, such facility shall be treated as originally placed in service not earlier than the date on which such property is used under the lease-back (or lease) referred to in subparagraph (B). The preceding sentence shall not apply to any property if the lessor and lessee of such property execute an election under section 168(f).

Such an election, once made, may be revoked only with the consent of the Secretary.

(3) QUALIFYING CLEAN COAL TECHNOLOGY.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(D)—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘qualifying clean coal technology’ means, with respect to—

(i) applications totaling 1,000 megawatts of advanced pulverized coal or atmospheric fluidized bed combustion technology installed as a new, retrofit, or repowering application and operated between 2000 and 2013 that has a design average net heat rate of not more than 8,750 Btu’s per kilowatt hour,

(ii) applications totaling 1,500 megawatts of pressurized fluidized bed combustion technology installed as a new, retrofit, or repowering application and operated between 2000 and 2013 that has a design average net heat rate of not more than 8,500 Btu’s per kilowatt hour,

(iii) applications totaling 1,500 megawatts of integrated gasification combined cycle, and

(iv) applications totaling 2,000 megawatts of equivalent of technology for the production of electricity installed as a new, retrofit, or repowering application and operated between 2000 and 2013 that has a carbon emission rate that is not more than 85 percent of conventional technology.

(B) EXCEPTIONS.—Such term shall not include clean coal technology projects receiving or scheduled to receive funding under the Clean Coal Technology Program of the Department of Energy.

(C) CLEAN COAL TECHNOLOGY.—The term ‘clean coal technology’ means advanced technology that utilizes coal to produce 50 percent or more of its thermal output as electricity including advanced pulverized coal or atmospheric fluidized bed combustion, pressurized fluidized bed combustion, integrated gasification combined cycle, and any other technology for the production of electricity that exceeds the performance of conventional technology.

(D) CONVENTIONAL TECHNOLOGY.—The term ‘conventional technology’ means—

(i) coal-fired combustion technology with a design average net heat rate of not less than 9,300 Btu’s per kilowatt hour (HHV) and a carbon equivalents emission rate of not more than 0.33 pounds of carbon per kilowatt hour; or

(ii) natural gas-fired combustion technology with a design average net heat rate of not less than 7,500 Btu’s per kilowatt hour (HHV) and a carbon equivalents emission rate of not more than 0.24 pounds of carbon per kilowatt hour.

(E) DESIGN AVERAGE NET HEAT RATE.—The term ‘design average net heat rate’ shall mean—

(i) based on the design average annual heat input to and the design average annual net electrical output from the qualifying clean coal technology facility and

(ii) based on the design average net heat rate of such technology’s co-generation of steam.

(F) SELECTION CRITERIA.—Selection criteria for clean coal technology facilities—

(i) shall be established by the Secretary of Energy as part of a competitive solicitation.

(ii) shall include primary criteria of minimum design average net heat rate, maximum design average thermal efficiency, and lowest cost to construct.

(iii) shall include supplemental criteria as determined appropriate by the Secretary.

(G) QUALIFIED INVESTMENT.—For purposes of subsection (a), the term ‘qualified investment’ means, with respect to any taxable year, the amount of qualified clean coal technology facility progress expenditure made by the taxpayer during such taxable year.

(H) QUALIFIED PROGRESS EXPENDITURES.—

(I) INCREASE IN QUALIFIED INVESTMENT.—In the case of a taxpayer who has made an election under paragraph (5), the amount of the qualified investment of such taxpayer for qualifying clean coal technology facility progress expenditure (as determined without regard to section (c)) with respect to which such election has been made shall be increased by an amount equal to the aggregate of each qualified progress expenditures for the taxable year with respect to which such election was made.

(II) TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—Construction shall be taken into account only if, for purposes of this subpart, expenditures therefor are properly chargeable (during such taxable year) to capital account with respect to the property.

(J) SELECTION CRITERIA.—Selection criteria for clean coal technology facilities—

(i) shall be established by the Secretary of Energy as part of a competitive solicitation.

(ii) shall include primary criteria of minimum design average net heat rate, maximum design average thermal efficiency, and lowest cost to construct.

(iii) shall include supplemental criteria as determined appropriate by the Secretary.

(L) QUALIFIED PROGRESS EXPENDITURES.—

(1) INCREASE IN QUALIFIED INVESTMENT.—In the case of a taxpayer who has made an election under paragraph (5), the amount of the qualified investment of such taxpayer for qualifying clean coal technology facility progress expenditure (as determined without regard to section (c)) with respect to which such election has been made shall be increased by an amount equal to the aggregate of each qualified progress expenditures for the taxable year with respect to which such election was made.

(2) PROGRESS EXPENDITURE PROPERTY DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘qualified progress expenditure property’ means any property being constructed by or for the taxpayer and which it is reasonable to believe will be used for, or be placed in service, for a period of not less than 12 years, for a period of not less than 12 years,

(3) PROGRESS EXPENDITURE PROPERTY DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection—

(A) SELF-CONSTRUCTED PROPERTY.—In the case of any self-constructed property, the term qualified progress expenditure means the amount which, for purposes of this subpart, is properly chargeable (during such taxable year) to capital account with respect to such property.

(B) NON-SELF-CONSTRUCTED PROPERTY.—In the case of a non-self-constructed property, the term qualified progress expenditure means the amount which is attributable to the qualifying clean coal technology facility disposed of, and whose denominator is the total number of years over which such facility would otherwise have been subject to depreciation. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the year of disposition of the qualifying clean coal technology facility property shall be treated as a year of remaining depreciation.

(4) PROPERTY CRASES TO QUALIFY FOR PROGRESS EXPENDITURES.—Rules similar to the rules of paragraph (2) shall apply in the case of a qualified progress expenditure for a qualifying clean coal technology facility under section 48B, except that the amount of the increase in tax under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall be determined by multiplying the amount described in such paragraph by 0.5.

(C) APPLICABLE TO ELECTRICITIES.—This paragraph shall be applied separately with respect to a qualifying clean coal technology facility.

(D) TRANSITIONAL RULE.—Section 39(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to transitional rules, as amended by section 101(c)(2), is amended by adding at the end the following:

(1) NO CARRYBACK OF SECTION 48B CREDIT BEFORE EFFECTIVE DATE.—No portion of the unused business credit for any taxable year which is attributable to the qualifying clean coal technology facility credit determined under section 48B may be carried back to a taxable year ending before the date of enactment of this subpart, and

(e) CREDIT ALLOWED AGAINST MINIMUM TAX.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 38(c)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to limitation based on amount of tax), as amended by section 101(b)(1), is amended by redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (5) and by inserting after such paragraph—

(4) SPECIAL RULES FOR CLEAN COAL TECHNOLOGY CREDIT.—

"(A) In general.—In the case of the qualifying clean coal technology facility credit—

"(i) this section and section 39 shall be applied separately with respect to the credit, and

"(ii) in applying paragraph (1) to the credit—

"(I) subparagraph (A) shall not apply, and

"(II) the limitation under paragraph (1) (as modified by subclause (I)) shall be reduced by the credit allowed under subsection (a) for the taxable year (other than the credits described in this paragraph and paragraphs (2) and (3)).

"(B) qualifying clean coal technology facility credit.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘qualifying clean coal technology facility credit’ means the portion of the credit under subsection (a) which is attributable to the credit determined under section 48B.

(2) Conforming Amendment.—Section 38(c)(2)(A)(ii)(I) of such Code, as amended by section 101(b)(2), is amended by striking ‘‘(other than the credits described in this paragraph (relating to business related credits) is amend-’’ and inserting ‘‘(other than the credits described in this paragraph and paragraphs (3) and (4))’’.

(3) Technical Amendments.—

"(f) Technical Amendments.—

"(1) Section 49(a)(1)(C) is amended by striking ‘‘and’’ at the end of clause (i), by striking the period at the end of clause (iii) and inserting ‘‘, and’’, and by adding at the end of the clause ‘‘(iv) the portion of the basis of any qualifying clean coal technology facility attributable to any qualified investment (as defined in subsection (b)(2)(A))’’.

"(2) Section 50(a)(4) is amended by striking ‘‘and (2)’’ and inserting ‘‘, (2), and (6)’’.

"(3) The table of sections for subpart E of part IV of chapter A of chapter 1, as amended by section 101(e), is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 48A the following:

"Sec. 48B. Qualifying clean coal technology facility credit.”

(4) Effective date.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to periods beginning after December 31, 1999, and before January 1, 2011, and shall be applied in a manner similar to the application of section 48(m) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this section).

SEC. 502. CREDIT FOR PRODUCTION FROM QUALIFYING CLEAN COAL TECHNOLOGY.

(a) Credit for Production From Qualifying Clean Coal Technology.—Subpart D of part IV of chapter A of chapter 1 (relating to business related credits) is amended by adding at the end of the following:

"Sec. 45D. Credit for Production From Qualifying Clean Coal Technology.”

(3) In the case of a facility originally placed in service after 2005 and before 2010, if—

"the facility design average net heat rate, Btu/kWh (HHV) is equal to:

| Net more than 8400 | $0.110 | $0.110 |
| Not more than 8400 | $0.100 | $0.085 |

"(2) In the case of a facility originally placed in service after 2009 and before 2011, if—

"the facility design average net heat rate, Btu/kWh (HHV) is equal to:

| Not more than 7770 | $0.100 | $0.080 |
| More than 7770 but not more than 8125 | $0.080 | $0.055 |

"(3) In the case of a facility originally placed in service after 2010 and before 2011, if—

"the facility design average net heat rate, Btu/kWh (HHV) is equal to:

| More than 7720 but not more than 7830 | $0.070 | $0.045 |

(4) Inflation Adjustment Factor.—Each amount in paragraph (1) shall be multiplied by the inflation adjustment factor for the calendar year in which the amount is applied. If any amount as increased under the preceding sentence is not a multiple of 0.01 cent, such amount shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of 0.01 cent.

(5) Definitions and Special Rules.—For purposes of this section—

"(A) In general.—In the case of the qualifying clean coal technology facility credit’’ means the portion of the credit under subsection (a) which is attributable to the credit determined under section 45D.

"(B) Qualifying clean coal technology production credit.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘qualifying clean coal technology production credit’ means the portion of the credit under subsection (a) which is attributable to the credit determined under section 45D.

(6) Effective date.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to periods beginning after December 31, 1999, and before January 1, 2011, and shall be applied in a manner similar to the application of section 48(m) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this section).

SEC. 503. RISK POOL FOR QUALIFYING CLEAN COAL TECHNOLOGY.

(a) Establishment.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall establish a financial risk pool which shall be available to any United States owner of qualifying clean coal technology (as defined in section 48B(b)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) to offset for the first three years of the operation of such technology the costs (not to exceed 5 percent of the total cost of installation) for modifications resulting from the technology’s failure to achieve its design performance.

(b) Authorization of Appropriations.—There is authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

TITLe VI—METHANE RECOVERY

SEC. 601. EXPANSION OF SECTION 29 TAX CREDIT.

(a) In General.—Section 38(c)(6)(D) of the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001 is amended by striking ‘‘2002’’ and inserting ‘‘2008’’.

(b) Purpose.—The purpose of this section is to provide tax relief to taxpayers for methane recovery projects.

SEC. 602. CREDIT FOR CAPTURE OF COALBED
METHANE GAS.
(a) CREDIT FOR CAPTURE OF COALBED METHANE GAS.—Subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to business related credits), as amended by section 502(a), is amended by adding at the end the following:

‘‘SEC. 45E. CREDIT FOR CAPTURE OF COALBED
METHANE GAS.

‘‘For purposes of section 38, the coalbed methane gas capture credit of any taxpayer for any taxable year is $10 for each ton of carbon-equivalent coalbed methane gas captured by the taxpayer during such taxable year.’’
(b) CREDIT TREATED AS BUSINESS CREDIT.—
Section 38(b), as amended by section 502(b), is amended by striking ‘‘plus’’ at the end of paragraph (12), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (13) and inserting ‘‘, plus’’, and by adding at the end the following:
‘‘(14) the coalbed methane gas capture credit determined under section 45E(a).’’
(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1, as amended by section 502(e), is amended by adding at the end the following:
‘‘Sec. 45E. Credit for capture of coalbed
methane gas.’’
(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to production after the date of the enactment of this Act.
TITLE VII—OIL AND GAS PRODUCTION
SEC. 701. CREDIT FOR PRODUCTION OF RE-REFINED LUBRICATING OIL.
(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to business related credits), as amended by section 602(a), is amended by adding at the end the following:

‘‘SEC. 45F. CREDIT FOR PRODUCING RE-REFINED LUBRICATING OIL.
‘‘(a) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of section 38, the re-refined lubricating oil production credit of any taxpayer for any taxable year is equal to $4.05 per barrel of qualified re-refined lubricating oil production which is attributable to the taxpayer (within the meaning of section 29(d)(3)).

‘‘(1) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘qualified rerefined lubricating oil production’ means a base oil manufactured from at least 95 percent used oil and not more than 2 percent of previously unused oil by a re-refining process which effectively removes physical and chemical impurities and spent and unspent additives to the extent that such base oil meets industry standards for engine oil as defined by the American Petroleum Institute document API 1509 as in effect on the date of the enactment of this section.
‘‘(2) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF PRODUCTION WHICH MAY QUALIFY.—Re-refined lubricating oil produced during any taxable year shall not be treated as qualified re-refined lubricating oil production but only to the extent average daily production during the taxable year exceeds 7,000 barrels.

meaning given such term by section 613A(e)(4).
‘‘(c) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT.—In the case of any taxable year beginning in a calendar year after 1999, the dollar amount contained in subsection (a) shall be increased to an amount equal to such dollar amount multiplied by the inflation adjustment factor for such calendar year (determined under section 29(d)(2)(B) by substituting ‘1998’ for ‘1979’).’’

REPEAL CERTAIN ADJUSTMENTS
BASED ON ADJUSTED CURRENT EARNINGS RELATING TO OIL AND GAS ASSETS.
(a) INTANGIBLE DRILLING COSTS.—Clause (i) of section 56(g)(4)(D) (relating to certain other earnings and profits adjustments) is amended by striking the second sentence and inserting the following: ‘‘In the case of any oil or gas well, this clause shall not apply to amounts paid or incurred in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1999.’’

(b) DEPLETION.—Clause (ii) of section 56(g)(4)(F) (relating to depletion) is amended to read as follows:
‘‘(ii) EXCEPTION FOR OIL AND GAS WELLS.—In the case of any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1999, clause (i) (and subparagraph (C)(i)) shall not apply to any deduction for depletion computed in accordance with section 613A.’’
(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1999.

‘‘(A) IN GENERAL.—The deduction for the taxable year attributable to the application of subsection (c) shall not exceed so much of the taxpayer’s taxable income for the year as the taxpayer elects under subparagraph (B)(iii) computed without regard to—‘‘(i) any depletion on production from an oil or gas property which is subject to the provisions of subsection (c), ‘‘(ii) any net operating loss carryback to the taxable year under section 172, ‘‘(iii) any capital loss carryback to the taxable year under section 1212, and ‘‘(iv) in the case of a trust, any distributions to its beneficiary, except in the case of any trust where any beneficiary of such trust is a member of the family (as defined in section 267(c)(4)) of a settlor who created inter vivos and testamentary trusts for members of the family and such settlor died within the last six days of the fifth month in 1970, and the law in the jurisdiction in which such trust was created requires all or a portion of the gross or net proceeds of any royalty or other interest in oil, gas, or other mineral representing any percentage depletion allowance to be allocated to the principal of the trust.
‘‘(B) CARRYBACKS AND CARRYFORWARDS.—
‘‘(i) IN GENERAL.—If any amount is disallowed as a deduction for the taxable year
(in this subparagraph referred to as the ‘unused depletion year’) by reason of the application of subparagraph (A), the disallowed amount shall be treated as an amount allowable as a deduction under subsection (c) for—‘‘(I) each of the 10 taxable years preceding the unused depletion year, and ‘‘(II) the taxable year following the unused depletion year, subject to the application of subparagraph
(A) to such taxable year.
‘‘(ii) APPLICABLE RULES.—Rules similar to the rules of section 39 shall apply for purposes of this subparagraph.
‘‘(iii) ELECTION TO WAIVE CARRYBACK.—Any taxpayer entitled to a carryback period under this subparagraph may elect to waive such carryback for any of the taxable years to which such carryback would apply. Such election made in any taxable year may be revised in the next succeeding taxable year in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe.
DISALLOWED
‘‘(C) ALLOCATION
AMOUNTS.—For purposes of basis adjustments and determining whether cost depletion exceeds percentage depletion with respect to the production from a property, any amount disallowed as a deduction on the application of this paragraph shall be allocated to the respective properties from which the oil or gas was produced in proportion to the percentage depletion otherwise allowable to such properties under subsection (c).’’ (b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1999, and to any taxable year beginning on or before such date to the extent necessary to apply section 613A(d)(1)(B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as added by subsection (a)).

(5) the photovoltaic or wind property manufacturing facility credit.

"SEC. 48C. PHOTOVOLTAIC OR WIND PROPERTY MANUFACTURING FACILITY CREDIT."

"(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of section 46, the photovoltaic or wind property manufacturing facility credit for any taxable year is an amount equal to 20 percent of the qualified investment in a photovoltaic or wind property manufacturing facility for such taxable year.

(b) PHOTOVOLTAIC OR WIND PROPERTY MANUFACTURING FACILITY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (a), the term 'photovoltaic or wind property manufacturing facility' means a facility of the taxpayer—

"(A) that is owned by the taxpayer,

"(B) that is eligible for the investment credit allowed under section 45(c)(1) (relating to credit for electricity produced from renewable resources),

"(C) that has a useful life of not less than 4 years, and

"(D) that is used to manufacture photovoltaic or wind property.

"(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR SALE-LEASEBACKS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A) of paragraph (1), in the case of a facility that—

"(A) is originally placed in service by a person other than the taxpayer and

"(B) is sold and leased back by such person, or is leased to such person, within 3 months after the date such facility was originally placed in service, for a period of not less than 12 years, such facility shall be treated as originally placed in service not earlier than the date on which such property is used under the leaseback (or lease) referred to in subparagraph (B). The preceding sentence shall not apply to any property if the lessor and lessor of such property elect election under section 1245 (as defined by section 179(d)(2)), (B) that has a useful life of not less than 4 years, and (D) that is used to manufacture photovoltaic or wind property.

(c) QUALIFIED INVESTMENT.—For purposes of subsection (a), the term 'qualified investment' means, with respect to any taxable year—

"(1) the property, or the aggregate of such property, for which the taxpayer elects to apply this section for such year in accordance with subsection (b),

"(2) the qualifying progress expenditures made directly by the taxpayer with respect to the property, and

"(3) a portion of the basis of the property.

"(d) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—

"(1) Section 49(a)(1)(C), as amended by section 504(f)(1), is amended by striking ''and (6)'' and substituting in lieu thereof the following:

"(B) it is reasonable to believe will qualify as a photovoltaic or wind property manufacturing facility which is being constructed by or for the taxpayer when it is placed in service.

"(3) QUALIFIED PROGRESS EXPENDITURES DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) SELF-CONSTRUCTED PROPERTY.—In the case of self-constructed property, the term 'qualified progress expenditures' means the amount paid during the taxable year for which the property is placed in service.

"(B) NON-SELF-CONSTRUCTED PROPERTY.—In the case of non-self-constructed property, the term 'qualified progress expenditures' means the amount paid during the taxable year for which the property is placed in service.

"(4) OTHER CONSIDERATIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) GENERAL RULE.—In lieu of the amount described in paragraph (A) of this paragraph, the amount of the basis of any photovoltaic or wind property manufacturing facility attributable to any qualified investment (as defined by section 48C(c)) is increased by an amount equal to 10 percent of the qualified progress expenditures made directly by the taxpayer with respect to the property.

"(B) PROPERTY CEASES TO QUALIFY FOR CREDIT.—The term 'qualified progress expenditures' means the amount paid during the taxable year for which the property is placed in service.

"(C) APPLICATION OF PARAGRAPH.—This paragraph shall be applied separately with respect to the credit allowed under section 38 relating to a photovoltaic or wind property manufacturing facility.

"(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to periods after December 31, 1999, under rules similar to the rules of section 48B of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this Act), and paragraph (5) is amended by inserting after the term 'qualified investment' the term 'investment (as defined by section 48C(c)).'

"Sec. 48C. Photovoltaic or wind property manufacturing facility credit.

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (B) of section 45(c)(1) (relating to credit for electricity produced from certain renewable resources) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) biomass.

"(2) BIOMASS DEFINED.—Paragraph (2) of section 45(c)(1) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) any solid, nonhazardous, cellulosic waste material which is segregated from other waste materials and which is derived from—

"(i) any of the following forest-related resources which has received commercial thinning, slash, and brush, but not including old-growth timber,

"(ii) urban sources, including waste pallets, crates, and dummys, and construction wood wastes, and landscape or right-of-way tree trimmings, but not including unsegregated municipal solid waste (garbage), and

"(iii) agriculture sources, including orchard tree crops, vineyard, grain, legumes, sugar, and other crop by-products or residues, or poultry waste.

(ii) Extension and Modification of Placed in Service Rules.—Paragraph (3) of section 48(c) is amended as follows:

(1) in General.—In the case of a facility using biomass to produce electricity, the term ‘qualified facility’ means any facility owned by the taxpayer which is originally placed in service after December 31, 1993, and before July 1, 2004.

(ii) Combined Production Facilities Included.—For purposes of clause (i), the term ‘qualified facility’ shall include a facility using biomass to produce electricity and ethanol.

(iii) Special Rules.—In the case of a qualified facility described in this subparagraph—

(1) The 10-year period referred to in subsection (a) shall be treated as beginning no earlier than the date of the enactment of this paragraph, and

(2) subsection (b)(3) shall not apply to any such facility originally placed in service before such date.

(c) Coordination With Other Credits.—Section 45(d) (relating to definitions and special rules) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(2) Coordination with other credits.—This section shall not apply to any production with respect to which the clean coal technology production credit under section 45B is allowed unless the taxpayer elects to waive the application of such credit to such production.

(d) Effective Date.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to electricity produced after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 803. PROPORTIONAL CREDIT FOR PRODUCING ELECTRICITY THROUGH CO-FIring.

(a) In General.—Section 45(b) (relating to limitations and adjustments) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(4) Proportional Credit for Co-firing.—In the case of a qualified facility as defined in subsection (c)(8)(B) using coal to co-fire with biomass, the amount of the credit determined under subsection (a) for the taxable year shall be reduced by the percentage coal comprises (on a Btu basis) of the average fuel supplied during the fiscal year to the electric generating unit."

(b) Effective Date.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to electricity produced after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 804. CREDIT FOR CAPITAL COSTS OF QUALIFIED BIOMASS-BASED GENERATING SYSTEM.

(a) Allowance of Qualified Biomass-Based Generating System Facility Credit.—Section 46 (relating to amount of credit), as amended by section 801(a), is amended by striking "20%" at the end of paragraph (5), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (5) and inserting "", and", and by adding at the end the following:

"(6) Qualified biomass-based generating system facility credit."

(b) Amount of Credit.—Subpart E of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to rules for computing investment credit), as amended by section 801(b), is amended by inserting after section 48C the following:

"SEC. 48D. QUALIFIED BIOMASS-BASED GENERATING SYSTEM.—For purposes of this subsection—

(a) In General.—For purposes of section 46, the qualified biomass-based generating system facility credit for any taxable year is an amount equal to 20 percent of the qualified investment in a qualified biomass-based generating system facility for such taxable year.

(b) Coordination With Other Credits.—For purposes of subsection (a), the term ‘qualified biomass-based generating system’ means a facility of the taxpayer.

(A) The original use of which commences with the taxpayer or the reconstruction of which is completed by the taxpayer (but only with respect to that portion of the basis which is properly attributable to such reconstruction), or

(B) That is acquired through purchase (as defined by section 179(d)).

(c) Coordination With Other Credits.—For purposes of this section—

(A) The term ‘qualified biomass-based generating system’ includes any facility using wind to produce electricity.

(B) The term ‘qualified facility’ includes a facility using wind to produce electricity.

(C) The term ‘qualified facility’ shall include a facility using wind to produce electricity.

(II) subsection (b)(3) shall not apply to such property make an election under this subsection—

"(a) any facility using the term 'qualified facility' means any facility meeting the environmental requirements of the Clean Air Act Amendments of 1990 which is owned by the taxpayer and placed in service under paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 45G(a), except that the credit allowed under such section (a) for the taxable year in which such facility was placed in service when such facility was last upgraded to increase efficiency or generation capability."
(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—
(1) The heading for section 45 is amended by inserting “and waste energy” after “renewable”.
(2) The item relating to section 45 in the table of sections of subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 is amended by inserting “and waste energy” after “renewable”.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to electricity produced in taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001, and before January 1, 2005.

TITLE X—AGRICULTURE

SEC. 1001. AGRICULTURAL CONSERVATION TAX CREDIT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to business related credits), as amended by section 901(a), is amended by adding at the end the following:

“SEC. 45H. AGRICULTURAL CONSERVATION CREDIT.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of section 38, in the case of an eligible person, the agricultural conservation credit determined under this section for the taxable year is an amount equal to:

“(1) 25 percent of the eligible conservation tillage equipment expenses, and

“(2) the eligible irrigation equipment expenses, paid or incurred by such person in connection with the active conduct of the trade or business for the taxable year.

“(b) ELIGIBLE PERSON.—For purposes of this section, the term ‘eligible person’ means a taxpayer to whom a deduction or credit is allowed under section 40, with respect to any taxable year, if the average annual gross receipts of such person for the 3 preceding taxable years do not exceed $1,000,000. For purposes of the preceding sentence, rules similar to the rules of section 44B(c)(3) shall apply.

“(c) LIMITATION.—The amount of the credit allowed under subsection (a) for any taxable year shall not exceed $2,500 for each credit determined under paragraph (1) or (2) of such subsection.

“(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

“(1) ELIGIBLE CONSERVATION TILLAGE EQUIPMENT EXPENSES.—

“(A) In General.—The term ‘eligible conservation tillage equipment expenses’ means amounts paid or incurred by a taxpayer to purchase and install conservation tillage equipment for use in the trade or business of the taxpayer.

“(B) CONSERVATION TILLAGE EQUIPMENT.—The term ‘conservation tillage equipment’ means a no-till planter or drill designed to minimize the disturbance of the soil in planting crops, including such planters or drills which may be attached to equipment already owned by the taxpayer.

“(2) ELIGIBLE IRRIGATION EQUIPMENT EXPENSES.—The term ‘eligible irrigation equipment expenses’ means amounts paid or incurred by a taxpayer to:

“(A) install and currently irrigated lands new or upgraded equipment which will improve the efficiency of existing irrigation systems used in the trade or business of the taxpayer, including:

“(i) spray jets or nozzles which improve water distribution efficiency, “(ii) irrigation well meters,

“(iii) surge valves and surge irrigation systems, and

“(iv) conversion of equipment from gravity irrigation to sprinkler or drip irrigation, including conversion, modification, and

“(B) for service required to schedule the use of such irrigation equipment as necessary to manage water application to the crop requirements, local evapotranspiration and transpiration rates or soil moisture.

“(e) SPECIAL RULES.—

“(1) REDUCTION IN BASIS.—For purposes of this subsection, rules similar to the rules of sections 45C(b) and 45D shall apply.

“(2) PARTNERSHIP DETERMINATIONS.—(A) In General.—(i) In the case of a partnership, the amount of the deduction or credit determined under this section with respect to any partner, the basis of such property shall be reduced by the amount of the credit so determined.

“(ii) Partnership in Case of Estates and Trusts.—For purposes of this section, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, rules similar to the rules of subsection (d) of section 52 shall apply.

“(3) ALLOCATION IN THE CASE OF PARTNERSHIPS.—For purposes of this section, in the case of partnerships, the credit shall be allocated among partners under regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

“(4) DENIAL OF DOUBLE BENEFIT.—No other deduction or credit shall be allowed to the taxpayer under this chapter for any amount taken into account in determining the credit under this section.

“(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

“(1) Section 38(b), as amended by section 901(b), is amended by striking “plus” at the end of paragraph (15), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (16) and inserting “, and”, and by adding at the end the following:

“(17) the agricultural conservation credit determined under section 45H.”

“(2) The table of sections for subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1, as amended by section 45B, is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(3) Section 1016(a), as amended by section 201(b)(1), is amended by striking “and” at the end of paragraph (27), striking the period at the end of paragraph (28) and inserting “, and”, and adding at the end the following:

“(29) in the case of property with respect to which a credit was allowed under section 45H, to the extent provided in section 45H(d)(1).”

“(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1999.

BUNNING AMENDMENT NO. 1377

"(a) In general.—In the case of an individual who is an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1), there shall be allowed as a deduction under this section an amount equal to 100 percent of the qualified health insurance costs of an individual who is an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1) against the tax imposed by this subtitle and sec. 165 for the taxable year, over

"(B) an amount equal to the sum of the deductions described in paragraphs (1), (2), (7), and (15) of section 62(a) to the extent such deductions are properly allocable to or chargeable against earned income described in subparagraph (A).

The amount of qualified earned income shall be determined without regard to any community property laws.

"(2) Earned income.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term ‘earned income’ means health insurance which constitutes medical care for the taxpayer, his spouse, and dependents, and which meets the requirements of paragraphs (2), (3), and (4)."
("(1) In general.—The credit allowed by subsection (a) of the taxable year determined after the application of subsections (c) and (d) shall not exceed the sum of—
(A) the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year determined by the credits allowable against such tax other than the credits allowable under this subpart,
(B) the taxpayer’s social security taxes for such taxable year,
(C) the social security taxes. For purposes of paragraph (1)—
(A) In general.—The term ‘social security taxes’ means, with respect to any taxpayer for any taxable year—
(i) the amount of the taxes imposed by sections 3121, 3201(a), and 3221(a) on amounts received by the taxpayer during the calendar year in which the taxable year begins,
(ii) the taxes imposed by section 1401 on the self-employment income of the taxpayer for the taxable year, and
(iii) the taxes imposed by section 3212(a)(2) on amounts received by the taxpayer during the calendar year in which the taxable year begins.
(B) Coordination with special refund of social security taxes. The term ‘social security taxes’ shall not include any taxes to the extent the taxpayer is entitled to a special refund of such taxes under section 6427.
(C) Special rule.—Any amounts paid pursuant to an agreement under section 3121(i) (relating to agreements entered into by American employers with respect to foreign affiliates) which are equivalent to the taxes referred to in subparagraph (A)(i) are treated as taxes referred to in such subparagraph.
(D) Coordination with other provisions.—
(1) Deduction for medical expenses.—The amount taken into account in computing the credit under subsection (a) shall not be taken into account in computing the amount allowable to the taxpayer as a deduction under section 213(a).
(2) Deduction for health insurance costs of self-employed individuals.—No amount included by reason of section 3212(a)(2) shall be included by reason of section 61(c).
(E) Expenses must be substantiated.—A payment for insurance which subsection (a) applies may be taken into account under this section only if the taxpayer substantiates such payment in such form as the Secretary may prescribe.
(F) Section not to apply to long-term care insurance.—This section shall not apply to insurance which constitutes medical care by reason of section 213(d)(1)(C).
(b) Clerical amendment.—The table of sections for part C of part IV of subpart A of chapter 1 is amended by striking the last item and inserting the following new item:

The effective dates for these amendments are specified, with most applicable from July 1, 1999, to June 30, 1999, or to June 30, 2000. The document is a testament to the ongoing legislative efforts to support various economic activities and initiatives.
the rules of section 1266 shall apply to the qualified school modernization bond as if it were a stripped coupon.

(1) TREATMENT FOR ESTIMATED TAX PURPOSES.—Solely for purposes of sections 6654 and 6655, the credit allowed by this section to a taxpayer by reason of holding a qualified public school modernization bond on a credit allowance date shall be treated as if it were a payment of estimated tax made by the taxpayer on such date.

(2) QUALIFIED BOND.—Nothing in any law or rule of law shall be construed to limit the transferability of the credit allowed by this section through sale and repurchase agreements.

(3) REPORTING.—Issuers of qualified public school modernization bonds shall submit reports similar to the reports required under section 146(e).

PART II—QUALIFIED SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION BONDS

Sec. 1400G. Qualified school construction bonds.

SEC. 1400G. QUALIFIED SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION BONDS.

(a) QUALIFIED SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION BOND.—For purposes of this subchapter, the term ‘qualified school construction bond’ means any bond issued as part of an issue if—

(1) 85 percent or more of the proceeds of such issue are to be used for the construction, rehabilitation, or repair of a public school facility or for the acquisition of land on which such a facility is to be constructed with part of the proceeds of such issue,

(2) the bond is issued by a State or local government within the jurisdiction of which such school is located,

(3) the issue designates such bond for purposes of this section, and

(4) the term of each bond which is part of such issue does not exceed 15 years.

(b) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF BONDS DESIGNATED.—The aggregate face amount of bonds issued during any calendar year under subsection (a) by any issuer shall not exceed the sum of—

(1) the limitation amount allocated under subsection (c) for such calendar year to such issuer, and

(2) if such issuer is a large local educational agency as defined in subsection (e)(4)(A) or is issuing on behalf of such an agency, the limitation amount allocated under subsection (e) for such calendar year to such agency.

(c) NATIONAL LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF BONDS DESIGNATED.—There is a national qualified school construction bond limitation for each calendar year. Such limitation is—

(1) $11,800,000,000 for 2001,

(2) $11,800,000,000 for 2002, and

(3) except as provided in subsection (d), zero after 2001 and before 2005, and after 2005.

(d) SIXTY-FIVE PERCENT LIMITATION ALLOCATED AMONG STATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Sixty-five percent of the limitation applicable under subsection (c) for any calendar year shall be allocated among the States in proportion to the respective amounts such State received for Basic Grants under subpart 2 of part A of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 6331 et seq.) for the most recent fiscal year ending before such calendar year.

(2) MINIMUM ALLOCATIONS TO STATES.—

(A) The Secretary shall adjust the allocations under this subsection for any calendar year for such purposes of paragraph (1) to such State to the extent necessary to ensure that the sum of—

(i) the amount allocated to such State under this subsection for such year, and

(ii) the aggregate amounts allocated under subsection (e) to local educational agencies in such State for such year, is not less than an amount equal to such State’s minimum percentage of the amount to be allocated under paragraph (1) for the calendar year.

(B) MINIMUM PERCENTAGE.—A State’s minimum percentage for any calendar year is the minimum percentage described in section 1124(d) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 6334(d)) for such State for the most recent fiscal year ending before such calendar year.

(3) ALLOCATIONS FOR INDIAN SCHOOLS.—In making other allocations, the amount to be allocated under paragraph (1) shall be reduced by the aggregate amount allocated under this paragraph to possessions of the United States.

(4) ALLOCATIONS FOR INDIAN SCHOOLS.—In addition to the amounts otherwise allocated under subsection (c) for any calendar year, one-hundred million dollars, to be allocated for each of the fiscal years 2001 and 2002, shall be allocated by the Secretary of the Interior for purposes of the construction, rehabilitation, and repair of schools funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs in the case of amounts allocated under the preceding sentence, Indian tribal governments (as defined by the Office of Management and Budget). In making other allocations, the amount to be allocated under paragraph (1) shall be reduced by the aggregate amount allocated under this paragraph to Indian schools.

(5) ALLOCATIONS FOR INDIAN SCHOOLS.—In addition to the amounts otherwise allocated under subsection (c) for any calendar year, one-hundred million dollars, to be allocated for each of the fiscal years 2001 and 2002, shall be allocated by the Secretary of the Interior for purposes of the construction, rehabilitation, and repair of schools funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. In making other allocations, the amount to be allocated under paragraph (1) shall be reduced by the aggregate amount allocated under this paragraph to Indian schools.

(6) APPROVED LOCAL APPLICATION.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term ‘approved State application’ means an application which is approved by the Secretary of Education and which includes—

(A) the results of a recent publicly-available survey (undertaken by the State with the involvement of local education officials, members of the public, and experts in school construction and planning) of such State’s needs for public school facilities, including descriptions of—

(i) health and safety problems at such facilities, and

(ii) the capacity of public schools in the State to house projected enrollments, and

(B) a description of how the State will allocate such funds to local educational agencies, or otherwise use, its allocation under this subsection to address the needs identified under subparagraph (A), including a description of how it will—

(i) give highest priority to localities with the greatest needs, as demonstrated by inadequate school facilities coupled with a low level of resources to meet those needs, and

(ii) use its allocation under this subsection to assist localities that lack the fiscal capacity to issue bonds on their own, and

(iv) ensure that its allocation under this subsection is used only to supplement, and not supplant, the amount of school construction, rehabilitation, and repair in the State that would not have occurred in the absence of such allocation.

Any allocation under paragraph (1) by a State shall be binding if such State reasonably determined that the allocation was in accordance with the plan approved under this paragraph.

(3) SEPARATION.—With respect to any plan, the amendments made by this section shall not apply to any employee before the date that such employee has 1 hour of service under such plan on any plan year to which the amendments made by this section apply.

SEC. 813. DEFERRED ANNUITIES FOR SURVIVING SPOUSES OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 8341 of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (h)(1), by striking “section 8338(b)” and inserting “section 8338(b), and a former spouse of a deceased former employee who separated from the service with title to a deferred annuity under section 8338 (if they were married to one another prior to the date of separation);”;

(2) by adding at the end the following:

“(k) Deferred annuity—Having separated from the service with title to a deferred annuity under section 8338 but before having established a valid claim for annuity, a surviving spouse may elect to receive—

“(1) an annuity, commencing on what would have been the former employee’s 62d birthday, equal to 55 percent of the former employee’s deferred annuity;

“(2) an annuity, commencing on the day after the date of death of the former employee, such that, to the extent practicable, the present value of the future payments of the annuity would be actuarially equivalent to the present value of the future payments under subparagraph (A) as of the day after the former employee’s death; or

“(C) the lump-sum credit, if the surviving spouse is the individual who would be entitled to the lump-sum credit and if such surviving spouse files application therefor.

(2) An annuity under this subsection and the right thereto terminate on the last day of the month before the surviving spouse remarries before becoming 55 years of age, or dies.”

(b) CORRESPONDING AMENDMENT FOR FERS.—Section 8445(a) of title 5, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking “(or of former employee or” and inserting “annuity, or of a former employee who dies after having separated from the service with title to a deferred annuity under section 8413 but before having established a valid claim for annuity (if such former spouse was married to such former employee prior to the date of separation);”;

(2) by striking “annuity, or of a former employee who dies” and inserting “annuity, or of a former employee who dies after having separated from the service with title to a deferred annuity under section 8413 but before having established a valid claim for annuity (if such former spouse was married to such former employee prior to the date of separation);”.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to years beginning after December 31, 2000.

Subtitle C—Increasing Portability of Pension Plans

SEC. 821. ROLLOVERS ALLOWED AMONG VARIOUS TYPES OF PLANS.

(a) ROLLOVERS FROM AND TO SECTION 457 PLANS.—

(A) ROLLOVERS FROM SECTION 457 PLANS.—

(1) Rollovers from section 457 plans shall be treated as rollovers from qualified retirement plans (as defined in section 401(a)(31) of the Internal Revenue Code) for purposes of subparagraph (A) of section 402(c) and shall be eligible rollover distributions (as defined in section 402(c)(12)) in accordance with the rules similar to the rules of section 401(a)(31) for purposes of subparagraph (A).

(2) In the case of a plan maintained pursuant to collective bargaining agreements between employee representatives and 1 or more employers ratified by the date of enactment of this Act, the amendments made by this section shall not apply to contributions on behalf of employees covered by any such agreement for plan years beginning before the earlier of—

(A) the later of—

(i) the date on which the last of such collective bargaining agreements terminates (determined without regard to any extension thereof on or after such date of enactment); or

(ii) January 1, 2001, or

(B) January 1, 2005.

(3) SEPARATION.—With respect to any plan, the amendments made by this section shall not apply to any employee before the date that such employee has 1 hour of service under such plan on any plan year to which the amendments made by this section apply.

‘‘(H) APPLICATION OF SECTION 72.—(i) IN GENERAL.—If—

‘‘(I) a distribution is made from an individual retirement plan, and

‘‘(II) a rollover contribution is made to an eligible retirement plan described in clause (ii) or (iii) of section 402(c)(8)(B),’’

(c) RULES FOR APPOINTING SECTION 72 TO IRAS.—(B) Paragraph (2) of section 408(d) (relating to application of section 72) is amended by adding ‘‘or’’ at the end of clause (iv), (v), or (vi) with respect to all or part of such distribution.
as follows:

The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to distributions made after December 31, 2000.

SEC. 824. HARDSHIP EXCEPTION TO 60-DAY RULE.

(a) EXEMPT TRUSTS.—Paragraph (3) of section 402(c) (relating to transfer must be made within 60 days of receipt) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) TRANSFER MUST BE MADE WITHIN 60 DAYS OF RECEIPT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), paragraph (1) shall not apply to any type of distribution made after the day on which the distributee received the property distributed.

"(B) HARDSHIP EXCEPTION.—The Secretary may waive the 60-day requirement under subparagraph (A) where the failure to waive such requirement would be against equity or good conscience, including casualty, disaster, other events beyond the reasonable control of the individual subject to such requirement.

(b) REGULATIONS.—Paragraph (3) of section 402(d) (relating to rollover contributions), as amended by section 333, is amended by adding after subparagraph (H) the following new subparagraph:

"(I) WAIVER OF 60-DAY REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary may waive the 60-day requirement under subparagraphs (A) and (D) where the failure to waive such requirement would be against equity or good conscience, including casualty, disaster, other events beyond the reasonable control of the individual subject to such requirement.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to distributions made after December 31, 2000.

SEC. 825. TREATMENT OF FORMS OF DISTRIBUTION.

(a) PLAN TRANSFERS.—

(1) AMENDMENT TO INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1986.—Paragraph (6) of section 411(d) (relating to accrued benefit not to be decreased by amendment) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(D) PLAN TRANSFERS.—

"(i) A defined contribution plan (in this subparagraph referred to as the 'transferor plan') shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of this subsection merely because the transferee plan does not provide some or all of the forms of distribution previously available under another defined contribution plan (in this subparagraph referred to as the 'transferor plan') to the extent that—

"(I) the forms of distribution previously available under the transferor plan applied to the account of a participant or beneficiary under the transferor plan that was transferred to the transferee plan pursuant to a direct transfer rather than pursuant to a distribution from the transferor plan;

"(II) the terms of both the transferor plan and the transferee plan authorize the transfer described in clause (I), and

"(III) the transfer described in subclause (I) was made pursuant to a voluntary election by the participant or beneficiary whose account was transferred to the transferee plan; and

"(IV) the election described in subclause (II) was made after the participant or beneficiary whose account was transferred to the transferee plan received a notice describing the consequences of making the election;

"(b) REGULATIONS.—

"(i) the transferor plan provides for an annuity as the normal form of distribution under the plan in accordance with section 417, the transfer is made with the consent of the participant's spouse (if any), and such consent meets requirements similar to the requirements imposed by section 417(a)(2); and

"(ii) the transferee plan allows the participant or beneficiary described in subclause (III) to receive any distribution to which the participant or beneficiary is entitled under the transferee plan in the form of a single sum distribution.

"(B) Subparagraph (A) shall apply to plan mergers and other transactions having the effect of a direct transfer, including consolidations of benefits attributable to different employers within a multiple employer plan.

"(C) Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to a transfer unless it is in connection with a bona fide transaction or change in employer.

"(D) Except to the extent provided in regulations, a defined contribution plan shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of this section merely because of the elimination of a form of distribution previously available thereunder. This subparagraph shall not apply to the elimination of a form of distribution with respect to any participant unless—

"(i) a single sum payment is available to such participant at the same time or times as the form of distribution being eliminated;

"(ii) such single sum payment is based on the same or greater portion of the participant's account as the form of distribution being eliminated.

"(E) ELIMINATION OF FORM OF DISTRIBUTION.—Except to the extent provided in regulations, a defined contribution plan shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of this section merely because of the elimination of a form of distribution previously available thereunder. This subparagraph shall not apply to the elimination of a form of distribution with respect to any participant unless—

"(i) a single sum payment is available to such participant at the same time or times as the form of distribution being eliminated;

"(ii) such single sum payment is based on the same or greater portion of the participant's account as the form of distribution being eliminated.

"(2) AMENDMENT TO ERISA.—Section 204(g) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1054(g)) is amended by adding after subsection (f) the following:

"(g) TRANSFER OF DISTRIBUTIONS.

"(1) AMENDMENT TO INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1986.—The last sentence of paragraph (6) of section 411(d) (relating to accrued benefit not to be decreased by amendment) is amended to read as follows: "The Secretary may by regulations provide that this subparagraph shall not apply to any plan amendment that does not adversely affect the rights of participants in a material manner.""

"(2) AMENDMENT TO ERISA.—The last sentence of section 204(g)(2) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1054(g)(2)) is amended to read as follows: "The Secretary may by regulations provide that this subparagraph shall not apply to any plan amendment that does not adversely affect the rights of participants in a material manner.""

"(3) SECRETARY DIRECTED.—Not later than December 31, 2001, the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to issue final regulations under section 411(d)(6) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 and section 204(g)(2) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974. Such regulations shall apply to plan years beginning after December 31, 2001, or such earlier date as is specified by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 826. RATIONALIZATION OF RESTRICTIONS ON DISTRIBUTIONS.

(a) MODIFICATION OF SAME DESK EXCEPTION.

(B) The heading for paragraph (11) of section 403(b) is amended by striking “separates from service” and inserting “has a severance from employment”.

(3) SECTION 457.—Clause (ii) of section 457(d)(1)(A) is amended by striking “is separated from service” and inserting “has a severance from employment”.

(4) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to distributions after December 31, 2000.

SEC. 857. PURCHASE OF SERVICE CREDIT IN GOVERNMENTAL DEFINED BENEFIT PLANS.

(a) 403(b) PLANS.—Subsection (b) of section 403 is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(13) TRUSTEE-TO-TRUSTEE TRANSFERS TO PURCHASE PERMISSIVE SERVICE CREDIT.—No amount shall be includable in gross income by reason of a direct trustee-to-trustee transfer to a defined benefit governmental plan (as defined in section 414(d)) if such transfer is—

“A purchase of permissive service credit (as defined in section 415(d)(3)(A)) under such plan, or

“(B) a repayment to which section 415 does not apply by reason of subsection (k)(3) thereof.”

(b) 457 PLANS.—

(1) Subsection (e) of section 457 is amended by adding after paragraph (17) the following new paragraph:

“(18) TRUSTEE-TO-TRUSTEE TRANSFERS TO PURCHASE PERMISSIVE SERVICE CREDIT.—No amount shall be includable in gross income by reason of a direct trustee-to-trustee transfer to a defined benefit governmental plan (as defined in section 414(d)) if such transfer is—

“A purchase of permissive service credit (as defined in section 415(d)(3)(A)) under such plan, or

“(B) a repayment to which section 415 does not apply by reason of subsection (k)(3) thereof.”

(2) Section 457(b)(2) is amended by striking “(other than rollover amounts)” and inserting “(other than rollover amounts and amounts received in a transfer referred to in subsection (e)(16))”.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to trustee-to-trustee transfers after December 31, 2000.

SEC. 858. TAKING DISAGREED ROLL-OVERS FOR PURPOSES OF CASH-OUT AMOUNTS.

(a) QUALIFIED PLANS.—

(1) Amendment to Internal Revenue Code of 1986.—Section 411(a)(11) (relating to restrictions on certain mandatory distributions) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(D) SPECIAL RULE FOR ROLLOVER CONTRIBUTIONS.—A plan shall not fail to meet the requirements of this paragraph if, under the terms of the plan, the present value of the nonforfeitable accrued benefit is determined without regard to that portion of such benefit which is attributable to rollover contributions (and earnings allocable thereto). For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘rollover contributions’ means any rollover contribution under sections 402(c), 403(a)(4), 403(b), 408(d)(3)(A)(ii), and 401(k)(16).”

(b) AMENDMENT TO ERISA.—Section 203(e) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1053(c)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(2) AMENDMENTS TO ERISA.—Section 203(e) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1053(c)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(A) A plan shall not fail to meet the requirements of this subsection if, under the terms of the plan, the present value of the nonforfeitable accrued benefit is determined without regard to that portion of such benefit which is attributable to rollover contributions (and earnings allocable thereto). For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘rollover contributions’ means any rollover contribution under sections 402(c), 403(a)(4), 403(b), 408(d)(3)(A)(ii), and 401(k)(16).”

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to distributions made after final regulations implementing subsection (c) of section 4050 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 as added by subsection (a) are prescribed.

SEC. 853. CIVIL PENALTIES FOR BREACH OF FIDUCIARY RESPONSIBILITY

(A) IMPOSITION AND AMOUNT OF PENALTY MADE DISCRETIONARY.—Section 502(b)(1) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1132(b)(1)) is amended—

(1) by striking “shall” and inserting “may”, and

(2) by striking “equal to” and inserting “not greater than”.

(B) APPROPRIATE RECOVERY AMOUNT.—Section 502(b)(2) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1132(b)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

“1132(b)(2) A recovery amount.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term ‘appropriate recovery amount’ means any amount which is recovered from (or on behalf of) any fiduciary or other person with respect to a breach or violation described in paragraph (1) on or after the 90th day following receipt by such fiduciary or other person of written notice from the Secretary of the violation, whether paid voluntarily or by order of a court in a judicial proceeding instituted by the Secretary under subsection (a)(2) or (a)(5). The Secretary may, in the Secretary’s sole discretion, extend the 90-day period described in the preceding sentence.”

(C) OTHER RULES.—Section 502(f) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1132(f)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(5) A person shall be jointly and severally liable for the penalty described in paragraph (1) to the same extent that such person is jointly and severally liable for the applicable recovery amount on which the penalty is based.

“(6) No penalty shall be assessed under this subsection unless the person against whom the penalty is assessed is given notice and an opportunity for a hearing with respect to the violation and applicable recovery amount.”

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to any action or claim, including any action or claim commenced by the Secretary of Labor, pending on or after the date of enactment of this section.

SEC. 854. FAILURE TO PROVIDE NOTICE BY DEFINED BENEFIT PLANS SIGNIFICANTLY REDUCING FUTURE BENEFIT ACCRUALS.

(a) EXCISE TAX.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 43 of subtitie D (relating to qualified pension, etc., plans) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“8906. FAILURE OF DEFINED BENEFIT PLAN TO PROVIDE NOTICE TO SATISFY NOTICE REQUIREMENTS.

“(a) Imposition of Tax.—There is hereby imposed a tax of a plan which fails to satisfy notice requirements of subsection (e) with respect to any applicable individual.

“(b) Amount of Tax.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount of the tax imposed by subsection (a) on any failure with respect to any applicable individual shall be $500 for each day the failure period with respect to such failure.

(2) Noncompliance Period.—For purposes of this section, the term ‘noncompliance period’ means, with respect to any failure, the period starting on the date the failure first occurs and ending on the date the failure is corrected.

(3) Minimum Tax for Noncompliance Period Where Failure Discovered After Notice of Examination.—Notwithstanding paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (c)—

(1) In General.—In the case of 1 or more failures with respect to an applicable individual—

(i) which are not corrected before the date a notice of examination of income tax liability is sent to the employer, and

(ii) which occurred or continued during the period under examination, the amount of tax imposed by subsection (a) by reason of such failures with respect to such beneficiary shall not be less than the lesser of $2,500 or the amount of tax which would be imposed by subsection (a) without regard to such paragraph.

(2) Higher Minimum Tax Where Violations Are More Than De Minimis.—To the extent violations by the employer (or the plan in the case of a multiemployer plan) for any plan year are more than de minimis, subparagraph (A) shall be applied by substituting ‘$15,000’ for ‘$2,500’ with respect to the employer (or such plan).

(4) Limitations on Amount of Tax.—

(1) Tax Not to Apply Where Failure Not Discovered Exercising Reasonable Diligence.—No tax shall be imposed by subsection (a) on any failure occurring during any period for which it is established to the satisfaction of the Secretary that none of the persons referred to in subsection (d) knew, or exercising reasonable diligence would have known, that such failure existed.

(2) Tax Not to Apply to Failures Corrected Within 30 Days.—No tax shall be imposed by subsection (a) on any failure if—

(A) it occurs during a reasonable cause and not to willful neglect, and

(B) such failure is corrected during the 30-day period beginning on the first date any of the persons referred to in subsection (d) knew, or exercising reasonable diligence would have known, that such failure existed.

(3) Overall Limitation for Unintentional Failures.—

(A) In General.—In the case of failures that are due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect, the tax imposed by subsection (a) for failures during the taxable year of the employer (or, in the case of a multiemployer plan, the taxable year of the trust forming part of the plan) shall not exceed $500,000. For purposes of the preceding sentence, all multiemployer plans of which the same trust forms a part shall be treated as 1 plan.

(B) Taxable Years in the Case of Certain Controlled Groups.—For purposes of this paragraph, if all persons who are treated as a single employer for purposes of this section do not have the same taxable year, the taxable years taken into account shall be determined under principles similar to the principles of section 1562.

(4) Waiver by Secretary.—In the case of a failure which is due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect, the Secretary may waive all or part of the tax imposed by subsection (a) to the extent that the requirement of such paragraph would be excessive relative to the failure involved.

(6) Liability for Tax.—The following shall be liable for the tax imposed by subsection (a):

(1) in the case of a plan other than a multiemployer plan, the employer,

(2) in the case of a multiemployer plan, the plan.

(7) Notice Requirements for Plans Significantly Reducing Benefit Accruals.—

(A) In General.—If a large defined benefit plan adopts an amendment which has the effect of significantly reducing the rate of future benefit accrual of 1 or more participants, the plan administrator shall provide a written notice to the Secretary that such failure existed prior to the adoption of such amendment and its effective date, the plan administrator provides—

(A) a written statement of benefit change described in paragraph (2) to each applicable individual, and

(B) a written notice setting forth the plan amendment and its effective date to each employee organization representing participants in the plan.

Any such notice may be provided to a person designated, in writing, by the person to whom it would have been provided. The plan administrator shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of this paragraph merely because the statement or notice is provided before the adoption of the plan amendment if no material modification of the amendment occurs before the amendment is adopted.

(B) Statement of Benefit Change.—A statement of benefit change described in this subparagraph shall—

(A) be written in a manner calculated to be understandable by the average plan participant, and

(B) include the information described in paragraph (3).

(8) Information Contained in Statement of Benefit Change.—The information described in this paragraph includes the following:

(A) Notice setting forth the plan amendment and its effective date.

(B) A comparison of the following amounts under the plan with respect to an applicable individual, determined both with and without regard to the plan amendment:

(i) The accrued benefit and the present value of the accrued benefit as of the effective date.

(ii) The projected accrued benefit and the projected present value of the accrued benefit as of the date which is 5 years, 5 years, and 10 years from the effective date and as of the normal retirement age.

Such comparison may include a statement that ‘The projected benefits were computed using assumptions required under Federal law and may not prove accurate over time.’

(C) A table of all annuity factors used to calculate benefits under the plan, presented in the form provided in section 72 and the regulations thereunder.

Benefits described in subparagraph (B) shall be stated separately and shall be calculated by using the applicable mortality table and the applicable interest rate under section 417(e)(33)/(A). The Secretary may prescribe regulations under which information other than that described in this paragraph may be provided in the event that the comparative benefits are not needed.

(D) Employees Held Harmless.—A plan (and any employer maintaining the plan) that reduces benefit accruals by reason of a reduction in the rate of accruals under the plan (or as being liable to any applicable individual) by reason of any projected amounts under paragraph (7) shall reduce such benefit accruals so as to satisfy notice requirements.

(9) Large Defined Benefit Plan; Applicable Individual.—For purposes of this subsection—

(A) Large Defined Benefit Plan.—The term ‘large defined benefit plan’ means any defined benefit plan which had 1,000 or more participants who had accrued a benefit under the plan (whether or not nonforfeitable) as of the last day of the plan year preceding the plan year in which the plan amendment begins to affect benefit accruals. A plan shall include a governmental plan (within the meaning of section 414(d) or a church plan (within the meaning of section 414(e)).

(B) Applicable Individual.—The term ‘applicable individual’ means—

(i) each participant in the plan, and

(ii) each payee (within the meaning of section 414(p)(8)) under an applicable qualified domestic relations order (within the meaning of section 414(p)(8)) who has a nonforfeitable benefit under the plan as of the effective date of the plan amendment and who may reasonably be expected to be affected by the plan amendment.

(10) Accrued Benefit; Projected Retirement Benefit.—For purposes of this subsection—

(A) Present Value of Accrued Benefit.—The present value of an accrued benefit of any applicable individual shall be calculated as if the accrued benefit were in the form of a single life annuity commencing at the participant’s normal retirement age (and by taking into account any early retirement subsidy).

(B) Projected Accrued Benefit.—

(i) In General.—The projected accrued benefit of any applicable individual shall be calculated as if the benefit were payable in the form of a single life annuity commencing at the participant’s normal retirement age (and by taking into account any early retirement subsidy).

(ii) Compensation and Other Assumptions.—Such benefit shall be calculated by assuming that compensation and all other benefit factors would increase for each plan year beginning after the effective date of the plan amendment at a rate equal to the median average of the CPI increase percentage (as defined in section 255(i) of the Social Security Act) for the 5 calendar years immediately preceding the calendar year before the calendar year in which such effective date occurs.

(iii) Benefit Factors.—For purposes of clause (ii), the term ‘benefit factors’ means social security benefits and all other relevant factors under section 411(a)(8), or

SEC. 906. EXCLUSION OF DISCHARGE OF QUALIFIED FARM INDEBTEDNESS FROM GROSS INCOME INCREASED FOR CERTAIN SOLVENT FARMERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 108(g) (relating to special rules for discharge of qualified farm indebtedness) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

“(b) SPECIAL LIMITATIONS FOR CERTAIN FARMERS.—(A) IN GENERAL.—With respect to a taxpayer who is described in subparagraph (C) of this paragraph, and who elects the application of this paragraph—

“(i) the amount excluded under subparagraph (C) of this paragraph (as so added) shall not exceed $300,000, and

“(ii) paragraph (2) of this subsection shall be applied by amending such paragraph to read as follows: ‘For purposes of this section, indebtedness of a taxpayer shall be treated as qualified farm indebtedness if such indebtedness was incurred directly in connection with the operation of the taxpayer’s trade or business of farming and when such taxpayer materially participated in such trade or business (within the meaning of section 2032A(e)(6)).’

“(C) TAXPAYER DESCRIBED IN THIS SUBPARAGRAPH.—A taxpayer is described in this subparagraph if—

“(i) more than 50 percent of the gross receipts of the taxpayer for 6 of the 10 taxable years preceding such taxable year are attributable to

“(I) the trade or business of farming (within the meaning of section 2032A(e)(5)), or “(II) the sale or lease of assets used in such trade or business; and

“(III) in any taxable year prior to the taxable year in which such discharge occurred—

“(AA) the taxpayer was described in subparagraph (C) of section 139, respectively, subsection (a)(1) of such section 139 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new paragraph:

“(BB) the taxpayer was described in subparagraph (C) of section 139 and inserting in lieu thereof the following new paragraph:

“(CC) the discharge was imposed by this chapter determined with regard to this section and section 139 if (if applicable).
(D) Definitions.—For purposes of this paragraph—

(1) FARM PROPERTY.—The term ‘farm property’ means real and personal property used by the taxpayer in the trade or business of farming (within the meaning of section 2032A(e)(6)), or the trade or business of raising livestock for sale or for grazing (within the meaning of section 2032A(e)(6)), or, for purposes of subsection (b)(2), a farming loss carryback or carryforward.

(2) ELIGIBLE TAXPAYER.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘eligible taxpayer’ means a taxpayer which derives more than 50 percent of its gross income for the 3-year period beginning 2 years prior to the current taxable year from qualified farming businesses.

(I) the taxpayer or a member of the family of the taxpayer materially participates in the trade or business for the taxable year determined by only taking into account items of income and deductions with respect to any property, an amount equal to—

(II) the fair market value of such property, minus

(III) any indebtedness relating to such property.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (A) of section 108(g)(3) is amended by striking out ‘The amount’ and inserting in lieu thereof ‘The amount provided in paragraph (4), the amount’.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to any sale or exchange after December 31, 2000, in taxable years ending after such date.

SEC. 907. NET OPERATING LOSS OF FARMERS.

(a) INCREASE IN CARRYBACK YEARS.—Paragraph (1) of section 172(b) (relating to net operating loss carrybacks and carryforwards) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

(2) ELECTION.—Any taxpayer entitled to a carryback of a net operating loss shall be treated as a single taxpayer.

(b) FARMING LOSSES.—Subparagraph (A) shall be applied—

(i) in the matter preceding clause (i), by substituting ‘any taxable year beginning with the 3rd taxable year after December 31, 1997, and ending before January 1, 2000, which is a farming loss as so defined’ for ‘any taxable year beginning with the 3rd taxable year after December 31, 1997, and ending before January 1, 2000’, and

(ii) in clause (i), by substituting ‘19 years for 2 years’, with respect to the portion of the net operating loss of an eligible taxpayer (as defined in subsection (i)) for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1997, and ending before January 1, 2000, which is a farming loss (as so defined) with respect to the taxpayer, and

(b) DEFINITIONS AND RULES RELATING TO FARMING LOSSES.—Section 172(e)(4) is amended by redesignating subsection (e)(4) as subsection (j) and inserting after subsection (j) the following new subsection:

(1) DEFINITIONS AND RULES RELATING TO FARMING LOSSES.—For purposes of this section—

(i) FARMING LOSS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘farming loss’ means the lesser of—

(I) the net operating loss of the taxpayer for the taxable year, or

(II) the net operating loss of the taxpayer for the taxable year determined by only taking into account items of income and deduction attributable to 1 or more qualified farming businesses of the taxpayer.

(B) DOLLAR LIMITATION.—In the case of a partnership, trust, or other pass-thru entity, the limitation shall be applied at both the entity and the owner level.

(C) QUALIFIED FARMING BUSINESS.—The taxpayer or a member of the family of the taxpayer materially participates with respect to any property, an amount equal to—

(i) the fair market value of such property, minus

(ii) any indebtedness relating to such property.

SEC. 908. CERTAIN CASH RENTALS OF FARMLAND NOT TO CAUSE RECAPTURE OF SPECIAL ESTATE TAX VALUATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (c) of section 2032A (relating to tax treatment of dispositions and surrenders for use for qualified use) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

(c) ELECTION.—Any taxpayer entitled to a carryback of a net operating loss shall be treated as a single taxpayer.

(b) ELECTION.—Any taxpayer entitled to a carryback of a net operating loss shall be treated as a single taxpayer.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply at the election date of such investment which occurred during December 1, 1976.
(B) each of the 4 anniversary dates of such debt held by the taxpayer.

(b) QUALIFIED EQUITY INVESTMENT.—For purposes of this section—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘qualified equity investment’ means any equity investment in a qualified community development entity if—

(A) such investment is acquired by the taxpayer (directly or through an underwriter) solely in exchange for cash,

(B) substantially all of such cash is used by the qualified community development entity to make qualified low-income community investments, and

(C) such investment is designated for purposes of this section by the qualified community development entity.

Such term shall not include any equity investment issued by a qualified community development entity more than 5 years after the date that such entity receives an allocation under subsection (f). Any allocation not used within such 5-year period may be reallocated by the Secretary under subsection (f).

(2) LIMITATION AMOUNT.—The limitation amount allocated under subsection (f) to such entity.

(3) SAFE HARBOR FOR DETERMINING USE OF CASH.—The requirement of paragraph (1)(B) shall apply for purposes of this subsection.

(4) TREATMENT OF SUBSEQUENT PURCHASE.—The term ‘qualified equity investment’ includes any equity investment which would (but for paragraph (1)(A)) be a qualified equity investment in the hands of a prior taxpayer if such investment was a qualified equity investment in the hands of the prior taxpayer if such investment was a qualified equity investment in the hands of the prior taxpayer if—

(A) the primary mission of the entity is serving, or providing investment capital for, low-income communities or low-income persons,

(B) the entity maintains accountability to residents of low-income communities through representation on governing or advisory boards or otherwise, and

(C) the entity is certified by the Secretary to businesses located in, and substantially all of such cash is used by the qualified community development entity in qualified low-income community investments.

(5) REDEMPTIONS.—A rule similar to the rule of section 1397B(d) shall apply for purposes of this subsection.

(6) EQUITY INVESTMENT.—The term ‘equity investment’ means—

(A) any stock in a qualified community development entity if—

(i) any specialized small business investment company (as defined in section 384(c)(3)), and

(ii) any community development financial institution (as defined in section 103 of the Community Development Banking and Financial Institutions Act of 1994 (12 U.S.C. 4700)).

(b) qualified low-income community investments.

(7) ALLOCATION OF LIMITATION.—The limitation amount allocated under paragraph (2) for the succeeding calendar year.

(8) CARRYOVER OF UNUSED LIMITATION.—If the new markets tax credit limitation of $750,000,000 for each of calendar years 2000 through 2004 and zero for any succeeding calendar year.

(9) REGISTRATION.—The registration under paragraph (1) shall be allocated by the Secretary among qualified community development entities selected by the Secretary.

In making allocations under the foregoing sentence, the Secretary shall give priority to entities with records of having successfully provided capital or technical assistance to disadvantaged businesses or communities.

(10) NATIONAL LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF INVESTMENTS DESIGNATED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There is a new markets tax credit limitation of $750,000,000 for each of calendar years 2000 through 2004 and zero for any succeeding calendar year.

(2) ALLOCATION OF LIMITATION.—The limitation under paragraph (1) shall be allocated by the Secretary among qualified community development entities selected by the Secretary.

(3) RECAPTURE OF CREDIT IN CERTAIN CASES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—If, at any time during the period beginning on the due date of the original issue of a qualified equity investment in a qualified community development entity, there is a recapTURE event with respect to such investment, then the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year in which such event occurs shall be increased by the credit recapture amount.

(2) CREDIT RECAPTURE AMOUNT.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the credit recapture amount is an amount equal to the sum of—

(A) the aggregate decrease in the credits allowed to the taxpayer under section 38 for all prior taxable years which would have resulted if no credit had been determined under this section with respect to such investment, and

(B) interest at the overpayment rate established under section 6621 on the amount determined under subparagraph (A) for each prior taxable year for the period beginning on the due date for filing the return for the prior taxable year involved.

No deduction shall be allowed under this chapter for interest described in subparagraph (B).

(3) RECAPTURE EVENT.—For purposes of paragraph (1), there is a recapTURE event with respect to any taxable year, any corporation or partnership if such tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year in which such event occurs shall be increased by the credit recapture amount.

(4) PORTIONS OF BUSINESS MAY BE QUALIFIED.—For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘qualified business’ has the meaning given to such term by section 1397B(e).

(5) Q UALIFIED BUSINESS.—For purposes of this section by the qualified community development entity selected by the Secretary. In making allocations under the foregoing sentence, the Secretary shall give priority to entities with records of having successfully provided capital or technical assistance to disadvantaged businesses or communities.

(6) EQUITY INVESTMENTS WHICH ARE INCLUDED.—For purposes of this section, the term ‘equity investment’ includes any equity investment which would (but for paragraph (1)(A)) be a qualified equity investment in the hands of a prior taxpayer if such investment was a qualified equity investment in the hands of the prior taxpayer if—

(A) the aggregate decrease in the credits allowed to the taxpayer under section 38 for all prior taxable years which would have resulted if no credit had been determined under this section with respect to such investment, and

(B) interest at the overpayment rate established under section 6621 on the amount determined under subparagraph (A) for each prior taxable year for the period beginning on the due date of the original issue of a qualified equity investment in a qualified community development entity.
respect to an equity investment in a qualified community development entity if:

(A) such entity ceases to be a qualified community development entity;

(B) the proceeds of the investment cease to be used as required of subsection (b)(1)(B), or

(C) such investment is redeemed by such entity.

(2) SPECIAL RULES.—

(A) TAX BENEFIT RULE.—The tax for the taxable year shall be increased under paragraph (1) only with respect to credits allowed by reason of this section which were used to reduce tax liability. In the case of credits not so used to reduce tax liability, the carryforwards and carrybacks under section 38 shall be appropriately adjusted.

(B) NO CREDITS AGAINST TAX.—Any increase in tax under this subsection shall not be treated as a tax imposed by this chapter for purposes of determining the amount of any credit under this chapter or for purposes of section 55.

(3) BASIS REDUCTION.—The basis of any qualified equity investment shall be reduced by the amount of any credit determined under this section with respect to such investment.

(4) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be appropriate to carry out this section, including regulations—

(a) which limit the credit for investments which are directly or indirectly subsidized by other Federal benefits (including the credit under section 42 and the exclusion from gross income under section 193),

(b) which prevent the abuse of the provisions of this section through the use of related parties,

(c) which impose appropriate reporting requirements

(4) which apply the provisions of this section to newly formed entities;

(b) CREDIT MADE PART OF GENERAL BUSINESS CREDIT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (b) of section 38, as amended by section 193(b), is amended by striking “plus” at the end of paragraph (13), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (14) and inserting “plus”, and by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(15) the new markets tax credit determined under section 45E(a).”

(2) LIMITATION ON CARRYBACK.—Subsection (d) of section 39, as amended by section 608(c), is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(2) LIMITATION ON CARRYBACK.—The table of sections for subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1, as amended by section 608(d), is amended by adding at the end the following new heading:

“SEC. 45E. NEW MARKETS TAX CREDIT.”

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to investments made after December 31, 1999.

147(b)(2)(A).

'Qualifying T&D facility'—The term ‘qualifying T&D facility' means—

(i) transmission facilities over which services described in subsection (b)(6)(C)(i)(III) are provided,

(ii) distribution facilities over which services described in subsection (b)(6)(C)(i)(III) are provided.

‘Effective Date and Transition Rules.—

(i) Effective Date.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act, except that a governmental unit may elect to apply section 141(b)(6)(C) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as added by subsection (a), with respect to permitted open access transactions on or after July 9, 1996.

(ii) Clarification of Treatment of Fund Transfers.—Subsection (e) of section 468A is amended by adding at the end the fol-owing new paragraph:

‘(B) Treatment of Fund transfers.—If, in connection with the transfer of the taxpayer's interest in a nuclear powerplant, the taxpayer transfers the Fund with respect to such powerplant to the transferee of such interest and the transferee elects to continue the application of this section to such Fund—

(A) the average maturity date of the issue of which the refunding bond is a part is not later than the average maturity date of the bonds to be refunded by such issue, and amount shall be treated as distributed from such Fund, or be includible in gross income, by reason of such transfer.'

...into such Fund amounts held in any non-qualified fund by the taxpayer with respect to such powerplant.

(2) Maximum amount permitted to be transferred.—The amount permitted to be transferred under paragraph (1) shall not exceed the balance in the nonqualified fund as of December 31, 1998.

(3) Deduction for amounts transferred.—

(A) In general.—The deduction allowed by subsection (a) for any transfer permitted by this subsection shall be allowed ratably over the estimated useful life (within the meaning of subsection (d)(2)(A)) of the nuclear powerplant, beginning with the later of the taxable year during which the transfer is made or the taxpayer’s first taxable year beginning after December 31, 2001.

(B) Denial of deduction for previously deducted amounts.—No deduction shall be allowed for any transfer under this subsection of an amount for which a deduction was allowed when such amount was paid into the nonqualified fund. For purposes of the preceding sentence, a ratable portion of each transfer shall be treated as being from previously deducted amounts to the extent thereof.

(C) Transfers of qualified funds.—If—

(i) any transfer permitted by this subsection is made to any Fund to which this section applies or

(ii) such Fund is transferred thereafter, any deduction under this subsection for taxable years ending after the date that such Fund is transferred shall be allowed to the transferee and not to the transferor. The preceding sentence shall not apply if the transferor is an organization exempt from tax imposed by this chapter.

(4) New Fund Amount Required.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any transfer unless the taxpayer requests from the Secretary a new schedule of ruling amounts in connection with such transfer.

(5) Nonqualified Fund.—For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘nonqualified fund’ means, with respect to any nuclear powerplant, any fund in which amounts are irrevocably set aside pursuant to the requirements of any State or Federal agency exclusively for the purpose of funding the decommissioning of the nuclear powerplant.

(6) No basis in qualified funds.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the basis of any Fund to which this section applies shall not be increased by reason of any transfer permitted by this subsection.

(d) Effective Date.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1999.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (f) of section 7701 (relating to disallowance of deduction in certain cases and special rules), as amended by section 807, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

‘‘(11) Split-Dollar Life Insurance, Annuity, and Endowment Contracts.—

‘‘(A) In General.—Nothing in this section or in section 7701(b)(2), 5502(b)(2), 662(b), 2655, 2106(a)(2), or 2522 shall be construed to allow a deduction, and no deduction shall be allowed, for any transfer to or for the use of an organization described in subsection (c) if in connection with such transfer—

‘‘(i) the organization directly or indirectly pays, or has previously paid, any premium on any annuity contract with respect to the transferor, or

‘‘(ii) there is an understanding or expectation that any person will directly or indirectly pay any premium on any personal benefit contract with respect to the transferor.

‘‘(B) Personal Benefit Contract.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term ‘personal benefit contract’ means, with respect to the transferor, any life insurance, annuity, or endowment contract if any direct or indirect beneficiary under such contract is the transferor, any member of the transferor’s family, or any other person (other than an organization described in subsection (c)) designated by the transferor.

‘‘(C) Application to Charitable Remainder Trusts.—In the case of a transfer to a trust referred to in subparagraph (E), reference in subparagraphs (A) and (B) to an organization described in subsection (c) shall be treated as a reference to such trust.

‘‘(D) Exception for Certain Annuity Contracts.—If, in connection with a transfer to, or for the use of an organization described in subsection (c), such organization incurs an obligation to pay a charitable gift annuity (as defined in section 501(m)) and such organization purchases any annuity contract to fund such obligation, persons receiving payments under the charitable gift annuity shall not be treated for purposes of subparagraph (B) as direct beneficiaries under such contract if—

‘‘(i) such organization possesses all of the incidents of ownership under such contract, and

‘‘(ii) such organization is entitled to all the payments under such contract, and

‘‘(iii) the timing and amount of payments under such contract are substantially the same as the timing and amount of payments to each person under such obligation (as such obligation is in effect at the time of such transfer).

‘‘(E) Exception for Certain Contracts Held by Charitable Remainder Trusts.—A person shall not be treated for purposes of subparagraph (B) as an indirect beneficiary under any life insurance, annuity, or endowment contract held by a charitable remainder annuity trust or a charitable remainder unitrust (as defined in section 664(d)) solely by reason of being entitled to any payment referred to in paragraph (1)(A) or (2)(A) of section 664(d).

‘‘(F) Exemptions Paid.—

‘‘(i) In General.—There is hereby imposed on any organization described in subsection (c) an excise tax equal to the premiums paid after February 8, 1999 (determined as if the tax imposed by such subsection applies to premiums paid after such date).

‘‘(ii) Payments by other Persons.—For purposes of clause (i), payments made by any other person pursuant to an understanding or expectation referred to in subparagraph (A) shall be treated as made by the organization.

‘‘(iii) Reporting.—Any organization on which tax is imposed by clause (i) with or to any premium shall file an annual return which includes—

‘‘(I) the amount of such premium paid during the year and the name and TIN of each beneficiary under the contract to which the premium relates, and ‘‘(II) such other information as Secretary may require.

The penalties applicable to returns required under section 6038 shall apply to returns required under this clause. Returns required under this clause shall be furnished at such time and in such manner as the Secretary shall by forms or regulations require.

(iv) Certain Rules to Apply.—The tax imposed by this subparagraph shall be treated as a tax described by section 6001(a)(2) of this title other than subsection B of chapter 42.

‘‘(G) Special Rule Where State Requires Separation of Ownership Before Transfer.—In the case of an obligation to pay a charitable gift annuity referred to in subparagraph (D) which is entered into under the laws of the State which requires, in order for the charitable gift annuity to be exempt from insurance regulation by such State, that each beneficiary under the charitable gift annuity be named as a beneficiary under an annuity contract issued by an insurance company authorized to transact business in such State, the requirements of clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (D) shall be treated as met if—

‘‘(I) such State law requirement was in effect on February 8, 1999,

‘‘(II) each such beneficiary under the charitable gift annuity is a bona fide resident of such State at the time the obligation to pay a charitable gift annuity is entered into, and

‘‘(III) the only person entitled to payments under such contract are persons entitled to payments as beneficiaries under such obligation on the date such obligation is entered into.

‘‘(H) Member of Family.—For purposes of this paragraph, an individual’s family consists of the individual’s spouse, the lineal descendants of such individual’s spouse, the lineal descendants of such individual’s spouse, the lineal descendants of such individual’s spouse, the lineal descendants of such individual’s spouse, and any other person referred to in paragraph (1)(A) or (2)(A) of section 2522.

‘‘(I) Regulations.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this paragraph, including regulations to prevent the avoidance of such purposes.

‘‘(j) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, the amendments made by this section shall apply to transfers made after August 8, 1999.

‘‘(k) Election.—Except as provided in paragraph (3) of this subsection, section 170(f)(11)(F) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as added by this subsection) shall apply to premiums paid after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) REPORTING.—Clause (iii) of such section 170(f)(11)(F) shall apply to premiums paid after February 8, 1999 (determined as if the tax imposed by such section applies to premiums paid after such date).

SEC. 1210. ALLOCATION OF BASIS ON TRANSFERS OF INTERESTS IN CERTAIN NON-RECOGNITION TRANSACTIONS

(a) TRANSFERS TO CORPORATIONS.—Section 351 (relating to transfer to corporation controlled by transferor) and the rules of section 367 (relating to transfers of intangible property) shall apply to a transfer of any stock or stock of another corporation (hereinafter in this section referred to as the ‘‘distributed corporation’’) from a corporation to an individual who is an individual shareholder of the distributed corporation at such time (or, if such shareholder is not an individual shareholder of the distributed corporation at such time (or, if such shareholder ceases to be an individual shareholder before the satisfaction of the Secretary that such corporation is not a part of a plan or arrangement to acquire control of the distributed corporation), the amount by which the sum of the aggregate adjusted bases of the property and the amount of money of the distributed corporation exceeds the corporate partner’s adjusted basis in the stock of the distributed corporation shall be increased by such excess.

(b) TRANSFERS TO INDIVIDUALS.—For purposes of this section, including regulations to avoid double counting of the purposes of this subsection, any retransfer of property held by a corporation as a result of a distribution from a corporation controlled by a corporation that held the property under paragraph (1) shall be treated as a distribution of property of that corporation to the individual in which the corporate partner held the property at such time but only to the extent that the basis of the property allocated as a basis of the property allocated to the individual by the transferor is less than the basis of such property at such time as a result of the transfer of property made by the corporate partner. In any case in which the corporate partner does not control the corporate partner at such time, at the time the corporate partner first has such control.

(c) TREATMENT OF TRANSFERS OF INTANGIBLE PROPERTY.—

(1) TRANSFERS OF LESS THAN ALL SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.—

(A) such excess shall be recognized by the corporate partner as long-term capital gain, and

(B) the corporate partner’s adjusted basis in the stock of the distributed corporation shall be increased by such excess.

(d) TRANSFERS TO PARTNERSHIPS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Sections 453 (relating to gain upon disposition of property) and 454 (relating to treatment of gain of a partner in a partnership) shall apply to any transfer of property by a corporate partner to a partnership. In any case in which the corporate partner does not control the corporate partner at such time, at the time the corporate partner first has such control.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to transfers on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 1221. DISTRIBUTIONS TO A CORPORATE PARTNER OF STOCK IN ANOTHER CORPORATION

(a) IN GENERAL.—If a corporation (hereafter in this subsection referred to as the ‘‘corporate partner’’) receives a distribution from a corporation (hereafter in this subsection referred to as the ‘‘distributed corporation’’), the corporate partner shall control the distributed corporation immediately after the distribution.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to transfers on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 1219. MODIFICATION OF ANTI-ABUSE RULES RELATED TO ASSUMPTION OF LIABILITY

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 453(b)(1) (relating to tax avoidance purpose) is amended—

(1) by striking ‘‘the principal purpose’’ and inserting ‘‘a principal purpose’’, and

(2) by striking ‘‘on the exchange’’ in sub-paragraph (A).

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to transactions after July 14, 1999.

(2) Exception for certain distributions before control is acquired.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any distribution of stock in the distributed corporation if—

(A) the corporate partner does not have control of such corporation immediately after such distribution, and

(B) the corporate partner establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary that such distribution was not part of a plan or arrangement to acquire control of the distributed corporation.

(3) Limitations on basis reduction.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The amount of the reduction under paragraph (1) shall not exceed the amount by which the sum of the aggregate adjusted bases of the property and the amount of money of the distributed corporation exceeds the corporate partner’s adjusted basis in the stock of the distributed corporation.

(B) REDUCTION NOT TO EXCEED ADJUSTED BASIS OF PROPERTY.—No reduction under paragraph (1) in the basis of any property shall exceed the adjusted basis of such property determined without regard to such reduction.

(4) Gain recognition where reduction limits not met.—In the case of a transfer of intangible property developed by the transferor or any related person if such development was pursuant to an arrangement with the transferor, rules similar to the rules of section 351(h) shall apply for purposes of this section.

(5) Control.—For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘control’ means ownership of a stock meeting the requirements of section 1564(a)(2).

(6) Special rule for stock in controlled corporation.—If the property held by a distributed corporation is stock in a corporation which the distributed corporation controls, rules similar to the rules of section 367(d)(3) shall apply to reduce the basis of the property of such controlled corporation. This subsection shall be reapplied to any property of any controlled corporation which is stock in a corporation which it controls.

(7) Special rule for stock in controlled corporation.—If the property held by a distributed corporation is stock in a corporation which the distributed corporation controls, such subsection shall be applied to reduce the basis of the property of such controlled corporation. This subsection shall be reapplied to any property of any controlled corporation which is stock in a corporation which it controls.

(8) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this subsection, including regulations to avoid double counting of the purposes of this subsection, any retransfer of property held by a corporation as a result of a distribution from a corporation controlled by a corporation that held the property under paragraph (1) shall be treated as a distribution of property of that corporation to the individual in which the corporate partner held the property at such time but only to the extent that the basis of the property allocated as a basis of the property allocated to the individual by the transferor is less than the basis of such property at such time as a result of the transfer of property made by the corporate partner. In any case in which the corporate partner does not control the corporate partner at such time, at the time the corporate partner first has such control.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

July 28, 1999

403

(2) Denial of deduction where contributions or activities. — No deduction shall be allowed under this section for a contribution or to an organization which conducts activities to which section 11(d)(2)(C)(i) applies on matters of religious interest to the donor's business, if a principal purpose of the contribution was to avoid Federal income tax by securing a deduction for such activities under this section; which would be disallowed by reason of section 11(d)(2)(C) if the donor had conducted such activities directly. No deduction shall be allowed under this sub-section (d) if any amount for which a deduction is disallowed under the preceding sentence.

(d) Amounts paid to maintain certain students as members of taxpayer's household. —

(1) In general. — Subject to the limitations provided by paragraph (2), amounts paid by the taxpayer to maintain an individual (other than a dependent, as defined in section 5(d), or a relative of the taxpayer) as a member of such taxpayer's household during the period described in this subparagraph if the acknowledgment meets the requirements of this subparagraph if it includes the following information:

(i) The amount of cash contributed.

(ii) Whether the donee organization provided any goods or services in consideration, in whole or in part, for any contribution described in clause (i).

(iii) A description and good faith estimate of the value of any goods or services referred to in clause (i) or, if such goods or services consist of intangible religious benefits, a statement to that effect.

For purposes of this subparagraph, the term "intangible religious benefit" means any intangible benefit which is provided by an organization in connection with religious purposes and which generally is not sold in a commercial transaction outside the donorative context.

(c) Contingent benefits. — For purposes of subparagraph (A), an acknowledgment shall be considered to be contingent if the taxpayer obtains the acknowledgment on or before the earlier of:

(i) The date on which the taxpayer files a return for the taxable year in which the contribution was made;

(ii) The due date (including extensions) for filing such return.

(d) Substantiation not required for contributions reported by the donee organization. — Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to a contribution if the donee organization files a return, on such form and in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, which includes the information described in subparagraph (B) with respect to the contribution.

(e) False statements. — The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this paragraph, including regulations that may provide that some or all of the requirements of this paragraph do not apply in appropriate cases.

(i) which is made by an individual as an employee under a qualified employer plan which allows employees to elect to make voluntary employee contributions to a separate account or annuity established under the plan,

(ii) with respect to which the individual has designated the contribution as a contribution to which this subsection applies.

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 517 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1147) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking “2001 and 2005 on or after September 1 of each year until January 1, 2009” and inserting “2001 and 2005 on or after September 1 of each year until January 1, 2009, and, for each of the subsequent years, respectively”;

(2) in subsection (c), by striking “(b)” and inserting “(a)”;

(3) in subsection (d), by striking “(B)” and inserting “(A)”;

(4) in subsection (e)(2), by striking “(B)” and inserting “(A)”;

(5) in subsection (e)(4), by striking “(C)” and inserting “(B)”;

(6) in subsection (f)(1)(C), by striking “(b)” and inserting “(a)”;

(7) in subsection (g), by inserting “, in consultation with the congressional leaders specified in subsection (e)(2)” after “report”;

(8) in subsection (i)—

(A) by striking “beginning on or after October 1, 1997” in paragraph (1) and inserting “2001, 2005, and 2009” and

(B) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(C) by the elected leaders of Congress, and by the elected leaders of Congress in clause (i), and by inserting ‘not more than 100 participants’ and ‘2001, 2005, and 2009’;" and

(9) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(K) by inserting ‘may enter into a contract on a sole-source basis’ and inserting ‘may enter into a contract on a sole-source basis;’ and

(b) AMENDMENT OF ERISA.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 4 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1003) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c) If a pension plan allows an employee to elect to make voluntary employee contributions to accounts and annuities as provided in section 408(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, such accounts and annuities (and contributions thereto) shall not be treated as part of such plan (or as a separate pension plan) for purposes of any provision of this title other than section 408(c), 401, or 405 (relating to exclusive benefit, and fiduciary and co-fiduciary responsibilities).

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to plan years beginning after December 31, 1999.

AMENDMENT No. 1388

(Submitted to the table.)
Mr. BINGAMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill, S. 1429, supra, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

DIVISION II—ENERGY SECURITY TAX INCENTIVES

SECTION 1. DEPRECIATION TREATMENT OF DISTRIBUTED POWER PROPERTY.

(a) In General.—Section 168(e)(3)(E) of the Internal Revenue Code (classifying certain property as 15-year property) is amended by striking the period at the end of clause (ii) and inserting the period at the end of clause (i) and inserting, ‘and’, and ‘as follows:’

“(ii) DISTRIBUTED POWER PROPERTY.—The term ‘distributed power property’ means—

(A) which is used in the generation of electricity for primary use—

(1) in nonresidential real or residential rental property used in the taxpayer’s trade or business, or

(2) in the taxpayer’s industrial manufacturing process or plant activity, with a rated total capacity in excess of 500,000 kilowatts,

(B) which also may produce usable thermal energy or mechanical power for use in a structure, or

(C) which is not used to transport primary fuel to the generating facility or to distribute energy within or outside of the facility,

(D) where it is reasonably expected that not more than 50 percent of the produced electric or mechanical energy will be sold to, or used by, unrelated persons.

For purposes of subparagraph (B), energy output is determined on the basis of expected annual output levels, measured in British thermal units (Btu), using standard conversion factors established by the Secretary.

(2) Subparagraph (B) of section 168(g)(3) is amended by inserting after the item relating to subparagraph (C) of subsection (c)(1) the following new clause:

“(iii) DISTRIBUTED POWER PROPERTY.—The term ‘distributed power property’ means—

(A) which is—

(1) solar energy property,

LEAHY AMENDMENT NO. 1396

Ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LEAHY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill, S. 1429, supra; as follows:

At the end of title XI, insert the following:

SEC. 2. COSTS OF MAKING COMPUTERS AND COMPUTER SOFTWARE YEAR 2000 COMPLIANT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) PROPERTY PLACED IN SERVICE IN 1998.—A taxpayer may elect to treat the cost of a business Y2K asset placed in service during the taxpayer's first taxable year beginning in 1998 as an expense which is not chargeable to capital account. The cost so treated shall be allowed as a deduction from gross income for purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(2) PROPERTY PLACED IN SERVICE IN 1997 OR 1998.—A taxpayer may elect to deduct from gross income an amount equal to the unrecovered basis of a business Y2K asset placed in service during the 2 taxable years preceding the first taxable year beginning in 1999 which is otherwise subject to depreciation under such Code.

(b) LIMITATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The aggregate amount allowed as a deduction under subsection (a) shall not exceed $30,000.

(2) APPLICATION OF BUSINESS LIMITATIONS OF SECTION 179.—Rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of section 179(b) of such Code shall apply for purposes of this section. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the cost of property to which the limitation in paragraph (2) of such section 179(b) applies—

(A) the amounts elected under subsection (a)(1) with respect to property placed in service during the taxpayer's first taxable year beginning in 1998; and

(B) the amounts elected under subsection (a)(2) with respect to the unrecovered basis of business Y2K assets placed in service during the 2 taxable years preceding the first taxable year beginning in 1999.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) BUSINESS Y2K ASSET.—The term "business Y2K asset'' means an asset acquired by purchase for use in the active conduct of a trade or business which is—

(A) any property required to replace a computer where such replacement is necessary because of the year 2000 computer conversion problem, and

(B) any of the following items which are of a character subject to the allowance for depreciation under such Code:—

(i) the modification of computer software to address the year 2000 computer conversion problem, and

(ii) computer software which is year 2000 compliant acquired to replace computer software which is not year 2000 compliant.

(2) COMPUTER.—The term "computer'' means a computer or peripheral equipment (as defined by section 168(k)(2)(B)) of such Code.

(3) COMPUTER SOFTWARE.—The term "computer software'' has the meaning given to such term by section 167(f) of such Code.

(d) UNRECOVERED BASIS.—The term "unrecovered basis'' means the adjusted basis of the business Y2K asset determined as of the close of the last taxable year beginning before January 1, 1999.

(e) SPECIAL RULES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Rules similar to the rules of subsections (c) and (d) (other than paragraph (1) thereof) of section 179 of such Code shall apply for purposes of this section.

(2) TREATMENT AS DEDUCTION UNDER SECTION 179.—For purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, the deduction allowed under this section shall be treated in the same manner as a deduction allowed under section 179 of such Code.

(f) ORDERING.—For purposes of section 179 of such Code, subsection (b)(3)(C) of such section shall be applied without regard to the deduction allowed under this section.

McCAIN AMENDMENT NO. 1397

Mr. MCCAIN proposed an amendment to the bill, S. 1429, supra; as follows:

At the appropriate place, add the following:

TITLE.—EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES FOR DISADVANTAGED CHILDREN

Subtitle A—Educational Opportunities

SEC. 1. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this title are—

(1) to assist States to—

(A) give children from low-income families the same choices among all elementary and secondary schools and other academic programs as children from wealthier families already have;

(B) improve schools and other academic programs so that students in wealthier families are better prepared to compete in the work force;

(C) more fully engage parents in their children's schooling; and

(2) to demonstrate, through a 3-year national demonstration grant program, the effects of a voucher program that gives parents in low-income families—

(A) choice among public, private, and religious schools for their children;

(B) access to the same academic options as parents in wealthy families have for their children.

SEC. 2. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title (other than section 101) $1,000,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2001 through 2003.

(b) EVALUATION.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out section 103 ($7,000,000 for fiscal years through 2004.

SEC. 3. PROGRAM AUTHORITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall make grants to States, from allotments made under section 104 to enable the States to carry out educational choice programs that provide scholarships, in accordance with this title.

(b) LIMIT ON FEDERAL ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENDITURES.—The Secretary may reserve not more than $1,000,000 of the amounts appropriated under section 102(a) for a fiscal year to pay for the costs of administering this title.

SEC. 4. ALLOTMENTS TO STATES.

(a) ALLOTMENTS.—The Secretary shall make the allotments to States in accordance with a formula specified in regulations issued in accordance with subsection (b). The formula shall provide that the Secretary shall allocate to each State an amount that bears the same relationship to the amounts appropriated under section 102(a) for a fiscal year (other than funds reserved under section 103(b)) as the number of covered children in the State bears to the number of covered children in all such States.

(b) FORMULA.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall issue regulations specifying the formula referred to in subsection (a).

(c) LIMIT ON STATE ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENDITURES.—The State may reserve not more than 1 percent of the funds made available through the State allotment to pay for the costs of administering this title.

(d) DETERMINATION.—In the case of the term "covered child'' means a child who is enrolled in a public school (including a charter school) that is an elementary school or secondary school.

SEC. 5. ELIGIBLE SCHOOLS.

(a) ELIGIBILITY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Schools identified by the State under paragraph (2) shall be considered to be eligible schools under this title.

(2) DETERMINATION.—Not later than 180 days after the date the Secretary issues regulations under section 101(a)(5), each State shall identify the public elementary schools and secondary schools in the State that are at or below the 25th percentile for academic performance of schools in the State in the performance of schools in the State in the performance of schools in the State in the performance of schools in the State in the performance of schools in the State.

(b) PERFORMANCE.—The State shall determine the academic performance of a school under this section based on such criteria as the State may consider to be appropriate.

SEC. 6. SCHOLARSHIPS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) SCHOLARSHIP AWARDS.—With funds appropriated under this title, each State awarded a grant under this title shall provide scholarships to the parents of eligible children, in accordance with subsections (b) and (c). The State shall ensure that the scholarships may be redeemed for elementary or secondary education for the children of any of a broad variety of public and private schools, including religious schools, in the State.

(2) SCHOLARSHIP AMOUNT.—The amount of each scholarship shall be $2000 per year.
(3) Tax Exemption.—Scholarships awarded under this title shall not be considered income of the parents for Federal income tax purposes or for determining eligibility for any other Federal program.

(b) Eligible Child.—To be eligible to receive a scholarship under this title, a child shall be—

1. a child who is enrolled in a public elementary school or secondary school that is an eligible school; and

2. a member of a family with a family income that is not more than 200 percent of the poverty line.

(c) Award Rules.—

(1) Priority.—In providing scholarships under this title, the State shall provide scholarships for eligible children through a lottery system administered for all eligible schools in the State by the State educational agency.

(2) Continuing Eligibility.—Each State receiving a grant under this title to carry out an educational choice program shall provide a scholarship in each year of the program to each child who received a scholarship during the previous year of the program, unless—

(A) the child no longer resides in the area served by the school; or

(B) the child no longer attends school.

(3) Family Income Exceeds 200 Percent of the Poverty Line—

(D) the child is expelled or convicted of a felony, including felonious drug possession.

(f) Termination.—In the case of taxable years beginning after December 31, 1999, the provisions of subparagraph (A) shall be construed to affect the beginning of the taxable year in which the portion of the award for such year is attributable to such scholarship.

(g) I ndividuals with Disabilities.—

(1) Award.—In general.—Scholarships under this title shall be considered to aid families, not institutions. For purposes of determining Federal assistance under Federal law, a parent's receipt of a scholarship under this title at a school or for supplementary academic services shall not constitute Federal financial aid or assistance to that school or to the provider of supplementary academic services.

(2) Supplementary Academic Services.—

(A) In General.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1), any educational choice program that receives scholarship funds under this title shall, as a condition of participation under this title, provide supplementary academic services to the children in the school or to such State or to a school selected by the parents of the child under this title in order to provide to any other funds from Federal, State, or local resources, or in determining the amount of such assistance, to such State or to a school attended by such child.

(e) No Discretion.—Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize the Secretary to exercise any direction, supervision, or control over the curriculum, program of instruction, administration, or personnel of any educational institution or school participating in a program under this title.

The Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct an evaluation of the program authorized by this title. Such evaluation shall, at a minimum—

(1) assess the implementation of educational choices under this title and their effect on participants, schools, and communities in the school districts served, including parental involvement in, and satisfaction with, the program and their children's education;

(2) compare the educational achievement of participating eligible children with the educational achievement of similar non-participating children before, during, and after the program; and

(3) compare—

(A) the educational achievement of eligible children who use scholarships to attend schools other than the schools the children would attend in the absence of the program; with

(B) the educational achievement of children who attend the schools the children would attend in the absence of the program.

SEC. 11. Enforcement.

(a) Regulations.—The Secretary shall promulgate regulations to enforce the provisions of this title.

(b) Private Cause.—No provision or requirement of this title shall be enforced through a private cause of action.

SEC. 12. Definitions.

In this subpart—

(1) Charter school.—The term "charter school" means the meaning given the term in section 2001 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 611 et seq.).

(2) Local educational agency.—The term "local educational agency" means the term "local educational agency" as defined by the Secretary in regulations given the terms in section 1101(a) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7801).

(3) Poverty line.—The term "poverty line" means the poverty line (as defined by the Office of Management and Budget, and revised annually in accordance with section 3(b)(2)(A) of the Consumer Price Index (Block Grant Act (42 U.S.C. 9902(2))) applicable to a family of the size involved.

SEC. 02. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) the $69,246,000,000 unified budget surplus achieved in fiscal year 1998 was entirely due to surpluses generated by the social security trust funds and the cumulative unified budget surplus projected for subsequent fiscal years are primarily due to surpluses generated by the social security trust funds;

(2) Congress and the President should balance the budget excluding the surpluses generated by the social security trust funds;

(3) according to the Congressional Budget Office, balancing the budget excluding the surpluses generated by the social security trust funds will reduce the debt held by the public by a total of $1,859,500,000,000 by the end of fiscal year 2009; and

(4) social security surpluses should be used for social security reform or to reduce the debt held by the public and should not be spent on other programs.

SEC. 03. PROVISIONS OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY TRUST FUNDS.

(a) PROTECTION BY CONGRESS.—

(1) reaffirmation of support.—Congress reaffirms its support of the provisions of section 13301 of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990 that provides that the receipts and disbursements of the social security trust funds shall not be counted for the purposes of the budget submitted by the President, the congressional budget, or the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

(2) PROTECTION OF SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS.—If there are sufficient balances in the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, the Secretary of Treasury shall give priority to the payment of social security benefits required to be paid by law;

(b) POINTS OF ORDER.—Section 301 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended by adding at the end the following:

(1) SOCIAL SECURITY POINT OF ORDER.—It shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that would—

(1) increase the limit on the debt held by the public in section 253(a) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985; or

(2) provide additional borrowing authority that would result in the debt held by the public in section 253(a) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 being exceeded.

(2) SOCIAL SECURITY SURPLUS PROTECTION POINT OF ORDER.—It shall not be in order in the Senate to consider a concurrent resolution on the budget, an amendment thereto, or a conference report thereon that sets forth a deficit for a fiscal year for the public and are not spent on other programs.

(3) EXCEPTION.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply if—

(A) the limit on the debt held by the public in section 253(a) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is suspended; or

(B) the debt for a fiscal year results only from the enactment of legislation—

(1) “(i) social security reform legislation, as defined in section 23A(e)(2) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985;”

(2) “(ii) provisions of legislation that are designated as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) or 252(e) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.”

(c) SUPERMAJORITY WAIVER AND APPEAL.—

Subsections (c)(1) and (d)(2) of section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 are amended by striking “305(b)(2),” and inserting “301(k), 301(l), 305(b)(2),”.

SEC. 04. DEDICATION OF SOCIAL SECURITY SURPLUS TO REDUCTION IN THE DEBT HELD BY THE PUBLIC.

(a) AMENDMENTS TO THE CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ACT OF 1974.—The Congressional Budget Act of 1974 is amended—

(1) in section 3, by adding at the end the following:

“(11A) The term ‘debt held by the public’ means the outstanding face amount of all debt obligations issued by the United States Government that are held by outside investors, including individuals, corporations, State or local governments, foreign governments, and the Federal Reserve System.

For the purposes of this paragraph, the term “face amount”, for any month, of any debt obligation issued on a discount basis that is not redeemable before maturity at the option of the holder of the obligation is an amount equal to the sum of—

(i) the original issue price of the obligation; plus

(ii) the portion of the discount on the obligation attributable to periods before the beginning of such month.

(12) The term ‘social security surplus’ means the amount for a fiscal year that receipts exceed outlays of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund;”.

(2) in section 301(a) by—

(A) redesigning paragraphs (6) and (7) as paragraphs (7) and (8), respectively; and

(B) inserting after paragraph (5) the following:

“(6) the debt held by the public; and”,

and “in section 313(a) by—

(A) striking “or” at the end of paragraph (3),

(B) by redesigning paragraph (4) as paragraph (5); and

(C) inserting the following new paragraph:

“(4) specify the amounts by which the statutory limit on the debt held by the public is to be changed and direct the committee having jurisdiction to recommend such change;”.

(b) AMENDMENTS TO THE BALANCED BUDGET AND EMERGENCY DEFICIT CONTROL ACT OF 1985.—The Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 is amended—

(1) in section 250, by striking subsection (b) and inserting the following:

“(b) GENERAL STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.—This part provides for the enforcement of—

(1) a balanced budget excluding the receipts and disbursements of the social security trust funds, and

(2) a limit on the debt held by the public to ensure that social security surpluses are used for social security reform or to reduce debt held by the public and are not spent on other programs.”.

(2) in section 255(c)(1), by inserting “‘debt held by the public’, ‘social security surplus’” after “outlays” and

(3) by inserting after section 253 the following:
SEC. 23A. DEBT HELD BY THE PUBLIC LIMIT.

The debt held by the public shall not exceed—

(1) for the period beginning May 1, 2000 through April 30, 2001, $3,618,000,000,000;

(2) for the period beginning May 1, 2001 through April 30, 2002, $3,488,000,000,000;

(3) for the period beginning May 1, 2002 through April 30, 2003, $3,349,000,000,000;

(4) for the period beginning May 1, 2003 through April 30, 2004, $3,015,000,000,000; and,

(5) for the period beginning May 1, 2004 through April 30, 2005, $3,698,000,000,000.

(b) Adjustments for actual social security surplus levels.—

(1) ESTIMATED LEVELS.—The estimated level of social security surplus for the purpose of this section is—

(A) for fiscal year 1999, $125,000,000,000;

(B) for fiscal year 2000, $147,000,000,000;

(C) for fiscal year 2001, $155,000,000,000;

(D) for fiscal year 2002, $183,000,000,000;

(E) for fiscal year 2003, $172,000,000,000;

(F) for fiscal year 2004, $181,000,000,000;

(G) for fiscal year 2005, $190,000,000,000;

(H) for fiscal year 2006, $205,000,000,000;

(I) for fiscal year 2007, $217,000,000,000;

(J) for fiscal year 2008, $228,000,000,000; and

(K) for fiscal year 2009, $239,000,000,000.

(2) LIMIT FOR ACTUAL SOCIAL SECURITY SURPLUS LEVELS.—After October 1 and no later than December 31 of each year, the Secretary shall make the following calculations and adjustments:

(A) Calculation.—After the Secretary determines the actual level for the social security surplus for the current year, the Secretary shall adjust the estimated level of the social security surplus for that year specified in paragraph (1) and subtract that actual level.

(B) Adjustment.—

(i) 2000 through 2004.—With respect to the periods described in subsections (a)(1), (a)(2), and (a)(3), the Secretary shall add the amount calculated under subparagraph (A) to—

(I) the limit set forth in subsection (a) for the period of years that begins on May 1 of that calendar year; and

(II) each subsequent limit.

(ii) 2005 through 2010.—With respect to the periods described in subsections (a)(4), (a)(5), and (a)(6), the Secretary shall add the amount calculated under subparagraph (A) to—

(I) the limit set forth in subsection (a) for the period of years that includes May 1 of that calendar year; and

(II) each subsequent limit.

(C) Adjustment to the limit for long economic growth and war.—

(1) Estimation of statutory limit on debt held by the public.—

(A) Low economic growth.—If the most recent of the Department of Commerce's advance, preliminary, or final reports of actual real economic growth indicate that the rate of real economic growth (as measured by real GDP) for each of the most recently reported quarter and the immediately preceding quarter is less than 1 percent, the limit on the debt held by the public established in this section is suspended.

(B) War.—If a declaration of war is in effect, the limit on the debt held by the public established in this section is suspended.

(2) Restoration of statutory limit on debt held by the public.—

(A) Restoration of limit.—The statutory limit on debt held by the public shall be restored on May 1 following the quarter in which the level of real Gross Domestic Product in the United States for the Department of Commerce is less than or equal to the level of real Gross Domestic Product in the quarter preceding the first two quarters that caused the suspension of the pursuant to paragraph (1).

(B) Adjustment.—The Secretary shall take over of the debt held by the public on October 1 of the year preceding the date referenced in subparagraph (A) and subtract the limit in subsection (a) for the period of years that includes the date referenced in subparagraph (A).

(C) Adjustment to the limit for social security reform provisions that affect the on-budget trust funds.—

(1) ESTIMATE OF LEGISLATION.—

(A) Calculation.—If social security reform legislation is enacted, OMB shall estimate the amount the debt held by the public will change as a result of the legislation's effect on the level of total outlays and receipts excluding the impact on outlays and receipts of the Federal Old-Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund.

(B) Baseline levels.—OMB shall calculate the changes in subparagraph (A) relative to baseline levels for each fiscal year through fiscal year 2010 using current estimates.

(c) Adjustments for actuarial contributions.—OMB shall include the estimated increase by this paragraph in the report required under section 251(a)(7) or section 252(d), as the case may be.

KERRY AMENDMENT NO. 1400

(Original to be on the table.) Mr. KERRY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill, S. 1429, supra; as follows:

At the end of title XI, add the following:

SEC. 4. CREDITS FOR COMPUTER DONATIONS TO SCHOOLS.

(a) In General.—Subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to business related credits), as amended by this Act, is amended by adding at the end the fol-

SEC. 4.5E. CREDITS FOR COMPUTER DONATIONS TO SCHOOLS.

(a) General Rule.—For purposes of section 38, the school computer donation credit determined under this section is an amount equal to 10 percent of the qualified elementary or secondary educational contributions made by the taxpayer during the taxable year.

(b) Qualified Elementary or Secondary Educational Contribution.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified elementary or secondary educational contribution' has the meaning given such term by section 170(e)(6)(B)(ii) except that such term shall include the contribution of a computer (as defiined in section 168(k)(4)(B)(ii) only if computer software (as defined in section 197(e)(3)(B)) that serves as a computer operating system has been lawfully installed in such computer.

(c) Increased Percentage for Contributions to Schools in Empowerment Zones, Enterprise Communities, and Indian Reservations.—The case of a qualified elementary or secondary educational contribution to an educational organization or entity located in an empowerment zone or enterprise community designated under section 1391 or an Indian reservation (as defined in section 168(j)(6)), subsection (a) shall be applied by substituting '50 percent' for '30 percent.'

(d) Certain Rules Made Applicable.—For purposes of this section, rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 41(f), and section 170(e)(3A), shall apply.

(e) Termination.—This section shall not apply to taxable years beginning on or after the date which is 3 years after the date of the enactment of the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999.

(b) Current Year Business Credit Calculation.—Section 38(b) (relating to current year business credits), as amended by this Act, is amended by striking "plus" at the end of paragraph (12), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (13) and inserting "plus", and by adding at the end the following:

"(14) the school computer donation credit determined under section 45E(a)."

(c) Deduction by Amount of Credit.—Section 280C (relating to certain expenses for which credits are allowable) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(d) Credit for School Computer Donations.—No deduction shall be allowed for that portion of the qualified elementary or secondary educational contributions (as defined in section 45E(b)) made during the taxable year that is equal to the amount of credit determined for the taxable year under section 45E(a). (In the case of a corporation which is a member of a controlled group of corporations (within the meaning of section 52(a)) or a trade or business which is treated as being under common control with other trades or businesses (within the meaning of section 52(b)), this subsection shall be applied under rules prescribed by the Secretary similar to the rules applicable under sub-sections (a) and (b) of section 52.)

(d) Limitation on Carryback.—Subsection (d) of section 45E(b) (relating to carryback and carryforward of unused credits) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(9) No carryback of school computer donation credit before effective date.—No amount of unused business credit available under section 45E may be carried back to a taxable year beginning on or before the date of the enactment of this paragraph.

(e) Clerical Amendment.—The table of sections for subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1, as amended by this Act, is amended by adding after the item relating to section 45D the following:

"Sec. 4.5E. Credit for computer donations to schools."

(f) Effective Dates.—

(1) In General.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply to contributions made in taxable years beginning after the date of the enactment of this paragraph.

(2) Certain Contributions.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to contributions made to an organization or en-ity not described in section 45E(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as added by subsection (a), in taxable years beginning after the date that is one year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

KERRY AMENDMENT NO. 1400

(Original to be on the table.) Mr. KERRY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill, S. 1429, supra; as follows:

At the end of title XI, add the following:

SEC. 5. LOANS USED TO ACQUIRE PRINCIPAL RESIDENCES FOR FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYERS.

(a) Loans Used To Acquire Principal Residences for First-Time Homebuyers.

(1) Individual Retirement Plans.—Section 408(e) (relating to tax treatment of accounts and annuities) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(7) Loans used to purchase a home for first-time homebuyers.—

"(A) In general.—Paragraph (3) shall not apply to any qualified home purchase loan made by an individual retirement plan.

"(B) Qualified home purchase loan.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'qualified home purchase loan' means a loan—

"(i) made by the trustee of an individual retirement plan at the direction of the individual on whose behalf such plan is established,

"(ii) the proceeds of which are used for the acquisition of a dwelling unit which within a reasonable period of time (determined at the time the loan is made) is to be used as the principal residence for a first-time homebuyer,

"(iii) which by its terms requires interest on the loan to be paid not less frequently than monthly,

"(iv) which by its terms requires repayment not later than the earlier of—

"(I) the date which is 15 years after the date of acquisition of the dwelling unit, or

"(II) the date of the sale or other transfer of the dwelling unit,

"(v) which by its terms treats—

"(I) any amount required to be paid under clause (iii) during any taxable year which is not paid at the time required to be paid, and

"(II) any amount remaining unpaid as of the beginning of the taxable year beginning after the period described in clause (iv), as distributed during such taxable year to the individual on whose behalf such plan is established and subject to section 72(t)(1), and

"(vi) which bears interest from the date of the loan at a rate not less than 2 percentage points below, and not more than 2 percentage points above, the rate for comparable United States Treasury obligations on such date.

Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to require such a loan to be secured by the dwelling unit.

(2) Prohibited Transactions.—Section 4975(d) (relating to exemptions from tax on prohibited transactions) is amended by striking "or" at the end of paragraph (14), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (15) and inserting "; or", and by inserting after paragraph (15) the following new paragraph:

"(16) any loan that is a qualified home purchase loan (as defined in section 408(e)(7)(B))."

(3) Effective Date.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to loans made in years after 2001.

(b) Offset.—Notwithstanding section 701(c) of this Act, the effective date of the amendments made by section 701 shall be adjusted by the Secretary of the Treasury as necessary to offset the decrease in revenues to the Treasury resulting from the amendments made by subsection (a).

ROBB (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT

NO. 1401

Mr. ROBB (for himself, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mrs. MURRAY, and Mr. BRYAN) proposed an amendment to the bill, S. 1429, supra; as follows:

"(C) Limitation on Amount of Loans.—The amendments made by this paragraph (3) does not apply by reason of this paragraph shall not exceed $10,000.

(D) Denial of Interest Deduction.—No deduction shall be allowed under this chapter for interest on any qualified home purchase loan.

(E) Definitions.—For purposes of this paragraph—

"(I) First-Time Homebuyer.—The term 'first-time homebuyer' has the meaning given such term by section 4975(b)(3)(B).

"(II) Acquisition.—The term 'acquisition' has the meaning given such term by section 4975(b)(3)(D)(i).

"(III) Principal Residence.—The term 'principal residence' has the same meaning as when used in section 121.

"(IV) Date of Acquisition.—The term 'date of acquisition' means the date—

"(I) on which a binding contract to acquire the principal residence to which subparagraph (B) applies is entered into, or

"(II) on which construction, reconstruction, or improvement of such a principal residence is commenced.''.

At the end of title XI, add the following:

SEC. 5. LOANS USED TO ACQUIRE PRINCIPAL RESIDENCES FOR FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYERS.

(a) Loans Used To Acquire Principal Residences for First-Time Homebuyers.

(1) Individual Retirement Plans.—Section 408(e) (relating to tax treatment of accounts and annuities) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(7) Loans used to purchase a home for first-time homebuyers.—

"(A) In general.—Paragraph (3) shall not apply to any qualified home purchase loan made by an individual retirement plan.

"(B) Qualified home purchase loan.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'qualified home purchase loan' means a loan—

"(i) made by the trustee of an individual retirement plan at the direction of the individual on whose behalf such plan is established,

"(ii) the proceeds of which are used for the acquisition of a dwelling unit which within a reasonable period of time (determined at the time the loan is made) is to be used as the principal residence for a first-time homebuyer,

"(iii) which by its terms requires interest on the loan to be paid not less frequently than monthly,
At the end add the following:

TITLE XVI—DELAY IN EFFECTIVE DATE

Notwithstanding any other provision of, or amendment made by, this Act, no such provision or amendment shall take effect until legislation has been enacted that extends the solvency of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund under section 201 of the Social Security Act through 2075 and the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund under part A of title XVIII of such Act through 2027.

KERRY AMENDMENT NO. 1402
(0rdered to be lie on the table.)
Mr. KERRY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill, S. 1429, supra; as follows:
On page 371, between lines 16 and 17, insert the following:

SEC. 1122. DISCLOSURE OF TAX INFORMATION TO FACILITATE COMBINED EMPLOYMENT TAX REPORTING.

Section 6103(d)(5) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended to read as follows:

"(5) Disclosure for combined employment tax reporting.--The Secretary may disclose to any State for the purpose of carrying out with such agency, body, or commission a combined Federal and State employment tax reporting program approved by the Secretary. Subsections (a)(2) and (p)(4) and sections 273A and 273B shall not apply with respect to disclosures or inspections made pursuant to this paragraph."

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

RETIREMENT OF COLONEL STEPHEN MCCARTNEY, LIEUTENANT COLONEL JACK MCMAHON, AND FIRST SERGEANT THOMAS SCALAVINO

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, on July 31, friends and colleagues will gather at the U.S. Naval War College to honor Colonel Stephen McCartney, Lieutenant Colonel Jack McMahon, and First Sergeant Thomas Scalavino who are retiring from Marine Corps Reserves. Accordingly, I want to pay tribute to these three distinguished gentlemen from Rhode Island as they embark on the next phase of their private lives.

As many know, I had the privilege of commanding a marine rifle company in Korea in the fall of 1951 and winter of 1952. During that time, I came away with tremendous respect for each officer and enlisted man. They were courageous and displayed extraordinary endurance. I have never forgotten the confidence they had in themselves, and their willingness to go into harm’s way. It was an onerous task that had to be done, then we willingly to do it. Colonel McCartney, Lieutenant Colonel McMahon, and First Sergeant Scalavino have displayed that same commitment and valor to our country.

After graduating from the Marine Corps Platoon Leader’s Course in 1968, Stephen McCartney was commissioned a Second Lieutenant in the Marine Corps in 1969 and assigned as an infantry officer. In this capacity, he served with the 1st Marine Division in the Republic of Vietnam and participated in three major combat operations against Viet Cong and North Vietnamese army units until 1971. In 1973, Colonel McCartney left active duty but remained involved in the Marine Corps Reserve serving in Mississippi. However, his tour did not end there.

During Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm, then Lieutenant Colonel McCartney and his battalion were activated and assigned to the 1st Marine Division. There he participated in direct combat operations against Iraqi forces in Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. In 1992, McCartney was promoted to his present rank. In his nearly thirty years of active and reserve service, Colonel McCartney has served in a variety of other important Marine Corps billets with consistent and meritorious service. Indeed, Colonel McCartney’s services have ranged from infantry officer to the Providence Police Department where he retired with the rank of Major, to his most recent appointment as Chief of Police for the Warwick Police Department.

Lieutenant Colonel Jack McMahon is retiring from the Marine Corps Reserve after twenty-four years. During these years, Lieutenant Colonel McMahon’s reserve and active duty experience included service as a judge advocate, as well as a commanding officer of Rhode Island’s Marine Corps Reserve transportation unit in Pilots Point and at the U.S. Naval War College.

Throughout his career, Lieutenant Colonel McMahon has been the recipient of numerous commentary letters and awards, including the “Junior Officer of the Year” award in 1972. He has been recommended for the Navy Achievement, two Navy Commendations, a Meritorious Service Medal, and the Navy-Marine Corps Medal. Finally, Lieutenant Colonel McMahon has served as a prosecutor in the Rhode Island Attorney General’s office for the past nineteen years.

A native of Sicily, First Sergeant Thomas Scalavino came to the United States in 1960 and enlisted in the Marine Corps in 1968. Without much time to spare, First Sergeant Scalavino participated in eighteen operations in the Republic of Vietnam from 1966 to 1967 as a rifleman in such military actions as Operations Big Horn and Operation Coyote.

In 1973, First Sergeant Scalavino was honorably discharged, but could not stay away for long. He reenlisted in 1981 at Transport Company in Providence, Rhode Island at the rank of Corporal. His responsibilities included: Administrative Chief, Platoon Sergeant, Platoon Commander, and Company First Sergeant. Later, First Sergeant Scalavino was sent to Southwest Asia where he participated in Operation Desert Shield, Operation Desert Storm, and Operation Cease Fire. First Sergeant Scalavino was sent home in July 1992. First Sergeant Scalavino has received the “Navy Achievement Medal” for his efforts as Motor Transport Officer in Ocean Venture 93.

Mr. President, I join with all Rhode Islanders in extending to Colonel McCartney, Lieutenant Colonel McMahon, and First Sergeant Scalavino our best wishes. Their contributions certainly will be remembered for generations to come.

140TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE GALENA POST OFFICE

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize a historic institution in the State of Illinois and the nation. On July 30, 1999, the Galena Post Office will celebrate its 140th anniversary, making it the longest continuously owned and operated post office in America.

When the post office was founded, Galena was a thriving mining and port community in northwestern Illinois. The streets were bustling with miners, traders, dock workers, and trappers. Though a great deal has changed since then, many of the original buildings remain standing in Galena’s historic downtown district. Among these structures is the post office.

The idea of the Galena Post Office was initiated by Congressman Elitzu B. Washburne, a pre-Civil War era politician from Illinois. The funds for the facility were authorized and appropriated by Congress on August 18, 1856. Construction of the building began in 1857, when the first limestone shipments for the edifice arrived via tow-boat. Upon the completion of the building’s structure, the Weekly Northwestern Gazette predicted, “it will last 1,000 years with only two forces capable of destroying it, one being an earthquake and the other a mob.” This newspaper was prophetic.

The Galena Post Office has outlived every other United States post office. It continues to thrive today with a delivery area of more than 2,800.

One hundred and forty years later, the Galena Post Office stands proudly in the center of town in the same condition as it was in 1859. Its 5,947 square foot interior was the grand vision of architect Arni B. Young. The two-story building is highlighted by an impressive limestone exterior. Mr. Young’s plans included a civic meeting place with a grand cast-iron stairwell, mahogany interior windows to complement the lobby area.

The Galena Post Office served as not only a post office and a social center but also as a vital part of the community. The Smithsonian National Postal Museum has bestowed Galena’s post office with yet another honor, The Great American Post Office Award. This month the museum will host an exhibit commemorating Galena’s Post Office for its outstanding architectural features, historical significance to the community, and outstanding record of service.

Mr. President, on Friday I will have the honor to share in the celebration of the 140th anniversary of the Galena Post Office. It truly is a remarkable accomplishment.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE ALAN KARCHER

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise today to celebrate a man who was a good friend and an extraordinary political mentor. I will miss the opportunity to consult with him on matters important to governing. His contribution to me was a valuable one and it is deep in my thought and functioning as a U.S. Senator. He was a superb role model for public service and I followed his judgement often. I am honored to offer this tribute to former New Jersey Assembly Speaker Alan Karcher, his indomitable spirit, his unshakeable conviction, his widespread talents, his love for politics in the widest sense, and his devotion to the people of New Jersey.

Alan’s death on July 27 at too young an age, was not totally unexpected—he had been battling cancer for several years—but the reality of it shocks all of us who knew him. And there are a lot of us who fought in the trenches of New Jersey politics alongside him, as well as those who fought in opposition. Alan used his considerable wit, intellect and spirit to master New Jersey politics, and all of us respected him as the consummate politician. Alan was political in the most classical sense of that word, with all of its ties to the Greek concepts of the body politic, the people and citizenship, and he was political in the most modern sense of the word—sagacious, prudent, shrewd, and artful.

Alan saw elected office as public service and an honored and honorable family tradition. Both his father, Joseph Karcher, and a great-uncle, John Quaid, also served in the New Jersey Assembly. When Alan followed them in 1974, he honed the practice of legislating to a fine art, serving as both Assembly Majority Leader and as Speaker during his sixteen-year career. He was a master of strategy in the service of the principal of the common good. He was articulate, passionate, and so often right, that more times than not he was able to convince both natural allies and skeptics alike.

Alan was a fiercely proud Democrat who believed wholeheartedly that "government" and "the people" were virtually synonymous concepts. He knew how to keep his "eye on the prize," and he understood that "the prize" was responsive, responsible government. Alan did nothing by halves and when he believed in something it was with total engagement. His interests and his talents spanned an extraordinary range. This most political of men was also a sensitive and accomplished musician, a cellist and an opera-lover who could sing Italian arias perhaps not as well as Pavarotti, but certainly as energetically. He was also, of course, a compelling lawyer nationally known for his insight into Constitutional issues and a respected author who examined controversial matters with perception and conviction. He has left a splendid legacy for us and for those he loved most, his wife Peggy, children Timothy, Elizabeth and Ellen, and his five grandchildren, who have his mark and his stature as enduring memories. We will miss him, but not his spirit, for that will continue to guide us. We will miss him, but not his idealism, for that will continue to inspire us. We will miss him, but not his passion, for that will continue to make us strive.

MUHAMMAD ALI BOXING REFORM ACT

On July 27, 1999, the Senate passed S. 305. The text follows:

S. 305

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Muhammad Ali Boxing Reform Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Professional boxing differs from other major, interstate professional sports industries in the United States in that it operates without any private sector association, league, or centralized industry organization to establish uniform and appropriate business practices and ethical standards. This has led to repeated occurrences of disreputable and coercive business practices in the boxing industry, to the detriment of professional boxers nationwide.

(2) Professional boxers are vulnerable to exploitative business practices engaged in by certain promoters and sanctioning bodies which dominate the sport. Boxers do not have a voice, a representative, or an advocate for their interests and rights in the industry.

(3) State officials are the proper regulators of professional boxing events, and must protect the welfare of professional boxers and serve the public interest by closely supervising boxing activity in their jurisdiction. State officials must ensure that state boxing commissions receive adequate information to determine whether boxers competing in their jurisdiction are being subjected to contract terms and business practices which may be violative of State regulations, or are onerous and confiscatory.

(4) Promoters who engage in illegal, coercive, and unethical business practices can take advantage of the lack of equitable business standards in the sport by holding boxing events in states with weaker regulatory oversight.

(5) The sanctioning organizations which have proliferated in the boxing industry have not established credible and objective criteria to rate professional boxers, and operate with virtually no industry or public oversight. Their ratings are susceptible to manipulation, have deprived boxers of fair opportunities for advancement, and have undermined public confidence in the integrity of the sport.

(6) Open competition in the professional boxing industry has been significantly interfered with by restrictive and anti-competitive business practices of certain promoters and sanctioning bodies, to the detriment of the athletes and the ticket-buying public. Common practices of promoters and sanctioning organizations represent restraints of interstate trade in the United States.

(7) It is necessary and appropriate to establish national contracting reforms to protect professional boxers and prevent exploitative business practices, and to require enhanced financial disclosures to State athletic commissions to improve the public oversight of the sport.

(8) Whereas the Congress seeks to improve the integrity and ensure fair practices of the professional boxing industry on a nationwide basis, it deems it appropriate to name this reform in honor of Muhammad Ali, whose career achievements and personal contributions to the sport, and positive impact on our society, are unsurpassed in the history of boxing.

SEC. 3. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to protect the rights and welfare of professional boxers by preventing certain exploitative, oppressive, and unethical business practices they may be subject to on an interstate basis;

(2) to assist State boxing commissions in their efforts to provide more effective public oversight of the sport; and

(3) to promote honoring competitive professional boxing and enhance the overall integrity of the industry.

SEC 4. PROTECTING BOXERS FROM EXPLOITATION.

(a) In General.—The Professional Boxing Safety Act of 1996 (15 U.S.C. 6301 et seq.) is amended by—

(1) redesignating section 15 as 16; and

(2) inserting after section 14 the following:

"SEC. 15. PROTECTION FROM EXPLOITATION.

"(a) CONTRACT REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Any contract between a promoter and a boxer, as a condition precedent to the boxer’s participation in a professional boxing match, may not be greater than 12 months in length if the boxer is required to grant such rights with respect to a boxer, as a condition precedent to the boxer’s participation in a professional boxing match against another boxer who is under contract to the promoter.

"(B) A promoter exercising promotional rights with respect to such boxer during the 12-month period beginning on the day after the conclusion of the match that is a mandatory bout contract, or a 1-year limit on coercive promotional rights in favor of another boxer as a condition of participating in a professional boxing match against the boxer during that period, and any contract to the contrary,

"(1) shall be considered to be in restraint of trade and contrary to public policy; and

"(ii) unenforceable.

(2) Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as pre-empting any law concerning interference with contracts.

(3) PROMOTIONAL RIGHTS UNDER MANDATORY BOUT CONTRACTS.—Neither a promoter nor a sanctioning organization may require a boxer, in a contract arising from a professional boxing match that is a mandatory bout under the rules of the sanctioning organization, to grant promotional rights to any promoter for a future professional boxing match.

(4) EMPLOYMENT AS CONDITION OF PROMOTING, ETC.—No person who is a licensee, manager, matchmaker, or promoter may require a boxer to employ, retain, or provide the services of any individual or business enterprise (whether operating in corporate form or not) recommended or designated by that person as a condition of—

"(1) such person’s service to the boxer as a manager, matchmaker, or promoter, or

"(2) such person’s arranging for the boxer to participate in a professional boxing match;

(a) REGULATORY PERSONNEL.—No member of the Commission,

(b) CONFLICTS OF INTEREST.—Section 9 of such Act (15 U.S.C. 6303) is amended by—

(1) striking "No member" and inserting "(a) REGULATORY PERSONNEL.—No member; and

(2) adding at the end thereof the following:

"(b) FIREWALL BETWEEN PROMOTERS AND MANAGERS.—

"(1) In General.—It is unlawful for—

"(A) a boxer’s promoter (or a promoter who is required to be licensed under State law) to have a direct or indirect financial interest in the promotion of a licensed manager or management company; or

"(B) a licensed manager or management company (or a manager or management company that, under State law, is required to be licensed)—

"(1) to have a direct or indirect financial interest in the promotion of a boxer; or

"(ii) be, by or receive compensation or other benefits from a promoter, except for amounts received as consideration under the manager's contract with the boxer.

"(2) EXCEPTION FOR SELF-PROMOTION AND MANAGEMENT.—Paragraph (1) does not prohibit a boxer from acting as his own promoter or manager.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) apply to contracts executed after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. SANCTIONING ORGANIZATION INTEGRITY REFORMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Professional Boxing Safety Act of 1996 (15 U.S.C. 6301 et seq.), as amended by section 4 of this Act, is amended by—

(1) redesignating section 16, as redesignated by section 4 of this Act, as section 17; and

(2) inserting after section 15 the following:

"SEC. 16. SANCTIONING ORGANIZATIONS.

"(a) OBJECTIVE CRITERIA.—A sanctioning organization shall establish objective and consistent written criteria for the ratings of professional boxers.

"(b) APPEALS PROCESS.—A sanctioning organization shall establish and publish an appeals procedure that affords a boxer rated by that organization a reasonable opportunity, without the payment of any fee, to submit information to contest its rating of the boxer. Under the procedure, the sanctioning organization shall, within 14 days after receiving a request from a boxer questioning that organization's rating of the boxer—

"(1) provide to the boxer a written explanation of the organization's criteria, its rating of the boxer, and the rationale or basis for its rating (including any response to any specific questions submitted by the boxer); and

"(2) submit a copy of its explanation to the President of the Association of Boxing Commissions of the United States and to the boxing commission of the boxer's domiciliary State.

"(c) NOTIFICATION OF CHANGE IN RATING.—If a sanctioning organization changes its rating of a boxer who is included, before the change, in the top 10 boxers rated by that organization, or who, as a result of the change is included in the top 10 boxers rated by that organization, then, after changing the boxer's rating, the organization shall—

"(1) within 5 business days mail notice of the change and a written explanation of the reasons for its change in that boxer's rating to the boxer at the boxer's last known address;

"(2) immediately post a copy of the notice and the explanation on its Internet website or homepage, if any, for a period of not less than 30 days; and

"(3) mail a copy of the notice and the explanation to the President of the Association of Boxing Commissions if the organization does not have an address for the boxer or does not have an Internet website or homepage.

"(d) PUBLIC DISCLOSURE.—

"(1) FTC FILING.—Not later than January 31 of each year, a sanctioning organization shall submit to the Federal Trade Commission—

"(A) a complete description of the organization's ratings criteria, policies, and general sanctioning fee schedule;

"(B) the bylaws of the organization; and

"(C) the appeals procedure of the organization; and

"(D) a list and business address of the organization's officials who vote on the ratings of boxers.

"(2) FORMAT; UPDATES.—A sanctioning organization shall—

"(A) provide the information required under paragraph (1) in written form, and, for any document greater than 2 pages in length, also in electronic form; and

"(B) promptly notify the Federal Trade Commission of any material change in the information.

"(3) FTC TO MAKE INFORMATION AVAILABLE TO PUBLIC.—The Federal Trade Commission shall make information received under this subsection available to the public. The Commission may assess sanctioning organizations a fee to offset the costs it incurs in processing the information and making it available to the public.

"(4) INTERNET POSTING.—In addition to submitting the information required by paragraph (1) to the Federal Trade Commission, a sanctioning organization shall provide the information to the public by maintaining a website on the Internet that—

"(A) is readily accessible by the general public using generally available search engines and does not require a password or payment of a fee for full access to all the information;

"(B) contains all the information required to be submitted to the Federal Trade Commission by paragraph (1) in an easy to search and use format; and

"(C) is updated whenever there is a material change in the information.

"(b) CONFLICT OF INTEREST.—Section 9 of such Act (15 U.S.C. 6308), as amended by section 4 of this Act, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(c) SANCTIONING ORGANIZATIONS.—

"(1) PROHIBITION ON RECEIPTS.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), no officer or employee of a sanctioning organization may receive any compensation, gift, or benefit directly or indirectly from a promoter, boxer, or manager.

"(2) EXCEPTIONS.—Paragraph (1) does not apply to—

"(A) the receipt of payment by a promoter, boxer, or manager of a sanctioning organization's published fee for sanctioning a professional boxing match or reasonable expenses in connection therewith if the payment is reported to the responsible boxing commission under section 17; or

"(B) the receipt of a gift or benefit of de minimis value.

"(d) SANCTIONING ORGANIZATION DEFINED.—Section 2 of the Professional Boxing Safety Act of 1996 (15 U.S.C. 6301) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(1) SANCTIONING ORGANIZATION.—The term 'sanctioning organization' means an organization that ranks boxers or sanctions professional boxing matches in the United States—

"(A) between boxers who are residents of different States; or

"(B) that advertised, otherwise promoted, or broadcast (including closed circuit television) in interstate commerce.

SEC. 6. PUBLIC INTEREST DISCLOSURES TO STATE BOXING COMMISSIONS.

The Professional Boxing Safety Act of 1996 (15 U.S.C. 6301 et seq.), as amended by section 5 of this Act, is amended by—

(1) redesignating section 17, as redesignated by section 5 of this Act, as section 18; and

(2) inserting after section 16 the following:

"SEC. 17. REQUIRED DISCLOSURES TO STATE BOXING COMMISSIONS.

"(a) SANCTIONING ORGANIZATIONS.—Before sanctioning or authorizing a professional boxing match in a State, a sanctioning organization shall provide to the boxing commission of, or responsible for regulating matches in, that State a written statement of—

"(1) all charges, fees, and costs the organization will assess any boxer participating in that match;

"(2) all payments, benefits, complimentary benefits, and fees the organization will receive for its affiliation with the event, from the promoter, host of the event, and all other sources; and

"(3) such additional information as the commission may require.

A sanctioning organization that receives compensation from any source to refrain from sanctioning or authorizing a professional boxing match in any State, or to over, or withholding its sanction of, a professional boxing match in any State shall provide the information required by paragraphs (2) and (3) to the boxing commission of that State.

"(b) PROMOTERS.—Before a professional boxing match organized, promoted, or produced by a promoter is held in a State, the promoter shall provide to the boxing commission of, or responsible for regulating matches in, that State—

"(1) a copy of any agreement in writing to which the promoter is a party with any boxer participating in the match;

"(2) a statement in writing made under penalty of perjury that there are no other agreements, written or oral, between the promoter and the boxer with respect to that match; and

"(3) a statement in writing of—

"(A) all fees, charges, and expenses that will be assessed by or through the promoter on the boxing pertaining to the event, including the provision of the boxing commission over, or withholding its sanction of, a professional boxing match in any State; and

"(B) all payments, gift, or benefits the promoter is providing to any sanctioning organization affiliated with the event; and

"(C) any reduction in the amount or percentage of a boxer's purse after—

"(i) a previous agreement concerning the amount or percentage of that purse has been reached between the promoter and the boxer; or

"(ii) a purse bid held for the event.

"(c) JUDGES.—Before participating in a professional boxing match as a judge in any State, an individual shall provide to the boxing commission of, or responsible for regulating matches in, that State a statement in writing of all payments, including reimbursement for expenses, and any other benefits that individual will receive from any source for judging that match.

"(d) INFORMATION TO BE AVAILABLE TO STATE ATTORNEY GENERAL.—A promoter shall make information received under this section available to the appropriate law enforcement officer of the State in which the match is to be held upon request.

"(e) EXCEPTION.—The requirements of this section do not apply in connection with a professional boxing match scheduled to last less than 10 rounds.
SEC. 7. ENFORCEMENT.

Section 10 of the Professional Boxing Safety Act of 1996 (15 U.S.C. 6309) is amended by—
(1) inserting a comma and “or” after section 9(b), 15, 16, 17, or 18, or this Act shall, upon conviction, be imprisoned for not more than 1 year or fined not more than—
(A) $10,000; and
(B) a violation occurs in connection with a professional boxing match the gross receipts for which exceed $2,000,000, an additional amount which bears to $2,000,000, the same ratio to $2,000,000 which the gross receipts of the professional boxing organization that boxer is competing, and the broadcaster that boxer is competing shall—
(1) any provision of this Act against the professional boxing match."

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. Res. 168.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is authorized and directed to pay, from the contingent fund of the Senate, to Mary Lyda Nance, widow of Admiral James W. Nance, an employee of the Senate at the time of his death, the sum of $200,000, that sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

(1) in paragraph (7) by inserting before the period the following: “and implement projects described in subsection (a)”;

(2) by adding at the end the following: “(16) Caloosahatchee River basin, Florida.”.

(18) Illinois River watershed, Illinois.”;

(21) Lower St. Johns River basin, Florida.”.

SEC. 214. FLOOD MITIGATION AND RIVERINE RESTORATION PILOT PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may undertake a program for the purpose of conducting projects that reduce flood hazards and restore the natural functions and values of rivers throughout the United States.

(b) STUDIES AND PROJECTS.

(1) AUTHORITY.—In carrying out the program, the Secretary may conduct studies to identify appropriate flood damage reduction, conservation, and restoration measures and may design and implement projects described in subsection (a).

(2) CONSULTATION AND COORDINATION.—The studies and projects carried out under this section shall be performed in a manner that is consistent with the plan for consultation and coordination with the Federal Emergency Management Agency and other appropriate Federal agencies, and in consultation and coordination with appropriate State, tribal, and local agencies.

(3) NONSTRUCTURAL APPROACHES.—The studies and projects shall emphasize, to the maximum extent practicable, and appropriate, nonstructural approaches to preventing or reducing flood damages.
(4) USE OF STATE, TRIBAL, AND LOCAL STUDIES AND PROJECTS.—Studies and projects shall include consideration of coordination and cooperation with any State, tribal, and local flood damage reduction, or riparian and wetland restoration studies and projects that conserve, restore, and manage hydrological and biological regimes and restore the natural functions and values of floodplains.

(c) COST-SHARING REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) STUDIES.—Studies conducted under this section shall be subject to cost sharing in accordance with section 105 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1986 (33 U.S.C. 2215).

(2) ENVIRONMENTAL RESTORATION AND NON-STRUCTURAL FLOOD CONTROL PROJECTS.—The non-Federal share of costs associated with non-structural flood control project carried out under this section. The non-Federal interests shall provide all land, easements, rights-of-way, dredged material disposal areas, and relocations shall be credited toward the payment required under this paragraph.

(3) STRUCTURAL FLOOD CONTROL PROJECTS.—Any structural flood control measures carried out under this section shall be subject to cost sharing in accordance with section 103(a) of the Water Resources Development Act of 1986 (33 U.S.C. 2213(a)).

(4) CREATION AND MAINTENANCE.—The non-Federal interests shall be responsible for all costs associated with operating, maintaining, replacing, repairing, and rehabilitating all projects carried out under this section.

(d) PROJECT JUSTIFICATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law or requirement for economic justification established pursuant to section 209 of the Flood Control Act of 1970 (42 U.S.C. 1962–201), the Secretary may implement a project under this section if the Secretary determines that the project—

(a) will significantly reduce potential flood damages;

(b) will improve the quality of the environment; and

(c) is justified considering all costs and beneficial outputs of the project.

(2) ESTABLISHMENT OF SELECTION AND RATING CRITERIA.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this section, the Secretary, in cooperation with State, tribal, and local agencies, shall develop, and transmit to the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate a report describing the results of the review conducted under this subsection with any recommendations concerning continuation of the program.

(e) COST LIMITATIONS.—No more than $30,000,000 may be expended by the United States on any single project under this section.

(f) COMMITTEE RESOLUTION PROCEDURE.—

(A) LIMITATION ON APPROPRIATIONS.—No authorization of appropriations for fiscal year 2002 if $15,000,000 is appropriated to carry out subsection (a), (b), and (c) for fiscal year 2002.

(B) REPORT.—As expeditiously as practicable after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall transmit to the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate a report describing the results of the review conducted under subsection (a).

(g) PROJECT JUSTIFICATION.—As expeditiously as practicable after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall transmit to the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate a report describing the results of the review conducted under subsection (a).

(h) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may provide to State, tribal, or local governments assistance and materials for studies, planning, and design assistance for remediation, environmental restoration, or reuse of areas located within the boundaries of such State or local government, such remediation, environmental restoration, or reuse will contribute to the conservation of water and related resources of drainage basins and watersheds within the State, and such assistance and materials shall be used to support the restoration of such areas.

(2) BENEFACTOR USE OF DREDGED MATERIAL.—In providing assistance under subsection (a), the Secretary shall encourage the beneficial use of dredged material, consistent with the findings of the Secretary under section 204 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1992 (33 U.S.C. 2226).

(i) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—The non-Federal share of the cost of assistance provided under subsection (a) shall be 50 percent.

(j) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $15,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2000 through 2004.

SEC. 217. SHORE DAMAGE MITIGATION.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

July 28, 1999

SEC. 365. AMERICAN AND SACRAMENTO RIVERS.

(a) In general.—The project for flood damage reduction, American and Sacramento Rivers, California, authorized by section 101(a)(1) of the Water Resources Development Act of 1996 (110 Stat. 3662-3663), is modified to direct the Secretary to include the following improvements as part of the overall project:

(1) Installation of a slurry wall in the north levee of the American River from 300 feet west of the right bank of the American River to the north levee of the Sacramento River as an additional action as part of the overall project.

(2) Imposing a flood equal in magnitude to a 100-year frequency flood on the American River as a condition of the project.

(b) Cost sharing.—For purposes of section 103 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1996 (33 U.S.C. 2213), the modifications authorized by this section shall be subject to the same cost sharing in effect for the project for flood damage reduction, American and Sacramento Rivers, California, authorized by section 101(a)(1) of the Water Resources Development Act of 1996 (110 Stat. 3662).

(c) Cost sharing.—For purposes of section 103 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1986 (33 U.S.C. 2213), the modifications authorized by this section shall be subject to the same cost sharing in effect for the project for flood damage reduction, American and Sacramento Rivers, California, authorized by section 101(a)(1) of the Water Resources Development Act of 1996 (110 Stat. 3662).

SEC. 366. MARTIN, KENTUCKY.

The project for flood control, Martin, Kentucky, authorized by section 202(a) of the Emergency Water Resources Development Act, 1981 (94 Stat. 1339) is modified to authorize the Secretary to take all necessary measures to prevent future losses that would occur from a 100-year flood.
“(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the pilot program under this section $40,000,000 for fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1992. Such sums shall remain available until expended.’’.

SEC. 366. BLACK WARRIOR AND TOMBIGBEE RIVERS, JACKSON, ALABAMA.

The project for navigation, Black Warrior and Tombigbee Rivers, vicinity of Jackson, Alabama, as authorized by section 106 of the Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act, 1987 (106 Stat. 3341–3349), is modified to authorize the Secretary to acquire lands for mitigation of the habitat losses attributable to the project, including the navigation channel, dredged material disposal areas, and other areas directly impacted by construction of the project. Notwithstanding section 906 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1986 (33 U.S.C. 2283), the Secretary may construct the project prior to acquisition of the mitigation lands if the Secretary takes such actions as may be necessary to ensure that any required mitigation lands will be acquired not later than 2 years after initiation of construction of the channel and such mitigation will fully mitigate any adverse environmental impacts resulting from the project.

SEC. 369. TROPICANA WASH AND FLAMINGO RIVER, NV.

Any Federal costs associated with the Tropicana and Flamingo Washes, Nevada, authorized by section 101(12) of the Water Resources Development Act of 1992 (106 Stat. 4602–4803) incurred by the non-Federal interest to accelerate or modify construction of the project, in cooperation with the Corps of Engineers, shall be considered to be eligible for reimbursement by the Secretary.

SEC. 370. COMITE RIVER, LOUISIANA.

The Comite River Diversion Project for flood control on the east fork of the project for flood control, Amite River and Tributaries, Louisiana, by section 101(11) of the Water Resources Development Act of 1992 (106 Stat. 4602–4803) and modified by section 301(b)(5) of the Water Resources Development Act of 1996 (110 Stat. 3709–3710), is further modified to authorize the Secretary to include the costs of highway relocations as a project construction feature if the Secretary determines that such treatment of costs is necessary to facilitate construction of the project.

SEC. 371. MARTHAS VINEYARD, MICHIGAN.

The project for navigation, St. Mary’s River, Michigan, is modified to direct the Secretary to provide an additional foot of ogefred between Point Louise Turn and the Locks and Sault Saint Marie, Michigan, consistent with the channels upstream of Point Louise Turn. The modification shall be carried out as operation and maintenance to improve navigation safety.

SEC. 372. CITY OF CHARLEVOIX: REIMBURSEMENT, MICHIGAN.

The Secretary, shall review and, if consistent with authorized project purposes, reimburse the City of Charlevoix, Michigan, for the Federal share of costs associated with construction of the new revetment to the Federal navigation project at Charlevoix Harbor, Michigan.

TITLE IV—STUDIES

SEC. 401. UPPER MISSISSIPPI AND ILLINOIS RIVERS, LEVEES AND STREAMBANKS RESTORATION PROJECT.

The Secretary shall conduct a study of erosion damage to levees and infrastructure on the upper Mississippi and Illinois Rivers and the impact of increased flood and pleasure craft traffic on deterioration of levees and other flood control structures on such rivers.

SEC. 402. UPPER MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION, IOWA.

(a) DEVELOPMENT.—The Secretary shall develop a plan to address water and related land resources problems and opportunities in the Upper Mississippi River Basin, extending from Cairo, Illinois, to the headwaters of the Mississippi River, in the interest of systemic flood damage reduction by means of a comprehensive approach of nonstructural and structural flood control and floodplain management strategies, continued maintenance of the navigation project, management of bank caving and erosion, wetland and riparian management, habitat management, recreation needs, and other related purposes.

(b) CONTENTS.—The plan shall contain recommendations for future management plans and actions to be carried out by the responsible Federal and non-Federal entities and shall specifically address recommendations to authorize construction of a systemic flood control project in accordance with a plan for the Upper Mississippi River. The plan shall include recommendations for Federal action where appropriate and recommendations for follow-on studies for problem areas for which data or current technology does not allow immediate solutions.

(c) CONSULTATION AND USE OF EXISTING DATA.—The Secretary shall consult with appropriate State and Federal agencies and shall make maximum use of existing data and ongoing programs and efforts of States and Federal agencies in developing the plan.

(d) COST SHARING.—Development of the plan under this section shall be at Federal expense. Feasibility studies resulting from development of such plans shall be subject to cost sharing under section 105 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1986 (33 U.S.C. 2215).

(e) REPORT.—The Secretary shall submit a report that includes the comprehensive plan to the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate not later than 3 years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The Secretary shall conduct a study of the potential environmental and social impacts and abatement measures in the watershed in and around Sweetwater Reservoir, San Diego County, California.

SEC. 405. WHITEWATER RIVER BASIN, CALIFORNIA.

The Secretary shall undertake and complete a feasibility study for flood damage reduction in the WhiteWater River basin, California, and, based upon the results of such study, give priority consideration to including the recommended project, including the Saltton Sea interconnection project, in the flood mitigation and riverine restoration pilot program authorized in section 214 of this Act.

SEC. 406. LITTLE ECONOLACHATECHIE RIVER BASIN, LOUISIANA.

The Secretary shall conduct a study of pollution abatement measures in the Little Econolachatchie River basin, Louisiana.

SEC. 407. PORT EVERGLADES INLET, FLORIDA.

The Secretary shall undertake and complete a feasibility study for flood damage reduction in the area. In determining the benefits derived from using dredged material for shoreline protection and storm damage reduction in the area, the Secretary shall give priority consideration to including the recommended project in the flood mitigation and riverine restoration pilot program authorized in section 214 of this Act.

SEC. 408. UPPER DES PLAINES RIVER AND TRIBUARIES, ILLINOIS AND WISCONSIN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall conduct a feasibility study to determine the feasibility of carrying out a project for storm damage reduction and environmental restoration for the Arcola Creek watershed, Madison County, Ohio.

(b) SPECIAL RULE.—In conducting the study, the Secretary may not exclude from consideration evaluation of flood control measures based on restrictive policies regarding the frequency of flooding, drainage area, and amount of runoff.

SEC. 409. CAMERON PARISH WEST OF CALCASIEU RIVER, LOUISIANA.

The Secretary shall conduct a study to determine the feasibility of carrying out a project for storm damage reduction and environmental restoration, Cameron Parish west of Calcasieu River.

SEC. 410. GRAND ISLE AND VICINITY, LOUISIANA.

In carrying out a study of the storm damage reduction benefits to Grand Isle and vicinity, Louisiana, the Secretary shall include benefits to Grand Isle and vicinity, Louisiana, may have on the mainland coast of Louisiana as project benefits attributable to the Grand Isle project.

SEC. 411. LAKE PONCHARTAIN SEAWALL, LOUISIANA.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall complete a post-authorization change report on the project for hurricane-flood protection, Lake Ponchartrain, Louisiana, and vicinity, authorized by section 204 of the Flood Control Act of 1965 (79 Stat. 1077), to incorporate and accomplish structural modifications to seawall fronting protection along the south shore of Lake Ponchartrain from the New Basin Canal on the west to the Inner Harbor Navigation Canal on the east.

(b) REPORT.—The Secretary shall ensure expeditious completion of the post-authorization change report required by subsection (a) not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this section.

SEC. 412. WESTPORT, MASSACHUSETTS.

The Secretary shall conduct a study to determine the feasibility of carrying out a flood control project for the town of Westport, Massachusetts, and the possible beneficial uses of dredged material for shoreline protection and storm damage reduction in the area. In determining the benefits of the project, the Secretary shall include the benefits derived from using dredged material for shoreline protection and storm damage reduction.

SEC. 413. SOUTHWEST VALLEY, ALBUQUERQUE, NEW MEXICO.

The Secretary shall conduct a study to determine the feasibility of carrying out a flood control project for the Southwest Valley, Albuquerque, New Mexico, and, based upon the results of such study, give priority consideration to including the recommended project in the flood mitigation and riverine restoration pilot program authorized in section 214 of this Act.

SEC. 414. CAYUGA CREEK, NEW YORK.

The Secretary shall conduct a study to determine the feasibility of carrying out a project for flood control for Cayuga Creek, New York.

SEC. 415. ARCOLA CREEK WATERSHED, MADISON, OHIO.

The Secretary shall conduct a study to determine the feasibility of a project to provide environmental restoration and protection for the Arcola Creek watershed, Madison, Ohio.

SEC. 416. WESTERN LAKE ERIE BASIN, OHIO, INDIANA, AND MICHIGAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall conduct a study to develop measures to improve flood control and management, environmental restoration and protection, water quality, recreation, and related purposes.
control, navigation, water quality, recreation, and fish and wildlife in a comprehensive manner in the western Lake Erie basin, Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan, including watersheds of the Maumee, Ottawa, and Portage Rivers.

(b) Carrying out the study, the Secretary shall cooperate with interested Federal, State, and local agencies and non-governmental organizations and consider all relevant properties.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the results of the study, including findings and recommendations.

SEC. 417. SCHUYLKILL RIVER, NORRISTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA.

The Secretary shall conduct a study to determine the feasibility of carrying out a project for flood control for Schuylkill River, Norristown, Pennsylvania, including improvement to existing stormwater systems.

SEC. 418. GREAT LAKES MARION AND MOUTLIEE, SOUTH CAROLINA.

The Secretary shall conduct a study to determine the feasibility of carrying out a project for Lake Marion and Moultrie to provide water supply, treatment, and distribution to Calhoun, Clarendon, Colleton, Dorchester, Orangeburg, and Sumter Counties, South Carolina.

SEC. 419. DAY COUNTY, SOUTH DAKOTA.

The Secretary shall conduct an investigation of flooding and other water resources problems between the James River and Big Sioux watersheds in South Dakota and an assessment of flood damage reduction needs of the area.

SEC. 420. CORPUS CHRISTI, TEXAS.

The Secretary shall include, as part of the study of carrying out a project for Lake Marion and Moultrie to provide water supply, treatment, and distribution to Calhoun, Clarendon, Colleton, Dorchester, Orangeburg, and Sumter Counties, South Carolina.

SEC. 421. MITCHELL'S CUT CHANNEL (CANEY FORK CUT), TEXAS.

The Secretary shall conduct a study to determine the feasibility of carrying out a project for navigation, Mitchell's Cut Channel (Caney Fork Cut), Texas.

SEC. 422. MOUTH OF COLORADO RIVER, TEXAS.

The Secretary shall conduct a study to determine the feasibility of carrying out a project for navigation at the mouth of the Colorado River, Texas, to provide a minimum draft navigation channel through the Colorado River through Parkers Cut (also known as “Tiger Island Cut”), or an acceptable alternative, to Matagorda Bay.

SEC. 423. KANAWHA RIVER, FAYETTE COUNTY, WEST VIRGINIA.

The Secretary shall conduct a study to determine the feasibility of developing a public port along the Kanawha River in Fayette County, West Virginia, at a site known as “Longacre”.

SEC. 568. PACKERY CHANNEL, CORPUS CHRISTI, TEXAS. (a) In General.—The Secretary shall construct a navigation and storm protection project at Packery Channel, Mustang Island, Texas, consisting of construction of a channel and a channel jetty and placement of sand along the length of the seashore.

(b) Ecological and Recreational Benefits.—In evaluating the project, the Secretary shall include the ecological and recreational benefits of reopening the Packery Channel.

(c) Applicability of Benefit-Cost Ratio Waiver Authority.—In evaluating and implementing the project, the Secretary shall allow the non-Federal interests to participate in the financing of the project in accordance with section 903(c) of the Water Resources Development Act of 1986 (100 Stat. 4184), notwithstanding any limitation on the purpose of projects to which such section applies, to the extent that the Secretary’s evaluation indicates that applying such section is necessary to implement the project.

SEC. 570. NORTHERN WEST VIRGINIA. The projects described in the following reports are authorized to be carried out by the Secretary substantially in accordance with the plans, and subject to the conditions, recommended in such reports:

(I) PARKERSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA.—Report of the Corps of Engineers entitled “Parkersburg/ Vienna Riverfront Park Feasibility Study”, dated July 7, 1997, at a total cost of $22,000,000, of which an estimated Federal cost of $4,200,000, and an estimated non-Federal cost of $17,800,000.

(2) WESTON, WEST VIRGINIA.—Report of the Corps of Engineers entitled “Feasibility Master Plan for Weirton Port and Industrial Center, Monongahela River, West Virginia”, dated December 21, 1996, at a total cost of $19,000,000, of which an estimated Federal cost of $9,000,000, and an estimated non-Federal cost of $10,000,000.

(3) ERICSSON/WOOD COUNTY PORT DISTRICT, WEST VIRGINIA.—Report of the Corps of Engineers entitled “Feasibility Master Plan for Erickson/Wood County Port District, West Virginia Public Port Authority”, dated September 21, 1999, at a total cost of $18,000,000, of which an estimated Federal cost of $9,000,000, and an estimated non-Federal cost of $9,000,000.

SEC. 571. URBANIZED PEAK FLOOD MANAGEMENT, TEXAS. (a) In General.—The Secretary shall develop and implement a research program to evaluate... opportunities to manage peak flood flows in urbanized watersheds located in the State of New Jersey.

(b) SCOPE OF RESEARCH.—The research program authorized by subsection (a) shall be accomplished, under the direction of the New York District, through research which shall specifically include the following:

(1) Identification of key factors in urbanized watersheds that are under development and impact peak flows in the watersheds and downstream of the steam.

(2) Development of peak flow management models for 4 to 6 watersheds in urbanized areas located within the New York District area, shapes, and soil types that can be used to determine optimal flood reduction factors for individual watersheds.

(3) Utilization of such management models to determine relationships between flow and reduction factors and change in imperviousness, soil types, shape of the drainage basin, and other pertinent parameters from existing to ultimate conditions in watersheds under consideration for development.

(4) Development and validation of an inexpensive assessment model to establish flood reduction factors based on runoff curve numbers, change in imperviousness, the shape of the basin, and other pertinent factors.

SEC. 575. ABANDONED AND INACTIVE NONCOAL MINE RESTORATION.

(a) In General.—The Secretary is authorized to provide technical, planning, and design assistance to Federal and non-Federal interests for carrying out projects to address water quality problems caused by drainage and related activities from abandoned and inactive noncoal mines.

(b) SPECIFIC MEASURES.—Assistance provided under subparagraph (a) shall be in support of projects for the following purposes:

(1) Management of drainage from abandoned and inactive noncoal mines.

(2) Restoration and protection of streams, rivers, wetlands, other waterbodies, and riparian areas degraded by drainage from abandoned and inactive noncoal mines.

(3) Demonstration of management practices and innovative and alternative treatment technologies to minimize or eliminate adverse environmental effects associated with drainage from abandoned and inactive noncoal mines.

SEC. 576. BENEFICIAL USE OF WASTE TIRE RUBBER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to conduct pilot projects to encourage the beneficial use of waste tire rubber, including crumb rubber, recycled rubber, and various uses may include marine pilings, underwater framing, floating docks with built-in flotation, utility poles, and other uses associated with transportation and infrastructure projects receiving Federal funds. The Secretary shall, when appropriate, encourage the use of waste tire rubber, including crumb rubber, in such federally funded projects.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $5,000,000.

SEC. 577. LAND CONVEYANCES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may cooperate with the Secretaries of Agriculture and the Interior and other appropriate Federal, State, and local agencies, and affected private entities, in the development of a management strategy to address problems associated with toxic microorganisms and the resulting degradation of ecosystems in the tidal and nontidal wetlands and waters of the United States for the States along the Atlantic Ocean. As part of such management strategy, the Secretary may provide planning, design, and other technical assistance to each participating State and in the development and implementation of non-regulatory measures to mitigate environmental problems and restore aquatic resources.

(b) CARRYING OUT PROJECTS.—The Federal share of the costs of measures undertaken under this section shall not exceed 65 percent.

(c) OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE.—The Federal share of the costs of operation and maintenance for projects constructed with assistance provided under this section shall be 90 percent.

(d) APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $7,000,000 for fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1999.

SEC. 578. WEST BATON ROUGE PARISH, LOUISIANA.

The Secretary shall expedite completion of the report for the West Baton Rouge Parish, Louisiana, project for waterfront and riparian preservation, restoration, and enhancement modifications along the Mississippi River.

SEC. 579. ABANDONED AND INACTIVE NONCOAL MINE RESTORATION.

(a) In General.—The Secretary is authorized to provide technical, planning, and design assistance to Federal and non-Federal interests for carrying out projects to address water quality problems caused by drainage and related activities from abandoned and inactive noncoal mines.

(b) SPECIFIC MEASURES.—Assistance provided under subparagraph (a) shall be in support of projects for the following purposes:

(1) Management of drainage from abandoned and inactive noncoal mines.

(2) Restoration and protection of streams, rivers, wetlands, other waterbodies, and riparian areas degraded by drainage from abandoned and inactive noncoal mines.

(c) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—The non-Federal share of the cost of assistance under subsection (a) shall be 35 percent; except that the Federal share shall be 5 percent after January 1, 2000.

(3) CONDITIONS OF EXCHANGE.—The exchange of land authorized by paragraph (1) shall be subject to the following conditions:

(A) DEEDS.

(i) FEDERAL LAND.—The instrument of conveyance used to convey the land described in paragraph (2)(B) to Holman Inc. shall contain such reservations, terms, and conditions as the Secretary deems necessary to allow the United States to operate and maintain the Mississippi River 9-Foot Navigation Project.

(ii) NON-FEDERAL LAND.—The conveyance of the land described in paragraph (2)(A) to the Secretary shall be by a warranty deed acceptable to the Secretary.

(B) REMOVAL OF IMPROVEMENTS.—Holman Inc. shall remove any encumbrances on the land described in paragraph (2)(A). In the event that Holman Inc. fails to complete such removal, the Secretary shall have the right to remove any encumbrances on the land described in paragraph (2)(A).

(C) TIME LIMIT FOR EXCHANGE.—The land exchange authorized by paragraph (1) shall be completed not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of the Act.

(D) LEGAL DESCRIPTION.—The Secretary shall provide the legal description of the land described in paragraph (2). The legal description shall be used in the instruments of conveyance of the land.

(E) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—The Secretary shall require Holman Inc. to pay reasonable administrative costs associated with the exchange.

(F) VALUE OF PROPERTIES.—If the appraised fair market value, as determined by the Secretary, of the land conveyed to Holman Inc. by the Act exceeds the appraised fair market value, as determined by the Secretary, of the land conveyed to the United States by Holman Inc. under paragraph (2), Holman Inc. shall make a payment equal to the excess in cash or a cash equivalent to the United States.

(b) CANDY LAKE PROJECT, OSAGE COUNTY, OKLAHOMA.

(1) DEFINITIONS.—In this subsection, the following definitions apply:

(A) FAIR MARKET VALUE.—The term "fair market value" means the amount for which a willing buyer would purchase and a willing seller would sell a parcel of land, as determined by a qualified, independent land appraiser.

(B) PREVIOUS OWNER OF LAND.—The term "previous owner of land" means a person (including a corporation) that conveyed, or a decedent of a deceased individual who conveyed, property to the Candy Lake project in Osage County, Oklahoma.

(c) EXCHANGE OF LAND.

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall convey, in accordance with this subsection, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the land acquired by the United States for the Candy Lake project in Osage County, Oklahoma.

(B) PREVIOUS OWNERS OF LAND.—
of land under paragraph (3).

(3) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The conveyances under this subsection shall be subject to such terms and conditions, including payment of reasonable administrative costs and compliance with applicable Federal floodplain management and flood insurance programs, as the Secretary considers necessary and appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

(d) CONVEYANCE OF PROPERTY IN MARSHALL COUNTY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall convey to the State of Oklahoma all right, title, and interest of the United States in real property located in Marshall County, Oklahoma, described in paragraph (6) of subparagraph (A) that was owned by the previous owner of land the first option to purchase the land described in subparagraph (A).

(2) REVERSION.—If the land to be transferred under paragraph (1) shall be determined by a survey satisfactory to the Secretary, the cost of the survey shall be paid by the State of Oklahoma.

(e) ENVIRONMENTAL COMPLIANCE.—Before making the conveyance under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall conduct an environmental baseline survey to determine if there are levels of contamination for which the United States would be responsible under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (42 U.S.C. 9601 et seq.); and ensure that the conveyance complies with the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4321 et seq.).

(f) OTHER TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The conveyance under paragraph (1) shall be subject to such other terms and conditions as the Secretary considers necessary and appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

(g) MANAGEMENT OF LANDS.—All lands that are conveyed under paragraph (1) shall be managed for such purposes in accordance with a plan approved by the Secretary, with the cost of the survey to be paid by the State. The State shall be responsible for all other costs, including real estate transaction and environmental compliance costs, associated with the conveyance.

(3) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The conveyances under this subsection shall be without consideration.
State to manage for fish and wildlife mitigation purposes the lands referred to in paragraph (1) and (2) in the boundary of the Lower Columbia River Project and appropriate for conveyance to the Port of Clarkston, Washington, at fair market value as determined by the Secretary, containing 0.53 acre, more or less. SEC. 581. FOLSOM DAM AND RESERVOIR ADDITIONAL STORAGE AND ADDITIONAL FLOOD CONTROL STUDIES.

(a) FOLSOM FLOOD CONTROL STUDIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall undertake a study of all levees on the American River and on the Sacramento River downstream and management of the non-Federal share of the American and Sacramento Rivers to access opportunities to increase potential flood protection through levee modifications.

(b) CREDIT FOR DESIGN WORK.—The non-Federal interest shall receive credit for reasonable design work completed by the non-Federal interest prior to entering into a local cooperation agreement with the Secretary for a project that is the subject of an agreement under this section.

SEC. 582. DETROIT RIVER, DETROIT, MICHIGAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to repair and rehabilitate the seawalls on the Detroit River in the manner described below.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $8,000,000.

SEC. 583. NORTHEASTERN MINNESOTA.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—The Secretary may establish a pilot program for providing environmental assistance to non-Federal interests in northeastern Minnesota.

(b) FORM OF ASSISTANCE.—Assistance under this section may be in the form of design and construction assistance for water-related environmental infrastructure and resource protection and development projects in northeastern Minnesota, including projects for wastewater treatment and related facilities, water supply and related facilities, environmental restoration, and surface water resource protection and development.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1999, $1,000,000 to carry out this section.

SEC. 584. ALASKA.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—The Secretary may establish a pilot program for providing environmental assistance to non-Federal interests in Alaska.

(b) FORM OF ASSISTANCE.—Assistance under this section may be in the form of design and construction assistance for water-related environmental infrastructure and resource protection and development projects in Alaska, including projects for wastewater treatment and related facilities, water supply and related facilities, and surface water resource protection and development.

(c) OWNERSHIP REQUIREMENTS.—The Secretary may provide assistance for a project under this section only if the project is publicly owned.

(b) LOCAL COOPERATION AGREEMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Before providing assistance under this section, the Secretary shall enter into a local cooperation agreement with a non-Federal interest to provide for design and construction of the project to be carried out with the assistance.

(2) REQUIREMENTS.—Each local cooperation agreement entered into under this subsection shall provide for the following:

(A) PLANNING.—Development by the Secretary, in consultation with appropriate Federal and State officials, of a facilities or resource protection and development plan, including engineering plans and specifications.

(B) LEGAL AND INSTITUTIONAL STRUCTURES.—Establishment of such legal and institutional structures as are necessary to ensure the effective long-term operation of the project by the non-Federal interest.

(C) COST SHARING.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Federal share of project costs under each local cooperation agreement entered into under this subsection shall be 75 percent. The Federal share may be in the form of grants or reimbursements of project costs.

(B) CREDIT FOR DESIGN WORK.—The non-Federal interest shall receive credit for reasonable designs completed by the non-Federal interest prior to entering into a local cooperation agreement with the Secretary for a project that is the subject of an agreement under this section.

(D) LAND, EASEMENTS, AND RIGHTS-OF-WAY CREDIT.—The non-Federal interest shall receive credit for reasonable costs of land, easements, rights-of-way, and relocations toward its share of project costs (including all reasonable costs associated with obtaining permits necessary for the construction, operation, and maintenance of the project on publicly owned or controlled land), but not to exceed 25 percent of total project costs.

(E) OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE.—The non-Federal interest shall receive credit for reasonable costs of operation and maintenance for projects constructed with assistance provided under this section.

(f) REPORT.—Not later than December 31, 2001, the Secretary shall transmit to Congress a report on the results of the pilot program carried out under this section, together with recommendations concerning whether or not such program should be implemented on a national basis.

(1) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—The Secretary may establish a pilot program for providing environmental assistance to non-Federal interests in central West Virginia.

(b) FORM OF ASSISTANCE.—Assistance under this section may be in the form of design and construction assistance for water-related environmental infrastructure and resource protection and development projects in central West Virginia, including projects for wastewater treatment and related facilities, water supply and related facilities, and surface water resource protection and development.

(c) REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary may provide assistance for a project under this section only if the project is publicly owned.

(d) LOCAL COOPERATION AGREEMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Before providing assistance under this section, the Secretary shall enter into a local cooperation agreement with a non-Federal entity to design and implement a project to be carried out with the assistance.

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

SEC. 586. SACRAMENTO METROPOLITAN AREA WATERSHED RESTORATION, CALIFORNIA.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to undertake environmental restoration activities included in the Sacramento Metropolitan Water Authority's Watershed Management Plan, including activities that are essential to the cleanup of contaminated groundwater resulting directly from the acts of any Federal agency or Department of the Federal Government at or in the vicinity of McClellan Air Force Base, California; Mather Air Force Base, California; Sacramento Army Depot, California; or any location within the watershed where the Federal Government would be a responsible party under any Federal environmental law.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out the purposes of this section $5,000,000 for fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1999.

SEC. 587. ONONDAGA LAKE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to establish a cooperative program for the environmental restoration, conservation, and management of Onondaga Lake, New York, and to provide, in coordination with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, financial assistance to the State of New York and political subdivisions thereof for the development and implementation of projects to restore, conserve, and manage Onondaga Lake.

(b) PARTNERSHIP.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall establish a partnership with the State of New York (including the Environmental Protection Agency) and the State of New York and political subdivisions thereof for the purpose of project development and implementation. Such partnership shall be dissolved not later than 15 years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) COST SHARING.—(1) The non-Federal share of the cost of a project constructed under subsection (a) shall not be less than 30 percent of the total cost of the project and may be provided through in-kind services.

(d) EFFECT ON LIABILITY.—Financial assistance provided under this section shall not relieve from liability any person who would otherwise be liable under Federal or State law for damages, response costs, natural resource damages, restitution, equitable relief, or any other liability otherwise available under Federal or State law.

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 to carry out the purposes of this section.

(f) REPEAL.—Section 401 of the Great Lakes Critical Programs Act of 1990 (104 Stat. 2010) and section 411 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1990 (104 Stat. 1418) are repealed as of the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 588. EAST LYNN LAKE, WEST VIRGINIA.

The Secretary shall defer any decision relating to the leasing of mineral resources in the vicinity of East Lynn Lake, West Virginia, project lands to the Federal entity vested with such leasing authority.

SEC. 589. EEL RIVER, CALIFORNIA.

The Secretary shall conduct a study to determine if flooding in the City of Ferndale, California, is the result of a Federal flood control project on the Eel River. If the Secretary determines that the flooding is the result of the project, the Secretary shall take appropriate measures (including dredging of the Salt River and construction of a Feedermenance at the conclusion of Francis, Reas, and Williams Creeks) to mitigate the flooding.

SEC. 590. NORTH LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall review a report prepared by the local and Federal interests concerning flood protection for the Dark Hollow area of North Little Rock, Arkansas. If the Secretary determines that the report meets the evaluation and design standards of the Corps of Engineers and that the project is economically justifiable, technically sound, and environmentally acceptable, the Secretary shall carry out the project.

(b) TREATMENT OF DESIGN AND PLAN PREPARATION COSTS.—The costs of design and preparation of plans and specifications shall be included as project costs and paid during construction.
ORDERS FOR THURSDAY, JULY 29, 1999

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I can unanimous consent that when the Senate reconvenes tomorrow morning at 9:30. By previous order, the Senate will immediately begin a stacked series of votes on the Abraham Social Security lockbox amendment, the Baucus motion to recommit, and the Graham amendment regarding effective dates of the provisions in the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999. Following the votes, Senator Gramm of Texas will be recognized to offer an amendment regarding cross-board tax cuts, estate taxes, and capital gains taxes. By previous consent, there will be 10 hours of debate remaining on the bill tomorrow. Therefore, it is hoped that the Senate can continue to make significant progress on the bill and that the Senate action can be completed no later than Friday.

ENERGY AND WATER DEVELOPMENT APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2000

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the order of the Senate of June 14, 1999, having received H.R. 2605, the Senate will proceed to the bill, all after the enacting clause is stricken, and the text of S. 1186 is inserted. H.R. 2605, as amended, is read a third time and passed. The Senate insists on its amendment, requests a conference with the House, and the Chair appoints. Mr. Domenici, Mr. Cochran, Mr. Gorton, Mr. McConnell, Mr. Bennett, Mr. Burns, Mr. Craig, Mr. Stevens, Mr. Reid, Mr. Byrd, Mr. Hollings, Mrs. Murray, Mr. Kohl, Mr. Dorgan, and Mr. Inouye conferees on the part of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. ROTH. If there is no further business to come before the Senate, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 10:43 p.m., adjourned until Thursday, July 29, 1999, at 9:30 a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate July 28, 1999:

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF THE UNITED STATES

MARTIN NEIL BAILEY, OF MARYLAND, TO BE A MEMBER OF THE COUNCIL OF ECONOMIC ADVISERS. VICE JANET L. YELLEN.

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION

JAMES C. HUSE, JR., OF MARYLAND, TO BE INSPECTOR GENERAL, SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION. VICE DAVID C. WILLIAMS, RESIGNED.
THE FINANCIAL FREEDOM ACT OF 1999

SPEECH OF HON. DENNIS MOORE OF KANSAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 22, 1999

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my opposition to this tax cut package and to explain my votes on this legislation.

H.R. 2488 is fiscally irresponsible and dangerous to the country’s economic growth and future. The package sponsored by Representative Bill Archer would commit this Congress to cutting taxes by $792 billion over the next 10 years, dedicating the majority of an expected $1 trillion Federal budget surplus—that may or may not materialize—toward massive tax cuts. Projections by the Treasury Department suggest that the cost of the bill would explode to $3 trillion in the second 10 years. This is the same decade in which our obligation to the retiring baby boom generation comes due, the Social Security Trust Fund will begin to be drained, and the Medicare Trust Fund will be exhausted.

Mr. Speaker, I serve on the House Banking and Financial Services Committee. On July 22, the same day that this Congress acted to pass a $792 billion tax cut, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan testified before our Committee. Chairman Greenspan not only argued that the projected surpluses on which this tax cut relies are based on spurious assumptions, but also that his preference would be to allow these surpluses, should they materialize, to buy down our $5.6 trillion debt. I listened to Chairman Greenspan and I voted against the majority tax cut bill. I voted for the motion to recommit, a proposal that would instruct the Ways and Means Committee to heed the advice of Chairman Greenspan and redraft their bill to distribute 50 percent of the surpluses to buying down our debt, 25 percent to tax cuts and 25 percent to ensure the long-term solvency of Social Security and Medicare. Unfortunately, this motion failed by nine votes.

For the first time in a generation, we have an opportunity to do the right thing, the financially responsible thing for our children, our grandchildren and our Nation—we have the opportunity to put our financial house in order by paying down our burdensome national debt. In 1998, we paid $243 billion in interest on the national debt. Paying down the debt would reduce these annual interest payments to fund future tax cuts or other needs. Paying down this debt would reduce our overall interest rates, as much as 2 or 3 percent. The benefit of such a decrease in interest rates should be readily apparent to any person in this country who borrows money from a bank or carries a credit balance.

By way of illustration, if one finances a mortgage of $115,000 for 30 years at 8 percent, the payment is $844 each month. But decrease the interest rate by only 2 percent, and the mortgage payment is $689 per month for monthly savings of $155 or an annual savings of $1,860. I call this the ultimate tax cut. By way of contrast, H.R. 2488 would only place $289 back in the average taxpayer’s pocket. This, while bankrupting America’s future.

I believe we should not let this opportunity pass. I believe we should be fiscally responsible and do the right thing now for our Nation and for our Nation’s future. I believe that the only vote that represents this sort of resolve and discipline was “aye” on the motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, I also voted in favor of the minority substitute that provides substantial tax relief to working Americans who need it most. While I would have included provisions that differ somewhat from this version had I drafted this bill myself, the minority substitute contains the following provisions that are beneficial to Kansans:

- Estate Tax Relief: $26 billion in estate tax relief over 10 years to accelerate the $1 million exclusion from 2006 to 2000.
- Marriage Penalty Reduction: $74 billion in tax relief over 10 years to reduce the “marriage penalty.” The bill adjusts the standard tax deduction for a joint income tax return filed by a married couple so that it is twice the standard deduction allowed to single taxpayers—$8,600 as opposed to the current $7,200.
- Permanent Extension of the Research and Development Tax Credit: $27.2 billion over 10 years to permanently extend the tax credit for businesses that engage in resource-intensive research, thereby encouraging economic expansion. A 1998 study estimated that a permanent R&D tax credit would result in an additional $41 billion in private sector research and development investment between 1998 and 2010.
- Child Credit Increase: $17 billion in tax relief over 10 years to increase the family child tax credit by $250 for each child under five.
- Limitations on Non-Refundable Credits: $36 billion in tax relief over 10 years to repeal the current limitation on the use of non-refundable credits to reduce an individual’s tax liability. Non-refundable tax credits include the child credit, various education credits and the dependent care credit.
- School Construction and Modernization: $8.6 billion over 10 years for interest-free funds to State and local governments for public school construction and modernization projects.
- Life-Long Learning Support: $7 billion over 10 years to make permanent the exclusion from income amounts received from employer-provided educational assistance for both higher education and post-graduate expenses.
- Long-Term Health Care Credit: $15 billion over 10 years to extend a non-refundable income tax credit of $5,000 for each individual with long-term needs taken care of in a household.

Mr. Speaker, this plan also restricts the majority of these tax cuts from taking effect until Medicare and Social Security have achieved solvency. This plan, along with my support of the motion to recommit, is the responsible approach to providing tax relief. I hope that this Congress can work together in the weeks and months ahead to provide reasonable and responsible tax relief to working families and family businesses while also paying down the debt and strengthening Medicare and Social Security.

THANK YOU, CHIEF GARY A. MUELLER
HON. JAMES A. BARCIA OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, if any of us ever face an emergency like a fire or accident, we are both most fortunate and comforted by the fact that caring professionals will respond to our needs. For nearly thirty-six years, the people of Bay City have received such service from Fire Chief Gary Mueller, who has recently retired from the Bay City Fire Department.

Gary Mueller has lived in Bay City all his life. Since his time at Zion Lutheran Grade School with the important guidance he received from his parents Otto and Marie Mueller, through his days at Handy High School, Bay City Junior College, and Delta College, Gary Mueller made friends in the community who later became the people he swore to help protect as a member of the Bay City Fire Department.

From that first day, September 12, 1963, he was an exemplary member of the Department. He was promoted to Relief Engineer on March 6, 1976, and then to Engineer on June 22, 1983. He was promoted to Lieutenant on the “C” shift on August 18, 1988. He became a Captain on April 4, 1990, and then Assistant Chief on August 4, 1992.

The work of a firefighter is one filled with danger, and our appreciation of the work done by Chief Mueller must also extend to his wife Nancy Crampton Mueller, and his children Mandi, Michel, Steven and Scott, and his stepsons Marc and Scott Uhlmann. They had the worry while the public had the benefit. Now that they can rest assured that Gary Mueller will be out of harm’s way, they all know that their peace of mind is as well-deserved as Chief Mueller’s retirement, and the Chief’s chance to enjoy his granddaughter, Kayla.

Mr. Speaker, we certainly appreciate the work of Gary Mueller who sacrificed and risked so much over the years, I ask you and all of our colleagues to join me in thanking him...
EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Since that fateful day, the many tentacles of the Argentine Judiciary have harassed the members of our school, especially the women. Our homes have been illegally searched, our property illegally confiscated, our phones illegally tapped, careers ruined and our lives in peril. Our young incorporation students have been subjected to the terror that is Argentine justice. Such as minor, Celeste Pain (whose brave mother is here to attend today) a young Jewish girl, who was phyically violated and raped by a member of the Argentine judiciary, the first criminal trial developer against us. She is a student of Judge Mariano Berges. Other BAYS members have been detained, separated from their families and forced to submit to psychiatric and psychological assessments. While in judicial detention, Dr. Maria Eugenia Rossi and Carmen Graciela Alarcon, two of our more prominent members, were vaginally and anally violated, and subjected to inhumane conditions while in the court’s jail for up to 16 days.

Most recently, the Argentine judiciary appointed a third criminal trial judge to investigate the BAYS case, a procedural duplication that is highly unusual even under Argentina’s bizarre judicial system, as admitted by Argentine Supreme Court Justice
Moline O’Connor and Adolfo Roberto Vazquez. The third criminal trial judge, Corvalan de la Colina, has escalated the ter-or, authorizing new criminal charges to be filed, based on the same meritless facts.

Such is the situation with my 27-year-old friend, Cara Papparella. Her parents have mistrusted her all her life. As any normal person would do, she left that life of abuse as soon as she was of age. Now her parents continue harassing her by accusing BAYS of incorporating her, to their own end. Cara went to see Judge Corvalan to show what a farce this is, but he would not meet her. She filed a document, which I submit as evidence for the record, stating that she is of sound mind and that her parents are lying. She is here with us today. To make matters worse, Maria Valeria Llamas’ mother launched a falsehood campaign accusing our institutions of complicity. Maria’s stepmother Sommariva initiated 6 years earlier.

The Argentine judiciary is now using a new, dangerous strategy to attack BAYS by filing a document, based on the same meritless citations of Maria’s stepmother Sommariva initiated 6 years earlier.

The truth is that the official psychological examination and test done on Carla is the first time in the history of Argentina. The Judicial nightmare that ensued has consumed over 10,000 years of my life and the lives of the 500 families of BAYS. It is about abuse of power. It is about greed and corruption. It is about fear, and violence and hatred. It is about the things that the Argentine government would rather never mentioned. It is about a small struggle for freedom that has come to symbolize the greater struggle for democracy and human rights throughout my country. And today, in these chambers, it is becoming a story of hope.
dreams. I am very afraid because I do not know how much longer we will have the strength to continue this fight against oppression—a fight for our very survival, a fight for freedom for the Argentine people. I wonder, how long can we and must we endure? Was of your great Nation, America, that you help us make our dreams of a democratic Argentina come true some day. I cannot thank you more deeply from my heart for your help.

INTRODUCTION OF H. CON. RES. 163
CALLING FOR THE FULL INVESTIGATION OF THE BOMBING OF THE JEWISH CULTURAL CENTER IN BUENOS AIRES, ARGENTINA

HON. ANTHONY D. WEINER
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Speaker, today is the Tisha B’Av, 5759 by the Hebrew calendar, the most important day of mourning in the Jewish year. It is the anniversary of the most tragic events in Jewish history, for it was on the this day, in 3338 that the first temple in Jerusalem was destroyed by the Babylonians, and in 3828 that the second temple was destroyed by the Romans.

Although this day is primarily meant to commemorate the destruction of the Temple, it is appropriate to consider on this day the many other tragedies of the Jewish people, many of which occurred on this day, the expulsion of the Jews from Spain, Betar, the last fortress to hold out against the Romans during the Bar Kochba revolt, fell, and so many others.

But the tragedies of Jewish history are not all so ancient. This past Sunday marked the 5th anniversary of the bombing of the Jewish Cultural Center in Buenos Aires, Argentina. On July 18, 1994, the Jewish Cultural Center in Buenos Aires, Argentina was destroyed by a terrorist bomb. Eighty-six people were killed. Over 300 people were wounded. The Argentinian Mutual Aid Association’s archive of community records, which dated back to 1894, was destroyed.

What is dispiriting is that today, five years after that tragic bombing, we still have not brought the terrorists to justice. Though we have recently seen the arrest of more suspects, there is still no resolution, no closure for the families that still grieve for their loved ones.

That is why I am choosing today, Tisha B’Av, the ninth of Av, to introduce a concurrent resolution calling upon the Argentine Government to fully support and devote all resources necessary to the efforts of Judge Juan Jose Galeano and to fully investigate, apprehend, and prosecute those responsible for the bombing; requesting that the Argentinian security forces and the judiciary of Argentina not impede this independent investigation; and requesting that Argentine President Carlos Menem appoint an independent committee to investigate and report on the integrity and competence of Argentina’s system of justice.

I invite my colleagues to cosponsor this resolution.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. ROBERT L. EHRLICH, JR.
OF MARYLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. EHRLICH. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, July 26, 1999, I missed several votes because my wife Kendel and our new baby boy were released from the hospital. Specifically, I missed the following two rollcall votes: 335 (Hoefelf amendment to H.R. 1074); and 336 (passage on H.R. 1074). If I had been present I would have voted “no” on rollcall No. 335 and “aye” on rollcall No. 336.

Likewise, I would have voted “aye” on Mr. McIntosh’s en bloc amendments to H.R. 1074; S. 604; H.R. 2565; H. Res. 172; H.R. 457; S. 1268; S. 1258, all of which were agreed to by voice vote.

FLAG CITY USA

HON. GREG WALDEN OF OREGON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. WALDEN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, in the vast Second Congressional District of Oregon lies a city named Redmond, also known as “Flag City USA,” because currently it proudly displays 687 flags that have been flown over our Nation’s Capitol. I would like to commend the citizens of Redmond for this great project that shows a strong sense of community spirit and patriotism.

The first display of flags was on July 4, 1991, the day that our nation officially welcomed home all veterans from Desert Storm and prior wars. The initial display was the concept of Mr. Mac McShannon. With the help of City Councilman Randy Povey, it became a reality. The flags displayed included 180 flags that had once draped the caskets of fallen veterans, which were made available by American Legion Post 44.

When Mr. McShannon and Mr. Povey learned that the flags from the previous year would not be available to display in the future, the Downtown Redmond Flag Committee was born. A representative of almost every civil organization of Redmond met with the American Legion, and a mission statement was developed and it reads as follows:

It is the feeling of this committee that flags should be flown on our city streets during appropriate holidays and other special occasions. Therefore, the acquisition, display, and perpetual care of the flags are now priorities we must address. Since this should be a community endeavor, we would like all area organizations, clubs, businesses and individuals to join us in a plan to perpetuate Americanism, the display of our flag and the Redmond Community Spirit.

PRIVATE ACTIVITY BONDS

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. LaFALCE. Mr. Speaker, today, I am announcing my intention to co-sponsor H.R. 864, the “State and Local Investment Opportunity Act of 1999.” This legislation would accelerate the increase in the private activity bond cap so that it would take effect at the beginning of next year, and index that cap in subsequent years for inflation.

I take this step in recognition of the value of expanding low interest rate financing for projects which include affordable housing, single family mortgages, student loans, environmental cleanup, and manufacturing job creation, and in recognition that politically, at least for the present, this may be the only way to accomplish these desired results.

However, I also feel compelled to express my reservations about expanding this and other tax-oriented mechanisms without a more extensive Congressional review of the merits of using the tax code for these purposes. Specifically, the issues of efficiency and accountability need to be addressed much more fully.

Every dollar of foregone tax revenue impacts the federal surplus or deficit in the exact same way as does an increased dollar of spending. Yet, the combination of tight discretionary spending caps and the popularity of tax cuts seems to have convinced lawmakers that the easiest route to increase resources for important priorities is through a tax credit or tax expenditure.

The serious drawback to this approach is that it is a very inefficient and costly way to achieve the desired purpose. For every dollar of foregone federal revenue, only a portion of that amount goes for the benefit of the project. A significant portion goes to the benefit of the taxpayer or entity directly, which the tax benefit is funneled. For example, a 1988 GAO report concluded that for every dollar of revenue foregone by the federal government through the issuance of mortgage revenue bonds, only between 12 and 45 cents of such subsidy are received by the homeowner.

A more direct, and clearly more efficient, less costly approach, would be to provide the benefit directly in the form of spending. Of course, this approach can easily be demagogued as “tax and spend liberalism.” Yet, direct program spending and tax expenditures are essentially indistinguishable—except that the tax expenditure is almost always less efficient, and therefore much more costly.

A second issue is that of accountability. The principle that the governmental unit that spends the tax should be the same entity that taxes its citizens to raise such dollars in a good one.

However, there are a growing number of federal tax expenditures and programs that transfer complete authority to states and localities to spend the funds as they see fit, subject only to broad general parameters. This is, in effect, “free money” to the states and localities. This is not to conclude that they make bad spending and allocation decisions, but just that such decisions are not grounded in the principle of accountability—i.e., of having the tax raiser answer directly to the taxpayers.

As Congress gets wrapped up in the day to day battles over how much to tax and how much to spend, it would do well to take a longer term, more comprehensive review of the best way to use federal resources to achieve the important policy objectives that we all share.

IN RECOGNITION OF TEXAS EASTMAN'S 50TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. RALPH M. HALL OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to “50 Years of Great Chemistry” by the Texas Eastman Division of Eastman Chemical Co., which has accomplished and contributed much as a company and to the people of East Texas. Eastman Chemical is a leading international chemical company that produces a wide range of chemicals, fibers, and plastics. In 1949, Longview, Texas, was selected as the location for the Texas Eastman Division. In 1950, plant construction began, and by 1952 products were being shipped out. From its modest beginning in 1950, the Eastman Division has grown into one of the largest petrochemical plants in Texas. The original plant in Longview, Texas, occupies a 6,000-acre site close to the East Texas Oil Field, which has provided the company with its principal raw materials—propane, ethane, and natural gas. The company also owns and operates a 300-acre underground storage facility in Tyler, Texas, where more than 250 million gallons of propane, ethane and chemical intermediates are stored. Texas Eastman uses approximately 55,000 barrels per day of its raw materials. In order to produce such a large quantity of raw material, Eastman owns and operates 11 pipelines that extend as far as 200 miles to the Texas Gulf Coast. Texas Eastman’s products are high-volume, continuous processes which operate twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week. On average, the company ships more than 9 million pounds per day of chemical and plastic products to its consumers worldwide.

Texas Eastman is one of the largest employers in East Texas with approximately 2,700 employees and annual payroll and benefits totaling 175 million dollars. Eastman also employs some 16,000 men and women in 30 countries around the world. Committed to working toward an improved quality of life for our families, neighbors, and communities, Texas Eastman and its employees participate extensively in civic and business organizations throughout East Texas. Additionally, the company floods the East Texas economy with hundreds of millions of dollars each year through materials, services, freight and local state taxes. Since 1981, Texas Eastman has spent hundreds of millions of dollars on environmental, operating, developmental, and capital projects, on its way to becoming the 9th largest chemical producer in the United States.

Eastman Chemical Company’s commitment has gone unrecognized. In 1993, Eastman won the Malcolm Baldrige National Quality Award, the first chemical company to win this prestigious national award. Texas Eastman also received the first Texas Quality Award presented to companies that are role models for quality excellence in the State of Texas. Additionally, Texas Eastman has received numerous awards for its efforts to protect the environment, such as the Environmental Protection Agency Administrator’s Award for “outstanding achievements in pollution prevention.” For its significant improvement in the state’s environment, Eastman also received the “Excellence in Environmental Awareness” award from the League of Women Voters of Texas in 1995. From the “Best in Texas” award, the Clean Industries 2000 Award, the list of honors and accolades bestowed upon Texas Eastman are numerous and distinguished.

“It is the policy of Eastman Chemical Company, to carry out its business activities in a manner consistent with sound environmental management practices and in compliance with applicable environmental laws and regulations.” These very words are the proud motto by which all Eastman employees stand true. The men and women of Texas Eastman proudly assume this responsibility as caring stewards of the earth, who cherish their time, talents, and energy as volunteers and civic leaders for the betterment of their communities.

Mr. Speaker, the Texas Eastman Division of the Eastman Chemical Co., is a tremendous asset to East Texas. As we adjourn today, let us honor and recognize the 50th anniversary of this committed and prosperous company.

RELIGION IN PUBLIC HIGH SCHOOLS AND SAFE SCHOOLS

HON. BERNARD SANDERS OF VERMONT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the record speak in the House of Representatives by high school students from my home State of Vermont, who were speaking at my recent town meeting on issues facing young people today. I am asking that you please insert these statements in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as I believe that the views of these young persons will benefit my colleagues.

RELIGION IN PUBLIC HIGH SCHOOLS

(On behalf of Nathan Loizeaux, Larry Grace and Melissa Tobin)

Nathan Loizeaux: In opening, we would just like to thank Congressman Bernie Sanders and everybody who is involved in this to give us a chance to voice our opinion. Thank you.

We would like to address the subject of religion in the public high school. We believe that our laws need to be reformed or we need new ones, because the existing laws seem to be inadequate at this time. They seem to be very broad, and most high schools that we have attended seem to ignore most of these laws, based on the fact that we are teenagers.

I would just like to say, in the court case Rosenberg v. Reactor and Visitors of the University of Virginia, the 15th Circuit Court, 25,010, 1986, the court concluded that from speech itself was threatened if religious speech was singled out for different treatment.

We have had found that in the current high school, public high schools, that religious groups are treated in a different way, and by Vermont and federal government laws, they are required to give us equal rights.

Larry Grace: At our school, the subject of religion is needed to be addressed, because it is a major issue that concerns us teenagers who have religious beliefs. Since time in our public school has past, we believe that the public school system is not adhering to these laws, the public school system is not upholding the state and federal government laws for equal rights for religious groups inside the public school system. The laws are ignored, and the school system gets away with it, because we, as students, don’t have the funds to fight back. And there should be new laws or for the current laws to be better enforced, to be instituted. The federal government and state laws require for the public school system to give religious groups inside schools equal rights. We feel they should be the same as nonreligious groups inside the school, allowing them to express their thoughts and beliefs in forms of materials and displays. The public school system is not adhering to these laws of equal rights in a way that we feel the religious groups within the public school are being discriminated against because of what they are.

Melissa Tobin: If schools allow noncurricular student-led groups to use their facilities for meetings and displays, why couldn’t they allow student-led groups to use the facilities in the same way? If a religious group were to put up a display, it may be thought of as forcing a certain religion on fellow students. If another group were to put up a display on sexual preferences, no one would feel that it was forcing their beliefs or

OF GEORGIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. BARR of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, all across America, there is a growing level of concern about a perceived culture of violence and apathy among many of our young people. In response, parents, teachers, students, and political leaders have been searching for ways to counteract these trends. I am pleased to report to the House of Representatives that one high school principal in my Congressional District is truly helping to provide a solution to this problem. That principal is Bill Parsons, and the school where he serves is Troup High School in LaGrange, Georgia.

Several years ago, Bill Parsons was working at West Point Elementary School in Troup County. At the time, he came to the realization disrespectful behavior is due, at least in part, to a lack of understanding among students about what it means to develop good character, and how having moral and courageous habits can help students lead better lives. For this reason, he instituted a character education program that resulted in a significant and immediate drop in disciplinary referrals.

In response, parents, teachers, students, and community leaders together to hammer home the message: character really does count. I salute Bill Parsons for his crusade to make building good character a part of every child’s education. I urge my colleagues in Congress to look to his example, and do everything we can to support efforts such as his.

HONORING JUDGE FRANK M. JOHNSON, JR.
OF ALABAMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Speaker, we are a country of strong men united by great philosophies, yet we are divided by realities that built this country by stripping a people of their land in order to call it our own, and by enslaving another people to a lifelong labor of blood and sweat to build our homes.

And the influence of this violence. It is at Colchester High School, and it is not just Littleton, New Hampshire. It makes people wonder: Could it happen here? Because we have had—as Beth is going to speak about—gun threats and bomb threats, and what’s next?

Mr. Speaker, I rise today, on the brink of a new millennium, not to point out the immeasurable flaws of our cherished American dream. Rather, I rise to salute, Judge Frank M. Johnson, Jr., a man who Time Magazine in 1967 deemed "one of the most important men in America" and whose life exemplifies the biblical statement "to whom much is given . . . much is required."

Judge Johnson was a man who dedicated more than four decades of his life to ensuring that no man be kept in separate facilities that inherently violate his right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. He is an American icon, a legendary Federal jurist from Alabama whose historic civil rights decisions forever shattered segregation in a "Jim Crow" South.

His monumental ruling striking down the Montgomery bus-segregation law as unconstitutional created a broad mandate for racial justice that eternally eliminated segregation in public schools and colleges, bathrooms, restaurants, and many public facilities in Alabama and across the South.

Judge Johnson was an innovator and a crusader for all mankind who will be remembered eternally for giving true meaning to the word justice.

Today, I rise to honor Judge Johnson for helping to bring equality to the American Dream. I honor him for bringing justice to an inhume system of law. I honor him like Martin Luther King, Jr., for allowing justice and righteousness to roll down like a mighty stream.

Thank you.

Beth Ziner: The problem of gun and bomb threats needs to be recognized and dealt with in a better manner. For the threats appearing at Colchester High School, the school took the appropriate steps. For the other threats, school was canceled, lockers were searched, metal detectors were placed in the halls, armed police were stationed in the halls. When the gun threat happened, heightened security became an issue at the school.

Everywhere was the same, except that the police were unarmored. An article from the Times Magazine states that in 1966, handguns were used to murder two people in New Zealand, 15 in Japan, 30 in Great Britain, 106 in Canada, 213 in Germany, and 9,390 in the United States. We have a problem, and it needs to be recognized.

The last issue I would like to present is the option of bringing together the state of Vermont. I feel we have had so much negativity in the past few months, something needs to be done. Perhaps a "Celebrate Life Week" in the state of Vermont, where there are parades, sales in stores, happenings in theaters, fireworks, and awards given out to people who have done something good in the community.

Thank you.
fact that a majority of Hmong adults are unable to speak English. The result is that many Hmong adults are unable to hold higher pay-ning jobs.
Hmong youth are constantly challenged due to the difficulties of social assimilation, lost opportunities and juvenile crime temptations. The Hmong Youth Foundation seeks to give evey child the opportunity to succeed and overcome negative obstacles. The Foundation pursues every avenue available through collaboration with other Hmong and Southeast refugee self-help organizations, as well as non-Asian agencies. The response has been very positive, as the Foundation does not duplicate any existing service provider’s intent.

Hmong students in Fresno County have excelled in academic excellence and thus, have received many accolades. Among them are annual Hmong valedictorians in the Fresno and Clovis Unified School Districts. The Hmong Youth Foundation’s intent is to help as many students as possible so that even greater success will follow.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize the Hmong Youth Foundation for its service to the community. I urge my colleagues to join me in wishing the foundation many more years of continued success.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE EXPANSION OF CALPINE
HON. DOUG OSE
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join with the people of California’s 3rd Congress-sional district to support the expansion of the Calpine Sutter Power Plant, a long-standing business in Sutter County.

Sutter County, situated just north of Sac-cramento between the Sacramento and Feather Rivers, has access to three state universities, a major metropolitan airport, the State Capitol, and recreational areas of the Sierra Mountain Range. However, with double-digit unemployment, a local economy almost solely dependent on agriculture, the lack of adequate power, and the annual danger of flooding in the upper Sacramento Valley, Sutter County also faces many challenges.

Today, Sutter County is celebrating the groundbreaking of Calpine’s new plant site, which will increase its property tax base by at least $300 million. The new plant will provide clean, low-cost power for economic development, employ up to 250 construction workers for twenty months, create at least twenty new family-wage, full-time jobs, and provide significant revenues to local businesses.

Additionally, Calpine has proposed a 10-year, $2.5 million private funding program for improving levees and storm drainage facilities in Sutter County. The funds will be distributed directly to the Sutter County Water Agency and the County Flood Control and Water Conservation District, which will have final authority over how the funds are spent.

I commend Calpine and people of Sutter County for their commitment and investment in their community through new jobs, increased tax revenue, clean, reliable, low-cost electricity, and willingness to work together toward local flood control solutions. This another example of collaborative communities working together to define a vision and successfully achieve common goals.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am outraged by the killing of 14 Serbs last Friday near the town of Gracko in Kosovo. The culpits of this crime are, in my view, prime candidates for the International Tribunal for against humanity by the International Tribunal which is located in The Hague. I certainly hope that the efforts of KFOR, the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), and Tribunal investigators will help identify and immediately apprehend those reponsible for the crime.

The killings, however, are no isolated incidents. Since NATO air strikes ended, the Serb forces have retreated, and the Kosovar refugees have begun to return to their homes, whose Serb civilians who chose to remain in the region have repeatedly been subjected to violent retribution. Certainly a Kosovo which is ethically cleansed of Serbs—and, according to reports, cleansed of Roma as well—is not the kind of Kosovo for which the international community undertook such a risky and costly intervention. Kosovo must pursue the path of rule by law not by lawlessness, and respect for and protection of basic human freedoms—including life itself.

A related disturbing trend is the attempt by leaders of the Kosovo Liberation Army—the KLA—to fill the political vacuum created now that Serbian authorities have departed Kosovo. The KLA has yet to prove its democratic credentials; in many instances, its tactics have sent the opposite message. Mr.
Speaker, before the KLA is granted any role in Kosovo’s interim administration, it must prove itself. Helping to find those responsible for this latest atrocity would be a good place to start.
Nationalist Kosovar Albanians can not hide behind the past victimization of their people by Milosevic and his forces, those responsible for these actions taken against Serbs and their property in Kosovo must be held accountable.
Neither can they relegate responsibility for stopping these incidents to the international community alone.

The international community must make clear to all Kosovo Albanian leaders that their actions now will go a long way in determining what kind of support they will find for their own aspirations down the road. The benefits of enhanced political status for Kosovo cannot be enjoyed without also undertaking the responsibilities of democratic governance.

HON. RON KIND OF WISCONSIN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to pay tribute to the Upper Mississippi River National Wildlife and Fish Refuge on the occasion of its 75th Anniversary.

The Upper Mississippi River National Wildlife and Fish Refuge is very important to the heritage and environmental conservation efforts of the Midwest. The refuge’s mission is to provide public benefits associated with fish, wildlife, and wild areas by reserving the Upper Mississippi flood plain ecosystem for the enjoyment and use of this and future generations. For the past 75 years the Upper Mississippi River National Wildlife and Fish Refuge has provided essential habitat for a wide variety of plants, fish, migratory birds, and other animals.

As a boy growing up on the north side of LaCrosse near the Mississippi River, I developed a special connection to the river. My fond memories of past camping trips on the river’s sand bars and fishing with my friends have helped me to see first hand the importance of responsible stewardship. These boy-hood impressions of the river have inspired me to work to protect the Great Mississippi from environmental damage.

As one of the four co-chairmen of the Upper Mississippi River Congressional Task Force (UMRTF), I have had an opportunity to effectively address stewardship issues pertinent to the Upper Mississippi River and adjacent lands. With the help of the UMRTF, attention has successfully been focused on the importance of refugees in the Upper Mississippi River Basin and their need for funding.

In recent years, the refugees have been asked to do more and more with less and less funding. Although the refugees have received added responsibilities, funding for maintenance, habitat restoration and outreach have all faced budget shortfalls. The Upper Mississippi Refuge currently lacks a full-time ref-ge manager. Although the master plan for the refuge calls for 60 staff members, only 28 staff are currently employed. With the aid of the Task Force, I am working to address this problem.

As a direct result of UMRTF efforts, the U.S.
Fish and Wildlife Service will increase refuge maintenance funding for the Upper Mississippi River National Wildlife and Fish Refuge, and the Mark Twain National Wildlife Refuge by $1 million in fiscal year 1999. In the future, the Task Force will continue to focus attention on these refugees and the key roles they fill in providing essential habitat for a wide variety of plants, fish migratory birds and other animals.

The Mississippi River is truly an environmental treasure. The Upper Mississippi refuge system plays a crucial role in protecting this national treasure so that current and future generations can enjoy the same environmental, recreational and economic benefits that we have enjoyed in the past.
A TRIBUTE TO THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF PEOPLE WITH AIDS (NAPWA)

HON. KAREN MCCARTHY OF MISSOURI
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Ms. MCCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the National Association of People with AIDS (NAPWA)—the leading advocate on behalf of all people living with HIV and AIDS in order to end the pandemic and human suffering caused by HIV/AIDS.

NAPWA was founded in 1983 in Denver, Colorado, at the Second National AIDS Forum. This organization has been at the forefront of the AIDS epidemic to address the issues of equality and equal access to treatment and prevention methods regardless of race, gender, class, or sexual orientation. On Saturday, July 31, 1999, NAPWA will hold their Annual Retreat in Kansas City, Missouri, including a public forum on “AIDS Now and in the New Millennium,” where a panel of leading experts, including Sandy Thurman, Director of the Office of National AIDS Policy, will discuss the latest developments in the effort to end the AIDS crisis. This forum will provide an opportunity for city, county, state, and national leaders, AIDS Service organizations, HIV infected individuals, health departments, faith communities, and medical professionals to talk about issues surrounding the AIDS epidemic and the funding that is needed to maintain quality health care services and innovative prevention strategies.

At this forum, NAPWA will welcome Roger A. Gooden—an AIDS survivor and tireless advocate for people with AIDS—as the newly elected Chairman of the Board of Directors. Mr. Gooden has a rich history of fighting for AIDS/HIV treatment and prevention, as well as for the rights of people with AIDS. He currently serves on the State of Missouri’s Governor’s Council on AIDS and the Board of Directors of the National Council on Alcoholism and Drug Dependence of Greater Kansas City. Recently, Mr. Gooden was honored by the Missouri Department of Health Division of Environmental Public Health and Communicable Disease Prevention, Bureau of HIV/AIDS Care and Prevention Services, in recognition of his dedication and service to the State of Missouri in advocating for people living with HIV/AIDS and the prevention of the spread of HIV. Mr. Gooden was also honored by Kansas City Mayor Emanuel Cleaver and the City Council with a resolution and proclamation recognizing his election as Chairman of the Board of NAPWA and for his dedicated service and efforts in the fight against AIDS.

NAPWA is an active and effective organization, providing many services to legislators and people with AIDS/HIV. For instance, NAPWA provides Community Education, Technical Assistance, and Regional Training Workshops around the country for people with HIV, to give them the skills they need to participate in HIV prevention community planning. With Ryan White CARE Act Planning Bodies. NAPWA also coordinates a diverse national network of committed public speakers through the Leadership Development Initiative. This initiative, coupled with the Youth Initiative involves outreach services where peers talk to peers about AIDS and HIV, encouraging each other to modify risk behaviors and change attitudes toward people with AIDS/HIV.

NAPWA also participates in a wide array of prevention, health promotion, and educational efforts for those infected with and at risk for HIV. NAPWA publishes several fact sheets, alerts, and reports, as well as supporting an information and Referral Service, to provide the nation with up-to-date and accurate information about the AIDS pandemic. NAPWA also sponsors National HIV Testing Day in June of each year, to encourage early and frequent testing for HIV/AIDS, especially for those who are at higher risk.

Mr. Speaker, NAPWA’s highest priority is the development of effective new treatments and a cure for HIV disease. Please join me in commending NAPWA for its tireless efforts on behalf of people with AIDS.

ELECTRONIC DISCLOSURES DELIVERY ACT OF 1999

HON. MARGE ROUKEMA
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, millions of consumers today routinely conduct business over the Internet, buying and selling a myriad of products and services from companies large and small, near and far. Many of these consumers already conduct much of their banking business over the web, checking balances, transferring funds and paying bills without leaving their homes. This explosion of online banking offers great benefits on both sides of the transactions. Even the tiniest small-town bank can have access to a national marketplace, while consumers can compare shop for the best interest rates or products. Nonetheless, the delivery of many financial services over the Internet, such as loans and mortgages, are limited by anti-financial services over the Internet, such as loans and mortgages, are limited by anti- consumers already conduct much of their savings to consumers. Reduced cost—Electronic delivery of disclosures will cost less than providing the same information on paper or paying employees to handle face-to-face disclosures. Competition should encourage business to pass on those savings to consumers.

Congressional guidance on electronic disclosures is needed immediately, given that most of the consumer protection laws now on the books were enacted before the Internet became popular. Congress should provide uniform standards so that disclosures will be delivered to consumers under the same set of rules by all financial service providers.

Some regulators, notably the Federal Reserve, have begun to address these issues. But others have not, as in the case of the Department of Housing and Urban Development with respect to the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act. Congressional action would provide uniformity and clarity among the agencies and provide guidance from the only body with the authority to amend the laws in question.

In sponsoring this legislation, we want to make clear that we do not intend to discourage the Federal Reserve from moving ahead. Instead, we want to encourage other agencies to follow the Fed’s example. If anything, we hope the pace of regulatory activity in this area will be stimulated by congressional interest and action.

Congress and the regulators must play a leadership role in updating many of the consumer protection laws to reflect new technologies and establish a coherent legislative framework for the delivery of financial services through electronic commerce. With the introduction of this legislation, we can begin the debate that set us on the path to enacting responsible legislation that will enhance consumer access to financial services while maintaining appropriate consumer protections.

SUMMARY OF THE ELECTRONIC DISCLOSURES DELIVERY ACT OF 1999

The “Electronic Disclosures Delivery Act of 1999” (the Act) amends the Truth in Lending Act, the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, the Fair Credit Reporting Act, the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act, the Truth in Savings Act and the Consumer Leasing Act to provide for the electronic delivery of disclosures, notices, and any other information that is required to be given to consumers under these acts. The legislation provides that acknowledgments given in connection with disclosures or notices may also be provided electronically.

On-line disclosures will provide consumers with a number of benefits:
Credits may rely upon the use of electronic communications. The legislation addresses only electronic communications. The legislation would be effective upon date of enactment. The legislation addresses only electronic delivery of information to consumers. It does not affect the substantive rights and responsibilities of any party or the content of any disclosure. Including both the timing and format of disclosures and the information to be provided.

RECOGNIZING THE PLIGHT OF HOME HEALTH CARE AGENCIES

HON. J.C. WATTS, JR.
OF OKLAHOMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. WATTS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, there is a growing concern over the devastated situation that is plaguing Home Health Care Agencies in this country. Today I am introducing the Medicare Home Health Services Equity Act of 1999 to provide greater equity to Medicare-certified home health agencies, and to ensure access to Medicare beneficiaries to medically necessary home health services furnished in an efficient manner under the Medicare Program. Quality, efficient home health care agencies are suffering under the punitive Interim Payment System and are going out of business. The per beneficiary limits imposed on home health agencies do not, for a great number of agencies, accurately reflect the costs necessary incurred in the efficient delivery of needed home health services to beneficiaries. The amount of reductions in reimbursement for home health services furnished under the Medicare program significantly exceeds the amount of reduction in reimbursement for any other service furnished under the Medicare program. This comes at a time when the need for home health services by the Nation’s elderly citizens is growing.

Although this is a nation-wide problem, the impact on my home state of Oklahoma has been disproportionately high. In Oklahoma alone, 198 of the 381 licensed home health care agencies have been forced to close their doors, of which 146 were Medicare certified. Surviving home health agencies which have managed to stay in business have curtailed their medical services due to financial constraints. As a result of this terrible tragedy, the sickest, most frail Medicare beneficiaries are being deprived access to medically necessary home health services. Thousands of elderly and disabled Americans are not receiving the type of quality care at home that they so much need and deserve.

In our efforts to end fraud and abuse, we must make certain that the benefits and much needed services of home health agencies are not lost. Home health care is the least expensive, most cost efficient provider of medical services for Medicare beneficiaries and must be preserved.

For that reason, I am introducing the Medicare Home Health Services Equity Act of 1999. It is critically important that we address this crisis promptly and pass this vital legislation.

ASSESSING HMO CURBS

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member highly commends to his colleagues the following portions of an editorial “Assessing HMO Curbs,” which appeared in the July 21, 1999, edition of the Omaha World-Herald.

A lot of hot air accompanies the debate over whether Congress ought to provide a “bill of rights” for people who obtain their health care from home maintenance organizations. But one thing is reasonably clear. The debate so far has been less about health care than it has been about campaigning for election in 2000.

Democrats want to go into the election season with an excuse to portray Republican candidates as indifferent to the suffering of sick and injured people. The theme is part of a blue-print for restoring Democratic Party control of Congress.

Michael M. Weinstein, in The New York Times, took a calm look at the situation for the “billion of whites who obtain their health care from health maintenance organizations.” But one thing is reasonably clear. The debate so far has been less about health care than it has been about campaigning for election in 2000.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN DINGELL:

On June 8, 1999, the House Energy and Power Subcommittee, on which I serve, held a hearing on the Kansas Ad Valorem Tax refund issue. This issue is extremely important to the State of Kansas and one of our most important industries, the production of oil and gas. As a 23-year veteran of the Kansas Legislature and as the Minority Leader of the Kansas Senate, I am writing to request your support of Congressmen Jerry Moran and Mark Andrews of the entire Kansas House delegation.

This legislation would provide relief from unfair interest and penalties on refunds retroactively ordered by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. For two decades, FERC has actively ordered by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. For two decades, FERC has since ordered all producers operating during a 5-year period in the 1980's to refund both principal and interest associated with reimbursement of the ad valorem tax. With this legislation hopefully headed toward consideration by the full House of Representatives, I am taking this opportunity to place in the RECORD a letter recently sent by Kansas Senator Democratic Leader Anthony Hensley to House Commerce Committee Ranking Democrat John Dingell, concerning the legislative history of ad valorem and severance taxes in Kansas. This background will be very helpful to our colleagues as they review this issue in the weeks ahead.

Sincerely,

JOHN D. DINGELL, III
House of Representatives, Committee on Commerce, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC. have a severance tax, only an ad valorem tax. At that time, ad valorem tax was assessed at approximately 3.1% of the value of production and was revenue used by counties and local school districts. Oklahoma and Texas, on the other hand, had severance taxes in place of ad valorem taxes on oil and gas for a total tax burden of 10.5%. Likewise, Colorado had a severance tax on oil and gas ranging from 2%-5% “in addition to” a 4.5% property tax, for a total tax burden of 7.4% to 10.4%.

As you know, federal law allowed purchasers to add all of these taxes on to the Federal Power Commission’s (FPC) maximum lawful price when purchasing gas. In Wisconsin and Colorado, both a severance tax and a property tax were permitted to be added to the maximum lawful price. Texas had both a severance tax and a property tax, however, because of the way its property tax was structured, it was allowed to add on only the 7.5% severance tax to the FPC maximum lawful price. The Kansas Attorney General requested clarification from the FPC to determine whether Kansas’ ad valorem tax could be added to the FPC maximum lawful price in 1974. Opinion 699-D clarified this issue and allowed the Kansas ad valorem tax as a lawful addition to the price.

In 1981, the State of Kansas needed additional funding for education, roads and infrastructure, and Governor Carlin began studying the potential for a severance tax. One of our state’s most valuable natural resources was being depleted and consumed out of state, pipelines were strewn across Kansas, drilling was taking place on Kansas roads and infrastructure, and little benefit was being derived by Kansas government. The price of gas at the wellhead, sold in interstate commerce, was being controlled by the federal government at prices far below fair market value, resulting in the transfer of enormous wealth from Kansas to out of state producers. Certainly Kansas, Colorado, Wyoming and other states were collecting taxes on oil and gas at twice the state tax rate.

Governor Carlin proposed a severance tax which, when added to the existing ad valorem tax, would be comparable to the taxes on oil and gas production collected in other producing states. The legislature studied various severance tax proposals for three years. Oil and gas severance and property tax in neighboring states were studied carefully. A comparative chart used by the Senate Tax Committee is passing the severance tax is enclosed with the attached Memo of Severance and Property Taxes prepared by the Kansas Legislative Research Department during the 1981 severance tax debate.

One of the issues raised during legislative debate was whether both a severance tax and an ad valorem tax on gas could be added to the maximum lawful price of gas as established by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC). We were advised that in 1981 a 4% severance tax on oil and gas “in addition to” a 6.5% property tax on oil and gas for a total tax burden of 10.5%. The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) was advised that the maximum lawful price of gas as established by the FERC to prohibit Kansas producers from passing through both a severance tax and a property tax. They were denied twice by the FERC. In 1988, Colorado Interstate Gas Company appealed the FERC decision to the Washington, D.C., Circuit Court of Appeals. I am sure you are familiar with the whole scenario that has followed. Nineteen years after Opinion 699-D was issued, the FERC, with incentive from the Washington, D.C., Court in the Colorado Interstate Gas case, the Circuit Court would reverse and allow Kansas to pass the severance tax without adjusting the methodology by which the Kansas ad valorem tax was calculated, many Kansas independent oil and gas producers and consumers.

What could the Kansas Legislature have done further to determine the reliability of Opinion 699-D? Should we have asked for a second ruling on the same issue? Would that opinion allow Kansas to rely on the Opinion? Would three, four or five opinions have allowed Kansas to rely on the ruling? Was there an opportunity to get further determination here that we could rely on before we passed the severance tax? How can a state ever rely on a federal regulatory ruling if a court can in the future retroactively change the law and require innocent victims who complied with the law to refund large sums of money with interest?

Certainly Kansas producers have done their part to provide consumers with an abundant supply of clean, cheap fuel. Why are consumers up in arms? In 1998, the price of gas at the wellhead in Kansas averaged less than $1.96 per mcf. The price of natural gas has at the residential burner tip, however, averaged $6.82 in the U.S.A., with prices ranging from less than $5 to over $12 per mcf from time to time. Since FERC Order 636 passed, the price of natural gas paid to producers at the wellhead has gone down while the price of natural gas paid by residential consumers has gone up. The middlemen’s share of the residential consumer’s dollar has increased from 59% to 73% while the producer’s share has decreased from 41% to 27%. Both producers and consumers are losers in this environment while the giant interstate pipelines and local distribution companies have seen profits rise dramatically.

Now, I understand, the primary beneficiaries of deregulation—the interstate pipeline companies and the energy companies—before the Energy and Power Subcommittee in the name of consumer protection. How much of the refund will ultimately reach the consumer? The amount of this consumer refund is undermined at this time, but I am advised that any residential consumer is likely to receive no more than $15 over a period of time. However, the total of these refunds is not passed through to the consumer, equals the estimated drilling and exploration budget for all of Kansas for the next three and one-half years.

As Democrats, we need to stand up for what is right and fair in America. Consumer protection is an enormously powerful political force. But, if consumers deserve no loss. Kansas producers were perhaps the only innocent parties in this entire scenario, caught between consuming states whose people believe they have a right to cheap fuel, and the governments of producing states who believe they have a right to tax oil and gas producers into oblivion.

This is not a consumer protection issue. I do not believe that consumers in Kansas, Missouri, Colorado, Michigan or any other state will benefit in any way from this retrospective reversal of law by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. A minuscule refund to a long lost consumer cannot offset the losses which will result from the destruction of honest, hardworking, productive citizens. Exploration in Kansas is almost totally dependent on small independent operators who provide an invaluable resource to communities throughout this country.

Exploitation in Kansas is almost totally dependent on small independent operators who provide an invaluable resource to communities across this country. As Democrats, we need to stand up for what is right and fair in America. Consumer protection is an enormously powerful political force. But, if consumers deserve no loss. Kansas producers were perhaps the only innocent parties in this entire scenario, caught between consuming states whose people believe they have a right to cheap fuel, and the governments of producing states who believe they have a right to tax oil and gas producers into oblivion.

As Democrats, we need to stand up for what is right and fair in America. Consumer protection is an enormously powerful political force. But, if consumers deserve no loss. Kansas producers were perhaps the only innocent parties in this entire scenario, caught between consuming states whose people believe they have a right to cheap fuel, and the governments of producing states who believe they have a right to tax oil and gas producers into oblivion.

Sincerely,

ANTHONY HENSLEY,
Kansas Senate Minority Leader.

On Or After January 1, 1973, And New Deductions Of Natural Gas To Interstate Commerce On Or After January 1, 1973, Opinion No. 699-D

DECLARATORY ORDER ON PETITION FOR CLARIFICATION (ISSUED OCTOBER 9, 1974)

Before Commissioners: John N. Nassikas, Chairman; Albert B. Brooke, Jr., Rush Moody, Jr., William L. Springer, and Don S. Smith.

The State Corporation Commission of the State of Kansas (Kansas) on August 29, 1974, filed a request for clarification of Opinion No. 699 concerning the severance tax on oil and gas production in Kansas. Opinion No. 699 provides in Paragraph A(3) (mimeo p. 141) that the national rate established there "shall be adjusted upward for all State or Federal severance, or similar taxes * * *". The question presented is whether the Kansas ad valorem tax is a similar tax within the meaning of the above provision. A number of other states also have an ad valorem tax, and our determination here will not be limited to the Kansas ad valorem tax, but will apply to all ad valorem taxes in general.

As Kansas points out, the bulk of the Kansas ad valorem tax is based upon production factors, and, as such, a severance or production tax merely bearing the title "ad valorem tax". The ad valorem tax in some other states is also similar to a production or severance tax inasmuch as it is based on the amount of production and the revenue therefrom. Consequently, we conclude that it is proper under Opinion No. 699 for producers to adjust upward for a state ad valorem tax where such tax is based on production factors.

SEVERANCE AND PROPERTY TAXES ON OIL AND GAS - BACKGROUND

This memorandum presents an overview of the severance taxes and property taxes levied on oil and gas properties in the major...
A severance tax may be either “in lieu of” or an addition to property taxes on oil or gas properties. An “in lieu of” severance tax exempts oil and gas properties from the general property tax.

Property Taxes on real and personal property have traditionally been a major source of funding for the activities carried on by state and local governments. Applying a property tax to oil and gas properties typically involves determining the value of minerals in the ground and the value of the production equipment. States imposing property taxes have usually chosen one of three methods to value the minerals: value of production; formula valuation; or token assessment.

Annual production assessment applies the property tax levy to the value of production, which might be either gross or net value.

Formula valuation attempts to value resources by estimating the average life of a well, rate of discount, and the estimated value of future production.

Token assessment would apply the property tax to a minimal amount of value, either per acre of lease or per well.

National Summary

Severance taxes on oil and gas have been enacted in 27 states, including states such as Kansas which have enacted relatively minor severance taxes based on the volume of production for regulatory, rather than revenue, purposes. Seventeen of those 27 states have enacted “significant” severance taxes—a tax at the rate of 2 percent or more of value. Six of the 17 states with significant severance taxes impose their tax in lieu of the property tax.

Kansas

Oil and gas leases, including royalty interests and equipment used in production, are assessed as tangible personal property in Kansas. Guides for assessing oil and gas properties have been prepared by the Director of Property Valuation, Department of Revenue, for use by county appraisers. After appraised values are determined, the properties are assessed at 30 percent of such values and are subject to the total general property tax rate according to the situs of the property.

According to Table 3, prepared by the Department of Revenue, Division of Property Valuation, oil and gas properties pass, on average, $95 million in property taxes in 1980, up from $60.5 million in 1979.

According to the Kansas Geological Survey, oil and gas production in Kansas for the last two years was as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Product</th>
<th>Quantity</th>
<th>1979 Value</th>
<th>1980 Value</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Oil</td>
<td>66,095 barrels</td>
<td>$2,145,015</td>
<td>$2,049,581</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Natural Gas Liquefied</td>
<td>33,888 barrels</td>
<td>$2,086,499</td>
<td>$3,045,227</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Thus, using the above oil and gas property tax figures, property taxes statewide averaged 3.1 percent of value and 2.9 percent of value in 1980 and 1979, respectively. Of course, the ratio of property taxes to value varies from lease to lease and county to county.

The biggest factor in the increase in property taxes between 1979 and 1980 was the increase in the price of oil. The calculation of the value of the gross reserves of oil is the most important step in valuing the oil lease. This value is calculated by multiplying the total annualized production for the previous year times a net price figure times a present worth factor. This value is calculated by the present value of money to be received at a specified time in the future. The low production credit is a reduction for wells with very low production levels.

Changes in the 1981 Guide include accounting for differences in production quality and expenses between eastern and western Kansas wells. One such difference is that the 1981 Guide will consider a 5 year income for the shallow eastern Kansas wells, while an 8 year income will be used for the deeper western Kansas wells.

In addition to the property tax, oil and gas producers, like other businesses, also pay sales and income taxes. Oil and gas producers also pay taxes or fees for antipollution and conservation activities of the state. The oil and gas property tax, for pollution control, is levied at the rate of .001 per barrel for each barrel of oil and $0.0005 for each one thousand cubic feet of gas produced. The conservation assessment tax is $0.003 per barrel of oil and $0.0008 for each one thousand cubic feet of gas.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has ruled that the Kansas property tax is essentially based on production and has allowed this tax to be “passed-on” to consumers. More than one production tax is levied on natural gas (the only type of energy production whose price is still controlled) may be passed on. Both the property tax and the two revenue taxes in Kansas are currently being passed on. Other states and the F.E.R.C. have also reported that natural gas producers are able to pass-on more than one production tax, as long as intrastate and interstate sales of natural gas are taxed equally.

A severance tax, if enacted in Kansas, would have had the effect of lowering values. These changes were raising the discount factor and changing the low production credit. The discount factor reflects the present value of money to be received at a specified time in the future. The low production credit is a reduction for wells with very low production levels.

The Legislative Research Department is not yet able to estimate the effect of a severance tax on property tax appraisals. A reduction in the net price figures does not necessarily mean that assessed valuations of oil and gas properties will fall—but it does at least mean that such valuations would not be as high as they otherwise might be if no severance tax were enacted. Decontrol of all oil prices, and rising prices for oil and gas are some factors that could lead to increases in oil and gas valuations, even if a severance tax were enacted.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

At least two opinions of former Kansas Attorneys General have stated that either an "in addition to" or "in lieu of" severance tax could be constitutionally enacted in Kansas. Article 11, Section 1, of the Kansas Constitution specifically, authorized the legislature to classify "mineral products" for purposes of taxation. In an opinion dated September 13, 1954, the Attorney General concluded: "...it is our opinion that a gross production or severance tax would probably be constitutional if levied to the exclusion of property taxes or if levied in addition to property taxes on mineral products. We do not believe that a provision exempting the equipment and other property used in production would be constitutionally valid."

The above opinion was confirmed in another opinion, dated June 5, 1969: "We have studied the (1954) opinion and agree with his conclusion stated therein. We are unable to find any recent case which would alter that conclusion. However, we would again emphasize that a severance tax act could not exempt the equipment and other property used in the production of oil and gas from ad valorem taxes."

A 1 percent severance tax on oil gas production was enacted on the last day of the 1957 Session. This tax was an "in addition to" severance tax. During the first six months after enactment, over $2 million was collected. This tax was held to be invalid by the Kansas Supreme Court, however, in the case State, ex. rel. v. Kirchner, 182 Kan. 437 (1958). The Court held that the bill enacting the tax was unconstitutional because the subject of the act was not clearly expressed in its title.

1. Tax on oil and gas is based on "gross income," defined as market value at wellhead or the value of the severer's income as computed for Colorado and federal income tax depletion purposes, whichever is higher.

2. Shippers oils (less than 10 barrels per day) are exempt. A credit is allowed for 87.5 percent of all property taxes paid during the tax year, excluding property taxes upon equipment and facilities.

3. Oil wells incapable of producing more than 25 barrels of oil per day which also produce at least 50 percent salt water per day, 6 1/2 percent, wells incapable of producing more than 10 barrels of oil per day, 3/4 percent; natural gas liquids, 10 percent, gas at 15,000 pounds per square inch pressure, 7 cents per m.c.f. gas from oil well at 10 pounds per square inch pressure, 3 cents, gas from well incapable of producing average of 250,000 cubic feet per day, 1.3 cents, Working interest owners in an oil well as well that discover a new field will receive a tax on 50 percent of all severance taxes for the first 24 months, up to a certain amount.

4. Former lower rates on low-producing oil or gas wells were repealed in 1980.

5. Mineral reserves are not subject to property tax. No personal property is taxed in South Dakota, so only oil and gas equipment forming a part of realty is subject to the property tax.

6. Oil tax deferred at 2 percent per year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Today’s prayer will be offered by our guest Chaplain, Rabbi Solomon Schiff, director of chaplaincy, Greater Miami Jewish Federation, Miami, FL.

We are pleased to have you with us.

__PRAYER__

The guest Chaplain, Rabbi Solomon Schiff, offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Creator, we invoke Thy blessings upon those gathered here, loyal servants in the vineyard of human compassion. Bless, we pray, the Members of this body who have accepted the high privilege and sacred responsibility of serving in the sacred Halls of the U.S. Senate. Unto their hands was entrusted the mantle of leadership on behalf of the American people. May they discharge their responsibilities with courage and commitment. Grant that their deliberations will be free from rancor and bitterness, but that they will be ruled instead by wisdom, purpose, and dedication.

O, divine Healer, bind our Nation together. Sustain the dreams of those who founded our great Republic, that through our sharing with one another the ideals which gave it birth—the ideals of liberty, justice, equality, and freedom—we will preserve and strengthen these ideals for all future time. In this way we will help bring about a society based on moral and ethical values and ensure that the new millennium will mark not only a change in calendar but a change in character as well.

We will then lead the family of nations to an unending era of tranquility, justice, and universal peace. Amen.

__PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE__

The Honorable CONRAD BURNS, a Senator from the State of Montana, led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

__GUEST CHAPLAIN RABBI SOLOMON SCHIFF__

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAPO). The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise to thank our distinguished guest Chaplain, Rabbi Solomon Schiff, a personal friend, who has been a great contributor to the religious and civic life of our community and Nation and who has brought us an inspirational message to commence a long day of Senate deliberation.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The acting majority leader is recognized.

Speaker of the House

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, today, by a previous order, the Senate will begin a series of stacked votes on the Abraham Social Security lockbox amendment, the Baucus motion to recommit, and the Robb amendment regarding effective dates of the provisions in the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999.

Following the votes, Senator GRAMM of Texas will be recognized to offer a substitute amendment containing across-the-board tax cuts, estate tax relief, and reductions in capital gains taxation. By previous consent, there will be 10 hours of debate time remaining on the bill today. Therefore, it is the intention of the majority leader and other national Senators to continue to make significant progress on the bill and complete action on this legislation no later than tomorrow. I thank my colleagues for their attention.

TAXPAYER REFUND ACT OF 1999— Resumed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill.

The legislative assistant read as follows:

A bill (S. 1429) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 104 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2000.

Pending: Abraham amendment No. 1388, to preserve and protect the surpluses of the social security trust funds by reaffirming the exclusion of receipts and disbursement from the budget, by setting a limit on the debt held by the public, and by amending the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 to provide a process to reduce the limit on the debt held by the public.

Baucus motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Finance, with instructions to report back with an amendment to reduce the tax breaks in the bill by an amount sufficient to allow one hundred percent of the Social Security surplus in each year to be locked away for Social Security, and one-third of the national Social Security surplus in each year to be locked away for Medicare; and an amendment to protect the Social Security and Medicare surplus reserves.

Robb amendment No. 1401, to delay the effective dates of the provisions of, and amendments made by, the Act until the long-term solvency of Social Security and Medicare programs is ensured.

MOTION TO WAIVE THE BUDGET ACT AMENDMENT NO. 1388

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the pending amendment is not germane. I raise a point of order that the Abraham amendment violates section 305(b)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, I move to waive the Budget Act for consideration of the Abraham amendment.

Mr. GRAMM. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 2 minutes of debate. Who yields time?

Mr. REID. Mr. President, in a letter dated April 21, 1999, on a similar provision, then-Secretary of the Treasury Robert Rubin wrote to Senator MOYNIHAN that this “provision could preclude the United States from meeting its financial obligations to repay maturing debt and to make benefit payments—including Social Security checks—also worsen a future economic downturn.”

The lockbox in this proposal is potentially destabilizing in a manner reminiscent of the constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget.

I remind those who propose rigid 10-year schedules for reducing the publicly held debt that economics does not follow the agricultural cycle. There will be periods when surpluses, both on and off budget, will fall far short of projections. We should not impose a debt reduction schedule, enforced by a declining debt cycle ceiling, even if it can be overridden with 60 votes. To do so will risk default every time the debt ceiling is lowered.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, first of all, we have endeavored to and have modified our amendment to try to address some of these concerns. I think we have done so. I believe we have given sufficient flexibility so that there will not be the concerns that were raised in that letter.

This lockbox does not need a lot of debate. Americans have been hearing us talk about it now for almost 3 months. We will continue to try to get a straight up-down vote on this. I would note that once again this morning another procedural roadblock has been put in place to prevent us from getting a straight up-or-down vote. I regret that. I was prepared to come today and offer both sides the opportunity to have straightforward votes. If one side or the other in their various lockbox proposals got 50-plus votes, they would win and we could give the American people what I believe they want, and that is protection for their Social Security dollars sent to Washington. But again, once more, what we have had is a procedural impediment placed in the way of getting final action on this legislation.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues who have previously supported this lockbox to do so. It is a tougher lockbox that protects Social Security. If we want to do it, I say vote “yes.” Vote to waive the Budget Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the motion to waive the Budget Act. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll. The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 54, nays 46, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the Baucus motion. Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I understand each side has 1 minute of explanation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, this is a very simple matter before the Senate. It is a choice: Do we want to protect Social Security or not. It is that simple. That is the choice that we are presented with today.

Mr. President, I have offered the House lockbox which passed the House by an overwhelming margin—it only had three or four votes against it—along with the Medicare lockbox. The Medicare lockbox provides for a trust fund, which can be used in whatever way we want to use it for Medicare, including to provide an affordable prescription drug benefit or for shoring up Medicare solvency.

That is the choice before the Senate. Do we preserve Medicare or not. Our choice here today, however, is nothing compared to another choice. That is the choice that about 16 million seniors must make every day: Do I choose to buy my medicine, choose to pay the tax, or choose to do neither?

We are saying set aside and preserve for Medicare one-third of the on-budget surplus so that the choices facing seniors are not as difficult.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the Baucus motion to recommit S. 1429. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The clerk will call the roll. The legislative assistant called the roll. The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 42, nays 58, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Frist). On this vote, the yeas are 42, the nays are 58. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected.

The point of order is sustained, and the motion falls.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.
Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that all amendments and motions to recommit to S. 1429 must be filed by 2 p.m. today at the desk and with the bill managers.

Mr. STEVENS. Reserving the right to object, what time was that?

Mr. ROTH. Two p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1401

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I think we are ready for the vote on the next amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 2 minutes equally divided. Who yields time?

Mr. ROBB addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, this amendment simply delays the effective date of the tax cut that is proposed. There are many who believe that a tax cut of this magnitude at this time would be ludicrous. But that is not the issue. The issue is whether or not we ought to go ahead with a tax cut notwithstanding the fact that we have not protected Social Security and Medicare.

Most of the people who have spoken so far have talked about their concern for doing just that. The lockbox provisions were proposing to do just that.

If you want to save Social Security and Medicare, this is an incentive. It will delay the implementation of the act, but it will not negate the effectiveness of the act.

I ask that our colleagues vote to support this particular amendment, save the one-half of 1 percent of the total which would be expended this year, and not lock in cuts that would cost $792 billion, which would be almost impossible to reverse should that prove to be the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, no one in this chamber thinks other than that we want a real, sound, solid, and solvent Social Security system and Medicare system. Most of us, however, realize we will only have that if we have fundamental reforms in those systems, such as that proposed by the Medicare commission at which the President scoffed.

This amendment will serve to actually make Social Security and Medicare less sound. It will actually delay the process of real reform. The solvency dates that are used in this legislation are taken from the President's proposal and will invariably result in pouring money and more general revenues into these entitlement programs, delaying the day when we have to face up to the fact that we have to have fundamental reform.

Our bill sets aside 75 percent of the surplus for Medicare, Social Security, debt retirement, and other spending priorities. With regard to the 25 percent remaining, there is no reason to delay tax cuts.

If we saved every penny of the surplus, put it into Medicare and Social Security, it would not do one thing toward solving the fundamental problem.

This language is not germane to the bill now before us; therefore, I raise a point of order, under section 365(b)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, pursuant to section 901 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, I move to waive the applicable sections of that act for the consideration of the pending amendment and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1402

(Purpose: To return to the taxpayers a portion of the budget surplus that they created with their tax payments)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Texas is recognized to offer an amendment.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk in the nature of a substitute for myself, for Senator LOTT, Senator NICKLES, Senator MACK, Senator COVERDELL, Senator CRAIG, Senator McCONNELL, Senator INHOFE, Mrs. HUTCHISON, Senator BUNNING, Senator KYL, Senator BOB SMITH of New Hampshire, Senator ALARD, and Senator HAGEL, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM], for himself, Mr. LOTT, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. MACK, Mr. COVERDELL, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. McCONNELL, Mr. INHOFE, Mrs. HUTCHISON, Mr. BUNNING, Mr. KYL, Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire, Mr. ALARD, and Mr. HAGEL, proposes an amendment numbered 1402.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The text of the amendment is printed in today's Record under "Amendments Submitted."

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I have the highest admiration for the chairman of the Finance Committee. I am supportive of the tax cut he has crafted in committee. I intend to vote for it on final passage if this amendment fails.

But I believe we need a clearer vision. I believe we need to define very precisely what we would like to use this tax cut to do, rather than running around trying to stick a nickel in everybody's pocket with a targeted program.

I would prefer to have a tax cut that has clear themes and this is a very simple substitute because it consists of simply five things. So this is a tax cut that you can explain to every American, and it contains basic principles that I believe every American can understand and support.

The first principle is we ought to have an across-the-board tax cut of 10 percent. Now, I know our Democratic colleagues are going to jump up and down and say, first of all, that 32 percent of American families pay no income taxes, and so if you have an across-the-board tax cut, they will not get a tax cut. And that is right. Tax cuts are for taxpayers. If you don’t pay taxes, you won’t have a tax cut, you don’t get a tax cut. Most Americans don’t get food stamps; most Americans don’t get TANF; most Americans don’t get Medicaid because they don’t qualify for those programs. If you don’t pay taxes, you don’t get a tax cut.

Our Democratic colleagues are obviously going to jump up and down and say that Senator Rockefeller, who pays 10 times as much taxes as I do, with a 10 percent across-the-board tax cut, will get 10 times as big a tax cut. That is right, but he pays 10 times as much taxes. If you ask people in your church to take up money to build a new parsonage and it turned out you had taken up too much money, and you decided to give it back, isn’t that logical to give it back to simply take how much an individual gave and take the amount that you didn’t need and give it back to them proportionately? So the first principle we believe in is there ought to be an across-the-board tax cut, so every American who pays income taxes will get a tax cut. Now, our Democratic colleagues have said they believe if you are rich, which means you are in the upper half of the income distribution—and they design that as roughly making somewhere around $50,000—you don’t deserve a tax cut. In their proposal, don’t get me wrong, I don’t get one. I want to remind my colleagues that by excluding people who pay 99 percent of the income taxes in America, they are excluding from a tax cut 62 percent of all homeowners, 66 percent of all Americans between the ages of 45 and 64, 67 percent of all families who have children in their homes, 67 percent of all full-time workers, 68 percent of all Americans who have some college education, 69 percent of all married couples, and 80 percent of all two-wage earner families in America. Our Democratic colleagues love investment, but they hate investors. They love the benefits of capitalism, but they hate capitalists. An across-the-board tax cut gives everybody a tax cut, and if people pay a lot of taxes, they get a bigger tax cut—not proportionately, but they get the same tax cut. If that offends you, if you believe that somehow people who make over $50,000 are the enemies of the people and they ought to continue to be punished, you would want to be against this provision.

The next thing this provision does is eliminate the marriage penalty. Most Americans are not aware of that because our Tax Code is so perverted, if two young people, both of whom work, fall in love and get married, they, on average, pay the Federal Government $1,100 a year in taxes for the right to be married. My wife is worth $1,400, but the point is, she ought to get the money, not the Government. We eliminate the marriage penalty.

Secondly, we have income splitting. Now, I know some of our Democratic colleagues are going to get up and say, well, look, if that is the case, then all the money and the wife stays at home and raises the children, they ought not to get the correction for the marriage penalty. Well, we do income splitting. We have decided we don’t want to infect the Tax Code in the decision about whether people work outside the home or not. My mama worked every day that I was a child, and she did it because she had to do it. My wife has worked every day that our children have been alive because she wanted to do it. I am not trying to distort the decision one way or another, or make a judgment. All I am saying is that people who stay at home and raise their children contribute to America. They make a huge contribution to America, so we ought to give it back to them proportionately, but they get the same tax cut, and if people pay a lot of taxes, they hate capitalists. An across-the-board tax cut, will get 10 times as big a tax cut. Now, our Democratic colleagues are going to get up and say, no matter who you are, if you are married, you get the same tax cut. Now, I know some of our Democrat colleagues are going to get up and say, well, look, if the husband earns all the money and the wife stays at home and raises the children, they ought not to get the correction for the marriage penalty. Well, we do income splitting. We have decided we don’t want to infect the Tax Code in the decision about whether people work outside the home or not. My mama worked every day that I was a child, and she did it because she had to do it. My wife has worked every day that our children have been alive because she wanted to do it. I am not trying to distort the decision one way or another, or make a judgment. All I am saying is that people who stay at home and raise their children contribute to America. They make a huge contribution to America, so we ought to give it back to them proportionately, but they get the same tax cut, and if people pay a lot of taxes, they hate capitalists. An across-the-board tax cut, will get 10 times as big a tax cut. Now, our Democratic colleagues are going to get up and say, well, these are rich people. But I want to give you an example. When I first met a printer from Mexia named Dicky Flatt, I met him about 25 years ago. He was in business with his daddy, who worked on these old calculator machines that businesses use. His mama kept all the books, his wife basically was working in their stationery shop, and Dicky Flatt did the printing business. They had an old building in Mexia, and it was cracking right down the middle. They kept putting sawdust in the bottom and kept tar-papering over the top. They had one bathroom, and it didn’t have a door on it; it had a curtain on it. So when you went in to use the bathroom, you pulled the curtain.

Now, they worked hard in that business. So now Dicky Flatt has torn down that building. He has built a Morton building, a metal building, and he has a good size print shop and stationery shop. He sent his two sons to Mexia, and it was cracking right down the middle. They kept putting sawdust in the bottom and kept tar-papering over the top. They had one bathroom, and it didn’t have a door on it; it had a curtain on it. So when you went in to use the bathroom, you pulled the curtain. Now, Dicky Flatt may be rich, for all I know. He doesn’t live like a rich guy. When his brother died of cancer, he took over his school supply business with his wife. His basic point is that Dicky Flatt and Linda, his wife, have worked 6 days a week their whole lives. They built up this business. Every penny they put into it has been in after-tax dollars. How can it be right to force their two boys, who now work in that business, to sell that business when Dicky and his wife Linda die in order to give the Government 55 percent of it, in order to take the money from Dicky Flatt and give it to people who have been sitting on their fannies in Mexia, not working on Saturday, and in some cases, not working at all? I am sure we are going to hear that this is for rich people. I want to put a human face on it.

When we revolted against King George, he wasn’t doing things such as the death tax. This is an outrage. This is an assault on every value this country stands for, and I want to repeal it and repeal it outright.

I want to index the capital gains tax. That is the fourth provision of this bill.

I want to say that from this day forward, if you buy a house as an investment and the price doubles and you sell the house for twice as much as you paid for it, you haven’t made any money, you simply kept up with inflation. But under current tax law, you have to pay the Federal Government a capital gains tax on the doubling of your house’s price even though that is the same price that you could have bought with the money for which you bought the house. So the next thing we do is index the capital gains tax for inflation.

Finally, we eliminate not the last outrage in the Tax Code but it is a big outrage. If General Motors buys you health insurance, it is tax deductible for them, but if you buy it for yourself, it is not tax deductible. We eliminate that by saying that no matter who buys health insurance in America, the employer or the employee, a rich person or a worker, a homemaker or someone who is employed in the economy, that health insurance is tax deductible. It is a simple tax cut that you can put on one piece of paper. If you pay taxes, you are going to get a 10-percent reduction in income taxes out of this bill. It is easy to figure. If you pay $1,000 in income taxes, you are going to get $100. If you pay $10,000, you are going to get $1,000. If that breaks your budget, so be it. I think most people will like it.

Second, we eliminate the marriage penalty and we allow income splitting. If you have one parent who stays at home, you are able to divide the income in half and have each of them claim that income that belongs to them. This is endorsed by every family group in America because it is the right thing to do.

We repeal the death tax outright over a 10-year period—no ifs, ands, or buts. If you live more years, under this bill, and you build something with after-tax dollars, it belongs to your family forever.

That is simple arithmetic. I think we can all understand it.

We index the capital gains tax so that you never pay capital gains tax again on inflation. This is a big issue for every homeowner and for every investor in America.

Finally, we provide full deductibility of health insurance. This is an equity issue. It is something that ought to be done.

This is a tax cut you can understand. It represents what I believe is the vision of the party of which I am proud to be a part. I hope my colleagues will vote for this substitute. I believe it represents a dramatic improvement and simplification in the Tax Code.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALARD). Who yields time?

The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from California and 10 minutes to the Senator from Wisconsin, off the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware controls the time in opposition.

Mr. BAUCUS. The Senator from Delaware delegated that to the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thanks the Senator for that clarification.

The Senator from California is recognized.

Mrs. BOXER. Thank you, Mr. President. I thank Senator BAUCUS.

My colleague from Texas says the Democrats hate investors and the Democrats hate capitalism. As a former stockbroker, I deeply resent his remarks. Maybe when the Senator from Texas was a Democrat he hated capitalism and he hated investors, but the Democrats around here don’t. One of the reasons we are not supporting his amendment is that we think it is bad for capitalism and we think it is bad for investors.

I have to say that this amendment, which reflects what the House did, is a risky and radical amendment. It hurts the middle class. He says he loves the middle class. He talks about his momma and Dicky Flatt. And I love to hear him do it. But the bottom line is, the result of his amendment will hurt the very people he says he wants to help because it is such an unfair tax cut that would go to the very wealthiest and hurt the middle class and the working poor.

I say to my friends who may be listening to this debate, the Senator from Texas is a great debater but he was wrong when he said the Clinton plan would lead to economic disaster and he is wrong today. I hope we will vote down his amendment.

I yield my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Montana.

Mr. President, I rise to offer some comments on the reconciliation tax measure we are considering.

First, let me note that we have come a long way in the last seven years.

When I first came to the Senate, we were facing an actual budget deficit of $340 million.

That was the real figure—the figure that did not use the Social Security Trust Fund balances to mask the deficit.

Thanks in large part to the President’s deficit reduction package in 1993, and to a lesser extent the bipartisan budget cuts of 1997, we are approaching a truly balanced budget.

I emphasize “approaching.” Mr. President, for we are not there yet.

The budget projections of the Office of Management and Budget, and of the Congressional Budget Office, are just that—projections.

We do not currently have a budget surplus, not without including the Social Security Trust Fund balances.

Mr. President, I do not mean to minimize the wonderful budget turnaround that has been achieved.

But we should not be building massive new commitments on a shaky foundation of questionable budget assumptions.

And that is just what we have.

The assumptions underlying the tax measure we will debate depend on Congress making cuts of $775 billion in real spending over the next ten years compared to current levels.

Let me note that this level of cuts does not include any additional cuts that might have to be made in order to offset the cost of unanticipated emergencies.

Let me repeat that, Mr. President.

The $775 billion in real spending cuts over the next ten years does not include the spending we do to help the victims of hurricanes, earthquakes, tornados, floods, or any kind of international emergency.

But, for the moment, let us suppose that somehow, even under all of these assumptions, would this tax proposal be a sound one? The answer is no, because even if each and every one of those rosy scenarios comes true, this bill would use over $75 billion in Social Security balances to pay for tax breaks.

Mr. President, I strongly oppose using Social Security to fund tax cuts; that is why I voted against the 1997 tax cut package.

We simply should not be using Social Security balances—balances needed to pay future benefits—to fund other government programs, or to pay for tax cuts.

Of course, some may argue that even more spending cuts will be found in order to avoid the use of Social Security balances—on the top of the three-quarters of a trillion dollars in spending cuts.

And let us further assume, as we did earlier, that there will be no hurricanes, or floods, or earthquakes, or drought, or any other kind of natural disaster for the next ten years.

And that there will be no more Bosnia or Kosovo or Iraqs—no international emergencies of any kind for the next ten years.

Even under all of these assumptions, would this tax proposal be a sound one? The answer is no, because even if each and every one of those rosy scenarios comes true, this bill would use over $75 billion in Social Security balances to pay for tax breaks.

Mr. President, granting even this still rosier scenario, would this tax measure be fiscally responsible?

I regret that it would not, because not only does this tax bill risk our current budget, it puts future generations at risk as well.

Mr. President, while the revenue impact of any tax cut measure can be expected to grow over time, the policies outlined in this measure explode.

Consider that while in the next ten years, the cost of this proposal is an already whopping $300 billion—if those...
tax policies are continued, the cost in the second ten years will be a nearly unbelievable $2 trillion.

If you add the additional interest payments that will arise from debt service, the total cost of the tax policies in this bill rise to over $3 trillion.

For those who may have forgotten, let me tell my colleagues that it is in that second ten years when the baby boomer generation begins to retire and put increased pressure on Social Security, Medicare, and the long-term care services provided under Medicaid.

If ever there were a time to be prudent, now is the time.

As improved as the short-term budget picture is, the longer-term budget picture is little changed.

We still face serious problems in Medicare, and as I noted, the baby boomer generation will put enormous pressure on that program, as well as on the long-term care services, many of which are provided through Medicaid.

There is also a consensus that we should address the long-term fiscal health of Social Security, and the sooner the better.

And finally, Mr. President, we still face a mountain of debt that was run up during the 1980s and early 1990s because of the deficits that were run up during that time.

In each of these areas, there is a stark choice: we can act now to address each of these areas; or, we can ignore them, watch the problems get much worse, and leave the work and cost of reform to our children and grandchildren.

Mr. President, for me, that's an easy choice.

I do not want my children footing the bill for the failure of past generations to act responsible.

I want to support a tax cut, but not one that jeopardizes the work we have done to straighten out the current budget and squander the opportunity to reduce our debt and put Social Security, Medicare, and our long-term care system on sound footing.

Mr. President, let me take a moment to look at the make-up of the tax measure itself.

One might expect that a tax cut of $800 billion would provide the sort of broad-based tax benefits that would be politically attractive.

But given the amount of revenue dedicated to this tax cut, the benefits to the average taxpayer are surprisingly small, and the overall package is heavily skewed to some of the wealthiest individuals and corporations in the world.

As was noted by the tax watchdog group Citizens for Tax Justice, the tax bill gives three-quarters of its benefits to the best-off fifth of all taxpayers.

By contrast, only 11 percent of the tax bill benefits go to the bottom 60 percent of all taxpayers.

While the average tax reduction for the wealthiest 1 percent of taxpayers—those with incomes over $300,000—is over $23,000 a year under this bill, those with an average income do not do quite as well.

The average tax cut for those who are among the middle fifth of taxpayers will be $279, or about $5 per week.

For those in the bottom three-fifths of all taxpayers, the average tax cut is even smaller—about $140 per year, or less than $3 per week.

Mr. President, under this $800 billion tax bill, the majority of taxpayers will have an average tax cut of $8 per week.

Maybe the proponents of this bill are hoping most of America will use this windfall to buy one of those overpriced cups of coffee.

Well, Mr. President, thanks to this tax bill, once a week, three-fifths of America will now be able to go to one of those fancy coffee shops and get a frothy decaf cappuccino latte with skim milk.

This tax bill is a bad tax policy any way you brew it.

Mr. President, I recognize that some may genuinely believe we should dedicate about $800 billion to tax cuts over the next ten years.

The tragedy is that even in that context, the $800 billion was spent unwise, because in addition to Social Security, Medicare, long-term care, and reducing our national debt, one of our highest priorities should be significant reform of our tax code.

It was just a few months ago that we heard how critical fundamental tax reform was to our future.

Flat tax, consumption tax, a national value-added tax—there were a number of significant proposals that sought to address the inefficiency of our current Tax Code.

Simplification was the order of the day, and let me add, Mr. President, that while I did not support many of those proposals, I think many of the proponents of reform got it exactly right.

Our Tax Code should be simplified.

We should reduce the number of special interest tax breaks and use that savings to lower the tax rates for everyone.

I participated in just that kind of exercise at the State level as chair of the Taxation Committee in the Wisconsin State Senate.

As we all know, there will be winners and losers in a reform of our tax code, and I can tell you from direct experience that the best time to enact tax reforms is when you have additional resources to help increase the number of winners and decrease the number of losers.

Mr. President, this tax bill and the House version both squandered that opportunity as well.

We might have had a significant start on real tax reform.

Instead, we got a grab bag of goodies for special interests added to a tax code already thick with complexity.

A recent article in the Washington Post listed a number of the special interest tax breaks in this bill and the House version.

They include tax breaks for: multinational corporations, utility companies, railroad, oil and gas operators, timber companies, the steel industry, seaplane owners in Alaska, sawmills in Maine, barge lines in Mississippi, Eskimo whaling captains, and Carolina woodlot owners.

This bill is a dream come true for business lobbyists.

The Post reported one lobbyist as saying, “If you’re a business lobbyist and couldn’t get into this legislation, you better turn in your six-shooter.”

Mr. President, in the name of complete disclosure, let me note that I understand the Democratic alternative, which I may support, suffers from the same problem, though to a much lesser extent.

And it will come as no surprise to my colleagues that I firmly believe this kind of pandering to special interests is a direct result of our campaign finance system.

There’s ample evidence to that effect right here in this bill.

The campaign finance system gives wealthy interest an open invitation to influence legislation in this body, and in this bill it’s clear that special interests accepted that invitation in droves, Mr. President.

For the benefit of my colleagues and the public, I’d like to share just a few examples of what these interests gave in PAC and soft money, and what they got in either this bill, the House tax measure, or both.

I do this from time to time; it is known as “The Calling of the Bankroll.”

According to the Washington Post, an umbrella organization called the Coalition of Service Industries, a coalition of banks and securities firms, won a provision to extend for five years a temporary tax deferral on income those industries earn abroad. The value of this tax deferral: $5 billion over ten years.

So we know what Congress has given the Coalition of Service Industries, but what has the Coalition of Service Industries given to candidates and the political parties? During the 1997-1998 election cycle, coalition members gave the following:

Ernst & Young—more than half a million dollars in soft money, and nearly $900,000 in PAC money.

CIGNA Corporation—more than $335,000 in soft money, and more than $210,000 in PAC money.

Ameriprise Financial—more than $275,000 in soft money and nearly $175,000 in PAC money.

Deloitte and Touche—more than $255,000 in soft money and more than $75,000 in PAC money.

Of course, as I said Mr. President, this is just a sampling of what Coalition of Service Industries members have given. I’d be up here a lot longer if I had a document all the millions of dollars these groups have given.

But it doesn’t stop there. These two tax bills mean Christmas in July for special interests, Mr. President, with gifts for just about every industry in Santa’s bag.

The post reports the utility industry got a provision affecting utility mergers in the House measure, which, if it survives, is worth more than $1 billion to the utility industry. The provision would excuse the payment of taxes on the fund that utilities set up to cover the costs of shutting down nuclear power plants.

Utilities companies that operate nuclear power plants would be particularly grateful to see this provision passed, Mr. President.

The term of their gratitude would be matched only by the size of their campaign contributions during the last election cycle, including:

Entergy Corporation, which gave $228,000 in soft money and nearly $250,000 in PAC money;

Commonwealth Edison, which gave $110,000 in soft money and more than $106,000 in PAC money;

And Florida Power and Light, which gave nearly $300,000 in soft money and more than $182,000 in PAC money.

As it does so many other issues, our campaign finance system is preventing real reform to our tax code, and those who doubt that only need to look at this bill.

Mr. President, the best thing we can say about this tax bill is that it will not be enacted into law.

The President will almost surely veto it, and he will be right in doing so.

This bill is fiscally irresponsible. It depends on budget suppositions that are at best fanciful. It uses Social Security balances to pay for tax cuts. It proposes a tax policy that no one could justify our current budget but our future fiscal health.

It sticks our children and grand-children with the cost of paying-off the debt run up over the past two decades, and leaves them the task of extending the solvency of Social Security, strengthening Medicare, and reforming our long-term care system.

And it hands our special interest tax breaks galore while providing little tax relief to the vast majority of taxpayers.

Mr. President, I will vote against this bill, and urge my colleagues to do so as well.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to my good friend from Delaware, Senator Roth.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, Senator GRAMM has provided Members with a straightforward alternative to the bipartisan Finance Committee bill. I compliment him on the clarity of his approach, much of which I favor. Although provisions of Senator GRAMM’s substitute have appeal for me, frankly, I could not have found a basis for the Finance Committee. His proposal contains elements that would not garner a majority of committee members.

In addition, Senator GRAMM’s substitute, though popular with many in the Senate Republican caucus, would not pick up support on the other side of the aisle. For that reason, his proposal would not be a blueprint for tax cuts, in the form of a signable bill, that we can deliver to the American people now.

Finally, although Senator GRAMM’s amendment is simpler, it leaves out many bipartisan tax measures that address important tax issues. For instance, education savings incentives are vital this year. The parents who want to save for a child’s college education would be left out of the picture. We’re talking about millions of parents and students in every state.

Yet another example is the student loan interest deduction. Under the Finance Committee bill, at least three million graduates, bearing the burden of college debt, would be allowed to deduct student loan interest on their tax returns.

In my legislation I try to focus on matters of need to the American family. I provide incentives to promote savings, pensions, IRAs. Many in retirement depend not only on Social Security, which we will address, but also on personal savings and pensions. My bill addresses that. There is nothing to correct the problems of AMT, the alternative minimum tax. Unfortunately, thousands upon thousands of American families will be hit by AMT and not enjoy the full benefit of many programs such as the child tax credit.

Finally, nothing is done with respect to charitable giving. We have proposals that will promote and create incentives.

For these and other reasons, I must oppose Senator GRAMM’s well-intentioned amendment.

I reserve the remainder of my time. Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I might consume. The Finance Committee has already rejected this amendment. The Finance Committee deliberated this amendment in committee, and, by a large margin turned it down because it is excessive. It is irresponsible, in my judgment. It is not the right thing to do. It says we are going to take the entire on-budget surplus. And because of the tax cut plus the lost interest on the debt, there is nothing left for Medicare, discretionary spending or any other programs which will be cut anyway by a very large margin.

It is excessive, too, compared to the bill passed by the committee because it is so backloaded. It is so top heavy. By that, I mean the bulk of the cost of the provisions are at the very end—6, 7, or 8 years from now. No one can predict the future of this country and what position we will be in 6 to 8 years from now.

I was speaking to the CEO of a major American company a few days ago, a man we all know, a company we all know very well. He told me they can’t begin to plan for the future. They do have 5-year plans but they know the 5-year plans are not going to be accurate. So they have to just do the best they can on virtually a quarterly basis. They have to go ahead in the areas they think are the areas of the future, but it is almost impossible to plan in this modern era.

So I say, if we today were to lock in provisions in the law which will hemorrhage this country’s budget surplus what the proponents said would come true at all.

I think prudence is the watchword here today. History sometimes is a guide. Look at the 1980s. What happened in the 1980s? There was a huge tax cut. Congress succumbed to the siren song of supply side economics. What was supply side economics supposed to do? It was supposed to make deep tax cuts, spend more on defense, and guess what, folks, that is going to cause the budget to be balanced. That was what supply side economics was supposed to do—advocated by the proponents of this amendment. It was going to balance the budget.

The theory is the trickle down theory: Cut the taxes of the most wealthy, they invest a lot more, it trickles down and the economy starts humming and it balances the budget. That was the Laffer curve. Guess what, it did not work. We kind of knew it was not going to work, but it was such a temptation, such a siren song to vote these huge tax cuts, hoping, hoping, hoping that what the proponents said would come true. Guess what, it did not. It did not come true at all.

The tax cut was passed in 1981. Then what happened in 1982? This Congress, a Republican Congress, and President Reagan, had to change course. They had to raise taxes. The Republican Congress and Republican President raised taxes in 1982. Then guess what. This tax increase was not enough because the deficits were just too large. The Republican Congress and Republican President had to raise taxes again in 1984. They had to raise taxes more because the deficit was so large. The national debt in 1980 was roughly about...
Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Texas.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I think Senator GRAMM is bringing a very important principle to the table, one that we need to address: If we are going to have a tax cut, what kind of tax cut should we have? What is best for the economy, and what is fair? There was a consensus in this country, 10, 15 years ago, that we needed to have a tax policy based upon a broader base and lower rates. That is essentially the tax bill that came out in 1986. We came down to two tax rates. We had a 15-percent and a 28-percent tax rate. There was a broader base, where more people were paying taxes, but lower rates.

In the 1990s, we have gotten away from that. We have gotten away from that progressive tax system, instead, toward what has been referred to as targeted tax cuts. That its basically the Government—we, the President—that decide, on an individual basis, who deserves the tax break or tax cut in any particular year. Usually it is based upon how much clout they have in Congress, or some notions of fairness of a particular congressional makeup at some particular time. So now we have wound up with higher rates and a narrower base. We now have five income tax rates instead of the two we had in 1986 in addition to phaseouts. The Tax Code, not only do we have additional rates, it has become more progressive, even in addition to those rates. I do not think a lot of people are aware of this. I think most Americans think initially, basically, they can look at tax rates and see what their tax burden is. But then you look at all the phaseouts that we have. Congress has decided in its wisdom that people of a certain income level do not deserve some of the deductions, exemptions, and benefits that others deserve. So we have a personal exemption phaseout.

We have an itemized deduction phaseout at basically the $124,000 level for individuals. I am talking about individuals and not couples, in terms of the dollar amounts I am using. The personal exemption phaseout; itemized deduction phaseout; limitation on being able to deduct that amount over 2 percent of itemized deductions; a 7.5 percent floor on medical deductions; a 10 percent adjusted gross income floor on casualty deductions; a $500 child credit that phases out at an income level of $75,000; a dependent child credit that begins to be phased out at an income level of $10,000; if you make that much it begins to be phased out; a deductible IRA, $30,000; an education IRA, $10,000; the student loan interest credit begins to be phased out at $40,000 for an individual. So we want to help you go to college, we want to help your kids go to college—as long as you do not have a job, basically that is what that amounts to.

We have a life-time learning credit of $40,000; student loan interest deductions, at $40,000 it begins to be phased out; education savings bond interest—if you make $32,000 you begin to lose that; elderly/disabled credit, $7,500; adoption credit/exclusion, $75,000; DC first time homebuyer—if you make $75,000, you begin to have that phased out as a taxpaying individual; rental real estate losses; rehabilitation tax credit—on and on and on.

In addition to continuing to raise the tax rate—the highest one in 1986 was 28 percent and now it is up to 39.6 percent. It produces rates in any appreciable amount, limited potential deductions, phaseout of personal exemptions, you wind up with an effective rate of over 40 percent. When you remove the cap on Medicare tax, plus these phaseouts, you are looking at, in some cases, close to an effective 45-percent tax rate, something like that.

My only point is that, as we decide how to go forward, we need to understand that we have a progressive system as far as our income Tax Code is concerned, and that is the way it ought to be. A lot of people believe it is that way. But every time we have a tax cut, we cannot say let’s give everybody the same dollar amount back in taxes regardless of how much they paid in because we have a very progressive system.

We have progressive tax rates up to 39.6 percent, with phaseouts so that if you are making any money, if people are working hard and making a pretty good living, they begin to lose the deductions and credits. That makes it even more progressive.

We come along and say we are going to give a tax cut now, and we say if the other guy is paying twice as much in taxes, I am, give him a tax cut. He lost all these exemptions because he is making good money. He is paying twice as much in taxes. But we come along with a tax cut and we say they are going to both get the same amount back. I do not think that makes much sense.

Let’s say the economy was good and we were able to have successive tax cuts over a period of time and we gave the same dollar amount back to everybody regardless of how much they were paying in taxes. We would have a narrower and narrower base all the time and fewer and fewer people paying any taxes at all. We would continually be taking people off the tax rolls. We already have 43 million people who do not pay taxes.

As progressive as our Tax Code is, as does the Senator from Texas, I make no apologies for the proposition that when it comes time for a tax cut, let’s base the tax cut on how much people are paying in.

We have to ask ourselves a fundamental question: Are we interested in punishing folks who are working hard? Are we interested in collecting money for the Federal Government to pay legitimate Government expenses? History shows every time we have had a reduction in tax rates, we have more money. Every time the Government reduces rates in any appreciable amount, the Government winds up getting more money.

In the 1920s, it was true. In the 1960s, under President Kennedy, who said a rising tide lifts all boats, it was true. In the much maligned 1980s, which laid the groundwork for the greatest economic prosperity this world has ever known, it was true. Increased revenues in the twenties was 61 percent over a 7-year period. In the sixties, a revenue increase after inflation was about 33 percent. In the eighties, after cutting the tax rates, revenues increased 28 percent because it reduced the incentive to hide income, to shelter income, and to underreport income.

Similarly, the share of the tax burden paid by the rich rose dramatically as the rates fell. By cutting rates, we get more money out of the rich.

Do you want to be concerned about how much somebody is making and try to hold that down or do we want the money for the Federal Government? I thought the idea was to have a fair Tax Code but to raise the money for the legitimate expenses of the Federal Government.

In the 1920s, they called rich $50,000. I guess things have not changed that much. But in 1921, the rich paid 44 percent of the income tax. In 1928, after the rate cut, they paid 78 percent of all taxes. The gap was not quite as pronounced later on, but in 1963 under President Kennedy, at the time of the cut, the rich were paying 11.6 percent of all the taxes being paid. In 1966, they were paying 15.1 percent. In the 1980s, we were talking about the top 10 percent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s time has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask for another 3 minutes.

Mr. GRAMM. I yield the Senator another 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. In the 1980s—1981—the rich were paying 48 percent of the taxes. In 1988, they wound up paying 57 percent of the taxes. We do not get a lot of credit taking up for the rich, but our responsibility as public servants is to look out for the country and have policies that are going to get the most money and not try to be too concerned about who is going to get this share of the economic pie: I am going to get yours; you are not going to get mine. Our concern should be with making that economic pie better.

As far as an across-the-board cut is concerned, every serious observer nowadays thinks it is sound economic policy. Lawrence Lindsey, former Federal Reserve Board member, George Shultz, former Secretary of State, and even the oft quoted Chairman Greenspan—there may be some discussion as to when he thinks a tax cut should come about, but he says when it comes about, it ought to be an across-the-board rate reduction. This is sound economic policy.

I know the prospects for this particular amendment, but all of this business about soak the rich and unfairness, we need to keep a little balance and keep things in mind. If we want more money, if we want to be fair, first of all, we have to recognize we have a very progressive system in this country, so when it comes time for a tax cut, let’s pay some attention to the idea of across the board and not have politicians deciding the detailed targeted tax cuts for their favorite people but make it across the board. It is more fair, and it will get more money for the Federal Treasury. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may take off the bill.

Mr. President, a number of my colleagues have attacked the Reagan tax cut. With that I strongly disagree. I have no argument with those who want to bring up history in their attempt to argue against the need for this tax relief package. But I do have an argument when they attempt to change facts and debunk what was—and continues to be—a tremendous economic legacy.

First, let me make it clear that cutting taxes to keep the economy strong did not begin with President Reagan—nor is the idea isolated to one political party or the other.

In the 1960s, President Kennedy ushered America into economic expansion with his own historic tax cuts.

In fact, in recalling our history it might help us to remember President Kennedy’s speech to the Economic club of New York in December 1962. On that occasion, he said:

Our true choice is not between tax reduction, on the one hand, and the avoidance of large federal deficits on the other. It is increasingly clear that...an economy hampered by restrictive tax rates will never produce enough revenues to balance our budget just as it will never produce enough jobs or enough profits.

Second, the facts concerning President Reagan’s economic record are very clear: everyone benefited from the broad based 25 percent across-the-board tax cuts signed into law by President Reagan. The facts show that all income groups saw their incomes rise during the period of 1980 to 1989. The facts show that during that period, the mean average of real income rose by 15.2 percent, compared to a 0.8 percent decline from 1970 to 1980.

And what of record-setting deficits? Did cutting taxes 25 percent across the board deplete the Treasury revenues? Absolutely not. Again, the records, the facts show that Federal revenues actually increased some taxes for a few people in this country, cut some taxes for others, cut some spending, and put this country back on track with an economic plan that resulted in where we are today.

In 1993 I voted for that package. We did not get one vote from the other side of the aisle—not one. It passed by one vote in the House, one vote in the Senate. We did not get one vote to help us from the other side of the aisle.

And what of record-setting deficits? The Federal deficit then was $290 billion and growing. We had nearly 10 million Americans out of work, looking for a job. The Dow Jones Industrial Average just barely reached 3,000. Inflation was double what it was last year. There were 97,000 business failures. Then we passed a piece of legislation that put this country back on track—over the objections, I might add, of the folks who bring—

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DORGAN. Of course I remember that statement. Do you remember this one?

Mr. REID. Do you remember this one?

Mr. DORGAN. That is correct.

Mr. REID. Do the Senator from North Dakota—this is a question—indicated that the Democrats did not receive a single Republican vote in the 1993 budget; is that true?

Mr. DORGAN. That is correct.

Do you remember that statement?

Mr. DORGAN. Of course I remember that. There were predictions of doom, saying, if you pass this, you are going to throw this country into a tailspin. This is a country that had a $290 billion deficit, anemic economy, with 10 million people out of work. This is a country that desperately needed a change in direction. We made it without the help of one vote from the other side.

Frankly, I thought a couple of the folks you referenced were going to do a half-gainer off the Capitol Dome, they were so upset about us changing the fiscal policy of this country. But we did it.

Guess what happened. Guess what happened. This country’s economy has seen robust economic growth. Seven years later, we do not have a budget deficit. No, we do not have a $290 billion, and growing, budget deficit. We have a budget that is nearly in balance. Economists are predicting surpluses for the next 10 years—I might point out, the same economists who predicted in the early 1990s we would have a full decade of sluggish, anemic growth in this country.

I mentioned yesterday these are the same economists who can’t remember their home phone number or address telling us what will happen 3, 5, and 10 years from now. We ought to be careful about these predictions. We do not have a budget surplus yet. The 10 years of estimated $3 trillion surpluses do not exist, and we have folks on the floor who are breathless to try to deal with them through tax cuts.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. DORGAN. I am happy to.

Mr. REID. I ask my friend from South Carolina, who is managing this bill, to tell whatever time I use asking these questions be yielded off the bill so the Senator does not lose his time.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Yes.

Mr. REID. I say to my friend, the statement I read to the Senator just a short time ago was given August 5 by the author of this amendment that we are now debating. A day later, on August 6, do you remember this statement? I quote:

I believe that this program is going to make the economy weaker. I believe that hundreds of thousands of people are going to lose their jobs as a result of this program. I believe that Bill Clinton is one of those people.

The fact is, does the Senator from North Dakota realize that there have been 18 million jobs created in those 7 years? Hundreds of thousands losing their jobs?

Do you remember this statement, don’t you?

Mr. DORGAN. Oh, I do. In fact, the same people who made those predictions that were so wrong are now telling us they have new predictions and we should believe the new predictions.

Mr. REID. I say to my friend, do you also understand that since this statement was made we had the lowest inflation, the lowest unemployment, in some 40 years? Does the Senator acknowledge that fact that the deficits, when these predictions were made, which were about $300 billion a year, are now down to nothing? Does the Senator realize that?

Mr. DORGAN. The economy has performed by every one expected. But we knew that the direction this country was headed in was wrong—$290 billion in a year in deficits, and heading up; more inflation, more people out of work. And we proposed to change the fiscal program for this country.

It took some guts to vote for it because it was not very popular. But I said to the folks I represent: Don’t blame me for voting for that. Give me credit for it because I stand behind this proposal. We were not going to put an end to these Federal budget deficits and to put this country’s economy back on track—over the objections of a lot of folks in this Chamber who today are telling us they have a new vision, a new idea.

We have heard their ideas. An old fellow in my hometown—a small town—once told me: Never buy something from somebody who is out of breath. There has been an almost breathless quality to the efforts by the majority party, for 6 months, to get to the floor as quickly as they could with their tax cuts.

If this is a battle of the pie charts, I say you win, we just give up. Here is a pie chart. Let me just show you. Let us just right at the start of this discussion say: You win; this is your pie; if it is a battle of the pie charts, you get the pie award. Republican tax breaks: $23,344 for the top 1 percent of the income earners. So you win the pie award.

Of course, you know here, they pay taxes, too. They all go to work. They pay payroll taxes. Eighty percent of the people in this country pay more in payroll taxes than income taxes.

But you breathlessly run to the floor of the Senate with a bill that says let’s cut income taxes, because that allows you to give a huge portion of this pie to the largest income earners in this country. In the meantime, there are folks working today for the minimum wage, $5, $6, $7 an hour, who pay a payroll tax, a big tax, pay more in payroll taxes than they do in income taxes. Are they going to get a tax cut? No; they don’t count because they “don’t pay taxes.” They are not taxpayers according to this strategy and this kind of philosophy. That is what is wrong with it.

Let me just run through a couple charts.

That if my colleagues showed this earlier this morning, I want to show it again.

The bottom 60 percent of the income earners, under this plan, will get $141 in tax breaks a year; the top 1 percent, $23,344 a year. And people say: How dare we? It happens because it is the fact. It happened because it is the fact. It happened because it is the fact.

As I said, so much of politics is fuzzy. But you do not need strong glasses to see this chart. There is nothing fuzzy about this. If you decide you do not want to do this, then do not do it. It is easy to amend your bill. If it is not your intention to give the bulk of the tax cut to the wealthiest Americans, then do not do it. But do not complain to us that we are calling attention to it when you do it. If you do not stand behind it, then change it.

My problem is this: I don’t understand what conservatism means anymore. I thought being conservative would be to try to put this country at a lower risk with respect to future opportunities and its future economy. Conservatism apparently means put the country at higher risk. If you see a glimmer of a prospect of an estimate by an economist that there might be a surplus, rush to the floor of the Senate and propose a three-quarters-of-a-trillion-dollar tax cut. Is that conservative?

It was a perfect symmetrical proposition that, on the floor of the Senate yesterday, the first vote was to waive points of order that would exist against their bill, waive points of order for a conference report that has not yet been written, for a conference that has not been held. That was, in my judgment, in perfect symmetry to the proposition they bring to the floor to provide tax cuts, paid for with surpluses that don’t yet exist. What perfect symmetry. But how perfectly awful as public policy to do that and put the country at this risk.

We have some choices. The choice is that we have good economic times in the future. Let us all hope and pray we do because that is good for this country. More people are working. Fewer people are on welfare. The country is growing, less inflation. It is a wonderful opportunity we have in this country. But the same people who opposed the fiscal policy that got us here have decided they want to create a new fiscal policy and a new strategy that puts all of that at risk. They know we are heading toward a serious problem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. DORGAN. I ask for an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. HOLLINGS. An additional 5 minutes.

Mr. DORGAN. We are heading toward a demographic time bomb in both Social Security and Medicare. The question is, If these surpluses exist, what shall we do with them; reduce the Federal debt that has gone from $2.7 trillion to $5.7 trillion in two decades. Reduce the Federal debt? The answer of the Republicans is no. How about extending the solvency of Social Security because we know we face this problem. Older people living longer; fewer people working to support them. Extend the solvency of Social Security? No. How about extending the solvency of Medicare? No.

The only answer coming from that side of the aisle is take three-quarters of a trillion dollars, package it up, put a huge bow around it, and then bring it to the floor of the Senate, and then complain about a pie chart that shows they have cut out the biggest piece for the wealthiest Americans.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DORGAN. I will.

Mr. DURBIN. I suggested that the amendment being offered by the Senator from Texas, which as I understand it, is the House version of the tax cut, is even worse than the Senate version and when it comes to helping working families, and frankly, I think, gives the word “conservative” a bad name. I ask the Senator if he would consider the following:

In this Nation where we revere free speech, we basically let people say what they want to say. Some people have gone so far as to suggest that tomorrow will be the end of the world. Well, when tomorrow comes and goes and the world doesn’t end, most of those people shrink away.

The people who are offering this amendment, in 1993, said the Clinton plan for deficit reduction was the end of the economic world for America. We would see deficits as far as the eye could see. We would have unemployment, high inflation, the economy was in terrible shape. As a result, not a single Republican would vote for the Clinton plan.

I ask the Senator, did the world end, as Senator Gramm and others suggested, with this Clinton plan? The same group is suggesting to us today that Alan Greenspan is wrong, Bill Clinton is wrong again, and that we have to pass this tax break for wealthy people which will endanger our economy.

Mr. DORGAN. Well, the Senator knows the economy not only did not collapse and crash and go into a depression as a result of our new fiscal policy; the economy blossomed and grew and everything changed. The deficits were gone. The deficits were at $290 billion and growing. We changed the fiscal policy.

A number of our friends stood up and said: You do this and you are going to collapse this country’s economy. In fact, the fellow who has offered this amendment is an economist, taught economics. I taught economics in college. I have been able to overcome that and lead a reasonably productive life, but economists can argue forever about all these things.

The question is whether we are going to put the country at risk by moving away from a fiscal policy that we know works and taking three-quarters of a trillion dollars from surpluses that do exist and giving big tax breaks.

This amendment is the House tax bill. I want to read for the author something he probably heard me read yesterday.

Mr. GRAMM. Will the Senator yield to correct a factual error? First of all, there is nothing wrong with the House tax bill.

Mr. DORGAN. I will yield.

Mr. GRAMM. This amendment is substantially more focused than the House tax bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. DORGAN. I did yield, and he made his point. Reclaiming my time, my understanding was it was described as the House tax bill. If you have made a couple of grammatical changes to that, so be it. Let me make the case, candidly, in their bill.

Similarly, the Senate bill, Kevin Phillips, a Republican columnist, said the following:

We can fairly well call the House legislation the most outrageous tax package in the last 50 years. It is worse than the 1981 excesses. You have to go back to 1948.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s time has expired.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Two additional minutes.

Mr. DORGAN. The point I am making is this: This is not a Democrat talking. This is a Republican saying this. We all know what is in this legislation. This legislation is a piece of legislation that does what is always done by the same suspects that bring this to the floor. They are always shading, not just shading, they are galloping towards the highest end of the income ladder to provide very significant cuts. The folks on the lowest rung of the ladder, they pay payroll taxes and they are told they don’t count. So the lowest 20 percent are going to get a $22 tax break; the top 1 percent, $23,300.

So the question is, when you stand up and say that is unfair, what is unfair? That we are telling people what is in your bill? Is that unfair? Do you want to change the bill? Do you deny this? Do you want to change the bill? Offer an amendment. I will support the amendment to change the bill, but don’t say it is unfair when we tell people what the tax cut is going to be—$22 for the lowest 20 percent of the American people, and the $23,300 for the top 1 percent—because you have decided that people who pay payroll taxes don’t count as taxpayers and you don’t intend to give them any help. It is the folks at the upper end of the income ladder who are going to get huge tax breaks from the income tax system.

Mr. DURBIN. If the Senator will yield for a question, perhaps Bill Gates and Donald Trump need a tax break. Maybe the Senator from Texas believes that is a good reason to pass the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s 2 minutes have expired.

Mr. DURBIN. I ask that the Senator be given 3 additional minutes.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Three additional minutes.

Mr. DURBIN. I ask the Senator from North Dakota: Is it true or not true that in the last 2 weeks Alan Greenspan, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, has testified before Congress and in different Senate committees that this kind of tax proposal that is coming from the Republican side could jeopardize the economic expansion? Is it not true that it is within the power of the Federal Reserve Board, by their monetary policy, to raise interest rates if they see indications of inflation, and by raising these interests rates, put an additional economic burden on families who are paying for their mortgages, family farmers who are trying to stay in business, small businesses alike? Is it not true that if we see inflation come on the scene and interest rates go up, that a $22 tax break for working families will disappear in a heartbeat?

Mr. DORGAN. Well, that is the case. I submit this: In a quiet moment, in a secluded corner, in a private conversation, most Members of the Senate who are supporting this three-quarters-of-a-trillion-dollar tax cut would admit that a better approach for this country and its future and certainly its children would be to use anticipated surpluses, first, to begin to pay down the Federal debt. If during tough times you run up the debt from $1 trillion to $5.7 trillion and then in good times you say, but we can’t pay down the debt, there is something fundamentally flawed about that strategy.

I think if you take all the politics and fuzz out of this and get in a quiet corner, those who are really conservative and have conservative values about these issues as embodied in the fiscal plan we passed in 1993, I think they would admit that we ought to take some of this surplus and reduce Federal indebtedness. I think they would also admit there is not an intention to kick 100,000 kids off of Head Start or to decimate the education program. Yet that is where we are headed, on auto pilot, because this surplus is garnered by those who want to package it up in a tax cut that predominantly benefits the upper-income folks.

We ought to do the right thing. The right thing, it seems to me, for our children’s sake, is to tell them we are going to begin using some of this to reduce Federal indebtedness, and for our children’s sake, that we are going to use some of this to extend the solvency of Medicare and Social Security, two programs that have a country a much better place in which to live for millions and millions of Americans. We ought to do that. All of us know we ought to do it. Regrettably, we are on the floor in a perverted process. Reconciliation was never intended for this process at all.

Yet, we are here because it muzzles us up with a 20-hour debate and does not allow a full debate about fiscal policy and tax cuts. And I say to those on the other side, you will get your bill and have your votes and you will pass a bill. But, in my judgment, you will put this country at risk because you are spending, through tax cuts, surpluses that do not yet exist, just as yesterday you wanted to waive points of order on a conference report that had not yet been drafted.

I yield the floor.

they elected the first Republican majority since the 1950s.

When they took over, things changed. With the same old Bill Clinton who was here in 1995, when the deficit was $200 billion, what changed was the Republican majority.

I just say to the American people, give us a Republican President, and we will again control spending, and we will let working people have more of what they earn.

Mr. President, I yield Senator Hagel 5 minutes off the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. Hagel. Mr. President, thank you.

I first want to add my thanks to the chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator Roth, for the leadership he has brought that decision. So we are going to target a very substantive vehicle that we are using now to really make some decisions on behalf of the American public.

I have heard this morning that this is an issue about priorities. Surely it is. This is about priorities. This will further be about priorities as we debate this issue throughout the day, and actually throughout this year and into next year, because the priorities are about whose money it is. It is not my money. It is not Senator Gramm's money. It is taxpayers' money. It is the taxpayers' money. We tend to allow that to slip aside here when we are engaged in this theoretical debate.

Second, we all have to appreciate that we live in the mythical kingdom around here. The political kingdom says that all the clouds and all the goodness will reside here in the knowledge and wisdom coming forth from Washington. We are seeing a great dynamic of that given when we are trying to take the people's money and then tell them how we will spend it and give it back to them because we are benevolent Senators; we are benevolent representatives of the people; we can figure it out better.

If there is a sense of arrogance in this, I think you are right if you sense that, that the Congress is going to decide who gets what; we are going to make that decision. So we are going to target all of these pieces of the pie because we can decide better for the American people how they should spend their money, if we decide to give them back some of their money.

I have also heard some interesting conversations this morning about projections. As a matter of fact, I used to have a real job, and in that real job I was a businessman. I had to deal with projections because I had to put together budgets. Those budgets had to direct investment, capital, and what we were doing for the long term. Yes, they are imperfect.

Ten-year budgets are slippery, and they are dangerous. But the fact is, we must base a budget upon something. That budget must be based upon a relevant series of assumptions. So that is a given, and we have to deal with that.

After we get through that, then we have to make some tough decisions. That is what we are going through today. I believe this bill that we have brought to the floor this morning does that. I think it does it first in a very responsible way. It does it in a way that allows 75 cents of every surplus dollar to go back into debt reduction projects—Social Security, Medicare, important Government programs such as defense. The first real obligation of responsibility of the Federal Government is national security—veterans programs, education, medical research, in this money is the taxpayers' money. It is not President Clinton's money. It is not Senator Gramm's money. It is taxpayers' money. We tend to allow that to slip aside here when we are engaged in this theoretical debate.

That budget must be based upon something. We have to make tough decisions based upon what we know and what we project. This bill does it very responsibly. It does it in a way that addresses those needs of our Republic and what we have committed to the American public.

My goodness, to say that giving 25 percent of that back to the American public in a tax cut is somehow irresponsible is well beyond my calculations.

Senator Mck was on the floor yesterday. I want to repeat a couple of points he made. One, he said, for example, how can a $4 billion net tax cut for fiscal year 2000 overstimulate demands in a $1 trillion economy? Of course, of as of now, this bill phases in those tax cuts over a series of 10 years.

Senator Mck said yesterday, and as my colleague again reminded us, he asked rhetorically, "Would a $39 billion tax cut in the year 2002 overheat the economy when this is only .004 percent of the total projected GDP?"

I think you get the message.

We are engaged once again in this mythical kingdom of fantasy. The fact is, this money is the taxpayers' money. The fact is, this is a responsible direction of those resources that surely, if they are allowed to stay here in Washington, will be spent.

The President has given us ample opportunity to look over that very generous menu he has presented to us with all of his new spending.

Mr. President, I strongly support this amendment.

I yield my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. Moynihan. Mr. President, I think our distinguished friend and colleague, Senator Hollings, is next.
There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

Bob Edwards: The Republican party last week had its tax reduction proposal passed by the House of Representatives, commentator Kevin Phillips says it's the most unsound fiscal legislation of the last half century:

Kevin Phillips: Tax bills often deal with Pie in the Sky. The mind boggling ten-year cuts passed late last week by the House of Representatives however deserve a new term: Pie in the Stratosphere. That's because the cuts are predicated on federal budget surpluses so far out, six, eight or ten years, that it would take an astrologer, not an economist to predict federal revenues. The most publicized provision, phased in ten-percent across the board reductions in federal income tax rates looks excessive. But these at least stand to be delayed by a legislative trigger, if surpluses and debt-reduction don't occur as assumed. Not so for the truly venal, trigger, if surpluses and debt-reduction don't occur as assumed. Not so for the truly venal, second, the phasing out of the federal gift and inheritance taxes. Both changes would concentrate a huge portion of their benefits in the top 1%.

The top 1% of American tax payers reported about 60% of the taxable capital gains dollar values several years back. To reduce their capital gains rate from today's 20% to 15% is unnecessary in terms of investment stimulus. All of the bull markets of the last 50 years have occurred when the top cap gains rate is in the 20 to 28% range. The bills special interest provisions phasing out the Federal estate and gift taxes over the next decade could be even more costly. Demographers say life expectancies ending in the years 2000 to 2010 will send a tidal wave of estates through the inheritance processes. The top 1% of families have the great dollar bulk of what are now taxable estates and if these are not substantially taxed, wealth and position in America will be more and more inherited, not earned.

We can fairly call the House legislation the most outrageous tax package in the last 50 years. It's worse than the 1981 excesses, you have to go back to 1946, when the Republican Party in Congress sent a kindred bill to President Harry Truman. Truman vetoed it, calling the Republicans bloodsuckers, with of all things, a tax cut. How speak. I agree with Mr. Phillips. This is what the Republicans intend: "We can fairly call the House legislation the most outrageous tax package in the last 50 years."

That is why I come to the floor to speak. I agree with Mr. Phillips. This tax bill turns everything on its back side when we have a good going economy, and the Republicans come in with, of all things, a tax cut. How come? I will tell you. This is why I come to the floor to speak. It is the blooming 2000 election, and CBO has a Republican—not any Alice Rivlin or Bob Reischauer, but they have a Republican fix—Mr. Crippen over at CBO. I have been working on this budget since we passed it back in 1973.

Both CBO and OMB started finding money. How we could as a party put in tax cuts and have the real issue for the election 2000.

This is very interesting. You don't find the word “unified, unified, unified.” That is all I have heard for the last 20 years—unified. It is not a unified budget. It is an outright budget surplus. That is what the CBO called it. It is not a budget surplus at all. The fact is, and I will quote the figures, the debt goes up each year for the next 5 years.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record from the CBO report on page 19.

Up, up, and away. Deficits, not surpluses—deficits—the Congressional Budget Office says—as far as the eye can see.

The Republicans were going to take the $1.9 trillion of Social Security. We have to not get into Social Security. We have to find $1 trillion for the tax cut about which we have been talking. So they said we have another $1 trillion. How do we do it? They said—at least the Republicans, and I will limit my comment to that because that is what they have in this particular amendment—they said: Let's not just have current policy. Let's stick to the spending caps that we put in.

They violate the spending caps. They violated it again last year, $21 billion, and we are already up to $17 billion and it is going to be at least $35 billion or $40 billion or more at the end of this year—already in violation of the caps. When the majority says they keep the
The page shows increasing deficits going up. The national debt goes up from $5.6 trillion to about $7.6 trillion; $7.587 trillion over 15 years.

What do we have? We have an increase in the debt of Social Security of $7.587 trillion over 15 years.

The distinguished Senator from North Dakota said, the rich get it all. Come on. It seems as if there would be a consensus in this crowd. I don’t think this will sell with the American people when they hear the truth. That is what I am trying to give them here today—the truth.

The distinguished Senator from Texas comes up. I knew it because I have been working at his side in previous years. He comes up and the first thing he said is the real problem is how to give it, and the best was “across the board.” I knew he was going to get to Dicky Platt. He immediately changed subjects and the debate became the Gramm amendment, which is supposed to go between workers, wage earners, and deadbeats. If he can put that one over, then he has won the day with the hard-working people and Dicky Platt.

Come on, give us a break. We have been through that. There is no education in the second kick of a mule.

We have a good economy. Alan Greenspan, the best of the best, who has helped us maintain that, says stay the course. The Hollings-Lieberman motion is not to take sides in this intramural between tax cuts and spending. But just saying: Finance Committee, come back with a bill that says any surplus you find, apply it to reducing the national debt. Let’s all go home. I think we will win the approval of the American people.

Now, not coming in with all of the lockboxes, that immediately puts back the money into IOUs. They issue these Treasury bills, which are nothing more than an IOU under section 201 of Social Security, and then they spend the money on other things. There is not any true lockbox.
We had an amendment and I showed that to the majority leader. I circulated it to all the Senators. That is why if they also put the word amendments up, including my amendment to cap the debt, we will get the truth. All I want to do is say cap the debt as of September 30, 1999. If you have nothing but surpluses, then run around asking how to get rid of it or how to give a tax cut or whatever.

I will agree that you are right if there is a surplus. But the debt won’t go down at the end of the fiscal year. They didn’t want that vote. That is why we are in a filibuster about the lockbox. Somehow, somewhere, we have to get the truth out and cut out this whining about the people back home know how to spend their money. The point is, you cannot cut taxes without increasing spending. That is the great fiscal cancer we have developed in the 1980s with the Reagan tax cuts. The national debt was less than $1 trillion, less than $1 trillion at that particular time. Now we have a $5.6 trillion debt. With all of that “growth, growth, growth—we are going to have growth everywhere,” what has grown is the national debt with an interest cost of $1 billion a day.

I served on Peter Grace’s commission against waste, fraud and abuse. The only thing Congress created was the biggest waste of all, spending $335 billion in interest costs. If we had that $335 billion, we could do all these things—Social Security, Medicare, research, tax cuts and everything else. We are going to spend it on account of a political sideshow and use our credibility to get by. The reason we credibility get by, and I will finish in a moment. We had a wonderful debate in the 1930s. I will listen to that any time. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, off the bill we yield the Senator 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GRAMM. I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished Senator from Texas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I want to address some of the issues I just heard from the Senator from South Carolina. The first is quoting of Alan Greenspan, the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. I believe Dr. Greenspan’s comments have been taken far out of context. Because if you look at what he said, plainly it is if the choice is more spending or tax cuts, I will take tax cuts.

It is true he said he would be very cautious.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Will the distinguished Senator yield?

Mrs. HUTCHISON. I will yield on your time.

Mr. HOLLINGS. The Senator was correct in what I was saying. I said nothing about tax cuts—I favored those over spending. I said in my motion there is a surplus that we apply to reducing the national debt, and I quoted Mr. Greenspan as of February, when he said, “Stay the course.” I didn’t say Greenspan said I prefer tax cuts over spending. I did not use that quote.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Dr. Greenspan said: If it is a choice of tax cuts versus spending, he takes tax cuts. Paying down the debt is exactly what the Republican plan does. So I think it is very important we keep Dr. Greenspan’s comments in context.

If you look at the President’s plan, he takes $1 trillion and spends it. The Republican plan takes all of the payroll taxes that we heard the Senator from North Dakota talk about and puts that into Social Security reform and stability. So when we are talking about a lockbox, we are saying all the payroll taxes for Social Security that people pay in will be set aside for Social Security. That is $2 trillion. That is exactly what the President’s plan sets aside for Social Security.

It also has the effect of paying down debt by about 50 percent, according to the estimates. So you pay down debt and you stabilize Social Security with $2 trillion that is set aside from the payroll taxes that people pay in.

But for the other $1 trillion we are looking at that comes from income tax withholding, we have very different plans. The President would spend it. The Republicans would let the people who earned it keep it, and we would hold the rest in abeyance for spending on Medicare, education, national defense.

Why do we want the people who earn this money, who work so hard for it, to be able to keep it? Because we believe the people who earn it need the relief for their own purposes—for them to decide how they want to spend their money. The typical American family is paying more in income taxes in peace-time than ever in our history—38 percent in income taxes. A 10-percent across-the-board tax cut is fair to everyone. Because when people paid their taxes last year—they know what they paid, and they can take 10 percent off that. That is the most fair of all tax cuts, to let people keep more of what they earn. In fact, our tax relief package is less than the tax increases that President Clinton put in place in 1993. At that time, President Clinton said he was going to tax the rich and he put in that category people on Social Security who earned $34,000 a year. That is what he declared as rich. I think these people deserve a break, and that is what we are trying to give them.

We are giving marriage tax penalty relief. This morning at my constituent coffee, I met a schoolteacher and a football coach. I am going to estimate they earn about $35,000 and about $40,000 apiece. They get hit right square between the eyes with the marriage penalty because when you put their incomes together, they go into a new bracket. They would go from, then, $65,000 to $70,000 for a family of four.

That is wrong. We should not tell people because they get married that they owe more in taxes, just because they got married.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s time has expired.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, did Senator HOLLINGS’ question come off his time or mine?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It came off of his time.
Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, it is time we provide marriage tax penalty relief, tax relief across-the-board, death taxes, and estate taxes will not have to visit the undertaker and the tax collector on the same day and give up the family farms that have had to be sold because of death taxes. That is wrong.
This amendment will correct that situation. It is time we give relief to the hard-working people of our country.
I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I understand I have 10 minutes. I will try to cut that in half in the interest of moving this along.

I cannot believe the amendment that is before this body. I am speaking about the Gramm amendment. The Center on Budget and Policy Priorities does very good work, as does Citizens for Tax Justice. Let’s take the 10-percent tax rate cut across the board: this is what they say, 9 percent of the benefits of this tax cut will go to 10 percent of the taxpayers with the highest income. The bottom 60 percent of all taxpayers will share just over 9 percent of the total benefits under this plan. The average tax cut under the Gramm amendment, for the lowest income, 60 percent of all taxpayers, those with incomes below $38,000, will be about $99.

By contrast, those in the top 10 percent will enjoy an average tax cut of about $4,000. Tax cuts for the 1 percent highest income, those making more than $300,000 a year, will average $20,000 a year. I am not even talking about es-estate and capital gains tax cuts, which make the Gramm amendment even more preposterous.

To pick up on the comments of my colleague from South Carolina, the original House Ways and Means Committee proposal in the second 10 years would explode the debt, costing $2.8 trillion. This may be only $2 trillion.
But even here, $2 trillion is a lot of money. From 2010 to 2019, this tax cut package in the Gramm amendment will probably cost about $2 trillion. That is what it will cost us.

Mr. President, Kevin Phillips, in some commentary the other day on “Morning Edition,” talked about the House proposal. I think what he said applies to this Gramm amendment:

The mind-boggling 10-year cuts passed late last week by the House of Representatives . . . deserve a new term: [Not pie in the sky but] pie in the stratosphere.

That is what this Gramm amendment is: pie in the stratosphere.

Sometimes my colleagues on the other side of the aisle—and I say this with love in my eye, it is never hatred; we always enjoy our work—they will accuse some of us of class warfare. I say to my colleague from Texas, this is class warfare. This is class warfare: 60 percent of the benefits go to the top 10 percent of all taxpayers. The bottom 60 percent gets 9 percent.

That is what his amendment is for most of the people in my State of Minnesota is about $99. But if you make over $300,000 a year, there will be an average tax cut of $20,000 a year. I say to my colleague from Texas, this is class warfare. That is what his amendment is.

In some ways, I am glad to fight this war because the vast majority of people in this country, when they realize who gets the benefits and who does not, when they realize what this amendment does in the second 10 years, here is what they are going to say. They are going to say: We heard enough about how this surplus belongs to us. We are responsible adults. We are responsible parents and grandparents, and we believe in whatever the performance of our economy—and I hope it will be good; we do not know, this is all assumed—and whatever we have by way of surplus, here is what we believe: We believe that it does not belong to us; it belongs to our children and our grandchildren.

That means we pay off some of the debt we put on their shoulders, and that means we also make sure that Medicare and Social Security are there for them. It also means our children and our grandchildren, regardless of whether they are rich or poor, have op-opportunities; that there is equal opportunity for every child. That is what the American people believe. That is what Minnesotans believe.

I love this Gramm amendment. I love it because I think it presents in the clairest possible way to people in Minnesota and people in the country what we are about, whose side we are on. It is a class warfare amendment, and it should be trounced in a vote. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I yield the Senator from Michigan 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished Senator from Michigan is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank the Chair. Mr.
President, I thank my good friend from New York.

The tax program which is in the amendment before the Senate, like the plan that it would amend, is unfair to middle-income Americans. It is economically unwise, and it is based on unrealistic assumptions. The unfairness in the underlying bill it would amend is perhaps best shown in the fact that about two-thirds of its tax benefits go to the upper one-fifth of our people. The amendment makes that worse. It makes an unfairness doubly worse. It gives almost 80 percent of the tax benefits to the upper one-fifth of the income bracket.

In addition to being unfair, it is also economically unwise because it jeopardizes Medicare, it fails to strengthen Social Security, and it risks higher interest rates. Yesterday, Alan Greenspan, testifying before the Banking Committee said:
We probably would be better off holding off on a tax cut.

Why? Because of the uncertainty of budget surplus projections and also be. cause we should normally reserve tax cuts for periods of economic slowdown.

The implication, in his words, has also been pretty clear over these last few months, which is that a large tax cut would cause the Fed to increase interest rates. For the average middle-income taxpayers, a rise in interest rates means larger mortgage payments, larger loan and credit card payments, larger payments on that automobile, and that would far outweigh the small benefits from the tax cut which that average taxpayer might receive.

The tax program that is being offered to us is also based on unrealistic projections. Projections are always risky.
We have seen many Federal budget estimates, and we know that as quickly as the surpluses appear, they can disappear. The estimates of both the Congressional Budget Office and the Office of Management and Budget have frequently been far off the mark in recent years, and that is not their fault. We have some bright economists in the CBO and the OMB. They have a difficult task. Forecasting the performance of the economy, particularly over the course of several years, is more art than science, and there is a lot of guesswork in it.

For instance, the CBO estimated that the unified budget surplus for fiscal year 2000 will be $79 billion. But 4 months later, in a January 1999 CBO document, the surplus for fiscal year 2000 was estimated at $130 billion. In 4 months, it jumped from a $79 billion estimate to a $130 billion estimate. The July estimate for fiscal year 2000 now projects a $161 billion surplus. So there has been a change of over 100 percent in the projection of the surplus in less than a year. If most Americans were confronted with such uncertainty over their own budget situation, they would follow a cautious course, and we should too.

The projections in both the underlying proposal and the pending amendment to it are extremely risky because they are based on assumptions about domestic spending levels that are highly unrealistic. The on-budget surplus, which the Republicans now say will pay for the tax cut, is reliant largely on massive cuts in discretionary spending, $595 billion over 10 years. That is a 23-percent cut in real terms from the base we adjusted for inflation. Can we realistically believe we will cut discretionary programs by 23 percent in real terms?

Is that what we are doing now?
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

July 29, 1999

Mr. REID. So we have someone here to speak when the Senator finishes, could the Senator give us an estimate of how much time he might complete his statement on this amendment?

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, how much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighteen and a half minutes.

Mr. GRAMM. I will be through before that. Senator KENNEDY may want to start making his way over here.

Mr. President, we are about to wrap up the debate on this amendment. I think sometimes it is easy to get carried away and get in the business of trying to look at people's motives. I would like, in my concluding comments, to try to set this whole thing in perspective.

I wonder sometimes if our Democrat colleagues do not just rediscover every once in a while how progressive—and that is the term that was made up by the people who wanted the Tax Code to be highly skewed, where higher income people paid the great preponderance of taxes in America.

We are today talking about cutting income taxes. Our dear colleague from Minnesota points out that if you make less than $30,000, you are going to get less than $100 of income tax cuts in this bill. But what our colleague fails to recognize is that 50 percent of Americans pay only 4.3 percent of the income taxes; 32 percent of American families pay no income taxes whatsoever.

So I know it makes for a good sound bite to say 32 percent of Americans will get no income tax cut if you cut taxes across the board by 10 percent, but they do not get a tax cut because they do not pay income taxes.

Tax cuts are for taxpayers. The people who get a tax cut under this bill get no food stamps. Is that an outrage? People who will get a tax cut under this bill do not qualify for Medicaid. Is that an outrage that they do not qualify for Medicaid? People who will get a tax cut under this bill do not get a tax cut because they do not pay income taxes.

Tax cuts are for taxpayers. The people who qualify for a tax cut under this bill get no food stamps. Is that an outrage? People who will get a tax cut under this bill do not qualify for Medicaid. Is that an outrage that they do not qualify for Medicaid? People who will get a tax cut under this bill do not get a tax cut because they do not pay income taxes.

So when our colleagues stand up and say the top one-quarter of the taxpayers in America will get 60 percent of the tax cut under this bill, don't forget that the top 25 percent of income earners in America today pay 81.3 percent of all the taxes.

Why would anybody be shocked that 32 percent of Americans who pay 81.3 percent of the taxes might get 60 percent of the tax cut? In fact, what our dear colleague from Michigan was pointing out is that the Roth bill is, from the point of view of the existing Tax Code, putting a heavier burden on higher income people. My amendment does not do that. Now, some of our colleagues, a few minutes ago, suggested that I was offering the House bill. The House tax cut bill is 157 pages long. The tax cut I am offering is 20 pages long. This is a very simple tax cut. At the end of my comments, I will go over what it does and does not do.

It is true that the top 1 percent will get more tax cuts than the bottom 50 percent. The top 1 percent of income earners in America earn 16 cents of every dollar earned, but they pay 32.3 percent of the taxes. The bottom 50 percent pay only 4.3 percent of the taxes. So if you are giving a tax cut, people who pay taxes get it. If you are giving welfare or Medicaid, people who are poor get it. I don’t know why that comes as a shock to our Democrat colleagues.

Our dear friend from South Carolina said the rich get it all. Well, the plain truth is that the average family in America making $50,000 a year, they are rich, according to the Senator from South Carolina, the average family making $50,000 a year will get $624 in a tax cut by the 10-percent across-the-board tax.

How is it that only rich people are getting the tax cut? Well, you have to remember that when the Democrats, in 1993, raised taxes, they defined “rich” as anybody making over $25,000 a year when they taxed people earning $25,000 a year on their Social Security benefits. I hope people are not confused when they hear the Senator from South Carolina say under the Gramm amendment rich people get it all. I hope they understand that rich people are people over $25,000 a year. When Senator Hollings was saying, yes, he voted to raise taxes on Social Security, that was on rich people who made over $25,000 a year. Don’t forget the code when we are talking about these things.

There are a lot of people on the Democrat side of the aisle who say hold off on the tax cut. Well, I don’t find that unappealing. Just to level with people, if we could stop the spending spree that is underway and hold off on the tax cut and have an election—I believe we are going to have a Republican President; I think I know who it is; I believe we are going to have a Republican majority in both Houses of Congress—I think we could do a better job 2 years from now.

So when Senator Levin says hold off on the tax cut, why do I not end up supporting his position?

Well, the problem is, this is the Congressional Budget Office analysis of President Clinton’s budget. He is proposing to spend $1.033 trillion, not only every penny of the surplus, but he is having to plunder Social Security for 3 out of the 10 years. So while our colleagues are saying don’t cut taxes, what they are not telling is that the President has proposed spending every penny of the non-Social Security surplus, plus part of the Social Security surplus.

The truth is, you can always get money back that you give to the American public in tax cuts. If we start 81 new programs, which is what President Clinton wants to do, we will never be able to get that money back. We will never be able to end those programs. That is what the debate is about.

I see that one of my colleagues who had asked to speak before, came and waited for others to speak, has come back. How much time do I have at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 6 minutes.

Mr. Gramm. I yield that Senator 5 minutes of my time, and then I will sum up with the last minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. Kyl. Mr. President, I have heard the name of the Federal Reserve Board Chairman. Alan Greenspan, invoked in this debate as if the Chairman would oppose the tax-relief bill. That is not my understanding of where Mr. Greenspan stands on the issue. I want to include for the Record at the end of my remarks a copy of an article in the Wall Street Journal editorial on the subject that ran on July 27, 1999.

When Chairman Greenspan testified before the Banking Committee last week, he said that he would delay tax cutting and apply the surplus to debt repayment—but here is the part of the quote that many in the media have failed to report. He said he would defer tax cuts:

... “unless, as I’ve indicated many times, it appears that the surplus is going to become a tightening rod for major increases in outlays (emphasis added). That’s the worst of all possible worlds, from a fiscal policy point of view, and it is clear that, under all conditions, should be avoided.”

Mr. Greenspan went on to say, “I have great sympathy for those who wish to cut taxes now to pre-empt that process, and indeed if it turns out that is the right thing when I would say moving on the tax front makes a good deal of sense to me.”

Mr. President, Chairman Greenspan’s view is important because opponents of this tax relief bill claim that the Federal Reserve will respond to its enactment by raising interest rates. It is the very reason we need a cool economy. But Mr. Greenspan’s remarks make it clear that the real threat to continue prosperity is bigger government, not tax relief. And if the tax overpayment is not returned to taxpayers, who do we think it is clear that $158 billion will be spent long before it can be applied to debt reduction.

Just consider that President Clinton is proposing new spending amounting to $362 billion—more than the 10-year cost of the tax-relief bill that is before us. Remember, too, that our tax bill accounts for only about 25 percent of the available surplus. In other words, we are only proposing to refund about 25 cents of every surplus dollar to the people who earned it—and to us—hardly a risky or irresponsible thing. Seventy-five cents of every surplus dollar would be dedicated to preserving Social Security and Medicare, and funding other domestic priorities.

Remember, to the extent that there is a surplus, we will have taken care of our core obligations already—things like education and health care, running our national parks, and providing for the national defense. It may be true that refunding the overpayment will mean we cannot fund some low priority programs, but that is the point: taxpayers ought to be able to decide how to spend their own hard-earned money before meet Washington wastes it.

Critics of the tax-relief bill also claim that it cannot be justified because projected surpluses may never materialize. That Congress and the President will be unable to live within the spending limits we agreed to on a bipartisan basis only two years ago. In other words, they contend that spending the surplus is a preordained outcome. To me, that is not a reason to defer tax relief. It is the very reason we need to pass tax relief—before Washington can find new ways to spend the tax overpayment.

Mr. President, I think it is important to clarify that we are talking about what to do with the non-Social Security surplus. Our plan saves all of the Social Security surplus for Social Security. President Clinton says that it is his goal as well, but his budget would actually spend $159 billion of the Social Security surplus on other programs. If our colleagues on the other side of the aisle would end their filibuster against the Social Security lockbox bill, we could pass it and make sure the Social Security surplus is not spent.

Let me turn for a few moments to the specific provisions of the tax-relief bill that is before us today. I want to begin by commending the chairman of the Finance Committee for producing a bill that fully meets the instructions of the budget resolution we passed earlier this year and provides a full $792 billion in tax relief over the next decade.

But I must say that I would have written the bill very differently. It seems to me that there are too many provisions that are targeted too narrowly. For example, the bill includes a tax break for the renovation of historic homes. That is great if you intend to engage in such renovation. But if you do not have the means to own a historic home, or do not want one, you get no relief.

People with a foreign address would have their frequent flyer miles exempted from the 7.5 percent air passenger ticket tax.

Generation of electricity from chicken litter would earn a tax break.

And if you are fortunate enough to get certain scholarships, your award would be excluded from tax.

These four provisions alone—and each may have merit in its own right—have a combined revenue impact of about $4 billion over 10 years—money that I would prefer to put toward broad-based, growth-oriented tax relief that help all taxpayers.

While there are many worthwhile provisions in the Finance Committee bill, a better approach is embodied in the specific provisions in the Finance Committee bill that help all taxpayers.

The Finance Committee bill goes a long way toward resolving the marriage-penalty problem, and I thank the chairman of the Finance Committee for that; but since we have the resources to solve it fully once and for all, we should.

The death tax is just as wrong, and we ought to do something about it, too. The Gramm amendment includes the provisions of the Kyl-Kerrey bill, as modified by the White House Conference on Small Business. The 1995 White House Conference on Small Business identified the death tax as one of small business's top concerns, and dele-gates to the conference voted overwhelmingly to endorse its repeal. Remember, this is a tax that is imposed on a family business when it is least able to afford the payment—upon the death of the person with the greatest practical and institutional knowledge of the estate.

Although the death tax raises only about one percent of the federal government's annual revenue, it exerts a disproportionately large and negative impact on the economy. In fact, Alicia Munnell, a former member of President Clinton's Council of Economic Advisors, estimates that the costs of complying with death-tax laws are roughly the same magnitude as the revenue raised. In 1996, for example that amounted to about $23 billion. In other words, for every dollar of tax revenue raised by the death tax, another dollar is squandered in the economy simply to comply with or avoid the tax.

Over time, the adverse consequences are compounded. A report issued by the Joint Economic Committee last December concluded that the existence of the death tax this century has reduced the stock of capital in the economy by nearly half a trillion dollars.

By appealing the death tax and putting those resources to better use, the Joint Committee estimates that as many as 240,000 jobs could be created over seven years and Americans would have an additional $24.4 billion in disposable personal income.

Unlike the Finance Committee bill, which leaves the death tax in place indefinitely, the Gramm amendment would repeal the tax—pull it out by its roots. The House has already passed similar provisions, and the Senate should, as well. Death-tax repeal is a must.

Mr. President, there are three other components of the Gramm amendment that I will touch on only briefly. First, it would reduce capital gains tax rates by 10 percent across the board. In other words, all taxpayers would see their tax bills reduced, proportionate to how much they pay. This is probably the fairest way of returning the tax overpayment.

Second, the amendment would index capital gains for inflation, recognizing that the Treasury should not reap the benefit of inflationary policies.

Third, it would provide a full deduction for health insurance for the self employed. It is no wonder both Mr. Clinton and Mr. Greenspan have been proposing. That is why I support this amendment.

Before concluding, I ask unanimous consent that the Wall Street Journal editorial from July 27, 1999, which I quoted at the beginning of my remarks, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as for the Wall Street Journal.

Mr. KYL. To reiterate, the bill includes a tax break for the renovation of historic homes. That is great, if you intend to engage in such a renovation and you have a historic home. But if you don't have that kind of a home, it is not going to do you much good. People with foreign addresses would have their frequent flier miles exempted from the 7.5 percent passenger ticket tax.

Generation of electricity from chicken litter would earn a tax break. If you are fortunate to get certain scholarships, you could be excluded from a tax. These four provisions alone, which may well be of some merit, have a combined revenue impact of about $4 billion over 10 years—money I would prefer to put toward the kind of relief Senator Gramm has been proposing. That is why I support his amendment.

Let's take one of the provisions of his amendment, whereas, the committee bill attempts to spread relief. Out of about 130 different parts of the Tax Code, the Gramm amendment focuses on just 5 particular areas, using the funds to directly correct, p. 220, of the most unfair and egregious provisions of the law. For example, it eliminates the marriage tax penalty.

The Finance Committee proposal goes a long way toward working on that marriage penalty, but it does not eliminate it. The Gramm proposal would do that. It is not fair that we overtax families just because they are married. The impact is estimated to cost the average couple an extra $1,400 a year, about $21,000 if more than one couple is affected. It is no wonder both spouses in the family are having to work. One, in effect, is working for the family, and the other is working to pay OFF the taxes. They are upset with this marriage tax penalty. I support that provision.

While we deal with the death tax in the Finance Committee proposal, we don’t eliminate it. It ought to be eliminated. The Gramm proposal eliminates it along the lines of the Kyl-Kerrey bill. I appreciate Senator Gramm including our provision in his amendment. The death tax is the most unfair tax of all. Death should not be a taxable event. If you want to pay tax people because they make some economic decision to spend money, to take money out of an account, to sell an asset, then tax that economic decision. They understand going in what the consequences are going to be. But nobody chooses to die. Why their heirs should have to pay a tax because of a death is beyond most of us. It brings in about 1 percent in revenue. It is not worth it.

An awful lot of small businesses and farms, which have all of the assets tied up in equipment and the capital of the business, you usually sell to some big conglomerate that then takes it over.

So the death tax is unfair. Our proposal, which in effect converts it to a capital gains tax on the sale of the assets if and when they are ever sold, is a much fairer proposal. It still permits the Government to recover some of the money, but it is not based upon the death of the individual, it is based upon the sale of the asset when the people want to sell it.

There are three other components I will touch on briefly. First, it reduces the marginal income tax by 10 percent across the board. In other words, all taxpayers would see their taxes reduced, and we have to figure how much they pay, as the Senator pointed out. It is probably the fairest way of returning the tax overpayment. The amendment would index capital gains for inflation, recognizing that the Treasury should not reap the benefit of inflationary policies.

Finally, it would provide a full deduction for health insurance for the self-employed, something I think everybody would like to see done.

We don’t afford to do those things, and we ought to do those things in this amendment. I will vote for the Gramm amendment. If it is defeated, I will vote for the underlying bill in order to get it to conference where it can be improved to sell reserve judgment on whether to support the conference report until I see whether it comes closer to the approach Senator Gramm has taken.

Mr. GRAMM addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I have worked up an example that I think tells the story here at the end of the debate. The question is, if we have a simple case, they deduct taxes across the board by 10 percent, eliminates the marriage penalty, repeals the death tax, indexes capital gains taxes, and gives a full deduction for health insurance, what will it mean to your family?

Obviously, it is easy to take how much taxes you pay and then take the 10 percent. Here is an example. Take this couple Senator Hutchinson talked about, where you have a teacher and a football coach and they are married. Together, they make $70,000 a year. Now, I know there are some people on the other side of the aisle who are going to say they are rich. They have two children, and they might have one of them in college. If they have both of them in college, they are among the most financially stressed people in America.

But what would happen under this bill is that the 10 percent tax cut would mean that this family—a coach and a teacher, making $70,000 a year—would get an $800 tax cut. Actually, it would be an $860 tax cut because of the 10 percent across-the-board cut; they would get a $1,400 tax cut from the marriage penalty elimination, meaning, in total, they would get $2,260 in tax cuts. That is roughly, I think, what working middle America is about.

Mr. President, I yield all my time back.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, this side of the aisle yields all our time back.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Gramm amendment, No. 1405, be temporarily set aside in order for Senator Kennedy to offer a motion relative to prescription drugs. I further ask consent that following the motion, the Senate then proceed to a vote or in relation to the Gramm amendment, No. 1405, to be followed by a vote on or in relation to the Kennedy motion. I ask unanimous consent that no other amendments be in order to the amendment prior to the vote. I further ask consent that there be 2 minutes equally divided prior to each vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the Senator from New York, on behalf of the Finance Committee, is honored to yield to our distinguished friend and long-time colleague, Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts. We welcome him back to the debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I understand we now have a 1-hour time limitation, am I correct, and the time is divided?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty minutes on each side.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield myself 10 minutes, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized for 10 minutes.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT

(Purpose: To modernize and improve the Medicare program by providing a long-overdue prescription drug benefit, by reducing or deferring certain new tax breaks)

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send a motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. Kennedy, moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Finance, with instructions to report back within 3 days, with an amendment to reserve amounts sufficient to provide a prescription drug benefit to all Medicare recipients, in the context of modernizing and strengthening Medicare, by reducing or deferring, and not tax breaks for the wealthy.

This debate is about priorities. New tax breaks are a priority for the Republicans. Prescription drugs for senior citizens are not. If senior citizens were the priority, we would be debating a Medicare prescription drug bill today—not a tax cut bill. If senior citizens were the priority, we would be debating a tax bill after we had taken care of Medicare and Social Security—not before.

These Republican tax bills have $230 billion in new tax breaks for people with incomes over $300,000 a year. They reinstate the three-martini lunch deduction.

There are sweetheart deals for the insurance industry, the timber industry, the oil industry, and large multinational corporations. But there is not one dime for Medicare prescription drugs for senior citizens.

Medicare is a clear contract between workers and their government. It says, “Work hard, pay into the system when you are young, and you will have health security in your retirement years.” But that commitment is being broken today and every day, because Medicare does not cover prescription drugs.

When Medicare was enacted in 1965, coverage of prescription drugs in private insurance policies was not the norm—and Medicare followed the standard practice in the private market. Today, ninety-nine percent of employer-based health insurance policies provide prescription drug coverage—but Medicare is caught in a 34 year old time warp—and too many seniors are suffering as a result.
Too many seniors today must choose between food on the table and the medicines they need to stay healthy or to treat a medical emergency. Too many seniors are paying twice as much as they should for the drugs they need, because they are forced to pay full price, while almost everyone with a private insurance policy benefits from negotiated discounts. Too many seniors are ending up hospitalized—at immense costs to Medicare—because they aren’t receiving the drugs they need at all, or cannot afford to take them correctly. Pharmaceutical products are increasingly the source of miracle cures for a host of dread diseases, yet they make up only 12 percent of all employment-income on health care than persons under 65, and they account for one-quarter of the population.

The greatest gap in Medicare—and Republicans say is inadequate—is the catastrophic insurance coverage associated with Medicare Part B premium, Medicare now pays the single largest out-of-pocket cost to the elderly for health care. The average senior citizen fills an average of eighteen prescriptions a year, and takes four to six prescriptions daily. Many elderly Americans face monthly drug bills of $100, $200 or even more.

America’s senior citizens and disabled citizens deserve to benefit from new discoveries in the same way that other families do. Yet, without negotiated pricing power, the count of cost-shifting—often with devastating results. In the words of a recent report by Standard & Poor “Drugmakers have historically raised prices to private customers to compensate for the discounted care they offered to consumers.” The private customers referred to in this report are largely the nation’s mothers, fathers, aunts, uncles, grandmothers, and grandfathers.

Despite—and to a large extent because of—Medicare’s lack of coverage for prescription drugs, the misuse of such drugs results in preventable illnesses that cost Medicare $20 billion or more a year, while imposing vast misery on senior citizens. It is in their best interest, and in the best interest of Medicare, to design a system that encourages the proper use, and minimizes the improper use of prescription drugs. Substantial savings can be found if physicians and pharmacists are educated on senior citizen-prescription drug interactions and on ways to identify, prevent, and correct prescription related problems.

Beneficiaries, too, must follow instructions that are dispensed with the medication itself. Too often, we hear stories of patients who skimp on medicine. They take half doses or otherwise try to stretch their prescription, to make it last longer. That is not right, and it doesn’t have to happen. If senior citizens are confident that the drugs they need will be covered, proper usage will improve, and so will the quality of life for senior citizens.

During the course of this debate, we will hear many arguments from the opposition of this amendment. Their arguments are as predictable as they are wrong.

First, we will hear that the sponsors of this excessive tax cut are all for a Medicare prescription drug benefit, too. They claim that even after their tax cut, they still have $253 billion of surplus left. But we all know that those estimates don’t account for any as three dollar bill—and about as valuable.

The only way that any money is left after the Republican tax cut is because their budget—presents a $100 billion deficit to the President—a request that Republicans say is inadequate. Their budget also pretends that there will never be another emergency appropriation ever. In fact, even without new emergencies, we will spend $90 billion over the next 10 years if present trends continue. Their budget pretends to cut out programs from Head Start to education to highway construction to law enforcement by half a trillion dollars over the next ten years. Cuts that no one believes will ever happen.

Republicans hope they can continue to play “let’s pretend” until this recklessness, irresponsible, irresponsibility crosses the Senate. But by then it will be too late—too late for today’s senior citizens, who need prescription drug coverage—too late for tomorrow’s senior citizens, who need a solvent Medicare—too late to protect Social Security—too late to meet pressing needs to educate the nation’s children, support biomedical research, fight crime, protect the environment, and meet all the other pressing needs that are priorities for the American people.

This is an issue of priorities. Republicans may say that there is enough money left over to protect seniors. Let’s look at the numbers. Fourteen million elderly and disabled Medicare beneficiaries—one-third of the total—do not have a dime of prescription drug coverage today. Not a dime.

One-quarter of Medicare beneficiaries have coverage through an employer but retiree health benefits will, on the chopping block as companies seek to cut costs by trimming health care spending. In fact, a recent survey of firms offering coverage has dropped one-quarter in just the last four years. No senior citizen—and certainly no 50-year old, 60-year old, or 70-year old—will ever have coverage their whole lives. If senior citizens were the priority, we would be debating a prescription drug coverage bill today—not a tax cut bill. If senior citizens were the priority, we would be debating a tax bill after we had taken care of Medicare and Social Security—not before. If senior citizens were the priority, it would be tax breaks that would get the left-overs, not the elderly.

Republicans also say that prescription drug coverage should not be provided to all senior citizens—:to the poor or those who have no current coverage. But we heard those same arguments when Medicare was originally enacted. The American people didn’t buy those arguments then—and they won’t buy them now.

will impose caps of less than $500. The majority of seniors have annual drug expenses well in excess of $500. More than $325,000 beneficiaries will be dropped from their HMOs next year. There are senior citizens who joined an HMO because of the promise of affordable prescription drug benefits who can count on that promise being kept.

Four and a half million senior citizens get prescription drug coverage through a Medigap plan. But that coverage is extraordinarily expensive and inadequate. According to Consumer Reports, a seventy-four year old senior citizen enrolled in the least generous Medigap plan offering drug coverage would pay an average of close to $2,000 a year more in premiums—on top of $1,400 for the non-drug part of the coverage—a total of more than $3,000 a year. And that is an average. Some beneficiaries must pay more than $9,000 a year for drug coverage through Medigap plans. Moreover, the starting premium, it goes higher and higher as senior citizens age and their need for medical care grows. Anyone who misses the chance to enroll in a drug coverage plan at age 65 never gets another chance if they have any health problems.

The only senior citizens who have stable, secure, affordable Medicare drug coverage today are the very poor on Medicaid. The idea that only the impoverished would qualify for needed hospital and doctor care was popular with Republicans more than 30 years ago when they fought against the enactment of Medicare. The American people rejected that cruel doctrine—and Medicare for all was enacted. Today, it is time for the Senate to reject the equally indefensible proposition that poverty is the price that senior citizens should have to pay to get the prescription drugs they need.

A couple of Marshfield, Massachusetts vividly demonstrates why we need to act now. Their plight is representative of other senior citizens across the country. They live on a fixed income of $30,000 a year from Social Security and a retirement pension. They are poor. Their income is not below 135% of poverty. In fact, it is not even below 200% of poverty—but it is not enough for them to afford prescription drugs they need. Both have substantial medical needs, and both belong to the Medicare HMO—but 19% of the couple’s income is still spent on prescription drugs.

By April, the couple had already exhausted their HMO’s $150 quarterly cap for prescription drug coverage. The $956 cost of the wife’s medications for May and June will come completely out of their pockets. She has been rationing her medication—not taking it as prescribed. She has had to stop shopping the medicine to save money. She was a stroke victim five years ago. Yet, she has to cut back considerably on her most needed medications. She has a difficult time with the left side of her body, and cannot move her left arm.

She says, “My muscles are really tight, and it is a result of not taking my Methocarbamol, because I am trying to stretch my prescription dollars. We don’t go out, we can’t afford gas, and we have had to cut down on groceries.”

Every senior citizen in America could find themselves forced to choose between a decent retirement and the medications they need. No person and no family should have to make that unfair choice. This is what our amendment is all about.

Senior citizens need and deserve prescription drug coverage under Medicare. Any senior citizen will tell you that—and so will their children and grandchildren.

I would like to just reiterate an earlier point. The debate this week is really about priorities, and there are many of us who believe that, prior to moving toward an adequate tax cut, we ought to provide for a prescription drug benefit program.

I have listened over the course of the past 2 days, as well as earlier in the debate, to those who can afford the kind of tax breaks that are being recommended. They say that we will have sufficient resources at the end of it in order to provide for a prescription drug benefit. I don’t believe that to be the case.

Even if it were the case, I am not sure we have time to debate how much may be left over after we deal with the Republican tax breaks. I don’t think there will be much, if anything.

But what we are saying today is rather than wait to see if there is anything left, let’s go ahead today. We are saying that any proposal that is going to come out of this Senate dealing with tax breaks, we ought to secure Social Security, we ought to ensure the security of the Medicare system, and include in the Medicare system, a prescription drug benefit program.

I have gone on and on and on about the case. Every senior citizen in America could find themselves forced to choose between a decent retirement and the medications they need. No person and no family should have to make that unfair choice. This is what our amendment is all about.

We say send this legislation back to the Finance Committee. Have it come back to the floor with funds reserved to have a prescription drug program that is going to be worthy of its name. It says that before we see the major kinds of tax breaks and tax cuts in this bill, we should meet the needs of our senior citizens.

Every Member of this body can give chapter and verse about what is happening in their communities, and about how important this is. I am sure that others in this body have had the opportunity, as I have, of visiting a nursing home or a senior citizen gathering and asking them: How many of you are paying out of your pocket for prescription drugs $25 or $50 or $75 a month? How many are paying $5 a month? You will find about half to three-quarters of them. How many are paying $50? Half or three-quarters of them. How many are paying $100 or more? You will still see many of those hands in the air.

We are finding that many of the senior citizens are skimping on their prescription drugs—they take half of it or skip days—despite all of the negative health implications that has.

It is interesting that for the five most common preventable conditions or diseases in the elderly, just five preventable diseases for which prescription drugs are available, the Medicare... system pays $30 billion a year in hospitalizations. Many of those hospitalizations could have been avoided if those senior citizens had been able to afford the prescription drugs recommended by their doctors.

That is what we are talking about. We are going to pay for it either on the front end or the back end.

This motion makes sense because it is the right thing to do from a health point of view. It is the right thing to do from a bottom line point of view. It is necessary if we are going to meet our continuing responsibilities to our senior citizens.

I would like to mention on the floor of the Senate a petition I just received from Silver Spring, MD. It is from the Homecrest House Resident Council in Silver Spring, MD. They wrote,

We are enclosing our petition signed by most of our 300 residents. We are sure that we voice a concern of our friends around the Nation, seniors and disabled. We do without other necessities in order to buy needed medications.

Here are the names from just one senior citizen center. Three hundred senior citizens and disabled persons. They understand the importance of this particular program.

Again, this debate is about priorities. Are we going to have tax breaks for the wealthy and for special interests or are we going to have the protection of our seniors?

Final point: I was listening with great interest to the debate on the other side about whether we are going to accept the House proposal. The fact is, that House proposal has a lot of tax goodies. There is the restoration of the three-martini lunch.

Many Members thought we freed ourselves of the tax break for the three-martini lunch back in 1993. It is back in the House bill.

This bill has all sorts of other tax goodies for special interests, tax goodies for various industries, including the insurance industry, the timber interests, the oil and gas industry, foreign tax credits, and others that I think are questionable.

Out of all those issue that are out there, I say prescription drugs for the elderly people are more important than putting into place the tax privileges in this bill.

This motion will put the Senate on record in favor of closing the largest gap in Medicare. A vote to reject it is a vote to put a higher priority on new tax breaks for the wealthy than on quality medical care for senior citizens. I know where the American people stand. It is time for the Senate to decide where it stands.

I hope this motion will be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I yield myself 3 minutes. I want to comment on the history that our distinguished friend, the senior Senator from Massachusetts, makes about the origins of the Medicare program.

He was the Senator at the time. I was a member of the administration at the time and was involved. A basic decision was made, and thank goodness it was, that Medicare, medical assistance to the aging, would not be a poverty program. It would not be dependent upon income. The idea was that programs for the poor inevitably become poor programs. I think this has been the case over the years.

The second point I make deals with 1965 and the years that followed. The pharmaceutical revolution in ways began with the discovery of penicillin in London in the 1920s, and medications of the kind we now today have become a whole new phenomenon in medical care. They made us believe that hospitals were about all you could do for ill people. Now so much more can be done, principally through pharmaceuticals.

Indeed, if you had to make some bizarre choice between providing hospital care and providing the full range of pharmaceuticals, one could very well choose the latter.

The Senator spoke of five lifesaving medications which are unavailable to people who only go to hospitals where they can receive consolation, but no true treatment.

This is a very wise and necessary motion. This Senator, for sure, will support it.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield such time as I may consume.

Mr. President, no one in the Senate is more serious about Medicare and the program’s beneficiaries than members of the Finance Committee. This year alone, our committee has held a dozen hearings looking into the needs and future of this important program.

We are firm in our commitment to strengthen and preserve Medicare for the Americans who are now a part of the program, and for those who will depend on it in the years ahead.

One of our areas of focus concerns prescription drug benefits, and we approved an amendment with which the senior Senator from Massachusetts takes this issue. However, now is not the time and place to address this issue.

The carefully crafted bipartisan Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999 leaves over $500 billion of the surplus for Congress to carefully weigh and meet the needs and long-term viability of Medicare. In September, we will turn our attention to addressing this most important concern.

But we should not be pressured into simply accepting something that requires our most careful and studied attention.

Testifying before the Finance Committee only last week, Comptroller General David M. Walker made it clear that Congress must take great care as we address Medicare reform. He reminded us that Congress has learned some sobering lessons about moving forward, pressed by political expediency to alter such an important program, without benefitting from careful study and deliberation.

“Effectiveness,” Comptroller Walker reminded our committee, “involves collecting the data necessary to assess impact—separating the transitory from the permanent, and the trivial from the important.”

“Steadfastness is needed,” Mr. Walker said, “when particular interests pit the primacy of needs against the more global interest of making Medicare affordable, sustainable, and effective for current and future generations of Americans.

This makes it all the more important that any new benefit expansion be carefully designed to balance needs and affordability both now and over the longer term.”

Mr. President, Congress cannot haphazardly paste one politically motivated change after another on the Medicare program and call it reform. We must be careful. We must be deliberate. To know how important this is, we simply need to harken back to 1988, when Congress—again out of politics, and in a rush—pasted together the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

Within six months of enacting that legislation, Congress and the people realized the debacle, and we were forced to repeal it within the year.

So we’ve been down this road before, Mr. President. A rush to legislation that not only failed to serve those whom we intended to help, but that actually set back progress more than a decade.

There is no question that Medicare reform is necessary. And there is agreement on both sides of the aisle that prescription drugs for the elderly must be a critical component of the reform. But now is not the time to address this issue. I can assure you that the committee will continue to proceed with Medicare reform as a top priority. We look forward to working with Senator KENNEDY and others who are concerned about this issue. Likewise, we will continue to give the President’s recent proposal careful consideration.

By proceeding methodically, but cautiously, Mr. President, Congress will construct a reform package that is complete—one that meets the pressing needs in the lives of the seniors who depend on the Medicare program. The amendment Senator Kennedy offers—as well as the President’s prescription drug benefit, as it now stands—provides only limited coverage to Medicare beneficiaries.
By waiting . . . by proceeding constructively . . . and by working in a bipartisan effort to reform Medicare, Congress will be able to continue our work on Medicare reform following the August recess. This effort does not have to wait long. The Finance Committee intends to continue our work on Medicare reform following the August recess. I fully intend to include a prescription drug option as part of the plan we will offer. At that time, the Senate will be able to more fully and carefully examine reform legislation. This will be in the long-term interests of everyone.

I compliment Senator Kennedy on his continuing commitment in addressing social needs, but now is not the time to move on it. I ask my colleagues to continue to vote against the Kennedy amendment.

Mr. Kennedy. Mr. President, let me say to my colleague from Delaware, he said about four or five times, “in the long term.” That is not good enough. The long term is not good enough. When I am in Minnesota, and I travel the State, no matter where I go, in town meetings, there is a huge turnout of older citizens, of senior citizens. In my State of Minnesota there are probably about 800,000 Medicare recipients, and only 35 percent have any kind of coverage for prescription drugs—35 percent. Two-thirds of elderly Minnesotans have no coverage; two-thirds in Minnesota have no coverage at all. It is not uncommon to meet someone who is spending $300 a month on a $1,000 monthly income. Mr. President, $300 a month on a $1,000 monthly income.

It is also not uncommon to meet with people who will tell you—actually not in a public meeting. People are a little embarrassed to do it. But if you go to meet with people individually—they cut their pills in half. The problem is it doesn’t give them half the benefit. Actually, it can be quite dangerous. Or if they don’t cut their pills in half, there are people who just do not take them so they can put food on the table, or if they go out and buy what they need, then they do not put food on the table. I hear my colleagues on the other side saying “in the long run.” In the long run? What are we waiting for? What are we waiting for?

You are talking about tax cuts. I was on the floor earlier when we were discussing the Gramm amendment, which I assume will be voted down. But take that one amendment: 60 percent of the benefit goes to the top 10 percent. The average tax cut for the lowest income is the lowest 6 percent. For example, if a family earning below $38,000, would be $99. But if you have an income of over $300,000, it is a $20,000 tax cut. You are talking about $700 billion, $800 billion of tax cuts in the Republican proposal, crowding out any kind of investment like this; for example, affordable prescription drug costs for the elderly.

We have another amendment, the Gramm amendment, which is class warfare. That is what it is. The people in Minnesota are scratching their heads saying: We would love to get some relief, us hard-working people, but that is not what the Republican plan is.

Now we have the Kennedy amendment on the floor, which I fully support, that speaks directly to the concerns and circumstances of older Americans. In my State of Minnesota, this is critically important. Only one-third of senior citizens have any prescription drug coverage at all. This is a burden-some cost. This is a health care issue. This is a public health issue.

What made Medicare important—it was a huge step forward in 1965—is that it was a universal coverage program. When we extend prescription drug benefits to Medicare, we make it a universal care program. For my father and my mother, neither of whom are alive today, both of whom had Parkinson’s disease, without Medicare they would have gone under. They never made any money. The kind of drugs they needed, and seniors need, for Parkinson’s disease—I can talk about other diseases—they cannot afford them.

I hear my good friend from Delaware say “in the long run.” The long run is too long for investment. We want the urgency of now. This is a clear choice. You are either for the tax cuts, three-martini lunches, egregious breaks for large corporations, the vast amount of the money going to the highest income citizens, exploding the debt over the next 10 years and then the next 10 years it gets worse; or why don’t we be fiscally responsible? Why don’t we pay the debt down, make sure we support Social Security and Medicare, investment in our children, and when we support Medicare, the best thing we could do would be to make sure there is prescription drug coverage for elderly Americans.

I hope there will be 99 or 100 votes for this amendment. There should be. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROBERT. I yield 10 minutes to Senator Kyl.

Mr. Frist. Mr. President, I rise to speak against the amendment offered by my colleague, the Senator from Massachusetts. The Senator from Massachusetts has introduced an amendment which suggests we set aside this money for the administration of the program to the committee of jurisdiction, so they will incorporate funding for a new prescription drug benefit in the existing Medicare program. I have several points to make. First of all, I think most important is that the Senate, this very body, has already set aside funds for Medicare modernization. This has now become a familiar chart on the floor of the Senate, but I think it is very important. It goes right to the heart of why this amendment should and hopefully will be defeated today. This is the plan. The U.S. Congress’ use of the surplus, the almost $3.3 trillion surplus: Debt reduction, $1.9 trillion; tax cuts, $792 billion.

For talk like this, that is not what the Republican plan is. First, what have we done? How can I say that with such determination? The congressional budget plan has $505 billion over 10 years. Very specifically, we say it again and again and again; it is for domestic priorities. That money is set aside, aside from the tax cuts, the tax relief, and the debt reduction.

No. 1, the Senate has already specifically set aside $505 billion in a reserve fund, for long-term Medicare reform. Again, I refer people to April 15, the day we passed in this very body the concurrent resolution for the year 2000, in section 203, reserve fund for Medicare. We lay it out. The charts are in the back, in terms of coming up with the $92.4 billion over 10 years.

No. 1, $505 billion is set aside for such things as Medicare modernization; No. 2, we specifically set aside $90 billion in a reserve fund, set aside $90 billion, in a reserve fund, for long-term Medicare reform. Again, I refer people to April 15, the day we passed in this very body the concurrent resolution for the year 2000, in section 203, reserve fund for Medicare. We lay it out. The charts are in the back, in terms of coming up with the $92.4 billion over 10 years.

No. 1, $505 billion is set aside for such things as Medicare modernization; No. 2, we specifically set aside $90 billion in a reserve fund, set aside $90 billion, for Medicare and modernization, including prescription drug coverage.

when we have a doubling of the number of seniors when we go forward. That is the framework we set forward, and it is what we need to address.

Our job, our challenge now that we have the money set aside—we do not need to recommit to it, send it back for more dollars and cents—is to fix the system inside this framework, and we do it in three ways. We need to modernize Medicare benefits, bring it up to date. The 1965 car is not up to today’s standards and we can modernize it. We demonstrated, through a bipartisan plan, the Medicare Commission—I will come back to what we actually said.

We need to modernize. No. 2, we need to strengthen our Medicare commitment, our commitment to the seniors, the generation of today, the future generation—we need to make sure we can fund our future for the Medicare system today in the fact that through focusing on low income, up to 135 percent, No. 1, and, No. 2, saying anybody who is going to come to the table and participates in a plan—Mr. President, I ask for 2 more minutes to complete my remarks. Mr. ROTH. I yield 2 more minutes. Mr. FRIST. Thus, our proposal, which we have discussed, to fix the system, to strengthen do nothing to modernize Medicare. We have a plan to do that. We have already set aside the resources to do that. The political tactics we are witnessing do nothing to modernize Medicare, do nothing to focus on that individual patient and the quality of care they receive. I close by saying that before 2 o’clock or in the next 2 to 3 minutes, I will be submitting an amendment which addresses the Medicare issue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator’s time has expired. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 6 minutes to the Senator from West Virginia.

do prescription drugs until we fix the system. It is a question totally of priorities. I will put a little dose of reality into this.

No matter what my colleagues on either side of the aisle might think, we are not going to reform Medicare this year on a systemic basis. If it happens the way the majority party wants, it is going to be vetoed by the President. It is not going to happen.

The question before the Senate on this amendment is, Do we want to take the tens of millions of Americans who have no prescription drugs and give them the benefit of prescription drugs now through voting for the Kennedy amendment, of which I am proud to be a cosponsor, or do we want to say, oh, let's wait and fix the system, and then when we fix the system, which may be 3, 4, 5, or 6 years from now, we will do pre-amendment, of which I am proud to be a cosponsor, or do we want to say, oh, amendment, of which I am proud to be now through voting for the Kennedy amendment, of which I am proud to be choice that needs to be made.

The world does not work like that. The real world of the Congress and the White House does not work like that. It is not neat and orderly? Is it not getting the message out to seniors. That is the reason for the Ken-dy amendment—to make us pick a prior-
ty. Tax cuts, for the most part for people who do not need them or, in a very small measure, in a very small amount of money, prescription drugs for people who desperately need them, who do not in the form of a cliche but in the form of real life, have to pick each week whether they are going to eat, have heat in their homes, or have prescription drugs.

I say to the Presiding Officer, I say to my colleagues, try to live on $8,600 a year, as our seniors do in West Virginia. You could not do it. Prescription drugs are the reason the money gets so scarce for them. They do know that they do not have a consensus on how to reform Medicare. They do know that they are hurting. They do know that they do not have prescription drugs. And they do know that some of them take up to 12 drugs a week, and they cost, and it is coming out of their pockets.

Medicare has no prescription drug benefits. These seniors are not on Medicaid; they are on Medicare. So they have nothing. The money has to come out of their pocket. That is wrong in America.

So the question is the priority. Are we for giving those people prescription drugs—a modest amount of money—or are we for simply going ahead with the deficit reduction efforts? I doubt whether that is humanly possible, unless the senior Sen-ant from New York wants to spend the weekend doing all of this and finishing it up by Monday morning.

There is no question that there is a need for prescription drugs in the Medicare program. But I say to my colleagues, that is not the way to fix Medicare. We have a program that is becoming insolvent. It is going broke in the year 2015. Just adding more benefits to the program, without reforming the structure of the program, is like having dessert before you eat your spinach. It is easy to add more benefits to a program. But bear in mind, we have a program that is structurally going insolvent. We spend more money today than we take in. Just adding more benefits, without taking the time to fundamentally reform the program, is not the answer.

The distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee said he planned to actually begin a markup in September on an omnibus Medicare reform bill which will include prescription drugs, doing it in a timely fashion. I suggest that after that is reported out, that is the time to look at how much money we need, and then pare down the tax cut, combine the two, and have something that can be signed into law.

I think, obviously, we cannot do it in the next 3 days. I think the chairman has outlined a program that makes more sense and that I think is really doable.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH. I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BREAUX. I thank the chairman of the Finance Committee.

I will be very brief and comment on the amendment of my good friend, the senior Senator from Massachusetts.

I do not think there is any disagreement that we ought to have prescription drugs in the Medicare program.

But it is interesting that the recom-mittal motion tells the Finance Committee to report it back in 3 days. I guess we could go over the weekend and, on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday write a prescription drug program and modernize Medicare and reform Medicare, but I doubt whether that is humanly possible, unless the senior Sen-ant from New York wants to spend the weekend doing all of this and finishing it up by Monday morning.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH. I yield 2 minutes to Sen-ant DOMENICI.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. Chairman, fellow Senators, I did not know that Senator BREAUX was going to come to the floor. I am delighted that he has. I want to start by thanking him by name over the months by just putting a quote from the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, a Democrat, here for everybody to see:

"All I can say to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana is, thank you!"
Medicare must not be used as a wedge issue any longer. The question before this Congress is not whether to cut taxes or whether to save Medicare. That’s not the choice we’re facing. I support a tax cut, targeted, and I’m dedicated to saving Medicare. It’s not an either/or position.

That is from a distinguished Senator who is on the committee that will do both—will reform Medicare and will write the tax laws. I give him a great deal of credit. I think he is a man of his word when it comes to these issues.

Frankly, it is not correct that it is either Medicare, prescription drugs, reform, or tax cuts. The truth of the matter is, Senator BILL FRIST has just showed you.

I hear Senator after Senator get up on that side and say there is no money for Medicare in this budget, there is no room after the tax cut.

Let me go back and asked the Congressional Budget Office to do an analysis and assume that we froze discretionary spending. We put in the tax cut, we put in the $1.9 trillion for Social Security, and we asked them: How much money can be added to discretionary spending and Medicare reform and still live within the estimated surplus? And they told us—$505 billion.

I say to the seniors in this country, I believe you have witnessed here on the floor, through the good work of Chairman BILL ROTH and the Finance Committee—I say to the seniors across America, I have seen them produce a tax bill that I believe you will love because you care about your sons and daughters; you care about the married members of your family. This bill before us stops penalizing marriage for 22 million American families. I ask the seniors, isn’t that a good piece of work? It makes child care more available for our children. Isn’t that a good piece of work? It makes child care more accessible. And guess what? The President plans to veto these—all in the name of “we can’t afford tax cuts.”

To be honest with you, the truth of the matter is, when you finish with that Congressional Budget Office analysis, you are spending 23.4 percent of the surplus for tax cuts, you are putting the entire Social Security surplus aside, and you still have $505 billion to be used over the next decade for high-priority items. So for those who have come to the floor and said there is no money, there is $505 billion over the next decade. Do you want to use $100 billion of it for Medicare? Some say that is too much. The President thought $46 billion was enough. That is very interesting. We still have people talking about how much money we are going to need to reform Medicare. I don’t know how much. I trust the Finance Committee, under the leadership of BILL ROTH, to produce a bipartisan bill. The President had proposed $46 billion as the entire amount necessary. Remember, the chart my friend BILL FRIST put up said there is $505 billion over the next decade.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I will yield in a little bit. You want to ask about the authenticity of my charts. I already explained it and you weren’t here.

Mr. BAUCUS. I want to hear it.

Mr. DOMENICI. I heard your attack on it last night, but I was home so I couldn’t come down here.

Mr. BAUCUS. Well, you stayed away. Mr. DOMENICI. Let me finish.

The President asked for $46 billion for the entire reform package on Medicare. What are we talking about? Holding up a tax bill that takes care of the married sons and daughters of our senior citizens across America. They have children and need all these things that the Tax Code provides? They say, we just want to do anything but give them help, so we will even hold up their bill, claiming we are really holding it up for you seniors because we want to take care of Medicare.

Frankly, I have nothing but compliments for the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. KENNEDY, because he is one who is concerned about this. But I am equally comfortable in saying I am. I think Senator BILL ROTH of Delaware is concerned about it. I think Senator BREAUX is concerned about it. Frankly, I believe we are going to have plenty of money left over to fix that Medicare problem from that $505 billion.

Now, if the Senator wants me to explain this budget, I will explain it right now.

Mr. BAUCUS. I have a question.

Mr. DOMENICI. That is a CBO number.

Mr. BAUCUS. The number on your chart, and that says CBO-Senate Budget Committee, that is really a Senate Budget Committee number. That is not a CBO number.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the truth of the matter is, we can ask the Congressional Budget Office any questions we would like. We asked them how much is the surplus, if you freeze discretionary programs at this year’s level for 10 years. They said these are the numbers.

Mr. BAUCUS. That is correct. That is CBO.

Mr. DOMENICI. That is CBO numbers.

Mr. BAUCUS. If I might ask another question. Basically, the CBO baseline we are all working under, House and Senate, is the baseline which assumes that after the caps expire by 2002, spending under the discretionary caps will proceed at inflation.

Mr. DOMENICI. That is not true. Mr. BAUCUS. It is true. That is the assumption.

Mr. DOMENICI. That is not true. Senator. I did the budget resolution.

Mr. BAUCUS. What you have done is, you have gone back to CBO and said, OK, let’s assume that there is no inflationary increase.

Mr. DOMENICI. That is right.

Mr. BAUCUS. Which is not CBO’s assumption. But what you have done is, in order to show there may be, under your figures, there may be a $500- $400 billion in spending, the yellow mark. You went back to CBO and said, I need to show a number, that yellow bunch there. What you did was, you said, CBO.

Mr. DOMENICI. Is this off my time?

Mr. BAUCUS. Just a second. You said, OK, CBO, give me a baseline that I want you to produce. What I want you to produce is a baseline that shows no inflation after the year 2000 on spending caps up to the rest of the 10-year period.

If you do that, of course, you get that chart. But that is not the CBO numbers under which the Senate Finance Committee operated. That is not the numbers under which the House operated. That is not the numbers under which the reconciliation caps is operated. So that is why I am saying we are not operating off the same numbers. You produced your own numbers by telling CBO to produce them the way you wanted them produced.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A minute of the time yielded.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask Senator ROTH, may I have 1 additional minute? Mr. ROTH. One minute.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me assure fellow Senators and explain what this is. This is a true assessment of the surplus in total dollars, if you assume that for the next 10 years discretionary spending is frozen. I did that so we could find out how much new money is there, available to spend, because the discretionary programs are not entitled to an inflationary add-on. They are entitled to what they added on. So that is why I want to know where their numbers came from, they came from the budget resolution we produced, which had $181 billion in discretionary spending. That was something we came up with. I asked them to take that out. And when they took it out, they said: Now you have this much to spend. You have $505 billion.

If you would like to certify that and ask the Congressional Budget Office, is this correct, they will tell you absolutely, because we got it from them.

Mr. President, I am not going to answer questions now because I want to finish my argument.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a half minute left under the control of the Senator from Delaware. The Senator from New York has 5 minutes 51 seconds.

Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. He just yielded me a half minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A half minute has been yielded by the Senator from Delaware.
Mr. DOMENICI. Whatever baseline anybody wants to use, there is roughly $400 billion above a freeze available to be spent on discretionary spending on Medicare reform. That is all we try to show in this chart. Before you start the chart, you can spend however much you want, but I decided to spend none so we could put in perspective how much there is that we can spend out of this surplus, and these are authentic numbers. They are correct, if you start with that assumption.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. How much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Five minutes 51 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield a minute to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, the point I am making is, those numbers are accurate, if you believe the assumptions behind the chart. The assumptions behind the chart are no increases in discretionary adjustment, for discretionary spending over the next 10 years. I think that is an unrealistic assumption. And it is, in effect, a reduction of some $500 billion over 10 years. If you add in the $127 billion for defense, that means, in effect, about a $775 billion reduction in domestic spending. So again, he is right, if you make those assumptions. I say those assumptions are unrealistic.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, to come back to a very basic and fundamental concept, we believe it is as important to give assurances to our senior citizens that there will be a prescription drug benefit for them as it is to have significant tax breaks. That is what this is about.

Those that oppose us say they have a different conclusion, a different priority. They think tax breaks are preferable. Then they make other assumptions in terms of what is going to be available at some future time.

I am not going to spend the last few minutes on this dispute, because this has been debated over the past few days, but I think it is very clear that both the CBO and OMB have basically indicated that if we go through with the kind of tax cut that is being proposed and advanced by our Republican friends, there just won't be resources left to deal with the elderly, the children and other priorities.

I say, why ask the senior citizens to wait? Why should they always be the ones who have to wait? Why shouldn't we say that the Senate will put aside the amount necessary to afford a good benefit program on prescription drugs as part of this legislation?

We want to give them the assurance that they are going to be protected.

Mr. KENNEDY. How much time do I have?

Mr. Domenici. Five minutes 50 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, to come back to a very basic and fundamental concept, we believe it is as important to give assurance to our senior citizens that there will be a prescription drug benefit for them as it is to have significant tax breaks. That is what this is about.

We want to give them the assurance that they are going to be protected.

Why leave it iffy to the seniors? Why are they always the ones left behind? That is the question. This is an issue of priority.

We say, if you are going to go down this road with regard to tax breaks that benefit the wealthy, let's make sure we are going to allocate some funds for a prescription drug benefit for the senior citizens and disabled persons who are on Medicare.

My friend and colleague from Louisiana said we can't do that over this period of time. Well, they are going to have a conference on the two tax bills over the weekend. If they can have a conference on these two bills over the weekend, they ought to be able to get together and allocate sufficient funds for a prescription drug benefit in about half an hour. In the Finance Committee, our time can do that within an hour. They can do it forthwith—introduce and report back with funds reserved for a benefit program. But we wanted to leave this up to the Finance Committee. This should not be a procedural issue, and it is not. Those of us who are supporting it are telling every senior citizen that we believe they are a priority, that their interests are important, and that their health care needs will be met. This isn't only an issue for the health care of the senior citizens; this matters to their children and grandchildren. They have an interest in the health care of their parents and grandparents.

We ought to be able to have a Finance Committee that can report back allocations of resources and say a sufficient amount will be reserved for prescription drugs. We will go ahead with the rest, but this is reserved for prescription drugs for all of those in Medicare. Let the Finance Committee work that process out, either as part of the Medicare proposal or as a separate proposal.

This is what this is about—priorities. It is about priorities. Those of us who are supporting it are giving the priorities to our senior citizens.

Finally, how much time do I have remaining?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent a group of letters from various groups that support this motion be printed in the Record.

Mr. KENNEDY. How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One minute 50 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent a group of letters from various groups that support this motion be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL ON THE AGING.

Senator Edward Kennedy, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: The National Council on the Aging—the nation's first organization formed to represent older Americans and those who serve them—wants to oppose the irresponsible tax cut proposal reported out of the Senate Finance Committee and to support your amendment to dedicate a portion of the tax cuts to a new prescription drug benefit available to all Medicare beneficiaries.

We are deeply disappointed in the Finance Committee's irresponsible decision to squander virtually the entire non-Social Security surplus on a massive tax cut. If this proposal were to become law, it would be impossible to protect and strengthen Medicare for the future. Without surplus or other new revenues, the Medicare program cannot remain strong while adding a meaningful new prescription drug benefit.

The Finance Committee tax cut proposal ignores the impending retirement of a vast number of baby boomers. With the Medicare population doubling by 2035 and a tax cut that would balloon to almost $3 trillion in the second 10 years, there would be no way to protect America's seniors, ensure future solvency and provide adequate drug coverage. The numbers simply do not add up.

We are also extremely concerned that such a tax cut would lead to drastic cuts in domestic programs that vulnerable seniors depend on. The cuts would undermine such Older Americans Act programs as meals on wheels, protections against abuse and neglect, and home care services. The proposal clearly assumes that programs like these would be cut significantly.

The Senate Finance Committee tax cut proposal would rob Medicare of the funds needed for modernization and future solvency and drastically cut programs frail seniors need to remain independent. This massive tax cut is bad medicine for older Americans.

We deeply appreciate your efforts to attempt to protect and strengthen the Medicare program and its beneficiaries and to add a meaningful new prescription drug benefit.

Sincerely,

James Firman, President and CEO.

Hon. Edward M. Kennedy, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Dear Senator Kennedy: The American Nurses Association, the only full-service professional organization representing the nation's registered nurses through its 53 constituent associations, strongly supports your amendment to S. 1429, the Budget Reconciliation Bill S1429 that allows for medical prescription drugs for those in need. Elderly, of every economic means, will greatly benefit from this amendment.

It is our hope that the proposed cuts in taxes bill is not approved. Rather, that these monies are used in a more productive way benefiting those in need in general and elderly in particular.

Sincerely,

Marta Sotomayor, Ph.D., President.

Hon. Edward M. Kennedy, Russell Office Building, Washington, DC.

Dear Senator Kennedy: The National Hispanic Council on Aging (NHCoA), its chapters and affiliates, enthusiastically support your amendment to the Budget Reconciliation Bill S1429 that allows for medical prescription drugs for those in need. Elderly, of every economic means, will greatly benefit from this amendment.

It is our hope that the proposed cuts in taxes bill is not approved. Rather, that these monies are used in a more productive way benefiting those in need in general and elderly in particular.

Sincerely,

James Firman, President and CEO.
Washington, DC.

Dear Senator Kennedy: On behalf of the Epilepsy Foundation, the national voluntary organization that works for people affected by seizures through research, education, advocacy, and service, this is to support your efforts to provide funding for a Medicare drug benefit program. As the Senate considers S. 1429, The Budget Reconciliation Bill, it is particularly important to assure that Medicare beneficiaries with epilepsy, for whom out-of-pocket expenses for seizure medications can be significant, have access to prescription medications at an affordable price. We also commend your support for other programs important to individuals with epilepsy who may face limited financial resources, such as Medicaid and Social Security.

As baby boomers age, there will be increasing concern for the health of these age groups. Epilepsy occurs each year among elderly Americans. By the year 2030, it is projected that one out of every five people over the age of 65 will be diagnosed with epilepsy.

In addition, many low-income, young, disabled individuals with epilepsy are Medicare beneficiaries. As you know, the Budget Reconciliation Bill will seriously jeopardize support for prescription drug coverage under Medicare.

The cost of prescription drugs has increased at an average of 6 percent annually and is the leading factor in today's rising health care costs. This has particular impact on elderly as they are more likely to be using, and even dependent on, multiple prescription drugs.

I hope you are successful in convincing your colleagues to support this important amendment.

Sincerely,

Gail Sherer
Director, Health Policy Analysis, Washington Office.

Hon. Edward M. Kennedy,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Dear Senator Kennedy: This letter is written in support of your amendment S. 1429 to the Budget Reconciliation Bill. The Gerontological Society of America, an organization of 6,000 professionals in the field of aging, is vitally concerned that the tax cuts as proposed in the current Budget Reconciliation Bill will seriously jeopardize support for prescription drug coverage under Medicare.

The cost of prescription drugs has increased at an average of 6 percent annually and is the leading factor in today's rising health care costs. This has particular impact on elderly as they are more likely to be using, and even dependent on, multiple prescription drugs.

I hope you are successful in convincing your colleagues to support this important amendment.

Sincerely,

Carol A. Schutt, Executive Director.

Re Kennedy amendment on prescription drugs.

Hon. Edward M. Kennedy,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Dear Senator Kennedy: We are writing as Co-Chairs of the Health Task Force of the Consortium for Citizens with Disabilities to support your amendment to include and protect sufficient funds within the pending Budget Reconciliation Bill (and within the budget surplus) to allow for the design of a new prescription drug benefit for Medicare beneficiaries.

CDD is a Washington-based coalition of nearly 100 national organizations representing the more than 54 million people living with disabilities in the United States. The five million Medicare beneficiaries with disabilities are dependent on prescription drugs to maintain sufficient function, control disease progression, and prevent secondary medical conditions. It is imperative that Congress both acknowledge the benefit need and implement appropriate budgetary policies to begin to lessen the cost burden on the nation's most vulnerable populations.

Sincerely,

Bob Griss,
Director, Health Policy Analysis, Washington Office.

Senator Edward M. Kennedy,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Dear Senator Kennedy: The National Council of Senior Citizens (NCSC) is following closely the debate on S. 1429, the Finance Committee tax bill. It is important that any tax bill this session allows for the use of some of the projected on-budget surplus to bolster the Medicare program and create a universal Medicare pharmaceutical benefit.

NCSC, therefore, strongly supports your motion to recommit S. 1429 back to the Finance Committee and to enact a pharmaceutical benefit for all Medicare beneficiaries. NCSC believes that the Congress must use this historic fiscal opportunity assured Medicare's solvency and to meet the pharmaceutical needs of forty million Medicare beneficiaries.

We urge all members of the Senate to support your motion to recommit.

Sincerely,

Steve Protulis, Executive Director.

Hon. Edward M. Kennedy,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Dear Senator Kennedy: Consumers Union supports your prescription drug amendment which is consistent with our goal of extending affordable prescription drug coverage to all Medicare beneficiaries.

The need is great. The average Medicare beneficiary uses 18 prescriptions each year, and average prescription drug spending is projected to be $1,100 in the year 2000. More than half will spend over $500. Seniors and other Medicare beneficiaries suffer financial hardship because of their out-of-pocket prescription drug costs.

Private prescription drug coverage is inadequate, over-priced, and not available to many beneficiaries who can be denied coverage. Only 24 percent of Medicare beneficiaries have prescription drug coverage, and only 32 percent of the beneficiaries who do have prescription drug coverage have coverage that pays more than $1,250 for prescription drug benefits.

The potential for prescription drugs to benefit those covered by Medicare has increased substantially since Medicare was enacted. Our nation's thriving economy and our government's dramatically improved budget status make this the right time to take this urgently needed step.

Sincerely,

Eric R. Hargis, President and Chief Executive Officer.

Hon. Edward M. Kennedy,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Dear Senator Kennedy: On behalf of the Epilepsy Foundation, the national voluntary organization that works for people affected by seizures through research, education, advocacy, and service, this is to support your efforts to provide funding for a Medicare drug benefit program. As the Senate considers S. 1429, The Budget Reconciliation Bill, it is particularly important to assure that Medicare beneficiaries with epilepsy, for whom out-of-pocket expenses for seizure medications can be significant, have access to prescription medications at an affordable price. We also commend your support for other programs important to individuals with epilepsy who may face limited financial resources, such as Medicaid and Social Security.

As baby boomers age, there will be increasing concern for the health of these age groups. Epilepsy occurs each year among elderly Americans. By the year 2030, it is projected that one out of every five people over the age of 65 will be diagnosed with epilepsy.

In addition, many low-income, young, disabled individuals with epilepsy are Medicare beneficiaries. As you know, the Budget Reconciliation Bill will seriously jeopardize support for prescription drug coverage under Medicare.

The cost of prescription drugs has increased at an average of 6 percent annually and is the leading factor in today's rising health care costs. This has particular impact on elderly as they are more likely to be using, and even dependent on, multiple prescription drugs.

I hope you are successful in convincing your colleagues to support this important amendment.

Sincerely,

Eric R. Hargis, President and Chief Executive Officer.

Hon. Edward M. Kennedy,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Dear Senator Kennedy: Consumers Union supports your prescription drug amendment which is consistent with our goal of extending affordable prescription drug coverage to all Medicare beneficiaries.

The need is great. The average Medicare beneficiary uses 18 prescriptions each year, and average prescription drug spending is projected to be $1,100 in the year 2000. Hon. TED KENNEDY, of older Americans. That promote the dignity and independence continuing to work with you on all endeavors resources and support services are available local aging agencies to ensure that needed plauds your efforts in this direction. Treating illnesses through drugs since the remarkable advances in preventing and Medicare beneficiaries is for drug coverage. The Medicare drug benefit for Medicare recipients. The institution currently on the Senate floor which recognizes the need for a universal prescription drug benefit for Medicare recipients. The largest out-of-pocket expenditure for Medicare beneficiaries is for drug coverage. Many beneficiaries the medication is required to pay for their own prescriptions at a time when the cost of medication is rising sharply. Medicare needs to be modernized to recognize that during consideration of the Senate tax bill, you intend to offer a motion to recommit the bill to the Senate Finance Committee with instructions for the committee to develop a Medicare pharmaceutical benefit. The American Lung Association and its medical section, the American Thoracic Society, strongly supports efforts to move the issue of a Medicare pharmaceutical benefit to forefront of Congressional activity. America’s seniors need prescription drug coverage. The Medicare program, far too often, Medicare beneficiaries are forced to choose between purchasing the drugs they need or paying for food and housing. This intolerable dilemma is not just a problem for a few low-income seniors. It is a chronic problem being faced by middle class senior citizens. While there are a number of difficult issues that must be resolved before Congress can move forward with the creation of a much needed Medicare pharmaceutical benefit, no issue is more difficult than determining how to pay for the new benefit. Congress now faces a wonderful opportunity. The expected budget surpluses have created a rare opportunity for Congress to address the glaring inadequacies in the Medicare program, the lack of a drug benefit. Before Congress can responsibly consider an amendment, Congress must first ensure that federal resources exist to provide prescription drugs to our nation’s senior citizens. Recommitting the Senate tax bill to the Senate Finance Committee is an appropriate first step in this process. Again, thank you for your leadership on this process.

Again, thank you for your leadership on this issue.

Sincerely,

FRAN D’UMELLE, Deputy Managing Director.

Hon. EDWARD KENNEDY, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENO R KENNEDY: This is in support of your prescription drug amendment to the tax bill. The National Osteoporosis Foundation (NOF), the only non-profit, voluntary health organization solely dedicated to eradicating osteoporosis, represents 250,000 members. To NOF it is far more important that seniors receive the protection they need under Medicare than it is for Americans to receive a tax cut. First we need to protect our senior citizens and people with low incomes before we provide tax breaks for people of means. Sincerely, BENTE E. COONEY, MSW, Director of Public Policy.

Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. President, virtually every major organization that represents senior citizens or persons with disabilities is in urgent support of this particular motion.

They know what is happening. There isn’t a Member who hasn’t gone home and met with seniors in the state that doesn’t know what is happening. It is not good enough to say we care about it and we will have it some time in the future. You have the chance to handle it now, in the next 15 minutes.

We have a chance to put the Senate of the United States on record and say: OK, we will work the details out now, but we are going to allocate the resources for it. We don’t have to do as my friend and colleague from Tennessee says—that we can wait until after 10 years and see where we are; or as our friend from Louisiana said, we can deal with this same time in the future. The seniors deserve better. They need an answer and they need it now. They need a message from the Senate that says we hear you, we know what is of concern to those who have made this the great country that it is. They deserve this kind of a protection.

There is an enormous need and incredible consequences. It is a matter of life and death for many senior citizens. Let us say that it is at least—at least—as important to guarantee that there will be funding for prescription drugs as it is for a tax benefit. Many of us believe it is more important, but with this motion to recommit the bill we are saying it is at least as important as the tax cut bill itself. I hope this motion will pass.

Mr. ROTH, Mr. President, has all time on both sides expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER: Yes.

Mr. ROTH, Mr. President, I make a point of order against this amendment. Under section 904 of the Budget Act of 1974, I move to waive the applicable section of that act for consideration of the pending motion. I ask for the yeas and nays. The PRESIDING OFFICER: Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER: Under the previous order, the Senate will return to the consideration of the amendment of Senator GRAMM of Texas. There will be 2 minutes of debate, to be equally divided.

Mr. ROTH, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER: The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROTH, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER: Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1405

The PRESIDING OFFICER: The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. President, it is not a matter of one side of the aisle or the other on Senator GRAMM’s amendment. Now for the first time, we find ourselves in complete agreement with the chairman of the Finance Committee, that the amendment is a disaster. We don’t have to characterize the existing proposal, but it is not everything we would hope for. That is something even the chairman would agree that he is right to do so. I think we are right in a situation such as this to overcome partisanship. It would be wicked, indeed, to join the Senator from Texas, and then where would we be? But we won’t. I hope on our side we will support the chairman of the Finance Committee and show him that we share his view of the unacceptable extravagance of the proposal, the amendment of the Senator from Texas, which will soon be voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote the yeas are 45, the nays are 55. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected. The point of order is sustained and the motion falls.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield time to the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. STEVENS. Parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. CHAFEE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

If we are serious about passing a tax cut this year, I believe our bipartisan amendment is the right way to go. It would provide carefully targeted, well-deserved tax relief to the American people but for $300 billion less than either the House or Senate bills. There is no doubt in my mind that President Clinton will veto an $800 billion tax cut package, particularly one that resembles the House-passed bill. What is more, his veto will be sustained. All of that puts us right back at square one. All of this maneuvering could be avoided by the acceptance now of this sensible bipartisan alternative that is being proposed. I hope my colleagues will support that bipartisan alternative.

I thank the Chair, and I thank Senator Breaux and yield the remainder of my time to Senator Breaux.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Senator Breaux and Senator Chafee have thoughtfully crafted an amendment that offers a $500 billion tax cut. As with the alternative introduced yesterday by my friend, the distinguished ranking member of the Finance Committee, Senator Moynihan, Senator Breaux's amendment demonstrates that there is agreement on both sides of the aisle concerning the need to give individuals and families a well-deserved tax refund from the $3.3 trillion surplus.

I appreciate the fact that Senator Breaux, with his amendment, offers a deeper cut than the alternative introduced yesterday, but I am concerned that it still does not go far enough. It does not go far enough in providing the much needed relief Americans require to meet the necessary and important priorities in their lives. It does not go far enough to offer broad-based tax relief that will be necessary to gain the bipartisan support needed to pass this bill in the Senate.

For example, Mr. President, the Breaux amendment does not lower the 15-percent tax bracket. Instead, it simply expands it by only $2,500 for individuals and $5,000 for joint returns. And this benefit is only available for people who do not itemize. This means that if you take a deduction for home mortgage interest you will not receive a tax rate cut, under this bill. Additionally, because the 15-percent bracket is not reduced, the tax relief is not felt by middle-income taxpayers in that bracket, nor is there a reduction for those paying taxes in the higher brackets.

The Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999 cuts the 15 percent rate to 14 percent and broadens the 14-percent bracket by twice as much as what the Breaux amendment would do at the higher 15-percent rate.

AMENDMENT NO. 1422

(Purpose: To make an amendment in the nature of a substitute.)

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, the time in favor of this amendment will be controlled by Senator Breaux for both Democrats and Republicans.

I commend Chairman Roth for his hard work in crafting the Taxpayer Relief Fund Act. I was pleased to support that and defend it in the Finance Committee. It is a carefully balanced, equitable bill that will provide targeted tax relief to all Americans. It has several features that I would like to point out.

First, it gives a generous tax deduction to millions of Americans whose employers do not provide health insurance. In other words, those who buy insurance through a company, but the company itself pays for the insurance, this helps make that deductible.

Second, it corrects a flaw in the alternative minimum tax which, if left uncorrected, will result in the application of the alternative minimum tax to millions of American families who currently don't pay it.

Third, the bill contains some very important environmental and urban renewal initiatives. Despite all the meritorious provisions in the bill of Senator Roth, I believe $800 billion in tax cuts is too big. What if the budget surpluses needed to pay for these reductions don't materialize? Does any one of us believe that Congress can go out and hold discretionary spending to nearly $600 billion below current levels over the next decade?

What about the fact that we are now in the middle of, or perhaps at the end of, the longest bust of economic prosperity in our peacetime history? Is that going to continue unabated? Nobody can tell. Nobody has a crystal ball that will give an accurate answer.

So I am simply not comfortable with rebating more than half of the projected non-Social Security surplus in tax cuts. That is why, along with fellow members of the Finance Committee, Senators Breaux, Jeffords, and Kerry, as well as a number of other moderate Senators from both sides of the aisle, I have joined in sponsoring a $500 billion bipartisan alternative tax cut amendment.

This bipartisan alternative is a good, solid package. It would provide broad-based tax relief for middle income tax payers and families. It would increase the standard deduction to $4,350 for joint filers, $2,175 for single filers, and $1,300 for single filers.

These increases in the standard deduction would have the effect of simplifying tax preparation for some 9 million households. Our bipartisan alternative contains the historic home owner credit that I mentioned earlier. That is an outstanding provision and certainly will be of assistance in curbing urban sprawl.

Second, in addition to these elements, the bipartisan alternative also addresses the excess Social Security tax burden. An estimated $25 billion in taxes will be returned to middle and upper middle income taxpayers that would be most affected by the current law.

Unfortunately, the bipartisan alternative that I am supporting will not meet the same fate as the Kennedy motion. I strongly urge my colleagues to support it, to do right by the American people, and to do our duty as stewards of this great nation.
The Breaux amendment also falls short when it comes to providing family tax relief. For example, the Taxpayer Refund Act offers $52 billion in health-related cuts, this amendment offers only $32 billion, or roughly $20 billion less. The shortfall can be seen in specific areas such as long-term care, where this amendment would not allow an employer to provide such long-term care coverage as part of its employee benefits package.

Another important difference between the Taxpayer Refund Act and this amendment is the area of estate tax relief. We have heard eloquent and persuasive arguments these past two days concerning how important it is that Congress provide American families with relief from death taxes. And our legislation offers almost $63 billion in relief. This will help countless families save the businesses, farms, and ranches that have been built by parents and grandparents.

It is good for these families, and for America, as it protects their work and sacrifice. Unfortunately, this amendment only contains a third of the relief that these families would receive from our legislation.

Mr. President, I compliment Senator Breaux for the work he has done on this amendment. It certainly offers more relief than the alternative that the Senate voted against yesterday. Like yesterday’s alternative, it shows that there is bipartisan support for relief, but it does not go far enough. It does not go far enough in the area of family tax relief.

It does not go far enough in the area of savings and investment. It does not provide enough health care tax relief, nor does it provide enough relief against death taxes.

As I said when I spoke against the Democratic alternative yesterday, the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999 is built on the proposition that the income Americans earn belongs to them; that when government sets a budget and receives revenues in taxes to meet the budget obligations, government—by the will of the people—receives what it needs to pay the bills; and that when the people have given government more than what the budget calls for, well, then that money should be returned to the people.

It’s that simple, Mr. President. And with that understanding, Congress passed a budget resolution authorizing the Finance Committee to cut taxes by $792 billion over 10 years. The Finance Committee, with bipartisan support, met that responsibility and, as a result, has offered the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999. What we have offered is a broad-based tax relief plan that will benefit all Americans—one that is fair, constructive, and empowering.

Our plan will help restore equity to the 73 million American families with the relief and resources they need to meet pressing concerns. It will help individuals and families save for self-reliance in retirement. It will help prepare parents for educational costs. It will give the self-employed and under-insured the boost they need to pay for health insurance. It will begin to restore fairness to the tax code by eliminating the marriage tax penalty.

These are all important goals. And, as with the Democratic alternative, this amendment also falls far short of accomplishing all that we do with our broad-based plan. This amendment will leave many taxpayers without the relief they deserve. For that reason, I encourage my colleagues to vote against it.

Mr. Breaux addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. Breaux. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time does not begin to run on the amendment until the amendment is actually called up.

Mr. Breaux. Mr. President, I ask for the reporting of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Breaux], for himself, Mr. Chafee, Mr. Kerry, Mr. Jeffords, Mr. Torricelli, Mr. Specter, Mr. Bayh, Ms. Snowe, Mr. Lincoln, and Ms. Collins, proposes an amendment numbered 1442.

Mr. Breaux. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today’s RECORD under “Amendments Submitted.”)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 1 hour for the sponsor and 1 hour for the opponents.

Mr. Breaux. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, I suggest it is time for a reality check by Members of both parties as to where we are and what we are attempting to do.

We in the United States in this period of time are in a very unique, and I would also say very unusual, position in the sense that other countries around the world would love to have the problem that is facing all of us in the Senate this afternoon: We are faced with a country that has a $1 trillion surplus.

That is a problem that most countries would love to have. It is a problem because we are now faced with the consideration that we have to do it with a $1 trillion surplus. Some have said all of it should be used in the form of a tax cut and given back to the American people. We can argue about how they do that. But, for the moment, let’s just say they have decided all of it should go for a tax cut. Some on my side of the aisle say, no, we can’t do that. It should be a very small tax cut, and the rest should be reserved for other functions of Government.

I point out to my colleagues what I think the rest of the American people already fully realize. They know if the proposal on that side of the aisle—an $800 billion tax cut—should pass and get sent to the President, it is clearly going to come as a political argument to make against each other. If we pass the Republican bill, and it ultimately goes to the President, there will be a big ceremony in the White House where he will veto that piece of legislation. He will then have a powerful political argument to say the Republican Party has wasted the trillion dollar surplus. There are some on the Republican side of the aisle who will say that is a great argument.

The White House and administration will blame the Republicans for wasting the trillion dollars and giving an unnecessary and unrealistic tax cut that is targeted to the wealthiest people in this country. That is a great argument for us.

While the political parties may have a short-term political gain, I suggest that the real losers, if this is what is going to happen, are the American people because they are getting nothing—no tax cut, no decision on how to spend the surplus, with no money being allocated to real Medicare reform, and no pressure to continue to work on a Medicare reform program.

I suggest there is a different way we can look at this problem instead of a political opportunity. We can look at it as a policy opportunity to do something realistic, and that is what the amendment before this body does. It is a $500 billion tax cut, it is targeted to people who really need help in this country. There are some arguments that say the polls tell us the people don’t want any tax relief. If you explain it properly when you go back, people do need help. People in the middle-income brackets would like to have a greater standard deduction than they have now. People on the edge of being kicked up into the 28-percent bracket would like to stay in the 15-percent bracket, work harder and earn more for their family. People would like to see more tax assistance for education and help for the 43 million Americans who work every day and can’t afford to buy health insurance because they work for a company that doesn’t provide them health insurance. We have carefully considered the $500 billion to help those people.

Our legislation helps people buy health insurance. It helps people avoid the ridiculous marriage penalty by eliminating it and increasing the standard deduction. That is a tax policy that should have an opportunity to become law, because while we spend $500 billion over the next 10 years to help people who need help the most, we also reserve $500 billion for other priorities of Government, to do something on Medicare, which needs to be reformed. The chairman says we will do something in September, and that is a very courageous position to take. But there will be money to pay for what is needed. We will have a $500 billion pot of money to go to cover the very necessary discretionary spending needs in this country.

So we are offering something, according to a reality check, that has the potential to do something good as opposed to merely a political statement on both sides of the aisle. Unfortunately, people in both parties have taken the position: It is my way or no way.

We were sent here not to do political statements and take political positions only, but to work together to resolve differences and come to an agreement on public policy. I happen to think public policy is good politics. But good politics is not necessarily good policy. We have a choice today, in the next couple of hours, to determine whether we are going to be interested in good politics in the short term, or whether we are going to try to work together to reach an agreement that can become law and become policy for the American people.

There are very few things in life that are either all one way or the other way. Anybody who has been around for a short period of time knows that. Certainly, when we are discussing what to do with $1 trillion, there are a lot of good ideas. But we have to conclude that neither side is completely right. There has to be a blend of different ideas and philosophies in order to come together in a democracy and reach something that can be become law, and ultimately, good public policy. Then the argument will be over success, as opposed to an argument over failure. The track we are on now leads us to go opposite an argument over failure. The argument will be over success, as ultimately, good public policy. Then something that can become law and, together in a democracy and reach ideas and philosophies in order to come out and come to an agreement and come to an agreement that we are going to try to work together to reach an agreement that can become law and become policy for the American people.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELSTONE. I thank the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. President, I was listening to my colleague, Senator BREAUX from Louisiana, and I want to respond to what he said because he said it—like he says everything—very well, regarding the whole question of reality tests and good politics versus good policy.

I speak against this amendment, not for the sake of good politics but for the sake of good policy. I speak against this amendment understanding that reality test, as I think about the lives of people in our country. I want to say one more time on the floor of the Senate—and I have said it a couple of times—that I do not understand this kind of bidding war on tax cuts. I understand very targeted tax cuts to those citizens who need it the most. I understand very targeted tax cuts that speak to the concerns and circumstances of hard-pressed working families. But I think the vast majority of people in the United States of America—and I think this is the meaning of the poll about tax cuts—are saying this: You all are sort of—I don’t know what the word is—trying to pander to us and you have this argument that you have made for years—I am not saying all colleagues for this amendment have made this argument for years, but it goes something such as this: This money belongs to the people, and we are going to give it back to you, whatever there is in surpluses, which, of course, is all based upon assumptions we make. And, hopefully, these assumptions will be borne out about economic performance.

I really think the vast majority of people in Minnesota and the vast majority of people in the country are saying this belongs not to us but to our children and grandchildren, and whatever you have by way of surpluses—now we are focusing on the non-Social Security surplus—put it into reducing the debt to get the debt off the backs of our children. Make sure there will be Social Security and Medicare for our children and our grandchildren as it has been there for us; and, finally, make sure that our children and grandchildren are going to have the same opportunities we have.

We can’t do that. It came to the floor the other day and said about my own party’s proposal at $300 billion—$200 billion less than $500 billion—that we can’t do all of that and have these tax cuts to the tune of $500 billion at the same time.

To use the old Yiddish proverb, “You can’t dance at two weddings at the same time.”

If you look at the non-Social Security surplus, three-quarters of it is based upon cuts or the caps in discretionary spending.

We say we are concerned about veterans’ health care, we want to have community policing, we want to have environmental cleanup, we certainly want to make sure that what is becoming a crisis of affordable housing, and then all of us are forever and ever and ever talking about children and education. We talk about all those people who do not have any health insurance. We talk about prescription drug benefits for the elderly. How are we going to do all of that at the same time that we are going to have $500 billion of tax cuts? We are not.

With the Democratic proposal the other day on the floor with $300 billion of tax cuts, we were still several hundred billion dollars under where the caps take us. In other words, we were several hundred billion dollars—I think close to $300 billion—short of making up the cuts in discretionary spending. With $500 billion—worse worse.

I want to know where the give is going to be.

In all due respect, as I look at the pattern of our powerlessness in America today, it is a very distorted pattern that is leading us. I know there will be a reality test. I can just imagine with the squeeze on—that is exactly what you are going to have, deep cuts in discretionary spending for a decade, and then God knows where this takes us in the next decade—what is going to be cut.

We are going to go from 1 percent Head Start funding—pre-3-year-olds, Early Head Start funding—to less than 1 percent. We are going to go from 40 percent, or a little over 40-percent funding for Head Start, ages 2 to 5, to less than 40 percent. We are going to go from barely covering 20 percent of affordable child care needs for low-income families—much less moderate income—much more working families—to less than 20 percent.

That is the problem with this amendment.

My colleague from Louisiana said it is a compromise. It is a reality test. It is a compromise between the political center of gravity of where Republicans are and where Democrats are, but it is not based upon where I think the political center of gravity is in the country. I know that sounds presumptuous. Maybe it even sounds arrogant. I swear that I don’t mean it to be. But I really believe the vast majority of people in our country are for tax cuts that are very targeted, that speak to the concerns and circumstances of really hard-pressed families, and they want to see the rest of us deal with Medicare. They want to make sure we have Social Security, and people want to see some investment in our children. They want to see opportunities for children in this country. We can’t do it with this.

We have several hundred billion dollars more—well over $300 billion more—of cuts in discretionary spending if we go for their $500 billion package. Where are we going to cut? You mean to tell me that now we are putting a straitjacket on ourselves and boxing ourselves into such a way that we are not even going to be able to make any of these kinds of investments in health, skills, intellect, and character of our children? We are not going to be able to do it.

I don’t see this as being any kind of reality test amendment. I think this is not at all based upon where most people in the country are. I don’t think it is based upon what we have to do as a nation.

I think in the next century we have to grow together. I think in the next century, by the year 2030 or 2040 or 2050, we have to make sure the next century belongs to our children and our grandchildren. We have to make sure that they are living healthier. We have to make sure they have the best skill development. We have to make sure they are healthy. We have to make sure they are productive. We have to make sure there is less violence in their lives; that they grow up to be independent, resourceful, self-reliant, morally responsible and democratic citizens. That is what we ought to be doing with whatever kind of surplus we have.

We certainly shouldn’t be supporting a proposal with $500 billion of tax cuts that will crowd out all of that investment, especially when it comes to the most vulnerable citizens in our country.

I hope this amendment will be voted down.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield 6 minutes to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, first I would like to thank my colleague, Senator ROTH, for his management of this bill and for bringing this bill to the floor of the Senate. I am going to talk preliminarily about the bill.

First, let me say to our colleagues who are offering the $500 billion cut that if we reduce taxes, I think that is important. There are several provisions they have in their bill that I compliment them for.

Most of all, I want to talk about the bill that is before us, the bill as reported out of the Finance Committee by a vote of 13-7. That was a bipartisan vote. I think that is important.

Again, I think that happened in large part because of the Senator from Delaware and because of the content of the bill. I think that maybe we spent too much time talking about numbers. Maybe that is partly my fault. I like talking about numbers. We have a $3 trillion surplus. We are going to give a tax cut of $782 billion. That is about 25 cents on the dollar.

We are going to take two-thirds of the surplus and use that for debt retirement. That is good.

Some people say: Wait a minute. You are not reducing the debt enough. We reduced the debt more than Clinton’s proposal. Maybe that is good. I think that is probably good.

Concerning the tax cut and total of the estimated surplus: Some people may say: Maybe the estimates aren’t right. Maybe they are too optimistic. And even though we are only taking one-fourth of the surplus and allowing people to keep it, they don’t want to give it back to the taxpayrs. They’d rather spend it.

Well, that is not what a tax cut is. A tax cut lets people keep more of their money. They do not have to get it back from Washington, DC. Is it their money? Or is it Washington’s money? It is their money. Is it not a gift from us. We are taking it from them right now. In some cases we are taking too much. In some cases the taxes we are taking from people are unfair.

I am going to talk about that because the bill we have before us alleviates some of those problems. It doesn’t solve all the problems, but it alleviates some of the problems. Is it the best bill imaginable and perfect? No. But it does go a giant step toward eliminating inequities and injustices in the tax bill. I say “injustices.” There are some cases in the 1999 Tax Code where the taxes are unfair.

It is absolutely unfair for a married couple to have to pay more taxes than if they were living together and unmarried. It is unfair to have a tax penalty for being married—absolutely unfair.

The bill of the Senator from Delaware eliminates that. We want to get rid of it.

Unfortunately, that doesn’t happen under the Democrats’ proposal. Let me talk about that for a second.

Somebody says: Well, you eliminate the marriage penalty. What does the House do? The House basically doubles the exemption for single people and for couples. That is one way of taking care of the exemption. But it doesn’t eliminate the fact that a lot of people have combined incomes that push them into higher income brackets.

For example, an individual with a taxable income of $25,000 is taxed at 15 percent. Anything above that, they are taxed at 28 percent. That is kind of simple.

Let’s say you have two teachers who are married, and they have a taxable income of $25,000. If they file as individuals, they are both taxed at 15 percent. If they are married, their combined income pushes them into a 28 percent tax bracket.

It just so happens, as it works out, that in this case they are penalized $1,400.

Where did I get that? They have a combined income of $50,000. At 28 percent, that is $14,000. If they are married, it actually kicks in at $42,000. They have $8,000 that is taxed at a 14-percent rate. It is higher than what somebody is paying at the 14-percent rate. Senator ROTH’s bill moves the bottom rate from 15 to 14.

The difference between 28 and 14 is 14 percent. Fourteen percent times the number of thousands, if it is $10,000, that is $1,400.

This hypothetical couple pays an additional $1,400 more per year for being married. We shouldn’t penalize them for that.

In the bill each couple has the option of being taxed individually. If one member of the couple is taxed at 28 percent, fine. It doesn’t mean the next year the other couple will be as well. Maybe the income of that spouse, male or female, might be significantly lower. It would be taxed at a lower rate. Why tax them at the highest rate? We shouldn’t do that. We eliminate that rate in this bill. That is not insignificant.

The example I gave was a $1,400 differential. CBO says the average marriage penalty is $1,400. We should be able to eliminate that, and we do eliminate it in this bill. Who benefits? Nineteen million married returns would have that inequity eliminated. That is in this bill.

Let me talk about the 14-percent bracket expansion. I wasn’t particularly fond of this idea. I thought, why move the 15-percent rate to 14 percent? What does that mean? Somebody asked me the other day on a radio show: What does that mean to me as a taxpayer? It means we have a benefit for you, the taxpayer will benefit. How much do you benefit? Individuals, up to $250; and a couple, $430.

Therefore, a couple who makes up to $38,000 receives a $430 benefit. Somebody said the tax benefit in the bill is only 50 cents a day. Their numbers are not adding up. The benefit of that is $430 a couple.

I will touch on the bracket expansion. I want to compliment our colleagues on the pending amendment. They expand the 15-percent bracket up. We lose that in this bill, too, under the pending bill authored by Chairman ROTH. We expand the 15-percent bracket. That means a lot of people who are paying 28 percent will pay 15 percent. We increase that by $5,000 per couple or $2,500 for an individual. That means a couple will save $700. If they have a combined income of $42,000, we save them $700 by reducing the rate from 15 to 14. For a couple earning $40,000 or more will save $1,130 under the bill. That is almost $1,000 a month.

I use the test sometimes of my son and his wife. He sells cars, and she is a schoolteacher. They have one child. How will this benefit them? From those two provisions alone, they will save almost $100 a month in taxes, and they are a middle-income, tax-paying family, not a family that is a good provision. When combined with marriage penalty relief, the average married couple will realize significant savings through this bill.
July 29, 1999

For instance, those items together come to $1,100 just in the rate reduction and the expansion of the 15-percent rate. Then there is $1,400 savings in eliminating the marriage penalty. Now we are talking about $2,500 per year for a married couple making $40,000, $50,000, or $60,000 a year. That is not insignificant. That is $200 a month.

We are helping a lot of people. The number of people who would benefit from expanding the 15-percent rate upward, so they don’t have to pay 28 percent, the top of old 15 bracket, and be said the 15 percent by the substitute offered and 14 percent by Chairman Roth’s proposal. Chairman Roth’s proposal says to individuals in that category, we are going to cut their rate in half for that area. That is a giant, significant saving. Add that all together, and we are talking about $2,500 for a couple who make $40, $50, or $60,000. That is not insignificant.

Mr. President, 98 million people will benefit from the reduction in the 15 to 14 percent income bracket, 80 million who have incomes less than $75,000. In other words, it is a tax cut for taxpayers, not necessarily targeted the way as some others might like, but it is a tax cut that is weighted on the lower end of the tax schedule.

Moving the 14-percent bracket up, 36 million middle-class people will benefit from that provision; 19 million married returns will benefit from elimination of the marriage penalty.

Then there is something else that hardly anybody is talking about. We have a provision that eliminates the penalty called alternative minimum tax that disallows a lot of the tax credits we have already passed. In 1997 we passed a tax credit, $500 per child. It was $400 last year, $500 this year. That is a tax cut that is weighted on the lower end of the tax schedule.

The provisions I discussed are $506 billion out of $792 billion. That is over five-eighths of the bill I have already described. I haven’t heard anybody single out any of those sections and say: that is a good provision, we shouldn’t have that provision.

Let me discuss a couple of other areas in this bill and why we should pass the bill. Let me talk about estate taxes. A lot of people are not aware of how the amendment of the Senator from Delaware works. It replaces the unified credit with an exemption. Most people say: What in the world are you talking about? Unified credit, under the existing system, says we will credit you so much in taxes, and you don’t have to pay anything. You start paying taxes at whatever rate it is. It means if you have a taxable estate, once you start paying taxes, you start paying taxes at a 39-percent rate. If you have a taxable estate of $1 million, $39 percent goes to the Government.

What we do by replacing the unified credit with an exemption is, once you run out of the exemption, you start paying taxes at the lowest rate, which is 18 percent. That is a big difference. That is a big difference for estates that are barely taxable. So, if you are over the exemption amount—the exemption amount today is $650,000—and you don’t have to have a amendment or to strike it out. If anybody thinks the marriage penalty provision, which is $112 billion—again, probably about 15 percent of this entire package—is too generous, if Members don’t think we should have raised the united a percentage point higher, offer an amendment and take it out. If Members don’t think we should cut the rate from 15 percent to 14 percent—which is $298 billion, which is the biggest provision in this entire bill, which is three-quarters of the entire package—Members don’t think it should be in there, take it out. I would oppose any such amendments, because these provisions are at the heart of this legislation and are what make this bill a tax cut for taxpayers on the lowest end of the ladder. A lot of people say the Republican package is a tax cut for the rich. It is not. Those people have not read the bill. This bill reduces taxes for all taxpayers, including people at the lowest end of the economic ladder.

The estate tax rate today says any estate over $3 million, they want 55 percent. Why in the world would the Federal Government be entitled to take over half of what somebody worked value or that entire al gain? That is not insignificant. You should not be taxing somebody because somebody dies. You should tax them when that property is sold. If the people who receive the property, the beneficiaries, the family, if they want to keep the business and keep the business operating and running, great. If they want to sell the business, tax it as a capital gain and tax it at the old valuation, at whatever escalation has been in the market value. That is a huge step towards bringing about some relief in estate taxes which I think is critically important. If you believe, as do I, in family-owned businesses, if you believe the Government is not entitled to take over half of people’s property just because they pass away then you should support this bill. Somebody said earlier this provision in the bill only benefits the wealthy. I disagree strongly with that statement.

My father, unfortunately, passed away when I was pretty young and we had a family-owned business, Nickles Machine Corporation, in Ponca City, OK. We had a significant dispute with the IRS for 7 years about the valuation of this company. The IRS said: We think it is worth a whole lot more and we want you to pay a lot of taxes. My mother did not pass away; my brothers and sisters did not pass away—just my father. And he was second generation in this business. Yet the Government said: OK. We had a significant dispute with the IRS for 7 years about the valuation of this company.

company, maybe it is a farm or ranch, maybe it is a restaurant, and it happens that you come up in the annual date to Government comes in and says: We want half. I absolutely think that is wrong. That is one of the many reasons why I think we need a tax cut today.

That is one of the reasons why I think we need a tax cut today. My colleague from New Jersey has offered an alternative proposed by our colleagues that would provide $500 million. I note the estate tax relief they have in their provision—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 15 minutes of the Senator has expired.

Mr. NICKLES. I ask an additional 10 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. NICKLES. Looking at the provision offered by our colleagues, in the substitute they have $19 billion of estate tax relief and the estate tax relief offered in the underlying proposal is $63 billion. So it does a lot more in estate tax relief in the chairman’s bill than it does in the substitute. I happen to believe in estate tax reform very strongly, and not because it benefits the wealthy. I happen to believe it is a matter of fundamental fairness and freedom. People should be able to work their entire life and be able to pass their property on to their kids without Uncle Sam coming in and saying that we want half or even over half. The chairman’s amendment helps make that change.

Also in the underlying bill, we increase retirement savings. Everybody in this room knows we do not save near enough. What we do under the underlying bill is we increase IRAs over a 3-year period from $2,000 to $5,000. We do that in both the IRAs that are tax exempt going in and the ROTH IRAs, into which you may put after-tax dollars. That means we are allowing people to put in more money to save for their own retirement.

The $2,000 limit goes back for years and has not been indexed for inflation. Frankly, we in Congress should encourage savings. We want people to be less dependent on Government, more dependent on themselves, to be able to save for their retirement. Increasing this amount from $2,000 to $5,000 is a giant step in the right direction.

Again, I compliment the chairman. This provision is in his bill. It is not in most of the other bills. I do not believe it is in the substitute as well.

Finally, I want to touch on one other thing, and that is the self-employed health care deductibility. The chairman’s bill says, for self-employed persons, who are going to be in the self-employed health care deductibility. We had this debate actually when we were debating the Patients’ Bill of Rights. It was included in the substitute that passed the Senate. I argued then if we want to increase health care access, we should at least make the Tax Code equitable in this area, even when the self-employed health care deductibility. We had this debate actually when we were debating the Patients’ Bill of Rights. It was included in the substitute that passed the Senate. I argued then if we want to increase health care access, we should at least make the Tax Code equitable in this area, even when the self-employed health care deductibility.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished cosponsor of the amendment, the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. TORRICEILLI. Mr. President, thank you very much.

The Senate has had before it three very distinct blueprints for the American future, not a tax plan for the remainder of this year or next year but blueprints that will dictate many priorities and decisions for more than a decade. They are very distinctly different.

The Senate has before it a Republican tax reduction plan that will never become law because the President will never sign it. The Senate is considering a Democratic tax reduction plan that will never become law because this Congress will never pass it. And there is a bipartisan tax reduction plan of $500 billion now before the Senate that is termed a "the October plan," but it should be better known as the “October plan,” because we may spend July and August debating our partisan proposals.

Members of the Senate may not endorse this proposal today, but I suggest that by the time we reach October, it is a plan such as this that will bring us together.

This plan, crafted by Senators BREAUX, KERREY, CHAFEE, SPEECH, COTTER, SNOWY, and a group of others, is based on a belief that the Nation should have returned to it as much of its tax dollars as possible while still being prudent to allow the development of a surplus, protecting Social Security and other national priorities. Reducing taxes is a national priority, so is hiring 100,000 teachers, rebuilding American schools, providing for a pharmaceutical benefit in Medicare, improving the national infrastructure, and reducing the national debt.

Like any compromise, this plan is designed to accommodate many of these
This tax reduction plan is a fair and reasonable dividend. This surplus developed for a reason. In 1993, appropriately in response to burgeoning deficits, this Congress increased taxes by a quarter of a trillion dollars. In the years that followed, American businesses produced and American businesses produced and American businesses produced and American businesses produced and American businesses produced and American businesses produced at unprecedented levels. They have provided an economic expansion and also a Government surplus, and they deserve now to have some of it returned. That is the foundation of this plan. But we accomplish nothing by returning these tax revenues if we only prestige a burgeoning deficit in the future or we deny other needs in the country as well.

Tax reduction is an economic imperative, in my judgment, but so is education, and so is improvement of the national health care system, and so is expansion of the national infrastructure. There is before this Senate but one bill that can achieve these tax reduction goals while meeting these balanced national objectives, and it is this plan, the "October plan."

This plan is also based on a recognition that even in good economic times, it is important to recognize that these are not perfect economic times. The United States today faces twin economic problems:

First, record levels of consumer debt. The current economic expansion is threatened by mounting middle-class consumer debt more than any other single indicator. Middle-income families with young children are shuddering more debt in home mortgages, credit card bills, and educational expenses than at any time in our national history.

This plan is designed to respond to that need by moving 4 million American people who earn $50,000, $60,000, $70,000 in family income, with young children, and moving them from the 28-percent bracket to the 15-percent bracket where they belong.

This Government has no right to go to a family that earns $60,000 and $70,000 and struggles every month to educate its children, provide housing, clothing, and food, and take 28 percent of that income for the Federal Government. I do not believe it was ever our intention.

Prosperity and inflation moved people into these tax brackets. For a long time, some of us lived with the illusion that people who lived at these modest incomes somehow had expendable income, as if they were living lives of luxury. There is no luxury in American life today on an income of $30,000 to $70,000. People struggle to make ends meet. People are not saving money, and they do not have money because this Government has made it economically irrational to do so, and the Tax Code is the answer to changing that reality.

Our bill, I think, is easily defined and explained. It is simply $500 billion over the course of this next decade. It removes 3 million people entirely from the tax rolls by increasing the standard deduction and eliminating taxes on modest savings. Three million people, largely senior citizens, will pay nothing.

Second, as I suggested, we move 4 million people from the 28-percent tax bracket to the 15-percent tax bracket, meaning that a family of four earning $37,000 will now have their taxes arguably reduced in half and have money available for their own family needs. For a single person earning $37,000, this translates into a $600 tax cut. A family earning $71,000, as I suggested, receives a $3,100 tax cut.

We also do more. We eliminate the marriage penalty entirely in the standard deduction. We increase and expand the child care tax credit to remove American women from this dilemma where they have to choose between going to work to pay the mortgage and knowing their children are safe by allowing affordable child care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded the Senator from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. TORRICELLI. I close by urging my colleagues to join with me in this bipartisan plan for reasonable and affordable tax relief. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BREAUX addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BREAUX. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank my colleague from Louisiana.

Mr. President, I join in cosponsoring this centrist approach. In my view, the tax proposal to cut $792 billion over 10 years is too much. It may be that the United States would be best served by not having any tax cut at all, but it appears we are headed for some tax cut. And a group of centrists, so-called moderates, have joined together on the proposal which is now on the floor for a tax cut of some $500 billion.

This same group, in substantial measure, was assembled 2 weeks ago on the so-called Patients' Bill of Rights, where the centrists had an alternative proposal to the more extreme proposals on the right and on the left.

We have rounded up the so-called "usual suspects," but we have a few more; and I think there is some chance that this bill, this proposal, this amendment will be adopted, if not today, then perhaps ultimately.

At the outset, I acknowledge the proposition which has been advanced by the Chairman of the Federal Reserve, Alan Greenspan: that the Government of the United States would be best served if there were to be no tax cut at all.

The projections of the surpluses are highly speculative. If you change the interest rate a bit, or if you change the unemployment rate a bit, those surpluses would change very dramatically.

There is a strong argument for the proposition that we would be best advised to pay down the national debt. The national debt now stands in excess of $5.5 trillion. When the President of the United States would be best served if there were to be no tax cut at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded the Senator from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BREAUX addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BREAUX. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from New Jersey.
Reagan, by the time he had left office, the national debt was in the range of $3 trillion, and it began to go up.

Then, the national debt would reduce the carrying costs on the interest, and there is a great deal to be said for that. But my sense is the temper of the times is that we are going to be looking at a tax cut to some extent. If we ameliorate, or reduce the tax cut from the proposed $792 billion to $500 billion, then we have more assurances that we can take care of other needs of America.

There is a consensus that the Social Security fund ought to remain inviolate, ought to be preserved at all costs. I believe that it is true that the Social Security fund will be secure under any of the pending proposals. But you can't be entirely certain of that because that significance measured against economic forecasts, the unemployment rate, and the interest rate.

Beyond Social Security, there is a commitment to preserve Medicare. A lesser tax cut would provide a better guarantee that funds will be available for Medicare.

Then we have the issue of prescription drugs where, again, there is a growing sense that this is an issue which has to be taken into account. Again, a lesser tax cut gives more flexibility for prescription drugs.

So when we look at the imponderables and the problems, there is much to recommend a lesser tax cut, which has to be taken into account.

Where we have the competing proposals—the one which was defeated yesterday, the Democratic proposal at $295 billion; the competing proposal of $792 billion—the $500 billion figure will provide more flexibility for other needs of America, will move to the center, will give better assurance that funds will be available to protect Social Security, to provide Medicare reform, to provide important programs such as prescription drugs, to provide for the kinds of funding necessary for the National Institutes of Health, the other important items yet to be resolved, to provide more flexibility for the White House on the pending appropriations bills.

I join my colleagues in urging adoption of the Chafee-Breaux proposal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Alaska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska is recognized. Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Alaska.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I join my colleagues in urging adoption of the Chafee-Breaux proposal.
Mr. MURKOWSKI. I will yield at the end of my statement. I will be happy to at that time answer any questions you may have. We only have to go back to December 1980, under the Carter administration. Some people have forgotten. Do you remember what the inflation rate was? The inflation rate was better than 11 percent. Interest on the prime rate in this country was 20.5 percent. Imagine that. What was that due to? Partially the oil shock. So here we have an opportunity where we can have a significant refund, and the beneficiary is the American people.

The fact is that what the President wants us to do is not to provide a tax refund to the American people. Instead, he wants to take that surplus to finance $1 trillion in new spending. Despite his claim that he wants to cut taxes, we have scored the President's budget as actually raising taxes by $100 billion over the next 10 years. In other words, at a time when we are running a real surplus in the hundreds of billions of dollars, this President wants to impose even more higher taxes on the American people so he can finance a big and growing Government.

The bill before us should not be vetoed because it provides a tax refund to every single American who pays taxes. The lion's share of the tax cut, more than $410 billion, results from cutting the 15-percent rate to the 14-percent rate. Is that what President Clinton objects to—elimination of the marriage penalty? Is that what President Clinton wants to do? Or does the President object to elimination of the marriage penalty? That must be the case, because if our President had his way and we cut taxes by $300 billion, we could not eliminate the marriage penalty. We could not cut the rate paid by the lowest income earners.

When the baby boomers are set to retire in 11 years, this bill expands retirement incentives, allows increased competition by people over 50 years of age. I commend the chairman, Mr. ROTH, for upping the limit on contributions to IRAs to $5,000. It has been over 20 years since we raised the $2,000 IRA limit. Upping the limit to $5,000 is long overdue, and it is incentive for the American people to save for retirement.

In recent months we have seen that America's savings rate is actually a negative number. These incentives could well serve to increase our savings rate. Is that what President Clinton objects to—retirement savings incentives? Or does the President object to the health care provisions in this bill, health care changes that bring a much-needed solution to the ''Tax Code''? Allowing the self-employed to deduct 100 percent of the cost of health insurance finally brings small businesses to parity with large corporations. What is wrong with that? For the first time in our history, under the bill, employees who pay more than half of their own health care premiums will be able to take an above-the-line deduction for those costs. It sounds fair to me. I thought the President was so concerned about the uninsured. Why would he, if he was that concerned, veto a tax bill that finally provides health equity to employees and small business owners? I ask that question of the President.

Much overlooked in this bill are the more than $12 billion in educational changes that will make it easier for graduates to pay for their student loans. In addition, more than $1 billion of this bill will help communities construct new schools. Does the President object to that? Mr. PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Alaska has expired.

Who yields time?
Mr. MURKOWSKI. I urge support of the Finance Committee chairman's bill.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding the 5 minutes. We have worked closely together on this bill. I am here to recommend passage of it.

First of all, I commend my chairman, Senator ROTH. I support many of the provisions in his bill. Many of the provisions in his bill are in this bill. I express my sincere hopes that the bill's good provisions will stand. I agree with much of what Senator SPECTER said about some of the ramifications if we continue on our present course. This is basically ''Roth lite'' as far as the bill goes.

It is very much modeled after it. It just cuts it back somewhat so we can get sort of in the middle.

This $500 billion centrist alternative represents an attempt by some of us to find a middle ground. The Senate finance Committee has approved tax cuts of roughly $800 billion. The President has said he will veto a bill of that size. The Senate Democrats have proposed tax cuts of $300 billion, and the President has signaled his willingness to sign a bill with that level of tax cuts.

The bad news in all this is that the parties are at an impasse. One side is dug in at $800 billion; the other will not budge from $300 billion. The good news is that both sides agree that we can afford and achieve some level of tax cut. I certainly do. And since both sides agree that a tax cut is appropriate, sooner or later we will have one.

What those of us sponsoring his centrist amendment are saying is: ''Let's compromise. Let us take a step toward the middle. Let us settle on a figure we can agree on. And let us get this tax cut done—sooner, rather than later. If neither side can give ground, if we lock ourselves into hard and fast positions, this whole process will come grinding to a halt. How the process will ultimately play out is anybody’s guess. It could mean we have another government shut-down. Or it could mean we end up with an omnibus bill like we had last year.

It does not have to be that way. This should not turn into a game of “chicken” between political parties. But both sides will have to give a little.

In the end, I think we will ultimately end up with a tax bill that is somewhere between $300 billion and $800 billion—in other words, around $500 billion. I do not see why we cannot settle on an acceptable midpoint now.

You can get a lot of tax relief with $500 billion. Millions of taxpayers will get a break, as the 15-percent bracket will be expanded. Up to $5,000 that was formerly taxed at 28 percent will now be taxed at 15 percent. This 13 percent reduction in tax will mean savings up to $650 for married couples.

Our centrist package also addresses the marriage penalty. It eliminates the marriage penalty in the standard deduction, and eliminates part of the marriage penalty in the earned income credit. Our Tax Code should not punish marriage—especially among the working poor. Right now two low-income people who marry often find themselves with a smaller earned income credit than they would have had as single taxpayers. That shouldn’t be.

This alternative also encourages savings and investment. The first $1,500 of capital gains would be tax-free. Again, this is not just tax savings; it’s also tax simplification. During the tax filing season, the complex schedule D was taxing even the tax preparers who claim to have been able to file on a postcard schedule D.

Our alternative includes targeted provisions that serve important national interests like retirement savings, education, and protection of the environment. When people move between jobs it will be easier for them to take their pension benefits with them. More people will be able to claim the deduction for student loan interest. Long-term care insurance would be deductible. The research and experimentation credit would be permanent and the low-income housing tax credit would be extended. These are but a few of many tax issues addressed in our alternative package.

In the Finance Committee, I voted to keep the bill out of committee and keep the process going. I applaud Chairman Roth for the reasoned approach he has taken in this bill.

With a projected surplus approaching a trillion dollars, I think we can afford some tax relief. I must confess, however, I’m a little uneasy with the level of tax cuts in the Finance Committee bill. An $800 billion tax cut leaves little margin for error if the surplus projections are not correct. An if these projections underestimate the surplus, we can always come back and enact further tax cuts.

I’m also concerned that an $800 billion tax cut doesn’t leave us a cushion sufficient to fund a Medicare prescription drug benefit, to pay down our national debt or to address other areas of concern, like education. I think we should go slower, be a little more cautious. Some would call this the conservative approach.

Still, it will be a tax cut. Our $500 billion alternative allows for meaningful tax relief, while also leaving a significant chunk of the surplus intact for other national priorities.

Mr. President, the American people are tired of gridlock. They are frustrated that compromise is becoming a lost art. We don’t need to wait for a veto before getting down to serious negotiations. We can get this bill done today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New Jersey for 5 minutes.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the Finance Committee. I appreciate this opportunity to state my opposition to the Chafee-Breaux amendment, which would provide a $500 billion tax cut. The proposal is being put forward by some of the moderate Members of this body, and I have tremendous respect for Senators Chafee, Breaux, and the other cosponsors. Its sponsors may be moderate, but this amendment is not. If we really look at the numbers, I would say it is fiscally irresponsible.

It is always tempting to believe the best solution to a conflict is to split the difference. But that is not true when one side is taking an extreme position. That is what is happening.

In this case, splitting the difference would be terrible policy. It would force either unreasonable cuts in education, defense, and other priorities or, more likely, it would eventually force excessive cuts in Medicare and Social Security.

Supporters of large tax cuts have been coming to the floor arguing that we have a $3 trillion surplus to divide up. But that is wrong. I have even heard the arguments being made about how well regarded the original Finance Committee bill of $792 billion in this room, and claiming that it is the only fair thing to do—to give it back to the people who paid the bills in the first place. The fact of the matter is, we are all on a mortgage; all of our citizens share a mortgage, all of us in this room, and outside in the countryside. It is our national debt.

I don’t know any family that, given a chance to get a couple of bucks in their pockets—less than $150 in the tax cut for modest-income earners of $38,000—would not rather have their mortgage paid off for them. That is the condition we ought to be in—paying off our mortgage and paying off our national debt, not giving it back in forms that produce most of the benefits for people in the highest share of the jurisdiction.

We were talking about people who are wealthy, who make $800,000 a year—and any judgment, they are pretty well off in this country—getting $23,000 a year worth of tax cuts in the original bill. Now we are in the compromise stage, and we are down at a level that still, frankly, doesn’t make economic sense.

It is expected that we are talking about a surplus. Well, first, I want to point out it is a projected surplus. There is a big difference. Hardly anybody who has looked at CBO’s projections truly believes that they are without question. To be fair to CBO, even they have acknowledged their estimates are uncertain.

They depend not only on guesses about our economy, but they depend on assumptions that the Congress will make drastic cuts in a broad range of popular programs from veterans’ hospitals to education to law enforcement. If Congress merely maintains defense spending at the levels requested by President Clinton, all of these other programs would have to be cut about 40 percent.

Alan Greenspan, Chairman of the Federal Reserve, who is really the most esteemed spokesman on the economic condition in our country, has said: Hey, be careful. The Fed Chairman told the Banking Committee in an article from the Washington Post this very day:

It would be unwise to cut taxes now along the basis of surplus forecasts that could be far off the mark. If Congress goes ahead with a major tax cut, I think it also has to be prepared to cut spending significantly in the event that the forecasts on which they are based are wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I thought I had 10 minutes.

Mr. ROTH. I yield 2 minutes from the bill.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, it is less time than I thought I would have to speak on this subject. I have
The current surplus is truly a mirage. If Congress were to maintain basic Government functions at this year's level, it would be a $1 trillion non-Social Security surplus, yes, but it would be more like one-tenth of that, or $100 billion, by the time we finish with this tax cut.

We are slashing prospectively important domestic programs such as VA and other programs, trying to find trick ways to satisfy our obligation to the Veterans Administration and to the Census, which is clearly identified in our Constitution as an obligation, now calling it “emergency” spending.

What we are observing, I think, is some sleight-of-hand work. I hate to use that term, but that is what I see, “cooking the books,” making sure we take whatever forecasts suit the situation the best.

There is no way to do what we want to do, what we are obliged to do, if we are going to give away $500 billion in tax cuts and all the other ways to deal with our financial or fiscal condition. Alan Greenspan confirms that.

I hope this Senate will respond to the American people’s desire. Get rid of the mortgage, pay down the debt, and then talk about tax cuts that are targeted specifically to modest-income people.

Mr. BREAUX. I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Maine, Ms. COLLINS.

Ms. COLLINS. I thank my colleagues and the Finance Committee for publishing the bill and making it widely available in the Senate. I am pleased to rise in support of the Chafee-Breaux bipartisan compromise plan. I commend the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Rhode Island for their leadership in bringing Members together to craft this important proposal. This amendment represents a fair, prudent, and responsible compromise between and among the competing proposals we have been debating. It is a sensible bipartisan plan.

In crafting this proposal, our bipartisan coalition has been guided by several principles. The first is perhaps best summed up by the expression, “Don’t count your chickens until they are hatched.” We know, based on CBO estimates, that the reconciliation may have a projected surplus of $3 trillion. However, $1.9 trillion of that surplus is due to a surplus in the Social Security trust fund. We don’t think we should spend a penny of the Social Security trust fund surplus for either tax cuts or for spending increases on non-Social Security-related programs. That should be reserved for paying Social Security benefits and for Social Security reform.

That leaves roughly $1 trillion to decide how we are going to allocate. Our bipartisan coalition believes adopting a more prudent tax relief goal of approximately $500 billion over the next 10 years will provide millions of families in Maine and across the country with much-needed tax relief, while at the same time guarding against the possibility that the current surplus projections may not be fully realized in the years to come. Our proposal allows for additional amounts of the public debt to be paid down, as well as reserving the extra funds that could be used to preserve and protect Medicare, to strengthen education, and for other priority programs.

Our second principle is to target the tax relief we are providing. In this time of economic good fortune, we should focus our tax relief on hard-working lower-income and middle-income families. Our proposal would do just that. It allows for additional public debt to be paid off while removing 3 million low-income taxpayers from the tax rolls altogether. In addition, it slices the marginal tax rate nearly in half for another 4 million Americans.

The third principle we have adhered to is quite simply pragmaticism. In order to craft a plan, and actually make it into law a tax relief bill, we must offer a plan that enjoys bipartisan support. Our proposal meets this test and in the process offers a blueprint for reasonable tax relief that should and could become law. Indeed, I predict that ultimately what will be signed into law will be very close to the proposal the bipartisan coalition has put forth today.

In addition to this broad-based tax relief, our proposal includes a number of compelling tax relief measures. For example, the amendment provides substantial relief for the unfair marriage tax penalty that causes many married couples to pay more taxes together than they would if they had remained single. It also contains an important health care-related tax proposals that I, along with many other Senators, have advocated for some time. That includes a 100-percent deduction for self-employed individuals purchasing their own health insurance, as well as the deduction for the purchase of long-term care insurance.

In addition, our amendment contains valuable estate tax relief provisions to help our family businesses and our family farms stay in the family. It includes provisions that I sponsored to help families save for college education of their children as well as to encourage the environmental benefits that come from biomass plants.

An astute, perhaps even a casual, observer might well notice that our bipartisan coalition’s plan bears a striking resemblance to the plan put forth by the Finance Committee. It is, however, a slimmed down version of the Finance Committee bill in that it trims about $300 billion from the Finance Committee legislation.

I urge the adoption of the Chafee-Breaux amendment. It seems a good middle ground that best provides tax relief in a prudent way for American families.

Mr. ROTH. I yield 6 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. President, I thank Senator ROTH for this time.

I am pleased to rise in support of the tax relief act that has been proposed by Senator ROTH and the Senate Finance Committee.

During this debate which has been going on some 15 hours and several days before that, we heard many opponents of tax relief argue that we ought to focus on paying down that national debt, which now stands at about $3.6 trillion. Many on the other side are stepping back from that issue and down that national debt should encourage Members to support the President’s plan, which actually has very limited tax relief in it. By the CBO’s own estimates, it actually has a $95 billion tax increase. Many people believe that going down that national debt will pay down more of the national debt. But, in fact, if you look at the real numbers and look where the national debt will be 10 years out, in the year 2009, you see that Senator ROTH’s plan and the Finance Committee plan pays down more of the national debt, the external national debt, than the President’s plan which has a net tax increase of $95 billion.

In fact, under the Senate plan that is now before us, the national debt will be paid down, the external national debt, will be paid down from $3.6 trillion to $1.5 trillion by the year 2009 versus only $1.8 trillion under the President’s plan. In other words, even with the tax cuts, we pay more of the external national debt, and we are in a better position, therefore, in the future to take care of our ongoing obligations for Social Security and Medicare.

But I want to encourage my colleagues to step back from this whole debate. We have heard all sorts of arguments about how much the surplus is projected to be—$3 trillion—and their plan will save that amount and this plan will cut taxes by this amount. But let us step back and just look at where overall levels of taxation are right now in our Nation’s history.

Going back to 1941—is this from the Congressional Research Service—if you look at the levels of taxes in this country. Federal taxes as a percentage of our gross domestic product, you will see that our taxes right now are almost at an all-time high. Right now, Federal taxes as a percentage of our gross domestic product are 20.6 percent of our economy.

When President Clinton first took office, taxes were 17.8 percent. If we were to give the entire $3 trillion surplus back in the form of tax cuts, the tax burden would still be 18.8 percent of the gross domestic product. You have to look back to the late 1950s. That tax burden is up here. To get equivalent high tax burdens, you have to look to the administration of Franklin Delano Roosevelt in 1944, or Harry Truman in 1945 when we were attempting to throw Hitler out of Europe, and when we were spending 38 percent of our money on our Nation's defense. Today, we are only spending about 23 percent. By historic standards, our taxes are enormously high. In fact, they are unprecedented in our peacetime history, and we ought, therefore, to be thinking about tax relief.

Another thing I would like to point out to you is that right now the average family in America is paying nearly 40 percent of its family income in combined Federal, State, and local taxes. That 40-percent burden means that in families in this country where you have two parents who are working, one of them is working for the government. I don't happen to think that is right. We need to do what we can to alleviate that tax burden on our American families.

We talk all the time in Washington about government programs that can help our families, help our children, improve their education, but all too often we ignore the fact that the greatest single reform we could have for our kids or for their futures would not be another government program but, in fact, more parental involvement in their lives.

But when you have a confiscatory level of taxation that is taking nearly 40 percent of the average family income where parents are working two, and sometimes two and a half or even three jobs just to pay the cut extracted by Uncle Sam—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time yielded to the Senator has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Could I request 2 minutes taken from the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 2 additional minutes yielded by the manager.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In short, families right now in America are spending more on taxes than they are on food, housing, and clothing combined. The actual tax levels have increased by 35 percent. The combined Federal, State, and local tax burden has increased by 35 percent on American families since the late 1950s. That tax burden is too high, and we ought to do something about it.

I compliment Chairman ROTH for what he has done to structure a bill that would eliminate that odious marriage tax penalty on 22 million American married couples who are penalized for being married. It would also give serious major tax relief to people in the lowest tax bracket—that 15-percent tax bracket which would be lowered to 14 percent. That bracket would also be expanded in size so that more Americans could pay taxes at that lower level. I appreciate the time. I yield the floor.

Mr. KERRY. Will the Senator yield for a question on the remaining time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. KERRY. I thought he had additional time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, thank you. I am pleased to be on the floor of the Senate as a part of a bipartisan group once again—this time to advocate a tax cut for the American people that is fiscally responsible, that honors our values, and that can actually be done.

I am disappointed we will not have an opportunity to vote on this proposal today because I believe it is in the best interests of the American people. Ultimately, I believe that if we are going to ever span the partisan chasm that stretches before us, it will be on the ground that I and others are staking out here today.

This proposal is fiscally responsible. It allows for paying down 94 percent of the publicly held Federal debt—94 percent of the publicly held Federal debt. That is fiscally responsible. It, as the other proposals would do, extends the life of Social Security to the year 2033—54 more years—by adding $1.8 trillion to Social Security. That, too, is fiscally responsible. It extends the life of Medicare to the year 2020, adding $210 billion—allowing for that to extend the life of Medicare.

As my colleague from Louisiana, Senator Breaux, pointed out, on some occasions none of the proposals that are before us permanently solve every issue of Medicare. All of them simply postpone the day of reckoning. Our proposal would do that and give us time for systemic reform. But, in the meantime, adding $210 billion to extend the life of Medicare is the fiscally responsible thing to do.

Finally, it allows for $500 billion of tax reductions for the men and women of our country, completely removing from the tax rolls 3 million hard-working Americans and moving 4 million people from the 28-percent tax bracket to the 15-percent tax bracket.

I have listened to the eloquence of my colleagues, many of whom have mentioned the important needs of our Government—and our Government does have important needs—many of whom have mentioned the funding priorities for Government spending programs.

I remind all of us about the needs of the American people, of families, working men and women. What about their needs too? Many working families across my State, even in this time of plenty with a strong economy, are having trouble paying the mortgage, putting something away for retirement, affording a college education for their children. These families—at a time when we are adding $1.8 trillion to Social Security, $210 billion for Medicare, and the other for discretionary spending—can very much use the $1,000 for an average family across my State to help meet their pressing needs. It is the right and appropriate thing to do.

This proposal honors our values—our most basic values—and eliminates entirely the marriage penalty. No longer will people be penalized under the Federal Tax Code simply because they choose to get married. We should encourage marriage. We should not discourage marriage.

This proposal makes child care, care for a sick parent, and health insurance for those who are without it more affordable. These are the right things to do.

I think it is important to recognize that we can cherish our values and promote them by reducing taxes just as easily and sometimes better than through increased public spending.

This proposal has room for a $45 billion drug benefit under Medicare, the same amount of public borrowing required of the President's proposal, and still we would have $180 billion for additional discretionary spending over the next 10 years.

There has been a lot of talk and a good deal of disagreement about the appropriate level for discretionary spending increases. I must say, with all due respect, I cannot agree with my colleagues in the majority because I find the assumptions and accounting upon which their proposal is based are suspect at best. They ask us to believe they can hold to spending caps over the next 10 years that they have already admitted they cannot abide by in this very year. That simply is not possible. Yesterday I listened to one of my colleagues on the Senate Banking Committee have an amiable conversation with the Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board in which he essentially said, Mr. Chairman, the reason I am supporting tax reductions is that I cannot keep from spending irresponsibly. He looked at the Chairman of the Federal Reserve and almost asked him: Mr. Chairman, stop me before I spend again.

Colleagues, we have been elected to this body to make tough choices and set priorities. I believe we can and should. The prescription of the majority is one for increased debt and deficit. This is a path I choose now of any kind. At a point in time when I cannot find myself in agreement with those who show charts and list figures basically arguing for an inflationary increase for Federal spending as far as the eye can see, basically putting Federal spending on autopilot, I do not know of any working family in my State who has been guaranteed inflationary increases in their family income for 10 years. Why should we treat the Federal Government any better than ordinary citizens? Of course we should not.

I asked the Chairman of the Federal Reserve yesterday about productivity increases. We are seeing amazing productivity increases in the private economy. Shouldn't the Government be asked to stay right in the middle of the road that has brought the American economy to the extraordinary point of growth and strength it occupies today, and that is the road of fiscal responsibility. It took a lot of hard work to get us to this plentiful place that we are enjoying today, with high productivity, low unemployment, a surprise and we are enjoying today, with high growth, low unemployment, a surprisingly high stock market, and surprisingly low inflation.

I think the Federal Government helped to begin it all by creating the climate for sustained economic growth by exercising some real fiscal discipline. Then most of the prosperity has come, as it always does in America, from the private sector, from millions of businesses and individuals, innovating, cooperating, and profiting. Now we must make the most of this generation it looks as if the Federal Government may actually go into surplus—if we let it.

Oscar Wilde once wrote, "I can resist everything except temptation." I fear the same may well be said of this Congress as it giddily proceeds to spend a surplus that no one knows is really there, that would take our Nation back into deficit and endanger the critical economic gains we have made over the past several years.

So I ask, why not stay the course that has raised the standard of living of millions of American families? Why not wait for at least another year to see if the surplus projections are real, if the economy is strong enough to allow us to stay on course? If Congress is prepared to exercise the required spending discipline? That is the question Senator LEVIN and I will ask later on a motion to strike the entire tax cut before us, which would mean that we would wait a year. It is the question that Senator HOLLINGS will ask in an amendment we will offer later which would recommit this tax cut to committee.

I must say, as all of us here, I suppose my reflex is to propose tax cuts not to oppose them. I was very active in support of the tax cuts we passed—just 2 years ago. I think sometimes we forget that in this debate. Just 2 years ago, I cosponsored the cut in the capital gains tax and supported so many of the incentives that the chairman of the Finance Committee offered to increase savings in our country. I would welcome the opportunity to vote for a balanced, thoughtfully crafted tax reduction plan such as the one the Senators from Rhode Island and Louisiana have offered today if I were convinced we could afford it, if I were convinced the money was there to support the tax cut, or, in the alternative, if I thought, as Chairman Greenspan has suggested, that the economy needed it, needed to be stimulated.

But the more I have looked at these protections of a $1 trillion surplus over the next decade, the more it looks to me like a Potemkin surplus—not a real one, a facade with nothing behind it. Because it is based on projections of 2.4 percent growth over the next 10 years, which may happen but would extend what is already the longest peacetime expansion of our economy in history. It is possible, but I would not bank on it, or at least I would not spend in tax cuts the profits of such unprecedented projected growth until I knew they were in the bank.

Of course, both baselines, OMB's and CBO's, are results of spending that are massive and unsustainable. These are cuts that few in either House would ever support and, in fact, are not supporting right now, as Congress simply exceeds the budget almost every day, exceeds the caps through transparent accounting gimmicks, calling excesses budget emergencies, and double counting when necessary.

In other words, we do not have to wonder whether Congress over the next decade will be able to hold the spending line on which the surplus, which would fund these tax cuts, is contingent because Congress is already proving today that it cannot even control itself. The result is that by passing a major tax cut, paid for by a surplus that probably will not be there, we would likely incur sizable deficits for years to come.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 5 minutes of the Senator have expired.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I ask the Senator from Delaware if I might have 2 more minutes to discuss his bill.

Mr. ROTH. I yield 2 more minutes to the Senator.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank the Senator.

On top of that, of course, we would have cut little or no money available for building the solvency of Medicare and Social Security, for supporting our national security—defense—and we would thus raise the specter of a major tax increase down the line to compensate for our profligacy right now.

It seems quite clear from what Alan Greenspan is saying, if we cut taxes now, the Fed will increase interest rates soon thereafter, which would put a drag on the economy, slow down business investment, and probably lower the stock market, and it would hit average working Americans literally where they live, driving up the cost of their mortgages, car payments, credit card bills, and student loans to the point where it would dwarf any tax break that most Americans would receive from this bill.

In other words, we would be robbing Paul to pay—Paul, while simultaneously robbing our economy of the dynamism we have labored so hard to create. And to what purpose? None that I have heard, except to return to the American people a surplus that is not going to be there.

What we need now, I argue, is a little more of the fiscal discipline and responsibility that helped bring this economy to the point of great growth it is at now.

I thank the Senator from Delaware, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BREAUX. I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Maine.

Ms. SNOWE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I congratulate Senators BREAUX, CHAFFEE, JEFFORDS, and KERRY for reigniting the centrists on an issue that certainly is important to the American people.

It is not lost on us that we are here today confronted with a major issue, and it is not surprising that various Members of this Senate, the House, and the President have different positions on an issue of such significance. What we have tried to do with the package that has been offered by Senator Breaux and Senator Chafee is to bridge the gap between what the President has offered, what the House has offered, and the package that has been offered by Senator Roth and the Senate Finance Committee. We are trying to bring the differences together to preserve the viability of a tax cut for the American people.

Lyndon Johnson once said: The good news is, I see the light at the end of the tunnel. The bad news is, it is the light of an oncoming train.

That is the prospect we are facing in Congress with the tax cut proposal because all the positions are different and everyone is taking a very polarized position on very important issues.

I hope our package will be one that can bridge the differences from all sides. That is why we have tried to stake out this position so that we can have a bipartisan proposal that will avoid that train wreck.

Over the last few days, we have heard comments from the administration and from Members of this body saying there is no room for compromise; there is zero room for a consensus. I think that kind of intransigence is unacceptable because ultimately it will result in no tax cut at all, and that is not in the best interest of the American people. We should not reject out of hand the possibility of developing a consensus, and that is what this proposal is all about.

This proposal is certainly similar to ones that have been offered on the floor by the Senate Finance Committee and by Senator Moynihan. So it is not a question of substance because if you look at the various components of the tax cut package, they certainly exist in all of them.

It is a matter of size, and that is why we decided that instead of the $792 billion package offered by the Senate Finance Committee or the President's package of $300 billion, we would come in the middle with $500 billion. That represents a consensus upon which I think we can all agree. That represents less than 40 percent of the $1 trillion projected on-budget surplus over the next 10 years, less than 40 percent.

It comes in the middle between the President's package and the Finance Committee's package. I think that it is eminently sensible. It is prudent, and we have to err on the side of economic caution when it comes to how much we are going to spend of the projected surpluses over the next 10 years because those surpluses are just that, they are projections. Some have referred to them as the hypothetical jackpot.

We have to be particularly cautious about how much we intend to spend over the next 10 years from projected surpluses. We want to save the additional $300 billion so we can look at Medicare, so we can look at prescription drug plans, so we can look at Social Security, and all the other issues contained within discretionary spending that we think happen to be a priority, or we can create a surplus reserve.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired.

Ms. Snowe. I hope, Mr. President, that Members of this body will give very careful consideration to the compromise proposal that we have put before you because it keeps open the door of the tax cut for the American people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. Breaux. Mr. President, I inquire as to whether the distinguished chairman has additional time. We can rotate.

Mr. Roth. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Ms. Landrieu. I yield 5 minutes to my distinguished colleague, Senator Landrieu.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Ms. Landrieu. I rise to support my senior colleague from Louisiana and thank him and Senator Chafee for bringing us together and for bringing this measure before the Senate and before the American people, a measure that, in my mind, is a very good starting point for where we need to be and on what we need to be focused.

It does a couple of things of which I am very proud and a couple of things of which I am not so proud. I want to try to do. One, it is very fiscally responsible. It pays down a significant portion of the publicly held debt and gives tremendous benefits to the market and to our economy because of that savings approach.

It also sets aside a prudent amount of money, and under the leadership of my senior Senator, it enables us to not only throw more money at Medicare, which we need to do for prescription drugs, but it provides a floor or a framework for us to really put in some systemic reforms if we could come to an agreement to strengthen a program that is dependent on by almost everyone in our Nation.

It also gives us a starting point and a proposal to reduce taxes, not for the very rich, not for those who have already benefited from this booming economy, but it gives us an opportunity, through strategic tax cuts, to make it possible for more people to enjoy this new historic economic boom that we are experiencing.

It does this in very strategic ways, and I will hit on a few in a moment. Before I begin that point, I want to say that I have the greatest respect for the senior Senator from Connecticut and, particularly, my dear friend, Senator Joe Lieberman, who just spoke. There is hardly a time I ever disagree with him on an issue of this magnitude, but I have also looked at the projections underlying the bipartisan plan of Senator Breaux and Senator Chafee.

I have learned through that review that over the last 50 years, the average rate of growth has been 3.3 percent. This plan is based on a very conservative projection, I believe, of a 2.4-per cent growth. I do not concede the point that these projections are off. I will concede that on the other side, in terms of the spending projections, we are tight. But we have never, as Senator Bazin pointed out, spent the inflationary standard.

There is room to pay down our debt, provide for reform of Medicare, provide a new and very much needed prescription drug benefit, leave room for some reasonable, responsible new spending for programs, and give some strategic relief to hard-working American families, families that are struggling every day to put their children through school, families who are struggling to keep an elderly person at home with the added expense so they do not have to live alone or live in a nursing home that perhaps is not appropriate for them.

There are many important parts of this bipartisan plan that help average, hard-working families begin to be a part of this new economy.

One of the things I want to mention that is actually interesting but not a part of this plan, and I hope as it is massaged and improved and perfected over the next weeks there can be some strategic tax relief to encourage low-income families to begin saving, just as we have the Roth IRA plan and the traditional IRA plan. Those have really helped a lot of middle-income Americans.

But today there are many Americans who live in Louisiana who do not make enough money to set aside $2,000 a year. So there is a possibility, through this tax proposal, that we could structure some tax relief to enable these hard-working, low-income Americans, to begin savings accounts that can promote their wealth, promote their economic fortune, and help them to participate in the new economy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 5 minutes have expired.

Ms. Landrieu. I could have 30 seconds to wrap up.

So besides the program I have just described, there is family tax relief, savings and investments, education, small businesses; their No. 1 request to us is for some tax relief so they can continue to afford insurance for themselves and small businesses throughout this country. There
Mr. CHAFEE. Just briefly, I congratulate my colleague, Senator Breaux, from Louisiana, for his presentation and organization of this whole effort that we have had. I believe there is going to come a time—not tomorrow, not the day after but before long—in which this proposal, which he and I and so many others have worked on, is going to be accepted by this body. I certainly hope so.

I thank Senator Moynihan for the kind comments he made about the efforts we have made.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Again, I emphasize that this was a bipartisan effort, with Senator Chaffee on the Republican side. And I say to him, semper fi.

On that note, I yield to Senator John Kerry.

Mr. KERRY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KERRY. I thank the distinguished ranking member.

Mr. President, I appreciate the hard work and the thinking that went into the so-called centrist approach. I would like to associate myself with that thinking and with the reasonableness that I think guides most of their actions.

But may I say, respectfully, that something is in the air in Washington that I think is clouding people’s thinking a little bit, about where we are on this whole tax bill.

We can’t be looking at a tax cut when you have the money to give as a tax cut. But everybody here understands some plain truths. Notwithstanding those plain truths, the Senate has in front of it a $792 billion tax cut.

A moment ago we were talking about a $500 billion tax cut. The fact is that most of the analysis that is reasonable, dispassionate—and certainly not pie-in-the-sky sort of dreaming about the future—suggests we have nothing near a $1 trillion, let alone a $2 trillion, surplus.

Everyone here has accepted the fact that $2 trillion is going to pay down the debt and protect Social Security, and, indeed, a little bit for Medicare, too. And as I think—many, for the case that the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Rhode Island have made and their colleagues in the centrist coalition.

I note the trenchant counsel of that philosopher from Bourbon Street: When to hold them, when to fold them, and now when to fold them; you have to know when to walk away and you have to know when to run.

I do not think this is the time to run or to walk away, but neither do I think that either of the two parties at this time is supportive of the concept that has been offered by our centrist coalition.

However, while I think that time does not derive yet today, I think some time before the year’s end both sides will come to reach an agreement that what we have offered on the floor is the right approach and one which will allow us to get something done with regard to this type of a tax cut and reservation of funds to do what we need to do as a government.

I hereby ask that my amendment at the desk be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 1442) was withdrawn.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. May I stress the admirable effort that Senator Chaffee and this side at this time is supportive of the concept that has been offered by our centrist coalition.

I note the trenchant counsel of that philosopher from Bourbon Street: When to hold them, when to fold them. I say, it is very clear that their time will come again, sooner perhaps than we know.

With that, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CHAFEE addressed the Chair.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Forgive me, sir. I withhold that. I think the Senator from Rhode Island wishes to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Just briefly, I congratulate my colleague, Senator Breaux, from Louisiana, for his presentation and organization of this whole effort that we have had. I believe there is going to come a time—not tomorrow, not the day after but before long—in which this proposal, which he and I and so many others have worked on, is going to be accepted by this body. I certainly hope so.

We are going to cut border guards. We’re going to cut drug fighting. We’re going to cut the Coast Guard. Nobody is saying that we are going to cut those things. But the absolute inescapable reality of this budget is that unless you increase the spending of discretionary by something reflecting inflation, you are going to cut it.

I heard the Senator from Indiana say: What is it that says we’re going to go out into the future increasing these budget accounts by inflation? The fact is, we have done it every year. We do it. That is what happens. It gets more expensive.

The Government isn’t somehow exempt from the inflation figures and factors to which the rest of the economy is subject. Prices go up. Costs of contracts for the Government go up. People want to have their wages increased with all of this.

The Government isn’t going to be in a position of giving everybody everything. That’s not possible. The Government isn’t going to be in a position of giving everybody everything. That’s not possible. The Government isn’t going to be in a position of increasing the spending of discretionary by something reflecting inflation, you are going to cut it.

The hard reality already is that the budget is $2 trillion. Everybody knows these games are gone back to their constituents and said: We’re going to cut veterans’ benefits. We’re going to cut highways.
block, which might amount to $112 billion or so, depending on what we do for prescription drugs, for Medicare, and a lot of other things.

The real choice in front of the Senate is considerably different than the fiction we are being fed. I heard the distinguished ranking member yesterday talk about the reality that we lived through in the 1980s, the creation of fiscal crisis as a means of achieving ideological and political goals. I respectfully suggest that what we are looking at is a form of Stockman 2. That is what is going on. This is Stockman 2. We are going to come in with a tax cut that has no money, that isn’t predictable, and we are going to create a new crisis in our Government, where we are going to face a whole set of choices that a lot of people here will love because they think these particular expenditures. But they are expenditures that time and again, year in and year out, our fellow citizens have said they want us to make. And time and again, the Congress, when it has had that great clash with the President, has capitulated and made them.

So this is a remarkable new kind of thinking, where if one big mistake is a mistake, we are going to come in and say we will make it a lesser mistake, but it is still somehow better thinking.

So instead of $791 billion, some people would argue we ought to do 500 or 300. The fact is, all of those figures are out of sync with the reality of what we have in front of us.

We don’t even show a real budget surplus until the year 2006. In the year 2006, assuming that you have spending plus some little measure of inflation, the way we have traditionally, you have only $29 billion of surplus by the year 2006. In reality, I hear my colleagues come to the floor and say: We have the highest measure of taxation against our gross domestic product that we have ever had. What they don’t tell you is the reason it is so high is because so many people are cashing in on their capital gains. We lowered the capital gains tax. They don’t tell you the capital gains tax isn’t even counted in the measure of the gross domestic product. So you have this artificial set of numbers, when they come in and tell you the tax rate is up.

That is the way it is supposed to work. That is why we have a progressive tax structure. When the economy does brilliantly, you are supposed to get a little more money into the Government so that you have the ability to do the things that are important for the long-term of our country.

Recently, I had the pleasure of meeting with a number of high-tech presidents. And to a person, these people, who are fueling the engine of our productivity growth in America and creating the high value-added jobs, will tell you they need an America that has a citizenry that is educated and capable, that depends on investment. You don’t cure the debt of this country by the figures that show up on debt. You measure the debt of this country by the people who can’t access those high value-added jobs, who don’t have child care and the ability to live with clean water and clean air and so forth.

Mr. President, I think we are measuring things backwards, wrong. I think we are on a very dangerous track which will have long-term implications for the full measure of the citizens of our country. I express that concern as we come, sometime, to a vote on this issue.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, Senator BINGAMAN has an amendment he will offer.

AMENDMENT NO. 1462
(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate regarding investment in education)
Mr. BINGAMAN. I appreciate the courtesy.
Mr. President, there is an amendment that I believe has been filed. I send it to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative assistant read as follows.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] proposes an amendment numbered 1462.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 371, between lines 16 and 17, insert the following:

SEC. 2. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING INVESTMENT IN EDUCATION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds the following:

MR. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, this amendment has a very simple purpose. The purpose is to protect the current investment that we are making in education.

The amendment seeks to decrease the tax breaks that disproportionately benefit upper-income taxpayers in order to sustain the current level of funding for education with an increase, a small increase for inflation. If the Republican tax bill we are considering is accepted as written, Congress must cut discretionary spending more than $775 billion over the next 10 years. When we say discretionary spending, of course, we are talking about domestic discretionary spending, which includes education, but we are also talking about national defense, what we spend on our military.

If we say the portion of discretionary spending that is spent on our military is likely to be funded at the level requested by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, which is very likely—in fact, we usually do better than the Joint Chiefs’ request—then domestic programs have to be cut 38 percent. By those “domestic programs,” in this amendment I am talking about education. If these cuts are spread across the board, it would result in very substantial reductions in current educational programs.

Let me show to my colleagues a chart which tries to make the point. I think it makes it pretty well.

It shows with this red line, starting in the year 2000 and going to the year 2009, we are spending nearly $34 billion less on education in the Federal budget. That includes what we spend on education through the Education Department but also Head Start. We have included Head Start because we consider that a program that assists greatly in preparing students for school. So we are spending a little below $34 billion this year.

If you take the Republican plan, as I understand it, and take the logical assumption that we are going to have the kind of cut in domestic programs we have to have in order to get enough room for this size tax cut, then you see that go from $34 billion down to a little over $19 billion by the year 2009.

An education freeze, of course, would keep it right at $34 billion, but that would not make any provision for inflation. What we are doing in this amendment is saying that the Senate should go on record as requesting that the tax cut be reduced by $132 billion so that we have room not only to maintain Federal funding for education while 2.5 million additional children will have to increase as inflation increases.

The Senator from Massachusetts made a very good point a few minutes ago: The cost of buying services, of paying utility bills, of doing everything else for government people does for everyone else. It certainly goes up for the schools.

Now, we have not built into this amendment, I should point out, any provision for the fact that we are going to have tens of hundreds of thousands of new children coming into our school system in the next 10 years, and we are not proposing increases in education funding to account for that. We should be, quite frankly, but we are not. We are also not proposing increases for any new education programs. I have been hearing Mr. Greenspan's testimony, as I am sure all of my colleagues have, and he says: Start no new spending and cut no taxes. That is his basic position. I agree with him, and let's get our fiscal house in order.

I don't agree with that position. I believe there are some areas in our Federal budget where we should increase spending. Education is the first priority, as I see it. But if we were to take the Republican plan as it is proposed, it would mean that 430,000 of the 835,000 children who would otherwise be served by the Head Start program would lose services by the time we get to the year 2000. It would mean that more than 5.9 million of the 14.6 million children who live in high-poverty communities would lose essential education services under the Head Start program would lose services by the time we get to the year 2000. It would mean that more than 5.9 million of the 14.6 million children who live in high-poverty communities would lose essential education services under title I. The title I program is the largest education program we fund here in Washington. It would mean that 480,000 of the 1 million students who currently are served by the Reading Excellence Program would lose the opportunity to learn and to have that additional help by the time they complete the third grade. It also means that the chance of increasing the Federal share of the cost of the Individuals With Disabilities Education Act, IDEA—the line item that we try to fund each year—the stated goal of many in this body has been that we should at least go to 40 percent of what it costs to implement IDEA. But that would be impossible under what I understand the Republican tax bill is to provide. Instead, we would be forced to cut special education by $3.4 billion by the time we get to the 10th year of the Tax Code.

Bill grants, which currently benefit nearly 4 million students—if we assume we are going to continue to provide a grant to 4 million students, then you have to slash that from $3.850 per year, which is today's level, down to $2,175 by the year 2009. Nearly 500,000 disadvantaged students who need extra guidance and support through the TRIO Program and the GEAR UP Program would also lose that extra help.

In my home State, these statistics could be very concrete. One example would be Head Start. We have about 8,000 young people in our Head Start Program in my State today, which is about half of what we should have; that is, half of those who are eligible. We would have about 3,000 fewer if this tax bill were agreed to.

I hope very much that we can get a strong vote of support. I believe the American people do not want to see a tax cut adopted at the expense of continued support for education as we go into this new century. Everyone realizes that our future depends upon how well we can prepare young people for the opportunities they will have in their lives. It is not responsible for us to be proposing tax cuts that are going to prevent us from at least maintaining the level of effort we have today in education. That is the difference. That is what we are trying to fix in this amendment. It is something that we will have a strong vote in favor of it.

Before I yield the floor to my colleagues to speak in favor, I hope, of this amendment, let me also say a couple of words about another motion I am going to propose which will be voted on when we get into the long list of motions. It is a motion to do something which is very modest, as this amendment is very modest. This only involves $132 billion. We have been talking about trillions for the last 2 months, but we would be to have the bill go back to the Finance Committee with instructions to report back with an amendment providing that an additional $100 billion be applied to debt reduction. That is a small thing to ask. I think of it more as a tithe than anything else.

If we are talking about nearly $800 billion in tax reduction over the 10 years, we ought to say let's get our back and at least take $100 billion of that, which is ample that we can anticipate, and commit that to debt reduction. That will be another item that I believe is very meritorious. I think all Senators should support it. I think it is the responsible thing to do. I do it because, in my State, whereas there is disagreement about new spending programs and whether we should fund those, and where there is disagreement about a lot of other items we are debating, there is a strong consensus that we need to make a downpayment on debt reduction as part of this reconciliation bill. This reconciliation bill is a blueprint for where we intend to go in the next 10 years.

I hope the blueprint we finally adopt shows that we intend to maintain funding for education, at least at current levels. I will be arguing each year I serve in the Senate that we should be increasing funding for education, not cutting. We should at least maintain the current level. I also hope we will adopt a roadmap for the next 10 years to increase education, to reduce the national debt. And I will propose this other motion, which we will vote on later in the debate, on that subject.

I see I have some colleagues who wish to speak. I know the Senator from Maryland does. Let me yield her 10 minutes to speak on this, or the bill, whichever she prefers.

The PRESIDING OFFICIAL. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Ms. MIKULSKI. I thank the Chair, and I thank the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a unanimous consent request?

Ms. MIKULSKI. Yes.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, it was right to me that we haven't had a chance to get it cleared.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, perhaps we will offer the request in a few minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICIAL. The Senator from Maryland.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, later today Senator JON KERRY, Senator ROYCEFELLER and I will make a motion which protects our senior citizens in the wake of the Balanced Budget Act of 1997. I would like to talk about this but I also rise to support the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico, Senator BINGAMAN. As usual, his amendment is well thought out. It brings intellectual rigor, sound public policy, and responsible fiscal policy to this debate, and really meets a compelling human need.

How I wish the rest of this debate reflected the Bingaman amendment, because I believe we have embarked upon a debate on these tax cuts which are, indeed, reckless. I believe the other party is practicing very reckless economics. First of all, we don't really have a surplus; we have a promissory note of a surplus. No. 2, we are looking at an area where we are not sure what the projections will be, and we need to be prudent. Therefore, we should use the taxpayer dollars to meet compelling needs of national security, and stay the course in terms of our research and development.

While we are in the midst of debating bloated tax cuts, we have marines who are on food stamps. I don’t see how we can meet our national security commitment, do a tax cut, and have marines on food stamps. The marines say “semper fi”—“always faithful.” They are faithful to the United States and we have to be always faithful to the Marine Corps and to the military.

Right over there in Quantico, they are getting food stamps and they run consignment shops. That is not right.

The Senator from New Mexico offers this excellent amendment that says: Stay the course on education.

When I travel in my own State, people don’t come up to me and say: I have a marriage penalty. They say: I am married, I have children, and I want them to have the same kind of good education that I did. So, make sure we have sound public schools, well-trained teachers, and structured afterschool activities. That is what the Bingaman amendment does—it lets reserve funds stay the course for our children.

While we are looking at Senator BINGAMAN’s amendment, there is another compelling human need that needs to be addressed. We have to reserve certain funds to correct the draconian effects of the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 on Medicare. The motion that I am cosponsoring will provide $20 billion to fix many of the problems in Medicare reimbursement. My colleagues might recall that in 1997 we passed a Balanced Budget Act. We were going to cut Medicare. But we went too far in our cuts. HCFA went too far in its regulations. Guess where we find ourselves? In my own home State, 34 home health care agencies have closed. I have 10 public home health agencies, primarily in rural counties, some who travel on snowmobiles to treat home-bound patients, and eight have closed because of the budget cuts. There is a terrible problem, and we need to go back and correct the draconian cuts of the Balanced Budget Act of 1997.

We also have a situation where we have skilled nursing facilities that are teeter-tottering on closing. Some might say: Oh, that is a profit-making industry. Stella Morris isn’t profit making. Hebrew Home isn’t profit making. But I will tell you they will now have to find funds through private, philanthropic dollars even though the Government should be providing funds.

We have people in my own home State who are being turned away from nursing homes because they are so sick, they have such complicated illnesses, that the nursing home can’t take them because of the skimpy, spartan reimbursement policies that are the result of the Balanced Budget Act of 1997. Some of those spartan reimbursements went to Medicare HMOs. I always thought that Medicare HMOs for seniors were a risky proposition because our old-timers are sick. They need complicated prescription drugs. I thought that these HMOs that were essentially making a profit may have some problems. However, these HMOs also provide seniors with extra health benefits that they cannot get in regular Medicare, oftentimes for no extra money.

Now, I will tell you that the non-profit HMO in my own State—Blue Cross Blue Shield—is pulling out of 17 rural counties in my State, as of 3 weeks ago in 17 counties, and 18,000 people will lose their Medicare + Choice HMO. Why? Because Blue Cross Blue Shield is losing $5 million, and they can’t afford to provide services.

Dear colleagues, I ask you to reexamine the premise under which we are operating.

No. 1, the surplus is not yet available. It is a promissory note. Let us move with prudence. Let us meet compelling human needs. Let us meet our national security responsibility and stay the course in research and development.

Let’s support the Bingaman amendment on education. Let’s deal with the issues that came from the Balanced Budget Act of 1997. Let’s make sure our marines aren’t on food stamps.

Let’s make sure that those on food stamps and their children have access to public education so that in the next generation they won’t have to be on food stamps.

Then we truly have been responsible. We are then getting our country ready for the millennium.

I would like to say one final word in closing. I thank the Senator from New Mexico for his strong advocacy for veterans, and particularly for veterans with disabilities. The Senator knows that we have an 18-month backlog. He has spoken to me about this.

In his State, they have billboards complaining about the VA backlog.

I bring to the Senator’s attention that in VA-HUD appropriations, we have under this budget allocation a 10-percent cut. We will not be able to deal with that backlog.

In fact, while we are opening tax loopholes, we might even be closing veteran hospitals.

I yield the floor.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Maryland for her very insightful words and her kind comments about me but also for her leadership on these key issues.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

I ask unanimous consent that Kathrynn Olsen Senator and Gabe Mandujano of my staff be granted floor privileges during the pendency of this bill.
The reality is, as was suggested before, that if we, in fact, simply fund the President’s proposal by the year 2009, we will be spending 38 percent in domestic discretionary spending. There is no way that we can do that. Frankly, the political reality is that there is no way we will do that.

We have to recognize that we will be investing in these programs. We have to recognize, as Senator BINGAMAN has said, that one of our first priorities is to continue to invest in education.

Looking at these Republican proposals, I am reminded of what happened in the early 1980s. George Bush, when he was campaigning against President Carter, described his economics as “voodoo economics.” It turned out to be that way. The supply side theories of cutting taxes will stimulate the economy, pay for themselves, and lead to surpluses proved dangerously incorrect during the 1980s.

Perhaps what we are talking about today when we look at these Republican proposals is “deja voodoo economics.” The theory is that we will return to the same kind of deficits, the same kind of economic instability that plagued us through the late 1980s and into the early 1990s until we did take some difficult votes in 1993.

What Senator BINGAMAN is saying is let’s recognize the reality. Let’s recognize that we have to fund educational programs at least at the level of inflation. If we do that, we will have to invest at least about $132 billion.

That is what we should be doing. If we don’t do that, we are going to lose out to proposals—this is the title I proposal, a Federal program that provides assistance and support for low-income students. Frankly, we understand the crisis in urban and rural education that this money is so effective in dealing with. Without it, urban systems and rural systems would be situated even worse. Without it, we would be fostering and contributing to two separate and terribly unequal societies. We have to keep our commitment to these young people.

We would also lose opportunities to reform education, for professional development programs, for opportunities to have smaller class sizes, for opportunities to go ahead and fix crumbling school buildings throughout the country. We would do something that all Members say we would never want to do, and that is renege once again on our commitment to special education.

I don’t know how many times I have been on the floor listening particularly to my colleagues on the other side who have been talking about how we have to put more money into IDEA, the Individuals with Disability Education Act, how we have imposed programs on localities promising robust spending, and we have never delivered. If we have not delivered on IDEA yet, if these tax proposals have a chance to deliver on our contribution to local school systems.

When we move to the area of higher education and Pell grants, work-study programs, the new LEAP program, which is an outgrowth of the State Student Center Grant Program, all of these provide opportunities for Americans to educate themselves beyond high school. We all recognize that might be the most critical issue we face as a nation—educating our citizens to enable them to assume challenging roles in the next century.

Yet we dramatically cut these programs, denying opportunities to thousands and thousands of Americans. We say to them again: This is not the land of opportunity: this is the land of advantage and affluence. Anyone lucky enough to pay for college with their own resources can go but don’t look to the Government to provide the kind of help provided in the past several years.

All of these cuts lead Members to ask a very simple question for the working families of Rhode Island, for the working families of New Mexico, for the working families across this country, when they lose the Pell grants or see the urban school systems getting less and less support and local property taxes going up: are they better off with whatever tax cut they receive than these proposed programs? I think not.

One other aspect of the Republican proposal is a terribly distorted benefit that goes to the very wealthy at the expense of middle- and low-income America. Our constituents know education is the most important aspect of any proposal in Congress to continue to support families. They want precisely what the Bingaman education amendment does. I believe if we listen to those people who sent us here, they will say vote for this amendment. They will say reject this deja voodoo economics that is underlying the proposals by the majority party. In fact, I hope we respond to that clarion call from our constituents.

I commend and thank the Senator from New Mexico for his efforts and for his time.

I yield the floor.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I want to speak briefly about my support for Senator BINGAMAN’S amendment, which urges restoration of a portion of the Republican cuts in several key education programs. There is nothing more important to me than doing the absolute best I can—and encouraging my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to do the same—to push, push hard as possible, so we can reorder our spending priorities so that they better reflect the real concerns and circumstances of the lives of those whom we represent who are trying to raise and educate their kids, or send them to college.

Our goal should be to approve a tax plan that will send a clear, unmistakable message that this Congress cares about education, that this Congress wants to ensure sure that children come to school prepared to learn and are given every possible opportunity to grow, to succeed, to excel. It is time to end photo op politics. It is easy for all of us to get our pictures in front of young children at schools, but the question is, have we done enough? The answer: we have not. I believe my colleagues’ proposal, modest as it is, moves us in the right direction. I know there are technical reasons why we couldn’t actually directly transfer funding for this year in the amendment—an approach which I wanted to take—but at least this amendment sends the right signal regarding a reordering of our priorities.

I consider this a matter of national security, issue, a national priority. Making sure that the young are ready to learn is good for our democracy, or economy, and our national defense. It is our responsibility to make sure that teachers are qualified and equipped with the right tools, and that the opportunities for learning will be there in the years after the last class has been dismissed. I cannot say forcefully enough: this must be accomplished not at the expense or detriment of our children but to their collective advantage.

I’m behind the proposal to shift these excessive tax breaks to a plan that would fully fund the initiative to hire 100,000 qualified teachers to reduce class sizes. It’s no mystery that smaller class sizes translate into greater opportunities for children to get more individualized attention.

We’ve heard that the size of the Republican tax bill is such that it will require significant cuts in crucial education programs. We’ve heard that if defense is funded at the level requested by the president, we should anticipate at 30 percent ($180 billion) cut in domestic discretionary spending. That is the worst possible news for the millions of people who rely on vital initiatives like Title I, Head Start, and the Reading Excellence program. Absolutely ludicrous.

For instance, under this proposal: Nearly 6 million disadvantaged children would lose Title I services that help them meet basic academic needs; 270,000 summer jobs and training opportunities would be eliminated for low-income young people; 375,000 children would be denied Head Start services as opposed to those other children who are ready-to-learn; and 549,000 children would be cut from the Reading Excellence program, denying them the extra help they need to read well by the 4th grade.
Mr. President, allow me to share some examples from my own experience. Minnesota, like most states, receives a concentration of the Title I money it desperately needs as it is. Our current allocation is about $38 million. If fully funded, we would receive approximately a quarter-billion dollars and over a hundred million additional dollars for concentration of the Title I money it desperately needs as it is. The Title I program has gained more than $1.5 billion in funding, which is on the north shore of Lake Superior. It is imperative that we take bold steps to pass a tax measure that will, at the absolute least, serve to move us closer to providing the resources so badly needed in so many areas of education. But it seems clear we will not do that here.

Another area that I believe is a vital component of our national infrastructure is our schools. That is why I am an original cosponsor of Senator Robb’s school modernization effort that we will hear more about later. I think it too is a step in the right direction and I honestly believe it’s another sure way to say to our kids, “You matter. Your schools matter. Your future matters.” In Minnesota alone, there is a one-point-five billion dollar unmet need for school construction. Our average school is over 50 years old. Eighty-five percent of Minnesota schools report a need to upgrade or rebuild their building just to achieve “good” overall condition. Sixty-six percent report at least one unsatisfactory environmental factor like air quality, ventilation, acoustics, heating, or lighting. My staff and I have visited nearly a hundred schools over the past eight months and we’ve heard stories of pathetic conditions throughout the state. I know many of you have heard these stories in your own states. In my state, for example, Two Harbors High School, which is on the north shore of Lake Superior is representative. Two Harbors is a thriving community, but each day its students must enter a facility that can’t meet some of their most basic educational needs. Three separate studies were conducted to assess Two Harbors’ facilities. The studies identified twenty-seven critical needs that are characteristic of so many of our schools. The original facility is sixty years old. The facility does not comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act. There are no teacher offices. The school does not permit the separation of middle level and senior high school students. The principal notes: “Then are we going to wake up and actually do something about it?”

Mr. President, I could go on but the time for talk is long past. The time for pondering our next move is over. The time to move and to move deftly is at hand. My colleagues’ proposal urges a major transfer of funding that goes straight to the heart of where our priorities ought to be. It calls for a real investment in real people, people who are not already sized into the system. Access to quality education at an early age. A fairer share for individuals with disabilities. Help for low and middle income students who deserve every opportunity to attend college.

These are some of the most fundamental elements in a strong education system that values all its children, leaving none of them behind. What is the Republican alternative? Denying our children access to the very things that would prepare them for healthy, happy, productive lives in the 21st century. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we should be doing all we can to help improve public schools to ensure a brighter future for children and the nation. We should help communities improve teacher training and teacher recruitment; reduce class sizes, especially in the early grades; expand after-school programs; build new school buildings; modernize crumbling schools; upgrade technology in every classroom; and make college more accessible and affordable to all families across the country.

But, the Republicans insist on an excessive tax cut at the expense of education and children. We should be making a strong investment in education—not underminding education. The Republican budget denies 5.9 million children in high-poverty communities the extra support they need to meet basic academic standards through the Title I program, including 81,547 children in Massachusetts. It denies 480,000 children the assistance they need to learn to read well by the 4th grade through the Reading Excellence Act. It denies more than a million children the opportunity to learn in smaller classes where they will get the individual attention they need to succeed in school. It denies 330,000 children the needed support services that help them come to school ready to learn. It denies 215,000 students the after-school and summer school programs they need to stay off the streets and out of trouble. It denies 500,000 disadvantaged students the extra guidance and support they need to prepare for college through the TRICARE GEAR-UP programs. It cuts IDEA by $3.4 billion, resulting in a reduction in the federal share of the funding, rather than the increase requested by school boards and administrators across the country.

The Republican assault on education doesn’t stop with young children—it affects college students, too. It makes college less affordable for nearly 4 million low- and middle-income students—by slashing the maximum Pell grant to $2,175, the lowest level since 1987. It denies 500,000 students the opportunity to work their way through college.

Education for the nation’s children must be a higher priority than tax breaks for the rich. The American people of all ages and all income levels, public schools is one of their top priorities. They support reducing class sizes. They support after-school programs to help children learn, and to reduce juvenile crime. They agree that every classroom should have a well-qualified teacher. They believe technology should be part of the classroom. They believe that all children should have the opportunity to meet high standards of achievement. They want us to make college more accessible and affordable. Instead of offering new tax breaks for the wealthy, Congress should be addressing the priority education needs of children and families across the country—and help all children get a good education.

Overcrowded classrooms undermine discipline and decrease student morale. Students in small classes in the early grades make more rapid progress than students in larger classes. The benefits last for minority, low-income children. Smaller classes also enable teachers to identify and work effectively with students who have learning disabilities, and reduce the need for special education in later grades.

The nation’s students deserve modern schools with world-class teachers. But too many students in too many schools in too many communities across the country fail to achieve that standard. The latest international survey confirms the urgent need to raise standards of performance for schools, teachers, and students alike. It is shameful that America’s twelfth graders ranked among the lowest of the 22 nations participating in the international survey of math and science.

The teacher shortage has forced many school districts to hire uncertified teachers, or ask certified teachers to teach outside their area of expertise. Each year, more than 50,000 under-prepared teachers enter the classroom. One in four new teachers does not meet state certification requirements. Twelve percent of new
I urge my colleagues to support Senator Bingaman’s Sense of the Senate commitment to support increased funding for education. Now is the time to do what it takes to give every child a good education.

Mr. ROTH. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, I rise in strong opposition to the Bingaman amendment. As I read the amendment, it suggests we shift $132 billion from tax breaks that disproportionately benefit upper-income taxpayers to sustain our investment in public education and prepare children for the 21st century, including our investment programs such as IDEA, special education, Pell grant, Head Start, and to fully fund the class size initiative.

I will concur with the sentiment of that particular statement. This amendment presents a false choice. It suggests to my colleagues and to the American people Members either have to be for tax relief for American people or to be for public education, but Members can’t be for both. If Members really support public education, then they will want to shift $132 billion out of the suggested tax relief and put it into various aspects of public education. That is a false choice.

It proves one thing conclusively, the concern many Members have had as we hear the arguments on the other side as they repeatedly say: We shouldn’t give tax relief to the American people because we need to pay down the national debt.

We have suggested it won’t ever go to pay down the national debt but any relief that money will not go to paying down the national debt. It proves one thing conclusively, the concern many Members have had as we hear the arguments on the other side as they repeatedly say: We shouldn’t give tax relief to the American people because we need to pay down the national debt.

trillion surplus, $13 to $14 billion can be found to fully fund IDEA without taking it away from tax relief for the Americ majority. IDEA is currently funded at $4.3 billion, which is about 10 percent of the cost of educating special education students. Therefore, about $7 billion would be needed to meet the fed-ally-authorized commitment of 40 percent. This would leave the appropriation of an additional $13 billion to fully fund IDEA. I suggest to my colleagues, that $13 billion can certainly be found in the projected $3 trillion surplus for this obligation over the next 10 years.

This is a wrongheaded amendment, and it is the wrong place to do this. But it certainly proves that this $792 billion will not go to debt reduction. It will go to extensive additional spending purposes.

I could not vote for this proposed amendment of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, apart from the $132 billion that it suggests we take away from tax relief, because it improperly characterizes the Republican tax relief package by saying it dis proportionately benefits upper-income taxpayers. I suggest this is one of the great myths being perpetrated about Senator Roth’s tax relief package that has been produced by the Finance Committee.

This proposal will reduce the lowest personal income tax rate, the lowest rate, from 15 percent to 14 percent, beginning in 2001 and then would gradually expand the bracket so more people would pay that lowest rate. It would benefit 70 million Americans; 55 percent of Americans would benefit from that provision alone. That is not a tax break for the wealthy, and I wish my honest and true colleagues on the other side would characterize it as such.
This amendment should not be voted for because it says it “dis proportionately benefits the wealthy,” and it does not.

In the State of Arkansas there will be 693,000 people, 61 percent of the taxpayers in Arkansas, who will receive tax relief from this single provision, apart from the marriage penalty, apart from the estate tax relief. The single provision of lowering that rate from 15 percent to 14 percent and expanding the bracket will benefit 61 percent of the poorest people in Arkansas.
So, in all honesty, let’s tell the American people the truth. This is not a tax break for the wealthy. It is a tax break for hard-working Americans who are paying far more than they should be in taxes.

Under the Clinton administration, taxes have risen to the highest level in peacetime, a level of 21 percent of GDP—21 percent. In my home State of Arkansas, that amount translates into $7,352 in taxes per capita in 1998. I plead with my colleagues, let us not agree to this amendment. Let us not begin to dilute that which is already far too little relief for hard-working Americans who have a difficult enough time making ends meet each month.

Oh, we can talk about wonderful Federal programs to benefit people, and they do. But if we start down that road, there is no stopping point. Let’s take more of our $791 billion tax cut and let’s spend it on this program and this program and this program because, after all, don’t we know best here in Washington? And we do not.

At the root and at the core of the de-ate going on in the Senate is more than just a debate over a tax package.
It is more than a debate over how much relief we can provide the American people. It is a debate over philosophy. It is a debate whether your faith in capitalism and your faith in legal order is in Washington and your faith is in more taxes and central control, or whether your faith is in the people of this country. We will do well to put our faith in the people and return that which belongs to them in passing the Roth tax cut bill.

1,250 jobs at the USFP, Stanford Health Care Network.

In Pennsylvania, the problems associated with the Balanced Budget Act are not unique to hospitals. In Massachusetts, as of mid-June, 20 home health care agencies have closed since late 1997.

The administration may be busy sort of brushing off some of this as the simple corrections of market inefficiencies, but I could not disagree more, and I think many of my colleagues would disagree with that.

Mr. President, I have sought recognition to talk about my flat tax amendment which will be voted on by the Senate either this evening or tomorrow.

First of all, the flat tax would eliminate double taxation so there would be no tax on estates. They have already been taxed; all the money is going into the estate. There would be no tax on dividends; that has all been taxed before it gets into earned surplus. There would be no tax on capital gains; that has already been taxed.

This is a win-win situation for America because it lowers the tax burden on the taxpayers in the lower brackets. For example in the 1998 tax year, the standard deduction is $4,250 for a single taxpayer, $6,250 for a head of household and $7,100 for a married couple filing jointly, while the personal exemption for individuals and dependents is $2,700. Thus, under the current tax code, a family of four which does not itemize deductions is owed $2,700 in refunds, plus the personal exemption for individuals and dependents is $2,700. Thus, under the current tax code, a family of four which does not itemize deductions is owed $2,700 in refunds, plus the personal exemption for individuals and dependents is $2,700.

Mr. President, I yield 15 minutes off the bill to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECKTER. I thank the Chairman.

Mr. President, I have sought recognition to talk about my flat tax amendment which will be voted on by the Senate either this evening or tomorrow.

First of all, the flat tax would eliminate double taxation so there would be no tax on estates. They have already been taxed; all the money is going into the estate. Thus, under the current tax code, a family of four which does not itemize deductions is owed $2,700 in refunds, plus the personal exemption for individuals and dependents is $2,700.
This bill is modeled after legislation organized and written by two very distinguished professors of law from Stanford University, Professor Hall and Professor Rabushka. Their model was first introduced in the Congress in the fall of 1994 by Majority Leader Richard Armey. I introduced the flat tax bill—the first one in the Senate—on March 2, 1995. Senate bill 988. I reintroduced the bill in the 105th Congress, and reintroduced the bill in this Congress on April 15, 1999—income tax day—in a bill denominated S. 822.

So the bill has been well thought out, has been well documented, as being revenue neutral by Professors Hall and Rabushka at 19 percent.

My bill has added two deductions—one for interest on home mortgages for borrowing up to $100,000 for middle-income families and a deduction for charitable contributions for up to $2,500. These two deductions have been obtained because of the practical impossibility of having a Tax Code which eliminates those two deductions which is readily the mainstay of America. But aside from those two modest deductions, it is a flat tax.

One percent has been added on my bill to the Hall-Rabushka formula to accommodate $35 billion in losses due to the home interest deduction and $19 billion in tax losses due to the deduction on interest on charitable contributions. So we have a system which is tax neutral.

Another major advantage of the flat tax is that it would vastly increase productivity because people would no longer be looking to what they could save on tax loopholes. Instead, Americans would be devising their affairs on what is really the mainstay of America. But aside from those two modest deductions, it is a flat tax.

leadership and the Finance Committee to no avail. I think the American people will not tolerate to move forward and I think the issue of tax reform is ripe for consideration.

In this period of opportunity as we commence the 106th Session of Congress, I am optimistic that public support for tax reform will enable us to move forward and adopt this critically important and necessary legislation.

My flat tax legislation will fundamentally revise the present tax code, with its myriad rates, deductions, and instructions. This legislation would institute a simple, flat 20% tax rate for all individuals and businesses. It will allow all taxpayers to file their April 15 tax returns on a simple 10-line postcard.

This proposal is based on three key principles which are critical to an effective and equitable tax system: simplicity, fairness and economic growth.

Over the years and prior to my legislative efforts on behalf of flat tax reform, I have noted considerable and attention to revising our nation’s tax code and the policies which underlie it. I began the study of the complexities of the tax code 40 years ago as a law student at Yale University. I included some tax law as part of my practice in my early years as an attorney in Philadelphia. In the spring of 1962, I published a law review article in the Villanova Law Review, “Pension and Profit Sharing Plans: Coverage and Operation for Closely Held Corporations and Professional Associations,” 7 Villanova L. Rev. 335, which in part focused on the inequity in making tax-exempt retirement benefits available to some kinds of businesses but not others. It was apparent then, as it is now, that the very complexities of the Internal Revenue Code could be used to give unfair advantage to some. Before I introduced my flat tax bill early in the 104th Congress, I had discussions with Congressman RICHARD ARMEY and House Majority Leader RICHARD ARMEY before the Senate Finance and House Ways & Means Committees, as well as the Joint Economic Committee and the House Small Business Committee, to discuss the economic impact and viability of a flat tax. Based on those discussions, and on the revenue estimates supplied to us, I have concluded that a simple flat tax at a rate of 20 percent on all business and personal income can be enacted without reducing federal revenues.

A flat tax will help reduce the size of government and allow ordinary citizens to have more influence over how their money is spent because they will spend it—not the government. By creating strong incentives for savings and investment, the flat tax will have the beneficial result of making available the capital for expansion of the private sector of the economy—rather than more tax money for big government. This will mean more jobs and, just as important, more higher-paying jobs.

A matter of federal tax policy, there has been considerable controversy over whether tax breaks should be used to stimulate particular kinds of economic activity, or whether tax policy should be neutral, leaving people to do what they consider best from a purely economic point of view. Our current tax code attempts to use tax policy to direct economic activity. Yet actions under that code have demonstrated that tax breaks are inevitably used as the basis for tax shelters which have no real relation to solid economic purposes, or to the activities which the tax laws were meant to promote. Even when the government responds to particular tax shelters with new and often complex revisions of the regulations, clever tax experts are able to stay one or two steps ahead of the IRS bureaucrats by changing the structure of their business transactions and then claiming some legal distinctions between the taxpayer’s new approach and the revised IRS regulations and precedents.

Under the massive complexity of the current IRS Code, the battle between $500-an-hour tax lawyers and IRS bureaucrats to open and close loopholes is a battle the government can never win. Under the flat tax bill I offer today, there are no loopholes, and tax avoidance through clever manipulations will become a thing of the past.

The basic model for this legislation comes from a plan created by Professors Robert Hall and Alvin Rabushka of the Hoover Institute at Stanford University. Their plan envisioned a flat tax with no deductions whatever. After considerable reflection, I decided to include in the legislation limited deductions for home mortgage interest for up to $100,000 in borrowing and charitable contributions up to $2,500. While those modifications undercut the pure principle of the flat tax by continuing the use of tax policy to promote home buying and charitable contributions, I believe that those two deductions are defensible, and are consistent with the financial planning of American families that they should be retained as a matter of fairness and public policy—and also political practicality. With those two deductions maintained, passage of a modified flat tax is difficult, but without them, probably impossible.

In my judgment, an indispensable prerequisite to enactment of a modified flat tax is revenue neutrality. Professor Hall advised that the revenue neutrality of the Hall-Rabushka proposal, which uses a 19% rate, is based on a well documented model founded on reliable governmental statistics. My legislation raises that rate from 19% to 20% to accommodate retaining limited tax benefits of home interest and charitable deductions. A preliminary estimate in the 104th Congress by the Committee on Joint Taxation places the annual cost of the home interest deduction at $35 billion, and the cost of the charitable deduction at $13 billion. While the revenue calculation is complicated because the Hall-Rabushka proposal encompasses significant revisions to business taxes as well as personal income taxes, there is a sound basis for concluding that the 1 percent increase in rate would pay for the two deductions. Revenue estimates for tax code revisions are difficult to obtain and are, at best, judgment calls based on projections from fact situations with a myriad of assumed variables. It is possible that some modification may be needed at a later date to guarantee revenue neutrality.

This legislation offered today is quite similar to the bill introduced in the House by Congressman ARMEY and in the Senate late in 1995 by Senator RICHARD SHELBY, which were both in turn modeled after the Hall-Rabushka proposal. The flat tax offers a potential for enormous economic growth, in keeping with principles articulated so well by Jack Kemp. This proposal taxes business revenues fully at their source, so that there is no personal taxation on interest, dividends, capital gains, gifts or estates. Restructured in this way, the tax code can become a powerful incentive for savings and investment—which translates into economic growth and expansion, more and better jobs, and raising the standard of living for all.

In the 104th Congress, we took some important steps toward reducing the size and cost of government, and this work is ongoing and vitally important. But the work of downsizing government is only one side of the coin; what we must do at the same time, and with as much energy and care, is to grow the private sector. As we reform the welfare programs and government bureaucracy—opportunities for past administrations, we must replace those programs with a prosperity that extends to all segments of American society through private investment and job creation—which can have the additional benefit of promoting social stability and sound fiscal planning as economic expansion adds to federal revenues. Just as Americans need a tax code that is fair and simple, they also are entitled to tax laws designed to foster rather than retard economic growth. The bill I offer today embodies those principles.

My plan, like the Armey-Shelby proposal, is based on the Hall-Rabushka analysis. But my flat tax differs from the Armey-Shelby plan in four key respects. First, my bill contains a 20 percent flat tax. Second, this bill would retain modified deductions for mortgage interest and charitable contributions (which will require a 1 percent higher tax rate than otherwise). Third, my bill would maintain the automatic withholding of taxes from an individual's paycheck. Lastly, my bill is designed to be revenue neutral, and thus will not undermine our vital efforts to balance the nation's budget.

The key advantages of this flat tax plan are three-fold: First, it will dramatically simplify the payment of taxes. Second, it will remove much of the IRS regulatory morass now imposed on individual and corporate taxpayers, and allow those taxpayers to devote a greater share of their income to productive pursuits. Third, since it is a plan which rewards savings and investment, the flat tax will spur economic growth in all sectors of the economy as more money flows into investments and savings accounts, and as interest rates drop.

Under this tax plan, individuals would be taxed at a flat rate of 20 percent on all income they earn from wages, pensions and salaries. Individuals would not be taxed on any capital gains, interest on savings or dividends—since those items will have already been taxed as part of the flat tax on business income. The flat tax will also eliminate all but two of the deductions and exemptions currently contained within the tax code. Instead, taxpayers will be entitled to "personal allowances" for themselves and their children. The personal allowances are: $10,000 for a single taxpayer; $15,000 for a married couple filing jointly; $7,500 per child or dependent. These personal allowances would be adjusted annually for inflation after 1999.

In order to ensure that this flat tax does not unfairly impact low income families, the personal allowances contained in my proposal are much higher than the standard deduction and personal exemptions allowed under the current tax code. For example in the 1996 tax year, the standard deduction is $4,250 for a single taxpayer, $6,250 for a head of household and $7,100 for a married couple filing jointly, while the personal exemption for individuals and dependents is $2,700. Thus, under the current tax code, a family of four which does not itemize deductions would pay tax on all income over $17,900 (personal exemptions of $10,800 and a standard deduction of $7,100). By contrast, under my flat tax bill, that same family would receive a personal exemption of $27,500, and would pay tax only on income over $100,000.

My legislation retains the provisions for the deductibility of charitable contributions up to a limit of $2,500 and home mortgage interest up to $100,000 of borrowing. Retention of these key deductions will, I believe, enhance the political viability of this legislation and allow the debate on the flat tax to move forward. If a decision is made to eliminate these deductions, the revenue saved could be used to reduce the overall flat tax rate below 20 percent.

With respect to businesses, the flat tax would also be a flat rate of 20 percent. My legislation would eliminate the intricate scheme of complicated depreciation schedules, deductions, credits, and other complexities that go into business taxation in favor of a much-simplified system that taxes all business revenue less only wages, direct expenses and purchases—a system with much less potential for fraud, "creative accounting," and tax cheating.

Businesses would be allowed to expense 100 percent of the cost of capital formation, including purchases of capital equipment, structures and land, and to do so in the year in which the investments are made. The flat tax would apply to all money not reinvested in the company in the form of employment or capital formation—thus fully taxing revenue at the business level and making it inappropriate to re-tax the same monies when passed on to investors as dividends or capital gains.

Let me now turn to a more specific discussion of the advantages of the flat tax legislation I am reintroducing today.

The first major advantage to this flat tax is simplicity. According to the Tax Foundation, Americans spend approximately 5.3 billion hours each year filling out tax forms. Much of this time is spentBurrowing into IRS rules and regulations which fill 17,000 pages and have grown from 744,000 words in 1955 to 5.6 million words in 1995.

Whenever the government gets involved in any aspect of our lives, it can convert the most simple goal or task into a tangled array of complexity, frustration and inefficiency. By way of example, most Americans have become familiar with the absurdities of the government's military procurement programs. If these programs have grown from 744,000 words in 1955 to 5.6 million words in 1995.

The Internal Revenue Service is certainly no exception. It has become a distressingly common experience for taxpayers to receive computerized print-outs claiming that additional taxes are due, which require repeated exchanges of correspondence or personal visits before it is determined, as it so often is, whether the taxpayer was right in the first place.

The plan offered today would eliminate these kinds of frustrations for millions of taxpayers. This flat tax would enable us to scrap the great majority of the IRS rules, regulations and paperwork currently contained in five million words in the Internal Revenue Code. Instead of tens of millions of hours of non-productive time spent in compliance with, or avoidance of, the tax code, taxpayers would spend only the small amount of time necessary to fill out a postcard-sized form. Both business and individual taxpayers would thus find valuable hours freed up to engage in productive business activity, or for more time with their families, instead of poring over tax tables, schedules and regulations.

The flat tax I have proposed can be calculated just by filling out a small postcard which would require a taxpayer only to answer a few easy questions. The resulting flat tax bill would become a manageable chore, not a seemingly endless nightmare, for most taxpayers.

Along with the advantage of simplicity, enactment of this flat tax bill will help to remove the burden of costly and unnecessary government regulation, bureaucracy and red tape from our everyday lives. The heavy hand of government bureaucracy is particularly onerous in the case of the Internal Revenue Service, which has been able to extend its influence into so many aspects of our lives.

In 1995, the IRS employed 117,000 people, spread out over countless offices across the United States. Its budget was in excess of $7 billion, with over $4 billion spent merely on enforcement. By simplifying the tax code and eliminating most of the IRS' vast array of rules and regulations, the flat tax would enable us to cut a significant portion of the IRS budget, including the bulk of the funding now needed for enforcement and administration.

In addition, a flat tax would allow taxpayers to redirect their time, energies and money away from the yearly morass of tax compliance. According to the Tax Foundation, in 1996, the private sector spent over $150 billion complying with federal tax laws. According to a Tax Foundation study, adoption of flat tax reform would cut pre-filing compliance costs by over 90 percent.

Flat tax reform would reduce the tax burden on investors in creating tax shelters and finding loopholes could be instead directed to productive and job-creating economic activity. With the adoption of a flat tax, the opportunities for fraud and cheating would also be vastly reduced, allowing the government to collect, according to some estimates, over $120 billion annually.

The third major advantage to a flat tax is that it will be a tremendous spur to economic growth. Economist Dale Jorgenson estimates adoption of a flat tax like the one offered today would increase future national wealth by over $2 trillion, in present value terms, over a seven year period. This translates into over $7,500 in increased wealth for every man, woman, and child in America. Our current tax system is inefficient; it is biased toward too little savings and too much consumption. The flat tax creates substantial incentives for savings and investment by eliminating taxation on interest, dividends and capital gains—and tax policies which promote capital formation and investment are the best vehicle for creation of new and high paying jobs, and for a greater prosperity for all Americans.

It is no more rational that to promote future economic growth, we need not only to eliminate the federal government’s reliance on deficits and borrowed money, but to restore and expand the base of private savings and investment than the real economic engine driving American prosperity throughout our history. These concepts are related—the federal budget deficit soaks up much of what we have saved, leaving less for businesses to borrow for investments.

It is the sum total of savings by all aspects of the U.S. economy that represents the pool of all capital available for investment—in training, education, research, machinery, physical plant, etc.—and that constitutes the real seed of future prosperity. The statistics here are daunting. In the 1960s, the net U.S. national savings rate was 8.2 percent, but it has fallen to a dismal 1.5 percent. Americans save at only one-tenth the Japanese level, and only one-fifth the rate of the Germans. This is unacceptable and we must do something to reverse the trend.

An analysis of the components of U.S. savings patterns shows that although the federal budget deficit is the largest cause of “disavings,” both personal and business savings rates have declined significantly over the past three decades. Thus, to recreate the pool of capital stock that is critical to future U.S. growth and prosperity, we have to do more than just get rid of the deficit. We have to very materially raise our levels of private savings and investment. And we have to do so in a way that will not cause additional deficits.

The less money people save, the less money is available for business investment and growth. The current tax system discourages savings and investment, because it taxes the interest we earn from our savings accounts, the dividends that has been the real engine in the stock market, and the capital gains we make from successful investments in our homes and the financial markets. Indeed, under the current law these rewards for saving and investment are not only taxed, they are overtaxed—since gains due solely to inflation, which represent the most increase in value, are taxed as if they were profits to the taxpayer.

With the limited exceptions of retirement plans and tax free municipal bonds, our current tax code does virtually nothing to encourage personal savings and investment, or to reward it over consumption. This bill will change this system, and address this problem. The proposed legislation reverses the current skewed incentives by promoting savings and investment by individuals and by businesses. Individuals would be able to invest and save their money tax-free and reap the benefits of the accumulated value of those investments without paying a capital gains tax. Businesses would also invest more as the flat tax allowed them to expense fully all sums invested in new equipment and technology in the year the expense was incurred, rather than dragging the tax benefits for these investments through complicated depreciation schedules. With greater investment and a larger pool of savings available, interest rates and the costs of investment would also drop, spurring even greater economic growth.

Critics of the flat tax have argued that we cannot afford the revenue losses associated with the tremendous savings and investment incentives the bill affords to businesses and individuals. Those critics are wrong. Not only is this bill carefully crafted to be revenue neutral, but historically we have seen that when taxes are cut, revenues actually increase, as more taxpayers work harder for a larger share of their take-home pay, and investors are more willing to take the risk of potential rewards that will not get eaten up in taxes.

As one example, under President Kennedy when individual tax rates were lowered, investment incentives including the investment tax credit were created and then expanded and depreciation rates were accelerated. Yet, between 1962 and 1967, gross annual federal tax receipts grew from $99.7 billion to $148 billion—an increase of nearly 50 percent. More recently after President Reagan’s tax cuts in the early 1980’s, government tax revenues rose from just under $600 billion in 1981 to nearly $1 trillion in 1989. In fact, the Reagan tax cut program helped to bring about one of the longest peace time expansion of the U.S. economy in history. There is every reason to believe that the flat tax proposed here can do the same—and by maintaining revenue neutrality in this flat tax proposal, as we have, we can avoid any increases in annual deficits and the national debt.

In addition to increasing federal revenues without increasing taxes by closing tax loopholes. The Congressional Research Service estimates that for 1995, individuals and sheltered more than $393 billion in tax revenue in legal loopholes, and corporations sheltered an additional $60 billion. There may well be additional monies hidden in quasi-legal or even illegal “tax shelters.” Under a flat tax system, all tax shelters will disappear and all income will be subject to taxation.

The growth case for a flat tax is compelling. It is even more compelling in the case of a tax revision that is simple and demonstrably fair.

By substantially increasing the personal allowances for taxpayers and their dependents, this flat tax proposal ensures that poorer taxpayers will pay no tax and that taxes will not be regressive on lower and middle income taxpayers. At the same time, by closing the hundreds of tax loopholes which are currently used by wealthier taxpayers to shelter their income and avoid taxes, this flat tax bill will also ensure that all Americans pay their fair share.

The flat tax legislation that I am offering will retain the element of progressivity that Americans view as essential to fairness in an income tax system. Because of the lower end income exclusions, and the capped deductions for home mortgage interest and charitable contributions, the effective tax rates under my bill will range from 0% for families with incomes under about $30,000 to roughly 20% for the highest income groups.

My proposed legislation demonstrably retains the fairness that must be an essential component of the American tax system.

The appeal that I make today is dramatic, but so are its advantages: a taxation system that is simple, fair and designed to maximize prosperity for all Americans. A summary of the key advantages are:

- Simplicity: A 10-line postcard filing system, and demonstrably fair.
- Cuts government: The flat tax would eliminate the lion’s share of IRS rules, regulations and requirements, which have grown from 744,000 words in 1955 to 5.6 million words and 12,000 pages currently. It would also allow us to slash the mammoth IRS bureaucracy of 177,000 employees.
- Promotes economic growth: Economists estimate a growth of over $2 trillion in national wealth over seven years, representing an increase of approximately $7,500 in personal wealth for every man, woman and child in America. This growth would also lead to the creation of 6 million new jobs.
- Increases efficiency: Investment decisions would be made on the basis of productivity rather than simply for tax avoidance, thus leading to even greater economic expansion.

Reduce interest rates: Economic forecasts indicate that interest rates would fall substantially, by as much as two points, as the flat tax removes many of the current disincentives to savings.

Lower compliance costs: Americans would be able to save up to $224 billion they currently spend every year in tax compliance.

Decrease fraud: As tax loopholes are eliminated and the tax code is simplified, there will be far less opportunity for tax avoidance and fraud, which now amounts to over $120 billion in uncollected revenue annually.

Would produce a 6 percent increase in enactment, this type of a flat tax will allow us to save significantly in uncollected revenue annually. The tax code will allow us to save significantly in uncollected revenue annually. This would be able to save up to $224 billion they currently spend every year in tax compliance.

Would fall substantially, by as much as two points, as the flat tax removes many of the current disincentives to savings.

Advantages of the 20 Percent Flat Tax

Simplicity: A 10-line postcard filing would replace the myriad forms and attachments currently required, thus saving Americans up to 5.3 billion hours they currently spend every year in tax compliance.

Reduces IRS costs: Simplification of the tax code will allow us to save significantly on the $7 billion annual budget currently allocated to the Internal Revenue Service.

Professors Hall and Rabushka have projected that within seven years of enactment, this type of a flat tax would produce a 6 percent increase in economic growth and prosperity.

In consulting with the biotechnology industry, the one item which could bridge the gap would be a 10 percent investment tax credit which would stimulate Biotech and would do a tremendous amount for the health of Americans.

In the course of the past few months, stem cells have been discovered by Biotech which is a veritable fountain of youth, holding a promise for a cure for cancer, Alzheimer’s, Parkinson’s, and other maladies.

So I urge my colleagues to take a close look at the investment tax credit for the Biotech industry when it comes up.

I thank the Chair and thank the chairman for yielding me this time from the bill and yield the floor.

Mr. REID, Mr. President, if the manager of the bill will yield for a brief statement, as soon as the leaders arrive, I wonder if the next speaker would mind being interrupted. He has an unanimous consent request we would like to enter and will not delay the leader any more than necessary. The leader should be coming here soon.

Mr. ROTH. That is satisfactory. I yield 12 minutes to Senator INHOFE.
Mr. INHOFE. I thank the Senator. Mr. President, I, like many of my colleagues, have been listening intently to all of the debate. I certainly understand that the Senator from New Mexico is very sincere when he talks about many of these programs that need funding.

I do think that something has been completely lost in the debate that has been taking place on the floor. It is this assumption that if we are going to pass a tax reduction, it is going to automatically reduce revenues. I think this is one of the fallacies that defies all history, and it is one that needs to be talked about at this time.

I can remember when President Clinton was first elected in 1992. One of the first appointments he made was his chief financial adviser, Laura Tyson, who was appointed to 25 percent—I believe this is an exact quote; certainly the intent is the same—that there is no relationship between the level of taxation the Nation pays and the amount of economic performance. I think this is ludicrous. You can look at all logic. If you carried that to its logical conclusion, you would say let’s raise all marginal rates to 100 percent, and everyone is going to work as hard as they would have otherwise. Certainly this is not what history has shown us.

One of the interesting things that is so overlooked by many liberals and others nowadays is that you can increase revenues by decreasing taxes. You have to realize that for every 1-percentage increase in economic activity, that generates new revenues of $24 billion.

This was really discovered by accident back in the 1920s. Back in the 1920s, under two administrations, Warren Harding and Calvin Coolidge, there was a guy named Andrew Mellon who was the Secretary of the Treasury under both administrations. It wasn’t his understanding at that time that he would be able to increase revenues by reducing taxes, but this was right after World War I. In World War I, we had tax rates that were just unconscionably high—73 percent. So they said, all right, the war is over now. Let’s reduce our tax rates, and they reduced them in three steps during a 5-year period from 73 percent down to 25 percent.

This chart shows the income tax rate at the time right after the war and how they reduced it from 73 percent down to 25 percent. Look what happens as the income started rising. It came up from about $700,000 to over a billion dollars. It was almost doubled during that period of time. I think this speaks for itself. It shocked a lot of people. This wasn’t some smart economist saying this is the way to increase revenue. They weren’t even trying to increase revenue. But that is what happened.

Then again in the 1960s, of course, this was not a Republican administration. This was the administration of President Kennedy, and he made the statement, drawing upon the experience of the 1920s, that we have to have more revenue to meet some of the obligations that we have incurred in Government. He said we need more revenues, and the best way to increase revenues is to reduce taxes.

I say to the Senator from New York, this was not a Republican administration saying this. This is someone whom he knew very well, President Kennedy, back in the 1960s.

So he came along with his tax rate. At that time the highest rate had been up at 91 percent, as you see on the chart represented by the green line. He reduced them over that period of time down to 70 percent.

Now, if you make that kind of a reduction in the tax rate and you see the curve going up here and showing that they have had more tax reductions in marginal rates than we did in the 1980s, it did exactly what the President said it was going to do in anticipating what was going to happen to the revenues. President Kennedy knew that, and I think many of the people at that time felt this was something that twice in history had been proven to be the case.

Then, of course, along came the 1980s. I can remember in the 1980s because I was around at that time. I remember when Ronald Reagan—keep in mind this was at a time when we had deficits, not surpluses as we have today. He was advocating a sweeping tax relief reduction of about $1.6 trillion. I happen to have known personally, as many of my colleagues did at that time, Speaker Tip O’Neill. Speaker O’Neill at that time was not considered to be one of the stalwarts of the conservative movement, but Tip O’Neill said: No, I think that is too much. I think to be fiscally responsible, we should reduce taxes only by some $790 billion.

Mr. President, to repeat, we learned lessons quite by accident during the Harding and Coolidge administrations back in the twenties. The lessons were that you can actually increase revenues by decreasing taxes. We learned in the 1960s when President Kennedy did the same thing; we dramatically increased revenues by decreasing taxes. This is the most revealing one because there has never been a 10-year period in the history of this country where we have had more tax reductions in marginal rates than we did in the 1980s.

On this chart, the green line is the income tax revenues, starting in 1980, going up here and showing that they increase by two-thirds at a time when the reductions in marginal rates were actually cut by two-thirds.

I think it needs to be pointed out that there is not a direct relationship between the level of taxation and the amount of revenue. In fact, the relationship is just the opposite. I think those who are saying we don’t want to reduce revenue are not saying they don’t want to reduce revenues. I can understand that. Some people believe Government should have more spending power and more control of our everyday lives. That is what defines a liberal versus a conservative. I think we are trying to do something to really have dramatic cuts to enhance the economy. Perhaps one of the benefits of that would be, as history has shown, to increase revenues.

There is one thing you can do if you want to cut down the size of Government, and that is to cut some of these programs. It has been my experience—having worked at the local level, State level, and now in both Houses of Congress, I have seen the size of the Government agency once formed. I say to the Senator from New York, there is nothing closer to immortality on the face of this earth than a Government agency once formed.

I believe we need to look at this and realize what has been happening, where we are going from here, and what effect the tax cuts we are advocating are going to actually have on the economy.

Another way of looking at it is, in 1995, Bill Clinton actually passed, with the support of Congress, the largest single tax increase in contemporary history—in the whole history of this country. He raised taxes in that one increase by $241 billion over a 5-year period. In 1995, 2 years later, President Clinton said:

People in this room are still mad at me because, prior to my proposal that we raise taxes too much. It might surprise you to know that I think they raised them too much, too.

I think anybody at that time who was opposed to that largest tax increase in the history of this Nation should realize that a way to rectify that is to reverse and repeal some of the taxes that were increased at that time. We have looked at different taxes that should be reduced. I agree with the Senator from Texas that we should reduce the marriage penalty. It doesn’t make any sense in our society to reward people who live together out of wedlock. It doesn’t make any sense at all, and it creates some of the other problems that we are so concerned about.

I am very concerned about the marginal rate tax, and I think we can probably have the effect of increasing revenues by reducing marginal rates.
I yield the floor.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, we have a unanimous consent agreement that I think will be constructive in getting our work completed. It has been discussed thoroughly with the Democratic leadership, and I know it is going to take some more time tonight and also an effort tomorrow, but I think that all things considered, it is the best way to proceed.

I ask unanimous consent that the vote with respect to the pending amendment No. 1462 occur tomorrow morning beginning at 9 a.m., with 15 minutes for concluding remarks to be equally divided beginning at 8:30 a.m. on Friday.

I further ask unanimous consent that the vote with respect to the Hutchinson amendment on the marriage penalty occur immediately following the above-described vote and there also be 15 minutes for concluding remarks to be equally divided beginning at 8:45.

I also ask consent that following the conclusion of debate this evening, no further debate time be in order other than the concluding time as outlined above.

I further ask unanimous consent that following the two described votes above, the Senate begin the voting sequence with debate on any amendment or motion properly filed in the consent agreement of July 29 limited to 2 minutes equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, in light of this agreement, there will be no further votes this evening. The first two votes of tomorrow will begin at 9 a.m. A number of votes will occur following those two votes. I hope Senators will work with the managers and work with the time. Senator Nickles is here and prepared to work with Senators to discuss the seriousness of their amendments. The "Tasmanian junior" here, Harry Reid, is going to be working on the Democratic side. Talk with the whip. It is not a very seemly way to do business to have repeated votes in the so-called vote-arama. A reasonable number is understandable and can be explained sufficiently. Senators will be asked not to leave the Chamber in the morning because once we start on the series of votes, votes will occur every 10 to 15 minutes, so we can get at least four done in an hour.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LOTT. Yes.

Mr. REID. I say to the leader and Members of the Senate, the staff will be working all night trying to clear all of these amendments. In addition, there is no rule that says if you call up an amendment or some insist on a recorded vote. We can have voice votes on some amendments. Also, on something such as this, people have to determine whether they want to offer the amendment that has been filed. Just because it was filed doesn't mean you have to vote on it.

Mr. LOTT. You do have options: they can be accepted or taken by voice vote or some insist on a recorded vote.

As I see things, tomorrow we can finish up at 2 or 3 o'clock, or we can be here at 5 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. I hope Senators will weigh carefully the need for their particular amendment. As far as amendments that have not been thoroughly debated in committee, it is awfully hard to change the Tax Code in that way. We will try to accommodate Senators as best we can.

Mr. BINGAMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Mexico. I rise in support of his amendment.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Sessions). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I renew my unanimous consent request as earlier stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, in light of this agreement, there will be no further votes this evening. The first two votes of tomorrow will begin at 9 a.m. A number of votes will occur following those two votes. I hope Senators will work with the managers and work with the time. Mr. BINGAMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Mexico. I rise in support of his amendment.

First, I thank him for his leadership on educational issues before introducing this amendment. I would like to speak for one moment about our preoccupation about another educational amendment that will be before us tonight or tomorrow.

First, on the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico, I have generally considered myself a balanced budget type of person and Democrat. I backed up the President a few years ago when we had a split in our party in the House as to whether to enact a balanced budget, and I am glad I did. I am glad I did. That means that one has to be careful about spending.

But if there is one place as we move into the 21st century that we should be spending more—not just throwing money at the problem, being careful, setting standards, but spending more money—the problem is education. As we move into an ideas economy, an ideas-based economy, the most important resource our country has is the minds of our young people. It is more important than the wealth of the mine, or the fertility of the fields, or even the output of the factory, because more and more and more wealth is created, jobs are created, and happiness is created by how well educated we are by the ideas that our people have.

To enact the budget plan posed by the other side, as the chart of the Senator from New Mexico shows, and cut education funding or to even simply freeze education funding, in my judgment, would be a mistake. This resolution, which urges this Senate and this Congress and this country to spend somewhat more on education, again wisely—I would not spend much more on education without imposing standards on teachers and standards on programs, which makes the idea of sense—I support wholeheartedly.

There is another amendment in the area of education which I am introducing along with Senator Snowe of Maine, Senator Bayh of Indiana, Senator Smith of Oregon, Senator Wyden of Oregon, and Senator Kohn of Wisconsin. It is a bipartisan amendment. We hope this amendment doesn't become a football in the various views of reconciliation that we have. But it is an amendment that is very simple. It is an amendment to make up to $2,500 of college tuition tax deductible and to provide tax credit to help those saddled with student loans.

We have introduced this amendment for two real purposes. The first purpose relates to individual families.

We are talking about tax cuts. But when I talk to my constituents in New York, and when I hear about constituents from around the country, what is the average person worried about? It is not the exact amount of tax that they pay as much as it is the big financial nugget they have to deal with—buying a home in early family life, paying for the kids' college in middle life, and paying for health care in later life.

Tonight, as we all go to sleep, there will be millions of Americans worrying about how they are going to pay for their kids' college education. Tuition has gone up far more than the rate of inflation. In fact, if you look at the prices of everything since 1980, tuition has gone up more than anything else—even more than health care. I believe the number is 250 percent between 1980 and 1995 for middle-income families—families that do not really need much other help, families that might make $50,000, or $60,000, or $70,000 a year. It seems almost unfair, after they struggle to pay that tuition bill, for Uncle Sam to take his cut. This bill says that won't happen. This bill says that for anyone at the 28-percent bracket, the tuition deduction will go lower. So the numbers will go up fairly high—$90,000—for a single head of household, and $105,000 for a two-family head of household. You can deduct your tuition.

We really give relief to those in the middle class. Too often many people in the middle class—the majority of Americans—think most of what we do helps the very poor or the very rich. But this proposal is aimed right at what bothers them, and with good reason. It is going to be tremendously helpful to millions and millions of Americans who right now think they are not getting much out of the tax proposal on either side of the aisle.

There is a second reason to do this; that is, for the good of the country. As we move into an ideas economy—an assumption just like the assumption of the Senate which had $181 billion in money over a baseline that was frozen for the next decade on the discretionary side, and ask what did it provide for education—an assumption just like the assumptions of the Senate from New Mexico—I would like to tell you what it does.

In 1999, that function on education had $47 billion in it. By the year 2009, it has $60 billion in it. It specifically provided that education initiatives receive an added amount of $37 billion over 5 years, $101 billion over 10 years.

The Senator from New Mexico, my colleague and my friend, could ask, how are you sure that will happen? I am not. Neither am I certain that the Senator's sense-of-the-Senate resolution is anything but a wish list. How do we know it would happen? If we reduce taxes by the amount suggested, there is absolutely nothing to indicate there would be more added to education in the appropriations process. It is what the Senator thinks they should add; that alone, it is called a sense of the Senate.

Over the decade under the budget resolution adopted, and I am not certain it will be implemented because it is not binding, we actually vote every year on the appropriated accounts. All Members know, the education function in that budget resolution has $570 billion, an average of $57 billion a year, while we are spending $47 billion this year.

I don't know where the other graphs came from that are talking about what we are doing to education. Those numbers are from the budget resolution.

Nobody knows at what level education will be funded on the discretionary side of the budget of the United States of America budget. They will not know any more if Senator Bingaman's sense of the Senate passes. They will say we should not cut taxes by $120 billion, because if we don't, we might put it in education.

I am not saying that. I merely want to look at the budget of the United States and the surplus that is created and then start with a freeze on everything, including education. And it may be that the Senator is starting with a freeze and assuming it continues. How much is the surplus? It is $351 trillion. What do you do with it? We put $1.9 trillion in trust funds. It turns out to be $505 billion.

I could not believe under any circumstance that the Congress of the United States, be it Republican, Democrat, or whatever, would take that $505 billion and spend it on education. I cannot believe that. There may be a difference of opinion as to where it is to be spent, but there is a whopping lot of money for high-priority items.

I don't know where the Senator got his numbers. If the numbers were legitimate, I would be supporting him. I believe we ought to establish a priority for education. If I thought we would not have enough money for the education function to be appropriated by the appropriators. I might even be saying that it is a wish list, but I don’t think that is the case. I don’t think we need to do that. There will be money around for education. It will grow dramatically because it is a high-priority item, and there is $306 billion over a freeze to be allocated for discretionary programs, and somewhere around 70, 80, or 90 for a Medicare prescription drug reform fix.

I regret doing this, but I do not think I want New Mexicans to think what I propose will destroy education in the manner that this sense of the Senate implies. If it did not imply that, I would be for it and I would not be speaking.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I yield to my distinguished colleague from New Mexico and indicate I do not in any way question his motives, and I certainly do not question his understanding or disagreement about what we are talking about in the size of this surplus. I hear my colleague say we have, over the next 10 years, $33.371 billion in surplus that we have to spend or we have to use for tax reductions. That is substantially more than the CBO indicated we had. They said we had $2.896 billion. There is a substantial difference there. Taking the figure I was given, $2.896 billion, I understand we are using by far the largest part of that for this proposed tax cut.

My view is that it is not the case, that there is still $505 billion remaining for Medicare and discretionary programs. I am just not clear in my mind where that money comes from. The figures I have for the total of the surplus do not allow for that money to be available for discretionary programs and Medicare. The figures I have received lead me to conclude that there will be major cuts in discretionary programs if we are going to adopt a tax cut of this size. If there are cuts in discretionary programs, some of those, of course, will be defense.

I believe, based on the time I have spent in the Senate, we will not cut defense. I do not support the cuts in defense, and I do not believe my colleagues do either. I think we will fund defense and we will fund increases in defense in the next 10 years in many respects. That means the discretionary domestic spending such as education has to be cut even more. That is the concern that I had, and I believe that this amendment to bring this amendment to the floor.

The point was made that I have just put together a sense of the Senate which is a wish list. That is in many ways true. I have said the Senate should go on record as not wanting to cut the current level of funding for defense, and I do not think we have to reduce the tax cut in order to ensure we do not cut current levels of funding for education, then reduce the tax cut to that extent.

As I understand the figures, that means a $12 billion reduction in the tax cut. That is what I have urged Senators to support.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, first of all let me thank my distinguished colleague from New Mexico for his continued leadership on virtually every aspect of education and our public responsibility in that particular area. I am pleased to join him on this amendment to our national policy and complete with my colleague from New Mexico about the need to make critical investments in our future. Not only does this tax bill fail to ensure the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, and I hope he would provide an adequate level of investment in education.

My own State of Virginia has long been proud of its history and support of education. You may recall it was a Virginian who is widely acknowledged as “the father of free public schools in America.” Thomas Jefferson’s vision to provide a free public education to all citizens was designed to preserve a fledging democracy. But at the dawn of a new millennium, a strong and vibrant system of public education has many other benefits as well.

Education breeds opportunity. And it is opportunity that knows no class, no gender, no race, no income level, no street address. Because when we invest in education, we invest in our people, we invest in the economic strength of our communities, and we invest in the international competitiveness of our Nation.

That is why I have always believed that all three levels of Government—local, state, and federal—should work together in the area of education. That is why I believe that the Federal Government can be a constructive partner in education. And that’s why I believe this tax bill fails short of our responsibility to our nation’s children and to our nation’s future competitiveness. The stakes for our country, and all who live here, couldn’t be greater.

Despite these stakes, the tax bill we debate today still falls short in its investment in education. In addition to the concerns expressed by my friend from New Mexico, I am particularly concerned about the inadequate level of school construction assistance provided in this bill.

Mr. LATENBERG. Mr. President, we know that 14 million children attend schools in need of extensive repair or, in some cases, complete replacement. We know that 7 million attend schools with safety code violations. And we know there are thousands and thousands of trailers in use because of school overcrowding—3,400 trailers alone in Loudoun County, Virginia, Mr. President will need to build 22 new schools to accommodate its enormous growth in student population. My home county of Fairfax, VA has capital needs of $1.2 billion over the next ten years. But it isn’t just a Virginia phenomenon; it’s a national crisis.

And we have known about this crisis since 1995, when the GAO informed us that our national school repair needs total some $121 billion. We have known that we need to build and repair over 6,000 schools across the Nation. And yet we are considering a bill today which builds and renovates only 200 schools.

Mr. President, later in our debate, I will more fully explain by law 291, the tax bill to the Finance Committee to force us to take another look at our priorities. I have recently introduced legislation which combines various bipartisan school construction proposals, with school districts and states closer to the compromise I know we can reach on this issue. I look forward to that debate, but for now I will simply say that Senator BINGAMAN is right: we need to pay more than lip service to our most critical societal investment—education. I thank the chair and I yield back any time remaining to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There remains 5 minutes.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I yield the remainder of our time to the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LATENBERG. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from the class of 1962. You are looking at the entire class here, Senator BINGAMAN and me. The Senator and I are the remainder of the class of 1962. We thought we were a small class then, but we have gotten smaller and we have hung on tenaciously.

One of the things we agree on is the need to provide the kinds of services to our country that we are pledged to, not only by the law of 1944, but by law established over a period of many years, including such services as our commitments to the veterans who fought to keep this country free, for the schoolchildren who need to get a start in life and get on with their own opportunities.

What we see today in the discussion we have just had, frankly, comes as a surprise to me, a surprise because I serve on the Budget Committee as the Democrat, I looked at the figures. We worked together to try to establish a plausible base, a parameter within which to work. But what I have heard is we just discovered gold. We found $500 billion just laying around. No one else knew it, but it was found. Since arithmetic is a relatively pure science, it has to add up, one scratches one’s head and says: How did we find roughly $500 billion more? The distinguished chairman, a very wise Member of the Senate, an outstanding expert on the budget, found $500 billion that could be used to support the tax cut that is proposed at some $790 billion. Then there are interest costs on that.

What I come up with, what the numbers say, is that we wind up with a budget surplus of $32 billion—$32 billion. That is at the end of 10 years—$32 billion. The elderly, the baby boomers who are going to be retiring at that time, ought to rest easy because they have $32 billion that is going to go into helping Social Security stay a little more solvent—$32 billion that can be used for other purposes.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I will be happy to yield for a question.

Mr. SARBANES. I would like to ask the Senator about his chart about the GOP baseline, if I might.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Please.

Mr. SARBANES. As I understand it, what the Republicans are now proposing represents a cut of over $1 trillion below—below what? Current spending levels?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. The baseline that was originally proposed by CBO was to have the caps in place until the year 2002. 3 years hence. Then it was assumed by the presentations that we have seen and that are here on the chart, that now the baseline will decline by virtue of no inflation allowable for those years after it—none, zero.

Mr. SARBANES. None whatever?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. That is right. If you do that, you take over $400 billion out of reality, out of the need to provide programs—$419 billion below CBO’s capped baseline.

If you want to play with a figment of imagination, you can imagine maybe it will be less than that. Maybe we will be able to cut out the programs for veterans and the other programs that are necessary, just cut them and play pretend.

Mr. SARBANES. As I understand it, it would take a cut of about 40 to 50 percent in the program levels in order to reach that figure on the GOP baseline.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. The Senator is absolutely right. It would take a cut of 50 percent. So that is how we get there. It is a poor way to do business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. Who yields time?

Mr. THOMPSON. With the committee chairman’s approval, I yield myself 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, on the assumption there are certain basic things we can all agree with about education. I think most of us realize the economic prosperity we have today has to do with our productivity. Our productivity, in turn, has to do in large part with the technological advances we have had, and that, in turn, is based upon a well-qualified workforce. The needs for that kind of workforce, that kind of background and training in the future, are going to be even greater because we are exploding with information in an information age for sure.

There is no question about that. Our economic stability and security in the long term in large part is going to depend on the education system we have. That, of course, does not necessarily equate to Federal spending on education. Unfortunately, for some years now we have seen that we have almost an inverse relationship between the amount of Federal money spent on education and the quality of education we seem to be getting. Nonetheless, we all agree there is a part of this effort that should fall on our shoulders. This amendment suggests our budget does not address this education problem sufficiently.

I think it has been a good discussion. I think it is one we ought to have. Every time I begin thinking we can have good discussion about this, I pick up something, such as the Daily Report for Executives of July 29 that is entitled, “GOP Tax Plan Would Hurt Schools, President And Administration Aides Say.”

Clinton told representatives of Boys and Girls Nation at the White House that the Republican tax cut represent funds to help $80,000 children learn to read.

On and on for other things. I know when I came to Washington, one of the main things I wanted to do was keep children from reading. We spend a lot of time, we stay up late at night, figuring out how we can keep kids from learning to read. The President is just verifying this with these young people. I hope the President, as badly as he is misdirecting them, has more credibility with the young people of this Nation than I think he has.

Now we hear about cuts. We have been hearing about cuts of 30 percent, cuts of 40 percent, and now cuts of 50 percent. People must wonder what is going on. Senator DOMENICI says that is not accurate. He points out that although we have a baseline freeze after the spending caps are lifted, there is an additional $505 billion in our budget proposal that can be used for whatever discretionary spending this President and this Congress decide they want to spend it on.

How do we come up with these cuts? It is a Washington, DC, cut. A Washington, DC, cut is when you project out what you want spending to be, and then any spending that is less than that constitutes a cut. It is not a real cut. All cuts are relative, but it is less than what the projection would be.

If you are going by that kind of rationale, then the President is proposing cuts up to 26 percent, if you figure in his Social Security plan, because he does not really keep up with the projections that are being argued.

Go back to 1991 and project increases from 1991 up to today. Look and see what that is. It has been about 4.2 percent during that period of time. What the other side is doing is projecting that out ad infinitum. If we cut back any of those programs, even though the dollar is an increase, it is less than what they projected it ought to be, so that constitutes a cut.

The fact is, if we did what our colleagues on the other side suggest, we would lock in basically the projected increases we would have—inflation plus—we would lock those in, basically making them. I suppose, mandatory programs instead of discretionary programs. We would not do what Congress is supposed to do, and that is sit down and decide what our priorities are, what programs should be cut, and what programs should not be cut.

Obviously, many of us think some programs should be increased. We are hearing a lot now about our hospital programs, our children’s hospitals, veterans, certainly military in some respects. Certainly, there are going to have to be some increases as we go along, but I think the primary point I want to make is that there are also going to have to be some decreases. There are going to have to be some cuts.

These are the kinds of things we are going to have to decide. We cannot decide here in advance, because some projection is not reached, that we are going to cut a particular program to keep kids from reading—pick your own favorite program, the worst thing you could do. We would not do what Congress is doing. We would not lock in basically the projected increases. That constitutes a cut. It is an increase, but it is less than what you want spending to be, and then any spending that is less than that constitutes a cut. It is not a real cut. All cuts are relative, but it is less than what the projection would be.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. The baseline that was originally proposed by CBO was to have the caps in place until the year 2002, 3 years hence. Then it was assumed by the presentations that we have seen and that are here on the chart, that now the baseline will decline by virtue of no inflation allowable for those years after it—none, zero.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. Who yields time?

Mr. THOMPSON. With the committee chairman’s approval, I yield myself 10 minutes.
the list year after year, but we keep funding these programs. We keep increasing the funding for these programs, whether they are working or not. There are billions of dollars of scarce resources diverted from their intended purposes many times in waste, fraud, and abuse.

The President in his budget does not find one agency, that I can determine, that he believes could be operated more efficiently or in which money could be spent better. All of these programs deserve an increase by definition. They are Federal Government programs. They deserve an increase. If you want to reduce funding for a Department or an agency, then you can pick the program on the other side they say you are cutting.

The honest truth is that no one knows really how much the Federal Government loses annually cumulatively to waste, fraud, abuse, and error. One reason is that most agencies do not keep track of such losses. We try to keep track for them, as best we can.

Here are a few things we have learned: The Health Care Financing Administration made erroneous Medicare payments that siphoned off between 7 and 14 percent of the total program. The Department of Housing and Urban Development made overpayments in its rent subsidy program of $2 billion, depending on which year you are talking about. In 1997, it was $24 billion. In 1998, they improved; it was only $12 billion.

The Supplemental Security Income Program—cumulative overpayments of $3.3 billion, including newly detected overpayments of $1.2 billion just last year.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development made overpayments in its rent subsidy program of almost $1 billion.

The Department of Agriculture made overpayments in its Food Stamp Program that amounted to about $1 billion, or 5 percent of the total program.

I have others here. The Federal tax debt. We have Federal tax debt and nontax debt delinquencies, money owed to the Government, not collected, of $150 billion. I have other items. I mentioned the Medicare payments.

The Department of Energy: Through 1980 to 1996, the Department of Energy terminated 51 major systems acquisition projects after expenditures of over $10 billion. They spent $10 billion and then terminated the projects; $10 billion was essentially wasted.

Defense contract overpayments: No one knows how much the Government overpays each year in contracts for goods and services. However, during the recent 5-year period, defense contractors returned $4.6 billion in overpayments to the Department of Defense.

Earned income tax credit, $1.4 billion.

I mentioned SSI.

Student loan defaults, $3.3 billion.

Food stamp overpayments, rent subsidy.

A total of $196 billion.

I yield myself another 5 minutes.

Mr. President, $196 billion, and that is just on the waste, fraud, and abuse side. This is on with regard to our Government now and these agencies across our Government.

Look at the cross-cutting and the duplication, the hundreds of programs that are all designed to do the same thing. The Federal Government does not know what the right hand is doing. No one is taking action to sort through this morass to find out which programs are working and are not. They keep being refunded every year at the full amount on an increased amount.

According to the GAO, in program area after program area, unfocused and uncoordinated cross-cutting programs waste scarce funds, confuse and frustrate taxpayers and other program customers, and limit overall program effectiveness.

Last year Congress tried to address the number of education programs. We are all for education. We are all for spending education money wisely. We have $505 billion of discretionary spending set aside, some of which we can spend on education. But we found there were 29 Federal agencies running more than 760 education programs at a cost of $100 billion a year. Is that effective use of taxpayers' money?

One example is homelessness where 50 Federal programs, run by eight agencies, seek to provide services to homeless people. We have eight agencies—the Departments of Agriculture, Health and Human Services, Housing, Urban Development, Education, Labor, Veterans Affairs—and two independent agencies—FEMA and the Social Security Administration—administering over 35 inefficient programs, putting the American public at greater danger of foodborne illnesses. But there have been virtually no discussions for many discretionary programs in the President's budget.

This is supposed to be part of our job. That is why we passed the Performance and Results Act. These agencies are supposed to come to us in Congress and tell us of the effectiveness of their programs. I assume that because we want that information, we want to do something with it, and what we want to do with that information is not use it to continue to fund these Departments that are wasting money and permitting fraud to be perpetrated upon us to the tune of billions and billions of dollars.

Some of these programs are mandatory spending programs. Some of them are discretionary spending programs. But it is all money that would have been in those Departments had it not been siphoned off; had it not been stolen; had it not been wasted. It would have been reflected in the budgetary requests when they came before us. The requests would be less, and we would be giving them less money if they were operating halfway the way they are supposed to.

My point is, again, this idea that our friends on the other side of the aisle have, that they want to have this projected rate of increase that we can't deviate from at all, is a notion that would go against every basic precept of efficiency and the proper functioning of Government.

I yield myself another 3 minutes.

Mr. THOMPSON. We need to, as we go along, take that $505 billion that our budget sets aside for these programs and have every one of them come up here and justify themselves. Some of them need increases. Some of them need cuts. In my opinion, some of them need total elimination, and I make no apologies for that.
But the idea that we are cutting this, and we are cutting that, and we are going to keep people from reading, the President of the United States telling these young boys and girls that we are going to cut 480,000 children from learning to read, that is kind of a new low. We do not know really what to do any more with this stuff. The first thing you do is get kind of angry, and then you are just kind of sad, shaking your head, that that sort of stuff is coming out of the White House.

So let’s get back to the facts. Let’s go back to reality. We can have a good debate as to how much money we ought to spend on these programs. That is what we ought to do. But let’s not try to convince the American people that we have made a determination that somewhere in our budget we are cutting our own learning to read. That or that we are doing any of these other things—any of these other scare tactics that are always used by people who think that the American people are not quite as smart as they really are. I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. ROTH. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. I thank the Chair and thank the chairman for yielding me time.

I rise to talk about two amendments—not the Bingaman amendment—two amendments that I have added to the list of 100-some amendments that we can accept one of them. We are working very hard to get that done. I have agreed to enter into a colloquy with the chairman on another one. I would hope that we will work in conference.

The AMERICAN COMMUNITY RENEWAL ACT

The amendment that I have agreed to enter into a colloquy with the Senator from Delaware on is the American Community Renewal Act. The American Community Renewal Act is part of the House bill. It was one of the centerpieces that the chairman and I very strongly support as chairman of the Renewal Alliance, which is a group of Senators and Congressmen who have been advocating nongovernmental solutions to the problems that face our inner cities and impoverished rural areas.

It is important for us, when we pass a tax bill that provides tax relief to taxpayers, as we should, that we look to those who do not pay taxes and see what we can do to help lift them into the sometimes beleaguered status of taxpayers.

It is important for us to be able to reach down into those communities that are struggling. I have many of them in my State. We work very hard in communities, from Philadelphia to communities like Chester and McKeesport, and work with community groups, nonprofits that are out there trying to make a difference, working with the local officials in trying to provide economic opportunity, as well as cultural ones, for the communities that are in blight.

The American Community Renewal Act, I believe, is the right message for those communities, is the right direction, and that is through empowerment and through working with the local faith-based and local community development organizations, helping them pull themselves out of the difficult situations they find themselves in.

The American Community Renewal Act has two parts. No. 1, it provides for a charitable tax credit. This is a State-based tax credit. It allows for Federal block grant funds to be used by States to provide a tax credit to individual taxpayers who give money to nonprofit organizations that spend over 55 percent of their money helping low-income individuals. So this is a way for the Government, instead of spending more money on Federal or State programs, to take the money that the Federal Government gives to run Federal programs and say: Let’s give it directly, unaltered, untainted, directly to those organizations—many of them faith-based—that really are out there on the front line, compassionate organizations that are out there across the table from people who are in need, people who have problems.

They are not behind a bulletproof glass at a welfare office passing out checks if you have the right number on your card. These are people who are in the trenches who are making a difference, who are transforming lives every single day, and doing it not because they get paid to do it or because there is a Federal law they have to do it; they do it because they love their neighbors.

Those organizations have been lifted up recently by the Vice President, by Governor George Bush, and many others running for President. They are lifted up because they found that—you know, some of these organizations—there is a very utilitarian reason to do this—it works best; it is cheapest—but that is not the best reason. The best reason to do this is because it transforms lives. It does not just give people a better job or get them off drugs. It transforms their spirit, which is the best thing needed in America’s poorest communities.

What we do with the charitable tax credit is, I believe, the most transformational thing we can do in this tax bill.

The second part of the American Community Renewal Act targets not the soul but the economy. How do we create jobs so when we transform people they can get into productive work, not taking a bus out to the suburbs to do something, but to transform their own communities with home ownership and economic opportunity and entrepreneurial investment.

We provide for 100 renewal communities, targeted with progrowth incentives, tax benefits, regulatory relief, savings accounts, brownfield cleanups, a comprehensive approach to inner cities. And at least 20 percent of these communities have to be in rural areas. This is in the House bill. This is where the House stepped up and said, yes, we are for tax relief. We have overpaid, but we will not leave any American behind. We are going to reach down and make sure every American has the opportunity to be a taxpayer, to contribute to the economic future of this country.

A renewal community must do some things. It is not just a handout to the community. They have to commit to reduce local tax rates and reduce fees within the zone. So yes, we are going to provide some incentives, but they have to do the same. They have to partner with us. The States have to eliminate State and local sales taxes, waive local and State occupational licensing regulations and other barriers to entry for entrepreneurs in these poor communities where it is so hard.

It is a lot harder to put up a store front in an area where crime is high, where the services are not as good, than it to set up one in the suburbs. It is a lot more expensive. It is harder to get employees, harder to maintain security, harder to get people to come into your establishment. So they need some help. This is the kind of help we want to partner with. We will provide the incentives, the States do the hard work. It is a partnership. Let’s really work together to make this happen.

I fervently hope when we bring this bill out of conference that the American Community Renewal Act will be a part of that so that we know, as I believe this bill does, that we care about all Americans in providing relief, yes, tax relief, but relief from the difficult times that many Americans are going through in our inner cities and poor rural areas.

The second bill I am going to be talking about, which we have introduced and I hope we can get adopted, is a very simple provision.

Before I start, in this bill—I congratulate the chairman—is a raising of the low-income housing tax credit allocation. The current cap, $1.25 per capita per State, was established in 1986 and has never been raised. Due to inflation, credits under the current allocation are lost and their value is lost.

The chairman’s bill raises the allocation to $1.75 per capita over a 5-year period. The low-income housing tax credit is the largest and, I think, most efficient housing program because it marries public and private resources of production in rehab of affordable rental housing that we have in America. It is a tremendous success.

My amendment to the chairman’s bill is based on legislation which raises the cap and indexes it for inflation. This legislation already has 70 cosponsors in the Senate. The only piece left out of the chairman’s bill is an indexing of that per capita allocation from the year 2006 on. That costs a whopping $43 million, not a big ticket item. And frankly, we pay for it. In fact, as the chairman will be delighted, we more than pay for it in the amendment that we have. So there is extra money around for other things that may be done. We think this is a high priority.

I think, again, we have to provide affordable housing. This is a program that works. This is a program that has bipartisan support and something that can say to people, as we have in this bill already, say to people who may not be big taxpayers and get big tax relief that we are going to provide some relief in the form of better affordable housing, more affordable housing for those who may not be taxpayers now but hopefully, through the efforts here in reducing taxes, getting this economy—not getting the real housing companies, but continuing this economy to grow in the future, we will participate in that.

This is one of those step-ups, by providing quality, affordable private housing, rental housing, which has, again, been an incredibly successful program. I hope, again, that we can include the amendment on the low-income housing tax credit in this bill and go to conference with that here in the Senate bill. Secondly, I implore the chairman that we make sure that at conference we include the American Community Renewal Act to make sure that every American has the opportunity to rise.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields the floor?

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes off the bill to the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LUTENBERG. I thank my friend and colleague from Montana.

Mr. President, tomorrow I will be offering an amendment on behalf of myself and Senator SENEGOLD. This amendment is very simple. It directs the Finance Committee to change the bill so that it does not raid Social Security surpluses in any year to pay for tax breaks.

The motion stands for a very simple proposition. Social Security surpluses should not be used for broad-scale tax breaks that primarily benefit special interests and wealthy individuals, for tax breaks that disproportionately benefit the wealthy, not for anything that would make it more difficult for baby boomers and other Americans to enjoy a secure retirement.

This ought not to be a controversial proposition. After all, both parties have been arguing along the same lines for most of this year. Democrats created a lockbox to prevent Social Security surpluses from being used for other purposes and to protect Medicare, and the Republicans vowed to support that concept. But actually, the lockbox proposal that was introduced by the Republicans has a huge loophole and does nothing for Medicare.

Medicare is perhaps the most important program that exists in this country. Medicare is for the elderly. Medicare is the one program that people have to have standing by in case an illness strikes, which is an occurrence that is not infrequent when one reaches 65 or retirement age. Medicare can prevent a catastrophic illness, but also can prevent a catastrophic financial problem. So we support extending Medicare for as long as we possibly can, and the projection now is that though Medicare would be insolvent in 2015, we see an opportunity to extend it to 2027.

There did seem to be broad agreement from both parties that Social Security surpluses should not be touched for any other purpose, that they should be used only to reduce publicly held debt. I was surprised, to put it mildly, to discover that the Republican tax bill before us actually spends Social Security surpluses. Deny it they might—and one need not be a mathematician; the arithmetic is pretty simple to see—but, in fact, the bill before us spends Social Security surpluses in each of the second 5 years after the bill’s enactment. It also can prevent a catastrophic illness, but that is not infrequent when one reaches 65 or retirement age. Medicare can prevent a catastrophic illness, but also can prevent a catastrophic financial problem. So we support extending Medicare for as long as we possibly can, and the projection now is that though Medicare would be insolvent in 2015, we see an opportunity to extend it to 2027.

This chart explains the problems. Consider, for example, what happens beginning in 2005 under this legislation. The non-Social Security surplus that year will be $38.6 billion. But this bill, the way it is laid out, would cost $89.9 billion. In other words, this bill would use $1.3 billion in Social Security surpluses that year, 2005, not a long way away. But the damage doesn’t stop there.

This legislation would increase debt, and that would lead to higher interest costs. In 2005 alone, these additional interest costs would eat up another $10.9 billion of Social Security surpluses. So the raid on Social Security that year would equal $12.3 billion. This is after the promise that Social Security is sacred: Touch not a hair on that Social Security reserve that we are saving for the elderly, which we promised them would be theirs. When we finally have to guarantee its solvency, that promise, frankly, was an empty promise.

Look at the numbers. If you consider both the direct revenue losses and the additional interest costs, this bill would raid Social Security surpluses in each of the second 5 years after enactment. We are talking about 10 years from now. The raid in 2006 would take $5.7 billion. That would increase to $16.2 billion in 2007, to $24 billion in 2008, and $23.4 billion in the year 2009. This is inconsistent with the Republicans’ own lockbox. It would violate a principle that is meant to protect all Americans who are depending on Social Security for their retirement. These are people who spend their lives working hard, playing by the rules, contributing their FICA taxes to the Social Security trust fund. In fact, millions of seniors depend on Social Security just to make ends meet, no luxury included there. Many of these people have high medical expenses. It is a humanitarian phenomenon. Thank goodness we are living longer, but in that living illnesses do occur. Some have trouble getting around; they are physically impaired. Many are really struggling. It is Social Security that keeps them out of poverty. For these people, saying Social Security is not just an abstract principle, a slogan; it is critical to their very existence.

That is important to remember. It is important to remember that the number of Social Security beneficiaries will grow by 37 percent between now and 2015. By 2014, Social Security taxes will no longer be sufficient to cover monthly expenses. So we need to restructure. At a minimum, that means not using Social Security surpluses for anything else.

I know how my friends on the Republican side will react to this. When confronted with these numbers, they will have to admit that this bill spends Social Security surpluses. But that is not really a problem, they will say, because years and years down the road the Congress will somehow find a way to make sure that the program such as education and the environment to make up the difference.

That is an empty promise, an empty lockbox, it is completely unenforceable, and it has zero credibility. Consider how deep these cuts would have to be. Let’s assume the Republican Congress funds defense programs only at the levels proposed by President Clinton. After 10 years, domestic needs—everything from education, to environmental protection, to the FBI—would have to be cut by roughly 40 percent. Is that credible? A 40-percent cut in student aid? A 40-percent cut in health research? A 40-percent cut in veterans’ programs? That always gets cut for the sake of the veteran. But when they are recruiting, when they sign up, are we not going to make sure you have medical care through the rest of your life—and that they cut the funding? There may be a few Republicans who would support cuts such as that. But there is no way cuts that size would ever win a majority. It would be foolish to assume otherwise.
My motion is simple. It tells the Finance Committee to go back and fix this bill; that it doesn’t do as much as needed to protect Social Security surplus, in any year, bring it back to the Senate within 3 days, and then let’s consider it. I don’t think it is asking much. It is not going to hurt anybody if the Senate waits another 3 days before resuming work on this bill. But lots of people will be hurt if the Senate abandons its principles and uses Social Security surpluses for tax breaks that disproportionately benefit the wealthy and special interests. That would be a serious mistake.

I urge my colleagues to support this motion when it is in front of you. Let’s fix this bill and protect Social Security surpluses. Let’s keep the promise we made to the baby boomers, those who will be retiring, that Social Security will be there. Don’t go as far as we are physically able to do so.

I yield the floor.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield the remaining 6 minutes we have on the amendment to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, there won’t be time tomorrow to say what I am saying tonight. That is why I came down. I congratulate the Senator from Delaware, Senator ROTT, and the Finance Committee for a fine job.

First of all, I am kind of infuriated, but I will keep my emotions down. The President of the United States has gone beyond what anybody would believe when today, in front of a bunch of young people, he as much as said the Republican plan will make sure you don’t even learn how to read. That is disgraceful because the truth of the matter is, if the Congress wants to spend more money on education after this tax cut, there is plenty of money to do it. If the President is persuasive enough next year, he can get more money for education because there is more money to spend.

The second thing is not at that level for me, but Senator LAUTENBERG is just flat wrong. Do you know who was spending the Social Security surplus? The President was. In fact, he even sent to us his first proposal and said, only save 62 percent of it, spend the rest of it. He said, we will save it over 15 years, don’t worry year by year about putting it in the trust fund. We challenged him on that. He came back in his midsession review and said: Republicans, you are right: Let’s put 100 percent in. So we put 100 percent in the lockbox, into security. So I don’t understand what Senator LAUTENBERG is talking about.

Having said that, let me talk about this bill because it is a verymasterful bill, considering where we are. First, there is no question that marriage, saving for retirement, and dying should not be taxable events as we enter the new century. If there is anything we have learned, it is that we need to en-hance and praise marriage, not punish it. We need to encourage saving for retirement; and we should not tax the event of dying. Isn’t it wonderful that we have fixed all of those to a great extent in this bill? What is the matter with that?

Mr. President, that is what you are going to be vetoing when you veto this bill.

Alternative minimum tax. That is, the alternative minimum tax should not turn the child care credit, education credit, HOPE education tax credit, and foster care credits into phantom tax relief. Not worth the paper they were written on because an old alternative minimum tax, adopted during the oil boom, would make these credits unusable, so when you hear these funny words, ‘‘Let’s fix the alter-native minimum tax, ’’ it is hundreds and hundreds of thousands of middle-income Americans who thought we gave them an education credit, who thought we gave them a child care credit, only to find that now the alternative minimum tax takes it away. That has been fixed.

Taxes are too high if measured by what is needed to fund the Government. They are too high if measured historically. The average family is paying twice what they paid in 1985. The tax burden is 54 percent heavier when measured from President Clinton’s first day in office to the end of 1999. He may take a lot of credit for other things, but that is a fact. Despite these record increases, the administration’s 2000 budget proposes another $170 billion in new taxes. Unbelievable.

Broad-based tax relief. The Senate bill starts off with broad-based relief, lowering the bottom brackets for everyone. The Senate bill starts out with broad-based tax relief, and in the bill after lowering the rate to 14, they raise the brackets by $10,000. That means that millions more Americans will be paying the lowest possible rate.

This bill provides significant family relief, although not as much as my good friend from Texas would like on the mortgage penalty.

I ask our seniors across America, as the President tries to frighten them into thinking we are harming them on Medicare and Social Security, when that is not the truth, wouldn’t you like it if your sons and daughters who are paying a marriage penalty because they are married are treated like other citizens instead of punished? I believe senior citizens would be very grateful for that for their children—the millions across America.

Child care: I think the seniors who are trying to frighten death because they want an issue and not a so-lution will be the last to know that Chairman BILL ROTT and his Finance Committee made it easier for their grandchildren to be taken care of under child care and the enormous costs that it imposes on a family. We have made it more accessible, and we have made the elderly much more advantageous tax laws.

Their Tax Code is notorious for giv-ing a tax break on the one hand and then taking it away on the other. That is the alternative minimum tax, and it works in that fashion. This bill that has been put before this committee protects the child credit, and it protects education credits.

Mr. President, and fellow Senators, there is much more that can be said about it. I suggest that this bill will do more for millions of Americans.

Taxes are too high if measured by what is needed to fund government. Taxes are too high if measured by historical benchmarks. The average family is paying twice what they paid in 1985.

The tax burden is 54 percent heavier when measured from President Clinton’s first day in office to the end of 1999. Despite these record increases, the Administration’s 2000 budget proposes another $170 billion in new taxes.

The Senate bill starts out with broad-based tax relief. Lowering the bottom bracket gives a tax cut to every taxpaying family. The bill lowers the rate to 14 percent. I would have liked to see it go even lower.

The bill also widens the lowest bracket so that more people can earn more money without being forced into the 28 percent bracket. This change will return 4 million Americans to the lowest bracket. It will return 131,000 New Mexicans to the lowest bracket and at the same time another 83,000 New Mexicans will see their taxes cut.

This bill also provides significant family tax relief.

Saying ‘‘I do’’ at the altar has meant paying on average $1,400 more on April 15. Marriage shouldn’t be a taxable event. This bill corrects this inequity for 19 million American families.

As more and more women have entered the work force, one of the fastest growing family expenses is child care. In New Mexico, the annual cost can run from $3,133 to $5,200 per child. This bill increases the child care credit from 30 to 50 percent for families earning less than $30,000, and expands the eligibility for the credit to all families. With the credit increase and the eligibility expansion, as many as 68,000 New Mexico families will be eligible for either a higher credit or first time eligibility.

The tax code is notorious for giving a tax break with one hand and taking it away in the other. The Alternative Min-i mum Tax, AMT, works in this fashion. This bill protects the child care credit, education credits, day care and other norefundable tax credits from being rendered unusable by the AMT. When the AMT was created in 1986, 140,000 people had to pay it. But by 2008: 24.8 million of those families would receive zero or less than the full credit as a result of the AMT.
There will be 49 million families with nonrefundable credits—all credits except EITC—and 39.9 million of them will owe less than the full credits as a result of the AMT.

There will be 16 million families eligible for HOPE and lifetime learning credits, but 11.3 million would receive zero or less than the full credits as a result of the AMT.

The bill recognizes that all family expenditures are not equal. This tax bill recognizes that education is important and provides $12 billion over ten years in tax relief. The bill includes education savings accounts for 14.3 million families. Seventy percent of these education tax benefits goes to families with incomes less than $75,000.

It makes employer provided education assistance permanent. In this ever changing technology driven world it is essential that workers pursue life long learning and complete graduate degree. The bill also makes it easier and cheaper for school construction. There are more than 1,700 schools in New Mexico that the hope will be helped by this initiative.

In New Mexico there are 331,815 public school students. It would be wonderful if New Mexican—parents and grandparents started as soon as this bill is signed into law to open an account for each of these 331,815 children. There would be no better investment in America’s future and these education accounts should help families meet that goal.

When it comes to health care, the Tax Code doesn’t discriminate based upon who you are, but rather upon who you work for. Families shouldn’t receive disparate tax treatment determined by who you work for. It isn’t fair that a child’s health care be purchased with pre-tax dollars; while the sole proprietor or the employee of a small business has to pay for health care with after-tax dollars.

This bill provides 100 percent deductibility for health insurance for the self-employed. It also provides an above-the-line deduction that will phase in from 25 percent to 100 percent for every taxpaying American family. There are 43.3 million uninsured people in America, plus 10.2 million who have access to health insurance but decline to participate because of the high cost. This is a big problem in New Mexico. There are 300,000 uninsured New Mexicans where someone in the family works.

The bill provides generational equity by providing a child care and a long term care credit. One in four families care for an elderly relative. This bill provides a tax credit and an extra exemption for the in home caregiver.

Expensing is the most efficient way of reducing the cost of capital for new investment. The bill provides $5,000 worth of new efficiency for every small business by increasing the amount that can be written off in the year the investment is made. A tax policy that allows capital investments to be deductible in the year they are made maximizes productivity, economic growth and job creation. When a company doesn’t have to calculate depreciation it saves 43 hours a year in tax preparation. If we adopted a system of expensing we could save the first million hours a year in tax and recordkeeping. We would also lower the cost of capital by about one-third.

‘This bill takes significant steps to reduce the estate and gift tax. The bill would lower the tax rate to 50 percent, double the gift tax exclusion and get rid of the generation skipping transfer tax which can impose taxes as high as 80 percent when a gift is left to a grandchild.’

Milton Friedman said and I agree, “The estate tax sends a bad message to savers, to wit: that it is o.k. to spend your money on wine, women and song, but don’t try to save it for your kids. The moral absurdity of the tax is surpassed only by its economic irrationality.”

The death tax is also one of the most unpopular taxes. While most Americans will never pay it, 70 percent believe it is one of the most unfair taxes.

Its damage to the economy is worse than its unpopular reputation. The Tax Foundation found that today’s estate tax rates (ranging from 18 to 55 percent) have the same disincentive effect on entrepreneurs as doubling the current income tax rates. NFIB called it the “greatest burden on our nation’s most successful small businesses.”

This bill makes a major stride. It makes the R&E credit permanent.

With a $2.2 trillion surplus, the only responsible, legitimate course of action is a tax cut.

Foolish are they who argue against tax cuts. They say to working families, “I know what to do with your money, better than you do. Give it to me so I can spend it for you.”

The tax burden is high. People work until May 11, of each year to pay their taxes. It is the highest tax burden since WWII. People pay more in taxes than they spend on food, shelter and education.

The Senate tax plan is an excellent plan that moves us toward lower, flatter, simpler taxes. It moves us toward taxing income that is consumed and not income that is earned, saved and invested.

It’s the same old debate: one party wants to give the money to programs; we want to give the money to people. With a $2.2 trillion government it is impossible to give you everything is a government that takes everything away with a big tax bite. I can’t imagine anything more frightening to the average taxpayer than the sight of grand government schemer rushing toward trillion dollar pile of extra tax payer dollars.

Republicans say it is the best of times for a tax cut; the Democrats say it is the worst. Everyone quotes Chairman Greenspan. When Greenspan is deciphered the oracle is that a tax cut is better than spending all the money.

If the surplus were a dollar 2 quarters would go for Social Security reform; one quarter for high priority spending—education, research, and defense.

The first three quarters we can save social security, reform medicare, provide adequate funding for domestic and defense spending and pay down the national the debt.

The remaining quarter is for tax cuts.

The Taxpayer Refund Act before the Senate is the best of plans. It lowers rates. It encourages savings. It eliminates the worst of a bad tax code by eliminating the marriage penalty; killing the death tax and ending the Alternative Minimum tax to rescue the full benefit of the child care, foster care, education, and other needed tax credits for families who otherwise unavoidably would end up in the AMT.

If not tax cuts now, then when? The Democrats say—not ever. I say, If not tax cuts now, then what? The President’s plan answers: Spend it all, grow government!

The Senate plan is synchronized to our business cycle and the condition of the economy. Congress’ budget allocates 75 percent of the projected surpluses over the next 10 years for paying down the debt. This ensures our long-term fiscal virility.

Even with our tax cut, our surpluses will climb steadily as a share of GDP and our national debt will be paid off—falling dramatically from 40 percent of GDP this year to only 12 percent by 2009. Our plan lowers the level of debt more than the President’s plan keeps government from growing out of control and gives the American people some of their hard earned money back in the form or a well-thought out tax cut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield the floor.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask that the legislative assistant read as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 1472
(Purpose: To provide for the relief of the marriage tax penalty beginning in the year 2001 and for other purposes)

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1472.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative assistant read as follows:

‘The Senator from Texas (Mrs. Hutchison), for herself, Mr. Ascorfoot, and Mr. Brownack, proposes an amendment numbered 1472.'
Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(1) On page 15, line 14, insert the following to paragraph (c):

(A) "Twice the dollar amount in effect under subparagraph (C) in the case of—

(i) a joint return for married individuals not filing a combined return under 6013A, or

(ii) a surviving spouse (as defined in section 2(a)),"

(2) On page 15, line 14, insert the following new paragraph (d) and reorder the remaining paragraphs accordingly:

(d) PHASE-IN.—In the case of taxable years beginning before January 1, 2004—

(A) paragraph (2)(A) shall be applied by substituting for "twice"—

(i) "1.778 times" in the case of taxable years beginning during 2001 and 2002

(ii) "1.889 times" in the case of the taxable year 2003.

(3) Alternative Minimum Tax: Modifications to Section 266.

On page 32, line 3—

"Strike "1998" and insert "2000.""

On page 32, line 14—

"Strike "2004" and insert "2006.""

(4) Gift Tax Exclusion: Modification to Section 721:

On page 236, line 11, strike all of Section 721 and insert the following new section:

"SECTION 721. INCREASE IN ANNUAL GIFT EXCLUSION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 2503 (b) (relating to exclusions from gifts) is amended—

(1) by striking "$10,000" and inserting "$30,000;"

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to gifts made after December 31, 2001.

(5) Charitable Contributions for Individuals Who Do Not Itemize: Modifications to Section 6017.

On page 262, strike lines 15 through 17 and insert the following new paragraph:

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001 and ending before January 1, 2004.

(6) International Tax Provisions: Modifications to Sections 901 and 962:

On page 275, line 12, strike "2003" and insert "2004".

On page 278, line 13, strike "2002" and insert "2004".

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, this amendment is cosponsored by Senators ASHCROFT of Missouri and Senator BROWNBACK of Kansas.

This is an amendment that, very simply, moves the marriage penalty provisions from taking effect in 2005 to giving an extra year, starting in 2001. By beginning to phase in the doubling of the standard deduction, we give married couples relief from the marriage penalty that I have to say I think is the most unfair part of the Tax Code in the Internal Revenue Code that we have in our country.

It isn't that anybody ever meant to have a marriage tax penalty. Congress didn't enact one. But it was a consequence that was unintended and unexpected when there were changes in the brackets in the Tax Code. We are going to correct it with this amendment. We are going to do it earlier than is in the bill.

I think Senator ROTH and Senator MOYNIHAN did a terrific job. They had a very difficult time, particularly because they were quite responsible in saying we were not going to have tax cuts except as we have a surplus that comes from income tax deductions.

The first decision the Finance Committee made was to say: We are setting aside Social Security. We are not going to touch it.

If we were to spend the Social Security surplus, we could have a lot more tax cuts a lot faster. But they were right. They said: No, we are not going to do that. Social Security was off the table.

We have smaller tax cuts in the early years because we are dealing with income tax deductions that should go back to the people who earned it. They sent too much to Washington and we want to return it to them.

The question is, What is the most important of the tax cuts and the least we can give? Senator ASHCROFT, Senator BROWNBACK, and I believe the marriage tax penalty is the highest priority for relief.

We are offering this amendment by delaying a few of the other tax cuts until later. We don't change any of the tax cuts in this bill. We do not eliminate any of them. I support all of them. But we say the highest priority is the marriage tax penalty relief and everything else can be delayed a little bit to give hard-working American families that relief.

We are talking about a schoolteacher who makes $33,000 a year and a football coach who makes $41,000 a year. They are paying taxes, when they are single, in the 15-percent tax bracket. They get married. Guess what, they go into the 28-percent tax bracket at a time when they need their money the most.

We have almost doubled their tax bracket just because they have gotten married. Not only that, we don't even give them double the standard deduction. Instead of $4,300, and $4,300 when they were both single, they now together get $7,200. All of us are going to do is phase in $8,600 in the standard deduction right up front. We are going to delay a few other things to let that happen.

In 2005, the real marriage tax penalty kicks in because that is the first time we have the money to let people file as singles when they are married. That is the best marriage tax penalty reduction of all because it eliminates it. That is simply what the amendment does.

I commend Senator ROTH for all of the effort he took to be responsible with this tax cut bill. This tax cut bill has across-the-board rate reductions that help every taxpayer in America, expands the tax brackets for middle-income taxpayers, and a number of positive pension provisions that are particularly helpful for women.

I spoke to Senator ROTH about the inequity for women in the workplace, because women have children and they have to lay off a few months. Some choose to lay off for six years until their children go to school. Some choose to lay off 18 years.

Women live longer. They are in and out of the workplace more—that is a fact—and they get penalized not only in their working years, but they get penalized in their retirement years. That is not fair.

This bill attempts to give them catchup provisions for their pensions. It is a great part of this bill. I support it totally.

We also have increases in charitable giving. This is a provision of mine that was put in this bill by Senator ROTH. It allows a person to roll over IRA contributions to charities without tax consequences. If a person has saved and done the right thing and sees that they are not going to need their IRA money, they can give it to charity without tax consequences. That is in this bill.

We are helping farmers with risk accounts in this bill, so that farmers will be able to plan and put aside money tax free until they need it in bad times. Heaven knows, the farmers of this country have seen bad times. We have $12 billion in education tax relief.

Mr. President, this is a good bill. It is a balanced bill. It has marriage tax penalty relief, but it is in 2005. That is my only real concern about the fairness of this bill.

Senator ASHCROFT, Senator BROWNBACK, and I want to phase in some of the other tax cuts a little bit further down the road and say to the 40 million American married couples who are being penalized because they are married, we believe it is the highest priority to give relief. That is what we are saying in our amendment.

How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ENZI). Thirty-four and a half minutes.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, the PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ENZI). Thirty-four and a half minutes.

Mr. BROWNBACK. I thank the Senator from Texas. She has been the leader on this issue. I am delighted to be working with her on such an important issue. She also thanked the chairman of the committee for recognizing the importance of eliminating the marriage penalty. We moved this up; this is the highest priority.
I want to tell Members why I think it is the highest priority in the words of people who have been interviewed and who have paid the marriage penalties. In the Wichita Eagle on Sunday, Kyle and Lynn Schudy stated they rediscovered the cost of true love this April. April 15. Their total cost of true love came to $1,623. That is how much the extra income tax was for this Prairie Village couple in their early thirties. That is what they paid last year because they are married and filed jointly instead of single and living together. They found that was the cost of true love.

I don't know that we can make a much better case for eliminating the marriage penalty than the voices across America who have stated what they are paying in this marriage penalty.

Listen to this from Tennessee:

My wife and I got married on January 1, 1997. We were going to have a Christmas wedding last year but after talking to my accountant, he said, instead of both of us getting money back on our taxes we would have to pay in. So we postponed it. Now after getting married we have to have more taken out of our checks just to break even and not get a refund. We got penalized for getting married and that is not right.

I don't know that it can be any clearer or what some of these families have said.

From Maryland, Mark Patterson:

My wife and I decided to have a family and get married. All we were concerned about was the love we had for each other.

That sounds like a pretty good start. After 8 years of marriage and two children we found all we worry about now is how to come up with enough money to put a roof over our head, eat and have good day care for our children. I am sick about the huge chunk of money taken out of every family check by Uncle Sam just because we are married.

Mr. SESSIONS. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BROWNBACK. Why if he will state his marriage penalty, I yield.

Mr. SESSIONS. I received a communication from an individual who was divorced in January and found out, had they divorced in December, they would have saved almost $2,000 in taxes.

My question to the Senator: Does that mean the Federal Government is subsiding divorce?

Mr. BROWNBACK. Some would draw that conclusion.

Clearly, we are taxing marriage. We are taxing the fundamental institution around which we build values. That is not right, as the people in the letters from across America state.

Here is another letter from Ohio:

No person who legitimately supports family values can stand against this bill of eliminating the marriage penalty. The marriage penalty is but another example of how in the past 40 years the Federal Government has enacted policies that have broken down the fundamental institutions that were the strength of this country from the start.

A woman writes:

My boyfriend, Darryl and I have been living together for quite some time. We would very much like to get married. We both work at Ford Electronics in Groveland Township, MI, and make less than $10 an hour, but work over time when available and Darryl does farming on the side. I now know, if we both are over this tax issue. If we get married not only would I forfeit my $900 refund check, we would be writing a check for $2,800.

This was figured by an accountant at H&R Block at New Castle. There is nothing right about this after we continually hear the government preach to us about family values. Nothing new about the hypocrites in Washington. Why not do away with the current tax system?

These are voices from across America.

This is from Houston, TX:

If we are really interested in putting children first, why would this country penalize the very situation [marriage] where kids do best? When parents are truly committed to each other through their marriage vows, their children's outcomes are enhanced.

Yet we tax it and penalize it to the average of $1,400 per married couple of the 21 million American married couples who pay this tax.

I am sure this evolved and nobody maliciously said we will tax married couples. The fact remains, we tax marriage, and it must stop. We have the chance now to actually do that.

Another voice speaks about this: The institution of marriage in America is in serious trouble.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the Washington Post article of July 2 of this year titled "For Better or Worse, Marriage Hits a LOW."

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, July 2, 1999]

FOR BETTER OR WORSE, MARRIAGE HITS A LOW

(By Michael A. Fletcher)

Americans are less likely to marry than ever before, according to a new study, and fewer people who do marry report being "very happy" in their marriages.

The report, released yesterday by Rutgers University's National Marriage Project and touted as a benchmark compilation of statistics and surveys, found that the nation's marriage rate has dipped by 33 percent in the past four decades—from 87.5 marriages per 1,000 unmarried women in 1960 to 49.7 marriages in 1996—leaving it at its lowest point in recorded history.

The percentage of married people who reported being "very happy" in their marriages fell from 53.5 in 1973-76 to 37.8 in 1996. The historically low marriage rate, coupled with a soaring divorce rate, has dramatically altered attitudes toward one of society's most fundamental institutions. Americans are more likely to get married for the right reasons to begin with than in the past of alternatives to marriage, including single parenthood and living together with a partner outside of marriage, according to the report.

"Young people today want successful marriages, but they are increasingly anxious and pessimistic about their chances for achieving the ideal," said Barbara Dafoe Whitehead, co-director of the National Marriage Project.

Funded by Rutgers in conjunction with several private foundations, the project is a research institute that looks at indicators related to marriage—an area of study whose directors contend is frequently overlooked.

"Nobody is focusing on marriage," said David Popeno, the project's other co-director. "It is not in the national debate."

Americans' attitudes toward marriage, researchers have tended to focus on the flip side of the coin, tracking social trends such as the increases in divorce, out-of-wedlock births and single-parent households over the past two decades. In the immediate post-World War II generation, 80 percent of children grew up in two-parent families. That number has dipped to 60 percent.

Before declining slightly in recent years, the divorce rate had soared more than 30 percent from 1950 to 1970. Today, nearly one in four U.S. marriages are projected to end in divorce or permanent separation.

These changes have ignited a national grassroots movement to discourage divorce and promote marriage. Many states are reexamining their no-fault divorce laws, and at least two states, Louisiana and Arizona, have instituted "covenant marriages," which require marriage counseling if a relationship falters and narrowly restrict grounds for divorce. "Marriage education," a term that emerged in the national lexicon just a decade ago, has become a growing concern.

Last year in Florida, legislators passed a law requiring marriage education skills to be taught in high schools. In addition, adults preparing for marriage in Florida receive a substantial discount on their marriage licenses if they choose to take a marriage education course.

"People are so distressed about the state of marriage in America," said Diane Sollee, founder of the Coalition for the National Excellence in Families and Couples Education. Her District-based group is hosting a conference in Arlington this week that is being attended by 1,000 people seeking marriage education training.

"We think about marriage counseling in terms of therapy," she added. "But we realize that we can teach skills to people to make their marriages strong. What distinguishes marriages that go the distance from those that end in divorce isn't whether couples disagree, but certain behaviors between them."

The National Marriage Project report blames the decline in marriage on people postponing marriage until later in life and on more couples deciding to live together outside of marriage. According to the report, nearly half of people ages 25 to 40 have at some point set up a joint household with a member of the opposite sex outside of marriage.

As a result, the report's authors argued, marriage is no longer the presumed route from adolescence to adulthood and has lost much of its significance as a rite of passage.

"We say marriage is an ideal that we still cherish the ideal of marriage, increasing numbers of young adults, particularly young women, are pess- mistic about finding a lasting marriage partner and are worried about whether they are going to be associated with first sexual experiences, particularly for women, the report said. Whereas as 80 percent of women born between 1933 and 1942 married before their 25th birthday, 80 percent of women born before between 1963 and 1974 had premarital sex only with their eventual husbands, now more than half of girls have sexual intercourse by age 17, and on average are sexually active for about eight years before getting married.

These changes in marriage patterns have contributed to new attitudes toward the institution. The percentage of teenagers who said that having a good marriage and family life was “extremely important” to them has increased modestly in the past two decades, the percentage who said they expected to stay married to the same person for life has decreased slightly. More dramatically, the percentage of teenage girls who said having a lot of wedlock is a “worthwhile lifestyle” increased from 33 percent to 53 percent in the past two decades.

Whereas the report’s findings led its authors to conclude that “the institution of marriage is in serious trouble,” other researchers who track marriage trends said there was also reason for optimism. For one, they note that demographers predict that 85 percent of young people will marry at some point in their lives, a substantial figure, even though it is smaller than the 94 percent that permitted in 1970.

“There is some evidence that marriage is in trouble,” said Kristin Moore, senior scholar for Child Trends, a nonprofit research organization that examines trends in family and child well-being. “But there is also much evidence that marriage remains highly valued.

Mr. BROWNBACK. It says:

Americans are less likely to marry than ever before, according to a new study, and fewer people who do marry report being “very happy” in their marriages.

This increased yesterday by Rutgers University’s National Marriage Project and touted as a benchmark compilation of statistics and surveys, found that the nation’s marriage rate has slipped by 43 percent in the past four decades.

We have a chart of the result from the Rutgers study. In 1960, per 1,000 women age 15 and over, between 85 and 90 percent per year were getting married, and now it is below 50 percent, a 43-percent fall-off in people getting married.

The writers of the study stated this about the institution of marriage, the foundational unit upon which we build family values and pass them on to the next generation:

Key social indicators suggest a substantial weakening of the institution of marriage.

This is serious. I daresay that probably in this next Presidential campaign, “family values” may be the two words said most often as we worry, fret, and be concerned about what is happening to our children and our society and in this culture.

Can anybody in this room, in this august body, therefore say it is OK to tax the fundamental institution that helps most family values in the country? Should we tax the U.S. institution of marriage, that we make 21 million American couples annually pay on average to the tune of $1,400 just for the privilege of being married when we are so worried about the rest of wedlock? Can we vote against this?

I am delighted the chairman has put this in the bill. I am happy we are trying, and I hope we will be successful, in moving this up earlier, so once and for all we can stop taxing the institution of marriage. We have to stop doing that.

When marriage as an institution breaks down, children suffer. The past few decades have seen a huge increase in out-of-wedlock births and divorce, a combination which has substantially undermined the well-being of children in virtually all areas, all places of life.

Some people can struggle heroically and help build up the families, and certainly nobody is here to castigate others. We are saying this is a tax that is wrong. It is wrong for virtually every reason. It taxes a fundamental family-value-building institution. It penalizes people whom we should be rewarding. Study after study has shown children do best when they grow up in a stable home, raised by parents who are committed to each other.

Newlyweds face enough challenges without paying punitive damages in the form of the marriage tax. The last thing the Federal Government should do is penalize the institution that is the foundational unit of passing on to the next generation morals and family values, and yet we do it. We have done it for a number of years.

We must give the people back a tax cut. I will support the overall effort to give back in tax cuts the nearly $800 billion. I think we should do that. But clearly our top priority in this effort must be eliminating this bad—this worst tax that we have, worst for its effect on the institution of marriage. We must give the American people the growth rebate they deserve and return this overpayment. The first tax we must cut is this marriage penalty tax. It is going to be expensive. It is important. It is significant.

With that, I have a number of other things to share, but I think it is simply time we do away with this tax. I am delighted to join the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Missouri in their efforts, in our efforts to do this. I applaud the chairman for building this into the tax cut. I am hopeful we can do this earlier. I would like us to even do income splitting. We are not going to do that. With that, I yield back to the Senator from Texas.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Kansas that we can do income splitting down the road as well because, in fact, it is very important that we give every married couple the best shake we can give them; that treats them totally fair. Whether they are a two-income-earner couple or a one-income-earner couple, we want them to have the same treatment that they would have under any other circumstance.

So I do support income splitting. I think after we get the money accumulated in the surplus we will be able to give them much more relief, real relief, in fact elimination of the penalty. That is the goal of all of us.

I yield 12 minutes also to Senator ASHCROFT. Senator ASHCROFT has been fighting along with Senator BROWNBACK and myself, side by side, on this issue. Ever since he came to the Senate it has been one of his highest priorities. I am so appreciative that he has been the stalwart soldier on the marriage tax penalty that he has because I think we are going to win this victory in the end.

I yield 12 minutes to Senator ASHCROFT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Texas for her leadership in this respect. She has underlined, I commend her, the special challenge that comes to families as a result of this pernicious discrimination in our Tax Code. She has fought long and hard for its removal. I am honored to be a participant as a cosponsor of this agreement with her and Senator BROWNBACK.

I also thank the chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator ROTH, who understood the fundamental value that is expressed in neutralizing the tax policy toward families. I say “neutralizing.” I really mean that, in the sense that we have been at war with families in our Tax Code. Mr. President, 21 million American couples, 42 million Americans, are spending an average of $1,400 per year more, each couple, because of the marriage penalty. It makes it tough for that couple to make choices that they ought to be able to make to benefit their families. So I thank the chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator ROTH, for placing this in the bill, for seeing to it that this category of remediation, this effort to repair an injury to the very fabric of America’s culture, is included in this tax measure.

We would not be here this evening with the capacity to say we want to accelerate that remedy, that we want to provide this antidote to a malady which has been afflicting the American culture, we could not move it up in the bill had it not been there in the first place.

I would like to just take us, for a minute, back to some very substantial fundamentals about America. I think the first of those fundamentals is that this is a culture where the most important things are not in Government. The most important things are not in the institutions of Government, not in the corporate responsibility of Government. The most important things are with individuals. This is a society that honors great freedom and expects great responsibility.

America has prospered. America is distinguished from, different from, differentiated from, we are different from...
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

July 29, 1999

Mr. ROTH. I am happy to yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Montana. Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senator from Texas for her amendment. It is a good amendment. It does deal with an inequity in the code clearly, simply. I congratulate her, too, because she is taking the course that we in the Democratic alternative took in trying to address this problem when we proposed to raise the standard deduction as well to address essentially the marriage tax penalty.

It is interesting; there is a marriage tax penalty today, but there is also a marriage tax bonus. Basically, the rule of thumb is 70-30. That is, if there is more than a 70-30 percent differential between the income of each spouse, then there is a marriage bonus; that is, you get a tax bonus for marriages as opposed to a penalty.

The penalty situation arises roughly when the 70-30 starts to narrow down, is less of a differential, and when both spouses are earning a similar income. That is what we are addressing here, the penalty side, because couples with both spouses working. It is interesting to note, there is a bonus for getting married today if the differential is roughly between 70-30.

The amendment the Senator from Texas is offering goes part way to eliminate the marriage tax penalty. Our Democratic alternative actually went a lot further. She raises the standard deduction by about $1,400, and the Democratic alternative raised the standard deduction for married couples by approximately $3,000.

In addition, in our proposal we began to eliminate the marriage tax penalty for itemizers; that is, for couples who itemize. The amendment before us deals only with couples who use the standard deduction. There are some couples who still itemize in the Tax Code, and it is our hope that we could address, eliminate, as you would, the marriage tax penalty not only for couples who use the standard deduction but also for taxpayers who itemize.

Also, in the Democratic alternative raised the standard deduction not only for married couples but also for singles. We thought the standard deduction is pretty simple. The proverbial rocket scientist is not needed here. It is an anomaly of our tax law. It is unfair to say the Congress at some point would not give to hurt families. But in this topsy-turvy environment that has grown by just a snippet here and a little piece there and a few hundred thousand words there—this Tax Code was, what, 750,000 words in 1955 and it is 25 million words. You would have a hard time reading it if you started at birth and read as fast as Evelyn Woods to get through the thing before the end of your life.

So we have a situation where this code has grown up and it discriminates against families. It hurts families, and we have a great opportunity now, thanks to the chairman of the committee who placed this concept of re-mediating this pathology right here in this bill. I predict Members on both sides of the aisle are going to say: We want to vote in favor of marriage; it is time to correct this inadvertent, but very damaging, prejudice against marriage in the Tax Code.

That is where we ought to be. No one in this Chamber believes that Government is more important than families. No one believes that our front line, in terms of developing this culture, is so unimportant that we ought to load all the resources to the guys at the back of the operation. We ought to put some of our ammunition in the hands of the front line.

Let’s let families, let’s let parents, who make these kinds of lasting commitments to each other and to their children, build an America tomorrow which has all the promise of the America you and I inherited.

I will add that it is not a great tradition in America to discriminate against marriage. This has happened in the Tax Code as our tax bite on the American family has accelerated with the growth of our Government. It was not until the sixties that we had anything of a marriage penalty, and it began to get worse and worse until now, as I have indicated, $29 billion a year is what Government takes from families as it robs 21 million families of about $1,400 per couple, and it sweeps that money away from the families into the Government, into the bureaucracy, into the plan B, the second best, yes, important safety net. Yes, we need it, but let’s not deprive the first line of this culture’s conditions for greatness—the families—let’s not deprive them of the resources they ought to have.

I thank Senator HUTCHISON from Texas for having been alert to this since before I came to the Senate. She was working hard in the Finance Committee, to eliminate the marriage tax penalty. She began to get worse and worse until now, as I have indicated, $29 billion a year is what Government takes from families as it robs 21 million families of about $1,400 per couple, and it sweeps that money away from the families into the Government, into the bureaucracy, into the plan B, the second best, yes, important safety net. Yes, we need it, but let’s not deprive the first line of this culture’s conditions for greatness—the families—let’s not deprive them of the resources they ought to have.

I thank Senator ROTH, chairman of the Finance Committee, for placing this concept in the bill. I thank Senator HUTCHISON from Texas for having been alert to this since before I came to the Senate. She was working hard in the Finance Committee, to eliminate the marriage tax penalty. She was working hard in the Finance Committee, to eliminate the marriage tax penalty. She was working hard in the Finance Committee, to eliminate the marriage tax penalty.
One of the frustrating things of putting a bill together, although I have to admit it is a very interesting challenge that I much enjoy, is the fact that there are so many things I believe should be done for the American family. It is frustrating that there are limitations as to what we can do. I agree with the distinguished Senator that nothing is more important than eliminating this marriage penalty. Obviously, the sooner we can do it, the better off we are. I thank her for her leadership.

For the information of all Senators, I do want to make clear that my concern with the pending amendment had been that it would put us out of compliance with our reconciliation instructions. I was also concerned that the earlier version of the amendment would have relied heavily on delaying the AMT relief. And this delay would hit middle-income Americans very hard.

But now we understand, of course, the modification that we offered a modification to the filed amendment which will alleviate this offset problem. For that I am very grateful. With these changes, I just say, I look forward to working with the Senator from Texas on having this amendment enacted.

Mr. President, I yield the floor. Would the Senator like some more time?

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I would just like to reserve the remainder of my time for the modification when it is ready, which I understand will be in the next 15 to 30 minutes.

So I yield now and will reclaim that time when we have the corrected amendment.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I think there is another dimension to this tax bill which I think is important for us to address. It is not only tax reduction in the amount of the reduction and not only the composition of the reduction, it is also whether we are making this Tax Code even more complex.

If there is anything we hear from our people at home, it is that this Tax Code is much too complex; it is just a mess. I see the President Officer, who has deep experience in this, is nodding his head in agreement. We all know that he is right.

Regrettably, when Congress passes tax legislation, we tend not to pay much attention to whether this adds further complexity to the code. We rarely pay any attention to that.

Frankly, I take some pride in that I pushed for the provision of the law last year that directs the IRS, in conjunction with the Joint Tax Committee, to come up with a complexity analysis of new provisions that the Congress enacted. We did not get this analysis until after the Finance Committee reported its bill, but we did get it. And so I have with me a letter from Charles Rossotti, the Commissioner of the IRS, to Ms. Lindy Paull, who is the Chief of Staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation, which is a brief analysis of the additional complexity that the bill before us would cost.

Just by way of example, we are here today trying to correct a problem by providing relief for the marriage tax penalty. This marriage tax penalty is where a couple pays a higher net tax when both couples earn about the same amount of money. The underlying bill before us today attempts to address that problem, but in a way which is very complex.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Texas is a much more crude way to deal with alleviating the marriage tax penalty by raising the standard deduction by a significant amount, an approach that we took in our Democratic alternative bill, too, where we would raise the standard deduction even more. But to give you an example of the additional complexity that this bill would cause in trying to resolve the marriage tax penalty, let me just state the following items which I hope we will get worked out as this bill progresses.

Essentially, taxpayers would have to fill out two forms or the 1040 would have to have more columns and many more items, because essentially couples would have to fill out their 1040 in many ways twice—one as if married, and then separate, as if joint filers, attempting to determine which is less in tax, and so forth.

Then there is the question of allocation of personal exemptions: When you file separately, who gets the personal exemptions, the additional personal exemption for children, and so forth, and who doesn't.

Then there is the question of large medical payments, the medical deduction, which, as the President Officer knows better than anybody else in the Chamber, is about two percent of adjusted gross income. And then the question is, How is that allocated—one spouse or do both spouses get it or whatnot?

There is a lot of additional complexity that couples would face under the underlying bill. All of this is not glamorous stuff. It doesn't get headlines. It is not in the evening news. It is my hope that as we undertake the work in this body, as well as in the other body, to reduce taxes, and we try to do it in a fair way, we also do it in a way that is less complex, not more complex.
As this bill stands tonight, with respect to the marriage tax penalty relief, it is going to be much more complex for taxpayers, whether they file separately, for individual taxpayers, or for joint filers. The tax rate change mandated by this provision is made and issue a refund, as well as incurring processing costs would be needed to make the provision provided it is enacted in the near future. If enactment is delayed, the IRS will have to begin taking steps to re-institute the pre-1998 rules for 1999 tax years. It is critical to avoid costly and unnecessary processing changes and to minimize the impact on the already stretched budgets of the IRS. The number of taxpayers seeking assistance about the marriage penalty election could reduce the opportunity for other taxpayers to get assistance. The IRS would have to make substantial changes to the customer service IRM and would have to train its examiners in the law and the new procedures. The marriage penalty election could also affect the resolution of examination cases involving the innocent spouse provisions.

This provision would require major systemic programming changes to IRS' computer processing, this process would affect many of our tax systems including Integrated Submission and Remittance Processing (ISRIP), Error Resolution System (ERS), Examiners' Generalized Unfiled Form (GUF), Generalized Mainline Framework (GMF), Federal Tax Deposits (FTD), SCRIPS, MasterFile, Electronic Filing, and TeleFile. It is estimated that at least 50,000,000 in contractor costs would be needed to make the necessary programming changes.

ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX

Since the provision regarding personal credits and the AMT is the same as that applicable to 1998 tax years, and reflected in the 1988 tax forms, no form or programming changes would be needed to implement the provision provided it is enacted in the near future. If enactment is delayed, the IRS will have to begin taking steps to re-institute the pre-1998 rules for 1999 tax years. It is critical that this provision be enacted as soon as possible to avoid costly and unnecessary programming changes and to minimize the impact on the already stretched budgets of the IRS. In addition, a return to pre-1998 law would significantly increase the complexity of these credits.

The provision relating to the deduction for personal exemptions would eliminate the nine line AMT worksheet in the Form 1040A instructions for 2005. This provision would not affect the number of forms on the 2005 Form 6251 or the AMT worksheet in the 2005 Form 1040 instructions.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

July 29, 1999

Ms. LINDY L. PAULL, Chief of Staff, Joint Committee on Taxation, Washington, DC, July 22, 1999.

DEPARTMETN OF THE TREASURY,

The following form changes would be necessary to implement this provision. The changes noted for Form 1040EZ could affect the scannability of the form.

1. A new line and check box would be added to the 2005 Form 1040 and 1040EZ for married taxpayers to indicate they are filing single returns on a combined form.

2. Three new schedules would be developed (for 1040, 1040A, and 1040EZ filers). These schedules would contain calculations involving multiple AGI and tax before nonrefundable credits. The combined tax would also be entered on the appropriate line of the couple's 1040 return and the return of that return would be completed as if a joint return has been filed.

Based on the 1999 forms, the new schedule for Form 1040 filers would have a total of 82 entry spaces. The schedule for Form 1040A filers would have a total of 94 entry spaces, and the one for 1040EZ filers would have a total of 16 entry spaces. The new schedules would contain calculations involving multiple AGI and tax before nonrefundable credits. The combined tax would also be entered as if a joint return had been filed.

If credits are to be determined as if the spouses had filed a joint return (as indicated in JCX–46–99), a third computation of AGI and tax before nonrefundable credits would be necessary to implement this provision. The AGI and tax would be computed as if a joint return had been filed. The reason for this additional computation is because some credits are affected by AGI and may also be limited by the regular tax liability. These items would not necessarily be treated the same as the two spouses' combined AGI and tax. To eliminate this third computation, the provision relating to credits should be changed to specify that the couple's combined AGI and tax are to be used in figuring the amount of any credit.

3. A new four-line, two-column worksheet would be developed which spouses could use to determine their applicable percentage for purposes of determining the deductions, such as the deduction for exemptions, that are referred to their spouse's share of the combined AGIs. This worksheet would be included in the instructions for the new schedules.

4. The 2000 TeleFile Record would be revised to permit its use by married taxpayers choosing the combined filing status. Based on the 1999 TeleFile Tax Record, this provision would add the requirement of 10 entry spaces.

5. The provision would require many electing taxpayers to complete two separate Schedules A, B, D, and E, or Forms 4797 (and possibly other schedules) to determine the amount of any credit. Since the provision regarding personal credits and the AMT is the same as that applicable to 1998 tax years, and reflected in the 1988 tax forms, no form or programming changes would be needed to implement the provision provided it is enacted in the near future. If enactment is delayed, the IRS will have to begin taking steps to re-institute the pre-1998 rules for 1999 tax years. It is critical that this provision be enacted as soon as possible to avoid costly and unnecessary programming changes and to minimize the impact on the already stretched budgets of the IRS. The provisions relating to the deduction for personal exemptions would eliminate the nine line AMT worksheet in the Form 1040A instructions for 2005. This provision would not affect the number of forms on the 2005 Form 6251 or the AMT worksheet in the 2005 Form 1040 instructions.

MARRIAGE PENALTY RELIEF FOR JOINT FILERS BEGINNING IN 2005 FORMS

The following form changes would be necessary to implement this provision. The changes noted for Form 1040EZ could affect the scannability of the form.
Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the Senator from Montana for yielding.

Mr. President, I will talk about the bill itself, but I also want to talk about an amendment that I intend to offer tomorrow, sponsored by myself, Senator BINGMAN of Oklahoma, and Senator WELLSTONE. It has to do with pensions.

Current law prevents companies from reducing pension benefits which a worker has already earned. However, there is a new phenomenon going on. Companies are now changing to so-called cash balance plans which can save the companies millions of dollars in pension costs each year by allowing them to take a substantial cut out of their employees’ pensions.

Employees generally receive three kinds of benefits from working. They get direct wages, health benefits, and pensions. So reducing an employee’s pension years after it is earned should be no more legal than denying a worker wages after the work has been performed.

Under traditional defined benefit plans, the worker gets a pension based on the length of employment and the average pay of the last few years of service. The pension is based on a pre-set formula using those key factors rather than on the amount in an employee’s pension account.

Under some cash balance plans, payments to workers do not start until the value of their pension has reduced to the lower level of the cash balance plan. This is a term of art that they call wearaway. In fact, under a number of cash balance plans, some older workers receive no pension benefit contributions for as long as 5 or more years, while younger workers, workmates receiving a pension years after it is earned should be no more legal than denying a worker wages after the work has been performed.

Mr. President, I will make it clear that my amendment does not stop companies from modifying their plans. It does not stop them from converting to cash balance plans, and it doesn’t stop them from improving the portability. It simply prevents employers from cutting the benefits of older workers by thousands of dollars a year, compared to what happens to younger workers.

My amendment just says that a company cannot discriminate against long-time workers by not putting money into their pension account just because they earn pension benefits under a pre-set formula. Whatever they are entitled to receive under the terms of their old pension plan as well as all they are entitled to under the new plan for the period that their pension fell under that plan. The total benefit would be the sum of the two.

In closing, my amendment is supported by the National Council of Senior Citizens, the National Committee to Preserve Social Security, the AARP, the AFL–CIO, the Pension Rights Center, Business and Professional Women USA, the Older Women’s League, and the Women’s Pension Project.

Older workers across America have been paying into pension plans throughout their working years anticipating the secure retirement which is their due. Now, as more Americans than ever before in history approach retirement, we are seeing a disturbing trend by employers to cut their pension benefits.

I urge the Senate to support our amendment.

Let me shift for just a second, in what I have realized, I can say that I am going to vote against this tax bill for three reasons: It is fiscally irresponsible, it widens the gap between the rich and the poor, and it really robs our children.

My friends on the Republican side make it sound so simple. They say: Look, we have this enormous surplus. It means people are paying too much in taxes. Let’s give it all back in a tax cut.

Well, if only it were that easy. First of all, we don’t have those surpluses yet. They are anticipated, but they are not here. Again, I remember back in 1981 when we were told the same thing that we could cut taxes and increase military spending and we wouldn’t have a deficit. Well, the deficit almost quadrupled during the 1980s. The public debt more than quadrupled. We simply put the American people out.

Finally, in 1993, Congress got serious. We took the lead in stopping the hemorrhaging. So now we have turned it around. We have gone from an annual deficit of $290 billion to a surplus of about $120 billion, created 19.9 million new jobs in the past 4 years, and cut the rate of inflation to the lowest it has been since the Kennedy administration. Our GNP is growing at a great rate. We are beginning to pay down the $5.6 trillion debt saddled on our kids.

My friends on the Republican side rejected that deficit reduction bill in 1993. Not one single Republican voted for it. I remember when Senator Gramm of Texas said:

...if we adopt this bill, the American economy is going to get weaker, not stronger. The deficit, 4 years from today, will be higher than it is today and not lower.

When all is said and done, people will pay more taxes, the economy will create fewer jobs, government will spend more money, and the debt will grow.

That was in 1993. Obviously, my friend from Texas could not have been more wrong in his assessment.

But now we have this big tax cut before us based on paper projections. But we also find the gap between the rich and poor is growing even wider. At a time when we need to ensure the future for our children, we are going to take it away from them.

This is the way I look at it. We built up this huge debt in the 1980s. Who made out from that? Look at all the statistics. Upper-income people made a lot of money in the 1980s and secured more wealth. More assets went to fewer and fewer people in this country and, thus, the gap between the rich and poor widened. We have slain the dragon of deficits and we are now going to have some surpluses. It seems to me it is our responsibility to take that money and lift the heavy debt burden off of our kids and grandkids—$5.5 trillion of debt. We owe it to our children and grandchildren.

I keep hearing a lot of my friends on the Republican side say: Well, this isn't our money; it is your money; we should give it back to you, the people today that are paying taxes; give it back. Of course, most of it goes back to the upper 5 percent of income earners in America. But I look upon it in a different way. The huge debt we ran up in the 1980s is going to be a burden on our kids and grandkids. The very wealthy people who made out in the 1980s are now going to get a big tax cut. It seems to me that what we need to do is take that money and say, no, you know who this money belongs to? It belongs to our kids and grandkids. We better be doing with this—not giving it back to people who already have too much.

I must tell you, I have a lot of friends and I know a lot of people who have a lot of money. We all have rich friends, people who have made a lot of money. I have yet to have any one of them ever tell me that they desperately need a tax break. Mostly, what they tell me is: Pay down the debt, invest in education, save Social Security for our kids.

That is what we ought to be doing. The top 1 percent of the taxpayers are the ones that make out the most in the tax cut by the Republicans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HARKIN. I ask unanimous consent for 2 more minutes.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield 2 more minutes to the Senator.

Mr. HARKIN. Since 1980, the average after-tax income of the top 1 percent of American families has increased by 72 percent. The income of the poorest fifth of American families has declined by 16 percent. If the Republican tax bill becomes law, corporate limousines will line up in front of the Capitol with their trunks open. The top 1 percent will haul the money away in the trunks of their limousines.

I have always said there is nothing wrong with making money in America. There is nothing wrong with being rich. There is nothing wrong with having a nice house, a bigger car, and all the better amenities of life. That is a big part of the American dream. But I believe when you make it to the top, and others make it to the top, and I make it to the top, it is the responsibility of Government to make sure we leave the ladder down there for others to climb, too. The tax cut bill, basically, says to the wealthy in this country: You have it made. Don't worry about anybody else. You made it to the top. Now you can pull up the ladder behind you and we are going to help you. The Government will help you pull the ladder up behind you.

President Clinton has talked often about the bridge to the 21st century, and we have a good construct of it: Unemployment is low, GNP is going up, debt is going down. But if only a few people cross that bridge, it will become a dividing line. That is why we don't need this tax bill. We need to bring people together, not divide us even more, as this tax bill would do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the adoption of the Senate's amendments be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. I will not talk that long. I thank the manager.

Mr. President, I will talk about another motion I will have to recommit the bill with instructions tomorrow when it comes up. This has to do with funding for the National Institutes of Health.

Just 2½ years ago, the Senate went on record, 98–0, committing to double the budget of the National Institutes of Health over 5 years. But this tax bill shortchanges America's health and research needs, the Senate's promise, by forcing cuts of up to 38 percent in discretionary health programs.

Earlier this evening, my friend and colleague from Pennsylvania, Senator Specter, talked about NIH being the "crown jewel" of our Government. Indeed, I agree with him. It is. But we said we were going to double the budget. Yet now, because of this tax bill, we are going to be faced with huge cuts. We can't even get our appropriations bill on the floor because we are $8 billion to $10 billion below what we had last year, and yet we are going to give a big tax break to the wealthiest in our society.

We have to invest in this medical research—Alzheimer's and arthritis to cancer, diabetes, and spinal cord injury. We are on the verge of breakthroughs in all of these areas. Now is not the time to back off; now is the time to invest in biomedical research.

If we were able to just simply delay the onset of Alzheimer's in individuals by 5 years, the savings would be $50 billion a year. We would have no problems in Medicare if we just delayed the onset of Alzheimer's by 5 years.

My amendment is going to be very simple. It makes good on the promise the Senate made, 89–0, to double the NIH budget over 5 years. The amendment returns the tax bill to the Committee on Finance, with instructions that the committee report back to the full Senate within 3 days with an amendment to provide an additional $13 billion for the NIH over 5 years. Funding for this would be provided by reducing or delaying specific tax cuts in the bill, so long as those tax cuts that benefit moderate- or middle-income taxpayers are not reduced.

Again, I commend this amendment. It is sponsored, again, by myself, Senator Kennedy, Senator Mikulski, and Senator Murray to again make good on our promise to make sure we put the necessary funding in biomedical research at the NIH.
I yield to the manager, if the manager would like to have the time back. I will be glad to yield back whatever time I have remaining.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, how much time remains on our side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Four minutes.

Mr. BAUCUS. Thank you, Mr. President.

I would like to emphasize a point that I made earlier about complexity. The tax bill passed by the other body reduces capital gains. Without getting into whether they should or should not be reduced, the effective date is July 1, 1999, which adds tremendous additional complexities to the code—to accountants, who have to add in more lines, and for programmers in their computers to adjust to the IRS.

The preliminary analysis is that there are many more pages for the capital gains increase schedule than currently is required. It is immense. Add to that Y2K. This provision goes into law on July 1, I am just addressing the complexity. I am not talking about the merits.

Then the IRS—who knows? It may well have to go back and retest their Y2K program to see if it works again with these additional items that are plugged in. I very much hope the conference on their tax bill, in working with the President when this bill is finally put together, pay much more attention to the complexity than they have in the past. Just bear down on that because if we hear anything from the taxpayers, it is the additional complexity of the code. We have an obligation not to add additional complexity.

In my experience in all of the debate on all of this to date, we have to cut a little bit here and raise some more revenue. We are going to add a little bit over here, with not one second of attention to whether or not this adds additional complexity to the taxpayers.

We have had IRS hearings on the problems the IRS has caused the taxpayers. There is some truth to that. The IRS has a lot of complexity. Most of that complexity is caused by Congress. Most of it is caused by Congress. We are a little two-faced around here. We like to say: Oh boy, we are helping taxpayers reducing taxes—and at the same time we are increasing complexity. We don’t talk about that. But we have an obligation to address both tax reduction as well as complexity.

I very much hope we live up to our responsibility and address that because it is a huge problem. No wonder Americans want a flat tax. It is the complexity.

On the other hand, I might ask myself and each of you, how do you address the marriage tax penalty with a national tax? Americans want both simplicity and equity. We will want both simplicity and equity. Of course, those are enemies of each other. The more something is simple, the more someone else claims it is inequitable and applies to them. The more we try to deal with them to make it more equitable, the code becomes. But nevertheless we have an obligation. I very much hope we address it and solve it.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.
