We are also on track to meet the pledge of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HASTERT), very close to it at least, by getting 12 of 13 appropriation bills done before we adjourn next Friday.

Most of those appropriation bills have passed that we have gotten through so far with again strong bipartisan majorities.

So, Mr. Speaker, let me just say that this majority is moving the ball forward on key priorities of the American people. We are very proud of the things that we have been able to do by gaining bipartisan support for what have been our legislative initiatives. Again, whenever we possibly can, we are going to continue to seek support from our friends on the other side of the aisle. But remember, if they do, in fact, subscribe to what was outlined by the minority leader in that Washington Post article last week; and they want... to obstruct our efforts here, we are willing to fight hard to make sure that we get the people’s work done, and with that attitude as we continue to hope what I hope only will be 1 week beyond the stated goal, at least until we adjourn in August, I will urge support of this rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 266, I call up the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 168) waiving the requirement of section 132 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 that the majority party of the Congress adjourn sine die not later than July 31, 1999, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

H. CON. RES. 168
Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 132(a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 (2 U.S.C. 198(a)), the House of Representatives and the Senate shall not adjourn for a period in excess of three days, or adjourn sine die, until both Houses of Congress have adopted a concurrent resolution providing either for an adjournment (in excess of three days) to a day certain or for adjournment sine die.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there an objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 266, the concurrent resolution is considered as read, is not debatable, and the previous question is ordered to final adoption without intervening motion.

The question is on the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MAKING IN ORDER ON AUGUST 3, 1999, OR ANY DAY THEREAFTER, CONSIDERATION OF H.J. RES. 58, REGARDING JACKSON-VANIK WAIVER FOR VIETNAM

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 12:30 p.m. on Monday next for morning hour debates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

HONORING LANCE ARMSTRONG, AMERICA’S PREMIER CYCLIST

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Government Reform be discharged from further consideration of the resolution (H. Res. 264) expressing the sense of the House of Representatives honoring Lance Armstrong, America’s premier cyclist, and his winning performance in the 1999 Tour de France, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. DOGGETT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, under my reservation, and I do not intend to object since this is a resolution that I have authored, I do want, in working with the gentleman from Texas (Mr. Sessions) to have a brief discussion of this resolution.

Some 21 Members, Democrats and Republicans, some of whom are here on the floor this afternoon have joined in this resolution in a bipartisan acknowledgment of the great success of Lance Armstrong in France this past week. I particularly want to acknowledge and will recognize momentarily the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. CAPPS) and an avid cyclist on her staff, Blake Selzer, who had been particularly interested in this subject.

Mr. Speaker, last Sunday, as Lance Armstrong, my fellow Texan and fellow Austinite, rode to the Arc de Triomphe in Paris, I was overcome not just with the elation of that moment, but with the importance of all that Lance has accomplished in getting to this point. I was also struck with the meaning that this victory would have for thousands of people around the world.

As an early budding career this young Austinite was stricken with life threatening advanced testicular cancer that actually metastasized and affected his lungs and brains. While his own recuperation was still incomplete, he began to worry not only about his own condition with this disease but with the impact that this disease was having on so many other people around the world. The drive and determination on so many other people around the world.

As he rode into Paris wearing that coveted Yellow Jersey, the cheers from the good French people let the world know that indeed there was a new American in Paris.

This drive to be the best that you can be and to make the things better for others manifested itself in his own physical healing long before this race in the founding of the Lance Armstrong Foundation, a project of which my office provided some assistance. Lance undertook the foundation in December of 1996 just 3 months after his diagnosis.

The foundation has as its mission, and an avid cyclist on her staff, Blake Selzer, who had been particularly interested in this subject.

the United States to bicycle in our Texas hill country each spring and, in the process, raise money for the foundation. It is a very successful event that raises thousands of dollars, and that foundation also sponsors the Lance Armstrong Oncology Conference that gathers physicians from around the world to discuss and learn about advancements and treatments of cancer.

Just last year, the Tour de France had fallen under the specter of performance-enhancing drugs. This once very prestigious bicycle race has lost glamor and credibility; but thanks to Lance, the credibility of the race has been restored. And in Texas we are suggesting to cycling friends in France that they respectfully consider re-naming this the “Tour de Lance.”

His recovery and victory in the tour has surprised us in Austin where we watched Lance as he promised to defeat cancer, where we watched him create this Lance Armstrong Foundation, and where we finally watched him wear the yellow jersey.

I stand here today very proud to sponsor this resolution though I have been a recreational bicyclist who has had a little difficulty staying on my own bicycle at times. As an Austinite, as a Texan, as an American, we are very proud of his accomplishments. It was very exciting to see it this past week and to know that he was also not only representing Texas but there as a member of the United States Postal Service team and that this was a team effort of all of the members of the post service and of the team that they sponsored.

So Lance pulled off the unexpected in Paris, and now we have good bipartisan support for this resolution honoring him.

We are not given many second chances in life, but Lance was given a second chance, and just look what he did with it. As he said himself, if you ever get a second chance in life, you have got to go all the way. The personal path that he has led certainly demonstrates that. We know here in the House that heroes are not just the giant statues against a red sky, they are the people that say: This is my community, my world, and it is my responsibility to make it better, and I know that my colleagues share in expressing our pride and gratitude to this young man from Texas, Lance Armstrong.

Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. CAPPS) who has been an inspiration on this legislation.

Ms. CAPPS. Mr. Speaker, I thank our Texas colleagues, and, Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join all our colleagues in the House in honoring Lance Armstrong for his incredible victory in this year’s Tour de France. Like millions of other Americans and fans around the globe, I followed Lance’s journey—Paris with great enthusiasm. Lance Armstrong did not do this alone. It was the incredible hard work of his teammates that insured Lance would arrive in Paris wearing the yellow jersey, and it is going to take the same teamwork to cure the devastating disease we call cancer. We in Congress must do all we can to help in this effort for just as Lance’s victory on his bike took teamwork, the fight against cancer will take the same hard effort.

Lance also matches his athleticism with altruism. Just 2 months after he was diagnosed with testicular cancer and given less than a 50 percent chance of survival much less ever riding a bicycle again, yet he came back to make what is one of the most incredible comebacks in the history of sport. The grueling Tour de France is one of the most physically demanding endurance sporting events in the world. Lance’s sheer determination and athletic ability was inspiring to watch. He is a role model for cancer patients and survivors around the world.

Lance also matches his athleticism with altruism. Just 2 months after he was diagnosed with cancer, he formed the Lance Armstrong Foundation, a nonprofit organization devoted to fighting cancer through awareness, education, and research. In the truest sense of the word, Lance Armstrong is a hero. And in the words of Lance himself on his accomplishment, this is what he said:

I hope this sends a fantastic message to all the cancer patients around the world. We can return to what we were before and even better.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. Pryce), who has been such a leader in the efforts here to deal with the issue of cancer.

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I am very pleased to join with my colleague from Texas in support of this resolution and congratulating Lance Armstrong, America’s premier cyclist, in his recent victory.

During this year’s tour, Lance won the four most important stages of the race, the 3-time trials and the first mountain stage, and he staked his place alongside some of the greatest winners of the past.

Regarded as one of the world’s most demanding sporting events, the 23-day long, 2,306 mile race has challenged some of the world’s fittest athletes... since 1906. However, this year’s victory by Lance Armstrong marks one of the greatest comebacks in the history of sports.

It was just a little over 2 years ago when Lance was diagnosed with testicular cancer, a form of cancer which strikes 7,400 men in the United States each year. And while it represents just 1 percent of all male cancers for men in their 20s and 30s, it is the leading form of cancer. Lance was diagnosed with testicular cancer so advanced it had spread to his lungs and his brain. He was given just a 50 percent chance of survival. His doctors’ main concerns were no longer his return to racing, but simply to keep him living.

However, Lance Armstrong had a different agenda. After undergoing surgery and during sessions of chemotherapy, Lance Armstrong began to ride and train between treatments. And then finally, there was good news. His blood protein levels had returned to normal and his chest x-ray was clear. Lance Armstrong was cancer-free just 1 year after beginning his treatment.

Lance Armstrong’s incredible achievement to battle back from cancer and to claim victory in the world’s premier cycling race not only illustrates his strong will and determination, but it also serves to send a strong message to all cancer patients and survivors, both young and old.

As Lance Armstrong simply put it after stepping down off the podium, “We can return to what we were before and be even better.”

Mr. Speaker, earlier this week, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH), my good friend and colleague, referred to Lance Armstrong as the “real McCoy,” a true American hero. This resolution congratulates on his special performance and recognizes his contributions to inspire those fighting cancer, and it deserves our support.

When Lance was diagnosed with cancer, he had a choice and he chose to fight. However, he is not just fighting for himself, but for all cancer patients worldwide. By establishing the Lance Armstrong Foundation, he is raising awareness, increasing research and providing services for people with cancer. To the thousands who admire his victory, may seek to inspire our next generation of cyclists, just as American Greg Lemond’s second win inspired him. But to cancer patients and survivors around the world, his victory means much more, and his fight and determination send such a strong message to never give up.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate Lance Armstrong not just for his victory in France, but more importantly, on his victory as a true American hero, and I urge strong support for this resolution.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Harris County, Texas (Mr. BENSON), to end finally on a Lonesome Star note, quite appropriately.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague and also my colleague from the Dallas area as well.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor our fellow Texan, Lance Armstrong, and his remarkable comeback from testicular cancer to win the 1999 Tour de France.

Lance Armstrong has stopped at many checkpoints along the road to recovery from cancer. One of these checkpoints was at M.D. Anderson Hospital in Houston where he received chemotherapy treatment as part of his miraculous recovery. As Lance has mentioned, his chemotherapy treatment at M.D. Anderson was one of the most difficult parts of his trying ordeal, because it resulted in the loss of hair, strength, weight, and all the other ills that accompany chemotherapy; yet his inner strength and personal will allowed him to defeat his cancer and regain his strength and prove to himself and the world that he could not only compete in the Tour de France, but win it.

Many in the sports world, even in the cycling team, wrote off Lance Armstrong, but Lance Armstrong never gave up hope. He showed great courage and determination, and once the cancer was removed, he slowly and steadily climbed back on his bicycle and started to train. Then he started to race. Then he started to surprise the cycling world by making a stunning comeback.

Mr. Speaker, Lance Armstrong’s victory inspires all of those who have had cancer, all of those who are fighting cancer, and all of those who have had loved ones die from cancer. He has proved to the world that there is life after cancer and that cancer no longer carries the sentence of death and destruction.

Lance Armstrong is now helping others prevent and survive testicular cancer not only through example, but by dedicating himself and his resources to the Lance Armstrong Foundation, which helps fund research to cure cancer.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate Lance Armstrong both on his victory in Paris and his victory over cancer.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, further reservation of the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from the Dallas area in Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) so that he might offer further explanation of the bill.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Austin for his indulgence in acceptance of this resolution on behalf of all of the people of the United States.

As a lifelong Texan, I take great pride today to honor a brave young Texan who represents the very best of Texas and America. Mr. Speaker, we take special pride today in this resolution recognizing the place that Lance Armstrong has earned among the truly inspirational athletes of this century. His tremendous achievement in winning the Tour de France of 1999 would stand as the biggest accomplishment of many athletes’ lives.

This race, which occurs over a 2-week period through some of the hilliest terrain in Europe, requires exceptional fitness on the part of each and every competitor. It is a feat of endurance that is rarely matched in any field of athletic competition. Few Americans have ever won this event, and as was noted today, Lance Armstrong was the second, and none have overcome the obstacles that Lance Armstrong did as he prepared for this monumental achievement.

Just 3 years ago, Lance Armstrong was diagnosed with testicular cancer. This disease is one of the most common forms of cancer to win the 1999 Tour de France.

Lance Armstrong has done far more than just survive. He has successfully completed his own treatment; and then, as he resumed his training for competition, he established the Lance Armstrong Foundation to promote, through awareness, education and research, the fight against testicular cancer. In organizing this valuable community service, he has initiated the measures that will help many other young men receive information and to early dying knows that which is effective, early treatment.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution expresses for the entire United States of America our House’s acclaim for Lance Armstrong as an athlete and dedicated contributor to his community and as an outstanding American citizen. We applaud his accomplishments and wish him continued success in every aspect of his activity.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the House agree to the adoption of H. Res. 264.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the timely consideration of this resolution so that this body could go record immediately in honoring Lance Armstrong, all that he has done and his effort represents in a strong, bipartisan way. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAUL) asked if there was objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, the 30th day of July, A.D. 1999, a resolution providing for the consideration of the following resolution, introduced by Mr. Sessions of Texas, and entitled "Honoring Lance Armstrong for his Indelible Mark on the American Spirit in the 1999 Tour de France";

Whereas Lance Armstrong, was diagnosed with advanced testicular cancer in 1996 and given a less than 50 percent chance of survival by doctors;
Whereas testicular cancer is the most common form of cancer in men between 15 and 35 years old.

Whereas Lance Armstrong has established the Lance Armstrong Foundation, devoted to fighting cancer through awareness, education, and research.

Whereas Lance Armstrong has made one of the most memorable comebacks in sports history.

Whereas the Tour de France is one of the most physically demanding endurance sporting events in the world; and

Whereas Lance Armstrong has honored the Nation with his courageous performance by winning the Tour de France: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) congratulates Lance Armstrong on his spectacular performance, winning the 1999 Tour de France; and

(2) recognizes the contribution Lance Armstrong’s perseverance has made to inspire those fighting cancer and survivors of cancer around the world.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPORT ON NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO TERRORISTS WHO THREATEN TO DISRUPT MIDDLE EAST PEACE PROCESS—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 106-106)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on International Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 401(c) of the National Emergencies Act, 50 U.S.C. 1703(c), I transmit hereunder the accompanying report on the national emergency with respect to terrorists who threaten to disrupt the Middle East peace process that was declared in Executive Order 12947 of January 23, 1995.

TRIBUTE TO CHARLES I. DENECHAUD, JR.

(Mr. OBERSTAR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to my late father-in-law, Charles I. Denechaud, Jr., whose life ebbed away last Saturday, July 24. He was taken from his loved ones after nearly 50 years of a silent struggle against a stroke that disabled him and in the end robbed his most precious treasure, the ability to speak to his dear wife.

Congressional Record—House

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

July 30, 1999

His remarkable life in the law and his extraordinary service to his fellow New Orleanians, his family, and the Catholic Church was summed up in a comprehensive account in the New Orleans Times-Picayune of Sunday, July 25, which I submit for the RECORD. I also include in the RECORD at this point the eulogy of my wife, Jean K. Oberstar, my own remembrance, and a poem dedicated to the splendiferous eulogy offered, though not available in printed version, by Jean’s brother-in-law, Tommy Boggs, in warm and touching tribute to a man whose exemplary life will inspire all of us to so live our lives.

CHARLES I. DENECHAUD, JR.

EULOGY OF JEAN K. OBERSTAR, M.C.

As we left the restaurant a few years ago, I had a clever idea: “Us older guys should walk together,” I said, taking his arm, “and maybe we can help shore up the sad little wall he has built.”

Charles quickly saw through the ruse: “It’s hell to get old, Jim; the first thing to go are your legs. Take care of your legs, now, let me take your arm, so I don’t stumble on something.”

He closed with that warm twinkle in his eye, and the gentle, upbeat, pursed smile which is the image I shall forever harbor and always cherish.

Like my own father, who lived a river’s length and a culture away, Charles Denechaud saw everything he looked over as a great deal, and forgave much.

As my father did with in-laws, Charles took me in as one of his own, without reservation, and instilled in me all the wisdom of family love. It was not my privilege to know, at its peak, his dazzling legal mind, but I shared, at its best, his unbounded love, especially for the lady he always endearingly called “my bride.”

The Psalmist wrote: “I will treat him as my first-born son. I will love him forever, and be kind to him always; my covenant with him will never end.”

Written of David, Psalm 89 appropriately embraces Charles I. Denechaud, Jr.

CHARLES I. DENECHAUD, JR.

EULOGY OF JEAN K. OBERSTAR

Almost three years ago, when my father was in the hospital, his doctor came into his room and asked, “Mr. Denechaud, would you like to pray?” There was silence for a while and then my father said, “My life is a prayer.” And indeed it was.

As a child, his likeness was used as a model for one of the cherubs in the Edward Francis Denechaud stained glass window here at Holy Name. Perhaps his life was directed toward goodness from that time forward. After Holy Name, the lady he always endearingly called “my bride” said, “I am quite certain that God angels?”

Mr. Denechaud and I often walked together, but never varied the route. It was the last thing he said.

Daughters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul in 1861.

In 1947, Pope Pius XII named Mr. Denechaud a Knight of St. Gregory, one of the highest honors in the Catholic Church. He became a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Gregory the Great in 1958.

Survivors include his wife, Barbara Byrne; two sons, Charles III and Edward B. DOB CUT NASA'S BUDGET

(Mr. ROGAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous material.)

Mr. ROGAN. Mr. Speaker, the House is recommending a $1.4 billion cut out of NASA's budget. This is wrong. With the string of accomplishments and world firsts under its belt, NASA has exceeded its goals of both this decade, 40 years ago to send men to the moon and return them safely to earth.

Under the proposed cuts, one of NASA's primary installations, the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, California will be the hardest hit. Their vital research leading us into the next century would be decimated by this action. The American people need to know that this is wrong, and I intend to join with my colleagues to fight these cuts.

NASA and JPL have proven that, in an era of diminishing Federal budgets, we can achieve results. In 1997, NASA directors Dan Goldin's words, that are "faster, better and cheaper." We must not reward NASA's efficiency by further slashing their budget.

I urge my colleagues and the House leadership to reinstate full funding for NASA, JPL, and America's crucial space science programs. Those who wish to cut funds for NASA and JPL are the heirs of those who scoffed at Columbus because they thought the earth was flat.

Mr. Speaker, I include the following article for the RECORD:

THURSDAY, JULY 29, 1999.

N A S A D E S E R V E S B E T T E R

America's record budget surplus has left the nation with a record $1.4 trillion in cash on hand. But, to the astonishment of scientists a House appropriations subcommittee on Monday approved a spending bill that increases most Federal agency budgets but takes a $1.4 billion bite out of NASA's budget. That's 11%. Worse, the cut tends to target the agency's most cost-efficient and significant projects. Officials at Pasadena's Jet Propulsion Laboratory say the change would sharply set back JPL research.

The decision of the Republican-dominated subcommittee was easy enough to understand. In that oddball project, a camera on the satellite would broadcast a live picture of Earth over the Internet, an idea conceived by Vice President Al Gore. Its demise wouldn't slow the forward march of science, but the subcommittee's other cuts would. They include: $100 million for the Space Infrared Telescope, which would enable scientists to detect "brown dwarfs," substellar objects that the existing Hubble and Chandra space telescopes have difficulty in detecting because their number and density must be known in order to calculate the mass of the universe and thus its age and ultimate fate. $200 million for the Earth Observation system. This proposal for a network of satellites—conceived in the Reagan administration and officially initiated by President George Bush—would create Earth's first integrated system for understanding how clouds and other fine particles affect global temperatures and climate. The answers could help nations prepare for hurricanes, droughts, global warming and other climate changes.

NASA director Daniel S. Goldin turned NASA into a model for efficient, small government projects. This decade, NASA used 4% of the nation's budget to put a man on the moon—an inspiring endeavor that nonetheless yielded only marginal scientific returns. Today the agency is far more focused. Missions reap huge amounts of worthwhile data while consuming less than 1% of the federal budget.

That's why members of the full House Appropriations Committee should restore NASA's funding when they take up the agency's budget on Friday. Democrats on the committee are expected to support restoration, but Republican members might need persuading. You can encourage them by calling the numbers below.

To take Action: Reps. Jerry Lewis (R-Redlands); Ron Packard (R-Oceanside); and Randy "Duke" Cunningham (R-San Diego).

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announcement of January 6, 1999, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may give my special order at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). Under the Speaker's announcement of January 6, 1999, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

THE DEBATE ON THE BUDGET SURPLUS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. FosSella) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, in the last couple of weeks we have seen a vigorous debate here in the House and in the other body. I think it is one that resonates across the country. That is, what to do with the projected $3 trillion budget surplus.

There are those who want to argue that the path to prosperity really begins and ends here in Washington, that government and higher taxes and taking away control from our everyday lives is the way to go.

There are those who feel that the path to prosperity is paved across every street across America: that rewarding people to go out and work hard, and to allow hard-working Americans to keep more of what they earn, that is the direction we believe is the right way to go; to strengthen personal freedom, to strengthen individual liberty, and to allow economic growth to create more jobs and to put more people to work.

Mr. Speaker, this is a debate that is just beginning, but one I think every hard-working American taxpayer needs to take note of.

As a reference, I cite a statement that was given about 36 years ago from then President John Kennedy. These were his remarks.

The most direct and significant kind of Federal action in aiding economic growth is to make possible an increase in private consumption and investment demand. In the past, this could be done in part by the increased use of credit and monetary tools, but our balance of payment situation today places limits on our use of those tools for expansion.

It could also be done by increasing Federal expenditures more rapidly than necessary, but such a course would soon demoralize both the government and the economy. If government is to retain the confidence of the people, it must not spend a penny more than can be justified on grounds of national need and spent with maximum efficiency. That final and best motive of strengthening demand among consumers and business is to reduce the burden on private income and the deterrents to private initiative which are imposed by our present tax system. However, the administration pledged itself last summer to an across-the-board, top-to-bottom cut in personal and corporate income taxes to be enacted and become effective in 1963.

Madam Speaker, President John Kennedy then, like Ronald Reagan several years ago, recognized what it meant to invest and truly believe in the spirit of the American people. This American spirit is not produced to invest, to create, and to give back is what this Nation is truly all about.

Currently we engage, as I say, in this debate, and although it is 36 years later, the core principles still remain the same. On one side are those who do not believe in the American spirit or the American people. According to this view, bigger government, higher taxes, and more government control is the answer and the salvation.

The alternative view, however, places trust and wisdom in the American people. Our views seem to strengthen personal freedom and reward individuals...
ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take my 5 minutes at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

THE MEANING OF COMPASSIONATE CONSERVATISM: CUTTING FUNDING FOR AMERICA'S VETERANS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. Biggert). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. FILNER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FILNER. Madam Speaker, I believe I have discovered the meaning of compassionate conservatism, at least as defined by the congressional Republicans. It is conservative to cut funding for the critical needs of our Nation's veterans, and it is compassionate to use the money for pork projects for congressional people in exchange for their votes.

At least that is the definition implied by the VA-HUD-Independent Agencies appropriations bill which was crafted by the Republican majority in its subcommittee earlier this week.

As the Washington Post reported yesterday, this pending bill is chock full of pork, 215 provisions funding a host of projects and activities that have little or nothing to do with veterans or housing, or the other concerns that this bill is supposed to address.

Madam Speaker, the gentleman just before me spoke of returning the surplus to people. What we are doing here is returning that surplus in pork projects to the majority Congresspeople.

As one who has joined our veterans throughout the Nation in advocating for the past many months for additional funding in the veterans budget, I am frustrated, appalled, shocked, and angry at the turn of events.

Our veterans must wait for months to see a doctor, but we fund the pork project of a machine aimed at growing plants in space. A Virginia doctor in Kentucky was authorized to provide care for only 25 of the 500 veterans suffering from Hepatitis C, a disease that is often fatal, but we fund the pork project of ship bottom painting.

Last year we fought to pass legislation to provide health care for Persian Gulf veterans suffering from undiagnosed illnesses. We now have no funding to absorb these additional veterans in VA medical facilities, but we are funding the pork project of researching into windstorms. One-third of our homeless are veterans who served their Nation. We need services to help them get off the streets and back into productive lives. But instead, Madam Speaker, we fund a pork project for studying the impact of temperatures on living organisms.

We are discharging veterans every day who are Alzheimer's patients, but we fund three separate pork projects worth $11.5 million in the district of our Speaker of the House.

Some of these projects may be worthy, especially in the abstract. But then Congress should fund them openly and honestly and above board. Sneaking them into a bill that should include $2 billion more for veterans just to keep the services we are providing today at that level of disbursement, it is an insult to the men and women who served our Nation in battle.

Is that what compassionate conservatism is all about: We cut veterans, but we hand out pork?

Madam Speaker, I urge my colleagues to reject this bill next week, and adequately fund the health needs of our Nation's veterans. I yield back whatever rationality exists in this House.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET REGARDING STATUS REPORT ON CURRENT LEVELS OF ON-BUDGET SPENDING AND REVENUES FOR FISCAL YEARS 2000 THROUGH 2004

Mr. KASICH. Madam Speaker, to facilitate application of sections 302 and 311 of the Congressional Budget Act during a status report on the current levels of on-budget spending and revenues for fiscal year 2000 and for the 10-year period of fiscal years 2000 through fiscal year 2004.

The term "current level" refers to the amounts of spending and revenues itemized for each fiscal year based on laws enacted or awaiting the President's signature as of July 21, 1999.

The first table in the report compares the current level of total budget authority, outlays, and revenues with the aggregate levels set by H. Con. Res. 68. This comparison is needed to implement section 311(a) of the Budget Act, which creates a point of order against measures that would breach the budget resolution's aggregate levels. The table does not show budget authority and outlays for years after fiscal year 2000 because appropriations for those years have not yet been considered.

The second table compares the current levels of budget authority and outlays of each direct spending committee with the "section 302(a)" allocations for discretionary action made under H. Con. Res. 68 and for fiscal years 2000 and fiscal years 2000 through 2004. "Discretionary action" refers to legislation enacted after adoption of the budget resolution. This comparison is needed to implement section 302(f) of the Budget Act, which creates a point of order against measures that would breach the section 302(a) discretionary action allocation of new budget authority or entitlement authority for the committee that reported the measure. It is also needed to implement section 311(b), which exempts committees that comply with their allocations from the point of order under section 311(a).

The third table compares the current levels of discretionary appropriations for fiscal year 2000 with the revised "section 302(b)" sub-locations of discretionary budget authority and outlays among Appropriations subcommittees. This comparison is also needed to implement section 302(f) of the Budget Act, because the point of order under that section also applies to measures that would breach the applicable section 302(b) sub-allocation.
The fourth table compares discretionary appropriations to the levels provided by section 251(c) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985. Section 251 requires that if at the end of a session the discretionary spending, in any category, exceeds the limits set forth in section 251(c) as adjusted pursuant to provisions of section 251(b), there shall be a sequestration of funds within that category to bring spending within the established limits. This table is provided for information purposes only. Determination of the need for a sequestration is based on the report of the President required by section 254.

U.S. CONGRESS, CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Hon. John J. Kasich,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

Dear Mr. Chairman: Pursuant to section 303(b) and in aid of section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended, this letter and supporting detail provide an up-to-date tabulation of the on-budget current levels of new budget authority, estimated outlays and estimated revenues for fiscal year 2000. These estimates are compared to the appropriate levels for those items contained in House Concurrent Resolution 68, which has been revised to include the amounts provided and designated as emergency requirements in Public Law 106-31, the Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1999, and an allocation for the Earned Income Tax Credit that is under consideration in H.R. 2400, the Treasury, Postal Service, and General Government Appropriations bill for fiscal year 2000. Also included, pursuant to Sec. 211 of H. Con. Res. 68, is a reduction to the aggregate level of revenues.

My first report for fiscal year 2000 and is current through July 21, 1999.

Sincerely,

Paul Van de Water

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 6, 1999, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. HOOLEY) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon. Madam Speaker, imagine a land where cows outnumber the people two to one, where the high school football team is aptly named the Cheesemakers, and where world famous cheddar cheese is produced by a cooperative of dairy farmers, many who have passed that skill on from generation to generation.

Such a place exists in a small Oregon coastal county named Tillamook. This 35,000 acre region is peppered with approximately 150 family farms that supply fresh milk to the Tillamook County Creamery Association, which in turn produces award-winning Tillamook cheese. It also markets butter, sour cream, yogurt, and ice cream. It was founded in 1909. The Tillamook County Creamery accounts for one-third of Oregon’s dairy industry.

Swiss settlers looking for an ideal location to raise dairy cattle discovered Tillamook in 1851. The name Tillamook is a native American name meaning land of many rivers, which is especially appropriate since five rivers feed into the Tillamook Bay.

The region’s climate is cool and wet, averaging 80 inches of rain annually, but it is this unique environment that allows cows to graze at least 8 months each year on natural grass in open pastures, resulting in exceptionally sweet and rich milk, the cornerstone of Tillamook cheese.

Superior milk, combined with Tillamook’s unique culture recipe, traditional cheddaring method, and natural aging process, enables the Tillamook County Creamery to guarantee its benchmark standards for its award-winning premium cheese.

The Tillamook County Creamery Association takes pride in producing blue ribbon cheese, and firmly believes that quality cheese begins in a quality locality, a place where cows still roam the open fields.

Oregon is proud of the excellence and tradition the Tillamook County Creamery Association has exemplified over the past 90 years. Tillamook has been a leader locally and nationally in enhancing the visibility of Oregon’s dairy industry.

The Tillamook County Creamery is one of Oregon’s most popular tourist destinations, drawing visitors from around the globe; so exemplary that Oregon’s governor, Governor Kitzhaber, has proclaimed today, July 30, 1999, to be Tillamook Day.

I urge all of my colleagues and the Nation to join me in observing Tillamook Day. If you are ever in Oregon, be sure to come and visit the factory and see how Tillamook’s famous cheese is made.

I am proud to represent Tillamook County and the Tillamook County Creamery, and I want to congratulate them for 90 years of operation in making America’s best cheese.

THE TAX BILL AND OUR TRADE RELATIONSHIP WITH THE PEOPLE’S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 6, 1999, the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

THOUGHTS FOR THE PEOPLE OF ATLANTA

Mr. SHERMAN. Madam Speaker, our hearts go out to the people of Atlanta, especially the families of the dead and the wounded. For the next few weeks, our hearts will be troubled by these constant questions: Why? What could have been done? Frankly, I do not have any answers.

For this reason, I will ask Members to indulge me, because I came to the House to speak about other subjects, even though, as much as we would like to concentrate on the fiscal subjects that I would like to address, our hearts will still be with the people of Atlanta.

Madam Speaker, I have come to the House rather hurriedly. I became aware just a few minutes ago that I would be the designee of our side to speak for 1 hour, so I will go through my notes in an effort to comment on the tax bill that recently passed this House, and which I hope will be radically changed by the conference committee before it is resubmitted here.

Then, time permitting, I would like to talk about our trade relationship with the People’s Republic of China, because when the House returns after the August break, we may be confronted with a major decision to be made with regard to whether to grant permanent most-favored-nation status or farm trade relations to the People’s Republic of China.

Focusing first on the tax bill, I would like to focus on two things: First, the content of the bill. So many speeches have been given on this floor talking about the size of the bill, and I do want to once remarked in talking about the pilots who saved Britain from the Nazi bombers, “never have so many owed so much to so few.” If we enact the Republican tax bill, then it will be said of us as a people “never have so many given so much to so few”, because we are asked, as a people of over a quarter billion in number, to give huge tax relief to the top 1 percent of our population.

I see it. The statements made in support of the Republican tax bill rise to the level of tax fraud.

We are told that we are giving people their money back. Yet, we take money from working men and women and provide in this Republican tax bill huge tax breaks to the rich and the special interests.

At least a dozen speakers have risen on this floor to claim that the Republican tax bill eliminates the marriage penalty; and, yet, it provides only minor relief. We are told that it provides tax cuts for working families, but it gives only a few crumbs to those in the bottom two-thirds of income in this country. It is a bill that we are told provides for school construction; and, yet, it provides very little. Likewise, with providing incentives for research.

Madam Speaker, Winston Churchill once remarked in talking about the pilots who saved Britain from the Nazi bombers, “never have so many owed so much to so few.” If we enact the Republican tax bill, then it will be said of us as a people “never have so many given so much to so few”, because we are asked, as a people of over a quarter billion in number, to give huge tax relief to the top 1 percent of our population.

I see that I am joined by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER) who would also like to talk about the tax bills that have recently passed this House.

Madam Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER).

Mr. TURNER. Madam Speaker. I want to join with the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) on this hour of debate, this time that is set aside at the end of the day, to talk about the issues facing us.
I would like to spend just a moment addressing the tax cut proposal that was before the House in the last few days.

The Republican tax message is one cannot trust the Congress to act responsibly with the surplus. They say get the money out of town before it even arrives here yet. It is a little bit ironic to think their theme is one cannot trust the Congress to manage the money wisely when, in fact, the last time I checked, they were in the majority in this House.

Their bill spends a trillion dollars, giving a $794 billion tax cut that is based on a future guesstimate of a trillion dollar on-budget surplus that is so far in the future that, if one looks at the tax cut year by year over the next 10 years, the tax cut planned in that $794 billion for next year is only $5 billion, six-tenths of 1 percent of the total tax cut.

The Federal Government, as my colleagues know, ran annual deficits for 29 years straight and ran up a $5.6 trillion national debt. The annual interest on that debt exceeds the annual spending, if one can believe this, on all of national security.

The interest on the national debt takes 25 percent of all individual income taxes collected by the Federal Government every year.

Do my colleagues not think that we could be disciplined enough just to run one true budget surplus before we spend what we do not even have yet? If a business had borrowed money from a bank to operate for 29 years straight and, for the first time in 29 years, it showed a small profit, would the business declare a dividend to the stockholders; or would it try to pay down that huge debt they had accumulated? I think the answer is obvious.

Last week, the House had a historic opportunity to do what every business- man or woman, every family in America, would do when faced with the choice of paying down debt or passing on that debt to our children, our grandchildren.

By a margin of 9 votes, this House defeated a responsible Democratic alternative that was designed to ensure that we had a reasonable tax cut while preserving Social Security and Medicare.

We even had on the floor of the House a motion to recommit that provided that 50 percent of the on-budget surplus would go to paying down the debt, 25 percent for tax cuts, and 25 percent for priority spending needs, such as Medicare and Social Security.

Every Democrat on the floor of this House voted for that responsible alternative. Only one Republican joined us. All the remainder voted against that alternative.

I ask, where have all the fiscal conservatives in the Republican Party gone? Fiscal conservatives do not spend money that we do not even have yet. Fiscal conservatives do not ignore the advice of the Federal Reserve Chairman, Alan Greenspan, who has said over and over again before this committee in this House that the best use of the surplus is to pay down debt.

Fiscal conservatives do not gamble with our economic security, our health security, our retirement security, the things he had to say. Fiscal conservatives understand that reducing the national debt lowers interest rates. For example, a 2 percent point reduction in interest rates on the purchase of a $30,000 home means a savings of almost $1,500 a year in mortgage payments for American families. That is $1,200 more than a family with an income of $50,000 a year would get from the Republican tax cut plan. That family, under their plan, only gets $300 a year.

Fiscal conservatives do not gamble with our economic security. They understand that our health security, our retirement security, our economic security is the important thing that must be protected. Fiscal conservatives do not pass on debts to their children and their grandchildren.

I believe we can have reasonable tax cuts over the next 10 years, given to people who really need the relief: working families and small business. These are the folks who have not yet fully participated in the booming new economy. These are the folks who live in rural America, the folks who live in the inner city.

In today’s economy, tax cuts should not be aimed at Wall Street, but they should be aimed at Main Street. But an equally important priority for this Congress is to pay down that $5.6 trillion national debt, to save Social Security, to save Medicare for our children.

Let us adopt a fiscally responsible tax reduction plan that shares the on-budget surplus to debt reduction, 25 percent for tax relief, and 25 percent to save Social Security and Medicare.

Mr. SHERMAN. Madam Speaker, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER) says it well. Since he has focused on the fiscal irresponsibility of the Republican tax cut, I would like to echo some of the things he had to say.

The most curious thing is that the Republican majority has come before us and agreed on what the best policy would be. They have agreed with Alan Greenspan that the best thing we could do is save the lion’s share of the surplus, adopt only small tax cuts, and pay for those tax cuts by debt relief. They admit that is the best economic policy. They admit that is what is best for America. Why will they not do it?

They come before us and say that America, the best Nation in the world, cannot have the best economic policy, that we are congenitally unable to use funds to pay down the debt; that if the money is not used for tax cuts, it will be squandered and wasted.

Well, I think America is the best country, and it deserves a Congress that will adopt the best economic policies. If the Republicans feel that they are congenitally unable to be fiscally responsible, then the least they could do is get out of the way, retire, and endorse the Reform party candidate or the Independent candidate for the House of Representatives who is the Democratic candidate from their district who will come here and do what both sides of the aisle have agreed is the best policy for this Congress; and that is to use the vast majority of the surplus to pay down the national debt.

The gentleman from Texas illustrates it well when he talks about the importance of fiscal responsibility. He talks about a $90,000 house. Out in extremely expensive Los Angeles and Ventura Counties, we do sell double those figures. Virtually every working family in my district that owns a home would save double or triple if they could reduce their interest rate by 1 or 2 percent as compared to the Republicans’ plan. This Congress must be a government of self-admitted spendthrifts. Perhaps the undertow of their comment is the Republican majority will not be a majority very soon. One way or another, they are telling us that the Congress of next year and the year afterward somehow will not be able to pursue a fiscally responsible policy.

I am confident that, with gentlemen like the gentleman from Texas and men and women on this side of the aisle exercising fiscal responsibility, that we will be able to do what is politically difficult but what we have shown ourselves capable of doing in the last 2 years; and that is to confine spending, to avoid tax cuts we cannot afford, and to run a government surplus.

Think back. I know the gentleman from Texas and I came to Congress in the same year, 1997. I served on the Committee on Budget, and we came out with a plan adopted by this House. We said, by 2002, the budget will be balanced. We could hear the laughter, the loud laughter from the press galleries behind me. They were occupied at the time, with people who giggled at the prospect that the 1997 budget agreement would lead to a balanced budget by the year 2002. In fact, it lead to a balanced budget in 1999, in fact, a significant surplus in 1999.

So this Congress has in the last 2 years shown it can be fiscally responsible. Now we need a tax plan that is based on the best economic policy, not one that assumes the people of this country cannot have a Congress that is as good as they are. They know that the best use of these funds is to pay down the debt.

Now, among the reasons it is the best use of funds is that it allows us to stop paying interest on the debt. The Repubcan tax cut of over $800 billion over ten first 10 years, $3 trillion in the second 10 years, those figures just collapse the cost of the tax cut. We have to add in the interest on the national debt that we will have to keep paying because, under the Republican plan, we cannot have deficit. That interest over the next 10 years will be on the order of another $150 billion.

Imagine what we could do if we could pay off the debt, stop paying interest on the debt, and have interest rates that reflect the fact that Wall Street and Main Street know there is fiscally responsible government here in Wash-do.

Instead, we are asked to adopt a tax plan which will quickly erode the tenuous faith Americans have that we have our fiscal house, in order in this House.

I should point out both to those on our side of the aisle that have thought of a number of government programs they think should be funded, and to all of the little tax incentives and giveaways built into the Republican plan and those people who voted for it, that fiscal responsibility will do more for the poor than 50 great society programs, and fiscal responsibility will do more for business than 50 special tax breaks. If we can take the Federal Government out of the capital markets, then all of the money that is available for investment, instead of being used to buy T-bills and T-bonds to finance Federal spending, can be available for private investment. That means a continuation of the economic expansion. It means people will find that when they go to borrow money for a new car or a new home those funds are available.

At this point, I would yield to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER).

Mr. TURNER. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I would like to engage the gentleman in a discussion regarding an issue that is often overlooked in the discussion on what we should do with the projected 10-year estimated, or guesstimated, surplus.

I am told by sources that know a lot more about how the economy works than I do that the current surplus estimate of $2.9 trillion over the next 10 years, $1.9 of which is in Social Secu-ary, which I think we have all agreed on both sides of the aisle we should not touch, but that other $1 trillion that we are arguing over as to what is the best use of it, is really a figure that is quite tenuous.

In fact, I am told that if we take four of the assumptions that were used by the Congressional Budget Office to come up with that estimate of $2.9 trillion and we adjust the double assumption’s only very slightly, the surplus would change from $2.9 billion over 10 years to a deficit once again.

Those four factors that were mentioned are: if, instead of assuming the CBO as estimated, we assume, if employment simply ends up being 1 percent less than they estimate, in other words, if the unemployment rate is 1 percent greater than the CBO estimates, it has a significant imfluence on the surplus.

If spending goes up over the next 10 years, Federal spending, with inflation, rather than being down at the levels that we are struggling to maintain that were set in the balanced budget act of 1997, then part of that surplus will disappear.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman is talking about a budget plan to try to keep all Federal expenditures at the same nominal rate as the previous year by increasing them for inflation. I think we should note that the Speaker has said again and again that we would pay all the appropriations bills before the August break. But the Republican majority has shown that they cannot meet those limited spending objectives. That is why they are sending us home without passing the appropriations bills and that they have now had to define the census as an unforeseen emergency and fund it outside of the budget caps.

Under those circumstances, does the gentleman think there is a significant risk the expenditures that will be voted over the next 10 years will exceed the no-increase-for-inflation straight line that the Republicans have used in their budget estimates?

Mr. TURNER. Well, it would seem to me very likely that that would be the result. And I, too, share the gentleman’s concern that the set of books that the Republican majority has begun to keep over the last couple of weeks just to try to show that they can stay within the budget caps of the

As we all know, if we declare something around here as an emergency, we do not have to count it against the caps. But one thing to keep in mind:
every time somebody stands up and says, I want to declare this spending an emergency, they are taking it right out of the Social Security Trust Fund.

And the truth of the matter is, if we have things like the census declared an emergency, I think we are committing gross misjudgment. It is the way we keep the Federal books. I mean the census is required in the United States Constitution. We do it every 10 years. And to stand up and say, well, we have to appropriate the money to do the census and call it emergency spending so it doesn’t count against the budget caps is disingenuous, in my opinion.

As I mentioned, if we alter four factors in the Congressional Budget Office assumptions about the $2.9 trillion surplus, it disappears. I mentioned two of those factors.

If unemployment is simply 1 percent higher than they estimated over the next 10 years; if spending goes up with inflation rather than at the artificially low estimates that we have under the current estimate; if the gross domestic product, a fancy word that I am not sure I completely understand, simply grows at seven-tenths of 1 percent less than the Congressional Budget Office estimates; and, finally, if Medicare spending simply goes at the same average annual rate that it has gone up since 1972; if all four of those things happen to turn out to be true, there is once again a deficit. There is no $2.9 billion surplus; there is a deficit over the next 10 years.

I think it is often overlooked in this debate, as we argue about what to do with the surplus, that the threshold question should be will there really be a surplus. I hope there is, and I hope the economy stays strong; but to gamble on the economic stability of Social Security, the security of Social Security, all on an estimate that may turn out to be completely wrong is the height of fiscal irresponsibility.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would echo what the gentleman has to say.

If we are in a position where perhaps we will have an extra trillion dollars in general funds, not to mention the nec-

In fact, I am told that if we could o

Let us look at the content. First, the Republicans promised to deal with the marriage penalty; and yet, this is an issue that the Research Council expressed its disappointment at the paltry marriage penalty relief found in the Republican tax bill. James Dobson, a man who has not ever offered to give me an award, I doubt he has offered to give the gentleman from Texas an award, went on radio to express his profound disappointment at the paltry marriage penalty relief in the Republican tax bill.

That being the case, we should look at the Democratic bill, the bill that costs less than a third of the Republican bill's cost. But somehow, with less than one-third the tax cut, the Democrats provide more marriage penalty relief than the Republican bill.

Let us look at the issue of school construction. We have seen the need to reduce class size around this country. We need our kids to get the best possible education. Well, if we are going to have smaller class sizes, then we need more classrooms. Both sides of the aisle have recognized that the Federal Government, through the tax code, should try to make it easier for local school districts to finance school construction. But in their bill, that is three times as expensive as the Democratic bill the Republicans provide only one-third of the help to local school districts. Three times as expensive but only one-third the help.

And what kind of help do they provide local school districts? What they do is change the arbitrage rules. Well, what does that mean? It means that this is the only help they provide schools. This is the help. They tell every school district in the country, look, go issue tax-free bonds. Borrow the money at a low interest rate, and then for 4 years take that borrowed money at a low interest rate do not use it to build schools yet, but go play the market. Go invest it the way Orange County did right before Orange County went bankrupt.

The only help they provide local school districts is to give them a free plane ticket to Las Vegas and to invite them to put the school bond money on the crap table. And they say they will allow school districts to do this and that is how we will help school construction.

How do the Democrats help school construction? We simply provide three times more the Federal help, and we do it by saying the Federal Government will pay the interest on the school bonds. No risks, no arbitrage, no invitation to local schools to sell bonds today and to go into the stock market and the bond market and buy derivatives and hope they can make a profit. Just real help by paying the interest on the bonds.

The Democratic bill, about 30 percent of the size of the Republican bill, makes the R&D tax credit permanent. But the Republicans made a low tech industry and says we will give them the R&D credit for a few more years and then we will turn it off.

The Democratic bill provides for education, saying that employers can provide have tenured for their employees without the employees being taxed, whether it is graduate school education or whether it is undergraduate education or technical education.

Yet, in a bill that costs more than three times as much, the Republicans cannot find room to allow for employee education.

Well, what do they spend their money on, $300 billion in the first 10 years, $3 trillion in the next 10 years? How is it all spent? Not for married families. Not for school construction. And not for ordinary working families in this country.

Because, in fact, they provide over 50 percent of the tax relief to the top one percent of Americans' income and to giant corporations.

Now, in many of the speeches on this floor, the numbers stated are not quite as sharp as the ones I related. And that is because the other speakers on this floor have tried to ignore the corporate tax provisions.

But if we look at how much goes to the top one percent in income, 45 percent of the benefits plus roughly 10 percent of the benefits going to giant corporations, we will see why there is so little room in the Republican tax bill to help education or to help marriage or to help working families.

Let us talk a little bit about the breaks that they give giant corporations. They provide provision dealing with the interest allocation rules for multinational corporations.

Well, what does that all mean? What it means is they provide $24.8 billion in tax relief to those corporations that take their shareholder money and invest it in factories overseas, shut down their domestic production, invest equity capital overseas, and share in a $25 billion tax reduction.

That provision will not create jobs in America. It may create a few extremely poorly paid jobs overseas. But it is not just $25 billion in the first 10 years. It is one of those exploding tax cuts that grows to nearly $50 billion in the second 10 years.

Furthermore, the new Democratic coalition put forward the idea that we eliminate the estate tax for all but the one percent of the richest families in America and that we do it in a way so that the families do not have to prepays the tax, they do not have to document none of the bypass trusts, none of the trust tax returns, none of the complication of the lives of widows and widowers that has become standard among upper middle-class seniors. Just complete relief on the first $2 million.

But that is not good enough for the Republican majority. They forget the derivation of the word "millionaire," someone who inherits a million dollars.

So they come here and they say, well, if they inherit a million dollars, there should be no tax. I agree. Inherit $2 million there should be no tax. I agree. And then they say if they inherit a billion dollars, if they happen to be the lucky unborn son or daughter of Bill Gates and they inherit $10 billion, they want no tax.

That is why their package is so expensive but they cannot provide relief to married families and they cannot help school construction.

Not only is the size of the Republican tax bill fiscally irresponsible, but the cost is extreme regressive that I have ever seen.

I notice that one of my other colleagues has come to the floor and requested that I yield to her. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. Clayton).

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much for yielding. I appreciate so much.

I had the pleasure of observing the discussion of the gentleman from California (Mr. Sherman) and the same topic he was talking about was very much on my mind and in my heart. I appreciate the gentleman taking the leadership and getting this time and explaining so vividly not only the reasonableness but the contradiction of this big, huge tax bill provision that we just passed in the House last week and how that is in contradiction of the principle that both sides say that they want to do.

They say, and we agree, the Democrats and Republicans agree, that we want to protect Social Security, we want to reform Medicare, and we also agree we want to pay down the debt.

Well, we cannot spend the monies twice. The great surplus that we are so blessed to have in this country is not there to be spent time and over and over again. So they either do these things that they say they want to do or they indeed give this big tax bill.

I just want to thank my colleague for explaining this. With his background as a CPA, he can put these details in such a vivid way that people begin to understand the reasonableness.

I, too, want to reduce taxes. I think it needs to be targeted. It needs to be targeted for those families that are having health care problems long-term, those who are having problems in terms of needs of educating their kids and day-care.

Also, I think we do need some relief on inheritance tax. We raised it last time, and we need to raise it again. And raising it to $2 million is reasonable and moving in the right direction.
But the tax cut needs to be targeted and it certainly needs to be affordable and we need to balance that. So I want to be the first to get up to the floor to participate in this discussion to say that there are priorities for spending and there are priorities for tax reduction that should be consistent with us giving everybody an opportunity in America.

We just should not give a tax break for the one-third or the richest one-fifth or give tax breaks to the one-third all over. We should make sure those are well-crafted, targeted tax relief.

More importantly, we should be able to afford it. Mr. Greenspan said over and over again, yes, he does not object to a tax cut. But it should be not in this environment when it is being proposed in an environment where we do not even have the surplus that we are talking about for this year, by and large, is as a result of people paying their payroll taxes, going into the Social Security. So if we give this big tax break, guess what happens? We cannot spend it twice.

When we go on those great emergencies, guess what happens when we take things off of budget? It indeed comes from the surplus.

So I just want to commend the gentleman for bringing a very factual, reasonable discussion. This is not a rhetorical discussion. This is a factual, reasonable discussion how insane this tax cut is, how unreasonable it is, is, in contradiction we put these principles, saying that the one side, Americans, we want to protect Social Security, we want to reform Medicare, we want to pay down the debt but, at the same time and in the same breath, we are going to give almost $800 billion.

Yes, we need a tax cut. But we need it to be targeted and we need it to be affordable. We also have spending priorities. Our education of our kids. Our senior citizens are without drug prescription opportunity. There are millions of senior citizens having to debate who can they afford to pay for their prescription or whether they can pay for the rent or buy food. These are the basic problems they have.

For those of us who now have the opportunity to be looking at the surplus, we ought to be balancing our priorities to make sure that all Americans are prosperous in this economy.

Again, I want to thank my colleague for yielding to me. I appreciate it so very much.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, re-claiming my time, I thank the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. CLAYTON) for coming to the floor and for joining with us here.

I share her belief that we need tax cuts. But if we can keep this economic expansion going for another 5 years, an flies economically irresponsible, then, first, people will suffer far more from an economic downturn and, second, we will be back here dealing with deficits.

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would yield further, I just want to share with my colleague, I am from rural America; and we in America are very blessed that we are having a sustained economy. But there are many of us in rural America and in the inner cities that are not prospering as much as any other part of America.

That is not to say we should not celebrate our prosperity. We do. But I want my colleagues to know, as we celebrate this, all of us are not eating from the same plate and the same meal and all the nutrition. Some of us are having difficulty in finding money for our schools and rural areas. Farmers are suffering.

So my colleague makes the right point. We would take this kind of in the wrong direction if we give too much of a tax break and then require us to raise taxes even greater. That certainly would be a travesty, and we should not do that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, it will take a few more years of this economic expansion for it to be felt in those places that it has not yet been felt.

My largest county, I represent a part of Los Angeles County, was lagging behind the rest of California; and only in the last couple of years has the economy that has been felt in Los Angeles County. I hope very much that it is beginning to be felt in your part of North Carolina.

There is nothing more important than keeping this economy growing.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I want to join with the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. CLAYTON).

I come from east Texas. The area that I represent is still operating off the old economy. The new economy has not made it there yet. And the old economy is not doing so well in rural America and inner city America.

That is why I feel so strongly, as my colleague does, about Congress making the right choices with regard to how we handle our Federal spending, our tax cuts.

As Democrats, we believe in tax cuts and we believe in tax cuts that are aimed at the people that really need them. I think it is important for us in trying to engage in this dialogue with the American people for them to understand that we want to see taxes go down just as much as anyone else in this country. But we are looking at this in a way that is good for the sustained, long-term growth of this country; and paying down the debt is a part of that, and we need to make that a priority.

I want to thank the gentlewoman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) for leading in this hour. It has been very informative to hear an individual with his background in accounting and finance talk about the details of the tax proposals that have been before this House in the last 10 days. I commend him for his leadership on these issues.

I know the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. CLAYTON) joins me as we all try to move forward together and try to accomplish things that will bring a better future for all of our children and our grandchildren.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have a few more examples and facts I want to quickly get into the RECORD. I promised I would wrap up just a few minutes after 4. We could, obviously, continue for another hour.

But let me first just make sure this RECORD reflects the analysis of citizens for tax justice. I mentioned it earlier that 45 percent of the benefits in the Republican package go to the top one percent of American families.

These families, on average, will save $54,000. These families typically have incomes of over three-quarters of a million dollars a year already.

So the decision on who should benefit from this tax bill is as severely mis-taken as the analysis that led to the unreasonable and fiscally irresponsible size of the tax bill.

That sounded like a big number. Let me make sure that that is corrected. Yes, indeed, the, quote, average person in my State would save $3,500. That is over a 10-year period. So that is $350 a year. But that is the average person. Not the median but the mean.

Let me just explain the difference. If you have got Al Checci, the gentleman, you may remember, who owns about half of Northwest Airlines, spent a lot of money in my State running for governor. If Al saves $10 million on his taxes and then we have got 1,000 families in another part of my district saving $10 on their taxes, well, that all adds up to a number.

The average simply looks at the huge amount of the tax break and divides it by the number of families. But the mean is when you look at the typical average family, what do they get. And typically under this tax bill, they get about 30 cents a day.

For God's sake, let us not risk America's current and tenuous prosperity, let us not risk this economic expansion on the joy that a few will get in giving tax breaks to a very few Americans, and certainly let us not risk this economic recovery and economic expansion on 30 cents a day of tax cuts for the average American family.

MEDICARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. Biggert). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. Johnson) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader. Mrs. Johnson of Connecticut. Madam Speaker, I rise today to address the increasingly acute, immediate problem of our Medicare program, one of the pillars of retirement security for America's seniors. It is significant that I rise at a time when Republicans, Democrats, the Congress and the President recognize that Medicare must include a new prescription drug benefit. While I strongly agree that we need to add prescription drugs to the Medicare system, we must provide coverage prudently and fairly and not by endangering funding for other Medicare services. Medicare simply cannot tolerate the scheduled deep cuts ahead, much less the billions of dollars in cuts proposed by the President in his budget and in the outline of his prescription drug proposal. I fervently believe that we must address the current problems immediately or hundreds of providers nationwide will close their doors, creating a crisis in access to care for our seniors of unprecedented proportions.

My purpose is more mundane and more urgent. It is critical to assuring seniors' access to quality care now and to assuring the survival of critical community health care institutions like our local hospitals, home health agencies and nursing homes.

In 1997, Congress adopted many reforms to Medicare because it was galloping toward bankruptcy. Already in 1997, it was paying out more for services than collecting in taxes and premiums. Medicare spending was exploding, especially in the areas of home health and skilled nursing facility costs. And as it reached the unsustainable level of 11 percent growth per year, the Balanced Budget Act reforms were adopted to cut this growth rate in half, from 11 percent to 5.5 percent, a modest and responsible goal.

Why, then, are home health agencies, nursing homes and hospitals begging us to hear their problems and pleading for relief? As Growth has dropped to 1.5 percent, the real savings from the Balanced Budget Act were $106 billion over 5 years. The real savings that will be achieved are about $100 billion above that. While the goal was to slow the rate of growth to 5.5 percent, growth has dropped to 1.5 percent, though the number of seniors and frail elderly continues to grow.

I believe we face a crisis and must act now. While the data from the real world has not reached the shores of Washington, in the real world in my estimation the crisis is immediate and beginning to endanger the quality of care available under Medicare. Seniors' access is at stake and the very institutions we depend on for care are at risk. There are few things more serious problems we face in Medicare:

First, though a relatively minor factor, important mistakes were made in writing the Balanced Budget Act reforms.

Second, bureaucratic problems have developed and are delaying payments to providers for many, many months.

Third, the reform bill included expanded funding and authority to eliminate fraud and abuse. As a result, the Inspector General has not only identified and eliminated a lot of fraud and abuse but has changed many rules, delaying payments unmercifully and unfairly in my mind. Further, the fear of the Inspector General is causing some providers to cancel negotiated discounts and pushing costs up as reimbursements are going down, all because the Inspector General is ignoring old rules and refusing to clarify new ones.

Fourth, the fact that rates are based on data that is 4 years old is exacerbating the problems dramatically.

And, fifth and possibly the most significant cause of the looming crisis is the unintended and unanticipated consequences of the interaction of the many changes in payment levels and payment systems with both public and private payers.

In fairness, we have placed enormous burdens on the good people of the Health Care Financing Administration which administers Medicare and their claims processors and on the providers with the level of changes that we have enacted. It would be sheer hubris to believe that so many changes could be implemented without unintended consequences, especially as they are interacting with private sector changes of a pace and a breadth unprecedented. Not surprisingly, there are slowdowns in the payments, real mistakes to be corrected and unanticipated problems to be addressed in the next phase.

In other words, actions that the executive branch can take immediately and laws, legal changes, that the Congress must adopt.
In the area of payments to skilled nursing facilities, we expected to save $3.5 billion through the Balanced Budget Act, but costs are now estimated at $16.6 billion, more than half again as much.

There are two administrative policies that together have delayed payments to nursing homes so severely that literally payrolls will not be met if relief does not come soon, spelling closure for good facilities providing compassionate care.

First, HCFA needs to repeal sequential billing for nursing homes. The balanced budget reforms required nursing homes to coordinate and pay for all ancillary services given to Medicare patients in nursing homes, but the law does not require sequential billing. If any ancillary service provider is late in submitting their bill, the nursing home is late in submitting its bill to Medicare. This creates a domino effect of payment delays when we require all of May's bills to be settled before June's bills can be looked at. HCFA, the Medicare administrator, has announced that they are ending sequential billing for home health agencies and they should repeal this destructive and unfair policy for nursing homes. Payments for room, board and regular services need to flow predictably as they have in the past while the problems with the ancillary services billing system are ironed out. This will prevent the serious cash flow problems that threaten small providers, particularly small providers in our rural areas and small cities.

Secondly, the administration must speed up Medicare payment denials. In my region, nursing homes are having difficulty getting payment denials from Medicare. The real world problem for providers is that they are ending sequential billing for home health agencies and they should repeal this destructive and unfair policy for nursing homes. Payments for room, board and regular services need to flow predictably as they have in the past while the problems with the ancillary services billing system are ironed out. This will prevent the serious cash flow problems that threaten small providers, particularly small providers in our rural areas and small cities.

In addition to these two administrative actions, which I urge the Health Care Financing Administration to take promptly to relieve the terrible strain on nursing homes that threatens the institutional survival of some, there are legislative corrections to the Balanced Budget Act that we must make if quality care is to be maintained.

First, we must fairly address the issue of medically complex patients. There is clear evidence that the payments under the nursing home prospective payment system are not sufficient to pay for the medical needs of the acutely ill patient. The General Accounting Office testified before the Senate Finance Committee that, and I quote, certain other modifications to the prospective payment system must be, may be appropriate because there is evidence that payments are not being appropriately targeted to patients who require costly care. The potential access problems that may result from underpaying for high-cost cases will likely result in beneficiaries staying in acute care hospitals longer rather than foregoing care, end quote.

Indeed, I have already heard about this problem from the hospitals in my district, yet we cannot expect hospitals to continue to treat patients without proper payment. Simply because there is not a nursing home that can afford to care for them, nor can we expect nursing homes to accept patients for whose care they will not be paid sufficiently. The Health Care Financing Administration has announced that there is concern that the prospective payment system, and I quote, does not fully reflect the costs of non-therapy ancillaries such as drugs for high acuity patients, unquote. HCFA announced that they were conducting research that will serve as the basis for refinements to the resource utilization groups that we expect to implement next year.

It is good that HCFA has recognized that we do not have the data to account for the cost of medications for acutely ill patients, but gathering the data for next year is not an acceptable solution. We cannot ignore patients and care providers who are facing serious problems now. We must take immediate action to direct increased payments so that sick patients can find a way to pay for it, and that is impossible without losing thousands of dollars on a case. That is unfair to both patient and nursing home.

In sum, if the Health Care Financing Administration moves swiftly to address administrative problems that it has the power to address and Congress acts on legislative issues, we can both meet the savings goal of the Balanced Budget Act for nursing homes and not lose the small homes that are truly at risk of closure though they provide wonderful care for our seniors.

And now to turn to hospital payment problems which are too numerous to detail here. Instead, I will mention one of the most troublesome.

First, the Balanced Budget Amendment projected savings of $48.9 billion from hospital reimbursements.

Currently the Congressional Budget Office projects savings of $52.6 billion. So the savings are being made in spite of major payment cuts in the law that have not yet gone into effect and now, I believe, are inappropriate. In fact, without relief, current law will dramatically escalate cuts in hospital reimbursements and severely damage our community hospitals as well as the medical centers on which we rely for sophisticated expertise, research into new treatments, training of new physicians and a great deal of uncompensated care for uninsured and low-income patients.

First, we must repeal the transfer policy. Hospitals are currently paid based on the average cost for caring for a patient with a specific disease. Naturally the facility will have some patients whose treatment requires them to stay longer than the average and some that will be able to be discharged earlier than the average. The difference in the cost to the hospital of MEDPAC has recognized this problem and recommended that HCFA modify its payment rationale to better reflect the needs of cancer center outpatient departments. Such administrative remedies are extremely important to preserving access to high-quality care in outpatient and cancer centers; but as important as they are to stemming overly severe cuts and hospital reimbursements legislative action is also required.

First, we must pass a stop-loss bill to prevent sudden and deep cuts in outpatient payments. According to MEDPAC, Medicare paid hospitals only 90 cents for each dollar of outpatient care provided prior to the 1997 Balanced Budget Act. The balanced budget has further reduced this to 82 cents for every dollar. Once the proposed outpatient PPS system is in place, hospitals will lose an additional 5.7 percent on average if the administration does not act in accordance with Congress’ intention.

And some hospitals will be impacted even further. More than half the Nation’s major teaching hospitals would lose more than 10 percent, and nearly half of our rural hospitals would lose more than 10 percent. Catastrophic losses would be experienced in some individual hospitals.

For example, large hospitals in Iowa and New Hampshire, will immediately lose 14 to 15 percent of Medicare outpatient revenue. Other large, urban hospitals in Missouri, Massachusetts, Wisconsin, Florida, and California will lose 20 to 40 percent. Some small rural hospitals in Arkansas, Kansas, Mississippi, Washington, and Utah will lose more than 50 percent of their Medicare revenue.

We must enact legislation to limit the amount of losses that any hospital sustains. As more treatments are moving into the outpatient setting, we simply cannot expect hospitals to absorb losses of 15 percent and more. Legislation to limit losses will ensure that hospitals will still be able to treat patients, and Medicare will secure the savings it needs to remain solvent in the short term.

Secondly, we must legislatively prevent any further cuts in the disproportionate share of payments. Many hospitals’ emergency departments are the only option for people without health insurance, because they cannot refuse to see patients. With the increasing number of uninsured Americans, hospitals are facing increasing burden. Congress must reassess our cuts in disproportionate share of payments in light of the increasing number of uninsured, by freezing payments at current levels.

Thirdly, we must increase the hospital update to reflect the costs of preparing for Y2K. MEDPAC has recommended that hospitals receive one-half to a 1 percent increase in their operating payments to account for the need for updating information systems and medicaide to become Y2K compliant, year 2000 compliant. Perhaps more than any other industry, hospitals have had to spend significant amounts of money to update their systems because of the wide variety of devices and systems that they deal with.

I have talked with hospitals in my district that have had to replace entire systems and devices ahead of schedule to ensure that they will continue to operate after the clock strikes midnight at the close of this year. The replacements range from simple devices such as IV pumps to costly systems such as a monitoring system in the intensive care unit. It is important to note that the ICU monitoring system was only 8 years old and was not due to be replaced, but the Y2K computer glitch possibility made replacement necessary.

The Y2K problem is not something that hospitals could have planned in their operating capital budgets a few years ago, but it is something they cannot afford to ignore.

The American Hospital Association survey of their membership shows that member hospitals will spend $8.2 billion to become Y2K compliant. We should follow MEDPAC's recommendation to increase reimbursements to hospitals to reflect these additional costs.

Finally, immediate attention must be paid to the needs of our great teaching hospitals. These institutions have been particularly hard hit because they are affected by essentially all of the Balanced Budget Act changes, while most institutions are only affected by a few provisions. They deny care to a large number of uninsured, have more acutely ill patients, because they serve as regional referral centers. They must train the specialists of the future and maintain cutting-edge technology. And they must use National Institutes of Health grants which require a 25 percent match from the institution to do the clinical research that we so deeply depend upon.

Madam Speaker, we must look at the way that all the payment changes adopted are affecting these hospitals and provide relief in this Congress.

Lastly, let us turn to home health agencies. In this sector, we projected that the Balanced Budget Act would save $16 billion. We have now realized savings of $48.8 billion, more than any other area. The Balanced Budget Act imposed significant changes on the home health industry, and we achieved the greatest savings in this area. I believe the high savings reflects the useful work of the Fiscus and Abuse Unit, but through talking to my providers, I know a lot of nonpayment lurks behind that $48.8 billion figure, and good agencies are on the brink of closure from both administrative actions by the government and the balanced Budget Act's effects.

First, having saved more than double the intended goal in home health services, we need to eliminate the threat of the 15 percent further additional reduction that will take place on October 1 in the year 2000.

While we put the 15 percent reduction in the system to ensure that there would be sufficient savings, we should remove the 15 percent, because the necessary savings have been achieved, completely eliminating the 15 percent reduction. If we are to assure our sickest seniors that home health services will continue to be available, will be expensive, about $7 billion over 5 years. But we should be able to accomplish this out of the savings that we have already generated, and making the surplus larger than expected.

We must also increase slightly the per-patient reimbursement limit, and the administration must stop the waste of revenues, the scandalous square that is taking place as a result of the high review rate in these agencies. It is a technical problem. It is administrative, but it is taking nurses away from care. It is raising administrative costs at an unprecedented rate, and HCFA must address this terrible problem of the high rate of post-payment reviews.

Lastly, we must raise the $1,500 cap on rehabilitative therapy services for both home health care providers and nursing homes. The Balanced Budget Amendment implemented two caps on outpatient rehabilitative therapy services, a $1,500 cap for occupational and physical therapy, and a $1,500 cap for speech therapy. This is an arbitrary regulation of our resources that is making the surplus larger than expected.

The Health Care Financing Administration has identified this problem in testimony before the Senate Finance Committee, and I quote: "We continue to be concerned about these limits, and are troubled by anecdotal reports about the adverse impact of these limits. Limits on these services of $1,500 may not be sufficient to cover necessary care for all beneficiaries."

HCFA has directed the Inspector General to study the cap to assess whether any adjustments to the cap should be made. MEDPAC has also expressed concern in this area. We need to get relief to the patients most in need, and not let them slip through the cracks.

This has been a long and sometimes technical Special Order; however, its message is simple. There are real, serious problems in today's Medicare program that are affecting care for seniors and threatening the future of some of our most beloved community hospitals, nursing homes, doctors' practices, and visiting nurses associations. We need to address these problems now, not next year, through targeted, immediate relief and through strong action.

Congress must act now. The administration must act now. At stake, I believe, is quality care for our seniors and indirectly for all of us who rely on our community hospital and community providers.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to please join me in this crusade for action.
The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o’clock and 43 minutes p.m.), under the previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, August 2, 1999, at 12:30 p.m. for morning hour debates.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The Senate met at 8:31 a.m. and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. Thummond].

PRAYER
The Chaplain, Rev. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Dear God, You have taught us that yesterday is already a memory and tomorrow is only a vision, but today well-lives makes every yesterday an affirmation of Your grace and every tomorrow an expectation of Your blessing. Make our life an accumulation of grace-filled days. We’ve learned that we can’t do much with our yesterdays, and worry over tomorrow is futile. Living today is so crucial. We want to be faithful and obedient to You today. We know that anything is possible if we take it in day-sized bites. The dynamic person You want us to be, the issues we want to confront, the people we want to bless, the projects we want to start—all can be done by Your grace today.

Bless the Senators. Enable them to enjoy the sheer delight of glorifying You by serving this Nation. May they live Andrew Murray’s motto: “To be thankful for what I have received and for what the Lord has prepared is the surest way to receive more.” Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE
The Honorable Conrad Burns, a Senator from the State of Montana, led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER
The President pro tempore, Senator Domingo, is recognized.

SCHEDULE
Mr. Domingo. Mr. President, on behalf of the leader, I have the following statement:

Today, by a previous order, the Senate will begin 30 minutes of debate for closing remarks with respect to the Bingaman amendment regarding education and the Hutchison amendment regarding the marriage tax penalty. Two back-to-back votes will then occur at approximately 9 a.m.

Following those votes, any additional amendments will be limited to 2 minutes of debate. Therefore, numerous votes will occur in a stacked sequence, and Senators are asked to remain in the Chamber in order to conclude the voting process as early as possible during today’s session of the Senate.

1 thank my colleagues for their attention and their cooperation.
1 yield the floor.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME
The President. Under the previous order, leadership time is reserved.

TAXPAYER REFUND ACT OF 1999
The President. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of S. 1429, which the clerk will report.

The legislative assistant read as follows:

A bill (S. 1429) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 104 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2000.

Pending:
Bingaman amendment No. 1462, to express the sense of the Senate regarding investment in education.

Hutchinson modified amendment No. 1472, to provide for the relief of the marriage tax penalty beginning in the year 2001.

Roth (for Grassley) amendment No. 1388, making technical corrections to the Saver Act.

Roth (for Abraham) amendment No. 1411, to provide that no Federal income tax shall be imposed on amounts received, and lands recovered, by Holocaust victims for their heirs.

Roth (for Sessions) amendment No. 1412, to provide for the College Savings (CLASS) Act title.

Roth (for Collins/Coverdell) modified amendment No. 1466, to eliminate the 2 percent floor on miscellaneous itemized deductions for qualified professional development and incidental expenses of elementary and secondary school teachers.

Roth (for Abraham) amendment No. 1455, to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to expand the deduction for computer donations to schools and to allow a tax credit for donated computers.

AMENDMENT NO. 1462
The President. Under the previous order, there will now be 15 minutes equally divided with respect to the Bingaman amendment No. 1462.

Who yields time?
Mr. Bingaman addressed the Chair.

The President. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. Bingaman. How much time is allotted to me?

The President. The Senator has 7 minutes 30 seconds.

Mr. Bingaman. I yield myself 4 minutes.

The President. The Senator is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. Bingaman. Mr. President, the amendment I presented yesterday and that we are going to vote on first this morning is a simple statement that we should reduce the size of the tax cut that is proposed by $12 billion so that we will have funds available to maintain the current level of effort in support of education. It, I grant you, is a sense-of-the-Senate resolution. It does not ensure that the money is spent there, but to my mind it at least reserves those funds so we can maintain the current level of effort in support of education. In other words, I believe we should be on record for funding education at least at current levels before we settle on the size of the tax cut that we afford.

Some might ask why am I singling out education. Well, S. 1412 is more than just a tax bill; it is a reconciliation bill, which means, at least in rough form, it purports to set national priorities for the next 10 years. I believe that a very top priority should be providing quality education to the young people of this Nation. Our future depends more on that investment than it does on virtually any other investment we might make.

So if education is a priority, what is the relationship of this tax cut bill to education? Now, as I understand the estimates for the next 10 years, the tax cut bill is so large that it will require us to make significant cuts in discretionary spending, including education, in this coming decade, and that is the concern I have and that is what has prompted this amendment.

Yesterday, as I was describing the amendment, I was informed that my concern is unfounded; that in fact even after the tax cut—and I know people do not like to have it referred to as a massive tax cut; I notice that is what the Wall Street Journal called it this morning in their headline—there will be plenty of discretionary funds for education. That was the information I was given.

So let me look at the figures I have and see where I am confused on this and where I have misunderstood the situation.

First of all, we all expect a surplus, and that is why we are having this debate and talking about cutting taxes in the first place. So we all agree to that. We also all agree that the portion of this surplus attributable to Social Security should be left for Social Security. And that is about 1.9 trillion. There is no dispute about that that I am aware of, at least in this debate.

So after we take that out, what is left? At the beginning of the debate, the Congressional Budget Office came out with the figure in the range of $1 trillion, the non-Social Security-related surplus. So that is represented here. This chart shows CBO, Congressional Budget Office. This column represents the non-Social Security surplus as it was understood by me when we started the debate.

Now I am informed that we have a new estimate and that the surplus is not going to be $2.8 trillion over the next 10 years; instead, it is going to be over $3.3 trillion. So there is going to be substantially more money. The question is, Where did we find this additional $400 to $500 billion?

Mr. President, let me yield myself 1 more minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico, Mr. Bingaman.

Mr. BINGAMAN. It was arrived at by assuming that less money is going to be spent on discretionary spending during the 10 years. The Congressional Budget Office said that $235 billion would be cut in discretionary spending. The new claim is that there is going to be $1 trillion cut, and that by cutting discretionary spending by $1 trillion instead of by $585 billion, we are going to have extra money that we can turn around and spend on discretionary accounts.

Mr. President, that doesn’t add up in my mind. I believe discretionary accounts have to be at the top of that list. I do not see where we can expect to find the money to maintain current levels of effort on education if we vote for this very large tax cut. That is why the size of the tax cut should be reduced so that education programs will not have to be cut.

How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2 minutes 25 seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, as I said yesterday, I don’t normally take to the Senate floor and speak in opposition to an amendment of my colleague from New Mexico. But I did yesterday, and I must this morning because if this amendment is reported in the Senate, and if it says to constituents of our State that the budget resolution we adopted, and what will be left over after the tax cut would decimate education, then it would appear to me that I must answer because that isn’t true.

First of all, the Senator from New Mexico, my colleague, is at least not as sensational in his approach as the President was yesterday. The President even knows right down to the nickel what is not going to be spent in education. That is impossible. He says that 544,000 kids aren’t going to be able to learn to read. That is ludicrous. If that is the kind of talk he needs to defend a tax bill, then good luck to him. It is just absolutely untrue.

Let’s get the facts as I remember and understand them. We produced a budget resolution. It is nothing new with reference to the taxes: $792 billion spread out over 10 years was the tax cut in that bill. We also allocated the remaining money for the next decade and, incidentally, in doing that, even though there was a reduction in discretionary spending, the highest priority domestic program was education, for all the reasons stated on the floor by Senator Murray and Senator Bingaman. It is terribly important that we use our education dollars right and better but that there be more of them. We put $37 billion in additional money during the first 5 years of that budget for discretionary spending.

Now, what happened after that? After that, some 3 months later, the Congressional Budget Office did a midsession review and told us there was more money than that. As a matter of fact, there was $170 billion more in the surplus account. We didn’t add some of that to the tax cut. It is sitting there. What I did, so that everyone would understand, I said let’s look at this surplus in the chart I used yesterday, and let’s assume that we freeze discretionary spending and ask CBO how much money would then be available to put back into discretionary accounts during the decade.

They told us: We don’t know whether you’ve got $37 billion or whatever your number is—out of the tax cut in order to do that. I disagree. I don’t have to do that.

Plain and simple, I think there is plenty of discretionary money available. I add, if you use the President’s numbers on Medicare—and he said you only needed $46 billion to fix prescription drugs—you have $505 billion, less the $46 billion, and all the rest can go to discretionary spending in the next decade. I am not trying to mislead anybody. In order to understand it, I said start with the premise that we freeze all these accounts and put in what is left. If you look at the budget resolution, we put $181 billion into those accounts, with education being the highest priority. It just happens there is more than that $181 billion because the midsession review added many billions of dollars in accumulated surplus.

I am fully aware that Senator Bingaman, my colleague, has regularly and consistently as a member of the Committee on Education, and on the floor, been a promoter and a staunch supporter of education. I agree with him, but I believe he is wrong in thinking that we have to reduce the tax cut in order to be sure we do that. I also remind everybody that there are some... very significant education programs in this tax bill. It makes it easier to continue your education because it has allowances, credits, and deductions in the adult education area. It makes it easier to pay off student loans. It makes college more affordable, and it provides tax exempt financing for school construction. All of that is in the Roth bill.

Whatever time I had remaining, I yield back.

I make a point of order that the Bingaman amendment No. 1462 is extraneous to the bill before us. Therefore, I raise a point of order under section 313(b)(1)(A) of the Congressional Budget Act.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act, I move to waive the applicable sections of that act for the consideration of the pending amendment. I ask for yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1472, AS FURTHER MODIFIED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be 15 minutes equally divided for concluding remarks with respect to the Hutchinson of Texas amendment, No. 1472.

Who yields time?

The Senator from Texas.

Mrs. Hutchison. Mr. President, under the previous unanimous consent agreement, I send a modification of the amendment to the desk to amendment No. 1472.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified.

The amendment (No. 1472), as further modified, is as follows:

1. ELIMINATION OF MARRIAGE PENALTY IN STANDARD DEDUCTION.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I now yield 2 minutes to Senator ASHCROFT of Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, first of all, I thank the Senator from Texas for her outstanding work correcting a pernicious discrimination against the most valuable institution in our society, the family. I thank the chairman for his sensitivity to this important issue, for placing in this bill procedures to remedy the marriage penalty.

The marriage penalty simply is an anomaly. It is a strangeness in the tax structure that has evolved, that penalizes people for being married. It puts them into higher tax brackets when they get married than when they were single. When people get married, they start paying a tax penalty. That is something we should stop.

The Senator from Texas and the chairman of this committee have agreed that we should stop it. And we should do it, as a matter of fairness, according to the amendment of the Senator from Texas, of which I am an original co-sponsor along with Senator BROWNBACK, accelerate the time at which we begin to stop this very serious fault with the tax system.

America should not penalize the family. It should not make it harder for people to have families. It should not make it financially more difficult for two people to be married and live together than unmarried and live together. That is a simple fact. It is because the family is the best department of social services, the best department of education; it is the best place in which individuals are enriched to learn individual responsibility and the values and character our culture needs to survive.

I am very pleased to be a part of this tax measure which will say about America’s families that we cherish them rather than punish them and it is time for all of us to join together and eliminate the marriage tax penalty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Who yields time? The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mrs. Hutchison. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. Is the 4 minutes from my 7½ minutes?

Mr. ROTH. I am yielding this from my 7½ minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. ROTH. Actually, Mr. President, I want to add my support for the amendment put forward by Senator Hutchinson. It builds on the basic objectives of the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999, particularly objectives of helping families bring greater equity to the Tax Code.

One very important provision of the tax relief package we have proposed is the elimination of the marriage tax penalty. There is strong bipartisan agreement that this penalty is not only unfair but that it is counterproductive... in a way that discourages couples from marrying.

When I introduced the Taxpayer Refund Act 2 days ago, I introduced Robert and Dianne, a hypothetical couple who had fallen in love and wanted to marry. I explained how, as individuals, they would not be considered wealthy, how Robert worked as a foreman in an auto plant and Dianne worked as a nurse. I then explained how, as a married couple with a combined income, they would be considered well off and how they would end up paying the Government $1,500 more in taxes than they would if they remained single.

The Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999 does away with the marriage tax penalty. It completely eliminates the penalty for Robert and Dianne and for any other couples who choose to marry. What I like about this is that was going to be paid for by our distinguished colleague from Texas, Senator HUTCHISON, is that under her plan the tax relief is expeditious. This is done at a price. The change does require the delay of other provisions that provide relief for the taxpayer. I regret that. But we do think it is desirable to provide marriage relief as early as possible. Therefore, I encourage my colleagues to vote for this amendment.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I again compliment my good friend, the Senator from Montana. The Senator from Montana is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I again compliment my good friend, the Senator from Montana, as well as the chairman of the committee. The Senator from Texas offered this amendment last night, and at that time I explained how in the past 40 years the federal government has enacted policies that have broken down the fundamental institutions that were the strength of this country from the start.

I note to my colleagues, we all frequently talk about family values. Thomas, from Hilliard, OH, writes in about this point on the marriage penalty and the notion of family values:

No person who legitimately supports family values could be against this bill. The marriage penalty is but another example of how in the past 40 years the federal government has enacted policies that have broken down the fundamental institutions that were the strength of this country from the start.

I could not have put it better. I am delighted it appears that this amendment is going to be agreed to. I hope the President will sign it and that the President will be supportive of eliminating the marriage penalty tax. I hope as well we could go further in the future and enact income splitting, that we could provide for a couple to split their income.

This would be more supportive of this fundamental institution in our culture, in our Nation, of marriage. I hope we can take that step on into the future.

I am delighted to have the chairman’s support in this. I urge all my colleagues in the name of family values, vote for this amendment.

I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I think that is a good offset. It adds a little more progressivity, frankly, to the bill, than otherwise would be there.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote the yeas are 48, the nays are 52. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected. The point of order is sustained and the amendment falls.

Mr. LOTT. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LEAHY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay the motion on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LOTT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I would object to any unanimous consent regarding comments on my outfit this morning.

I ask unanimous consent that the remaining votes in the series be limited to 10 minutes in length.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. I urge my colleagues, please stay in the Chamber. We still do have a number of amendments we will need to go through. Senator DASCHLE and I have agreed that we want to limit those to 10 minutes each, with 2 minutes between the 10 minutes for 1 minute of explanation on each side. If we do that, I believe we can still finish this bill at a reasonable hour.

Mr. ROTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Brig. Gen. and Ed McClellan of the Finance Committee staff be granted floor privileges for the duration of the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

VOTE ON AMENDMENT NO. 1472, AS FURTHER MODIFIED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now on the amendment of the Senator from Texas. Does the Senator request the yeas and nays?

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered taken.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. I ask unanimous consent that Senator DOMENICI be added as an original cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 1472, as further modified. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The result was announced—yeas 98, nays 2, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 233 Leg.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment (No. 1472), as further modified, was agreed to.

Mr. BROWNBACK. I move to lay that amendment on the table.

The motion to lay the amendment on the table was agreed to.

Ms. LANDRIEU addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two staffers, Kathleen Strottman and Ben Cannon, have floor privileges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURBIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a member of my staff, Chris Stanek, have access to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I have a motion at the desk and ask that it be called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the motion.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] moves to recommit S. 1429, the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999, to the Committee on Finance, with instructions to report back to the Senate within 3 days, with an amendment to reserve $20 billion over ten years for relief from the unintended consequences of the Balanced Budget Act on teaching hospitals, skilled nursing facilities, home health care providers, and other community hospitals, and other health care providers, by reducing or deferring certain new tax breaks in the bill.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I understand I have 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, let me share with my colleagues what this is. Under the Balanced Budget Act, we set out to save some $103 billion in Medicare expenditures with respect to hospitals, home care, etcetera. The problem is the unintended consequences of the way that has happened, coupled with the managed care process, in fact, about $205 billion in Medicare payments has been reduced. The result is that, in hospitals, home care facilities, and skilled nursing facilities all across the country, all of our States are significantly affected in the quality of care that is being delivered.

Special care units in hospitals are closing. Home care facilities are refusing patients. There has been a significant reduction in the quality of care across the country. Our teaching hospitals are threatened. What we are saying is that we need to reserve some $20 billion in order to be able to adequately make up for the unintended consequences of the Balanced Budget Act.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, although the Kerry amendment is well-intended, it is not germane to this reconciliation bill. The Finance Committee is paying close attention to the concerns of health care providers and beneficiaries. Over ten Medicare hearings have been held this year, three focusing specifically on BBA 1997 policies.

The Finance Committee is also developing a Medicare package that will address the many concerns in the Balanced Budget Act. The tax package in no way interferes with this process.
Finally, I might add that even the President's Medicare proposal sets aside a maximum of only $7.5 billion over 10 years. The BBA fixes $12.5 billion less than this amendment.

The amendment is not germane to this reconciliation legislation, and I raise a point of order under section 305 (b)(2) of the Budget Act.

Mr. KENNEDY, pursuant to section 904 of the Budget Act, I move to waive that section in that act for consideration of this motion. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Balanced Budget Act of 1997 helped bring us to this era of budget surpluses and economic prosperity. But the tax cuts and the savings used to balance the budget have come from Medicare.

At the time the BBA was enacted, those savings were expected to total $116 billion over five years. Now, they are estimated by CBO to be nearly twice as great—nearly $200 billion over five years. Such deep cuts in Medicare are clearly unfair and unacceptable.

Not surprisingly, all of us are now hearing from bedrock health care institutions across the country that are being devastated by these excessive cuts. Teaching hospitals—community hospitals—community health centers and many others. We are hearing from those who care for the elderly and disabled when they leave the hospital—nursing homes—home health agencies—rehabilitation facilities. We are hearing from virtually every one who cares for the 40 million senior citizens and disabled citizens on Medicare. They are telling us in no uncertain terms that Congress went too far.

This motion is the first step toward reducing the steepest cuts. It would provide $20 billion over the next ten years to slow or eliminate the harshest impact of the Balanced Budget Act. It would ensure that the nation's hospitals and other health care facilities will be able to care for senior citizens and the disabled in the years ahead.

With the retirement of the baby boom generation, the last thing we should be doing is jeopardizing the viability of the many health care facilities that depend on Medicare for their survival. These institutions are being hard hit in cities and towns across the nation. Often, the hospitals and other institutions that care for Medicare patients also care for other patients as well. Health care in the entire community is being threatened.

Teaching hospitals are on the receiving end of a triple whammy. The slash in Medicare reductions is leading to less patient care, less doctor training, and less medical research at the nation's top hospitals. In my own state of Massachusetts, for the first time in history, some of the finest and most renowned teaching hospitals in the country are now operating at a deficit. This situation is unsustainable—and it is happening all over our country. We will all suffer if these great institutions are forced out of business or into the arms of for-profit corporations.

Community hospitals are suffering, too. Throughout my State of Massachusetts, we are seeing red ink and cutbacks in essential services. This, too, is happening all over the country.

In Massachusetts alone, house health agencies are losing $160 million a year. Twenty agencies have closed their doors since the Balanced Budget Act went into effect. Many others are seeing fewer patients, and seeing their remaining patients less often. The home-bound elderly are especially vulnerable, and are suffering even more. In just the last two weeks, two Massachusetts nursing homes have declared bankruptcy.

This proposal is an important step to restore the viability of these indispensable institutions in our health care system, and I urge the Senate to approve it. We must undo the damage before it is too late. The last thing we need to see on the doors of the nation's teaching hospitals, community hospitals, home health agencies, and nursing homes, is a sign that says, "Closed because of the ill-considered activities of the United States Congress."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote the yeas are 50, the nays are 50. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected. The point of order is sustained and the motion falls.

Without objection, the motion to table is agreed to.

The Senator from Tennessee.

CHANGE OF VOTE

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, on rollover vote No. 234, I voted "no." It was my intention to vote "aye." Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to change my vote. It will in no way change the outcome of the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The foregoing tally has been changed to reflect the above order.)

AMENDMENT NO. 1467

Mr. Frist. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1467.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 19) prescribing the rules of procedure for the 105th Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 19) prescribing the rules of procedure for the 105th Congress.

The Senator from Tennessee. (Mr. Frist)

Mr. President, with the respect due from a policymaker from Montana, I propose an amendment numbered 1467.

The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. President, this amendment is a sense-of-the-Senate amendment that goes right at the heart of what we should be doing about Medicare. It says Congress should be acting to modernize Medicare, to ensure its solvency, and to include prescription drugs.

The congressional budget plan has $555 billion over the next 10 years in unallocated budget surpluses that could be used for long-term Medicare reform. In addition, the congressional budget resolution for the year 2000 has specifically set aside $90 billion for this purpose.

Thus, my sense-of-the-Senate amendment says that the unallocated on-budget surpluses provide adequate resources and that: No. 1, the congressional budget resolution provides a sound framework for the modernization of Medicare; No. 2, improving the solvency of Medicare; and No. 3, improving coverage of prescription drugs.

Congress should act to accomplish these goals for the Medicare program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, with great respect, I must inform this body that this amendment is pure fiction. It is pure fiction because the House and the Senate this year have been using Congressional Budget Office baseline numbers to predict what the surplus is or is not and what is left for spending. Under that formula, there is virtually no money in this tax bill left for discretionary spending.

A few days ago, a new chart suddenly popped up. The new chart comes up with this money. How does it come up with this money? It basically assumes that the Congress, over the next 10 years, is going to not only cut discretionary spending under the caps as planned but then not raise discretionary spending above inflation over the next 8 years.

I say that is a fiction—it is just not going to happen, so the money is not there—developed by this recent new chart.

If it is an accurate assumption that there is no spending, then it cuts discretionary spending by 50 percent, one or the other. It is a fiction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on amendment No. 1467.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I raise a point of order that the pending amendment violates 313(b)(1)(A) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

Mr. FRIST. Pursuant to section 904 of the Budget Act, I move to waive the point of order that the pending amendment numbered 1467, offered by Senator FRIST. For the benefit of my constituents in West Virginia, I offer a brief explanation for why I voted the way I did.

I opposed Senator FRIST’s amendment because, in my judgment, it is based on a fiction. As we all know, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) has projected a $996 billion non-Social Security surplus over the next ten years. The Frist amendment said that, even allowing for the $792 billion tax cut, there was still enough money left over to provide for the long-term solvency of the Medicare system. One need not be an economist, or even an expert in budget policy, to understand why that was just plain wrong.

The Republican tax cut plan will cost $971 billion over the next ten years—$792 billion for the actual tax cut, plus $179 billion in additional interest payments on the debt. That leaves $25 billion of the non-Social Security surplus. From that amount, the Republicans have said we can provide for emergency expenditures for natural disasters and international conflicts, which averages $80 billion over ten years; fund current operations of government; and reserve enough money for Medicare. And, as I say, they would do all that without using the Social Security surplus. As anyone can plainly see, that is just not possible. In all good conscience, I could not vote for the Frist amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

MR. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table prepared by the Congressional Budget Office be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

</table>
Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, this table clearly shows there is no Social Security money in this tax cut.

Secondly, maybe the Senator is confused. CBO says the President still does not lock up all the Social Security money. It is $30 billion short.

Last, I suggest if they are really concerned about the Social Security trust fund size, why are they filibustering against a lockbox that would encapsulate it and make sure it is there?

In summary, the Senator from New Jersey is using the wrong chart. It does not apply to the real situation. We are using no Social Security money in terms of our tax cut.

I move to table the Lautenberg motion to recommit and ask for the yeas and nays.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. KYL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

AMENDMENT NO. 1469, AS MODIFIED

(Purpose: To repeal the Federal estate and gift taxes and the tax on generation-skipping transfers, to repeal a step up basis at death, and for other purposes)

Mr. KYL. I call up amendment No. 1469, and ask unanimous consent that it be modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. KYL] proposes an amendment numbered 1469, as modified.

Mr. KYL. I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

TITLE VII—ESTATE AND GIFT TAX RELIEF PROVISIONS

Subtitle A—Repeal of Estate, Gift, and Generation-Skipping Taxes; Repeal of Step Up in Basis at Death

SEC. 701. REPEAL OF ESTATE, GIFT, AND GENERATION-SKIPPING TAXES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subtitle B is hereby repealed.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The repeal made by subsection (a) shall apply to the estates of decedents dying, and gifts and generation-skipping transfers made, after December 31, 2007.

SEC. 702. TERMINATION OF STEP UP IN BASIS AT DEATH.

(a) TERMINATION OF APPLICATION OF SECTION 1014.—Section 1014 (relating to basis of property acquired from a decedent) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(f) TERMINATION.—In the case of a decedent dying after December 31, 2007, this section shall not apply to property for which basis is provided by section 1022.";

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subsection (a) of section 1016 (relating to adjustments to basis) is amended by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (20), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (27) and inserting "; and", and by adding at the end the following:

"(28) to the extent provided in section 1022 (relating to basis for certain property acquired from a decedent dying after December 31, 2007)."

SEC. 703. CARRYOVER BASIS AT DEATH.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Part II of subchapter O of chapter 1 (relating to basis rules of general application) is amended by inserting after section 1021 the following:

"SEC. 1022. CARRYOVER BASIS FOR CERTAIN PROPERTY ACQUIRED FROM A DECEDE

(f) TERMINATION.—In the case of a decedent dying after December 31, 2007, this section shall not apply to property for which basis is provided by section 1022.";

(b) CARRYOVER BASIS PROPERTY DEFINED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the term 'carryover basis property' means any property—

"(A) which is acquired from or passed from a decedent who died after December 31, 2007, and

"(B) which is not excluded pursuant to paragraph (2)."
The property taken into account under subparagraph (A) of the last sentence of paragraph (9) of section 1014(b) without regard to subparagraph (A) of the last sentence of paragraph (9) thereof.

"(2) CERTAIN PROPERTY NOT CARRYOVER BASIS PROPERTY.—The term ‘carryover basis property’ does not include—

(A) any item of gross income in respect of a decedent's adjusted basis immediately before the decedent's death, the value of which would have been deducted from the tax liability of the decedent.

(B) property which was acquired from the decedent by the surviving spouse of the decedent, the value of which would have been deducted from the tax liability of such spouse.

(C) property which was acquired from the decedent by the surviving spouse of the decedent during the decedent's lifetime, and with respect to which the decedent is determined to have "net appreciation" after "is determined".

(3) ARRANGEMENT OF CARRYOVER BASIS IF INCLUDIBLE PROPERTY EXCEEDS $1,300,000.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If the adjusted fair market value of the includible property of the decedent exceeds $1,300,000, the amount of the increase in the basis of such property which would (but for this paragraph) result under section 1014 shall be reduced by the amount which bears the same ratio to such increase as such excess bears to $700,000.

(B) ALLOCATION OF REDUCTION.—The reduction (A) shall be allocated among only the includible property having net appreciation and shall be allocated in proportion to the respective amounts of such net appreciation. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term ‘net appreciation’ means the excess of the adjusted fair market value over the decedent's adjusted basis immediately before such decedent's death.

"(4) INCLUDIBLE PROPERTY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘includible property’ means property which would be included in the gross estate of the decedent under any of the following provisions as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999:

(i) Section 2033.

(ii) Section 2034.

(iii) Section 2041.

(iv) Section 2042(a)(1). (A) EXCLUSION OF PROPERTY ACQUIRED BY SPouse.—Such term shall not include property described in paragraph (2)(B).

(B) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(B) MISCELLANEOUS AMENDMENTS RELATED TO CARRYOVER BASIS.

(1) CAPITAL GAIN TREATMENT FOR INHERITED ART WORK OR SIMILAR PROPERTY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (C) of section 1221(3)(C) for basis determined under section 1221(3)(C) is amended by striking paragraph (2).

(2) DEFINITION OF EXECUTOR.—Section 7701(a) (relating to definitions) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(4) Executor means either the executor or administrator of the decedent, or, if there is no executor or administrator appointed, qualified, and acting, within the United States, then any person in actual or constructive possession of any property of the decedent."

"Sec. 1022. Carryover basis for certain property acquired from a decedent dying after December 31, 2007."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to estates of decedents dying after December 31, 2007.

Subtitle B—Reductions of Estate, Gift, and Generation-Skipping Transfer Taxes

SEC. 711. REDUCTIONS OF ESTATE, GIFT, AND GENERATION-SKIPPING TRANSFER TAXES.

(a) MAXIMUM RATE OF TAX REDUCED TO 50 PERCENT.—The table contained in section 2001(c)(11) is amended by striking the 2 highest brackets and inserting the following:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Bracket</th>
<th>Amount</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Over $2,500,000</td>
<td>$1,025,800, plus 53% of the excess over $2,500,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

(b) REPEAL OF PHASEOUT OF GRADUATED RATES.—Subsection (c) of section 2001 is amended by striking paragraph (2).

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to estates of decedents dying after December 31, 2003.

Subtitle C—Simplification of Generation-Skipping Transfer Tax

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I begin today by thanking Senator ROTH, the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, for recognizing that there is a place for estate-tax relief in this bill. The measure reported by the Finance Committee includes a variety of changes: a one-time reduction in the top death-tax rate, converting the unified credit to a true exemption, and raising the annual gift exclusion. These are all steps in the right direction. The problem is, at the end of the day, the Roth bill leaves the death tax in place.

By contrast, the bill that the House of Representatives passed last week phases out the death tax over a 10-year period, and then implements a version of the bill I introduced back in May with Senator Bob KERRY and a bipartisan group of 19 other Senators.

The amendment I am offering today is based upon that bipartisan initiative. I would replace the death tax with a tax on the appreciated value of inherited property, but only to estates valued at over $2 million. We try to reconcile these positions in this amendment by eliminating both the death tax and the step-up in basis, and attributing a carryover basis to inherited property so that all gains are taxed at the time the property is sold and income is realized.

The concept of a carryover basis is not new. It exists in current law with respect to gifts, property transferred in cases of divorce, and in connection with involuntary conversions of property relating to theft, destruction, seizure, requisition, or condemnation.

In the latter case, when an owner receives compensation for involuntarily converted property, a taxable gain normally results to the extent that the value of the compensation exceeds the basis of the converted property. However, section 1033 of the Internal Revenue Code allows the taxpayer to defer the recognition of the gain until the property is sold. This amendment would treat the transfer of property at death—perhaps the most involuntary conversion of all—the same way, deferring recognition of any gain until the inherited property is sold.

Small estates, which currently pay no estate tax by virtue of the unified credit, and no capital-gains tax by virtue of the step up, would be unaffected by the basis changes being proposed here. The estate tax would be eliminated for them, and they would still get the benefit of the current law's step-up. The basis changes would apply only to estates valued at over $2 million.

There are four problems I see with the underlying bill’s death-tax provisions. First, the bill tries to make palatable what is fundamentally indefensible. Taxing death is wrong.

Second, because it leaves the death tax in place, the need for expensive estate-tax planning also remains. Some people will have to divert money they would have spent on new equipment or new hires to insurance policies de-dsigned to cover death-tax costs. Still others will spend millions on lawyers, accountants, and other advisors for death-tax planning purposes. But that leaves fewer resources to invest, startup new businesses, hire additional people, or pay better wages.

Third, the higher exemption proposed in the committee bill provides some relief, but I believe it also serves as an artificial cap on small businesses’ growth. To avoid the death tax, an entrepreneur merely needs to limit the growth of his or her business so it does not exceed the $1.5 million exemption amount. That means fewer jobs, and less output.

I believe it would be better to elimiate the tax and, if there is a need to impose a tax, impose it when income is actually realized—that is, when the assets are sold. That is what this amendment would do.

I want to stress to colleagues, parcularly colleagues on the Democratic side of the aisle, that we do not allow appreciation in inherited assets to go untaxed, as other death-tax repeal proposals would do. We are merely saying that if a tax is imposed, it should be imposed when income is realized. Earnings from an asset should be taxed the same whether the asset is earned or inherited.

The question has been posed at various times during debate on this bill whether the American people want tax relief. Let me answer that question with respect to the issue at hand. Although most Americans will probably never pay a death tax, most people still sense that there is something terribly wrong with a system that allows Washington to seize more than half of whatever is left after someone dies—a system that prevents hard-working Americans from passing the bulk of their nest eggs to their children or grandchildren.

Seventy-seven percent of the people responding to a survey by the Polling Company last year indicated that they favor repeal of the death tax. When Californians had the chance to weigh in with a ballot proposition, they voted two-to-one to repeal their state’s death tax. The legislatures of five other states have enacted legislation since 1997 that will either eliminate or significantly reduce the burden of their states’ death taxes.

The 1995 White House Conference on Small Business identified the death tax as one of small business’s top concerns, and delegates to the conference voted overwhelming to endorse its repeal. Outright repeal received the fourth highest number of votes among all resolutions approved at the conference.

A couple of other points to consider about the death tax. It is one of the most inefficient taxes that the government levies. Alicia Munnell, who was a member of President Clinton’s Council of Economic Advisors, estimated that the costs of complying with death-tax laws are of roughly the same magnitude as the revenue raised. In 1998, that was about $23 billion. In other words, for every dollar of tax revenue raised by the death tax, another dollar is squandered in the economy simply to comply with or avoid the tax.

The tax hurts the economy. A report issued by the Joint Economic Committee in December of 1998 concluded that the existence of the death tax this century has reduced the stock of capital in the economy by nearly half a trillion dollars. By repealing it and put-ing those better to use, the Joint Committee estimated that as many as 240,000 jobs could be created over seven years and Americans would have an additional $24.4 billion in disposable personal income. So much for the contention that this is a tax that touches only a few.

It appears that the chairman of the Finance Committee will raise a point of order against this amendment. I think that is regrettable. If there is a way to improve this amendment, I am willing to work with Chairman ROTH on any ideas he might have. But if the point of order is intended to preserve the death tax as a permanent part of the Tax Code, then I believe the Senate has a very significant difference of opinion, and I think he should allow the Senate to work its will, rather than use a parliamentary point of order to block it.

This is a good amendment; the policy it proposes is reliable, and fair. Its time has come. I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

As I say, this amendment would repeal the estate tax, the so-called death tax. According to the Joint Tax Committee, under scoring, it cannot occur until the eighth year or until 2007. But at that point it replaces the death tax with a tax on the sale of the assets, usually a capital gains tax, if and when the property is sold. In other words, it is a very fair compromise between those who believe there should be some tax on the sale of assets and those who believe that death itself should not be a taxable event.

I am advised that a point of order will be made that this amendment is not germane. If that is done, I believe that to be very unfortunate. But because Senator KERNEY would prefer that we not proceed with a vote on the point of order, I will not contest the ruling of the Chair.

I believe that repeal of the death tax enjoys more than majority support and am confident that in the conference committee, we will be able to accept a legislative version of something close to it which repeals the death tax along the lines of the Kyl-Kerrey approach.

I urge my colleagues to support repeal of the death tax. If a point of order is made, I will not contest it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the pending amendment is not germane. I therefore raise a point of order that the amendment violates section 305(b)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken and the amendment falls. Who seeks recognition?

Mr. HOLLINGS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator LIEBERMAN, Senator LEVIN, and myself, I move to recommit the bill to the Finance Committee with instructions that the report back within 3 days with an amendment that implements the Greenspan recommendations by deferring tax reductions and by taking any projected rev-evenue surplus and actually reducing the national debt.

Now, for days on end we have been talking about what Mr. Greenspan said here, what Mr. Greenspan said here. As our friend, the former Attorney General Mitchell said: Watch what we do, not what we say.

He has been trying to stay the course;
namely, just take, in a sense, any surpluses—don’t argue about them, but if you can find them, then apply that to reducing the national debt. So we say that all we do is go to heaven but we don’t want to do what is necessary to get there. All of us say we want to reduce or pay down the national debt, but we don’t want to do what is necessary to get there. All you have to do in order to get there or reduce the debt is vote for this motion.

I yield to Senator LIEBERMAN.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, in the interest of legislative efficiency, let alone fiscal responsibility, Senator LEVIN and I are withdrawing our motion to strike the entire tax cut and joining to raise the same issue with Senator HOLLINGS on this amendment which says you can’t have a tax cut if the surplus is not there, and there is no evidence the surplus is there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. The

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to this motion. In a very real way, this is the final vote on the legislation before us. Let me point out that both Democrats and Republicans have broadly agreed that there should be a tax cut. That tax cut should be now. The American people are entitled to relief. What we are really doing here is restoring the excess taxes already paid. For that reason, I shall make a motion to table.

Let me reemphasize again, the Democrats have had a proposal of $300 billion in a tax cut. There has been a $500 billion tax cut. We have followed the budget recommendations of $792 billion. To deny the working people of America the tax break they deserve today is unconscionable.

For that reason, I move to table the motion to recommit, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I join in cosponsoring the Hollings motion to recommit the bill to the Finance Committee with instructions to defer tax reductions in order to reduce the national debt. I cosponsored the Hollings motion in lieu of calling up the Lieberman-Levin amendment because the effect of the Hollings motion, had it been adopted, would have been largely the same as the Lieberman-Levin amendment.

The tax program before the Senate is unfair to middle income Americans; it is economically unwise and it’s based on unrealistic assumptions. The unfairness is perhaps best shown by the fact that about two-thirds of its tax benefits go to the upper one-fifth of our people. In addition to being unfair, it is economically unwise in that jeopardizes Medicare, fails to strengthen Social Security, and risks higher interest rates.

This bill takes us back to the bad old days of backloaded tax breaks whose real costs explode several years after enactment. This budgetary time bomb is set to go off at roughly the same time as the Medicare trust fund is expected to be bankrupt and the bill begins to come due for Social Security.

In that decade, as the “baby boomers” begin to retire, the Social Security Trust fund will begin to run a deficit, requiring the redemption of Treasury bonds which it holds.

It is also based on unrealistic projections. Projections are always risky. We have seen many federal budget estimates, and we know well that as quickly as these surpluses appear, they can disappear. In 1981, President Ronald Reagan introduced his Economic Recovery Tax Act which included huge tax cuts and predictions that the budget would be balanced by 1984. In 1981, I opposed the Reagan tax cut because I was convinced that it would lead to huge deficits. We have paid dearly for the debt which resulted from that legislation. In 1992, the deficit in the federal budget was $290 billion. The remarkable progress which has brought us now to the threshold of surpluses has come about in large part as a result of the deficit reduction package which President Clinton presented in 1993, and which this Senate passed by a margin of one vote, the Vice-President’s. We should not now, by passing a tax bill like the one before us, head back down the road toward new future deficits.

I joined with Senator HOLLINGS in his motion to defer the tax cut, because it seems clear to me that we should first see if the surplus is real before we adopt tax cuts; second, if those surpluses are real, we should pay down the national debt faster; and third, we should save tax cuts for a time of economic slowdown.

During the consideration of this legislation and the national debate which has surrounded it, much has been made of the projected reduction of the national debt and concurrent reductions in interest payments. Although the debt held by the public, or the so-called external debt, is projected to be paid down by the surpluses accumulated in the Social Security Trust Funds, interest paid to the Social Security Trust funds in the form of bonds will con-continue to increase for more than a decade. At that time, in approximately 2014, unless Social Security reform has been accomplished, the Trust Funds will no longer be in surplus, but instead there will be a shortfall in those funds. As the bonds held by the Social Security Trust Funds are redeemed, we will therefore begin paying a portion of the interest owed to the Social Security Trust Funds in cash. Also, we will then have to redeem the trillions of dollars of bonds representing principal owed to the trust funds.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous con-

The table shows that through 2035, under current projections, that although the cash interest payments to the public on external debt go down over the course of the next 15 years or so to zero, the amount of interest that the Treasury will be required to pay to the Social Security Trust Funds in bonds and eventually in cash rises sharply during that period and beyond. After that, the amount of cash necessary to redeem bonds representing principal held by the Social Security Trusts Funds kicks in and then rises sharply. The projections show that in the year 2025, for example, the Treasury would be required to pay to Social Security $295 billion in interest payments and an additional $35 billion in cash to redeem bonds representing principal held by the Social Security Trust Funds which will then be needed to pay benefits to recipients. Ten years later, in the year 2035, the projections show that, in the absence of Social security reform, the Treasury would be required to pay to Social Security $135 billion in interest payments and an additional $77 billion in cash for bonds representing principal redeemed. These obligations are one more powerful reason why a huge tax cut, at this time, before the surpluses have even actually materialized is, in my judgement, both unwise and imprudent.

The Yeas and Nays for the Motion to Recommit are recorded on the Journals of the Senate for July 30, 1999.
wealthy children can make their dreams a reality.

We can not afford to continue subsidizing the ethanol, sugar, oil and gas industries at a time when we are struggling to save Social Security and Medicare, provide much needed and deserved tax relief to American families and strengthening our investment in the health, security and education of our children—our future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senate has expired.

Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I oppose this amendment on procedural grounds. This is a highly complex subject. It is a subject that I am sure will be debated extensively as we consider the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. But in principle also I think it is inappropriate to divert these resources to private education when we have so many unmet needs in public education.

I believe also that if we adopt the underlying tax bill there will be even less resources to devote to public education and it will exacerbate the demands that we already must meet with respect to public education.

There is a difference between private schools and public schools. Private schools can exclude children. Public schools and public schools. Private education Act. But in principle also I think it is inappropriate to divert these resources to private education when we have so many unmet needs in public education.

I believe our obligation and commitment is to public education, and this amendment will defeat that.

I also note that the pending amendment is not germane. Therefore, I raise a point of order that the amendment violates Section 305(b)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona. Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. President, pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act, I move to waive the point of order against amendment No. 1397, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The following tally has been changed to reflect the above order.
Shame on Congress for giving tax breaks to the rich, but denying a pay raise for the working poor. The $792 billion Republican tax bill will disproportionately benefit the richest Americans. Almost thirty percent of the tax breaks, once fully implemented, will go to the wealthiest 1 percent of Americans—those who make over $200,000 a year. Seventy-five percent of the tax breaks will benefit the wealthiest 20 percent of Americans—those with an average income of over $139,000.

But these tax breaks do virtually nothing for the lowest paid workers. They give minimum wage earners less than $22 a year in tax relief, compared to an average tax break of $22,964 a year for the wealthiest Americans. The Republicans want to give America’s wealthy 1 percent a $6,150 raise, that is equal to or higher than what 40 percent of Americans earn in a year.

The vast magnitude of these tax breaks is possible only because they depend on severe budget cuts in Head Start, summer jobs for low-income youth, and HUD housing subsidies for low-income tenants. Shame on Congress for ignoring the majority of America’s workers to benefit the wealthy few.

Our amendment is a modest proposal to raise the minimum wage from its present level of $5.15 an hour to $5.65 an hour on September 1, 1999 and to $6.15 on September 1, 2000. It will help over 11 million American families.

At $5.65 an hour, working full-time, a minimum wage worker would earn $12,800 a year under this amendment—an increase of over $2,000 a year.

That additional $2,000 will pay for seven months of groceries to feed the average family, and provide greater opportunities for those struggling at the minimum wage to obtain the skills needed to obtain better jobs.

The national economy is the strongest in a generation, with the lowest unemployment rate in three decades. Under the leadership of President Clinton, the country is enjoying a remarkable period of growth and prosperity. Enterprise and entrepreneurship are flourishing—generating unprecedented expansion, with impressive efficiencies and significant job creation. The stock market has soared. Inflation is low, and interest rates are low. We are witnessing the strongest peace-time growth in our history.

The sad reality, however, is that low wage workers are being left behind. And this disparity is at the heart of why we have widened the gap between the wealthy and the working poor. The Republican pension provisions, for example, only benefit high income Americans with extra income to contribute to IRAs and 401(k) plans. Raising the contribution limits on these savings vehicles only disappoints panties from offering across-the-board retirement plans that benefit all employees. The Republican tax bill also undermines the current tax code rules that require retirement benefits to be distributed fairly among lower and higher paid workers.

Under current law, minimum wage earners can barely make ends meet. Working 40 hours a week, 52 weeks a year, they earn $10,712—almost $3,200 below the poverty line for a family of three. The real value of the minimum wage is now more than $2.00 below what it was in 1968. To have the purchasing power it had in 1968, the minimum wage should today be at least $7.49 an hour, not $5.15. This unconscionable gap shows how far we have fallen short over the past three decades in giving low income workers their fair share of the country’s extraordinary prosperity.

To rub salt in the wound, Congress recently signed off on a cost of living pay increase for every member of the Senate and House of Representatives. Republican Senators don’t blink about giving themselves an increase—how can they possibly deny a fair increase to minimum wage workers?

It is time to raise the Federal minimum wage. No one who works for a living should have to live in poverty. I urge my colleagues to join me in raising the minimum wage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, we should not be passing a law on a tax cut bill to say it is against the law. It is time to work for $6.15 an hour, that the Federal Government, in its infinite wisdom, decided if you don’t have a job that pays at least $6.15 an hour you should be unemployed. That would be a serious mistake.

This language in this amendment is not germane to the bill now before us. I now raise a point of order under section 305(b)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act, I move to waive all the applicable sections of the Act for consideration of the pending amendment.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this flat tax amendment realistically as a protest against the complicated Tax Code which now numbers some 7.5 million words, costs $600 billion in compliance, and takes 5.4 billion hours to comply. This amendment is supported by Senator LOTT, Senator NICHOLS, Senator CRAIG, and others.

In a very shorthand statement, this is a tax return under the flat tax. It is a postcard, and it can be filled out in 15 minutes. It eliminates taxes on capital gains, on estates and on dividends, all of which have been taxed before. It is not regressive. There is no tax for a family of four up to $27,500 in earnings, which is 53 percent of Americans. There is a reduction in tax for $1,000 up to $45,000. It is even at $75,000. An affirmative vote will signal a protest to urge the Finance Committee and Ways and Means to give serious consideration to this important reform.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, we have not seen a copy of this amendment, but I assume it is the standard flat tax that has been discussed for years. If that is the case, then the net effect of it will be, for more income earners, most American taxpayers, in effect, a tax increase. The only taxpayers with a tax reduction under the standard flat tax proposal will be those of adjusted gross incomes of over $200,000, and the tax reduction will be 50 percent. Stated differently, this is a tax on workers but it is not a tax on investment income, it is not a tax on other income, which I think is unfair.

In any event, the amendment is not germane. I raise a point of order that it violates section 306(b)(2) of the Budget Act.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, under the applicable provision, I move to waive the provision as to germinness, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered. The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 35, nays 65, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote the yeas are 35, the nays are 65.

Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected. The point of order is sustained and the amendment falls.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I call up my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative assistant read as follows:

The Senator from New York (Mr. SCHUMER), for himself, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. BAYH, and Mr. SMITH of Oregon, proposes an amendment numbered 1416.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in a prior edition of the RECORD.)

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank the Chair. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Maine when I am completed.

This amendment is simple. It is bipartisan, sponsored by the Senator from Maine, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. SMITH of Oregon, Mr. BAYH of Indiana, and myself. It seeks no political advantage for either side. It helps the middle class in a vitally needed way, by making college tuition, up to $12,000, fully deductible for all those in the 28 percent bracket or lower. That is over 90 percent of all Americans. The average middle class person making $50,000, $60,000, $70,000 a year sweats at night worrying about paying for the cost of college, which is getting higher and higher. I urge support of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUNNING). The Senator's 30 seconds yield to the Senator from Maine when I am completed.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment. It will dramatically improve access for working American families in this country to pursue higher education. The bottom line is that even as the cost of college has quadrupled over the past 20 years, in fact, growing nearly to twice the rate of inflation, the value of Pell grants has actually decreased. Where it used to cover 30 percent of the cost of public education, today it is 22 percent. In fact, in the last 5 years alone, the total amount of college loans has soared by 82 percent, even after adjusted for inflation. I hope that we will help American families with this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, Senator SCHUMER's amendment would provide a full tax deduction for higher education and a tax credit for student loans. While I recognize that we need to assist American families with the cost of higher education, I cannot support this amendment. The costs of this amendment are enormous. I understand that it would cost something like $25 billion over 10 years, but the pay-for would delay the AMT relief that is provided in this bill. That delay would impact on working Americans, depriving them of the child credit, personal exemptions, and, ironically, educational benefits such as the HOPE scholarship and lifetime earnings.

Mr. President, I regret that I must make a point of order against the amendment under section 305 of the Budget Act on the grounds it is not germane.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I move to waive the Budget Act, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to waive the Congressional Budget Act in relation to the Schumer amendment No. 1416. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote the yeas are 53, the nays are 47.

Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected. The point of order is sustained and the amendment falls.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I note that the banking committee is meeting at this time, and objection to that meeting has been made for the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is so noted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader, the minority leader, and also Senator Roth, Senator Reid, and Senator Moynihan.

We have made very good progress in reducing the number of amendments. I think we are down to maybe a few amendments. I know that on this side we are only looking at one or two that would require a rollcall vote. We are trying to make it as short as possible. We have a few more requests. I think we are making good progress. I know Senator Reid is making good progress.

That is for the information of our colleagues.

We would also like to keep the rollcall votes to 10 minutes. The last rollcall vote went a little extra. We are going to finish this bill today. It is in everybody’s interest to stay on the floor and to have timely rollcall votes. We expect to accept a couple of amendments right now. That will help expedite the process.

I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 1452
(Purpose: To increase the mandatory spending in the Child Care and Development Block Grant by $50,000,000,000 over 10 years in order to assist working families with the costs of child care, and for other purposes)

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I call up amendment 1452 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], for himself and Mr. JEFFORDS, proposes an amendment numbered 1452.

(The text of the amendment is printed in a previous edition of the RECORD.)

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, the child development block grant has helped families of families keep jobs by helping offset the enormous costs of child care, which enable them to go to work. In most cases, subsidies are so low that families are forced to use the cheapest and, in many cases, the poorest quality child care.

There are 66 Senators who voted for the money in the budget for this purpose. The kids at the Burlington YMCA are right: We must act now for quality child care.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, this is a very good amendment. Only one in 10 eligible children is being served.

I thank my colleagues, Senators JEFFORDS, CHAFFEE, SNOWE, COLLINS, ROBERTS, STEVENS, and DOMENICI. This is a large bipartisan group that cares about this very much.

These are needed resources to get to children who are not being well served. The tax credit is not refundable so it does not reach that low-income category. This child care development block grant does assist these families.

For those reasons, we urge adoption of the amendment. I thank the leadership for agreeing this be done on a voice vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1452) was agreed to.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. ROBB. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, despite the opportunities we have had in this bill and in the Finance Committee to address the $112 billion school repair needs in this country, this tax bill is simply inadequate in terms of infrastructure assistance for our Nation’s schools.

We know 14 million children attend schools in need of extensive repair or complete replacement. We know we need to build 2,400 new schools by 2003 to accommodate record school enrollments. We know we need to equip our schools with modern technology and the infrastructure necessary to support that technology. We know all these things. Yet we have reported a tax bill that only helps build and renovate 200 schools. We cannot starve our schools of resources and then criticize them when they are overcrowded or dilapidated.

On behalf of Senators Lautenberg, Conrad, Harkin, and Wellstone, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Finance, with instructions to report back to the Senate within 3 days with an amendment reducing or deferring by $5.7 billion over the next 10 years certain new tax rates in the bill that benefit those who least need relief.

Mr. NICKLES. I think this procedure would be a serious mistake. We don’t want Federal bureaucrats trying to improve school construction programs. We should leave those decisions of which schools to be building and which schools to repair to the State and local governments.

1 move to table the motion, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT

Mr. WELLSTONE. I call up my motion to recommit to veterans’ health care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WELLSTONE] moves to recommit the bill, S. 1429, to the Committee on Finance with instructions that the Committee on Finance report the bill to the Senate with provisions which—

Establish a reserve account for purposes of providing funds for medical care for veterans.

Provide for the deposit in the reserve account of $2,000,000,000 in each of fiscal years 2000 through 2004:

Make available amounts in the reserve account for purposes of medical care for veterans, which amounts shall be in addition to any other amounts available for medical care for veterans in those fiscal years; and Provide that amounts for deposits in the reserve account shall be derived by reductions in the amounts of new tax reductions provided in this bill, wherever possible, for individuals with incomes exceeding $200,000 per year.

The motion was agreed to.
Mr. WELLS. Mr. President, I introduce this motion with Senator Johnson, Senator Daschle, and Senator Harkin. The motion calls for $3 billion added to veterans' health care. That is consistent with what the Veterans' Affairs Committee has said we need to do. That is consistent with the veterans' independent budget. That is consistent with what the report we did last week on the gaps in veterans' health care, and every single Senator voted on the budget resolution for a $3 billion increase for veterans' health care. That is the least we should do to make sure there is high-quality health care for veterans in our country.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the underlying tax bill calls for domestic spending reductions of anywhere from 24 to 38 percent, closing down VA hospitals on one end of this country to the other. This is the one vote on which my colleagues will have an opportunity to make sure there is enough money in the VA system to keep those hospitals open.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I agree with my colleagues on the other side. Yet the President's budget devastates veterans' health care. The flat-line budget proposed by this administration will result in some 13,000 Veterans Affairs employees being RIF'd or furloughed. It will close down facilities. It will throw people out of the care of the veterans facilities.

The problem is that this motion does nothing to get money to veterans. This body has already gone on record saying we do not want to stay at the low level submitted by the President. That is why we are going to increase by hundreds of millions of dollars in the appropriated amount to cover for veterans' health care. We are concerned about veterans' health care. That is why we are not going to tolerate the unforgivably small budget that the President has proposed. This is an attempt to provide appropriations when, in fact, it will have no such impact. There is $505 billion set aside in this plan for spending on high-priority matters.

Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment section 305 of the Budget Act on the grounds that it is not germane.

Mr. WELLS. Mr. President, I move to waive the Budget Act, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a second?

There is a sufficient second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to waive the Budget Act with respect to the motion to recommit. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 58, nays 42, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBERTS). On this vote the yeas are 58, the nays are 42. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected. The point of order is sustained and the motion falls.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. NICKLES. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BINGAMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I have a motion at the desk to recommit to the Finance Committee that I call up at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative assistant read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Finance with instructions to report back within three days with an amendment providing for an additional $100 billion of debt reduction, and to do so by reducing narrowly-targeted, special-interest tax breaks and tax reductions that disproportionately benefit the wealthy.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, we have a historic opportunity before us. If the President are to agree to the motion to waive the Budget Act with respect to the motion to recommit. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 58, nays 42, as follows:

Paying off the debt today will also leave us in a much stronger position to afford the cost of the baby boom’s retirement and health care. As my colleague from Oklahoma pointed out, the cost of the Republican tax cuts begin to rise dramatically just at the same time the pressures on the budget begin to grow as the baby boomers start to retire.

But Republicans have rejected our attempts to pay down the debt. They claim they are doing plenty to pay down the debt—and that this is enough. They may even talk about a Congressional Budget Office report that purports to show how their plan reduces the debt. But that analysis is based on a fiction; the fiction that Republicans will be able to cut spending dramatically—by nearly one-fourth. And if defense is funded at the level the Administration has requested, other important domestic programs would face cuts of nearly 40 percent. This means less medical research, dramatic cuts in the number of children participating in Head Start, substantial reductions in the number of law enforcement personnel, no new environmental cleanups, closures at national parks. The list goes on.

However, as we all know, Democrats and Republicans both, there is really no support for cuts of that magnitude, either in Congress or among the public.

A story on the front page of the Washington Post on July 27, 1999 puts the lie to Republican assertions that they will be able to cut spending. They can’t even pass this year’s appropriations bills without resorting to smoke-and-mirrors gimmickry to hide the cost of their bills.

Without those cuts, they need to raid the Social Security trust fund to pay for their tax cut. And they will increase it far more than reduce, our national debt.

The truth is, they want their excessive, risky tax cut so badly that they are willing to put the health of our economy at risk, to endanger the security of retirees, and to short-change important national priorities like investments in education, medical research, the environment and even national defense.

Republicans want to spend 97 percent of the available non-Social Security surplus on tax cuts—tax cuts whose cost explodes in the future, overheat our economy, and disproportionately favor the rich and special interests.

Democrats have offered reasonable alternatives that balance tax cuts with Medicare solvency, debt reduction and investments in key domestic priorities. But these have all been rejected.

So I am making this last, very modest attempt to avoid wasting surplus—asking to subtract $100 billion of this tax cut be used instead for paying off more of our national debt. This would leave about 86 percent of the surplus for tax cuts—this is less than 97 percent they want to spend, but is still a substantial amount. We could do more to reduce the debt, but we wouldn’t do it. But this is a starting point.

My motion would instruct the Finance Committee to report the bill back in 3 days, with an amendment to reduce the tax cut by $100 billion, and use the savings to pay down more of our national debt. It also instructs the Committee to find the savings by reducing narrowly-targeted special interest tax breaks in the bill, and tax relief that disproportionately benefits the wealthy.

Last week, just days after Republicans passed their tax bill out of committee, the Washington Post ran a story detailing the special-interest giveaways in the Republican tax bills. These include special breaks for airplane owners in Alaska, barges in Mississippi, and foreign residents who use frequent-flyer miles to purchase airline tickets. Since then, we have also learned just how skewed the bill is toward families with the very highest incomes. The top 1 percent of all taxpayers would receive a whopping 30 percent of the tax cuts. Overall, the top one-fifth of taxpayers would receive 75 percent of the tax relief. It seems to me there is plenty of room in this bill to reduce the tax cut by $100 billion for the sake of reducing our national debt.

The Republicans have rejected our balanced alternative to a huge, imprudent tax cut, and they have rejected our lockbox that would set aside money for Social Security and Medicare—but can’t they even reduce their enormous, risky tax cut by $100 billion in order to further reduce our nation’s indebtedness? That’s only about 10 percent of the available surplus. Only 10 percent for prudence and responsibility to fulfill our agenda, the

Mr. NICKLES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. One, I appreciate our colleague’s willingness to have a voice. I encourage others to have voice votes. For the information of all Senators, I think we are making good progress. We only have a few amendments left, maybe just three or four that require a recorded vote. I urge our colleagues, on this particular motion—despite my colleague’s very good intentions—to vote no by voice vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion. The motion was rejected.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. NICKLES. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I call up my motion to recommit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the motion.

The legislative clerk reads as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Finance, with instructions to report back within 3 days, with an amendment to reserve amounts sufficient to establish an improved income safety net for family farmers and ranchers in fiscal years 2000 through 2009, by limiting the bill’s new tax breaks for large corporations and those with annual incomes in excess of $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, this is a motion to recommit. I will not seek a recorded vote on it. My motion to recommit is to recommit the bill to the Finance Committee with instructions to report back with an amendment to reserve sufficient amounts to establish an improved income safety net for family farmers and ranchers in fiscal years 2000 through 2009 by limiting the bill’s new tax breaks for large corporations and those with annual incomes in excess of $300,000.

I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I suggest we are ready for a voice vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion. The motion was rejected.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. ROTH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. May I just note, sir, for the RECORD, that there are several of us, including the junior Senator from Alaska, who regret that the rum cover-over provisions for Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands are not included in this legislation. We hope to do so at some early future date. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

AMENDMENT NO. 1470, WITHDRAWN

(Purpose: Providing the Sense of the Senate regarding Capital Gains Tax Cuts) Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1470.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk reads as follows:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. ABRAHAM] proposes an amendment numbered 1470.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in a previous edition of the RECORD.)

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, this amendment tries to address what I consider to be one of the shortfalls in the Senate Finance Committee’s tax bill. This tax bill does not include any provisions to reduce the capital gains tax. rate. I believe we need to address the needs of America's growing investor class only the rich pay capital gains taxes.

I believe it is time to put to rest once and for all the old class warfare slogan that only the rich pay capital gains taxes. Forty-nine percent of the investor class are women, and 38 percent are nonprofessional, salaried workers. Wall Street and Main Street are no longer separated. I believe it is time we recognize this fact and help new middle-class investors succeed in their drive to invest and save for the future.

I think it is time to cut the tax on mutual funds and pensions for working Americans and, therefore, I have offered this amendment. It is a sense of the Senate suggesting we should, in the conference that will follow the passage of this legislation, recede to the House position which reduces capital gains tax rates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the pending amendment is not germane. Accordingly, I raise a point of order that the amendment violates section 305(b)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I respond by saying that it is my impression that will not have a majority for this amendment. We will not overcome the point of order. So at this time, in light of the time constraints we are operating under today, I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

The distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

AMENDMENT NO. 1439

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota (Mr. CONRAD), for himself, Mr. REID, and Mr. ROBB, proposes an amendment numbered 1439.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is printed in a previous edition of the RECORD.
Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, right now companies are changing pension plans. They are going from defined benefit plans to these cash balance plans. That is OK. This amendment doesn’t stop that. But what is happening now is workers who have worked at these companies for sometimes 20 or 25 years have their pensions degraded. There are 5 to 7, and sometimes as many as 10, years when nothing is put into their pension plans. The younger workers are getting money paid into their pensions and the older workers are not. This amendment says that if they change pension plans they can not discriminate against the older workers, and the companies have to put into the older workers’ pension accounts whatever they are putting into the younger workers’ pension accounts so that we don’t have this kind of wear away for 5 or 7 years when older workers are degraded their pension benefits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I rise to oppose this amendment. Employer sponsorship of defined benefit pension plans have been declining over the last few years, mainly due to the increased regulatory burden that Congress and the IRS has placed on employers who offer these plans to employees.

This amendment would also substantially impair the employer’s ability to design and change their pension plans to meet the changing needs of the business and of the employees. In addition, it would punish good corporate citizens who maintain pension plans while leaving other companies free to terminate their plans in order to get from under this new law.

We have dealt with the concerns that participants do not know or understand changes to their pension plans with the more expansive disclosure requirements that are contained in this bill.

We should focus on revitalizing the defined pension system, rather than adding new burdens on employers who voluntarily establish these plans. For these reasons, I urge my colleagues to oppose this amendment.

Mr. President, I make a point of order. I understand the amendment under section 305 of the Budget Act on the grounds that it is not germane.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, pursuant to section 901 of the Congressional Budget Act, I move to waive the Congressional Budget Act for the consideration of amendment No. 1454, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas are ordered. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to waive the Congressional Budget Act in relation to the Harkin amendment No. 1454. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 48, nays 52, as follows:

July 30, 1999

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

18803

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN] moves the bill to the Committee on Finance, with instructions to report back within 3 days, with an amendment to reserve sufficient amounts of funding to allow our Nation to reach our goal of serving one million children through the Head Start program and to ensure that the number of nutritionally at-risk women and children being served by the Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants, and Children will not be reduced in fiscal years 2000 through 2009, by limiting the bill’s new tax breaks for schools with annual incomes in excess of $300,000 and for large businesses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator is recognized.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I would like to take just a few seconds and then yield to Senator WELLSTONE the remainder of the 1 minute.

This is a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Finance with instructions to report back with an amendment to reserve sufficient amounts of funding to allow our Nation to reach our goal of serving 1 million children through the Head Start Program and to make sure we are not diminishing or threatening those who are receiving benefits under the WIC Program.

We hope if there is enough opportunity to provide tax cuts for 9 or 10 years, Members of the Senate will agree that Head Start and WIC also ought to receive priority.

I yield to Senator WELLSTONE.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, this is all about whether or not we support children in our country. It is a terribly important program. We will vote it up or down on a voice vote. On the ag appropriations bill we will have a recorded vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does any Senator wish to speak in opposition to the amendment?

The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WARREN. I rise in opposition to this amendment.

Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to support this amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does any Senator wish to speak in opposition to the amendment?

The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WARREN. I rise in opposition to this amendment. The poultry provision in the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999 meets three important criteria:

First, it facilitates the development and use of alternative fuel to generate clean electricity—energy that is not only abundant, but environmentally friendly. Certainly, in this summer of rolling brownouts, we cannot overstate how important this is.

Second, the poultry provision in this bill addresses the need to safely and effectively dispose of chicken waste. Poultry production in the United States has tripled since 1975. Along with this growth, comes the waste, and the need to dispose of it.

And third, the poultry provision in this bill demonstrates Congress’ willingness to help our poultry farmers, while encouraging technological advances. Providing incentives for facilities that turn chicken waste into clean energy is consistent with our objectives.

For these reasons, I urge my colleagues to vote against this amendment, and to support the production of clean energy—production that will help America meet its energy needs, while helping our farmers and protecting our environment.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The amendment is printed in a previous edition of the RECORD.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, this amendment simply eliminates from this bill a special tax cut aimed at foreign technologies for converting poultry waste into electricity. I agree with converting poultry waste into something useful, but I disagree with giving a tax break to foreign corporations when there are U.S. companies capable of achieving that end.

Two such companies exist in my home State. Agri-Cycle of Springfield, MO, processes chicken manure into pollution-free fertilizer pellets. The British company that wants to build the facility here and burn the waste claims they need the tax break because without it, they would not be able to expand here because they are used to large subsidies they receive from the British Government.

I ask my colleagues to support this amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

to hard rock minerals and does not touch oil and gas, and it preserves the deduction for private lands.

The President's fiscal year 2000 budget recommend eliminating this tax break. OMB estimates this amendment would raise $378 million over 5 years.

We allow companies to mine on public lands for very low patent fees already. We shouldn't continue to provide them with a double subsidy by preserving this special tax break for hard rock mining companies which ordinary businesses do not get.

I understand this will be the subject of a voice vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 1417. The amendment (No. 1417) was rejected.

Mr. BOTH. Mr. President, I recognize Senator COVERDELL, for the next amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 1426, AS MODIFIED

Mr. COVERDELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to send a modification of my amendment No. 1426 to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. COVERDELL], for himself, Mr. TORRICELLI, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. BAYH, and Mr. ABRAHAM, proposes an amendment numbered 1426, as modified.

Mr. COVERDELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 32, strike lines 12 through 14, insert the following:

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2005.

SEC. 1202. LONG-TERM CAPITAL GAINS DEDUCTION FOR INDIVIDUALS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Part I of subsection P of chapter 1 (relating to treatment of capital gains) is amended by redesignating section 1202 as section 1203 and by inserting after section 1201 the following new section:

“SEC. 1202. CAPITAL GAINS DEDUCTION FOR INDIVIDUALS.—

“(a) GENERAL RULE.—Part I of subsection P of chapter 1 (relating to treatment of capital gains) is amended by redesignating section 1202 as section 1203 and by inserting after section 1201 the following new section:

“Sec. 1202. Capital gains deduction for individuals.

“(a) General rule.—Part I of subsection P of chapter 1 (relating to treatment of capital gains) is amended by redesignating section 1202 as section 1203 and by inserting after section 1201 the following new section:

“(d) Section Not To Apply To Certain Taxpayers.—No deduction shall be allowed under this section to:

“(1) an individual with respect to whom a deduction under section 151 is allowable to another taxpayer for a taxable year beginning in the calendar year in which such individual's taxable year begins,

“(2) a married individual (within the meaning of section 7703) filing a separate return for the taxable year, or

“(3) an estate or trust.

“(e) Special Rule for Pass-Through Entities.—

“(1) In general.—In applying this section with respect to any pass-through entity, the determination of when the sale or exchange occurs shall be made at the entity level.

“(2) Pass-through entity defined.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term ‘pass-through entity’ means—

“(A) a regulated investment company,

“(B) a real estate investment trust,

“(C) a partnership,

“(D) an estate or trust, and “(F) a common trust fund.

“(b) Coordination With Maximum Capital Gains Rate.—Paragraph (3) of section 1(h) (relating to maximum capital gains rate) is amended to read as follows:

“(3) Coordination with other provisions.—For purposes of this subsection, the amount of net capital gain or loss shall be reduced (but not below zero) by the sum of—

“(A) the amount of the net capital gain taken into account under section 1220(a) for the taxable year, plus

“(B) the amount which the taxpayer elects to take into account as investment income for the taxable year under section 163(d)(4)(B)(ii).

“(18) Long-term capital gains.—The deduction allowed by section 1202.

“(d) Treatment of Collectibles.—

“(1) In general.—Section 1222 (relating to other terms relating to capital gains and losses) is amended by inserting after paragraph (11) the following new subparagraph:

“(12) Special rule for collectibles.

“(A) In general.—Any gain or loss from the sale or exchange of a collectible shall be treated as a short-term capital gain or loss (as the case may be), without regard to the period such asset was held. The preceding sentence shall apply only to the extent the gain or loss is taken into account in computing taxable income.

“(B) Treatment of certain sales of interest in partnership, etc.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), any gain from the sale or exchange of an interest in a partnership, S corporation, or trust which is attributable to unrealized appreciation in the value of collectibles held by such entity shall be treated as gain from the sale or exchange of a collectible. Rules similar to the rules of section 751(c) shall apply for purposes of the preceding sentence.

“(C) Collectible.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘collectible’ means any capital asset which is a collectible (as defined in paragraph (12) thereof) without regard to paragraph (3) thereof.

“(B) Clause (iv) of section 170(b)(1)(C) is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the following: ‘and section 1222 shall be applied without regard to paragraph (12) thereof (relating to special rule for collectibles).’

“(1) In general.—Subparagraph (E) of section 6(b)(1) is amended by striking ‘$500’ and inserting ‘$300’.

“(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (E) of section 56(b)(1), as amended by section 206(b)(2), is amended by striking ‘$500’ and inserting ‘$300’.

“(C) FORMING AMENDMENTS.—

“(1) Section 57(a)(7) is amended by striking ‘1202’ and inserting ‘1203’.

“(2) Clause (iii) of section 163(d)(4)(B) is amended to read as follows:

“(i) the sum of—

“(3) Subparagraph (B) of section 172(d)(2) is amended to read as follows:

“(B) the deduction under section 1202 and the exclusion under section 1203 shall not be allowed.

“(4) Section 642(c)(4) is amended by striking ‘1202’ and inserting ‘1203’.

“(8) The last sentence of section 1044(d) is amended by striking ‘1202’ and inserting ‘1203’.

“(9) Paragraph (1) of section 1402(i) is amended by inserting ‘1203’ and the deduction provided by section 1202 and the exclusion provided by section 1203 shall not apply’ before the period at the end.

“(10) Section 121 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

VOTE ON AMENDMENT NO. 1468

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, if I might have the attention of the Senate, a moment ago we had a voice vote on the Snowe amendment and there was some question on the outcome. I think the Chair ruled "no" on the Snowe amendment, and I personally think there was a significant question about that. A lot of people voted in favor of the Snowe amendment. So I move to reconsider the vote on the Snowe amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote?
Without objection, the vote will be reconsidered.

The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 1468 by the Senator from Maine, Ms. SNOWE.

The amendment (No. 1468) was agreed

Mr. ROTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

MOTION TO WAIVE

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, section 202 of S. 1429 makes certain that the marriage penalty relief in the bill also applies to married couples receiving earned income. Thus, the provision violates the Budget Act because it increases outlays.

In order to protect the provision against a point of order, I move to waive any point of order against section 202 in this legislation. A subsequent conference report, or in an amendment between the Houses if such point of order is made on the grounds that the enhancement of the earned-intcome tax credit for married couples is an increase in outlays.

I call for a voice vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

In the opinion of the Chair, three-quarters of the Senators duly sworn having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to.

imous consent that I be allowed to read the following.

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, this amendment would expand the small business provisions of this tax bill. I am pleased that several of the provisions have been accepted. We are making solid progress on this issue.

This is a bipartisan amendment, co-sponsored by Senators ROBB of Virginia and HAGEL of Nebraska.

I support tax relief for the American people, and I will support this tax bill. The surplus belongs to the American people, and I think a refund of one-third of the surplus is reasonable.

While I support the bill, I have been working to improve it before final passage.

In particular, we should expand the small business tax section of the code known as Subchapter S. Subchapter S of the Internal Revenue Code was enacted by Congress in 1958 and has been liberalized over a number of times over the last two decades, significantly in 1982 and again in 1996.

This reflects a desire on the part of Congress to reduce taxes on small businesses. Subchapter S eliminates the double taxation of small business income.

Under Subchapter S the business is taxed at the shareholder level alone, it is not taxed at the corporate level. Subchapter S is available only to small businesses that have a small number of shareholders.

Congress made small banks eligible for S corporation status in the 1996 “Small Business Job Protection Act.”

Since first becoming eligible, nearly 1,000 small banks have converted from regular corporations to small business corporations.

Unfortunately, many more would like to convert, but are prevented from doing so by a number of remaining obstacles in the tax law.

My amendment builds on and clarifies the Subchapter S provisions from 1996. It contains several provisions of particular benefit to community banks that may be contemplating a conversion to Subchapter S.

The amendment is based on S. 875, legislation that I introduced earlier this year with the cosponsorship of Senators GRAMM, BENNETT, SHELBY, ABRAHAM, HAGEL, ENZI, MACK, GRAMS, INHOFE, BROWNBACK, and THOMAS.

I have selected several provisions from the bill for this amendment and the Finance Committee has agreed to accept them. Let me review these provisions:

First, we exclude investment securities income from the passive income test for banks. Banks are unique, they are required to hold passive investments such as federal bonds and municipal bonds to comply with safety and soundness regulations.

This provision is only fair. If we require certain investments by regulations, we should not use this requirement to prohibit banks from becoming Subchapter S small businesses.

Second, we permit Subchapter S small business corporations to have bank director stock. Again, regulations require banks to have bank director stock.

We clarify that this does not punish banks. They can still become small business corporations.

In addition, I will be working with Chairman ROTH and his staff on several other provisions to consider for the future. These include one to permit Individual Retirement Accounts to be shareholders in an S corporation. This provision is a recognition of the importance of IRAs.

We have found that many community bank owners have their shares in an IRA. There is nothing wrong with this. We should let them be shareholders.

In addition, we hope in the future to permit S corporations to issue preferred stock. This would give all small businesses that are S corporations access to investing capital.

Let me conclude with a general statement on why we should enact these changes. Last year we enacted broad legislation to support credit unions, I supported this legislation.

We should now give small banks some tax relief. They are in a tough competitive position.

We are about to approve financial modernization in this Congress. I am a member of the Conference on this important legislation. I support the legislation.

But I think it is right to note that this legislation is of greatest appeal to larger financial institutions.

Again, our small community banks need help. I promised you on this floor many people from rural areas get on a plane to travel within their States. There are no roads from Barrow to Nome or Anchorage to Cold Bay. Additionally, in the event of illness, many people in rural States must take an empty seat on a company owned airplane and incur a tax penalty because they need medical treatment that can only be found in larger cities. My amendment includes a provision to allow passengers to be treated as employees if they live in remote areas that are not connected to a road system. For cases of medical emergency or other time sensitive situations, a passenger could as if they were an employee of the operator of the non-commercial aircraft without being taxed on the value of the seat.

This is a modest proposal with small revenue impacts. The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates the revenue impact for this provision would be approximately five million dollars per year over the next ten year period. While this is a small amount against the backdrop of the overall tax cut measure we are considering, it is a large amount to the people who are

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, my amendment mirrors a bill I introduced on an earlier occasion-S. 1410.

This amendment would equate the tax treatment of persons flying what would otherwise be a nontaxable flight on private noncommercial aircraft with the treatment of airline employees flying on space available basis on regularly scheduled flights. Currently, use of these empty seats is deemed taxable personal income to the employee. I refer to it as the empty-seat tax. In contrast, under current law, airline employees, retirees and their parents and children can fly tax-free on scheduled commercial flights for nonbusiness reasons. Military personnel and their families can hop military flights for nonbusiness reasons without the imposition of tax. Current and former employees of airborne freight or cargo haulers, together with their parents and children, can fly tax-free for nonbusiness reasons on seats that would have otherwise been empty.

Employers who own or lease these aircraft are compelled by IRS regulations to consider 13 separate factors or steps in determining the incidence and amount of tax to be imposed on their employees. My proposal is not only a deal with this inequity by treating all passengers the same way, but includes a provision which retains a reasonable standard of proof at audit to prevent abuse.

This amendment would not allow an executive to use a company jet to fly with his family and friends on vacation. My amendment would require proof to be shown that the flight was made in the ordinary course of business, the flight would have been made whether or not the person was transported on the flight, and no substantial additional cost was incurred in providing the transportation for the passengers.

In addition to the facilitation of employee travel, this provision is an especially important issue to large States with smaller populations because air travel comprises such a large part of our transportation systems. Instead of driving a car from one remote area to another or people from rural areas get on a plane to travel within their States. There are no roads from Barrow to Nome or Anchorage to Cold Bay. Additionally, in the event of illness, many people in rural States must take an empty seat on a company owned airplane and incur a tax penalty because they need medical treatment that can only be found in larger cities. My amendment includes a provision to allow passengers to be treated as employees if they live in remote areas that are not connected to a road system. For cases of medical emergency or other time sensitive situations, a passenger could as if they were an employee of the operator of the non-commercial aircraft without being taxed on the value of the seat.

This is a modest proposal with small revenue impacts. The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates the revenue impact for this provision would be approximately five million dollars per year over the next ten year period. While this is a small amount against the backdrop of the overall tax cut measure we are considering, it is a large amount to the people who are forced to pay the tax simply because they do not work for or are not related to an employer who is an airline, military, or common carrier company, or because they live in remote areas without road access. Flights are often, at best, biweekly to some rural villages in my State and during the long periods when no flights are scheduled, transportation out of these remote areas in emergency situations requires chartering an aircraft.

We should keep in mind that we are currently debating a tax refund bill that seeks to level the playing field for the American taxpayers. The tax refund bill would remove the marriage penalty that discriminate against married couples. It addresses inequities in pension plans that discriminate against certain workers. Yet, the Tax Reform Act of 1986 allows fisherman discrimination against the users of empty seats who live or do business in rural areas.

It is my hope that we can address this basic issue of tax fairness and complexity by eliminating the empty seat tax.

AMENDMENT NO. 1488

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the proposed Taxpayers Refund Act of 1999 includes a provision to create farm and ranch risk management (FARM) accounts to help farmers and ranchers through down times. The estimated cost for this provision is $897 million over the next ten years. The FARM accounts would be used to let farmers and ranchers set aside up to 20 percent of their income on a tax deferred basis. The money could be held for up to five years, then it would have to be withdrawn from the individual's account. Once the money is withdrawn from the account, the farmers and ranchers would pay tax on the amount that was originally deferred. Any interest earned on the money in the account would be taxed in the year that it was earned.

This approach to encouraging farmers and ranchers to set some money aside for downturns in the market makes sense. However, this provision should be expanded to include fishermen—I have an amendment that would do just that. The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates the cost for farmers would cost $22 million over the next ten years. According to the Joint Committee on Taxation, my amendment for fishermen would cost $5 million over the next ten years. This is a small amount to ensure that fishermen receive the same benefits as farmers under our current tax structure.

Fishermen face the same type of economic ups and downs that farmers and ranchers face. Because of this, they shouldn't be excluded from income averaging or coordination with the estimated tax. I think my colleagues who have joined me on this amendment, Senators MURkowski, INouye, Shelby, Breaux, Hollings, Gorton, and Murray.

AMENDMENT NO. 1488, AS MODIFIED

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that amendment No. 1485, which was previously adopted, be modified with the changes that are at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 1485), as modified, is as follows:

On page 371, between lines 16 and 17, insert the following:

SEC. 2. TREATMENT OF BONDS ISSUED TO ACQUIRE RENEWABLE RESOURCES ON LAND SUBJECT TO CONSERVATION EASEMENT.

(a) In General.—Section 145 (defining qualified 501(c)(3) bond) by redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (f) and by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

(e) Bonds Issued To Acquire Renewable Resources On Land Subject To Conservation Easement.—

(1) In General.—If—

(A) the proceeds of any bond are used to acquire land (or a long-term lease thereof) together with any renewable resource associated with the land (including standing timber, agricultural crops, or water rights) from an unaffiliated person,

(B) the land is subject to a conservation restriction—

(i) which is granted in perpetuity to an unaffiliated person that

(I) a 501(c)(3) organization, or

(ii) a Federal, State, or local government conservation organization, which meets the requirements of clauses (ii) and (iii)(II) of section 170(h)(4)(A),

(iii) which exceeds the requirements of relevant environmental and land use statutes and regulations,

(iv) which obligates the owner of the land to pay the costs incurred by the holder of the conservation restriction in monitoring compliance with such restriction,

(C) a management plan which meets the requirements of the statutes and regulations referred to in subparagraph (B)(iii) is developed for the conservation of the renewable resources, and

(D) such bond would be a qualified 501(c)(3) bond (after the application of paragraph (2)) but for the failure to use revenues derived by the 501(c)(3) organization from the sale, lease, or other use of such resource as otherwise required by this part, such bond shall not be a qualified 501(c)(3) bond by reason of the failure to so use such revenues if the revenues which are not used as otherwise required by this part are used in a manner consistent with the stated charitable purposes of the 501(c)(3) organization.

(2) Treatment of timber, etc.—

(A) In General.—For purposes of subsection (a), the cost of any renewable resource acquired with proceeds of any bond described in paragraph (1) shall be treated as a cost of acquiring the land associated with the renewable resource and such land shall not be treated as used for a private business use because of the sale or leasing of the renewable resource to, or other use of the renewable resource by, an unaffiliated person to the extent that such sale, leasing, or other use does not constitute an unrelated trade or business, determined by applying section 513(a).

(B) Application of bond maturity limitation.—For purposes of section 147(h), the cost of any land or renewable resource acquired with proceeds of any bond described in paragraph (1) shall have an economic life commensurate with the economic and ecological feasibility of the financing of such land or renewable resource.

(C) Unaffiliated Person.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'unaffiliated person' means any person who controls not more than 20 percent of the governing body of another person.
The bottom line is this, Mr. President. Clinton wants to spend the surplus. According to the CBO, the President projects $3 trillion in new spending over the next 10 years. That would mean taking $29 billion out of the Social Security Trust Fund surplus.

Now I know some of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle have been quoting from Federal Reserve Chairman Greenspan's recent congressional testimony. In that testimony, Chairman Greenspan said "My first priority, if I were given such a priority, is to let the surpluses run.

Some of my colleagues have been claiming that, in these words, Chairman Greenspan has rejected tax relief for the American people. But this is simply not so, Mr. President. Any reasonable garnishment of the record would show Chairman Greenspan's true views on the matter, namely that he would delay tax cuts "unless, as I've indicated many times, it appears that the surplus is going to become a lightening rod of interest and concern in our daily lives. That's the worst of all possible worlds, from a fiscal policy point of view, and that, under all conditions, should be avoided.

Chairman Greenspan was not saying "I oppose tax cuts." Rather, he was saying, quite reasonably in my view, that tax cuts must not come at the expense of fiscal and monetary stability. I agree with Chairman Greenspan that tax cuts cannot be our first priority. Our first priority must be to protect Social Security and address the national debt. Which is exactly what this substitute does by setting aside more than half of our projected surpluses for those purposes.

At the same time, we cannot allow these surpluses to become "lightning rods" for yet more increases in the size and scope of government, and in the tax burden on the American people. And that is precisely what the President's plan would do; it would spend the surplus, including the Social Security surplus, on further government programs, leaving nothing for the American people.

That is simply wrong. And I was pleased to learn that Chairman Greenspan agrees. In his testimony he said "I have great sympathy for those who wish to cut taxes now to pre-empt that eventuality, but I would suggest that, if it turns out that they are right, then I would say moving on the tax front makes a good deal of sense to me."

It makes a great deal of sense, Mr. President, for us to set aside the bulk of the surplus for Social Security and debt relief, then to return the rest to the American people. It makes a great deal of sense for us, after reserving over $2 trillion for these essential functions, to return $900 billion to the American people as a refund of their tax overpayment.

I believe we are doing the right thing by giving 25 cents back to the American people for every surplus dollar. I believe the plan crafted by those on the other side of the aisle is wrong to give back only 10 cents on each surplus dollar.

Let me briefly outline the provisions of this substitute, crafted as I said by majority Leader Lott. It includes:

- Broad-based rate cuts, expanding the 15% tax bracket upwards by $10,000.
- Family tax relief, including an end to the marriage penalty and provisions for child care and foster care.
- An end to the estate or death tax.

Incentives for savings and investments, including exclusions for interest and dividend income and a cut in individual capital gains rates to 15% and 7.5%.

Retirement savings incentives through an increase in the IRA contribution limit to $10,000 a year.

Education incentives, including education savings accounts, student loan interest deductions and prepayment tuition plans for public and private schools.

Provisions making health care more affordable, including full deduction for health insurance expenses, long-term care provisions, Medical Savings Accounts, and an additional caretaker dependency deduction.

Small business tax relief, including immediate 100% deductibility of health insurance for the self-employed and in increase in small business expense to $30,000.

Risk management accounts for farmers and ranchers.

Permanent extension of the Research and Development tax credit, and an extension of the work opportunity credit and welfare to work credit.

I would like to focus on the provisions in this substitute that I believe differentiate it from the Finance Committee bill; provisions that in my view provide even more pro-family and pro-growth tax relief where it is most needed.

First is family tax relief. Families today pay a higher proportion of their incomes in taxes than ever before in our history—31.7 percent. They pay more in income taxes than at any time in our history—31.7 percent. They pay more in income taxes than at any time since World War II. They spend more on taxes than on food, clothing and shelter combined. And this tax burden leaves families with less money to spend on necessities, and less to save for their retirement and for their children's education.

Families deserve tax relief, particularly at a time when they are overpaying the tune of over a trillion dollars.

This substitute will give families the substantive tax break they need and deserve.

First, it includes broad-based tax relief by increasing the amount of income a family can earn while remaining in the 15% income tax bracket by $10,000. The figure for single taxpayers will increase by $5,000. In this way, Mr. President, we will return 7 million taxpayers to the lower, 15% tax bracket, and 33 million taxpayers will receive a tax cut.

Under this proposal, even a single filer would save $550 on his or her taxes. In addition, this substitute ends the marriage penalty and provides relief for child and foster care services.

Taken together, these provisions will directly reduce the tax rate imposed on American families and increase incentives for work and economic growth.

Second, this substitute will provide tax relief to literally millions of working Americans struggling to build a nest egg for the future. By cutting taxes on interest, dividends and capital gains.

This latest era of economic growth has been unique, Mr. President, in that it has seen savings rates fall into negative numbers—indicating an increase in consumer borrowing in excess of savings. We cannot sustain economic growth and job creation unless Americans save and invest for the future. That is why this substitute will address the needs of America’s growing “investor class.” These working Americans—25 million and counting—are the real owners of the means of production in America.

Surveys conducted by a number of sources agree that, through pension plans, IRAs and other investment vehicles, roughly 50% of Americans—half our nation—owns stocks. They outnumber any of the special interest groups you would care to name. Yet, they want no special favors, just the opportunity to save and invest. And, with $4.5 trillion invested in mutual funds alone, America’s investor class has become the bedrock of our economy.

It is time to put to rest once and for all the old class warfare slogan that only the rich pay capital gains taxes. It is half of America “rich?” Do half our people earn so much money that they do not deserve a tax relief? I think not. Indeed, 49% of the investor class if female, 38% are non-professional salaried workers. Wall Street and Main Street are no longer separated by a vast socioeconomic divide. It is high time we recognized this fact, and helped new, middle class investors succeed in their drive to invest for the future.

This substitute would do precisely that, Mr. President. It would make the first $250 of this income becoming tax-free for families, with the first $250 of this income becoming tax-free for individuals. It would also increase the IRA contribution limit to $5,000 per year, allowing Americans to save more for retirement. Finally, it would cut capital gains tax rates, reducing the current 20 and 10% tax brackets to 15 and 7.5%, respectively.

Of course, not all of nation’s economic growth comes from stock investment. Many entrepreneurs in this economy are at their wit’s end, their tears, tolls and sweat into family owned businesses—businesses that keep our main streets vital and our economy growing.

Our nation was built on the strength of family-owned businesses. Whether on the frontier or in more settled urban areas, family businesses have delivered the goods for generations. Yet the federal government sets up almost insurmountable obstacles to family businesses.

The death tax makes it impossible for many entrepreneurs to pass the business on to their children. Too often, today, children must sell the family business just to pay taxes. And the result is often a sell-off of assets to large corporations, destroying jobs and investment opportunities.

I realize that some people favor the death tax as a means of punishing people who have amassed great quantities of wealth. But the IRS’ own records show that fully 80% of all taxable estates are worth less than $1 million. $1 million still sounds like a lot of money, Mr. President. But consider this: according to the Associated General Contractors of America, any contractor who purchases the three pieces of equipment essential to this trade, an off-highway dump truck, bulldozer and front-end loader, will have already amassed assets valued at over $1 million.

And relatively new businesses, such as those begun by black Americans until recent years deprived of the chance to compete, are especially vulnerable to the death tax. A Kennesaw State College survey found that close to a third of African-American-owned businesses would have to be sold by their inheriting heirs to pay taxes. The death tax destroys family businesses. It destroys wealth, and it destroys jobs. It is time to end it.

But entrepreneurs need more help than we can give from current tax laws, by subsidizing employer-purchased health plans, penalize small business owners. They make it more difficult for them to afford their own health insurance and to attract and keep good employees without spending themselves into bankruptcy.

The substitute framed by Leader Lott would address these barriers to family-owned business survival by accelerating the 100% deductibility of self-employed health insurance. the surplus is generated under the assumption that Congress will significantly slash investments in education, veterans and defense below the level needed to keep pace with inflation. Such cuts in key investments are not what the American people want. Moreover, the current majority has already exceeded last year's spending limit by $35 billion in the first 10 months of this fiscal year.

The real surplus from our current economic growth is closer to $112 billion when one eliminates the unrealistic, rosy scenarios painted by the Republican’s $900 billion tax bill.

Mr. President, our great economic growth has presented us with an opportunity to do many things. Sensible, modest, and targeted tax cuts for working families is part of that mix along with tax cuts in investments and Medicare reform.

In that spirit of balancing priorities, I supported the proposal of Sen. MOYNIHAN to provide $290 billion in targeted tax relief, while extending the life of Medicare and preserving funding for our most pressing domestic needs. That proposal was realistic and based on sound footings.

But, we should not enact an $800 billion tax cut based on mere projections; which slashes domestic investments; and which does nothing to preserve Medicare. Our $112 billion tax cut proposal is tied to a realistic review of the actual unencumbered surplus. This is the judgement of many outside experts including former Congressional Budget Office Director Robert Reischauer. Using this figure we can still provide marriage penalty relief, education tax credits, preserve Medicare, and meet the expectations of America’s families. That is why Sen. ROCKEFELLER, LEAHY, and I have put forth this proposal.

Mr. President, my hope is that our colleagues on the side of the aisle will take a moment to review the real surplus numbers and join us in our effort.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, I rise today to oppose S. 1429. Passing this bill is like going on a spending spree just because a sweepstakes company tells you “you might be a winner.”

I support the proposal for me is, when? I am a fiscal conservative and am happy to vote for tax cuts. Any tax cut, however, needs to be done in a fiscally-responsible manner. This is common sense.

But we need to look at the big picture, and we can’t engage in wishful thinking. So when we talk about cutting taxes we must do it in the same breath as paying down the national debt and dealing with Social Security and Medicare.

We should cut government spending. Working Americans pay taxes to the federal government, and that money buys a lot of great things. But we have a responsibility and obligation to only spend what is absolutely necessary, and we are afraid that we haven’t done a very good job of that. The federal government is too big and spends too much, and we need to do something about it.

We should pay down the public debt. If we reduce our public debt, we reduce the money the federal government owes to foreign investors and other bondholders. If we reduce our public debt—a debt that has accumulated because of out-of-control government spending in years past—it will lower interest rates, increase investment in America’s economy, and help ensure our economy’s continued growth and success. That has real benefits for average Americans: lower mortgage interest rates and a booming economy.

This isn’t inside-the-Beltway stuff. This is important to North Carolinians and all other Americans. And I think all of them can relate to why it is unwise to cut taxes before we are certain there is a surplus and before we are on the road to securing the future of Social Security and Medicare.

Look into your crystal ball. How much will you be earning in the year 2009? Will your 10-year-old be going to Duke or UNC, and what will be the tuition? What are you going to pay for health insurance during the next 10 years? And how much can you put away for retirement?

I think the: projections are important to North Carolinians and all other Americans. I have been thinking about how a family might try to answer these questions, and two things come to mind.

First, answers are extremely difficult to find with any degree of certainty. Unforeseen expenses can arise. And other factors—career changes, interest rates, or family size—may also affect the answers. It seems to me very likely, given these projections, that a family would be very cautious about their financial planning.

Second, if that family had to make a decision now about which one of those items they would forego if they needed extra money to cover unforeseen expenses, which one would it be?

If making these projections for a family is difficult, what can be said about the difficulty of predicting the federal government’s budget 10 years? I’ll tell you what I think about it. I think it is extremely difficult. And I am not alone.

I had an exchange the day before yesterday with Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan during a hearing. I talked to him about his earlier comments about the surplus, the proposed tax cuts and about the problems the federal government has showing restraint.

Mr. Greenspan noted that these projections are rarely accurate. His advice, then, is very simple and practical: wait. “Several years,” he said. “In other words, one year, two years.” Chairman Greenspan said he favors paying down the public debt—not using any surplus for increasing government spending.

It is hard to wait. This has been a real struggle. I break with the President, with my party and with the Republican party. But I do so because first and foremost we should not imperil our unprecedented economic prosperity by moving too quickly. To put it simply: look before you leap. A huge tax cut today is like entering the biggest watermelon contest the day after an especially good-looking vine sprouts up.

I, myself, just don’t have that much confidence that we have a surplus at all or that the economic assumptions underlying the surplus are accurate. It feels like smoke and mirrors—hocus pocus. And when people waive around numbers like $1 trillion, it’s hard not to get swept away.

I have no problem taking an extra $12 billion带来的 tax cut and take a look at the facts, we get a more frightening picture. If government spending is 1 percent higher than projected and revenues are 1 percent lower than projected, then the so-called $1 trillion surplus would be off by $170 billion annually.

When it comes to government spending, the truth is Congress has not been able to live within its budgets. Federal spending should be cut, but let’s not be naive: Congress has bad spending habits.

Current projections are based on assumptions about our spending habits that everyone admits have been impossible to live with. This is a fact. I want to remind everyone that this body passed a $12 billion “emergency” spending package—raiding the Social Security Trust Fund—earlier this year. I voted against that package because never in a million years did I think that no honest person would consider an “emergency.” We’ve also been pouring money into defense spending—something I support—but it’s not within the budget we tried to set for the government. We can’t stick to our limits now, and yet we are talking about a tax cut based on the assumption that we are going to spend less. This just doesn’t make sense to me.

Having noted that we never stay within the spending caps, let me say that we should not give up on them. They are important. And, despite our history of breaking them, they have acted to keep our spending lower than it would have been otherwise. This is important because the last thing we need to do is make sure that the federal government doesn’t just spend money because taxpayers send it to us. We need to constantly look for ways to cut unnecessary spending and pressure the federal government to operate more efficiently.

Even as we propose to dramatically cut taxes based on the fantasy that we will control spending and enjoy unprecedented economic prosperity, we are hiding our head in the sand and about a very real and very near fiscal catastrophe. In 2012, we will need to pay more for Medicare than we have. We’ll need to dip into a Medicare trust fund. But there is no Medicare trust fund. In 2014, Social Security benefits paid out will exceed receipts, and we will have to start dipping into the trust fund. This tax cut puts the cart before the horse. Cut taxes and then try to figure out how to deal with a looming crisis? No one could call that fiscally responsible.

What if there’s a real emergency? This bill leaves me worried. Suppose a Class 5 hurricane were to strike North Carolina sometime in the next few years. If we needed emergency relief, this proposal could leave us high and dry—or taking a dip into Social Security.

North Carolinians might be excused for thinking that the current tax debate sounds like hocus pocus. And they might be excused for wondering whether people are making promises they can’t keep. This government has made a great many promises:

- Putting more money in your pocket;
- Saving Social Security;
- Reserving money for Medicare;
- Improving Veterans’ health care;
- Funding for the National Institute of Health;
- Putting 100,000 cops on the street;
- Aiding America’s farmers;
- Funding for programs like Head Start;
- Maintaining interstate highways; and Supporting National Missile Defense and other spending to ensure a strong national defense.

I don’t think we can keep all of these promises. And I can’t bring myself to bate the American public with a tax cut only to be forced to cut their legs off on Social Security, Medicare and debt reduction or raise taxes again.

I heard this question asked earlier today about tax cuts. My answer is the same as the one Chairman Greenspan gave at the hearing yesterday—he said wait a few years.

After a few years we may know a few things.

First, are we keeping spending reasonably under control?

Second, have we saved Social Security and reformed Medicare?

Third, how’s the economy doing?

Fourth, have we paid down some of our national debt?

Our first real test will come this fall—when we will again start the process that will lead to meeting—or breaking—the spending caps. The federal government needs to prove to the American public that it can operate under its own budgetary limits. If we can do this, if we can break the habit of busting the budget caps, we will then be able to tell if we do in fact have a surplus.

I want the American people to know this: I am for cutting taxes paid by working Americans. We’ve got an amazingly successful economy right now. I want to make sure when I cast my vote this is working for something that will ensure, not destroy, the continued growth of our economy. Right now, the projections are too speculative, the assumptions too unrealistic, and to me, the solution is obvious. We should not spend money until we know we have it—and when we do have it, we need to give it back to working Americans.

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, I would like to make some comments regarding repeal of the “temporary” 0.2 percent Federal unemployment tax (FUTA) surtax.

Earlier this year I introduced S. 103 to repeal the surtax.

I commend Chairman ROTH and my colleagues on the Finance Committee for including in their tax bill repeal of the temporary 0.2 percent FUTA surtax.

I would, however, like to accelerate the effective date from 2004 to next year.

I believe that this tax relief provision is very important for both businesses and employees. We should repeal the surtax immediately.

The “temporary” surtax was enacted in 1976 by Congress to repay the general fund of the Treasury for funds borrowed by the unemployment trust fund.

Although the borrowings were repaid in 1987, Congress has continued to extend the surtax in tax bill after tax bill.

Since 1987, Congress has used extension of the surtax to help raise revenue to pay for tax packages.

In fact, the surtax was most recently extended to help pay for the 1997 tax bill.

The tax takes money out of the private economy for no valid reason. By repealing the surtax, Congress will honor a promise that it made when the surtax was first enacted.

Small businesses were told repeatedly that the tax was temporary and would be repealed when it was no longer needed to finance the unemployment tax system.

Clearly a tax is not temporary when it has already been in place for over twenty years.

Based on the original purpose, the surtax is no longer needed.

The economy is experiencing the highest level of employment in decades, and all state unemployment funds have surpluses.

It is inappropriate for the government to continue to raise excess unemployment taxes and then use the surplus for purposes completely unrelated to unemployment.

Repeal of the temporary unemployment surtax will also be beneficial to small businesses.

The surtax is especially hard on the small businesses because they are often labor intensive.

Any payroll tax is added directly to the employer’s payroll costs.

In fact, according to the National Federation of Independent Business, payroll taxes are the fastest growing federal tax burden on small business.

It is also important to note that the payroll taxes must be paid whether the business experiences a profit or a loss.

As a former small businessman myself, I am particularly aware of this fact.

I suspect that my view is similar to the view of many other small business owners.

It is one thing to have a surtax when unemployment is high and the surtax is necessary.

However, it is totally unjustified when unemployment is at the lowest level in three decades.

Repeal of the 0.2 percent surtax will reduce the tax burden on employers and workers by $6 billion over the next five years.

Lower payroll taxes mean higher wages for workers. Although the employer appears to fully pay the unemployment surtax and other payroll taxes, the economic evidence is strong that the cost is actually passed along to workers in the form of lower wages.

Consistent tax relief will help to ensure that our economy remains the strongest and most vibrant in the world.

Low taxes reduce unemployment and help ensure that future surtaxes are unnecessary.

The time has come to do away with this outdated and unnecessary surtax.

Again, I commend the Finance Committee for their provision to repeal the FUTA surtax, and I urge my colleagues to support efforts to accelerate the effective date so that repeal is immediate.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we are at a historic juncture. In the 1980’s, we faced massive deficits and growing debts. In sum, Congress debated red ink.

On the edge of the millennium, we are debating the question of what to do with about $1 trillion in anticipated budget surpluses.

Why are we here debating a surplus? We are here because of the tough choice we made in the past: a choice to use fiscal discipline. We started down the road of deficit reduction with the 1993 budget package, which passed without a single Republican vote. In fact, some members on the other side of the aisle claimed the bill would lead to economic collapse. However, because of the courageous stand we took then, we have gone from a $290 billion deficit...
Congratulations Record—Senate

In 1992 to an estimated $70 billion surplus in 1999.

But to more than reduce the deficit and restore fiscal discipline, we spurred tremendous economic growth and unprecedented economic expansion. For the sake of perspective, I would like to list the following facts: we have seen 3.5% annual growth since 1993, 18.9 million new jobs, 4.3% unemployment, and the median family income grow by more than $3,500 since 1993. This is good news, and we cannot afford to squander it.

The days of red ink as far as the eye can see are gone. Instead, based on various budget projections, we can suppose that there will be a total surplus of approximately $3 trillion over the next ten years. More than $2 trillion of that total comes from Social Security payroll tax roll-offs, to be absolutely left aside to preserve Social Security for current and future beneficiaries. Social Security is a promise to those Americans who worked and fought to make this nation great, and it is a program that must be protected.

The Office of Management and Budget and the Congressional Budget Office both project that the remaining non-Social Security surplus totals roughly $895 billion. But these are merely projections, dependent upon the performance and vagaries of the economy. And, I would caution that the Office and Management and Budget and the Congressional Budget Office have a history of predictions that fall far short of the mark. Indeed, Mr. President, because of changes in the economy between April and July of 1999, the Congressional Budget Office revised its ten year projections, adding $300 billion to the surplus. Imagine—a swing of $300 billion in three months.

But how are we generating the surplus, or more accurately, why is the Congressional Budget Office predicting a budget surplus?

Quite simply, the vast bulk of the non-Social Security surplus, nearly $600 billion of it, comes from the continuation of arbitrary spending caps established in the 1997 Balanced Budget Act. When we passed that legislation, we still had a deficit, but many of us realized then that if these budget caps were maintained beyond this period, they were required to balance the budget, they would prevent us from meeting our long-term obligations for education, health care, and the environment.

The American people cannot afford, as my colleagues on the other side of the aisle have asked of them, to retain these caps for the next 10 years. We cannot afford $600 billion in cuts to Pell Grants, Head Start, the Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women Infants and Children, Brownfield cleanup, Community Policing, Veterans benefits, and the National Institutes of Health, to name a few essential initiatives. Let me emphasize that the $600 billion figure is not atypical. Federal investments. Rather, that figure represents the resources we need to maintain current levels of funding. Make no mistake, these are cuts, not "reductions in the rate of growth", but real cuts.

Moreover, if we adopt the Republican $800 billion tax cut plan and if we fund the President's plan to meet the military's personnel and equipment needs, as the Republican leadership has said it will do, non-defense domestic spending will be cut by a whopping 38% in 2009. Under this scenario, 375,000 children will not get Head Start services, 1.4 million veterans will lose medical care, and 6.5 million poor students will lose Title I education aid. Simply put, the $800 billion tax cut before us today crowds out every priority we know must be met in the future.

Mr. President, the most serious shortfalls of the Republican tax bill is that it disperses the entire surplus through tax breaks and the Republican tax cut plan completely ignores the impending crisis in Medicare. By using all of the projected surplus for tax cuts, we leave ourselves severely restricted in the options we will have in the future.

Actuarial reports from the Medicare Trustees project that, under current economic conditions, we will have to contend with the inevitable fact that the Medicare program will be insolvent by 2015. Regrettably, by allocating the entire federal surplus for tax cuts, we will be forced to make radical changes to the program, either in the form of dramatic benefit reductions, large increases in premiums, or tax increases.

In addition, the Republican tax cut plan completely ignores the impending burdens of a retiring baby boom generation. The truth is that by 2030, there will be about 70 million Americans 65 years of age or older, more than twice their number in 1996. In terms of the total population, seniors will grow from 13% to 20% between 1999 and 2030.

In spite of these imminent demographic challenges, the Republican tax cut bill is structured in a way that tax breaks would explode during their second ten years. As the baby boom generation retirements occur, the cost of the tax cuts would explode to $2 trillion.

Prudence dictates that we should take the opportunity the surplus presents to meet meaningful changes to the Medicare program. I believe that we should be looking at the possibility of adding a prescription drug benefit as well as additional preventive benefits to the basic package of health care benefits. For elderly Rhode Islanders the cost of prescription drugs is a major concern and a major expense. Unfortunately, Medicare does not cover this expense nor does the COLA for Social Security accurately represent the medical expenditures of today's seniors.

While consideration of these matters should be made in the context of overall structural reform, we must ensure that there are sources to guarantee a basic benefit package upon which Medicare beneficiaries continue to rely.

Sadly, the Republican tax bill saps these resources before the debate can even begin. The massive size of the Republican tax plan threatens to unravel the many years of fiscal austerity that have brought us to this important juncture. Their unrealistic and dangerous proposal sacrifices the future for short-term gratification.

Mr. President, these are good times in our nation. More Americans are employed. More Americans own a home. Crime is down. Productivity is up, and inflation is low.

Working families in Rhode Island expect us to be responsible and prepare for the future. They want us to prepare Medicare, but the Republicans want them to say "no". They want us to care for our veterans, but the Republicans say "no". They want us to address the shameful fact that 1 out of every 5 children in America lives in poverty, but the Republicans say "no".

Mr. President, saying "no" to the needs of the American people is not an acceptable legacy for this Congress. On the edge of the Millennium, we should not put politics ahead of what is far and reasonable. Let's build for the future.

Ms. Collins. Mr. President, yesterday I offered an amendment to the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999. My good friend Senator COVERDELL and I crafted this amendment to help our public school teachers pursue professional development and pay for incidental supplies for classroom use.

Our amendment allows teachers to deduct their professional development expenses without subjecting the deduction to the existing two percent floor. It will also allow teachers to deduct up to $125 for books, supplies, and equipment related to their teaching.

Michael President, while our amendment provides financial relief for teachers, its ultimate beneficiaries will be their students. Other than involved parents, a qualified teacher is the most important prerequisite for student success. Educational researchers have demonstrated the close relationship between qualified teachers and successful students. Moreover, teachers themselves understand how important professional development is to maintaining and extending their level of competence. When I meet with teachers from Maine, they repeatedly tell me of their need for more professional development and the scarcity of financial support for this worthy pursuit.
The willingness of Maine's teachers to fund their own professional development activities has impressed me deeply. For every dollar raised by a teacher who serves on my Educational Policy Advisory Committee told me of spending her own money to attend a curriculum conference. She is typical of many teachers who generously reach into their own pockets to pay for professional development and to purchase materials that enhance their teaching.

I hope that this change in our tax code will encourage teachers to continue to take formal course work in the subject matter that they teach, to complete graduate degrees in either their subject matter or in education, and to attend conferences to give them new ideas for presenting course work in a challenging manner. This amendment will reimburse teachers for a small part of what they invest in our children's future.

Mr. President, this would be money well spent. Investing in education is the surest way for us to build one of the most important assets for our country—a well-educated population. We need to ensure that our public schools have the best teachers possible in order to bring out the best in our students. Adopting this amendment will help us to accomplish this goal. I thank my colleagues in joining Senator COVERDELL and me in support of this effort.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 1429, the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999. This statute has been about numbers and surpluses and budget rules. To some extent, it has to be. But our efforts to provide tax relief are also about something more important:

People

The kind of relief that both the Senate and House tax bills would provide is a matter of providing real help to real people who have real needs.

This tax relief is about returning some modest amount of liberty, some small measure of power, to the people. This is the most heavily taxed generation of Americans in history. Providing some degree of tax relief will return to individuals and families more power over their own lives, more ability to meet their pressing needs, and more of an opportunity to pursue their dreams. I believe all parents, the Senate and House tax bills. I think we can come up with a very good conference report based on these two bills—a conference report that preserves the best of both bills, and helps improve the lives of all Americans.

We are talking about a tax bill that removes some fundamental unfairness from the current system. For example, it just isn't fair that two individuals should be forced to pay hundreds of dollars more in taxes simply because they get married. That's why the Senate bill ends the marriage penalty for two earners. I think we should go farther, which is why I've supported the Gramm amendment and the Hutchison amendment and hope we can do more in conference.

Mr. President, it just isn't fair that working families sometimes have to pay to attend a family event or a family business just to pay taxes. I've seen family farms carved up because of the death tax. The other side would have us believe that this is a debate about the so-called "estates" of rich people. It's not.

Death tax relief is a question of saving the family farm; maintaining the family business; and allowing people the fundamental freedom to dispose of their own property and their own savings as they see fit. The death tax imposes a double tax, because it confiscates property and savings built up from income left over after it's already been taxed one, two, or three times before.

But we know where the other side and the Administration are coming from. In fact, this Administration's former Secretary of Labor, in one of his books, called it a "loophole" for the tax code to actually to pass along some of their savings and possessions to their children.

I support the relief from the death tax in this bill and wish we could do more. That's why I've supported the Kyl amendment.

This tax relief bill is good for children. It would allow more parents to afford child care, both because it increases and expands the child care tax credit, also called the Dependent Care Credit, and because it allows more modest- and middle-income families to make full use of the child tax credit we enacted in the 1997 Tax Relief Act. It would also expand the tax exclusion for interest on education.

This bill will help make education more affordable and available to individuals and families. It includes tax-free, qualified tuition plans; extends the employer-provided tuition assistance, and makes our 1997 education tax credits more fully available to modest- and middle-income families, by taking it out of the Alternative Minimum Tax calculations.

We should be doing even more to help families meet their educational needs and opportunities. This is why I've supported the Coverdell-Torricelli amendment to expand and improve Educational Savings Accounts.

The Coverdell-Torricelli amendment would give parents greater choice in how best to educate their children. TheCoverdell-Torricelli amendment would give parents greater choice in how best to educate their children. The other side is parental choice. Who knows best—parents or a distant government bureau in Washington, DC? In recent years, the focus has been entirely too much on growing the government and inventing federal programs. But much of that national government is far removed from the year-to-year day-to-day decisions that parents must make, and work on with teachers, and school boards, about their children's education.

This amendment would shift power and resources back to the local level: Mom and Dad. The Coverdell-Torricelli amendment would allow more flexibility—and the use of more of their own money—as they face decisions about paying for things like tutoring, home computers, private or religious school, higher education, and vocational education. The amendment focuses especially on those who find it hard to pay for educational expenses now. In talking about public schools, supplies and activity fees are a burden on parents today. The Coverdell amendment would help families deal with those costs.

Mr. President, a few months ago, we passed the Ed-Flex bill. This law gives the state educational agency and the local educational agency the flexibility in how they spend federal dollars. Now, Mr. President, it is time to give parents similar flexibility in how they help provide for their children's education.

I hope we can do more to help families with their children's educational needs when this bill goes to conference. I hope we can include provisions that come much closer to the Coverdell-Torricelli amendment.

Besides helping families with the care and education of their children early in life, this bill also will help provide care in the twilight of life, through an additional deduction for providing in-home care for an elderly family member.

This bill takes a significant step forward in making health care coverage more affordable and available for millions of Americans. Small businesses and farm families, especially, will be helped by the accelerated, full deductibility of health care premiums, as will other workers not covered by an employer-provided plan. More Americans would be able to plan for long-term care, a critical area of growing need, because of an above-the-line deduction for individuals and inclusion in cafeteria plans at work.
America’s farm families are in a period of economic crisis today. That crisis should be, and will be, addressed in a major package a number of us are working on. But additional, much-needed help is provided in this bill, as well.

Besides self-employed health insurance and death tax relief, this bill would provide for increased expensing, starting next year, to $30,000; create the new FARRM Accounts—Farm and Ranch Risk Management Accounts—that Senators Grassley, Burns, I, and others have been working on; protect income averaging from the Alternative Minimum Tax; increase credits for reforestation; and allow farmer co-ops more dividend flexibility.

Like farmers, small business, the over-taxed engines of job-creation, innovative opportunity in our economy, will finally receive some relief from many of these same provisions. The Senate bill makes tremendous strides in retirement security. Today’s baby boomers, the first generation to have spent their entire lives in the most heavily-taxed generation, are becoming increasingly anxious about their prospects for retirement security. Why is no mystery: Since the baby boomers were children, they have seen the average family’s tax burden, at all levels, increase by more than 50 percent, as a share of income. When the government takes 50 percent more from you than it did from your parents, how do you save and invest for your own retirement?

All taxpayers, of all incomes and all ages, stand to benefit from expanding the use of Individual Retirement Accounts. In the past, IRAs were a simple, universally-understood, readily-accessible way to save for retirement. One of the worst things in the 1986 tax bill was the confusing limitations placed on IRAs that, in fact, have discouraged many modest- and middle-income workers from using them. Farmers and small business owners and their employees, especially, have an important stake in more accessible IRAs, because they have no other large, employer-provided pension plan to participate in.

Mr. President, the tax relief bills moving through Congress will help real people. The real debate is over two competing visions of how the government can help people. Those of us who support tax relief say, we help people when we give them back the power and freedom to control their own destinies. The other side says, they think it would help people if the government made decisions for them, and dispensed dependency through an expensive bureaucracy.

You can confiscate more and more money from workers, savers, and families. That, in fact, has been and is the trend. Then the government can spend that money, grow the bureaucracy, write more rules, make citizens feel more like supplicants, and, in the end, hand someone another small government check. Or we can let workers, savers, entrepreneurs, and families keep a little more of their fruits of their own labors, and let them apply that directly to taking care of their parents, their health care needs, and their education.

We can, as this bill does by extending the Work Opportunity Tax Credit, tell employers they can keep a little more of what they earn, if they also provide jobs for disadvantaged, hard-to-place workers.

Today, 70 percent of taxpayers receive no recognition of charitable giving—because they don’t itemize their deductions. We can, in this bill, reward and encourage those middle-class taxpayers who benefit their community, help the less fortunate, and promote the social good, by letting them keep a little more of their hard-earned income, with an above-the line deduction for charitable donations.

We are talking about a modest and reasonable package of tax relief. Both Houses are calling for a tax cut of only 5.5 percent over the next 10 years, or less than one-fourth of the total amount taxpayers have been overcharged by their government. We are proposing a modest amount of tax relief that leaves plenty of room to safeguard Social Security completely. In fact, with the budget we passed earlier this year, for the first time in history, Congress has committed itself to reserving all of the Social Security surplus, and all future Social Security revenues, exclusively for future Social Security benefits.

Our tax relief is based upon huge over-collections of taxes from American workers and taxpayers. In other words, it’s projections of budget surpluses—surpluses projected both by the bipartisan Medicare Commission, the Government Budget Office and the President’s own Office of Management and Budget. It is interesting that the same critics who criticize the idea of basing tax relief on projections then make up their own, speculative projections about the cuts in future spending programs they claim would result from this tax relief.

In point of fact, we all agree that Medicare, Veterans programs, education, and other priorities must be maintained and improved in the future. The budget we passed earlier this year provides for that, and this tax relief package does nothing on them. I remember how, just a few years ago, some in Congress, the White House, and special interest groups made dire predictions of how spending on all kinds of essential programs would have to be slashed to balance the budget.

Since then, a new Congress came to town in 1995, committed to balancing the budget and reining in the growth of government. We’ve still had increases in spending, but they have been more moderate. We do have some high priority programs to re-evaluate. Some increases are needed. In other places, we need more restraint, and even some cuts.

But a balanced budget and a significant surplus have expanded—along with an economy that is strong because the people who work, save, invest, and create jobs took us seriously when we said we would balance the budget and limit the growth of spending.

Now, Congress has taken the first critical steps needed to save and preserve Social Security for the current generation of seniors and those who expect to retire soon. We all agree the next step is to modernize it for future generations. Our budget, and this tax relief, is perfectly consistent with that commitment.

Most of us agree with the majority of the bipartisan Medicare Commission that we need to shore up that program as well, too. That will involve expanding or improving some of what Medicare provides, as well as expanding consumer choice, increasing market discipline, curbing waste and abuse, and finding savings. Unfortunately, the necessary super-majority of the commission didn’t allow it to turn its majority views into what it could call its “official” recommendations. But we in Congress stand ready to work with the President on the responsible reforms suggested by that commission and others.

And this Congress remains committed to reducing the national debt. Under our budget, and including this tax bill, we will cut the public debt in half over the next ten years, and reduce the debt by more than $200 billion over what the President’s budget recommendations called for.

Still, Mr. President, even as we tackle all these challenges, we do have the capability of refunding to the hard-working American taxpayers a little of what they have been overcharged. That’s what this legislation, and this debate, are all about today.

The choice is simple: More government and more spending versus letting the people keep a little more of their hard-earned incomes and a little more control over their own lives.

Mr. President, I voted for this tax relief bill because I am casting a vote of confidence for the wisdom of the people, and a vote to help by removing some of the heavy tax burden they are bearing.

COMMUNITY RENEWAL AND CHARITY EMPOWERMENT AMENDMENT

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I rise to discuss one of my amendments, No. 1476, offered with Senator Abraham and Senator DeWine, to establish renewal communities and encourage...
Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I join the Senator from Pennsylvania. My staff has been reviewing this proposal and we will continue working with him toward a favorable outcome.

Mr. SANTORUM. I thank the Senator. I appreciate his continued assistance.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I also rise in strong support of this legislation creating Renewal Communities. These distressed communities will be able to benefit from lower taxes, regulatory relief, and brownfield cleanup while committing to lowering barriers to economic opportunity. The President of the United States has voiced his support for helping these communities. The House of Representatives has already passed this legislation. Moreover, our amendment also provides the option to leverage federal dollars to transform lives and reignite the spirit of the American community to meet compelling human needs; to maintain our leadership in science and technology; and to stay the course on research and development.

Mr. ROTH. I thank the Senator from Missouri and appreciate the commitment of the Senators who have spoken to these important issues.

Mr. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise today to oppose what the Republicans are calling a tax cut. This so-called tax cut is a gimmick to get attention, to get votes, but not to get America what it needs.

The Republicans are trying to pander to every interest group in America and give them a tax break. And who doesn’t want a tax break?

I oppose these tax cuts for three reasons. First, these tax cuts are premature. They are based on a projected surplus of funds that we do not have. We all know that this surplus exists on paper only. It is no more than a promissory note and we don’t know if that note can or will be redeemed.

Second, these tax cuts are irresponsible. With no surplus, we are spending money before we have it. We are on a collision course between monetary and fiscal responsibilities. Should we combine our monetary and fiscal responsibilities to get the country in the right direction towards growth in the future?

Third, these tax cuts are callous. We are giving money away that we don’t have—when we’re not even met the compelling needs of our country: We’ve not fixed the draconian Medicare cuts stemming from the Balanced Budget Act of 1997. We’ve not ensured the long-term solvency of Social Security and Medicare. We’ve not addressed the spending caps—which are forcing cruel cuts in critical services for veterans health, and children’s education, and which are crippling scientific research.

The Medicare Act and the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 have already caused 34 Home Health agencies in my state to close—only two public Home Health Agencies remain in Maryland. Maryland is also facing a managed care crisis. Because of Balanced Budget Act of 1997, 18,000 people in Maryland will lose access to supplemental benefits such as prescription drug coverage and preventive health benefits.

Republicans may say that a tax cut will allow these senior citizens to use the money from a tax cut to buy supplemental coverage, such as Medi-Gap and that they are returning “choice” and “freedom” to the American people. But we cannot make a forty-percent of Medicare beneficiaries who do not even submit tax returns because their incomes are so low. Those people will not see a dime of the tax cut. They will still not have any way to afford prescription drugs like heart medication or insulin for diabetics, because their HMO left town.

Spending caps will threaten our ability to meet compelling human needs; charitable giving to those organizations which make a lastiing difference in the lives of people.

The amendment creates 100 renewal communities where businesses will have the incentive to stay and locate to provide economic opportunity for some of the most disadvantaged communities in America. The amendment also allows states to utilize federal block grant funds, if they choose to, in order to offset any revenue loss associated with offering a targeted state charity tax credit for individual donations to charities working predominately to alleviate poverty.

Mr. President, I will continue to work with the chairman of the Finance Committee in order to see that these critical provisions for expanding opportunity and transforming lives are included in the conference report. The Renewal Community provisions were included in the House of Representatives tax relief package and I look forward to working with the chairman to see that these provisions are included which unleash the power of the private sector and American charitable and faith-based resources to renew our commodities.

Mr. ROTH. I appreciate the comments of the Senator from Pennsylvania. My staff has been reviewing this proposal and we will continue working with him toward a favorable outcome.

Mr. SANTORUM. I thank the Senator. I appreciate his continued assistance.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I also rise in strong support of this legislation creating Renewal Communities. These distressed communities will be able to benefit from lower taxes, regulatory relief, and brownfield cleanup while committing to lowering barriers to economic opportunity. The President of the United States has voiced his support for helping these communities. The House of Representatives has already passed this legislation. Moreover, our amendment also provides the option to leverage federal dollars to transform lives and reignite the spirit of the American community to meet compelling human needs; to maintain our leadership in science and technology; and to stay the course on research and development.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, in the Small Business Job Protection Act of 1986, I had the good fortune of working with my esteemed colleague, the senior senator from Nevada, on an amendment restoring the exclusion for the receipt of contributions in aid of construction (CIAC) for water and sewage disposal property repealed by the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

I rise today to voice my concern about the possible direction of the Department of the Treasury’s regulations interpreting the definition of CIAC under Internal Revenue Code section 118(h). Specifically, I am troubled by an effort to narrow the definition to exclude service laterals.

The Senator from Nevada and I, along with many of our colleagues here in the Chamber worked hard over the course of a number of years to restore the pre-1986 Act exclusion for the receipt of CIACs for water and sewage. As part of our efforts, we developed a revenue raiser in cooperation with the industry to make up any revenue loss due to our legislation. This revenue raiser extended the life, and changed the method, for depreciating water utility property from 20 year accelerated to 25 year straight line depreciation. As a consequence of this cooperation with the industry, the CIAC change made a net $274 million contribution toward deficit reduction.

In addition to these efforts, we made a number of changes to the pre-1986 language. The most important of these was a change to clarify that service laterals should be included in the definition of CIAC.

These lines typically run from a larger water distribution line to the property line of one or more customers. The utility is responsible for all maintenance and "liability" associated with service laterals. Additionally, state public utility commissions treat contributions for service laterals (or any other capital component of the water supply system) as a CIAC and, therefore, do not allow a utility company to include them in its rate base.

It is important to distinguish that service laterals are not fees charged to customers for the right to start and stop service. Such fees would be treated as taxable income. However, as elements of utility plant, the service laterals should be treated as CIAC.

Additionally, it is my sense that the final revenue estimate done by the Joint Committee on Taxation on the restoration of CIAC included service laterals. In an October 11, 1995 letter to me the Joint Committee on Taxation provided revenue estimates for the CIAC legislation. A footnote in this letter states, "These estimates have been revisited to reflect more recent data." The industry had only recently supplied the committee with comprehensive data, which reflected total CIAC in the industry including service laterals. It is my sense that the Department of the Treasury drafts the regulations on this important matter clearly reflecting the intent of Congress to include service laterals in the definition of CIAC.

Mr. REID. Mr. President. I, too, stand to express my concern over the possible direction of the Treasury regulations. The Senator from Iowa and I worked long and hard to fix this problem in 1995. We worked with the various staffs here in Congress and at the Department of the Treasury to ensure that all contributions in aid of construction as regulated by the various state utility commissions were included under our legislation. We worked with the industry to develop a revenue raiser paid for by companies receiving relief in our legislation. I urge the Department to stick closely with the congressional intent of our amendment and look forward to working with my colleague to ensure that we reach the correct result on this issue.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the Roth tax bill and to express disappointment that Senator MOYNIHAN's alternative did not pass the Senate. The Moynihan amendment would have provided real tax relief to those Americans who need it most, maintained the balanced budget that we fought so hard to achieve, and strengthened the Social Security and Medicare programs for generations to come.

Senator MOYNIHAN's amendment would have reduced the unprecedented $800 billion, six-year tax cut to more reasonable $256 billion. The Moynihan proposal pays a fair dividend, fairly distributed, to the working families that have fueled the current economic recovery. The Roth proposal breaks the bank with tax breaks for those who don't need them, and benefits cuts to those who have already suffered them.

The Moynihan proposal takes a conservative, cautious estimate of the American economic pie and divides it evenly. The Roth proposal uses "pie in the sky" surplus estimates to justify huge tax breaks for a very small segment of society.

The proponents of $800 billion worth of tax relief would have us believe that a $1 trillion surplus is as reliable and irrevocable as the sun coming up in the morning. But as my colleagues know, this projection is based on the most optimistic and unrealistic assumptions—assumptions about the precise direction of the economy, which is notoriously hard to predict, and assumptions about the willingness of Congress to make large and drastic spending cuts, which is notoriously nonexistent.

Over the next 5 years, the smallest changes in the economy could lead the $1 trillion surplus estimate to be off by as much as $800 billion.

And, who among us believes that Congress and the President have the ability, or the desire, to cut programs like education, agriculture, and biomedical research by the approximately 50% required? In fact, already this year we have increased spending by $35 billion with more added every day. Furthermore, members of Congress from both sides of the aisle admit there is no way we will pass an annual appropriations bill without yet another, end-of-the-year cash infusion.

The surplus is not a sure thing, and basing an $800 billion tax cut on it is a long-shot gamble. It was wrong, during the decades of deficit spending, to take money from future generations and spend it on ourselves. It is equally wrong today to bet the money of future generations on shaky economic projections and the surreal expectation that Congress will suddenly—for the first time—decide to make tough cuts in government spending.

None of this is to suggest that our budget is as bad as it was ten years ago—it is just not as good as the Roth proposal assumes. Our nation is currently enjoying record unemployment, falling welfare rolls, and increased prosperity for more Americans than at any time in history. We can and should use this opportunity to fix oversights and inequities in our tax code. Working Americans have done their part to support the economy, and they deserve to share in it—they deserve a tax code that helps them send their children to college, that eases the burden of paying for long-term care, that encourages marriage, saving and high quality child care. Simply put, in times of economic prosperity, the government has an obligation—to expand the pool of winners in our economy.

And there are definitely some provisos in the Roth proposal that do just that. Both Senator Roth's bill and the Moynihan amendment contain a version of my Child Care Tax Credit to encourage employers to get involved in increasing the supply of quality child care. Both bills also contain my Farmer Tax Fairness Act to allow farmers to realize the benefits of income averaging. And both bills provide for education tax relief, marriage penalty relief, full health insurance deduction for the self-employed, tax relief to cover the costs of long-term care, and the extension of tax credits that are vital to our economic health.

But despite any common elements, on almost every point, the Moynihan alternative not only does a better job of maintaining the overall concept of tax relief, it also focuses that relief on those taxpayers most in need of help. It is a conservative package that leaves plenty of room to preserve Social Security and Medicare, preserve the fiscal balance we have worked so hard to achieve, and pay down the national debt.

Mr. President, for all these reasons, I hope, when we finally get serious about writing a tax bill later this year, we will seriously consider the Moynihan alternative. It is balanced, responsible and fiscally prudent. It will help us expand opportunities and make life better and easier for more Americans and their families. And we should reject the Roth proposal. It turns the clock back to the failed budget policies of the past, while providing too much benefit for too few Americans at too great a cost.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, the question now being considered by the Senate is whether we should refund a portion of the federal government surplus to American families.

Over the next ten years, the federal government will collect $996 billion more in income and other taxes than is necessary to pay fully for every existing federal program, agency and department. This means that the IRS will be taking almost $1 trillion more in taxes from the American people's paychecks than it needs to operate the government. This is a tax surplus—a tax overpayment.

This tax rate debate, serious as it is, concerns only the non-Social Security surplus. Both sides agree that the Social Security surplus itself is to be reserved for Social Security recipients only, and not be diverted to any other purpose.

There is, however, an important distinction between the two parties even on Social Security. Republicans, myself included, believe that we should pass a “lockbox” law, giving the strongest possible statutory protection to that non-Social Security surplus. Democrats have consistently filibustered our proposal, asking Americans simply to trust them not to raid the Social Securitiy surplus in the future as they have in the past. That is not enough.

The difference between the parties on taxes is even more striking. Republicans believe that the lion’s share of the non-Social Security surplus ought to be returned to the American taxpayer whose taxes created that surplus; Democrats want to spend that surplus on new and expanded government programs.

I am convinced that this tax overpay-ment should be refunded to the American people who worked for and earned it. It is their money and it should be returned, as they deem best for their families and their futures. The alternative to refunding the tax surplus to taxpayers is to leave the money in Washington, D.C, where it will be spent to create $1 trillion in new government programs.

The President and his supporters in Congress are making outrageous claims that giving a refund to taxpayers is risky or even dangerous. They say that somehow returning a portion of the government surplus to American families will somehow end-danger the very livelihoods of women and children. On that point, I would ask every American citizen to challenge the President and his Democratic allies to back up with facts their politically-charged claims.

This latest shameful charade by the President is absolutely outrageous. The inference propounded by President Clinton is that those of us in this Chamber who favor a tax refund law are out to harm women and children, and that those who oppose such a refund care more about women and children than we do. That’s an absolute outrage, and I’m truly sorry to see that the President of the United States will stoop to such low levels in order to keep this money here in Washington, D.C. so that he can spend it on new government programs.

I will resist the temptation to join the President in his game of scare tactics, but I will take this opportunity to chal-

The surplus is generated from personal income and other taxes, it belongs to the American people. It’s not the government’s money—it’s your money . . . you sent it here. Shouldn’t you get some of it back?

While I strongly support refunding the tax surplus to the taxpaying families and hardworking individuals all across this country, it is my sincere hope that Congress will ultimately pass a bill that reduces the tax burden on those who work hard while it is moving towards simplification of the federal tax code.

Fundamental reform of the tax code is my number one tax priority. I am a strong, committed advocate for the elimination of our current federal tax system. It is too complicated, too burdensome, too unfair. The current system should be scrapped and replaced with one that is much simpler and easier to understand. We need to focus our energy and attention in Congress on developing an alternative. I will support a replacement code that is based on four principles: the new code must be fair, simple, uniform and consistent.

A vast majority of the American peoples and those in Congress support reforming our tax code. I hope that when Congress takes action to ease the cost burden of the federal tax code, the opportunity to simplify or reduce the complexity of the tax code will be seized. I do not pretend to believe there is consensus on how to reform the code completely at this time, but at the very least Congress should pass a tax bill that does not make the code even worse or a bewildering mess than it is today.

Unluckily, the bill reported out of the Finance Committee does not achieve the goals of either simplifying the code, or even to do no further harm. The bill contains 15 titles, 19 subtitles and 163 various sections to total over 400 pages in length. It takes a report of an additional almost 300 pages to explain what the bill even does. Yes, the bill does refund nearly $500 billion in unneeded tax dollars back to the American people, but at what price? Adding more pages to the tax code? Making the code more complicated? Further confusing taxpayers as they struggle to fill out their tax returns?

What is most unfortunate is that a tax relief bill need not be so complex. It is certainly possible to refund the tax surplus simply and directly. An alternative was proposed during committee consideration by Senator Gramm that accomplished the goal of simple tax relief by including just four elements: broad-based income tax rate relief, repeal of death taxes, elimination of the marriage penalty, and full deductibility for health insurance for all Americans. I voted for that alternative in the Senate.

While I may not fully endorse every aspect of this specific proposal, I strongly and enthusiastically support its intent to refund the taxpayers’ money in a manner that simplifies and corrects injustices in the current tax code. We should get rid of death taxes, stop penalizing married couples through the tax code, allow self-employed and individual Americans to fully deduct their health insurance costs as corporations do, and we should permanently extend the R&D tax credit so that our increasingly technology driven economy can continue to grow and create jobs.

I cannot, though, happily endorse a tax relief package that moves toward such reform only to get lost in a 443-page swamp of countless new provisions and rules. The citizens of Washington state and the taxpayers of this nation deserve to have a significant portion of the tax surplus returned to them, and they deserve it in a manner that doesn’t make filling out their IRS return by April 15th even more of an exasperating experience.

For now, I will continue to push for a de-debate that reform our tax code. In the meantime, I am committed to pushing onward with the principles that guide this debate: Should a portion of the government surplus be refunded to American families, or should the rest of the non-Social Security and Medicare surplus be left in Washington, D.C. for increased spending on government programs.

On that question, the answer is easy . . . give American families a tax refund. That requires a yes vote, though with serious reservations.

CAPITAL GAINS EXCLUSION

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I rise to enter into a colloquy with the chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator ROTH, about a tax issue that is important to farm families across the country.

The Senate is on record in this year’s budget resolution as supporting legislation to end the disparity between family farmers and their urban and suburban counterparts with respect to the $500,000 capital gains inclusion for homes sales that Congress passed in 1997 by expanding it to cover capital gains from the sale of farmland along with the farmhouse. Under current law, farmers receive little or no benefit from the existing capital gains exclusion for homes and farms. Farmers in the U.S. town often hold little or no value.

It is my understanding that the chairman is supportive of the effort to end this tax inequity and will work to include this family farmers capital gains fairness proposal in conference should the final tax bill include other capital gains tax relief.

Mr. ROTH. I understand the Senator's concerns. In the context of capital gains, I believe the needs of farmers should be considered as we develop future legislation. In the conference, we will certainly be discussing capital gains. And we will consider the special needs of farmers in this area.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President. Today I have strong support for S. 1429, the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999. This is a sound bill based on real need and I believe the American taxpayers deserve and want this legislation.

The Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999 goes a long way toward taxpayers of an unfair tax burden. This bill provides: broad-based tax relief; family tax relief by addressing the Marriage Penalty Tax; retirement savings and education incentives; health care tax reductions; small business tax relief; international tax reform, and death and gift tax relief, among other provisions.

I am particularly interested in the estate tax relief because earlier this year I introduced the Estate and Gift Tax Rate Reduction Act of 1999, (S. 38). Estate and gift taxes remain a burden on American families, particularly those who pursue the American dream of owning their own business. This is because family-owned businesses and farms generally pay the highest tax rate when they are handed down to descendants—often immediately following the death of a loved one. These taxes, and the financial burdens and difficulties they create come at the worst possible time. Making a terrible situation worse is the fact that the rate of this estate tax is crushing, reaching as high as 55 percent for the highest bracket. That’s higher than even the highest income tax rate bracket of 39 percent.

Furthermore, the tax is due as soon as the business or estate owner passes away. Many times, the business will actually be sold to pay the tax bills. Estate and gift taxes right now are one of the leading reasons why the number of family-owned farms and businesses are declining; the burden of this tax is just too much.

This tax sends the troubling message that families should either sell the business while they are still alive, in order to spare their descendents this huge tax after their passing, or run down the value of the business, so that it won’t make it into their higher tax brackets. Whichever the case may be, it hardly seems to encourage private investment and initiative, which have always been such a strong part of our American economy.

I am pleased that the bill before us takes the important step to address this unfair burden. I will continue to work with my colleagues for the complete elimination of the death tax.

I want to say, however, that the argument that this tax cut will threaten Social Security, that’s just not true. In fact, this bill saves every penny of the money set aside for Social Security. Social Security is safe and secure with this bill. This bill also saves $277 billion to finance Medicare, emergencies or other priorities, so this bill does not threaten Medicare or Medicare beneficiaries. In contrast, the administration’s budget would increase spending by $1 trillion and increase the deficit by $3 trillion over the next 10 years according to the Congressional Budget Office. How can this administration believe that they can increase spending and taxes even though they already admitted raising taxes too much? I think since we now have a balanced budget, then the American people deserve this tax cut.

The American people have earned this tax cut, this is their money and I think we should give it back to them.

I know that $792 billion is a lot of money, but we have a $3 trillion surplus and one reason we have a $3 trillion surplus is the taxpayers got their taxes raised too much. I realize that we could just go ahead and spend that extra money like the administration wants to do, but I think that would be irresponsible. I think if the American people overpaid, then the American people should get their money back—that’s just fair.

The Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999 is the largest middle-class tax relief since the Reagan administration and I think it’s high time the hard-working taxpayer get this refund.

I ask unanimous consent to have pertinent information printed in the Record:

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Dear Senator Campbell: This is in response to your request dated February 24, 1999, for a revenue estimate of your bill, S. 38, "The Estate and Gift Tax Rate Reduction Act." Briefly, this bill would reduce the statutory estate and gift tax rates contained in section 2010 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (the "Code") each year by subtracting 0.15 percent in each rate bracket contained therein. In addition, your bill would also reduce the credit for State death taxes contained in section 2201 of the Code from a maximum of 1.5 percent from each rate in each rate bracket contained therein. As the result of these reductions in the statutory estate and gift tax rates, Subtitle D of the Code pertaining to estate, gift, and generation-skipping transfer taxes will effectively be repealed for decedents dying and gifts made after December 31, 2009.

Assuming that your bill would take effect for decedents dying and gifts made after December 31, 2009, we estimate that this proposal would decrease Federal fiscal year budget receipts as follows:

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Fiscal years</th>
<th>Total</th>

</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>2000</td>
<td>-197.8</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

I hope this information is helpful to you. Please let me know if we can be of further assistance in this matter.

Sincerely,

LINDY L. PAUL.

Dear Colleague: As we prepare to convene the 106th Congress, I am writing to seek your co-sponsorship of legislation that would eliminate the burden of the death taxes. On July 16, 1998, I introduced S. 2318, a bill that took a fresh and prudent approach to reducing the burden of estate and gift taxes. This important bill, which I plan on re-introducing as soon as we reconvene, would close the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to phase out gift and estate taxes completely over a ten year period. A copy of S. 2318 is enclosed for your convenience.

Just this month, the Joint Economic Committee released its study entitled, "The Economics of the Estate Tax." This thorough analysis concluded that "the estate tax gen- erates less revenue to taxpay- ers and the environment that far exceed any poten- tial benefits that it might arguably produce." The study shows persuasively that this unfair and byzantine tax detracts from economic growth and squelches entrepreneurial initiative. Of special importance to me, the study also demonstrates how this tax undermines family-owned businesses and farms—a segment of our economy responsible for about ⅔ of new job creation since the early 1970s. Clearly, the time for eliminating the estate tax has arrived.

My bill would gradually eliminate this tax completely, by reducing the tax five percent each year, until the highest rate reaches zero. Although the $23 billion received from this tax last year represents only a tiny percentage of overall IRS receipts, eliminating it requires a gradual approach. A gradual re- duction over ten years is wise as we struggle to maintain our commitment to balance the budget and prune the federal government. A gradual approach minimizes possible disloca- tions.

Several states have already taken a sim- ilar initiative and phased out their state taxes on their own. I think it’s time we followed their example and eliminate this federal tax. My bill last year was endorsed by the American Farm Bureau, the Family Business Estate Tax Coalition, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, and other interested groups.

Should you wish to be an original cospon- sor of this bill when I reintroduce it, or if
Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise, while we are debating the budget reconciliation bill, to talk about an important family issue that I raised during debate on the emergency supplemental bill in March. I want to voice my strong opposition to efforts by Members in the other body to use $6 billion in unobligated Temporary Assistance for Needy Families, or TANF, money, and unobligated Medicaid or Children’s Health Insurance Plan funds. I learned of this proposal after reading the July 28, 1999, New York Times, in which appeared a story entitled, “Leaders in House Covet States’ Unspent Welfare Money.” Why do they want to do this? To help fund the $792 billion tax cut proposal that the other body passed last week—a proposal that would mostly help the wealthy in this country. Such an action would be a repudiation of our promise to help families living in poverty. It is a classic situation of reverse Robin Hood: robbing the poor to give more to the rich.

Mr. President, during debate on the welfare reform bill in 1996, states agreed to trade entitlement status under the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program for the assurance of a fixed, annual amount in the form of a block grant. Those of us who opposed the welfare bill for this and other reasons warned that it would be harder under a block grant to keep welfare funds from being cut. Now, certain members are turning our fears into reality. The cuts in this former entitlement program have begun. Cutting funds in this manner, Mr. President, would represent a betrayal of our promise to help America’s poor families.

Again, as I explained in March, the term, “unobligated,” may seem self-explanatory—that these are simply funds that have not been spent under TANF, Medicaid, or CHIP. Under TANF, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, a combined total of $4.2 billion from fiscal years 1997, 1998 and 1999 is available. Some would point out that many poor families have worked their way to self-sufficiency and that welfare rolls have fallen by record numbers, as reasons why this money is not needed by states and remains unobligated.

However, many states are relying heavily on these unobligated funds and have already committed them for a wide variety of uses. States need to distribute some of this funding to counties, local agencies, or to child care and social services activities. Governors are keeping “rainy day” funds for contingencies such as recessions or periods of stagnant growth—as we have seen in recent years. Some states have forced families back onto welfare and leave states without enough money until the next quarterly federal payment. States are also planning to use this money for fundamental or new, innovative expenses to help poor families become financially independent.

In July 23, the National Governors Association wrote to Congressman John Porter and David Obey of the House Appropriations Committee, to plead their case. This letter is signed by Governors Thomas R. Carper of Delaware and Michael O. Leavitt of Utah, one Democrat and one Republican. The letter states, “Cutting funding for vital health and human services programs such as Medicaid, CHIP, TANF, and child support would adversely affect millions of Americans—with the greatest impact on children and the elderly in the greatest need. We reiterate our adamant and uniform opposition to these unprecedented cuts and to any proposal that would result in less health and human services benefits for our most vulnerable citizens.”

I concur with the Governors’ sentiments about these valuable programs.

Mr. President, I do this especially because the monies in question were originally designated to help our poorest children and their families. Instead, they would, over the next 10 years, go toward such things as estate tax relief and capital gains tax relief—tax benefits for the wealthiest taxpayers in the Nation.

Tax relief can be a good thing. However, it should not be the top priority when we face the urgent need to pay down our country’s debt and save Social Security and Medicare. I hope my colleagues agree with me on an issue that is important to many poor Americans. I hope funding is not taken out of TANF, Medicaid, or CHIP, as a solution to low budget caps.

INDEPENDENT BAKERY DRIVERS

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I have been working for several years to clarify a provision of the tax code which treats certain truck drivers as “statutory employees,” meaning they are independent contractors except for payroll tax purposes.

Prior to 1991, these individuals could pay their own payroll taxes if they had a substantial investment in a distribution route. However, a 1991 IRS ruling said that an investment in a distribution route no longer qualified as an investment in “facilities.” This reversal by the IRS has created much uncertainty, particularly in the bakery industry.

I have prepared an amendment to clarify that an investment in facilities can include a substantial investment in a distribution route, area, or territory. Thus, an independent-contractor truck driver who has a substantial investment in a distribution route or territory will not be treated as a statutory employee for FICA and FUTA tax purposes.

Unfortunately, I am prevented from offering my amendment to this tax reconciliation bill because it affects the Social Security program. Under Section 310(g) of the Budget Act, the adoption of my amendment would cause the entire bill to be subject to a 60-vote point of order.

Therefore, I will not offer my amendment to this bill. However, I ask my colleagues from Delaware, Senator Roth, if he would work with me to consider this amendment on the next non-reconciliation tax measure considered by the Senate Finance Committee.

Mr. ROTH. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma for his comments on this issue. The budget reconciliation procedures do prevent the consideration of some amendments such as the one described by the Senator from Oklahoma. I look forward to working with the Senator from Oklahoma on this important issue on the next non-reconciliation tax bill.

TAX RULES FOR CONSOLIDATION OF LIFE INSURANCE COMPENSATION

Mr. COVERDELL. Mr. President, let me ask the Chairman. As I understand it, the tax rules regarding the taxation of life insurance compensation changed substantially over the past years. As a vestige of these old tax rules, however, there are certain limitations on when life insurance companies can file consolidated tax returns with non-life companies.

Mr. ROTH. Yes, I agree.

Mr. SHELBY. I also want to note that in the Senator's tax bill and in the House tax bill, some of these restrictions on life insurance consolidation have been addressed.

Mr. ROTH. Yes, that is true.

Mr. SHELBY. I ask that the Chairman keep in mind the further rationalization of these restrictions as this bill heads into conference and in future action in the Committee.

Mr. ROTH. I will keep in mind the concerns of both Senators in this important issue.

BRINGING COMPUTERS TO THE CLASSROOM

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, as a cosponsor of the New Millennium Classrooms Act, introduced by Senators ABRAHAM and WYDEN, I am very pleased the Senate adopted this provision to encourage computer donations to schools. While I oppose the underlying bill, and believe the magnitude of the Republican tax cut is irresponsible, I do support a more reasonable level of tax relief with provisions targeted to address national needs. This provision, which has strong bipartisan support, meets that test. I would also like to point out that Senator BAUCUS sponsored a similar provision that was part of the Democratic alternative considered earlier.

Technology is playing an increasingly important role in our society, in homes, in businesses, and in many aspects of everyday life. Employers will require increasingly sophisticated levels of technological literacy in the workplace of the 21st Century. Education Secretary Riley has pointed out that we can expect 70 percent growth in computer-related technology-related jobs in the next 6 years.

Yet, a recent U.S. Department of Commerce report, “Falling Through the Net: Defining the Digital Divide,” finds there is a growing disparity in terms of who has access to technology. While more Americans are embracing technology, African Americans and Hispanics, particularly from lower-income families and from rural areas, have less access to computers, and that gap is growing. We find ourselves with a new, information-age definition of “haves” and “have-nots.” These conditions are not good either for those left behind, or for those who will be looking to hire employees in the future.

Every child should be able to gain technological skills through his or her classroom. Yet many schools are having difficulty meeting this challenge. Sadly, while some schools have access to the latest in equipment, too many schools, particularly in fiscally strapped urban and rural areas, have an insufficient number of computers, and most of those are outdated. The average computer in the classroom is 7 years old—and many are even older. A large proportion of these computers cannot run current educational software or connect to the Internet.

The Department of Education recommends that the optimal ratio of students per computer is five to one. Yet schools where 81 percent or more of the children meet the Title 1 eligibility standards have only one multimedia computer for every 32 students. Even schools where less than 20 percent of the students are economically disadvantaged have only one multimedia computer for every 22 students.

At the same time, research shows that students with the least access to technology can be helped most from effectively integrating technology into the classroom. A study by City University of New York found test scores of disadvantaged children increased dramatically with computer-aided instruction.

We have taken several steps at the federal level to increase schools' ability to integrate technology into the classroom. The creation of the E-rate program, for example, is helping schools obtain access to the Internet. Technology Challenge grants are providing resources to schools to upgrade their computer programs. We are also providing more resources to help train teachers on the best ways to use technology effectively in their classes. But many schools have a fundamental problem in obtaining suitable hardware.

Current law provides an enhanced deduction for computer donations to schools until December 31, 2000. Unfortunately, few corporations are taking advantage of the enhanced deduction for two main reasons: the requirement that donated equipment be 2 years old or less does not fit companies' equipment use cycles, and the deduction is tax reform limited. Modifying the tax code to address these limitations, as the Abraham-Wyden amendment proposes, will help us achieve the goal of putting a computer in every classroom and create ongoing incentives to make sure the technology is kept reasonably up-to-date.

The Rand Institute has estimated the cost of providing our schools with appropriate technology to be about $15 billion. The New Millennium Classrooms Act will help stretch federal funds efficiently and effectively to address this shortfall.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I am pleased that last night the Senate adopted the Abraham-Wyden New Millennium Classrooms Act as an amendment to the reconciliation tax bill. Senator ABRAHAM and I have worked on many technology issues together as members of the Senate Commerce Committee.

The New Millennium Classrooms Act is about digital recycling. It gives companies an incentive to recycle technology. It says the computer Bill Gates may see as a dinosaur, is really a dynamic new opportunity for seniors and students who have none.

There is a growing need to encourage access to information technology for both seniors and students. The Administration on Aging estimates there are about 11,500 senior centers throughout the United States serving millions of older Americans. The centers offer a variety of services, including employee assistance and educational programs.

Equipping senior centers with donated computer equipment could help open the door to employment opportunities. We know there is a growing demand for skilled high tech workers. Just last year, the high tech community came to Congress asking for a large increase in the number of skilled H–1B visas so they could hire foreign workers to fill the gap. Congress agreed to boost the number of H–1B visas from 65,000 to 115,000 for 1999 and 2000. Those are 50,000 jobs that could have gone to Americans. Many seniors have the drive and the desire to keep working; they simply need to gain some basic computer skills.

While it is important for all Americans to have equal access to information technology, the most pressing need is in our schools. The Department of Commerce recently published a report, “Falling Through the Net: Defining the Digital Divide.” For example, the study found that the rapid build-out of the information superhighway has by-passed many in rural and in less-advantaged urban communities. The report says factors such as race, income and area of residence help limit access to information technology. For example, the study found that households earning more than $75,000 are five times more likely to own computers than those earning less than $10,000. Households earning more than $75,000 are seven times more likely to use the Internet than those earning less than $10,000.

We know that very early in the next Century 60% of all jobs will require high-tech computer skills. To prepare our children for the jobs of the future, they not only must have access to technology, but they must be trained to use it as well. But we cannot count on children in low-income and rural communities even to have access to computers.

Schools can serve as great equalizers in this equation, giving all children access to information technology resources. However, a 1997 report by the Educational Testing Service found that on average there was only one multimedia computer for every 24 students. In economically disadvantaged communities, the situation is worse: the computer to student ratio rises to one in 32.

The purpose of our amendment is to build more bridges between the technology “haves” and the “have-nots” to build more on-ramps to the information superhighway. You can’t get 21st Century classrooms, using Flintstones technology. However, technology is not cheap and school budgets are limited, making technology for schools to upgrade their systems by themselves. The point of our amendment is to enhance existing incentives to businesses to donate computer equipment to schools.

There is a federal program in place, the 21st Century Classroom Act of 1997, but its use has been limited. It allows businesses to take a tax deduction for certain computer equipment donations to K-12 schools. But most businesses take longer to upgrade their computers than any school for schools to upgrade their systems by themselves. The New Millennium Classrooms Act would make this law work the way it was intended, and include donations to senior centers under this tax credit. First, our legislation would increase the age limit from two to three years for donated equipment eligible for a tax credit. This more realistically tracks the time line businesses follow for their computer upgrades. It will cover hardware that possesses the necessary memory capacity and graphics capability to support Internet and multimedia applications.

Second, our bill expands the current limitation of “original use” to include both original equipment manufacturers and any corporation that reacquires their equipment. We believe that by excluding donors eligible for the credit, we will expand the number of computers donated to schools and senior centers.

Third, our bill provides for a 30% tax credit of the fair market value for school and senior center computer donations, and a 50% credit for donations to schools located in empowerment zones, enterprise communities and Indian reservations. The Department of Commerce report highlights the need to encourage school computer donation in these notoriously under-served communities and we want to target donations toward these communities.

Finally, our bill requires an operating system to be included on a donated computer in order to qualify for the tax credit. This will ensure students and seniors don’t get empty computer shells, but the brains that drive the computers.

Our legislation is supported by a wide range of businesses and education groups. Leaders of technology associations, like the Information Technology Industry Council and TechNet, and the National Association of Manufacturers have joined education associations, such as the National Association of Secondary School Principals and the National Association of State University and Land Grant Colleges, in support of the amendment.

The Digital Millennium Classrooms Act promotes digital recycling. It will encourage companies to put their used computers into classrooms instead of into landfills. It will help build a safety net under students trying to cross the digital divide. I thank my colleagues for supporting this amendment, and I recommend Senator AREA BAMA HAM for his leadership on this legislation.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, as one who has advocated tax relief and reform for American families throughout my 17 years in Congress, I welcome the opportunity to speak on the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999.

Americans want, need, and deserve tax relief. The government takes too much of the American people’s earnings in order to fund the wasteful bureaucracy in Washington. The notion that the government knows better than families how to spend their money is absurd. Americans should be able to keep much more of their hard-earned money to use and invest for themselves and their family’s future.

Not only do Americans want and need tax relief, they also deserve fundamental reform of our unfair and overly complex tax code. For years, members of this body have improperly expanded the tax code’s complexity and put tax loopholes for special interests ahead of tax relief for working families. The result is a tax code that is a bewildering 44,000 page catalogue of favors for a privileged few and a chamber of horrors for the rest of America. Perhaps the accountants and lawyers.

No one can possibly believe it’s fair to tax your salary, your investments, your property, your expenses, your marriage, and your death. Taxes claim nearly 40 percent of the average taxpayer’s income. This is simply not right.

This bill takes several steps toward relieving that excessive tax burden, and I congratulate the Chairman and his colleagues on the Senate Finance Committee for their hard work in drafting this bill for the Senate’s consideration.

There are many good provisions in this bill, and I intend to support it in the hope that a conference agreement can be reached that provides meaningful tax relief and that the President will sign into law. However, I am concerned that the majority of the tax relief proposed in this bill will not be available to taxpayers for several years. The bill also excludes other very good ideas but includes several provisions that are clearly intended to benefit special interests. I hope the amendment process, limited though it is, can be used to look up the Social Security Trust Funds and prevent the House from taking itself and Congress to a conference agreement with reconciliation measures, will improve it before we are asked to vote on final passage.

Mr. President, the latest reports project a nearly $3 trillion federal budget surplus over the next 10 years. About two-thirds of the projected surplus comes from Social Security payroll taxes that are deposited in the Social Security Trust Funds, and must be kept away from spendthrift politicians to ensure that Social Security benefits are paid as promised. Our first priority must be to lock up the Social Security Trust Funds to prevent further Congressional raids on workers’ retirement funds to pay for so-called “emergency” spending or new big government programs. Most Americans don’t share the view that dubious pork-barrel projects, such as millions of dollars in assistance to reindeer ranchers and maple sugar producers, should be treated as emergencies to be paid for with their Social Security taxes, but that is what Congress did earlier this year.

That leaves nearly $1 trillion in non-Social Security revenue surpluses. Now, the typical Washington response would be to spend the money on new government programs and bureaucracies. Let me state very clearly that I vehemently oppose the view that “growing government” should be a national priority. To the contrary, our goal should be to continue to shrink the size of the federal government, returning more power and money to the people.
I firmly believe a healthy portion of the projected non-Social Security surplus should be returned to hard-working Americans. I also believe we have a responsibility to balance the need for tax relief with other pressing national priorities.

After locking up the Social Security surpluses, I would dedicate 62 percent of the remaining $1 trillion in non-Social Security surplus revenues, or about $620 billion, to shore up the Social Security Trust Funds, extending the solvency of the Social Security system until at least the middle of the next century. The President promised to save Social Security, but he failed to include this proposal anywhere in his budget submission. In fact, he has since proposed or supported spending billions of dollars from the surplus on other government programs, depleting the funds needed to ensure retirement benefits are paid as promised.

I would also reserve 10 percent of the non-Social Security surplus to protect the Medicare system, and use 5 percent to begin paying down our $6.5 trillion national debt.

With the remaining $230 billion in surplus revenues, plus about $300 billion raised by closing inequitable corporate tax loopholes and ending unnecessary spending subsidies, I would provide meaningful tax relief that benefits Americans and fuels the economy.

My tax relief plan, which was filed as an amendment to this bill, provides slightly more than $500 billion in tax relief over 10 years, targeted toward lower- and middle-income Americans, family farmers and small businessmen, and families. The bill before the Senate includes provisions that are similar to some of the proposals included in my plan.

The bill does provide relief from the marriage penalty and gift and estate taxes, but these important provisions do not take effect for several years. I believe we should repeal, once and for all, the disgraceful tax penalty that punishes couples who want to get married. We should also slash the death tax that prevents a father or a mother from leaving the hard-earned fruits of their labor to their children. Why wait five or seven years to provide some relief from these onerous and unfair taxes?

The bill properly targets the lowest 15 percent tax bracket for a one-percent rate reduction and provides for a gradual increase in the upper limit of the bracket. My plan would also expand this bracket to allow as many as 17 million more Americans to pay taxes at the lowest rate.

The bill also increases the income threshold for tax-deferred contributions to IRAs, but not until 2006, and very gradually increases the amount that employees can contribute each year to employer-sponsored retirement plans. We should make these increases effective immediately to encourage more Americans to save now for their retirement.

What the bill before the Senate does not do is provide much-needed incentives for saving. Restoring to every American the tax exemption for the first $200 in interest and dividend income would go a long way toward reversing the abysmal savings rate in this country.

Most important, we must eliminate immediately the Social Security earnings test. This tax unfairly penalizes senior citizens who choose to, or have to, work by taking away $1 of their Social Security benefits for every $3 they earn. There is no justifiable reason to force seniors with decades of knowledge and expertise out of the workforce by imposing such a punitive tax.

Many of the other provisions in this bill that provide tax relief for education, health care, and other issues important to American families are implemented gradually or simply delayed for several years. Likewise, some of the provisions that benefit small businesses and tax-exempt organizations do not take effect for a number of years. In fact, less than half of the 120 provisions in this bill provide any tax relief at all in the year 2000. Those tax cuts that do take effect immediately amount to just $5 billion of the nearly $800 billion total tax cuts in the bill.

But look at some of the provisions that do take effect immediately:

- A provision to extend the tax credit for electricity produced from wind and closed-loop biomass sources, and also extend the credit to electricity produced from poultry waste, which is defined to include rice hulls, wood shavings, straw, bedding, and other litter. This provision goes into effect immediately, and will cost $1.6 billion over 10 years.

- A provision to exempt individuals with foreign addresses from paying the 7.5 percent air passenger ticket tax on frequent flier miles, leaving American passengers to pay for our over-burdened air traffic control system. The provision goes into effect on January 1, 2000, and will cost $238 million over 10 years.

- A provision that exempts small seaplanes from paying ticket taxes. This provision goes into effect on December 31, 1999, and will cost $11 million over 10 years.

- A provision to reduce the excise tax, from 12.4 percent to 11 percent, on components of parts of arrows used for hunting fish and game that measure 18 inches overall or more in length. This provision takes effect immediately.

How can we justify giving a $33 million tax break next year to companies producing electricity from chicken waste, when senior citizens have to forego some of their Social Security benefits if they must work to make ends meet. How can we justify writing off $15 million in revenue next year from people from other countries who fly to the U.S., when American families and others pay a egregious marriage penalty until 2005?

Mr. President, as I have said, there are many good provisions in this bill which reflect the hard work and difficult decisions that Chairman Roth and the Finance Committee faced. They have worked hard to do the best we can for the American people who need and deserve relief from excessive taxation and a burdensome tax code.

I intend to vote for this bill, even though I know, as do my colleagues, that the President has pledged to veto both the Senate and House tax bills. Neither bill will ever become law, and the American people will never see a nickel’s cut in their taxes, if the President has his way. This is an unfortunate reality that the conferees on this measure must recognize as they work to craft a meaningful tax relief bill that can be enacted and implemented for the benefit of the American people.

I will vote for this bill to move the process along and send this bill to conference with the House. What will matter at the end is that we focus on crafting a bill that can become law so that the American taxpayers get the relief they deserve and need. I have put forward a plan described briefly here, that I believe can be a starting point for meaningful and achievable tax cuts. I urge the conferees on this legislation to focus on a conference agreement that the President will sign and that will become law this year. That is what the American people want and need.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to express my thoughts and observations on the Senate’s consideration of S. 1429, The Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999.

Regrettably, in choosing to pass this bill, the Senate has missed a unique opportunity to provide Americans with long-term economic stability, improved retirement and health security for seniors, and targeted tax cuts for working families.

Instead, the Senate has adopted—along largely partisan lines—a package of reckless and fiscally irresponsible tax cuts that threatens our economic future with large deficits and higher taxes.

Let me briefly express my concerns about this legislation in more detail.

First, it would harm the country’s long-term economic prospects. I find it somewhat ironic that many of our Republican colleagues applaud Federal Reserve Chairman Greenspan’s economic stewardship, yet choose to ignore his warnings about the ill-considered implications of the bill. In fact, the Chairman has made abundantly clear that this tax package will stimulate an economy that is already performing at a high level. That will only contribute to the kinds of inflationary pressures that have already caused the Fed to recently raise interest rates. The further impetus of concern is that, as we all know, an increase in interest rates acts as a hidden tax on taxpayers. So by contributing to a hike in interest rates, this tax package could actually have the effect of raising the cost of things such as a mortgage loan, a student loan, and so many other items upon which working families depend.

Second, S. 1429 fails the test of tax fairness. According to the Department of the Treasury, nearly 67 percent of the tax cuts would benefit the wealthiest 20 percent of families. Only 12 percent of the tax benefits are targeted at the bottom 60 percent of income earners. The bill contains estate tax relief that costs a tax cut for those with estates exceeding $10,000,000 in worth.
Is this middle America? I don't believe so. Meanwhile, the Majority has once again refused to extend child care tax credits to people earning less than $29,000.

The Republicans stress the importance of securing the solvency of Social Security and Medicare. Again, it is cruel irony that, at precisely the time early in the next century that Medicare is scheduled to become insolvent and Social Security surpluses are expected to disappear, the cost of the Majority's tax cut will begin to skyrocket to almost $2 trillion. As the baby boomers begin to retire and the solvency needle approaches zero, the Republicans have left virtually nothing to secure the viability of these important programs for future generations of retirees.

Drastic cuts to domestic and defense spending are the real and consequent achievement almost as important as balancing the budget itself, since it has given confidence to taxpayers and financial markets that the Administration and Congress can keep its fiscal house in order. Now, with S. 1429, we risk simply squandering the gains that have been made. This distorted process using budgeted deficits will, I fear, lead this nation down a precarious path in years to come.

This is not to say that I do not support some reasonable tax relief targeted at those who need it the most.
But just as no family would leave for vacation without making sure that their bills could be paid, the Congress should not provide tax cuts without first meeting our obligations to strengthen Social Security and Medicare, reduce the debt, and invest in defense and domestic priorities. What the supporters of this bill have done is es-tially to buy a vacation without making sure they could pay for the ne-necessities.

Senator MOYNIHAN's amendment struck the proper balance among these important obligations by devoting one-third of the surplus to discretionary spending, one-third to paying down the debt, and $290 billion in tax cuts for low and middle income Americans. It would have, among other provisions, increased the standard deduction for the 75 percent of Americans who claim the standard deduction, provided a 100 percent deduction for health insurance for the self-employed, and offered a 25 percent credit for employers who operate child care centers on site or who help employees pay the cost of off-site care, reduce the debt, and invest in defense and domestic priorities. What the supporters of this bill have done is es-tentially to buy a vacation without making sure they could pay for the ne-necessities.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, in simple terms, tax cuts that are used to pay down the debt are important to outher priorities as well. Especially now, when economic times are as good as they have been in our lifetimes, we should build a strong foundation for long-term prosperity by reducing the national deficit, strengthening Social Security and Medicare, boosting our national defense, and investing in education, the environment, and other vital priorities.
The bill that has just passed the Senate fails to do that. I remain optimistic that in conference we can craft legislation that is more faithful to our shared vision of future prosperity and stability for all Americans.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, the amendment I submitted would reduce the capital gains holding period for horses from 24 months to 12 months and would correct an inequity in the tax code that has discriminated against the horse industry since 1969. Currently, all capital assets—with the exception of horses and cattle—qualify for the lowest capital gains tax rate and are held for 12 months. This discrepancy in the tax code is simply not fair to the horse industry and must be changed.

The horse industry is extremely important to our economy, and accounts for thousands of jobs. Whether it is owning, breeding, racing, or showing horses—or simply enjoying an afternoon ride along a trail—one in thirty-five Americans is touched by the horse industry. In Kentucky alone, the horse industry has an economic impact of $3.4 billion, involving 150,000 horses and more than 50,000 employees.

What supports this industry is the investment in the horses themselves.
Horses are like cattle. But just as the investments are essential to the operation and growth of the horse industry.
Without others willing to buy and breed horses, it is impossible for the industry to remain competitive. The 2-year holding period ultimately discourges investment, putting this industry—and the 1.4 million jobs it supports nationwide—at risk. Clearly, this is bad economic policy and must be changed.

The two-year holding period for horses is sorely outdated. It was established in 1969, primarily as an anti-tax shelter provision. Since then, there have been a number of changes in the tax code. Specifically, the passive loss limitations have been adopted, putting an end to these previous tax loopholes.

Although horses are categorized as livestock, they have an entirely different function than other animals, like cattle. While both are livestock, the investment in these two animals is different. Beef and cattle, while both have a finite and generally short life span. However, horses—whether they are used for racing, showing, or working—are frequently bought and sold

Mr. President, in simple terms, tax cut may be compared to apple pie. Evyone likes them. Everyone would like a slice. But we have other responsibilities. We should provide tax cuts, but we should take care of our other priorities as well.
Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I filed a motion to protect veterans’ health care because veterans are apt to be hurt by the tax reduction bill before us. I was joined in this effort by Senators MIKULSKI, BRYAN, DASCHLE, HARKIN, and BINGAMAN. Senator MIKULSKI, as vice chair of VA Appropriations Subcommittee, and my other cosponsors all understand what is at stake here. I did not proceed in offering this motion, however, because Senator WELLSLONE offered a similar motion.

The issue raised by my amendment still applies to this tax bill. It is very simple: approval of this $800 billion tax reduction bill leaves no ability to meet our obligations to veterans. If we spend all of the federal surplus on tax giveaways, there will be nothing left to fund veterans’ health care.

In my view, the Senate Finance Committee needed to rethink this tax bill and reserve $3.5 billion over 5 years to appropriately fund VA health care.

This is simple math. My motion instructed the Finance Committee to provide for slightly more than 1 percent of the tax cut included in the bill before us. I want to repeat that—it would have set aside about 1 percent of the tax cut included in the bill for veterans.

The amount included in the motion—$8.5 billion over 5 years—has been fully justified by the Committee on Veterans’ Affairs in its Views and Estimates letter to the Committee on the Budget.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VETERANS HEALTH CARE

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I filed a motion to protect veterans’ health care because veterans are apt to be hurt by the tax reduction bill before us. I was joined in this effort by Senators MIKULSKI, BRYAN, DASCHLE, HARKIN, and BINGAMAN. Senator MIKULSKI, as vice chair of VA Appropriations Subcommittee, and my other cosponsors all understand what is at stake here. I did not proceed in offering this motion, however, because Senator WELLSLONE offered a similar motion.

The issue raised by my amendment still applies to this tax bill. It is very simple: approval of this $800 billion tax reduction bill leaves no ability to meet our obligations to veterans. If we spend all of the federal surplus on tax giveaways, there will be nothing left to fund veterans’ health care.

In my view, the Senate Finance Committee needed to rethink this tax bill and reserve $3.5 billion over 5 years to appropriately fund VA health care.

This is simple math. My motion instructed the Finance Committee to provide for slightly more than 1 percent of the tax cut included in the bill before us. I want to repeat that—it would have set aside about 1 percent of the tax cut included in the bill for veterans.

The amount included in the motion—$8.5 billion over 5 years—has been fully justified by the Committee on Veterans’ Affairs in its Views and Estimates letter to the Committee on the Budget.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this letter be printed in the RECORD.
Legislation would, reportedly, require that all health care plans provide such care, as a matter of right, to the enrollees. In such circumstances, VA will be compelled to offer emergency care services to its enrollees, either directly or more likely, by reimbursing fees charged by other providers. Prior to the development of the Administration’s proposal on the issue, VA had not anticipated the asserted demand for such services. Legislation requiring VA to pay for emergency care provided to veterans by non-VA medical facilities has already been introduced in the House and will be advanced in the Senate.

VA estimates the costs of providing emergency care services and subsequent hospital admission to VA enrollees will be $548 million in FY 00.

Weapons of mass destruction preparedness

In response to Public Law 105–114, VA has enhanced its role in assisting the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) in stockpiling antibiotics and other pharmaceuticals needed for response to potential domestic terrorist attacks with weapons of mass destruction, VA medical facilities are dispersed nationwide and thus, along with the Department of Defense hospitals located within the continental U.S., they are natural depositories of pharmaceutical supplies and materials which might be needed to respond to such emergencies.

VA participation in preparatory activities is cost-efficient—but it is not without costs. Such costs, which had not been anticipated by VA prior to enactment of Public Law 105–114, will amount to $14.6 million in FY 00.

Increased prosthetic costs

VA expenditures for meeting the prosthetic device needs of its patients—needs which include not only artificial limbs and the like, but also more conventional aids such as hearing aids, eyeglasses, walkers, etc.—have increased markedly between 1993 and 1998, at annual rates of up to 18.90%. A portion of those increases are an unanticipated side effect of the Medicare “eligibility reform” legislation enacted in 1996, which allows VA to enroll all veterans, subject to available funding, for VA medical care. That legislation appears to have averted some costs for VA services among persons needing such devices.

Even after general inflation is factored out, VA anticipates that its prosthetic device expenses would increase by a rate of 14.8%, and VA will require an additional $74.075 million in defray these expenses in FY 00.

2. Current services—$853.1 million

We have closely observed VA’s recent efforts to restructure to deliver health care services to the Nation’s veterans more efficiently. Generally, we are satisfied with VA’s actions, and we acknowledge that fiscal restraint has been—and will continue to be—a stimulus to change. Nonetheless, we believe that a fourth consecutive year of non-growth in the medical care budget would be destructive.

As anyone who pays medical bills or health insurance premiums knows, medical costs are rising. Payroll inflation, increases in the cost of “eligibility reform” legislation enacted in 1996, which allows VA to enroll all veterans, subject to available funding, for VA medical care. That legislation appears to have averted some costs for VA services among persons needing such devices.

other duties to yield a net addition of 490 staff. In addition, VA has already submitted a request for an additional $49 million in funding to add new adjudication staff. In addition, we believe that the adjudication backlog must be attacked now using current staff in a one-time, targeted, and carefully controlled overtime effort.

IV. PROJECTED MANDATORY ACCOUNT SPENDING

A. EDUCATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

As part of the ‘‘Soldiers’, Sailors’, Airmen’s and Marines’ Bill of Rights Act of 1999,’’ the Senate has already approved, with no objection from the Budget Committee, the following improvements in VA educational assistance programs: An increase in monthly assistance payments (from $258 to $600 for veterans who served three-year enlistments, and from $235 to $429 for two-year enlistees); a repeal of the requirement that servicemembers must save $100 per month for 12 months from base pay to ‘‘buy’’ eligibility; the allowance of a ‘‘jump sum’’ benefit at the beginning of a training term; and a provision allowing veterans to transfer benefits to a spouse and/or children. CBO has estimated that these provisions will result in additional mandatory account costs of $3.8 billion over fiscal years 2000–2004, and $13 billion over fiscal years 2000–2009.

Had this business been conducted in the regular order, these improvements could have been considered by the Committee on Veterans’ Affairs, the committee of primary jurisdiction. Our committee, perhaps would have devoted to this different mix of program improvements—e.g., the Commission on Servicemembers and Veterans Transition Assistance—had recommended enactment of a tuition-reimbursement benefits program like that in force after World War II. We did not, however, impede these Armed Services Committee amendments, and we enthusiastically support them. Of course, we reserve the right to revisit the issue within our committee irrespective of the fate of the ‘‘Soldiers’, Sailors’, Airmen’s and Marines’ Bill of Rights Act of 1999.’’ We almost certainly will also see a provision allowing veterans to transfer education assistance to a spouse and/or children. CBO has estimated that this provision would result in additional mandatory account costs of $0.1 billion over fiscal years 2000–2004.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, it is a reasonable amount which covers $853 million in ‘‘automatic’’ costs such as inflation and wage increases. It also allows for new initiatives, such as the program to help veterans with special needs. Resource shortfalls have imperiled services for the spinal-cord injured, for blind veterans, for veterans in need of prosthetics, and for veterans in need of mental health care. Health care professionals within VA are overworked. Reductions-in-force have also become a reality for them.

In my own state, we are already seeing lapses in the availability of health care. For example, at the Beckley VA Medical Center, approximately 400 new veterans are waiting to be seen in primary care. Approximately 500 veterans already in the system are on a waiting list for hearing evaluations. And the caseload in pharmacy has increased over 41 percent in the last year, with no increase in staffing, causing many veterans to wait two hours or longer to have a prescription filled.

At the Martinsburg VA Medical Center, veterans are waiting six months for an urology appointment. In the PTSD program the number of beds have increased by 14 while the number of staff have been reduced, making one-on-one counseling very difficult.

At the Clarksburg VA Medical Center, current staff are not able to keep pace with the demand for inpatient care, and veterans are too often referred to private hospitals because no beds are available at the VA.

In outpatient care at Clarksburg, the waiting times for an appointment in optometry and dermatology are approximately four months, and in urology, veterans are waiting seven months for an appointment.

There has been a recent proposal to close both the inpatient and outpatient surgical programs at the Huntington VA Medical Center and to refer veterans to a VAMC in Kentucky, over 130 miles away.

I can assure my colleagues that if these things are happening in the VA medical centers in my state of West Virginia—and trust me, they are—then you can be sure that they are occurring in the VA medical centers in your states, as well.

Staff at each of our VA medical centers have been stretched to the limit, and without additional funding, staffing will only get worse. The erosion of services and the huge reductions in staff have already put the veterans’ health care system in serious jeopardy, and I cannot allow it to continue.

I can assure my colleagues that further cuts will seriously jeopardize the quality of VA health care. Earlier this week, I spoke about the erosion of VA’s caseload in pharmacy has increased over 41 percent in the last year, with no increase in staffing, causing many veterans to wait two hours or longer to have a prescription filled.

In summary, VA requires at least $1.26 billion in additional discretionary account funding to meet unanticipated spending requirements that have been thrust upon VA by events beyond VA’s control; an additional $853.1 million to overcome the effects of inflation and other ‘‘uncontrollables’’ and maintain current services for eligible veterans; and at least $1 billion in additional discretionary account funding to begin to better address the needs of an aging, and increasingly female, veterans population. These needs total over $3 billion.

We do not request, however, that discretionary account ceilings be raised $3 billion+ for FY 00. While such an increase would be totally justified to make up for flat VA medical care services funding over the last three years, we believe that recent budgetary restraints have stimulated needed reform. We believe, further, that VA can squeeze out yet more efficiency, in the way it provides health care, and we would not want to impede such reforms by requesting funding increases beyond VA’s ability to absorb them without additional funding. Thus, we request that VA discretionary spending be allowed to increase by $1.7 billion for FY 00.
eliminate 58,000 tons of smog-forming emissions by 2004. That number would more than double by 2009. In order to accomplish that, without alternative fuel vehicles, we would have to remove 1.5 million conventionally-fueled vehicles from the road.

Furthermore, each gallon of alternative fuel used in such a vehicle represents one less gallon of gasoline that we need to obtain from imported oil. The Department of Energy estimates that nearly three billion gallons of gasoline would be displaced, thus reducing our foreign oil dependence.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Rhode Island is correct. Millions of Americans live in areas that are not in compliance with air quality standards. The increased motor vehicle traffic anticipated in the four county Wasatch front in my home state of Utah, whether we certainly push us toward non-attainment compliance problems. Promoting the increased use of alternative fuel vehicles is a viable option available to help Utah achieve our clean air objectives. Alternative fuel vehicles represent the cleanest vehicles in the world. Market-based incentives will help encourage the use of such vehicles. I am very pleased to be part of this effort with my colleagues from the Finance Committee and am looking into getting a natural gas car of my own at this very moment.

Mr. CHAFEE. The legislation Senator HATCH and I have drafted would address the problem that currently prevents these fuels and vehicles from competing on their own in the market. Incentives to make them less costly will stimulate demand and permit the alternate fuel vehicles to compete on their own in the market. Market-based incentives will help encourage the use of such vehicles. I am very pleased to be part of this effort with my colleagues from the Finance Committee and am looking into getting a natural gas car of my own at this very moment.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, it has taken a lot of tough choices here in Washington—and a lot of hard work and restructuring in the private economy—to put our country’s budget into the black. For the first time in a generation, we have a balanced federal budget. And for the first time in our nation’s history, we can project substantial surpluses for the foreseeable future.

There were times I believed we would never see this day, Mr. President, but our official forecasts now call for as much as one trillion dollars in surplus over the next ten years. That’s on top of the two trillion in Social Security surpluses that will build up over that same time, money that is already promised to future retirees.

I want to say something about whether we should count on those surpluses actually materializing. Mr. President, but first I want to talk about what most families I know would do if they woke up to the kind of windfall above themselves to relax and enjoy that we anticipate in our federal budget today.

Take your average family, Mr. President, with a mortgage, maybe paying for one or two children already in college, maybe another child with college still in his or her future. Do they have some debts, some worries about how to pay for a retirement that gets closer every year, some aspirations for their children that they may not be able to afford. Maybe Grandma and Granddad have moved in with them, bringing with them some health care problems that add to the family’s expenses.

Let’s assume that after years of spending more than they took in, their family finally turns the corner. Let’s borrow a story from today’s new high-tech economy and say that the stock they hold in their new start-up company has just jumped in value. They cannot be sure that the stock will stay that high next year, or the year after that. But they have a whole lot richer than they did before.

Now let’s picture the discussion around their kitchen table, with this new problem to discuss. I’m betting that most of the families I know in Delaware would make plans to pay down their past debts, the mortgage hanging over their heads, make provisions for their children’s education, their parents’ health needs, and their own retirement. Maybe, after they had taken care of those priorities, they would allow themselves to relax and enjoy a more affluent lifestyle.

Mr. President, I don’t claim that this is a perfect analogy to the situation before us in the Senate. I certainly don’t claim that for many hardworking Americans sensible tax relief is some kind of luxury. But I think it makes an important point, which is simply that most Americans would be a lot more cautious, and a lot more prudent, in using any anticipated surplus in their own household budgets that we are projecting in the deficit reduction plan.

Those are the priorities that I think should guide us in our deliberations today. We should take the opportunity given us with the expectation of future budget surpluses first to pay down the debt that has built up in a generation of deficit finance, then we should redirect those excesses to Social Security and Medicare, and then we should prevent further erosion in funding for national security, law enforcement, education, and the other basic functions of a space-age, high-technology, industrial economy.

I think we can do all that, Mr. President, and still provide tax relief to the millions of Americans whose hard work and sacrifice—through downsizing, restructuring, and all the rest—has been the real driving force behind the remarkable economy we enjoy today.

But as we all know, Mr. President, the forecasts on which our projected surpluses are based make a lot of assumptions. That’s all well and good for making long-term economic projections. But it is not good enough, as far as I’m concerned, for making long term economic policy.

I ask my colleagues to listen to some of these assumptions, and to answer honestly if our country can really afford the nearly $800 billion tax cut before us today.

The surplus that is forecast assumes no major interruption in the economic growth we have enjoyed in what is now the longest economic expansion in our history. That unprecedented economic growth has kept revenues strong enough to meet and exceed our spending plans. But as Alan Greenspan has reminded us, it is not a question of if, but when, that growth will slow. Still, those who call for an $800 billion tax cut are basing policy on the false hope that that inevitable day will never come.

Mr. President, the surplus that some of my colleagues want to use to pay for this tax cut also assumes that there will be no emergencies—no Bosnias, no Kosovo, no Iraqs, no hurricanes, no floods—that could change spending, even though we regularly spend an average of $8 billion a year on such emergencies.

The surplus also assumes that we will continue deep cuts in national defense, in education, health care, law enforcement, in environmental protection. It assumes that we will continue to reduce spending beyond the current levels, levels that are already causing gridlock in our budget process this year.

But now, Mr. President, we are planning for the basic functions of government—as well as the number of people we pay to perform those functions, down from more than 340,000 in the past twelve years—and at levels at which we have not been seen since 1962.

We should recognize the hard work that achieved those low numbers, Mr. President. They are an important part of how we got to where we are today, with a balanced budget in hand, and surpluses in sight. As the private sector has become leaner and more efficient, the federal government has also moved in the same direction.
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE
July 30, 1999

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I genuinely appreciate the courtesy of the distinguished Chairman of the Finance Committee (Mr. ROTH) for allowing me to discuss an innovative new technology available to the dry cleaning industry.

Dr. Joe DeSimone, a highly-regarded professor of the faculties of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and N.C. State University in Raleigh has developed an environmentally safe way to dry clean their clothes while eliminating the millions of pounds of toxic solvents currently being used to clean clothes, and, at the same time, advancing more energy-efficient technology. This procedure would dramatically reduce the dry cleaning industry's reliance on hazardous chemicals as solvents.

My amendment will allow for a 20 percent tax credit to new and existing dry cleaners who purchase the equipment which uses non-toxic solvents. The equipment includes both wet cleaning and liquid carbon dioxide technology.

The Joint Tax Committee estimates the tax credit would decrease revenues by a little more than $500 million during the next 10 years; this is a modest price to pay considering the amount Americans rely on dry cleaners and by the fact that so many of these Americans bring potentially hazardous chemicals into their homes when they dry clean their clothes.

I believe that clarification of a Treasury regulation's application to an international tax treaty would provide an ample offset for this tax credit. Let me briefly explain the current situation:

Just this month, a judge in New York overturned 19 years of tax treaty policy. The judge ruled that an existing regulation that permits the Treasury to allocate interest based on a company's worldwide operations did not comply with the 1980 treaty. I disagree. The regulations allowed the U.S. Treasury to disallow abusive tax strategies and make sure that these companies pay their fair share of taxes. Tax treaties are never intended to be a means to avoid taxes, simply a means to prohibit double taxation. This amendment will continue this policy and avoid a rush for billions of dollars in tax refunds by international corporations.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article from the July 9 edition of The New York Times entitled "British Bank Wins Dispute With the IRS" be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 1.)

Mr. HELMS. Unfortunately, Mr. President, under the rules of the budget, my amendment is subject to a point of order. However, I do appreciate the willingness of Chairman ROTH to work with me to find a way to make this tax credit a reality.
The Treasury Department, as a result, is issuing a regulation shortly after the treaty took effect alerting the I.R.S. to think hard about thumbing their nose at this because if they do, they will have to devote a lot of legal resources to fighting similar issues and they will probably lose."

Mr. Andersen and other lawyers said that because of its enormous market the United States will probably not become the "beachhead" ignoring tax treaties. "The fact is, no bank has withdrawn from the U.S. because of this issue," he said.

Arthur D. Pastrernak, an international tax specialist at Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, said that "the I.R.S. has this no-cheating concept that it's their idea, it tends to apply evenly to American and foreign corporations operating in the United States."

And the I.R.S. has become much more aggressive in the past few years in fighting what it regards as using tax treaties for aggressive tax avoidance," he said. "The general rule is that the Treasury Department has been saying that statutes passed by Congress can override existing treaties, but this case shows that mere regulations can't override those statutes and treaties."

Sydney E. Unger, chairman of the tax department at Kaye Scholer Fierman Hays & Handler in New York, said that foreign corporations operating in the United States were a convenient target for American politicians and that the regulation the judge ruled on illustrated this.

"Fundamentally, there has been a sense at Treasury and among politicians that foreign entities with operations in the United States are not paying their fair share of tax," Mr. Unger said. "Whether that is true or not, certainly it is a wonderful issue for American politicians and for Treasury officials to want to pursue because it's a way to take money from someone else, who doesn't vote."

Inland Revenue, the British tax agency, filed a friend-of-the-court brief supporting NatWest. Jerome Libin, a tax specialist in the Washington office of Sutherland Asbill & Brennan in New York, who filed the brief, said that the I.R.S. believed that even if NatWest's interest deductions were dubious—and that point was believed that even if NatWest's interest deductions were dubious—and that point was not conceded—the deductions still had to be allowed under the treaty.

Mr. Libin won a similar case three years ago in United States Tax Court over a tax treaty with Canada, but that case involved allocating deductions. In that case, the I.R.S. also took from the judge "will force the I.R.S. to think about disallowing deductions if it could show that they were abusive."

One of NatWest's lawyers, Jerry Snider of Davis Polk & Wardwell, called Judge Turner's decision "a terrific, thorough and carefully written opinion."

The Internal Revenue Service declined to comment or even to make documents available. It referred questions to the Treasury Department, where a spokesman, Maria Tharp, said "it will confirm or deny availability for an interview on condition that he neither be identified nor quoted directly."

That offer was declined. They were abusive. Mr. Andersen and other lawyers said that because of its enormous market the United States will probably not become the "beachhead" ignoring tax treaties. "The fact is, we have been---we have been able---we have been able not only to stem the tide of red ink that ran into the triple-digit billion-dollar levels for each of the Reagan-Bush years but, if the latest projections of both the OMB and CBO pan out, we can look forward to huge federal surpluses each year as far as the eye can see. That's good news, if those projections come true and if Congress is able to withstand another round of tax cut fever."

The Congressional Budget Office projects surpluses over the next ten years (FY 2000--2009) totaling nearly $3 trillion. Of that amount, about $2 trillion would be surpluses in the Social Security Trust Fund, and the other $1 trillion ($996 billion to be exact) would be non-social security surpluses. However, a closer look at these non-social security surpluses projected by CBO over the next ten years, reveals that they rest on a very shaky foundation. The fact is, these non-social security surpluses which are projected to total $996 billion, are based in large part on huge cuts in investments and national priorities—such as national security, veterans' medical care, the FBI and other law-enforcement programs, the environment, agriculture, border patrol agents, health research, education, and many other critical programs. Of the $996 billion in non-social security surpluses projected by CBO for the next 10 years, $996 billion results from real and devastating cuts in these national priorities. As if that were not bad enough, the Republican tax cut plan calls for additional cuts of some $180 billion to
Mr. President, it could not be any clearer that Congress is likely to not only spend all up to $14 billion, FY2000 emergency spending levels which will not only use up the projected $775 billion non-social security surplus projected for that year, but will also eat into the Social Security Trust Fund surplus by at least $13 billion. So much for the Social Security Lock-box! Congress has already foreclosed all of the options to do, won’t fool the American people, and we must face the fact that the Republican tax cut bill now before the Senate. Furthermore, the Republican tax cuts of $792 billion would, if enacted, also result in increased interest on the Federal Debt over the next 10 years totaling $176 billion. In reality, then, the Republican tax cut bill eats up $971 billion of the $996 billion in projected non-social security surpluses over the next 10 years, leaving only $25 billion remaining.

We should heed the advice of Federal Reserve Chairman Greenspan in his testimony before Congressional Committees when he advised caution when considering what to do with these projected surpluses. In the first place, it is extremely unlikely that those two factors will suddenly cease. To the contrary, there is substantial evidence that they have become more frequent and more severe in the latter part of this Century. What does this mean? It means that it is highly likely that over the next decade, at least $80 billion in emergency spending will be needed. But, the case that the $996 billion in non-social security surpluses projected by CBO, the large bulk of which results from real cuts in national priorities, does not allow for any emergency spending over the next 10 years. That being the case, wouldn’t it be prudent to reduce the $996 billion projection by at least the $80 billion historical average per decade that we have seen in the past? After so doing, even if Congress and the Administration will enact spending levels which will not only use up the projected $775 billion in cuts in purchasing power for national priorities that the Republican tax cut bill requires, there would not be sufficient surpluses remaining to cover this Republican tax cut plan without either increasing the deficit spending, or repealing the tax cut, or dipping into the Social Security Trust Fund surpluses.

Next, let’s look at the question of whether Congress can, or should, stay within the spending caps for FY2000, much less the $36 billion per year; and their deficit/surplus projections have been off by an absolute average of $54 billion per year over the past two decades. If these averages hold up over the next 10 years, the trillion-dollar non-social security surpluses could be slashed by $540 billion purely due to mis-estimates by the Congressional Budget Office. Further, as CBO states in virtually every report that they publish, cyclical disturbances such as recessions, changes in interest rates, inflation, etc., could have significant effects on their projected surpluses at any time during the projection period.

Then, there is the question of emergency spending. As Senators are aware, under the Balanced Budgets and Emergency Deficit Reduction Act of 1990, emergency spending of $1 billion or more is to be offset by cuts in entitlement programs. Further, the projections are based on virtually impossible, and extremely unsound, cuts in spending on national priorities. Keeping two sets of books, as the Republicans are attempting to do, won’t fool the American people for very long.

In closing, Mr. President, let me quote from the text of a recent statement by 50 of the Nation’s most revered economists, including six Nobel laureates, concerning the tax cuts now before the Senate.

The federal budget is projected to show substantial surpluses over the next 15 years. These surpluses offer an exceptional opportunity to pay down government debt and thereby strengthen Social Security and Medicare in order to prepare for the retirement of the baby boomers. . . .

In contrast, a massive tax cut that encourages consumption would not be good economic policy. With the unemployment rate at its lowest point in a generation, now is the wrong time to stimulate the economy through tax cuts. Moreover, an ever growing tax cut would drain government resources just when the aging of the population starts to put substantial stress on Social Security and Medicare. Further, the projections assume substantial undesirable reductions in real spending for entitlement programs, including important public investments. Given the uncertainty of long-term budget projections, committing to a large tax cut would create significant risks to the budget and the economy.
true. Even if they do, some $80 billion in emergency spending for natural disasters has not been accounted for; another $30 billion in administrative costs of the Social Security Administration has not been accounted for; and the budget caps for FY2000 alone are likely to be exceeded by over $20 billion. Now is not the time to return to the failed economic policies that prevailed during the Reagan-Bush years. Rosy Scenario in all her splendor could not make their policies work. The same is true of the policies that would be undertaken if we were to enact this Republican tax cut.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, very few decisions we make in Congress will have more impact on the long-term economic well-being of our nation than how we allocate the projected surplus. By our votes this week, we are setting priorities that will determine whether the American economy is on firm ground or dangerously shifting sand as we enter the 21st century. These votes will determine whether we have the financial flexibility to meet our responsibilities to future generations, and whether we have fairly shared the economic benefits of our current prosperity. Sadly, the legislation before us today fails all of these standards. We should vote to reject it.

A tax cut of the enormous magnitude proposed by our Republican colleagues would reverse the sound fiscal management which has created the inflation-free economic growth of recent years. That is the clear view of the two principal architects of our current prosperity—Robert Rubin and Alan Greenspan. Devoting the entire on-budget surplus to tax cuts will deprive us of the funds essential to preserve Medicare and Social Security for future generations of retirees. It will force harsh cuts in education, in medical research, and in other vital domestic priorities. This tax cut jeopardizes our financial future—and it also dismally flunks the test of fairness. When fully implemented, the Republican plan would give 75% of the tax cuts to the wealthiest 20% of the population. The richest 1%—those earning over $300,000 a year—a would receive tax breaks as high as $23,000 a year, while working men and women would receive an average of only $139 a year.

Republicans claim that the ten year surplus is three trillion dollars and that they are setting two-thirds of it aside for Social Security, and only spending one-third on tax cuts. That explanation is grossly misleading. The two trillion dollars they say they are giving to Social Security already belongs to Social Security. It consists of payroll tax dollars expressly raised for the purpose of paying future Social Security benefits. Using those dollars to fund tax cuts or new spending would be to raid the Social Security Trust Fund. The Republicans are not providing a single new dollar to help fund Social Security benefits for future generations. They are not extending the life of the Trust Fund for one day. It is a mockery to characterize those payroll tax dollars as part of the surplus.

That leaves the $996 billion on-budget surplus as the only funds available to address all of the nation’s unmet needs over the next ten years. Republicans propose to use that entire amount to fund their tax cut scheme. Since CBO projections assume that all surplus dollars are devoted to debt reduction, the $996 billion figure includes nearly $200 billion in debt service savings. The amount which is available to be spent—either to address public needs or to cut taxes—is only slightly above $800 billion. Their $792 billion tax cut will consume the entire surplus.

Even more troubling, the Republican tax cut has been designed to expand dramatically beyond the tenth year. The cost between 2010 and 2019 will dwarf the cost in the first decade. It will rise from $800 billion to $2 trillion dollars. And the cost of the deficit service payments necessitated by a tax cut of that magnitude will grow exponentially as well. The GOP plan will usher in a new era of deficits—just as the baby boom generation is reaching retirement age.

While the Senate Rules have been invoked to prevent the current tax cut from going beyond ten years, the Republican leadership has made clear their intent to make these massive cuts permanent. If these tax cuts were to become permanent, they would precipitate a genuine fiscal crisis.

Most Americans understand the word “surplus” to mean dollars remaining after all financial obligations have been met. If that common sense definition is applied to the federal budget, the surplus would be far smaller than $996 billion.

We have existing obligations which should be our first responsibility. We have an obligation to preserve Medicare for future generations of retirees, and to modernize Medicare benefits to include prescription drug assistance. The Republican budget does not provide one additional dollar to meet these needs.

The American people clearly believe that strengthening Social Security and Medicare should be our highest priorities for using the surplus. By margins of more than two to one, they view preserving Social Security and Medicare as more important than cutting taxes. We should use the surplus to meet these existing responsibilities first, in order to fulfill the promise of a secure retirement with access to needed medical care.

If we do nothing, Medicare will become insolvent by 2015. The surplus gives us a unique opportunity to preserve Medicare, without reducing medical care or raising premiums. The Republican tax cut would take that opportunity away. It would leave nothing for Medicare.

We must seize this opportunity. Senate Democrats have proposed committing one-third of the surplus—$290 billion over the next ten years—to strengthening Medicare and to assisting older citizens with prescription drugs. The Administration’s 15 year budget plan provides an additional $500 billion for Medicare between 2010 and 2014. Enactment of the Republican tax cut would make this $300 billion transfer to Medicare impossible. If we squander the entire surplus on tax breaks, there will be no money left to keep our commitment to the nation’s elderly.

Unless we use a portion of the surplus to strengthen Medicare, senior citizens will be confronted with nearly a trillion dollars in health care costs and premium increases. We know who the people are who will be asked by the Republican Congress to carry this burden.

The typical Medicare beneficiary is a widow, seventy-six years old, with an annual income of $10,000. She has one or more chronic illnesses. She is a mother and a grandmother. Yet the Republican budget would force deep cuts in her Medicare benefits, in order to pay for new tax breaks for the wealthy. As a result, elderly women will be unable to see their doctor. They will go without needed prescription drugs, or without meals or heat, so that wealthy Americans earning hundreds of thousands of dollars a year can have additional thousands of dollars a year in tax breaks.

The projected surplus also assumes drastic cuts in a wide range of existing programs over the next decade—cuts in domestic programs such as education, medical research, and environmental cleanup; and cuts in national defense. We have an obligation to adequately fund these programs. If existing programs merely grow at the rate of inflation over the next decade and no new programs are created and no existing programs are expanded, the surplus would be reduced by $884 billion dollars. That is the amount it will cost to merely continue funding current discretionary programs at their inflation-adjusted level. In fact, the real surplus over the next ten years is only slightly above $300 billion, roughly one quarter the size of the proposed Republican tax cut.

In other words, the Republican tax cut would necessitate more than a five percent across the board cut in discretionary spending—in both domestic and national defense—by the end of the next decade. If defense is funded at the Administration’s proposed level, and it is highly unlikely that the Republican Congress will do less, domestic discretionary spending would have to be cut 38% by 2009. No one can reasonably argue that cuts that deep should be made, or will be made.
We know what cuts of this magnitude would mean in human terms by the end of the decade. We know who will be hurt: 375,000 fewer children will receive a Head Start; 6.5 million fewer children will participate in Title I education programs; 14,000 fewer biomedical research grants will be available from the National Institutes of Health; 1,431,000 fewer veterans will receive V.A. medical care; and there will be 6,170 fewer Border Patrol agents and 3,342 fewer FBI agents insuring safer communities. These are losses that the American people are not willing to accept.

The Democratic alternative would restore $290 billion, substantially reducing the size of the proposed cuts. A significant reduction would still be required over the decade. One thing is clear—even with a bare bones budget, we cannot afford a tax cut of the magnitude the Republicans are proposing.

Our Republican friends claim that these enormous tax cuts will have no impact on Social Security because they are not using payroll tax revenues. On the contrary, the fact that the Republican budget commits every last dollar of the on-budget surplus to tax cuts does imperil Social Security.

First, revenue estimates projected ten years into the future are notoriously unreliable. As the Director of the Congressional Budget Office candidly acknowledged:

Ten year budget projections are highly uncertain. In the space of only six months, CBO’s estimate of the cumulative surplus has increased by nearly $300 billion. Further changes of that or a greater magnitude are likely—in either direction—as a result of economic fluctuations, administrative and judicial actions, and other developments.

Despite this warning, the Republican tax cut leaves no margin for error. If we commit the entire surplus to tax cuts and the full surplus does not materialize, Social Security revenues will be required to cover the shortfall.

Second, even if the projected surplus does materialize, the cost of the Republican budget exceeds the surplus in five of the next ten years—2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, and 2009. Unless the Republican proposal is restructured, Social Security revenues will be required to cover the shortfall in each of those years.

Third, the Republican tax cut leaves no money to pay for emergency spending, which has averaged $9 billion a year in recent years. Over the next decade, we are likely to need approximately $50 billion to cover emergency needs for the uninsured, the homeless, and other problems somewhere. With the entire surplus spent on tax cuts, the Social Security Trust Fund will have to fund these emergency costs as well.

The three threats to Social Security I have described are very real. However, there is an even greater impact of the Republican plan on the future of Social Security. As I noted earlier, that plan does not provide Social Security with a single new dollar to fund future benefit payments. The Social Security Administration has proposed using a major portion of the surplus to strengthen Social Security for future generations of retirees. Beginning in 2011, the President’s budget allocates to Social Security the savings which will result from debt reduction. Between 2011 and 2014, the Social Security Trust Fund would receive $54 billion new dollars from the surplus, and it would receive an additional $189 billion each year after that. As a result, the solvency of Social Security would be extended for a generation, to well beyond 2050.

The Republican tax cut proposal, which costs over $2 trillion between 2010 and 2019, will consume all of the surplus dollars which were intended for Social Security. There will be nothing left for Social Security. As a result, no new dollars will flow into the Trust Fund, and the future of Social Security will remain clouded.

For two-thirds of America’s senior citizens, Social Security retirement benefits provide more than 50% of their annual income. Without Social Security, half the nation’s elderly would be living in poverty. Social Security enables millions of senior citizens to spend their retirement years in security and dignity. A Republican tax cut of the magnitude proposed here today will put their retirement security in serious jeopardy.

The votes which we cast this week—the choices which we are required to make—will say a great deal about our values. We should use the surplus as an opportunity to help those in need—senior citizens living on small fixed incomes, children who need educational opportunities, millions of men and women whose lives may well depend on medical research and access to quality health care. We should not use the surplus to further enrich those among us who are already the most affluent. The issue is a question of fundamental values: the choices which we are required to make

The Republican tax cut would consume the entire surplus, and distribute the overwhelming majority of it to those with the highest incomes. The authors of the Republican plan have highlighted the reduction of the 15% tax bracket to 14%. They have pointed to this as middle class tax relief. But that relief is only a small part of the overall tax breaks in their bill. It amounts to only $210 billion of the $792 billion in GOP tax cuts. Most of the remaining provisions are heavily weighted toward the highest income taxpayers.

If the Republican plan were enacted and fully implemented, nearly 50% of the tax benefits would go to the richest 5% of taxpayers, and more than 75% of the benefits would go to the wealthiest 20%. Those with annual incomes exceeding $300,000 would receive tax breaks of $23,000 per year. The lowest 60% of wage earners would share less than 11% of the total tax cuts—they would receive an average tax cut of only $139 per year. That gross disparity is unfair and unacceptable.

This is not the way the American people want to spend their surplus. I urge my colleagues to reject this bill. The American people deserve better than this package.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, as the debate on the Senate’s version of the reconciliation tax bill winds down, I wanted to come to the floor and say a few words about where we are in this process, how we got here, and where I think we ought to go.

Let me begin by saying that the discussions we have seen on the Senate floor these past few days should lead all of my colleagues—Democratic and Republican alike—to agree on one thing: the issues affected by this bill—Social Security, Medicare, education, tax relief—are serious and should not fall prey to political gamesmanship. It is not an overstatement to say that the nation’s economic and fiscal health are at stake. What we do on these issues will affect the lives of millions of Americans for decades to come.

The discussion has also revealed another truth. The debate we are having today is the wrong course for this nation and its people as we head into the 21st century is really a tale of two paradoxes.

The Republican vision for the future is to replay the past. They would have us follow their economic policies of the 1980s, a course that can best be characterized as one of faith wishful thinking and fiscal disaster. This is a course of irresponsible tax breaks for the wealthiest among us. This is a course of voracious economics, where providing huge tax breaks to the wealthiest was to somehow benefit one and reduce government deficits.

As history demonstrates, this really was a course of rosy scenarios and disastrous results. The benefits of their tax breaks were not, surprisingly, essentially confined to the wealthiest. Small deficits turned into massive ones. Government debt exploded, quadrupling in the 1980s. Unemployment averaged 7.1 percent in the previous decade. Median family income fell $1,825 in just four years. Welfare rolls were up 22 percent.

The Democratic vision for the future is to continue along the path we set forth in 1993, a path marked by fiscal responsibility and economic prosperity. Just to remind my colleagues of what we have accomplished since we embarked on this road, let me talk about the state of our economy when President Clinton took office. The deficit in 1992 was $290 billion and projected to grow to over $500 billion by the end of the decade and to continue
The Republican majority is about to fail on three counts. The President's defense spending proposals, all remaining discretionary programs, and the non-Social Security surplus in critical priorities, such as defense, education, veterans' health, agriculture, and NIH. Finally, Democrats believe in protecting the entire $1.9 trillion Social Security surplus; every dollar, every year.

Democrats strengthen and modernize Medicare by setting aside a portion of the on-budget surplus to extend solvency and provide a prescription drug benefit for Medicare beneficiaries. Democrats pay down the federal government's publicly held debt, and, if our course is followed, eventually eliminate it. Democrats invest some of the non-Social Security surplus in critical priorities, such as defense, education, veterans' health, agriculture, and NIH. Finally, Democrats believe in a significant, responsible tax cut.

It is projected there will be sufficient resources to do all of this. Yet, Republicans refuse to do most of it. Instead, they choose to follow a course that has become all too familiar to Americans. Republicans again elect to pursue ideologically extreme positions that best serve special interests instead of the needs of ordinary, hard-working Americans. The Senate has seen this before, on the overall budget plan, on juvenile justice, and, most recently, on the Patients' Bill of Rights.

This is not a political game. We face serious challenges and historic opportunities. We have wasted precious time. The list of unresolved items that the Senate should address is a long one. And time is short. I hope that when we come back next week and in September, Republicans will discard their agenda written by special interests and pursue the people's agenda. If they do so, we can accomplish much together. If they do not, the American people will be the losers.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The bill (S. 1429), as amended, was passed.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote. Mr. ROTH. I move to lay that motion on the table. The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I want to give my thanks to the many staff members on both sides of the aisle, including my good friend and colleague, PAT MOYNIHAN, and all the many people who made this possible. This afternoon, I think we took a giant step to ward getting the American people a tax break.

I would like to thank the following staff on this bill: Frank Polk, Joan
Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Coverdell-Torricelli previously agreed to amendment be modified as follows, and I send it to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 1426), as further modified, is as follows:

On page 32, strike lines 6 through 11, and insert the following:

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (E) of section 56(b)(1) is amended to read as follows:

"(E) SPECIAL RULE FOR CERTAIN DEDUCTIONS.—The standard deduction under section 63(c) shall not be allowed and the deduction for personal exemptions under section 151 and the deduction under section 64(b) shall each be allowed, but shall each be reduced by $1,000.

On page 32, strike lines 12 through 14, insert the following:

"(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2005.

SEC. 1292. CAPITAL GAINS DEDUCTION FOR INDIVIDUALS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an individual, there shall be allowed as a deduction for the taxable year an amount equal to the lesser of—

(1) the net capital gain of the taxpayer for the taxable year, or

(2) $1,000.

"(b) SALES BETWEEN RELATED PARTIES.—Gains from sales and exchanges to any related person (within the meaning of section 267(b) or 707(b)(1)) shall not be taken into account in determining net capital gain.

"(c) SPECIAL RULE FOR SECTION 1231 PROPERTY.—So long as for purposes of this section, in applying section 1231 to any disposition of property, all depreciation adjustments in respect of the property shall be treated as additional depreciation.

"(d) AGENCY REPORT TO APPLY TO CERTAIN TAXPAYERS.—No deduction shall be allowed under this section to—

(1) an individual with respect to whom a deduction under section 151 is allowable to another taxpayer for a taxable year beginning in the calendar year in which such individual’s taxable year begins,

(2) a married individual (within the meaning of section 7703) filing a separate return for the taxable year, or

(3) an estate or trust.

"(e) SPECIAL RULE FOR PASS-THRU ENTITIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In applying this section with respect to any pass-thru entity, the determination of when the sale or exchange occurs shall be made at the entity level.

"(2) PASS-THRU ENTITY DEFINED.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term ‘pass-thru entity’ means—

(A) a regulated investment company,

(B) a real estate investment trust,

(C) an S corporation,

(D) a partnership,

(E) an estate or trust, and

(F) a common trust fund.

"(b) COORDINATION WITH MAXIMUM CAPITAL GAINS RATE.—Paragraph (3) of section 1(h) (relating to maximum capital gains rate) is amended to read as follows:
"(3) COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROVISIONS.—With respect to subsection (a) of this subsection, the amount of the net capital gain shall be reduced (but not below zero) by the sum of—

"(A) the amount of the net capital gain taken into account under section 1202(a) for the taxable year under section 163(d)(4)(B)(ii),"

"(B) the amount which the taxpayer elects to take into account as investment income for the taxable year under section 163(d)(4)(B)(iii)."

(c) DEDUCTION ALLOWABLE IN COMPUTING ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME.—Subsection (a) of section 62 (defining adjusted gross income) is amended by inserting after paragraph (17), the following new paragraph:

"(18) LONG-TERM CAPITAL GAINS.—The deduction allowed by section 1292.

(d) TREATMENT OF COLLECTIBLES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1222 (relating to terms relating to capital gains and losses) is amended by inserting after paragraph (17), the following new paragraph:

"(12) SPECIAL RULE FOR COLLECTIBLES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Any gain or loss from the sale or exchange of a collectible shall be treated as a short-term capital gain or loss (as the case may be), without regard to the period such asset was held. The preceding sentence shall apply to the extent that the gain or loss is taken into account in computing taxable income.

"(B) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN SALES OF INTERESTS IN PARTNERSHIPS, ETC.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), any gain from the sale or exchange of an interest in a partnership, S corporation, or trust which is attributable to unrealized appreciation in the value of collectibles held by such entity shall be treated as gain from the sale or exchange of a collectible. Rules similar to the rules of section 701(a) shall apply for purposes of the preceding sentence.

"(C) COLLECTIBLE.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'collectible' means any capital asset which is a collectible (as defined in section 408(m) without regard to paragraph (3 thereof)."

(2) CHARITABLE DEDUCTION NOT AFFECTED.—

(A) Paragraph (1) of section 170(a) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "For purposes of this paragraph, section 1222 shall be applied without regard to paragraph (2) thereof (relating to special rule for collectibles)."

(B) Clause (iv) of section 170(b)(1)(C) is amended by inserting before the period at the end the following: "and section 1222 shall be applied without regard to paragraph (12) thereof (relating to special rule for collectibles)."

(e) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 57(a)(7) is amended by striking "1202" and inserting "1203".

(2) Clause (ii) of section 163(d)(4)(B) is amended to read as follows:

"(ii) the sum of—

"(I) the portion of the net capital gain referred to in clause (i)(II) (or, if lesser, the net capital gain referred to in clause (i)(I)) taken into account under section 1202, reduced by the amount of the deduction allowed with respect to such gain under section 1202 plus

"(II) so much of the gain described in subclause (I) which is not taken into account under section 1202 and which the taxpayer elects to take into account under this clause.

(3) Subparagraph (B) of section 172(d)(2) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) the deduction under section 1292 and the exclusion under section 1203 shall not be allowed."

(4) Section 642(c)(4) is amended by striking "1202" and inserting "1203".

(5) Section 643(a)(3) is amended by striking "1202" and inserting "1203".

(6) Paragraph (4) of section 691(c) is amended inserting "1203", after "1202".

(7) The second sentence of section 871(a)(2) is amended by inserting "or 1203" after "section 1202".

(8) The last sentence of section 104(d) is amended by striking "1202" and inserting "1203".

(9) Paragraph (1) of section 1402(1) is amended by inserting "; and the deduction provided by section 1202 and the exclusion provided by section 1203 shall not apply" before the period at the end.

(10) Section 121 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(h) CROSS REFERENCE.—

"For treatment of eligible gain not excluded under subsection (a), see section 1203."

(11) Section 1203, as redesignated by subsection (a), is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(i) CROSS REFERENCE.—

"For treatment of eligible gain not excluded under subsection (a), see section 1203."

(12) The table of sections for part I of subchapter P of chapter 1 is amended by striking the item relating to section 1206 and by inserting after the item relating to section 1201 the following new items:

"Sec. 1202. Capital gains deduction.

"Sec. 1203. 50-percent exclusion for gain from certain small business stock.

(2) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2005.

(2) COLLECTIBLES.—The amendments made by subsection (d) shall apply to sales and exchanges after December 31, 2006.

AMENDMENT NO. 1496

Purpose: (Purpose of this amendment: manager's amendment) The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, amendment No. 1496 is agreed to.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "amendments submitted.")

Mr. ROTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House companion bill, Calendar No. 234, H.R. 2480. I further ask consent that all after the enacting clause be stricken, and the text of the Senate bill be inserted in lieu thereof, the bill then be read for the third time and passed, with a motion to reconsider laid upon the table. I also ask consent that the Senate then insist on its amendments and request a conference with the House. I finally ask consent that the passage of S. 1429 be vinticated and the bill be placed back on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (H.R. 2480), as amended, was passed.

(The bill will be printed in a future edition of the RECORD.)

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I rise first to compliment my senior colleague from Delaware on his effectiveness. We agree on an awful lot of things. We disagree on this tax bill, but that in no way diminishes my admiration for his effectiveness. As a matter of fact, this is one of the few occasions I wish he were not as effective as he has been.

I compliment him and I echo the comments of my friend from New York who said he is held in affection by Members on both sides of the aisle. I am first among those. I congratulate him for his success. I will not use the word "deplorable," but I disagree strongly with the outcome. However, I admire the way in which he—and maybe only he—could have been able to put this together.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I congratulate the chairman of the Finance Committee and the ranking member of the Finance Committee for the outstanding work they have done together through this week to bring together a bill that could have bipartisan support in the Senate.

I particularly thank Senator ROTH for the depth of understanding he has on tax issues, the way he has worked across the aisle, the way he has worked through such a variety of measures. There were over 126 amendments we have just done. He understood and worked through and negotiated those into a package that I hope will be accepted by the House and signed by the President.

As the accountant in the Senate, I have been fascinated by the debate we have had this week. I volunteered to serve late a couple of nights. For us accountants, what we have seen here this week has been live entertainment—some of the finest stuff you can see on television.

I know my fellow accountants across the nation have been watching. While we did not get the simplification we would have liked to have had, and that simplification is necessary for the American people, we have gotten some very exciting, necessary provisions, some provisions where all Americans taxpayer will receive back part of the overpayment they paid in.

We have made a dent in the death taxes. We fixed the marriage penalty—eventually, with a start immediately, and a myriad of other provisions in there that will affect the lives of literally every person in the United States.

I thank the chairman of the committee who has been a part of the last great tax relief that was done as well as this great tax relief.

I thank the chairman and my colleagues who worked on and supported this measure.

I yield the floor.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I also associate myself with the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming commending Senator ROTH and the Finance Committee for their work on this very important landmark tax relief legislation the Senate passed today. I believe, in taking the step we did today, in lowering the tax burden upon the American people from 21 percent of GDP to 20 percent of the gross domestic product, we have taken a modest but a very important step in providing relief to all Americans. I commend the Senate today, and the President, and ask the President to reconsider his proposed veto.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate now proceed to a period of morning business with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BALKAN HISTORICAL PARALLELS

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, yesterday the Committee on Foreign Relations held a hearing on the prospects for democracy in Yugoslavia. Testifying were two of the Administration’s top Balkan experts, two leading representatives of the non-governmental organization community with wide and deep experience in the Balkans, the executive director of the Office of External Affairs of the Serbian Orthodox Church in the United States, and a courageous woman from Belgrade who chairs the Helsinki Committee for Human Rights in Serbia.

One of the many topics raised during this hearing was the question of the correctness of the decision of the United States to refuse to give reconstruction assistance—as distinct from humanitarian assistance—to Serbia as long as the Government of Serbia remained in control in Belgrade. I completely support the Administration’s policy in this matter, which, I am certain, comes as no surprise to any of my colleagues.

Since on this very day President Clinton and more than forty other world leaders are meeting in Sarajevo to discuss a so-called Balkans Stability Pact, which would deliver reconstruction assistance on a regional basis, I thought it would be appropriate at this time briefly to discuss two alleged historical parallels, one of which I believe is fallacious, the other which I would assert is directly applicable to the current situation.

At yesterday’s hearing it was asserted that there was a moral imperative for NATO countries to offer reconstruction aid to Serbia just as after World War II the United States included Germany in its Marshall Plan assistance.

Mr. President, I would submit that this intended parallel falls short in several respects. First of all, in spite of twelve brutal years of criminal Nazi rule, post-war Germany still had the democratic tradition of Weimar as a basis for rebuilding its political system, with several prominent surviving leaders. Nothing like that exists in today’s Germany, and cooperation with neighboring countries. Needless to say, the Serbia of Slobodan Milosevic would qualify on none of those grounds.

Finally, in order to guide post-war Germany toward democracy, the victorious allies occupied the country, dividing up responsibility into four zones. The Soviets quickly made clear their intention to impose communism in what became East Germany, and Stalin pressured the East Germans and other satellite countries to refuse the offer of Marshall Plan aid. In the U.S., British, and French zones of Germany, however, hundreds of thousands of troops and civilian officials essentially ran political life until the Federal Republic of Germany was established in 1949, and allied troops have remained until today.

It may well be that in order to bring Serbia into the family of democratic nations just such an international occupation would have to happen, but it is simply not in the cards.

So, Mr. President, the alleged parallel of today’s Serbia with post-war Germany is totally inappropriate.

There is, however, a historical parallel chronologically much closer to today, which is, in fact, an appropriate one. That is the case of the Republika Srpska, one of the two entities of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

After the Dayton Accords were signed in late 1995 and the two entities—the Bosniak-Croat Federation and the Republika Srpska—were established, the Congress of the United States put together a reconstruction assistance package. Because of the brutal war, which began in 1992 and ended in 1995, the legislation excluded the new Republika Srpska, then under Karadzic’s control, from any reconstruction assistance except for infrastructural projects like energy and water, which spanned the inter-entity boundary line with the Federation. That meant that in the immediate post-Dayton period the Federation received about ninety-eight percent of American development assistance to Bosnia.

Largely as a result of this policy, the Federation’s economy immediately began to recover from the war, while the Republika Srpska, under Karadzic’s control in the town of Pale, stagnated.

But our policy has not been one exclusively of sticks; there have also been carrots. If localities in the Republika Srpska cooperated with Dayton implementation, the U.S. Agency for International Development was prepared to channel assistance to them. USAID lays down strict conditions in contracts with the local leaders. The policy is not perfect, and it is carefully monitored by Congress. But, in general, it has worked, and it has had positive results.

People in the Republika Srpska saw the economic resuscitation of the Federation and noticed the assistance that a few of their own localities were receiving. They compared this modest, but undeniable economic progress with the persistent, grinding poverty of most of the Republika Srpska, led by Karadzic and his corrupt, criminal gang in Pale, which had been effectively isolated. The indicted war criminal Karadzic was finally banned from political life, but one of his puppets took his place.

No matter how ultra-nationalistic or even racist many of the people in the Republika Srpska were, most of the population caught on pretty quickly that their future was an absolute zero as long as their current leaders stayed in office.

The result was a reform movement, initially led by Mrs. Plavsic, which legally wrested control from the Pale thugs and moved the capital of the Republika Srpska to Banja Luka. Last year she lost an election, but the government of the Republika Srpska is now led by Prime Minister Dodik, a genuine democrat, who has survived attempts from Belgrade by Milosevic to unseat him, is supported by a multi-ethnic parliamentary coalition, kept the lid on the situation during the Yugoslav air campaign, and now is beginning to implement Dayton.

The situation in Bosnia, as we all know, is far from satisfactory, but real progress has been made back to my original point, in the Republika Srpska we have the real historical parallel of a policy of excluding a government from economic reconstruction assistance as long as it is ruled by an indicted war criminal or his puppet.

I hope this discussion of historical precedents may be helpful as the Senate continues to debate our Balkan reconstruction policy.

REGULATORY OPENNESS AND FAIRNESS ACT OF 1999

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President I rise today to speak on the Regulatory Openness and Fairness Act of 1999, of which I am an original cosponsor.

This legislation will ensure that the Food Quality Protection Act (FQPA) will carry out its original intent while protecting agricultural producers from unnecessary regulations. The FQPA, enacted in 1996, was put in place to ensure that highest level of food safety. This is a necessary and worthwhile goal. However, the EPA currently makes rulings that are based on data

ALBRIGHT, Chinese Foreign Minister Hold ‘Very Friendly Lunch.’” The article reads in part:

Lee’s announcement triggered a ferocious response by Beijing. Washington also criticized it and dispatched a representative to pressure Taiwan to modify its statement.

Today, Albright said that Richard Bush, the U.S. envoy to Taiwan, told Lee “that there needs to be . . . a peaceful resolution to this and a dialogue. And I think that the explanations offered thus far don’t quite do it.”

Mr. President, this is an amazing as it is outrageous. Rather than defend the Republic of China on Taiwan and its right to live in peace and choose its own form of government, Secretary of State Albright has a “very friendly lunch” with one of the highest ranking members of the repressive communist Chinese regime while one of her assistants reprimands and pressures Taiwan to appease China. Can it truly be our nation’s policy is to protect China from Taiwan?

Taiwan is not the bully in this matter. Taiwan deserves America’s com-mittment to defend it against China’s threats. Our nation should proudly and firmly stand by Taiwan, a blooming and prosperous democracy where free speech, religious freedom and the benefits of capitalism are practiced and enjoyed. The United States should stand in the future, as it has in the past, for freedom and democracy wherever those great qualities are threatened by the forces of repression.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article “On The Wrong

ON THE WRONG SIDE
(By Michael Kelly)

Back in the dead, dark days when the Democratic Party stood for dreams a bit loftier than clinging to power, the labor wing of the party liked to ask a question: “Whose tide are you on?” It was a good question because it was an awkward one and an inescapable one. The question presents itself these days, awkwardly and inescapably as always, in the matter of Taiwan and China. Whose side are we on?

On the one hand, we have Taiwan, which is an ally and a democracy. It is not a perfect ally nor a perfect democracy (but neither is the United States). Formed out of the nationalist movement that lost China to Mao’s Communists, Taiwan increasingly has wished for independent statehood. In recent years, as the island has become more democratic and more wealthy, it has become more aggressive in expressing this wish.

On the one hand, we have China. The Peoples’ Republic is a doddering, desperate despotism, in whose desperate, unrepentant regime the genius of China is but barely survives, only by the power of the gun, over a billion people who would rather live in freedom. China has always regarded Taiwan as an illegitimately errant province, ultimately to be subjugated to Beijing’s rule. In recent years, as China’s rulers have found themselves increasingly uneasy on their thrones, they have at times attempted, in a refuge of dictators, to excite popular support by threatening belligerence against an exterior effeminate— in this case, Taiwan.

For two decades, the United States has supported a deliberately ambiguous policy, which says that there should be “one China,” but carefully does not say who should rule that China. Ambiguity is well suited for a long time, but it is a Cold War relic whose logic has expired, and its days are run-ing out.

Two weeks ago, Taiwan’s president, Lee Teng-hui, recognized this reality and said that henceforth Taiwan and China should deal with each other on a “state-to-state” basis. Beijing reacted with its usual hysterical bellicosity. This week, Chinese Foreman Minister Tang Jiaxuan used a session of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations to again threaten Taiwan: “If there occur any action for Taiwan independence and any attempt by foreign forces to separate Taiwan from the motherland, the Chinese people and government will not sit back,” Tang said. He added a warning to Secretary of State Madeleine Albright “to be very careful not to say anything to fan the flames of independence.”

But to worry. Neither Madame Secretary nor anyone else in the Clinton administration has the slightest intention of fanning freedom’s flames. Quite the contrary. The administration has reacted to Lee’s “state-to-state” remarks by repeatedly reassuring Beijing that the United States is entirely at it in this matter. On Monday Albright made a point of saying that Lee’s efforts to back off of his remarks “thus far don’t quite do it.” So, we are on China’s side.

We are on the side of a regime that, the administration and its own Justice Department us, has engaged in (1) a massive and perhaps still ongoing campaign to steal America’s most valuable nuclear secrets; and (2) an effort to corrupt the 1996 elections by funneling cash to, principally, the Clinton-Gore campaign and the Democratic National Committee.

We are on the side of a regime that, the ad-mnistration assures, is becoming more tol-grant of political freedom. Is that so? Beijing has nullified the promise of political rights that China’s leaders have given to Taiwan since Clinton began his policy of “constructive engagement” with China. Most recently, Beijing has been hosting old-fashioned, Stalinist shows of political dissidents; three organizers of the fledgling China Democratic Party drew sentences of, respectively, 13, 12 and 11 years.

China also continues its campaign to destroy independent religious movements. According to the group Human Rights in China, the regime arrested 7,410 leaders of the Protestant house-church movement in two months last year. Currently, Beijing is undertaking a countrywide effort to stamp out the spiritual movement Falun Gong. The New York Times reports that more than 5,000 people have been arrested, and 1,200 government officials who are movement members have been expelled from schools to study Communist Party doctrine.

We are on the side of a regime that forces away women who give “unplanned” births; a regime that exploits the accidental bombing of its embassy to into an American anti-American riot, threatening U.S. city into a regime that sells weapons of mass destruction to rogue states inimical to U.S. interests.

We are acting against a regime that seeks democracy, independence, unification, and

Mr. CLELAND. Mr. President, I rise today to express my continued support for the U.S. Army School of the Americas (SOA), located at Fort Benning, Georgia. Legislation has been introduced by my colleagues both in the House and the Senate which would close the School of the Americas, and last evening the House adopted an amendment to do so. Mr. President, I rise to support the School of the Americas and the vital mission it performs in encouraging diplomacy and democracy within the militaries located in the Americas.

The School of the Americas has been a key instrument of U.S. foreign policy in Latin and Southern America for over fifty years and is the single most important instrument of our National Security Strategy of engagement in the Southern hemisphere.

The legislation opposing the School has been accompanied by a mountain of communications alleging that this School, operated by the U.S. Army and funded by taxpayers’ dollars, is the cause of horrendous human rights abuses in Central and South America. In twelve separate investigations since 1989, the Department of Defense, the Army, the GAO and others have found nothing to suggest that the School either taught or inspired Latin Americans to commit such crimes. Yet, sponsors of these measures reproduce the critics’ list of atrocities allegedly committed by a small number of graduates in order to transfer responsibility for these crimes to the backs of the School and those who dare to question the very same values that the Army teaches its own soldiers. These U.S. military personnel receive the same training as all graduates of our military schools. To suggest that terrorist activities are taught to students is no more relevant than to the individual themselves.

The School is, and always has been, a U.S. Army training and education institution teaching the same tactics, techniques, and procedures taught at other Army installations. The very same values that the Army teaches its own soldiers. These U.S. military personnel receive the same training as all graduates of our military schools. To suggest that terrorist activities are taught to students would suggest that we in fact teach terrorist activities to all of our own military personnel. This is assuredly not the case.

The School is commanded by a U.S. Army colonel whose chain of command includes the Commanding General of the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command. The School also receives oversight and direction from the Commander-in-Chief of U.S. Southern Command. The School’s staff and faculty includes over 170 U.S. Army officers, noncommissioned officers, enlisted soldiers, and Department of the Army civilians. The School counts among its graduates over 1,500 U.S. military personnel including five general officers currently serving on active duty in our military.

I agree completely with critics of the School that “Human rights is not a partisan issue,” and I further agree that, in the past there were indeed some shortcomings of the School’s fulfillment of its mission to transmit all of the values we hold dear in our country. In that regard, today, the U.S. Army School of the Americas has the U.S. Army’s premier human rights training program. The program has been expanded in recent years in consultation with the International Committee of the Red Cross and Mr. Steve Schneebaum, a noted human rights attorney and a member of the School’s Board of Visitors. Every student and instructor at the School receives mandatory human rights instruction and the International Committee of the Red Cross teaches human rights each year during the School’s Command and General Staff and Peace Operations course. Last year 900 Latin American soldiers, civilians, and police received human rights instruction at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

Latin America is currently undergoing an unparalleled transformation to democratic governance, civilian control of the military, and economic reform along free market principles. Almost every nation in Latin America has a democratically elected government. During this transition, the region’s militaries have accepted structural cuts, reduced budgets, and cut-tailed influence in society. In many cases, their acceptance of this new reality has been encouraged and enhanced by the strategy of engagement of the U.S. Army School of the Americas is an integral part. However, many Latin American democracies are fragile. True change does not occur in days, months, or even years. We must continue to engage Latin American governments, including their militaries. Marginalizing or ignoring the militaries of the region will not help in consolidating hard-won democracy but, instead, will have the opposite effect. Our efforts to engage the militaries of the region are more important and more relevant than ever. The U.S. Army School of the Americas is unique in this regard because it trains and educates large numbers of Latin American students who cannot be accommodated in other U.S. military service schools due to limited student spaces and the inability of other U.S. military schools to teach in Spanish.

Over the years, changes have been made to enhance the School’s focus on human rights and diplomacy. Recently introduced courses such as Democratic Sustainment, Humanitarian Demining, International Peacekeeping Operations, Counternarcotics Operations, and Human Rights Train-the-Trainer, directly support shared security interests in the region, and are not offered elsewhere. Other proposals include placing the School under the jurisdiction of U.S. Southern Command and expanding the Board of Visitors to include congressional membership—both proposals which I strongly support.

By focusing on the negative, critics ignore the many recent positive contributions that U.S. Army School of the Americas graduates have made. In 1985, this nation helped broker a cease fire between Peru and Ecuador when a historical border dispute threatened to ignite into war. The key members of the delegations that put together that accord were U.S. Army School of the Americas graduates, from Peru, from Ecuador, and from the guarantor nations of the United States and Chile. In fact, the Commander of the U.S. contingent to the multinational peacekeeping force, who received special recognition from the commander-in-chief, was a graduate of the School, appointed as part of the extraordinary contribution to U.S. diplomacy. ’’ was a 1986 graduate of the School’s Command and General Staff course, and serves as the current Commandant of the School. More recently, in 1997, the President of Ecuador was removed from office, creating a constitutional crisis. Some of the people of Ecuador called for the military to take power, but their military refused. Many of the officers in the high command were U.S. Army School of the Americas graduates. Finally, less than four months ago, the President of Paraguay was impeached for misconduct. Once again, a constitutional crisis ensued. Once again, the military refused to take power, but their military refused. Many of the officers in that military were U.S. Army School of the Americas graduates, including one general officer who played a key role in the resolution.

I ask each of you to take a careful look at the U.S. Army School of the Americas as it exists today. Look to the future. As stated by the School’s critics, “The contentious politics of U.S. foreign policy in Central America in the 1980s are over. ’’ I strongly urge you to continue your support of the Army School of the Americas and the U.S. Army.

REGULATORY FAIRNESS AND OPENNESS ACT

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I rise today to signify my support for the introduction of the Regulatory Fairness and Openness Act of 1999. According to data compiled in the last five years, the State of Washington produces more than 230 food, feed and seed crops; ranks in the top five for the value of the value of its vegetables produced; leads the nation in the production of apples, spearmint oil, red raspberries, hops, edible peas and lentils, asparagus, sweet cherries, and... pears; is second in the nation in the production of winter wheat, potatoes, Concord grapes, and carrots; and contributes $5 billion, three hundred sixty-two million, two hundred ninety-one million (five trillion, five hundred forty-three billion, twenty-six thousand, eight hundred forty million) to the State’s economy annually. Not only do all these facts signify the importance of the agriculture industry to the State of Washington and the nation, but highlight the importance of having the proper tools and chemicals necessary to produce one of the most abundant, economical, and safest food supplies in the world.

I agreed to be an original cosponsor the Regulatory Fairness and Openness Act of 1999 for many reasons, but the most significant reason comes down to common sense. I supported the passage of the Food Quality Protection Act in 1996 and still believe in the intent of the legislation. However, recent accounts of overestimation, thereby overcite concern about the practical application of reliable data and science to the process.

Just this week a 25-year-old apple farmer from Orondo, Washington, visited my office to voice her concerns over the implementation of FQPA. Karen Simmons explained that with the current manner in which FQPA is being implemented, entire classes of pesticides are threatened with elimination. Should these tools of agriculture be lost, an orchard like Karen’s faces possible extinction. Karen’s story is not the first I’ve heard, as farmers from Washington have been invaluable in expressing their concerns to me over the future of their livelihood.

Karen’s account mimics the thousands of reports by my colleagues and I have heard from growers across this country. Karen, like many farmers, never follows the application suggestions prescribed by the chemicals she has it as a tool. Should this tool be eliminated altogether, Karen’s crop is in jeopardy. That is why it is imperative that we incorporate into the implementation of FQPA a rulemaking process that allows growers to utilize the ability to divulge actual usage and to apply practical sense to the process. How could we suggest threatening the livelihood of the American farmer and others, while not providing for them an avenue to participate, comment and clarify?

Children’s health is equally important, and, as several of my colleagues have suggested, improper application of the FQPA to household pest controls could create a host of health hazards for children and the elderly. For example, there is a real threat that current FQPA implementation could eliminate the use of some household insecticides and repellants. As many of you know, children and the elderly are susceptible to disease, often carried by cockroaches and other insects. Improper control of these pests could equate to serious health hazards across the nation, a scenario none of us predicted with the passage of FQPA.

And again, I have to wonder if the intent of the legislation is not to alter the importance or significance of human health, but to ensure that decisions regarding health risks are informed and not hasty, that the intent of the FQPA is to make certain all decisions and tolerance standards are healthy and equitable.

Without question, the United States produces the most abundant, desirable, inexpensive, and safest food supplies in the world. The FQPA must be implemented in a fashion that not only takes into account these very facts, but continues to consider the needs, choices and health of the American consumer.

I thank my colleagues for their continuing interest in this issue, and look forward to working with everyone to pass the Regulatory Fairness and Openness Act of 1999.

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak for a moment about the Regulatory Fairness and Openness Act that I am pleased to co-sponsor with a number of my colleagues who are concerned about the state of agriculture today. I want to thank Senator HAGEL and his staff for their work on this legislation which reflects the input of a number of agriculture groups, including the American Farm Bureau Federation.

When the Congress passed the Food Quality Protection Act in 1996, the idea was to update our pesticide laws so that our farmers could continue to provide the safest and most economical food supply in the world. FQPA eliminated the outdated zero-tolerance Delaney clause for pesticide residues and provided the EPA a framework to review and approve pesticides based on the best available science and practical application, that a dose of common sense is applied, and that adequate time is available to make certain all decisions and tolerance standards are healthy and equitable.

The very bad debt boxscore

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, at the close of business yesterday, Thursday, July 29, 1999, the Federal debt stood at $5,640,577,276,144. Five trillion, six hundred forty billion, five hundred seventy-seven million, two hundred seventy-six thousand, eight hundred forty dollars and fourteen cents.

One year ago, July 29, 1998, the Federal debt stood at $5,543,291,000,000 (Five trillion, five hundred forty-three billion, two hundred ninety-one million).

Five years ago, July 29, 1994, the Federal debt stood at $5,368,362,000,000 (Five trillion, three hundred sixty-two billion, three hundred sixty-two million).

Twenty-five years ago, July 29, 1974, the Federal debt stood at...
$476,155,000,000 (Four hundred seventy-six billion, one hundred fifty-five million) which reflects a debt increase of more than $5 trillion—$5,164,422,276,840.14 (Five trillion, one hundred sixty-four billion, four hundred seventy-six thousand, eight hundred forty dollars and fourteen cents) during the past 2 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized.

WETLANDS RESERVE PROGRAM ENHANCEMENT ACT

Mr. Hutchison. Mr. President, earlier this week I introduced the Hutchinson-Lincoln Wetlands Reserve Program Enhancement Act to help strengthen the popular Wetlands Reserve Program administered by the Natural Resources Conservation Service. Simply put, this legislation will act to strengthen the current WRP which provides financial incentives to farmers and private landowners who voluntarily set aside marginal lands and restore them to optimal wetland wildlife habitat.

These restored wildlife areas are some of the best wildlife conservation habitat in America and are critical to the future of waterfowl throughout our Nation. Established by the 1990 farm bill as a long-term conservation option for farmers, the WRP protects farm wetlands using 10-year, 30-year, and permanent easements. Land which is eligible for WRP is characterized by wetlands that are farmed, lands adjacent to protected wetlands, and croplands and pastures which are naturally prone to flooding.

If eligible, the landowner voluntarily limits the use of the lands while retaining private ownership and access to the land. In addition, they may also lease the land for hunting, fishing, and other undeveloped recreational activities. The NRCS, in conjunction with the landowner, then develops a plan for the restoration and the maintenance of the wetland.

Once restored, wetlands act to: No. 1, improve water quality by filtering sediments; No. 2, reduce flooding; No. 3, recharge ground water; No. 4, promote biological diversity; and No. 5, furnish educational, recreational, and aesthetic benefits. These benefits, as a result of the WRP, have helped landowners throughout the 46 States where farmers have currently enrolled in what has become a very successful program.

At the local level, I want to mention three farmers in Arkansas who are benefiting from the WRP. Hattie Neely of Moro, AR, in Lee County, grows soybeans and has enrolled 31 acres in this very important program. Then there is Donna Wallace of Gillett, AR, in Arkansas County, who grows soybeans, and he has enrolled 30 acres in the WRP. And Dick Carmichael of Monticello, AR, in Drew County, grows soybeans and rice and has enrolled 115 acres in the WRP.

In each case, these farmers are using the WRP to restore bottom land hardwood forests and a natural wildlife habitat. Other farmers in Arkansas are using WRP to retire agricultural lands unsuited for crop production because of elevated levels of salt from irrigation water. In this case, WRP lands filter runoffs, keeping salts and sediments in the wetlands and out of the natural waterways.

Despite the benefits to farmers across America, the WRP will soon become a victim of its own success. The current WRP is authorized to enroll up to 975,000 acres nationally through the year 2002. WRP is in such high demand from America’s farmers that it will reach its acreage cap next year. The top 10 States—Louisiana, Mississippi, Arkansas, California, Missouri, Iowa, Texas, Florida, Oklahoma, and Illinois—have a combined enrollment of almost 427,000 acres in these States alone.

In response to the success of WRP, my bill seeks to expand the acreage cap from the proposed 180,000 acres in fiscal year 2000 to a newly authorized maximum of 250,000 acres per year through the year 2005. This will help to ensure that farmers who want to enroll in the program will have the option to do so.

There is no doubt that the American farmer faces an industry that is in crisis. To find solutions for the many challenges facing farmers, I want to ensure that my colleagues in the Senate do not overlook the importance of conservation to family farmers, both as a way to protect valuable wildlife resources and as a source of additional income.

In the Mississippi Delta, family farmers are using the WRP to move frequently flooded farmland away from high-risk, high-cost farming back to original hardwood timberlands.

Mr. President, I thank you for this opportunity to speak on behalf of family farmers who care about protecting the natural resources with which they are entrusted. I ask my colleagues to consider the importance of wildlife conservation in the life of family farmers. Join me in the support of what I think is very good, very important, bipartisan conservation legislation.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 3:20 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bill, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

The page numbers of the House act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that pursuant to section 5(b) of Public Law 93-642 (20 U.S.C. 2004(b)), the Speaker appoints the following Members of the House as Members of the Board of Trustees of the Harry S. Truman Scholarship Foundation: Mrs. Emerson of Missouri and Mr. Skelton of Missouri.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 900) to enhance competition in the financial services industry by providing a prudential framework for the affiliation of banks, securities firms, insurance companies, and other financial service providers, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, and agree to the conference as asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints the following Members as the managers of the conference on the part of the House:

From the Committee on Banking and Financial Services, for consideration of the Senate bill, and the House amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. Leach, Mr. McCollum, Mrs. Roukema, Mr. Berreuter, Mr. Baker, Mr. LaHood, Mr. Bachus, Mr. carrots, Mr. LaFalce, Mr. Vitter, Mr. Baca, Mr. Carper, and Mr. La Malfa.

As additional conferees from the Committee on Banking and Financial Services, for consideration of titles I, III (except section 304) IV, and VII of the Senate bill, and title I of the House amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. Frank of Massachusetts, Mr. Kanjorski, Ms. Waters, and Mrs. Maloney of New York.

As additional conferees from the Committee on Banking and Financial Services, for consideration of title V of the Senate bill, and title II of the House amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. Kanjorski, Mrs. Maloney of New York, Mr. WATT of North Carolina, and Mr. Maloney of Connecticut.

As additional conferees from the Committee on Banking and Financial Services, for consideration of title II of the Senate bill, and title III of the House amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. Kanjorski, Mrs. Maloney of New York, Ms. Velázquez, and Ms. Hooley of Oregon.

Provided further, That Mr. MEHAN is appointed in lieu of Mr. Berman for consideration of sections 741, 1501, 1505, 1534-35, and titles V, VI, and IX of the Senate amendment.

From the Committee on Education and the Workforce, for consideration of the House bill, and the Senate amendment (except sections 741, 1501, 1505, 1534-35, and titles V, VI, and IX), and modifications committed to conference: Mr. BLILY and Mr. DINGELL.

Provided, That Mr. BILIRAKIS is appointed for consideration of sections 1365 and 1401-03 of the House bill, and sections 1504, 1515, and 1523 of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference: Mr. BLILY and Mr. DINGELL.

Whereas, to obtain delegation of federal environmental programs to states, it must demonstrate that it has adopted laws, regulations, and policies as stringent as federal laws, regulations, and policies.

Whereas, over the past 25 years, the states have developed and demonstrated expertise in operation of federal environmental programs enabling states to obtain and maintain the delegation.

Whereas, the state of Utah, Colorado, Montana, Wyoming, North Dakota, and South Dakota constitute an area designated by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) as Region VIII.

Whereas, the states in Region VIII make compliance with environmental laws, rules, and permits the highest priority.

Whereas, the state of Utah has full delegation in all federal environmental programs.

Whereas, the EPA and the states have bilaterally developed over the past 25 years policy agreements which reflect roles and which recognize that the primary responsibility for enforcement and compliance resides with the states.

Whereas, the EPA taking enforcement action principally when the state requests assistance or is unwilling or unable to take timely and appropriate enforcement actions.

Whereas, inconsistent with these policy agreements, the EPA has conducted direct federal inspections within programs delegated to the states, has taken direct enforcement actions, has levied fines and penalties against regulated entities in cases where the state previously took appropriate action consistent with its agreements to bring the entities into compliance, and has failed to notify the states in advance of their action.

Whereas, the EPA had begun to use its enforcement authority in cases where the state had worked with the regulated entity to achieve compliance, and the overreaching by the EPA accomplished no further protection of the public health or environment but only imposed an additional penalty on the regulated entity.

Whereas, the EPA’s current enforcement practices have taken the advantage of failed oversight and overstepping of state actions substantially weaken the state’s ability to take compliance actions and resolve environmental problems.

Whereas, the EPA’s enforcement practices and policies have had an adverse impact on working relationships between the EPA and states.

Whereas, the EPA’s reliance on the threat of enforcement action to force compliance may not result in environmental protection, but rather may result in delay and litigation, cripple incentives for technological innovation and provoke animosity between government, industry, and the public.

Whereas, the Western Governor’s Association has adopted “Principles of Environmental Protection in the West,” which encourages collaboration not polarization, advocates the replacement of command and control with economic incentives and rewarding results and encourages the weighing of costs against benefits in environmental decisions.

Now, therefore, be it

RESOLVED, That the Legislature of the state of Utah, the Governor, and the Council of State Governments, the Western Governor’s Association, the Administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, the Assistant Administrator of the U.S. EPA Office of Enforcement and Compliance, the Regional Administrator of the U.S. EPA Region VIII, the National Governors’ Association, the National Council of State Legislators, the Council of State Governments, the Western Governor’s Association, and the Environmental Council of the States.

Be it further RESOLVED, That the Legislature and the Governor request the Congress of the United States to investigate EPA enforcement activities and require the EPA to defer to state enforcement and compliance actions in delegated states where the actions achieve compliance and are protective of health and the environment.

Be it further RESOLVED, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, each member of the Utah congressional delegation, the Administrator of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, the Assistant Administrator of the U.S. EPA Office of Enforcement and Compliance, the Regional Administrator of the U.S. EPA Region VIII, the National Governors’ Association, the National Council of State Legislators, the Council of State Governments, the Western Governor’s Association, and the Environmental Council of the States.

Be it further RESOLVED, That the resolution be published by the World Health Organization; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Be it RESOLVED by the Legislature of the State of Utah:

Whereas, good health is a basic right for every citizen of the world and access to the highest standards of health information and services is necessary to help guarantee this right.

Whereas, direct and unobstructed participation in international health cooperation forms and programs is therefore crucial, especially with today’s greater potential for the cross-border spread of various communicable diseases through increased trade and travel.

Whereas, the World Health Organization set in the first Global Health Summit the objective of attaining the highest possible level of health for all people.

Whereas, in 1977 the World Health Organization published “Health for All” for all by the year 2000” as its overriding priority and reaffirmed that central vision with the initiation of its “Health for All” renewal process in 1996.

Whereas, Taiwan’s population of 21 million people is larger than that of ¾ of the member states already in the World Health Organization and shares the noble goals of the organization.

Whereas, Taiwan’s achievements in the field of health are innovative and unparalleled in one of the highest life expectancy levels in Asia, maternal and infant mortality rates comparable to those of western countries, the eradication of such infectious diseases as cholera, smallpox, and the plague, the first country in the world to provide children with hepatitis B vaccination.

Whereas, prior to 1972 and the loss of membership in the World Health Organization, Taiwan sent specialists to serve in other member countries’ public health projects and its health experts held key positions in the organization, all to the benefit of the entire Pacific region.

Whereas, Taiwan is not allowed to participate in may World Health Organization-organized forums and workshops concerning the Whereas, in recent years both the Taiwanese Government and individual Taiwanese experts have expressed a willingness to assist in the technical aspects of the World Health Organization-supported international aid and health activities, but have ultimately been unable to render such assistance;

Whereas, according to the constitutions of the World Health Organization, Taiwan does not fulfill the criteria for membership;

Whereas, the World Health Organization does not allow observers to participate in the activities of the organization; and

Whereas, in light of all of the benefits that such participation could bring to the state of health not only in Taiwan, but also regionally and globally:

Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That the legislature of the State of Utah urge the Clinton Administration to support Taiwan and its 21 million people in obtaining appropriate and meaningful participation in the World Health Organization.

Be it further Resolved, That United States policy should include the pursuit of some initiatives to make the World Health Organization, which will give Taiwan meaningful participation in a manner that is consistent with such organization’s requirements.

Be it further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the United States Secretary of State, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the members of Utah’s congressional delegation, the Government of Taiwan, and the World Health Organization.

POM–282. A resolution adopted by the House of the Legislature of the State of Michigan relative to imported apple juice concentrate; to the Committee on Finance.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 51

Whereas, the production of apple juice concentrate is an important component of Michigan’s agricultural bounty; Michigan, which is traditionally the third largest apple-growing state, is the nation’s top apple-processing state. This record of consistency has been achieved in the face of many uncertain times in farming, including wild swings in our Midwestern weather; and

Whereas, in recent years, however, our apple growers and processors have come to face even more serious threats from foreign sources of apple juice concentrate selling their products in this country at artificially low costs. From an average imported price of $12 per gallon in 1995, the price has fallen by fifty percent. This is far below the break-even point for American growers. Coupled with the erosion of export opportunities due to the troubled economies in the Asian markets, Michigan apple growers and those in other states face severe threats to their livelihood; and

 Whereas, The opening up of markets that has taken place in the past few years has brought many benefits. However, there can be situations in which the removal of restrictions on trade offers the chance for abuses. When a country, for whatever purpose, encourages certain activities by helping a specific industry gain an unfair advantage through below-cost prices, steps need to be taken to ensure the viability of American economic and social interests. The United States Department of Agriculture has taken steps to assist certain American farmers on a number of occasions. The possibility of unfair advantages due to dumping, or “dumping” on the American market is a situation that demands immediate attention and thorough study; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and the members of the Michigan congressional delegation.

POM–283. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire relative to tobacco settlement funds; to the Committee on Finance.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 12

Whereas, on November 22, 1998, representatives from 46 states signed a settlement agreement with the 5 largest tobacco manufacturers; and

Whereas, the Attorneys General Master Tobacco Settlement Agreement culminated legal action that began in 1994 when states began filing lawsuits against the tobacco industry; and

Whereas, the respective states are presently in the process of finalizing the terms of the Master Tobacco Settlement Agreement, and are making initial fiscal determinations relative to the most responsible and means to utilize the settlement funds; and

Whereas, under the terms of the agreement, tobacco manufacturers will pay $206 billion over the next 25 years to the respective states in up-front and annual payments; and

Whereas, New Hampshire is projected to receive $1,304,689,150 through the year 2025 under the terms of the Master Tobacco Settlement; and

Whereas, because many state lawsuits sought to recover Medicaid funds spent to treat illnesses caused by tobacco use, the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA) continues to be authorized and obligated, under the Social Security Act, to collect its share of any tobacco settlement funds attributable to Medicaid recoupment.

Whereas, the Master Tobacco Settlement Agreement does not address the Medicaid recoupment issue, and thus the Social Security Act must be amended to resolve the recoupment issue in favor of the respective states; and

Whereas, as we move toward final approval of the Master Tobacco Settlement Agreement, it is imperative that state sovereignty be preserved; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the State House of Representatives, the Senate concurring, That the New Hampshire legislature urges the United States Congress to enact legislation amending the Social Security Act to prohibit recoupment by the federal government of state tobacco settlement funds; and

That it is the sense of the New Hampshire state legislature that the respective state legislature be authorized to act over the appropriation and expenditure of state tobacco settlements funds; and

That the New Hampshire state legislature urges the following efforts by the federal government to earmark or impose any other restrictions on the respective states’ use of state tobacco settlement funds; and

That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the house clerk to the President of the United States; the President and the Speaker of the United States Senate, the Speaker and the Clerk of the United States House of Representatives; and to each member of New Hampshire’s congressional delegation.
WHEREAS, actions of one branch of government in encroachment upon the duties and authority of another branch create the Constitution’s checks and balances against abuse of power by any branch;

WHEREAS, the United States Supreme Court has asserted that federal judges have the power under the United States Constitution to levy or increase taxes;

WHEREAS, this determination places the judicial branch of government in direct competition with state legislatures and limits the fiscal resources available to legislatures to serve their constituents’ needs;

WHEREAS, it also gives the federal judiciary a virtual veto-proof spending power over political choices and spending priorities of democratically elected state legislatures;

WHEREAS, federal courts continue to violate the United States Constitution by ordering states to levy or increase taxes to comply with federal mandates;

WHEREAS, a proposed amendment to the United States Constitution to prohibit the judiciary’s encroachment reads: “Neither the Supreme Court nor any inferior court of the United States shall have the power to instruct or order a state or political subdivision, to levy or increase taxes”; and

WHEREAS, encroachments by one branch of government upon the authority of another branch are, however, by constitutional amendment if necessary, to preserve the balance of power the founding fathers constructed;

NOW, therefore, be it Resolved, That the Legislature of the state of Utah urge the United States Congress to amend the United States Constitution to prohibit federal courts from levying or increasing taxes.

Be it further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be presented to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the President of the United States Senate, and to the members of Utah’s congressional delegation.

POM–286. A resolution adopted by the City Council of Canton, Ohio relative to the proposed “Civil Asset Forfeiture Reform Act”; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. Res. 169. A resolution commending General Wesley K. Clark, United States Army; to the Committee on Armed Services.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. CONRAD:
S. 1469. A bill to amend the Community Development Banking and Financial Institutions Act of 1994 with respect to the use of net migration loss as a measure of economic distress, to amend the Riegle Community Development and Regulatory Improvement Act of 1994, and for other purposes.

As many of my colleagues know, the CDFI Fund was established by the Riegle Community Development and Regulatory Improvement Act of 1994. This program is intended to stimulate the creation and expansion of diverse community development financial institutions. The fund invests federal resources in—and builds the capacity of—private, for-profit and nonprofit financial institutions, leveraging private capital and public-sector talent and creativity. The fund invests in CDFI’s using flexible tools such as equity investments, loans, grants, and deposits, depending upon market and institutional needs.

The Core Component is the CDFI Fund’s main program. In order to be certified for funding, an entity must demonstrate that it has a primary mission of promoting community development, principally serves an underserved investment area or targeted population, makes loan or development investments as its predominant business activity, provides development services, maintains accountability to its target market, and is a non-governmental entity.

In order for a geographical area to be eligible for investment, one of a number of objectively-defined economic distress criteria must be met.

The problem, Mr. President, is that the objective measures of economic distress as currently defined by the CDFI Fund do not fully reflect economic distress in low-population areas. Allow me to share just a couple examples with my colleagues.

First, significant parts of low-population rural states like North Dakota have historically low unemployment rates and therefore cannot qualify on that basis. In many rural areas unemployment remains statistically nearly non-existent despite—and in fact because of—a lack of non-agricultural jobs. In rural North Dakota, the unemployment rate is barely above the national average. When the returns to employment are so low, it is a difficult choice but to leave for urban areas.

The result is unemployment rates as low as two or three percent in rural parts of my state and the misleading impression of a strong economy. It is also worth noting that such rural areas often suffer from high underemployment.

Additionally, the CDFI Fund program considers an area economically distressed if median family income is at or below 80 percent of the national average, or if the percentage of the population living in poverty is at least 20 percent. Here again, Mr. President, these criteria do not accurately capture the extent of economic distress in low-population rural areas. Prolonged out-migration in many rural areas due to the loss of family farms and a short-age of non-agricultural jobs keeps median incomes at higher levels.

There are other economic distress criteria in the CDFI program. Mr. President, but they all share one thing in common: they do not register the unique economic distress found in a good part of rural America. This leads me to the most frustrating aspect of the CDFI program for many low-population rural areas. Current CDFI guidelines consider certain areas economically distressed and suffering from out-migration if county population loss between 1980 and 1990 was at least 10 percent. This effort to utilize out-migration figures as a measure of economic distress is laudable. However, the CDFI program does so in a manner that does nothing for many parts of rural America, including my state.

Mr. President, change in the size of a population has two components. One is what demographers term natural population growth. This is computed by subtracting deaths from births. The other variable is migration, which is determined by subtracting departures from arrivals.

If you assumed that out-migration related economic distress was determined under the CDFI program by looking at out-migration numbers, you would be mistaken. In fact, birth and mortality rates are effectively factored into calculations of out-migration.

Instead of net migration loss, the determine criterion under current CDFI guidelines is the change in the overall sum total of the population from 1980 to 1990. Consequently, many counties that have experienced a consistent net loss of population to the cities, but also which have robust birth rates and long life expectancies, have not qualified for the CDFI program.

Mr. President, this makes no sense. Natality and mortality rates have nothing to do with out-migration.

Just a couple of statistics illustrate why this problem needs to be fixed. Nearly every non-metro county in North Dakota experienced a more than 10 percent net migration loss between 1980 and 1990. Only slightly more than two thirds of rural North Dakota counties qualify for the CDFI program because the program’s guidelines measure overall population change, not net migration loss. Birth rates have been high enough and life-spans long enough to hide the real story of out-migration in a dozen counties in my state.

Mr. President, instead of wheat or sunflowers, the top export in many parts of farm country is people. Unless they can find work in the shrinking agriculture industry, increasing numbers of Americans who were born and raised in the rural Upper Great Plains are being forced to leave our workforce. They become statistics in a continuing and under-recognized exodus driven by economic depression, one that is destroying two of our nation’s greatest assets: its small towns and family farms.

Mr. President, I want to see the CDFI program work for rural America, to help save our rural communities and keep people on the land. Today, I am introducing legislation that will help it do just that.

Mr. President, my bill is very simple. It amends the Riegle Community Development and Regulatory Improve Act of 1994 to allow non-metro counties to qualify for the CDFI program if net migration loss—rather than just overall population loss—was at least 10 percent during the years 1980 to 1990.

Let me be clear: my bill does not strike any part of the Riegle Act and does not make major revisions to that landmark legislation. Rather, my bill makes a technical, perfecting correction that will help make the CDFI Fund work as intended for rural America. Consequently, I have entitled this measure the CDFI Technical Corrections Act.

Eighteen states and the District of Columbia, had populations of fewer than two million people during the 1990 Census, Mr. President. That is roughly one-third of the states. Yet of all the Core Component loans the CDFI Fund has made over the past three years, only about 12 percent have been to entities in these low-population states. The CDFI economic distress criteria need to be changed to more accurately reflect the level of economic distress in much of rural America.

I urge my colleagues to join me in fixing the CDFI economic distress criteria by passing my technical corrections bill.

By Mr. LAUTENBERG:

S. 1470. A bill to amend the Clean Air Act to ensure that adequate actions are taken to detect, prevent, and minimize the consequences of accidental releases that result from criminal activity that may cause substantial harm to public health, safety, and the environment; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.
Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise to introduce the Chemical Security Act of 1999, a bill which will address the threat of criminal attack on chemical facilities.

The FBI and the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry have warned us that the possibility of terrorist and criminal attacks on chemical plants is a serious threat to public safety. The scenarios they describe are truly chilling.

The concerns about criminal attack on chemical plants were initially raised in the context of Internet access to chemical accident information. Some were concerned that criminals could use chemical accident information, gained through the Internet, to target their attacks. In response, we will soon send a bill to the President that will balance the benefits of public access to chemical accident information against the threat of criminal attack.

However, Mr. President, the underlying issue is not Internet access to such information—no resourceful criminal needs the Internet to find a chemical plant to attack. A chemical plant target can be found by driving through neighborhood, reading a city map, or accessing information already available from government and business sources.

The real issue is the vulnerability of chemical facilities to attack—a vulnerability which can arise from a lack of adequate security at chemical facilities, as well as the use of inherently hazardous chemical operations, even when safer technologies are available.

The Chemical Security Act of 1999 will directly address the potential danger of criminal attack on chemical facilities. First, the Act will clarify that it is the general duty of chemical facilities under the Clean Air Act to reduce their own vulnerability to criminal attack. Second, it will require the Attorney General, within one year, to determine whether chemical facilities are taking adequate measures to reduce their vulnerability to criminal attacks that could cause substantial harm to public health, safety, and environment. Third, if the Attorney General finds that chemical facilities are not taking such actions, the Act will require the Attorney General, in consultation with the Environmental Protection Agency, within two years, to promulgate regulations requiring appropriate facilities to detect, prevent, and minimize the consequences of such criminal attack.

Mr. President, the American public has the right to chemical facilities that are safe from criminal attack.

I urge my colleagues to co-sponsor this legislation.

SENATE RESOLUTION 169—COMMENDING GENERAL WESLEY K. CLARK, UNITED STATES ARMY
Mr. Cochran (for himself, Mr. McCain, and Mr. Stevens) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Armed Services:

S. RES. 169
Whereas General Wesley K. Clark has had a long and distinguished military career, which includes graduating first in the class of 1966 from the United States Military Academy at West Point and serving in command positions at every level in the United States Army, culminating in service concurrently in the positions of Supreme Allied Commander Europe and Supreme Commander of the United States European Command; Whereas General Clark was integral to the formulation of the Dayton Accords; Whereas General Clark most recently distinguished himself by his tireless, resourceful, and successful leadership of the first military action of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization despite severe constraints; and Whereas General Clark’s record of exemplary and dedicated service is an example which all military officers should seek to emulate and is deserving of special recognition: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That (a) the United States Senate commends and expresses its gratitude to General Wesley K. Clark, United States Army, for his outstanding record of military service to the United States of America. (b) The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this resolution to General Wesley K. Clark.

Mr. Cochran. Mr. President, I am submitting today a resolution which commends General Wesley K. Clark for his outstanding service to the United States. I am pleased to be joined by Mr. McCain and Mr. Stevens as cosponsors of the resolution.

I was sorry to learn from the Wednesday morning’s newspapers that General Clark would be leaving his current post, where he serves simultaneously as the NATO Supreme Allied Commander Europe and as Commander-in-Chief of the United States European Command, before his tour was scheduled to end. When General Clark retires next year, the United States will be losing one of its finest officers. And I say that not just because of what he just accomplished in successfully leading NATO forces into battle for the first time, but because of the exemplary record General Clark compiled over 33 years of service to our Nation. Wes Clark graduated first in his class from West Point in 1966, and was selected to attend Oxford University as a Rhodes Scholar. After graduating from Oxford, General Clark distinguished himself in Vietnam, where he commanded a mechanized infantry company in combat. General Clark went on to command two other companies, as well as an armor battalion at Fort Carson, Colorado, a brigade in the 4th Infantry Division, and a joint battalion at Fort Irwin, California, the 1st Calvary Division at Fort Hood, Texas, and the United States Southern Command, headquartered in Panama. I work with General Clark on numerous jobs in which General Clark has served, but I do point out that General Clark, as the Director of Strategic Plans and Policy on the Joint Staff, was integral to the formulation of the Bosnian Peace Accords, negotiated in Dayton. In reviewing the numerous positions General Clark has held since he graduated from West Point, it is beyond question that Wes Clark is an officer who has served our Nation well during the last 33 years.

I recently had a chance to visit with General Clark at his headquarters in Brussels. Despite months of getting little sleep, I’m told it was about four hours per night, General Clark was able to explain it to me clearly and in detail our military operations in Kosovo and Serbia. His grasp of every nuance of every plan and option, was evident, and only reinforced his reputation for thoroughness. Nothing demonstrates his reputation for thoroughness and resourcefulness. Nothing demonstrates this more clearly than one simple fact: In an environment where General Clark was operating under severe constraints, he led NATO forces to victory. He was tireless; he was imaginative; and ultimately, he was victorious.

This resolution commends General Clark and expresses the Senate’s gratitude to him not just because of his recent service of high offices but because of his lifetime of service. General Clark deserves recognition not only for achieving results, but also for his personal integrity. His record of saying what he believes should be said without respect to whether other people necessarily want to hear is an example that others should seek to emulate. General Wes Clark has had a career distinguished by exemplary and dedicated service to our Nation. I urge the adoption of the Senate of this resolution.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Arkansas for his kind remarks. We appreciate very much his cosponsorship of the resolution.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATIONS FOR FY 2000

BAUCUS AMENDMENT NO. 1495

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. BAUCUS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1233) making appropriations for Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies programs for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes; as follows:

On page 76, between lines 6 and 7, insert the following:

SEC. 7. SENSE OF THE SENATE CONCERNING ACTIONS BY THE WORLD TRADE ORGANIZATION RELATING TO TRADE IN AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES.—

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that—

(1) agricultural producers in the United States compete effectively when world markets are not distorted by government intervention; (2) the elimination of barriers to competition in world markets for agricultural commodities is in the interest of producers and consumers in the United States; (3) the United States must provide leadership on the opening of the agricultural markets in upcoming multilateral World Trade Organization negotiations; (4) countries that import agricultural commodities are more likely to liberalize practices if they are confident that their trading partners will not curtail the availability of agricultural commodities on world markets for foreign policy purposes; and

(b) a multilateral commitment to use the open market, rather than government intervention, to guarantee food security could advance the interests of the farm community of the United States.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) members of the World Trade Organization should undertake multilateral negotiations to eliminate policies and programs that distort world markets for agricultural commodities; and

(2) as part of the multilateral negotiations, members of the World Trade Organization should agree to renounce the use of unilateral or multilateral sanctions to prohibit, restrict, or condition agricultural exports.

SEC. 9. MAXIMUM CONTRIBUTION DEDUCTION RULES MODIFIED AND APPLIED TO ALL DEFINED BENEFIT PLANS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (c) of section 401(a)(11) (relating to special rule in case of certain plans) is amended to read as follows:

“(2) SPECIAL RULE IN CASE OF CERTAIN PLANS.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any defined benefit plan, except as provided in regulations, the maximum amount deductible under the limitations of this paragraph shall not be less than the unfunded termination liability (determined as if the proposed termination date referred to in section 4041(b)(2)(A)(i)(II) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 were the last day of the plan year).

“(ii) PLANS WITH LESS THAN 100 PARTICIPANTS.—For purposes of this subparagraph, in the case of a plan which has less than 100 participants for the plan year, termination liability shall not include the liability attributable to benefit increases for highly compensated employees (as defined in section 414(q)) resulting from a plan amendment which is made or becomes effective, whichever is later, within the last 2 years before the termination date.

“(iii) RULE FOR DETERMINING NUMBER OF PARTICIPANTS.—For purposes of determining whether a plan has more than 100 participants, all defined benefit plans maintained by the same employer (or any member of such employer's controlled group within the meaning of section 414(b)(8)(C)) shall be treated as 1 plan, but only employees of such member or employer shall be taken into account.

(iv) Plans established and maintained by professional service employers—Clause (i) shall not apply to a plan described in section 408(b)(1) if the employer is an individual retired plan. Section 415(b)(2)(F)(i), as amended by section 346(c), is amended by adding at the end the following:

(b) Simplified annual filing requirement for plans with fewer than 25 employers. In the case of a retirement plan which covers less than 25 employees on the 1st day of the plan year and meets the requirements described in subparagraphs (B), (D), and (E) of subsection (a)(2), the Secretary of the Treasury shall provide for the filing of a simplified annual return that is substantially similar to the annual return required to be filed by a one-participant retirement plan.

(c) Effective date. The provisions of this section shall take effect on January 1, 2001.

On page 195, strike lines 4 through 9, and insert:

SEC. 404. Extension of exclusion for employer-provided educational assistance.

(a) In general. Section 108(a)(2)(B) of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by striking "$75,000" and inserting "$2,000,000".

(b) Conforming amendments. Section 108(a)(3)(B) is amended by striking "$75,000" and inserting "$2,000,000".

(c) Effective date. The amendments made by this section shall apply to returns for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001.

Sec. 407A. Reporting simplification.

(a) Simplified annual filing requirement for owners and their spouses. Section 6018 of the Internal Revenue Code is amended by striking paragraph (1)(A) and inserting the following:

"(1) $1,000 in the case of self-only coverage; and

"(2) 70 percent in the case of family coverage (as defined in section 129(c))."

(c) Per employer dollar limitation. The amount of qualified employer health insurance expenses taken into account under subsection (a) with respect to any qualified employee for any taxable year shall not exceed

"(1) $1,000 in the case of self-only coverage, and

"(2) $1,751 in the case of family coverage (as defined in section 129(c))."

(d) Definitions. For purposes of this section—

"(1) Small employer. The term 'small employer' means, with respect to any taxable year, any employer if such employer employed an average of 9 or fewer employees on the first day of any calendar quarter during such taxable year. For purposes of this section, paragraph (1) and subsection (a)(2) shall not apply to a plan which meets the requirements described in subparagraph (A) of section 417(a)(2) over the amount excluded from the employee's gross income under section 127 for such year.

"(2) Principal shareholders and owners. Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any amount provided to any child of any individual (such individual's spouse) who owns (on any day of the year) more than 5 percent of the stock of the capital or profits interest in the employer.

"(3) Degree requirement not to apply. In the case of an amount which is treated as a qualified scholarship by reason of this subsection, paragraph (1) shall not apply with regard to the requirement that the recipient be a candidate for a degree.

"(4) Certain other rules to apply. Rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (4), (5), and (7) of section 127(c) shall apply for purposes of this subsection.

(b) Effective date. The amendment made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after the date of enactment of this Act.

On page 225, after line 24, insert:

SEC. 408. Increase in estate tax deduction for family-owned business interests.

(c) Effective date. The amendments made by this section shall apply to estates of decedents dying after December 31, 2000.
year may be taken into account only if the employer was in existence throughout such year.

'(B) EMPLOYERS NOT IN EXISTENCE IN PRECEDING YEAR.—In the case of an employer which was not in existence throughout the 1st preceding calendar year, the determination under subparagraph (A) shall be based on the average number of employees that it is reasonably expected such employer will employ on business days in the current calendar year.

'(C) QUALIFIED EMPLOYEE.—The term ‘qualified employee’ means any amount paid by an employer for health insurance coverage to the extent such amount is attributable to coverage provided to any employee while such employee is a qualified employee.

'(D) EXCEPTION FOR AMOUNTS PAID UNDER SALARY REDUCTION ARRANGEMENTS.—No amount paid or incurred for health insurance coverage pursuant to a salary reduction arrangement shall be taken into account under subparagraph (A).

'(E) HEALTH INSURANCE COVERAGE.—The term ‘health insurance coverage’ has the meaning given such term by section 9832(b)(1).

'(F) QUALIFIED EMPLOYEE.—'(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘qualified employee’ means, with respect to any plan, an employee of an employer if the total amount of wages paid or incurred by such employer to such employee at an annual rate during the taxable year exceeds $5,000 but does not exceed $15,000.

'(B) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term ‘employee’ shall include an employee who is a full-time student at the end of the academic year in which such employee attained the age of 26.

'(C) WAGES.—The term ‘wages’ has the meaning given such term by section 3121(a) (determined without regard to any dollar limitation contained in such section).

'(D) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT.—'(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any taxable year beginning in calendar year 2001, the dollar amount contained in subparagraph (A) shall be increased by an amount equal to—

'(II) the cost-of-living adjustment under section 1(f)(3) for the calendar year in which 2001, the $16,000 amount contained in subparagraph (A) shall be increased by an amount equal to—

'(iii) the average number of employees that the employer was in existence throughout such year may be taken into account only if the employer was in existence throughout such year.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart D of part IV of chapter A of chapter 1 is amended by inserting after section 41 the following:

'515. EXPENSES ATTRIBUTABLE TO QUALIFIED INSTITUTIONS INCLUDING TEACHING HOSPITALS.'
by any grant, contract, or otherwise by another person (or any governmental entity).

"(c) MEDICAL INNOVATION BASE PERIOD AMOUNT.—For purposes of this section, the term 'medical innovation base period amount' means the average annual qualified medical innovation expenses paid by the taxpayer during the 3-taxable year period ending with the taxable year immediately preceding the first taxable year of the taxpayer beginning after December 31, 1996.

"(d) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(1) LIMITATION ON FOREIGN TESTING.—No credit is allowed under this section with respect to any clinical testing research activities conducted outside the United States.

"(2) CERTAIN RULES MADE APPLICABLE.—Rules similar to the rules of subsections (f) and (g) of section 41 shall apply for purposes of this section.

"(3) ELECTION.—This section shall apply to any taxpayer for any taxable year only if such taxpayer elects to have this section apply for such taxable year.

"(4) CREDIT FOR INCREASING RESEARCH EXPENDITURES AND WITH CLINICAL TESTING EXPENSES FOR CERTAIN DRUGS FOR RARE DISEASES.—Any qualified medical innovation expenses paid by a taxable year to which an election under this section applies shall not be taken into account for purposes of determining the credit allowable under section 41 or 45C for such taxable year.

"(b) CREDIT TO BE PART OF GENERAL BUSINESS CREDIT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 38(b) (relating to current year business credits), as amended by this Act, is amended by striking "plus" at the end of paragraph (14), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (15) and inserting ", plus", and by adding at the end the following:

"(16) the medical innovation expenses credit determined under section 41(a)."

"(2) TRANSITION RULE.—Section 38(d), as amended by this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(11) CREDIT ON PART D OF SECTION 41.—No portion of the unused business credit for any taxable year which is attributable to the medical innovation development expenses paid in any taxable year, which has been interpreted and implemented before enactment by current law, may be carried back to a taxable year beginning before January 1, 1999.

"(e) CREDIT FOR INCREASING MEDICAL INNOVATION EXPENSES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—No deduction shall be allowed for that portion of the qualified medical innovation expenses (as defined in section 41(a)) otherwise allowable as a deduction for the taxable year which is equal to the amount of the credit determined for such taxable year under section 41(a).

"(2) CERTAIN RULES TO APPLY.—Rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of subsection (c) shall apply for purposes of this subsection.

"(d) DEDUCTION FOR UNUSED PORTION OF CREDIT.—Section 199(c) (defining qualified business credits) is amended by redesignating paragraphs (9) through (8) as paragraphs (10) through (9) respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

There will be testimony from the Administration, state and local officials, and other interested parties.

Those who wish to testify or to submit written testimony should write to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C. 20510. Presentation of oral testimony is by Committee invitation only. For further information, please contact Jo Meuse or Brian Malnik.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TRIBUTE TO COLONEL CHARLES W. ALSUP, USA

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to pay tribute to a great patriot, soldier, and father, Colonel Charles W. Alsup. After nearly 28 years of dedicated service, he has retired from the United States Army on September 30, 1999. Colonel Alsup will retire from the United States Army on September 30, 1999. Colonel Alsup was born in Birmingham, Alabama. He enlisted in the Army in 1971 as a private and was later commissioned as a Military Intelligence Second Lieutenant upon completion of the Infantry Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning, Georgia.

Throughout his military career, Colonel Alsup distinguished himself as a true professional and an exceptional leader. His initial assignments included: a tour with 8th Special Forces Group, Fort Gulick, Panama; duties as a counterintelligence special agent and staff officer with the 902nd Military Intelligence Group, Fort Meade, MD; and intelligence officer, 4th Battalion, 89th Armor Regiment, 8th Infantry Division in Mainz, Germany during the height of the Cold War. He successfully commanded at the company, battalion, and brigade levels, culminating with the prestigious 501st Military Intelligence Brigade, Yongsan, Korea.

Colonel Alsup also excelled at a variety of teaching and staff officer positions, including Reserve Officer Training Corps duty at the University of Alabama; Staff Group Leader, Combined Arms and services Staff School, Fort Leavenworth; Director of Intelligence, 24th Infantry Division, Fort Stewart, GA; Director of Intelligence, Eight U.S. Army, Yokota, and duty on the Army Staff in Legislative Liaison and the Directorate for Operations and Plans.

Colonel Alsup’s final assignment as Assistant Director of Intelligence for the Joint Staff, Washington, DC, showcased his superior grasp of national intelligence issues, his management skills, and his ability to perform under pressure. Colonel Alsup provided unparalleled intelligence support to the senior leadership of the Executive and Legislative Branches, contributing significantly to their understanding of national level crisis and contingencies. His positive impact on the Joint Staff, the Defense Intelligence Agency, and the intelligence community will be felt for years to come.

Colonel Alsup is a distinguished graduate of the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College, Fort Leavenworth and the Naval War College, Newport, Rhode Island. His awards and decorations include the Defense Superior Service Medal, the Legion of Merit with Oak Leaf Cluster, the Meritorious Service Medal with Four Oak Leaf Clusters, the Army Commendation Medal with two Oak Leaf Clusters, the Special Forces Tab, the Senior Parachutist Badge, and the Ranger Tab.

Through his distinctive accomplishments, Colonel Charles W. Alsup culminates a distinguished career in the service of his country and reflects great credit upon himself, the United States Army, the Defense Intelligence Agency, and the Department of Defense.

I wish every success to Colonel Alsup as he finishes his truly remarkable military career and thank him for a job exceedingly well done.●
TRIBUTE TO RICHARD TORTORELLI

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I rise today to honor Richard Tortorelli of Milford, New Hampshire, who has retired from the Milford Fire Department after 41 years of service.

Richard began his career with the Milford Fire Department while in high school. At the age of 21, he joined the fire department as an on-call fire fighter. In 1986, he became the first full-time Fire Chief in Milford's history. Under his leadership, the fire department has seen many changes: a move from Town Hall in 1974 into the current station, a change from a one-town dispatch center to the regional Milford Area Communication Center, and equipment updates along with specialized training.

Even though Richard works in one of the most demanding professions in the country, he has never lost a member of his department. One of the most rewarding aspects of his career is that the number of fire calls in Milford has decreased over the years. He acknowledges that teaching fire prevention is not as thrilling as fighting a fire, however, it is very important. I would like to thank Chief Tortorelli for his service to the Town of Milford, and his dedication and leadership to the Milford Fire Department. I commend Richard for his exemplary career and tireless efforts. I wish him luck in his future endeavors. It is an honor to represent him in the United States Senate.

APPOINTMENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the Majority Leader, pursuant to Public Law 100–458, appoints the Senator from Virginia (Mr. WARNER) to the Board of Trustees of the John C. Stennis Center for Public Service Training and Development, for a term ending October 11, 2004.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT—S. 335

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at 1 p.m. on Monday, August 2, the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 191, S. 335, and that it be considered under the following limitations: 2 hours of total debate on the legislation equally divided between Senator COLLINS and Senator LEVIN or their designees; the only amendment in order be a managers' amendment offered by Senators COLLINS and LEVIN or their designees; the only amendment in order be a managers' amendment offered by Senators COLLINS and LEVIN. I further ask unanimous consent that following the expiration or yielding back of time and passed, without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR PRINTING OF S. 1344

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 1344, the Patients' Bill of Rights Plus Act, as amended and passed by the Senate on July 15, 1999, be printed as a document of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF FUNDING LEVELS FOR AVIATION PROGRAMS

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the immediate consideration of S. 1467 introduced earlier today by Senator WARNER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1467) to extend the funding levels for aviation programs for 60 days.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 1467. This bill will extend the Federal Aviation Administration's, FAA, Airport Improvement Program, AIP, for sixty days. It is critical that Congress complete the authorization for this program for this fiscal year. Otherwise, the FAA will be prohibited from issuing much-needed grants to airports in every state, regardless of whether or not funds have been appropriated. In fact, there are still nearly $300 million in unspent funds for the current fiscal year that cannot be spent because AIP authority expires on August 6.

If we do not act to reauthorize this program for at least the remainder of this fiscal year, we will cause harm to the transportation infrastructure of our country. AIP grants play a critical part in airport development. Without these grants, important safety, security, and capacity projects will be hampered throughout the country. Therefore, we must act swiftly.

The safety of the traveling public depends upon the continued flow of AIP monies. For example, airports use these funds to install instrument landing systems, which help guide airplanes to safe landings when visibility is impaired. AIP funds are also used for airport safety projects related to runway approach lighting; aircraft deicing equipment; snow removal equipment; repair of damaged runways; rescue and firefighting equipment; and runway safety areas for aircraft that have trouble stopping after a landing. It is my understanding that AIP funds were used to construct an innovative "arrestor bed" at the end of a runway at New York's JFK Airport. A few months ago, that arrestor bed prevented a commuter plane from plunging into the bay. It was credited with saving lives on that flight.

This bill will also extend the Aviation Insurance Program, which is commonly known as the War Risk Insurance Program. It provides insurance for commercial aircraft that are operating in high-risk areas, such as countries at war or on the verge of war. Commercial insurers will not usually provide coverage for such operations, which are often required to further U.S. foreign policy or national security objectives. For example, commercial airlines were needed to ferry troops and equipment to the Middle East for Operation Desert Shield and Desert Storm. If War Risk Insurance had not been available, our troops may not have been adequately supported.

This extension will also give us more time to work on a more comprehensive aviation bill that is still desperately needed. We have been working hard to accommodate the concerns that many Senators have with respect to provisions in S. 82, the Air Transportation Improvement Act. I believe we can bring a bill to the floor that will require very little of the Senate's time.

Mr. President, I urge all of my colleagues to support swift passage of this short-term extension of the AIP. If we fail to act, the FAA will not be able to address vital security and safety needs in every State in the Nation. We must reaffirm our commitment to providing the public with a safe and efficient air transportation system. This bill will help us meet that goal.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read a third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating to this bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 1467) was read the third time and passed, as follows:

S. 1467

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

SECTION 1. EXTENSION OF AIRPORT IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM, ETC.

Provided further, That no more than $975,000,000 of funds limited under this heading may be obligated prior to the enactment of a bill extending contract authorization for the Grants-in-Aid for Airports program to the third and fourth quarters of fiscal year 1999.’’ and inserting ‘‘Code.’’

UNITED STATES CAPITOL VISITOR CENTER COMMEMORATIVE COIN ACT OF 1999

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of S. 1468 introduced earlier today by Senators LOTT, DASCHLE, and others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:
A bill (S. 1468) to authorize the minting and issuance of Capitol Visitor Center Commemorative coins, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 1468) was read the third time and passed, as follows:
S. 1468

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.
This Act may be cited as the ‘‘United States Capitol Visitor Center Commemorative Coin Act of 1999’’.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.
Congress finds that—
(1) Congress moved to Washington, District of Columbia, and first convened in the Capitol building in the year 1800;
(2) the Capitol building is now the greatest visible symbol of representative democracy in the world;
(3) the Capitol building has approximately 5,000,000 visitors annually and suffers from a lack of facilities necessary to properly serve them;
(4) the Capitol building and persons within the Capitol have been provided with excellent security through the dedication and sacrifice of the United States Capitol Police;
(5) Congress has appropriated $100,000,000, to be supplemented with private funds, to construct a Capitol Visitor Center to provide continued high security for the Capitol and enhance the national experience of visitors to the Capitol;
(6) Congress would like to offer the opportunity for all persons to voluntarily participate in raising funds for the Capitol Visitor Center;
(7) it is appropriate to authorize coins commemorating the first convening of the Congress in the Capitol building with proceeds from the sale of the coins, less expenses, being deposited for the United States Capitol Preservation Commission with the specific purpose of aiding in the construction, maintenance, and preservation of a Capitol Visitor Center.

SEC. 3. COIN SPECIFICATIONS.
(a) DENOMINATIONS.—The Secretary of the Treasury (hereafter in this Act referred to as the ‘‘Secretary’’) shall mint and issue the following coins:

(i) BIMETALLIC COINS.—Not more than 200,000 $10 bimetallic coins of gold and platinum, in accordance with such specifications as the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

(ii) $1 SILVER COINS.—Not more than 500,000 $1 coins, which shall—
(A) weigh 26.73 grams;
(B) have a diameter of 1.205 inches; and
(C) contain 90 percent silver and 10 percent copper.

(iii) HALF DOLLAR.—Not more than 750,000 half dollar clad coins, each of which—
(A) shall weigh 11.34 grams;
(B) have a diameter of 1.205 inches; and
(C) be minted to the specifications for half dollar coins contained in section 512(b) of title 31, United States Code.

(iv) GOLD COINS.—If the Secretary determines that such action would be beneficial to the sale of coins minted under this Act, enter into a contract with the Commission or an entity referred to in paragraph (1) to carry out the role established under paragraph (1).

(b) QUALITY OF COINS.—Coins minted under this Act shall be legal tender, as prescribed in title 31, United States Code.

SEC. 4. SOURCES OF BULLION.
(a) PLATINUM AND GOLD.—The Secretary shall obtain platinum and gold for minting coins under this Act from available sources.

(b) SILVER.—The Secretary may obtain silver for minting coins under this Act from stockpiles established under the Strategic and Critical Materials Stock Piling Act, and from other available sources.

SEC. 5. DESIGN OF COINS.
(a) DESIGN REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The design of the coins minted under this Act shall be emblematic of the Capitol and the Capitol Preservation Commission.

(2) DESIGNATION AND INSIGNIA.—On each coin minted under this Act there shall be—

(A) a designation of the value of the coin;
(B) an inscription of the year ‘‘2000’’; and
(C) inscriptions of the words ‘‘Liberty’’, ‘‘In God We Trust’’, ‘‘United States of America’’, and ‘‘E Pluribus Unum’’.

(b) SELECTION.—The Secretary may select the design for the coins minted under this Act by—

(1) selected by the Secretary, after consultation with the United States Capitol Preservation Commission (in this Act referred to as the ‘‘Commission’’) and the Commission of Fine Arts; and

(2) reviewed by the Citizens Commemorative Coin Advisory Committee.

SEC. 6. ISSUANCE OF COINS.
(a) QUALITY OF COINS.—Coins minted under this Act shall be issued in uncirculated and proof qualities.

(b) MINT FACILITY.—Only 1 facility of the United States Mint may be used to strike any particular combination of denomination and quality of the coins minted under this Act.

(c) FIRST USE OF YEAR 2000 DATE.—The coins minted under this Act shall be the first commemorative coins of the United States to be issued bearing the inscription of the year ‘‘2000’’

(d) PROMOTION CONSULTATION.—The Secretary shall—

(1) consult with the Commission in order to establish a role for the Commission or an entity designated by the Commission in the promotion, advertising, and marketing of coins minted under this Act;

(2) if the Secretary determines that such action would be beneficial to the sale of coins minted under this Act, enter into a contract with the Commission or an entity referred to in paragraph (1) to carry out the role established under paragraph (1).

SEC. 7. SALE OF COINS.
(a) SALE PRICE.—The coins minted under this Act shall be sold by the Secretary at a price equal to the sum of—

(1) the face value of the coins;
(2) the surcharge provided in subsection (d) with respect to such coins; and
(3) the cost of designing and issuing the coins (including labor, materials, dies, use of machinery, overhead expenses, marketing, and shipping).

(b) BULK SALES.—The Secretary shall make bulk sales of the coins issued under this Act at a reasonable discount.

(c) PREPAID ORDERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall accept prepaid orders for the coins minted under this Act before the issuance of such coins.

(2) DISCOUNT.—Sale prices with respect to prepaid orders under paragraph (1) shall be at a reasonable discount.

(d) SURCHARGES.—All sales under this Act shall include a surcharge established by the Secretary, in an amount equal to not more than—

(1) $50 per coin for the $10 coin or $35 per coin for the $5 coin;
(2) $10 per coin for the $1 coin; and
(3) $3 per coin for the half dollar coin.

SEC. 8. DISTRIBUTION OF SURCHARGES.
All surcharges received by the Secretary from the sale of coins minted under this Act shall be deposited in the Capitol Preservation Fund in accordance with section 5134(f) of title 31, United States Code, and shall be made available to the Commission for the purpose of aiding in the construction, maintenance, and preservation of a Capitol Visitor Center.

COMMISSIONER OF COMMERCE

Mr. LOTTF. Mr. President, today the Senate is returning a very distinguished and qualified Commissioner back to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. I am pleased that my good friend Curtis L. Hebert, Jr. of Pascagoula, Mississippi is that Commissioner.

As a former member of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, I appreciate the high standard that FERC nominees are held to during committee consideration. Throughout Curt’s nearly two-year tenure as a FERC Commissioner, he demonstrated that he has not only the knowledge, but the determination and skills to get the job done. He has been a responsible and able federal steward of the utility industry across the United States. I expect that he will continue to serve the FERC and our nation with the same enthusiasm and foresight.

Before Curt came to Washington, he served the state of Mississippi as a member and a chair of the Public Service Commission for several years. During that time, he demonstrated the ability to balance the diverse utility interests in our state. This was no easy task. Mississippi is the home to both public and private power companies, PUHCAs and providers of all sizes. Curt was also my representative in the Mississippi legislature where he did an excellent job. Curt has proven that he has the skills necessary to address the needs of each of these entities, while keeping the best interest of the consumer in mind.

Congress must recognize that national electric utility deregulation is on the horizon. How and when a new system will be created remains to be seen. What is certain, however, is that the FERC will be instrumental in guiding Congress toward competition in the utility industry. I am confident that Curt has the experience and insight necessary to help us reach the right balance of interests. Most importantly, Curt understands what deregulation means at the state level. Already, Congress has witnessed deregulation of several states, but Congress will value the FERC’s input concerning deregulation.

There is no industry as complex as the utility world—and none that impacts the lives of Americans more directly every hour of every day. The challenges ahead are great and must be tackled head on. There is no denying that the FERC Commissioners have their work cut out for them. I have enjoyed working with Curt, and spending time with his wife, Virginia, and their two children, Lane and Ashley. They are an authentic, Mississippi family.

I am pleased that the Senate has unanimously confirmed Curt Hebert as a member of the FERC, thus ensuring that the future of the electric utility industry is in good hands. I congratulate him on this accomplishment and wish him the best of luck in the future.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 107) was agreed to.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate receives H. Con. Res. 168 from the House, it be considered as agreed to and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO EXTEND THE AUTHORIZATION OF TITLE X OF THE ENERGY POLICY ACT OF 1992

HON. BARBARA CUBIN OF WYOMING
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mrs. CUBIN. Mr. Speaker, today on behalf of Representative STEVE LARGENT and myself, we are introducing a bill that extends the authorization of Title X of the Energy Policy Act of 1992 which has been cleaning up the radio-active contamination created by the uranium and thorium milling operations. This program has been a valuable and generally successful endeavor, and has been instrumental in completing remediation at a number of uranium and thorium milling sites. This bill addresses the environmental hurdles and rising costs facing private industries in cleaning up those sites, five of which are in the State of Wyoming.

For the most part, the tailings were created in the process of obtaining supplies of uranium and thorium for the Manhattan Project, which produced America’s first nuclear weapons. Title X sites encompass a range of areas which have combined tailings of both civilian and military responsibility. At those sites, the private owners remediate the contamination, then are reimbursed by the government for that share of the tailings which were generated as a result of Federal activities.

Without this legislation, DOE and the uranium/thorium industry may be unable to continue their cleanup of the remaining Title X sites. This bill is a responsible measure—and a positive one—which allows the Federal government to continue to clean up its environmental liabilities.

The main purpose of the bill is to extend authority for title X cleanup from 2002 to 2007 and provide for a staged reimbursement increase from $6.25 per ton to $10.00 per ton. The need for the increase in the mill tailings reimbursement rate and program extension stems from several factors. Congress has decreased annual discretionary appropriations while clean-up costs have increased due to groundwater and environmental standards. After Congress’ adoption of the “Polluter Should Pay” principle in CERCLA, the Federal government has the same responsibility for environmental clean-up as does private industry.

This legislation would not require an increased spending authorization for uranium/thorium reimbursement for the Federal government’s share of mill tailings clean-up costs. DOE has concluded that the requested increase in the per ton reimbursement rate from $6.25 to $10.00 would not exhaust the uranium tailings authorization of $350,000,000 and therefore would not require an increase.

Representative LARGENT and I commend this legislation to my colleagues and encourage them to join us in cosponsoring it. It is our hope that it will be considered expeditiously by the Commerce Committee.

CONGRATULATIONS FIRST GRADUATES OF THE NATIONAL LABOR COLLEGE

HON. BRUCE F. VENTO
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the first National Labor College class of graduates.

The National Labor College is a correspondence school that offers bachelor of arts degrees in seven different disciplines all relating to labor and its practices. Students of this university are given credits for work and union experience as well as general class work. Students that are union members and full time workers pay a substantially lower tuition rate and work independently towards their degree.

This program was established 2 years ago and has advanced the skills and knowledge of many working Americans by offering them an opportunity to receive higher education at a cost they can afford while still allowing them to remain a part of the workforce. While most of the students are from the United States, the participation is international.

As a strong advocate of education and its continuing growth and improvement in our society today, I have fought to ensure that a quality education is accessible to the working class of Minnesota and America. Providing our work force with a solid, quality education is a crucial necessity in the continuation of the advancement of knowledge and skills. Today’s workers and labor unions have a much greater challenge than in the past as they cope with the rapid change in the world of work and represent the most important factor in the progress of productivity, the workers.

The National Labor College aids in ensuring that the American work force is ready for the challenges of the new millennium. By providing education and support to our work force we can continue to successfully compete in the growing global economy and vastly expanding technological market. We must continue to support our work force and the National Labor College is a very important first step in doing so.

I’d like to submit, for my colleagues’ review, an article from the Washington Times Sunday, July 25 issue, which highlights this program and the achievements of its graduates.

NATIONAL LABOR COLLEGE PITCHES TENT FOR ITS FIRST GRADUATES

88 PERSONS EARN 4-YEAR DEGREES BY MAIL, E-MAIL
(by Gerald Mizejewski)

At first glance it looked like any other college commencement, with dark gowns, tassets and gushing parents snapping photographs. But then the speakers starting saying things like, “I say to you all, solidarity, solidarity forever,” and “May God bless the labor movement.” Under a tent on a stretch of open grass in Silver Spring, the National Labor College graduate its first class yesterday. Eighty-eight men and women from as far away as California and Panama took home four-year bachelor’s degrees in subjects such as union governance and administration.

“Then’s what this is all about. Decent, honest pay for a hard day’s work,” said Maryland Gov. Parris N. Glendening, a Democrat, who was honored with a doctor of humane letters in labor studies by Mr. Glendening, who addressed the crowd as “brothers and sisters,” enjoy strong labor support during his two campaigns for governor. The Maryland General Assembly approved $650,000 this year for the school—its first public funds—but less than the $2 million included in Mr. Glendening’s budget proposal.

The idea of creating a national college for union members had been around since 1899, when American Federation of Labor President Samuel Gompers proposed the University of the Federation of Labor in Baltimore. The school never materialized.

The National Labor College, a correspondence school accredited by the state of Maryland, offers bachelor of arts degrees in seven disciplines: labor studies; labor education; organizational dynamics and growth; political economies of labor; union governance and administration; labor history; and labor safety and health.

It was established two years ago by the AFL-CIO and its affiliated unions as a way to make higher education available to working Americans. The program enables workers to advance their skills as leaders in the labor movement. Students are given credit—up to 90 quarter hours—for their work and union experience over the years. The college requires 180 quarter hours of credit for graduation.

“Most people are genuinely surprised to find out how much their life experience is worth,” said Sue Schurman, president of the National Labor College. The Labor College replaces Antioch University, a degree program operated through the George Meany Center for Labor Studies in Silver Spring.

Average tuition is $8,000 a year, and $3,000 for union members, who make up the majority of the college’s student body. While enrolled, participants must take humanities, English, social science, mathematics and science, in addition to electives. They are required to complete at least eight labor courses and a senior research project.
Participants typically spend one to two weeks each year at the George Meany Center and work independently the rest of the time, completing reading assignments, writing research papers and communicating with instructors by phone, mail and e-mail.

Alex Bell, 78, a former Maryland state delegate, is the oldest graduate. An active member of the Teamsters Local 5 in the District, Mr. Bell is on the executive board and financial board of his union and also serves as a business agent.

"That college is the greatest place in the world," he said.

Yesterday's graduates, ranging in age from 29 to 78, represented 25 states and 33 unions. Most of them are the first in their families to earn a degree.

About 400 union members and leaders from throughout the country are participating in the college degree program, which has recently expanded to offer a master's degree. Kevin F. O'Sullivan, yesterday's student speaker, predicts the college will play a significant role in the public administration through the college.

For Mr. O'Sullivan, the labor movement is integral to his family's history.

"My father, an Irish immigrant, worked seven days a week as an electrician, providing a better life for his family," said Mr. O'Sullivan.

"His example of solidarity while supporting a Teamsters strike for three months despite the pressures of providing for his wife and seven children will be with me longer than my daddie for oatmeal that I gained during the strike."
HON. ED WHITFIELD
OF KENTUCKY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in tribute to the Thomas and Bridges families, who will come together for their 28th reunion in Cadiz, Trigg County, Kentucky this August.

Drury Bridges brought his family to Kentucky from North Carolina in 1804. James Thomas, Sr., also a North Carolinian, came two years later. Both patriarchs had taken part in the struggle for independence during the Revolutionary War, but they had never met until they acquired land grants near each other in a portion of Christian County that in 1820 would become Trigg County.

With the passing of time, three of the Bridges children married three of the Thomas children, the beginning of family connections that remain strong today.

During the almost 200 years since these families chose Trigg County as their home, they and their descendants have made invaluable contributions to the cultural, religious, educational and political life of the county.

It is my honor to represent these distinguished families in the Congress of the United States and I am proud to introduce them to my colleagues in the House of Representatives and recognize their patriotism and civic leadership.

HON. ALICE L. HASTINGS
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I rise today to mark the loss of a remarkable leader in South Florida. Margaret Blake Roach, an educator and pioneer in civil rights, passed away on July 16, 1999, among her loving family in Ft. Lauderdale, Florida. The Broward County community is no doubt in mourning for the loss of this great leader, mentor, and role model.

Margaret Roach served as a beacon of wisdom and fairness for many who suffered from social injustice. For more than thirty years, she was at the forefront of the civil rights movement. She was the founder and leader of the Broward County Teachers Association, and she was a founder and president of the Broward/South Palm Beach region of the NAACP.

Margaret Blake Roach Roach nurtured her students with an uncommon commitment to education and an education that went far beyond reading, writing, and arithmetic. She taught her students by example and brought both her time and leadership to various civic establishments such as the United Way, Habitat for Humanity, and the Cleveland Clinic.

The State of Florida will truly miss Margaret Roach for both her vision and her commitment to serving others. I am confident that despite the sadness of her loss, the Broward community will celebrate her exceptional life through the organizations to which she dedicated both her time and compassion. Mr. Speaker, I ask for my colleagues to join me as we honor this great American who has left such a memorable impression on the lives of so many people. I am grateful to Margaret Roach for her years of dedicated service to humanity and mourn her loss.

HON. BRUCE F. VENTO
OF MINNESOTA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, recently the Saint Paul Federation of Teachers Local #28 took time out to honor a special person and friend, Margaret Kelly.

Margaret Kelly, through a long career in Saint Paul Public Schools, is committed to education and has invested in building solid representation for teachers. Politically active, her hard work has resulted in a successful educational environment and an effective teacher’s labor union. Her sister and perhaps best supporter, Mary Kelly, has also been active.

The roots of this local union go back many years and in line 1940’s when there was labor strife, a young Margaret Kelly was in the middle of it. Today relations are more harmonious, but the challenges to Saint Paul Federation of Teachers #28 President Ian Keith and Kent Kelly are just as great. Fortunately, he has Margaret Kelly to rely upon. As a Member of Congress, I have been proud and well served with Margaret and Mary Kelly’s counsel as well.

Congratulations to Margaret Kelly. The following brief article from the July 21 Union Advocate touches upon Margaret’s role and the feelings of her fellow teacher’s union members.

[From the Union Advocate, July 21, 1999]

L驾OR MOVEMENT PIONEERS GATHER TO CELEBRATE, REFLECT

Some of the key leaders who helped build the St. Paul Federation of Teachers gathered July 13 to celebrate the contributions of one of their own—Margaret Kelly (left), a member of the local for more than 50 years, an officer and leader.

Ian Keith, president of the St. Paul Federation of Teachers, Local 28, presented her with the American Federation of Teachers “Living the Legacy” Award.

“A lot of things changed in the union, but Margaret was always there,” said Tom Dorsch. “She really represented the union and unionism. She certainly was a guiding force the early years I was involved.”

HON. HOWARD L. BERMAN
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to my friend, Mike Riley, who is retiring after a 45-year career with the Teamsters Union. In his modest way, Mike has said that working as a union organizer is “one of the few things I was good at that I liked.” I don’t know about his other pursuits, but I can say without hesitation that Mike is one of the best union representatives that I have ever known.

Mike’s union career began as an accident. He was working as a truck driver in San Francisco, recently back from a tour of military duty in Korea, when he attended a union meeting. The big issue that day was whether members should support an increase in dues from $3 to $3.50 per month. Mike thought the request was justified, especially since the union had recently negotiated a $2.50 per week increase for Mike and his co-workers.

As it turned out, he was in the minority. From that point, Mike started to speak in favor of the union at the monthly meetings. His efforts caught the attention of union organizers, who asked him to join their ranks. He accepted the offer, and has never looked back.

Mike has held many prominent positions with the Teamsters, including International Union Representatives, International Vice President, Chairman of the Western Conference of Teamsters and President of Teamsters Joint Council 42, the position he holds today. Mike estimates he has helped negotiate thousands of contracts and settle tens of thousands of grievances through the years.

Mike counts among his proudest achievements obtaining early retirement—with full benefits—for eligible union members and helping to establish the Teamsters Miscellaneous Benefits Project. Mike is a union member and President of Teamsters Joint Council 42, the position he holds today. Mike estimates he has helped negotiate thousands of contracts and settle tens of thousands of grievances through the years.

July 30, 1999

I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting Mike Riley, whose sense of compassion, commitment to economic justice and devotion to his family is an inspiration to us all. I am proud to be his friend.

TIME TO INCREASE THE MINIMUM WAGE: THERE IS A HIGH COST FOR LOW WAGES

HON. TOM LANTOS
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, with 126 of our distinguished colleagues, I am a cosponsor of the bill, H.R. 325, which was introduced by our colleagues Congressman DAVID BONIO and Democratic Leader RICHARD A. GEPHARDT. Our legislation would raise the minimum wage from $5.15 to $5.65 on September 1, 1999, and from $5.65 to $6.15 on September 1, 2000. An identical bill has been introduced in the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, the present minimum wage is a poverty wage. A single mother, with two children, working at minimum wage earns thousands of dollars less than the poverty level. You just cannot raise a family on $5.15 an hour. As Barbara Ehrenreich said in an essay entitled “The High Cost of Low Wages” which appeared in America @ Work: “Even in an economy celebrating unequaled prosperity, a person can work hard, full-time or even more, and not make enough to live on, at least if she intends to live indoors. I left thinking that if this were my real life, I would become an agitator in no time at all, or at least a serious nuisance.”

It is essential that we increase the minimum wage, Mr. Speaker, in order to prevent further erosion of the purchasing power of low-wage workers. An increase in the minimum wage will serve as an important means for people to gain independence from government income support programs. It will boost worker morale and increase worker productivity.

Mr. Speaker, we can afford to increase the minimum wage—and now is the time to do it. Our nation has now experienced the longest peacetime expansion in our country’s history. The unemployment rate has fallen to 4.4%, the lowest rate in a generation. Inflation remains extremely low. Based on recent studies, there would be no adverse effects on employment or job opportunities with the implementation of the proposed increases in the minimum wage. The 1996–1997 increase of the minimum wage serves as an example of the effect of such an increase upon our economy. Two months after the 1997 increase the national unemployment rate actually dropped one full percentage point. Raising the minimum wage is good for the economy. The extra money gets spent at the grocery store, at the hardware store, and throughout the local community.

Mr. Speaker, approximately, ten to twelve million Americans will benefit from this legislation. Minimum wage workers are a significant part of our workforce. Over half of these workers are women, and almost three-fourths are adults. Half of those who will benefit from this bill work full-time, and 80% of them work over twenty hours per week. They are providers of child care. They are teachers’ aides. They are single heads of households with children. These are hard-working people who deserve a fair living wage.

Barbara Ehrenreich, the author of a dozen books on politics and society, authored a particularly good essay on the consequences of the low wages and the implications of increasing the minimum wage: “The High Cost of Low Wages”—which appeared in the AFL-CIO publication America @ Work. Mr. Speaker, her article is particularly insightful. I urge my colleagues to read Ms. Ehrenreich’s article, and I urge them to support the adoption of H.R. 325.

The HIGH COST OF LOW WAGES

Last summer I undertook an unusual journalistic experiment: I set out to see whether it is possible to live on the kind of wages available to low-skilled workers. I structured my experiment around a few rules: I had to find the cheapest apartment and best-paying job I could, and I had to do my best to hold it—no sneaking off to read novels in the ladies room or aimless wandering.

So, in early June, I moved out of my home near Key West and into a $500 efficiency apartment about a 45-minute drive from town, where I paid rent and utilities all right on the edge of town, but they wanted over $600 a month for a one-person trailer.

Finding a job turned out to be a little harder than I’d expected, given all the help-wanted signs in town. Finally at one of the big corporate discount hotels where I’d applied for a housekeeping job, I was told they needed a waitress in the associated “family restaurant.”

The pay was only $2.43 an hour, but I figured with tips, I would do far better than I would have at the supermarket which was offering $6 an hour and change.

I was wrong. Business was slow, and tips averaged 10% or less, even for the more experienced “girls.” I was curious as to how my fellow workers managed to pay their rent. (The immigrant dishwashers (from Haiti and the Czech Republic) mostly lived in dormitory-type situations or severely overcrowded apartments. As for the servers, some were teenagers. They just didn’t think of themselves that way because they had cars or vans to sleep in. I was shocked to find that a few were sharing motel rooms, and one was going to stay on the bus for a week, and the other for a month. I’m talking about middle-aged women, not kids. When I naively suggested to one co-worker that she could save a lot of money by getting an apartment, she pointed out that the initial expense—a month’s rent in advance and security deposit—was way out of her reach.

Meanwhile, my own financial situation was declining perilously. The money I saved on rent was being burned up as gas for my commuting. I was spending too much on fast food. I began to realize it’s actually more expensive to be poor than middle class: You pay more for food, especially in convenience stores, you pay to get checks cashed; and you end up paying ridiculous prices for shelter.

I decided to redouble my efforts to survive. First, I got a job at a shrimp-rove volume restaurant where my pay averaged about $7.50 an hour. Then I moved out of my apartment and into the trailer park, calculating that, without the commute, I’d be able to handle an additional job. For a total of three days altogether, I did work two jobs—including a hotel housekeeping job I finally landed.

At the end of the month, I had to admit defeat. I had earned less than I spent, and the only things I spent money on were food, gas and rent. If I had had children to care for and support—like many of the women now coming off welfare—I wouldn’t have lasted a week.

But my experiment did succeed in showing that, even in an economy celebrating unequaled prosperity, a person can work hard, full-time or even more, and not make enough to live on, at least if she intends to live indoors. I left thinking that if this were my real life, I would become an agitator in no time at all, or at least a serious nuisance.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, the physician self-referral law has successfully prevented billions of dollars worth of business deals that would have abused patients through overtesting and provision of unnecessary services and wasted Medicare funds. That’s why the legislation that is sponsored by Representative BILL THOMAS—which effectively guts the statute by eliminating the Federal Government’s authority to regulate providers’ compensation relationships—should be summarily rejected.

Instead, I hope that my colleagues will take a careful look at the legislation that I am introducing, which makes certain responsible changes in the law to streamline and simplify it.

The principal provision in the Medicare Physician Self-Referral Improvement Act of 1999 creates a fair market value exception, or safe harbor, for providers who enter into compensation relationships with entities to which they refer Medicare and Medicaid beneficiaries for health services. All that is required under the fair-market value exception is that providers set down the terms of their arrangement in writing, that it is for a specified period of time and is signed by all parties; that it is not based on the volume or value of referrals; and that rates paid are commercially reasonable.

What honest doctor can’t meet those standards?

The bill that I am introducing also makes changes in the “direct supervision” requirement that governs the in-office ancillary services safe harbor; substantially narrows financial relationship reporting requirements for providers, who would only have to produce accounts of their financial relationships and those of immediate family members upon audit; modifies the law’s “direct supervision” requirement for in-office ancillary services; expands the prepared plan exception to include Medicare and Medicaid coordinated capitated plans; creates an exception for areas in which the HHS Secretary finds there are no alternative providers; exempts ambulatory surgical centers and hospices; alters the definition of a group practice; and requires HCFA to issue advisory opinions within 60 days of receiving a request.

If enacted, these changes would improve the law without undermining it—as the Thom bill clearly would. Policymakers know that...
The self-referral law is uniquely effective in controlling overutilization, and that it works well precisely because physicians are well placed to judge the necessity of their arrangements before finalizing contracts. In effect, the self-referral law is self-enforcing.

To further substantiate that point, at a May 13 Ways & Means Health Subcommittee hearing on the physician self-referral law, the HHS Inspector General's chief counsel, D. McCarthy Thornton, testified that the phony joint ventures on the 1980's have decreased significantly. That is good news.

The result is that compliance with the law is standard practice in the health industry today. Even Columbia-HCA, which I have long criticized, now has a system in place that carefully screens financial relationships with physicians in order to stay in compliance with the law. This demonstrates that even without final regulations, the law is effectively controlling overutilization in Medicare's fee-for-service programs.

It is particularly hypocritical that the American Medical Association is lobbying for repeal of the law's compensation provisions. Last time I checked, AMA's Code of Medical Ethics makes it clear that the patient's best interests are the first priority of the physician and that the physician must be financially independent from any organization that might influence medical judgment. This is the law of medicine.

The Health Care Financing Administration has promised to issue final regulations for the physician self-referral law by next spring. At this juncture, it would be deeply irresponsible to enact legislation that effectively repeals the heart of the law—which is the Federal Government's ability to require fair-market value parameters for compensation arrangements between providers.

If the law is repealed, taxpayers will again be forced to foot the bill for billions of dollars in provision of unnecessary services. Enactment of the Thomas proposal would shorten Medicare's life and return us to the days of the 1980's, when physicians created sham joint ventures to which they steered their patients. The result is that compliance with the law is standard practice in the health industry today. Even Columbia-HCA, which I have long criticized, now has a system in place that carefully screens financial relationships with physicians in order to stay in compliance with the law.

On June 11, the Pleasanton Lions Club sponsored their 11th annual golf tournament and dinner to help raise money for scleroderma research. I have been told that the tournament and the subsequent dinner were a roaring success.

It is important that scleroderma be given the attention required to raise awareness and the funds needed to fight this chronic disease. The Pleasanton Lions Club have played a major role in this effort and I thank them for it. I hope others will follow their lead and get the word out to the public about why we need to fight scleroderma.

SALARIES FOR MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

HON. RON LEWIS
OF KENTUCKY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. LEWIS of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address the issue of salaries for Members of Congress.

I have spoken time and again about my frustration of having to deal with the issue of automatic cost of living increases for Members of Congress each year. This year was no exception.

Representing a mostly rural district in Kentucky, I believe that I am fairly compensated for my services. It is an honor for me to represent the Second District.

It is important, at a time like this, for us to not lose sight of the fact that in the past several years we have asked America to sacrifice in order to balanced the federal budget. While we, in Congress, have made great strides toward this goal, our job is not yet complete.

I continue to be concerned with the process in which these cost of living adjustments are made. I would rather Congress take an up or down vote on all pay adjustments for Members and have cosponsored legislation to eliminate the cost of living provision all together. This was the manner in which Congress did business for over one hundred and fifty years.

This is the first time in five years I have voted for a cost of living increase. I have to recognize that many of my colleagues are not fortunate enough to live in a low cost area such as the Second District of Kentucky.

This increase is not just for Members of Congress but for the thousands of federal judges and civil service administrators which are leaving at an alarming rate for the private sector. This exodus is depriving the government of some of the best and brightest that we have to offer.

Mr. Speaker, while I supported the increase for these reasons this time, I will not accept it personally. I intend to contribute my share of the cost of living increase to worthwhile causes in the Second District of Kentucky.

TRIBUTE TO ALBERT SADOW

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Police Chief Albert Sadow who retired from Hazel Park, Michigan’s Police Department on July 14, 1999, bringing closure to 38 years of distinguished public service.

Chief Sadow’s career with the City of Hazel Park dates back to 1961 when he worked for the Water and Sewer Department at the hourly rate of $1.67. In addition to holding the civilian posts of Assistant City Manager and Personnel Director, Chief Sadow rose through the ranks of the Police Department from Patrolman to Sergeant to Lieutenant, and finally to Chief in 1985.

Under Chief Sadow’s leadership, the City of Hazel Park profited from many positive changes and innovations in public safety. Through the acquisition of state and federal funds, Chief Sadow brought the Hazel Park Police Department into the 21st Century by installing video display terminals, video cameras, radar units and state-of-the-art computer systems in every police cruiser.

Other programs instituted during Chief Sadow’s tenure include the Southeast Oakland Crime Suppression Task Force, Drug Abuse Resistance Education (DARE), the K–9 unit, Motor Vehicle Carrier and Bicycle Patrol.

In his 38 years of service, Albert Sadow never used a sick day, and has been a tireless, and dedicated public servant. Indeed, Hazel Park is as better and safer place thanks to Chief Sadow.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in wishing my friend, Albert Sadow, good health and happiness as he and his wife, Virginia, trade in his police car for their motor home, and spend their retirement visiting their three grown children and enjoying life together.

HONORING JUDGE FRANK M. JOHNSON, JR.

HON. EARL F. HILLIARD
OF ALABAMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Speaker, We are a country of strong men united by great philosophies, yet we are divided by realities that built this country by stripping a people of their land in order to call it our own and by enslaving another people to a lifelong labor of blood and sweat to build our homes.

Mr. Speaker, today, on the brink of a new millennium, not to point out the immaculate flaws of our cherished American dream. Rather, I rise to salute Judge Frank M. Johnson, Jr., a man who Time Magazine in 1967 deemed “one of the most important men in America” and whose life exemplifies the Biblical statement “To whom much is given, much is required.”

Judge Johnson is a man who dedicated more than four decades of his life to ensuring that no man be limited by separate facilities that inherently violate his right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. He is an American icon, a legendary Federal jurist from Alabama whose historic civil rights decisions forever shattered segregation in a “Jim Crow” South. His monumental ruling striking down the Montgomery bus-segregation law as unconstitutional created a broad mandate for racial justice that eternally eliminated segregation in public schools and colleges, bathrooms, restaurants and other public facilities in Alabama and across the South. Judge Johnson was an innovator and a crusader for all mankind who will be remembered eternally for giving true meaning to the word justice.

Today, I rise to honor Judge Johnson for helping to bring equality to the American dream; I honor him for bringing justice to an inhume system of law; I honor him like Martin Luther King, Jr., for allowing justice and righteousness to roll down like a mighty stream.

AMENDMENT TO CZECH CITIZENSHIP LAW PRAISED

HON. STENY H. HOYER
OF MARYLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999
Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address an issue I have raised in this Chamber many times before: the Czech citizenship law. For 5 years, as a member of the Helsinki Commission, I have argued that the law adopted when the Czechoslovak Federal Republic dissolved, on January 1, 1993, was designed to and had the effect of leaving tens of thousands of former Czechoslovaks de jure or de facto stateless. I have argued, and as Czech officials eventually admitted, all of those people were members of the Romani minority. And I have argued that to have a law with such a narrow and discriminatory impact was no accident. Most of all, I have argued that this law needed to be changed.

In 1996, the law was amended in an effort to placate international critics of the law, but that amendment was mere window dressing and the Czech citizenship law still left tens of thousands of former Czechoslovaks stateless, every one a Rom. Moreover, there was an important principle at stake: citizenship laws in newly independent states which discriminate against permanent residents who were citizens of the former state on the basis of race, language, religion or ethnicity are not compatible with international norms. That failure to uphold this principle in the Czech Republic could have critical reverberations in every former Soviet Republic and, more to the point, every former Yugoslav Republic.

Many people working on this issue believed that the 1996 amendment was all that was politically possible; that we would simply have to resign ourselves to a generation of stateless Roma. The leadership of the Helsinki Commission, including the current Chairman, Congressman CHRIS SMITH, held our ground and insisted that the Czech law should be amended again, to bring it into line with international norms.

Meanwhile, throughout this first post-Communist decade, the number of violent attacks against Roma climbed, year after year. By the fall of 1998, some 2000 Czech Roma had requested asylum in Canada. By 1998, NGO’s reported that there had been more than 40 racially motivated murders in the Czech Republic since 1990, more than the number of racially motivated murders in Bulgaria, Romania, and Slovakia combined—countries with much larger Romani populations. Midway through 1998, the city of Usti nad Labem announced plans to build a wall to segregate Romani residents from ethnic Czechs—a ghetto in the heart of Europe.

Fortunately, the Czech Government elected last year appears to take the human rights violation of Czech Roma much more seriously. Early after taking office, Deputy Prime Minister Pavel Rytechsky announced that amending the Czech citizenship law would be a priority in his government. Acting on that commitment, the Chamber of Deputies adopted an amendment on July 9 that will enable thousands of Roma to apply for citizenship.

This amendment must still be passed by the Czech Senate and signed into law by President Havel—both steps are expected to take place this year. More critically, it will be necessary to ensure that there is an active campaign to reach all those who have been denied citizenship, to make sure this right is fully exercised. But for now, the Czech Chamber of Deputies has upheld an important principle and, even more importantly, upheld the rights of the Romani minority.

H.R. 2633—THE POLICE BADGE FRAUD PREVENTION ACT OF 1999

HON. STEPHEN HORN
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999
Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, today I reintroduced H.R. 2633, the Police Badge Fraud Prevention Act, a bill intended to remove the state and local police badge from the reach of those who wish to use badges to commit crimes.

If a man or woman in a police uniform knocks on your door and shows a badge, you wouldn’t think twice about opening the door. But by doing so, you may be putting your family in danger. Counterfeit police badges—and fraudulently obtained real ones—have allowed criminals to invade people’s homes and terrorize their families.

In 1997, Los Angeles police arrested two men suspected of committing more than 30 home-invasion robberies by impersonating police officers. Among the more than 100 items confiscated from the suspects’ homes were official Los Angeles police badges.

Despite state statutes against impersonating police officers, criminals appear to have disarmingly easy access to police badges and the means to manufacture counterfeit badges.

The local Fox television affiliate in Los Angeles found out just how easy it is in an undercover investigation. The undercover reporter bought a fake Los Angeles Police Department badge from a dealer for $1,000, a fake California Highway Patrol badge for $40, and for $60 a fake badge from the police department of Signal Hill (a city in my Congressional District).

The threat of counterfeit police badges reaches across state lines. Criminals can purchase badges on the Internet and through mail-order catalogs. The interstate nature of the counterfeit badge market calls for a national response to this problem. There is currently no federal law dealing with counterfeit badges of state and local law enforcement agencies.

H.R. 2633, the Police Badge Fraud Prevention Act, would ban the interstate or foreign trafficking of counterfeit badges and genuine badges (among those not authorized to possess a genuine badge). This legislation would complement state statutes against impersonating a police officer, addressing in particular the problems posed by Internet and mail-order badge sales. The bill is similar to H.R. 4282 in the 105th Congress. The new version of the bill includes exceptions for cases where the badge is used exclusively in a collection or exhibit; for decorative purposes; or for a dramatic presentation, such as in theatrical, film, or television production. The Fraternal Order of Police is endorsing this bill.

Misuse of the badge reduces public trust in law enforcement and endangers the public. This bill should be enacted to stop criminals from using this time-honored symbol of law enforcement for illegal purposes.

I am delighted to have the following co-sponsors. They are: Mrs. MORELLA, Mr. RAMSTAD, Mr. SHOWS, Mr. BACIA, Mr. HOLDEN, Mrs. KELLY, Mr. INSLEE, Mr. VISCLOSKY, Mr. GENE GREEN, Mr. KOLBE, Mr. LUTHER, Mr. ENGLISH, Mr. ADAM SMITH, Mr. STUPAK, Ms. DANNER, Mr. OSE, Mr. REYES, Ms. BERKLEY, and Mr. GARY MILLER.

I urge my colleagues to co-sponsor this legislation and urge the House to pass it.

Mr. Speaker, the text of H.R. 2633 is short. It follows:

H.R. 2633
Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE. This Act may be cited as the “Police Badge Fraud Prevention Act of 1999”

SEC. 2. POLICE BADGES. (a) In General.—Chapter 33 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

“716. Police badges

“(1) knowingly transfers, transports, or receives, in interstate or foreign commerce, a counterfeit police badge;

“(2) knowingly transfers, in interstate or foreign commerce, a genuine police badge to an individual not authorized to possess it under the law of the place in which the badge is the official badge of the police;

“(3) knowingly receives a genuine police badge in a transfer prohibited by paragraph (2); or

“(4) being a person not authorized to possess a genuine police badge, in interstate or foreign commerce, a law enforcement officer shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than 180 days, or both.”
EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of a program very important to Connecticut. With Congress presently debating its annual spending bills, people may wonder how the budget affects them and their well-being. I would like to take this opportunity to tell you about one particular program of which I am a strong supporter—the Connecticut State Technology Extension program (CONN/STEP). CONN/STEP helps Connecticut manufacturers become more competitive through the use of advanced manufacturing and management technologies. Through their team of field engineers, CONN/STEP provides onsite technical assistance, detailed assessments, outlines potential solutions, and identifies external service providers. CONN/STEP is funded jointly by the State Department of Economic and Community Development and the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) under the Department of Commerce.

Here’s how CONN/STEP helped one local company in Bristol, Connecticut. Ultimate Wireforms manufactures arch wires and other orthodontic appliances from superelastic memory alloys and stainless steel for orthodonty applications. The arch wires apply pressure to teeth, slowly causing them to move in a predetermined amount to correctionally position teeth. The company has provided support to the orthodontic industry since 1989 and currently employs 65 people.

Ultimate Wireforms was searching for opportunities to expand their product offerings and decided to focus on the Titanium arch wire business which was undergoing rapid growth. Titanium arch wires apply higher forces to the teeth, which accelerate the correct orthodontic process. Ultimate, however, had no titanium technology experts in house and was being restricted from entering this market by an existing patent, held by a competitor.

Ultimate initially attempted to find a Titanium alloy to leap-frog the patent but all of the candidate alloys had one or more drawbacks and, consequently, were not pursued beyond the laboratory phase. With the potential expiration of the patent, Ultimate was poised to pursue entry into this market, but lacked the in-house expertise to develop Titanium technology. This led them to CONN/STEP for help. A CONN/STEP specialist, knowledgeable in the Titanium industry, identified melting, ingot conversion and wire making suppliers to make small and medium-sized experimental quantities. CONN/STEP soon became the technical interface with the titanium suppliers, resolving problems as they arose until multiple batches with the correct composition and mechanical properties were produced. Ultimate has since entered the Titanium arch market and is now enjoying a 60% increase in sales.

Satisfied with the technical service, Ultimate Wireforms had subsequently entered into several additional projects with CONN/STEP, including a comprehensive assessment of their accounting and financial system to help Ultimate better understand their internal functions as well as their place in the market.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a true leader in the Federal Employees community, Robert Tobias. Since 1983, Bob Tobias has served as the President of the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU) and he has been involved with NTEU since 1968. Bob Tobias has a proud thirty-one year legacy with NTEU and he has improved the workplace for all federal employees.

Since I first came to Congress, I have had the opportunity to work with Bob on supporting federal employees and their issues.

Tonight, several members of Congress from both sides of the aisle will pay tribute to Bob and his many victories at the helm of NTEU. When my distinguished colleague, Representative STENY HOYER, and I first sent out a request for participation in an evening of Special Orders, I was overwhelmed by the number of my colleagues who expressed an immediate interest in participating in paying tribute to Bob. It is a testament to his ability to work with members of both political parties to find a common ground that protects federal employees and continues to bring our federal government into the Twenty-First Century.

Every major battle that involved federal employees over the past twenty years has included Bob Tobias. He was integral to the creation of the Federal Employee Retirement System (ERS) in 1983, protecting the Federal Employees Health Benefits Plan (FEHBP), restructuring the Internal Revenue Service (IRS), advocating for the closure of the pay gap for federal employees, and instrumental in reforming the Hatch Act which allows federal employees to exercise their rights to engage in political activity.

Bob has not only encouraged federal employees to become more involved politically at both the federal and grassroots levels, but has also pursued litigation as a tool to advance and expand worker interests. Bob has not only led the fight in landmark court battles, but before the Federal Labor Relations Authority, the Merit Systems Protection Board, the Federal Service Impasses Panel, and the Office of Personnel Management.

Under his leadership, federal employees won a federal court victory giving them the right to engage in informational picketing; a Supreme Court win that overturned the ban on knowledge and writing handouts at work; as well as the Critical Case which established in law the right of federal employees and their collective bargaining representatives to initiate midterm bargaining. That victory gives employees the same rights that agency managers have and, to a very great extent, levels the negotiations playing field.

Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned previously, I have worked closely with Bob Tobias on numerous federal employee issues. Bob has dual goals that he has continually achieved throughout his tenure at NTEU—protecting the rights of federal employees, and ensuring that our government effectively and efficiently accomplishes its job. It has been my honor to work with Bob in meeting those goals.

As one of the primary advocates for federal employees, Bob constantly reminded us of the necessity of hiring the best and the brightest to work in the government, and the necessity of retaining those employees who have the knowledge and expertise to get the job done. He and I have worked together to keep federal employees in the workforce by making sure that they have the same rights, benefits, and protections as do their colleagues in the private sector.

Before I came to Congress, I worked as high-tech executive for a government contracting firm in Northern Virginia. We made it our top priority to treat our human capital as our most valuable asset. Unfortunately, the federal government does not do that, but Bob and the Federal Employees community, Robert Tobias, has been in the fight for federal employees who often make numerous sacrifices to be in public service. Instead, it has always been more popular to ask federal employees to sacrifice pay raises, and forego benefits, or to simply perpetuate negative stereotypes of federal employees. Bob Tobias has always known this is inaccurate and he has devoted his entire career to giving federal employees a stronger voice.

For many years, Bob has sought to educate the members of NTEU and federal employees of the importance of participating in the legislative process. I have had the opportunity to speak to the Northern Virginia legislative leaders as well as those who represent their colleagues from across the country at NTEU’s biennial legislative conference in Washington, D.C. It is apparent to me that the legislative program is thriving because of Bob Tobias and his commitment to ensuring that the voices of federal employees are heard on Capitol Hill.

NTEU was one of the main forces behind passage of a bipartisan bill, signed into law by President George Bush that would close the pay gap between the government and the private sector. Since the Federal Employees Pay...
Comparability Act (FEPCA) became law. Bob has fought to have the FEPCA language enforced and the pay raises provided for in the law fulfilled.

During the 105th Congress, Bob and I worked closely together on efforts to restructure the IRS and to ensure that the rights of both the American taxpayer and IRS employees were protected. Bob sought to make the employee's voices heard in the discussions of how to make the IRS more customer-service oriented and more responsive to the needs of the people it serves. IRS reform continues to be on-track and successful. This is in large part because of Bob Tobias' efforts to involve the employees at the agency.

I am certain that he will enjoy many new successes as he pursues writing, teaching, and educating a new generation. I am personally saddened that I will no longer be working with Bob on the numerous issues that affect the many federal employees living in the Eleventh Congressional District of Virginia but I wish Bob, his wife, and his family well as he pursues new opportunities. I will miss his leadership, his commitment, and his expertise.

Mr. Speaker, I know my colleagues join me in honoring Bob Tobias on his retirement as President of the TEF. He has been a tireless advocate for federal employees for the past thirty-one years, and I would like to join my colleagues in saluting him this evening. His dedication to federal employees and their issues is second to none. His commitment and leadership in the federal employees community will be sorely missed.

TRIBUTE TO MR. THOMAS CHARLES UNIS

HON. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor to one of the most productive civic leaders in the history of Dallas, Mr. Thomas Charles Unis, who passed away on July 17th. Mr. Unis was a gentleman, and an outstanding public servant. He was one of the best legal minds ever produced by the state of Texas. The City of Dallas is forever indebted to Mr. Unis for his leadership, and commitment to public service. The loss of Thomas Unis is an incredible blow to Dallas. We are comforted by the fact that Mr. Unis led an exemplary life.

As a man of faith, Mr. Unis was held in the highest regard, being designated a papal knight of St. Gregory by Pope Pius XII, and a Knight of Malta. Honors were no stranger to Mr. Unis, as he received praise for his dedication to community service, as founder or charter member of a number of organizations including the Catholic Foundation, University of Dallas, and the Greater Dallas Community Relations Commission.

Tom Unis not only had a record of community involvement, but was also able to use an impressive educational background to gain success in his career. Mr. Unis received his law degree from the University of Texas and served in the Navy in World War II before he began practicing law in 1946. As a result of the war period, cases moved in the District Attorney's office. Mr. Unis, a young prosecutor after World War II, gained experience in the office of the District Attorney, working on cases accumulated from the War period. Tom recalled in an interview that, "we were trying cases morning, noon, and night." Mr. Unis' legal career extended well into the 1980's, when he made his services available to Pennzoil, in the Pennzoil v. Texaco corporate lawsuit. According to Tom, he was compelled to take the case because "it was the biggest piece of litigation that had come along in years." Though Mr. Unis was an incredibly successful attorney, having a four decade career with the firm, Strasburger and Price, he devoted a substantial portion of his time to public service.

Thomas Unis began his participation in the political realm in 1959, at the University of Texas, when he serenaded female students as part of a campaign for student office. In 1957, nearly two decades later, Mr. Unis remained involved in local politics, serving on the Dallas City Council. In the early 1960's J. Erik Jonsson ran for mayor with the backing of the Dallas Citizens' Charter Association. Jonsson eventually persuaded Mr. Unis to become his campaign manager for the mayoral race. Mr. Jonsson, with Tom Unis as his campaign manager, won the mayoral race, and ironically, Mr. Unis later became the president of the Dallas Citizens' Charter Association. During the 1980s, Thomas Unis served on the Dallas Area Rapid Transit (DART) board as an appointee of the Dallas County Commissioners Court. His presence on the DART board as well as the other associations had a significant impact on Dallas, which is why his participation was requested for a large number of public service endeavors.

Mr. Unis died at the age of 81, and is survived by his wife, Dorothy and four children, Tom, Joseph, Cheryl, and Mary. Though the City of Dallas will mourn the death of Mr. Unis, we should remember his words: "I've had a lot of fun all my life," we should also celebrate his accomplishments, and the fact that he lived a long and memorable life. We all have lost an incredible person, but celebrate Mr. Unis' full and successful life.

HONORING YOSHIITO TAKAHASHI

HON. GEORGE RADANOVICH
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. RADANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a Clovis native, Yoshito Takahashi. Mr. Takahashi is among the 34 recipients worldwide to win a Medal of Honor from Japan's Minister for Foreign Affairs. The award is the Order of the Sacred Treasure, Gold and Silver Rays for his contributions to improving the status of Japanese Americans and the promotion of U.S.-Japan relations and community service. Fifteen people garnered the award in the United States.

Mr. Takahashi has left an indelible mark on healthcare in California's San Joaquin Valley. He helped build the first hospital in Clovis in 1939, and then over a period of 50 years, built another one. This hospital is a state-of-the-art healthcare facility serving not only the Clovis area but also the nearby mountain communities, including Yosemite National Park. For his service to the community and to healthcare, he was given a proclamation from the Mayor of the city of Fresno. The Board of the Community Health Foundation, which Mr. Takahashi served on for nine years, also recognized him at their annual Community Circle dinner in 1996.

Mr. Takahashi began his relationship with Community Hospitals of Central California (CHCC) when he joined the Board of Clovis Memorial Hospital in 1975. As a board member, he served on the Corporate Affairs Committee, the Long-Range Planning Committee, and the Physicians Relations Committee. Mr. Takahashi also served on the Audit Committee and the Quality Assurance Committee at Clovis Hospital. He continued to serve on the CHCC Foundation Board and until 1977, he was a member of the Foundation Committee responsible for Finance and Asset Management.

As he left his formal association with Community Hospitals of Central California, he left a relationship that started with a 40-bed hospital in Clovis and ended with much more. He was responsible for policy and support to a Community Healthcare System with an annual operating budget of over $300 million, and 1,000 beds, reaching out to people from Modesto to Bakersfield.

Mr. Takahashi has also been active in numerous community organizations and held various leadership positions within them. He has been involved with the Clovis Chamber of Commerce, the Clovis Unified District Foundation, and the Legacy Fund for the JCL. Mr. Takahashi was a Fresno County representative to the California Freestone Peach Association, served as past Director of the Clovis Rotary Club, secretary-treasurer of the Clovis District Coordinating Council, Director of the Central Valley Produce Company Bank, and as president of the Clovis Japanese American National Museum in Los Angeles and is an active member of the Fresno Buddhist Church, of which he has been a member for 50 years.

Mr. Takahashi believes that participation in competitive sports is as important as community involvement. He has been president of the Central California Amateur Union and a life member of the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States since 1974. Mr. Takahashi also served on the Jr. Olympic Judo Committee for 20 years and was an officer of the Central California Judo Black Belt Association in his community and for promoting U.S. and Japan relations. I urge my colleagues to join me in wishing Mr. Takahashi, his wife, and family, many more years of continued success.
IN MEMORY OF FEDERAL JUDGE FRANK M. JOHNSON, JR.
HON. ALCEE L. HASTINGS OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the late Federal Judge Frank M. Johnson Jr. As a federal judge, Judge Johnson's decisions literally shaped the future and the force of the civil rights movement in the 1960s. As an individual, he was a man whose commitment to his ideals and the law did not wane, despite considerable personal risk and significant sacrifice. Mr. Speaker, it is vital that Congress honor Judge Johnson for both of these roles, and to recognize the loss that his recent death represents.

Judge Johnson served on the U.S. District Court in Montgomery, Alabama, for twenty-five years, during the height of the civil rights movement in the 1950s and 1960s. In that time he made several decisions that formed the thrust of the civil rights movement. In 1956, when deliberating to the Montgomery bus boycott case, he outlawed segregation on public transportation, in parks, restaurants, libraries and schools. In the 1960s, Judge Johnson also signed the original order to integrate the University of Alabama, as well as the order to allow Martin Luther King Jr. and voting rights activists to march from Selma to Montgomery. Moreover, Judge Johnson participated in the decision that ultimately became the "one man, one vote" principal put forth by the Supreme Court.

Clearly, Judge Johnson's contribution to the civil rights movement was both significant and integral to its ultimate success. His impact was felt not only in Montgomery, but throughout the South and the nation as well. One must wonder to what extent the civil rights movement would have succeeded without the support, honesty, and courage of Judge Johnson.

While these decisions are hailed today as just and honest, Judge Johnson faced severe criticism, damaging slander, and even personal danger in the time that he made them. Then Governor George Wallace fueled his gubernatorial race by denouncing Judge Johnson, while his mother's home was bombed and a burning cross was placed on his own lawn. Yet Judge Johnson did not abandon his principles or his commitment to the law. He simply upheld the Constitution and did not question the consequences.

 Judge Johnson was truly a great man, whose unwavering principles are too rare today. As a legislator, former judge and lawyer, I am personally inspired by Judge Johnson's commitment to the law, and am grateful for his influence and the example he set for us all. Indeed, I am fully aware that I was able to become the first African American Federal Judge in Florida because of the principles Judge Johnson promoted and the opportunities he made possible for the African Americans of my generation.

Today, I remember him for these opportunities, the strides he made in civil rights, the definition he gave to the movement, and most of all, his commitment to what he perceived as right and just. Judge Johnson deserves this recognition, and I hope my colleagues will join me in paying tribute to this legacy that he has left after him.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong opposition of providing normal-trade-relations status to the People's Republic of China, because China continues to deny the greater part of its citizenry the most basic human rights; because it engages in the worst kinds of religious, political, and ethnic persecution; because it bullies neighboring countries, and because it undermines international stability by exporting missiles and nuclear technology to Iran, Iraq and other rogue nations.

Every year, we are told that normal-trade-relations status promotes continued economic growth and human rights in the People's Republic of China. While this trade has helped China expand its economy and improve the living standards of a relatively small number of its citizens, I believe it is an absolute stretch of imagination that China's economic growth has benefited the vast majority of its 1.5 billion citizens who continue to be denied—oftentimes forcibly—the freedom to think, speak, read, worship and vote as they wish.

I simply cannot agree with those who argue that normal-trade-relations will one day result in improved human rights in China as the government of that vast nation continues to violate human rights on a massive scale.

For example, the people of Tibet have been subject to especially harsh treatment by the Chinese Government because their culture and religion are inseparable from the movement that seeks full Tibetan freedom from China—a movement that has been brutally suppressed by the Chinese Government since the late 1940's when armed Chinese forces drove the Dalai Lama into exile.

Since then, the Chinese Government has stepped up its efforts to discredit the Dalai Lama as well as its campaign to eradicate the ancient culture and traditions of Tibet. In May 1994, a new ban on the possession and display of photographs of the Dalai Lama, resulted in a raid of monasteries in which Buddhist priests were brutally beaten by Chinese military personnel.

And it is not just the Buddhists that have been victims of this harassment. Since 1996, all religious institutions in China must register with the state. The failure to do so results in the closure of such institutions—or worse. For example, Human Rights Watch—Asia reports that unofficial Protestant and Catholic communities have been harassed, with congregants arrested, fined, sentenced, and beaten.

Even as recently as July 20, 1999, the Chinese Government has implemented large-scale arrests of Falun Gong practitioners in different parts of China. Falun Gong is a widely practiced meditation exercise that upholds the principles of truth, compassion, and forbearance. Although it has no political motivation or agenda, the Chinese Government has officially banned it as an illegal operation.

Sadly, China's policies have not changed since the United States and China have normalized trade relations. It has persisted on following policies that threaten to make it an increasingly disruptive force among all other nations. China's continuing and growing practice of selling advanced weapons and nuclear technology to Iran, Iraq and other rogue nations, not to mention their theft of U.S. nuclear technology, makes it a threat to world peace.

It should be remembered that, like China today, South Africa had a growing economy, a growing middle class—albeit racially limited, a significant United States business presence, and a severely repressive government. And, just like the arguments supporting normal trade relations with China, it was argued that continued and increased United States trade with South Africa would bring about the economic, social, and political reforms that would inevitably force the South African Government to dismantle apartheid.

However, despite our continued trade relations, the Government of South Africa continued and, in fact, stepped up its campaign of repression and terror, including kidnappping, torture, jailing, and murder, to maintain apartheid. It took a worldwide trade embargo—not increased trade—to convince a previously intractable South Africa to transform itself into the open and democratic society that it is today. The embargo—not, our previous policy of "constructive engagement"—convinced the South African leadership to, among other things, release Nelson Mandela from 27 years of imprisonment and recognize the African National Congress.

It took the Western World losing patience with the broken promises of the South African Government to bring about the inevitable prospects of the coming of democracy in South Africa.

It is time that we lose our patience with the People's Republic of China.

HON. ROSA L. DELAURO OF CONNECTICUT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, today, I am proud to stand and honor my good friend, Maria Morales who, at the age of 105, passed away July 27th. Maria was a resident of Casa Otonal, an Hispanic residential and service community in New Haven, Connecticut.

Living for over a century, Maria witnessed many sweeping changes to our Nation's history. Born in Juana Diaz, Puerto Rico, she came to Connecticut with her son in 1958. For over 20 years she was an active and committed member of the Casa Otonal Senior Center—sharing a myriad of stories with her many friends and family. I often spoke with Maria during my many visits to Casa Otonal. Bright and articulate, she was well-versed in many areas including politics and had a unique gift for patchwork quilts and other hand-crafted specialties. Just this past May, Maria participated in the 13th Annual Centennial Reception and was the oldest member of the honored group. “Maintaining a strong faith and an active lifestyle” was her secret to a long and successful life. With five children and dozens of grandchildren and great-grandchildren, Maria’s life was full and joyous. It was an honor to have known her.

Maria Morales was an exceptional woman and I am pleased to stand today to pay tribute to my dear friend and join with her daughter, Domitila, granddaughter, Carmen, family, friends, and the Casa Otonal community as they celebrate her life. Her vitality and spirit continue to shine in the many wonderful memories of her that we all share.

DISAPPROVING EXTENSION OF NONDISCRIMINATORY TREATMENT TO PRODUCTS OF PEOPLE’S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

SPEECH OF HON. NICK SMITH OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, the President has announced the extension of Normal Trading Relations with the People’s Republic of China. I support his decision because I believe that U.S. interests are best served by a stable and open China. However, most importantly, I believe that normal relations with China is the most effective way to convince them to end their human rights abuses and join the international community in support of democracy.

We should demand that China abide by international trade and non-proliferation agreements, cooperate in regional and global peace-keeping security initiatives, and maintain and respect the human rights of the Chinese people.

Our total trade and exports to China has dramatically expanded. The United States maintains a large agricultural trade surplus with China (including Hong Kong), our fourth largest agricultural market. U.S. agricultural exports to China reached almost $2.9 billion in 1998. In addition, engagement has produced significant breakthroughs in opening China’s agricultural market.

If the United States chose not to continue normal relations, we would be the loser. China will find other trade countries to replace the U.S. goods now sold to China. Should I be-
And whoever receives one such child in My name receives Me; but whoever causes one of these little ones who believes in Me to stumble, it is better for him that a heavy millstone be hung around his neck, and that he be drowned in the depth of the sea."

I applaud my colleagues who reached across party lines to protect children from those who would exploit them by normalizing pedophilia.

OBITUARY OF MRS. ADDIE THOMASON

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Addie Pressley Thomason was born in York County, South Carolina to the late John and Katie Wilson Pressley on October 9, 1896. She was called to her reward on Monday, July 12, 1999 at Gaston Memorial Hospital, Gastonia, North Carolina.

A lifelong resident of the Gastonia metropolitan area, Addie Thomason was the daughter and wife of farmers. She was a witness to more than a century of change and progress in the area; from mule-drawn transportation to space flight, and from rigid segregation to a society more representative of the needs and aspirations of all its citizens. Through it all, "Mother Addie" was a source of support, stability, courage, and comfort to her family, friends, and community at large. She was passionately committed to education and, despite being denied access to a formal education during her formative years, she persevered in pursuing her own goal of learning to read and write by attending school at the age of 85—an achievement recognized by the then Governor of the State of North Carolina.

During her life, "Mother Addie" was an avid gardener and active member of several area church congregations; including New Home AME Zion in York, South Carolina; Ebeneezer Baptist Church in Kings Mountain, North Carolina; and St. John Missionary Baptist Church of Gastonia, North Carolina. She often credited her faith in God as the source of her strength, determination, and longevity.

Addie Thomason was preceded in death by her husband, Fred Thomason and son, Fred, Jr. She leaves six loving children: Rev. John Thomason of Bloomfield, New Jersey; Leroy Thomason of Stanley, North Carolina; and Rev. Mason Thomason, Alice Ross, Lillian Thomason, and Cora Lee Hart, all of Gastonia, North Carolina.

She is also survived by two loving daughters-in-law, sixteen grandchildren, twenty-three great-grandchildren, and sixteen great-great grandchildren, as well as a host of family and friends.

THERE IS A VIRUS LOOSE WITHIN OUR CULTURE: AN HONEST LOOK AT MUSIC'S IMPACT

HON. THOMAS G. TANCREDO

OF COLORADO

Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, it has been more than three months since the tragic event of Columbine High School occurred a few blocks from my home. As we here in Congress continue to struggle to find ways to prevent this heart-wrenching event again, I would like to call attention to a report prepared by the Free Congress Foundation which will hopefully broaden our understanding of how cultural factors shape the lives of our youth.

I would like to submit into the record the attached executive summary from the report written by Tom Jipping, Director of the Center for Law and Democracy at the Free Congress Foundation, which details popular music's contribution to youth violence. Mr. Jipping has worked with at-risk youth for a dozen years, and research and written in this area for over a decade. The research, survey, search, data, and other evidence documenting how some popular music can lead some young people to violence. Many congressional offices have received a hard copy of the entire report already.

The report does not advocate any specific policy proposals but instead provides comprehensive information that will make anyone, no matter what plan of action they pursue, better informed.

The report has been endorsed by hundreds of grassroots organizations and religious leaders from the evangelical, Catholic, Jewish and Orthodox communities. I urge all Members to read the attached executive summary and the full report as we continue to address the problem of youth violence and delinquency.

"THERE IS A VIRUS LOOSE WITHIN OUR CULTURE: AN HONEST LOOK AT MUSIC'S IMPACT"

(By Thomas L. Jipping)

After two teenagers killed twelve of their peers, a teacher, and themselves at Columbine High School in Littleton, Colorado, Governor Bill Owens said that "there is a virus loose within our culture." The effort to identify that virus is properly focusing on how the media reports, these boys all killed out of revenge against, those who had offended, harassed, or persecuted them. Luke Woodham, for example, had said that "the world has wronged me."

Consider what their idol Marilyn Manson told them to do about it:

"The big bully try to stick his finger in my chest, try to tell me, tell me he's the best. But I don't really give a good * * * cause I got my lunchbox and I'm armed real well .. . Next * * * gonna get my metal .. . Powa pow pow, pow pow pow, pow pow pow, pow pow pow. .. . I wanna grow up so no one * * * with me"

"But your selective judgments and gooduy badys don't mean a * * * to me. I throw a little fit. I sit my teenage wrist. Get your gun, get your gun."

"I hate the hater, I'd rape the vaper"

"There's no time to discriminate, hate every * * * that's in your way."

"There is no cure for what is killing me, I'm on my way down; I've looked ahead and saw a world that's dead, I guess I am too; I'm on my way down, I'd like to take you with me"

"I'll make everyone pay and you will see . . . The boy that you loved is the monster you fear"

"When you are suffering know that I have betrayed you"

"Shoot here and the world gets smaller; Shoot shoot shoot * * *

"Live like a teenage Christ; I'm a saint, go date with suicide"

"I'm dying, I hope you're dying too I'm gonna hate you tomorrow because you make me hate you today"

The second parallel is the message Manson himself says he tries to promote. Ordained in the Church of Satan, Manson has said that "[Church of Satan founder Anton] LaVey along with Nietzsche and [British Satanist Aleister] Crowley have all been great influences on the way that I think." In a foreword to the book Satan Speaks, Manson wrote that "Anton LaVey was the most righteous man I've ever known."

On CNN's The American Edge program, Manson explained his message: "God is dead, you are your own god. It's a lot about self preservation. . . . It's the part of you that no longer has hope is mocked. And you realize that you are the only thing you believe in."

Manson has compared Christians to Nazis and insists that "hate is just as healthy and worthwhile as love."

This message contributes to the situation Vice President Al Gore described at a Littleton memorial service on April 25, 1999: "Too many young people place too little value on human life."

The third parallel is Manson's own life, which looks similar to those who consume and act on the music they consume. According to media reports, these boys all killed out of revenge, against, those who had offended, harassed, or persecuted them. Luke Woodham, for example, had said that "the world has wronged me."

Consider what their idol Marilyn Manson told them to do about it:

was the only thing I had to enjoy. So I got into heavy metal rock bands: Kiss, Black Sabbath and things like that.”

While Marilyn Manson alone is not the problem, his brand of music promotes violence more aggressively than ever. Indeed, Manson’s own response to the Littleton massacre raises the issue to be addressed here. Television or even religion may cause youth violence, he says, but music plays no role whatsoever. In fact, he claims that he is actually a victim when he asserts that the media “has unfairly scapegoated the music industry. . . . and has speculated—with no basis in truth—that artists like myself are in some way [sic] to blame.”

Unfortunately, it appears that the music industry’s only response to this cultural crisis is simply to deny that its products have any effect on anyone. One the June 29, 1999, edition on CNN’s Showbiz Today program, for example, musician Billy Joel dismissed as “absurd” the idea that music influences violent behavior. Elton John put it more bluntly: “It has nothing to do with the musical content or the lyrics whatsoever. [The idea is] absolute rubbish.”

No one, of course, argues that popular music is the sole cause of youth violence. Something as complex as human behavior does not have a sole cause. The question is whether popular music and other cultural influences (such as no seriously argues), but whether there is any “basis in truth” for the proposition that some popular music makes a real contribution to youth (something only the music industry deigns).

The affirmative answer to this question rests on three pillars. First, media such as television and music are very powerful influences of attitudes and behavior. Second, popular music in an even more powerful influence on young people. Third, some of the most popular music today promotes destructive behavior such as violence and drug use.

Effective prescriptions require accurate diagnoses. Whether the solution involves parental involvement, public policy, pressure on record companies or retailers to change their practices, or all of these and more, the effort must be informed by a comprehensive understanding of the problem.

Toni Parks, Guest Lecturer for the RC Hickman Young Photographers Workshop

HON. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON
OF TEXAS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join the constituents of the 30th Congressional District of Texas, the residents of Dallas and my colleagues in the House of Representatives in taking great pleasure to proclaim July 31st, 1999 as “Toni Parks Day.”

Mr. Speaker, Ms. Toni Parks is an internationally acclaimed photographer whose works have appeared in prominent magazines and newspapers throughout the U.S. and Europe. Her pictures have appeared in Stagebillet, American Vision, USA, Life, and Arts, to name a few. Toni Parks has been featured in numerous publications including the Lott Gallery, Tony Green Gallery in England, Columbia University, and the Martin Luther King Gallery. Her photos consist of fashion and beauty as only Toni Parks can vision. In her years as a photographer, she has received critical acclaim for her works of art. Toni Parks will be a platform to share her experiences with the students and enthusiasts of the RC Hickman Young Photographers Workshop at the South Dallas Cultural Center, located on the corner of Robert B. Cullum and Fitzhugh. The program is presented each year by the Artist and Elaine Thornton Foundation For the Arts, Inc., a non-profit organization established to educate, promote and embrace the arts of all disciplines including drama, dance, visual, and music. Its mission is to bring about positive social awareness to the inner city community, using art as a tool for positive social change. We salute you Toni Parks.

Therefore, I ask that all citizens of Dallas join in celebrating July 31st, 1999 as “Toni Parks Day.”

RECOGNIZING JACQUE CORTEZ
HON. GEORGE RADANOVICH
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. RADANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Jacque Cortez upon her selection by Visalia-area schools as a “Good Kid.” Jacque was chosen based on her academic achievements, classroom leadership, and efforts in literature and music.

The “Good Kid” program was formed in an effort to provide students with positive reinforcement. The program allows Visalia teachers to nominate students, who have excelled in academics and demonstrated a good work ethic, for recognition in the Visalia Times Delta newspaper. Those individuals selected are mentioned in a piece featured daily in the Times Delta.

Jacque Cortez, who was nominated by her fifth grade teacher, currently attends sixth grade at Willow Glen Elementary in Visalia, California. Throughout Jacque’s years at Willow Glen, faculty and classmates alike have considered her to be a student who is eager to learn and always willing to assist others.

Mr. Speaker, I want to recognize Jacque Cortez for being selected as a “Good Kid.” I urge my colleagues to join me in wishing Jacque continued success in her academic and extracurricular pursuits.

INSIGHTS ON THE PEACE PROCESS
HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to enter into this record an opinion piece from the May 30th Washington Times by former Illinois Senator Chuck Percy. In this article, Senator Percy concisely points out the present status of the peace process and those steps that must occur next for progress to continue. This is a timely and insightful piece that I commend to the attention of all members.

EMBRACING PEACE AND PROGRESS

The statement of Ehud Barak, Israel’s new prime minister, that he is determined to revive the Middle East peace process, to withdraw Israeli troops from Lebanon and to negotiate with Syria and the Palestinians is good news.

Mr. Barak’s words are encouraging to Israelis who seek the security only peace can bring, to Palestinians who long for a place of their own can only be satisfied with the acquiescence of Israel, and to the United States, which has worked for a settlement of the Arab-Israeli dispute for so many years.

Also encouraging is Syria’s quick and affirming response expressing a willingness to resume negotiations with Israel and asking that Lebanon be included.

Apparently, Mr. Barak—once he has put together a government—will begin to clear the smothering fog or acrimony and distrust left behind by Benjamin Netanyahu’s Likud government, and has reneged on the deal.

It would be appropriate and wise for Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat to acknowledge openly Israel’s need for security by announcing and taking strong, credible new measures to prevent terrorist acts against Israel.

Mr. Arafat has to do more than he has done previously. Such moves by Mr. Barak and Mr. Arafat would begin to clear the smothering fog or acrimony and distrust left behind by Benjamin Netanyahu and would engender an atmosphere more conducive to serious negotiations.

Considering the checkered nature of the peace process up to this time, it is hard to have confidence a fresh start will succeed. But Mr. Barak comes to office with a clear mandate from his people, and the Palestinians must recognize that they now have another chance to complete the process developed in Oslo.

Mr. Barak and Mr. Arafat surely must realize the future of the region lies in peace—not escalation, and that determining to choose a future in which their human and financial resources can be concentrated on peacetime tasks, their region can be more secure for all, and there will be an opportunity—with help from the international community—to build their economies and establish trade links between themselves and the entire world. It is still true that political relationships tend to follow the trade lines.

In 1994, when I served as a Senate representative on the United Nations General Assembly, I was in the hall when Mr. Arafat made his first speech there. At that time, I thought it might be possible to find the path to peace, if the leaders of Israel and the Palestinians had the courage to meet, to discuss the difficult and detailed questions of their mutual dilemma, and to decide what risks they could afford, what concessions they could make.

Since then, much progress has been made in communications between Arabs and Israelis. From Camp David to Madrid to Oslo, the peace process became viable and promising. But always there were interruptions in the dialogue, due to fears focused on one side or the other, often by terrorist acts or unwise unilateral moves by leaders.

oversee and possibly censure the content of news reports and other information programs in Russia. This is a frightening prospect for all news organizations, and particularly for privately owned independent media—who could lose their freedom to report news as they see it. This censorship effort could be particularly destructive during periods of increased political activity, such as national election campaigns.

Mr. Speaker, the situation today in Russia is especially precarious given President Yeltsin's fragile health and the absence of strong leadership at the national level. This has been clearly demonstrated by the fact that President Yeltsin has dismissed three Prime Ministers in the past two years. With the upcoming parliamentary elections in December 1999 and presidential elections in June 2000, the situation is expected to become even more politically charged and volatile.

It would appear, Mr. Speaker, that the newly launched effort to control and/or censure the media in Russia is in large part explained by these upcoming elections. With the beginning of serious political activity over the next year in connection with the parliamentary and presidential elections, Kremlin authorities have accelerated their offensive against NTV and other independent news outlets. One of the clearest indications of this struggle is the fact that the state-owned television network ORT is using its news programs to undermine privately owned rival television network.

Mr. Speaker, I have consistently supported U.S. programs to help Russia to get back on its feet economically, to develop strong private institutions, and to establish a functioning market-oriented economy. All of us want to see Russia succeed and become a strong and viable democratic country which plays a positive role in the community of nations. Respect for freedom of expression and freedom of the press, however, are absolutely essential if we are to assist Russia, and an uncensored press is essential if Russia is to take its appropriate place in the world.

I call upon President Boris Yeltsin and Prime Minister Sergei Stepashin to take quick and decisive action to end once and for all the efforts within the Kremlin to punish, intimidate and decisively is thereby detrimental to the national security and well being of the United States.

Three aspects of the Pakistani behavior during the crisis should worry us:
1. Intentional reliance on nuclear capabilities in order to shield one's own aggression. A policy advocated by radical Islamists since 1993, the current Pakistani nuclear doctrine constitutes a profound deviation from the post WWII norm of using nuclear weaponry—an utter deterrence in the form of weapons of last resort in case of aggression against one's own state and/or most vital interests. The Pakistani intentional and unilateral ultimatum—repeated warnings to escalate the Kargil crisis into a nuclear war in case India's reaction to the Pakistan aggression threatened to deprive Pakistan of any achievement—exceeds even the most aggressive use of the nuclear card by the USSR at the height of the Cold War (when Moscow reiterated its commitment to use nuclear weapons solely at time of a major world war). In contract, the Pakistani nuclear ultimatum is identical to the nuclear blackmail doctrine of the People's Republic of China and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea—a doctrine based on brinkmanship and blackmail which both states tinkered with but are yet to have implemented despite repeated crises. Thus, it is Islamabad that was the first to cross the threshold of aggressive use of one's own nuclear potential.
2. Concealing the use of one's own national military forces as deniable "militants." In so doing, Islamabad demonstrated unwillingness to face responsibility for actions that amount to an act of war. This is a blatant break of the international order stipulating that sovereign governments acknowledge their own actions—thus opening up to United Nations intervention as well as other forms of crisis management and containment by the international community. While such international intervention may not be welcome in Islamabad, or elsewhere for that matter, this is the way the modern world works: The acknowledged responsibility and accountability of sovereign governments are the cornerstones of international relations and are thus the key to preventing all out chaos in an already volatile world. Indeed, governments that internationally break away from this posture are labeled rogue and are shunned by the international community.

In contrast, India should be rewarded as the rogue and terrorism sponsoring state that it now is. Pakistan should be treated accord- ingly and, given the cynical use of war-by-proxy and nuclear threats for so long, Pakistan ought to make a mockery of the most basic norms of international relations and crisis resolution dynamics. As such, the Clinton Administration effectively encourages other rogues and would-be aggressors to pursue their objectives through brinkmanship, blackmail, aggression, and terrorism.

AFTER KARGIL—WHAT?

HON. BILL McCOLLUM
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my concern over an important foreign policy decision. If left unpunished, the Pakistani conduct during the recent Kargil crisis—particularly in view of the Clinton Administration's hands-on—would set a dangerous precedent for would-be aggressors and rogue nations. Failing to address the Pakistani precedent swiftly and decisively is therefore detrimental to the national security and well being of the United States.

Three aspects of the Pakistani behavior during the crisis should worry us:
1. Intentional reliance on nuclear capabilities in order to shield one's own aggression. A policy advocated by radical Islamists since 1993, the current Pakistani nuclear doctrine constitutes a profound deviation from the post WWII norm of using nuclear weaponry—an utter deterrence in the form of weapons of last resort in case of aggression against one's own state and/or most vital interests. The Pakistani intentional and unilateral ultimatum—repeated warnings to escalate the Kargil crisis into a nuclear war in case India's reaction to the Pakistani aggression threatened to deprive Pakistan of any achievement—exceeds even the most aggressive use of the nuclear card by the USSR at the height of the Cold War (when Moscow reiterated its commitment to use nuclear weapons solely at time of a major world war). In contract, the Pakistani nuclear ultimatum is identical to the nuclear blackmail doctrine of the People's Republic of China and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea—a doctrine based on brinkmanship and blackmail which both states tinkered with but are yet to have implemented despite repeated crises. Thus, it is Islamabad that was the first to cross the threshold of aggressive use of one's own nuclear potential.
2. Concealing the use of one's own national military forces as deniable "militants." In so doing, Islamabad demonstrated unwillingness to face responsibility for actions that amount to an act of war. This is a blatant break of the international order stipulating that sovereign governments acknowledge their own actions—thus opening up to United Nations intervention as well as other forms of crisis management and containment by the international community. While such international intervention may not be welcome in Islamabad, or elsewhere for that matter, this is the way the modern world works: The acknowledged responsibility and accountability of sovereign governments are the cornerstones of international relations and are thus the key to preventing all out chaos in an already volatile world. Indeed, governments that internationally break away from this posture are labeled rogue and are shunned by the international community.

In contrast, India should be rewarded for the responsibility and self-restraint practiced by New Delhi. Under the extreme pressure of a foreign invasion—albeit of a limited scope—on the eve of bitterly contested national elections, the Indian government rose to the challenge and placed the national interest ahead of political expediency. In so doing, New Delhi behaved like the major democratic power India
Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the innovation and dedication of Colorado Bluesky Enterprises, Inc., of Pueblo, Colorado. The services which this institution provides for the developmentally disabled citizens of Pueblo and Pueblo County are both noble and commendable.

Formerly known as Pueblo County Board for Development Disabilities, Inc., Colorado Bluesky Enterprises was established in March of 1964. As one of 20 Community Centered Boards which contracts with the state of Colorado, Colorado Bluesky provides services for people with developmental disabilities. CBE first began its work in an old former school building with only 12 students, CBE has grown to serve several thousand people. Currently, CBE dedicates time to working with the 750 citizens with developmental disabilities.

CBE provides numerous services and opportunities for the individuals whom rely on their benefits. Through an array of day programs for people of all ages, job training, community participation, and OBRA day services for individuals in nursing homes, CBE strives to make a better life for the people of Pueblo.

Colorado Bluesky Enterprises provides personal care alternatives such as host home services, staffed personal care alternatives, and drop in supports. CBE also works to ensure affordable housing for families with low incomes.

I am grateful for the dedication and courageous efforts of Colorado Bluesky Enterprises, and I would like to congratulate them on 35 years of commitment to helping others. On behalf of all those it has served, I would like to thank CBE and offer recognition of their dedication to the Pueblo community.

TAXPAYER’S DEFENSE ACT

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS OF PENNSYLVANIA

_in the House of Representatives_

Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, today I join with Mr. HAYWORTH to introduce the Taxpayer’s Defense Act. This bill simply provides that no federal agency may establish or raise a tax without the approval of Congress.

One of the principles on which the United States was founded was that there should be no taxation without representation.

In The Second Treatise of Government, John Locke said, "If any one shall claim a power to lay and levy taxes on the people, without * * * consent of the people, he thereby * * * subverts the end of government." Consent, according to Locke, could only be given by a "multitude of people, either by themselves or their representatives chosen by them." The Boston Tea Party celebrated Americans’ opposition to taxation without representation. And the Declaration of Independence listed, among the despotics acts of King George, his "imposing Taxes on us without our Consent." First among the powers that the Constitution gave to the Congress, our new government’s representative branch, was the power to levy taxes.

The logic of having only Congress establish federal taxes is clear: only Congress considers and weighs every economic and social issue that rises to national importance. While any faction, agency, or sub-agency of the government may view its own priorities as paramount, only Congress can decide which goals are of the highest priority to recipients of taxpayer dollars. Only Congress can determine the level at which taxpayer dollars should be spent.

The American ban on taxation without representation has not been seriously challenged during our nation’s history. The modern era of restricted federal budgets, however, threatens to erode the essential principle of “no taxation without representation.” In ways that are often subtle or hidden, federal agencies are taking on—or receiving from Congress—the power to tax. Federal agency taxes pass the costs of government programs on to American consumers in the form of higher prices. These secret taxes tend to be deeply regressive and they create inefficiency in the economy. They take money from everyone without helping anyone.

The worst example of administrative taxation is the Federal Communications Commission’s Universal Service Tax. “Universal service” is the idea that everyone should have access to affordable telecommunications services. It originated at the beginning of the century when the nation was still being strung with telephone wires. The Telecommunications Act of 1996 included provisions that allowed the FCC to extend universal service, ensuring that telecommunications are available to all areas of the country and to institutions that benefit the community, like schools, libraries, and rural health care facilities.

Most importantly, the Act gave the FCC the power to decide the level of “contributions”—taxes—that telecommunications providers would have to pay to support universal service. The FCC now determines how much can be collected in taxes to subsidize a variety of universal service spending programs. It charges telecommunications providers, who pass the costs on to consumers in the form of higher telephone bills. The FCC recently nearly doubled the tax to $2.5 billion dollars per year, and Clinton Administration budgets have projected a rise to $10 billion per year. Mr. Speaker, this administrative tax is already out of control.

The FCC’s provisions for universal service have many flaws. Among them are three “administrative corporations” set up by the FCC. The General Accounting Office determined that the establishment of these corporations was illegal and the FCC has collapsed them into one, no less illegal corporation. The head of one of these corporations was originally paid $200,000 dollars per year—as much as the President of the United States. Reports have come out about sweetheart deals between government contractors and their State government friends, who have access to huge amounts of easy universal service money.

This FCC prompted our inquiry into this issue. As our study continues, it reveals that a number of federal agencies have been given, or discovered on their own, the power to tax.

Congress has given taxing authority to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Because these taxes are within statutory parameters, we have less concern with them than others, but they are still taxes and an important principle is at stake: no taxation without representation. The Constitution gives the taxing power only to Congress. In practice, we see a direct correlation between an agency having taxing authority and the agency overcompensating with taxes. Congress must retain the power of the purse.

More egregious examples are those where agencies have spontaneously discovered the power to tax. We categorize the FCC’s telecommunications tax as such, and note two taxes, past and proposed, on Internet domain name registration. Mr. Speaker, just when we thought we had protected the internet from taxation with Internet Tax Freedom Act, we discover new taxes right under our noses. The first, sponsored by the National Science Foundation, collected more than $60 million before a federal judge put a stop to it. The second, under the aegis of the Commerce Department, proposes to charge $1 per Internet domain name per year. I would like to know what Commerce Department official stands to be voted out of office if he or she sponsors an increase in this tax.

Finally, we note with dismay that the Administration’s electricity legislation proposes a tax as high as $3 billion to be imposed by the Secretary of Energy. Federal agency taxation appears to be a popular trend in some circles. Washington special interest groups seem to be able to unite around one thing: taking money from taxpayers. Mr. Speaker, special interests who feed at the federal trough are already geared up to accuse the Republican Congress of cutting funding for education and health care if any attempt is made to rein in the FCC. They will cynically frame the issue as a matter of federal entitlements for sympathetic causes and groups.

But the most sympathetic group is the American taxpayer, whose money is being taken, laundered through the Washington bureaucracy, and returned (in dramatically reduced amounts) for purposes set by unelected Washington poohbahs. This is why we must require the FCC, and all agencies, to get the approval of Congress before setting future tax rates.

Should tax dollars be used for federal programs? In what amounts? Or should Americans spend what they earn on their own, locally determined priorities? Requiring Congress to review any administrative taxes would answer this question.
My bill would create a new subchapter within the Congressional Review Act for mandatory review of certain rules. The portion of any agency rule that establishes or raises a tax would have to be submitted to Congress and receive the approval of Congress before the agency could put it into effect. In essence, the Act would disable agencies from establishing or raising taxes, but allow them to formulate proposals for Congress to consider under existing rulemaking procedures. It is a version of a bill introduced and ably advocated for by Mr. HAYWORTH. He joins me today as a leading cosponsor of this bill.

Once submitted to Congress, a bill noting the taxing portion of a regulation would be introduced (by request) in each House of Congress by the Majority Leader. The bill would then be subject to expedited procedures, allowing a prompt decision on whether or not the agency may put the rule into effect. The rule could take effect once a bill allowing it was passed by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President. If the rule were approved, the agency would retain power to reverse the regulation, lower the amount of the tax, or take any other legal actions with respect to the rule.

Mr. Speaker, the cry of "no taxation without representation" has gone up in the land before, and today we are hearing it again. Congress must not allow a federal agency comprised of unelected bureaucrats to determine the amount of taxes hardworking Americans must pay. While preserving needed flexibility, the Taxpayer’s Defense Act will allow Congress alone to determine the purposes to which precious tax dollars will be put.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

TAXPAYER’S DEFENSE ACT

HON. J.D. HAYWORTH

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the Taxpayer’s Defense Act, which Mr. GEKAS and I are introducing today, would establish a system to allow Congress, and only Congress, to approve new taxes before they take effect. Before an administrative tax could be imposed on the American people, an agency would submit the rule or regulation to Congress. The Majority Leaders in both the House and Senate would introduce the bill by request. The bill would then be subject to expedited procedures and the rule would not go into effect until an approval bill was passed by the House and Senate and signed by the President. It is important to note that this legislation would only affect future administrative taxes, not those currently in effect.

I believe the constitutional precedent for this legislation is clear. Article I, Section 8 of the Constitution gives Congress the “power to lay and collect taxes.” It doesn’t give unelected, unaccountable bureaucrats this power; it gives only Congress this power. Moreover, the Constitution’s “separation of powers” doctrine ensures that each branch of government would have one specific duty. By delegating legislative powers to unelected officials, we are allowing the executive branch to become both the maker and enforcer of our nation’s laws, which is in direct violation of the Founders’ intent. By enacting the Taxpayer’s Defense Act, Congress would give an accountable body—accountability to federal taxation and reduce the hidden taxes that are being imposed on the American taxpayer.

While administrative taxation hasn’t been used often, it is used increasingly to circumvent the legislative process. One of the most troubling administrative taxes is the Federal Communications Commission tax on long distance telephone service, which is also known as the Gore tax. Every telephone caller in the United States is subjected to this tax, which raises approximately $2.5 billion annually. Other regulatory agencies are also doing an end run around Congress, including the Commerce Department’s $1 tax on every Internet domain name. The National Science Foundation has tried a similar approach by authorizing a $30 tax on registration of domain names on the Internet. Fortunately, a federal judge ended this illegal tax, but not before taxpayers shelled out $60 million. The U.S. Department of Agriculture, through the Agricultural Marketing Service, has also gotten into the game with taxation of food commodities in order to fund advertising a promotion of commodities.

The point is simple: Americans can’t hold unelected executive branch employees accountable for administrative taxation. However, Americans can hold their representatives accountable for these taxes if we once again require Congress to vote on all of these administrative taxes. The Taxpayer’s Defense Act would achieve this goal.

In December 1773, American colonists boarded three British ships in Boston harbor and emptied chests of tea into the sea. This event, which we all know as the Boston Tea Party, celebrated American opposition to taxation without representation. That is why the Constitution specifically states that Congress shall have the power to tax. I urge this Congress to once again make Congress accountable for all taxation by passing this important legislation.

EMBRYONIC STEM CELL RESEARCH: UNLAWFUL, UNACCEPTABLE, UNNECESSARY

HON. BOB SCHAFFER

OF COLORADO

Thursday, July 29, 1999

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, President Clinton’s National Bioethics Advisory Commission recommended the United States government fund the practice of killing human embryos for research purposes. On top of the release of the Commission’s report, the Health and Human Services General Counsel has advocated the use of federal funds in using the destroyed embryos for research purposes. Mr. Speaker, funding destructive embryonic research with tax dollars is unlawful, unacceptable to the American people, and unnecessary since recent advances have revealed viable stem cell alternatives in adults.

Mr. Speaker, in 1995 Congress successfully added the Dickey/Wicker amendment to FY 1996 Labor/HHS appropriations bill. Each year since then, Congress has reaffirmed this crucial amendment as part of our law. The Dickey/Wicker amendment prohibited the use of federal funds for the creation of a human embryo for research purposes or for research in which an embryo is “destroyed, discarded or knowingly subjected to risk of injury or death.” While HHS has tried to rewrite the current law on embryo research, it is clear that Congress has prohibited all funding of “research in which” embryos are destroyed or discarded. Simply stated, the taxpayer funding of research which relies on the intentional killing of human beings would violate the law.

Using federal funds for such an unlawful practice is anathema to the people of the United States. Already eight states have enacted laws that make destructive embryonic research illegal. According to a 1995 Tarrance poll, 74 percent of Americans oppose the use of federal funds “to support the destruction of human embryos in order of fund advertising a promotion of commodities.” While the American people are quite evenly polarized on the issue of abortion, a majority of the population oppose the use of tax dollars to fund lethal research on human embryos.

Furthermore, scientists have confirmed there is no medical necessity for embryonic stem cell research. Those who thought embryonic stem cells were the only or best hope for organ repair have been proven wrong. Recent advancements have led scientists to consider an alternative, adult-derived stem cells. According to D. Josefson’s article in the British Medical Journal, new research suggesting that adult nerve stem cells “can de-differentiate and reinvent themselves” as blood-producing stem cells “means that for cells as a source of stem cells for medical research may soon be eclipsed by the more readily available and less controversial adult stem cells.” The Wall Street Journal article by L. Johannes entitled, “Adult Stem Cells Have Advantage Battling Disease,” states that adult “precursors or stem cells may prove much more useful to medical science” than cells obtained by killing human embryos—that is, preborn human boys and girls. While scientists used to be concerned that there were no known adult stem cells for some critical organs, research by Harvard Medical School researcher Evan Y. Snyder now thinks “we will find these stem cells in any organ that we look.”

Mr. Speaker, killing preborn babies for tissue harvest is never justified. The logic of this practice is not unlike that of the Third Reich, where torture was rationalized for medical research. It is something no civilized nation should condone, much less fund with the tax dollars of conscientious, disapproving Americans. I defy anyone in this chamber to look me in the eye and say that the deliberate taking of a new life, a unique and growing human being, is a justifiable sacrifice for the curiosity of science. When there are non-lethal alternatives, I defy anyone to tell the American people they have no choice but to pay for the young.

Littleton, Colorado, on April 20th. The fact remains that Eric Harris and Dylan

Klebold’s disturbed states of mind are the re-result of problems that our society has a responsibility to acknowledge and change.

This event has broken the already damaged national spirit, but it has brought to our attention the moral decline in American society. The lack of spiritual guidance among the nation’s youth that was once thought to be politically correct has only made life easier for young Americans to feel lost. Why did Eric Harris believe so strongly that life held no value, and why did Dylan Klebold feel so alone that he followed the demonic beliefs of his friend? These are the questions America must ask itself. Parents, teachers, administrators, friends, relatives, religious leaders, and especially our government must enter the active role in the lives of young Americans if future tragedies like the one at Columbine High are to be avoided.

Sarah Mayer: Why is it that prayer is for-bidden in schools, yet at the moment of service for those who died in Littleton, the theme of every speech was that the only way to heal such a wound was through faith in God and prayers of the spiritual community?

My fellow classmates and I at Rice Memorial High School are privileged to have prayer in our everyday lives. We feel that teaching kids about their spirituality gives them a stronger moral base to make better decisions throughout their lifetime. An anonymous student from a Catholic high school once said, ‘‘We do not kill together because we pray together.’’

Colleen McCormick: Kids need to be able to differentiate between fantasy and reality. But can they do this when video games like Doom, which teaches children how to kill people, are readily available? In order to curb the availability of those games, greater restrictions need to be placed on the Internet and sale of home games. Although the Internet has a lot faster communication and is an effective learning tool, it has also made media such as pornography and deadly games to be at the fingertips of the young.

The media is another aspect of our society that needs to be more careful about what im-gestions need to be restricted in terms of violence and sex.

Our proposal is that legislation be passed to more strictly enforce the age limits at movie theaters, and all television channels be required to rate their shows according to a government rating system.

Jessica Normand: Besides the media and schools, the most important influence every child has are their parents. As a society, we need to implore all parents to be involved in their children’s lives, and to keep track of the outside influences, such as the Internet and the harmful media we mentioned earlier.

Sarah Mayer: Kids need to understand that this isn’t a video game, it’s life, and there is no reset button. Thank you.

AREGARDING TREN VIOLENCE

(On behalf of Alicia Prince)

ALICIA PRINCE: I am Alicia Prince, here to speak on reducing teen violence.

I think we all are affected by what happened in Littleton. It has definitely given me the passion to come up here to say it.

I am originally from East Los Angeles, California, and I understand the type of violence that happens throughout our neighborhoods, communities, and in our schools. I think that firearms are a really big part of that, and I think that that should be discussed. I’m not antigun; I understand peoples’ rights to carry firearms, private collectors, and households as well. But when they’re in the wrong hands, there is trouble, there is a problem there. And a child’s hands are the wrong hands, and there is no reason why they should have been placed there.

My specific suggestion would be that there is absolutely no reason why every gun in this country, in this state, cannot be locked up, and ammunition locked up separately. There is no reason to have a loaded gun in your car, in your house. I understand where it is an issue in big cities. But it is not an issue where you have to carry a 9 millimeter strapped to your ankle and walk into a school in Vermont.

I think that this also goes to a deep-rooted problem of the teaching in this society. ‘‘Too many times, I have seen people perpetuate these cycles of poverty and violence because they just don’t know any beter. They don’t expect young children to be in a different direction, because that’s the way they have been taught. I think that mandatory parenting classes are absolutely essential. It is very important, and no harm can be done in it. I think it should be mandatory, and I think it is very important that parents know how to take care of their kids and know how to prevent this from happening.

There is no reason why these kids, especially in Littleton, should not have been—you know, this couldn’t have gone unnoticed. Okay? They were in the garage five hours, you know, working on bombs, and they had it written in their diary. That was accumulating for the past year and a half before it was, you know, executed. And I think that that is a direct, you know, obvious thing, that the parenting is just not happening adequately enough.

I am also a ward of the state. I am a foster kid. And all of the foster parents in which I live in, we know who every gun that is in their house and ammunition must be locked up separately. There is no reason it should not be done in every other house throughout this country.

So my two main suggestions would be, really good family counseling. Parents need to know how to create safe families, so that a teenager or a child has a sense of safety and belonging in their home and in school, instead of having to fight or shoot their way out of safety in school or in the community. And I think it is absolutely ludicrous this is happening when we have every power of preventing it.

CONGRESSMAN SANDERS. Thank you, Alicia.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2000

SPEECH OF

HON. EARL POMEROY

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1999

The House in Committee of the Whole

House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2587) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against revenues of said District for the fiscal year endning September 30, 2000, and for other purposes.

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Largent amendment to H.R.

2587, which would have as great an impact on these children’s lives as whether they will be able to be part of a family of their own. By placing restrictions on joint adoptions, the Largent amendment lessens the chance that these

3,000 children will ever be part of a ‘‘forever family.’’

The Largent amendment would also prevent child welfare workers from making decisions based on the best interests of individual children. The success of the child welfare system depends upon its ability to recognize that every waiting child has individual needs. The Largent amendment favors the judgment of Congress over that of child welfare professionals, who are experts at determining what constitutes a safe and loving home. Child advcacy organizations across the country, including the Children’s Defense Fund and the Child Welfare League of America, also oppose this amendment and have recognized that it could endanger the future of over 3,000 children.

Mr. Chairman, no event has so profoundly transfigured my own family as the adoption of my children, Kathryn and Scott. I will always be deeply grateful that my wife and I were able to welcome these two exceptional children into our home. The Largent amendment could prevent other families from experiencing this joy, and I urge my colleagues to oppose it.

Mr. Speaker, the Reverend Douglas Zimmerman of St. Thomas Episcopal Parish in Miami, Florida has always been known for his unselfish giving, his Christ-like character and his invaluable service to his parish and community. Among his many gifts are the precedents he sets and the ways in which he leads children by example into following the teachings of Jesus Christ. This Monday, August 2nd, Reverend Zimmerman will, once again, instruct students to give as Christ gave of himself, as he organizes a group of 12 dedicated students who have volunteered part of their summer vaca- tion to lend a helping hand to underprivileged families in Central America.

During this mission trip, Reverend Zimmerman and his team of 12 students will travel to Honduras, a country which was ravaged by Hurricane Mitch, to establish places of refuge for families who were left desolate. They will bring light to a world of darkness by providing children and families with the basic necessities which we, the fortunate, often take for granted. During their 9-day trip, the mission team will have the unique opportunity of building a House of the Lord, a church where individuals, families and entire communities can come to know Jesus. The sanctuary to be built, where families will gather for worship, where the needy will receive, and where the hungry and tired will find comfort and rest, will restore faith, hope and joy to the people of Honduras.

In light of the many contributions Reverend Zimmerman and the St. Thomas Episcopal Parish Youth Mission Team will make this summer, I ask that my colleagues join me in prayer to ensure safety for this team and in commending them for their faithfulness in bringing the “good news” of Jesus Christ.

IN HONOR OF MS. BRIGID O’KEEFFE

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FRIDAY, JULY 30, 1999

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor and recognition of Ms. Brigid O’Keeffe, a student from Ohio’s 10th district. Ms. O’Keeffe has recently been announced as one of the National Security Education Program’s Undergraduate Scholarship and Graduate Fel- lows for the 1999–2000 academic year. The National Security Education Program, which was established in 1992, was created to increase U.S. citizens’ understanding of different world cultures, to increase international co- operation and to strengthen U.S. economic competitiveness. The National Secu- rity Education Program fellows study those languages and areas of the world most critical to future U.S. national security.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

Ms. O’Keeffe was selected from a rigorous national-merit based competition made up of a pool of hundreds of well-qualified applicants. Aspire from traveling to Russia, where she will be studying, Ms. O’Keeffe will participate in the National Security Education Program’s Federal service requirement. All National Security Education Program award recipients have agreed to seek work in the Federal government in an organization with national security responsibilities. In the past, the program has placed award recipients in various posi- tions throughout the Federal sector, including: Departments of Commerce, Defense, State, and Treasury; NASA, USAID, USIA, and the Intelligence Community. Ms. O’Keeffe will no doubt be a fine addition to any one of these organizations. She should be congratulated on her accomplishments.

SALUTE TO THE MEDAL OF HONOR RECIPIENTS

HON. STEVE E. BUYER OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FRIDAY, JULY 30, 1999

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to re- flect on the recent Memorial Day recess. Over that weekend, I had the distinct pleasure and honor to assemble with a very special group of veterans, nearly 100 recipients of the Medal of Honor. It was truly an inspiring gath- ering, and at the same time, proved a very humbling experience. These individuals epit- omize the true meaning of selfless sacrifice and personal commitment.

While many have answered the call to duty, they have answered a higher calling. A calling that is spiritual in nature and bigger than one’s self. For love of God, country, family and friends, these brave individuals knowingly placed themselves in harm’s way, ready to sacrifice life and limb so that their comrades may live.

Their significant contributions have helped secure a more democratic and peaceful world over the last century. More importantly, their actions serve as a testament to all Americans about serving and caring for others. A recent letter to me from Major General Robert Moorehead, United States Army Retired, por- trays a fitting description describing that pow- erful event.

General Moorehead stated:

Memorial Day weekend in Indianapolis was one of the most significant weekends in the history of our great capital city. As the last days of the 20th century continue to unfold, Memorial Day weekend in the capital of In- diana was one to remember. Nearly 100 Medal of Honor recipients were guests for a series of stirring tributes. These included a solemn Memorial Service; the dedication of the only memorial to recipients to the Medal of Honor; grand marshals in the IPALCO 500 Festival Parade; an outdoor concert by the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra; and a pa- rade, featuring more than 10000 Indianapolis Motor Speedway oval prior to the start of the race.

As the 20th century draws to a close, many wonder if the nation has lost sight of the sacrifices which have been made to preserve freedom. After this Memorial Day weekend in Indianapolis, my heart remains swollen with pride in our land and my fellow citizens. The reception given these ordinary men who did extraordinary things can never be equaled.

I am especially proud of the untold hun- dreds of volunteers who gave of their time and talent to make these events possible. Memorial Day Weekend 1999 did much to convince me that our nation’s freedom loving spirit is alive and well.

A TRIBUTE MR. WING FAT

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES FRIDAY, JULY 30, 1999

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to rise in tribute to Mr. Wing Fat of Sacramento, California. The Sacramento Chinese Community Service Center will honor him for all of his great contributions to the Asian and Pacific Islander communities in our area. I ask all of my colleagues to join me in saluting Wing Fat’s outstanding philanthropic endeavors.

Wing Kai Fat was born in 1926 in Canton, China to Frank and Mary Fat. At the age of nine, Wing and his mother joined his father in the United States. While his parents worked hard to achieve the American dream, Wing, being the older sibling to his brothers and sisters, became a father figure in the family.

While helping to raise his younger brothers and sisters, Wing worked along side his father for very long hours at Frank Fat’s restaurant when it opened in 1939. Wing graduated from Sacramento High School in 1945 as a very accomplished athlete.

From 1945 to 1947 Wing served in the U.S. Army Air Force during the end of World War II. He rose to the rank of sergeant while stationed in the Philippines. He returned home to graduate from Sacramento State College in 1951.

Wing became the manager at Frank Fat’s restaurant where he quickly acquired a reputation as a gregarious and gracious host. While working at Frank Fat’s, a famous Sacramento eatery, he hosted presidents, governors, mem- bers of Congress, legislative leaders, and many celebrities.

Governor Pat Brown appointed Wing to the California Veterans Board in 1966 and Gov- ernor Ronald Reagan re-appointed him to that post in 1971. In 1981, Governor Jerry Brown appointed Wing to the California State Fair Board. Wing remains close with former Cali- fornia Governors George Deukmejian and Pete Wilson.

Besides Frank Fat’s, Wing is co-owner of Fat City, California Fat’s, and a soon-to-be opened restaurant in Roseville, California. He has established a remarkable reputation for his business acumen, as well as his commu- nity service activities. He has served on the board of directors of Cathay Bank and River City Bank in Sacramento.

Additionally, he has served on the boards of the California State University Sacramento Foundation, the Sacramento Host Committee, and the Golden State University Board. Wing is currently active on the University of Cali- fornia at Davis Hospital Leadership Council. and the Transplant Hope Foundation to raise funds for the UCD Transplant Research Center. He is also the past president of the Grandfathers Club of Sacramento.

Wing Fat is truly a gentleman in every sense of the word. He epitomizes honesty in business and service to community. His strong links to the business community have made the Asian Pacific Rim Festival founded by his father a great success every year in Old Sacramento. With the passing of his legendary restaurateur father, Wing devotes himself to continuing Frank Fat's legacy of strengthening the influence of Asian Americans in business and politics.

Mr. Speaker, I ask all of my colleagues to join me in applauding Wing Fat's great contributions to the Sacramento community. As he is honored I wish him a very enjoyable evening at the Sacramento Chinese Community Service Center's annual August Moon Night Dinner.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, due to official business, I was unable to record my vote on the following two measures that were considered here in the House of Representatives on July 29, 1999. Had I been present, I would have voted “nay” on rolcall vote 348 as well as rolcall vote 349.

DISAPPROVING EXTENSION OF NONDISCRIMINATORY TREATMENT TO PRODUCTS OF PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

SPEECH OF
HON. NANCY L. JOHNSON OF CONNECTICUT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to this resolution. Denying NTR to China will undermine United States economic interests. It is our twelfth largest market and China increased imports from the United States 11 percent last year; all products made by highly skilled workers earning high wages. Connecticut exports to China in 1998 totaled more than 301 million ranking it tenth in the nation. Connecticut businesses and its workers have a direct interest in maintaining normal trading relations with China and further opening China’s markets. With a quarter of the world’s population and the third largest economy, China’s buying power will grow tremendously in the years ahead. If we do not engage this emerging major market, other nations will replace U.S. companies and through the significant resulting profits gain a competitive advantage over us. That has already happened in the helicopter market through shortsighted American policy.

Mr. Speaker, it is just a fact that China is making quiet but significant progress in many areas. Unlike Russia, China has recognized the need to recapitalize their state-owned businesses and has gradually sold many to foreign companies. They are modernizing their economy without the level of unemployment, crime, and turmoil that has plagued other communist nations faced with this challenge.

Furthermore, western companies have brought management practices to China that develop individual initiative and respect workers’ ideas. They have brought more stringent health safety and environmental standards as well as accomplishing goals like reducing industrial waste 35 percent and harmful air emissions 36 percent, as did Carrier since 1995.

And western companies have brought more opportunity to workers through benefits like Osh's Elevator's home ownership program. In addition, China has had direct elections in half its villages, gaining experience with secret ballots and multicandidate elections. In some provinces, 40 percent of the candidates are young entrepreneurs and not Communist Party members. In 1997, as part of the rule of law initiative the training of legal aid lawyers began.

In sum, China is modernizing its economy and governance through a process that is harmonious with her long history and cultural traditions, but that should not obscure the growth of values in common with people in the west. It should certainly be obvious our common interest in the growth of trade between our nations based on the principles that undergird the WTO relationships. By renewing NTR and working with China to enter WTO we can help China adopt free and fair trade policies. Lower tariffs make our goods more affordable. Distribution rights under WTO will provide access to customers. Good for China, good for us.

I urge renewal of the normal trade relations with China and opposition to this resolution of disapproval.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION
HON. JIM SAXTON
OF NEW JERSEY
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 30, 1999

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced a bill that will aid the families of Toms River, New Jersey, a community in my district, and with its superfund site, is a mentally hazardous site.

Yet at the same time that I will greatly miss her, I know very little about radium 224 and it is time we take a closer look at its possible effects on public health.

My bill would require the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry (ATSDR) to complete a study of the toxicological effects of Radium 224 in drinking water. The study is to include an epidemiologic analysis of populations in areas where Radium 224 occurs in drinking water.

It would also require the administrator of EPA to establish safe drinking water standards for Radium 224 under the Safe Drinking Water Act. This measure would amend the Safe Drinking Water Act to instruct that each state revise its water quality assessment plan every five years and that the results be made available to the public.

It has been reported that childhood cancer rates in the United States are increasing each year. More and more, we hear of other cancer clusters appearing all across the country. This measure, coupled with the efforts of all those working on the Toms River case, will provide valuable assistance in addressing many of the mysteries associated with cancers in children. We have a commitment to find the cause of this cluster, and failing to do so would be a setback for everyone living near an environmentally hazardous site.

MAVIS TOSCANO
HON. ZOE LOFGREN
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 30, 1999

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Speaker, today I want to extend my warmest thanks, and my fondest best wishes, to Mavis Toscano, my chief of staff, who will be leaving my office at the beginning of August. We have become accustomen-to in Congress to staff members who come and go in a period of months or a few years, replaced in a matter of days by their successors who themselves are destined for only limited stays. Mavis Toscano was the shining exception to this rule. Mavis has been on my staff for some 15 years, dating back to when I was a member of the County Board of Supervisors in San Jose, and in my own journey from California to Washington she has been an indispensable assistant, an invaluable help, an immeasurable asset.

Over the years Mavis has handled nearly every imaginable task for a congressional staff member, sometimes all at once, and she has done it with a smile. For the last several years she has run my district office in San Jose, creating there a smoothly functioning enterprise whose successes on behalf of the people of the 16th District of California are innumerable. Her service to our community, both during her time with me and while she worked for the California State Assembly, has been at all times both resourceful and thoughtful. At times it has seemed like Mavis knew everyone in the District by his or her first name, and was owed a debt of gratitude by nearly all of them for her service.

Yet at the same time that I will greatly miss both the services of Mavis Toscano and her decades-long friendship, I cannot but be happy for the tremendous opportunities that remain open to her for the rest of her career. Just as my desire to serve brought me from San Jose to Washington, so have Mavis’s talents offered her even greater opportunities to continue the sort of work at which she has excelled for the past 15 years. I wish Mavis Toscano great success and good fortune in her next endeavors, and I know well that, judging by her work for me over the last 15 years, she will not be short of either.

IN HONOR OF MR. NATHAN BEDROSIAN

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 30, 1999

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor and recognition of Mr. Nathan Bedrosian, a student from Ohio’s 10th district. Mr. Bedrosian has recently been announced as one of the National Security Education Program’s Undergraduate Scholarship and Graduate Fellows for the 1999–2000 academic year. The National Security Education Program, which was established in 1992, was created to increase U.S. citizens’ understanding of different world cultures, to increase international cooperation and security and to strengthen U.S. economic competitiveness. The National Security Education Program follows study those languages and areas of the world most critical to future U.S. national security.

Mr. Bedrosian was selected from a rigorous national-merit based competition made up of a pool of hundreds of well qualified applicants. Aside from traveling to Japan, where he will be studying, Mr. Bedrosian will participate in the National Security Education Program’s Federal service requirement. All National Security Education Program award recipients have agreed to seek work in the Federal Government in an organization with national security responsibilities. In the past, the program has placed award recipients in various positions throughout the Federal sector, including: Departments of Commerce, Defense, State, and Treasury; NASA, USAID, USA, and the Intelligence Community.

Mr. Bedrosian will no doubt be a fine addition to any one of these organizations. He should be congratulated on his accomplishment.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, due to a family commitment I was unable to cast House roll call vote 355 on July 30, 1999; to instruct conferrees on the Financial Services Modernization bill, H.R. 10. If I had been present I would have voted “aye.”

This motion requires the conferrees to insist on the strongest possible consumer protections for financial and medical privacy of consumers and to protect against discrimination in access to financial services, including not weakening the Community Reinvestment Act (CRA). These are essential to protect consumers and to modernize the financial services industry.

25TH ANNIVERSARY OF TURKEY’S INVASION OF CYPRUS

SPEECH OF

HON. FRANK PALLONE, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague from Florida, Mr. BILIRAKIS, and my colleague from New York, Mrs. M ALONEY for organizing this Special Order. This year the anniversary of the illegal Turkish invasion of Cyprus is, tragically, of particular significance. It is being called the “Black Anniversary” because 25 years—a quarter of a century—have now passed since the Turks invaded Cyprus on July 20, 1974. It is important to remember this date every year, this year’s remembrance has added meaning.

The Turkish invasion and occupation of Cyprus is tragic for so many reasons. Innocent lives were lost. Families and friends were torn apart. And, as a result, the Turkish invasion contributed to the emigration of hundreds of thousands of Cypriots. The human suffering that has been caused by the Turkish invasion can never be reversed, and we must always remember on this day that a great many Cypriots lost their lives for no good reason. None of us here tonight can say anything that can reverse the brutality that took place. We can only honor the memory of those whose lives were prematurely cut short by Turkish aggression.

In addition to the human suffering, the Cyprus problem is tragic because the history of attempts to resolve the situation is one of missed opportunities for peace. Since the invasion, hundreds of attempts to solve this problem have been made, yet to date, the island is divided and remains one of the most militarized places on the face of the earth. Recent statements from the Turkish side, moreover, indicate their obstinance is only getting worse.

For the leading role it played in bringing NATO’s war with Serbia to an end, the Group of 8 major industrialized nations, the GB, agreed to press for a new round of United Nations negotiations on the Cyprus issue. The Secretary General of the U.N., Kofi Annan, endorsed the GB’s plan and subsequently announced he was prepared to invite the Greek and Turkish Cypriots to hold comprehensive peace negotiations. The Turkish Cypriot President Rauf Denktash quickly dismissed the U.N.’s proposal for a new round of peace talks as “nonsense.”

The justification the Turkish leader provided for rejecting a new round of peace negotiations is absolute garbage. Denktash said he would not attend any negotiations at which the democratically elected president of Cyprus, Glafcos Clerides, represented the Cypriot government. According to Denktash and his patrons in Ankara, the Cypriot government does not have any official jurisdiction or authority over the portion of the island that has been illegally occupied by Turkish troops for almost 25 years.

Adding to this absurdity, Denktash and Turkey claimed talks based on the bizonal, bi-communal framework that had been earlier accepted by the Turkish side and endorsed repeatedly by the international community were useless because they have to date failed to acknowledge the existence of two separate governments on the island. In other words, the Turkish side is now claiming talks are useless unless Cyprus and the entire international community accept terms that have for years been rejected as absurd. Glafcos Clerides is recognized internationally as the President of Cyprus. Turkey is alone in its recognition of the so-called Turkish Republic of Northern Cyprus. No other country in the world recognizes the portion of Cyprus that the Turks have illegally occupied as an independent state. The Turkish suggestion that future peace negotiations must be between leaders of independent nations was made by Denktash for the sole purpose of killing the proposed round of negotiations before it has a chance to succeed.

The international community has reaffirmed its position on the Cyprus issue twice in the last seven months. In December of last year, the U.N. Security Council passed a number of resolutions on the Cyprus situation, including Resolution 1217, which reiterates all previous resolutions on the Cyprus problem. Those resolutions state that any solution to the Cyprus problem must be based on a State of Cyprus with a single sovereignty and international personality and a single citizenship, in a bi-communal and bi-zonal federation, with its independence and territorial integrity safeguarded. That position was again reaffirmed in United Nations Security Council Resolution 1250, which was passed just about a month ago on June 27.

So on the one hand, we have the international community taking steps to reaffirm its commitment to a peaceful and just settlement to the Cyprus problem, and on the other, the Turks are only hardening their position and thumping their nose at whatever the international community suggests. And as I said this is truly tragic; this most recent refusal promises to be another chapter in a historical record that clearly documents a systematic campaign by the Turkish side to undermine proposals for peace no matter where they come from.

Last year, for example, the Cypriot government again offered to demilitarize the island after it decided to cancel the deployment of a defensive air-to-surface missile system. The Turks rejected the offer. In a separate gesture, the Cypriot government invited the Turkish-Cypriot community to participate in the Cyprus-EU negotiating team. That offer was also rejected. When the United States made an attempt last year to restart talks, the Turkish side undermined them before they had a chance to begin. In that instance, they insisted on two irrational preconditions to negotiations, prompting Ambassador Richard Holbrooke, who was leading the United States effort, to publicly rebuke the Turkish side for not being

HON. RANDY "DUKE" CUNNINGHAM
OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 30, 1999

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to express my gratitude for the exceptional services which Captain Bryan L. Rollins, U.S. Navy, has performed for the United States and for the County of San Diego. Captain Rollins' selfless devotion and patriotic performance make him a truly admirable American and one deserved of recognition by this body.

American Rollins has had an impressive Naval career with each assignment more demanding and more impressive than the last. He served aboard the U.S.S. Constellation as Chief Staff Officer in the Western Pacific and Indian Ocean through 1987. In November of 1990 Captain Rollins assumed duties as Commanding Officer of the Sun Downers. He amassed over 3000 hours and more than 800 carrier landings aboard the U.S.S. Carl Vinson and the U.S.S. Kitty Hawk. While serving as Navigator aboard the U.S.S. Kitty Hawk, Captain Rollins performed honorably and exceptionally in Somalia, the Persian Gulf and Korea. The Navy recognized his outstanding performance by awarding him four Meritorious Service Medals, the Navy Commendation Medal, and the Navy Achievement Medal.

In April of 1996, he was selected as Deputy Chief of Staff Commander, Navy Region Southwest. It was there that he was instrumental in the formulation and implementation of a regionalization plan which involved over 65,000 personnel and four full-scale Naval bases. In addition to consolidating and incorporating commands throughout San Diego, he established the Navy's first regional business office and developed business strategies which have become standard throughout the Navy-wide regionalization plan. His effective and efficient tactics have saved the Navy countless millions of dollars as it undergoes historic changes nowhere else. His management skills, foresight, and exceptional communication skills allowed him to gain widespread support for Navy operations throughout the community.

Captain Rollins' remarkable contributions to San Diego County, the United States Navy, and our Country speak to his intellect, his professional drive, and his relentless pursuit of excellence. I wish him the very best success as he starts a new chapter in his life. Congratulations and, as always, "fair winds and following seas."

AMERICAN INDIAN EDUCATION FOUNDATION

HON. DALE E. KILDEE
OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 30, 1999

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, as Co-Chairman of the House Native American Caucus, it is an honor for me to introduce a bill creating an American Indian Education Foundation. I especially want to thank the original cosponsors of this bill, they include: Representatives Patrick Kennedy, George Miller, Tom Udall, J.D. Hayworth, Earl Pomeroy and Jim Kolbe.

As a senior member of the House Education and the Workforce Committee, I have enjoyed the opportunity of developing proposals designed to support Indian education. Up for reauthorization this Congress is the Elementary and Secondary Education Assistance Act that includes a section devoted to Indian education. This Act supports the educational, cultural and academic needs of American Indian, Alaska Native and Native Hawaiian children.

It is estimated that the BIA educates approximately 12 percent of the Native American K–12 population. This means that 88 percent of our American Indian and Alaska Native youth rely on supplemental educational programs like Johnson O'Malley. This program provides services to more than 200,000 Indian students. However, these programs are drastically underfunded.

A critical need for an increase in funding for school construction exists in Indian country. When I came to Congress 23 years ago, I was appointed Chairman of the Indian Education Task Force. I will never forget visiting schools that were in such poor condition that the children of these schools could barely keep warm let alone have a chance at getting a decent education. I know that the judges in my hometown in Michigan shutdown prisons that were in better condition than many schools I visited.

Our Native American students deserve a decent education. It is our responsibility to ensure that our children are studying in environments conducive to learning. I support the creation of an American Indian Education Foundation because I believe Congress must find a new way to supplement current funding for BIA Indian education programs. The Foundation would encourage gifts of real and personal property and income for support of the education goals of the BIA's Office of Indian Education Programs and to further the educational opportunities of American Indian and Alaska Native students.

The governing body of the Foundation would consist of 9 board of directors who are appointed by the Secretary of Interior for an initial period. The Secretary of Interior and the Assistant Secretary of Interior for Indian Affairs would serve as ex officio nonvoting members. Members of the board would have to be "knowledgeable or experienced in American Indian education and . . . represent diverse points of view relating to the education of American Indians."

Election, terms of office, and duties of members would be provided in the constitution and bylaws of the Foundation. Administering the funds would be the responsibility of the Foundation.

This bill would allow the Secretary of Interior to transfer certain funds to the Foundation. It is my understanding that the initial funding for the Foundation would come from existing donations or bequests made to the BIA. Funds prohibited by the terms of the donations would not be used for the Foundation.

The Foundation is not a new idea to Congress. Congress has, from time to time, created federally chartered corporations. In 1967, Congress established the National Park Foundation. The purpose of the Foundation is to raise funds for the benefit of the National Park Service. Funds received from individuals, corporations, and foundations are distributed to individual parks through competitive grants. My bill is modeled after the 1967 Act.

I believe that an American Indian Education Foundation could be just as successful as the National Park Foundation. I want to emphasize that I believe that Congress has a federal trust responsibility to ensure that every Native American receives a decent education. This Foundation would not replace that responsibility, but would supplement it through grants designed to support educational, cultural and academic programs.

Mr. Speaker, this concludes my remarks on creating an American Indian Education Foundation.
My colleagues, this is a situation which must be met with fierce determination. We need to support an aggressive agenda for Indian education because the current landscape is not meeting the challenge.

Right now, the BIA and Office of Indian Education is not authorized to distribute privately donated monetary gifts or resources to supplement the missions of these agencies. Yet every year numerous inquiries from the public are made as to where they can donate funds that will be spent wisely on behalf of Indian education. Simply put, we are missing out on a unique opportunity to help funnel non-governmental resources into Indian education. Ultimately, I believe this legislation is the appropriate answer to this situation. We can give the public a high profile mechanism to reach out to Indian Nations in a way that is apolitical and noncontroversial.

Simply put, the establishment of an American Indian Education Foundation is good government. It speaks to a modern way of going things in which successful private-public partners are created. It is also an efficient way to get at the heart of a very pressing problem without placing an undue additional burden on taxpayers.

Within 2 to 3 years after enactment of this bill the Foundation should be completely self-sufficient and will not use more than 10 percent of its generated funds to pay for operating expenses. My colleagues, let be clear at the outset—the purpose of this legislation is not to create a new level of bureaucracy or make some starter rich. In my opinion such a situation would be one more example of where this government has failed in its trust duty to Indian Country. In brief, it is my intention to hold the bureaucracy to the letter of the law that we are now beginning to draft.

As for the role of Congress, I do want to make one thing perfectly clear. It should not be the intent of this legislation to use the funds raised to take the place of existing Indian education programs. Rather, these funds should be considered entirely separate and supplemental to the efforts of the Federal and tribal governments.

My colleagues, we all understand the budget shell game and I do not want to see the success of this program leveraged against governmental funding for teacher training, school modernization, and education technology initiatives.

In short, I do not want to hear one voice out there saying that we do not need to fund the Office of Indian Education because the Foundation has X amount of dollars in its account. To do so would again be another slight against our trust and treaty obligations to the First people of this nation.

In the end, I will not reiterate the obvious. Indian Country is lacking in the resources needed to train its children for the demands of the global economy.

The 106th Congress has a chance to help rectify this problem. While we should continue to allocate more federal resources towards the growing population of children within Indian Country we can also make it easier for private interests to become involved. Helping Indian children achieve the not only a public trust but a private one as well.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will move this legislation in an expeditious manner.
CONGRATULATING THE CHANDRA TEAM AT MARSHALL SPACE FLIGHT CENTER

HON. ROBERT E. (BUD) CRAMER, JR.
OF ALABAMA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 30, 1999

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to congratulate the Chandra team at Marshall Space Flight Center for their role in the successful launch of NASA’s Chandra X-ray Observatory. When Chandra reaches its planned orbit in about three weeks, and first turns its instruments to the far reaches of space, NASA will have opened a new and exciting chapter in space exploration and space science. From this chapter, America will reap new and exciting educational, intellectual, and quality-of-life benefits that are critical to our Nation’s future.

Chandra is 20 times more sensitive than any previous X-ray telescope, and together with NASA’s other Great Observatories already in orbit—the Hubble Telescope for studying objects in space using visible light, and the Compton Gamma Ray Observatory for detecting mysterious gamma rays—this X-ray observatory will give us the most complete picture ever of our universe.

At the heart of Chandra are eight of the largest and smoothest mirrors of their kind ever created. Together, the assembled mirrors weigh more than a ton, and if the State of Colorado were polished to the same degree of smoothness that went into the manufacture of these mirrors, Pike’s Peak would stand less than one inch tall. High-resolution cameras and other sensors complete the suite of hardware aboard the observatory, critical components of which have been exhaustively tested at Marshall Space Flight Center by the talented people of North Alabama. The technology and manufacturing expertise that went into constructing these instruments is no less riveting than the scientific observations that Chandra will make.

Just in building, launching, and operating the Chandra X-ray Observatory, we have added much to our store of knowledge about optics, engineering and design. What science will we learn when Chandra begins to open its X-ray eyes to space? Scientists stand to make fundamental advances in our understanding of many of the most puzzling features of the universe: black holes and quasars, the identity of “dark matter,” and the very age of the universe itself. By looking deep into the hottest, most violent parts of the cosmos—providing us with a laboratory that could never be reproduced here on Earth—Chandra will reveal an entire new level of detail in the far reaches of space, and will take our minds where our feet may never have a chance to tread.

Mr. Speaker, I share pride in Chandra’s launch and the excitement of discoveries yet to come with my friends and neighbors in North Alabama, with NASA, and with my colleagues in the House.
HON. PETER DEUTSCH
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 30, 1999

Mr. DEUTSCH. Mr. Speaker, as Russia prepares for Parliamentary and Presidential elections, there are alarming signals that the Kremlin is cracking down on privately owned news outlets which have been critical of government policies. In particular, I understand that the independent and highly regarded television station, NTV, has been pressured by officials who are displeased with its news coverage of the Kremlin. There are reports that the owners and reporters of NTV and other news organizations have been harassed, and that government agencies have threatened to deny operating licenses to these organizations, have attacked private media companies through state-owned media, and have issued veiled threats to nationalize NTV and other private media outlets.

Such actions undermine Russia’s free and democratic nature. I find particularly disturbing reports that Yeltsin Administration head Alexander Voloshin has asked his staff to find any grounds possible by which to initiate criminal action against owners of private media enterprises. The most notable example is Mr. Voloshin’s order to the Director of the Tax Police to carry out inspections of the editorial offices of media outlets owned by Media Most, the largest privately owned media company in Russia, headed by Vladimir Goussinsky. The fact that Mr. Goussinsky has consistently submitted tax returns and paid all taxes required by current law was apparently insufficient in stopping these egregious searches.

Free press may also be threatened on another front. In June, the government established a new Ministry for Publishing, TV and Radio with the task, according to Prime Minister Stepashin, of “consolidating” the government’s “ideological work.” This new Ministry is already attempting to stop the sale of books, magazines, and newspapers not approved by the government. It is also attempting to block distribution of information on the Internet.

Such activities undermine Russia’s free and independent media, especially at this critical juncture in the Russian political process. The subversion of an open and independent media is an important and variety of information that is fostered by a free and independent press. Mr. Speaker, over the past few years, the railroad industry has achieved a reduction in the number of fatalities and in the number of certain types of accidents, such as collisions and grad-crossing accidents. But the number of derailments and employee fatalities has remained almost unchanged, and some key safety issues have not been adequately addressed.

For example, it is clear that in rail transportation, as in other modes of transportation, tired workers with insufficient rest present serious safety and health problems that must be addressed. While some individual rail unions continue to evaluate this issue in craft-specific ways, we do nothing to address hazardous working conditions that are a number of loopholes in current regulations that must be closed, and updates that must be made, to the current regime. Mr. Speaker, whether it is these issues or others such as certification, van crew safety, passenger safety service standards, etc., the fact of the matter is that current rail laws do not adequately address rail safety.

The bill I am introducing today is one approach that would go a long way in achieving new levels of safety in the rail industry. We must carefully consider all approaches to rail safety, but if the “Federal Railroad Safety Enhancement Act of 1999” is the most we can do at this time to reach that goal, then it is the very least we must do.

Mr. Speaker, I urge members to join in support of this important piece of legislation.
appropriaed from the respective tribes for the Grand Coulee Project, or approximately 39.4 percent of the past and future compensation awarded the Colville Tribes. Although the Department of the Interior and other federal officials were well aware of the flooding of Indian trust lands and other severe impacts the Grand Coulee Project would have on the fishery and other critical resources of the Spokane and Colville Tribes, no mention was made of these impacts or the need to compensate the Tribes in either the 1933 or 1935 authorizations. Federal interdepartmental and interoffice correspondence from September 1933 through October 1934 demonstrate the government knew the Colville and Spokane Tribes should be compensated for the flooding of their lands, destruction of their fishery and other resources, destruction of their property and annual compensation from power production for the use of the Tribes’ land and water resources contributing to power production.

Congress passed legislation in 1940 to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to designate whichever Indian lands he deemed necessary for Grand Coulee construction and to receive in lieu of the lands and interests the Indians have in them in return for his appraisal of its value and payment of compensation by the Secretary. The only land that was appraised and compensated for was the newly flooded lands for which the Spokane Tribe received $4,700. There is no evidence that the Department advised or that Congress knew that the Tribes’ water rights were not extinguished. Nor had the Indian title and trust status of the Tribal land underlying the river beds been extinguished. No compensation was included for the power value contributed by the use of the Tribal resources nor the loss of the Tribal fisheries or other damages to tribal resources.

In a 1976 opinion, Lawrence Aschenbrenner, Acting Associate Solicitor with the Department of the Interior’s Division of Indian Affairs, stated, “The 1940 act followed seven years of construction during which farm lands, and timber lands were flooded, and a fishery destroyed, and during which Congress was silent as to the Indian interests affected by the construction. Both the Congress and the Department of the Interior appeared to proceed with the Grand Coulee Project as if there were no Indians involved there. . . . It is our conclusion that the location of the dams on tribal land and the use of the water for power production, without compensation, violated the Government’s fiduciary duty toward the Tribes.”

The Colville settlement legislation of 1994 ratified a settlement agreement reached between the United States and the Colville Tribes to settle the claims of the Tribes to a share of the hydropower revenues from the Grand Coulee Dam. This claim was among the claims which the Colville Tribes filed with the Indian Claims Commission (ICC) under the Act of August 13, 1946. This Act provided for a five year statute of limitations to file claims before the Commission. While the Colville Tribes formally organized for over 15 years at this point, the Spokane Tribe did not formally organize until 16 days prior to the ICC statute of limitations deadline. In addition, evidence indicates that while the Bureau of Indian Affairs was aware of the potential claims of the Spokane Tribe, it does not appear that the Tribe was ever advised of the potential claim.

Since the mid-1970’s, both Congress and Federal agencies have expressed the view that both the Colville and Spokane Tribes should be compensated. The legislation I am introducing today will provide for compensation to the Spokane Tribe. There is ample precedent for such settlement legislation that addresses the meritorious claims of a tribe and I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

HONORING AMERICA’S HEROS

HON. MICHAEL BILIRAKIS
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 30, 1999

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, early this month I had the privilege of presenting military medals to several of my constituents—a recognition which was long overdue.

Julian Burnside was in the U.S. Army’s 106th Infantry Division when he was captured by German Nazis during the Battle of the Bulge. He spent 10 days squeezed into a railroad boxcar with other U.S. soldiers. The conditions were so bad that the men had to keep their legs folded and were only fed 4 of the 10 days.

Julian was eventually taken to a prisoner-of-war camp near Dresden, Germany. While there, he was forced to pull bodies from piles of burned human remains and dig holes for their burials. During his captivity he suffered from frozen feet, malnutrition, dysentery and yellow jaundice.

On May 9, 1945, Julian was freed when his German captors surrendered to the Allies. He spent months recovering in a hospital before being discharged in October 1945. While in the hospital, someone told Julian about all of the medals that he was eligible to receive, including the Order of the Purple Heart for Military Merit, commonly called the “Purple Heart.” An officer then told him that they were no longer giving the Purple Heart for injuries like his. Julian didn’t care. He was just happy to be free.

But heroes like Julian Burnside should never be forgotten, and on July 3, 1999, I was honored to present Julian with both the Purple Heart and the POW medal. The Order of the Purple Heart is awarded to members of the Armed Forces of the United States who are wounded by an instrument of war in the hands of the enemy. It is a combat decoration.

The POW medal may be awarded to any one who “was taken prisoner and held captive while engaged in an action against an enemy of the United States, while engaged in military operations involving conflict with an opposing foreign force, or while serving with friendly forces engaged in an armed conflict against an opposing armed force in which the United States is not a belligerent party.”

The front of the circular medal features a golden eagle standing with its wings outspread against a lighter gold background, ringed by barbed wire and bayonet points. Although symbolically imprisoned, the American eagle is alert to regain freedom, the hope that upholds the prisoner’s spirit. On the reverse side of the medal, there is the inscription “For Honorable Service While A Prisoner of War.”

Another American hero who should not be forgotten is Luis Reyes. Luis was also in the U.S. Army Infantry, but he served during the Korean War from August 1950 until August 1951. He was wounded in the Injin River area during the War and suffered a bullet wound in his leg. On July 3, I presented him with the Purple Heart for wounds received in action against an armed enemy.

That day, I was also honored to present the POW/MIA medal to the family of a third Army veteran, Lowell Pirkle. Lowell was killed while working for Air America in Vietnam in 1967. During his lifetime, he received two Purple Hearts, the Vietnam Service Medal and the Good Conduct Medal.

Lowell, who served two tours in Vietnam, was attempting to load wounded Laotian soldiers into a helicopter when the aircraft was hit by a rifle shell and exploded. The pilot and co-pilot escaped. Lowell and a Laotian soldier were not so lucky. His body was not recovered.

Lowell was survived by his wife, Deborah, and two children, Robin and Scott. Lowell’s family and the Air America Association pressed the federal government for information about Lowell after discovering he had never been listed among those missing in action.

The crash site was discovered in 1995, and Lowell’s remains were identified by the U.S. Army in January 1998. On August 3, 1998—thirty-one years to the day after being shot down—Lowell was laid to rest in Arlington Cemetery.

The POW/MIA medal depicts a bald eagle, which symbolizes all unaccounted for Americans, amidst the bamboo of a Southeast Asian jungle. The eagle retains the American spirit of freedom in its vigilant stance. On the reverse side is a representation of the Vietnam Campaign Medal lying on a table, issued, but not yet claimed by its owner. The words, “You Are Not Forgotten” reflect the sentiment of family, loved ones, and all Americans waiting for their return.

Mr. Speaker, Julian, Luis and Lowell all answered the call to duty when their country needed them. They are true American heroes.

IN RECOGNITION OF DEDICATED SERVICE BY MR. ROBERT TOBIAS

SPREE OF

HON. BOB FILNER
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, and colleagues, I rise today to salute a great American, Mr. Robert Tobias, the retiring president of the National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU).

Mr. Tobias’ career at NTEU spans thirty busy years including the last sixteen as the union’s president. As he led the fight on behalf of federal employees, he became a leading authority on these issues. In doing so he vastly expanded NTEU’s influence in the halls of Congress and in the White House.
EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

July 30, 1999

HON. CURT WELDON OF PENNSYLVANIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 30, 1999

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, last week the President signed H.R. 4, the National Missile Defense Act of 1999, into law. This measure unequivocally states that it is the policy of the United States to deploy a national missile defense system as soon as it is technologically feasible. In signing the bill, the President has at long last acknowledged that the missile threat is so long denied, and the need to defend against it.

Mr. Speaker, there was no signing ceremony, no fanfare, not even a press conference announcing this significant action. Unfortunately, there is a reason the President chose to downplay this event. In characteristic style, he is already trying to redefine the meaning of this law. The ink on the bill was not dry when the President released a statement noting that the "legislation makes clear that no decision on deployment has been made." Next year, we will, for the first time, determine whether to deploy a limited national missile defense..." This is Orwellian. The President signs a bill that says that it is our policy to deploy a national missile defense, and in the same breath says that a decision to deploy will be made next year. It would be comical if the stakes were not so high.

I guess we should not be surprised anymore. The President has already successfully redefined the word "is," and once again he provides him with a convenient escape hatch. Perhaps we should have reconsidered the use of that word in our policy statement before submitting it to the President, because he has already made it clear that to him, "is" does not always mean "is." But most people understand that when we say it is the policy of the United States to deploy a national missile defense, that the decision to deploy has been made. The question is not whether to deploy, only when. And contrary to the President's interpretation, Congress was clear on this point.

Before the House voted on this measure, both the original bill and the conference report, I called on my colleagues to vote against this bill if they agreed with the President that we should hold off the decision on whether to deploy, and told those who agreed with moving forward with that decision now to vote for it. There was considerable discussion about whether we could deploy a system now. It was repeatedly noted that the bill was not mandating when to deploy, it was simply stating that the decision was being made to do so as soon as it is technologically feasible. Similar debate ensure in the Senate.

This time, the President says that Congress itself has qualified that it "is" the policy to deploy. He argues that the bill language subjecting deployment to the authorizations and appropriations process means that no decision has been made. That argument is a Trojan horse, because all policy decisions are subject to the authorization and appropriations process. He further argues that the bill's language supporting continued reductions in strategic nuclear arms means that the decision must account for arms control and nuclear nonproliferation objectives. Congress said nothing of the sort, and made absolutely no linkage of these objectives.

Mr. Speaker, no amount of tortured linguistics by this President or anyone else can change the legislative record. We were clear that passage of this bill would formalize U.S. policy to deploy a national missile defense system, and it was overwhelmingly adopted in both bodies. It is time for the President to stop rewriting the dictionary, and get down to the business of executing the law and ensuring the security of this nation.

THE RETIREMENT OF DDO JACK DOWNING

HON. PORTER J. GOSS
OF FLORIDA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 30, 1999

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today. Mr. Speaker, to recognize the contributions of Jack Downing, the acting Director of Operations, or DDO, to the security and well-being of this Nation. Just this once, on the occasion of Jack's retirement on 31 July, I want to bring this remarkable man, our Nation's "head spy," out of the shadows and into the spotlight of this forum.

 Barely 2 years ago, Jack was pulled out of an earlier retirement from CIA to take over its directorate of operations, or DO, at a time when the morale, sense of mission, and strength of the DO had been sapped by careerism, corruption politics, and lack of leadership. At that time, I knew only two things about Jack: first, he couldn't be a careerist because he had already retired once. Second, he couldn't be a "corridor cowboy" back in Washington because he had spent almost all of his legendary career in the field where case officers belong. Jack, in fact, was our chief of station on the very front lines of the cold war.

What I did not know at the time, and what now causes me to offer this tribute, is the leadership that Jack would bring to the DO and to its officers. In two short years, Jack has refocused the DO on its core capability: the clandestine collection of intelligence. Under Jack, DO officers have found ways to penetrate terrorist cells, to get inside the cabinet rooms of rogue states, and to detect and disrupt the movement of narcotics. Under Jack, the DO has been put in a position to collect intelligence on whatever threats and challenges come our way in the next century.

Jack's leadership, however, is more than these accomplishments. In the unique, often peculiar, business of espionage, the DDO is more than someone who directs the operations of the DO; for young officers, particularly, the DDO is a role model in the clandestine service. And the DO, in my opinion, has never had a better role model than Jack Downing.

As chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, I visit stations overseas and talk with the young officers who hop fences, slip down alleys, and take real risks to collect the intelligence we need back here in Washington.

Over the past 2 years, the change I have seen in these young officers overseas has been extraordinary. Where there used to be a sense of mission, there is now a sense of mission. Where there used to be risk aversion is now a feeling of confidence. Perhaps the most telling change under Jack Downing, and most central to the character of this former marine, is that his troops at risk in the field know that he will stand behind them when things go wrong.

I can offer no higher tribute than what Jack's own troops think of him. I commend this man for what he is and what he has done. Our country is and will be a better place because of him. Goddess, to Jack Downing, you are the "right stuff" and have served us well.

DISAPPROVING EXTENSION OF NONDISCRIMINATORY TREATMENT TO PRODUCTS OF PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

SPEECH OF
HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, July 27, 1999

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of extending normal trade relations status to China for another year. I oppose this resolution and call upon my colleagues to vote against it.

As events over the past week have shown, the human rights situation in China needs to improve. Increased respect for human rights must be accompanied by political and democratic reforms. But let us not forget that our own country's record on certain human rights issues is less than perfect, as has been noted by such organizations as Amnesty International. Over 1.8 million Americans are in jail, most of them for non-violent crimes and many of them—and this is not an accident—coming from our country's worst schools. Given our own record, we should avoid hypocrisy in our insistent demands for reform in China.

Rather, we should be pragmatic in our efforts and pursue a productive engagement with Chinese society. The only way we can convey our values to other countries is to have a record of our own that the rest of the world respects. By the same token, we must recognize that other countries will do the same and move toward the future only as we move toward it.

Entering the next century, the United States is experiencing a remarkable economic boom. However, as we work to maintain our technological leadership and the growth of 21st century jobs, we should also keep in mind the jobs lost to many of those at the lowest end of the economic spectrum. We must do much more to assist those who need skills and training in order to get new, better-paying jobs, and we must ensure full and real opportunities for all the children in our country. That is central to our task so that we can be a beacon to China and the world and use our policy of engagement to its fullest.

The question before us today is what are the best and most appropriate means to achieve our goals. The most effective way to bring about improvements in human rights and political freedoms in China is through continued engagement with the Chinese government and increased contacts with the Chinese people about our way of life. Withdrawing and ceasing to do business with China by removal of NTR status will harm, not improve, the situation.

We must also remember that history has shown that using trade as a weapon can work only if there is a consensus among our trading partners that we will work collectively and apply similar policies. I led the fight on trade with South Africa, but the effectiveness of that effort depended on participation of numerous other countries. By contrast, in the case of our embargo against Cuba, we stand alone. The failure of this outdated and misguided policy has proven that our unilateral trade sanctions do nothing to advance our objectives and only give our foreign competitors an advantage.

Too many other countries are ready and willing to fill the vacuum we would leave in the huge Chinese market as a consequence of withdrawal of NTR status. We would merely lose export markets that we create. As also shown by our experience with Cuba, punishing a country through trade does not help the cause of democracy or promote fundamental freedoms. Isolationist policies do not promote the free exchange of ideas. Isolationist policies do not bring leaders to the negotiating table.

What isolationist policies do is separate people.

We should also not forget that the benefits of trade—of engaging fully in the global marketplace, including through trade with China—are considerable for our country. Jobs supported by our export-oriented economy are more than the average U.S. job, and the number of export-related jobs in the U.S. grew four times faster than overall private job growth from 1986—1994. U.S. exports to China have almost tripled since 1990, increasing steadily in nearly every year, and trade with China supports over 200,000 export-related jobs. Market access provisions in a WTO accession agreement with China would further open Chinese markets to U.S. products and services.

The United States must not withdraw from the world economy of the next century—a world economy that will be built increasingly on trade, trade and more trade. Our country's economic future will largely rest on educating and training our young people for the world economy of the 21st century—not by turning away from the realities of the world.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote no to this resolution. Continuing dialogue and interchange with China, I truly believe, is the more rational and better course of action than terminating the discussion.

INTRODUCTION OF LAW ENFORCEMENT TRUST AND INTEGRITY ACT OF 1999

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 30, 1999
Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce the Law Enforcement Trust and Integrity Act of 1999, along with additional co-sponsors. This legislation adopts a new approach to the dilemma of police misconduct.

Rather than focusing on episodic incidents, this legislation targets hiring and management protocols much farther up the chain of causation that can stop incidents of misconduct long before they occur. Moreover, this bill focuses on the long-term improvement of the law enforcement profession. Further, it strengthens our federal prosecutorial tools with demonstrate effectiveness at sanctioning misconduct. This bill seizes upon the opportunity to initiate reforms that would restore public trust and accountability to law enforcement.

This legislation provides a direct contrast to other proposals that merely provide, without enforcement, an unreasonable or arbitrary period of time the answer to questions posed by a local internal affairs officer, prosecutor, or review board on the investigative integrity and prosecution of law enforcement misconduct.

Enhanced Funding of Civil Rights Division—The bill authorizes appropriations for expenses related to the enforcement against pattern and practice discrimination described in section 20401 of the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 14141) and authorizes appropriations for expenses related to programs managed by the Community Relations Service.

6. Deprivation of Rights Under Color of Law—The bill amends section 242 of Title 18 of the United States Code to expressly define excessive use of force and non-consensual sexual conduct as deprivations of rights under color of law.

7. Study of Deaths in Custody—The bill amends section 20101(b) of the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 (42 U.S.C.A. 13701) to require assurances that States will follow guidelines established by the Attorney General for reporting deaths in custody.

Given the litany of incidents—Rodney King, Amadou Diallo, Abner Louima—it should be clear to all members, and the nation at large, that this issue must be addressed in a bipartisan manner. Faced with such compelling evidence, we cannot afford any other study of problems that we all know to exist. The energies of Congress should be focused on the adoption of legislative priorities that address the substance of law enforcement management and strengthen the current battery of tools available to sanction misconduct.

As a Congress we have been enthusiastic about supporting programs designed to get officers on the street. We must be just as willing... to support programs designed to train and manage them after they get there. The current national climate requires decisive action to implement solutions. This legislation initiates the reforms necessary to restore public trust and accountability to law enforcement.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2000

SPEECH OF
HON. CHARLES F. BASS OF NEW HAMPSHIRE
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, July 22, 1999

The House in Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2561) making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes:

Mr. BASS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on the FY00 Defense Appropriations Act and to express my support for the Air Force’s F–22.

I wish to commend the distinguished gentleman from California, Mr. LEWIS, for promoting the Air Force’s number one priority.

I am, however, troubled by the Subcommittee’s recommendation to cut $1.8 billion from the F–22 program. I certainly appreciate the Subcommittee’s concerns about the program and am fully aware of the substantial challenges it faced as it sought to reconcile military requirements with available resources.

Nevertheless, I believe that the F–22 remains critical to maintaining the air superiority that has proven invaluable to the United States in the past and will continue to be fundamental requirement in the future if our interests are to be protected. Indeed, the F–22 program is the Air Force’s number one priority.

Mr. Chairman, although I support the bill before us on the whole, I look forward to working with the Subcommittee Chairman and other members of the Committee to ensure that the F–22 is fully funded in the final bill.

MEDICARE PRESCRIPTION DRUG BENEFIT PLAN

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK
OF CALIFORNIA

HON. ALBERT RUSSELL WYNN
OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 30, 1999

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with my colleague ALBERT WYNN (D-MD) on behalf of the citizens of the United States and their requests for a much-needed Medicare prescription drug benefit plan.

Some of the greatest financial difficulties faced by seniors today come as a result of increasingly exorbitant medication prices. As the price of prescription drugs continue to rise, access to these vital drugs decrease concurrently.

Just this week, we received the following petition from the Homecrest House Resident Council of Silver Spring, Maryland. This petition was sent to various members of Congress as well as President Clinton urging us to work together for the institution of a Medicare prescription drug benefit plan. Close to 300 of the residents signed this letter which stretches some seven feet long. It is an urgent plea that not only lays out their own concerns, but also those of seniors nationwide who are constantly restricted financially from obtaining vital prescription drugs.

The petition notes that decreased access to vital medications only contributes to prolonged illness and more frequent hospitalization, which subsequently increases the government’s costs of caring for these elderly and disabled citizens.

We ask our colleagues to join with us today in protecting our seniors and in aiding them in gaining access to the prescription drugs to which they are entitled. This petition is yet another visible example of the need for Congress to actively improve and protect the Medicare program. All seniors deserve access to prescription drug medications. It is our duty today to guarantee that access through prompt enactment of legislation that adds a prescription drug benefit to Medicare.

I am submitting a copy of the petition we received which clearly illustrates the Homecrest House residents’ concerns and requests.

HOMECREST HOUSE RESIDENT COUNCIL,
Silver Spring, MD, July 8, 1999.

Hon. Peter Stark,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

Dear Representative Stark: We are enclosing our petition signed by most of our 300 resident.

All acknowledgment would be greatly appreciated.

We are sure that we voice a concern of our friends around the nation, seniors and disabled, who do not have other necessities in order to buy needed medications.

We are confident that you will help us and that you and your party will get our voice, because you recognize how critically important it is to make prescription drugs more affordable for senior and disabled persons. Thank you for your cooperation.

Sincerely,

Virginia Benson,
President.

Mary Rygler,
Chair Community Affairs Committee.
Enclosure.

Copies of this petition have been either hand-delivered or mailed to President Clinton as well as several legislators.

As Members of Congress, you hold in your hands the future quality of life of retired and disabled Americans, most of whom worked hard all their long lives and contributed to the greatness of our beloved country!

The 300 Residents of a retirement community in Silver Spring, Maryland who signed this petition, reflect the strivings of most elderly and disabled Americans all over the country.

We are sending to you our urgent plea to address the most vital problem affecting our segment of population and that is the skyrocketing cost of prescription drug.

The fact that many vital medications are out of financial reach of most seniors and disabled contributes to the misery of prolonged illness and more frequent hospitalization, which—in turn—increases the government cost of caring for millions of elderly and disabled.

Please keep in mind that we, seniors, take full advantage of the privilege of voting.

TAX RELIEF

HON. DAVID L. HOBSON
OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 30, 1999

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I commend my colleagues in the Senate for moving forward with a companion measure to the substantial tax relief and debt reduction contained in the Financial Freedom Act of 1999 that this chamber approved last week.

As we move towards a conference with the Senate, I want to urge my colleagues to continue to maintain the high priority we assigned to debt reduction.

When I am back in Ohio’s 7th district, my constituents ask me to make sure Congress is paying off its debts, the same way they have to make their credit card and mortgage payments.

I agree with this approach, which will help ensure that we meet our future obligations while reducing the burden the debt represents for our children and grandchildren.

We made the right decision this year, when Congress set aside two-thirds of the surplus for Social Security and Medicare. This will help keep Social Security and Medicare solvent for the long-term.

Congress also pledged to pay down the national debt. This is a good step—we can put money back into the hands of taxpayers and maintain our fiscal responsibility.

I was very supportive of the “trigger” mechanism which was included in the Financial Freedom Act to make sure that our debt reduction plans remain on track. I urge my colleagues to insist this sensible and responsible provision remains a key priority during our negotiations with the Senate to produce a final tax relief and debt reduction measure.

ENERGY AND WATER DEVELOPMENT APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2000

SPEECH OF
HON. MICHAEL N. CASTLE OF DELAWARE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 27, 1999

The House in Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2605) making appropriations for energy and water development for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes:

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 2605, the FY 2000 Energy and Water APPROPRIATIONS ACT. This $20 billion bill provides crucial funding to operate the Department of Energy ($15 billion), which includes funding for the Manhattan Project, the National Nuclear Security Administration, and the Bureau of Reclamation ($784 million); and the Army Corps of Engineers (ACOE) ($4.2 billion), which builds flood control projects, including $999,000 to build dune systems and horseshoe crab breeding areas along Delaware's fragile coastline. The ACOE is also responsible for keeping navigation channels clear, including the Delaware River channel. H.R. 2605 fully funds President Clinton's budget request for $16.5 million to deepen the Delaware River shipping channel from 40 feet to 45 feet—a project Congress approved in 1992. This funding complies bipartisan support for $2 million for this project in Delaware's 1999 bond bill and other funding assistance from New Jersey and Pennsylvania.

I have spent a considerable amount of time researching this project over the last year after concerns about its environmental impacts were brought to my attention. I have reserved judgment on this project until I was satisfied that these concerns had been addressed. I would like to take this opportunity to share with the body some of the conclusions from my research and advocate a course of action for how this project should proceed.

One of the primary environmental issues that have been raised about the project is the impact of the project on water quality standards. The Delaware Department of Natural Resources and Environmental Control (DNREC) has determined that the Delaware River and its tributaries are not being damaged by this project. The Delaware River is a unique ecosystem, and DNREC has determined that the impacts of this project are negligible when compared to other human activities that affect the Delaware River.

The ACOE figures underestimate the benefits to Delaware and the region, because ACOE's regulations prohibit them from taking into account business that ports along the Delaware River may take from other ports in the country. In fact, the Port of Wilmington is taking steps to compete for business through its recent proposal to move its berth from the Christina River to the Delaware River. Even without this increase in business, ACOE estimates that Delaware will gain over 300 jobs and $3.4 million in annual tax revenue. Other benefits to Delaware include $78 million in clean sand material that will be used for creation of wetlands at Kelly Island and Port Mahon. Furthermore, sand deposits placed along Delaware Bay beaches, such as Broadkill, will provide storm damage protection against potential annual damages of $1.6 million each year. All these benefits are attributed to Delaware and Delaware's share of the cost is only 7 cents to $10 million. With an estimated tax revenue increase of $3.4 million a year, Delaware should recoup its cost in less than three years.

I have given the Delaware River Deepening Project close scrutiny. Given the conservative reputation of the ACOE's economic figures, the overwhelming benefits of the project both to the region and to Delaware, the progress in protecting Pea Patch Island, the special attention being given to proper dredging and disposal of the "hot spots," and the overwhelming conformity of opinion by the appropriate environmental agencies, I am satisfied that the economic and environmental justification is strong enough to move forward with funding the project in FY 2000. I also believe Delaware should be given a strong voice in the future implementation of this project, particularly with the design and construction of the dredge disposal sites. Therefore, I am prepared to contact ACOE and the Environmental Protection Agency to encourage them to accommodate more public input into the process.

Mr. Speaker, ACOE and the Environmental Protection Agency have expressed a willingness to work closely with citizen groups in actively informing them about the progress of the Delaware River Deepening Project to prevent misunderstandings. Although all the interested parties will not always agree on the correct course of action, each one plays a role that is essential to our democratic process and produces a better product in the end.

As with all long-term government projects, the Delaware River Deepening Project must be monitored to maintain cost controls and compliance with environmental safeguards. I look forward to working with the House Transportation and Appropriations Committees in their oversight of this project.

TOWN MEETING
HON. BERNARD SANDERS OF VERMONT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Friday, July 30, 1999

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have printed in the RECORD this statement by a high school student from my home State of Vermont, who was speaking at my recent town meeting on issues facing young people today. I am asking that you please insert this statement in the RECORD as I believe that the views of this young person will benefit my colleagues.

[June, 1999]

RECOMMENDATION: TOBACCO
(On behalf of: Andy Tsuy, Carey Levine, Zach Pratt, Tina Reed and Doug Lane)

Carey Levine: People who smoke are at increased risk of heart disease, cancer, emphysema and other smoking-related illnesses that contribute to over $20,000 deaths per year. These people dying from cigarettes are our mothers, fathers, aunts, uncles, sisters, brothers, colleagues, peers, and friends. Smoking is no longer just a problem, it is an major health issue worldwide.
epidemic that is expanding nationally and globally.

Zach Pratt: In the wake of the recent landmark tobacco settlement, which awarded $206 billion over the course of the next 25 years to fund programs aimed at aiding smoking victims, debate regarding the most appropriate use of the funds has been fierce. The current proposals very drastically by state.

According to a recent USA Today poll, popular opinion favors utilizing the appropriated money in an effort to improve public health care systems. Most Americans believe that the tobacco cash should be returned to those most affected by smoking and not split towards expanding health coverage for impoverished or uninsured families. The same poll reports that 27 percent of Americans would like to see the money spent on antismoking education. However, many governors would prefer to see the funds utilized in existing state education programs, feeling that the development of new programs would raise state expenditures to dangerous levels.

Doug Lane: I believe that the money would best be spent in educational programs. The risk of getting addicted to nicotine are reduced through a national educational program targeting preteenagers, and highlighting the negative effects of smoking. The money the government has obtained through cigarette taxes and lawsuits of tobacco companies should be used for preventative measures, to stop this addiction before it starts.

Recently, President Clinton has publicly announced that he is making it part of his agenda to reduce the amount of teenage smoking that goes on in America.

Tina Reed: The “Stop Teenage Addiction to Tobacco” on Oklahoma’s Teenage Facts sheets states that, every day, 3,000 teens smoke their first cigarette, and approximately one-third of these children will eventually die due to smoking-related illness. These are serious enough statistics that they demand a more intensive and proactive stance from schools to encourage students not to smoke.

The new program would take a fresh new approach in informing students about the negative effects of smoking, through hands-on projects such as seeing a healthy lung compared to a smoker’s lung, science projects breaking down the actual contents of the cigarette, and guest speakers. Through these types of activities, students will see the devastating effects of smoking by guest speakers that have lived to regret ever taking a puff of a cigarette, and touching a lung that is black and distorted due to smoking.

Andy Tyson: There are many possibilities as to where the tobacco money can be spent. The money could help everything, from preventative measures to improving health and funding education. The truth is, all of these are worthwhile causes. The only thing that we must be especially careful of is the possibility of spreading the money too thin. Wherever this money goes, there must be enough of it to make a difference. Smoking should stop, and this is our opportunity to do so.

Congressman Sanders: Good job.
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, August 2, 1999

The House met at 12:30 p.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. STEARNS).

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC.
August 2, 1999.

I hereby appoint the Honorable CLIFF STEARNS to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MORNING HOUR DEBATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of January 19, 1999, the Chair will now recognize Members from lists submitted by the majority and minority leaders for morning hour debates. The Chair will alternate recognition between the parties, with each party limited to 30 minutes, and each Member, except the majority leader, the minority leader, or the minority whip, limited to 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT) for 5 minutes.

BETTER AMERICA BONDS, H.R. 2446

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, it has been said that the only means of conservation is innovation, and I believe that is what Vice President GORE had in mind in recommending an innovative proposal called Better America Bonds. I joined him back in January of that year over at the American Institute of Architects with a number of outstanding planners and conservationists to announce this initiative. Now, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GRHARDT), the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUJI), the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENBAUER) and I, along with a number of our colleagues, have filed this legislation to establish the Better America Bonds program.

Mr. Speaker, we believe that the Federal Government should be an active partner with local communities supporting their efforts to build more livable communities as we approach the 21st century.

I believe that there is strong, broad-based support for these locally developed, "smart growth" or sustainable growth initiatives. The Better America Bonds program would assist State and local governments in their efforts to plan for their future growth and development.

Through the issuance of this new type of bond, one that carries a Federal tax credit as opposed to a small amount in interest payments, local governments would be enabled to make purchases to preserve green space, create or restore urban parks, or simply to clean up land or water.

I believe that the preservation of more open space, more green space in which families can enjoy life, is becoming a leading environmental issue across this country. Both property values on homes and the basic quality of life that we all expect are improved with additional open space and parks.

It really is not that hard to understand why that is so if we are coming or going from Washington, D.C. along the George Washington Parkway or the Rock Creek Parkway. Or if, as my wife and I like to do, one is enjoying bicycling along the trail that leads beside the parkway down to Mt. Vernon, one recognizes how much the beauty of the green space and the opportunity to walk and play in that green space adds to the quality of life.

Mr. Speaker, the Better America Bonds legislation has some 110 Members of this House now as cosponsors. We would provide up to almost $10 billion in bonding authority for communities across the country to buy up threatened farmland or to purchase downtown waterfront property to convert into a park perhaps, like the great hike and bike trail we have along Town Lake in my hometown of Austin, Texas. In Austin, we have a number of new projects that are under consideration, including a project along Walker Crest which will make an additional Town Lake park, both to preserve green space. Additional green space provided through these projects means not only more fun but more opportunity for economic development in some areas that have been neglected and not properly used in the past by the city.

My constituents back in central Texas have realized the importance of additional green space acquisition and of clean water by approving local bond initiatives through which the City of Austin has already purchased some 15,000 acres of land towards this objective. These new land purchases will protect our sensitive environment in central Texas and provide additional parks.

They have also provided a unique opportunity for some groups that havewarred against each other to work together. In Austin, the Save Our Springs Alliance, the Greater Austin Chamber of Commerce and the Real Estate Council were once opposing each other over some of the environmental efforts in the community. Now they have united in what is called a "Vast Open Spaces" project to acquire additional land and in the process of uniting over this issue, they have come to achieve some common ground on a number of other issues toward improving the quality of life in central Texas as well.

I believe that the Better America Bonds program, by supporting that kind of effort, will allow them to do an even better job, reach more parts of our community, and provide more parks and green space, not only along Town Lake but throughout central Texas.

Mr. Speaker, I think the same kind of thing can happen around the country, whether it is along the Anacostia River here in Washington, the Chattahoochee in Atlanta, or along the Los Angeles River, these bonds provide the opportunity to revitalize downtown areas, make them more livable, and revitalize the economy in some of these areas.

The Better America Bonds initiative has received support from the American Institute of Architects and the National Realty Committee because they support strong neighborhood planning and this program provides the means for communities to do just that. Communities and local governments are also supporting the Better America Bonds program because these bonds are much less costly to a local government for them to use than the traditional interest bearing ones.

As Vice President GORE said earlier this year, "Plan well, and you have a community that nurtures commerce and private life. Plan badly, and you have what many of us suffer from first-hand: Gridlock, sprawl and that uniquely modern evil of all, too little time."

We incorporated this concept of Better America Bonds in the Democratic tax substitute. It received a substantial number of votes, and I hope that we can come together in a bipartisan effort to support Better America Bonds in the future. I believe that we must all be active participants in preserving our livable communities for our children and grandchildren. Through innovative conservation programs like Better...
As a result of these organizations getting together, Ocala recorded its lowest crime since 1997. Furthermore, in 1997, the city’s homicide rate was only one, and in the previous decades it went as high as 20 per year.

Another program that is cited in this article is called “Problem-Oriented Policing.” Under this program, officers identify possible areas which, quote, ‘‘detact from good living conditions in the neighborhoods they patrol, end quote. These areas may be abandoned lots or houses that are abandoned or they might be areas that provide haven for drug trafficking and criminal activities.

Once they identify these areas, a form is completed by the officer and is sent through the chain of command. The identified site is then referred to the city department best able to handle the situation. Let me quote fromLieutenant DeVilling when he says, “It is not uncommon for a police officer to identify a dilapidated building which is used as a crack house. Within a short time, the building is burned to the ground by firemen to prevent its use and improve their skills. The property is then cleared and recycled. These recycled properties are frequently used for purposes such as building a brand-new home by Habitat for Humanity.’’

Another program operated by the Ocala Police Department include drug education for young people, drug abuse resistance education, and of course dealing with the gangs through education and training.

Mr. Speaker, this morning I am pleased to be here. I commend the Ocala Police department, the local and State officials, and all the organizations involved in this dramatic, dramatic success achieved in crime prevention. As we here in Congress attempt to find solutions to the violence that is permeating this country and this Nation, it is comforting to know that our local law enforcement and community organizations working hard to combat this problem at its source and it is happening in my hometown of Ocala. They are succeeding.

Mr. Speaker, I will submit to enter into the RECORD Lieutenant DeVilling’s article as it appears in the Department of Justice’s spring 1990 report, “Weed and Seed and Best Practices Report.” For brevity, Mr. Speaker, I will submit only that section dealing with “Taking it to the Streets,” which is a small part of this article explaining how the Ocala Police Department actually reduced crime in my hometown using the “Weed and Seed” program.

My efforts this morning are also to recognize the fine things being done by the Ocala Police Department to reduce and eliminate crime in my hometown of Ocala, Florida.
Mr. Speaker, a critical part of making the Federal Government a better partner in promoting livable communities is the work we do with basic infrastructure. Rather than spending a lot of new money, making new rules and regulations and starting new programs, one of the most important contributions the Federal Government can do is making our existing resources more wisely.

Nowhere is that more clearly illustrated than what we do with water resources. Currently, the Federal Government makes it easier to spend money paving a creek to stop flooding than to restore wetlands to achieve the same goal. I have already introduced legislation that would make it easier for communities to invest in cheaper, greener approaches to flood protection. This approach does not need to cost the Federal Government an additional dime, and it gives the communities more choices as they solve their problems and increase livability.

The National Flood Insurance program poses another critical water resource management challenge. It is appropriate for the Federal Government to step in when there is a case of unforeseen natural disaster. However, if it is clear that some people make it hard on themselves by continuing to invest in unwise anti-environmental, unsustainable situations, then we have an obligation to draw the line. The Federal taxpayer should not be paying for people to live in places where God repeatedly has shown that he does not want them.

There is a home in Houston which has an appraised value of $1,14,000 which has received over $800,000 in flood insurance payments in 16 events in the last 10 years. Over 5,600 properties, nearly 1 in 10, have loss claims which exceed the value of the property. Forty percent of our flood insurance goes to 2 percent of the property that is repeatedly flooded.

Mr. Speaker, if the local government and private property owners are going to be foolish, they need to do it on their own dime. Indeed, it is not just our money they are wasting; these development patterns take on a life of their own. They pressure organizations like the Corps of Engineers, FEMA and local and state governments to further engineer the environment and protect ill-advised development from flooding, often succeeding in making matters worse.

Despite having spent over $40 billion since 1960, our losses adjusted for inflation are three times greater than when we started the building spree. Our disaster relief costs have increased 550 percent in the last 10 years.

It is time for us to rethink our policies and our investments. It is time to stop the waste of money, predictable loss of property, and threat to public safety. As a basic simple common sense step, it is time to reform the National Flood Insurance program.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with the gentleman from Nebraska, (Mr. Bereuter) who has long been a champion of reforming the Flood Insurance Program to propose a simple approach in the next few months after his election. We reintroduced the Flood Insurance Program so that rather than continuing to rebuild a repeatedly flooded home, the program would provide homeowners with money to help them move away from flood waters or at least floodproof their homes. Those who refuse assistance must start paying the real actuarial insurance costs for the risks that they choose to take.

This policy is both humanitarian and fiscally responsible, allowing people to plan out of harm’s way and protect the Federal taxpayer by making the National Flood Insurance program solvent. We need to enforce the existing rules and regulations to keep people out of harm’s way. We need to spend money to prevent loss rather than repeatedly cleaning up after it is too late.

This basic solution to more livable communities will not require more money or bureaucratic regulations. As usual, a livable community is possible if the Federal Government is a thoughtful partner with citizens and their local government. I would like to urge my colleagues to join with me and the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. Bereuter) to reform the National Flood Insurance program and to sign on as cosponsors of our “Two Floods and You’re Out” legislation.

WHO IS RECKLESS?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. Mica) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, from time to time the comments from this administration and the President of the United States lead me to the floor to comment. I think my colleagues and the American people saw the President of the United States calling the Republicans reckless. And I guess I am in the same boat that I am a Republican. We were called reckless for proposing a significant tax cut for the American people.

Mr. Speaker, I almost had to chuckle to hear the President of the United States calling the Republicans reckless and the Republicans for offering a tax cut. It is almost hysterical when we think about it when the other side of the aisle for some 40 years had control of this body and under the Constitution of the United States we all know bills, financial bills start in the House of Representatives on the basis of a judgment made by our founding fathers. For 40 years, the recklessness of the other side nearly bankrupt the Nation.

When I came into the House of Representatives in 1992, we were facing financial disaster. This was carried through with the reckless policy of this President who instituted one of the largest tax increases in American history in his own first term.

And again when he had complete majorities in the House, the Senate, and controlled the White House.

What was reckless is 40 years of taking money out of Social Security. It is like robbing our senior citizens’ pension accounts, their funds, and using it for outlandish spending. Spending really to buy votes and win elections in a giveaway program that backfired and nearly ran us into financial oblivion. That is reckless.

Reckless when they robbed every trust fund, including the Federal employee’s trust funds, when they robbed the highway trust funds, which this responsible new majority has restored. Is it reckless in fact when we guarantee 63 percent and we create a lock-box to secure revenues for the future stability and security of Social Security? That is responsible.

Mr. Speaker, some people I guess just do not know the meaning of reckless.

Then to provide health insurance, there are 43 million Americans in this Nation that do not have health insurance. What is interesting is two-thirds to three-quarters of them are employed. Our plan for financial assistance for families and tax cuts will allow millions and millions of Americans who work at minimum or low wage or small employers who are the largest employers, and most of those people who do not have health insurance are not covered but they do work, we are providing in this tax relief package a responsible package. It is reckless in my opinion not to provide those working men and women with at least a minimal chance of getting some health coverage.

So somehow we have a difficulty between determining what is reckless and what is responsible. I think what the Republicans, the majority and myself, have done is a responsible action. I think we have a history of a President and a party in Washington. I think the examples are clear and the financial statements speak for themselves.

TAKE A CLOSE LOOK AT TAX CUT PROPOSALS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker’s announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. OLVER) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. OLVER. Mr. Speaker, it is sort of irony that I should be following the gentleman who just spoke because I am going to be speaking about the same thing. That was not specifically planned, but I am glad that it comes out that way.

Mr. Speaker, we are told this week that the main business of the Congress is proposals which have now passed both the House and the Senate to provide for an $800 billion tax cut. Any time the Congress is thinking about tax cuts, it behooves everyone in America to hang on to their wallet, to sit up and take notice, to pay very close attention to who is being given tax breaks and why. But also how that differs from who the proponents are saying is going to get the tax breaks.

This week is no exception at all. The Republican leadership says that their tax cut is for the middle-class. For the middle-class in America to hang on to their wallet, to the House his approval thereof. Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. CHABOT) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. CHABOT led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Sherman Williams, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Lundregan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment concurrent resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. Con. Res. 107. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of Congress rejecting the conclusions of a recent article published in the Psychological Bulletin, a journal of the American Psychological Association, that suggests that sexual relationships between adults and children might be positive for children.

H. Con. Res. 168. Concurrent resolution waiving the requirement in section 132 of the
The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 2488. An act to provide for reconciliation pursuant to sections 105 and 211 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2000.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H.R. 2488) and requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Roth, Mr. Lott, and Mr. Moynihan, to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1497. An act to extend the funding levels for aviation programs for 60 days.
S. 1488. An act to authorize the minting and issuance of Capitol Visitor Center Commemorative coins, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that pursuant to Public Law 100–458, the Chair, on behalf of the Majority Leader, appoints the Senator from Virginia (Mr. Warner) to the Board of Trustees of the John C. Stennis Center for Public Service Training and Development, for a term ending October 11, 2004.

COMMUNICATION FROM HON. RICHARD A. GEPHARDT, DEMOCRATIC LEADER

The Speaker pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from Richard A. Gephardt, Democratic Leader:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
OFFICE OF THE DEMOCRATIC LEADER,

Hon. J. Dennis Hastert,
Speaker of the House,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to Section 581a(3) of the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1999 (112 STAT. 2681–210), I hereby appoint to the National Commission on Terrorism:

Ms. Juliette N. Kayyem of Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Yours Very Truly,

RICHARD A. GEPHARDT.

THE REAL COST OF TAXING MINING INTERESTS

(Mr. Gibbons asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to address the claim of some of my colleagues that gold mines get a free ride because they do not pay their fair share of Federal royalties. Well, when considering a Federal tax increase on the mining industry, we must always remind my tax and spend colleagues to take into account the adverse effect of such a tax increase on state and local tax revenues as well.

There is a direct correlation between increasing mining royalties or taxes and the reduction in mining activities. Federal royalties are deductible from the income base on which many of these State taxes are levied. This results in an even less tax dollar amount for State and local governments. Even a small tax increase would cost State and local governments hundreds of millions in tax revenues every year.

Mr. Speaker, it becomes very clear that when a Federal royalty is not in the best economic interests of this country or the mining industry, we should avoid it.

Abraham Lincoln had the great foresight when he said, ‘‘Tell the miners for me that I shall promote their interests to the utmost of my ability, because their prosperity is the prosperity of the Nation, and we shall prove in a very few short years that we are indeed the treasury of the world.’’

NORTH KOREA ACCUSED OF DRUG DEALING

(Mr. Trafficant asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFFICANT. Mr. Speaker, needing cash to run their government, the government of North Korea has been accused of selling heroin and cocaine. I am not kidding you. Reports say that North Korean agents were arrested by international police, possessing 80 pounds of cocaine and $100 million worth of methamphetamine that was sponsored for sale officially by their government.

Now, if that is not enough to trigger your concern, a analysis shows that an 8 percent gross royalty would cost State and local governments hundreds of millions in tax revenues every year.

Mr. Speaker, it becomes very clear that when a Federal royalty is not in the best economic interests of this country or the mining industry, we should avoid it.

Abraham Lincoln had the great foresight when he said, ‘‘Tell the miners for me that I shall promote their interests to the utmost of my ability, because their prosperity is the prosperity of the Nation, and we shall prove in a very few short years that we are indeed the treasury of the world.’’

DEFINING A TARGETED TAX CUT

(Mr. Chabot asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks).

Mr. CHABOT. Mr. Speaker, when I hear some of my liberal friends on the other side of the aisle, not the gentleman who just spoke, I might add, talk about targeted tax cuts, I know exactly what they mean. It means you will not be getting one.

Republicans, I should add, also are putting forth a targeted tax cut, but there is a very big difference. If you are a taxpayer, you get one.

That is right, our targeted tax cuts target all taxpayers, a concept that really sticks in the craw of many of my liberal friends on the other side of the aisle.

Many politicians in Washington have a hard time coming to grips with the fact that the budget surplus, a tax cut, really, does not belong to them. That money, every penny of it, belongs to the taxpayers.

Washington is taking more than it needs out of the pockets of those who work all over this country and pay their taxes.

The bottom line is the American people are overtaxed, and the real issue is, who should decide how the money gets spent: The bureaucrats up here in Washington, or the taxpayers all over this country.

I will cast my lot with the people of this Nation. Let us cut the taxes on the American people, and let us do it now.

REPORT ON REVISED DEFERRAL OF BUDGET AUTHORITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 106–180)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, I herewith report one revised deferral of budget authority, now totaling $173 million.

The deferment affects programs of the Department of State.

WILLIAM J. CLINTON.

The WHITE HOUSE, August 2, 1999.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered or on which the vote is objected to under clause 6 of rule XX.
AMENDING FEDERAL RESERVE ACT TO BROADEN RANGE OF DISCOUNT WINDOW LOANS WHICH MAY BE USED AS COLLATERAL FOR FEDERAL RESERVE NOTES

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1094) to amend the Federal Reserve Act to broaden the range of discount window loans which may be used as collateral for Federal Reserve notes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 1094

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the third sentence of the second paragraph of section 16 of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 412) is amended by striking “acceptances acquired under the provisions of section 13 of this Act” and inserting “acceptances acquired under section 10A, 10B, 13, or 13A of this Act.”

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. LEACH) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFAULCE) each will control 20 minutes.

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1094, a bill to broaden the range of discount window loans which may be used as collateral for Federal Reserve notes.

I would like to point out at the outset this is not a new approach for this House. Virtually the same proposal was incorporated into the bankruptcy reform bill, H.R. 833, which passed this body on May 5, but which has not yet cleared the other body.

The bill enjoys the strong support of the Federal Reserve, as reflected in correspondence with Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan to the last Congress, and again in testimony by the member of the Federal’s Board of Governors, Edward Kelly, at a hearing held by the committee in April.

The bill also enjoys strong bipartisan support on the Committee on Banking and Financial Services. The original sponsors of the bill include the ranking minority member of the full committee, the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFAULCE), as well as the Chairman of the Subcommittee on Domestic and Monetary Policy, the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS), the ranking member, the gentleman from California (Ms. WATERS), and I understand it has the support of my good friend the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. VENTO).

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a brief moment to explain the need for the bill and the issue of timing. Section 16 of the Federal Reserve Act requires the Federal Reserve to collateralize Federal Reserve notes when they are issued. The list of eligible collateral includes, at present, Treasury and Federal agency securities, gold certificates, special drawing rights certificates, and foreign currencies. In addition, the legally eligible backing for currency includes discount window loans made under Section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act.

Over the years, Congress has added a new section to the law to permit lending by the Federal Reserve to depository institutions under provisions other than section 13 and against a broader range of collateral. However, section 16 has not been similarly amended to accommodate these new sections, thus limiting the types of loans the Federal Reserve may use to back currency. For example, certain discount window loans made by the Federal Reserve Board approved to secure mortgages on one-to-four family residences cannot be used to back currency.

The bill before us today, H.R. 1094, simply seeks to update the currency collateral provisions in section 16 to reflect the broader range of collateral accepted for discounted window loans under section 16a, section 10B and section 13A of the Federal Reserve Act.

Finally, I would like to point out the reason for bringing this measure to the floor today as a stand-alone proposal is one of timing. According to the Federal Reserve Board, the existing limits on currency collateral are becoming a potential problem because of the increased use of retail sweep accounts over the past 5 years and the corresponding decline in reserve balances that can be used as excess collateral. For example, given of margin, the Federal Reserve Board’s available currency collateral could pose a potential problem should there be a substantial increase in the demand for discount window loans due to temporary, or unusual, circumstances, such as might occur around the year 2000 date change.

Mr. Speaker, as I explained earlier, this is not a new proposal, but given the issues of timing and the need to ensure that our bank agencies have all the necessary tools at their disposal to smooth the transition to the year 2000, I believe it is important for this body to act separately on this bill. I appreciate the great courtesies extended by the minority in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LAFAULCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I join the gentleman from Iowa (Chairman LEACH) of the Committee on Banking and Financial Services in supporting this much needed measure. It will ensure that the public has available any and all cash it might demand near the end of the year as the country’s computer systems make their changeover to the new millennium. Although we expect few if any problems with respect to Federal Reserve notes at that time, this is a prudent move to help relieve any doubt that the public will have access to hard currency.

H.R. 1094 provides for a technical change in the Federal Reserve Act to facilitate the Federal Reserve’s ability to distribute as much as $50 billion in currency during this period, if needed. Under current law, every unit of currency issued by the Federal Reserve must be collateralized by certain assets held by the Federal Reserve. The assets on the current list have always been adequate to collateralize currency in circulation. However, should there be a surge in currency demand at the end of 1999 and the beginning of the year 2000, the current list of assets would not be adequate.

The list, therefore, needs to be expanded to include other assets which the Federal Reserve already owns but which, largely due to historical oversight, are not now included.

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I fully support H.R. 1094 and wish to express my appreciation to the chairman of our committee for the bipartisan attitude which has been able in all circumstances to approach Y2K problems. I also wish to thank especially the ranking minority member of the financial institutions subcommittee, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. VENTO), for his great work on this legislation. This legislation is merely the latest example of that general tremendous bipartisan spirit.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. VENTO).

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlelady ranking Member LAFAULCE for yielding me time, as well as the gentleman from Iowa (Chairman LEACH) for his comments.

Mr. Speaker, I concur in their statements. I think this is an appropriate bill to forestall any emerging problems with regard to the issuance of Federal Reserve Board paper, the one dollar bills and larger bills that some of us have an opportunity to spend.

Two things have happened. One is, obviously as has been pointed out by the chairman and ranking member, the types of credit paper available have changed and evolved and we have not kept up with them, with regard to the provisions of law to be used as collateral. The Federal Reserve Board notes the dollar bills.

The other, as pointed out by our staff and research folks, is in fact the Fed, like most accounts, are subject to sweep accounts. Some of the credit paper that they otherwise have is not deposited there long enough to use, so it cannot be used to offset the dollars placed into circulation. As our good counsel, Mr. Peterson, pointed out in the research papers of the gentleman from New York (Mr. LaFalce), if in fact we issue treasuries, which the Fed could do, they could buy treasuries at the end of the year and that might cause a spike in the market with the demand for currency expected regarding the Y2K phenomena.

So in order to preserve orderly markets, to respond to Y2K problems and other events that may occur of an unusual nature in the history of monetary policy, it is prudent to, in fact, have these alternative and new instruments to offset and use as collateral.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Stearns). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. Leach) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1094, as amended, which was agreed to by the yeas and nays: Yeas 399, Nays 75.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE HOUSE WITH REGARD TO SHUTTLE MISSION STS–93, COMMANDED BY COLONEL EILEEN COLLINS, FIRST FEMALE SPACE SHUTTLE COMMANDER

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H. Res. 267.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LOFGREN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H. Res. 267.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LOFGREN) each will control 20 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday evening, Space Shuttle Columbia touched down at the Kennedy Space Center in Cape Canaveral, Florida. The crew of Space Shuttle Columbia completed an important mission. A few short hours after launch, shuttle mission STS–93 successfully deployed the Chandra X-ray Observatory. With the launch of Chandra, we begin to explore the universe in new and exciting ways.

Chandra will allow us to examine the hot, turbulent regions in space with images nearly 25 times sharper than previous X-ray pictures. The scientific promises that Chandra holds are far reaching and will have a significant impact on our understanding of how our universe operates.

Yet beyond the scientific accomplishments of the recent shuttle mission, we rise today to celebrate a new turning point in history. STS–93 is the first-ever shuttle mission commanded by a woman, U.S. Air Force Colonel Eileen Collins. Colonel Collins has downplayed her role as the first female space shuttle commander. In her mind, she is just another astronaut, not unlike her male predecessors, who has worked hard and has been bestowed the great honor of commanding a U.S. space shuttle into space.

In reality, Colonel Collins has emerged as a role model for all young women who aspire to one day follow in her footsteps or to pursue careers in other scientific fields. However, Mr. Speaker, a young girl watching the recent nightly news coverage of Colonel Collins’ flight will not be able to command her own space shuttle flight unless she acquires the science and math skills necessary to succeed as an astronaut in the U.S. space program.

Sadly, many young girls, and boys as well, continue not receiving a quality education even in the most basic math and science courses. The release last year of the Third International Mathematics and Science (TIM) study revealed that American high school seniors, even our Nation’s best students in advanced classes, are among the world’s least prepared.

We must expect more from our Nation’s students with respect to math and science. Curricula for all elementary and secondary years need to be developed in a manner that conveys the excitement of science and math so that students are prepared to follow in the footsteps of Colonel Collins and her crew if they choose to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA), the chairwoman of the Subcommittee on Technology, and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. Eddie Bernice Johnson), the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Basic Research, for introducing H. Res. 267 for our consideration today.

I congratulate Colonel Eileen Collins and the crew of Shuttle Mission STS–93 and urge my colleagues to support H. Res. 267.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to speak in support of the resolution to honor the accomplishments of Colonel Eileen Collins, NASA astronaut.

As my colleagues know, she recently commanded the successful STS–93 shuttle mission. As such she was the first female shuttle commander in the history of the United States Space Program. She completed the mission with distinction, and she and the rest of the crew are to be congratulated.

By all accounts she has handled all of her assignments at NASA and in the Air Force with distinction, and she represents the best in service to our Nation.

In addition, Colonel Collins is a valuable role model for young women. She shows them that the sky is not the limit if they study hard, work hard, and are willing to dream. Colonel Col- lins says that determination can lead one to get ahead.

She began her academic career at Corning Community College where she got a degree in mathematics and science. She went on to get her bachelor's degree in mathematics and economics from Syracuse in 1978, a master’s of science degree in operations research from Stanford University in 1986, and a master’s of arts degree in space systems management from Webster University in 1989.

Colonel Collins had nothing given to her, but Colonel Collins worked hard and made a future for herself in the space program and as a role model for girls all over the country. She is just the person to help inspire more young Americans to seek benefits of a math and science education.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that Congress is planning to honor her with this resolution. Unfortunately, however, I believe that it risks being a hollow honor. On the one hand we will vote today to honor Colonel Collins for her accomplishments at NASA. On the other hand later this week, the majority is preparing to bring to the floor an appropriations bill that will cut NASA's budget by a billion dollars compared to fiscal year 1999.

It is a bill that cuts the President’s request for human space flight by a quarter of a billion dollars. The request for space science research is also cut by more than a quarter of a billion dollars. And the request for NASA’s infrastructure budget for facilities, personnel, and so forth, is cut by almost a quarter of a billion dollars.

I think that the majority is making a grave mistake. NASA has done a great job in streamlining its programs and delivering good value for the taxpayers’ investment. We should be supporting NASA’s efforts, not slashing its budgets while voting an 800 billion tax cut.

I hope that we can restore the funding for NASA when the VA-HUD bill reaches the floor.

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speak- er, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I share the concern of the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LOFGREN) about the activities of the Committee on Appropriations relative to the NASA budget. And it was my hope that at least some of these funds can be added to the Committee on Appropriations bill now and the time that the VA-HUD bill comes to the floor.

Let me state, however, that passage of the VA-HUD bill is necessary even at the lower amount if we are to avoid having a government shutdown of NASA. I think that we ought to have a VA Appropriations bill as part of the VA-HUD and VA departments at the end of September. That I think is the worst of all possible alter- natives.

So we have to work together in a bi- partisan basis to attempt to get a VA- HUD bill out of this House and over to the other body for its consideration as we continue working on giving NASA an appropriate appropriation.

I would like to point out to the gentle- woman from California, however, that the mark that came out of the Committee on Appropriations for fiscal year 2000 is $700 million higher than the outer year budget that was submitted in January of 1996 by the Clinton ad- ministration. In other words, the Clin- ton administration’s projections for the NASA budget for fiscal year 2000 was $700 million lower than the Committee on Appropriations mark which has been so roundly criticized.

So I wish that we could do the same and not come up short. As a testament of the possibilities that are out there for the American people, I rise today to honor Colonel Collins for her accomplishments at NASA.”
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE 18899

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 267, honoring Colonel Eileen Collins, our first female shuttle commander, and her crew on Shuttle Mission STS–93.

While each new exploration into space remains a marvel of scientific ingenuity and the creative spirit, this mission is a truly special one. As we mark the 30th Anniversary of the greatest triumph of the American space program— mankind’s first footsteps on the moon—we can see how far we have come. This latest shuttle mission deployed the most sophisticated X-ray observatory ever built and will give us even greater opportunities to observe areas of the universe about which we still know very little, such as the remnants of exploded stars.

Regrettably, safety precautions grounded the mission that day. However, on July 23, this mission was able to take place. July 23 was a proud day that was for Col. Collins, NASA and for the women of our country. She has persevered in a way that most of us can only dream of.

Mr. Speaker, we all can remember the awe that we felt as children as we watched John Glenn, Neil Armstrong and their fellow astronauts, as they brought space discovery home to all of us. Thanks to Col. Collins and her colleagues, our children will also be inspired by brave Americans, who like Col. Collins, have dedicated their lives to the space program and improving our knowledge of the world around us. Once again I would like to congratulate Col. Collins and NASA on their successful mission in which they claimed a place in history and opened a new eye on the universe.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, on July 23, 1999 Col. Eileen M. Collins took one giant step for all womankind by serving as the first woman in history to command a space shuttle flight. I was privileged to fly to Cape Canaveral, Florida with the First Lady and the U.S. Women’s Soccer Team on July 22, 1999 to watch the shuttle’s first attempt. Although we were disappointed that the flight was delayed, we all marveled that just a few years ago events such as this one could not have occurred.

Col. Collins was born in upstate New York, not far from my district, at a time when women were excluded from our nation’s space exploration program. Col. Collins rarely ever missed an episode of Star Trek or Lost in Space according to her family. Along with her father, Col. Collins would watch the gliders soaring over Elmwra hoping one day she too could fly. Eileen Collins dared to dream and her dreams became our dreams. Her efforts are inspiring young women and girls to tackle and excel at math and the sciences today.

Col. Collins is blazing a trail that will undoubtedly open the doors for many more women astronauts. She has rendered outstanding service to her country and is a true role model to young and old alike. I would like to take this opportunity to commend and congratulate her on a tremendous accomplishment.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join my colleagues in honoring Colonel Eileen M. Collins, the first American woman to command a mission in space. I congratulate Colonel Collins and her crew—Pilot Jeffrey S. Ashby and Mission Specialist Steven A. Hawley, Catherine G. Coleman, and Michael T. Gernhardt—on a very successful mission.

On July 23, 1999, Colonel Collins made history when the Space Shuttle Columbia took off under her command with the heaviest payload in shuttle history. The objective of the mission—to deploy the Chandra X-Ray Observatory—was flawlessly accomplished. A veteran of three space flights since becoming an astronaut in 1991, Collins has logged over 537 hours in space. She served as pilot on her two previous shuttle flights in 1995 and 1997—in fact, she was also the first woman pilot of a space shuttle.

The girls of today have some powerful role models to emulate, and Colonel Collins is one of the best. She has consistently excelled in fields dominated by men. Colonel Collins has demonstrated that there are no limits to what women can accomplish if given the opportunity to pursue careers in science and technology.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H. Res. 267, the resolution congratulating NASA on its successful Shuttle Mission STS–93, commanded by Colonel Eileen Collins, the first female space shuttle commander.

Col. Eileen Marie Collins, who is originally from Elmira, New York, was selected by NASA in January 1980, and became an astronaut in July 1991. She has an extensive resume at NASA. A veteran of three space flights, Collins has logged over 537 hours in space. She served as pilot on STS–63 (February 2–11, 1995) and STS–84 (May 15–24, 1997), and was the first woman Shuttle commander on STS–93 (July 22–27, 1999).

Women have come a long way since Alan Shepard became the first American man to go into space in 1961.

Women have faced numerous barriers when it comes to advancing in science professions. I can remember when signs were put up advertising for a job but saying “women need not apply.” We passed the Civil Service Act in 1973 eliminating weight and height requirements in federal jobs and the EEOC ruled that employers cannot discriminate against women. Today, women have broken the barriers in professional careers. It seems that today there are no limits to the professional success of women.

The selection of Col. Eileen Collins as shuttle commander is not only a product of her own hard work and effort, but a product of the rights which women have established for themselves. Col. Collins accomplishments in the U.S. space program have made her a role model for women pursuing an education and career in scientific fields.

Women continue to be underrepresented in the science, engineering, and technology fields. The statistics paint a bleak picture: Women have historically been underrepresented in scientific and engineering occupations, and although progress has been made over the last several decades, there is still room for improvement.

Female and minority students take fewer high-level mathematics and science courses in high school.

Female students earn fewer bachelors, masters, and doctoral degrees in science and engineering.

Among recent bachelors of science and bachelor of engineering graduates, women are less likely to be in the labor force, to be employed full-time, and to be employed in their field than men.

Among doctoral scientists and engineers, women are far more likely to be employed at 2-year institutions, are far less likely to be employed in research universities, and are much more likely to teach part-time.

Among university full-time faculty, women are less likely to chair departments or hold high-ranked positions.

A substantial salary gap exists between men and women with doctorates in science and engineering.
It is for all of these reasons that Col. Collins’ accomplishment is all the more historic. The selection of Col. Collins as the first female shuttle commander has raised the level of awareness and appreciation of women’s contributions in the advancement of science.

I would like to congratulate the crew of Shuttle Mission STS–93 and honor Col. Eileen Collins being the first female commander of a United States space shuttle.

In recognition of the important contribution Col. Eileen Collins has made to the U.S. space program and to the advancement of women in science, I would like to invite Col. Collins and the crew of STS–93 to the United States Capitol to be honored and recognized by the House of Representatives for their achievements.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENIBRENNER) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, Res. 26.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SEC. 1. SATISFACTION OF CLAIMS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.
(a) PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay, out of money not otherwise appropriated—
(1) to the Global Exploration and Development Corporation, a Florida corporation incorporated in Delaware, $9,500,000; (2) to Kerr-McGee Corporation, an Oklahoma corporation incorporated in Delaware, $10,000,000; and
(3) to Kerr-McGee Chemical, LLC, a limited liability company organized under the laws of Delaware, $0.

(b) CONDITION OF PAYMENT.—
(1) GLOBAL EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION.—The payment authorized by subsection (a)(1) is in settlement and compromise of all claims of Global Exploration and Development Corporation, as described in the recommendations of the United States Court of Federal Claims set forth in 36 Fed. Cl. 776.

(c) LIMITATION ON FEES.—Not more than 15 percent of the sums authorized to be paid by subsection (a) shall be paid to or received by any agent or attorney for services rendered in connection with the recovery of such sums. Any person violating this subsection shall be fined not more than $1,000.

SEC. 2. CRIMINAL PROHIBITION ON THE DISTRIBUTION OF CERTAIN INFORMATION RELATING TO EXPLOSIVES, DESTRUCTIVE DEVICES, AND WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION.
(a) UNLAWFUL CONDUCT.—Section 842 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(p) DISTRIBUTION OF INFORMATION RELATING TO EXPLOSIVES, DESTRUCTIVE DEVICES, AND WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION.—
"(1) DEFINITIONS.—In this subsection—
"(A) the term 'destructive device' has the same meaning as in section 921(a)(4); (B) the term 'explosive' has the same meaning as in section 844(j); and
"(C) the term 'weapon of mass destruction' has the same meaning as in section 2332a(c)(2).

"(2) PROHIBITION.—It shall be unlawful for any person—
"(A) to teach or demonstrate the making or use of an explosive, a destructive device, or a weapon of mass destruction, or to distribute by any means information pertaining to, in whole or in part, the manufacture or use of an explosive, destructive device, or weapon of mass destruction, with the intent that the teaching, demonstration, or information be used for, or in furtherance of, an activity that constitutes a Federal crime of violence; or
"(B) to teach or demonstrate to any person the making or use of an explosive, a destructive device, or a weapon of mass destruction, or to distribute to any person, by any means, information pertaining to, in whole or in part, the manufacture or use of an explosive, destructive device, or weapon of mass destruction, knowing that such person intends to use the teaching, demonstration, or information for, or in furtherance of, an activity that constitutes a Federal crime of violence.

(b) PENALTIES.—Section 844 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—
(1) in subsection (a)—
(A) by striking "person who violates any of subsections" and inserting the following: "person who—";
(B) by striking "any of subsections" and inserting "any of subsections";
(C) by striking the period at the end and inserting "; and"; and
(D) by adding at the end the following:
"(2) violates subsection (p)(2) of section 842, shall be fined under this title, imprisoned not more than 20 years, or both.; and
"(2) in subsection (b), by inserting "and section 842(p)" after "this section".

SEC. 3. SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS OF MENOMINEE INDIAN TRIBE OF WISCONSIN.
(a) PAYMENT.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the Menominee Indian Tribe of Wisconsin, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, $32,052,547 for damages sustained by the Menominee Indian Tribe of Wisconsin by reason of—
(1) the enactment and implementation of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for a per capita distribution of Menominee tribe funds and authorize the withdrawal of the Menominee Tribe from Federal jurisdiction", approved June 17, 1954 (68 Stat. 250 et seq., chapter 307). (2) the mismanagement by the United States of assets of the Menominee Indian Tribe held in trust by the United States before the enactment of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for a per capita distribution of Menominee tribe funds and authorize the withdrawal of the Menominee Tribe from Federal jurisdiction", approved June 17, 1954 (68 Stat. 250 et seq., chapter 307).

(b) EFFECT OF PAYMENT.—Payment of the sums referred to in subsection (a) shall be in full satisfaction of any claims that the Menominee Indian Tribe of Wisconsin may have against the United States with respect to such damages referred to in that subsection.

(c) REQUIREMENTS FOR PAYMENT.—The payment to the Menominee Indian Tribe of Wisconsin under subsection (a) shall have the status of a judgment of the United States Court of Federal Claims for the purposes of the Indian Tribal Judgment Funds Use or Distribution Act (25 U.S.C. 1401 et seq.); and

(2) be made in accordance with the requirements of that Act on the condition that, of the amounts remaining after payment of attorney fees and litigation expenses—
(A) at least 30 percent shall be distributed on a per capita basis, and
(B) the balance shall be set aside and programmed to serve tribal needs, including funding for—
(i) educational, economic development, and tribal health programs; and
(ii) such other programs as the circumstances of the Menominee Indian Tribe of Wisconsin may justify.

Amendment of title 18, United States Code.—Not more than 15 percent of the sums authorized to be paid by subsection (a) shall be paid to or received by any agent or attorney for services rendered in connection with the recovery of such sums. Any person violating this subsection shall be fined not more than $1,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. McCOLLUM) and the gentleman from California (Ms. LOFGREN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. McCOLLUM).

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks, and include extraneous material on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, section 1 of this legislation will right a long-standing wrong involving the Federal Government and Global Exploration and Development Corporation and Kerr-McGee Corporation. Global and Kerr-McGee became embroiled in a dispute with the Department of Interior more than 20 years ago when they were denied an opportunity to participate in the environmental assessment process of a potential mining site in the Osceola Forest in Florida.

In January 1991, I introduced legislation for the relief of Global and Kerr-McGee for damages incurred due to wrongful government actions. That bill was successfully referred to the U.S. Court of Federal Claims which ruled that the Government had, in fact, committed a wrongful act. The parties subsequently reached a settlement, the terms of which are embodied in this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful that the passage of this legislation will bring long awaited and long overdue relief for the parties involved. Protecting pri"vate rights and rectifying public wrongs are essential if we are truly a government of, for, and by the people.

The second section of S. 606, authored by Senator DIANE FEINSTEIN, would amend the Federal Criminal Code to prohibit any person from teaching or demonstrating the making or use of an explosive, destructive device, or weapon of mass destruction. This conduct would be criminal if accompanied by either the intent that the teaching, demonstration, or dissemination be used for or in furtherance of an activity that constitutes a Federal crime of vioence, or knowing that a person intends to use the teaching, demonstration, or information for such activity.

We live in dangerous times and some believe that in the next 10 or 20 years we may witness an unprecedented number of acts of terror in the United States.
We face the very real threat that a weapon of mass destruction will be used against civilians in a major American city in the next 10 or 20 years. We certainly pray that does not happen, but we must do everything in our power to reduce the threat of terrorism on a massive scale.

No one should be allowed to distribute bomb-making information with the intent that it be based and be used to commit a violent crime. This legis-alation is carefully crafted to prohibit and punish conduct, not speech, and I am quite confident it will withstand constitutional challenge. Senator FEINSTEIN worked with the Justice Department on the constitutionality, and they support it.

With the Internet, it has become all too easy to disseminate bomb-making information to anyone with a personal computer. While we cannot and should not inhibit constitutionally-protected speech, we can and should do everything in our power to prevent the dissemination of bomb-making information to commit a violent crime.

Similar or virtually identical provisions were passed on the floor of this House were passed previously and I am confident this will now finally become law if we pass it today.

Now, I turn to section 3 of this bill.
S.606 additionally authorizes the U.S.
Government to finally make good on a $32 million court settlement with the Menominee Indian Tribe of Wisconsin.
The history of this settlement can be traced back to 1954, when the Federal Government terminated the tribe’s Federal trust status and the Bureau of Indian Affairs grossly mismanaged many of the tribe’s assets.

In 1967, the tribe filed a lawsuit chal-ening this determination and seeking damages. After decades of litigation, in 1993 Congress passed a congressional reference directing the U.S. Claims Court to determine what damages, if any, were owed the tribe.

Finally, in August of last year, the tribe and the Federal Government presented a settlement agreement to the Claims Court paying the tribe $32 mil-ion. That settlement was approved by the court. These dollars will only be used to improve education, health care, and economic opportunities for the tribe and the areas surrounding the reservation.

I particularly want to commend the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. GREEN) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr.
SENSENBRENNER) for their work in this particular area.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, though these three provisions are somewhat related, and as such a good illustration of the careful work that has been done by the other body, each of the legislative initiatives contained within S.606 are straightforward and relatively non-controversial. I ask for the support of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, which passed both the Subcommittee on Immigration and Claims and the full Committee on the Judiciary during the 105th Congress, and passed the full Senate this year, will pay $10 million and $5,900,000 respectively to Kerr-McGee
Corporation and Global Exploration Corporation and submitted this stipulation to the recommendation made by the Court of Claims as to the amounts equitately due those companies.

This legislation is intended to resolve litigation between the Federal Government and these corporations. This litigation was based upon the corporations’ allegations that the United States improperly failed to grant or approve leases or to allow phosphate mining by Global and Kerr-McGee Corporations in Osceola National Forest.

After a 6-week trial before the Court of Federal Claims, but before the court could issue an opinion, the parties agreed to a joint stipulation of settlement and submitted this stipulation to the court. On November 18, 1996, the court published its recommendation to Congress that the disputes be settled for the amounts set forth in this bill.

The Court’s recommendation to Congress was not based upon the finding of any wrongdoing by the United States in its dealings with Global or the Kerr-McGee Corporations. Rather, the court’s recommendation was based upon and limited to a finding that an equitable claim against the United States existed and it was in the best interest of all parties to settle this claim for the amounts set forth in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the measure. We will certainly find out soon enough whether our efforts to succeed in that regard are successful or not when the measure is challenged in court.

a little bit more careful procedurally as we deal with both public and private legislation in the same bill.

I would hope that this motion to suspend the rules will be overwhelmingly agreed to so that we can get these three items out of the way and enacted into law, but I would hope we would be a little bit more careful procedurally
as we deal with both public and private legislation in the future.

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield
myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I urge that my colleague vote in favor of passing S. 606.

Mr. Speaker, I would note that the section referred to in the bill by my colleague, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Crime, relative to penalties for teaching individuals weapons of mass destruction may or may not prove violative of the first amendment.

But clearly a very strong effort has been made to comport with the requirements of the first amendment, and I would urge my colleagues to support the measure. We will certainly find out soon enough whether our efforts to succeed in that regard are successful or not when the measure is challenged in court.

Let me just put a word of procedural cautions with regard to how this bill is being considered. All three of the provisions of this bill have merit and should be enacted into law on their own. Two of them are private bills in nature, the Kerr-McGee settlement and the Menominee Indian Tribe settlement, and the other provision is public in nature relative to disseminating on the Internet a do-it-yourself kit on how individuals can make their own weapons of mass destruction. So they all should become law, and I support this legislation today.

However, I am disturbed at the practices of mixing public and private legislations on the same bill, and I would hope that the consideration of this bill today as a mixture of both public legislation and private legislation will not be viewed as a precedent for future mixings by either this body or the other body.

I would hope that this motion to suspend the rules will be overwhelmingly agreed to so that we can get these three items out of the way and enacted into law, but I would hope we would be a little bit more careful procedurally
as we deal with both public and private legislation in the future.
I think it has been well stated what is in this legislation. It is good legislation. It is three separate provisions that will all become law, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. Mccollum) that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 606, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ARCTIC TUNDRA HABITAT EMERGENCY CONSERVATION ACT

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2454) to assure the long-term conservation of mid-continent light geese and the biological diversity of the ecosystem upon which many North American migratory birds depend, by directing the Secretary of the Interior to implement rules to reduce the overabundant population of mid-continent light geese, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2454

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Arctic Tundra Habitat Emergency Conservation Act”.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds the following:

(1) The winter index population of mid-continent light geese was 800,000 birds in 1969, while the total population of such geese is more than 5,200,000 birds today.

(2) The population of mid-continent light geese is expanding by over 5 percent each year, while the total population of such geese is increasing by over 50 years. During that time the mid-continent population, that is the population that frequents the Mississippi Flyway, has expanded.

(3) The primary reasons for this unprecedented population growth are—

(A) the expansion of agricultural areas and the resulting abundance of cereal grain crops in the United States;

(B) the establishment of sanctuaries along the United States flyways of migrating light geese; and

(C) a decline in light geese harvest rates.

(4) As a direct result of this population explosion, the Hudson Bay Lowlands Salt-Marsh ecosystem in Canada is being systematically destroyed. This ecosystem contains approximately 135,000 acres of essential habitat for migrating light geese and many other avian species. Biologists have testified that 1⁄3 of this habitat has been destroyed, 1⁄3 is on the brink of devastation, and 1⁄3 is overgrazed.

(5) The destruction of the Arctic tundra is having a severe negative impact on many avian species that breed or migrate through this habitat, including the following:

(A) Canada Goose.

(B) American Wigeon.

(c) Dowitcher.

(d) Hudsonian Godwit.

(e) Stilt Sandpiper.

(f) Northern Shoveler.

(g) Red-Breasted Merganser.

(h) Oldsquaw.

(i) Parasitic Jaeger.

(j) Whimbrel.

(k) Yellow Rail.

(g) It is essential that the current population of mid-continent light geese be reduced by 90 percent by the year 2005 to ensure that the fragile Arctic tundra is not irreversibly damaged.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are the following:

(1) To reduce the population of mid-continent light geese.

(2) To assure the long-term conservation of mid-continent light geese and the biological diversity of the ecosystem upon which many North American migratory birds depend.

SEC. 3. FORCE AND EFFECT OF RULES TO CONTROL OVERABUNDANT MID-CONTINENT LIGHT GEESE POPULATION.

(a) FORCE AND EFFECT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The rules published by the Service on February 16, 1999, relating to use of additional hunting methods to increase the harvest of mid-continent light geese (Fed. Reg. 7307–7317) and the establishment of a conservation order for the reduction of mid-continent light geese populations (Fed. Reg. 7317–7328), shall have the force and effect of law.

(2) PUBLIC NOTICE.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the Service, shall take such action as is necessary to appropriately notify the public of the force and effect of the rules referred to in paragraph (1).

(b) APPLICATION.—Subsection (a) shall apply only during the period that—

(1) begins on the date of the enactment of this Act; and

(2) ends on the latest of—

(A) the effective date of rules issued by the Service after such date of enactment to control overabundant mid-continent light geese populations;

(B) the date of the publication of a final environmental impact statement for such rules under section 102(2)(C) of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4332(2)(C)); and

(c) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—This section shall not be construed to limit the authority of the Secretary or the Service to issue rules under any other law, to regulate the taking of mid-continent light geese.

SEC. 4. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(a) MID-CONTINENT LIGHT GEESE.—The term “mid-continent light geese” means Lesser snow geese (Anser caerulescens caerulescens) and Ross' geese (Anser rossii) that primarily migrate between Canada and the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

(b) SECRETARY.—The term “Secretary” means the Secretary of the Interior.

(c) SERVICE.—The term “Service” means the United States Fish and Wildlife Service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. Saxton), and the gentleman from California (Mr. George Miller) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. Saxton).

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that we are considering H.R. 2454, the Arctic Tundra Habitat Emergency Conservation Act. This bipartisan legislation addresses the devastating impact of an exploding population of light geese, more commonly known as snow geese.

Included within the Members’ folders is a chronology on the issue. The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has been monitoring snow geese populations for over 50 years. During that time the mid-continent population, that is the population that frequents the Mississippi Flyway, has increased from 800,000 birds in 1969 to more than 5.2 million geese today. In the absence of new wildlife management actions, there will be more than 6 million breeding light geese in 3 years.

This unprecedented population explosion is creating serious problems. The geese appetite for Arctic coastal tundra has created a strip of desert stretching for 2,000 miles in Canada. These birds are world-class foragers, and their favorite foods are found in the 135,000 acres that comprise the Hudson Bay lowland salt marsh ecosystem. These geese are literally eating themselves out of house and home and, in the process, destroying thousands of acres of irreplaceable nesting habitat. These wetlands are crucial to the survival not only of light geese but to dozens of other species.

On February 16, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service issued two final rules to reduce this ever-expanding population of light geese. Sadly, in response to a legal challenge, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service withdrew these two regulations on June 17. While the judge did not rule on the merits of the regulations, the Service was instructed to complete an Environmental Impact Statement. This process will take between two and 18 months to complete and during that time the tundra will continue to be systematically destroyed by an ever-increasing population of light geese.

This is a simple bill. It will restate the two regulations already carefully evaluated, approved and then withdrawn by the Fish and Wildlife Service. States would have the flexibility to allow the use of electronic goose calls and unplugged shotguns, and to implement conservation orders to take mid-continent light geese.

H.R. 2454 enacts these regulations in their identical form. In addition, the bill sunsets when the Service has completed both its Environmental Impact Statement and a new rule on mid-continent light geese. It is an interim solution to a very serious and evergrowing environmental problem.

Mr. Speaker, I urge an “aye” vote.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I urge an “aye” vote.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.
Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation with the changes that have been made in terms of making this program available for the next two hunting seasons. I think that puts the kind of limitation on it that we can monitor and will make it a well-run program.

In game bird and wildlife management, some times our best efforts to restore wildlife populations can go awry and produce unintended consequences, and that seems to be the case with mid-continent light geese.

No reasonable field biologist who has examined light geese census data disputes the fact that the population of light geese has shot up dramatically over the past decade to a point now where the birds are virtually eating themselves out of their arctic and subarctic nesting habitats. Our current management actions, including the establishment of protective areas and abundance of cereal grain crops, are partly to blame, but so is the natural wariness and reproductive capacity of this species.

And so, we are left with the unfortunate reality that overhunting—either through increased harvest of light geese or natural mortality—population of light geese will be culled in order to prevent widespread habitat deterioration. It is a regrettable circumstance which offers no simple, painless solutions.

H.R. 2454 would authorize two emergency regulations proposed earlier this year by the Fish and Wildlife Service to increase the harvest of light geese in States within either the Mississippi and Central flyways. These regulations were broadly supported by a wide range of State and private wildlife and conservation organizations, including Ducks Unlimited and the National Audubon Society.

These regulations were withdrawn earlier this year by the Fish and Wildlife Service after a Federal appeals court ruled that the Service needed to submit a full environmental impact statement (EIS) regarding the proposed emergency actions. I commend the Service for voluntarily withdrawing their proposed regulations and for recognizing the need to develop a full EIS, and urge the Service to complete this EIS at the earliest possible date.

I think it important to note for members that Congress is legislating in this matter solely because all other administrative options available to the Service—under NEPA or any other statute—had been exhausted, and that the only remedy remaining was a legislative fix. This is an important factor driving the need for this legislation.

I do appreciate the helpful modifications made to the bill in the Resources Committee. Even improved, the bill does contain two troubling provisions of which I am still concerned. First, the bill would waive all procedural requirements under the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA), and second, the bill authorizes the use of otherwise outlawed hunting practices, notably the use of electronic calling devices and un-plugged shotguns.

However, while I personally disagree with the Congress passing legislation to waive NEPA or to authorize the otherwise illegal hunting methods, and while I remain concerned that these regulations may be too broad, I realize that under the constraints of this specific emergency situation, such provisions may be needed, if necessary.

Moreover, I am pleased that the Resources Committee amended the bill to include an expiration date of May 15, 2001, or earlier if the Service files its final EIS before that date, to limit the duration of this emergency action.

And while I believe the Fish and Wildlife Service will act in good faith to complete the EIS at the earliest possible date, I also believe that a fixed expiration date is necessary to ensure that a temporary action does not inadvertently become permanent. I look forward to the Service completing its EIS, and I hope that this additional analysis will provide other alternatives to address the overabundance of light geese in a less indiscriminate manner and without requiring Congress to pass legislation.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the legislation being offered today by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SAXTON].

H.R. 2545, the “Arctic Tundra Habitat Emergency Conservation Act,” quite simply is trying to head off an unmitigated conservation disaster for white geese, including greater and lesser snow geese andRoss’ goose. During the past three decades, these mid-continent snow geese species populations have literally exploded, from an estimated 800,000 in 1969 to more than five million today. This dramatic increase has resulted in the devastation of nearly 50,000 acres of snow goose habitat around Canada’s Hudson Bay. This tundra habitat, most of which comprises a coastal salt marsh, is vital for nesting. As the snow goose proliferate and consume this habitat, other populations of birds are also placed at risk by this loss of habitat.

A special report issued in January 1998, by Ducks Unlimited provides a good example of the depth and the breadth of the problem. In studies conducted in Churchill, Manitoba, there were 2,000 nesting pairs in 1968. In 1997, there were more than 40,000 pairs. The result is a cruel fate for the birds, particularly the thousands of orphaned, malnourished and eventually dead goslings who cannot survive on barren tundra.

Together with expected population increases is another vexing problem: recovery of habitat destroyed by overfeeding at this far-north latitude, is expected to take at least 15 years; it will take even longer if some of the acreage continues to be foraged by geese during the recovery period.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service has been working for a few years in partnership with the Canadian Wildlife Service, several departments of Fish and Game, Ducks Unlimited, the Audubon Society and other non-governmental entities to try to address the problem. In February of this year, the Fish and Wildlife Service issued two final rules to authorize the use of additional hunting methods to reduce the population of snow geese so that a reasonable population can survive on a viable habitat. The goal was to reduce the number of mid-continent light geese in the first year by 975,000 using additional hunting methods carefully studied and approved by the Fish and Wildlife Service.

Unfortunately, the Service withdrew the rules in the aftermath of a court challenge. The result of inaction, however, would be devastating. Chairman Saxton was correct to press for a legisla-tion solution to expedite the research and implementation of the Service’s rules, as the bill before us does today. It is clear that human decision making has contributed mightily to the light geese problem through increased agricultural production, sanctuaries designation, and reduction in harvest rates.

Mr. Speaker, the bill before us takes an affirmative and humane step to help assure the long-term survival of mid-continent light geese and the conservation of the habitat upon which they and other species depend. I urge my colleagues to support this important bill.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, as co-author of H.R. 2454, I rise in strong support of the Arctic Tundra Habitat Emergency Conservation Act. The fundamental goal of this legislation is to stop the destruction of the Canadian Arctic Tundra by a growing population of mid-continent light geese. If we do not act, these valuable wetlands may be lost forever.

Three years ago, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service joined with the Canadian Wildlife Service, Ducks Unlimited, the National Audubon Society and several State and Provincial Fish and Game Departments in forming the Arctic Goose Habitat Working Group. After carefully studying the problem, the Group issued a report that recommended that the population of mid-continent light geese, which now numbers more than five million birds, be cut in half within six years.

The working group suggested that the food supply be reduced along U.S. Flyways, bailing of light geese be permitted, sharpshooters be hired to kill large numbers of geese and additional hunting methods such as electronic goose calls and unplugged shotguns be utilized.

The Fish and Wildlife Service carefully reviewed these recommendations and it conducted an exhaustive analysis of the various wildlife management options to reduce the population of geese. It finally rejected the idea of “letting nature run its course” because it would cause an environmental catastrophe and many of the suggestions of the Working Group were not implemented.

In fact, in the end, the Service issued two modest rules which would have increased the harvest of light geese by allowing hunters to use electronic calls and unplugged shotguns. While these changes by themselves would not save the fragile Arctic ecosystem, they were a responsible step in the right direction.

Once enacted, these new rules will reduce the population of mid-continent geese and more importantly they will slow the destruction of the Arctic Tundra that is being transformed from thinly vegetated wetlands to a virtual desert.

In La Prouse Bay in Canada, which is a critical nesting site, more than 60 percent of the salt-marsh vegetation has already been destroyed or damaged to the point where it is unable to nourish birds.

Regrettably, in response to a court order, the Fish and Wildlife Service withdrew their regulations and they are now completing an Environmental Impact Statement on mid-continent light geese.

While that occurs, the Arctic Tundra will continue to be destroyed an acre at a time.
and these essential wetlands which provide life for literally hundreds of avian species, besides geese, will be irreparably lost.

Therefore, I urge Members. H.R. 2454 will reinstate the Fish and Wildlife Service’s rules in their identical form. It is a temporary solution and it will sunset no later than May 15, 2001. This legislation is strongly supported by the Administration, the States, and by most of the conservation community, including Ducks Unlimited and the National Audubon Society.

In closing, let me quote from the Chairman of the Arctic Goose Habitat Working Group, Dr. Bruce Batt, who testified that “the finite amount of suitable goose breeding habitat is rapidly being consumed and eventually will be lost. Every technical, Administrative, legal and political delay just adds to the problem. There is real urgency here as we may not be far from the point where the only choice is to record the aftermath of the crash of goose numbers with the related ecosystem destruction with all the other species that live there with geese.”

I urge an aye vote on H.R. 2454, a bipartisan bill that will save critical Arctic wetlands.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SAXTON) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2454, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Arizona Statehood and Enabling Act Amendments of 1999

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 747) to protect the permanent trust funds of the State of Arizona from erosion due to inflation and modify the basis on which distributions are made from those funds.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 747

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

SEC. 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Arizona Statehood and Enabling Act Amendments of 1999”.

SEC. 2. PROTECTION OF TRUST FUNDS OF STATE OF ARIZONA.

(a) In General.—Section 28 of the Act of June 20, 1910 (36 Stat. 574, chapter 310) is amended in the first paragraph by striking “the income therefrom only to be used” and inserting “distributions from which shall be made in accordance with the first paragraph of section 28 and shall be expended”.

(b) Conforming Amendments.—

(1) Section 25 of the Act of June 20, 1910 (36 Stat. 574, chapter 310), is amended in the provisions set forth by striking “the income therefrom only to be used” and inserting “distributions from which shall be made in accordance with the first paragraph of section 28 and shall be expended”.

SEC. 3. USE OF MINERS’ HOSPITAL ENDOWMENT FUND FOR ARIZONA PIONEERS’ HOME.

(a) In General.—Section 28 of the Act of June 20, 1910 (36 Stat. 574, chapter 310) is amended in the second paragraph by inserting before the period at the end the following: “except that amounts in the Miners’ Hospital Endowment Fund may be used for the benefit of the Arizona Pioneers’ Home.”

(b) Effective Date.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be deemed to have taken effect on June 20, 1910.

SEC. 4. CONSENT OF CONGRESS TO AMENDMENTS TO CONSTITUTION OF STATE OF ARIZONA.

Congress consents to the amendments to the Constitution of the State of Arizona provided by Senate Concurrent Resolution 1807 of the 43rd Congress that amended the New Mexico Enabling Act. I urge its support.

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 747 amends the 1910 act to alter the terms of the fund which have worked over time to prevent the State from managing the trust fund and correct the problem. These changes have been approved by the voters in Arizona, but because they alter the original statehood act, Congress must approve them as well. This measure is almost identical to legislation approved in a previous Congress for the State of New Mexico. It is noncontroversial, and I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. STUMP).

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN) for all his hard work on this. The bill has been explained. Let me just say, that it has been approved by the Governor. It is supported by the entire Arizona delegation as well.

The proposition on the ballot that was considered in the State of Arizona was not as controversial, and I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time.

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. STUMP).

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN) for all his hard work on this. The bill has been explained. Let me just say, that it has been approved by the Governor. It is supported by the entire Arizona delegation as well.

The proposition on the ballot that was considered in the State of Arizona makes very minor changes to the 1910 Enabling Act. I urge its support.

I would also like to thank the Arizona delegation, Mr. PASTOR, Mr. KOLBE, Mr. HAYWORTH, Mr. SALMON and Mr. SHADEGG for their support and cosponsorship of H.R. 747. The Arizona Statehood and Enabling Act Amendments of 1999.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 747 amends the 1910 act of Congress that granted the State of Arizona’s entry into the Union. This bill makes two minor changes to the Arizona Enabling Act relating to the administration of state trust funds. This legislation is supported by the Governor of Arizona, our State Treasurer, the Attorney General, State Legislature, and most importantly, the citizens of Arizona through their approval of this change through the ballot process. On November 3, 1998, Arizona voters passed Proposition 102. This ballot measure amended the Arizona constitution to authorize the investment of Permanent Land Trust Fund monies in equity securities. These trust fund monies derive from the sale of State Trust Lands granted to Arizona by the federal government at statehood. The proposition allows the State of Arizona to capitalize on the higher return rates offered through equity securities. This would improve management in the State and assist in the generation of more revenues for the beneficiaries by gaining authorization to invest up to 7% of time and to invest some earnings to offset inflation.

The Arizona Statehood and Enabling Act Amendments legislation will also make a much needed and essential change to the funding of the Arizona Pioneers’ Home. This state-operated facility has been dedicated to the long-term care of miners and homesteaders since 1911. Inadequate funds exist in the Miners’ Hospital Endowment Fund to build and operate a separate hospital for disabled miners. Disabled miners have been cared for at the Arizona Pioneers’ Home, but current law prohibits the commingling of funds associated with state trust lands. H.R. 747 would allow the Arizona Pioneers’ Home to expend monies from the Miners’ Hospital Endowment Fund to continue care for miners who meet the statutory admission requirements.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 747 is a bill that is supported by bipartisan interests in the State of Arizona and most importantly, the citizens of Arizona. I ask my colleagues for favorable consideration of this legislation.

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SAXTON) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 747.

The question was taken.

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the balance of my time.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair’s prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

VISITOR CENTER FOR HOME OF FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT NATIONAL HISTORIC SITE

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1104) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to transfer administrative jurisdiction over land within the boundaries of the Home of Franklin D. Roosevelt National Historic Site to the Archivist of the United States for the construction of a visitor center.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 1104

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representativer of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

SECTION 1. VISITOR CENTER FOR HOME OF FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT NATIONAL HISTORIC SITE, HYDE PARK, NEW YORK.

(a) TRANSFER OF ADMINISTRATIVE JURISDICTION.—The Secretary of the Interior may transfer to the Archivist of the United States administrative jurisdiction over land located in the Home of Franklin D. Roosevelt National Historic Site, for use by the Archivist for the construction of a visitor facility at the Home of Franklin D. Roosevelt National Historic Site and the Franklin D. Roosevelt Presidential Library, located in Hyde Park, New York.

(b) CONDITIONS OF TRANSFER.—

(1) PROTECTION OF HISTORIC SITE.—The transfer authorized in subsection (a) shall be subject to an agreement between the Secretary and the Archivist that shall include such provisions for the protection of the Home of Franklin D. Roosevelt National Historic Site and the joint use of the facility to be constructed as the Secretary and the Archivist may consider necessary.

(2) CONSIDERATION.—A transfer made pursuant to subsection (a) shall be without consideration or reimbursement.

(3) TERMINATION.—If use by the Archivist of the land referred to in subsection (a) is terminated by the Archivist, administrative jurisdiction over the land shall automatically revert to the Department of the Interior.

(c) DESCRIPTION OF LAND.—The land referred to in subsection (a) shall consist of not more than 1 acre of land as may be mutually agreed to by the Secretary and the Archivist, and more particularly described in the agreement required under subsection (b)(1).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SAXTON) and the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SAXTON).

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1104 is a non-controversial bill that would authorize the Secretary of the Interior to transfer administrative jurisdiction over land within the boundaries of the Home of Franklin D. Roosevelt National Historic Site to the Archivist of the United States for the construction of a visitor center.

The visitor center facility will be the much-needed new facility at the Franklin D. Roosevelt National Historic Site, Hyde Park, New York.

It is our understanding that the site in question has been mutually agreed upon by the two agencies and that the funds have already been appropriated to construct the joint-use facility.

Mr. Speaker, both the National Park Service and the National Archives and Records Administration testified in favor of this legislation, and we are unaware of any controversy and we support the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) for his support.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation. H.R. 1104 is a minor housekeeping measure to authorize the National Park Service to transfer jurisdiction over approximately one acre of land to the National Archives to enable construction of a joint visitor center facility at the Franklin D. Roosevelt National Historic Site in Hyde Park, NY.

Mr. Speaker, both the National Park Service and the National Archives and Records Administration testified in favor of this legislation, and we are unaware of any controversy and we support the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New Jersey for yielding me the time and for his support.

I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER) for his support.

Finally, I would like to thank the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN), the subcommittee chair, for his support.

I am proud to rise in support of H.R. 1104. This legislation is introduced to transfer administrative jurisdiction from the National Park Service to the National Archives for the construction of a visitor center at the Franklin D. Roosevelt National Historic Site.

The much anticipated visitor center will serve three area National Historic Sites and will be a great addition to the rich history of the Nation’s Roosevelt era and that of New York’s Hudson Valley.

The 105th Congress provided $8.2 million to the National Archives for construction of the much-needed new facility on a one-acre parcel within the historic site. However, construction is stalled due to a legal snag; and this legislation corrects that snag.

In short, jurisdiction over this site for the visitor center must be transferred from the National Park Service to the National Archives and Records Administration before we can begin construction on this long-awaited visitor center.

Mr. Speaker, Franklin D. Roosevelt, our Nation’s 32nd President, lived at his home in Hyde Park, New York, commonly referred to as “Springwood,” for most of his young life. While Governor of New York and as President, Mr. Roosevelt frequented Springwood often and entertained many dignitaries, including Winston Churchill and King George VI.

Franklin D. Roosevelt was involved in the planning and construction of the Presidential library at the site. The F.D.R. Library is the only Presidential library that was used by a sitting President for official duty.

F.D.R. was intent on preserving his papers and mementos for future generations to cherish and study. Included in his collection are 44,000 books, photographs, Roosevelt’s White House desk and chair, and his collection of naval prints, models, and many paintings.

The F.D.R. Library became the site of the broadcast of Mr. Roosevelt’s popular fireside chats, and President Roosevelt would regularly hold conferences with world leaders in his personal study.

This legislation enjoys widespread support of the National Park Service, the National Archives and Records Administration, the town of Hyde Park, the Franklin D. Roosevelt Site at Val-Kill, the Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt Institute, Historic Hudson, and the Hudson River Valley Greenway.

All of these organizations and communities have dedicated their time and expertise to ensure that this visitor center becomes a reality, and I thank them all for their support.

I look forward to seeing many Americans and all of those who would travel and venture to Hyde Park, New York, to see the visitor center finally become a reality at the Franklin D. Roosevelt Historic Site.

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SAXTON) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1104.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OLD JICARILLA ADMINISTRATIVE SITE

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 695) to direct the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior to convey an administrative site in San Juan County, New Mexico, to San Juan College, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 695

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. OLD JICARILLA ADMINISTRATIVE SITE

(a) CONVEYANCE OF PROPERTY.—Not later than one year after the date of completion of the survey referred to in subsection (b), the Secretary of the Interior shall convey to San Juan College, in Farmington, New Mexico, subject to the terms, conditions, and reservations under subsection (c), all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a parcel of real property (including any improvements on the land) not to exceed 20 acres known as the “Old Jicarilla Site” located in San Juan County, New Mexico (T29N; R5W; portions of sections 29 and 30). . . .

(b) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—The exact acreage and legal description of the real property conveyed under subsection (a) shall be determined by a survey satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the President of San Juan College. The cost of the survey shall be borne by San Juan College.

(c) TERMS, CONDITIONS, AND RESERVATIONS.—(1) Notwithstanding exceptions of application referred to in subparagraph (C) of paragraph (3) of section 112 of the 1936 Act (43 U.S.C. 530b(c)), consideration for the conveyance described in subsection (a) shall be—

(A) an amount that is consistent with the Bureau of Land Management special pricing program for Governmental entities under the Recreation and Public Purposes Act; and

(B) an agreement between the Secretaries of the Interior and Agriculture and San Juan College indemnifying the Government of the United States from all liability of the Government that arises from the property.

(2) The lands conveyed by this Act shall be used for educational and recreational purposes.

(3) The Secretary of Agriculture shall identify any reservations of rights-of-way for ingress, egress, and utilities as the Secretary deems appropriate.

(d) LAND WITHDRAWALS.—Public Land Order 3443, only insofar as it pertains to lands described in subsections (a) and (b), shall be revoked simultaneous with the conveyance of the property under this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 695, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1219) to amend the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act and the

CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY PAYMENT PROTECTION ACT OF 1999

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1219) to amend the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act and the Miller Act, relating to payment protections for persons providing labor and materials for Federal construction projects.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 1219

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Construction Industry Payment Protection Act of 1999."

SEC. 2. AMENDMENTS TO THE MILLER ACT.

(a) ENHANCEMENT OF PAYMENT BOND PROTECTION.—Subsection (a)(2) of the first section of the Miller Act (40 U.S.C. 270a(a)(2)) is amended by striking the second, third, and fourth sentences and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The amount of the payment bond shall be equal to the total amount payable by the terms of the contract unless the contracting officer awarding the contract makes a written determination based on specific findings that a payment bond in that amount is impractical, in which case the amount of the payment bond shall be set by the contracting officer. In no case shall the amount of the payment bond be less than the amount of the performance bond.”.

(b) MODERNIZATION OF DELIVERY OF NOTICE.—Section 2(a) of the Miller Act (40 U.S.C. 270b(a)) is amended in the last sentence by striking "mailing the same by registered mail, postage prepaid, in an envelope addressed to the Government Service or a private express delivery service, including the United States Postal Service, with a copy to the beneficiary of the payment bond at the address provided by the contractor," and inserting "any delivery service that provides third-party verification of delivery, any delivery service that provides written, third-party verification of delivery,".

(c) NONWAIVER OF RIGHTS.—The second section of the Miller Act (40 U.S.C. 270b) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection: "(c) Any waiver of the right to sue on the payment bond required by this Act shall be void unless it is in writing, signed by the person whose right is waived, and executed after such person has furnished labor or material for use in the performance of the contract.”

SEC. 3. IMPLEMENTATION THROUGH THE GOVERNMENT-WIDE PROCUREMENT REGULATION.

(a) PROPOSED REGULATIONS.—Proposed revisions to the Government-wide Federal Acquisition Regulation to implement the amendments made by this Act shall be published not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and provide not less than 60 days for public comment.

(b) FINAL REGULATIONS.—Final regulations shall be published not less than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and shall be effective on the date that is 30 days after the date of publication.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from California (Mr. HORN) and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. HORN).

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I include for the RECORD at this point a letter from the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), agreeing to the discharge of the Committee on the Judiciary from further consideration of H.R. 1219.

The bill also would expand the methods by which the subcontractors could use to notify the prime contractor of their intent to seek payment from the payment bond. It permits notice by any delivery service that provides written third-party verification of delivery, including the United States Postal Service or a private express delivery service.

Moreover, the bill would require that any waiver of the Miller Act protections by a beneficiary of those protections must be in writing and may be made only after a subcontractor or supplier has furnished labor or materials for use in the performance of the contract.

The bill also requires that the Office of Management and Budget issue final regulations implementing these provisions not less than 180 days after enactment of this legislation.

H.R. 1219 represents a bipartisan effort to update the 1935 Miller Act. This bill contains proposals to amend the Miller Act that address some of the concerns of a variety of trade associations representing essentially every segment of the construction and surety industries. Our thanks go to the Democrats and Republicans who have worked together long and hard to bring this important bipartisan measure to the floor.

I was pleased to be a cosponsor of the gentlewoman from New York’s bill, the prime author, and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Davis) was also one of the key people in assuring that these different parties came together. The time has come to modernize the Miller Act. I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced by the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY) as a means of addressing some very serious concerns surrounding the bond requirements established in the Miller Act of 1935. I want to commend the gentlewoman from New York for her leadership in this legislation, specifically her work in bringing all the parties together that have an interest in this bill, working with them, ensuring that all of the concerns that were laid on the table by all of the parties were addressed. She did an outstanding job in working in a very bipartisan way on this bill.

Specifically, subcontractors who perform construction projects for the Federal Government have raised questions about the adequacy of the payment bond requirement. The gentlewoman from New York is a member of the Committee on Government Reform, former ranking member of the Subcommittee on Government Management, Information, and Technology, has been persistent in trying to correct the deficiencies of the current law. H.R. 1219 would remedy these problems by requiring that the payment bond is great enough to protect all of the subcontractors. At the same time, the legislation would modernize and strengthen the Miller Act and provide a means of improving a relationship of the subcontractors that had been long needed.

This bill was reported by the Committee on Government Reform on May 19 by voice vote. The measure has also been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary which has discharged the bill. I would like to thank particularly the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. NAZLER) for their help in crafting this bill.

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. DAVIS). He has done an outstanding job in bringing together the parties to work on this particular bill and we deeply appreciate his work on it.

Mr. DAVIS of Virginia, Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the subcommittee for yielding me this time and I particularly thank the author of this bill the gentlewoman from New York who has worked, I think, over and beyond the usual call of duty in trying to bring consensus to something very technical but I think something very meaningful to government contractors and subcontractors and sureties.

I rise today in support of H.R. 1219, the Construction Industry Payments Act of 1999.

This is legislation we have been involved with for the 106th Congress when the gentlewoman from New York began working with the affected industry groups to find consensus on updating the original Miller Act of 1935. I am happy to say that this bipartisan cooperation resulted in a strong bill that industry, Congress and the Federal Government can all support. It is fiscally responsible and it offers reasonable protections to all parties involved in this type of Federal procurement.

H.R. 1219 amends the 1935 Miller Act which has stood the test of time very well. It has needed relatively little legislative attention or congressional oversight since its passage. Currently, the Miller Act requires a contractor to provide a Federal contract in excess of $100,000 to furnish the government with a performance bond and a payment bond. These bonds protect the government and certain persons providing labor and material for performance of that work. H.R. 1219 prepares the Miller Act for the 21st century. It should achieve its objectives without unreasonably increasing the financial exposure or placing additional burdens on the prime contractor or the surety bond producers and corporate sureties that provide Miller Act bond payments. It maintains the act in three areas: the legislation sets the value of the payment bond to the value of the contract award, allows receipt of notice through any method that provides written third party verification of receipt, and it prevents any waiver of the Miller Act rights prior to the commencement of the work. These three key updates of the 1935 legislation enhance the procedures and protections of the Miller Act for the government and those with rights under the act as we continue to update our procurement procedures the next century.

I am particularly impressed with H.R. 1219 and the reasonable updates of the Miller Act that allow it to be particularly effective in protecting all parties involved in the procurement process. Not only does it preserve the authority of the United States courts to adjudicate issues under the Miller Act but it preserves the freedom of the contractor and the subcontractor to choose within their own contract the particular dispute resolution process that will govern their dispute. This is an effective reform that focuses on everyone’s goal, providing the best product to the Federal Government in a timely manner. Additionally, H.R. 1219 maintains a subcontract provision that allows for requiring arbitration or another alternative dispute resolution process. A protected person’s Miller Act rights would be preserved by a timely suit in the District Court that can be stayed pending the subcontract dispute resolution process.

Simply put, this legislation modernizes the procedures and protections of the Miller Act, preserves the exclusive jurisdiction of the District Court to resolve issues arising under the Miller Act, and respects the freedom of the contractor and subcontractor to choose their own dispute resolution process, thereby bolstering the Federal Government’s strong policy in favor of alternative dispute resolution.

Finally, I want to again thank the gentlewoman from New York for her willingness to sit down and negotiate on this legislation what appeared to be differences too great to overcome in the waning days of the 106th Congress. Instead this has resulted in a strong, updated Miller Act early on in this Congress. I believe the extensive negotiations between the gentlewoman from New York, myself and others dispersed the key elements of the Miller Act to address and improve future situations in Federal contracting. H.R. 1219 is legislation that both enhances and preserves the 1935 legislation. This could not have occurred without a will to build consensus or work together. I would also like to thank the many industry organizations that agreed to sit down and come up with reasonable compromises that helped us develop the strong bill before us today.

In particular, I want to thank the Association of General Contractors of America, the Surety Association of America, the American Insurers Association, and other organizations that I will insert in the RECORD.

I urge the passage of this bill. I would also like to thank Amy Heerink and Melissa Wojciak from my staff.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor for me to yield such time as he may consume to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY). I too would like to thank the gentlewoman for the leadership she has provided on this bill. She has spent more time working on this than any other Member of this House. She is the sponsor of this bill.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I thank the ranking member for yielding me this time and I thank him for his leadership and support.

The best legislation is bipartisan and this has truly been a bipartisan effort over the past 3 years. I particularly congratulate the gentlewoman from California (Mr. HORN) with whom I have worked in a constructive way on many pieces of legislation before this body and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS) who likewise led on this effort and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. DAVIS) who led actually a task force over the last summer between the force over the last summer between the stakeholders, all of the industries involved, over 25 industries came together and signed their own contract in support of the legislation and their pledge to work to pass it. So it has indeed been a combined effort which will ultimately not only help the employers and the employees but the American taxpayer, because the cost of the jobs will go down because those bidding on them will know that the risk of not being paid will now be covered and that risk will not be built into their bid. So it has been a day where everyone benefits in our country and I am very proud to have been part of the team that made this happen.

This is truly a historic day for the construction industry and their workers. That's why I am pleased to stand up today in support of H.R. 1219 which will modernize the 65-year-old Miller Act which was in place in 1935 to provide payment protection for construction firms and their employees who do business with the Federal Government. Thanks to this bill, subcontractors who work on Federal projects will actually be paid and will not have to worry about being paid for their work. H.R. 1219 will modernize the 65-year-old Miller Act which was in place in 1935 to provide payment protection for construction firms and their employees who do business with the Federal Government. Thanks to this bill, subcontractors who work on Federal projects will actually be paid and will not have to worry about being paid for their work.

I learned firsthand about the problems of the Miller Act when I was contacted by one of my constituents, Fred Levinson, in 1997. Fred is a subcontractor in my district. Fred Levinson was hired to work on a project for the Federal Bureau of Prisons for over $100 million. But when the prime contractor on the building was terminated, Mr. Levinson was left without any way to collect the money he was owed for the work that he performed. As a result, he lost $9.5 million simply because the Miller Act did not provide for full payment protection.

Mr. Levinson was fortunate enough to be able to save his company, but this payment problem still forced him to lay off employees and scale back his business. Other subcontractors on big Federal projects simply lost not only the money they were owed but also their company. This is simply not right, and it is critical that the rights of subcontractors throughout the bidding process and beyond are protected.

I always believe that the best legislation is bipartisan, and that is certainly true in this case. This legislation enjoys broad support from Members across the political spectrum. This bill grew out of a hearing that was held jointly by my friend from California (Mr. HORN) and my friend from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS).

At that hearing we heard from several witnesses who spoke on the need to modernize the Miller Act for my constituent Fred Levinson and one of Chairman GEKAS' constituents, Micki Weaver. Mrs. Weaver, who owns a small specialty firm told of how the inadequacies of the Miller Act led her to avoid bidding altogether on future Federal projects.

Both the gentleman from California (Mr. HORN) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS) agreed that the Miller Act needed to be modernized and joined me as an original sponsor. I am very grateful for their hard work as well as that of their staffs and my own, staff which have helped to get us to where we are today. In addition, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) both were instrumental in moving this bill through the legislative process, as were the ranking members, the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS).

My friend from Virginia (Mr. DAVIS) took the lead in getting everyone involved in this issue to agree to sit down at the table and negotiate so that we could reach the agreement on the legislation we have before us today. And addition, many other Members of this House, including the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SCARBOURGH), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH), and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. KANJORSKI) have supported and worked on this legislation from the beginning and were very instrumental in moving it to the floor today.

Equally important, Mr. Speaker, is the hard work that many of the industry groups have done. I am pleased that every industry group with an interest in modernizing the Miller Act supports this bipartisan legislation. This bill enjoys the backing of at least 25 industry organizations, all of which have had a vested interest in the payment bond protection afforded by the act.

Finally, this bill includes a provision that prohibits any waiver of the right to sue under a payment bond unless the waiver is voluntary and in writing. All contracts will be required to provide written third-party notification of an intent to make a claim on a payment bond. Current law permits notification only by certified mail. Under this bill, notification will be permitted by any means that permit irrevocable notification of delivery. In this era of overnight mail and electronic commerce, it simply makes no sense to permit notification only through registered mail.

Mr. Speaker, as someone who has long been interested in Federal procurement policy, I can speak firsthand to the importance of full and timely payment to all segments of the construction industry. In particular, small firms face frequent risks when they are not paid for work they complete. Many firms across the country have faced bankruptcy simply because they were not paid on time or in full by a project owner. Cases in which the Federal Government is the owner of the project are certainly no exception.

This bill will make three important changes to the Miller Act.

First, it will require that prime contractors working on Federal projects furnish a payment bond of a value equal to the value of the contract they have been awarded. This provision will ensure full payment protection for subcontractors who choose to work on Federal projects. They will no longer be limited to $2.5 million.

Second, this bill will modernize the provisions of the Miller Act which deal with notification of an intent to make a claim on a payment bond. Current law permits notification only by certified mail. Under this bill, notification will be permitted by any means that permit irrevocable notification of delivery. In this era of overnight mail and electronic commerce, it simply makes no sense to permit notification only through registered mail.

I would like to dedicate my work on this bill to my constituent Fred Levinson. This is my story, and my experience, and my bill, and I would like to make a difference. I would like to make a difference.
In particular, I would like to thank the American Subcontractors Association which has led the broad-based initiative to modify the Miller Act for their hard work on this bill as well as that of the Associated General Contractors of America and the Surety Association of America, both of which played a critical role in the negotiations which led to this bill.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, finally I am very pleased to announce that the administration has recently said that it, too, supports the bill. This bill will bring about a common sense reform that will make a tremendous difference for construction subcontractors and their workers who do business with the Federal Government. It will not cost the taxpayers anything, and in fact it might lower the cost of projects.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members to support this important bipartisan bill.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of the time.

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I just want to, in conclusion, note that the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GELAS), the ranking minority member on the subcommittee, has been very helpful on this; and I mentioned earlier, I will mention again, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS) is a very distinguished legislator from Pennsylvania and a key person on the Committee on the Judiciary, and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) gave the waiver of this bill to the floor, and we are extremely grateful for that bipartisan, bi-committee cooperation.

But in closing, I want to say to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY) and the staff, George, the chief counsel and staff director, Randy. The counsel and professional staff member have worked with the staff of the gentleman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY) and the staff of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS), and we thank them all for their help. I urge adoption of this measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. HORN) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1219, as amended.

The question was taken. Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair’s prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 1219, as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE

SEC. 201. MISCELLANEOUS CORRECTIONS TO SUBCHAPTER II OF CHAPTER 37 OF TITLE 31, UNITED STATES CODE

(a) CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT.—Section 3716(h)(3) of title 31, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(3) SUBCONTRACTS.—(A) Each State, acting through its designated child support agency, shall, prior to entering into a subcontract, the head of the agency shall consider the contractor's reports in accordance with subsection (a) to any Federal benefit description provided under State law, the contractor's past experience and frequency of valid debtor complaints shall also be considered in the evaluation criteria.

(b) DEBT SALES.—Section 3711 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by striking subsection (1).

(c) GAINSHARING.—Section 3720C(b)(2)(D) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by striking "delinquent loans" and inserting "debts".

(d) PROVISIONS RELATING TO PRIVATE COLLECTION CONTRACTORS.—

(1) COLLECTION BY SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.—Section 3711(g) of title 31, United States Code, is amended—

"(g) In selecting contractors for performance of collection services, the Secretary of the Treasury shall evaluate bids received through the methodology that considers the bidder's prior performance in terms of net amounts collected under government collection contracts of similar size, if applicable. The existence and frequency of valid debtor complaints shall also be considered in the evaluation criteria."

SEC. 202. BARRING DELINQUENT FEDERAL DEBTORS FROM OBTAINING FEDERAL BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 3720B of title 31, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 3720B. Barring delinquent Federal debtors from obtaining Federal benefits.

"(a)(1) A person shall not be eligible for the award or renewal of any Federal benefit described in paragraph (2) if the person has an outstanding nontax debt that is in a delinquent status with any executive, judicial, or legislative agency, as determined under standards prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. Such a person may obtain additional Federal benefits if the Secretary of the Treasury determines, after such delinquency is resolved in accordance with those standards.

"(2) The Federal benefits referred to in paragraph (1) are the following:

"(A) Financial assistance in the form of a loan (other than a disaster loan) or loan insurance or guarantee.

"(B) Any Federal permit or Federal license required by law.

"(c) Any Federal financial officer or other person may waive the application of subsection (a) to any Federal benefit that is administered by the agency based on standards promulgated by the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(3) The chief financial officer or chief operating officer of an agency to whom waiver authority is delegated under paragraph (2) may delegate the authority described in paragraph (2) only after such delinquency is resolved in accordance with those standards.

"(d) As used in this section, the term 'nontax debt' means any debt other than a debt under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 or the status with any executive, judicial, or legislative agency.

SEC. 203. COLLECTION AND COMPROMISE OF NONTAX DEBTS AND CLAIMS.

(a) USE OF PRIVATE COLLECTION CONTRACTORS AND FEDERAL DEBT COLLECTION CENTERS.—(paragraph (5) of section 3711(g) of title 31, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(5) In selecting contractors for performance of collection services, the Secretary of the Treasury shall evaluate bids received through the methodology that considers the bidder's prior performance in terms of net amounts collected under Government collection contracts of similar size, if applicable. The existence and frequency of valid debtor complaints shall also be considered in the evaluation criteria."
of 1986 or the Tariff Act of 1930.’’.

(ii) The term ‘nontax debt’ means any debt other than a debt under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 or the Tariff Act of 1930.’’.

(5) An assessment of why the debtor default.”

SEC. 302. REQUIREMENT TO SELL CERTAIN NONTAX DEBTS.

Section 3711 of title 31, United States Code, is amended further by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(j)(1) The head of the executive, judicial, or legislative agency shall sell any nontax debt owed to the United States by the later of—

(i) the date on which the nontax debt becomes 24 months delinquent; or

(ii) 24 months after referral of the nontax debt to the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to section 3711(g)(1) of title 31, United States Code. Sales under this subsection shall be conducted under the authority in section 301.

(2) The head of the executive, judicial, or legislative agency shall sell each loan obligation from a program administered by the agency, not later than 6 months after the loan is disbursed, unless the head of the agency determines that the sale would interfere with the mission of the agency administering the program under which the loan was disbursed, or the head of the agency, in consultation with the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and the Secretary of the Treasury, determines that a longer period is necessary to protect the financial interests of the United States. Sales under this paragraph shall be conducted under the authority in section 301.”

(3) After terminating collection action, the head of an executive, judicial, or legislative agency shall sell any nontax debt owed to the United States unless the head of the agency, in consultation with the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and the Secretary of the Treasury, determines that the sale would interfere with the mission of the agency administering the program under which the indebtedness was incurred.’’.

TITLE IV—TREATMENT OF HIGH VALUE NONTAX DEBTS

SEC. 401. ANNUAL REPORT ON HIGH VALUE NONTAX DEBTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 90 days after the end of each fiscal year, the head of each agency that administers a program that gives rise to a delinquent high value nontax debt shall submit a report to Congress that lists each such debt.

(b) CONTENT.—A report under this section shall, for each debt listed in the report, include the following:

(1) The name of each person liable for the debt, including, for a person that is a company, cooperative, or partnership, the names of the principal officers.

(2) The amounts of principal, interest, and penalty comprising the debt.

(3) The actions the agency has taken to collect the debt, and prevent future losses.

(4) Specification of any portion of the debt that has been written-down administratively or due to a bankruptcy proceeding.

(5) An assessment of why the debtor defaulted.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—In this title:

(1) AGENCY.—The term ‘agency’ has the meaning that agency has in chapter 37 of title 31, United States Code, as amended by this Act.

(2) HIGH VALUE NONTAX DEBT.—The term ‘high value nontax debt’ means a nontax debt having an outstanding value (including principal, interest, and penalties) that exceeds $1,000,000.

SEC. 402. REVIEW BY INSPECTORS GENERAL.

The Inspector General of each agency shall review the applicable annual report to Congress required in section 401 and make such recommendations to the head of the agency to improve the performance of the agency. Each Inspector General shall periodically review and report to Congress on the agency’s nontax debt collection, management, and administration. As part of such reviews, the Inspector General shall examine agency efforts to reduce the aggregate amount of high value nontax debts that are resolved or written off in part by compromise, default, or bankruptcy.

SEC. 403. REQUIREMENT TO SEEK SEIZURE AND FORFEITURE OF ASSETS SECURING DELINQUENT DEBT.

The head of an agency authorized to collect a high value nontax debt that is delinquent shall, when appropriate, promptly seek seizure and forfeiture of assets pledged to the United States in any transaction giving rise to the nontax debt. When an agency determines that seizure or forfeiture is not appropriate, the agency shall include a justification for such determination in the report under section 401.

TITLE V—FEDERAL PAYMENTS

SEC. 501. TRANSFER OF RESPONSIBILITY TO SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY WITH RESPECT TO PRIORITY PAYMENT.

(a) DEFINITION.—Section 3901(a)(3) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by striking—

`Director of the Office of Management and Budget'' and inserting—

``Secretary of the Treasury''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Section 3901(c)(3)(D) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by striking—

``Director of the Office of Management and Budget'' and inserting—

``Secretary of the Treasury''.

SEC. 501A. PROMOTING ELECTRONIC PAYMENTS.

(a) EARLY RELEASE OF ELECTRONIC PAYMENTS.—Section 3711(g) of title 31, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by amending paragraph (1) to read as follows—

``(1) provide that the required payment date is—

``(A) the date payment is due under the contract for the item of property or service provided; or

``(B) no later than 30 days after a proper invoice for the amount due is received if a specific payment date is not established by contract,''; and

(2) by striking—

``and'' after the semicolon at the end of paragraph (8), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (9) and inserting—

``; and'', and by adding at the end the following—

``(10) provide that the Secretary of the Treasury may waive the application of requirements under paragraph (1) to provide for early payment of vendors in cases where an agency will implement an electronic payment technology which improves agency cash management and business practice.''

(b) AUTHORITY TO ACCEPT ELECTRONIC PAYMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to an agreement between the head of an executive agency and the applicable financial institution or institutions based on terms acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, the head of such agency may accept an electronic payment, including debit and credit cards, to satisfy a liability owed to the agency.

(2) REGULATIONS.—Section 309(a) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by striking—

``Director of the Office of Management and Budget'' and inserting—

``Secretary of the Treasury''.

SEC. 502. REGULATIONS.—Section 3903(a) of title 31, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking paragraph (8); and

(2) by redesigning paragraphs (9) and (10) as paragraphs (8) and (9), respectively; and

(3) by amending paragraph (9) (as redesignated by paragraph (2)) to read as follows—

``To carry out the purposes of this subsection, including services provided under sections 3716 and 3720A, the Secretary of the Treasury may—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from California (Mr. Horn) and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. Turner) each will control 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. Horn).

Mr. HORNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

H.R. 1442 the Law Enforcement and Public Protection Act of 1999 is a bipartisan bill introduced by my colleague from California (Mr. Calvert). The amendment I am offering aims to accomplish two goals. First, it would improve the efficiency and economy of Federal debt collection practices, Federal credit management and Federal travel practices.

Second, the bill would also eliminate a December 31, 1999, sunset date for a provision in the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act that authorizes the transfer of surplus Federal real property at no cost to the State and local governments for law enforcement and emergency response purposes.

In a moment I will yield the gentleman from California (Mr. Calvert) to explain the portion of the bill that would amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949. First, however, let me say that the bill before us contains a number of provisions that are designed to improve Federal debt collection, credit management and travel management. As the Subcommittee on Government Management, Information and Technology learned at its June 15, 1999, hearing on Federal debt collection, credit management, information and technology. The Senate passed the Senate version into law the Debt Collection Improvement Act of 1996. This bipartisan legislation in which the gentleman from New York (Mrs. Maloney) was the ranking member and joined me in authoring this legislation, this bipartisan legislation established significant new debt collection authorities and enhanced existing ones.

H.R. 1442, as amended, builds upon the Debt Collection Improvement Act by providing the Federal Government with additional authorities to improve its collection of delinquent non-tax debts. The bill would prohibit Federal agencies from writing off delinquent non-tax debts prior to initiating collection procedures. The bill authorizes the offset or withholding of Social Security benefits to recipients who owe past-due child support to a State. Currently, Social Security benefits can be intercepted to offset a recipient’s debt to the Federal Government. This bill would assist States in their efforts to collect the billions of dollars in unpaid child support, billions of dollars in unpaid child support. According to the Congressional Budget Office, their proposed offset requirements to cover $7 million each year in past due child support. To help eliminate waste, fraud, and error in Federal benefit and credit programs, H.R. 1442, as amended, would authorize Federal agencies to bar delinquent debtors from obtaining a Federal permit, license or from receiving financial assistance in the form of a loan or loan guarantee until the debt is repaid.
The bill also focuses attention on large debts. It would require agencies to report annually to Congress on their high value debts, that are $3 billion or more. H.R. 1442, as amended, promotes the sale of new and delinquent loans by Federal agencies. Loan sale programs would benefit the Federal Government in a number of ways. Loans that are sold in a competitive market could yield substantial proceeds, reduce administrative costs, and allow agencies to focus their limited resources on other programs. An agency with guidance from the Office of Management and Budget could exempt any class of debt from the sale provisions of this bill if it were determined that the sale would interfere with agencies, programs or mission.

For example, certain performing loans and loans with social or economic purposes could be exempt from the sales provision of this bill by the agency head in consultation with the director of the Office of Management and Budget provided that the sale would interfere with the mission of an agency and be not in the financial interests of the United States.

The bill, as amended, also includes provisions to improve Federal employee travel management. The administrator of General Services would be required to develop a mechanism to ensure that employees of executive branch agencies are not charged State and local taxes on travel expenses relating to official business. H.R. 1442 also includes a provision that would remove a December 31, 1999, sunset provision in the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949. It would make permanent the authority for State and local governments to acquire surplus Federal property for law enforcement and emergency response purposes.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT).

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support passage of this bill. H.R. 1442 will amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 to extend authority for transfers to State and local governments of certain property for law enforcement and emergency response purposes.

I introduced H.R. 1442, the Law Enforcement Public Safety Enhancement Act of 1999, to permanently extend the pilot program that has become an important tool for local law enforcement and public safety officials. Without the help, leadership and support of the gentleman from California (Mr. HORN), my good friend from Long Beach, California (Mr. HORN), my colleagues in the full committee and subcommittee for their efforts.

I would also like to thank the chairman of the Committee on Government Reform as well as the ranking members of the full committee and subcommittee for their efforts.

As we all know, one of the keys to crime prevention is a well-trained local police force and public safety officials. My bill will strengthen law enforcement and emergency management training, while saving these organizations thousands, sometimes millions, of dollars.

When the Federal Government declares real property as a surplus, various local entities may apply for the property on a no-cost basis if they use the property for a public purpose. To obtain the excess Federal property, the local entity must apply to a Federal agency to sponsor the no-cost transfer. My bill would permanently extend this 2-year-old authority to all local agencies the ability to apply for surplus property at no cost for the purpose of law enforcement and emergency response training.

Due to the efforts of the Riverside, California, Sheriff’s Department to create a comprehensive multijurisdictional training center, the need for this legislation became clear. In 1997, Congress passed legislation to create a 2-year pilot program to allow the Department of Justice and the Federal Emergency Management Agency to sponsor local law enforcement and emergency management response entities for a no-cost transfer. The results of this 2-year program are startling. Twenty-one separate local agencies in 11 States applied for this program. The results of the program are in various stages of the process. Without this legislation, these projects will be stopped in their tracks.

I would like to encourage all of my colleagues to support this pro-law enforcement legislation and give back to the men and women that battle on our streets every day.

Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Federal Property Law Enforcement Public Safety Enhancement Act currently allows surplus Federal property to be transferred to State and local governments at a discount off the fair market value. Public benefit discounts are available under current law for public health or educational uses, public parks or recreational areas, historic monuments, correctional institutions, port facilities, public airports, and wildlife conservation.

In 1997, this Congress overwhelmingly passed a bill that made Federal property available to State and local authorities for law enforcement and emergency response purposes for a 2-year trial period. With the sunset date fast approaching in December of this year, H.R. 1442, which was introduced through the good work of the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT), we will extend that worthwhile provision and make it permanent.

Mr. Speaker, this bill would allow the Department of Justice and FEMA to sponsor the use of excess Federal property for law enforcement and fire fighting and rescue training purposes. I expect this bill will move quickly through the legislative process and become law. Only last week the Senate successfully included a similar provision in the Commerce-Justice-State appropriations bill for fiscal year 2000.

There are currently at least 22 jurisdictions around the country who have submitted applications to acquire surplus Federal property for these purposes, and at least three of them have successfully acquired their property. We must not deny the remaining 19 the opportunity to complete their application processes and secure the property they need to make their communities safer.

Law enforcement and fire rescue services provide vital services for State and local governments, and it is critical that we allow them to acquire this Federal surplus property at a discount.

This legislation benefits police officers, fire fighters, and other emergency response officials across the country, and I commend the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) for his hard work on this particular provision.

In addition, H.R. 1442, as amended, is designed to address problems with Federal debt collection and Federal credit management. In 1996 Congress passed the Debt Collection Improvement Act, which was designed to centralize management of Federal debt collection at the Department of Treasury and to enhance cooperation of Federal agencies in the collection of delinquent debt.

Within the past 2 years, the Federal Government centralized debt collection activities at the Financial Management Service have begun to work more efficiently. In fact, collections have grown from $1.7 billion in fiscal year 1997 to $2.5 billion in fiscal year 1999, after the Debt Collection Improvement Act enhanced the Treasury’s offset authority.

Clearly there has been improvement in the government collection efforts. There are, however, many challenges that remain. According to the Department of Treasury, the Federal Government is owed approximately $50 billion in delinquent, non-taxed debt. Of this amount, $47 billion has been delinquent for more than 180 days. In addition, the Federal Government writes off about $10 billion in delinquent debts every year.

H.R. 1442 focuses management attention on high-risk programs and builds... upon prior initiatives to improve Federal debt collection practices by providing Federal agencies with the additional tools they need to improve Federal debt collection. It is almost identical to H.R. 4857, a bill that passed the House of Representatives with overwhelming bipartisan support under suspension of the rules in the 105th Congress. We passed these provisions by a vote of 419 to 1 earlier this year.

I would like to commend the gentleman from California (Chairman HORN), who has done an outstanding job in leading to improve the Federal debt collection practices through his diligent legislative oversight activities. The gentleman has worked to assure that the taxpayers get every dollar they are entitled to and no more.

I also want to mention and commend the leadership of the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY), who has continued her partnership with the gentleman from California (Chairman HORN) since the time she served in the position of ranking member of this subcommittee.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER), the ranking member. He has had an excellent series of questions this morning of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the General Accounting Officer. The gentleman is deeply committed to an effective and efficient government, and especially to getting at the non-tax debt.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation. H.R. 1442, as amended, provides the tools needed to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of Federal debt collection and credit management. It would also assist State and local governments in their efforts to acquire much needed surplus property for law enforcement and emergency response. This legislation has broad bipartisan support, as was evident on the floor. The provisions are the result of a bipartisan effort between majority and minority on the Committee on Government Reform, working closely with the administration.

Mr. CRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 1442, the Law Enforcement and Public Safety Enhancement Act of 1999. I am a co-sponsor of this legislation which makes permanent the General Services Administration authority to transfer federal surplus lands at no cost to state and local governments for the purpose of law enforcement and emergency response services.

H.R. 1442 will have a direct and immediate impact on my Congressional District as well as a number of other districts throughout the country. Currently, thirteen sites across the nation, one of which is in my District, are utilizing a temporary authorization allowing the Department of Justice (DOJ) to transfer excess federal property to local government entities for law enforcement and public safety purposes.

This temporary authority, which expires December 31, 1999, allows local law enforcement, fire services, and emergency management agencies the opportunity to receive federal surplus property through a "no-cost" transfer. This legislation aims to make permanent this temporary authority.

In my Congressional District, the Fifth District of Alabama, the City of Huntsville has applied for the transfer of a Naval Reserve Center to the City for use as a public safety training facility for our police officers, firefighters, and rescue personnel. This facility will allow Huntsville to provide excellent training to the men and women who safeguard our citizens. Currently, Huntsville's application is under review. Many projects that are currently under way or those pending applications for land transfers-like the one in my district-will be severely impacted by the quickly approaching sunset date of December 31, 1999. This legislation will permanently allow the Department of Justice (DOJ) and the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) to sponsor the use of excess federal property for law enforcement, public safety, and emergency management purposes.

I would like to once again express my strong support for this legislation. We in Congress can and should do everything in our power to assist law enforcement officers, firefighters, and emergency management personnel in their efforts to improve public safety on our streets, in our schools, and in our neighborhoods.

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. HORN) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1442, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: 'To reduce waste, fraud, and error in Government programs by making improvements with respect to Federal management and debt collection practices, Federal payment systems, Federal benefit programs, and for other purposes.'

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 1442, the Law Enforcement and Public Safety Enhancement Act of 1999.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOFFEL) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER).

"[Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 1152, as amended.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Committee on International Relations and the original sponsor of H.R. 1152, this Member rises in strong support of the Silk Road Strategy Act of 1999. In introducing this important legislation, this Member joined by the distinguished ranking Democrat on the Subcommittee on Asia and the Pacific, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. ACKERMAN), the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. BRAD Sherman) and many other colleagues in the House who were interested in and concerned about improving U.S. relations with the countries in this vital region of the world.

Mr. Speaker, with the disintegration of the Soviet Union in 1991, Russia became the focus of U.S. attention and heir to the vast Soviet arsenal. Russia also retained the Soviet permanent seat on the UN Security Council and membership now, of course, in the G–8. A peaceful post-Soviet world largely depended on Washington's ability to get along with Moscow. It is not surprising then that U.S. attention, including the Freedom Support Act, was directed principally at Moscow.

We should remember, however, that 15 countries emerged or reemerged from the collapse of the Soviet Union. A few, the Baltics and Ukraine, garnered special attention in the Freedom Support Act, or in the SEED Act, which addressed Eastern Europe. But the Caucasus and Central Asia region received scant attention.

The area includes some 75 million people in the Nations of Georgia, Armenia, Azerbaijan, Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Tajikistan.

Mr. Speaker, two points are clear as we look at the situation in these eight countries. First, there is much at stake for our national security. The Caucasus and Central Asia is strategically located at the geographic nexus of Russia, China, Iran, Afghanistan and Turkey. At least six are secular Islamic states that largely have rejected the expansion of Islamic fundamentalism. They are a front-line force to contain the spread of terrorism, the proliferation of sensitive weapons and technologies and drug trafficking. Rich in natural resources, these nations are a proven storehouse of energy with vast crude oil and natural gas reserves.

Second, given the region’s clear importance, it is time for the United States to become more energetically and effectively engaged in the region. For this area is at an historic crossroads, poised between merging into or retreating from the free world order. It is undergoing an uncertain and turbulent economic, political and cultural transformation.

H.R. 1152 seeks to invigorate and provide direction to U.S. policy in the Caucasus region and the Central Asian Republics.

First, it outlines what our foreign policy and foreign aid priorities should be.

Second, it delineates potential rewards for continued cooperation with the United States, as well as actions that would result in the termination of U.S. assistance.

Third, it does not authorize new money. Instead, it redirects funding already provided to the countries of the former Soviet Union.

Fourth, it does not address the difficult question of section 907 of the Foreign Assistance Act, the prohibition of assistance to Azerbaijan. Frankly, where the votes are on this issue is well-known, and elements of this legislation are too important to subordinate to a Section 907 debate.

The states of this region are looking to the outside for political and economic assistance, Russia and Iran, Turkey potentially, to China and Pakistan, and even to Afghanistan, as well as to the United States. They are actively looking to the United States for leadership and guidance on a range of international issues and to long-standing U.S. friends in the area, such as Israel and Turkey, for closer relations.

At this crucial juncture in their evolution, the support the U.S. can provide can tip the scales of these countries’ orientation towards or against the West. We have a unique opportunity to influence events there now by adopting a broad-based and proactive policy of engagement designed to keep conquerors away from the region, to foster cooperation among the states, and to unleash and channel the energies of growth, economic, social and democratic growth.

We cannot build toward these goals without the creation and use of effective tools. This body has been at the forefront in encouraging the formation of coherent policies for assisting the Caucasus region and Central Asian republics and, indeed, moved the Freedom Support Act for just this purpose.

This body can and must continue legislative initiatives in this area. This Member’s proposed legislation, H.R. 1152, the Silk Road Strategy Act of 1999, is an essential tool in building toward U.S. goals in the region. Broadly, this bill targets U.S. assistance to support the economic and political independence and cross-border cooperation of the Central Asian and Caucasian states. This puts the U.S. squarely behind efforts to, first, build democracy and cross-border cooperation as well as resolve regional conflicts; second, to build market-oriented economies and legal systems as well as the infrastructure to facilitate strong East-West commerce and other relations; and, third, to promote U.S. business interests and investments in the region.

Sustained, affordable engagement that matches U.S. ambitions with resources is indispensable to the Caspian region’s evolution in a manner compatible with the Free World order and interests. H.R. 1152 is an essential tool in helping to ensure that the region’s political and economic options are clear and expansive, and that the far-reaching changes under way in the nations there will turn out to be desirable ones.

Mr. Speaker, this Member urges his colleagues to vote in favor of H.R. 1152, the Silk Road Strategy Act of 1999.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOEFFEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 1152, the Silk Road Strategy Act. I would like to start by commending the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) for his leadership on this bill. He is the prime sponsor. He is the distinguished chair of the Subcommittee on Asia and the Pacific, and has provided great leadership on this.

Mr. Speaker, I also commend as well a bipartisan group of cosponsors from the committee, including the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), the gentleman from California (Mr. Berman), the gentleman from New York (Mr. ACKERMAN), and the gentleman from New York (Mr. King).

Mr. Speaker, the five countries of Central Asia and the three countries of the South Caucasus are an important part of the newly independent States. This bill recognizes the unique interests that the United States has in these countries.

We have a strategic interest in seeing that the region does not become a hotbed of armed conflict, terrorism and drug trafficking, and we have some reason to worry. Many of these countries have difficult neighbors, including those in the former Soviet Union.

The region is also rife with not only the seeds of ethnic and political conflict, but as we have seen in Nagorno-Karabagh, with actual conflicts that have claimed tens of thousands of lives and have created hundreds of thousands of refugees. We have legitimate and important economic interests in Central Asia and the Caucasus. All eight of these countries have a lot to offer in terms of natural and human resources. There is great potential for trade and investment and a positive exchange of people and ideas.

We have a great political interest in Central Asia and the South Caucasus. These countries are still emerging from Soviet rule, and it is in our interest to help them in the difficult transition away from their communist past.

Unfortunately, many of the governments of the region have a long way to go regarding democratization. It is our desire to engage these countries economically and politically and offer our strategic interests, but we must not neglect the democratization that must occur there. We need to keep democratic values and human rights at the top of the agenda in the bilateral meetings with leaders of all eight of these countries and need to reach out further to those within these countries that are working to develop a civil society, including independent media, the people in the non-governmental sector and in private business.

It is imperative that we make sure that democratization becomes and remains a priority of ours in this region.

Mr. Speaker, I also welcome the inclusive nature of the bill. We recognize the fact that these countries are interrelated, there is economic integration that is needed in this region, and that includes all of the countries of this region. We will not see a full potential for this region without the full participation by all of the countries.

It is our hope that these countries understand the incentive of cooperation and make a renewed effort to solve the conflicts that have stood in the way of a greater integration.

Similarly, because we are endorsing integration within the region, this should not be seen as an endorsement of excluding others outside of the region. To tap the resources of Central Asia and the Caucasus to settle these conflicts, we will need to work with others outside of the immediate region such as Russia, Ukraine and Turkey, in order to have the fullest possible success.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to note the administration is already pursuing many of these policy issues called for in this bill. It is also providing the kind of assistance authorized by this bill.

I must also note that the administration has expressed strong reservations about two amendments attached during the committee markup. The administration is concerned that these provisions which condition assistance on certification of free and fair elections...
Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I submit the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. RADANOVICH) for his leadership in bringing this bill to the floor. I share the gentleman’s vision in promoting greater regional cooperation, supporting increased economic integration, and facilitating the free flow of transportation and communication among the States of the Caucasus and Central Asia.

While I support these goals, I along with many of my colleagues, remain concerned about the implications of this bill upon the political situations and interests of Armenia and Azerbaijan. In particular, Section 907 has been a significant component of the strategy that has been advanced after amendment, deletion, or repeal of Section 907 in conference, with the approval of this legislation, after the amendment deleting the provision of the senior Senator of the State of Kansas, contains anything referring to Armenia or Nagorno-Karabagh. Any attempt to repeal or waive Section 907 legitimizes Azerbaijan’s blockade and rewards its rejection of the current OSCE compromise plan. Further, such a waiver would seriously jeopardize any chance for peace in the near future.

While I share a commitment to greater regional cooperation and economic integration in the Caucasus and Central Asia, I am very concerned that this legislation could become a vehicle for the weakening or repeal of Section 907. I would strongly oppose such action and urge the House to reject Nagorno-Karabagh. Any attempt to repeal or waive Section 907 legitimizes Azerbaijan’s blockade and rewards its rejection of the current OSCE compromise plan. Further, such a waiver would seriously jeopardize any chance for peace in the near future.

Uzbekistan and the Southern Caucasus republics of Armenia, Azerbaijan, and Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the United States to give greater attention to the important countries of Central Asia and the Caucasus. We have significant national concerns in this region related to our national security and our international economic interests. These countries were part of the former Soviet Union, and we have a great interest in fostering democracy, an open market economy, and respect for human rights there. Many of these countries are resource-rich, and we likewise have a strong interest in assuring that oil, gas, and other natural resources are developed and are available on the world markets through free and fair international trade.

We have a strategic interest in seeing that these areas do not become hotbeds of armed conflict, terrorism or drug trafficking. The countries are located in a difficult neighborhood—the adjacent countries include Iran, Afghanistan, and China. In this area are a number of serious ethnic conflicts and unresolved political differences which could lead to bloodshed and instability. We need only remember, Mr. Speaker, that in this region we have already seen serious strife in Nagorno-Karabakh and Abkhazia, which have resulted in the loss of tens of thousands of lives and the creation of hundreds of thousands of refugees.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1152 authorizes and urges that we provide humanitarian assistance, as well as help for economic development and the development of democratic institutions. These countries are already eligible for other forms of U.S. assistance, but we can and should be doing more. I would also note, Mr. Speaker, that the Administration is currently pursuing many of the policy lines that I and others are calling for in this region. I support this legislation because it helps to focus attention on this important region and urges our government to make a greater effort to help solve regional conflicts, promote regional economic development, and further the development of democracy.

I was fortunate to express my support for an amendment adopted during the markup of this legislation in the International Relations Committee. American companies and firms from other OECD nations have made substantial direct investments in “Silk Road” countries, but they are not being accorded fair treatment. In some cases investment contracts are not being honored, export permits are not being issued, and de facto rationalizations of foreign investment have taken place. In several instances, formal complaints have been lodged by investors through embassies of the United States and other countries.

In order to discourage this kind of mistreatment, the International Relations Committee amended the legislation to include language conditioning assistance on the fair treatment of foreign investors. Specifically, the amendment requires recipient governments to demonstrate “significant progress” in resolving investment and other trade disputes that have been registered with the U.S. Embassy and raised by the U.S. Embassy with the host government.

I cosponsored this amendment in Committee and I support its inclusion in the bill, Mr. Speaker, because without it the Silk Road Strategy Act could lead countries in this region to conclude that they have a green light to renege on commitments to foreign investors, jeopardizing hundreds of millions of dollars of foreign investments. The inclusion of this amendment should send a strong signal that countries cannot expect to receive American assistance if they mistreat the companies that provide critical investment capital and employment opportunities for their own citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 1152, the Silk Road Act of 1999.

Mr. HOEFFEL. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I urge again support of the legislation, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1152, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds of those present voting) ayes 217, noes 0, and the motion agreed to.

I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2614) to amend the Small Business Investment Act to make improvements to the certified development company program, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

CERTIFIED DEVELOPMENT COMPANY PROGRAM IMPROVEMENTS ACT OF 1999

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE. This Act may be cited as the “Certified Development Company Program Improvements Act of 1999.”

The notice shall be given to the company as soon as possible after the financing is identified, but not less than 90 days before the date the Administration first makes any records on such financing available for examination by prospective purchasers prior to its offering in a package of loans for bulk sale.

“(2) LIMITATIONS.—The Administration shall not offer any loan described in paragraph (1) as part of a bulk sale unless it—

“(A) provides prospective purchasers with the opportunity to examine the Administration’s records with respect to such loan; and

“(B) provides the notice required by paragraph (1).

SEC. 6. SALE OF CERTAIN DEFAULTED LOANS.

Section 508 of the Small Business Investment Act of 1958 (15 U.S.C. 696e) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking “On a pilot program basis, the” and inserting “The”;

(2) by redesignating subsections (d) through (j) as subsections (e) through (g), respectively;

(3) in subsection (f) (as redesignated by paragraph (2)), by striking “subsection (f)” and inserting “subsection (g)”;

(4) in subsection (h) (as redesignated by paragraph (2)), by striking “subsection (f)” and inserting “subsection (g)”;

and (5) by inserting after subsection (c) the following:

“(d) SALE OF CERTAIN DEFAULTED LOANS.—

“(1) NOTICE.—If, upon default in repayment, the Administration acquires a loan guaranteed under this Act, the Administration shall offer such loan for inclusion in a bulk sale of defaulted or repurchased loans or other financings, it shall give prior notice thereof to any certified development company which has a contingent liability under this section. The notice shall be given to the company as soon as possible after the financing is identified, but not less than 90 days before the date the Administration first makes any records on such financing available for examination by prospective purchasers prior to its offering in a package of loans for bulk sale.

“(2) LIMITATIONS.—The Administration shall not offer any loan described in paragraph (1) as part of a bulk sale unless it—

“(A) provides prospective purchasers with the opportunity to examine the Administration’s records with respect to such loan; and

“(B) provides the notice required by paragraph (1).

SEC. 7. LOAN LIQUIDATION.

(a) LIQUIDATION AND FORECLOSURE.—Title V of the Small Business Investment Act of 1958 (15 U.S.C. 695 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“SEC. 510. FORECLOSURE AND LIQUIDATION OF LOANS.

“(a) DELEGATION OF AUTHORITY.—In accordance with this section, the Administration shall delegate to any qualified State or local development company (as defined in section 508(e) that meets the eligibility requirements of subsection (b)(1) the authority to foreclose and liquidate, or to otherwise treat in accordance with this section, defaulted loans in its portfolio that are funded with the proceeds of debentures guaranteed by the Administration under section 508.

“(b) ELIGIBILITY FOR DELEGATION.—A qualified State or local development company shall be eligible for a delegation of authority under subsection (a) if—

“(1) the company—

“(2) the company is making a good faith effort to assist the Administration in meeting the eligibility requirements of subsection (b)(1).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question was taken; and (two-thirds of those present voting) ayes 217, noes 0, and the motion agreed to.
(B) the company—

(i) has 1 or more employees—

(1) with not less than 2 years of substantive, decision-making experience in administering the liquidation and workout of problem loans secured in a manner substantially similar with subparagraph (A), the proceeds of debentures guaranteed under section 503; and

(ii) who has completed a training program on loan liquidation developed by the Administration in conjunction with qualified State and local development companies that meet the requirements described in paragraph (1)—

(B) the company—

(i) has not less than 5 years of substantive, decision-making experience in administering the liquidation and workout of problem loans secured in a manner substantially similar with subparagraph (A), the proceeds of debentures guaranteed under section 503; and

(c) Scope of Delegated Authority.—

(1) in general.—Each qualified State or local development company to which the Administration delegates authority under section (a) to do liquidation functions described in paragraphs (1)(A) and (B), a qualified State or local development company shall submit to the Administration a request for written approval before committing the Administration to the purchase of any other indebtedness secured by the property securing the liquidation, foreclosure, or mitigation of the Administration's failure and any delays that occurred in the submission of the report on the results of delegation of authority under subparagraph (B)(i), including specific reasons for the delays that occurred in the submission of the report on the results of delegation of authority under subparagraph (B)(i).

II. admission or foreclosures, including the restructure functions described in paragraph (1)(A), a qualified State or local development company may undertake routine actions not addressed in a liquidation plan without obtaining additional approval from the Administration.

(2) Purchase of Indebtedness.—

(i) In general.—In carrying out functions described in paragraph (1)(A), a qualified State or local development company shall submit to the Administration a request for written approval before committing the Administration to the purchase of any other indebtedness secured by the property securing a defaulted loan.

(ii) TIMING.—Not later than 15 business days after receiving a request under clause (i), the Administration shall approve or deny the request.

(III) NOTICE OF NO DECISION.—With respect to any request that cannot be approved or denied within the 15-day period required by clause (ii), the Administration shall notice the company that the Administration has not approved or denied the request.

(2) CONTENTS.—Each report submitted under paragraph (1) shall include the following information:

(1) the total cost of the project financed with the loan;

(ii) the total original dollar amount guaranteed by the Administration;

(III) the total dollar amount of the loan at the time of liquidation, foreclosure, or mitigation of loss; and

(iv) the total dollar losses resulting from the liquidation, foreclosure, or mitigation of loss, both as a percentage of the amount guaranteed and the total cost of the project financed.

(B) With respect to each qualified State or local development company to which the Administration delegates authority under section (a) to do liquidation functions described in paragraphs (1)(A) and (B), a qualified State or local development company shall submit to the Administration a request for written approval before committing the Administration to the purchase of any other indebtedness secured by the property securing the liquidation, foreclosure, or mitigation of the Administration's failure and any delays that occurred in the submission of the report on the results of delegation of authority under subparagraph (B)(i), including specific reasons for the delays that occurred in the submission of the report on the results of delegation of authority under subparagraph (B)(i).
The fees in the 504 program cover all these costs, resulting in a program that operates with no cost to the taxpayer. The fees sunset on October 1, 2000 and H.R. 2614 will continue them through October 1, 2003. Additionally, 2001 will grant permanent status to the Preferred Certified Lender Program before it sunsets at the end of fiscal year 2000. This program enables experienced CDCs to use streamlined procedures for loan making and liquidation, resulting in improved service to the small business borrower and reduced losses and liquidation costs.

Finally, to address the problem of low recovery rates on defaulting 504 loans, H.R. 2614 makes the Loan Liquidation Pilot Program a permanent program. This gives qualified and experienced CDCs the ability to handle the liquidation of loans with only minimal involvement of the SBA, resulting in savings to the program, and a corresponding reduction in the fees charged to the borrowers and the lenders.

Mr. Speaker, I again want to urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2614. It will mean a significant improvement in services to their small business constituents, and a reduction in the cost of providing those services.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2614, which amends the Small Business Investment Act to make changes in the Section 504 loan program administered by the Small Business Administration. The 504 loan program guarantees small business loans for construction, renovation and purchase of buildings and equipment, and provides nearly $2 billion of financial assistance every year.

Mr. Speaker, let me briefly describe the provisions of H.R. 2614.

H.R. 2614, will increase the maximum debenture size for Section 504 loans from $750,000 to $1 million, and the size of public policy debenture backed loans from $1 million to $1,300,000. It has been 10 years since the committee acted to increase the maximum guarantee amount in the 504 program. To keep pace with inflation, the maximum guarantee amount should be increased to approximately $1.25 million; however, the committee believes that a simple increase to $1 million is probably sufficient. This increase is especially needed in the 504 program because it is primarily a real estate-based program and the cost of commercial real estate has increased markedly in the last several years.

H.R. 2614 also adds women-owned businesses to the current list of businesses eligible for the larger public policy loans of up to $1.3 million. This continues our efforts to increase assistance to women-owned businesses.

The Committee on Small Business recognizes the important role women-owned businesses play in the economy and believes this change is needed to ensure the expansion of this sector of our economy.

H.R. 2614 will reauthorize the fees currently levied on the borrower, the Certified Development Company, and the participating bank. The 504 programs operate with a revenue surplus rate based on calculations estimating the net present value of a year’s loans plus fees and recoveries from defaulted loans minus losses.

The changes made by H.R. 2614 will allow this program to continue assisting entrepreneurs in one of the most critical areas in business expansion, finance assistance for building and equipment purchases. These are critical ingredients for business growth, and the 504 programs make sure that small businesses continue to grow. When a business is able to expand, every small business owner helps families in the communities I represent.

The changes made by H.R. 2614 will allow this program to continue assisting entrepreneurs in one of the most critical areas in business expansion, finance assistance for building and equipment purchases. These are critical ingredients for business growth, and the 504 programs make sure that small businesses continue to grow. This bill will ensure a greater access to capital for potential business owners. By providing this access, this will allow our economy to continue to grow and ensure future prosperity for the country. H.R. 2614 makes a number of necessary changes to the Small Business Administration’s (SBA) 504 loan program. H.R. 2614 makes a number of changes to the Small Business Administration’s (SBA) 504 loan program.

H.R. 2614 will allow Certified Development Companies (CDCs) to make more loans. H.R. 2614 increases opportunities for businesses supported by small business programs to have access to loans. It is clear that access to loans gives business owners access to opportunities. In addition, by increasing the debenture size, we will allow Certified Development Companies (CDCs) to make more loans.

of fees, we can ensure the solvency of the program. We also have a responsibility to make the 504 program more efficient. Under the Premier Certified Lender Program, specific experienced CDC's are granted the authority to approve debentures without SBA involvement. In return, the lenders agree to reimburse the SBA 10% of any loss on a debenture guaranteed by the SBA. By making the Premier Certified Lender Program permanent, the 504 program will be more efficient.

The 504 loan program must properly serve the borrower. The current loan liquidation program has been successful in ensuring that the 504 program works for borrowers. Loan liquidation is the most expensive portion of the 504 program. Through the involvement of the CDC, which has resulted in a higher response rate, the overall costs are lowered for the program. By lowering the cost of the program, businesses will have access to reduced rates on loans, which will lower expenses to small businesses.

H.R. 2614 is good for borrowers and small businesses and is therefore good for our economy. We should vote in favor of H.R.

2614 and expand opportunities for small business owners.

Ms. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLER of Florida). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mrs. KELLY) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2614.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING SMALL BUSINESS ACT

TO MAKE IMPROVEMENTS IN GENERAL BUSINESS LOAN PRO-

GRAM

Mr. TALENT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2615) to amend the Small Business Act to make improvements to the general business loan program, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2615

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. LEVELS OF PARTICIPATION.

Section 7(a)(2)(A) of the Small Business

(1) in paragraph (i) by striking “$100,000” and inserting “$150,000”; and

(2) in paragraph (ii) by striking “$100,000” and inserting “$150,000”.

SEC. 2. LOAN AMOUNTS.

Section 7(a)(3)(A) of the Small Business

Act (15 U.S.C. 636(a)(3)(A)) is amended by striking “$750,000,” and inserting “$1,000,000 (or if the gross loan amount would exceed

$2,000,000),”.

SEC. 3. INTEREST ON DEFAULTED LOANS.

Subparagraph (B) of section 7(a)(4) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 636(a)(4)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(ii) APPLICABILITY.—Clauses (i) and (ii) shall not apply to loans made on or after October 1, 1999.”.

SEC. 4. PREPAYMENT OF LOANS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 7(a)(4) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 636(a)(4)) is amended—

(1) by striking “(4) INTEREST RATES AND FEES.” and inserting “(4) INTEREST RATES

AND PREPAYMENT”;

(2) by adding at the end the following:

“(C) PREPAYMENT CHARGES.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—A borrower who prepays any loan guaranteed under this subsection shall remit to the Administration a subsidy recoupment fee calculated in accordance with clause (ii) if—

“(I) the loan is for a term of not less than 15 years;

“(II) the prepayment is voluntary;

“(III) the amount of prepayment in any calendar year is more than 25 percent of the outstanding balance of the loan; and “(IV) the prepayment is made within the first 3 years after disbursement of the loan proceeds.

“(ii) SUBSIDY RECoupMENT FEE.—The subsidy recoupment fee charged under clause (i) shall be—

“(I) 1% of the amount of prepayment, if the borrower prepays during the first year after disbursement;

“(II) 3% of the amount of prepayment, if the borrower prepays during the 2nd year after disbursement; and “(III) 1% of the amount of prepayment, if the borrower prepays during the 3rd year after disbursement.

SEC. 5. GUARANTEE FEES.

Section 7(a)(18)(B) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 636(a)(18)(B)) is amended to read as follows:

“(B) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN LOANS.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding sub-paragraph (A), if the total deferred participation share of a loan guaranteed under this subsection is less than or equal to $120,000, the guarantee fee collected under subpara-graph (A) shall be in an amount equal to 2 percent of the total deferred participation share of the loan.

“(ii) RETENTION OF FEES.—Lenders participating in the programs established under this subsection may retain not more than 25 percent of the fee collected in accordance with this subparagraph with respect to any loan not exceeding $150,000 in gross loan amount.”

SEC. 6. LEASE TERMS.

Section 7(a) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 636(a)) is further amended by adding at the end the following:

“(28) LEASING.—In addition to such other lease arrangements as may be authorized by the Administration, a borrower may permanently lease to 1 or more tenants not more than 20 percent of any property constructed with the proceeds of a loan guaranteed under this subsection, if the borrower permanently occupies and uses not less than 60 percent of the total business space in the property.”.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. TALENT) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO), as a Member opposed to the bill, each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. TALENT).

Ms. VELAZQUEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time in support of H.R. 2615 be equally divided between myself and the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. TALENT).

Mr. TALENT. Mr. Speaker, preserving the right to object, and I will not object, I would just join the gentlewoman in her unanimous consent request.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that 10 minutes in favor of the bill will be divided equally, so that the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. TALENT) has 10 minutes and the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELAZQUEZ) has 10 minutes.

Without objection, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. TALENT) is recognized.

There was no objection.

Mr. TALENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker. I rise in strong support of H.R. 2615, a bill to amend the Section 7(a) loan program at the Small Business Administration. I want to start by thanking my colleague, the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELAZQUEZ), the ranking Democrat on the committee, for her assistance in drafting this bill. Her help has been invaluable, and I thank her on behalf of myself and the small business community as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, the 7(a) general business loan program provides over $9 billion of financial assistance to small businesses every year. The bill before us, H.R. 2615, will improve this program and make it more responsive to the needs of small businesses.

Without further ado, I will briefly describe the proposed changes to the 7(a) program contained in H.R. 2615. First, the maximum guarantee amount of a 7(a) loan program is increased to $1 million from the 1988 limit of $750,000 in order to keep pace with inflation. In fact, Mr. Speaker, to fully keep pace with inflation, the maximum guarantee amount should be increased to approximately $1,250,000. The committee believes a simple increase to $1 million is sufficient and has not gone further.

Second, H.R. 2615 removes a provision which reduced SBA’s liability for accrued interest on defaulted loans since the provision’s intended savings have not materialized.

The third change to the 7(a) program concerns the problem of early repayment of large loans, which is jeopardizing the subsidy rate supporting the program. H.R. 2615 will remedy this problem by assessing the fee to the borrower for prepayment of any loan with a term in excess of 15 years within the first 5 years of the term.

The committee believes this increase in prepayments is due to a variety of factors. There have been some instances of misuse by the program by businesses seeking bridge financing. This has also been a reality, where, due to the strong economy, lenders have approached borrowers offering improved terms, effectively skimming loans, and avoiding the need to process credit analyses. This removes authorization dollars from the program which could have been used for other loans and is a disservice to both the small business borrowers and the 7(a) lenders. Both parties work to put financing packages together at the cost of both time and space.

H.R. 2615 also includes three changes designed to encourage the making of smaller loans. The 80 percent guarantee rate will be expanded from loans under $100,000 to loans under $150,000. Likewise, the 7 percent guarantee fee will now apply to loans up to $150,000. That represents a significant savings for these small borrowers.

Finally, for small loans we have included a provision allowing lenders to retain one quarter of the guarantee fee on loans under $150,000 as an incentive to make these loans.

These changes add to the innovations that Congress has introduced over the past several years concerning the availability of loans at the lower end of the 7(a) spectrum. As a result, since 1994, the number of loans made under $100,000 significantly. In 1998 alone, 53 percent of the 7(a) loans were under $100,000. This compares with only 37 percent in 1994. The figure fluctuates, Mr. Speaker, but the general trend is noticeably in the direction of smaller loans.

Finally, H.R. 2615 modifies current 7(a) program rules prohibiting loans from passive investments. When Congress last reauthorized the program, we modified a similar restriction in the 504 program in order to permit the financing of projects where less than 20 percent of a business space will be rented out when the small business borrower in question will occupy the remainder. It is time we provides similar options to 7(a) borrowers.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2615 is a common sense bill designed to improve the financial assistance provided to small businesses, particularly the smallest of small businesses, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the chairman of the Committee on Small Business and the ranking member, and I agree with six-sevenths of the bill. So that is pretty good. My colleagues may say, well, if the gentleman agrees with six-sevenths of the bill, should that not be enough? Normally, under most circumstances, I would say yes, but in its current form, I rise in opposition to the bill and, therefore, will vote against it.

We should not rush to pass this bill under suspension of the rules until we actually have more information from the SBA. I realize most of my colleagues are not versed on the different programs run by the SBA. The SBA has two main loan programs, the 7(a) program and the 504 program. 7(a) mainly provides capital for new entrepreneurs, while the 504 program is designed to meet the capital needs of growing small businesses for expansion or purchases of additional equipment.

We just passed, with my concurrence, H.R. 2614, which increased the maximum loan guarantee amount in the 504 loan program from $750,000 to $1 million. I agree with that because growing small businesses already in existence have greater capital needs. In addition, the program operates at no cost to the taxpayer because the fees it charges offset its costs. However, H.R. 2615 plans to do the same thing for the 7(a) loan program and I disagree with this policy change.

No one should start up a small business as a large loan backed by the SBA. If a bank needs a 75 percent government-backed guarantee to feel comfortable with a $1 million loan, then we should begin the process of passing the bill. If someone requires a $1 million loan for start-up, they are probably buying a lot of new equipment and large amounts of real estate. They should rethink their business because this is a recipe for failure and the taxpayers will be left paying off the default.

If a loan is for an already existing small business, then the bank should make those loans on a sound commercial basis without having to rely upon the crutch of the taxpayer. These companies already have a financial track record. It should be on the merits, not an SBA guarantee, that the bank should make the loans.

If a borrower still needs government backing for an expansion project, then they should turn to the 504 loan program. The 504 program should serve capital expansion needs, not the 7(a) loan program.

The question essentially is this: At what point should companies be weaned off government guaranteed loans? 1 year, 2 years, 5 years, 10 years, up capital available to them from $750,000 to $1 million? We should be keeping it the same and encouraging companies to get off the government help.

If the purpose of the Small Business Administration is to give a jump-start to companies that otherwise would not be able to start up a business, then why are we increasing the amount of start-up money available to them from $750,000 to $1 million? We should be keeping it the same and encouraging companies to get off the government help.

It stands to reason that if the SBA has an overall fixed amount of total loans it can support, then throughout the year as small business owners are able to borrow larger amounts, then the overall loan volume will decrease, to the detriment of the number of small borrowers.

This is what is really confusing. The SBA maintained, for the longest period of time, and sent a memo to my office which they have never corrected in writing, that if the authorization level were kept the same, which it is, but the level of 7(a) loans went from $750,000 to $1 million, then in excess of 6,000 entrepreneurs, who otherwise would be applying for and qualifying for small business loans, would be left out because the bigger borrowers would be in there taking up all the money.

That was SBA’s position for the longest period of time until they mysteriously, and without any empirical evidence, suddenly changed their mind and said that the small business incentives in the small business bill means there would be a net loss of people receiving loans.

We have to think about that. This bill has a small business incentive in the Small Business Administration loan program.

So now we are in the process of defining a small business within a small business to give incentives to small businesses within the small business loan program.

It makes us wonder why we even have the program in the first place. But it is here. And if it is here, then it should not be abused. And if it is here and the money is available, it should be available for those, not entrepreneurs, not the people who can borrow up to $1 million.

The cost implications in the bill are still not clear. H.R. 2615 contains much-needed incentives to encourage the banks to make the smaller loans. And there we are.

Now, we have got a system not of set-asides but a system somehow built into language that says the Small Business Administration should prefer small businesses.

I want the Members of Congress and the Speaker to think about that statement. If we are encouraging small business loans within the Small Business Administration, then I think that we have an agency now that has lost its mission when it starts dividing up what exactly is a small business.

When H.R. 2615 was marked up in committee, the sponsors of the bill readily admitted that any additional revenue that may be raised with the fees charged to higher dollar loan borrowers will be used to pay for the small loan incentive contained in the bill. Thus, the impact on most expensive items in the SBA budget supposedly would be a wash at best. But we have no empirical data, nothing, that has been furnished to this Member of Congress, who requested the SBA first of all to come to an analysis as to the loss of businesses that would be deprived of start-up capital; and they, on their own, advised this Member of Congress that it would be in excess of 6,000.

Later on they changed their mind, but they told the press still that the information given to this Member of Congress was correct.

Therefore, I can come to one conclusion, and that is that the Small Business Administration itself does not understand the mechanics of this bill. And if they do not understand the mechanics of this bill and they do not understand the impact of it, then this bill should not pass, it should come up under regular order and be subject to an amendment.

I urge my colleagues to reject the bill now and send it back to the committee. Once we have a more clear understanding of how this bill will impact the budget and small loan borrowers, then we can always act on this provision. We do not have the information yet.

There is plenty of time to work on this legislation. An additional hike in the maximum guarantee amount of the 7(a) loan program can be included in the regular SBA authorization bill. It would be easy to bring it up at a later time. We can mark up a separate bill later this fall. But I do not see the reason for rushing to action on this now when we have incomplete information.

Thus, I respectfully disagree with my chairmanship and ranking minority member and ask that H.R. 2615 be defeated in its current form.

This is the only alternative left to me because I cannot amend the bill under suspension of the rules. The rest of the bill is fine.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2615, legislation to improve and update the General Business Loan Guaranty, or 7(a), program.

With the passage of today’s legislation, we will grow the 7(a) loan program in a reasonable and thoughtful way that expands the program, while continuing our commitment to those businesses that need access to start-up capital.

Although SBA administers numerous programs that provide financial and technical assistance to small firms, the 7(a) program is the agency’s flagship loan program. It is far and away the agency’s largest and most important both in terms of number of loans and program level supported.

Under 7(a), loan guarantees are provided to eligible small businesses that have been unsuccessful in obtaining private financing on reasonable terms. The proceeds from a 7(a) loan may be used for any purpose, and have made the difference for countless entrepreneurs.

Under a 7(a) partnership between Government and nearly 7,000 banks and non-bank lenders that participate, small businesses are ensured access to capital they need. Since the program’s inception, more than 600,000 7(a) loans totaling $80 billion have been made to help this Nation’s small businesses.

One of the important items in this legislation is the increase in the loan guarantee from $750,000 to $1 million. It has been over a decade since we increased the loan guarantee. As a matter of fact, if we were to index the current guarantee based on the Consumer Price Index, we would actually have a loan guarantee that is higher than what is under consideration today.

I believe what we are doing is reasonable and necessary if the program is to continue to serve our Nation’s small businesses.

To safeguard against the risk that increasing the guarantee will harm those seeking smaller loans, we have capped the total loan amount that can be made under the 7(a) program at $2 million. This is in combination with other provisions of the legislation that will ensure that the 7(a) program will be available to all who need it.

I would also like to voice my strong support for the small loan provisions contained in this legislation. The committee has made sure that small loans are still a priority by adopting such changes as reducing the program’s cost to the borrower of loans of $150,000 or less from three percent of the loan to two percent, making certain that small businesses will keep more of their money.

We are also creating incentives for lenders to continue to make small loans by giving those lenders additional funds guaranteed by the SBA through an increasing guarantee from 75 percent to 80 percent and a rebate that could be as high as $600 per loan.

These proposals will ensure that the program continues its mission. If the 7(a) program is going to continue to serve this Nation’s small businesses, it must keep in step with the changing financial landscape.

The changes made by H.R. 2615 create a balanced approach that updates the 7(a) program while affirming our commitment to small businesses that small loans are still accessible. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2615.

I just would like to take a moment to respond to the points made by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO).

I am just as concerned that we continue our commitment to small loans to address this. To address this, the committee has placed several provisions aimed at encouraging small loans. These provisions offer incentives for 7(a) lenders to continue to make smaller loans, especially loans under $150,000.

These incentives include the increase in the loan guarantee amount from $75 to 80 percent for loans under $150,000 in section 1; the reduction of borrower’s fees from three percent to two percent on loans up to $120,000 in section 5; and the fee-splitting provision in section 5 that will allow up to 25 percent of the borrower’s fees on loans under $150,000 to go to the 7(a) lenders rather than to SBA.

Without the increase in the loan guarantee that pays for these incentives, we will be faced with a choice, either increase the program’s subsidy rate, which will require additional funds from the network of statutes that is the current state of the Commerce-Justice-State appropriations bill we will consider this week, that is unlikely; or eliminate these important small business loan provisions. And I believe that that will be short-sighted.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TALENT. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLER of Florida). The gentleman from Missouri (Mr. TALENT) has 6 1⁄2 minutes remaining.

Mr. TALENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the jurisdiction of the small business community, the legislative jurisdiction of it, is really only over the Small Business Administration and its programs.

Since I became chairman, I have tried to use the oversight jurisdiction of the committee, which is much broader, to struggle for tax and regulatory relief for small businesses around the country. And that is really what we devote a whole lot of our time to on the committee. But we do take seriously the job of overseeing the programs in the Small Business Administration.

In order to accomplish that, we periodically work together on a bipartisan basis and we pass bills designed to update the network of statutes that on the basis of which those loan programs run. I have tried to push them in the direction in my chairmanship and with the support first of the gentleman from New York (Mr. LaFalce) and then of the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. Velázquez) in the direction of making those programs more efficient and making them run as entirely private lending programs do whenever we can.

This bill is part of that trend. It contains a number of different provisions which are important to achieving that effort.

We have worked together on a bipartisan basis. We produced the bill by a 24–4 vote in the committee. I ask the House to support us in these efforts. This is important to the people who rely on these programs and important to what we are trying to accomplish on the committee.

The gentleman from Illinois said correctly, I think, that he agrees with six-sevenths of the bill. I say it might be even more than that. The only dispute is a provision that, in the view of the gentleman, pushes the portfolio away from the direction of smaller loans.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, there is no question and I do not think the gentleman would deny that, on balance, this bill continues the trend of moving the 7(a) portfolio in the direction of smaller loans.

First of all, the bill caps the total size of any guaranteed loan at $2 million. So a lender cannot issue a 7(a) loan or make a 7(a) loan for more than $2 million. There has been no statutory cap on loan size.

The bill allows lenders to retain a somewhat greater percentage of fees that are paid when they make smaller loans, and the bill increases guarantee rates for smaller loans. So there is no question that this bill will continue prudently pushing the portfolio in the direction of smaller loans.

The sole dispute is over one small provision in this bill which allows the total amount of the guaranteed loan to go up from $750,000 to $1 million. In other words, the portion that the Government guarantees of any loan is now at $750,000. If this bill passes and the President signs it, it will be $1 million.

The reason we do that, Mr. Speaker, is that amount has not been adjusted for inflation for 11 years. It was made $750,000, believe it or not; we have made what changed it at all. We have made a modest adjustment that does not even keep pace with inflation. It is the only part of this bill that is in issue.

To be perfectly frank, I simply do not see why it is that big a deal. We felt it was important to do it because, without some aspect of this portfolio being somewhat larger loans, it tends to undermine the stability and the financial prudence of the portfolio as a whole.

We want to push it in the direction of the smaller loans as far and too fast, we yank out of the portfolio the somewhat larger loans which really support the whole 7(a) portfolio. And we do not want to do that. That could result in a lot more defaults and a lot more money that we have to find out of the general revenue in order to support this program.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I respect the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO). He and I have worked together on our committee together. I respect the sincerity of his view here.

I would say it is a small part of this bill. I am happy to work with the gentleman as we go through the process over in the Senate and then in conference. But I hope we can have the confidence of the House in supporting this bill.

It came out of the committee by an overwhelming majority. It may be housekeeping to most of the House. It is important to these programs. We try to do a responsible, bipartisan job on the Committee on Small Business. The ranking member and I are in full agreement, as was the overwhelming majority of the committee.

Again, I ask the House for its support. We will continue working on this issue as we move through the process.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the Chair the amount of time that I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO) has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to concur with the statements of the chairman of the Committee on Small Business, who has done a tremendous effort in turning the Committee on Small Business into a committee that has been very responsive, listening to the needs and the desires of the people across this Nation.

I chair the Subcommittee on Small Business, Tax, and Trade. I have seen the chairman conduct other hearings, and I know that he has the small business community intimately well.

I would only suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Small Business, my friend the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. TALENT) this fact: With the increase of the loan amounts from $750,000 to $1 million, financially there is less money in the overall pot. Because there has been no increase in the authorization.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would just like to echo the comments made by the gentleman from Missouri. You have to continue updating a program. What works in the 1980s does not necessarily work in the 1990s. The SBA loan program to go a decade without updating it. If we are going to make SBA a cutting edge financial institution of the 21st century, we must continue to improve these programs. It just makes sense.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TALENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Let me repeat again both my friendship and my respect for the passion and the commitment of the gentleman from Illinois to small business. He and I have talked over this issue. We had a full debate over it in committee. I do want to continue working with him as this bill goes through the process. I do not think that the increase of the amount that Members of the House who may not, and I certainly could not blame them if they were not familiar with the ins and outs of all these programs, but I hope...
Mr. TALENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on H.R. 2615.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion offers by the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. TALENT) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2615.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. TALENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on H.R. 2615.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? There was no objection.

THOMAS S. FOLEY UNITED STATES COURTHOUSE AND WALTER F. HORAN PLAZA

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 211) to designate the Federal building and United States courthouse located at West 920 Riverside Avenue in Spokane, Washington, as the "Thomas S. Foley Federal Building and United States Courthouse", and the plaza at the south entrance of such building and courthouse as the "Walter F. Horan Plaza", as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 211

SEC. 1. DESIGNATION OF COURTHOUSE.

(a) Designation.—The Federal building and United States courthouse located at 920 West Riverside Avenue in Spokane, Washington, shall be known and designated as the "Thomas S. Foley United States Courthouse".

(b) References.—Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, paper, or other record of the United States to the Federal building and United States courthouse referred to in subsection (a) shall be deemed to be a reference to the "Thomas S. Foley United States Courthouse".

SEC. 2. DESIGNATION OF PLAZA.

(a) Designation.—The plaza located at the south entrance of the Federal building and United States courthouse referred to in section 1(a) shall be known and designated as the "Walter F. Horan Plaza".

(b) References.—Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, paper, or other record of the United States to the plaza referred to in subsection (a) shall be deemed to be a reference to the "Walter F. Horan Plaza".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. COBLE) and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. COBLE).

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 211, as amended, introduced by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. NETHERCUTT), honors two former Members of this body, former Speaker Tom Foley and Congressman Walter Horan. The amendment simply corrects the address and properly designates the facility as a United States courthouse, which the building is typically referred to as in Spokane.

This legislation will designate the United States courthouse and courthouse plaza in Spokane, Washington, as the "Thomas S. Foley United States Courthouse and Walter F. Horan Plaza". This designation is a most deserving one.

Ambassador Foley served in the Congress assembled, representing the United States of America in Congress assembled.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that:

SECTION 1. DESIGNATION OF COURTHOUSE.

(a) Designation.—The Federal building and United States courthouse located at West 920 Riverside Avenue in Spokane, Washington, shall be known and designated as the "Thomas S. Foley United States Courthouse".

(b) References.—Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, paper, or other record of the United States to the Federal building and United States courthouse referred to in subsection (a) shall be deemed to be a reference to the "Thomas S. Foley United States Courthouse".

SEC. 2. DESIGNATION OF PLAZA.

(a) Designation.—The plaza located at the south entrance of the Federal building and United States courthouse referred to in section 1(a) shall be known and designated as the "Walter F. Horan Plaza".

The plaza entrance to the courthouse will be designated as the "Walter F. Horan Plaza". This will be a reminder to all that are entering the courthouse through the main entrance of the many accomplishments by former Congressman Horan for his eastern Washington district.

If there ever was an example of the American dream, it is Walter Horan. He was born in a log cabin on the banks of the Wenatchee River in 1898. After attending the Wenatchee public schools, he was graduated from Washington State College in 1925. Prior to that, he entered World War I, serving 2 years in the United States Navy as a gunner's mate third class. Upon graduation, he returned to his apple farm in Wenatchee, Washington where he engaged in fruit growing, packing, storing and shipping until he was elected to the 78th Congress in 1942. He went on to serve in the next 10 succeeding Congresses and rose to third in seniority on the Committee on Appropriations. He always gave close attention to agriculture and the conservation community. Former Congressman Horan passed away in 1966. Naming the Plaza on his behalf is a fitting designation.

This is a fitting tribute, Mr. Speaker, to two former Members of this body. I support the bill and urge my colleagues to join in support.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. Also, I want to thank the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. COBLE) for introducing this bill and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER) for bringing this bill to the floor in such a timely manner.

I rise in strong support of H.R. 211, a bill to designate the Federal building and courthouse located at 920 West Riverside Avenue in Spokane, Washington as the Thomas S. Foley United States Courthouse, and the plaza located at the south entrance as the Walter F. Horan Plaza.
Mr. Speaker, as a new Member from Washington State, I know that we come here with big shoes to fill. We had Scopit Jack and Warren Magnuson, and we had Speaker of the House Tom Foley. Tom Foley had an outstanding and distinguished public career and it is a career that continues to this day. As we all know, for 30 years he ably represented the Fifth Congressional District in Washington. During that time he served as the majority leader, the majority whip, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture and was, of course, the 49th Speaker of the House. Mr. Foley continues to serve today as our country’s Ambassador to Japan.

During his time in Congress, Tom Foley’s top legislative priorities included increasing the minimum wage, revising clean air standards and parental leave and child care measures.

Tom was a Washington native. He was born in Spokan in 1929. He attended local school, graduated from Gonzaga and went on to attend the University of Washington in Seattle. He later graduated from the University of Washington Law School in 1957.

Tom Foley’s legacy is lasting and his reputation for fairness, for dignity and for openness is a model for all Members to follow. He is well respected, affable and a conciliatory person. Speaker Foley served to help make Congress the best forum for democracy in the entire world. It is with great pride that I support this bill.

Mr. Speaker, as was mentioned, H.R. 211 also honors Walt F. Horan by designating the plaza at the south entrance to the building as the Walter F. Horan Plaza.

As was mentioned earlier, Mr. Horan served his country in the House of Representatives for 22 years, from 1943 to 1965. He was proud of the fact, it was mentioned, that he was born in a log cabin on the banks of the Wenatchee River, truly a pioneer in our State and the State of Washington.

The 1645 member of the Washington State family. His mother and father were farmers, and he attended local public schools. After graduating high school, he served in World War I as a gunner’s mate third class. In 1925 he graduated from Washington State College in Pullman.

Walter Horan served with dignity and diligence for over 20 years. It is fitting to honor him as a colleague of knowing him as the distinguished Speaker of this House, of knowing him as the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, and I felt I had to be here today to express my enormous admiration for this distinguished American.

He as a Speaker, a Democratic Speaker, but a Speaker of the Whole House, was always very, very fair. This distinguished American treated those of us in the minority, when indeed Republicans in the minority, with fairness, with consideration. In fact, one of my Democratic friends some years ago who was fulfilling them with dignity, with intelligence and in the best tradition of the great speakers of this august body.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly therefore want to very strongly support this legislation today as a tribute particularly to Ambassador Foley, and I want to note that indeed it is a Republican Member of Congress, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. NETHERCUTT) who has been the prime mover of this legislation, and I think that is very fitting because I believe it sends the very clear message that we on this side of the aisle have the same respect and love and affection for Speaker Foley that our good friends on the other side of the aisle certainly have indicated.

So I urge the passage of this legislation, and I trust and hope it will be unanimous.

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I have no more requests for time at this point, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. NETHERCUTT) the author of the bill. Mr. NETHERCUTT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. COBLE) for the time and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER) and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) for their kind remarks. I am proud to be the sponsor of this legislation along with the other 8 members of the Washington State congressional delegation to name the Federal Court House in Spokane, Washington, my hometown, the Thomas S. Foley United States Courthouse and the plaza in front of that courthouse as the Walter F. Horan Plaza.

As the successor to Tom Foley, I came to know him very well in the 1994 elections, and I must say, as difficult as elections can be, the one that occurred in 1994 in my judgment and I think in the judgment of many other people was one that was carried on with great dignity and discussion and debate of the issues and the leadership that was proper for the future for our Fifth Congressional District.

I won that election with mixed emotions frankly. I felt terrible for my predecessor who had served for 30 very long years and dignified years and years filled with great service, and I felt sorry that he ended his service with an election like that which occurred in 1994, but at the same time I was pleased to be able to represent the Fifth Congressional District and go forward in the years ahead, wanting to have good representation for the entire east side of the State of Washington.

So it was bitter sweet in many respects, but my respect for Mr. Foley certainly is not bitter sweet. It is enduring, it is unyielding, it is constant, because I have had him as my representative before I came to public life for 30 years and Mr. Horan for the prior 22 years, virtually my entire adult life until I was elected in 1994. So I have known these two men and watched them represent eastern Washington and the State of Washington’s interests with great dignity, with certainly unquestionable respect for the institution of Congress and respect for the people of eastern Washington.

During law school I happened to serve as a law clerk in the Spokane County Superior Court, and my prime judge for whom I was assigned was William F. Williams, a very close friend of Foley who was later a Supreme Court Justice in our State. But I also served as a law clerk for Thomas S. Foley’s father, Judge Ralph Foley.

So Tom, the former Speaker, comes to this institution with a very distinguished background, a distinguished family. His mother and father were very highly recognized and respected in eastern Washington, and was Thomas S. Foley. He served, as was stated here, for 30 years representing our district as Speaker of the House, as majority leader, as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, a chairmanship that was very high profile, and the State of Washington and the agricultural community that exists there even to this day.

I saw Mr. Foley in Japan earlier this spring, and in characteristic conduct he conducted himself and has conducted himself as a representative of the United States of America in Japan with great respect and dignity, just as he did here in this House for so many years.

I just want the people of eastern Washington, the people of this country, to know that in designating this courthouse in the name sake of Tom Foley and Walt Horan we are paying tribute and respect to their work for all of us.
in eastern Washington and in our State of Washington, our beloved State of Washington. So it was with pleasure that all of the members of our delegation signed onto this bill that I introduced, most notably Democrats and Republicans alike who had worked with Mr. Foley and Mr. Horan in some respects and have enormous respect for those two men.

So I thank the House for considering this bill, I urge that it be adopted unanimously and that the respect and dignity that is due Mr. Horan and Mr. Foley will continue under the name sake of the Thomas S. Foley United States Courthouse and the Walt F. Horan Plaza.

Mr. COBLE. I have no further requests for time, Mr. Speaker, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may revise and extend their remarks and insert extraneous material into the RECORD on the motion regarding the deterrence of copyright infringement so that there will be an effective deterrent to this conduct.

Another significant aspect of H.R. 1761 addresses a problem the subcommittee learned about during an oversight hearing on the implementation of the IPP Act and enforcement against Internet piracy. The House Judiciary Subcommittee on Courts and Intellectual Property received testimony about the lack of prosecutions being brought under the act by the Department of Justice and the Sentencing Commission staff failure to address Congress’ desire to impose strict penalties for violations of the act that will deter infringement in their recent report. H.R. 1761 clarifies Congress’ intent that the United States Sentencing Commission ensure that the sentencing guideline for the intellectual property offenses provide for consideration of the retail price of the legitimate infringed-upon item and the quantity of infringing items in order to make the guidelines sufficiently stringent to deter such crime. This language gives the Sentencing Commission the discretion to adopt an aggravating adjustment where it may be appropriate in cases of pre-released copyright piracy in which no corresponding legitimate copyrighted item yet exists, but the economic harm could be devastating. These changes will enable the Department of Justice to better prosecute crimes against intellectual property.

It is vital that the United States recognizes intellectual property rights and provides strong protection and enforcement against violations of those rights. By doing that the United States will protect its valuable intellectual property and encourage other countries to adopt and enforce strong copyright protection laws.

I would like to commend the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. ROGAN) for his leadership in introducing this bill and his hard work in bringing it to this point. H.R. 1761 is an important piece of legislation, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BERNAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1761, the Copyright Damages Improvement Act of 1999. Consistent with the responsibility conferred on us by article 1, section 8, of the Constitution, we are required from time to time to assess the efficacy of our intellectual property laws in protecting the works of authors and inventors. Toward that end earlier this year the Subcommittee on Courts and Intellectual Property resolved to address several concerns which had been brought to our attention regarding the deterrence of copyright infringement and penalties for such infringement in those instances when it does unfortunately occur.

The bill originally reported out by the Committee on the Judiciary was broader in scope than the bill before us today, and I supported that bill in its previous form, but we resolved to bring before this body a bill reflecting a consensus, and that is what we have done. I know of no opposition to the bill under consideration today.

The bill has two key features. First, the bill provides an inflation adjustment for copyright statutory damages. It has been well over a decade since we last adjusted statutory damages for inflation. Our purpose must be to provide meaningful disincentives for infringement, and to accomplish this the cost of infringement must substantially exceed the cost of compliance so that those who use or distribute intellectual property have an incentive to comply with the law. The inflation adjustments provided in H.R. 1761 accomplish that objective.

Secondly, at a hearing held this past May, the Subcommittee on Courts and Intellectual Property heard evidence that the current sentencing guidelines for intellectual property crimes is not sufficiently stringent to deter such crimes.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield my time.

The subcommittee’s conclusion ratified by the committee was that the current guideline with its reliance on the value of the infringing item should be replaced with a guideline based on the retail price of the infringed item. At the same time, as a result of quite productive discussions with the staff of the sentencing commission, we acknowledged the commission’s ability to make necessary adjustments, aggravating or mitigating, as appropriate.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the chairman of the subcommittee for bringing this bill to the floor and for his consistent work in bringing bills to strengthen our intellectual property laws to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend from California, and I was about to do the same to him. We have worked very closely on this. This has taken a good amount of time, both on the part of gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) and me as well as other members of the subcommittee and staff. All have done a good job. This is an important piece of legislation.

Mr. ROGAN. Mr. Speaker, copyright violations, particularly those via the Internet, are a growing problem. H.R. 1761 the Copyright Damages Improvement Act of 1999 ensures that changes in federal law keep up with changes in technology. This bill provides an effective deterrent against copyright infringers and Internet privacy. I am pleased to join the chairman of the Courts and Intellectual Property Subcommittee, Mr. COBLE, and the gentleman from Virginia Mr. GOODLATTIE, along with the ranking member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from California Mr. Berman, to make these significant improvements to the Copyright Act and the No Electronic Theft Act. H.R. 1761 will increase the amount of statutory damages available for copyright infringement. Specifically, this bill, as amended, increases existing penalties for infringement by 50%. Further, the bill clarifies Congress’ intent that the United States Sentencing Commission consider the retail price of a legitimate infringed-upon work and the quantity of the infringed-upon works when determining sentencing guidelines for intellectual property offenses.

During the subcommittee’s hearing on the “Implementation of the NET Act and Enforcement Against Internet Piracy,” the concern was raised about the lack of prosecutions being brought by the Justice Department and the Sentencing Commission’s failure to address Congress’ desire to impose strict penalties for violators. The committee heard how the price that pirated material is sold for on the black market is often the value used for prosecution, not the actual value of the copyrighted item. This is wrong. My bill clarifies that the Sentencing Commission shall use the retail price and quantity of the infringed-upon goods as bases for determining their value.

Finally, I want to recognize and thank all of the interested parties who came together to work out the compromise language that is contained in the manager’s amendment today. These needed changes will give added protections to copyright owners by strengthening the deterrents for intellectual property theft, and enable the Department of Justice to better prosecute crimes against copyright owners.

Mr. Speaker, it is crucial that our country remain the leader in the protection and enforcement of intellectual property rights. H.R. 1761 increases the copyright infringement, and serves as a strict deterrent for those who try to skirt the law. I urge my colleagues to support the passage of this bill in its amended form.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLER of Florida). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. COBLE) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1761, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker’s table the Senate bill (S. 1257) to amend statutory damages provisions of title 17, United States Code, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so simply to yield to my friend from North Carolina to indicate his intentions with respect to bringing up the Senate bill at this time.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this request is to amend the companion Senate bill and send it back to the Senate with the amendment that the House just passed.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 1257

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

This Act may be cited as the “Digital Theft Deterrence and Copyright Damages Improvement Act of 1999.”

SECOND TITLE

STATUTORY DAMAGES ENHANCEMENT.

Section 504(c) of title 17, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)—

(A) by inserting “$300” and inserting “$750”;

and

(B) by striking “$20,000” and inserting “$30,000”; and

(2) in paragraph (2)—

(A) by inserting “(A)” after “(2)”;

(B) by striking “$100,000” and inserting “$150,000”; and

(c) by inserting after the second sentence the following:

“(B) In a case where the copyright owner demonstrates that the infringement was part of a repeated pattern or practice of willful infringement, the court may increase the award of statutory damages to a sum of not more than $250,000 per work.”;

and

(d) by striking “The court shall remit statutory damages” and inserting the following:

(C) The court shall remit statutory damages.”

Passed the Senate July 1, 1999.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. COBLE

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COBLE moves to strike all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, S. 1257, and to insert in lieu thereof the text of H.R. 1761 as it passed the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the Senate bill was amended so as to read: “to amend provisions of title 17, United States Code, relating to penalties, and for other purposes.”.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.
A similar House bill (H.R. 1761) was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 1761, as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? There was no objection.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until approximately 5:15 p.m.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess until approximately 5:15 p.m.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 2488, FINANCIAL FREEDOM ACT OF 1999

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1 of rule XXII and by the direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2488) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to sections 105 and 211 of the concurrent resolution for reconciliation pursuant to sections 105 and 211 of the concurrent resolution for reconciliation, to instruct the conferees on the budget for fiscal year 2000, with respect to the House amendments to the Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment, and disagree with the Senate amendment, with respect to sections 303 and 330 of the concurrent resolution for reconciliation, to insist on limiting the net 10-year tax reduction provided in the conference report to not more than 25 percent of the currently projected non-Social Security tax surpluses (or if greater, the smallest tax reduction permitted within the scope of the conference).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARCHER) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, few people in the country and a lot of people in the House of Representatives are unaware as to what this procedure is in terms of going to conference. Civil War I would dictate that the House and Senate conferees are trying to come out in a conference in working out their differences so that we can send a tax cut bill to the President of the United States for his consideration so that it would become law.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, nobody in the House or the Senate, no Democrats or Republicans, truly believe that anybody believes the President is going to sign such a bill.

This thing rushed through the Committee on Ways and Means in 1 day. And why? Because it was already prepackaged. We already had an offer from the majority that we had to refuse. A similar thing happened in the Senate.

So this evening we meet for the first time. Do we really meet to work out our differences in order to have a tax cut bill? No. We meet to see how Republicans in the House and Republicans in the Senate can fashion a bill to such an extent that they know that the President of the United States will have to veto it. And so instead of talking as legislators, instead of talking as tax writers, we are having a political meeting to determine the campaign for the year 2000.

Chairman Greenspan had indicated that he thought it would be best for the economy for us just to take a deep breath, to do nothing. To just allow hundreds of billions of dollars to pay down our national debt, to give a tax cut for everybody by reducing the interest for everybody. And then we say that after we take a look at this objective suggestion by Chairman Greenspan, we should do what every responsible citizen would want us to do, and that is to find out how much money do we owe? How much money do we have? And why not pay off some of this debt before we move forward?

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE 18931

The Republicans would suggest, oh, my God, we have to return this money back to the taxpayers because if we do not, we will spend it. Well, I know it is a very small majority that they have, but they still are the majority. They still are the leaders. And unless we have an implosion, unless we have an implosion, it seems as though they will have the majority at least until the year 2000. So what are they afraid of if they are the ones that are in control of the spending?

So we just hope that the motion to instruct the conferees is save Social Security, save Medicare, and let the conference say we do not need a political statement, but we are going to come back together, send this bill quickly to the President to get the veto that you are begging for, and then we will not have to debate throughout August what the tax bill would have been, but we can work together not as Democrats, not as Republicans, but Members of the House and Senate to say to America we fixed the Social Security system, we fixed the Medicare system, we fixed the prescription drugs that are so necessary for our senior citizens. Now we will review and see what in the responsible way we can do to reduce the tax burdens on all of America and not just the richest among us.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I rise in opposition to the motion to instruct conferees.

Mr. Speaker, this motion it is almost identical to the motion to rec 20 item that was offered by the minority when the tax bill was debated on the floor of the House and perhaps we might simplify things by simply stipulating to the debate that occurred on that motion, and then we could just go to a vote.

But I am not sure that I am quite as eloquent as the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. WATTS); but I would say, Mr. Speaker, that the American people are caught in a tax trap. The longer they work, the harder they work, the more they pay. And that is wrong.

Now the American people are simply paying too much. Perhaps it was unexpected, but they are paying too much. And the strongest proof of this is that the IRS is now accumulating more and will accumulate more cash in the future.

Americans are sending too much money to Washington and there is actually more money than is projected for the government's needs in which to operate.

Mr. Speaker, the problem is not that Washington does not have enough money. The problem is that Washington does not spend money efficiently, prudently, productively. We should begin to cut out the waste instead of saying we have got to have more money and more money and more money.

I know there are those who believe that Washington knows best how to spend the people's money and they should not be given the opportunity to do it because maybe they might make a mistake; but it is their money, not ours and I am proud that the House and Senate on a bipartisan basis think this is unfair and have passed good plans to let people keep more of their money. Yes, the plans are different, but they are both based on the principle that all Americans deserve to keep more of what they have earned. After all, it is their money. If we keep it in Washington, politicians will most surely spend it.

That has been the way it has been throughout history. And over the last hundred years right here in Washington, over 70 percent of all the surpluses that have ever been generated into the Federal Government have been spent by politicians. Unfortunately, the motion before us is designed to keep hundreds of billions of dollars in excess taxpayer money in Washington to be spent. All along, we warned that there would be enormous pressure and great temptation to spend this budget surplus on more government programs, and it looks like we were right. But, Mr. Speaker, we do not need full-time government and part-time families. We need part-time government and full-time families.

This motion guts broad-based tax relief for the taxpayers who created the budget surplus in the first place. This motion threatens marriage penalty relief. This motion would make it tougher for people who care for elderly relatives at home by blocking health and long-term care insurance incentives. This motion would stand in the way of pension modernization that will help more men and women enjoy retirement security.

This motion would take away education incentives to make college more affordable and to give parents the ability to save for their children's education and that is what is fair.

Mr. Speaker, we can save Social Security, strengthen Medicare, and provide for prescription drug benefit for needy seniors, pay down the debt and provide tax relief for the American people. Mr. Speaker, 25 cents out of every dollar of surplus is what we are talking about in this tax relief bill. There is plenty to do all of these other things.

I hearken back again when I say deja vu to 1995, 1996, and the beginning of 1997 when people warned that it was this motion to instruct said, oh, we cannot give tax relief until after we have balanced the budget. First things first.

Mr. Speaker, I urge opposition to this motion to instruct conferees.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI).

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a couple observations as the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Social Security who has studied the issue of Social Security now for 21/2 years, I have to say that there was a lot of misleading information passed on by the House of Representatives last week when we discussed this bill.

There has been a lot of talk about a lockbox and $3 trillion. The fact that $2 trillion will be put in a lockbox, that in fact is Social Security money. That is payroll tax money coming in over the next decade, 15 years, the $2 trillion. The problem is that will not preserve Social Security.

The gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. WATTS) said last week that that will not save Social Security. That will not save Social Security. By putting the $2 trillion in a lockbox, all that does is make sure that Social Security problem does not get any worse, that it does not get any worse. That is what the issue is. But it will not solve that problem at all.

In fact, what will be needed, if we do not want to cut benefits, is general fund money going into the Social Security system. The bill of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. Archer) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. Shaw) puts general fund money into the Social Security system.

Now, we have a $1 trillion dollars surplus that is projected, it is only projected over the next decade in the on-budget, non-Social Security surplus. If in fact this tax cut goes through and becomes law, and we all agree it probably will not, but assuming my colleagues vote for this tax bill, that essentially means that they are going to favor cuts in benefits over the Social Security system.

I have to say the purpose of this vote is to put Members on record so that the American public in the year 2000 will find out who wants to protect Social Security and maintain the level of benefits we have now or who wants to cut benefits. Because this vote, if my colleagues vote against this motion to reconsider, they are saying, in the year 2001, when we try to deal with Social Security, that they are going to cut benefits, or an alternative, they may want to raise payroll taxes, although I do not believe that is true, so they are going to be cutting benefits.

So this vote against the motion to reconsider will be to cut benefits and Social Security. What we are talking about here is a reduction in benefits of 25 percent of the Social Security benefits.

So I urge a "yes" vote on the motion of the gentleman from New York (Mr. Rangel).

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute simply to respond to the gentleman from California (Mr. Matsui), and he is my friend.

This is the same sort of statement that we heard when we passed the last tax relief bill; one cannot balance the budget and pass tax relief. One will be cutting benefits. One will be doing all these awful things. But we did it.

I say, Mr. Speaker, today we can save Social Security, we can save Medicare, we can give a prescription drug benefit, and we can pay down the debt, and we can give a small amount in tax relief to the people who earned it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the respected gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, as Ronald Reagan once said "Here we go again." Whenever Republicans want to lower the tax burden on families, my friends on the other side of the aisle always say it is going to somehow hurt people when they lower their taxes.

Now, where I come from, people tell me their tax burden is too high. Our tax burden today is 21 percent of our economy which is consumed by the Federal Government.

Since 1993, the tax burden has continued to go up. In fact, in 1993, the tax burden was less than 18 percent. Today it is 21 percent of our gross domestic product going to the Federal Government. That tax burden is too high.

When it comes to Medicare and Social Security, thanks to this Republican Congress, we have a balanced budget, the first balanced budget in 28 years. It is now projected to provide a $1 trillion surplus over the next 10 years.

Under our budget, of course we do something that Congresses of the past and Presidents of the past for the last 30 years have refused to do; and that is, we set aside 100 percent of Social Security retirement security to save Medicare and Social Security.

Now these 3 dollar bills I have, each dollar bill represents $1 trillion. Under
Mr. Speaker, lowering taxes in a time of prosperity is a good idea. In fact, let me quote a Democrat on the other side of the aisle, Bob Kerrey. He says, "To suggest we cannot afford to cut income taxes when we are running a $3 trillion surplus is ludicrous."

Cutting taxes deserves bipartisan support.

Mr. Rangel. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 seconds to thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Weller) making this so personal in sharing the happiness of Shelly and Shad Callahan, and I would like to wish them well. But if they are really looking for a simplification from what is going on in the House and Senate conference, they are in for a nightmare.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. Cardin).

Mr. Cardin. Mr. Speaker, first, let me correct the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Weller) in that we do not have a balanced budget. We do not have a balanced budget today unless they count the surplus for Social Security generated income, and none of us want to do that.

They talk about $3 trillion over the next 10 years. We do not have that. If they look at what is the on-budget surplus that we all acknowledge is money that could be used, we have projected $1 trillion surplus over the next 10 years; and we have not seen dime one of it yet. Yet, the Republicans want to spend the surplus before we get the surplus. That is not responsible.

We are talking about what should the priorities Social Security cuts were going to help our economy, economics and we were told that tax cuts were going to help our economy, not increase interest rates if they have any credit responsibility under any charge accounts or financing a car. They are going to end up paying back more that is in the Republican tax bill.

That couple that was so nice that they are trying to help, they are going lose all that money by increased interest rate if they save any credit responsibility under any charge accounts or financing a car. They are going to end up paying back more that is in the Republican tax bill.

This is an irresponsible and reckless proposal. That is why our motion to instruct is an attempt to try to bring some sanity to what left this House as far as the tax relief is concerned.

Fortunately, this bill will not become law. That is the good news. The President is going to veto it if it passes anywhere near its current form. We do not believe that we should go back to the 1980s when we tried trickle-down economics and we were told that tax cuts were going to help our economy, and it did grow our debt.

Now, I understand the Republicans did not support the 1993 economic program that brought about our prosperity. We understand that. But do not turn the clock backwards and try to do that again.

We do have projected surpluses in the future. Let us use that to pay down our debt so that we can continue the economic prosperity that we have. Let us meet our obligations under Social Security and Medicare. Let us invest in the priorities that are important, including responsible tax legislation.

This bill is irresponsible. The motion to instruct corrects it. I urge my colleagues to support the motion.

Mr. Archer. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. Cunningham).

Mr. Cunningham. Mr. Speaker, I want my colleagues to look up in the web page www.dsausa.org. It stands for the Democratic Socialists of America, the progressive tax, income tax.

In there, the Progressive Caucus, 58 Members of the Democratic party belong to that. What do they want, Mr. Speaker? This is their own 12-point agenda, not mine, but their 12-point agenda. They want government control of health care. They tried to get it when they had the White House, the House, and the Senate. They wanted government socialized health care. It failed miserably.

They want government control of education and environmental laws. They even want government control of private property. They want union over small business. They want the highest possible socialized spending, and they want the highest possible progressive tax that they can get. The highest progressive tax, income tax.

That is what the Democratic Party is controlled by, their leadership, the Democratic Socialists of America, the Progressive Caucus. Guess what, one of the agendas is also to cut defense by 50 percent to pay for that spending.

We fought to save Medicare, and the Democrats fought against it, dead fought against it. $100 million of union...
Now, we have a balanced budget, and we are going to have tax relief, not for the rich, as the Karl Marx-Engels class warfare Democrats talk about, but we are going to have a tax break for working Americans.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 seconds just to say that Herbert Hoover is still alive and Herbert Hoover is well. The same accusations are going to have a tax break for warfare Democrats talk about, but we are going to have tax relief, not for the middle class. They increased the tax on Social Security.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN).

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to get back to the subject at hand. When the Republican leadership was trying to find the votes for the bill, the majority leader said this: “You always know how many horses are in the herd, it is just a question of how long it takes to get them into the barn.” Well, I hope that some of the horses that went into the barn will take a second look and get out of this barn before we get a roaring deficit once again that would burn it down.

The proponents of this bill like to talk about a $792 billion cost, but look at the second 10 years. It would be $3 trillion, $3 trillion. And the timing could not be worse, as this chart shows, because at the time there would be an explosion, an explosion, in terms of revenue loss that same second 10-year period, the Social Security surplus begins to fall. During the same period, Medicare runs out of money, 2015. And during that same period, non-Social Security budget surpluses begin to fall. Look, there could not be anything worse in timing. But to make it even worse, the projected surpluses do not even include recognition that there may be emergency supplemental.

Listen, I say to the Republicans, to a fellow Republican, Alan Greenspan, who serves in a nonpartisan position at the moment. Here is what he has said about the Republican bill. “Hold off for a while,” “the timing is not right for your bill,” “allow the surpluses to run for a while.”

The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means refers to the 1997 tax bill, $275 over 10 years. This is a ridiculous, a reckless, and an irresponsible proposal. It would return our country to the days of borrow and spend.

I heard the chairman of our committee say we can do it all; it is easy. We can do everything. Do not worry, be happy. Well, if this law ever were enacted, this country would be very sad. The Republican Party is becoming the spendthrift party. The spendthrift party.

This is reckless, it is irresponsible, let us vote for the motion to instruct.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I would say to the gentleman from Michigan, I did not say it was easy. I did not say it would be easy to balance the budget and give tax relief, but we did it. And the President himself speaks over and over again about the accomplishment of a tax bill that we pushed, and a balanced budget that we pushed. He claims that.

I did not say it would be easy. It will not be easy. What I did say is it is not that Washington does not have enough money to spend, but if we get tough and we eliminate the waste and we become prudent and productive in the utilization of the taxpayers’ dollars, we do not have to keep adding bushels and bushels of money by taxing the American people more and more and more. They earned it; they produced it; they enjoyed a windfall. Maybe there could have been a little less tax on the windfall to Washington to let the people keep more of their money.

As far as Alan Greenspan is concerned, a lot of what he said has been taken out of context and it needs to be set straight. He said, “If you can save the money, save it.” If.

And he knows full well what the halls of history teach this country and other countries that are democracies, and that is that politicians will spend the surplus. Let me repeat again that in the last 100 years every surplus generated by the Federal Government, 70 percent has been spent by the politicians. That is a history of surpluses that are left to “ride” unencumbered.

What does the President do? In his budget, and I now cite from the CBO documents, “The President’s proposals would spend most of the projected on-budget surpluses.” Would spend them. And the debt would increase by a greater amount than under the budget that we Republicans passed this year and is now the congressional budget for the United States of America.

Will it be easy? No, it will not be easy. We need to assure the taxpayers that the money that they send here is spent right and not wastefully, instead of merely saying we have to throw more money at it. And there is more than enough money in the Social Security surplus to pay down the Federal debt, to save Social Security, to save Medicare.

The charts that my friend from Michigan used are a little outdated. I am sure he did not prepare them recently, in the last 24 hours. The Senate already, by their rules, prohibits any additional revenue loss outside of the 10-year window. They are shut off totally. Not $1 is permitted to be used for tax relief outside of the 10-year window.

Besides that, there are no official projections for the years after 10 years, so one can only guess. There are not official government documents, but under the Senate provisions that must be complied with, there is not $1 of revenue loss outside of the 10-year window. So the gentleman needs to find a new chart for his next speech.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY).

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the Democratic motion to instruct conferences on the Republican tax bill.

America needs a fiscally responsible tax bill, not an excessive and reckless $800 billion tax cut, almost a trillion dollar tax cut. A tax bill of this magnitude stands in the way of strengthening Medicare and Social Security and threatens the progress we have made in eliminating the deficit and reducing the national debt, and it does nothing, it absolutely nothing, to help our struggling middle class.

My constituents have demanded this Congress strengthen and protect Social Security and Medicare as well as to continue to pay off the national debt, rather than give tax breaks to the top 1 percent of Americans. I am not arguing there are no Americans who need tax relief, but let me just add that no one on this side of the aisle has said no one in this country needs some tax relief, we are saying just do not give it to the most richest people on this planet. Many middle income families would greatly benefit from affordable tax cuts, however, these families are not the ones assisted by the Republican tax bill.

Mr. Speaker, please listen to the American people. And if my colleagues will not listen to them, they should listen to the chairman of the Federal Reserve, Mr. Greenspan, who has vocally denounced a massive tax cut initiative such as the ones passed by the House and the Senate as potentially harmful to our Nation.

This bill does not strengthen Social Security and Medicare and it does not pay for our schools, building new schools and modernizing their old, outdated, and ofttimes unsafe existing structures.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to envision one classroom in my district. A single-room classroom with 50 kindergarten students in it, two teachers, and no funds under this tax proposal to improve the situation in the near future.
Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this motion to instruct. Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, because again Mr. Greenspan’s comments are taken out of context. He said that as between tax relief and spending, he would far prefer tax relief. In fact, he said, “It is not even a close call.” The Congressional Budget Office has just certified that the President proposes to spend almost all of the projected on-budget surplus. Mr. Greenspan would most certainly say that tax relief is better than spending from the surplus. In fact, he said it and he will continue to say it. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE).

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I also would like to speak to the last gentleman who spoke and say that I also heard Mr. Greenspan in the Committee on Banking and Financial Services. I heard what he said, and what he said was, “My first preference is to pay down debt.” My first preference is to pay down debt. Now, maybe the majority knows something Alan Greenspan does not, but I do not think so. I do not think so.

We have a $5.6 trillion debt in this country. We have an opportunity for the first time in a generation to do the right thing and put our financial house in order. The question is whether we will step up to the plate and do that or we will take the money and run and hand the debt to our children and grandchildren.

It is simply not right. It is unconscionable and we should not do it. The fiscally prudent and the financially sound thing to do is to use 50 percent to pay down the debt, 25 percent for tax relief, and 25 percent for Social Security and Medicare.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time is remaining on each side?

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN), a respected member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I would like to say that he deserves a lot of credit for getting this bill through the House and for having spent this weekend working with the Senate to come up with a compromise package that will, in the end, be able to give taxpayers the relief that they so well deserve.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to the motion to instruct. I was watching in my office and thought I should come over and talk about the fact that the Financial Freedom Act that the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARCHER) and others have put together, so many of us have had a part in this, is, in fact, not fiscally responsible. It is simply taking what is $3 trillion in projected surpluses over the next 10 years and allowing the taxpayers to keep a little more of their hard-earned money, roughly one-third of that amount, rather than spending it here in Washington on new programs.

It comes down to a philosophical difference, really. The philosophical difference is that Republicans believe people should be able to keep more of their hard-earned money, and the other side believes that it ought to be spent.

Now, we have talked about Alan Greenspan here a lot today. I heard Alan Greenspan testify before the Committee on Ways and Means, and I questioned him. He was very straightforward. He said if it is going to be spent or it is going to be spent back in terms of tax relief, he would far prefer tax relief. In fact, he said it is not even a close call.

Now, Alan Greenspan may believe if it were to stay here in Washington that it would be used to reduce the surplus. I find that hard to believe when I look at the President’s own budget proposal, which in fact spends the money. In fact, in this tax bill there is more debt relief than there is in the President’s proposal, based on what the Congressional Budget Office, the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office, just told us last week.

Second, I believe that if we look simply at the recovery of the last 40 years, we can watch it every time there is indeed a surplus in this town. Congress turns around and spends it, expanding Federal programs already in place and creating new programs.

So what we are saying is very simple, which is one dollar out of the three ought to go back.

Second, I want to make the point that this tax bill contains a number of wonderful provisions for the taxpayer in terms of relief from excessive complicity of the Tax Code and also in various areas like the marriage penalty, and one I really want to focus on is retirement security.

In this bill our provisions are the most fundamental changes in retirement security in well over a generation that allow every American to have the ability to save more money for themselves, for retirement. It lets everybody save more on their 401(k) account. It allows everybody coming back into the workforce at age 50 or above, particularly helpful to women who have stayed at home to raise kids, to put more into their defined contribution plans, 401(k)s, 457s, 403(b)s, and 403(b) surpluses.

It expands all the defined benefit plans. These are plans that are, unfortunately, dying on the vine out there. There are fewer and fewer of them preferred. We make those plans. We enable people to save more. We enable people to get more in terms of a benefit. We enable people who are in multi-employer plans, section 415, to be able to get more into their own retirement, taking away some limits that do not make any sense. It will help in the end every single American.

What I love about this is that 77 percent of pension participants are precisely the people we are trying to help the most who make under $55,000 a year. It is in this bill, and it is precisely what this Congress ought to be doing, in the context of tax relief, simplifying the Tax Code, increasing the savings rate in this country, and finally providing retirement security for millions of Americans.

Sixty to 70 million Americans do not have any kind of pension at all now. Millions of those Americans will be able to get immediate retirement security from the legislation that is contained within this tax bill.

Again, I commend the chairman. I hope we can move on from this motion to instruct, get this legislation to get through between the House and the Senate, and get it to the President where, hopefully, he will change his mind and sign it for the American taxpayer.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER).

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, the Republican tax message is one that we cannot trust Congress to act responsibly with the surplus. They say, get the money out of town before it even arrives here yet. Is it not a little bit ironic to think their theme is one cannot trust the Congress to manage money wisely, when they in fact are in the majority? Do my colleagues not think that we could be disciplined enough just to run one true budget surplus before we spend what we do not even have yet?

If a business had borrowed money from a bank to operate for 25 years straight and for the first time in 25 years showed a small profit, would we not think we would try to pay down that huge debt?

Two weeks ago this House had a historic opportunity that every businessman and woman understands. That is, when faced with a choice of paying down the debt or spending the surplus, we should pay down the debt. We had a motion on the floor that would dedicate 50 percent of the on-budget surplus to paying down the debt, 25 percent to tax cuts, 25 percent to priority spending needs such as Medicare and Social Security.
Today we are trying again.

Where have all the fiscal conservatives gone in the Republican Party? Fiscal conservatives do not spend money that we do not even have yet. Fiscal conservatives do not ignore the advice of Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan. Fiscal conservatives do not gamble with our economic security, our health security, our retirement security. Fiscal conservatives understand that paying down the debt means lower interest rates. Fiscal conservatives do not pass on debts to our children and our grandchildren. And fiscal conservatives do not backload tax cuts into an uncertain future.

The President is right to veto this bill. We can take it up next year. What is the rush anyway? There is only $5 billion in tax cuts next year out of the $792 billion in the bill, and half of that is extenders.

Only six-tenths of 1 percent of the tax relief will be effective next year, fiscal year 2000. The 10 percent across-the-board tax cut, the increase in standard deduction to reduce the marriage penalty, those could not even happen next year. There is little tax relief in the bill next year, so what is the rush?

I say pay down the debt. Do what is right for our children, right for Social Security, right for Medicare, and right for America.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, what is the time proration again, please?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILER of Florida). The gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARCHER) has 10 1/2 minutes remaining. The gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) has 11 minutes remaining. The gentleman from New York has the right to close.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 1/2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to instruct. I hope we will vote for this motion to be responsible and to be prudent.

We have to remember, we are not at a crap table in Washington, D.C. This is not Vegas. And I have seen the trick made with the $3. I hope that all Americans understand that the $3 we keep hearing about, these $3 which represent $3 trillion, when we talk $2 trillion being saved for Social Security, we are not saving it for Social Security; we are just telling all the people who contributed this money, the Social Security contributors, the taxpayers who gave out of their payroll taxes that money, that we are going to reserve it. Because that is what it was supposed to go for. It was never meant to be spent for tax cuts or something else. So when my colleagues talk about the three, take the two off the table. Because no one would want us to play with that money.

When we take out of people’s paycheck every month Social Security taxes, we do not tell them it is for tax cuts or anything else. We tell them it is for their retirement. So as we are left with $1 trillion, this $1 bill. Most of that, under this Republican bill, would go to tax cuts, some $800 billion dollars.

Now, if we take that $800 billion tax cut, two-thirds of all that money, two-thirds of this $1 trillion is going to go to 10 percent of all of America. The 10 percent wealthiest tax filers get two-thirds of this dollar. That means the remaining one-third is left 90 percent of America. That is what we get with this tax bill.

But forget about all that because all this is just projections. We do not know what kind of surplus we will have. The projection is we will have a huge surplus. This is like playing craps on a crap table. They are shooting and hoping and praying that they win.

But what happens if they do not? Let me put it to my colleagues this way: the average tax cut for someone who earns about $50,000, a couple who earns about $50,000 under the Republican tax bill is about $200 per year. And that is when we have got some of these provisions fully phased in. Because, by the way, in the year 2000 no one is going to get $200 in tax relief if they earned about $50,000. They have got to wait until all these provisions are phased in.

But say they are all phased in. They get about $200 in tax cuts. They are not going to have it. Because all they have to do is save that money, use it for debt relief; and if they have a $20,000 debt, interest rates go down by one percent, they will save $200. Do not vote for the tax bill. Vote for this motion to instruct.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I have so many speakers, perhaps the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means might yield some time to us so that we could allow the Members to speak out.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANGEL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to yield adequate time to anyone on the side of my colleague who wants to speak against the motion to instruct.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, that does not sound fair.

Let me say this. Would the chairman want me to have all of the Democrats speak and then close the argument debate?

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, I served in the minority for 24 years, where I was greatly outnumbered. So I feel very comfortable today being by myself here.

Mr. RANGEL. Well, I guess that makes sense. But what I am trying to do is to find out whether or not my colleague intends to be the last speaker before I close the debate. Because I have half a dozen people here and I just want to know, with the time being what it is, I have 8 minutes and my colleague has 11, I do not know how to space it.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, when he gets to his last speaker, then I will be glad to yield the balance of my time.

Mr. RANGEL. Very good. I understand.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT), a member of the committee.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, this Republican tax bill has declared Christmas while it size.

On this Christmas tree that has been erected here in Washington, one will find a package wrapped up for anyone who has a lobbyist and a political action committee.

There is one break after another. They think nothing of having the taxpayers subsidize 80 percent of the cost of a $100 bottle of cabernet or a two-martini lunch. They want the taxpayers to subsidize our defense contractors to go out and start more arms races around the world. And these con-ferees will even be considering a tax subsidy for chicken manure, something that many people have said symbolizes this entire bill.

Instead of simplifying the Tax Code, this bill makes the Tax Code even more complex, and it certainly does not reduce the abusive billions of dollars that occur in corporate tax shelters that all the rest of us end up having to pay. And of course when it comes to fairness, this Christmas tree, while it sizzles, is one that provides a third of its proposed individual tax benefits to the wealthiest one percent of Americans.

It is truly amusing to listen to this debate about Alan Greenspan. After all, what difference does it, really make? Well, the difference I think centers on the fact that he is a President Ronald Reagan appointee, an admitted Republican, who has been given credit by many people, Democrats and Republicans, for the success of our economic expansion.

It has been said he would prefer tax cuts to spending. My guess is he prefers tax cuts to death, as well. But that is not the alternative that he was presented. There is the alternative instead of this massive tax cut bill of reducing the Federal debt. When he was asked last week about this House and Senate Republican approach to taxes, he said... it would be "creating a risk that I don't think we need." We do not need to jeopardize either Social Security or the economic success. And the leading Republican economic expert in this country is the one who said we ought not to do it. If he were here tonight, he would be endorsing the motion of the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), which is only a motion to instruct the fiscally responsible bipartisan alternative; and it ought to be preferred over this tax break and borrowing scheme that is being advanced by our Republican colleagues.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH), a respected member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield my colleague, the esteemed chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means, for yielding me the time.

As I walked onto the floor, Mr. Speaker, I was greeted by the familiar incendiary rhetoric of my friend from Texas. While I appreciate his ability to frame the most extreme terms what is a reasonably prudent bill and action to give the American people more of their hard-earned dollars, give it back to them, I do find it interesting that my friend from Texas supported tax reduction in 1997 when this government was still in a deficit and yet he would use all matters of extreme rhetoric to try and mischaracterize the essence of what we are doing here as the responsible majority in the United States House of Representatives as we prepare to go to conference with our friends from the other body.

I think the motion offered from my good friend from New York (Mr. RANGEL), the ranking member of the committee, shows the length to which the minority will go to separate the American people from their hard-earned money. It is sad but true, and the rhetoric indicates it and so does the motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, as we have documented before, we talk so much about billions and trillions of dollars in this body and on the airwaves across America that sometimes we tend to lose focus about what it is our common sense majority proposes. I think the best way to characterize it, Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, is to ask us to take a look at these $3 bills and let them represent the $3 trillion of surplus that this government will have in the years to come. This is what we propose to do, to lock away almost $2 trillion dollars to save Social Security and Medicare. And that leaves the remaining $1 trillion dollars.

This is the crux of the question, when we get through all the legislative leg- erdemain and the name calling, this question remains at the end of the day. To whom does this money belong? We would say, in the common sense majority, this money belongs to the people who earned it, not to the Washington bureaucrats. Let us take this money and return it to the hardworking taxpayers who have been called on again and again and again to feed the gaping maw which is this insatiable Washington bureaucracy.

And so the gentleman's motion to instruct conferees again asks us, after we have seen the largest tax increase in American history, so extreme a tax increase that over 10 years' time it asked for an additional $900 billion from the pockets of every American, we are told somehow that is responsible, a tax increase so extreme that it was retroactive, to take money from taxpayers beyond the grave in terms of the death tax.

What we simply say is, Americans have had enough of this. We should put the death tax to death, we should reduce the marriage penalty, and I am glad my friend from Texas mentioned the special interests. Because, as we have seen throughout the years, no one accedes to the special interests more than the previous liberal majority.

Mr. Speaker, I stand with my friends on the right. Reject the motion to instruct conferees.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlelady from New York for yielding me this time. I rise to support the motion to instruct.

Mr. Speaker, I wish we had time for a philosophical debate as was just given by my esteemed colleague, but we have business. And I would simply tell him that from the far reaches of my district and the people that I have spoken to, businesses, they say they do not want a tax cut that is so enormous that it damages Social Security and Medicare, they do not want a tax cut that will increase the national debt by $1 trillion over the next 10 years, will increase the national debt by an additional $4.4 trillion over the next 10 years. What they want is a family-friendly, middle-income tax cut and what the Harris County citizens want is the ability to be able to support the Harris County Hospital District with Medicare and Medicaid dollars so that we do not have to cut 165 beds, cut the treatment for AIDS and cancer, and I would imagine the public hospital systems around this Nation are crying now because we are taking $800 billion away from treating sick people, closing beds, denying them service.

What we want is a motion to instruct to protect Social Security, Medicare, and provide more Medicaid dollars. I would hope my colleague from Texas and all of my colleagues, Republicans and Democrats, will come down on the side of middle-income tax cuts and saving Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the one thing that has not been debated tonight yet is what is in the Democrats' motion to instruct.

One thing that is not in it is a 10 percent across-the-board tax relief to all working Americans and families, men and women who made this surplus possible. What is not in it is marriage penalty relief for millions of Americans who are being punished simply because they got married. That is not in their motion to instruct. They do not include education incentives on student loan interest payments, education savings accounts, and making prepaid college tuition plans tax-free. Those education provisions are not in their motion to instruct. Health care provisions, providing a tax deduction for people who buy their own health insurance for long-term care help for people who take care of their elderly in their own homes. Our plan has those provisions. It is nowhere to be found in the Democrats' motion to instruct. The Democrat motion has no strengthening of our pension system to help more American workers, particularly women, get a pension and have greater retirement security.

No, that is not in their motion.

To 100 million American investors, the Democrats say, "Sorry, you’ve got to keep paying taxes on your savings every time you sell an asset." To 68 million Americans who have small savings accounts, the Democrats have no provision in their motion to instruct to help. And the Democrats' tax bill explains because that is what they proposed in their substitute, and this motion does not even lessen the unfair death tax or the punitive alternative minimum tax.

This motion is a turnback to the days of more taxes and more spending and the punitive alternative minimum tax. And the Democrats' tax hike, be- cause that is what they proposed in their substitute, and this motion does not even lessen the unfair death tax or the punitive alternative minimum tax. This motion is a turnback to the days of more taxes and more spending and away from the days of economic growth and opportunity for every American.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN).

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I think the biggest problem with this tax cut is that it is built upon a false assumption, a false assumption that at least the majority party is not willing to admit, and that is, that of the $792 billion tax cut, $720 billion is attractive to economically disadvantaged, low level of Federal spending by 29 percent below today's current spending level. It is not going to happen.

The majority party is not going to cut veterans spending by 28 percent, to cut agriculture by 33 percent, to cut the FBI by 28 percent. Are you going to cut transportation by 23 percent, are going to cut defense by $68 billion? You are not going to do it.
The Committee on Appropriations met last week. It did not do it. It will not do it. And so if you did not do it, $720 billion of the $792 billion tax cuts is not there. It evaporates because it is built upon a false assumption. You know it and we know it and that's why you should support this truthful instruction.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CAMP).

Mr. CAMP. I thank the distinguished gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to point out that we are here talking about this measure only after we have a balanced budget. We have passed legislation to set aside the surplus to save Social Security and Medicare. We have locked that Social Security surplus away in a lockbox, and we are talking about part of what is left.

I think it is important to point out that the average American family, and I repeat, the average American family today pays double in taxes what it paid only in 1985. Today's tax burden is the highest ever in peacetime history.

I think the key question is, should your hard-earned tax dollars stay here in Washington to be spent on new Federal programs? Or should they be returned to you, the taxpayer, who sent them here in the first place? I think the answer is pretty clear that you, the taxpayer, deserves the money.

We have over $1 trillion in non-Social Security surplus, and I think we absolutely must return the taxpayers' money to the people who sent it here. Our bill means that the average Michigan factory worker and his family will save $1,000 in income taxes. Our across-the-board rate reduction will save the seniors who live in my district over $500 in income taxes, and, if that senior has a mutual fund, will cut her investment losses that she has so far suffered.

We have over $1 trillion in non-Social Security surplus, and I think we absolutely must return the taxpayers' money to the people who sent it here. Our bill means that the average Michigan factory worker and his family will save $1,000 in income taxes. Our across-the-board rate reduction will save the seniors who live in my district over $500 in income taxes, and, if that senior has a mutual fund, will cut her investment losses that she has so far suffered.

Mr. Speaker, I believe tax relief is needed. There is no doubt about that. We have balanced the budget, we have set aside money for Social Security which pays down the debt, and I think now is the time for the American people to reap the rewards of their hard work. I urge that we vote against the motion to instruct.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM).

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Texas left off a few other things that I believe in the motion to instruct. There is not a $200 billion increase in the national debt over the next 5 years. There is not a $3 trillion increase in our national debt from 2011 to 2020, or $1.5 trillion of additional debt when you add in interest. That is also not in the Democratic motion to instruct.

The motion to instruct is truly a debate about priorities and values. The priorities, we believe very strongly this is the time for us to use that which we have invested in this nation, that money that is, to pay down our national debt. We do have a surplus. This is the time for us to be fiscally responsible and pay down the national debt. This is the time for us to be dealing with a very real social problem, Social Security, of which the gentleman from Texas certainly knows and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW) here knows that unless we do some things of a responsible nature soon, we will have major problems in 2011. This is what we ought to be doing. That is what the motion to instruct is all about. Do not have a tax cut today. What should we be debating this week before we go home is Social Security reform. What should be debating with is Medicare and Medicaid reform. We ought to have the debate on this floor right now dealing with the problems of our hospitals around the country that are saying to me, "Unless you deal with some of our problems by October, the last thing we must close." That is what we ought to be doing.

Really and truly what this motion to instruct is all about is just saying "no tax cut first, let us deal with Social Security, let us deal with Medicare first and then let us bring a tax cut to the floor.

If we would only do that, we would send the kind of message to our children and grandchildren that they hear. We should not be spending their future inheritance today based on our desires and all of the wonderful things that we say today. We ought to be paying down the debt so that they will have an opportunity for the same kind of future.

Although a lot of numbers get thrown around in the budget discussions, this is really a debate about priorities and values. This motion to instruct is based on the value that has guided generations of Americans: the value that we should leave our country stronger for children and grandchildren. This motion simply says that meeting our obligations for Social Security and Medicare and first reducing the debt burden on future generations should be a higher priority than current consumption for tax cuts or new spending.

We should put our fiscal house in order before we talk about tax cuts or new spending. We should agree to lock up a substantial portion of the non-Social Security surpluses outside of the Social Security trust fund to pay down national debt and deal with Social Security and Medicare before we start talking about how to carve up the surpluses for new spending. I agree with much of those criticisms, but that is not what we are talking about today. The motion before the House today provides that we should reduce the debt and deal with Social Security and Medicare before we talk about tax cuts or new spending.

The only way to truly reduce burden on future generations is to lock up a significant portion of the non-Social Security surpluses to reduce debt held by public. That is what this motion to instruct calls on our conference to do.

Paying down the national debt is the most important thing Congress can do to maintain a strong and growing economy with low inflation and providing working men and women with a tax cut in the form of lower mortgages, lower credit card payments, etc. Reducing our $5.4 trillion national debt will reduce the burden left to future generations by reducing the amount of the federal budget that will be consumed by interest payments.

The motion to recommit will provide an opportunity to begin a bipartisan process to achieve a responsible budget agreement. Members on both sides of the aisle have said they agree with the Blue Dog budget approach of paying down our national debt, dealing with Social Security and Medicare, and then dealing with tax cuts.

Voting for the motion to instruction would send a strong message to the conference, the leadership in Congress and the President that we are committed to a fiscally responsible, bipartisan budget that is based on the principles of paying down the national debt, dealing with our obligations before agreeing to tax cuts or new spending.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BERRY).

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the motion to instruct on the Republican tax cut bill. This motion will urge conferees to take responsibility and commit to reducing the debt. I am for a tax cut. I think we all are. But not with funny money. We should be sure that we really have a surplus before we commit to these tax cuts, put the budget on a long-term path, take the so-called surplus and... pay down the debt, deal with Social Security and Medicare first, and then talk about tax cuts. Do not spend projected revenues that may not exist and certainly do not exist today.

Let us take this terrible burden of a $5.6 trillion national debt off our children. Vote for the motion to instruct.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Social Security.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLER of Florida). The gentleman from Florida is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

In looking at what is before us and the guidelines in which the tax bill is presently going to conference is drawn, and looking at that in comparison with the motion to instruct, these tax bills, both the House and the Senate, were very carefully drawn and crafted within the budget limitations. I think it is very important for this House to realize that the budget that passed out of the Senate and, under which this tax bill is tailored, pays down the debt more than the President's budget.

We have heard a lot of rhetoric this afternoon regarding Social Security.

There is a bill, that will be filed shortly, that the people on both sides of the aisle are fully versed in, that is the Archer-Schaw bill that could save Social Security for all time. There is ample money to save Social Security and save Medicare and pay down the debt and give the taxpayers some relief.

The previous speaker, I know he did not mean to be flip, but he talked about funny money. This is not funny money. This is the taxpayers' hard-earned dollars, and I think when my colleagues find that we are moving forward, that we have created a surplus, I think it is important that we not pay down the debt, which I agreed with, the accumulated debt must be reduced; But I think it is also important that we let the taxpayer keep some of their own money.

This is hard-earned dollars. The taxpayers are paying far too much money today, and when we put all the taxes together that the taxpayers pay, let us reject this motion to instruct, and let us let the conference go about their task of conferencing this most important bill and give the taxpayers some relief that they so richly deserve.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KLECZKA) to close the debate on the motion to instruct the conference.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to some of the items that have been brought up in debate.

Let me start out by saying I support the motion to instruct, and my Republican colleagues know full well that after their tax bill is vetoed, we are going to be back to precisely what we are talking about today, a tax cut which would give back about 25 percent of the projected, projected surplus.

My good friend from Florida talks about funny money. The thing that is funny about the money is it is not here yet. I have heard this afternoon Members come up and say, give it back, it is not easy to balance the budget, but we did it. My friends and colleagues, as we close out this fiscal year, the budget is not in surplus, but in a $5 billion deficit, and for those who say, give it back, we do not have it. It is a projection over the next 10 years based on some very rosy assumptions, very low inflation. One economic downturn, Mr. Speaker, and those dollars will not be here.

In fact, I said it before, and I will say it again. I have a better chance of winning the lottery than this government having a trillion dollars surplus over the next 10 years.

We have had unheralded economic success over the last 4 years. To think it is going to continue for 14 and then for another 10 to make it 24 is totally absurd.

The motion before us says, let us pay down the debt. The gentleman says already we are paying down the debt. If the Congress will go home for 2 years, that debt would be paid down because it is a double counting of the Social Security surplus. Do not kid a kidder. That is going to happen with or without the Congress doing anything.

But what we are saying in our motion is let us take it down even further. It is in excess of $5 trillion. The Republican tax bill expands all the money and leaves no room for modernizing Medicare. What happens to the extra dollars that are there? We spend it on national debt. So to say that we are doing Social Security and Medicare is totally false.

The bill will be vetoed. I ask my colleagues to vote for the motion to recommit, vote for the motion to instruct because in October that is exactly what we are going to do any way.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my extreme concern over the President's threat to veto H.R. 2488, the Financial Freedom Act of 1999. This legislation offers nearly $800 billion in tax relief for America's families, including eliminating the death tax, reducing the marriage penalty tax and capital gains tax, a 10 percent across the board income tax reduction for all Americans.

The President opposes the Financial Freedom Act because he claims this legislation does not secure Social Security. This is false. The fact is, H.R. 2488 leaves more than $2 trillion for Social Security and Debt Reduction, which exceeds the amount requested in the President's own budget.

Mr. Speaker, tax relief is the right thing to do. H.R. 2688 gives the surplus back to those who created it, the American taxpayer. Over the next ten years, the government will receive an average $5,307 more in taxes from each American family than needs to operate. If families continue to overpay the federal government in taxes, Washington will just spend it on more big government programs. Mr. Speaker, it is time we let those who worked for the money spend it as they see fit.

I urge the President to reconsider his position against American taxpayers and support the Financial Freedom Act. Government should do more for its citizens than raise their taxes and feed the federal bureaucracy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLER of Florida). Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to instruct.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The Chair announces that proceedings will resume immediately following this vote on two motions to suspend the rules postponed from earlier today. The first vote on the motion to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 747 will be not less than 15 minutes in length, followed by a 5-minute vote on the motion to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 1219.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were Yeas 205, nays 215, not voting 15, as follows:

ANNOUNCEMENT REGARDING AMENDMENT PROCESS FOR H.R. 417, CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM ACT OF 1999

Mr. REYNOLDS, Mr. Speaker, a "Dear Colleague" letter will be sent to all Members informing them that the Committee on Rules is planning to meet this week to grant a rule which may limit the amendment process for floor consideration of H.R. 417, the Bipartisan Campaign Finance Reform Act of 1999.

The Committee on House Administration ordered H.R. 417 reported this evening and is expected to file its committee report on Wednesday, August 4. Any Member wishing to offer an amendment should submit 55 copies and a brief explanation of the amendment to the Committee on Rules in room H–312 of the Capitol by 4 p.m. on Wednesday, August 4. Amendments should be drafted to the bill as ordered reported by the Committee on House Administration. Copies of the bill may be obtained from the Committee on House Administration, and is also expected to be posted on that committee's web site.

Members should use the Office of Legislative Counsel to ensure that their amendments are properly drafted and should check with the Office of the Parliamentarian to be certain their amendments comply with the rules of the House.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on further consideration of the bill (H.R. 2296), making appropriations for foreign operations, export financing, and related programs for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CALVERT). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF S. 1467

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1467) and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not able to entertain the gentleman's request.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. Oberstar), I understand, is reserving the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Shuster) is not recognized for that purpose.

Mr. SHUSTER. May I ask why the gentleman is objecting? Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, for me to ask why the gentleman is objecting?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's guidelines, the Chair is not recognizing the gentleman from Pennsylvania for that purpose at this time.

APPPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 2488, FINANCIAL FREEDOM ACT OF 1999

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Chair announces the Speaker's appointment of the following conferees on the bill (H.R. 2488) to provide for the elimination pursuant to sections 105 and 211 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2000:

For consideration of the House bill, and the Senate amendment, and modifications of:

Messrs. Archer, Armey, Crane, Thomas, Rangel, and Stark.

As additional conferees for consideration of sections 313, 315–316, 318, 325, 329, 332, 341–42, 344–45, 351, 362–63, 365, 369, 371, 381, 1261, 1305, and 1406 of the Senate amendment, and modifications committed to conference:

Messrs. Goodling, Boehner, and Clay.

There was no objection.

FOREIGN OPERATIONS, EXPORT FINANCING, AND RELATED PROGRAMS APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2000

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 263 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 2296.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 2296) making appropriations for foreign operations, export financing, and related programs for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes, with Mr. Thornberry in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The CHAIRMAN. The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole rose on Thursday, July 29, 1999, amendment No. 3 printed in part B of House Report 106–269 by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. Pitts) had been disposed of.

Under the order of the House of that day, it is now time to consider amendment No. 6 printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. Andrews).

AMENDMENT NO. 6 OFFERED BY MR. ANDREWS

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 6 offered by Mr. Andrews: Page 116, after line 5, insert the following:

PROHIBITION ON FUNDS FOR NEW OPIC PROJECTS

Sect. 585. None of the funds made available by this Act may be used by the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, after the enactment of this Act, for the issuance of any new guarantee, insurance, reinsurance, or financial or for initiating any other activity which the Corporation is otherwise authorized to undertake.

APPPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 2206: FOREIGN OPERATIONS ACT OF 2000

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. Andrews) and a Member opposed each will control 15 minutes.

Does the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. Callahan) seek to control the time in opposition?

Mr. CALLAHAN. Yes, I do, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time be halved with the gentlewoman from California (Ms. Pelosi), and that she be given the authority to yield the time for her 7½ minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There is no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. Andrews) is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.
Mr. Chairman, in 1996, this House voted to end welfare as we know it for single men, and for people struggling to raise families all across America. The amendment says that it is time for us to end corporate welfare as we know it. The amendment says that the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, OPIC, will be precluded from initiating new deals, new transactions, with the money that is in this underlying bill. It says that DuPont and General Electric, and McDonald’s, and some of the largest corporations in the world, ought to risk their capital in risky international investments, not the capital of the American taxpayers.

Now, I have had the opportunity to outline my views previously on Thursday night, but I want to quickly summarize them before yielding to support, and amendment.

We will no doubt hear that this will cause chaos at OPIC. It will not. This amendment does not interfere with the ongoing operation and the wind-down of the entity. It simply says that funds should be used to effectuate that wind-down rather than to initiate new deals.

We will hear that this will have a devastating effect on U.S. investment overseas. Frankly, the huge majority, the immense majority of private investments by U.S. corporations overseas have nothing to do with OPIC. They have to do with the judgments of entrepreneurs and investors in the global market every day.

We will hear that somehow or another this is unilateral disarmament in the war on trade. It is nothing of the sort. It is the recognition that the real engine of international growth for the U.S. economy is not the taxpayers’ pockets, but the entrepreneurs taking a risk.

This is one of the few amendments I have ever seen that is supported by Ralph Nader and Milton Friedman. And that is probably all people need to know about why they should support it.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield the 7½ minutes that has been yielded to me to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. MENENDEZ) and that he be allowed to control that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. MENENDEZ) will control the 7½ minutes.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), the distinguished Democrat on the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I oppose this amendment. It really puts a damper on American entrepreneurship as we try to transfer technology to the least developed countries that we have in the world. OPIC's support and what kind of so-called foreign investment has been created. The United States cannot supply raw electric power to Egypt. We can supply American-made power generating equipment and services. How is selling power generating equipment and years of spare parts and services taking jobs away from Americans? If we don't sell the Egyptians these power plants, the Europeans, Japanese, Canadians, or other foreigners will.

The United States does not grow tea. Therefore, how does investing in a tea plantation in Rwanda steal American jobs? Indeed, it supports U.S. jobs insofar as that tea operation needs tools, machines, trucks and other services—and these are products and services made by American labor.

The United States is not home to the great African savannah and giraffes, lions, zebras, and baboons are not native wildlife. Therefore, how does supporting the eco-tourism industry in Botswana by investing in new hotels and tour operations take away American jobs? On the contrary, this development requires all kinds of infrastructure—construction materials, furnishings, vehicles, and services—these goods and services Americans produce and sell.

OPIC-backed projects around the world are U.S. small businesses. Over the next 4 years it is estimated that OPIC projects will generate $23 billion more in America exports. $6 billion of those exports are to be from over 150 American small businesses.

OPIC has proven itself to be a successful supporter of American foreign policy. OPIC mobilizes private sector investment in support of U.S. foreign policy at no cost to the American taxpayer. The Andrews amendment would mean no support for U.S. investment in high priority foreign policy areas. It would eliminate an estimated $9 billion in increased American investment with Sub-Saharan Africa, $4 billion in Central America and the Caribbean, and $8 billion for development of Caspian Sea energy resources.

Since 1971, OPIC supported projects which have resulted in the export of $58 billion of American products. More than $2.8 billion in American exports were generated by OPIC supported projects in 1998 alone.

With respect to the Andrews-Sanders-Sanford amendment, I would have to say that it hurts American competitiveness and benefits our foreign competitors. Most of our developing nations, like France, Germany and Japan, offer a comprehensive array of export and overseas investment support. They clearly understand the importance of such programs in supporting jobs and economic growth at home. The U.S. spends less per capita, as a percentage of GDP, and in dollar terms on supporting private sector investment in developing countries than any other major competitor country.

Mr. Chairman, the support OPIC provides is not corporate welfare and has not eliminated American jobs as the “Dear Colleague” letter circulated recently complained. Caterpillar was
Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised to find among the Caterpillar workers any of them who believe they are fat cats.

These are hard-working Americans. OPIC helps promote the sale of the tractors they make. OPIC does not cost the American taxpayer anything. Given the support foreign competitors like Komatsu or Korea's Hyundai. Let us not ignore the consequences—ultimately, this Amendment benefits foreign competitors like Komatsu at the expense of American workers in all 50 states.

Mr. Chairman, in response to the charges by some OPIC critics that OPIC is not even authorized, this Member would remind his colleagues that the House International Relations Committee, the appropriate authorizing body, has already considered and marked up a new reauthorization for OPIC. This legislation is pending on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I urge opposition to the Andrews amendment.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SANFORD), one of the co-authors of this amendment and a person who has been very diligent about cutting costs for the American public.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I support this amendment and am, indeed, a cosponsor on this amendment because it makes sense to the United States taxpayer.

This amendment is not about the ineffectiveness of OPIC. As government organizations go, it is quite efficient. It is not about the management. It has a good name. I have met with George Munoz, who is head of OPIC. The issue that this amendment gets to is not is OPIC able to handle the mandate that it has been given, but rather is that mandate in the best interest of the United States taxpayer. And I think if we look under the hood on this, we would come to the conclusion that no is the answer.

First, Mr. Chairman, there is a financial risk to the U.S. taxpayer with OPIC. OPIC was given a billion dollars of seed money in 1971 when OPIC was begun, and yet if we look, since 1971 there has not been, for instance, a world war. These loans or guarantees are backed with the full faith and credit of the United States Government. If there was a war, we would see the cost to those guarantees. There has not been a global depression since 1971. If there was a severe economic downturn, we would see the cost to those guarantees.

In fact, if we look in Brazil, where there is $1.9 billion of taxpayer exposure, OPIC itself has said that fully half of their portfolio could be affected by the crisis there. The same could be said, for instance, in Russia. So, one, there is a contingent liability that goes back to the United States taxpayer.

With the money that was originally provided, interest is earned on that money. And if we look at the income statement of last year, $139 million was the net income and $133 million can be seen as a result of these interest payments. That leaves a loss of $54 million.

Admittedly, $54 million is not a lot of money in Washington, but back home that is a lot of money. In fact, I did a back-of-the-envelope calculation, and it would take 13,500 taxpayers, average taxpayers, working and paying taxes for a full year, to send Washington $54 million.

This consideration is that it does cost American jobs. And that is not my opinion or the opinion of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS). That is the opinion of Time magazine. They did a three-part series on corporate welfare. What they found was, for instance, a $29 million loan guarantee for Levi Strauss and Company to build a manufacturing plant in Turkey, while, at the same time, the Labor Department was handing out unemployment and training benefits for 6,400 American workers who had been laid off in 11 American plants with Levi Strauss and Company. The point of that article was saying that the two were directly correlated.

Finally, I would just make mention of the fact that this changes markets. If we change a market, we change where an investment can be made. And so what we are doing is subsidizing development off our coast. And as well, that what we are doing is preventing a marketplace from developing with other insurers.

This is a need that needs to take place, but it could be easily handled by the Lloyds of London, who are not in the same market as OPIC, America's Caterpillar is in many instances at a real disadvantage to Japan's Komatsu or Korea's Hyundai. Let us not ignore the consequences—ultimately, this Amendment benefits foreign competitors like Komatsu at the expense of American workers in all 50 states.

Mr. Chairman, in response to the charges by some OPIC critics that OPIC is not even authorized, this Member would remind his colleagues that the House International Relations Committee, the appropriate authorizing body, has already considered and marked up a new reauthorization for OPIC. This legislation is pending on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I urge opposition to the Andrews amendment.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 1/4 minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, in response to the charges by some OPIC critics that OPIC is not even authorized, this Member would remind his colleagues that the House International Relations Committee, the appropriate authorizing body, has already considered and marked up a new reauthorization for OPIC. This legislation is pending on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I support this amendment and am, indeed, a cosponsor on this amendment because it makes sense to the United States taxpayer.

This amendment is not about the inefficiency of OPIC. As government organizations go, it is quite efficient. It is not about the management. It has a good name. I have met with George Munoz, who is head of OPIC. The issue that this amendment gets to is not is OPIC able to handle the mandate that it has been given, but rather is that mandate in the best interest of the United States taxpayer. And I think if we look under the hood on this, we would come to the conclusion that no is the answer.

First, Mr. Chairman, there is a financial risk to the U.S. taxpayer with OPIC. OPIC was given a billion dollars of seed money in 1971 when OPIC was begun, and yet if we look, since 1971 there has not been, for instance, a world war. These loans or guarantees are backed with the full faith and credit of the United States Government. If there was a war, we would see the cost to those guarantees. There has not been a global depression since 1971. If there was a severe economic downturn, we would see the cost to those guarantees.

In fact, if we look in Brazil, where there is $1.9 billion of taxpayer exposure, OPIC itself has said that fully half of their portfolio could be affected by the crisis there. The same could be us they believe in government insurance. This is what it is.

Now, it is interesting, however. This is not government insurance for middle-class homeowners. This is not government insurance for those people who are paying outrageous premiums for automobile insurance. No, no, no. We do not get government insurance for that.

But if they are J.P. Morgan, they can get government insurance for a $200 million investment in an oil field in Angola. If they are Texaco, they get government insurance for $139 million for investment of a power generating project in the Philippines. If they are the Chase Manhattan Bank, they get socialized insurance.

Here we have conservative Republicans, corporate Democrats telling us government insurance is for the wealthiest corporations in the world. I think that is pretty strange.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we should note that in Indonesia right now OPIC officials are in that country, and that country because the government there is suggesting that an American-backed company may not be able to make as much money as they wanted; and if that in fact takes place, it is going to be the American taxpayer through OPIC that bails out that particular company that invested in Suharto’s dictatorship.

Mr. Chairman, another disturbing aspect of this situation is that the United States Government is providing financial incentives to the largest corporations in this country to invest abroad. Now, some of us think that it would be a very good idea for these corporations that are investing tens of billions of dollars abroad to maybe bring that investment back to the State of Vermont and other States around this country to put our people to work at decent paying jobs.

I hear our friends say that OPIC makes money. OPIC makes money. Well, if OPIC makes money, then maybe we better think about government insurance in other areas. And I would yield right now to any person who is opposing the Andrews amendment to tell us that they are prepared to support government insurance for homeowners, government insurance for automobile people who need automobile insurance.

Are they in favor of that? Mr. Chairman? Not. I ask the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. MENENDEZ).

Only government insurance for the large multinational corporations. Let us stop corporate welfare. Let us support the Andrews amendment.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. GEJJDENSON), ranking Democrat of the Committee on International Relations.

Mr. GEJJDENSON. Mr. Chairman, I would join my friend from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) in having universal health coverage, but that is not the debate today. The debate today is whether we are going to tell these corporations, not welfare, but that we are going to tell my colleagues what they had to do. And not only the 6,400 employees, if any of them were laid off, but Strauss built that factory? They laid down hundreds of millions of dollars of future U.S. exports from ever taking place. Thousands of jobs now held by American workers would be lost, and millions of dollars in tax revenue would be unavailable to our States and local communities.

Since its inception in 1971, OPIC generated over $58 billion in U.S. exports, created more than 237,000 jobs. It operates on a self-sustaining basis and actually provides funding authority to pay for the humanitarian development and anti-narcotics programs contained in the legislation we are now debating.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to oppose the Andrews amendment.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to my friend, the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS).

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACHUS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, let me just make one thing very clear about OPIC making money. OPIC holds government bonds. The Department of the Treasury of the United States then pays interest on the government bonds.

So when we talk OPIC making profit, the profit is being paid for by taxpayers to an organization that holds government bonds. It has nothing to do with making money or having a profit.

Let us just be clear about the fact that we use this terminology carefully. We know this is a very tough fight here because it is right at the heart of subsidies to the most powerful, and we understand that it is hard to win that. But I think it is very important that when we have this debate that we be clear about it.

I am not suggesting for a second that anybody is trying to distort the truth. We have just got to get the facts about what profits are all about. It is not about any government operation making money in the marketplace. It has to do with taxpayers giving them the money that then gets scored as extra government money, which some call profits. That is in error. So we ought to be clear about what this organization actually does.

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Chairman, re—

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I would join the chairman in his assessment on the profit it makes.

Now, we have heard that OPIC helps American workers, and we have heard that it hurts American workers. I want to focus on that one claim.

Let us look at one of these transactions. In 1997, OPIC financed the building for Levi Strauss of a garment-making factory in Turkey, a $29-million guarantee, because they did not want to finance it themselves and private insurers would not do it.

Well, what happened when Levi Strauss built that factory? They laid off 6,400 workers at U.S. garment-making factories. But they built it in 11 locations in the United States.

Now, do my colleagues think that those 6,400 employees, if any of them are listening today, that they will buy this argument that we are creating jobs? We lost those jobs. And not only did we lose those jobs, but the Labor Department had to go in, and let me tell my colleagues what they had to do. They had to provide unemployment assistance, and they also had to provide trade adjustment assistance because of the companies that had been built in Turkey, financed by OPIC.

I strongly urge support of this amendment.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BLUNT), the chief deputy whip.

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey prohibiting OPIC from supporting any new investment projects.

This amendment would not only close down any future OPIC investments in Africa, but it would eliminate billions of dollars of OPIC-related hurricane assistance for Central America and the Caribbean. The adoption of this amendment would eliminate billions of dollars of future U.S. exports from ever taking place. Thousands of jobs now held by American workers would be lost, and millions of dollars in tax revenue would be unavailable to our States and local communities.

We know this is a very tough fight here because it is right at the heart of subsidies to the most powerful, and we understand that it is hard to win that. But I think it is very important that when we have this debate that we be clear about it.

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

As the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. MENENDEZ) and others have talked about, we are in a global economy.
OPIC does open markets. OPIC has helped create jobs in this country. And OPIC charges premiums. OPIC charges premiums.

One of the big criticisms of OPIC is that the premiums are too high and that is why they have $3.3 billion in reserves. Now, if the premiums are too high and the private sector would be interested in going into these areas, why is it not there?

OPIC fills a void that the private sector will not go into if OPIC is eliminated. They will go into troubled countries. They go into countries that insurance companies of a private nature will not go into. These premiums have generated $139 million last year. They are expected to generate $200 million this year.

OPIC's claims because of the way OPIC and they fill a priority whenever these troubled countries try to re-establish relationships with the United States.

No private company would have that great advantage in settling claims. That is why OPIC won't lose money. That is why OPIC does encourage trade. That is why OPIC works. That is why the private sector will not replace it if it is eliminated.

I urge my colleagues to vote against this amendment.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support for this amendment. If it were true that this agency is profitable, we would not be here. They would be making profit, and OPIC would not need to come here every year.

They are asking for $55 million. Where does the profit come from? It was stated earlier very clearly; from the interest that they earn. They have a portfolio of $3 billion of U.S. securities. But these did not reduce the national debt. That is part of the national debt. We pay interest on that $3 billion. And this agency gets $194 million from it. four times the amount of the requested appropriation.

No wonder on paper it looks profitable. And I say, well, the private companies will not insure some of these projects. That means it is probably risky. Why should the taxpayer assume the risk? Why should these corporations be protected with this corporate welfare?

This is the reason why jobs are exported to a cost to the American taxpayer. It is bad economics. And it is a lot of twisting of the facts if we call this agency profitable at the same time they are getting $194 million that we barely talk about.

How many other agencies of government get interest like this? This is almost a government unto itself, the fact that it has that much financing without even a direct appropriation because it is paid out of the interest budget.

This is indeed an important amendment. I believe that we should definitely vote for this. If we care at all about the taxpayer of this country, we should expose what is happening with corporate welfare.

The little people are not coming to us today begging us to vote against this amendment. It is the corporations, the giant corporations, not our small mom-and-pop businesses. They are not coming and saying, please, please protect OPIC. No, it is the giant corporations that have been able to manipulate and get benefits from programs like this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama (Mr. CALLAHAN) has 2 minutes remaining. The gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS) has 2 minutes remaining. The gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. MENENDEZ) has 3½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Alabama (Mr. CALLAHAN) has the right to close.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BENTSSEN).

Mr. BENTSSEN. Mr. Chairman, the reason why we have this insurance program is the same reason why we have the HUD insurance program for homeowners in this country, low-income homeowners, because the marketplace does not provide for it, just as my colleague from Missouri just said.

The other reason we have this program is because our trading partners around the world do this and do it a lot more. So if we are to pass this amendment and unilaterally withdraw from being a competitive trading Nation, we will only drive up the imports in this country, drive down the exports from this country, and cost Americans jobs.

By passing this amendment, we will not do anything to bring capital back into this country. OPIC is used in my district where we have companies that are looking for new markets to get into.

The Stewart & Stevenson Company builds turbine engines and then sells them throughout the world. And when they sell more engines, they hire more Americans to build them in my district.

The other amendment that is on the floor is an rider to add a new arbitration to OPIC. It would shift the arbitration in favor of the American worker.

The Stewarts & Stevenson Company builds turbine engines and then sells them throughout the world. And when they sell more engines, they hire more Americans to build them in my district.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. Wu).

Mr. Wu. Mr. Chairman, I rise today on behalf of small business owners and workers in my home State of Oregon and in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS). This amendment to abolish OPIC would damage the efforts of Oregon's small businesses in opening markets overseas. In Oregon, OPIC has financed and insured projects worth $27 million. These efforts have generated over $33 million in Oregon exports. Many new jobs come through businesses that supply goods and services to projects insured or financed by OPIC. Businesses like Hyster Sales Company in Tigard, Oregon, and Interwrap Industries in Portland, Oregon.

OPIC helps level the playing field for American businesses of all sizes which compete for overseas projects. OPIC offers American businesses essential risk insurance for their investments in high-risk emerging markets. It provides temporary financing for investments when private sector support is lacking.

But OPIC does all of this in a fiscally sound manner. Customers which benefit from OPIC repay the full principal amount.

I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the Andrews amendment.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY), a very articulate freshman Member.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Andrews amendment. I am not debating whether or not it is corporate welfare, but I want to talk about how OPIC must get its own house in order first as I lack confidence in this program.

I am going to tell my colleagues a story about a company in my district, Mid-American Energy, who has been working with OPIC, had used OPIC to build a power plant in Indonesia.

What next? OPIC said, "That's not good enough. We need you to do it again. We want you to go somewhere else for another arbitration."

When OPIC loses this time, will they change the rules again? Will they require this company to go three out of five arbitrations? Mr. Chairman, Mid-American has followed OPIC guidelines. Now it must fulfill its obligations. I urge the support of this amendment.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS).

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. TERRY).

fat cats. But I am not opposed to stimulating business growth and development in sub-Saharan Africa, the poorest region of the world. I am not opposed to saying that in order to facilitate the development of opportunity in areas that unless there was some private investment, nothing would happen. And so while generally I would be on the other side of an issue like this one, but because of the need in areas of the world for business development, I find myself in opposition to this amendment because I want to see Africa have an opportunity to grow and develop, and I support investment in countries like sub-Saharan Africa. I oppose the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to this amendment to prohibit any funds for new projects by the Overseas Private Investment Corporation. OPIC's budget will hurt our nation's 22 million small businesses who export directly or by contract to other countries.

Specifically, cutting funds would cut what little business assistance sub-Saharan Africa, the poorest region in the world receives.

During this decade OPIC has increased its effectiveness in helping Africa. For instance, OPIC has currently four privately managed investment funds available to support investment in Africa. These programs focus on mining, manufacturing, broadcasting, information-technology and I hope to see soon healthcare.

The point I am trying to make here is that if we cut OPIC's budget we would hurt small businesses, decrease our nation's exports, and cut jobs. For the past three years, OPIC's budget has been effectively frozen. We already have this organization working on a shoestring budget.

OPIC is not a giveaway program, it is not a subsidy and it is not general assistance. It is not corporate welfare. This is an investment and a repayment that the government will have to reach into our pockets and subsidize it. The idea of us subsidizing these operations is wrong.

Let us end corporate welfare as we know it and support this amendment.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, let me say that I know the gentleman from New Jersey is well-intended in his beliefs, but I do believe him to be absolutely wrong.

He mentioned the fact that plants have already spent their own money in his home State without government assistance. I beg to differ with him, but the plants that are already there, like AT&T, like Berger International, like Schick, like Johnson & Johnson, Nabisco, Squibb and Ingersoll-Rand are all using OPIC; and I am sure that the hundreds of thousands of jobs that are benefitting from the fact that they are exporting the products could probably convince their fellow New Jerseyan that he was making a mistake.

The same with the gentleman from Alabama who stood up and talked about it. Yet in his hometown of Birmingham, Alabama, Mr. Chairman, they utilize OPIC more than any other city in the entire State. But the good thing about that is they ship those products through the port of Mobile and enhance the ability of the people in my district to benefit from exporting these products.

They say OPIC is not really making any money and how the books say that, but OPIC is making $200 million a year period. That is the fact. They are not losing money. It is true that when our countries go now into a foreign country, they are on a levelized playing field with all of the other industrialized nations. But other nations have similar programs. These are insurance programs that for the most part insure that if the government expropriates all of the properties there, that OPIC, the United States of America, will guarantee payment to the bank from which most of this money comes from for their guarantees.

This is not corporate welfare. This is a sensible export program that is vital to American industry. I would urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the Andrews amendment.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, is it the Chair's understanding that after this vote, there will be no more votes tonight, that the rest of the amendments that we debate tonight will be carried over until tomorrow so that this would be the last vote of the night?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. Under the rule the Chair has the authority to postpone votes on amendment and intends to do so after the vote on the Andrews amendment.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I would urge my colleagues to vote "no" on this last amendment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to the Andrews amendment and in support of the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, or OPIC.

Let me tell you what OPIC has meant to companies, large and small, in my state of New Jersey. With the help of risk insurance provided by OPIC since the program began, New Jersey companies have generated $3 billion in exports which supported 10,000 jobs.

I hope my colleague from New Jersey will take note of the companies from New Jersey who needed OPIC insurance in order to sell their products abroad and thus support jobs here at home in our state of New Jersey.

Many New Jersey companies have benefited from OPIC financing and insurance. They include, among others, Copelco Capital of Mahwah, Croll Reynolds Co. of Westfield; Engelhardt Pollution Control of Iselin; Guest Supply Inc. of Monmouth Junction; H.W. Baker Linen Co. of Mahwah; Ingersoll-Dresser Pump Co. of Liberty Corner; Ingersoll-Rand of Woodcliff Lake, ITT of Midland Park; Maersk Inc. of Madison; Regal International of Closter. And what have these companies been able to do with OPIC Insurance? Let's just talk about some of the small New Jersey companies that have benefited. Misco America from Holmdel supplied products for a project in Ethiopia; Casale Industries from Garwood was involved in an electrical project in Turkey; GAR International from Red Bank was a supplier for the privatization of a copper mine in Peru.

So, again, I hope my colleague from New Jersey takes note of the importance of OPIC to New Jersey companies, large and small, and their employees.

OPIC is a key component in our efforts to open up markets all over the globe to U.S. products and services.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to oppose this amendment and support OPIC.

Mr. ANDREWS. The amendment is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

An recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—aye 103, noes 315, not voting 15, as follows:

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, is it the Chair's understanding that after this vote, there will be no more votes tonight, that the rest of the amendments that we debate tonight will be carried over until tomorrow so that this would be the last vote of the night?

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I would urge my colleagues to vote "no" on this last amendment.
Mr. WATKINS and Mr. EVERETT changed their vote from “aye” to “no.”
Mr. FLETCHER changed his vote from “no” to “aye.”
So the amendment was rejected.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Stated against:
Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, on rollcall No. 359 I was inadvertently detained. Had I been present, I would have voted “no.”

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word in order to continue the colloquy with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DEAL] and to have the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DEAL] explain the problem and his request.

If the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAHAN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. DEAL of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, as the chairman indicated, we have a serious problem in this country with regard to individuals who are noncitizens who have been arrested for serious felonies and have been ordered deported.

They are then in the custody of the Immigration and Naturalization Service pending the acceptance by their country of their citizenship. Unfortunately, we have many countries, well over 100 countries now, who have either refused to accept their citizens back or are unduly delaying the process of accepting them back, over 3,300 people, and we are adding approximately 60 every month to this list.

These are individuals who are having to be detained in our Federal detention facilities at a cost of about $67 a day, and the cost on an annual basis is somewhere of about $80 million.

My amendment would have addressed that by simply saying to those nations, many of whom do receive assistance under this particular bill, that they would not be able to receive that assistance unless they cooperated, which is the responsibility of and the comity of nations to accept your citizens back once they have been ordered deported from another country, and that that would be a condition for their receiving assistance under this bill.

As the chairman has indicated, unfortunately, we did not receive the waiver from the Committee on Rules, but it is a serious problem, not only in my district, but in many other parts of the country. We cannot criticize the INS for not issuing deportation orders when we run into the problems of these over 100 countries who refuse to cooperate with that deportation process.

I want to thank the chairman for his cooperation in making the matter a matter before the House tonight. I appreciate his cooperation and look forward to working with the gentleman as we approach the Commerce, Justice and State Appropriation, as hopefully we can find wording that will address the issue there. I also appreciate his willingness that if we are not successful there, to continue to work with us to find a solution.

I think the American people expect when we order a person deported, that their country will accept them back, and, if they do not, that they should not expect to receive foreign aid at the same time. The other Member is costing the American taxpayers over $80 million a year.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I would also say I believe this is the law of the land anyway. It is my understanding we are just not actuating it; enforcing it; that the State Department and the Justice Department have the authority already to enforce this, and yet they are failing to do so. It is an issue that needs to be addressed by this Congress, and I am very appreciative of the gentleman from Georgia for bringing it to our attention.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BURTON

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Burton of Indiana:

Page 116, after line 5, insert the following: Sec. 3. Of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available in this Act in title II under the heading "DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE", not more than $35,500,000 may be made available to the Government of India.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the order of the House of Thursday, July 29, 1999, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON), and a Member opposed each will control 25 minutes.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Burton amendment and claim all time in opposition to the Burton amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama (Mr. CALLAHAN) will control 25 minutes.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield half of the time allocated to me to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), and that she be allowed to control said time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield my time to the gentleman from New York (Mr. ACKERMAN), and that he be allowed to control said time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) is recognized.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, our foreign policy in our country has been concerned about human rights violations around the world for a long time. However, Mr. Chairman, we have been concerned about human rights around the world on a very selective basis in this country.

Recently we were in Yugoslavia, in Kosovo, trying to help the people who were being persecuted on both sides, and there were about 10,000 deaths in Kosovo. In Haiti, we sent in our troops a few years ago, and there were only a few hundred people killed, and it cost us probably several hundred million dollars to have our troops down there, but we thought it was a good cause in this country. Yet in places like the Sudan, where 2 million people have been killed, 2 million, in the struggle for freedom, we have not done a thing. Our role is almost nonexistent.

In other parts of Africa, Rwanda, Burundi, they killed thousands and hundreds of thousands of people have been killed, we have not done a thing. We do not even talk about it.

In a place called Kashmir, where there are half a million Indian troops occupying that area, women are being gang raped and men are being tortured and killed. Amnesty International calls the policy of the Indian government an "official policy sanctioning extrajudicial killings," and we do not even talk about it.

In Punjab, since 1984, the last 14 to 15 years, a quarter of a million, 250,000 Sikhs, have been killed, not to mention those who have been tortured and maimed. In Kashmir, since 1988, a mere 10 years ago, 60,000 Muslims have been killed. Thousands of so-called untouchables, Dalits, the blacks in India, have been killed.

As result of some of these problems, there is a report out this week. This is the report of the Human Rights Commission in India. The human rights organizations around the world, such as Human Rights Watch says, "Torture, including rape and ill-treatment continue to be endemic throughout the world," and, yes, the whole world itself, because both of those countries have nuclear weapons. According to our own State Department, India paid over 41,000 cash bounties to the state continue to carry out summary executions, disappearances, rape and torture." This report was written in July of 1999, this year.

Methods of torture include severe beatings with truncheons, rolling a heavy log on the legs, hanging the detainee upside down, and the use of electric shocks. Indian security forces have raped women in Kashmir during search operations.

I can go on and on.

Amnesty International, another human rights group says, "Torture, including rape and ill-treatment continue to be endemic throughout the world." This is their annual report, 1999. "Disappearances continue to be reported during the year, predominantly in Punjab and Kashmir." 1999. "Hundreds of extrajudicial killings and executions were reported in many states, including Kashmir and Punjab." 1999, this year.

I talk about this year after year after year. My colleagues who defend India's government policies keep coming down saying, "Oh, well, it is a big country, the second biggest in the world. We have to keep those economic doors open. We have got to make sure that we do business with them."

Well, okay, let us do business with them, but let us at least send them a signal, send a little-bitty signal to them that these kinds of atrocities cannot be tolerated, should not be tolerated. $11 million cut from our foreign aid to India is a drop in the bucket. They are getting foreign aid from all over the world. So if we cut them by a mere $11 million, one-fourth of the developmental aid we are going to give them, to send a little signal that they should stop these human rights abuses, is that wrong? I think not.
But if the persecution of these people were not enough, let me talk to you about something else, something that I think is extremely important that we have not talked about for a while.

Last week, my colleagues who support these atrocities in India by not sending them a signal, last week the Indian oil minister attempted to circumvent the United Nations embargo on Iraq by extending a $25 million loan to Iraq in a deal that knowingly violated, or were going to knowingly violate the U.N. trade sanctions imposed on Iraq for invading Kuwait in 1990. It was not until international pressure was put on India that they reluctantly bowed and complied with the U.N. rules governing these transactions.

India’s minister of oil and gas said, granted his agreement would violate U.N. sanctions, but he said his country would never allow a friend like Iraq to suffer. He went on to say India is deeply concerned about the situation in Iraq, adding that the Indian government would offer Iraq all the political, material, and moral support that they needed.

India also wants to help Iraq rehabilitate some Iraqi oil refineries and a lubricant oil plant. India and Iraqi officials have said they would like to soon sign a contract to develop two oil fields in southern Iraq.

So India wants to help one of the worst tyrannical regimes in the world, Saddam Hussein’s, at a time when we are participating in a U.N. embargo. And we are going to continue to send the same amount of foreign aid or almost the same amount. We are not going to send any signal about the human rights violations or about them breaking this embargo, or wanting to break this embargo, about their intention to work with Saddam Hussein to develop the oil fields in southern Iraq?

And I say to my colleagues, do you not want to say anything about this? Do you not want to send any kind of a signal to India?

Eleven million dollars is a drop in the bucket, but it will tell the whole world that the United States is paying attention to the horrible human rights abuses that are taking place, the atrocities that are taking place, the killings that are taking place, and, yes, the violation of the U.N. embargo that they want to take place.

So I would say to my colleagues, who I know have their minds already made up and who are going to be out here en masse tonight opposing this amendment, have a heart. Show a little bit of heart for these people who are suffering over there. Because unless we say something, it is going to keep on happening.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out to Members and to the author of the amendment that the intent of his amendment places a ceiling of $33.5 million on the amount of development assistance aid available to the government of India. However, the President’s fiscal year 2000 budget request for all development assistance to India, including both aid to the government and aid directly to nongovernmental organizations, is only $28.7 million. In fact, about 85 percent of all aid funding to India goes through NGOs, not the government.

Therefore, the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) would actually allow considerably more funding to the government of India than the President, the Secretary of State, USAID, and the committee is recommending. I do not think it was the intent of the gentleman from Indiana to increase funding for India, but based upon the reading of his amendment, it appears to me that it raises the level of assistance to India and he may want to withdraw it.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. BERNAM). Mr. BERNAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Burton amendment.

Cutting development assistance for India at this time would be totally counterproductive because it would undermine U.S.-India relations just when we’re starting to make some real progress.

India showed great restraint in the recent Kashmir crisis, and the Indian government has made a strong commitment to resuming bilateral discussions with Pakistan as soon as all militants have withdrawn behind the Line of Control.

India has also indicated that signing the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty will be a high priority.

On both counts, India is moving in a direction that’s totally consistent with U.S. security interests in South Asia. It would be foolish to put this progress in jeopardy by cutting India’s development assistance.

Mr. Chairman, human rights abuses should be taken seriously wherever they occur. India, like most countries in the world, doesn’t have a perfect record.

But according to the latest State Department report on human rights practices, India is making real progress. The Indian Supreme Court has acknowledged and condemned earlier human rights abuses in Punjab, and the independent National Human Rights Commission is conducting an investigation.

The best way to improve human rights in India is to continue an open and frank dialogue, not to cut programs that limit the spread of AIDS, improve access to reproductive health services, and provide basic health care for mothers and children.

With some 500 million Indians living below the poverty line, the modest amount of assistance we provide barely scratches the surface when compared to the overall need.
Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. ACKERMAN) for yielding me this time and for his great leadership on this issue and so many others.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Burton amendment which would cut aid to India. A similar resolution or amendment was defeated in 1997, and we should do so again tonight.

The last two State Department Human Rights reports praised India for the progress the country has made in the area of human rights. And in the wake of the recent Pakistani-backed incursion across the line of control into Kashmir, India has been praised by the international community for the restraint it demonstrated and for the steps it took to ensure that the situation would not escalate out of control.

The momentum gained in U.S.-India relations in recent years needs to be sustained and strengthened. It is the world’s largest democracy and the world’s strongest democracy should be promoting our friend and ally. I urge a “no” vote.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER).

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the intent of the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) to send a message to India. I really actually act in support of supporting India. India is a very large country that was created in a period of turmoil after the decline and the dissolution of the British Empire, and India has managed over the years, with great hardship, to have some fundamentally democratic institutions; and we should all recognize that they have elections there and have struggled to have independent courts and free elections and some kind of freedom of speech.

There have been ups and downs. In fact, I believe that the American business community has made a tragic error in focusing on Communist China as being that country which would be the recipient of aid and the recipient of investment over the years. When India was there and ready and willing to be a country that could increase the standard of living of its people by industrializing and making itself more prosperous.

However, let us recognize that with that that India has made some major errors and some of them are based totally on ego. And when it comes to the Kashmir and the Punjab and Jammu, the Indian Government might as well be a Nazi Germany. It might as well not have free elections at all, because those people are being denied their right to have been all along, especially in Kashmir, to determine their own destiny through a plebiscite that was required of them by the United Nations.

The Indian Government today has, as the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) pointed out, hundreds of thousands of troops in Kashmir; and many of these troops have engaged in, as troops do when they are in hostile territory, engaged in major human rights abuses that have been documented time and again by Amnesty International. There is really no doubt.

Our own government’s Human Rights department here and the State Department have documented these human rights abuses. And take a look at what is being said. The type of grotesque human rights abuses against the people of Kashmir is the very same things we saw Saddam Hussein committing and also Milosevic down there in Kosovo and against the Bosnians. These things require us to act and to treat India in a certain way that will get them to change their behavior.

First of all, and again let me go back to, India is a democratic government. I would hope people would invest in India, and I hope that the United States has put closer ties to India in the future. Nothing would make that more likely than for them to seek peace in Kashmir by permitting the people there to have a vote of plebiscite which India, because of ego, continues to say no, no, no. And as long as that happens, India will be spending tens of millions, if not hundreds of millions of dollars on weapons.

Mr. Chairman, think of this. Today we are only talking about decreasing the foreign aid to India by $11 million, when the Indians themselves are spending hundreds of millions on conventional weapons and at least tens of millions, probably hundreds of millions, on nuclear weapons as well. That makes no sense at all for us to be subsidizing the weapons of India. Instead, we should be sending this message to convince them to solve this long-fetching problem in Kashmir and permit some of the democratic reforms to take place in Punjab and Jammu.

This would be a very positive message for us to send for only an $11 million reduction. I would hope that my colleagues join me. I am sorry if there has been some kind of a drafting problem with this amendment, and I would hope that the gentleman from Indiana is permitted to solve that drafting problem here on the floor with some minor alteration of the text.

Mr. Chairman, I ask support for the intent of the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON).

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KNOLLENBERG), who is a member of our subcommittee.

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Chairman, I yield all along the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. CALLAHAN) for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) as I have done for the last 5 years or so.

In light of the heightened tensions in Kashmir and engagement with India, we would be sending the wrong approach at the wrong time. The gentleman from Alabama has mentioned the NGO situation. That is aside from some of the things that I want to say. It is important, obviously, but I want to say this amendment will have the inappropriate and ill-considered effect of ostracizing India at a critical point in the ongoing conflict over Kashmir.

Mr. Chairman, instead of risking further tension in the region, the United States should be actively engaged in promoting peace in the subcontinent of Asia. While the eventual resolution of the Kashmir conflict must be resolved bilaterally between India and Pakistan, the United States has an interest in facilitating meaningful negotiations between the parties. In fact, I believe so strongly in bringing peace to this region, that I have encouraged the administration to appoint a special envoy to serve as an honest broker to the conflict.

But in order to help bring a framework for peace, the U.S. must come to the table with clean hands. Supporting the Burton amendment would put the recent progress in relations between India and America at risk. Over the past year, we have seen increased dialogue on nuclear nonproliferation, a better understanding of India’s security concerns, and an increase in U.S.-India trade and investment. This improvement in U.S.-India relations should be sustained and strengthened, not put at risk.

In order to address concerns we may have about India, it is important to focus on fostering a positive and constructive dialogue. Instead, we would do the exact opposite by risking the progress we have made.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues on both sides to vote against the Burton amendment and in support of peace in Kashmir and engagement with India.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. PRICE).

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I rise again in strong opposition to the Burton amendment and ask permission to include the full text of my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. Chairman, I rise again this year to oppose the Burton amendment which would unfairly and unwisely cut foreign assistance to India. As this body has done repeatedly in the past, I urge my colleagues to reject this amendment.

Adoption of this amendment would send the wrong message at the wrong time. We have fought the amendment of a dangerous confrontation between the world’s two newest nuclear powers, India and Pakistan. Rather than praising India for the restraint it demonstrated during the recent situation in

More than 650 million citizens are expected to vote in India’s elections later this year. There is no other nation that can boast of voter participation by that many citizens, and few that can match India’s voter turnout which ranges around two-thirds of its voters.

And, there is no other nation that can boast of its economic ties to the United States in comparison to India.

U.S. business in India has grown at an astonishing rate of nearly 50 percent a year since 1991, from $500 million then, to more than $12 billion now, with the United States becoming India’s largest trading partner and largest investor.

Some one hundred of America’s Fortune 500 companies have invested in India, opened offices and plants there.

With so many large American companies that have now invested in India and opened operations there, it would be foolish to break those ties, ties that we have so diligently strived to assemble.

It is false and misdirected to say that India is not our friend.

I would remind my colleagues, Mr. Chairman, that our Government and the Government of India have negotiated on very sensitive matters of disarmament and non-proliferation.

Serious efforts have been made by our two countries to find common ground on these important security issues.

Any action by the United States to stigmatize India on inaccurate human rights allegations will likely complicate our efforts to create a lasting and meaningful friendship in a very dangerous part of the World.

It also should be noted that the aid we provide to India goes for very important projects. The aid we provide to India goes to the control of AIDS, to population control, disease control and rural development.

These are important and worthy causes, causes that not only benefit India, they benefit us and the rest of the world. We took the right position then, and we should take the right position now.

Mr. Chairman, let us as Members of Congress not view the Government of India as being callous to alleged human rights violations.

India has made great strides in their battle to bring together diverse states within its Region.

Vote NO! on the Burton Amendment.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. CLAYTON).

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Burton amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose the Burton amendment.

This amendment, whether it freezes, cuts, or caps foreign assistance to India, is a step in the wrong direction.

India’s Government is moving in the right direction, at a rapid pace to strengthen its ties with the United States and the world.

The economic and diplomatic relationship between the United States, the world’s oldest democracy, and India, the world’s largest democracy, would receive a harmful blow with successful passage of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the Government of India has been on a constant pace of change since 1991.

Indeed, the most recent State Department human rights reports praised India for the substantial progress it has made.

India has established a process to receive and resolve complaints of human rights violations.

Those complaints are investigated.

And when officials and members of security forces are found to have violated human rights, India has taken swift and sure action.

Indeed, the human rights violations that Mr. Burton alleges, no longer exist.

India is a strong and vibrant democracy, with an independent judiciary, a free press and an active voting population.
The amendment, according to the intent of the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON), would cut one-quarter of the development assistance aid to India. This would affect, of course, not only American national interests, but some of the neediest people in the world in South Asia.

Make no mistake about it, the purpose of the gentleman’s amendment is punitive. It is designed to show our displeasure and our disapproval of the government of India. But India, a nation of a billion people, is too important to American interests to threaten or to punish in order to send a message or to show a pro-Pakistan tilt. Regrettably, despite his intent to the contrary, I have to submit that the gentleman’s amendment does not serve our national interests, neither with regard to arms control nor in relationship to human rights.

It cuts off all aid except Public Law 480 Title II when it comes to humanitarian aid. Some of the most important things that we are trying to do to assist the poorest people in the world and those specifically in India in this instance would be cut off. We are talking about immunizations against communicable diseases, basic education, nutrition programs, programs relating to HIV/AIDS.

I urge opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON). India is already subject to a wide range of sanctions in accordance with Glenn Amendment to the Arms Export Control Act. As a result, all military assistance and even the commercial sale of defense articles are prohibited. All foreign assistance except humanitarian assistance has been terminated.

While this Amendment does not affect the $81 million Title II food aid provided by the United States, it does directly affect other kinds of humanitarian aid. Utilizing the waiver process, the remaining U.S. development aid program responds other non-food humanitarian aid which supports to two key U.S. national interests: (1) the global issues of population growth, infectious diseases and environmental conservation; and (2) the humanitarian concerns of alleviating poverty and supporting child survival.

This Amendment would directly affect these poverty alleviation and basis development programs. It would cut HIV/AIDS containment and cut immunizations against such communicable diseases as polio and tuberculosis. It would cut basic education and nutrition programs. The recipients of this aid, mostly poor Indian women and children, have absolutely nothing to do with their government’s nuclear proliferation, human rights or foreign trade policies. Their lives should not be further jeopardized for the sake of making a symbolic political statement.

Our national interests in South Asia go beyond poverty alleviation. With India’s and Pakistan’s successful testing of nuclear weapons, it is in our own short term and long term national security interests to bring both South Asian countries into the regime of international arms control agreements. The chances for and consequences of nuclear warfare in this very volatile region are too great to betitle American foreign assistance statements aimed at only party. In just the past few months, we have seen tension escalate to a very dangerous level due to Pakistan’s irresponsible provocations in Kashmir. The fact that India reacted in a relatively measured and internationally responsible way certainly helped contain and diffuse the conflict. While this Member does not support direct linkage between humanitarian aid and regional conflict resolution, to arbitrarily cut humanitarian assistance to India given these recent positive actions by New Delhi would, indeed, undermine the leverage we have and jeopardize our efforts to further engage India on critical nuclear proliferation issues that affect their own national security.

Human rights problems exist in India. It is appropriate to express concern about this issue. However, cutting humanitarian assistance is not an appropriate or effective way to influence human rights practices in India. On the contrary, it only punishes the poor in India, who unfortunately, are often the actual victims of human rights transgressions.

India is not our enemy. India is a friendly democracy. The United States continues to be India’s largest trade and investment partner with trade between our two countries exceeding $10 billion annually.

Deep cuts in humanitarian assistance to some of the world’s neediest people are not the way to go about addressing the gentleman’s concerns and advancing American interests. Accordingly, this member urges his colleagues to reject the Burton Amendment.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS).

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I thank the ranking member for yielding me this time. This marks the fifth year that the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) has submitted an amendment that unjustly singles out India and hopefully, the fifth year that we decide to vote it down.

The alleged claims of the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) of India’s human rights violations completely ignore the last two State Department human rights reports that praise India for its considerable progress in the human rights area.

Supporting the Burton amendment would not just weaken our dialogue with India but would undermine the strong economic relationship that both of our countries have achieved. The United States is India’s largest trading partner and largest investor. U.S. investment has grown from $500 million per year in 1991 to more than $12 billion in 1999. Many large American companies have seen the economic opportunities in India and have invested heavily there.

We clearly need to sustain and further strengthen the momentum that has been gained in U.S.-India relations. Instead of proposing legislation that merely alienates an important ally, I suggest the esteemed member from Indiana first take the time to travel to India and see its progress first-hand. Instead of proposing legislation that merely alienates an important ally, I suggest the esteemed member from Indiana first take the time to travel to India and see its progress first-hand.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to point out that there are seven multilateral and 13 bilateral donors that provide assistance to India.

The United States is the seventh largest donor after the World Bank, the Asian Development Bank, the European Union, Japan, Germany, and the United Kingdom.

So there is a lot of people that are giving money to India. But nobody is sending any kind of a message to them that Indian troops am to clean up their act as far as the human rights tragedies that are going on.

Christians are dying in Nagaland. Dalits, the blacks in India, are being persecuted and are dying because of Indian repression, because of the caste system. In Punjab, Sikhs are dying and being tortured. In Kashmir, women are being gang raped and men are being tortured and dying. People are going to jail without proper judicial proceedings.

We ought to at least send a signal. That is all we are saying. They are getting money from all over the world. A signal. The signal is going to be sent tonight whether we pass this amendment or not because we are talking about it.

The Indian ambassador came to me and did not want me to introduce this amendment because of what is going on over there right now. But somebody said to me a little while ago, what about the signal this is sending because of the technology to Pakistan on the border between Kashmir and Pakistan or India and Pakistan?

But what about the signal that was sent when they were going to give $25 million to Iraq just the other day? When the Indian ambassador was in my office, they were planning to give $25 million to Iraq in violation of the U.N. embargo. Does not anybody care about that?

Do we want them to support and work with Saddam Hussein? They said they are planning to work with him in developing oil fields in southern Iraq. Saddam Hussein has not changed. He is a terror to that entire region. He is a blot on the world. India says they want to help them. Let us help them, not hurt them.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of India and against the Burton amendment.

Today, India is the world's largest democracy with 950 million people. For half a century India has struggled to overcome colonialism, religious and ethnic conflicts and all of the problems of underdevelopment.

India has made tremendous progress in trying to address its human rights problems. India has instituted a process to receive complaints, initiate investigations of all claims, and pass laws to take action against those officials and members of security forces that have committed human rights offenses. The Burton amendment would eliminate U.S. assistance to help sustain these achievements.

Mr. Chairman, I know that India is not a perfect country. However, and perhaps unfortunately, there are none, or at the very least, none that I am aware of. Even in our own country, one whose democracy is much older, one that is more technologically advanced, we are still trying to form a more perfect union and so is India.

So why, why reduce or cut funding to the world's largest democracy? Why cut funds to a nation that is working hard and struggling to pull itself out of the depths of poverty and despair? Why cut back and or cut out the progress that is being made? W.E.B. DuBois is reported to have once said, when asked about the lack of progress being made by African Americans towards becoming a part of mainstream America, DuBois is reported to have said that "a people so deprived should not be expected to race with the wind," perhaps one could say that a young democracy, like India should not be expected to progress at a much faster pace.

They are making progress in the human rights arena, but have not quite gotten there yet. They are moving in the right direction and I say, let's help and not hinder them, let us support and not oppose them, let us fund and not cut them.

Mr. Chairman, I have lived long enough to understand the African proverb that says when elephants fight it is the grass that suffers, in this case it is the people, 950 million of them. Today let us make a stand for the 950 million people who need our help.

Do we want them to support and not oppose them, let us fund and not cut them.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 1⁄2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MCCOLLUM).

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the Burton amendment this evening, as I have done several times over. A very similar amendment to make the same type of point was defeated in 1997 by a vote of 82 to 342 in this House, and I would hope that this House's parameters would be defeated by a similarly wide margin.

The reason I feel this way and so strongly is because it is our national security interest for the United States to have a strong relationship with India.

We do not need to be showing the kind of vote that a vote for this amendment would do right now when we are having the best relationships we have ever had with India in the entire history of the two countries; at a time when India is sharing a common fight with us against terrorism, terrorism spawned by radical Islamists in that region of the world which do terrorist acts, not only in India, but all over the world, and particularly against our interests in many parts and maybe against us ourselves; at a time when China is a growing presence that we are not quite sure of and India provides a democratic ballast in that part of the world.

Mr. Chairman, I have lived long enough to realize that a vote for the Burton amendment would be defeated by a similarly wide margin.

I personally have spoken with the Indian ambassador within the past week, and I am very aware that the activity level involving the question of the aid to Iraq is fully within the United Nations' purview, and it says so in its most current report.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Burton amendment. There is nothing involved about human rights that has not been hashed over before. The reality is, yes, there are human rights violations; but the reality is our State Department says it is improving, and it says so in its most current report.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS).

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON). interest in checking that potential aggression than the promotion of a stable, secure, and democratic India.

As the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Davis) just said, no, India is not perfect. No one is. But India is essential to the future long-term interests of the United States.

This amendment takes us in the wrong direction. It should be defeated.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the logic of some of the arguments tonight kind of eludes me. One of my colleagues was talking about India being such an essential ingredient in world peace and, for that reason, we ought to do everything we can to work with them.

The logic that we have used with China is that China is so big, and they are a nuclear power, we have to stay engaged with them. We cannot criticize them. We cannot do anything but appease them because it might lead to a conflict down the road. As a result, we accept things like nuclear espionage; we accept things like illegal campaign contributions coming to the United States.

Attitudes of appeasement usually do not lead to a solution. They lead to a conflict. We saw that in World War II when Lord Chamberlain went to Munich.

All I can say is we are not talking about destabilizing or causing a problem in India right now. What we are talking about is sending a message to them. We are talking about sending a message to them that human rights violations, that gang rapes by Indian soldiers who are occupying, imposing martial law on Kashmir and Punjab will not be tolerated. I am not saying sever relations with India. I am not saying that we should not do business with India, trade with India. I am saying we should send them a strong signal like we should send to China. We do not want espionage from China. We do not want them stealing our nuclear secrets in our nuclear labs. We do not want them trying to influence our elections, like we do not try to influence theirs. We do not want India to violate human rights, or China.

So we should send signals to those countries around the world where that occurs. We are supposedly the superpower. We are supposedly the moral compass in this world. If we are the moral compass, then at least send a signal to them.

If we cut off just $11 million, and we did vote for that one year. We did pass that one year not too long ago, because I do remember debating Steven Solarz on this subject. I think sending that signal was the reason that India unleashed all of its resources that they possibly could to lobby this body so that we would not ever do it again.

They evidently have been fairly successful. But, the feeling I have is that is so strong and the reason I bring this up year after year is because I cannot go to sleep at night when I know that there are gang rapes taking place, people being tortured, people being put in jail for no good reason other than they do not like what is going on when we are supposed to be the people who really believe in freedom, democracy, and human rights.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. Owens).

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the debate for the last 10 minutes, and I am appalled by the fact that the debate is taking place without any real examination of the question of Kashmir.

I have heard the various reasons that the gentleman has given for sending a signal to India, but the reason that all of us should be concerned about sending a signal to India is that the Kashmir bind that we have been in for almost 50 years is caused by the fact that India refuses to accept the simple route of Democratic self-determination for Kashmir.

Kashmir is a large body of people who ought to have the right to vote as to what they want to do, whether they want to be independent or join Pakistan, or maybe we will even let India cross that off and do not have annexation to Pakistan on the agenda. Let them vote either to join India or to become an independent state. They will not even agree to that.

If Kashmir were located in Europe or in Yugoslavia, we would all be concerned about the denial of self-determination by the people of Kashmir. It has gone on for decades now and nobody seems to care about the fact that the world’s largest democracy, and India likes to call itself the world’s largest democracy, and I applaud democracy in India, but it has great limitations and it is totally blind when it comes to democracy for Kashmir. Kashmir is not permitted to exercise the simple right to vote.

Now we have a situation where the situation has escalated because these two powers, which dispute about a number of things but mainly about Kashmir, are now nuclear powers. They are nuclear powers. And I hate to say, but as new nuclear powers or amateur nuclear powers, they may rush into something and cause havoc in that part of the world. And of course, once we start using nuclear weapons, we have a problem with the atmosphere, we have a problem with the ashes being blown and radioactivity, all kinds of things can be set up between Kashmir where Pakistan and India.

I think that if we remove Kashmir as a point of contention between India and Pakistan, we would take a giant step toward promoting peace in that part of the world and toward avoiding a catastrophe which would pull in many other nations.

Now, I was all in favor of doing what we did in Kosovo, because I thought it was important to establish a new moral order and to send a message to predators like Slobodan Milosevic. But India does not have any evil person we can personally in the case of Kashmir. But they have a long-term policy, a long-term policy of just denying the right to self-determination to the people of Kashmir. Who can justify that? And why not send a signal to India? Why not do something?

I do not hear the United Nations debating it. I do not hear anybody proposing a sense of the Congress resolution. Why are we ignoring the problem of Kashmir? Why do we let it go on and on for decades? Are we waiting for an explosion? Are we waiting for something more serious that we will be drawn into? Are we waiting when we will be forced to take sides because of geopolitics, that China may be on one side, therefore we have to get on the other side? Why do we not proceed with a simple nonviolent solution.

People have said we should not have gone into Kosovo with bombs; we should have gone into Kosovo with NATO; we should have had a non-violent solution. Here is an opportunity for a non-violent solution. And India, as a nation, has always been in favor of nonviolence in many instances. Gandhi was the founder of the whole nonviolent movement. Why do we not send a signal to India that we would like to see them change their ways and let Kashmir have a vote on self-determination. Any signal would be helpful.

I certainly will support the gentleman’s amendment, because nothing else is being done.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. Stearns).

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of my good friend the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Burton).

Without question, the U.S. relationship with India has been undergoing tremendous improvements in the last decade. With the rising influence of Communist China over Asia, it is in the vital national security interest of the United States to solidify our friendship and cooperation with India.

Not only is India directly threatened by the belligerent government in China, Pakistan gave military assistance to a band of terrorists who crossed into Indian territory of Kashmir and began a military assault.

The Indian military responded with equal force to demonstrate their military integrity. India was praised for demonstrating restraint and confined its military activities to re-capturing its territory that was occupied by Pakistani-backed military forces. By adopting a
Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I inquire as to the time remaining?

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Chairman, I think his differences with the Indian people, especially those who are in need of the aid.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire as to the time remaining?

Mr. HOLST. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I rise in opposition to the Burton amendment as I have in the past.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLST).

Mr. HOLST. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I rise in opposition to the Burton amendment as I have in the past.

As in the past, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) has cited human rights abuses in India as the reason for his legislative initiative. While human rights abuses have been uncovered in India, it is important to note the significant progress that India has made in addressing human rights problems.

As noted in the State Department's human rights report on India, India is addressing its human rights problems because it is a democracy, as noted, the world's largest. Although the country has confronted many challenges since gaining independence in 1947, it has stayed true to its founding principles.

For 50 years, India has been striving to build a civil society, to institutionalize democratic values of free expression and religion, and to find strength in the diversity of its land and its people, despite such things as outside insurgents in Kashmir.

I do not see why we would want to jeopardize this humanitarian aid. With the threat of a cooling and disengagement in the case, I think his differences with the independent National Human Rights Commission.

As many of my colleagues know, this is the world's largest democracy. Elections have been held in this country in a fair manner and they have made tremendous strides towards their democracy. In 1997, in the State of Punjab open and democratic elections were held and there was a 67 percent turnout. Elections in India are regular. They are contested by numerous parties and scrutinized by a free press.

Later this year, India will conduct the largest exercised democracy in the world. More than 250 million people are expected to vote. More than 100 national and regional political parties will be participating in the elections. India maintains an independent judiciary, a free press, and diverse political parties. The India press corps actively investigates human rights abuses on a regular basis.

So I understand my colleague. Every year he comes to the House floor and offers this amendment. But in this case, I think his differences with the government of India should not harm the Indian people, especially those who are in need of the aid.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York (Mr. ACKERMAN) has 6 1/2 minutes remaining, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) has 1/2 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. CALLAHAN) has 4 1/2 minutes remaining.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLST).

Mr. HOLST. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I rise in opposition to the Burton amendment as I have in the past.

We have had India attacked for spending money on its own defense and yet it is subject to attack by the Pakistani army in an action of aggression as Kashmir. And just as importantly, China, one of the world's emerging powers, occupies a small part of India's territory.

We have had talk of the Iraqi potential loan, and yet that loan would go through only with the approval of the U.N. Security Council, which has a veto on that committee.

We are told that India should just allow Kashmir to secede, but there have already been elections in Kashmir.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is the wrong approach at the wrong time. In the wake of the recent Pakistani incursion across the line of control, the U.S. and India have a new opportunity to build a broad-based relationship. Instead of applauding India for the admirable restraint shown in the recent Kashmir crisis, this amendment would punish India by cutting crucial humanitarian assistance.

The Burton amendment would substantially cut critical U.S. humanitarian aid to India. These programs limit the spread of HIV/AIDS, improve access to reproductive health services, and provide supplemental feeding and basic health services to mothers and children.

A similar amendment was defeated in 1997 by a vote of 342–82. No similar amendment was offered in 1998.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I will not object if we do that after the closing statements.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his request.

The gentleman from New York (Mr. ACKERMAN) has 6 1/2 minutes remaining.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I think we are seeing a rather unique occurrence here on the floor today. Indeed, we usually enjoy doing battle with the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Burton). He sometimes is really a lone warrior on this issue, the overwhelming majority of the House of Representatives voting against his amendment. But, nonetheless, we have never come to the point where we have forced him into a full retreat on the floor of the House, and that is too bad, because we do appreciate hearing his point of view, in the minority though it might be.

The gentleman’s amendment is being withdrawn because it is flawed, as is his logic, as are his arguments. The gentleman’s intent, as it usually is, is to come to the floor, as he has time and time again, to bash India. And, indeed, the facts would indeed allow an increase in aid to be sent to India. Instead of sending a letter bomb, had his amendment passed, he would have sent a Valentine’s card.

The gentleman’s intent was basically to hurt the most vulnerable people of the Indian society. Our assistance programs help children and the elderly and pregnant women. The gentleman from Indiana comes to the floor as a champion of human rights. Does he not know that in Kashmir there is an elected government, democratically elected; a government that is under continuous assault from secessionist terrorists who are responsible for numerous serious abuses, including extrajudicial executions, torture, kidnapping and extortion?

Mr. Chairman, the fountainhead of human rights violations in Kashmir is state-sponsored terrorism from across the border in Kashmir. Just recently, I wrote a letter to the gentleman from Indiana expressing the fact that India was being victimized by an egregious invasion of forces from across the border from Pakistan. This invasion would have become a full-fledged war but for the commendable restraint shown by New Delhi. India has demonstrated to the world by any people, it would be 435 Democratic India, as violators of human rights.

India is a beacon of unity and diversity. It is a multi-ethnic, multi-lingual, multi-cultural, and multi-religious civilization with a commendable record of tolerance. This is not the time, as the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. Burton) recognizes, to bring this amendment up. It is not the time to bash India and to reward Pakistan. It is not time to punish the victims and to reward the aggressors.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, how much time do I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama (Mr. Callahan) has 4 1/2 minutes remaining.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to such點.
observation is India is the largest democracy in the world, and there are 300 million people who live in poverty in that largest democracy. And 85 percent of the monies that we appropriate in this bill goes to private, volunteer organizations who spend it on making things better for the poverty stricken people of India.

There are other monies that go to India indirectly through this committee. For example, we fund UNICEF, and we also fund indirectly the Rotary International, which is in the process today of immunizing every child in India so there will not be a polio epidemic there and we will help to eradicate it.

So I do not question the fact that the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) is concerned. I do not question his motives at all. None of us agree with any atrocities that are committed.

If we look at the situation that the gentleman from New York (Mr. OWENS) mentioned in Kosovo, the KLA is murdering people in Kosovo. Yet, within the next few months, we are going to appropriate some more money for Kosovo for humanitarian efforts.

We have already appropriated hundreds of millions of dollars already, and yet we still see the KLA now slaughtering the Serbs as they try to exit Kosovo and back into Serbia.

So it is not an indication of tolerance, it is not an indication of no concern. It is an indication of we are doing the right thing, in my opinion, by appropriating this small amount of money, of which only probably less than $3 million goes to the Government of India and it is restricted in its use.

So, in my opinion, we are doing the right thing with the money we have agreed to give to the President in order that he can handle the international affairs as he sees fit, as the Constitution says.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON).

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, let me just close by saying to my colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. ACKERMAN), that I am not in full retreat. Withdrawing the amendment was because of a technicality, and I think my good friend knows that. And we are good friends. We worked together on other issues.

But the thing that motivates me is 200,000 Christians that have died over the past 30, 40, 50 years in Nagaland; the 250,000 Sikhs that were killed in Punjab in the last 15 years; the 60,000 Muslims killed in Kashmir in the last 10 years; and the thousands of Dalits, who are lower cast people, the blacks, who are mistreated and killed in India.

Maybe we are jousting windmills here. I do not know. But we have got to do what we think is right.

So I would just like to say to my colleague, we will be back another time to fight this battle. And I am sure I will have some formidable opponents like my colleagues over there, but we will do the best we can.

Just remember what Arnold Schwarzenegger said, ‘I’ll be back.’

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I just want to understand that the gentleman from New York (Mr. BURTON), under the unanimous consent request of last Friday I believe, has the right to offer an amendment, that this being withdrawn does not give the gentleman the right to offer a different amendment, and that is not his intent.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, that is correct.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HASTINGS OF FLORIDA

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HASTINGS of Florida:

Page 116, after line 5, insert the following:

SENSE OF THE CONGRESS RELATING TO COLOMBIAN FLOWER INDUSTRY

SEC. 1. FINDINGS.—The Congress finds the following:

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds the following:

(1) The flower industry of Colombia has been recognized on several occasions by the Department of State, the Drug Enforcement Agency, and the United States Customs Service for its substantive part in reducing drug-related and other criminal activities while working closely with United States law enforcement to establish extensive anti-smuggling programs.

(2) The flower industry of Colombia has been a leader as a major private industry in reducing corruption in the commercial sector and working closely with the Colombian Government to bolster and advance its democratic initiatives.

(3) The flower industry of Colombia employs directly and indirectly approximately 125,000 people in Colombia.

(4) The flower industry of Colombia has established numerous social programs for workers and their families such as nursing care, day care, subsidized food and nutrition programs, subsidized schooling, and most recently, a program and publication dedicated to reducing intra-family violence.

(5) This publication is designed to strengthen family value and human rights among the workers of the Colombian flower sector.

(b) SENSE OF THE CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that the flower industry of Colombia should be recognized for its contributions to strengthening United States and Colombian relations by insuring strong and healthy families, domestic stability, and promoting good government in the democratic nation of Colombia.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the order of the House of Thursday, July 29, 1999, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

Mr. CALLAHAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. CALLAHAN) also seek the time in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. CALLAHAN. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman and the ranking member for their patience with this amendment. I rise today to offer the amendment to the Foreign Operations bill. The amendment is designed to recognize members of the Colombian flower industry who have worked diligently to improve the living standard of all people in Colombia.

Known by their countrymen as Growers of Flowers, these business persons have been leaders in Latin American private industry in reducing corruption in the commercial sector, while working closely with the Colombian Government to bolster and advance its Democratic initiatives.

Programs being supported and funded by Growers of Flowers include corruption reduction in the private sector, the establishment of nursing care, day care, subsidized food, nutrition, and educational programs, and a new program to eradicate domestic violence.

At this time there is scarce good news coming out of Colombia. On this past weekend, we read and saw further bombings taking place in Colombia.

The work that Growers of Flowers is voluntarily doing on the ground is, however, a bright little light.

I am offering this amendment this evening to acknowledge the contributions of Growers of Flowers, and I hope my colleagues will join me in this effort.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CALLAHAN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, continuing to reserve my point of order on the amendment, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR).

Mr. FARR of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise with concern over this amendment. The amendment expresses a sense of Congress. Colombia is in a very grave situation right now.
August 2, 1999

18959

Its 40-year-old government guerrilla struggle and the latter day antidrug struggle is over.

The Colombian flower growers have been one of its most successful enterprises in Latin America, but not without help from our country. Our country allowed Colombian flowers into this country duty free.

There is a downside to the Colombian success, the injury done to U.S. flower growers. We might note that since 1992, 50 percent of the U.S. carnation producers have left the business, 39 percent of the mini-carnation producers have left the business, 54 percent of the U.S. chrysanthemum producers have left the business, and 41 percent of the rose growers have left the business.

Well, I am here to congratulate those businesses in Colombia that are doing well. I think that the flower growers are a good example.

Let us not forget or let us not do this without remembering that there is a downside, because all of those Colombian flowers get into the United States duty free.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment. I thank the chairman and the ranking member for their indulgence.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection. The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) is withdrawn.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. TANCREDO

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Chairman. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Tancredo:

SEC. None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by this Act may be provided for the United Nations Man and the Biosphere (MAB) Program or the United Nations World Heritage Fund.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the order of the House of Thursday, July 29, 1999, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) is recognized for 5 minutes on his amendment.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment I offer today cuts nothing from the total appropriations for the Foreign Operations Appropriations, but it does prohibit any use of funds for the Man and the Biosphere Program and the World Heritage Convention.

Currently, there are 47 Biosphere Reserves and 20 World Heritage Sites in the United States that in total make up a land area the size of my home State of Colorado. Creation of these reserves and sites has significant impact on non-Federal lands outside the designated areas and in several instances has caused major problems for private land owners.

In fact, several States have passed resolutions opposing U.S. Biosphere Programs.

Over the past several years in both the United States and Australia, the weight levied by World Heritage Sites has been brought to bear by private citizens carrying out the course of their industry.

In Yellowstone National Park, the environmental impact statement for the New World Mine was not even finished when the World Heritage Committee voted to place Yellowstone on the “In Danger” list for World Heritage Sites.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment. I thank the chairman and the ranking member for their indulgence.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection. The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) is withdrawn.

came up against a similar threat by the World Heritage Committee, but this time the verdict was much more agreeable. What is ironic is that the decision was handed down in Paris.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama withdraws the point of order.

Mr. TANCREDO. A decision affecting the land of private citizens in Australia was decided by bureaucrats in a country halfway around the world. These are decisions which should be handled by the government of the country in which the action in question takes place. It should in no way be given over to an international organization with foreign influence.

Similar amendments to the one I have proposed have been passed in previous appropriations bills because these programs draw from funds of over 10 governmental agencies. This House has given, I believe, to deny funding to these two particular organizations, and I believe that we must come together again to make sure more American taxpayer money is not used for programs which do not serve the American people justly.

I believe that there are certainly better places for this funding to be spent than in UNESCO, an organization from which the United States withdrew over a decade and a half ago.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. CALLAHAN) seek to control the time in opposition?

Mr. CALLAHAN. I do seek to control the time, Mr. Chairman, but I also ask unanimous consent to give the time to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI) and give her the authority to yield as she so deems necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI) will control 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Ms. PELOSI. I thank the distinguished chairman for his generosity in yielding all the time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the very distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), the ranking member on the authorizing committee.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time in opposition to this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the World Heritage Convention is an international treaty conceived and spearheaded by the United States during the Nixon administration under which countries voluntarily identify culturally and environmentally significant areas within their own borders and promise to continue to protect them.

The program is totally voluntary. The land must be protected in order to be nominated. It is not protected after it is nominated. The only power that the World Heritage Committee has is if the country who nominated the site goes back on its promise to protect that area, the committee can drop the site from the list.

The Man and the Biosphere program identifies protected areas where scientists can study entire ecosystems and then sets up a framework where those scientists can share their information internationally.

The framework documents which control the Man and the Biosphere program and the World Heritage Convention both contain language making clear that they in no way alter the ownership or control of these lands.

Since we were the first signatory of the World Heritage Convention in 1973, 152 other nations have followed suit. This convention was not only a promise to live up to our own standards for protecting these sites, it was an invitation to other countries around the world to follow suit.

These two programs have established the United States as a world leader in environmental protection and scientific study and the sharing of that information. Killing these programs will not hurt these sites in the U.S. They are already protected and will remain so. Yellowstone and Glacier National Parks will still be national parks if we withdraw from the World Heritage Convention. The Everglades will still be protected if we stop our scientific study under the Man and the Biosphere program.

But this action will send a signal around the world that we no longer value the kind of environmental protection and scientific study that we as a Nation pioneered and asked the world to join.

We have seen this amendment a number of times in the last several years and the House has rejected this amendment each and every time because in fact a majority of the House understands the nature of the scientific study, the importance of designating these sites as World Heritage areas, and they also understand that this is a voluntary program. The fact that the process takes place in Belgium or in Paris or somewhere else, this is an international body. This is an international body. So that should not be foreign to the Members of Congress and that is one of the reasons why it is in this legislation. This is an international organization to foster the protection of these huge, huge world class environmental assets. The size of these assets is immaterial. Some of them are there because nations decided that these landscapes, these huge areas should be preserved as we did with the Everglades, as we did with Grand Canyon, as we did with Yellowstone. That is the purpose of this program. The international scientific study is there so scientists in one country can help other scientists learn about the kind of protections, about the kinds of programs that we propose to protect these environmental assets.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong, strong opposition to this amendment.

This amendment is a late-night, backdoor attempt to kill two programs that critics of these programs have been unable to kill in the light of day. Legislation to abolish the Man and the Biosphere and World Heritage Programs failed in 1996 and 1997 and looks like it may fail again this year. So we are here tonight to short circuit the process with a little amendment buried in a huge appropriations bill.

The World Heritage Convention is an international treaty, conceived and spearheaded by the United States during the Nixon administration, under which countries voluntarily identify culturally and environmentally significant areas within their own borders and promise to continue protecting them.

1. The program is totally voluntary.
2. The land must already be protected in order to be nominated, it is not protected after its nomination.
3. The only power the World Heritage Committee has is, if the country who nominated the site goes back on its promise to protect that area, the Committee can drop the site from the list.
4. The Man and the Biosphere program identifies protected areas where scientists can study entire ecosystems and then set up a framework where those scientists can share their information internationally.

The framework documents which control the Man and the Biosphere program and the World Heritage Convention both contain language making clear that they in no way alter the ownership or control of these lands.

So if these programs are so innocuous, what’s the big deal if we abandon them?

Well, since the United States was the first signatory of the World Heritage Convention in 1973, 152 other nations have followed suit. This convention was not only a promise to live up to our own standards for protecting these sites, it was an invitation to other countries around the world to follow suit.

These two programs have established the United States as a world leader in environmental protection and scientific study. Killing these programs won’t hurt these sites in the United States. They are already protected and will remain so. Yellowstone and Glacier National Park will still be national parks if we withdraw from the World Heritage Convention. The Everglades will still be protected if we stop our scientific study under the Man and the Biosphere program.

But, this action will send a signal around the world that we no longer value the kind of environmental protection and scientific study that we as a Nation pioneered and asked the world community to join.

We have seen this amendment a number of times in the last several years and the House has rejected this amendment each and every time because in fact a majority of the House understands the nature of the scientific study, the importance of designating these sites as World Heritage areas, and they also understand that this is a voluntary program. The fact that the process takes place in Belgium or in Paris or somewhere else, this is an international body. This is an international body. So that should not be foreign to the Members of Congress and that is one of the reasons why it is in this legislation. This is an international organization to foster the protection of these huge, huge world class environmental assets. The size of these assets is immaterial. Some of them are there because nations decided that these landscapes, these huge areas should be preserved as we did with the Everglades, as we did with Grand Canyon, as we did with Yellowstone. That is the purpose of this program. The international scientific study is there so scientists in one country can help other scientists learn about the kind of protections, about the kinds of programs that we propose to protect these environmental assets.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong, strong opposition to this amendment.
This amendment is an attempt to short circuit the will of the Congress and it would send a terrible signal to the rest of the world. Oppose the TANCREDO amendment.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume. The opponents of the amendment have suggested that in fact we have seen this many times before and it has been turned down by the House. In fact, the House has passed and the Congress has passed this amendment more than once on other programs, on other appropriations. I refer specifically to the State Department authorization for fiscal year 1998 and 1999, agreed to by recorded vote of 222–202. The Interior appropriations bill, fiscal year 1998, agreed to 222–203. The Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1998, all of these.

For all that Mr. Chairman, these two programs actually receive funding from a variety of different organizations and a variety of different departments, and so you have to go after them as you see them arise. That is why we had to do this before. But each time, at least in the situations that I have identified, they have been passed by this House.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume. Mr. Chairman, I will defend the committee position in opposing reluctantly the distinguished gentleman from Colorado's amendment to our bill.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is important to note that the House Committee on Appropriations mark for the IO&P account is $167 million, which is $25 million below the administration's request. An additional reduction of $2 million would erode our ability to gain international cooperation in protecting the environment and natural resources.

A $2 million reduction to the IO&P account exceeds our voluntary contribution to the Man and the Biosphere programs, $355,000, and the World Heritage Fund, $450,000. As a result, this amendment would force reductions in other worthwhile scientific and educational activities, such as the International Council of Scientific Unions at a time when we look toward science to increase our understanding of global environmental problems.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Ms. PELOSI. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for letting me interject here. The fact is that we have amended our own appropriations bill, that we do not strike any particular dollar amount, we just prevent funds from going for these two programs. It actually would go other places in the bill.

Ms. PELOSI. Reclaiming my time. I thank the gentleman. We need to make those contributions to the Man and the Biosphere program. Everything else is fully funded.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote “no” on the amendment. I commend the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) for his leadership on this issue.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

There have been a number of comments made with regard to the original treaty obligations of the United States, but concerning the Man and the Biosphere program, Congress has never gone on record either authorizing or supporting such a program to be carried out. Furthermore, many people have raised the issue as to the treaty obligation for the World Heritage Fund. This, however, is not true.

In article 16, paragraph 2 of the convention concerning the protection of world cultural and natural heritage, it states that a state may declare at the time of ratification that it shall not be bound by the provisions of paragraph 1 which deals with the payment of regular contributions to the World Heritage Fund. Likewise on October 26, 1973, the Senate consented to the ratification of the convention subject to the declaration that the United States is not bound by provisions dealing with regular contributions to the World Heritage Fund. The Senate has the power to ratify, but this House has the responsibility of the public purse. We are not bound to contribute to the program with the hard-earned money of the American people. I strongly urge support of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO).

The question was taken; and the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 283, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) will be postponed.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. KUCINICH.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Kucinich: At the end of the bill, insert after the last section (pressing the short title) the following new section:

SEC. 3. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used by the Overseas Private Investment Corporation for any category A Investment Fund project, as listed in Appendix E, Category A Projects, of the Corporation's Environmental Handbook of April 1999, as required pursuant to Executive Order 12114 and section 239(g) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 219(g)).

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the order of the House of Thursday, July 29, 1999, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH).

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama reserves a point of order.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment cuts funding to environmentally sensitive Overseas Private Investment Corporation fund projects, such as oil refineries, chemical plants, oil and gas pipelines, large scale logging projects and projects near wetlands or other protected areas. Current OPIC investment funds are not subject to any transparency requirements. Furthermore, no specific information on these projects is contained in OPIC’s annual reports.

As a consequence, Congress, the public and the residents living near OPIC projects have no knowledge of the potential environmental and related financial and political risks. What is the taxpayer’s interest in these projects?

Taxpayers are liable for OPIC investments overseas if they fail. I want to repeat that. Taxpayers are liable for OPIC investments overseas if they fail. Private corporations and investors make investments in OPIC investment funds. OPIC-supported funds, in turn, make direct equity and equity-related investments in new, expanding and privatizing companies in “emerging market” economies. While taxpayer money is not actually invested in these funds, taxpayers are liable for the investments should they fail. These funds have invested in more than 240 business projects in over 40 countries. Recent estimates show that the total amount in Investment Fund programs will soon reach $4 billion.

Since taxpayers are exposed to millions of dollars of potential liabilities, I believe OPIC has a responsibility to Congress and to the public to operate in an open and transparent manner. The lack of environmental transparency conceals environmentally destructive investment of these funds not only from Congress and the American public but also to locally affected people in the countries where OPIC projects are run.

For example, a 1996 Freedom of Information lawsuit focusing on OPIC activity in Russia revealed that an investment fund in a Russian logging project involved clear cutting of primary ancient forests in northwest Russia. Russian citizens, expecting democracy building assistance from the U.S. Government, OPIC's investment fund projects are environmentally sensitive and require stringent environmental standards. These standards are higher than any other bilateral export credit, investment or insurance agency in the world. In fact, no other investment funds program has higher standards. OPIC requires that each environmentally sensitive fund investment must undergo a complete environmental impact assessment and must meet OPIC obligations to mitigate potential environmental harm. Each OPIC fund project is subject to OPIC environmental monitoring over the life of the project. This includes the Russian forest project which has been cited and about which this Member has been informed did meet applicable World Bank Environmental Standards.

Moreover, by imposing new, additional standards on OPIC, we have already had this debate on the Andrews amendment.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, we have already had this debate on the Andrews amendment. The benefit to the claims of some OPIC opponents is that OPIC invests in environmentally sensitive programs that it is more important to hold accountable to the public than to OPIC’s public or investment projects. The ideal legislation to correct the lack of transparency in investment fund projects would require the public disclosure of environmental impact assessments conducted on all new investment projects on environmentally sensitive programs. Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that it is the intent of the gentleman to withdraw his amendment. That being the case, I will withdraw my reservation of objection and claim the opposition time.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me. So with almost $4 billion invested in these programs and OPIC's sketchy environmental record, it is ever more important that OPIC be held accountable to the public regarding its investment in environmentally sensitive projects.
I. The Kucinich amendment is a bullet to the heart of OPIC's $350-million New Africa Infrastructure Fund.

This amendment would:
- Stop the fund from investing in a majority of infrastructure projects (since many infrastructure projects are environmentally sensitive).
- Prohibit most investments in clean water, sewage treatment, transportation, electric power and other projects that improve the lives of African people.
- Undercut the fund's ability to raise the private sector matching funds.
- Make the fund uneconomic and less able to invest in women and microenterprises.

It would deny the benefits of the fund, including:
- 6,800 new jobs for Africans.
- Almost $50 million in annual revenues for the countries of sub-Saharan Africa.
- $2.5 billion in additional financing capital to Africa.
- $350 million in exports from the United States.

II. This amendment undercuts the environmental protections and new transparency built into the New Africa Infrastructure Fund.

OPIC has world-class environmental standards that apply to all OPIC programs and funds:
- All environmentally sensitive projects must undergo a complete environmental impact assessment.
- The New Africa Infrastructure Fund projects will provide for public notice and public comment period in the host country.
- All environmentally sensitive projects must meet OPIC requirements to mitigate potential environmental harm.
- All environmentally sensitive projects are subject to OPIC environmental monitoring over the life of a project.

The New Africa Infrastructure Fund must have at all times an environmental management system and a full-time qualified environmental expert supervising the implementation of OPIC requirements.

III. The amendment would jeopardize investments in projects as well as many basic services in sub-Saharan Africa.

These funds:
- Will provide for public notice and public comment period in the host country.
- All environmentally sensitive projects will be subject to OPIC environmental monitoring over the life of a project.
- The New Africa Infrastructure Fund must have at all times an environmental management system and a full-time qualified environmental expert supervising the implementation of OPIC requirements.
- The amendment would jeopardize investments by two other OPIC-supported Africa funds totaling $270 million.

These funds:
- Would be prohibited from investments in many manufacturing, agricultural, and processing projects as well as many basic services in sub-Saharan Africa.
- Will generate more than $300 million in US exports (estimated).
- Will create an estimated 5000 African jobs.
- The amendment would harm, rather than help, the environment in Africa.
- From OPIC funds would be prohibited from any environmentally sensitive investment.
- Some infrastructure projects will be stranded with no obligation or requirement to meet OPIC's world-class environmental standards.
- Africa will lose the benefit of OPIC's world-class standards being applied to a broad range of infrastructure, manufacturing and natural resource projects.
- This amendment will undermine OPIC's ability to fulfill its commitment to create another $150 million fund for Africa as called for in the House-passed Africa Growth and Opportunity Act.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—HOUSE 18963

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH) is withdrawn.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. STEARNS

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEARNS:

Page 116, after line 5, insert the following: REPORT ON ATROCITIES AGAINST ETHNIC SERBIANS IN KOSOVO

SEC. ___. None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by this Act in title III under the heading "Peacekeeping Operations" may be otherwise expended for peacekeeping operations in the Kosovo province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) until the Secretary of State prepar[es] and submits to the Congress a report containing a detailed description of the atrocities that have been committed against ethnic Serbians in Kosovo, including a description of the incident in which 14 Serbian farmers were killed on or about July 25, 1999, and a description of actions taken by North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) forces in Kosovo to prevent further atrocities.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the order of the House of Thursday, July 29, 1999, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the request of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STEARNS), the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts also reserves a point of order.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS).

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I come here tonight, Mr. Chairman, just to request a simple study. None of the funds that are appropriated under this act, under the title "peacekeeping operations," they should not be obligated or expended for peacekeeping operations in Kosovo, province of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, until the Secretary of State prepares and submits to this Congress a report containing a detailed description of the atrocities that have been committed in this case against the Serbians in Kosovo.

Thirty-four churches, Mr. Chairman, have been bombed since the Air Force, since NATO has stopped their bombing exercise and we declared that we won the war, and of course recently 14 Serbian farmers were massacred on or about July 25, 1999; and my point this evening is that we are going to appropriate more money for peacekeeping... operations will amount to nothing if the perpetrators of these and other crimes are not brought to justice. This report on atrocities committed against the Serbs including the July 25 massacre is necessary if the NATO-led peacekeeping force intends to prevent any further atrocities from happening in Kosovo.

Again, I support this important amendment, and I ask my colleagues to join me in voting for the Stearns amendment; and again I think we are all concerned about events in Kosovo. We are all concerned about what happened to the Kosovar Albanians. Let justice be consistent, and let us also be concerned about what is happening to the Serbians.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the case for the Stearns amendment is well presented by the gentleman from Florida. I think the case has been made that we need to ensure accountability for the atrocities committed against the Serbs.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I still reserve my point of order. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would like to enter into a colloquy with the gentleman from Florida. Mr. STEARNS speaks of concerns about the atrocities committed against the Serbs in Kosovo. The gentleman speaks of the need to bring justice to those responsible. I think we both agree that justice is necessary. But I think we have come to a point where we need to take action to ensure it.

The United States cannot tolerate the slaughter of Serbs. They are faced with the same problem, the same philosophy, the same circumstances, but in the reverse of the Kosovars; and we cannot tolerate that, and we must insist with the administration at some point, which I think I can do that as chairman of this subcommittee, of accountability. Give us the full story of what is taking place there. How can we continue to tolerate this? Or how can we continue not to speak out so openly against the same atrocities that led this Congress to appropriate the millions of dollars that we sent to Kosovo and the front-line states.

So I share my colleagues' concerns, but I still reserve my point of order.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAHAN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is absolutely correct. And I am sure the gentleman is well aware of the fact that another, that other action has granted $20 million for security for Kosovo, and with the KLA being in charge of the province, it raises questions as to whether or not that money would actually be for the Serbs or secured for the Serbs, or securing the interests of the KLA.

So I thank the gentleman for expressing his concern that was raised by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS), and I appreciate the gentleman's sentiments.

Organizing Gangs Run Kosovo

(30) reports that 30 people a week are being killed in Kosovo as organized gangs take advantage of the U.N.'s failure to police the province. Kosovo spokesman Janko Seda admitted yesterday a "law and order vacuum" has been created by a long delay in deploying U.N. civil administrators and an expected 3,000-strong police force. But the war-torn province was not yet out of control.

Western diplomats in Pristina say gangs, some of which are suspected of having links to the Kosovo Liberation Army, are taking apart, real estate, businesses, fuel supplies and cars from Kosovo Albanians and Serbs, who have little recourse to justice.

A British K-For official in Pristina said: "UNMIK (the U.N. interim administration) is unprepared to take over law and order. In the absence of police and legitimate rules, a vacuum has occurred."

"That vacuum is being filled by organized crime. Albanian gangs are inviting Kosovo Serbs to leave their apartments in fear for their lives." The Serbian K-For commander, General Fritz von Koriff, said his soldier stop cars to search for weapons and frequently come across smuggled items, such as massive amounts of cigarettes, particularly at the Morina-Kukes border crossing. But NATO's mandate does not permit his soldiers to confiscate any item except weapons, and the police are permitted to keep their loot if it is believed they are from the province.

One of the biggest problems involving gangs is that they are targeting homes to claim ownership and threatening to beat those who refuse to move out.

No statistics are available on the number of property seizures, but anecdotal evidence suggests a growing problem. And, while initially it seemed that seizures were ethnically motivated, and targeted at Kosovo Serbs in the capital Pristina, increasingly Kosovo Albanians are victims as well.

Kosovo's provisional prime minister, KLA leader Hashim Thaci, said his organization was behind seizures of Kosovo Serb apartments. "We have no such information. We know there are those who have left Kosovo, but we have not forced anybody to leave, or put pressure on them to leave. That is propaganda. Any one who has not committed crimes is free to live in Kosovo."

"According to a U.N.源泉, who asked not to be identified, intelligence suggests there are three main types of organized criminal gangs in Kosovo: Russian, Albanian and those linked with the KLA. Some analysts suggest that the seized apartments and other looted goods are the KLA's way of paying debts to arms procurers, funders and important soldiers and commanders."

U.N. officials deny the organization's slowness is responsible for Kosovo's growing

Mr. OLLER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me, and I also would like to associate myself with the comments that have been made by the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee. There is no question that there is no shortage of hatred in Kosovo these days, and I would just point out that the first sizable delegation of Members of the Congress was led by the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Military Construction, of which I serve as the ranking member; and we saw the attempt on the part of American forces there, having detained some 10 or so Serbian Kosovars and some, almost 30, Albanian Kosovars for a variety of actions, but there are no courts in Kosovo to send those actions to, actions of looting and arson and, in fact, murder. In this instance, the 14 Serbian farmers, and one can surely not condone that kind of activity, already three people have been arrested for that. On the other hand, there have been no arrests and may well never be. In fact, the perpetrators out of the Yugoslavian armed forces are probably quite free and among the elite of the Serbian people which are diametrically opposed to Mr. Milosevic. So we do have some people in Serbia who deserve some attention, some respect because they did not agree with Mr. Milosevic, but in any event the gentleman’s point is taken. I hope he will withdraw it, and if so, I will remove my point of order.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, and I will withdraw it. I just would like to make a final argument here.

In this particular instance, the 14 Serbian farmers has touched upon it, and my good colleague from Ohio has touched upon it when he mentions the word “accountability.” We need to take taxpayers’ money and help people; I understand that. But in the overall understanding of this project, we need to have accountability for the taxpayers’ money, how it is being spent.

So with that in mind, and I am hopeful that the chairman will consider part of what I have in report language, if not at least to make the attempt to tell the administration that money will not be given, taxpayers’ money will not be given until there is full accountability in this case and that we have balance and fairness.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Before, Mr. Chairman, I had forgotten I told the gentleman from Massachusetts that I would yield to him. Whatever time remaining I have on my point of order, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. OLVER) is recognized for 2 minutes.
move forward and give their people peace and tranquillity should be applauded. The Ethiopia-Eritrea conflict has substantially damaged the economic growth and development of the countries and has led to humanitarian suffering on both sides of the border.

For 30 years, a problem dividing Ethiopia and Eritrea was Eritrea’s claim that its people have a right to self-determination. In 1991, this long and costly struggle ended through a coalition built to topple the Ethiopian dictatorship that was not acceptable to either country. For 7 years of peace, both neighbors pursued paths of economic and social development to give rise to the very idea of renaissance, establishing a path to economic growth and a better quality of life for the people.

The border dispute that ignited hostilities has smothered any confidence that things would be really better. The war has taken a vicious toll on the people in the countries. The number of casualties are almost surreal. We have seen reports of over 120,000 victims within 3 or 4 days of fighting. Individual border battles have involved over 90,000 soldiers fighting from various fronts. In Eritrea the army is estimated to be over 250,000 soldiers, men and women, a huge drain on a population of 3.5 people.

That is why I brought to the attention of this Congress my desire for a sense of Congress to acknowledge the movement, the progress, that has been made, the fact that the OAU agreement has been accepted or at least has been moved on and as well that there are efforts toward trying to resolve this.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from New York, the Chairman of the Committee on International Relations.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I share the gentlewoman’s concerns that Ethiopia and Eritrea, two fine countries that have already suffered too many years of communist dictatorship, have spent 14 months at war with one another, and the loss has been tragic. We are hopeful now that there is a cease-fire, that they will implement the ceasefire and return to peace. I want to commend the gentlewoman for calling the Congress’ attention to this important region of the world.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I share the gentlewoman’s concern about the war in Ethiopia and Eritrea, and I too am optimistic that the war between these two nations will soon be ending. I remind Members that bin Laden has long utilized Sudan as a terrorist training ground. In fact, Sudan served as a safe-harbor for the bin Laden terrorists who blew up the U.S. embassies in Tanzania and in Kenya. But I sincerely hope that the gentlewoman would withdraw her amendment. I do not want to insist on my point of order, but I must insist if the gentlewoman does not choose to withdraw it.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAHAN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. If the chairman would allow me just to summarize, then I would like to ask unanimous consent upon my summary to withdraw this amendment.

I appreciate very much the chairman of the Committee, the chairman of the Committee on International Relations and their ranking members for their kind words and agreement with me on the importance of this issue.

Let me close by simply saying that we have at least the makings of the potential of an opportunity for peace. The de facto cease-fire and the work of the government of Algeria in aiding the negotiations between Eritrea and Ethiopia should also be recognized, and hopefully the Congress will continue to monitor this circumstance to avoid the loss of life and certainly in tribute to my predecessor, Mickey Leland and his efforts in Ethiopia, and love for mankind we can monitor the circumstances there.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I share the gentlewoman’s concerns that Ethiopia and Eritrea, two fine countries that have already suffered many years of communist dictatorship, have spent 14 months at war with one another.

I am very hopeful that they will implement the ceasefire and return to peace.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Texas?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT NO. 9 OFFERED BY MR. PAUL

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 9 offered by Mr. PAUL:

At the end of the bill, insert after the last section (preceding the short title) the following:

LIMITATION ON FUNDS FOR ABORTION, FAMILY PLANNING, OR POPULATION CONTROL EFFORTS

SEC. 4. None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by this Act may be made available for—

(1) population control or population planning programs;

(2) family planning activities; or

(3) abortion procedures.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the order of the House of Thursday, July 29, 1999, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama will control the time in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to transfer my 5 minutes to thegentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), and that she may yield said time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment is straightforward. It prohibits the use of any money for population control, family planning, or abortion of any funds authorized in this bill, appropriated in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, the question really is this: Should the American taxpayer be required to pay for birth control pills, IUDs, Depo-Provera, Norplant, condom distribution, as well as abortion in foreign countries. Those who believe this is a proper and legitimate function will vote against the amendment. Those who believe that it is not a proper function for us to be doing these things around the world would vote for my amendment.
Mr. Chairman, I mention abortion because although this bill does not authorize funds directly for abortion, any birth control program that is involved in a family planning clinic can very easily shift those funds and perform abortions. So this is very, very clear-cut.

I would like to spend a minute though on the authority that is cited for doing such a thing. Under the House rules, the committee is required to at least cite the constitutional authority for doing what we do on each of our bills. Of course, I was curious about this, because I was wondering whether this could be general welfare. This does not sound like the general welfare of the U.S. taxpayer, to be passing out condoms and birth control pills and forcing our will on other people, imposing our standards on them and forcing our taxpayers to pay. That does not seem to have anything to do whatsoever with the general welfare of this country.

Of course, the other clause that is generally used in our legislation is the interstate commerce clause. Well, it would be pretty tough, pretty tough, if you are going to apply fungibility, you have a discussion on this subject. If you are going to shift those funds and perform abortion procedures. That is the law of the land. We reiterate it every time we do here. I do not know why all of a sudden, if we spend this money, then the organizations that use this money but also perform abortions have this underwriting, or the money is fungible, and, therefore, we are supporting abortions. I think that unless we are full well that no funds may be used for abortion procedures. That is the law of the land. We reiterate it every time we have a discussion on this subject. If you are going to apply fungibility, you would have to apply it to everything we do here. I do not know why all of a sudden when it comes to international family planning, fungibility becomes a principle, but when we are dealing with the defense bill or any other appropriations, we never say that giving money for that, or the other purpose helps that country underwrite some practices that we might not approve of.

The amendment would end a more than 30-year-old program recognized as the most successful components of U.S. foreign assistance. Tens of millions of couples, Mr. Chairman, in the developing world are using family planning as a direct result of this program, and the average number of children per family has fallen more than one-third since the 1960's.

Three out of four Americans surveyed in 1995 wanted to increase or maintain spending on family planning for poor countries. I was, this year, in India and saw what happened in those states where they have effective family planning as opposed to what was the plight of the people in areas where the women did not have access to this family planning information.

So I believe that this amendment would be contrary to the interests and values of the vast majority of the people in the world, and certainly, speaking in our own terms, of the American people. In February 1997, both the House and the Senate showed their commitment to the USAID International Family Planning Program by voting for the early release of funds specifically for this program.
the abortion issue to talk about fungibility and I believe that she is correct. I think it should apply to ev-everything. This is the reason I do strongly oppose Export-Import Bank money going to Red China. Their violations of civil liberties and abortions are good reasons why we should not do it, and yet they are the greatest recipient of foreign aid from the Exim Bank. $5.9 billion they have received over the years.

So I would say, yes, the gentlewoman is correct. All of these programs are fungible. And I agree that the wording in the bill says that our funds cannot be used. But when we put our funds in with other funds, all of the sudden they are in a pool and they can shift them around and there is a real thing called fungibility.

So once we send money to a country for any reason, we endorse what they do. Therefore, we should be rather cautious. As a matter of fact, if we were cautious enough we would not be in the business of taking money at the point of a gun from our American taxpayer, doing things that they find abhorrent around the world and imposing our will and our standards on them.

Mr. Chairman, birth control methods are not perfectly safe. As a gynecologist, I have seen severe complications from the use of IUDs and Depo-Provera and Norplant. Women can have strokes with birth control pill. These are not benign.

And my colleagues say we want to stop the killing and abortions, but every time that the abortion is done with fungible funds, it is killing a human being, an innocent human being. So for very real reasons, if we were serious about stopping this and protecting the American taxpayer, there is nothing wrong with some of these goals. I agree. As a gynecologist, I would agree with the goals, but they should not be done through coercion. They should be done through voluntary means through churches and charities. That is the way it should be done.

Mr. Chairman, we do not have the authority to coerce our people to work hard, pay their taxes, and then take the money into foreign countries and impose our will on them.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for debate has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes ap-ppeared to have it.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolutions 263, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MS. JACKSON-LEE OF TEXAS

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

The amendment offered by Ms. Jackson-LEE of Texas: Page 116, after line 5, insert the following:

Sec. 2. (a) Of the amounts made available in title III under the account "INTER-

ATIONAL MILITARY EDUCATION AND TRAIN-

ING", $4,000,000 made available for the United States Army School of the Americas is transferred as follows:

(1) $2,000,000 is transferred to the account "ECONOMIC SUPPORT FUND" in title II and made available for providing training and education of Tibetans in democracy activities and for monitoring the human rights situatation in Tibet.

(2) $2,000,000 is transferred to the account "UNITED STATES EMERGENCY REFUGEE AND MI-GRATION ASSISTANCE" in title II and made available for the Tibetan refugee program.

Of the funds appropriated in this Act in title II under the account "ECONOMIC SUP-PORT FUND", not less than $2,250,000 shall be made available for providing training and education of Tibetans in democracy activities and for monitoring the human rights situatation in Tibet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, in actuality I wish I did not have to rise to the floor to offer this amendment. I wish that Tibet was living in peace and harmony. I wish the Dalai Lama who is in exile, who I had an opportunity to meet and discuss these issues with, was free to go back to Tibet.

My amendment offers to provide $4 million to the Economic Support Fund to provide training and education of Tibetans in democracy activities and for monitoring the human rights situation in Tibet made worse by the activities of China. In addition, we would offer additional funds to be of assistance to the Tibetan refugee program.

Mr. Chairman, there is a need for something to be done. As we recently remembered the 30th anniversary of the Tiananmen Square tragedy, we continue to acknowledge the human rights abuses imposed by the Chinese government. Whether on the mainland or other areas, the Chinese have shown themselves to be opposed to the basic human rights principles we all aspire to achieve.

The Chinese have tripled their missile threat to Taiwan. China does not understand they cannot force a free and democratic Taiwan to unify and that they should accept its existence.

The continued population transfer of Chinese to Tibet threatens the existence of the unique national, cultural, and religious identity of the Tibetan people. The fragile Tibetan plateau is seriously threatened by the exploitation of its environmental resources by coercive birth control policies, including forced abortion and sterilization, are continuing to wipe out the Tibetan people. It is important that the Chinese recognize them in their efforts, encourage them in democracy, encourage them in being able to monitor the various human rights abuse.

Indeed, when in 1989 the Dalai Lama, leader of the Tibetan people, received the Nobel peace prize, the international community documented its commitment to free Tibet. There are 110,000 Tibetan refugees living in 53 settlements in India, Nepal and Bhutan. Over 1.2 million Tibetans have died in a widespread program of imprisonment torture and executions orchestrated by China.

Tibet’s unique culture and Buddhist religion have been systematically suppressed as China has looted Tibet’s enormous mineral wealth, natural resources, and priceless art treasures, in order to fuel its own economic growth.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to congratulate the Committee on International Relations for its removal of $8 million from the World Bank to avoid this so-called apartheid system where there was a movement of 50,000 Chinese farmers into Tibet creating almost an apartheid system where the Tibetans would not have the good jobs or opportunities, but the Chinese would.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment which will take $4 million out of the fund which contains the Foreign Ops funding for the School of the Americans, and redistribute it to the Economic Support Fund and the Emergency Refugee and Migrations Assistance Funds for specific use in Tibet.

As we recently remembered the 10th anniversary of the Tiananmen Square tragedy we continue to acknowledge the human rights abuses imposed upon the people by the Chinese government. Whether on the mainland or in other areas, the Chinese have shown themselves to be opposed to the basic human rights principles we all aspire to achieve.

The Chinese have tripled their missile threat to Taiwan. China does not understand they cannot force a free and democratic Taiwan to unify and that they should accept Taiwan as a friendly and independent neighbor and establish diplomatic ties.

And we all still watch as China continues its occupation of Tibet. Since 1951, when the People's Republic of China invaded Tibet hundreds of thousands of Tibetans have been killed outright or died as the result of aggression, torture or starvation. Over 6,000 monasteries and temples have been destroyed. China has implemented a consistent pattern of suppression in an attempt to eradicate the Tibetan way of life.

The continued population transfer of Chinese to Tibet threatens the existence of the unique national, cultural and religious identity of the Tibetan people.

The fragile Tibetan plateau is seriously threatened by the exploitation of its environmental resources by China.

The Tibetan people have demonstrated repeatedly for independence from China. Their struggle is nonviolent and worthy of special attention. Indeed, when in 1989, the Dalai Lama, the leader of the Tibetan people, received the Nobel Peace Prize the international community documented its commitment to a free Tibet.

There are about 110,000 Tibetan refugees living in 53 settlements in India, Nepal and Bhutan. Over 1.2 million Tibetans have died in a widespread program of imprisonment, torture and executions orchestrated by China.

Tibet's unique culture and Buddhist religion have been systematically suppressed as China has looted Tibet's enormous mineral wealth, destroyed sacred places and priceless art treasures, transporting them back to China to fuel its own economic growth.

An apartheid system is in place, following the mass migration of Chinese into Tibet. These immigrants now dominate the economy and hold all the best jobs. Employment prospects for Tibetans are virtually nonexistent.

Coercive birth control policies, including enforced abortion and sterilization, are completing the policies of wiping out Tibet's identity forever. We watch China, the world's most oppressive police state, control Tibet. There are between a quarter and half a million Chinese troops in Tibet. Tibetans are liable to interrogation, imprisonment and torture for having unofficial contact with foreigners.

Tibet covers an area the size of Western Europe and is the world's highest plateaus. The Culture is magnificent and unique. Until 1950, Tibet had retained that ancient culture.

My amendment would offer additional hope to the Tibetan people that the international community, particularly the United States is supportive of their independence and that we are providing resources for improved systems and enhancement of aid programs.

The United States Army School of the Americas will have $4 million of its appropriations transferred to a true democratic cause. Our current military training and education to the armed forces in Latin America has at best led to questionable practices by its graduates. We want democracy. We want to see our funds used to support the development of democracies. The Tibetans want democracy. Some graduates of the School of the Americas have not demonstrated such a commitment.

Graduates of the United States Army School of the Americas include some of the worst human rights abusers in the Western Hemisphere, including 19 Salvadoran soldiers linked to the 1989 murder of six Jesuit priests and their housekeeper and her daughter. Two of the three officers cited by the Guatemalan archbishop's office are suspected of the killing of anthropologist Myrna Mack in 1992, as well as three officers among the notorious Guatemalan military intelligence unit D—2 were graduates of the School of the Americas.

One-half of the 247 Colombian army officers cited in the definitive work on Colombian human rights abuses, El Terrorismo de Estado en Colombia, in 1992 were graduates of this School.

Ten of the 30 Chilean officers against whom a Spanish judge in 1998 requested indictments for crimes of terrorism, torture and disappearance as well as the El Salvador death squad leader Roberto D'Aubuisson graduated from the School of the Americas.

Two of the three killers of Archbishop Oscar Romero of El Salvador and 10 of the 12 officers responsible for the murder of 900 civilians in the El Salvadoran village El Mozote are graduates.

And the most notorious for us, three of the five officers involved in the 1980 rape and murder of four United States churchwomen El Salvador graduated from the School of the Americas.

Reducing funding for this School does not prevent the United States from providing appropriate training for military personnel of Latin American armed forces. It is conceivable that by our actions a better military training and education program can be developed. With a most improved screening process for potential students, including the people of Tibet.

I urge you to support my amendment for democracy.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. Gilman), chairman of the Committee on International Relations. And, of course, the gentleman from New York (Mr. Gilman), chairman of the authorizing committee, has been a champion on the Tibet issue for one day.

Mr. Gilman, I yield to you on the amendments.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. Gilman), chairman of the Committee on International Relations.

Mr. Gilman, the gentleman from Texas (Ms. Jackson-Lee) has done an outstanding job of focusing attention on the violations by the People's Republic of China with regard to the Tibetan people. We cannot give enough attention to the occupation of the People's Republic of China in Tibet and we welcome the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.
as we try to bring peace and dignity to the Tibetan people.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PAUL

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PAUL:
Page 116, after line 5, insert the following:
LIMITATION ON FUNDS FOR EXPORT-IMPORT BANK OF THE UNITED STATES, OVERSEAS PRIVATE INVESTMENT CORPORATION, AND THE TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

SEC. . None of the funds made available pursuant to this Act for the Export-Import Bank of the United States, the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, or the Trade and Development Agency, may be used to enter into any new obligation, guarantee, or agreement on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the order of the House of Thursday, July 29, 1999, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) and the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. CALAHAN) each will control 5 minutes.

The gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment provides that no funds for new obligations, guarantees, or agreements can be issued under the Export-Import Bank under OPIC or under the Trade Development Agency. This again is an attempt to try to slow up the amount of dollars available to corporations and for their benefit specifically as well as our foreign competitors.

China, for instance, receives the largest amount of money from the Export-Import Bank. Outstanding liabilities for the Export-Import Bank is now $55 billion. There is $5.9 billion that have been granted to the Chinese.

Last week we had a very important vote on trade. It was hotly debated over human rights issues. I voted to trade with China because I believe it is proper to trade with people. We are less likely to fight with them. And in this institution, too often we use our terms carelessly and we talk about free trade as being something which is managed trade. Free trade here generally means that they have the NAFTA people managing trade, the World Trade Organization managing trade, and we will subsidize our businesses.

Just this past week we had the World Trade Organization rule against us saying that the $2 billion worth of tax benefits to our own corporations and they ruled that that was illegal. This is all done in the name of free trade.

I say that we should have free trade. We should trade with our friends and with anybody who would trade that we would not at all. We would really, really be careful about issuing sanctions. But here we are, last week we had the great debate and a lot of people could not stand the idea of trading with Red China because of their human rights record and I understand that, although I did not accept that position. But this is the time to do something about it.

Trading with Red China under true free trade is a benefit to both of us. It is a benefit to our consumers and it benefits both countries because we are talking with people and we are not fighting with them. But it gets to be a serious problem when we tax our people in order to benefit those who are receiving the goods overseas.

Now, if there is a worldwide downturn, this $55 billion of liabilities out there could be very significant in how it is going to be paid back. The Chinese right now, their economy is not all that healthy. They are talking about a devaluation.

So this is a liability that the American taxpayers are exposed to. If we do have a concern about Red China and the Chinese, yes, let us work with them, let us trade with them, but let us not subsidize.

This is what I am trying to do. I am trying to stop this type of subsidies. So my bill, my amendment would stop any new obligation. It does not close down Export-Import Bank. It allows all the old loans to operate and function, but no new obligations can be made, no new guaranties, and no agreement, with the idea that someday we may truly move to free trade, that we do not recognize the use of subsidized trade as well as internationally managed trade with organizations such as NAFTA and World Trade Organization.

Those institutions are not free trade institutions. They are managed trade institutions for the benefit of special interests. That is what this type of funding is for is for the benefit of special interests, whether it is our domestic corporation, which, indeed, I would recognize does receive some benefit.

Sixty-seven percent of all the funding of the Export-Import Bank goes to, not a large number of companies, to five companies. I will bet my colleagues, if they look at those five companies in this country that gets 67 percent of the benefit and look at their political action records, my colleagues might be enlightened. I mean, I bet my colleagues we would learn something about where that money goes, because they are big corporations and they benefit, and they will have their defenders here.

It is time we look carefully at these subsidies.

Mr. CALAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 1⁄2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI).

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. In doing so, I want to correct the record. Those of us who were asking for raising tariffs on products coming from China were not interested in cutting off trade with China. What we were doing is to say, let us have the same reciprocity between our two countries as we would expect from other countries.

But then to use that and say it is all right to give a $70 billion trade surplus to the regime so they can strengthen their hold on the people of China but we should take out our concerns with China on the Ex-Im Bank I think is very inappropriate. That is why I oppose it.

The Ex-Im Bank does not subsidize the Chinese government. The Ex-Im Bank subsidizes U.S. manufacturers selling into countries, including China. Ms. PAUL amendment would not allow the Export-Import Bank to assume any new business. This would mean that all of the Ex-Im’s resources would be used to liquidate existing transactions. In other words, Ex-Im would slowly, gradually shut down.

I agree with the gentleman that we must subject the Ex-Im, OPIC, and all of these institutions to harsh scrutiny. Are they performing the task that is their established purpose, to promote U.S. exports? The Ex-Im Bank, I think, from the scrutiny we subjected to in our committee does that.

The gentleman’s amendment is ill-advised. The same would apply to OPIC, which, by the way, does not operate in China.

So I urge our colleagues to oppose this amendment for many more reasons than I have time to go into.

Mr. CALAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, we have already discussed the impact of the closing down of OPIC earlier tonight, and my colleagues can see that the will of the House certainly agreed with those of us who think that we must have this competitive level playing field with the rest of the G–7 Nations.

The gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) is absolutely right when it comes to basic sounding good things, a feel-good amendment, when he talks about Ex-Im Bank giving money to Red China. Ex-Im Bank does not give money to Red China. Ex-Im Bank loans money to American businesses to establish programs in Red China. There is no prohibition against Red China coming to the United States to invest with the support of a similar organization in China.

What we are saying is we want to be just like the rest of the world when it comes to global economy. This is a global economy. The only way our people can participate in global economy is to have the same advantages as do Canada, as do Japan, as do Germany, as do France. We need this in order to work today in a global economy.

So we are not talking about losing money. That is not the question here. Ex-Im bank is not losing money. We are talking about whether or not we are going to have a financing capability that will enable American jobs to be exported to all of the countries that the gentleman from Texas mentioned.

So, Mr. Chairman, I think it is the same debate that we had on OPIC except this one is twice as bad because, also, he closes down the Ex-Im Bank as well and cuts off the ability of American businesses to do business in most any foreign country.

I urge opposition to the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that it is truly a subsidy to a foreign corporation, a foreign government. For Red China, corporations and governments are essentially identical. They are not really quite in the free market yet.

But the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. CALLAHAN) points out that, no, that is not true. The money does not go to Red China and they buy things; we just give it directly. We do not even send it round trip. This is true.

We take taxpayers' money. We take taxpayers' guarantee. We give them to those huge five corporations that do 67 percent of the business. We give them the money. But where do the goods go? Do the goods go to the American taxpayers? No. They get all of the liabilities. The subsidies help the Chinese. So, technically, yes, we do not send the money there. But who is going to pay it back? The Chinese pays the loan back. If they default, who pays the bill if the Chinese defaults? Who pays the bill if they default? It is obviously the taxpayers.

What I am pointing out is that $5.9 billion that the Chinese now had borrowed from us, from the Export-Import Bank, is a significant obligation that, too, is on the backs of the American taxpayers.

So I urge support for the amendment because, if we are serious about free trade, just please do not call it free trade anymore. Call it managed trade. Call it subsidized trade. Call it special interest tax cut. But please do not call it free trade anymore, because it is not free trade.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say that the $16 million, or whatever figure he is using that goes to China, goes in the form of things like airplane. Yes, a lot of it goes to Boeing, which is a huge corporation. But the benefit that the American taxpayers receive are the thousands of jobs that Boeing provides in order to export this plane to China. If indeed there was some problem, we can always go and get the airplanes back.

It is not like we are giving something away. We are talking about whether or not we might tell my colleagues that many of those Boeing jobs are located in the State of Alabama.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL).

The question was taken; and the CHAIRMAN declared the noes to have appeared to have it.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 283, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) will be postponed.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Payne amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the UN World Food Program (WFP) last Tuesday expressed fears of a "worsening humanitarian crisis" in southern Sudan, resulting from the inability to transport food to those who need it. This ban has made most of the region inaccessible to relief agencies trying to deliver urgent humanitarian assistance to some 150,000 people.

Mr. Chairman, the funds appropriated by this amendment which is more than $4,000,000 will be used for rehabilitation and economic recovery in areas of Sudan which have endured many hardships due to their religious and political beliefs. These funds will help support education, crop growth and other needs necessary for the basic existence of these people.

Mr. Chairman, this is a humane, well thought out, gesture offered by the gentleman from New Jersey and I urge all Members to support this amendment.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 283, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) will be postponed.

Mr. OLVER. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that I am making known that all of the members of the staff by taking 5 minutes at this hour, including the Speaker, but since I have stayed here this long, I will take the 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, we are told that this is the week that the main business is going to be, for this Congress, is the final passage of an $800 billion tax cut.

The Republican leadership says that their tax cut, at least that one which passed the House of Representatives, is for the middle class. But I would like to raise that question. The bill which passed the House of Representatives about 2 weeks ago had the following features: the 2.25 million taxpayers representing the 1 percent wealthiest, richest portion of the population each, on average, got $54,000 of tax reduction. Thus the 1 percent whose incomes is more than $300,000 per year.

At the other end of the scale, starting from the bottom, the lowest income person in this society issuing a tax return, if we were to start, starting from the lowest income and coming up to an income of $125,000 a year, all 95 percent of that population, all 120 million would have received 39 percent of the total tax cut; whereas, the 1.25 million, the wealthiest 1.25 million, or 1 percent, would have received 45 percent of that total tax reduction. The 1 percent richest of Americans got more than all 95 percent of our population whose income is below $125,000.

If I may put that in a slightly different way, if those who may still be watching would consider 100 people, 100 people, all of whom have incomes over $300,000 and consider that we might have $100 of tax reduction to be able to distribute among those 100 people, that the average person who makes a tax return of over $300,000 would get $45 of the total of $100 that is available for all tax reduction for all Americans.

Whereas 95 percent starting at the lowest income, up to the persons who might have $125,000 of income, that group of 95 people would find that they were able to receive only a total of $39 divided among the 95 of them. Now, I do not know how many people would believe that that was a fair distribution that would suggest that this tax cut was for the middle class. That is how I characterize the class tax cut. In fact, it is designed to make the already rich a great deal richer. And that the middle class, those people between incomes of $55,000 and perhaps $90,000 per year, would receive $1 or $2 a day, hardly a middle class tax cut.

But that is only a small part of the story. The rest of the story is what the Republican leadership makes impossible if this rich-get-very-much richer bill were to become law. I forgot to bring the chart that I have here, but I will get it because I would like to show the American people what happens on just one issue, and that is the issue of the Nation’s debt.

If this tax bill is passed, as it was passed in the House of Representatives, then it would be nearly impossible to reduce the Nation’s debt. Let me show you this chart. This chart shows where the present $3.7 trillion of debt that is publicly held was created.

The first 38 presidents, from George Washington, our first president, through Mr. Ford, our 38th president, produced $549 billion of debt. President Carter, in his 4 years, created an additional $236 billion of debt. President Reagan created, in his 8 years, $1.4 trillion. President Bush, $1.1 trillion, and President Clinton, in his almost 7 years, an additional $472 billion.

The Senate met at 12:01 p.m. and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we praise You for great Senators in each period of our Nation's history. And the Senate of the 106th Congress is certainly no exception. Thank you for our Senators who love You, seek Your best for our Nation, and are indefatigable in their efforts to lead with courage and vision. Over the years, You have impacted their consciences with Your Ten Commandments, Your truth, the guidance of Your Spirit, and vision for this Nation so clearly enabled by our founding fathers and mothers. Daily, refine their consciences. Purify them until they reflect the pure gold of Your character and Your priorities of righteousness, justice, and mercy. Then may their consciences guide their convictions, and may they always have the courage of these sacred convictions.

What we pray for the Senators we ask for the entire Senate family. May we all be one in asking You to develop in us a conscience saturated by Your absolutes and shaped by Your authority. To this end, Senators and all staff join in rededicating our lives to glorify You by serving our Nation. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable STROM THURMOND, a Senator from the State of South Carolina, led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The able Senator from Alaska is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, today by previous order the Senate will begin 1 hour of morning business to be followed by 2 hours of debate on S. 335, the Deceptive Mail Prevention and Enforcement Act regarding sweepstakes. The first rollcall vote today will occur at 5:30 p.m. on passage of the sweepstakes legislation. At 3 p.m. today, the Senate will resume consideration of the Agriculture appropriations bill. It is hoped that Senators who have amendments will work with the bill managers to schedule time to debate those amendments. Additional votes beyond the 5:30 vote could occur relative to the Agriculture appropriation bill. It is the intention of the majority leader to complete action on as many appropriations bills as possible before the August recess. Therefore, Senators should be prepared to vote into the evenings throughout this whole week.

1. thank my colleagues for their attention.
2. yield the floor.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The able Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 10 minutes in morning business under the time allocated to Senator DASCHLE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(Mr. STEVENS assumed the chair.)

FAMILY FARMING IN AMERICA

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, this afternoon at 3 o'clock we will begin debate on a farm disaster relief plan that will be offered by Senator HARKIN, myself, Senators CONRAD, DASCHLE, and others. I think this will be, for those of us from farm country, one of the most important pieces of legislation addressed by this Congress this year. I know that unless one lives on a family farm, it is probably pretty hard to describe the farm crisis, but I thought I would read a letter from my constituents in North Dakota.

Before I do, I am reminded of the story the former chairman of the House Agriculture Committee used to tell. Kika de la Garza was his name. He used to talk about agriculture and food by telling a story about nuclear submarines. He said he met with all these folks from the Defense Department and they told him about the wonders of these nuclear submarines the United States had. They told him about all of their provisions and all their fuel and their capabilities and their speed and their distance. And he said, well, how long can a nuclear submarine stay under the sea? And the admiral says: Until the food runs out. It was Kika de la Garza’s way of pointing out that food, after all, is the essence of most of our existence, and we are a world, a rather fragile, large globe—as seen by our existence, and we are a world, a celestial people.

Until the food runs out. It was Kika de la Garza’s way of pointing out that food, after all, is the essence of most of our existence, and we are a world, a rather fragile, large globe—as seen by our existence, and we are a world, a celestial people. How could it be that what we produce has no value? That is what our farmers wonder. Let me talk just about these farmers in the context of their words. This is a letter from a woman in the central part of our State whose family farms; she farms. Here is the kind of plaintive cry that exists from a proud and hardworking people in our country, family farmers who take enormous risks, risk everything they have to try to make a living with seeds they plant in the ground. They do not know whether they will grow; they do not know whether the natural disasters will occur—insects and hail and rain too much, too little. They don’t know what will happen with this money they have invested in the soil. If they finally get their crop and they escape all of those problems, they get the crop off the ground and take it to the elevator, they don’t know whether there will be a price that allows them to get a return for that crop.

These are the kinds of people who live on our family farms. They are the people who create the backbone of our society in our country. They are the people who together build a small community where they trade and do business. They build our churches in those communities. They create charities. They do the things together in a community that we forget about sometimes in our country. What is it that makes this country work at its roots? It is entrepreneurship, it is family farming, it is a sense of community, and it is a sense of sharing.

Here is a family farm. This woman says in her letter to me:

We aren’t asking for a free ride, just the possibility of surviving. We are private people and we bear our pain alone, and we don’t discuss the true situation out here on the farm family with anyone. Our neighbors are all in the same situation. The spirit of North Dakota will be gone with these people and their farms. We cannot survive without a reasonable income. How much longer will it be before people understand that we are trying to feed our family, and pay for basic necessities? But with today’s income we are not saving money for retirement. We are not going on trips. We are not enjoying any of the fruits from our labor. We are slowly but surely going broke.

A man who lives in southeastern North Dakota on the family farm says:

It sometimes brings a tear to my eye that maybe in a year, maybe two years, I will not be around in family farming to matter anymore. This won’t be easy to explain to my three young daughters. This is what I want ed to bring them up, in a rural setting of life that I was used to and that I understand. If it happens, I hope they read in their history books that it wasn’t because I was a dumb man. It was because it was caused by policy and giant concentration of companies who want dominance.

Or, from a woman named Susan, whose letter I have read previously on this floor. She lost her husband, and she had to sell their family farm. Prices had collapsed.

I had an auction last week to sell the machinery so that I could help pay off some of the debts that incurred after 25 years of farming. I have a 17-year-old son who would not help me prepare for auction and did not even get out of bed the day of the auction sale because he was heartbroken that he cannot continue to farm this land.

This is a 17-year-old boy who is not a bad boy. It is just that he could not get out of bed to watch the auction sale of his farm because he couldn’t bear to see the loss of his dream and his family’s dream. He wanted to be a farmer as well.

She said:

My husband was an excellent manager, fully educated. He chose to farm rather than go out of bed to watch the auction sale of his farm because he couldn’t bear to see the loss of his dream and his family’s dream. He wanted to be a farmer as well.

She said:

My husband was an excellent manager, fully educated. He decided that corporate farms shall farm the land and help and working together. We will lose all of that because some people say it doesn’t matter.

Although I am one of the youngest Members of the Senate, I grew up in Helena, Arkansas during what seemed to be a much simpler time—even though we were in the height of de-segregation in the South.

Our parents pulled together to make everyone's education experience a success. Students came to school prepared to learn. Teachers had control of their classroom. The threat of school violence was virtually non-existent.

Now, more than twenty years later, things are different.

Our children are subjected to unprecedented social stresses including divorce, drug and alcohol abuse, child abuse, poverty and an explosion of technology that has good and bad uses. These stresses exhibit themselves in the behavior of teenagers, as well as in our young children. Increasingly, elementary school children exhibit symptoms of substance abuse, academic underachievement, disruptive behavior, and even suicide.

Too many students bring guns and weapons to school. This is a very complex problem and there is no one single answer. It will take more than metal detectors and surveillance cameras to prevent the tragedies occurring in our schools today. But we must do something. We cannot wait any longer. We have to address this issue now.

I believe the Safe Schools Act reflects the needs and wishes of students, parents, teachers and school administrators. It is the first step toward addressing the emotional well-being of our young people.

During my Senate campaign last year, I spent a lot of time listening to parents and teachers. From my experience, the most effective solutions being at the local level.

This bill incorporates the lessons I have learned from the people of my state who are working on the front lines to educate and care for our children.

First, this bill would provide funds to elementary and secondary schools to hire additional mental health professionals.

Students today bring more to school than backpacks and lunchboxes. Many of them bring severe emotional troubles.

It is critical that schools be able to help these students and help teachers deal with them. We can possibly prevent a horrific act of violence, and if a disruptive student receives help, his or her teacher will have more control of the classroom in order to instruct all of the children there to learn.

Unfortunately, there are not nearly enough mental health professionals working in our nation’s schools today.

The American School Health Association recommends that the student-to-counselor ratio be 250:1. In secondary schools, the current ratio is 513:1. In elementary schools, where the student-to-teacher ratio exceeds 1000:1. This is just not acceptable for a country as advanced as ours to not be providing the needs of our children.

The second major component of my Safe Schools Act provides funding for after-school and mentoring programs. Many of our children go home to empty houses or spend hours every day in poorly supervised settings. Studies show that youth crime peaks between 3:00 and 7:00 p.m.

Local public schools need additional resources so they can establish or expand after school and summer programs for children.

This is a wonderful chance for the community to get involved. Many non-profit organizations can bring their resources to children in the schools and to the community.

A variety of organizations can come together to build strong after school and summer programs which enhance the academic work of students and provide them with other meaningful activities.

Many communities in Arkansas are doing just that.

The city of Fort Smith has begun the SPICE Program, which has been working for nine years with adult tutors who help kids after-school with homework, and teach them arts and crafts which keep them out of trouble.

In Little Rock, the Camp Aldersgate Youth Initiative encourages teenagers to participate in supervised community service activities, such as tutoring, recreation and conflict management.

The Safe Jonesboro Mentoring Program in Jonesboro, Arkansas, brings adults from the local business community to Jonesboro High School once a week to mentor high school students.

Another program shows us what is acceptable, what is just being put into place in our larger towns, they’re also cropping up in rural communities.

In Monticello and six counties throughout Southeast Arkansas, the Southeast Arkansas Foster Grandparents Program has helped improve literacy and reading test scores for hundreds of children. In this program, senior citizens serve as literacy and reading tutors to K-3 elementary school students twenty hours a week.

The Boys, Girls and Adults Community Development Center in Marvell, a Save the Children grantee, has been providing educational, cultural and recreational activities, as well as mentoring for children after school. 60% of the children participating in this program have improved their grade point average. It works.

Studies show that one-on-one attention raises the academic scores of children and improves their self-esteem. With just a little extra help, a child who is struggling with reading or math can catch up with the help of volunteers or mentors and excel.

We can utilize organizations like AmeriCorps and our older volunteers in the Senior Corps program. Encourage high school students to mentor elementary school students who need a little extra attention, to see an older peer being a part of their life makes a difference.

The bottom line is we don’t need to reinvent the wheel. Good examples already exist in our communities, initiatives like the ones I’ve mentioned today. By providing added resources to the states, we can emphasize the successful programs and make them available to more students.

I’m also asking states to inform parents about the quality of public schools by issuing a Safe Schools Report Card. My own state of Arkansas will begin releasing a more comprehensive report card next year.

All states should collect this information and make it readily available to parents and the community. This information will help parents and schools officials better address the most important issues at the local level.

Above all, we must continue to share information and ideas, to talk to one another. Our country cannot possibly meet the challenges of the 21st century if each community operates in a vacuum and there is no mechanism to pass on what is working and what isn’t.

During the August recess I will hold five “Back to School” meetings with students, parents, teachers, school administrators and concerned citizens.

These meetings will be a good chance to discuss the various components of my Safe Schools Act as well as other important education issues like school construction, class size, school discipline and parent involvement.

I welcome the chance to listen to these future citizens directly about our public schools and I hope my colleagues will spend some of their time during the recess to do the same.

I also hope my colleagues will take the opportunity to review the components of this bill. I feel strongly it should be a critical part of any federal response to school safety issues. I look forward to its passage.

This is our opportunity to begin the process that will show our children we do care about their emotional well being and the future success of our nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

The Senator from Wisconsin.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR
Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, first of all, I ask unanimous consent that the Brady Payday loan company have been permitted the privilege of the floor during today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I would like to take 12 minutes of the time allotted, and then the Senator from Montana would like 20 minutes following that time.

ISSUES AND ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF 1999

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, this is the last week before we go on recess. We will be gone approximately a month. We will have an opportunity to be home, to talk to our constituents about the issues that are here, to talk about what we have done during this calendar year, and talk about what we have not done for this year as well. We will be back, then, the first part of September. We will have, probably, 2 months to continue and to complete our work for this year.

There are 13 appropriations bills that must be passed to keep the Government running. They must be passed by September end of the fiscal year. This is a very difficult task. We are, hopefully, running on time. We passed eight bills out of the Senate. However, none has yet been sent to the President. So we will have a couple of months to wind up the year's work. I cannot tell you how important it is that we do complete that work. Of course, the Presiding Officer is the key Senator in that regard. He has done a great job.

We do not want the President to be able to put us in a position again of closing down the Government and blaming the Congress. I hope what we do is get these bills to him. I think we will do that. I cannot help but mention as we think about this a little bit, I hope in Congress we take a look at a biennial budget, as we have in many States—for instance, my home State of Wyoming. The Congress or the legislature would form a budget for a 2-year period, which has advantages, particularly for the agencies, and we would have the other year for oversight, which is equally as important a task for the Congress—to oversee the expenditure of those dollars. So I hope we are able to do that.

This has been a tough year. We have had lots of difficulties, starting, of course, with the impeachment process, which was difficult. I don't know that it slowed us up particularly. On the contrary, we did a lot of committee work during the time the impeachment was going on. Nevertheless, it was tough. Then came the Colorado Columbine situation, of course, the tragedy out there at the school and, with that, the great controversy over gun control, which we are likely to see again now after the tragedy in Georgia. Then Kosovo was also an issue, of course, although Congress really was not as involved. It was pretty much the President on his own, committing troops there. Obviously, we were going to support that.

So, it has been a difficult year. Despite that, it seems to me we have accomplished a great deal. I am a little disappointed that most of the accomplishments have been made without the support of the minority. Our friends on the other side have, in fact, opposed nearly everything that has been done—I think, unfortunately, more often to create an issue than to create a solution. That often is the choice we have; you can cook up something you can take home to talk about in political rhetoric, as opposed to trying to find some solutions.

But we have accomplished a great deal. Much of the controversy will continue, I suppose. There are legitimate differences of view. The Senate is on the floor on almost every issue. Generally, the issue is the larger issue of whether or not you want more and more Federal Government, more and more Federal regulation, more and more taxes—which is basically Senators on the other side of the aisle as opposed to this side of the aisle, where we are looking for limited government, where we are looking for less regulation, where we are looking for an opportunity for people to spend more of their own money.

So basically, when you get down to it in almost all these issues, if you really pare it away, that is the debate. Legitimate? Yes, indeed, it is legitimate. I happen to be on the side of being more conservative, of thinking we ought to be moving more and more of these decisions back to the States and to the counties rather than deciding everything, one-size-fits-all, at the Federal level. But these are the differences, and that is one of the things most of the things we find in conflict. We have had less cooperation from the administration than I had hoped we would have, from that side of the aisle. I think the President is seeking to change his image so the politics become more important than the movement of the congressional budget.

Let's review some of the highlights. The most recent one, of course, is the passage of tax relief, something I think is very legitimate, perfectly logical. We won this debate about it, of course. One of the keys, naturally, is that you have to talk about reduction of taxes after having done something to save Social Security, having done something to strengthen Medicare, that is part of the program. That is not the choice.

We see these polls that are run from time to time. They say: Would you rather have Social Security protected or would you rather have tax relief? That is not the basis by which analysts evaluate the things we worked at. All of us are setting aside this surplus that comes from Social Security for the preservation of Social Security. These funds which will be used to reduce taxes and give some tax relief are beyond that.

I think one of the best illustrations is a bill that has been passed, the additional $3 billion. This is basically the surplus we are looking at in the next 10 years, $3 trillion, each of these. Two of them are being set aside for Social Security. Tax relief constitutes about 75 percent of the third one, with the additional amount of the third one being set aside for spending and for Medicare.

The press has not been very helpful, of course, trying to get that understanding. But in any event, I think that is a real movement forward.

The thing one also has to keep in mind is, if there is money lying around here, it is going to be spent. It is going to be spent enlarging Federal Government. So if you go back to that original thesis, you go back to the original notion that you would like to move actively back closer to home, you do it that way rather than bringing more and more money here that inevitably will be spent increasing the size of Government.

I think we have some hope, that both Houses have passed some tax relief. We will see if we can find a way to put that together, hopefully this week. Then it will be up to the President to say whether he wants to spend more and more money, wants to spend $1 trillion on 61 new programs, or let the American people have an opportunity to spend some of their own.

Education? Our position again has been that the decisions that are basic to elementary and secondary education ought to be made closest to the people. They ought to be made by the States and by the school boards. Sure, we have an obligation to provide some financial help, but the Ed-Flex program that was passed by this Senate allows those decisions to be made more at home.

I can tell you, the delivery of education is quite different in Wyoming or different in Alaska, the State of the President Officer, from what it is in New York—and properly so. But to make that work, then, the local people have to have that opportunity. We have done that with Ed-Flex, and we had some other educational programs.

I feel fairly strongly about some of the Federal involvement. My wife is a teacher. She teaches special ed and spends almost half of her time on paperwork because of the kinds of Federal programs that are involved. So we are making some movement to change that.

The military fulfills what is obviously one of the principal, if not the principal, obligations of the Federal Government, to provide for the safety and protection and defense of this country. Over the last number of years, the administration has increasingly reduced the amount of resources there.
At the same time, we had more demands on the military than we had before. They were not able to conduct their mission on the amount of resources that had been available. I was very disappointed it took a congressional committee to press and push and demand from the Joint Chiefs of Staff to really get down to whether we were able to carry out their mission with the resources they have. The answer was no. So we have moved to make some additions to that, in the first step for a very long time.

The other thing is, if you are going to have a voluntary force, you have to make it fairly attractive to be in the military, and after having trained people to do technical things like flying airplanes or servicing airplanes, they have a stay in the service and do that. So we need more of that kind of support.

Social Security? For a very long time no one would talk about Social Security. It is one of the rail of all rail of all rail and it is dead. Now, finally, everyone does understand that you have to do something different if, indeed, your purpose is to maintain the benefits that are now going to be needed and to provide an opportunity for young people, who are beginning to work and put their money into the fund, to have some anticipation of having benefits for themselves.

We have to make some changes. The sooner those changes are made the less severe they will have to be.

The President has been talking about saving Social Security for several years. He has no plan. He has done nothing except talk about it. We now have a plan. There is a bipartisan amendment to preserve Social Security funds. It has been opposed on the other side of the aisle five times, but we are going to move forward on Social Security.

VA funding: The administration has for several years requested a flat budget for VA health care but at the same time has expanded the eligibility for people to utilize those facilities. We find, for instance, in my State we have two facilities, but they are underfinanced and are not providing the kinds of services to which veterans are entitled. More money needs to be provided, and we are going to do that. The Republican budget this year had an additional $1.7 billion for veterans' health. It is something that is very important.

Patients' Bill of Rights: We passed a Patients' Bill of Rights that did not involve the Federal Government, did not involve lawyers and the courts making the decisions but indeed guaranteed emergency services without having to go through some kind of clearance. It guaranteed, if you felt as if you were not getting the services, an appeal to a physician, not to a lawyer or to a court, and that was passed.

Medicare: We moved to doing something with Medicare. A bipartisan commission was set up and that has a report, a report, a report. The President asked his folks whom he appointed to serve on that commission to vote against it, so it did not come out as a commission report and as a commission recommendation. We are going to take that, basically, and move forward and do something on Medicare.

We are moving toward the end. We have some very difficult issues to deal with, particularly in appropriations. We have to deal with them. We will deal with them. I am hopeful we will also have some kind of a relief valve so that if we get through and cannot come to an agreement with the President that it goes on as it has and will not let that problem be used again. I hope we find a little less resistance from our friends on the other side in terms of finding solutions to these problems.

Before I go, I admit—and this is a philosophy, and this is a philosophy—that as we go forward we continue to understand the greatness of this country. And it is a great country. If you have had a chance to travel about a bit, you find it is the greatest. Each time I have a chance to go somewhere, I come back thanking God this is the place in which I live. But it is a great country not because of the Federal Government. There is a legitimate role for the Federal Government, of course, described, by the way, in the Constitution, but the real strength of this country lies in its communities and in its individuals who have the freedom to make decisions for themselves. They have the freedom to get together and do those that are required to be done in their communities to make them healthy.

Admittedly, I come from a State that is unique. Maybe we are the lowest populated State now. We are one of the largest States and the services is quite different, whether it be airlines, whether it be electricity, whether it be education. We cannot have this one-size-fits-all situation.

Again, I am pleased with what we have done. I say to the President, he has had one of the most difficult tasks of leadership in the Appropriations Committee and has done a good job.

I hope we will continue to provide an opportunity for us to come together to resolve our problems so that we can continue to have the opportunity to serve, to let communities make some of their decisions, and we will continue to be the greatest country in the world.

Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER, the Senator from Montana is recognized.

TRADING AND THE ENVIRONMENT IN AN ERA OF GLOBALIZATION

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I would like to talk today about the relationship between trade and the environment.

When I joined the Finance Committee in 1978, debate about the Tokyo Round was just concluding. I don't remember a single mention of water pollution, air pollution, or the protection of sea turtles and other endangered species—important issues, but they were not part of the trade debate.

NAFTA changed this. We negotiated the environmental side agreement, and created the North America Commission on Environmental Cooperation. There were flaws and limitations, but it was a turning point.

Now, it is not or, environmental issues are an integral part of the trade debate. Environmental group opposition was one of the major reasons for the defeat of Fast Track legislation last year. Ambassador Barshefsky has said that the next round of trade negotiations should address environmental protection. Two months ago, the WTO held a series of high level roundtable discussions on trade and the environment, in part to help define the issues for consideration in Seattle.

Why has this happened? It is partly a function of technology. Environmental groups have plugged into the Internet—aggressively. Browse the web sites of almost any environmental group, and you will see what I mean. Any citizen can follow a high level environmental trade dispute on the Internet. The heretofore insulated, inaccessible, and arcane international trade world meets the chaotic, grassroots, democratic, and Internet-savvy environmental world.

Let me tell my friends in the trade world something about my friends in the environmental world. I have worked with them for years. Sometimes on the same side, sometimes in disagreement. They are smart, dedicated, energetic, and aggressive. And they are very good at using the latest communications technology. So, if you are uncomfortable with the new role of the environmental community in the trade debate, my only advice is: Get used to it and figure out how to work together. The same advice goes to my environmental friends: The trade folks are here to stay. Figure out how to work with them.

There's a second important reason why environmental protection is now an important part of the trade debate. We are in the midst of an economic boom in the United States and the revolution of globalization. Globalization is bringing every classroom in every small western town, and on every Native American reservation, smack into the middle of the information-based marketplace. It allows small businesses all over the world to tap into the global marketplace. It's forcing virtually every company to become more competitive.
CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE

August 2, 1999

But there's another side to the story. Call it the dark side of globalization. And it has a long and painful history. America's drive for industrialization created great wealth and progress. But it left behind a terrible environmental legacy. Rivers so infected with toxic chemicals that they caught fire. Abandoned mine tailings that dot the landscape like the petrified bones of mammoths. The loss of wetlands and other habitat necessary to sustain the animal and plant species upon which our survival depends.

In America, we have turned the tide. Our air and water are cleaner now. But we have seen what unchecked economic development did to us.

Extend that kind of growth world-wide. And pick up the pace, to reflect the hyper-speed of global competition. As globalization has accelerated, with the expanded trade that accompanies and fuels it, we are likely to see a rapid increase in environmental problems.

Tom Friedman puts it this way, in The Lexus and the Olive Tree: [globalization has] unleashed forest-crushing forces of development . . . which, if left unchecked, [has] the potential to destroy the environment and uproot cultures, at a pace never before seen in human history.

Let me give you two examples.

For years, Montanan and other U.S. softwood lumber producers have been fighting against subsidized Canadian imports. One continuing issue is Canada's relatively weak environmental standards for timber harvesting. Canada has no law, at the federal or provincial level, like our Endangered Species Act.

This gives Canadian producers an economic advantage over U.S. producers, which can lead to a serious environmental effect. In Montana, we're fighting to protect the Bull Trout, which is listed as an endangered species. One of the biggest populations resides in Lake Kookanusa, just south of the Canadian border. In the spring, the fish swim up Wigwam Creek, across the border in British Columbia, to spawn.

Recently, British Columbia announced a program of aggressive timber harvesting in the Wigwam Basin. Maybe things will work out, and the harvesting will occur in a way that does not threaten the Bull Trout. But, if not, our efforts to protect an endangered species in this country will be undermined because of another developed country's environmental laws that are deliberately weak to support an industry interest.

Or consider the objectives of the Endangered Species Act which includes preserving biodiversity, the web of life that sustains us. We're losing species at an alarming speed—perhaps a thousand times the natural rate.

No matter how strictly we protect species here in the United States, if the South American rain forest continues to disappear at the current rate, all of our efforts will have been futile. The message is simple. Globalization and expanded trade benefit us. But we must ensure that globalization and expanded trade are conducted in a way that enhances, and does not undermine, environmental protection.

One thing that worries me greatly is the polarization that has occurred among participants in the trade and environment debate. The middle ground seems to have fallen into a sinkhole. Yet the middle is where we need people to find solutions to these very difficult problems.

Let's turn to the next round of multilateral trade negotiations that will be the subject of the WTO Ministerial in Seattle in late November. We must accommodate globalization and expanded trade while, at the same time, preserve and enhance environmental protection.

America must lead. We are the world's largest economy. We are the world's largest consumer. And we are the world's leader in developing strong environmental laws. As in many different areas, if we don't exert leadership, no one else will. This is not arrogance. This is not unilateralism. This is leadership, and I offer no excuses and no apologies for it.

I believe that we must follow three broad precepts in developing the proper linkage between trade and the environment. Call these my "Three No's":

Trade liberalization must not harm the environment: Trade rules must not be used to stop legitimate and reasonable environmental protection; Environmental regulations must not be used as an instrument for trade protection that closes markets and distorts trade flows.

We need to balance trade and environmental goals and prevent trade and environmental pretexts from turning my agenda for trade and the environment in the next round of trade negotiations.

First, the WTO dispute resolution process must be made more open, transparent and publicly accessible. This is important in the context of environmental law and regulation, which relies heavily on citizen suits and the public's right to know. And it is important in the context of the WTO's credibility. Secrecy does not enhance respect and confidence in institutions.

The GATT was created in an era when nation-states were the only significant actors on the world scene. The WTO followed the same structure. But it does not reflect today's reality. Where non-governmental entities have become important international and national players. The rules and procedures must accommodate these new actors.

The dispute settlement process takes too much time and must be shortened significantly. Loopholes that allow delay in complying with decisions must be closed.

Second, the Administration must conduct an environmental assessment of the trade agreement that will emerge from the new round. It will introduce legislation soon requiring such a review.

Third, we should eliminate all tariffs on environmental goods and services. One important way to improve environmental conditions in other countries, especially in developing countries, is to reduce the cost of environmental technology—everything from the elements of a sewage treatment plant to catalytic converters to bioremediation technology. U.S. companies are leaders in this field, so reduced tariffs will have the added advantage of increasing U.S. exports.

My fourth item involves environmentally harmful subsidies. In some cases, like fishing and agriculture, excessive subsidies lead to practices that are both economically and environmentally harmful. By limiting such subsidies, we can achieve a "win-win." For years, Montanan and other U.S. businesses have been fighting against subsidized Canadian imports. One continuing issue is Canada's relatively weak environmental standards for timber harvesting. Canada has no law, at the federal or provincial level, like our Endangered Species Act.

This gives Canadian producers an economic advantage over U.S. producers, which can lead to a serious environmental effect. In Montana, we're fighting to protect the Bull Trout, which is listed as an endangered species. One of the biggest populations resides in Lake Kookanusa, just south of the Canadian border. In the spring, the fish swim up Wigwam Creek, across the border in British Columbia, to spawn.

Recently, British Columbia announced a program of aggressive timber harvesting in the Wigwam Basin. Maybe things will work out, and the harvesting will occur in a way that does not threaten the Bull Trout. But, if not, our efforts to protect an endangered species in this country will be undermined because of another developed country's environmental laws that are deliberately weak to support an industry interest.

Or consider the objectives of the Endangered Species Act which includes preserving biodiversity, the web of life that sustains us. We're losing species at an alarming speed—perhaps a thousand times the natural rate.

No matter how strictly we protect species here in the United States, if the South American rain forest continues to disappear at the current rate, all of our efforts will have been futile. The message is simple. Globalization and expanded trade benefit us. But we must ensure that globalization and expanded trade are conducted in a way that enhances, and does not undermine, environmental protection.

One thing that worries me greatly is the polarization that has occurred among participants in the trade and environment debate. The middle ground seems to have fallen into a sinkhole. Yet the middle is where we need people to find solutions to these very difficult problems.

Sixth, the environmental community believes that we need to find a way to integrate multilateral, trade agreements, and environmental agreements, as we did in NAFTA. We could start out by providing a so-called ‘safe haven’ for the Montreal Protocol and CITES, the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora. The other is to describe the characteristics of an MEA that will automatically be protected.

Let me add a few other agenda items that are unrelated to my Seattle list but need to be on our “to do” list in the United States.

First, we should take a hard look at the NAFTA environmental side agreement, and see how it is working. I will ask the key Congressional Committees, including the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, to conduct appropriate oversight.

Second, we need to improve our domestic trade policy institutions. And that includes enhancing the role of Congress in trade negotiations. Last week, in a speech at the Washington International Trade Association, I proposed the establishment of a Congressional Trade Office. This office would provide the Congress with additional independent, non-partisan, neutral trade expertise.

Its functions would include: monitoring compliance with major bilateral, regional, and multilateral trade agreements; analysis of Administration trade policy, trade actions, and proposed trade legislation; participation in dispute settlement deliberations at the WTO and NAFTA, and evaluation of the results of dispute settlement cases involving the United States.

The National Wildlife Federation and the Sierra Club have proposed such an office, although the functions in my concept are quite different.

I will be offering legislation on this later this year.

One of the most difficult issues that has arisen in recent years has been the relationship between trade policy and environmental protection. The lack of consensus on this relationship has been one of the major reasons that we have not been able to proceed with fast track legislation in the Congress.

Paralysis helps no one. I hope that the thoughts I have set out today for Seattle and for our own domestic agenda will help to begin a constructive and responsible dialogue between the trade and the environmental communities. We need to work together in this area. We need environmental protection. We need a sustainable earth, and that means a clean world and a growing world—more and better jobs everywhere, increased income, cleaner air and water, the protection of our natural heritage for future generations. These goals are only incompat-ible when people are unwilling to talk about them together.

I yield the floor.

"(4) by inserting after subsection (b) the following:

"(c)(1) In any proceeding in which the Postal Service may issue an order under section 3005(a), the Postal Service may in lieu of that order or as part of that order assess civil penalties in an amount not to exceed $25,000 for each mailing of less than 50,000 pieces; $50,000 for each mailing of 50,000 to 100,000 pieces; with an additional $10,000 for each additional 10,000 pieces above 100,000, not to exceed $1,000,000.

"(2) in any proceeding in which the Postal Service assesses penalties under this subsection the Postal Service shall consider the nature and extent of the civil penalty taking into account the nature, circumstances, extent, and gravity of the violation or violations of section 3005(a), and with respect to the violator, the ability to pay the penalty, the effect of the penalty on the ability of the violator to conduct lawful business, any history of prior violations of such section, the degree of culpability and other such matters as justice may require.

“(d) Any person who violates section 3001(l) shall be liable to the United States for a civil penalty not to exceed $10,000 for each mailing to an individual; and

“(3) by amending subsection (e) (as redesignated by paragraph (3) of this section) to read as follows:

“(c)(1) From all civil penalties collected in the administrative and judicial enforcement of this chapter, an amount equal to the administrative and judicial costs incurred by the Postal Service in such enforcement, not to equal or exceed $500,000 in each year, shall be—

“(A) deposited in the Postal Service Fund established under section 203; and “(B) available for payment of such costs.

“(2) Except for amounts deposited in the Postal Service Fund under paragraph (1), all civil penalties collected in the administrative and judicial enforcement of this chapter shall be deposited in the General Fund of the Treasury.

SEC. 7. ADDITIONAL AUTHORITY FOR THE POSTAL INSPECTION SERVICE.

(a) In General.—Chapter 30 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

“§3016. Administrative subpoenas

“(b) SERVICE.—

“(1) SERVICE WITHIN THE UNITED STATES.—A subpoena issued under this section may be served by a person designated under section 3061 of title 18 at any place within the territorial jurisdiction of any court of the United States, in such manner as the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure prescribe for service in a foreign country. To the extent that the courts of the United States may assert jurisdiction over any person, the person is subject to process issued by due process, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia shall have the same jurisdiction to take any action respecting compliance with this section by such person that the District Court would have if such person were personally within the jurisdiction of such court.

“(2) SERVICE ON BUSINESS PERSONS.—Service of any such subpoena may be made by a Postal Inspector upon a partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity by—

“(A) delivering a duly executed copy thereof to any partner, executive officer, managing agent, or general agent thereof, or to any agent thereof authorized by appointment or by law to receive service of process, in such partnership, corporation, association, or entity;

“(B) delivering a duly executed copy thereof to the principal office or place of business of the partnership, corporation, association, or entity;

“(C) depositing such copy in the United States mails, by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, duly addressed to such partnership, corporation, association, or entity at its principal office or place of business;

“(4) NATURAL PERSONS.—Service of any subpoena may be made upon any natural person by—

“(A) delivering a duly executed copy to the person to be served;

“(B) depositing such copy in the United States mails, by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, duly addressed to such person at his residence or principal office or place of business;

“(5) VERIFIED RETURN.—A verified return by the individual served shall be filed with the court the same as a certificate of service; in the case of service by registered or certified mail, such return shall be accompanied by the return post office receipt of delivery of such subpoena.

“(c) ENFORCEMENT.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Wherever any person, partnership, corporation, association, or entity who is required to produce any such subpoena fails to do so, or fails to comply with any subpoena duly served upon him, the Postmaster General may request that the Attorney General seek enforcement of the subpoena in the district court of the United States for such judicial district in which such person resides, is found, or transacts business, and serve upon such person a petition for an order of such court for the enforcement of this section.

“(2) JURISDICTION.—Whenever any petition is filed in any district court of the United States under this section, such court shall have jurisdiction to enforce this section, or to compel the production of records as required by such section, or to compel the discovery of documents or things under such section, and to take any action respecting compliance with this section by such person that such court would have if such person were personally within the jurisdiction of such court.

“(3) SERVICE.—Whenever any petition is filed under this section by such person that such court shall have jurisdiction over such person consistent with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure prescribe for such action.

“(d) DISCLOSURE.—Any documentary material provided pursuant to any subpoena issued under this section shall be exempt from disclosure under section 5 of this title.

“(e) REGULATIONS.—Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Postal Service shall promulgate regulations setting out the procedures the Postal Service will use to implement this section.

“(f) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The tables of sections for chapter 30 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

“§3016. Administrative subpoenas.”.

SEC. 8. REQUIREMENTS OF PROMOTERS OF Skill Contests or Sweepstakes MAILings.

(a) In General.—Chapter 30 of title 39, United States Code (as amended by section 7 of this Act) is amended by adding after section 3016 the following:

“§3017. Nonmailable skill contests or sweepstakes matter; notification to prohibit mailings

“(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the term—

“(1) ‘removal request’ means a written request that mails a skill contest or sweepstakes shall not include an opportunity to make a payment or order a product or service;

“(2) ‘removal request’ means a written request stating that an individual elects to have the name and address of such individual excluded from any list used by a promoter for mailing skill contests or sweepstakes;

“(3) ‘skill contest’ means a puzzle, game, competition, or other contest in which—

“(A) a prize is awarded or offered;

“(B) the outcome depends predominantly on the skill of the individual entering the contest;

“(C) a purchase, payment, or donation is required or implied to be required to enter the contest; and “(D) the outcome is a game of chance for which no consideration is required to enter.

“(b) NONMAILABLE MATTER.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Matter otherwise legally acceptable in the mails described under paragraph (2)—

“(A) is nonmailable matter;
“(B) another duly authorized person.

(9) Prohibition on commercial use of lists.—

“(1) in general.—

(A) prohibition.—No person may provide any information, including the sale or rental of any name or address, in a list described under subparagraph (B) to another person for commercial use.

(B) lists.—A list referred to under subparagraph (A) is any list of names and addresses (or other related information) used, maintained, or created by the system established under this section.

“(2) civil penalty.—Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be assessed a civil penalty by the Postal Service not to exceed $2,000,000 per mailing of nonmailable matter or $50,000 per other related information) used, maintained, or created by the system established under this section.

“(3) immunity.—Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to preempt any provision of State or local law that imposes more restrictive requirements, regulations, damages, costs, or penalties. No determination by the Postal Service that any particular piece of mail or class of mail is in compliance with the requirements of subsection (c)(2) shall be liable to the United States in an amount of $10,000 per violation for each mailing of nonmailable matter.

“(4) criminal statute.—Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to affect the criminal statute of any State or any specific criminal or civil statute of that State or any specific civil or criminal statute of that State.

SECTION 10. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Except as provided in section 8, this Act shall take effect 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

Amend the title so as to read: ‘‘A bill to amend chapter 30 of title 39, United States Code, to provide for the nonmailable matter of certain deceptive matter relating to sweepstakes, skill contests, facsimile checks, administrative procedures, orders, and civil penalties relating to such matter, and for other purposes.’’

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be 2 hours for debate on S. 335, to be equally divided between the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Michigan or their designees.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following members of my staff be granted the privilege of the floor during consideration of S. 335: Lee Blaylock and Michael Bopp.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. If the Senator will yield for a similar request, I ask unanimous consent that Leslie Bell of my staff be granted the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at 5:10 today Senator Edwards be allowed to speak for up to 10 minutes, with the time coming from the time controlled by the Senator from Michigan, that the Senator from Michigan be permitted to speak for 5 minutes following Senator Edwards, and that I be permitted to speak for 5 minutes immediately prior to the 5:30 vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. COLLINS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate is now considering S. 335, the Deceptive Mail Practices Act. As Chair of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, which I chair. This legislation would establish for the first time tough new Federal consumer protection standards for sweepstakes and other promotional mailings. For example, these mailings would be required to clearly inform consumers that a purchase is not necessary to win the contest and that a purchase will not increase their chances of winning. In addition to these important consumer protections, the bill confers additional investigative and enforcement authority on the Postal Service and authorizes civil fines of up to $2 million for companies that violate the consumer protection standards.

This comprehensive measure has the support of the AARP, the National Consumers League, and the U.S. Postal Service.

I particularly recognize the leadership roles played by several members of the committee. Senator LEVIN, in particular, has long been a leader in the effort to curtail deceptive mailings. Senator COCHRAN held some of the first hearings on this issue. Senator EDWARDS, Senator SPECTER, and Senator DURBIN all contributed greatly to our investigation.

Let me also express my appreciation for the assistance provided by the chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee, Senator THOMPSON, and by the committee’s ranking minority member, Senator LIEBERMAN.

In addition, I salute Senator CAMPBELL, who was one of the first to call attention to the growing problems of deceptive sweepstakes mailings. Some of the provisions in our legislation are similar to those in a bill introduced by Senator CAMPBELL.

I first became aware of the growing problem of deceptive sweepstakes last year after receiving several complaints from my constituents in Maine. In order to learn more about this growing problem, the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations began an investigation into the nature of deceptive mailings and the extent of sweepstakes and other promotional mailings. The subcommittee soon realized that the promotional mailing industry generates an enormous volume of mail that reaches the mailboxes of millions of Americans. In fact, the four major sweepstakes companies alone flood the mailboxes of Americans with more than 1 billion solicitations every year.

The Subcommittee held 2 days of public hearings. At the first subcommittee hearing in March, we examined the practices of the four major sweepstakes companies: American Family Publishers, Publishers Clearinghouse; Time, Inc.; and Reader’s Digest.

I want to make clear that they all run legitimate sweepstakes, legitimate in the sense that they do award the prizes, they do deliver the merchandise orders, and they do not seek to conceal their identities. However, there is a critical distinction between running a legal contest and treating consumers fairly, without resorting to misleading or deceptive practices.

Our hearings in March examined the key issue of whether consumers are being clearly informed that no purchase is necessary to enter sweepstakes and that buying something does not increase their chances of winning. Far too many consumers believe that if they make a purchase in response to the sweepstakes solicitation, they somehow improve their chances of winning. Nothing could be further from the truth. The subcommittee heard testimony indicating that the existing disclaimers used by the large sweepstakes companies are of very little value. They are too often deceptively worded or they are contradicted by the glowing promises in the promotional copy. In addition, they are hard to locate on the mailing, and they are often written in very tiny print that is difficult to read.

Our hearings in March prompted over 1,000 letters from across the country to the subcommittee. Many of those letters included mailings from smaller sweepstakes companies with which the subcommittee had not been familiar. This public response prompted an expansion of the subcommittee’s investigation into the deceptive practices of these smaller sweepstakes companies.

Those smaller companies were the focus of the subcommittee’s second... hearing in July. Many of these smaller companies tend to be fly-by-night operations—different multiple trade names to hide their identities and to confuse consumers. In fact, we found one company that sent out solicitations under 40 different trade names. That was obviously very confusing to consumers because when they were getting a chance to enter 40 different contests when, in fact, it was just one sweepstakes company using 40 different names.

In some cases, these smaller companies are run by promoters for a year or two and then shut down. The operator then starts up a new company under yet another name, often one that is specifically chosen to lend credibility to the contest or to deceive consumers. These companies profit not only from their extremely deceptive mailings but also by reselling the names of their customers to other operators who then inundate the unlucky consumer with still more mailings. Unfortunately, our investigation suggests that, you have practiced, this business, is quite lucrative.

The smaller companies investigated by the subcommittee sent approximately 100 million mailings in 1998 and received over 11 million purchases, which we conservatively estimate cost consumers in the neighborhood of $40 million. In return, most individuals received a discount coupon book that was frequently followed by additional numerous other mailings urging consumers to purchase the exact same coupon book once again.

Anonymity, as our hearings demonstrated, is crucial to the success of many of these small operators. They depend on working in the shadows and under the radar of State and Federal regulators. They are, in many ways, the ‘‘stealth’’ sweepstakes companies, difficult to detect, to track, and to stop. Our investigation discovered that most of these companies attempt to conceal their identities through multiple corporate names and various mailbox drops in several different States. Their mailings are often designed to deceive even the most cautious and wary consumer.

Our investigation and hearings demonstrated that sweepstakes companies, both large and small, use deceptive and aggressive marketing techniques far too often to entice consumers into making purchases that they do not need or want, in the mistaken belief that a purchase will improve their chances of winning the grand prize.

Indeed, we heard testimony that deceptive sweepstakes mailings can induce trusting consumers to purchase thousands of dollars of questionable merchandise. One example that was related to us by a witness was a magazine subscription extending to the year 2018 that had been purchased by her 82-year-old father-in-law in response to repeated solicitations.

The subcommittee found that many of our senior citizens are particularly vulnerable to such deceptive mailings. They are trusting consumers who believe what they read, particularly if it is endorsed by a trusted spokesman, such as Ed McMahon or Dick Clark, or if it comes from a well-known company, such as Bearor’s Discount Time. Or if it involves a mailing that appears to be official.

At the subcommittee’s hearings, family members told of loved ones who were so convinced that they had won a sweepstakes that they refused to leave their home for fear of missing the Prize Patrol. One of my constituents in Maine actually postponed needed surgery because she was absolutely convinced that that was going to be the day her winnings were delivered to her.

The subcommittee investigated many cases of seniors who, enticed by the bold promises in deceptive sweepstakes, actually spent their Social Security checks, squandered their life’s savings, and even borrowed money in order to continue to make purchases through these sweepstakes mailings. I will never forget one of our witnesses who actually broke down in tears before the subcommittee as he recounted how he had been enticed to spend $15,000 on merchandise he did not want because he thought it would bring him closer to winning millions of dollars.

Time and again, family members have described sweepstakes companies literally bombarding elderly relatives with repeated mailings. Our witnesses explained that their elderly family members spent thousands of dollars in the vain hope that if they just bought one more trinket, or one more videotape, or one more magazine subscription, they would improve their chances of winning. Of course, it never did.

The losses suffered by consumers could not, however, be measured in dollars alone. As one elderly gentleman put it:

My wife has finally come to realize that she has been duped by the sweepstakes solicitations for all these years. Although the financial drain is now halted, the loss of her dignity is incalculable.

Unfortunately, these are not isolated examples. According to a recent survey commissioned by the AARP, nearly 40 percent of seniors surveyed believed there was a connection between purchasing and winning, that either making a purchase would help you to win or it would ensure that you would win a prize.

You have only to look at some of these sweepstakes mailings to understand why consumers draw these conclusions. For example, one mailing by Publishers Clearinghouse, which is famous for its Prize Patrol, tells consumers to ‘‘open your door to $31 million on January 31.’’ You can see the personalized mailing, although we blocked out the name of the person involved. This mailing clearly suggests to the consumer that his or her—her in this case—purchases are paying off. It specifically states:

You see, your recent order and entry has proven to us that you’re indeed one of our loyal friends and a savvy sweepstakes player. And now I’m pleased to tell you that you’ve passed our selection criteria to receive this special invitation...

Mr. President, this is clearly and blatantly designed to deceive the consumer into drawing a connection between making a purchase and winning the prize.

Let me show you another example. The next example is a mailing from American Family Publishers. It states: ‘‘It’s down to a 2 person race for $11 million—you and one other person in Georgia were issued the winning number. Whoever returns it first wins it all.’’

Most people don’t see the very fine print that declares: ‘‘You probably have the winning number. Unless the contestant reads and understands this fine print, the mailing leaves the unmistakable impression that this recipient, this lucky person, and one other person, have the winning number for the $11 million prize. This mailing actually causes a number of contestants to fly to Florida in the hope that their entry would be received first. After all, it says, ‘Whoever returns it first wins it all.’’ It also prompted lawsuits by several States’ attorneys general, and American Family Publishers eventually agreed to a multistate settlement.

I wish the misleading mailings from the largest sweepstakes companies represented the worst of the lot. Unfortunately, they do not. Let’s take a look at a couple of examples of deceptive practices of some of the smaller sweepstakes companies. As you will recall, these were the companies that were brought to the subcommittee’s attention by outraged consumers from across this country who wrote to us after our first round of hearings.

This solicitation, or promotion, from Mellon, Astor & Fairweather is a deceptive attempt to make the consumer think that a prestigious firm—presumably an accounting firm—is ready to give him or her money. Despite describing Mellon, Astor & Fairweather as the ‘‘trustee of record,’’ the sponsor of this mailing admitted under oath to the subcommittee that Mellon, Astor & Fairweather is not a trustee for any group or individual. In fact, there is no ‘‘Mellon,’’ ‘‘Astor,’’ or ‘‘Fairweather’’ associated with this company. The name was completely made up to give an air of legitimacy and credibility to this mailing—in short, to deceive people. Moreover, the sweepstakes promoter admitted that this is actually the address of a Mail Boxes, Etc., and that the company’s offices are located.
not in Lake Forest, IL, but in Las Vegas, NV.

Another problem the subcommittee found was the use of words or symbols that give the impression that the mailing is connected with the Federal Government. Here is another example of this kind of mailing. It says at the top—"it is hard to read: The Official United Sweepstakes of America.

Yes, this mailing implies a Government connection to the sweepstakes. It includes a photo of the U.S. Treasury building, and by using the address of 611 Pennsylvania Avenue, Southeast, Washington, DC it sounds like a very prestigious Pennsylvania Avenue address of a Federal agency. In fact, once again, this is an address of a Mail Boxes, Etc. And, of course, the Federal Government does not sponsor sweepstakes, contrary to the implication of this mailing.

Yet another deceptive mailing shows how fraudulent operators link their company to the Government. This is a blowup of a postcard sent to me by a constituent from Machiasport, ME. As you can see, it is marked “Urgent Delivery. A Special Notification of Cash Currently Being Held By the U.S. Government is Ready for Shipment to You.” It mimics the typical postcard the Postal Service uses. It is designed to look like that.

The mailing asks the consumer to send $9.97 to learn how to receive this cash. Of course, this was not in any way a legitimate postcard from the Federal Government. It was merely a ploy used by an unscrupulous promoter to trick an unsuspecting consumer into sending money. Fortunately, my consumer did not fall for this scam. But many others did, leading the Postal Service to bring action against the promoter of this scam.

Sadly, these are just a few of the many examples of deceptive mailings that the subcommittee uncovered during its investigation. The simple fact is that far too many consumers regularly fall victim to increasingly deceptive and sophisticated marketing techniques used in these mailings.

I want to emphasize that sweepstakes can, of course, be a legitimate marketing technique. While I have concerns with the deceptive nature of far too many sweepstakes mailings, I don’t want to give the impression that all sweepstakes are deceptive, or that they should be outlawed. Our legislation is setting clear standards for them to follow to avoid the kind of deception that we found to be rampant in the industry.

Let me outline the major provisions of the legislation before the Senate today.

First, S. 335 requires sweepstakes mailings to clearly and conspicuously display several important disclaimers and consumer notices, including a clear statement that no purchase is necessary to win the contest, and most of all, a statement that a purchase will not improve your chances of winning. I think that is the most important disclaimer of all.

These statements have to appear in three places—on the solicitation, in the rules, and on the order form.

In addition, the mailings must state the odds of winning, the value and the nature of the prize, and the name and address of the sponsor of the sweepstakes. Sweepstakes mailings would also be required to include all the rules and entry procedures for the contest. The bill would prohibit mailings from describing the recipient as a “winner” unless the recipient has really won a prize.

You can see from some of the mailings that we have discussed here today why that provision is necessary.

Second, this legislation includes the provision drafted by Senator Edwards to require companies sending sweepstakes or skill contests to establish a system that will allow consumers to remove themselves from future sweepstakes mailing lists. Companies sending sweepstakes mailings must include either a toll-free number or the address at which the consumer may request that their name be removed altogether from future sweepstakes mailings. Companies would be required to remove such individuals from sweepstakes lists within 35 days.

Our hearings showed that far too many consumers had great difficulty in turning off the spigot of sweepstakes lists within 35 days.

Third, our legislation strengthens the current law regarding “Government look-alike” mailings by prohibiting mailings that imply a connection to, approval, or endorsement by the Federal Government through the misleading use of a seal, insignia, reference to the Postmaster General, citation to a Federal law, or any other term or symbol unless the mailings carry true disclaimers.

The bill imposes new Federal standards for facsimile checks that are sent in sweepstakes mailings. These tests must include a statement on the check itself stating that it is non-negotiable and has no cash value.

Finally, S. 335 will strengthen the ability of the Postal Service to combat deceptive mailings. Under existing law, the Postal Inspection Service does not possess subpoena authority, is unable to obtain a judicial order to stop the deceptive mailing at multiple mailboxes in different States, and may only seek fines if a company has violated a previously imposed order for sending deceptive mailings.

Our legislation grants the Postal Service subpoena authority, nationwide wiretap mail authority, and the ability to impose strong civil penalties for the first violation. At our hearings in July, the Postal Service testified that civil penalties would be a significant deterrent against deceptive mailings. We can’t just have minor penalties that are treated as a cost of doing business. The penalties under our legislation can reach as high as $1 million, and, if a company violates an order, that penalty is doubled and can range as high as $2 million.

The current penalties—capped at $10,000 per day—are simply inadequate to deter deceptive mailings, especially since they can only be imposed after the mailer has evaded or failed to comply with a prior order.

Our bill recognizes the important role played by the States in investigating and prosecuting deceptive mailings. We do not preempt any provision of State or local law. In many instances, it is the States that have taken the strong action against deceptive sweepstakes mailings. During our investigation, we worked very closely with the National Association of Attorneys General.

I would like to close my initial statement by urging my colleagues to support S. 2335, the Deceptive Mail Prevention and Enforcement Act, so that the Senate, by passing this legislation later today, can take an important first legislative step in curtailing deceptive sweepstakes and protect the American consumer.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Maine for her tremendous leadership on this issue and so many other consumer protection issues. She is leading the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations with tremendous distinction, with great strength, and the consumers of this Nation are all better off because of that leadership. This bill is a further example of that leadership. I am proud to be her principal cosponsor of the bill that we have worked on for so long.

Sweepstakes for many Americans has become a cruel joke. Americans are overwhelmed with sweepstakes solicitations in the mail that deceptively appear to promise large winnings but deliver only empty appeals for purchases of unneeded products and more entries into additional sweepstakes.

The majority of Americans may have a healthy skepticism about these solicitations and don’t believe the misleading representations. But many are not so disbelieving, and they can get caught up and do get caught up in a spiral of financial and emotional trauma.

The subcommittee heard story after story before of seniors particularly, some of the most vulnerable people in America, who receive these mailings and believe that they have been awarded a prize.

Several of my constituents from Michigan lost tens of thousands of dollars to sweepstakes solicitations.

One woman in Grand Rapids spent over $12,000 in one year with Reader's Digest.

A woman in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan spent $30,000 in less than a month on sweepstakes-related promotions.

Sweepstakes solicitations are big business. Companies using sweepstakes to promote their products, be it magazines or coupon books, or jewelry, send over a billion pieces of mail a year to American consumers.

We learned that one person could get from one company alone as much as 144 different sweepstakes mailings in a year. That was from a so-called "legitimate company."

Purchases through these types of mailings are in the billions of dollars. Sweepstakes are used as the "come-on" to get the recipient to purchase a product or make a contribution. They are used, companies say, to get the recipients to open the envelopes and, once opened, to get the person to respond with a purchase or contribution.

Promoters argue that sweepstakes entice people to buy products they want or need. Yet we learned at our hearings this is clearly leaving a very different impression.

We investigated and demonstrated that many people who enter these sweepstakes purchase items only because they think doing so will improve their chances of winning the sweepstakes prize. A large number buy and buy and spend tens of thousands of dollars, with that expectation that the purchase of items will help improve their chances of winning.

Companies are not allowed by law to use the U.S. mails to conduct a lottery. A lottery is where payment must be given in order to have a chance to win. It is illegal for a sweepstakes promoter to require a purchase in order for a person to have a chance to win or to improve a person's chances of winning.

Buying something when entering a sweepstakes cannot, by law, do anything to improve a person's chances of winning. Many people don't know that or believe a purchase will improve their chance and many sweepstake companies try to leave the impression that buying something will give that recipient an advantage.

Sweepstake companies encourage this in many ways. For example, some use different envelopes for those who buy a product and those who don't. Here is an example from Reader's Digest. They send two envelopes. If a person orders something, the envelope says: Yes, Reward Entitlement [underlined], Granted and Guaranteed. If a person does not order something, the envelope says: No Reward Entitlement, Denied and Unwarranted.

They go to different post office boxes, clearly leaving a very different impression. It is a very strong different impression, a very deceptive different impression.

Other sweepstakes companies use their own envelope and address card for those entering the sweepstakes without a purchase. In another sweepstakes, they are given an envelope if they want to buy something; if they don't want to buy something but still enter, they have to fill out their own envelope or their own card, which is much more difficult than if they are simply buying a product.

Some companies try to confuse the message, leaving the recipient to believe he has to pay a fee to collect a prize that he has already won. This certificate states, "You are a $12,000 winner!" And our investigation demonstrated that our constituents do not understand that buying something will not improve their chances of winning. The companies state clearly and conspicuously that buying something will not improve their chances of winning.

Other sweepstakes companies use their own envelope and address card for those entering the sweepstakes without a purchase. In another sweepstakes, they are given an envelope if they want to buy something; if they don't want to buy something but still enter, they have to fill out their own envelope or their own card, which is much more difficult than if they are simply buying a product.

And our investigation demonstrated that our constituents do not understand that buying something will not improve their chances of winning. The companies state clearly and conspicuously that buying something will not improve their chances of winning.

Companies make the reader believe that buying something will help him get the prize it would help her get the prize. This is a Certificate of Recognition for her loyalty to Reader's Digest: Dear valued customer: You've been selected to receive one of our highest honors—the Reader's Digest Recognition Reward. It's your obvious love of Reader's Digest and sweepstakes that made you an ideal candidate. In fact, it was your recent subscription request that finalized our decision.

In other words, keep buying and we will keep sending opportunities to win a sweepstakes. It is buying the Reader's Digest that they are saying gets the special treatment. What is the Reader's Digest Recognition Award? It is a little stick 'em that Mrs. Rosenbarg got for spending over $12,000 in 1 year for products she didn't even open, filling up her house.

Through the artful placement of words and graphics, the sweepstakes companies make the reader believe they have won. They use such large screaming headlines: [Mr. X] is Officially Declared $833,337 Winner.

A big headline you can't miss. However, one misses the fine print that says, no, you haven't—only if you held the right number. What jumps out is the headline that you have won.

Our sweepstake promoters try to make their envelopes look special, not like the bulk mail which they are, or make them look like a government document, or even in the case of a recent Publishers Clearinghouse envelope, as if they were photographs that the recipient paid to have developed. This envelope looks exactly like envelopes received from the photo store. In fact, this is one of these sweepstake offers from Publishers Clearinghouse.

We cannot control each and every trick that a company uses to get the recipient of a sweepstakes promotion to buy something. However, there are some things we can and we should insist upon. We can insist that the companies state clearly and conspicuously that buying something will not improve a person's chances of winning. We can insist that these companies state clearly and conspicuously that you don't need to buy anything to win.

We can make these companies state clearly and conspicuously what are the odds of winning. In many cases, the odds are nearly 1 in 100 million or 1 in 150 million. We can also require the sweepstake promoters not tell a person they have won if they haven't and not use devices to suggest that the mail is from a Government agency. That will hopefully alert the folks receiving the sweepstakes promotion and will help them this bill that the government says they really do not want and do not need.

In the last Congress, several of our colleagues joined in sponsoring a bill to increase enforcement of deceptive mailings by the Postal Service. This year Senator Collins held hearings on sweepstakes and other forms of deceptive mail. We have introduced two bills to try to eliminate deceptive sweepstakes practices. Senator Collins’ bill is S. 335; my bill is S. 336. We learned during the hearings that the financial costs to consumers for deceptive and fraudulent sweepstakes is a serious problem and one that particularly plagues our senior citizens. We learned that the Postal Service has inadequate, law enforcement tools to effectively shut down deceptive direct marketers who use deceptive sweepstakes promotions to sell their products. We also learned that the Postal Service can’t impose a fine against such a promoter until the Postal Service has issued a stop order, and the stop order has been violated. Willy promoters craft their mailing so that it technically complies with a particular stop order but is this deceptive? Thus, time and time again these promoters continue to prey on Americans, and the postal service has been all but powerless to stop them.

The bill before us is a combination of our two bills. It establishes a special provision in law for deceptive sweepstakes mailings, requires certain disclosures to be clearly and conspicuously displayed in key parts of the sweepstakes promotion; prohibits other misleading and deceptive statements in the promotion; gives the Postal Service additional law enforcement tools, and requires sweepstakes promoters to provide a mechanism for a recipient of mail to remove his or her name off a mailing list if requested.

Mr. President, what is the time situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These are 34½ minutes remaining on the Senator’s side.

Mr. LEVIN. I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

The provisions in S. 336 have been incorporated into the substitute. First, to prevent unscrupulous mailers from duping people into believing that a purchase will increase their chances of winning, the bill requires that a statement that a purchase will not increase an individual’s chances of winning be clearly and conspicuously displayed in a prominent place and manner in the mailing, in the rules, and on the order or entry form.

In addition to the new requirements and standards, this is perhaps the most important. The statement that a purchase will not increase an individual’s chances of winning must not only be clearly and conspicuously displayed but also displayed in a prominent place and manner in the mailing, in the rules, or on the entry form. Such a statement will, hopefully, help readers dissociate the ordering process from the sweepstakes entry.

Second, it provides the Postal Service with the authority to issue a civil penalty for a first-time violation of the statute. This means the Postal Service does not have to first issue a stop order and then wait for that order to be violated before assessing civil penalties. This has the effect of applying the penalty to the deceptive offense, not for noncompliance with the order. It makes enforcement a one-step instead of a two-step process. Third, it gives the Postal Service the subpoena authority it often needs to help identify sweepstakes mailers.

Despite the specificity of the disclosures required under the bill, I remain quite concerned that the disclosures be noticeable and understandable to the reader. That is why the bill requires all disclosures to be clearly and conspicuously displayed. With a managers’ amendment, we define “clearly and conspicuously displayed” in the bill so that there can be no misunderstanding by the Postal Service and the direct mail industry as to what we mean. Furthermore, two critical disclosures—“no purchase necessary” and “a purchase will not increase an individual’s chances of winning”—are required to be not only “clearly and conspicuously displayed” but “prominently” displayed as well. This means that these two disclosures must be highly visible to and easily noticeable by the reader. These important messages will not be allowed to be hidden or disguised through illegible print size, glitzy disclosures, watermarked disclosures, or barely noticeable ink color.

The Deceptive Mail Prevention and Enforcement Act of 1999 takes a tough stance. The bill will force sweepstakes mailers to start telling the truth. For all the folks who have done a tremendous job in the pendency of this legislation: R. Emmett Mattes, Kathy D. Cutler, and Deirdre Foley.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Michigan for his very generous comments. Also, once again I commend his outstanding leadership on this issue. It has been terrific working with him in a variety of areas related to consumer protection. We are where we are today because of his efforts.

I also want to thank the staff who have done a tremendous job.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The privilege of the floor.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I am pleased to be a cosponsor and to support the passage of the Deceptive Mail Prevention and Enforcement Act, S. 335. This legislation would establish new safeguards to protect consumers against deceptive and dishonest sweepstakes and other promotional mailings. The bill grants additional investigative and enforcement authority to the U.S. Postal Service to stop deceptive mailings, and it establishes standards for all sweepstakes mailings by requiring certain disclosures on each mailing.

In the last Congress, our subcommittee examined the use of mass mail to deceive and defraud consumers. At the hearings, we heard how sweepstakes and other promotions were causing individuals to make unwanted or excessive purchases in the hope that the purchases would increase their chances of winning. As a result of the hearings, we concluded that an individual's chances of winning must not only be clearly and conspicuously displayed but also displayed in a prominent place and manner in the mailing, in the rules, or on the entry form. Such a statement will, hopefully, help readers dissociate the ordering process from the sweepstakes entry.

Second, it provides the Postal Service with the authority to issue a civil penalty for a first-time violation of the statute. in some cases—sometimes their life savings—to deceptive mailing practices. But it is not just sweepstakes offers that are deceptive. Some mailers imply an association with the Government, often enticng consumers to pay unnecessary fees.

This bill will address several types of deceptive mailings, including sweepstakes and Government look-alike mailings.

First, it will require sweepstakes mailings to display a statement that no purchase is necessary to enter the contest and that a purchase will not improve the chances of winning. Other disclosures will also be required, including the sponsor of the sweepstakes and the principal place of business or an address at which the sponsor can be reached, and the estimated odds of winning each prize and the estimated aggregate value of each prize. In addition, all terms and conditions of the sweepstakes promotion, including the rules and entry procedures for the sweepstakes, will be required on each mailing.

Second, the bill will expand the authority of the U.S. Postal Service by granting the Postal Inspection Service subpoena authority, nationwide stop-mail authority, and the ability to impose civil penalties of up to $1 million for the first offense and $2 million for a violation of an existing order.

Finally, the bill will strengthen existing law regarding Government look-alike mailings by requiring disclaimers on any mailings that might be interpreted as implying a connection to the Federal Government.

This legislation was reported out of the Subcommittee on International Security, Proliferation, and Federal Services on April 12 and reported unanimously by the Committee on Governmental Affairs on May 20. It has the support of the U.S. Postal Service, a number of consumer groups, and the American Association of Retired Persons.

I commend the work of the distinguished Senator from Maine, Ms. Collins, in crafting this legislation to curb deceptive mailings. As chair of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, Senator Collins has thoroughly and reported majestically by the Committee on Governmental Affairs on May 20. It has the support of the U.S. Postal Service, a number of consumer groups, and the American Association of Retired Persons.

I commend the work of the distinguished Senator from Maine, Ms. Collins, in drafting this legislation to curb deceptive mailings. As chair of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, Senator Collins has thoroughly examined the issue, and I applaud her efforts in developing this bill and her continuing efforts to protect consumers. The distinguished ranking minority member of the committee, Senator Levin, has also supported this initiative, and we appreciate his assistance.

This bill takes an important step toward the prevention of deception in sweepstakes and other promotional mailings. I urge Senators to support it.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, during the July 1999 hearing on deceptive mail held by the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, several promoters testified that they use different business names and different stationery to send to the same people different-looking mailings to promote the same sweepstakes. So, for example, on day one, a person can get a solicitation to enter a $10,000 sweepstake, and the solicitation says on the top that “Company Blue” is making the offer. In the rules it says “your chances of winning are 1 in 3 million.” Let’s say you enter the sweepstakes. One week later you get another solicitation for a $10,000 sweepstakes.

And we learned that the standard operating procedure for this type of sweepstakes is to send 5 or 6 mailings to the same person to deter the person responding the first mailing.

So on this second mailing, it says “Company Red” at the top and the materials look totally different from the “Company Blue” promotions. The rules of this second solicitation also say you have a 1 in 3 million chance of winning $10,000, which a reasonable person would think is a completely different sweepstakes. That’s also what the promoter wants you to think. So you think you have a chance of winning $20,000 in total. But, you don’t. The most you can win is $10,000.

I believe these mailings are misrepresenting the facts, and under existing law these misrepresentations are deceptive mailings. Clearly, many sweepstakes mailers use different business names and different stationery to make you think they’re receiving two separate solicitations, each involving two separate sweepstakes. In fact, the solicitations for “Company Blue” and “Company Red” are for the same sweepstakes and thus you can win only once. Section 3005 of title 39 currently allows the Postal Service to deny delivery of mail used as part of a scheme to obtain money through the mail by deception. Clearly, many sweepstakes mailers use different business names and different stationery to mislead consumers into believing that they are entering separate contests from different companies.

Ms. COLLINS. Yes, I agree with the language you just used. The practice of using different-looking promotional mailings without any information explaining that they are for the same sweepstakes serves no purpose except to lead recipients into believing that they are different sweepstakes. Once the recipient believes that a separate purchase must be made for each sweepstakes, the recipient who believes that a purchase either is required or will confer an advantage upon them will then believe that a separate purchase must be made for each unique-looking sweepstakes. Because these different-looking mailings do not clearly state that they are promoting the same sweepstakes, I agree with the Senator from Michigan that they can be deceptive.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, our bill requires a sweepstakes or skill contest promotion, in order to be mailable matter, to contain a number of specific disclosures. Each of the disclosures required by the bill must be clearly and conspicuously displayed. This is a definition consistent with the definition used by the Federal Trade Commission.

Two of the required disclosures—that no purchase is necessary to win and that purchasing does not improve your chances of winning—are so important to giving a consumer the information he or she needs to decide whether or not to enter a sweepstakes and if so, whether or not to purchase an advertised product—that they should appear prominently in three places in each mailing. Our addition of the term “prominently” to these two disclosures is intended to emphasize the heightened significance of these disclosures. This means that these two disclosures must be highly visible and highly noticeable to the reader. In Edgeworth v. Fort Howard Paper Co., 673 F. Supp. 922, 923 (N.D. Ill. 1987), rev. on other grounds, 883 F. Supp. 1193 (1998), the District Court defined “prominent and accessible” to mean that the message conveyed can readily be observed by the people for whom it is intended. In Allstate Insurance Co. v. Clemmons, 742 F. Supp. 1073, 1075 (D.N.J. 1990), the District Court defined “prominently displayed” to mean “the message must have greater prominence than the balance of the policy language. . . . In other words, a clause attains prominence by being different from its surrounding terms.”

Mr. President, our bill requires, for purposes of our bill, the making the two disclosures to which “prominently” applies to mean “the message must have greater prominence than the balance of the policy language. . . . In other words, a clause attains prominence by being different from its surrounding terms.”

One can argue that there is going to be some subjectivity in deciding whether a statement is prominently placed in a promotion or not. Our intention here is to provide the Postal Service with enough guidance to ensure that when it comes to these two

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—SENATE 18993
disclosures, there should be no close calls. These two disclosures should be obviously clearly and conspicuously displayed in a prominent manner and location.

Does the Senator from Maine agree with my description?

Ms. COLLINS. Yes, I do. Of the several disclosures we require to be included in a mailing containing a sweepstakes or skill contest promotion, these two disclosures—that no purchase is necessary and that purchasing does not improve your chances of win-ing—are particularly important for the reader to see in a prominent way.

The statements themselves should be clear and conspicuous, as required by the bill, and they should be prominent in three places in each mailing, so it would be very difficult for a recipient not to notice them.

A number of sweepstakes and skill contest promoters currently include in their mailings the statement that no purchase is necessary. But this is often included only as a part of a lengthy set of rules or buried in other statements and notions that allow it to be easily overlooked. That is why our managers’ amendment includes the requirement that these two statements be prominent, and clearly and conspicuously displayed. I thank the Senator from Michigan for his assistance on this issue.

AMENDMENT NO. 1497

(Purpose: To provide a managers’ amendment)

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I send to the desk the managers’ amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:
The Senator from Maine [Ms. COLLINS], for herself and Mr. LEVIN, proposes an amendment numbered 1497.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 19, insert between lines 22 and 23
the following:

“(A) ‘clearly and conspicuously displayed’ means presented in a manner that is readily noticeable, readable, and understandable to

SEC. 8. REQUIREMENTS OF PROMOTERS OF SKILL CONTESTS OR SWEEPSTAKES

(a) In General.—Chapter 30 of title 39, United States Code (as amended by section 7 of this Act) is amended by adding after section 3016 the following:

3017. Nonmailable skill contests or sweepestakes matter; notification to prohibit mailings

(a) Definitions.—In this section, the term—

‘(1) ‘promoter’ means any person who—

(A) originates and mails any skill contest or combatstakes matter; or

(B) originates and causes to be mailed any skill contest or sweepstakes, except for any matter described under section 3001(k)(4); or

‘(2) ‘removal request’ means a request stating that an individual elects to have the name and address of such individual excluded from any list used by a promoter for mailing skill contests or sweepstakes;

‘(3) ‘skill contest’ means a puzzle, game, competition, or other contest in which

(A) a prize is awarded or offered;

(B) the outcome depends predominately on the skill of the contestant; and

(C) a purchase, payment, or donation is required or implied to be required to enter the contest; and

‘(4) ‘sweepstakes’ means a game of chance for which no consideration is required to enter.

(b) Nonmailable Matter.—

(1) In General.—Matter otherwise legally acceptable in the mails described under paragraph (2)—

(A) is nonmailable matter;

(B) shall not be carried or delivered by mail; and

(C) shall be disposed of as the Postal Service directs.

(2) Nonmailable Matter Described.—

Matter that is nonmailable matter referred to under paragraph (1) is any matter that—

(A) is a skill contest or sweepstakes, except for any matter described under section 3001(k)(4); and

(B)(i) is addressed to an individual who made an election to be excluded from lists under subsection (a), or

(ii) does not comply with subsection
(c)(1).

(c) Requirements of Promoters.—

(1) Notice to Individuals.—Any promoter who mails a skill contest or sweepstakes shall provide with each mailing a statement that—

(A) is clearly and conspicuously displayed;

(B) includes the address or toll-free telephone number of the notification system established under paragraph (2); and

(C) states that the notification system may be used to prohibit the mailing of all skill contests or sweepstakes by that promoter to the individual.

(2) Notification System.—Any promoter that mails or causes to be mailed a skill contest or sweepstakes shall establish and mainthan a notification system that provides for any individual (or other duly authorized person) to notify the system of the individual’s election to have the name and address of the individual excluded from all lists of names and addresses used by that person to mail any skill contest or sweepstakes.

(d) Election To Be Excluded From

Lists.—

(1) In General.—An individual (or other duly authorized person) may elect to exclude the name and address of that individual from all lists of names and addresses used by a promoter of skill contests or sweepstakes by submitting a removal request to the notification system established under subsection
(c).

(2) Response After Submitting Removal

Request To The Notification System.—Not later than 35 calendar days after a promoter receives a removal request pursuant to an election by the Postal Service (1), the prom-motor shall exclude the individual’s name and address from all lists of names and addresses used by that promoter to select recipients for any skill contest or sweepstakes.

(3) Effectiveness of Election.—An election under paragraph (1) shall remain in ef-flect, unless an individual (or other duly authorized person) notifies the promoter in writing that such individual—

(A) has changed the election; and

(B) elects to receive skill contest or sweepstakes mailings from that promoter.

(4) Promoter Nonliability.—A promoter shall not be subject to civil liability for the exclusion of an individual’s name or address from any list maintained by that promoter for mailing skill contests or sweepstakes.

(5) Prohibition on Commercial Use of

Lists.—

(a) General.—No person may provide any information (including the sale or rental of any name or address) derived from a list described under subparagraph (b) to another person for commercial use.

(b) Lists.—A list referred to under sub-paragraph (A) is any list of names and addresses (or other related information) compiled from individuals who exercise an election under subsection (d).

(6) Civil Penalty.—Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be assessed a civil penalty by the Postal Service not to exceed $2,000 per violation.

(7) Civil Penalties.—

(A) General.—Any promoter—who recklessly mails nonmailable matter in violation of subsection (b) shall be liable to the United States in an amount of $10,000 per violation for each mailing to an individual of nonmailable matter; or

(B) who fails to comply with the requirements of subsection (c)(2) shall be liable to the United States.

(8) Enforcement.—The Postal Service shall assess civil penalties under this sec-

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I offer this managers' amendment on behalf of myself and Senator LEVIN to clarify certain provisions of S. 335.

As I described in my opening statement, this legislation imposes a number of new standards on promotional mailings. The managers' amendment further defines what is a "clear and conspicuous" standard for the disclaimers and notices required in this bill. All disclaimers and notices must be "clearly and conspicuously displayed," which means "in a manner that is readily noticeable, clearly readable and understandable to the group to whom the applicable matter is disseminated."

During its investigation into deceptive sweepstakes mailings, the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations found numerous examples of mailings that misled consumers into believing that they must purchase a product to win a prize, or that a purchase will improve their chances of winning. The investigation showed that many mailings did not clearly inform consumers that no purchase was necessary to enter the sweepstakes and that buying a product did not increase their chances of winning. The disclaimers and notices in many existing sweepstakes mailings are of little value because they are too often buried in tiny print or contrived by the promotional copy. Consumers should not need a law degree or a magnifying glass to read the rules or to decipher how to enter a sweepstakes without placing an order. In order to give these disclaimers and consumer notices mandated by this bill, S. 335 requires each of these disclosures to be "clearly and conspicuously displayed."

The managers' amendment defines "clearly and conspicuously displayed" in a manner that is consistent with previous agency and court rulings. As the committee report for this legislation explains, the Federal Trade Commission has issued opinions on the meaning of "clear and conspicuous" and this standard is a staple of commercial law. The definition of clear and conspicuous, as used in S. 335, is meant to be consistent with the interpretation of the standard as developed in previous regulatory opinions, statements, and case law.

Thus, as the definition states, the required disclosures must be readily noticeable, readable, and understandable to the group to whom the matter is mailed. As the committee report notes, in some instances, the language may need to be highlighted, in bold letters, or placed in a visible location. We recognize that the format and layout of promotional mailings differ dramatically and, accordingly, the presentation of each required disclosure will necessarily vary. Thus, we believe it is improper to use the same size, font, color, or placement of each disclaimer imposed on promotional mailings. The definition in this managers' amendment, however, gives the regulators broad guidance to interpret on a case-by-case basis what is required for a disclaimer or notice to qualify as "clearly and conspicuously displayed."

The committee report accompanying S. 335 provides a detailed description of the clear and conspicuous standard as enunciated by the Federal Trade Commission and in court decisions. The standard was designed to prevent deception, and we expect those enforcing this Act to make use of this standard to protect consumers receiving promotions and practices. We agree with the Federal Trade Commission that deception occurs if there is a representation, omission, or practice that is likely to mislead the reasonable consumer or his or her detriment.

Furthermore, the managers' amendment adds the word "prominently" to the two most significant disclosures required by S. 335: first, that no purchase is necessary to enter the sweepstakes; and second, that a purchase will not increase an individual's chances of winning with that entry. S. 335 already places significance on these two disclosures by requiring that they appear in three different places in most sweepstakes mailings: (1) the mailing, (2) the rules, and (3) the entry or order form. Because the subcommittee's investigation found strong evidence that some consumers believed a purchase would increase their chances of winning, we view these two disclosures as particularly important. Because of the brevity of these disclosures, we believe that it is particularly important that they be easily identifiable by the reader.

The Federal Trade Commission has used a variety of terms to describe clear and conspicuous, including sufficiently clear and prominent. Because many of the other disclosures required by S. 335 may be lengthy and may only appear in one place in a mailing, we believe it is "clear and conspicuous" for one disclaimer to differ from what is necessitated by another. A disclosure of a few words, such as "no purchase necessary," would by its very nature dictate a different yardstick than would the entire contest rules, which might consist of several hundred words. We expect all disclosures to be clear and conspicuous but these two disclosures should be "prominent" in the three required places in sweepstakes mailings.

The managers' amendment also makes several technical changes. It removes duplicative language from several different disclosures required by S. 335. These deletions, however, are not intended in any way to weaken the overall requirement that disclosures to the group to whom the applicable matter is disseminated must be prominently and conspicuously displayed. The managers' amendment also deletes a somewhat duplicative requirement relating to advantages that a sweepstakes might imply are given to those entries that accompany a purchase. Given the managers' amendment states that a purchase will not improve the contestant's chance of winning, we determined that this provision was superfluous.

Finally, the managers' amendment replaces section 8 of the bill reported by the Governmental Affairs Committee with new language requiring all companies sending sweepstakes or skill contest mailings to establish a system for removing the names of individuals who do not wish to receive such mailings. Section 8, as reported out of the Committee on Governmental Affairs, established a uniform notification system for most sweepstakes and contest mailings.

Unlike the new provisions companies would be required—on a company-by-company basis—to include on their mailings a notice of the address or toll-free telephone number that individuals could contact to request that their names be removed from future mailings. Such names must be removed within 35 days after appropriate notice. If a mailing is recklessly sent to consumers who have requested not to receive further solicitations, the maller shall be subject to a penalty of $10,000. This section shall take effect one year after enactment of this legislation. We commend our colleague and friend Senator EDWARDS for his strong leadership in crafting this proposal.

In closing, I thank my colleagues, particularly Senator LEVIN, for their assistance in crafting this managers' amendment, and I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 1497) was agreed to.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LEVIN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, we are expecting additional speakers. In the meantime, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that time be charged equally to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.
Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise today to speak in support of the Deceptive Mail Prevention and Enforcement Act. Unsolicited mailings are seen by many as a nuisance. But when junk mail makes insupportable and outrageous claims of instant wealth, phantom prizes, and bogus benefits, annoyance becomes fraud—the small print notwithstanding.

Among its provisions, the Deceptive Mail Prevention and Enforcement Act, S. 335, would place new requirements on sweepstakes offerings and allow fines to be levied on deceptive mailings. S. 335 would also require sweepstakes information to be presented clearly, and grants the Postal Service new authority to halt misleading mailings.

I feel strongly that these reforms will benefit an untold number of American families and elderly persons from some unscrupulous elements of our society.

It pleases me to remark briefly on the genesis of this proposal. In my experience, the role of oversight and investigation enabled the Congress to craft its most informed, well reasoned, and thorough legislative proposals. As past chairman of the Senate's Permanent Subcommittee on Investigation and current chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, I have long used and will continue to use these tools to assess and reform.

I commend my successor as chairman of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigation, Senator SUSAN COLLINS, for taking a thorough approach to crafting this proposal. Following a process of investigation and hearings, Senator COLLINS has applied the right tools to a common problem. The people of Maine, Delaware, and the rest of our Nation will benefit from her hard work.

Earlier this year a constituent of mine from Huntington, Vermont, e-mailed me her story as an example of the problems of these deceptive sweepstakes mailings. She was shocked to receive mailings from and you are looking at an overwhelming amount of mail.

One of the most outrageous practices in these mailings is the request for a donation or a purchase of a product without making it clear that the donation or purchase has no effect on your chances of winning any of the prizes.

For example, another constituent of mine from Barre, Vermont, brought into my office over fifteen pounds of sweepstakes mailings from one company that related to only one contest. You have read the fine print of material for only one contest from one company. Multiply that by the number of contestants and companies people receive mailings from and you are looking at an overwhelming amount of mail.

One of the most outrageous practices in these mailings is the request for a donation or a purchase of a product without making it clear that the donation or purchase has no effect on your chances of winning any of the prizes. This has caused some people to spend their precious resources thinking they are giving themselves a better chance at winning the grand prize, when in reality it has done nothing to change the odds.

Senator COLLINS' legislation, S. 335, will go a long way to solve the problems of these deceptive sweepstakes mailings. It requires a clear disclosure of the game's rules and an indication that the odds of winning are not improved by purchasing any products that are being advertised. It will also restrict the mailing from depicting an individual as a winner unless that person actually has won a prize.

In addition, the bill will implement stricter penalties for sending mail that does not comply with the federal standards.

Every day people are being inundated with these mailings and many of them promote a belief that you have already won, or that a donation or purchase will increase your chances of winning. For many, especially for the most vulnerable in our society, it has been very difficult to separate the truth from the fantasy in these mailings, and as past history has shown sweepstakes mailings are a particular problem for the elderly in our society.

Mr. President, we have a chance to protect all Americans, particularly the elderly, and I urge all my colleagues to support this important piece of legislation.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I ask the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. COLLINS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time under the quorum call, which I will ask for, be charged against our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I lend my strong support for Senate approval of S. 35, the Deceptive Mail Prevention and Enforcement Act. This bill will establish new consumer protections to shield consumers from falling victim to deceptive and fraudulent practices found in some sweepstakes and mail promotions.

Thanks to the hard work of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigation, under the leadership of Senator SUSAN COLLINS, we have become privy to the operations of some of these sweepstakes companies. As the hearings pointed out, sweepstakes companies are now sending out more than one billion mailings per year. In the course of these mailings, some recipients have been led to believe that their chances of winning large amounts of money could be increased through the purchase of the promoter's products or merchandise. Whether through the use of unclear and ambiguous language, symbols, or documents, these mailings have been a source of confusion and have lead to some readers spending significant sums of money ordering products in the mistaken belief that this would increase their chances of winning.

S. 335, for the first time, would establish specific guidelines and parameters for mailings containing sweepstakes, games of skill and facsimile checks. The legislation requires conspicuous disclaimers that "no purchase is necessary" on the sweepstakes claim or entry form. The legislation also improves restrictions on government look-alike mailings. Further, the bill directs sweepstakes companies to adopt procedures to prevent the mailing of these materials to anyone who submits a request stating their intent not to receive these mailings.

This bill has the strong support of the Postal Service. In providing the Postal Service with the ability to protect consumers through civil enforcement, the bill further grants the Postal Service administrative subpoena authority. It will also give U.S. district courts the ability to impose nationwide temporary training orders.

As a strong proponent of federalism, I think it is important that this bill does not preempt the authority of the state attorneys general and various consumer protection agencies which also combat deceptive mailings. The Postal Service and these agencies have a history of cooperation in the investigation and prosecution of these cases. The Postal Service reports that this collective effort has produced significant results in policing a variety of fraud while enabling state prosecution efforts to investigate questionable promotion practices beyond their state borders. S. 335 will not only improve the Postal Service’s ability to investigate and stop deceptive mailings, but it will also help state attorneys general work more effectively against this fraud.

This bill represents the bipartisan efforts of a number of Senators. S. 335 was unanimously reported out of the Committee on Governmental Affairs with the support of both myself and the ranking minority member, Senator LIEBERMAN. I would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge the hard work put forth by the bill’s sponsor, Senator COLLINS, and other cosponsors of the legislation including Senators COCHRAN, EDWARDS, and LEVIN. In addition, I want to acknowledge the role of Senator CAMPBELL in first introducing legislation last year on this issue. His efforts served as the genesis for the successful investigative and legislative efforts we have seen this year.

In conclusion, Mr. President, S. 335 presents a balanced and fair approach in protecting consumers from misleading and fraudulent sweepstakes and related mailings, while not unduly burdening those mailers who legitimately use the mail as an advertising medium. I urge all Senators to support Senate approval of S. 335.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the question be suspended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. I yield 6 minutes to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I thank my friend and colleague from Michigan, Senator COLLINS, and other cosponsors of the legislation including Senators COCHRAN, EDWARDS, and LEVIN. For the way they have worked together with my former colleagues, the State attorneys general, the AARP, and the sweepstakes industry itself to put together this important consumer protection legislation. I think their combined efforts stand as a model not only of cooperation but of thoughtful legislating from which we can all learn. I am very proud to join them as a cosponsor of this bill.

No marketing effort should be based on misleading advertising. That principle is worth at least the $40 billion a year before the Senate. It reminds everyone that occasionally the Federal Government has to step in to make sure that the free market we celebrate and benefit so much from truly remains free. That freedom is so often based on the truthfulness of representations made by those who are marketing.

The purpose of this bill is to eliminate deceptive practices in the sweepstakes industry. We have all seen them. Who wouldn’t be tantalized by a letter proclaiming you may already be a winner? It is hard not to open that one up. Everybody wants to be a winner. Most of us have probably fantasized about how we would spend a sudden windfall that dropped into our bank accounts.

Unfortunately, sweepstakes mailings often involve sophisticated marketing techniques that persuade recipients to spend money in the hope of finding the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow. It’s a long way off in almost all cases. Often the mailings are targeted at the elderly or the financially vulnerable who don’t realize that sweepstakes companies are not in business primarily to rain riches down upon them. Sweepstakes companies are in business to sell products that make a profit, plain and simple. That is legitimate so long as they do it fairly and truthfully.

It is a big business. The fact is that sweepstakes and telemarketing firms take in more than $2 billion a year from promotional campaigns in my State of Connecticut alone. Nationally, estimates are that the sweepstakes in telemarketing firms have gross revenues between $40 and $49 billion a year. This legislation makes sure that before our consumers take a chance on the sweepstakes, they know it is just that, a chance—not a winning ticket, not a prize, but a chance. They will know the odds are not improved no matter how much money they buy.

This legislation requires a clear statement that no purchase is necessary to win, as well as terms and conditions of the promotion in language that is easy to find, to read, and to understand. It prohibits abuses we have seen such as symbols or statements that imply Federal Government endorsement, and it provides meaningful disclosures to let consumers know the actual odds of winning.

Further, the bill sets up a mechanism for consumers and those who care for them to stop unwanted sweepstakes solicitations and a recordkeeping requirement to assure that such requests are properly implemented.

Finally, the bill gives the Postal Service the additional enforcement authority it needs to stop unlawful sweepstakes schemes, particularly those that flirt with fraud and skip from State to State.

I strongly support this legislation as a tool to help consumers negotiate their way through the high pressure sales tactics sometimes employed by marketers using sweepstakes to sell their products. I am very grateful to colleagues on the Governmental Affairs Committee for the leadership they have shown.

I am delighted to join this bipartisan effort to protect our citizens—again, particularly the aged—from these deceptive marketing tactics. I urge the Senate to vote for this strong consumer protection measure. I hope the House will then join in adopting this bill and sending it to the President.

I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative assistant proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I am going to speak for a brief period of time in morning business. I see the Senator from Mississippi is coming into the Chamber. I know we are ready to start with the Ag appropriations bill.

FOOD ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I want to very briefly speak to an issue that actually might be one we will debate as we go through this Ag appropriations bill since part of what we deal with within the Department of Agriculture is food assistance programs such as the Women, Infants, and Children Program and the Food Stamp Program.

We have heard a great deal from the White House and from some Members of Congress about the success of the welfare bill. On Sunday, the White House released data on the number of women who were on welfare and are now working. There will be a gathering in Chicago tomorrow. I believe, where the President will be talking about welfare to work and talking about the success of this.

As a Senator, I want to raise a couple of questions that I think are important and to focus on some unpleasant facts that we should be willing to face up to.

First of all, I point out for my colleagues the fact that the welfare rolls are down 40 percent begs the question of whether or not we have reduced poverty. The fact of the matter is, the welfare rolls are down 40 percent, but poverty is barely down. The goal was not to reduce the welfare rolls; the goal every everybody talked about was to move families from poverty to economic independence. That is really what the goal was all about. The issue has never been welfare; the issue has been poverty.

The question is, How do you reduce the poverty? Especially I had it in mind how the White House or any Democrat or any Republican can proclaim this a success when we have done so little to reduce poverty in our country, especially poverty of children. There are about 14 million people who are poor in the country.

My second point is, when the President and the White House talk about the number of mothers who are now working, that begs the question as to what kind of jobs and what kind of wages. What we should be talking about are family-wage or living-wage jobs. The evidence we have right now is that most of the mothers who are working are working in jobs with wages somewhere between about $5.50 and $7 an hour, which is barely above minimum wage but does not enable these families to escape poverty.

My third point is, Families USA just came out with a study that points out there are about 675,000 low-income citizens who have now been cut off medical assistance because of the welfare bill. There are about 675,000 low-income citizens who no longer are receiving any medical assistance.

My final point is, there was a Wall Street Journal piece today about the dramatic, precipitous decline of participation in the Food Stamp Program. I argue especially the decline of participation among children which cannot be explained alone by the state of the economy, especially with the dramatic increase in the use of food shelf service.

What is going on? Do we have a situation now where the AFDC structure is no longer there, and when people come in, no one tells them about the fact they and their families are eligible for food stamps—that is happening—or they are not told they are eligible for medical assistance—that is happening—all of which leads me to two final points today as we move into debate about the Agriculture appropriations bill.

First, I lost by one vote on a welfare tracking amendment, and then the Senate adopted it on the Treasury-Postal bill. It is now in conference committee. The amendment called upon the States to be able to apply for the $1 billion bonus money, to present to Health and Human Services the data on what kind of jobs women have, whether or not they and their children are participating in food stamps and do the families have medical assistance, so we can find out if families are better off or worse off. That is now in conference. If that gets taken out of conference committee—amendments are adopted in the Senate and taken out in conference committee—I am going to bring that amendment back up on this bill, and we are going to have a vote because sometimes we do not know what we do not want to know, and sometimes we only know what we want to know.

That is the way it is with the White House about this welfare bill. We ought to be engaged in an honest policy evaluation to find out what is happening in the country. We are talking about poor women and poor children, and we ought to know whether they are better off or whether they are worse off. There is some disturbing evidence that many of these families might, in fact, be worse off. It is a little early and premature for the White House to be declaring this a success or for any Senator or Representative, Democrat or Republican, to be declaring it a success.

My final point is, since we are dealing with an Ag appropriations bill—and I think I will have an amendment to this effect—we need to call on USDA, or someone, to do a study and to report back to the Senate and to the Congress in a relatively brief period of time, as soon as possible, what is happening with the Food Stamp Program in this country. We need to know.

There was a dramatic piece in the Washington Post about 2 weeks ago. I could hardly bear to read it. It was the front page of the B section. It was a picture of an 8-year-old child, a little boy. The whole piece was devoted to hungry children in the District of Columbia.

The gist of the article was that in August—now—the summer schools are going to shut down and the breakfasts will not be there, the School Lunch Program will not be there, and there is no food at home.

In this particular family, this grandmother with four children does not have enough money to feed her children. What I want to know is, whatever happened to the Food Stamp Program? That has been our safety net program. What is going on when we have a dramatic rise in the use of food shelves and food pantries in this country? The Catholic Church network study pointed this out just last month.

What is going on when 675,000 low-income people are removed from medical assistance as a result of the welfare bill? What is going on when the vast majority of these women are working at jobs that still do not get them and their children out of poverty? What is going on when we are unwilling to do an honest policy evaluation of this legislation, because very soon in many States there will be a drop-dead date certain, and all families, all women, and all children will be cut off from any welfare assistance at all. Before that happens, we need to know what is happening with this legislation.

I have come to the floor of the Senate today to basically challenge my colleagues to make sure this stays in the conference committee and to announce I will be out here on the floor with an amendment if it gets eliminated from the conference committee, and to announce we ought to also have a study of the Food Stamp Program to find out why it is not reaching children and families who need the help, and also to directly challenge the White House and the President. It is not enough to say we have cut the rolls by 40 percent. The question is, Have we reduced the poverty by 40 percent? We have not.

It is not enough to say these mothers are now working. The question is, Are they working jobs that will enable them and their children to no longer be poor in our country? That is the goal which I do not believe has been met.

We are talking about the lives of poor women and poor children. They deserve to be on our radar screen. They deserve an honest, rigorous policy evaluation so that we, as decisionmakers, know whether or not, by our actions, we are helping these women and children or whether or not we are hurting these women and children. We ought to have the courage to step up to the plate.

I think we are about ready to start on the Ag appropriations bill. I will yield the floor. I look forward to this debate. I came down here on the floor to debate this bill. This is the crisis that is staring my State of Minnesota in the face. I am going to leave it up to Senator HARKIN or Senator DACCHI to start out debate on our side, but I am very anxious to be in this debate and very anxious to speak for farmers and for agriculture.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative assistant proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOTT. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. COLINS). Without objection, it is so ordered.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of S. 1233, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1233) making appropriations for Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies programs for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes.

Mr. LOTT. Madam President, I believe we have a unanimous consent request now and some motions that we will need to make. It might take a few minutes to get through this.

First, I ask unanimous consent that Senator DASCHEL be recognized to offer his amendment relative to disaster assistance and, following the reporting by the clerk, the amendment be laid aside and Senator COCHRAN be recognized to offer his disaster assistance amendment. I further ask unanimous consent that debate run concurrently on both amendments, with the votes occurring in a stacked sequence at 2:15 p.m. on Tuesday, the first in relation to the COCHRAN amendment to be followed by a vote in relation to the DASCHEL amendment, as amended, if amended, with 2 minutes of debate prior to each vote. I further ask unanimous consent that no amendments be in order to either amendment prior to the votes.

I ask unanimous consent that following those votes, Senator JEFFORDS be recognized to offer his amendment relative to dairy and immediately following the reporting by the clerk, Senator LOTT be recognized to send a cloture motion to the desk and that cloture vote occur at 9:30 a.m. on Wednesday, with the mandatory quorum being waived notwithstanding rule XXII.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KOHL. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. LOTT. Since objection has been heard, I have no alternative other than to offer amendments. This is important because we do need to move forward with the Agriculture appropriations bill. We brought it up earlier, this past month. It became embroiled in an unrelated issue, and we had to set it aside.

The farmers in America and the consumers of America and the children of America are depending on this very important legislation going through the process. We are talking about $60.7 billion, probably more than that by the time it is completed, for agriculture in America. We need to get it completed.

I know there are some issues that cause a lot of concern: How do you deal with a disaster in America, when you do deal with it, and how would any assistance be apportioned among the farmers that are impacted by disasters in a number of ways. And also, of course, we have this very important dairy issue. I have advised Senator COCHRAN, Senator JEFFORDS, Senator KOHL, and Senator DASCHEL to make sure everybody understands what I am doing here. I am doing it because I do think it is so important that we move forward on this bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 1499

(Purpose: To provide emergency and income loss assistance to agricultural producers)

Mr. LOTT. Madam President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator DASCHEL and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT], for Mr. HARKIN, for himself, Mr. DASCHEL, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. dyno, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. WELLSTON, Mrs. LINCOLN, and Mr. SARANKES, proposes an amendment numbered 1499.

Mr. LOTT. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The text of the amendment is printed in today's Record under "Amendments Submitted." 5

Mr. LOTT. Madam President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1500 TO AMENDMENT NO. 1499

(Purpose: To make a perfecting amendment)

Mr. LOTT. Madam President, on behalf of Senator COCHRAN and others, I send a second-degree amendment to the desk and ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT], for Mr. COCHRAN, proposes an amendment numbered 1500 to amendment No. 1499.

Mr. LOTT. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The text of the amendment is printed in today's Record under "Amendments Submitted." 5

MOTION TO RECOMMIT WITH AMENDMENT NO. 1501

(Purpose: To restrict the use of certain funds appropriated to the Agricultural Marketing Service)

Mr. LOTT. Madam President, I now move to recommit the bill with instructions to report back forthwith with an amendment, and I send the motion to the desk.
VERDATE JUL 14 2003 13:33 APR 29, 2004 JKT 069102 PO 00000 E:\BR99\S02AU9.000 S02AU9

These payments are transition payments called AMTA payments. So that is a major distinction of the old subsidy payments. Farmers are now free to make planting decisions, for example, for themselves, rather than what the Government tells them they should produce under the restraints of Federal law.

Many farmers are beginning to make these decisions and shift from one program crop to another, without running the risk of losing Federal Government support. In order to show that the economic conditions and the market conditions have been so severe as to cause farmers not to be able profitably under the new transition payment system, that payment is doubled under the Cochran amendment. And so instead of receiving $5,000 as a transition payment, a person who is entitled to that benefit under existing law this year will get twice that amount as an economic assistance payment from the Federal Government. A total of $5.54 billion will be paid to agriculture producers for market transition payments under the Cochran amendment. This is a 100 percent increase in a producer's 1999 payment under the existing farm bill.

Other benefits that are available to agriculture producers under this amendment would include $500 million in direct payments to soybean and oilseed producers; $350 million in assistance to livestock and dairy producers; to be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture. The amendment would also suspend the budget deficit reduction assessment on sugar producers for the remainder of the farm bill, as long as no Federal budget deficit exists.

There will be a direct payment provided in this amendment to producers of quota and non-quota peanuts, equal to 5 percent of the current loan rate. The Cotton Step Two Export Program is reinstated in this amendment. There is an increase in the current loan deficiency payment limit from $75,000 to $150,000. There is, additionally, a provision in this bill that expresses the sense of the Congress, encouraging the President to be more aggressive in strengthening trade negotiating authority for Agriculture and expressing the Congress' objectives for future agriculture trade negotiations. The amendment also requests that the President evaluate and make recommendations on the effectiveness of our existing export and food aid programs.

If you add up all of the direct benefits that are payable, they have been scored by the Congressional Budget Office as amounting to a total of $6.67 billion for fiscal year 2000. The added cost over the next 3 years, from 2000 to 2004, would add another $390 million to the cost of the bill, for a total of $6.979 billion in total cost from fiscal year 2000 to 2004, as scored by the Congressional Budget Office.

Madam President, Senators will remember that when we first brought this bill from the committee to the floor of the Senate, there was a great deal of concern about whether or not there should be a disaster program included in a title of the bill. We had asked the administration to submit a budget request for any funds that were expected to be needed. We have had no response whatsoever from the administration to that request. We attach that, as an appendix, to the report of the Appropriations Committee. We discussed it on the floor of the Senate when this bill was before the Senate earlier, and I am very distressed that we have yet to hear any request made by the administration for this assistance. So in spite of the absence of cooperation in trying to identify and work together on a program that would be sensitive to the problems in production agriculture, we are moving to suggest to the Senate that this is a program that ought to be adopted.

I have additional comments to make. I will be glad to respond to questions that may arise from Senators on the content of this legislation to try to answer any questions that others may have. But I know we will soon have a vote that is scheduled to occur on another bill that was debated in the Senate earlier today. In an effort to accommodate friends who have asked for time to talk on their amendment, I will yield the floor at this time so other Senators may speak.

Mr. HARKIN. Madam President, I wonder if the Senator will yield. I would like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. COCHRAN. I would be happy to respond to the Senator.

Mr. HARKIN. I didn't get a copy of the amendment. What is the bottom line? What is the total package?

Mr. COCHRAN. The Congressional Budget Office has scored the items I discussed at $6.67 billion for fiscal year 2000, and the total cost during fiscal years 2000 to 2004 is scored at $6.979 billion.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. HARKIN. Madam President, today all across America most people are doing pretty well. Unemployment is at its lowest rate in years. The stock market keeps going up. Our gross national product is going up at a great rate. As we now know, we have a surplus for the first time in almost 30 years in the Federal budget. We just had a lengthy debate last week on what we are going to do with that surplus. Our friends on the other side want to take it out of our hands. They want to make sure that through a tax break, to people mostly in the upper-income brackets.

If you just looked at that, you would think we shouldn’t be worried too much about what is happening in America; things look pretty good.

Out of the glare of Wall Street, far from the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, sort of silently and quietly, American farmers and ranchers are losing their businesses. They are at the end of their rope. Our small towns and communities that dot our countryside are facing a bleak winter, with the prospect that things will get even worse after the harvest is in and the snow falls.

The situation facing American agriculture today—according to bankers, farm economists, and agricultural economists from many of our universities—is the worst it has been since the Great Depression. We have to respond to the magnitude of the problem. It is that big.

I have an article that was in the Kansas paper back in 1995 when we passed the Freedom to Farm bill. It failed our farmers. It failed our communities. It is really happening in agriculture and perhaps put out a smokescreen on what is actually produced this year, not what farmer’s production—what that farmer actually produced this year, not what they were in the previous couple of years. We are exporting more. If we are exporting more, what is the problem? The problem is, there is no price and farmers aren’t getting anything for their commodities. Here is what has happened to soybeans just in my State of Iowa since the fall of 1997: Basically about a 45-percent decrease in the value of that crop. The same is true with corn. There have been precipitous drops just in the last year-and-a-half. It is not a lack of total exports. It is a lack of the money and the price that farmers are getting.

While we need to get an emergency package of money out to farmers, we need to do it now. We also have to be about changing the farm policy. We cannot go on another year under the Freedom to Farm bill and be back here again next year looking at another package of several billion dollars. The Freedom to Farm bill has failed miserably. It has failed our Nation. It has failed our farmers. It has failed our rural communities.

I have an article that was in the Kansas paper back in 1995 when we passed the Freedom to Farm bill. It failed our farmers. It failed our communities. It is really happening in agriculture since the 1930s. That is why halfhearted measures are not going to work. That is why the bill we are working on really does address the magnitude of the problem. It is deep, and it is a very large problem and one that has to be addressed efficiently.

The amendment that Senator Daschle and I, along with Senator Dorgan, Senator Kennedy, Senator Johnson, Senator Conrad, Senator Baucus, Senator Durbin, Senator Wellstone, Senator Lincoln, and Senator Sabanes have just sent to the desk provides for a total of $10.79 billion in emergency aid for next year. The only items not are the Cotton Step Two Program, and that is scored by CBO at $439 million for 3 years, and the adjustment to the payment limitations.

There is a great gulf of difference between what the Republicans have set up and what we are proposing. First, the Republicans are proposing that we send all of this money out in a direct payment to farmers; an AMTA payment, it is called, a market transition payment. Our payments go out in supplemental loan deficiency payments, which means they are based upon a farmer’s production—what that farmer actually produced this year, not what they did 10 or 20 years ago. In that way, it is more fair and it is more direct to the actual farmers this year. We include $2.6 billion for disaster assistance.

We include a number of other measures such as $212 million for emergency conservation. We have had a lot of floods and a lot of damages in a lot of States. We need to repair the damage to farm and ranch land and enhance our conservation. For emergency trade provision, we have $879 million for purchases of commodities for humanitarian assistance. We have people starving all over the world. We have a Public Law 480 food assistance program and related programs. Our bill provides about $1 billion to take the surplus food we have and send it around the world to starving people. The Republican proposal does not include that.

We include money for emergency economic development for our rural towns, small towns, and communities that are hit hard. Our package of $10.79 billion addresses the magnitude of the problem. It is that big.

I say to the people who think $10.79 billion is a lot of money, we passed a tax break bill last week for $792 billion, most of which goes to upper-income people in this country. Very little will ever go to our farmers and our ranchers around America.

This point in time is going to decide what happens to rural America this winter. That is why it is so important to act now. That is why it is so important that we get the money out that is needed—not some halfhearted measure in a way that doesn’t address the real and devastating economic problems that farmers have all over America.

I will have more to say about my amendment later.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARKIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. COCHRAN. My colleague asked me whether the Congressional Budget Office had scored the amendment that I offered. I ask my colleague the same question: What does the Congressional Budget Office say the amendment that the Democratic leader has offered will cost the American taxpayer over the next few years?

Mr. HARKIN. I answer to my friend from Mississippi that all of the items in our amendment are direct appropriations for next year. The only items that are not are the Cotton Step Two Export Program, and that is scored by CBO at $439 million for 3 years, and the adjustment to the payment limitations.
Mr. COCHRAN. Emergency trade provisions, humanitarian assistance, cooperator program, for a total of $688 million; is that what the Senator is saying the CBO has verified the cost to be?

Mr. HARKIN. That is the amount of money we specifically provide in the amendment.

Mr. DORGAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARKIN. I am delighted to yield, and I want to thank the Senator from North Dakota with whom I serve on the agriculture appropriations subcommittee.

I appreciate the very strong help in putting this package together. It has been a very difficult year for farmers in North Dakota as well as Iowa and I can say without fear of contradiction the Senator from North Dakota has been one of the people in this body who actually put this package together. I appreciate the support.

Mr. DORGAN. I want to address the question to the Senator from Iowa. The discussion we had about income support for farmers in the nature of a disaster program being income support in the form of a transition payment or AMTA, the whole notion of a transition payment is to transition farmers out of a farm program into the free market.

This chart shows what has happened to the price of wheat since 1996. This chart is similar to the corn chart and the price of corn which the Senator from Iowa shared. This is what has happened to the so-called "free market" for wheat. The price of wheat has collapsed. The notion of a transition was philosophically by those in this Chamber who said let’s transition people out of a farm program.

Isn’t that the base of an AMTA payment?

Mr. HARKIN. As I read the debate and all the talk on the Freedom to Farm bill when it passed, the idea was that we would transition out of farm programs with AMTA payments.

Mr. DORGAN. This is the right subject and the right time; we are debating the right issues. The Senator said it well. We have an economy that is growing and prospering, more people are working, fewer people are unemployed, fewer people in welfare, inflation is down. So many good things are going on in this country, but in rural America family farmers are in desperate trouble through no fault of their own.

If any group of Americans found their income had collapsed, or if the salary for Members of Congress had fallen where income for family farmers had fallen, we would have dealt with this immediately and a long time ago. The same is true with corporate earnings.

However, we are here through no fault of the family farmers but because they are trying to do business in a marketplace where prices have just collapsed. If we don’t take action soon, we won’t have many family farmers left across the bread basket of the country.

Mr. HARKIN. The Senator is absolutely correct. The Freedom to Farm bill was premised that we would put farmers on the free market. As the Senator from Kansas said, they would have high net income for the next several years. However, Freedom to Farm ripped the safety net out from agriculture.

As I pointed out, our exports are up. We are exporting more of our key commodities, but there is no price. The safety net has been taken out from underneath agriculture. Farmers all across America recognize that Freedom to Farm has been a total and absolute disaster when it comes to protecting farm income, and it has to be changed. That is why the first thing we need to do is get the emergency package, but then we have to address the end-of-the-line problem of Freedom to Farm.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, I have a question.

Mr. HARKIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I actually have three quick questions. First of all, dealing with the urgency of now, is it not true that the Senator from Iowa and other Democrat Senators have tried to pass an emergency assistance package and we have been working on this for some time? Would the Senator from Iowa give a little bit of a historical background? I think farmers are wondering how much more has to happen to them before there is some assistance.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank my friend from Minnesota. I also thank him for his help in putting this package together.

The Senator is right. We started this spring, in the emergency supplemental appropriations bill, trying to add some money. We got beat on a nearly straight party-line vote. All but one Republican voted no; Democrats voted yes.

We then came back, as the Senator from Minnesota knows, and tried it again in the subcommittee on this bill. We again lost on a straight party-line vote.

Now we are on the floor. I will say we are making some progress. At least now our friends on the other side recognize there is a problem. At least they are willing to address it somewhat. The amendment that the Senator from Mississippi sent to the desk is better than nothing, but it is not going to do enough to help get our farmers through this winter. It is only a little more than half of what is needed.

Mr. WELLSTONE. If I might ask my colleague from Iowa a second question to be clear about what is at stake—we will all have a chance to speak later. My colleague from Iowa says that what the Senator from Mississippi introduces is an emergency assistance package for farmers to try to get some income to families, and my colleague says it does about half the job.

Mr. HARKIN. A little bit over half. Give them the benefit of the doubt—about half, though.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Where are the gaps? In other words, I think people assume, if we pass something that we say is going to enable them to continue to stay on the farm until we deal with the structural problems, it is going to help them. Again, could the Senator emphasize the difference?

Mr. HARKIN. I will be delighted to respond to the Senator, but I understand our time is up.

Madam President, if I might inquire what the parliamentary situation is right now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes consideration of S. 335 in 15 seconds.

Mr. HARKIN. I understand there is a vote at 5:30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. HARKIN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that at the end of that vote, when we return to this bill, the Senator from Iowa be recognized to complete his statement. It will not take very long to complete my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

DECEPTIVE MAIL PREVENTION AND ENFORCEMENT ACT—Continued

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to vote on S. 335, after recognizing Senator Edwards for 10 minutes, Senator Levin for 5 minutes, and Senator Collins for 5 minutes.

The Senator from Maine is recognized.

Ms. SNOWE. Madam President, I rise today in support of S. 335, the Deceptive Mail Prevention and Enforcement Act, legislation authored by my colleague from Maine, Senator Susan Collins. I applaud her leadership on this issue as chair of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. I believe that this legislation strikes an important balance between consumer protection and over-regulation of the sweeps industry.

This issue has long been a priority for me. In the late 1980s, while in the House of Representatives, I began working on initiatives to curb deceptive mailings, and during the 101st Congress, I co-authored H.R. 2331, the Deceptive Mailings Prevention Act of
August 2, 1999

1990, which was signed into law by President Bush on November 6, 1990. H.R. 2391 prohibited solicitations by privateers that advertised the purchase of products or services or the contribution of funds or membership fees, which imply false federal government connection or endorsement.

At the time, our main focus was on mailings that led one to believe that they were endorsed by the government—for example, offers that promise consumers information on federal benefits for which they may be eligible for a fee, when in fact such information is available at no cost directly from federal agencies.

The legislation barred the use of any seal, insignia, trade or brand name, or other symbol designed to construe government connection or endorsement. Today, I am pleased to support S. 335, which builds on the foundation laid by the 1990 law, in recognition of the problems that have emerged as sweepstakes offers have proliferated, with all of the accompanying abuses we have witnessed.

How many times have each of us received an offer in the mail promising enormous sweepstakes payoffs or other prizes? These promises are a clever way to market magazine subscriptions and other products. The old adage—"if it's too good to be true, it probably is"—comes to mind. Regrettably, for many, such offers seem too good to pass up particularly when the are accompanied by dire warnings such as "urgent advisory," "don't risk losing your multi-million dollar prize," or "don't risk forfeiture now!" Many consumers are misled by this type of advertising, which is deliberately designed to mislead.

Many offers are designed to entice the consumer into believing that he or she has already won a valuable prize, for example, or is on the verge of winning, when in fact, the odds against winning may be astronomical.

The sad truth is that companies use deceptive advertising because it works—it sells more product. And the tragic problem facing us today is this: all too often, the consumer who is being victimized is a senior on a fixed income or is disabled.

We continue the good fight that was launched nearly fourteen months ago when the Senate first began consideration of sweepstakes reform legislation. I was pleased to lead the fight for sweepstakes reform on June 5, 1998, in the 105th Congress, when I introduced S. 2414, the Honesty in Sweepstakes Act of 1998. This was the first legislation of its kind.

A few months later, on September 1st, 1998, a high-impact Senate hearing focusing on the Honesty in Sweepstakes Act of 1998 attracted national attention and widespread public support. That hearing, followed by a series of hearings chaired by Senator Collins this year, was the turning point in the battle for sweepstakes reform and by my colleague Senator Collins, momentum that has carried sweepstakes reform forward.

I was prompted to fight for Honesty in Sweepstakes when I heard far too many horrible stories about how consumers, especially older Americans were being taken advantage of, and all too often seriously financially harmed by sweepstakes promotions that prey upon people's hopes and dreams by making convincing yet false promises of riches. They use massive mailing lists to deliberately target our most vulnerable consumers with false promises of riches and then bombard them again and again.

Since I first introduced the Honesty in Sweepstakes Act I have been contacted by many people from Colorado and all over the country with stories of their unfortunate experiences with sweepstakes promotions. They told stories of how their loved ones, often their elderly parents, had squandered many thousands of dollars after having been lured in by cleverly presented promotions promising instant riches. Many people from all over the country have also sent me large envelopes stuffed full of examples of the misleading sweepstakes promotions they and their loved ones have received.

I am pleased to be an early cosponsor of the bill we consider today, S. 335, the Deceptive Mail Prevention and Enforcement Act, which was introduced by my colleague Senator Corker. This bill includes a number of provisions similar to those I included in the Honesty in Sweepstakes Act. There are two additional provisions included in S. 335 that I believe will be especially beneficial in the fight against misleading sweepstakes. The first calls for establishing centralized and easy to access toll free phone numbers where consumers' questions can be answered. The second provision makes it much easier for people to have their names removed from misleading lists.

Our nation's seniors and other vulnerable consumers are clearly being taken advantage of, and in some cases important step toward enacting sweepstakes reform legislation.

At the time, our main focus was on mailings that led one to believe that they were endorsed by the government—for example, offers that promise consumers information on federal benefits for which they may be eligible for a fee, when in fact such information is available at no cost directly from federal agencies.

The legislation barred the use of any seal, insignia, trade or brand name, or other symbol designed to construed government connection or endorsement. I was pleased to lead the fight for sweepstakes reform on June 5, 1998, in the 105th Congress, when I introduced S. 2414, the Honesty in Sweepstakes Act of 1998. This was the first legislation of its kind.

A few months later, on September 1st, 1998, a high-impact Senate hearing focusing on the Honesty in Sweepstakes Act of 1998 attracted national attention and widespread public support. That hearing, followed by a series of hearings chaired by Senator Collins this year, was the turning point in the battle for sweepstakes reform and by my colleague Senator Collins, momentum that has carried sweepstakes reform forward.

I was prompted to fight for Honesty in Sweepstakes when I heard far too many horrible stories about how consumers, especially older Americans were being taken advantage of, and all too often seriously financially harmed by sweepstakes promotions that prey upon people's hopes and dreams by making convincing yet false promises of riches. They use massive mailing lists to deliberately target our most vulnerable consumers with false promises of riches and then bombard them again and again.

Since I first introduced the Honesty in Sweepstakes Act I have been contacted by many people from Colorado and all over the country with stories of their unfortunate experiences with sweepstakes promotions. They told stories of how their loved ones, often their elderly parents, had squandered many thousands of dollars after having been lured in by cleverly presented promotions promising instant riches. Many people from all over the country have also sent me large envelopes stuffed full of examples of the misleading sweepstakes promotions they and their loved ones have received.

I am pleased to be an early cosponsor of the bill we consider today, S. 335, the Deceptive Mail Prevention and Enforcement Act, which was introduced by my colleague Senator Corker. This bill includes a number of provisions similar to those I included in the Honesty in Sweepstakes Act. There are two additional provisions included in S. 335 that I believe will be especially beneficial in the fight against misleading sweepstakes. The first calls for establishing centralized and easy to access toll free phone numbers where consumers' questions can be answered. The second provision makes it much easier for people to have their names removed from misleading lists.

Our nation's seniors and other vulnerable consumers are clearly being taken advantage of, and in some cases important step toward enacting sweepstakes reform legislation.

At the time, our main focus was on mailings that led one to believe that they were endorsed by the government—for example, offers that promise consumers information on federal benefits for which they may be eligible for a fee, when in fact such information is available at no cost directly from federal agencies.

The legislation barred the use of any seal, insignia, trade or brand name, or other symbol designed to construed government connection or endorsement. Today, I am pleased to support S. 335, which builds on the foundation laid by the 1990 law, in recognition of the problems that have emerged as sweepstakes offers have proliferated, with all of the accompanying abuses we have witnessed.

How many times have each of us received an offer in the mail promising enormous sweepstakes payoffs or other prizes? These promises are a clever way to market magazine subscriptions and other products. The old adage—"if it's too good to be true, it probably is"—comes to mind. Regrettably, for many, such offers seem too good to pass up particularly when the are accompanied by dire warnings such as "urgent advisory," "don't risk losing your multi-million dollar prize," or "don't risk forfeiture now!" Many consumers are misled by this type of advertising, which is deliberately designed to mislead.

Many offers are designed to entice the consumer into believing that he or she has already won a valuable prize, for example, or is on the verge of winning, when in fact, the odds against winning may be astronomical.

The sad truth is that companies use deceptive advertising because it works—it sells more product. And the tragic problem facing us today is this: all too often, the consumer who is being victimized is a senior on a fixed income or is disabled.

We continue the good fight that was launched nearly fourteen months ago when the Senate first began consideration of sweepstakes reform legislation. I was pleased to lead the fight for sweepstakes reform on June 5, 1998, in the 105th Congress, when I introduced S. 2414, the Honesty in Sweepstakes Act of 1998. Our nation's seniors and other vulnerable consumers are clearly being taken advantage of, and in some cases seriously financially harmed, by intentionally misleading sweepstakes promotions. Something needs to be done. I support this legislation to bring this harmful practice to a halt.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 335, the Deceptive Mail Prevention and Enforcement Act. I am proud to be one of the co-sponsors of this important legislation.

I commend Senators COLLINS and LEVIN for their efforts in addressing the serious problems with deceptive mailings involving sweepstakes, skill contests, facsimile checks, and mailings made to look like government documents. The investigation and hearings of the Senate Governmental Affairs Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations have shed light on sweepstakes and other mailings that promise extravagant prizes in order to entice individuals to make unnecessary purchases.

Far too many of these mailings are full of deceptive and misleading statements, which lead unsuspecting recipients to believe that they must purchase various items in order to be a winner or in order to improve their chances of winning. In too many cases, the prizes and awards are never granted. In many instances, the customer receives a trinket or coupon book of little value. Those consumers who respond to these mailings are then bombarded with additional mailings seeking more money for the same or similar items.

The effect on many consumers can be devastating. One of my constituents wrote about his 88-year-old father, who had spent thousands of dollars in hopes of receiving a large cash prize.

This legislation would set new standards for mailings that use sweepstakes, skill contests, and facsimile checks as promotions to sell merchandise. More disclosures would be required, disclosures which are clear and conspicuous, displayed in a manner that is readily noticeable, readable and understandable. Sweepstakes mailings must include prominent notice that no purchase is necessary to win, and that a purchase will not increase the chances of winning. In addition, the mailing must state the estimated odds of winning.

While S. 335 will probably not put a stop to all of the egregious practices that the unscrupulous companies employ, I am hopeful that this bill will result in fewer deceptive mailings and that fewer consumers will lose their hard-earned savings and retirement funds.

One important provision of this bill would require each company that sends these mailings to have a toll-free number that customers may call to have their names removed from that company’s mailing list. This is a first step in making it possible for individuals to have their names removed from mailings.

However, this particular system places an undue burden on the consumer to call each company that sends him mailings. The unscrupulous companies could circumvent the intent of this provision by forming a new company that would then use the old mailing lists.

To minimize this risk, I encourage the industry groups to establish a system whereby consumers would have one toll-free number to call which would serve as the mechanism to remove their names from all mailing lists for all sweepstakes, skill contests, facsimile checks and government look-alike mailings. This system has worked in other areas, and I believe that it would work here, as well.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. EDWARDS. Madam President, I rise today to urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the sweepstakes legislation, which is S. 335, the Deceptive Mail Prevention and Enforcement Act.

Let me say first, I thank my colleague, Senator LEVIN—I do not see him on the floor right now—also, my colleague, Senator COLLINS. They worked so hard and so long on this remarkably important piece of legislation.

Let me start by telling a story. It is a story I have told before, but I think it goes to the very heart of what this legislation is about.

There is an elderly man in North Carolina who lives in Raleigh, NC. I believe—right outside of Raleigh—named Bobby Bagwell. Bobby Bagwell is an elderly man who was watched over by his family, his daughter-in-law. Although he lived alone, he had a difficult time living alone.

His daughter-in-law went over to his house one day. When going through his various belongings, she discovered boxes and boxes of sweepstakes mailings. She came to discover in addition to that, in response to these sweepstakes mailings, Mr. Bagwell had purchased thousands and thousands of dollars of devices—goods that were basically useless. They were of no value to him at all. When she questioned her father-in-law about why he had bought these goods, the response was that he believed it would increase his chances of winning the sweepstakes.

He had spent, I think, something on the order of $20,000, which was basically his life’s savings, on purchasing this useless, worthless material.

As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Bagwell was an elderly man. For that reason, he was vulnerable. But there is an even worse part to this story. Mr. Bagwell, as it turns out, suffers from dementia.

He could not remember from day to day what he had bought, how much money he had spent, or why he had spent it. His daughter-in-law, doing every-people who do not want to receive these mailings to no longer receive them. Ultimately, what it does is it empowers American families who want to make sure the elderly members of their families—their parents, their in-laws—are taken care of. It empowers them to make sure they are not taken advantage of with these sweepstakes mailings. It means, in fact, if they have one's name removed from the mailing lists that they no longer continue to receive these mailings.

This is a wonderful piece of legislation. As I mentioned earlier, it has bipartisan support from very very proud to have worked with Senator COLLINS and Senator LEVIN, who have done a tremendous job for the American people in connection with this legislation.

Lastly, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the Association of Retired Persons be printed in the RECORD. They specifically provide their strong support for this legislation.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AARP.

Hon. JOHN EDWARDS, U.S. Senate, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR EDWARDS: AARP thanks you for including a provision to the Managers Amendment to S. 335, the Deceptive Mail Prevention and Enforcement Act, to institute a notification system. As drafted, the notification system would provide consumers with numbers to call to have their names removed from the mailing lists of companies that promote products and services through sweepstakes. The ability to have one's name removed from mailing lists is an important consumer protection, and facilitating such removal through the use of a toll free number is even better for consumers.

AARP has supported the use of toll free helplines to respond to questions or concerns in the telemarketing area, and the requirement to provide such a service to slow the proliferation of deceptive mailings is a logical extension. Further, we applaud the amendment's strong civil penalty provisions imposed on companies that violate a consumer's request.

AARP appreciates your efforts on behalf of consumers to eradicate the practice of fraudulent sweepstakes mailings through this provision to the Manager's Amendment to S. 335. We strongly support the "notification system" provision and ask you to consider adding it to the bill, and hope that this section of the bill will be retained as it works its way through conference. We look forward to working with you and other Members on a bipartisan basis to ensure that this issue is resolved in the 106th Congress.

Sincerely,

HORACE B. DEETS, Executive Director.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, I again commend Senator COLLINS for her responsible leadership of our subcommittee in so many consumer protection measures. This is just the latest of many on which Senator COLLINS has been the leader. That leadership is critically important to the American people. I commend her on it.

I also want to commend Senator EDWARDS. He made a major contribution to this bill by making it possible for people who no longer want to receive these sweepstakes to call a phone number to stop the deluge of mail which is received in so many homes. As in so many other areas, he is already making a great contribution to this Senate. I especially thank him for his contribution to this bipartisan bill. That part of this bill is a very important part. It is a very creative part of the bill. Again, it makes it possible, in a very practical way, for people who get sick and tired of the swamping of their mailboxes with these sweepstakes offers, to end that.

This bill attempts to end these sweepstakes mailings which are swamping our Nation. The sweepstakes scams are part of a $1 billion industry, an industry which is too often based on deception, an industry which too often tells people they have won a prize, dangers in front of them are not promised, prize, and then, of course, encloses the promotional materials that create the impression that buying a product will help to get that prize.

Most people are skeptical when they get this mail. They realize there could be 100,000 people who are told they have just won a huge amount of money, but there is a significant percentage of our people who are misled. The companies that do this prey on some of the most vulnerable among us and they take special advantage of our seniors. This is shown, in particular, when somebody responds to one of these promotions and then they are frequently inundated with followup targeted promotions. In fact, according to one of our witnesses, one company sends as many as 144 mailings from one company in 1 year and that, by the way, is one of the larger companies that does that, one of the so-called legitimate companies.

Our bill is aimed at ending the abuses and the deceptions and the scams. It will require the companies that are using these sweepstakes to display clearly and conspicuously and in a prominent place and in a prominent manner a statement that no purchase is necessary to enter the contest and, even more important, in my judgment at least, a statement saying that a purchase will not improve their chances of winning.

There are other requirements in this bill, and they are important requirements, but I think those are two of the most important requirements that we do now impose on an industry to see if we can clean up some of these abuses.

We also give the Postal Service some authority. The Postal Service will have subpoena power. The Postal Service will no longer have to take two steps before clamping down on the deception; they will be able to do it in one step. If the representation is false and materially false, the Postal Service will be able to act directly and not have to first go through an order which, in turn, will have to be violated as is the current law.

If someone violates the law, they should not need two steps. One step ought to be enough to stop the violation and punish the perpetrator. This bill is intended to close the loopholes in our law, to end the deceptions that permit too many of these sweepstakes to take in too many people, usually too many vulnerable people, raising hundreds of millions of dollars from people who usually cannot afford the dollars they are scammed into sending to the deceptive mailers of some of these sweepstakes.

Mr. President, again, I commend the Senator from Maine, Ms. COLLINS, for her very strong leadership, and the other members of our committee who have participated, including Senator COCHRAN who has been a leader in this and, again, Senator EDWARDS for his major contribution to this bill.

I thank the Chair.

Ms. COLLINS. Thank the Chair. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator DOMENICI and Senator FEINGOLD be added as cosponsors to the pending legislation S. 335.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. COLLINS. Madam President, let me start by expressing my deep appreciation to the members of the subcommittee and the full committee who worked so closely with me on this legislation. In particular, I recognize the generous contribution of the Senator from Mississippi, Mr. LEVIN; the Senator from North Carolina, Mr. EDWARDS; and the Senator from Mississippi, Mr. COCHRAN. Without their help, we would not have been able to craft such an effective bill. I am very grateful for their assistance and support.

We have heard very eloquent statements from a number of Senators today about the need for this legislation. In closing this debate, let me quote from a 74-year-old woman who wrote to me about how deceptive sweepstakes put her deeply into debt. In her letter, she said:

My only source of income is a monthly Social Security check totaling $893. I estimate that I have spent somewhere between $10,000 and $20,000 in the last 19 years. What money I did not have, I borrowed from my daughter who is now responsible for my total financial support. I am deeply in financial debt. Their mailings were worded in such a way that I was certain I was going to win anywhere from $1 million to $10 million. I truly wish I could recoup the moneys that I squandered in the hope that a real payoff would come my way.

Unfortunately, it is too late for this woman, but today the Senate can act

§ 3016. Administrative subpoenas

(a) Authorization of Use of Subpoenas by Postmaster General.—In any investigation conducted under section 3001(k)(4), the Postmaster General may require by subpoena the production of any records (including books, papers, documents, and other tangible things which are material to the investigation) which he finds relevant or material to the investigation.

(b) Service.

(1) Service within the United States.—A subpoena issued under this section may be served by a person designated under section 3061 of title 18 at any place within the territorial jurisdiction of any court of the United States.

(2) Foreign service.—Any such subpoena may be served on behalf of the Postmaster General by any person who is not found within the territorial jurisdiction of any court of the United States, in such manner as the Secretary of State may determine.

(c) Enforcement.—Whenever any person, partnership, corporation, association, or entity fails to comply with any subpoena duly served upon him, the Attorney General may require the Postmaster General to seek an order from any court having jurisdiction to hear and determine a proceeding to enforce the provisions of this section.

(d) Disclosure.—Any documentary material provided pursuant to any subpoena issued under this section shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5.

§ 3017. Nonmailable skill contests or sweepstakes mailings.

(a) In General.—Chapter 30 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§ 3017. Nonmailable skill contests or sweepstakes mailings.

(a) Definitions.—In this section, the term—

(1) ‘promoter’ means any person who—

(A) originates and mails any skill contest or sweepstakes, except for any matter described under section 3001(k)(4); or

(B) originates and causes to be mailed any skill contest or sweepstakes, except for any matter described under section 3001(k)(4);

(2) ‘removal request’ means a request to the notification system established under paragraph (2); and

(3) ‘removal request’ means a request to the notification system established under paragraph (2);

(b) Response after submitting removal request to the notification system established under subsection (c).

(1) A promoter who mails a skill contest or sweepstakes shall provide with each mailing a statement that—

(A) is clearly and conspicuously displayed;

(B) includes the address or toll-free telephone number of the notification system established under paragraph (2); and

(C) states that the notification system may be used to prohibit the mailing of all skill contests or sweepstakes by that promoter to such individual.

(2) Notification system.—Any promoter that mails or causes to be mailed a skill contest or sweepstakes mailings shall maintain a notification system that provides for any individual (other than duly authorized person) to notify the system of the individual’s election to have the name and address of the individual excluded from all lists of names and addresses used by that promoter to mail any skill contest or sweepstakes.

(3) Election to be excluded from lists.—

(1) In general.—An individual (other than duly authorized person) may elect to exclude the name and address of that individual from all lists of names and addresses used by that promoter to mail any skill contest or sweepstakes by submitting a removal request to the notification system established under subsection (b).

(2) Response after submitting removal request to the notification system.—Not later than 90 days after receiving a removal request pursuant to an election under paragraph (1), the promoter shall notify the system of the individual’s election to have the name and address of the individual excluded from all lists of names and addresses used by that promoter to mail any skill contest or sweepstakes.

(3) Effectiveness of election.—An election under paragraph (1) shall remain in effect, unless an individual (other than duly authorized person) notifies the promoter in writing that such individual—

(A) has changed the election; and

(B) elects to receive skill contest or sweepstakes mailings from that promoter.

(4) Promoter nonliability.—A promoter shall not be subject to civil liability for the exclusion of an individual’s name or address from any list maintained by that promoter for mailing skill contests or sweepstakes, if—

(1) a removal request is received by the promoter’s notification system; and

(2) the request is from—

(A) the individual whose name and address is to be excluded; or

(B) another duly authorized person.

(5) Prohibition on commercial use of lists.

(I) In general.—No person who is a promoter shall use a list of names and addresses to mail any skill contest or sweepstakes mailings.
SEC. 9. STATE LAW NOT PREEMPTED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Nothing in the provisions of this Act (including the amendments made by this Act) or in the regulations promulgated under such provisions shall be construed to preempt any provision of State or local law that imposes more restrictive requirements, regulations, damages, costs, or penalties. No determination by the Postal Service that any particular piece of mail or class of mail is in compliance with such provisions of this Act (including the amendments made by this Act) shall be construed to preempt any provision of State or local law.

(b) EFFECT ON STATE COURT PROCEEDINGS.—Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to prohibit an authorized State official from proceeding in State court on the basis of an alleged violation of any general civil or criminal statute of such State or any specific civil or criminal statute of such State.

SEC. 10. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Except as provided in section 8, this Act shall take effect 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

The title was amended so as to read: “A bill to amend chapter 30 of title 39, United States Code, to provide for the nonmalleability of certain deceptive matter relating to sweepstakes, skill contests, facsimile checks, administrative procedures, orders, and civil penalties relating to such matter, and for other purposes.”

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LEVIN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Did the Senator have a question?

Mr. COCHRAN. No. My question of the Senator from Iowa was much longer than I thought he would take. This is for the purpose of advising my friend from Indiana how long he would sit on the floor and listen to your colloquy, or whatever it is the Senator intends to do, or for how long the Senator intends to proceed. It is just a question. I am not suggesting the Senator does not have the right to talk all night, if he wishes. Mr. HARKIN. I am not going to talk all night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa has the floor. I am just curious about how much time he might take, or could we interrupt the remarks and let the Senator from Indiana proceed?

Mr. HARKIN. About 15 minutes—perhaps not that long. Let me conclude my earlier remarks. Quite frankly, I find myself in a very uncomfortable position. This is extremely uncomfortable for me. I think the pending amendments are the ultimate statement on the failure of the farm policy. We are saying it is uncomfortable for me? Because I don’t like it when farmers have to rely on government payments because they are not getting enough from the marketplace.

I am uncomfortable with an amendment that provides about $10 billion in support for our farmers. I find myself extremely uncomfortable. That is why I view what we are doing here as part of a two-step process. First, we must get the emergency money; but second, we have to change the underlying failures of the Freedom to Farm bill or we will be right back where we are again next year, asking for billions more in emergency payments to deal with the crisis in the farm economy.

Our farm policy now is based on cash payments. Now we are back here talking about even more cash payments. We are forced into this situation because the underlying farm policy is wrong. And that is how the Republicans’ proposal is shaped. It is a stopgap gesture based on AMTA payments. So naturally, the larger farmers with the larger base acreages are going to get the most money. This policy goes against what government programs ought to be. Government programs ought to be for those who are in need.

This amendment stands that principle on its head. The Republican proposal will give most of the money to the biggest farmers under the so-called AMTA payments. Our proposal offers a more equitable distribution by providing the assistance to producers who are actually on the farm right now and in relation to what they are growing now—not what they grew 20 or more years ago. That is a big difference between the two approaches.

The Republicans’ said they wanted to get rid of the old farm programs when they passed Freedom to Farm, but... their AMTA type payments are based on that very same outdated base acreage and payment yield system that is already 30 years old. An AMTA system, like the other two-step process, would undermine the words in the Janis Joplin song, “Freedom is just another word for nothin’ left to lose.” How accurate is that when it comes to the farm crisis. For our farmers, the word “freedom” in the Freedom to Farm bill is just another word for “nothin’ left to lose.”

Mr. WELLSSTONE. Mr. President, every time I’m home, farmers are saying to me: We appreciate some assistance so we can live to be able to farm another day, but we want to know whether we or our children or grandchildren will have any future? How are you going to deal with the price crisis? What are you going to do to change the direction that this freedom to farm bill has taken?

Farmers focus on the structural issues. They want Members to write a new farm bill. They don’t want a bail out every year. They want to be able to get a decent price in the marketplace. They want a fair shake. That is all they want.

I ask my colleague from Iowa, also my friend from North Dakota, what should we be focusing on here in the U.S. Senate beyond this emergency assistance package to make sure that farmers can get a decent price, and that family farmers can be able to make a living and their children can farm and our rural communities can flourish?

Mr. HARKIN. In responding to my friend from Minnesota, I was meeting with farmers this week in Iowa talking about our emergency package. On more than one occasion the farmers got up and said: We appreciate what you are trying to do to save the money. But if all you are going to do is send out another check and we are going to have the Freedom to Farm bill again next year, it isn’t going to work because we will be even deeper in the hole next year.

They are begging Congress to change this policy.

I tell my friend from Minnesota what I hear most often from them is they have to have a better price, they have to be able to market their grain more efficiently, and they need some limited kinds of conservation land idling program shorter than 10 years.

The vast majority of farmers I talked to said we have to get our supply and demand in line. The only way we will get them in line anytime soon is if we have some land out of production. With short-term land retirement, something to take land out for conservation purposes for 2 years, or 3 years at the most, where they get some economic benefit for that, coupled with higher loan rates and the extension of the loan and storage payments, we can start to get some stability and get the farm economy back on track.

This past weekend as well as on other Iowa visits, farmers are telling me if we don’t change the underlying farm bill it will be much worse. That is the judgment of the Senator from Iowa that while we do this—and it is urgent that we must do this, pass some disaster relief bill—that we also must accompany that with a change in the underlying farm bill, sooner rather than later, because if we do not, those farmers who are making decisions about the future will have to decide there is no hope ahead.

Freedom to Farm means there are lower price supports even when prices are high. Is it the judgment of the Senator from Iowa that while we do this—and it is urgent that we must do this, pass some disaster relief bill—that we also must accompany that with a change in the underlying farm bill, sooner rather than later, because if we do not, those farmers who are making decisions about the future will have to decide there is no hope ahead?

Freedom to Farm means there are lower price supports even when prices are high. Is it the judgment of the Senator from Iowa that while we do this—and it is urgent that we must do this, pass some disaster relief bill—that we also must accompany that with a change in the underlying farm bill, sooner rather than later, because if we do not, those farmers who are making decisions about the future will have to decide there is no hope ahead?

In the State of Iowa, from April of 1998 to April of 1999, land prices in Central Iowa have gone down 11 percent already. The Governor of Iowa was at a meeting I held in Iowa this weekend. He said, when the legislature left 3 months ago, when they went out of session, they estimated the growth in revenues at 1.8 percent. It is now down to 1 percent. That is going to affect our schools and everything else in the State of Iowa. So the broader impacts on Iowa’s economic health are already being felt. It is already happening.
I have had people tell me if all we are going to do is put the money out there, it will help those some with their debts, it will help them through the next few months, help them get through the harvest, if we do not change the Freedom to Farm bill, they are out, they are not going to be there next year.

Mr. DORGAN. May I ask one further question?

Mr. HARKIN. I yield for a question.

Mr. DORGAN. Payments, as I understand them, have gone too far in the current farm bill, the underlying farm bill; too high in the disaster programs. Perhaps both programs should be adjusted lower. My understanding of the program that has been offered earlier today, by the majority party, is with the triple-entity rule, the payment limitation. If that is not going to work—well, my feeling has always been, if we are not targeting help to family farmers, we don’t need a Department of Agriculture. The only reason to have all of this is to help family farmers.

Mr. HARKIN. The Senator is onto something regarding payment limitations. In the Republicans’ proposal, the maximum payments that an individual can receive—by setting up partnerships or corporations to maneuver around the limits—would be $460,000. Nearly half a million dollars to one individual.

Mr. DORGAN. If I might—

Mr. DORGAN. If I might again just inquire, I had computed it under the three-entity rule, what they could achieve. If I have missed part of that and they can achieve $460,000. It simply makes the point; $300,000 is too much.

Mr. President, $460,000 is way out of bounds. We ought to be trying to get a reasonable amount of support during this price collapse to family-size farms.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am constrained to object to any request to speak in the morning. We have not had an announcement as to what time we are coming in or how the bill will be handled. The usual rules of seeking recognition I think probably will apply tomorrow.

Mr. WEISHOTTENOK. Let me ask my colleague: My friend from North Dakota made the distinction between agriculture and family farmers; his passion is for the producers, the family farmers. Beyond this assistance bill, we would like to see something that would help us continue to survive. In Minnesota, on August 21, we are going to have a Rural Crisis Unity Day with a whole congressional delegation there to meet with the farmers and business people and all, really, of rural Minnesota. Does he think it would be helpful for people to say: We need you to do something about the price crisis; we need you to do something to make sure we get a fair shake; we need you to do something so that it is for family farmers; it is not just for IBP or the packers—it is not for the packers, it is for the producers? Do you think this is the kind of thing we are going to need to see in many of our agricultural States over the next several months to come, to put the pressure on the House and Senate to pass a bill for family farmers as opposed to these big conglomerates?

Mr. HARKIN. I say to my friend from Minnesota, I hope each one of us in our own capacity would understand what is happening out there right now. We are not blind. We are not deaf. We are not without the capability of going out in the countryside and talking to farmers and listening to them. We all do that. If we have eyes to see and ears to hear and a decent knowledge of what is happening on the farms, I hope we will not have to have all the rallies and have farmers come to big meetings to try to impress upon us this need. I do say, however, the way things are going that will happen. If we do not address the underlying aspects of the Freedom to Farm bill,
Congressional Record—Senate
19011
August 2, 1999

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Senator from Mississippi, Mr. LUGAR, be recognized for such time as he may consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I want to discuss the two amendments which have been offered by my colleagues, the distinguished ranking member,
Senator HARKIN of Iowa, and the distinguished chairman of the Agriculture Subcommittee on Appropriations, Senator COCHRAN. But I want to do so in the context in which Senators may be thoughtful about what type of action is appropriate, given not only the problems of agriculture but likewise the general problems that we have in this country that we are trying to address.

I note, for example, that the President of the United States, in his speech to the Nation on agriculture on Saturday, indicated that there are a number of things at stake here. I quote the President:

I am committed to working with Congress to provide the resources to help our farmers and ranchers by dealing with today’s crisis and by fixing the farm bill for the future.

Beyond that, the average net income in 1999, the year we are in, net farm income will be $43.8 billion. They point out that will fall below the revised estimate of $44.1 billion for 1998, last year. That means the estimate for this year is $300 million, or less than a 1 percent change, from the net income in 1998.

I make this point because usually on this floor we are into that kind of debate about our future and about how to use our resources. But from time to time, we have a debate on agriculture, and everything else is suspended. It is as if the money we are talking about today, the $10.8 billion, for example, that Senator HARKIN addressed, does not pertain to any of the above—tax reduction, Medicare, Social Security, the surplus, and what have you. It is deemed emergency spending, outside the budget, outside the budget caps, outside of our general consideration.

If we are to do emergency spending of that amount or any amount, there must be some requirements to show the criteria for what is required. That is what I want to review with the Senate this evening.

I suggest the Department of Agriculture, in its most recent summary of where agriculture stands, points out that with low commodity prices in 1999, the year we are in, net farm income will be $43.8 billion. They point out that will fall below the revised estimate of $44.1 billion for 1998, last year. That means the estimate for this year is $300 million, or less than a 1 percent change, from the net income in 1998.

I make that point because, as I have listened to the debate, Senators appear to be describing a loss that is substantially greater than that, but USDA in estimates made just last week, plugging in the low prices and plugging in also sometimes low inputs—that is, for feed costs and various other things agriculture people will need—have come to a conclusion the net change is only the difference between $44.1 billion and $43.8 billion.

Beyond that, the average net income of the last 5 years has been $46.7 billion, which means this year’s figure, if Democratic position: Emergency relief for agriculture—Continued

(10 billions of dollars)

Emergency Watershed Program 0.060
Emergency Conservation Program 0.030
EQIP—Prioritize livestock/nutri-

Ante our long-term financial prosperity.
These things are good for America’s farming and ranching families, too, and they’re good for all Americans.

I quote the President because the administration has been asked a number of times for an opinion on what type of emergency spending, if any, is appropriate at this point, on August 2, for a harvest that, by and large, is not yet in and with conditions that must, of necessity, be unknown. The administration has been reticent to address this situation with any figure, in large part that matter, many people in this Senate have been arguing over how the surplus we believe will come after September 30 should be spent or the surplus for future years. There have been a number of strong contending ideas which include the rescue of Medicare and Social Security reform, tax reduction, prescription drugs for those in Medicare who do not have that, and the various other things the President has cited.

I make this point because usually on this floor we are into that kind of debate about our future and about how to use our resources. But from time to time, we have a debate on agriculture,
and everything else is suspended. It is as if the money we are talking about

of our general consideration.

If we are to do emergency spending of that amount or any amount, there must be some requirements to show the criteria for what is required. That is what I want to review with the Senate this evening.

culture, in its most recent summary of where agriculture stands, points out that with low commodity prices in 1999, the year we are in, net farm income will be $43.8 billion. They point

year is $300 million, or less than a 1

1998.

I make that point because, as I have listened to the debate, Senators appear

tially greater than that, but USDA in ging in the low prices and plugging in also sometimes low inputs—that is, for feed costs and various other things agriculture people will need—have come to a conclusion the net change is only the difference between $44.1 billion and $43.8 billion.

Beyond that, the average net income of the last 5 years has been $46.7 billion, which means this year’s figure, if
It comes out this way, is $2.9 billion less than the 5-year average. The average for the 5-year period covering 1992 through 1997 was $7.7 billion, so this year’s result is 1.9 less than the 8-year average, or approximately 4 percent.

I am not making a claim it is higher; I am saying it is going to be lower. It is going to be lower by $300 million as opposed to last year and at least $2 billion to $3 billion less than the 5-year and 8-year averages.

As I have been listening to the debate and Senators have described this as a depression, a circumstance, Senators must take a look at the parameters of what is the actual set of facts. Let me point out historically the high water mark for agricultural income in the last 10 years was $54.9 billion in 1996. That followed the low year in 1995 of $37.2 billion. Low of $7, high of $4.9. Average: 45, 46 for the 5-year/10-year situations. This year: 43.8, close to 44 billion.

That is the range. This is net income, not net loss. Agriculture had a substantial net income never below $37 billion and never higher than $54.9 billion in this 10-year period of time.

We are taking a look at a situation that shows loss, but we ought to quantify that loss. These are the official USDA projections as of last week.

Senators will recall that 1998’s net farm income of $44 billion included $12.2 billion of direct Federal Government payments. About $9 billion was provided by the farm bill and the remaining $3 billion was this year before the October 1998 emergency appropriations bill. But this year, already, before this legislation comes to the floor, Federal payments are projected to be $16.6 billion.

Let me point out how this can be true. The safety net provided by the current farm bill—that safety net—provides for an annual transition payment, a so-called AMTA payment, of $5.1 billion. That is provided for by the farm bill, and to be paid to all farmers according to formulas at the times that are prescribed. But loan deficiency payments for corn, wheat, soybean, and other crops eligible for marketing loans are estimated at $6.6 billion. This is a safety net provided by the current farm bill.

It has been suggested a number of times that the current farm bill, in its emphasis upon market economics, has no safety net. But I am pointing out $5.1 billion in AMTA payments and another $6.6 billion in so-called loan deficiency payments, still another $4.8 billion to be paid out in conservation and crop loss disaster payments, with $2 billion of that authorized by the 1998 October emergency appropriations bill.

It is important to note that most of the farm debate has focused on low prices, and charts have been given to the Senate indicating how prices have tended downward over the years. But, nevertheless, the more important figure would be price times yield; that is, the income of the farmer from crops. If, in fact, the price is low but the yield is high, the product of the two may still be a reasonable return for that acre in that year. There is an even more important fact that I suspect that many Senators have not thought through clearly. An article that I saw on the front page of USA Today talked about a farm meeting the distinguished occupant of the Chair attended in Illinois. That particular article mentioned low prices and pointed out the depression and the fall of those prices.

But if the price of corn—as has been sometimes suggested—has been quoted at elevators at $1.75 or $1.70 per bushel, the good news is that a farmer will receive, at least if he is a farmer in the central part of Indiana, $1.95. That is price guaranteed through the loan deficiency payment in that part of the state.

How does this work? Let’s say the farmer brings the corn in and the market price is $1.70 per bushel at the time of harvest. At the Beach Grove elevator in Indianapolis, that farmer will receive what amounts to 25 cents a bushel, bringing that $1.70 up to $1.95. That is true for soybeans at Beach Grove. In the soybean loan rate will be $5.40. In some parts of the country it may be $5.26. I am advised, but it is not $4 or $4.50 or $4.60 or $3.75 or various figures that have been quoted.

This is a tough concept to try to get across because even after you make the point again and again, people talk about a $3.75 market price for soybeans. What I am saying is that every bushel of soybeans the farmer brings into the elevator, he is going to get $5.26. The Government loan deficiency payment will provide him with a payment equal to the difference between his market price and the local county loan rate. That is very different.

This is not a question about how low the prices are going to go. If they go lower, the loan deficiency payment is higher. That is why the Federal Government will be paying out at least $6.6 billion to make up the difference. It was the same for wheat. In many parts of the country, that harvest has already come in. But the government guarantees at least $2.58 for wheat at many elevators around the country.

I make that point because that is the safety net of the current farm bill. It is a very strong safety net. It will provide a very substantial amount of income as the harvests occur, as the grain comes in, as the loan rates are established. It will amount to $5.6 billion that has not yet been received but will be received by farmers. Hopefully, that will take the debate away from a comparison of how low the prices are going to go to the concrete figure of what the loan deficiency payment will be—specifically, as I say, again, in most parts of the country, at least $1.89 for every bushel of corn, and for every bushel of wheat, and $3.26 for every bushel of soybeans. At many elevators it will be a higher figure than that, including the one in Indianapolis that I cited. Farmers receive that even if the quoted market price is much lower.

Let me mention some other statistics the USDA has pointed out that may give you some idea about the parameters of our discussion. In the same report last week of USDA giving estimates on net income, USDA also went into the question of farm assets and farm debt and farm equity. If you had heard the entirety of the debate today—or maybe for some time—on this issue, the Chair might logically believe that land values in this country are going down if they pertain to agriculture; that the net worth of farmers collectively in this country is going way down. That, in fact, is not the case.

The Agriculture Department points out that farm equity, which was $325 billion in 1996, rose to $387 billion in 1997. It is estimated to go up to $365 billion this year. That is an increase of approximately $9 billion more, or a 1 percent increase in net worth. The farm real estate figures are $802 billion for this year as opposed to $794 billion last year, and $783 billion the year before, and $746 billion the year before that.

It does not mean every acre of land in every county all over America is going up. As a matter of fact, the Federal Reserve Board statistics for my home State of Indiana indicate an estimate that in the first quarter of 1999, real estate values in agriculture may have gone down by 2 percent. As a matter of fact, that was true of a number of States. But in a fair number of States, obviously, the estimate that agricultural land is down the aggregate, the total, for America is the land values are higher. Furthermore, the net worth is higher because farm debt will decrease from $172 billion to $171 billion.

Once again, listening to the debate you would say, how can that be? If we are in a depression circumstance, how can you be arguing that real estate on farms is going up, that net worth is going up, that debt is coming down? Because that is what is occurring. You can give any number of statistics about prices falling, but the fact is that net income is going to fall by $300 million. And that will still be within $2 to $3 billion of a range for the last 5 or 10 years of time.

Let me try to bring clarity to the argument in still another way.

The distinguished Senator from Iowa, Mr. Harkin, has mentioned, in a fact sheet that he released and he gave some of these figures again today, that there will be a 29-percent drop in agricultural income, but Senator HARKIN...
That is, should the Senate say that agriculture is an integral part of our general economic structure, that agriculture is an integral part of our general economic structure, and that agriculture is an integral part of our general economic structure.

As we all know in America agriculture, in order to get rid of the weeds in the field, it is a much more complicated and essential part of the soybean and corn plants that rejects the herbicides that kills all the weeds but leaves the corn and the soybeans standing. We believe that not only is corn and soybeans from such situations safe, but as a matter of fact, our yields have increased. The health of the plants has increased, and we felt all over the world people might want to benefit from these breakthroughs. Not so in Europe, and a debate rages as to whether there is something fundamentally wrong with our genetically modified seeds to the point we are finding it very difficult to export a single bushel of corn or beans to the European market. That debate is going to go on for awhile, and it has not been helpful.

We are on the threshold of a World Trade Organization meeting in Seattle that comes up in October. We must have fast track authority. That is, the President must be able to negotiate on behalf of the administration with other countries, knowing this body will vote up or down on the treaty without amendment, because amendments by all of us attempting to influence the situation to benefit our particular States or crops or so forth could be matched by amendments all over the world and the treaty negotiations collapse.

We don't have fast track authority. We have tried in this body several times to obtain that. The House of Representatives had similar difficulties. It will require enormous leadership by the President and by many of us, but we cannot make a new treaty that takes down the walls but increases our exports in the way that all Senators want, without doing the basic steps. Fast track authority is one of them, as well as a determined will that agriculture will not be left off the wagon, that 20 percent is an integral part of what our Nation must do at the WTO meetings.

I make this point because we talk, often glibly, about the need for exports. Of course, we have a need for exports. But they will not happen in the quantities that we need to have happen without lowering tariff and nontariff barriers, and the Seattle meeting is where that does or does not get done. If we don't have fast-track authority, it will not occur during this administration. That is a long time.

So for all these reasons, farmers have taken a direct hit, largely because of worldwide demand and in the case of many fields in the State of Illinois, or in my State of Indiana, or the State of Iowa, as much as a third to a half of all our acreage literally results in yields that must be exported, or we have it coming up around our ears. We know that and yet, as a Nation, we have not moved aggressively to make the difference that we need to occur.

So for all these reasons, the Senate might come to a conclusion that some compensation is required for farmers in order to keep their cash flow going. I made the point earlier that, as a matter of fact, loans will be reduced this year. But cash-flow will be reduced, also. And for those farmers who have the need for operating loans, who are genuinely in danger because of debt situations, the situation could be dire and family farms could be lost.

In the event that we are to make payments, the so-called AMTA payments, put money into the hands of farmers quickly, directly, and certainly—we had a pretty good demonstration of that last year. The Senate, in fact, was not going to respond to the session as the large appropriation compromise came together, appropriated as part of a package about $6 billion for American agriculture. It came as a surprise to many, but the form it came in was a surprise that was even more difficult. About $3 billion of it came in AMTA payments. Those were made immediately. They were received by farmers in the first week of November, after passage late in October of the appropriation bill.

I make that point because if we are serious about money actually arriving in the hands of farmers, then we must be serious about the distribution method. The AMTA method gets the money to farmers quickly, directly, and certainly—the money actually arriving in the hands of farmers, then we must be serious about the AMTA method.

The USDA struggled and, as a matter of fact, finally made payments in June of this year—not in November or October of last year—and it did so after exploring not only disasters of 1998 in some States, but '97, '96, '95 and '94—multiple years, all mopped up with some States, but '97, '96, '95 and '94—after the Appropriations Committees will have to respond to Senator's questions about this, the committee will hold a markup in the first week of September so that the Appropriations Committee that must now struggle with this legislation would have a fairly clear and real map of what the compromises were and what considerations have been given.

Furthermore, the September debate would give us a pretty good idea of what the yields actually are going to be for a number of our major crops. I suspect that, even as we speak, as people now begin to talk about a different problem in agriculture—namely, drought—a whole slew of new considerations are going to come into the picture. The price might go up and the yield might go down. Once again, the product of the two is the critical element, rather than the new per acre.

Mr. President, obviously, we are in this debate because the occupant of the chair and, frankly, the distinguished floor leader has indicated that we need to get on with this. I accept that fact. We will have tomorrow morning in the Agriculture Committee at 9 o'clock an appearance by the Secretary of Agriculture. We will ask him for his testimony and we will ask him for the administration's point of view, which I think is relevant to what we are discussing here.

I know it is relevant on the basis of last year's experience because we passed, I think, an agriculture appropriation bill, and it had considerable benefits for farmers. But it was vetoed by the President. And, as a result, the benefits did not accrue very rapidly, and we got into what I would say was a bidding war again. That is not advisable if it can be avoided in some normal framework. So I am hopeful that we will have a hearing, and at least that it will provide some benefit for the debate we are now having before us, and certainly for the farmers, also.

We will have it again because the Appropriations Committees will have to come back with conference reports, and we will have to judge the adequacy or inadequacy of what we have done at that point.

Mr. President, I finally make the point that the previous speakers have stated there is an emergency to be met, an immediate need for income. But, fundamentally, we must debate the entire farm bill when we come back—not simply a question of adequate income for farmers, but the fundamental law of the land.

I am prepared for that debate, but I simply say that before Senators get engaged in the debate, it is well to gauge at least the benefits that come from the current farm bill. There are, to date, $16.6 billion this year, which is just $100 million short of an all-time record of farm payments. That is a substantial safety net. I make the point that the farm bill recognizes that point and, in fact, provides fairly amply when that occurs. But it also provides freedom to farm, and that is very important to most farmers in this country—the ability to determine how to make their land, how many acres of corn, or beans, or cotton, or rice, or whatever the farmer wants to plant, or not to plant at all. The AMTA payment comes to a farmer who does not plant an acre, because this is a transition from the date of supply control to a day in which we move into market economics and the farm area more completely.

The thing the world dictates presently is that market economics is the important way to go. Our country testifies to that in almost every other debate.

I hope we will continue to testify in behalf of that when it comes to American agriculture.

I thank the Chair for this indulgence; likewise for other Senators.

I am hopeful that before action is taken on either of the two amendments, there will be testimony by the Secretary and then very thorough and by each Senator as to what our obligations should be to American agriculture both to encourage and enhance it and, likewise, that our obligation is to all the taxpayers of the country and the other major objectives that lie before our country.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Indiana. He has definitely elevated the level of discussion on the issue before the Senate by his remarks. He has given this debate unusual insight based on his experience and his knowledge of the subject and his personal experience as one who is engaged in production agriculture in the State of Indiana.

I think the Senate has benefited from his remarks. I, for one, want to congratulate him and thank him for remaining on the floor this evening and allowing the Senate the benefit of his observations on this issue.

Tomorrow, as he points out, there will be a hearing in the Agriculture Committee which could also be very helpful to our further understanding of the situation. The Economic Research Service and other agencies of the Department of Agriculture could make available to us information that would be very helpful and constructive as we try to decide what is best in this situation for our farmers around the country.

I don’t want to overuse this or build the lily too brightly. But I personally respect the Senator so much—and he knows that—and consider him a great friend. I again express my personal appreciation for his being here tonight and for his leadership in the agriculture area specifically.

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Mississippi, who is my friend and whose leadership I appreciate.

Let me inquire of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi if he knows of further debate. If not, I make an inquiry because I have been asked to substitute for the leader in making motions.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I know of no other Senator who seeks recognition on this. I think it would be appropriate to go to final wrap-up.

Mr. LUGAR. I thank the Senator.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to a period of morning business with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TAXPAYER REFORM ACT OF 1999

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I wish to express my support for the Bingaman amendment to recommit S. 1429 to the Senate Finance Committee which would have enabled us to clarify that debt reduction is a top priority for this government in spending any budget surplus.

As we say in my home state of Arkansas, the best time to fix the roof is when the sun is still shining.

Now is the time for us to take steps to reduce our enormous federal debt. I believe we have an unprecedented opportunity before us. We’ve been making tough decisions—living within our means, so to speak.

We have a surplus that’s bigger than we thought it would be and a chance to save Social Security for future generations, protect for Medicare and help older people afford prescription drugs.

So, now we have a shot at reducing our nation’s debt, which in turn will lower interest rates and put more money back in the pockets of more Americans.

Using a major portion of any surplus accumulated in these times of prosperity to improve the financial integrity of the federal government. Reducing the national debt is a smart long-term strategy for the U.S. economy and it must be our priority in this bill.

Reducing our national debt will provide a tax cut for millions of Americans because it will restrain interest rates, saving them money on various interest payments, new mortgages, auto loans, credit card payments, etc. Each percentage point decrease in interest rates would save American families hundreds of dollars every year.

By reducing the national debt we will protect future generations from increasing tax burdens. Currently, more than 25 percent of individual income taxes go to paying interest on our national debt. Every dollar of lower debt means more than one dollar for future generations, a savings that can be used for tax cuts, or for covering the baby boomers retirement without tax increases.

Reducing the national debt will also make it easier for the government to deal with the future costs of Social Security and Medicare and repay the Social Security trust fund when the Social Security system faces annual shortfalls.

In addition, reducing the national debt will reduce our reliance on foreign investors. More than $1.2 trillion of the national debt—roughly one third of the publicly held debt—is held by foreign investors. In 1998, the U.S. government paid $91 billion in interest payments to foreign investors.

It was not the American way to live beyond one’s means. Our parents taught us to work hard so that we can pay our bills, clothe our children and save for the future.

Accumulating debt and simply letting it grow and grow is not—and should not be—an option for most families around this country. It should no longer be the practice of this government.

Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan has repeatedly advised Congress that the most important action we could take to maintain a strong and growing economy is to pay down the national debt. I, for one, believe he is on the right track.

Clarifying our intent to prioritize debt reduction is the right thing to do.

THE VERY BAD DEBT BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, at the close of business yesterday, Thursday, July 29, 1999, the Federal debt stood at $5,640,577,276,840.14 (Five trillion, six hundred forty billion, five hundred forty dollars and fourteen cents) during the past 25 years.

Five years ago, July 29, 1994, the Federal debt stood at $4,636,362,000,000 (Four trillion, six hundred thirty-six billion, three hundred sixty-two million).

Twenty-five years ago, July 29, 1974, the Federal debt stood at $476,155,000,000 (Four hundred seventy-six billion, one hundred fifty-five million) which reflects a debt increase of more than $5 trillion—$5,164,422,276,840.14 (Five trillion, one hundred sixty-four billion, four hundred twenty-two million, two hundred seventy-six thousand, eight hundred forty dollars and fourteen cents) during the past 25 years.

THE VERY BAD DEBT BOXSCORE

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Williams, one of this secretary.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

REPORT ON THE UNITED STATES EMERGENCY REFUGEE AND MIGRATION ASSISTANCE FUND—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 54

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committees on Appropriations, the Budget, and Foreign Relations.

To the Congress of the United States:
In accordance with the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, I herewith report one revised deferral of budget authority, now totaling $173 million.

The deferral affects programs of the Department of Labor.

WILLIAM J. CLINTON.
THE WHITE HOUSE, August 2, 1999.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES
The following reports of committees were submitted:
By Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, without amendment:

By Mr. VOINOVICH (for himself and Mr. LIBBERMAN):
S. Con. Res. 49. A concurrent resolution expressing the sense of Congress regarding the importance of “family friendly” programming on television; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS
By Mr. SARBANES (for himself, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. WARNER, Mr. ROBB, and Mr. AKAKA):
S. 1472. A bill to amend chapters 83 and 84 of title 5, United States Code, to modify employee contributions to the Civil Service Retirement System and the Federal Employees Retirement System to the percentages in effect before the statutory temporary increase in calendar year 1999, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEE RETIREMENT CONTRIBUTIONS ACT OF 1999
Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I am again pleased to join with my colleagues, Senators MIKULSKI, WARNER, ROBB and AKAKA, in introducing the Federal Employee Retirement Contributions Act of 1999. This bill makes a technical correction to legislation introduced last week that would return Federal employee retirement contribution rates to their 1998 levels, effective January 1, 2000. It is my belief that the temporarily increased retirement contributions enacted as part of the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 represent an unfair penalty against Federal workers at a time when budget surpluses are predicted into the next ten years.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

S. 1472
Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.
This Act may be cited as the “Federal Employee Retirement Contributions Act of 1999”.

SEC. 5. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall take effect on December 31, 1999.
own states, but I’d like to take a moment to talk about the Norfolk-Portsmouth Enterprise Zone (EZ) in my state of Virginia. The Norfolk-Portsmouth EZ won its new designation in 1997. One of the many services Norfolk-Portsmouth provides through Norfolk Works, Inc. the entity implementing the many activities of the EZ, are GED classes and job training and apprenticeship programs. There’s even a Multi-media Training Course, which includes an 15-week internship at a media company. Norfolk Works also recruits and screen applicants for jobs. And they don’t do this alone: Norfolk Works coordinates with many agencies, organizations and businesses to help the residents within the Norfolk-Portsmouth Zone. Already, the Norfolk Works has produced impressive results—from May 1995 to June 1999, 60 percent of those completing training are employed with another 16% involved in additional training.

The success of the Norfolk-Portsmouth Enterprise Zone is just one example of the promise and results of Enterprise Zones. But unlike Round I EZ/ECs, Round II EZ/ECs did not receive the Social Service Block Grant (SSBG) that provides resources for social services such as job training and child care which complements the tax incentives and funding already approved.

Communities competed for these designations with the understanding that Congress would give them the full funding to implement their vision. We have a responsibility to fulfill our obligations to these communities, that worked very hard to win the resources to make their vision a reality.

I look forward to working with our colleagues to fulfill this promise.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 49—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING THE IMPORTANCE OF “FAMILY FRIENDLY” PROGRAMMING ON TELEVISION
Mr. Voinovich (for himself and Mr. Lieberman) submitted the following concurrent resolution referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 49
Whereas American children and adolescents spend between 22 and 28 hours per week viewing television—more than any other activity except sleeping; Whereas American homes have an average of 2.75 television sets, and 87 percent of homes with children having more than one television set; Whereas a very limited number of prime time programs are suitable for the entire family; Whereas surveys of television content demonstrate that many programs contain substantial sexual and/or violent content; Whereas parents are ultimately responsible for the appropriate supervision of their child’s television viewing, and critical viewing and “co-viewing” of television programming, with the child are especially important; Whereas “family friendly” programming means programs which are relevant, interesting, and appropriate for audiences of all ages, including movies, series, documentaries, and informational programs aired during hours when children and adults might be together watching television (between 9:00 p.m. and 10:00 p.m.); Whereas “family friendly” programming is of a type that the average viewer or parent would not be embarrassed to watch with children in the room and ideally presents an uplifting message; Whereas efforts must be made by television networks, studios, and the production community to produce more quality family friendly programs and to air them during times when parents and children are likely to be viewing together; Whereas members of the Forum on Family Friendly Programming at industry conventions and meetings, and other television networks, studios, and production companies to share concerns; (2) expressing the importance of family friendly programming at industry conventions, meetings, and forums; (3) honoring outstanding family friendly television programs with a new tribute, the Family Program Awards, to be held annually in Los Angeles, California; (4) establishing a development fund to finance family friendly scripts; and (5) underwriting scholarships at television studies departments at institutions of higher education to encourage student interest in family friendly programming: Now, therefore, be it
Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Congress—
(1) recognizes and honors the efforts of the Forum on Family Friendly Programming and other entities supporting family friendly programming; (2) supports efforts to encourage television networks, studios, and the production community to produce more quality family friendly programs; (3) supports the Family Friendly Programming Awards, which will recognize, recognize, and celebrate creative excellence in, and commitment to, family friendly programming; and (4) encourages the media and American advertisers to further a family friendly television environment within which appropriate advertisements can accompany the programming.

Mr. Voinovich. Mr. President, I rise today along with my distinguished colleague from Connecticut, Senator Lieberman, to submit a concurrent resolution recognizing the importance of expanding the amount of family friendly television programming, and the contributions that the Forum for Family Friendly Programming is undertaking to make this goal a reality.

One of the more frustrating aspects of being a parent in the United States is the fact that we cannot always protect our children from what they see and hear. Images and descriptions of violence, sex and drug and alcohol consumption permeate our homes, classrooms, and communities. Nowhere are these depicted more readily than on television. Recent studies support the theory that children exposed to violent video programming at a young age have a higher tendency to engage in violent and aggressive behavior later in life. Even more distressing is that children witness an average of five violent acts per hour on prime-time television and 200,000 acts of violence on television by the time they are 18 years old. There is no doubt that this exposure threatens the healthy development of our children.

For families that have both parents working, it’s becoming harder for them to keep track of what their children watch after school or during the summer months. More likely than not, a child will pick up the television clicker before he or she will pick up a book. In a week’s time, the average child will watch 22–28 hours of television, which is more than twice the time he or she spends on any outside activity other than sleeping.

At the request of Mr. Reid, the name of the Senator from Michigan (Mr. Levin) was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 95, a resolution designating August 16, 1999, as “National Airborne Day.”

At the request of Mr. Thurmond, the name of the Senator from Alaska (Mr. Stevens) was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 95, a resolution designating August 16, 1999, as “National Airborne Day.”

At the request of Mr. Craig, the name of the Senator from Idaho (Mr. Nickles) was added as a cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 42, a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that a commemorative postage stamp should be issued by the United States Postal Service honoring the members of the Armed Forces who have been awarded the Purple Heart.

At the request of Mr. Baucus the names of the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. Bingaman) and the Senator from Washington (Mrs. Murray) were added as cosponsors of Senate Resolution 95, a resolution designating November 20, 1999, as “National Survivors for Prevention of Suicide Day.”

At the request of Mr. Roberts, the name of the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Bond) was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 95, a resolution designating November 21, 1999, as “National Public Transit Day.”

The trick for parents is to establish good viewing habits for their child—as well as the entire family—that emphasize quality family programming. Right now, most parents indicate that the so-called “family viewing” time of evening—traditionally between 8:00 and 10:00 p.m.—often contains programming that they feel is inappropriate for their children. It is important that broadcasters recognize that the daily “family viewing” period needs to focus more on programming that is actually family friendly; shows that parents and children can readily watch together.

No one has the good judgment of a parent in determining what a child watches on television. However, parents can use all the help they can get in ensuring that more family-oriented shows are aired during the evening hour.

To help in this endeavor, a number of our nation’s largest companies have joined together to establish the Forum for Family Friendly Programming. Like many American families, the members of the Forum are concerned that fewer and fewer television programs are specifically geared towards the entire family. They are concerned, also, that too many of the programs that our children view contain storylines, language and characters to which they should not be exposed.

Most of the companies that belong to the Forum are sponsors of a wide range of television programs, but they believe that more family-friendly television programming, including movies, documentaries or informational programs that are interesting or relevant to a broad audience, will actually appeal to more families.

Right now, the members of the Forum for Family Friendly Programming are working with and in the entertainment community on a variety of initiatives on family friendly programming including: meetings with industry leaders; speeches and discussions at industry meetings and conferences; award tributes to family friendly television programs; a development fund for family friendly scripts; university scholarships in television studies departments to encourage student interest in family friendly programming; and a public awareness campaign to promote more family friendly programming.

Mr. President, as a father and a grandfather, I am deeply concerned about the healthy development of all of our nation’s children. Since the future of our country depends upon our children, we must do all that we can to limit their exposure to negative influences and provide them with as safe and nurturing an environment as possible. Therefore, I encourage efforts that will expand the number of quality family programs shown on television, and I congratulate the Forum for Family Friendly Programming on their leadership towards that goal.

I believe that passage of this resolution honoring the Forum’s commitment will help raise awareness and inspire others in the business world to align themselves with the goal of bringing quality television to our nation’s families. I am pleased to join with my colleague, Senator Lieberman, who has been a leader in the Senate on addressing the needs of our children, and I urge my colleagues to join us in co-sponsoring this resolution, and calling for its speedy consideration by the Senate.

SENATE RESOLUTION 170—RECOGNIZING LAURENCEBURG, TENNESSEE, AS THE BIRTHPLACE OF SOUTHERN GOSPEL MUSIC.

"(A) is clearly and conspicuously displayed;

"(B) includes the address or toll-free telephone number of the notification system established under paragraph (2); and

"(C) states that the notification system may be used to prohibit the mailing of all skill contests or sweepstakes by that promoter to such individual.

"(2) Notification System.—Any promoter that mails or causes to be mailed a skill contest or sweepstakes matter shall establish and maintain a notification system that provides for any individual (or other duly authorized person) to notify the system of the individual's election to have the name and address of the individual excluded from all lists of names and addresses used by that promoter to mail any skill contest or sweepstakes.

(d) Election To Be Excluded From Lists.—

"(1) In General.—An individual (or other duly authorized person) may elect to exclude the name and address of that individual from all lists of names and addresses used by a promoter of skill contests or sweepstakes by submitting a removal request to the notification system established under subsection (c).

(2) RESPONSE AFTER SUBMITTING REMOVAL REQUEST TO THE NOTIFICATION SYSTEM.—Not later than 35 calendar days after a promoter receives a removal request pursuant to an election under paragraph (1), the promoter shall exclude the individual’s name and address from all lists of names and addresses used by that promoter to select recipients for any skill contest or sweepstakes.

(3) EFFECTIVENESS OF ELECTION.—An election under paragraph (1) shall remain in effect, unless an individual (or other duly authorized person) notifies the promoter in writing that such individual—

'(A) has changed the election; and
'(B) elects to receive skill contest or sweepstakes mailings from that promoter.

'(e) PROMOTER NONLIABILITY.—A promoter shall not be subject to civil liability for the exclusion of an individual’s name or address from any list maintained by that promoter for mailing skill contests or sweepstakes mailings if—

'(1) a removal request is received by the promoter’s notification system; and
'(2) the promoter has a good faith belief that the request is from—

'(A) the individual whose name and address is to be excluded; or
'(B) another duly authorized person.

'(f) PROHIBITION ON COMMERCIAL USE OF LISTS.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Any promoter—

'(A) PROHIBITION.—No person may provide any information (including the sale or rental of any name or address) derived from a list described under subparagraph (B) to another person for commercial use.

'(B) LISTS.—A list referred to under subparagraph (A) is any list of names and addresses (or other related information) compiled from individuals who exercise an election under subsection (d).

'(2) CIVIL PENALTY.—Any person who violates paragraph (1) shall be assessed a civil penalty under this section.

'(g) CIVIL PENALTIES.—

'(1) IN GENERAL.—Any promoter—

'(A) who recklessly mails nonmailable matter in violation of subsection (b) shall be liable to the United States in an amount of $10,000 per violation for each mailing to an individual of nonmailable matter; or
'(B) who fails to comply with the requirements of subsection (c)(2) shall be liable to the United States.

'(2) ENFORCEMENT.—The Postal Service shall assess civil penalties under this section.

'(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections for chapter 30 of title 39, United States Code, is amended by adding after the item relating to section 3016 the following:

'3017. Nonmailable skill contests or sweepstakes matter; notification to prohibit mailings.'

'(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section shall take effect 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act.
(2) Payment limitation.—The total amount of all payments that a person may receive under paragraph (1) during any crop year may not exceed $40,000.

(3) Producers without production.—The payments made available under this subsection to producers with failed acreage, or acreage on which planting was prevented, due to circumstances beyond the control of the producers.

(4) By additional payment.—The assistance made available under this subsection for an eligible owner or producer shall be provided as soon as practicable after the date of enactment by this Act and any advance payments that are based on expected production and by taking such measures as are determined appropriate by the Secretary.

(5) Dairy Producers.—

(A) in general.—of the total amount made available under paragraph (1), $400,000,000 shall be available to provide assistance to dairy producers in a manner determined by the Secretary.

(6) Peanuts.—

(A) in general.—of the total amount made available under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall use not to exceed $45,000,000 to provide payments to producers of quota peanuts or additional peanuts to partially compensate the producers for the loss of markets for the 1998 crop of peanuts.

(B) Additional amount of a payment made available to producers on a farm of quota peanuts or additional peanuts under subparagraph (A) shall be equal to the product obtained by multiplying—

(i) the quantity of quota peanuts or additional peanuts produced or considered produced by the producers under section 155 of the Agricultural Market Transition Act (7 U.S.C. 7271); and

(ii) an amount equal to 5 percent of the loan rate established for quota peanuts or additional peanuts, as determined by the Secretary.

(7) Tobacco grower assistance.—The Secretary shall provide $328,000,000 to be distributed to tobacco growers according to the formulas established pursuant to the National Tobacco Grower Settlement Trust.

(c) Funds for strengthening markets, income, and supply (section 32).—

(1) in general.—For an additional amount for the fund maintained for funds made available under section 32 of the Act of August 24, 1922 (7 U.S.C. 612c), there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $300,000,000.

(2) Set-aside for certain livestock producers.—Of the funds made available by paragraph (1), the Secretary shall use not more than $200,000,000 to provide assistance to livestock producers.

(3) Waiver of commodity limitation.—In prescribing the amount under this subsection, the Secretary may waive the limitation established under the second sentence of the second paragraph of section 32 of the Act of August 24, 1922 (7 U.S.C. 612c), on the amount of funds that may be devoted to any 1 agricultural commodity or product.

(d) Emergency livestock assistance.—For additional amounts to provide emergency livestock assistance, there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $150,000,000.

(e) Commodity purchases and humanitarian donations.—

(1) in general.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall use not less than $978,000,000 of funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation for the purchase and distribution of agricultural commodities, under applicable food aid authorities, including—

(A) section 415(b) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1431(b));

(B) the Food for Progress Act of 1985 (7 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.);

(C) the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (7 U.S.C. 1961 et seq.).

(2) Least developed countries.—Not less than 40 percent of the commodities distributed pursuant to this subsection shall be made available to least developed countries, as determined by the Secretary.

(f) Local currencies.—To the maximum extent practicable, local currencies generated from the sale of commodities under this Act shall be used for development purposes that foster United States agricultural exports.

(g) Upland cotton price competitiveness.—

(1) in general.—section 136(a) of the Agricultural Market Transition Act (7 U.S.C. 7236(a)) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1), by inserting “in the case of each of the 1999–2000, 2000–2001, and 2001–2002 marketing years for upland cotton, at the option of the recipient” after “or cash payments”;

(B) by inserting “in the case of each of the 1999–2000, 2000–2001, and 2001–2002 marketing years for upland cotton, $1.25 cents per pound” each place it appears;

(C) in paragraph (3), by inserting “the equivalent of 5 weeks’ consumption of upland cotton by domestic mills at the seasonally adjusted average rate of the 3 months immediately preceding the first special import quota established in any marketing year.”;

(2) seasonal ending united states stocks-to-use ratio.—For the purposes of making payments under this Act, the Secretary shall, on a monthly basis, estimate and report the season-ending United States cotton stocks-to-use ratio, excluding processed raw cotton inventory, as determined under subparagraph (D), to be below 16 percent, the Secretary, in making the determination under subparagraph (B), shall not adjust the Secretary, and the Thursday average price quotation for the lowest-priced United States growth, as quoted for Middling (M) 1½-inch cotton, delivered C.I.F. Northern Europe, adjusted for the equivalent of any special import quota issued under subsection (a), exceeds the Northern Europe price by more than 1.25 cents per pound, there shall immediately be in effect a special import quota.

(3) Tight domestic supply.—During any month for which the Secretary estimates the season-ending United States upland cotton stocks-to-use ratio, at a level determined by the Secretary, there shall immediately be in effect a special import quota for the lowest-priced United States growth, as quoted for Middling (M) 1½-inch cotton, delivered C.I.F. Northern Europe, for the value of any certificates issued under subsection (a).

(D) Season-ending United States stocks-to-use ratio.—For the purposes of making payments under this Act, the Secretary shall, on a monthly basis, estimate and report the season-ending United States cotton stocks-to-use ratio, as determined under subparagraph (D), to be below 16 percent, the Secretary, in making the determination under subparagraph (B), shall not adjust the Thursday average price quotation for the lowest-priced United States growth, as quoted for Middling (M) 1½-inch cotton, delivered C.I.F. Northern Europe, adjusted for the equivalent of any special import quota issued under subsection (a).

(2) Removal of suspension of marketing certificates.—section 171(b)(1)(G) of the Agricultural Market Transition Act (7 U.S.C. 7301(b)(1)(G)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end the following: “, except that this subsection shall not apply to each of the fiscal years 2000, 2001, and 2002.

(3) Redemption of marketing certificates.—section 115 of the Agricultural Market Transition Act (7 U.S.C. 7306) is amended—

(A) in subsection (a), by striking “rice (other than negotiable marketing certificates for upland cotton or rice)” and inserting “rice, including the issuance of negotiable marketing certificates for upland cotton and rice;

(ii) in paragraph (1), by striking “and” at the end;

(iii) in paragraph (2), by striking the period at the end and inserting “; and”;

(iv) by adding at the end the following:

“(m) Redeem negotiable marketing certificates for cash under such terms and conditions as are established by the Secretary”; and

(B) in the second sentence of subsection (c), by striking “export enhancement program established under the Agricultural Trade Act of 1978” and inserting “market access program or the export enhancement program established under sections 203 and 301 of the Agricultural Trade Act of 1978 (7 U.S.C. 5623, 5651)”.

(g) Farm Service Agency.—For an additional amount for the Farm Service Agency, there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $140,000,000, of which—

(1) $100,000,000 shall be used for salaries and expenses of the Farm Service Agency; and

(2) $100,000,000 shall be used for direct or guaranteed farm ownership, operating, or emergency loans under the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1921 et seq.), there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $500,000,000.

(h) State Mediation Grants.—For an additional amount for grants pursuant to section 502(b) of the Agricultural Credit Act of 1987 (7 U.S.C. 5102(b)), there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $50,000,000.

(i) Disaster Reserve.—For the disaster reserve established under section 13 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (12 U.S.C. 128), and the contingency fund, there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $2,000,000.

(j) Disaster Reserve.—For the disaster reserve established by section 13 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (12 U.S.C. 128), and the contingency fund, there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $2,000,000.

(k) Crop and Livestock Cash Indemnity Payments.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary may use the amount made available under this subsection to carry out a program to provide crop or livestock indemnity payments to agricultural producers for the purpose of remedying losses caused by damaging weather or related condition resulting from a natural or related cause.

(l) Commercial Fisheries Failure.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall provide $15,000,000 of the amount made available under this section to the Department of Commerce to provide emergency disaster assistance to persons or entities that have incurred losses from a commercial fishery failure described in section 308(b)(1) of the Interjurisdictional Fisheries Act of 1986 (16 U.S.C. 4107(b)) with respect to a Northeast multispecies fishery.

(m) Flooded Land Reserve Program.—For an additional amount to carry out a flooded land reserve program in a manner that is consistent with section 1224 of the Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1999 (7 U.S.C. 1421 note; Public Law 105-277), there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $250,000,000.

(n) Emergency Short-Term Land Division.—For an additional amount to carry out an emergency short-term land division program, there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $250,000,000.

(o) Grain Inspection, Packers, and Stockyards Administration.—For an additional amount for the Grain Inspection, Packers, and Stockyards Administration to support rapid deployment of staff to enforce the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921 (7 U.S.C. 181 et seq.), there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $1,000,000.

(p) Water Sheds and Flood Prevention Operations.—For an additional amount for watershed and flood prevention operations to repair damaged waterways and waterhedges resulting from natural disasters, there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $60,000,000.

(B) (i) not sold, or held for sale or sold at the food service establishment in normal retail quantities; or

(ii) served to consumers at the food service establishment.

(4) METHOD OF NOTIFICATIoN.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The information required by paragraph (2) may be provided to consumers by means of a label, stamp, mark, placard, or other clear and visible sign on the perishable agricultural commodity or on the package, display, holding unit, or bin containing the commodity at the final point of sale to consumers.

(B) LAbeled COMMODITIES.—If the perishable agricultural commodity is already indi-videntally labeled regarding country of origin by the packer, importer, or another person, the retailer shall not be required to provide any additional information to comply with this subsection.

(5) VIOLATIONS.—If a retailer fails to indicate the country of origin of a perishable agricultural commodity as required by paragraph (2), the Secretary may assess a civil penalty on the retailer in an amount not to exceed—

(A) $1,000 for the first day on which the violation occurs; and

(B) $250 for each day on which the same violation continues.

(6) DISPOsIT OF FUNDS.—Amounts collected under paragraph (5) shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

(7) APPLICATION OF SUBSECTION.—This section shall apply with respect to a perishable agricultural commodity after the end of the 6-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) UPLAND COTTON PRICE COMPETITIVEness.—(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 136(a) of the Agricultural Market Transition Act (7 U.S.C. 7286(a)) is amended—

(A) by inserting at the end of paragraph (1), by striking "or cash payments" and inserting "or cash payments, at the option of the recipient,";

(B) by striking "3 cents per pound" each place it appears and inserting "1.25 cents per pound";

(C) in the first sentence of paragraph (3)(A), by striking "owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation in such manner, and at such price levels, as the Secretary determines will best effectuate the purposes of cotton user marketing certificates" and in-serting "owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation or pledged to the Commodity Credit Corporation as collateral for a loan in such manner, and at such price levels, as the Secretary determines will best effectuate the purposes of cotton user marketing certificates, including enhancing the competitiveness and marketability of United States cottons"; and

(D) by striking paragraph (4).

(ii) FUNDING.—For an additional amount to carry out the import quota program during the period ending July 31, 2003, as provided in this subsection.

(i) PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS.—Except as provided in subparagraph (C), whenever the Secretary determines that for any consecutive 4-week period, the Friday through Thursday average price quotation for the lowest-priced United States growth, as quoted for Middling (M) 1 3⁄32-inch cotton, delivered C.I.F. Northern Europe, adjusted for the value of any certificate issued under subsection (a), exceeds the Northern Europe price by more than 1.25 cents per pound, there shall immediately be in effect a special import quota.

(C) TIGHT DOMESTIC SUPPLY.—During any month for which the Secretary determines that the Friday through Thursday average price quotation for the lowest-priced United States growth, as quoted for Middling (M) 1 3⁄32-inch cotton, delivered C.I.F. Northern Europe, for the value of any certificates issued under subsection (a),
(D) SEASON-ENDING UNITED STATES STOCKS—To ensure that, for purposes of making estimates under subparagraph (C), the Secretary shall, on a monthly basis, estimate and report the season-ending United States upland cotton on-hand-to-use ratio, and (B) by adding at the end the following:

"(7) LIMITATION.—The quantity of cotton entered into the United States during any marketing year under the special import quota established under this subsection may not exceed the equivalent of 5 week's consumption of upland cotton by domestic mills at the seasonally adjusted average rate of the 3 months immediately preceding the first special import quota established in any marketing year.

(3) REMOVAL OF SUSPENSION OF MARKETING CERTIFICATE AUTHORITY.—Section 171(b)(1) of the Agricultural Trade Act of 1978 is amended—

(A) by striking subparagraph (G); and

(B) in paragraph (1), by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (A) and inserting "; or";

(C) by adding at the end the following:

"(3) COMPUTATION.—A payment to producers on account of a marketing year shall be computed by multiplying—

(A) a payment rate determined by the Secretary; by

(B) the quantity of oilseeds that the producers on the farm are eligible to place under loan under section 313 of that Act.

(3) LIMITATION.—Payments made under this subsection shall be considered to be contract payments for the purposes of section 1001(1) of the Food Security Act of 1985 (7 U.S.C. 1308(1)).

(4) ASSISTANCE TO LIVESTOCK AND DAIRY PRODUCERS.—The Secretary shall use $500,000,000 of funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation to provide assistance to livestock and dairy producers in a manner determined by the Secretary.

(g) SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING FAST-TRACK AUTHORITY AND FUTURE WORLD TRADE ORGANIZATION NEGOTIATIONS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the President should make a formal request for appropriate fast-track authority for future United States trade negotiations; and

(2) regarding future World Trade Organization negotiations—

(A) rules for trade in agricultural commodities should be strengthened and trade-distorting import and export practices should be eliminated or substantially reduced; and

(B) the rules of the World Trade Organization should be strengthened regarding the practices or policies of a foreign government that unreasonably—

(i) restrict market access for products of new technologies, including products of biotechnology;

(ii) delay or preclude implementation of a report of a dispute panel of the World Trade Organization; and

(iii) restrict market access for products of new technologies, including products of biotechnology.

(3) the President should—

(A) conduct a comprehensive evaluation of all existing export and food aid programs, including—

(i) the export credit guarantee program established under section 202 of that Act (7 U.S.C. 5651); and

(ii) the market access program established under section 203 of that Act (7 U.S.C. 5623); and

(iii) the foreign market development coop- erator program established under section 702 of that Act (7 U.S.C. 7722); and

(iv) programs established under the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (7 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.); and

(v) programs established under the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1965 (7 U.S.C. 1706 et seq.); and

(vi) programs established under the Food for Progress Act of 1965 (7 U.S.C. 1786).

(4) the Secretary should carry out a pur- chase and donation or concessional sales ini- tiative in each of fiscal years 1999 and 2000 to promote the export of additional quantities of soybeans, beef, pork, poultry, and products of such commodities (including soybean and related products, meats, and textured vegetable products) using programs established under—

(A) the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter Act of 1948 (7 U.S.C. 1431); and

(B) section 416 of the Agricultural Act of 1996.
restoration project now nearing completion in Mendocino, California. While the North Coast of California is renowned for its natural beauty and breathtaking views, in Mendocino there is another coastal landmark that has captured the imagination of this rugged region. Built in 1908, the Point Cabrillo Lighthouse is a living reminder of California’s maritime history. And on August 6th, the Lighthouse celebrates the 90th anniversary of the first lighting of its light.

This one-of-a-kind structure was originally built by the United States Lighthouse Service to protect the legendary “doghole schooners” that plied the lumber trade between San Francisco and California’s northern coast at the turn of the century. The Lighthouse was turned over to the U.S. Coast Guard in 1939, and still houses Coast Guard navigational aids and monitoring equipment. However, the Lighthouse structure and its rare Fresnel lens suffered significant damage after a fire in 1998. The California Coastal Conservancy and North Coast Interpretive Association stepped forward to restore and reinstate the original Fresnel lens, and to renovate the Lighthouse for use as an educational and interpretive center.

Thanks to the efforts of the people of Mendocino, the Coastal Conservancy and the North Coast Interpretive Association, the Lighthouse restoration project will soon be complete. A weekend of festivities will celebrate the Lighthouse’s revival and highlight the attractions of the Point Cabrillo Preserve and Light Station. This celebration will acknowledge the efforts of the many volunteers and community partners that also helped make this project a success.

It is important to take the time to applaud the restoration of this nationally significant historic landmark. I also think it is important to recognize the significance of community projects such as the Point Cabrillo Lighthouse, which serve as invaluable, irreplaceable links to our common past and as unique educational tools for the future. I commend the efforts that have gone into this restoration project, and send the Point Cabrillo Lighthouse volunteers and other partners my best wishes for their continued success.

TRIBUTE TO THE TOWN OF NEWTON, NEW HAMPSHIRE

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to the town of Newton, New Hampshire on its two hundred and fiftieth anniversary. The town’s residents will celebrate the 90th anniversary of the town of Newton, New Hampshire on August 2, 1999.

Newton’s rich and fruitful history dates back to 1639 when families first settled in the area granted by England known as New Salisbury (Amesbury). Newton’s actual township was incorporated in 1748, allowing the people to elect their own officials and to hold town meetings.

Much of the frontier region was wild country inhabited by the Naumkeag Indians. The settlers and the Naumkeaks had generally peaceful relations, relying on one another for trading purposes. The greatest danger facing the settlers came from the war parties of the Mic Macs, who originated from the area now known as Maine and New Brunswick, Canada. These hostile groups conducted violent raids as far south as Connecticut, killing large numbers of local populations. With a combination of the settlers’ admirable fortitude and the recurring epidemics of disease, these native populations were nearly wiped out.

Newton residents have persevered in other ways throughout the years, courageously serving and defending America in time of war. Among the lineages of the French and Indian Wars, Revolutionary War, War of 1812, Civil War, World War I, World War II, the Korean War and the Vietnam Conflict, Newton’s citizens are always willing to serve our Nation when called upon.

I congratulate the town of Newton, and it’s dedicated and patriotic citizens. I am proud to serve the residents of Newton in the United States Senate.

ICELANDIC HERITAGE

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I rise today to celebrate the Icelandic heritage of our country and of the state of North Dakota.

For a century it has been North Dakota’s custom to set aside time to honor the contributions of Icelanders to North Dakota. In order to honor the thousands of people of Icelandic descent that reside in my state, the Governor has proclaimed July 30 to August 2 as Icelandic Heritage Days.

Icelandic Heritage Days culminates with a celebration of the historical presentation of a new constitution to the Icelandic Parliament. This occurred on August the second, or “August the Deuce,” as many Icelanders call it. 1874 by King Kristjan the Ninth. This action formally freed Iceland from hundreds of years of Danish rule.

In 1878, people of Icelandic descent first settled in northeastern North Dakota. Since this time, Icelandic-Americans have been instrumental in the development of their communities and my state. One settler, E.H. Bergman, was a member of the Territorial Legislature, which passed legislation enabling the establishment of the states of North and South Dakota.

In Bergman’s time, many more people of Icelandic descent have represented their constituencies in the ND Legislature and state government.

Mr. President, this year’s celebration is especially noteworthy because an Icelandic dignitary, the Hon. Olafur Ragnar Grimsson, the President of Iceland, will be in attendance. This visit will mark the first time that an Icelandic head-of-state has visited North Dakota.

It is a pleasure to have President Grimsson visit North Dakota, and a privilege to honor Icelandic-Americans for all they have done for North Dakota and this great country.

ANGELO QUARANTA

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, today, I extend special birthday wishes to a very special Californian, Angelo Quaranta, whose birthday is August 8.

Angelo is perhaps best known as the owner and driving force behind Allegro, an Italian restaurant on San Francisco’s Russian Hill. Regardless of whether you are the Governor, the Mayor, a community organizer or just someone looking for a wonderful plate of pasta, Angelo’s grace and easy manner always make you feel welcome.

Angelo was born in Taranto, Italy in 1941. Before leaving his homeland for San Francisco in 1960, he attended the police academy and became national Judo champion while serving with the Italian Police Force. Upon arriving in San Francisco, he first worked as a window washer and then began a distinguished career in the insurance industry.

Cooking may be Angelo’s passion, but he can be found in many more places than the kitchen. He has long been active in local government and is a leader in community affairs. He is currently president of the Commission of Parking and Traffic, and serves on San Francisco’s Recreation and Park Commission. In the 1970’s, he operated an Italian television station that broadcast programming from Italy. He founded Unione Sportiva Italia, and has been active in numerous efforts to celebrate the invaluable contributions of Italians and Italian-Americans to the life of the city and nation. Angelo has served as a member of the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation and founded Candlelight Again, an organization comprised of restaurant owners and their patrons dedicated to raising funds for community needs. In recognition of his work, and in addition to many other honors, the Mayor’s Office has twice proclaimed it “Angelo Quaranta Day in San Francisco.”

Angelo has two adult daughters who live with their husbands and children in Italy. It is a pleasure to join them and the larger civic family Angelo continues to nurture in San Francisco in wishing him a joyous 65th birthday.
TRIBUTE TO HONOR BEDFORD PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I rise today to honor the Bedford Presbyterian Church which is celebrating its 250th Anniversary on August 15, 1999. The church first organized on August 15, 1749 and has been serving the people of Bedford ever since.

The church was founded under the rules of Massachusetts Colony who deeded the land to the New Hampshire and also mandated that in order to organize a town there must be land for a church, a minister, and an orthodox ministry. The church was thus formed in 1749 and the town charter was signed the next year.

As a person of strong religious convictions, I applaud the services and strong sense of family and community that the church has provided to its community. Furthermore, I applaud their monthly celebrations of this historic event.

I commend the Bedford Presbyterian Church and wish them luck in the next 250 years. It is an honor to represent the members of Bedford Presbyterian Church in the United States Senate.●

TRIBUTE TO ADMIRAL BARRY COSTELLO

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize Rear Admiral (Select) Barry Costello, United States Navy, for the excellent job he has done as the Director of Senate Liaison for the Navy. I want to recognize Admiral Costello for his many achievements and commend him for the exemplary service he has provided to the Senate, to the Navy, and to our great nation.

Barry Costello is a sailor's sailor who has distinguished himself through his seaman ship, tactical acumen, and inspiring leadership. He has served on some of our country's finest warships, including command of the destroyer U.S.S. Elliot (DD 967). Prior to coming to the Senate, he commanded the prestigious “Little Beavers” of Destroyer Squadron 23, following in the footsteps of Admiral Arleigh “Thirty-One Knot” Burke, who famously led the “Little Beavers” to a decisive victory over Japanese forces in the Battle of Cape Saint George in 1943.

In March 1997, Admiral Costello took the helm of the Navy’s Senate Liaison Office. His integrity, enthusiasm, and foresight have earned the admiration of all members of the Senate who have worked with him, and it is not an exaggeration to say that through his service to the Senate, Barry Costello has helped to ensure that our Navy remains the best trained, best equipped, and best prepared naval force in the world.

Mr. President, Rear Admiral (Select) Barry Costello exemplifies what is best in the Navy and in America. The Senate, the Navy and the American people are indebted to him for his many years of distinguished service. As he departs PROVISIONS

TRIBUTE TO ROBERT STEPHEN

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Robert Stephen of Manchester, New Hampshire for his appointment to Director of Community Development Services at New Hampshire’s Department of Resources and Economic Development.

After two years of service as a New Hampshire State Senator, Democratic Leader from 1984 to 1990, Robert was appointed Deputy Executive Director of the New Hampshire Job Training Council. In this capacity Robert was responsible for providing New Hampshire businesses with the skilled labor needed to grow and be successful and New Hampshire citizens with the skills they need to become self-sufficient. He has also been a driving force in workforce development by overseeing the state’s Rapid Response effort and convening the Statewide Business Relations Team.

Not only has Robert taken on the task of improving the New Hampshire workforce, but he has been an asset to his community. He has won numerous Multiple Sclerosis Fund-Raising Awards, was a former member of the New Hampshire State Athletic Commission, has received the Easter Seal VIP Award and has been a business owner and even a snowboarder. On top of all this service, Robert was also able to become a three-time New Hampshire Golden Gloves Boxing Champion.

Robert’s new responsibility as Director of Community Development Services will give him the opportunity to cultivate a stronger and more job ready workforce, meeting the needs and specifications of New Hampshire companies. His presence at the New Hampshire Job Training Council will surely be missed.

I want to commend Robert Stephen for his hard work on behalf of New Hampshire citizens and wish him luck in his new endeavor. It is an honor to represent Robert in the United States Senate.●

(D) the only contributions to such trust (other than rollover contributions) are employer contributions.

(2) Participation requirements.—A plan meets the requirements of this paragraph for any year only if the requirements of subsection (b)(3) are met for such year.

(V) Vesting.—A plan meets the requirements of this paragraph for any year only if the requirements of subsection (b)(3) are met for such year.

(4) Benefit form.—

(A) In general.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the requirements of this paragraph only if the trustee distributes a SAFE annuity that satisfies subsection (b)(4) where the annual benefit described in subsection (b)(4)(A) is not less than the accrued benefit determined under paragraph (5).

(B) Direct transfers to individual retirement plan or safe annuity.—A plan shall not fail to meet the requirements of this paragraph by reason of permitting, as an optional form of benefit, the distribution of the entire balance to the credit of the employee. If the employee attains age 65, such distribution must be in the form of a direct trustee-to-trustee transfer to a SAFE annuity, another SAFE trust, or a SAFE rollover plan (or, in the case of a distribution that is subject to the dollar limit in effect under section 411(a)(1)(A), any other individual retirement plan).

(C) Safe rollover plan.—For purposes of this subparagraph, ‘SAFE rollover plan’ means an individual retirement plan for the benefit of the employee to which a rollover was made from a SAFE annuity, SAFE trust, or another SAFE plan.

(D) Amount of annual accrued benefit.—A plan meets the requirements of this paragraph for any year only if the requirements of subsection (b)(6) are met for such year.

(6) Funding.—

(A) In general.—A plan meets the requirements of this paragraph for any year only if—

(i) the requirements of subsection (b)(6) are met for such year,

(ii) the case of a plan which has an unfunded annuity amount with respect to the account of any participant, the plan requires that the employer make an additional contribution to such plan (at the time the annuity contract to which such amount relates is purchased) equal to the unfunded annuity amount, and

(iii) in the case of a plan which has an unfunded prior year liability as of the close of such plan year, the plan requires that the employer make an additional contribution to such plan for such year equal to the amount of such unfunded prior year liability no later than 8% months following the end of the plan year.

(B) Unfunded liability.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘unfunded annuity amount’ means, with respect to the account of any participant for whom an annuity is being purchased, the excess (if any) of—

(i) the amount necessary to purchase an annuity contract which meets the requirements of subsection (b)(4) in the amount of the participant’s accrued benefit determined under paragraph (5),

(ii) the balance in such account at the time such contract is purchased.

(C) Unfunded prior year liability.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘unfunded prior year liability’ means, with respect to any plan year, the excess (if any) of—

(i) the aggregate of the present value of the accrued liabilities under the plan as of the close of the prior plan year, over

(ii) the value of all the plan’s assets determined under section 411(a)(2) of the close of the plan year (determined without regard to any contributions for such plan year).

Such present value shall be determined using the assumptions specified in paragraph (D).

(D) Actuarial assumptions.—In determining the amount required to be contributed under subparagraph (A),—

(i) the assumed interest rate shall not be less than 3 percent, and not greater than 5 percent, per year,

(ii) the assumed mortality shall be determined under the applicable mortality table (as defined in section 411(e)(3), as modified by the Secretary so that it does not include any assumption for preretirement mortality), and

(iii) the assumed retirement age shall be 65.

(E) Changes in mortality table.—If, for purposes of this subsection, the applicable mortality table under section 411(e)(3) for any plan year is not the same as such table for the prior plan year, the Secretary shall prescribe regulations for such purposes which phase in the effect of the changes over a reasonable period of not less than 10 years.

(F) Penalty for failure to make required contribution.—The taxes imposed by section 4971 shall apply to a failure to make the contribution required by this paragraph in the same manner as if the amount of the failure were an accumulated funding deficiency to which such section applies.

(7) Separate accounts for participants.—A plan meets the requirements of this paragraph for any year only if the plan provides—

(A) for an individual account for each participant,

(B) for benefits based solely on the amount contributed to the participant’s account,

(C) which the income, expenses, gains and losses, and any forfeitures of accounts of other participants which may be allocated to such participant’s account, and

(D) the amount of any unfunded annuity amount with respect to the participant.

(8) Trust may not hold securities which are not readily tradable.—A plan meets the requirements of this paragraph only if the plan prohibits the trust from holding directly or indirectly securities which are not readily tradable on an established securities market or otherwise.

(9) Nothing in this paragraph shall prohibit the trust from holding insurance company products regulated by State law.

(d) Special rules for safe annuities and trusts.—

(1) Certain requirements treated as met.—For purposes of section 401(a), a SAFE trust shall be treated as meeting the requirements of the following provisions:

(A) Section 401(a)(4) (relating to non-discrimination rules);

SEC. 335. TREATMENT OF FORMS OF DISTRIBUTION.

(a) PLAN TRANSFERS.—

(I) Amendment to Internal Revenue Code of 1986.—Paragraph (6) of section 411(d) (relating to accrued benefits) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(D) Transfers.—A defined contribution plan (in this subparagraph referred to as the ‘transferor plan’) shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of this section merely because the transferor plan does not provide some or all of the forms of distribution previously available under another defined contribution plan (in this subparagraph referred to as the ‘transferee plan’) to the extent that—

(1) the forms of distribution previously available under the transferor plan applied to the account of a participant or beneficiary under the transferee plan and which is permitted under the transferee plan pursuant to a direct transfer rather than pursuant to a distribution from the transferor plan,

(2) the terms of both the transferor plan and the transferee plan authorize the transfer described in clause (I),

(3) the transfer described in clause (I) was made pursuant to a voluntary election by the participant or beneficiary whose account was transferred to the transferee plan,

(4) the election described in clause (III) was made after the participant or beneficiary received a notice describing the consequences of making the election,

(5) the transferor plan provides for an annuity as the normal form of distribution under the plan in accordance with section 417, the transfer is made with the consent of the participant, and such consent meets the requirements similar to the requirements imposed by section 417(a)(2), and

(6) the transferee plan allows the participant or beneficiary described in clause (III) to receive any distribution to which the participant or beneficiary is entitled under the transferee plan in the form of a single sum distribution.

(II) Waiver of 60-Day Requirement.—The Secretary may waive the 60-day requirement under another defined contribution plan (in this subparagraph referred to as the ‘transferee plan’) to the extent that—

(1) the forms of distribution previously available under the transferor plan applied to the account of a participant or beneficiary under the transferee plan, and

(2) the election described in clause (III) was made after the participant or beneficiary received a notice describing the consequences of making the election.

(II)Waiver of 60-Day Requirement.—The Secretary may authorize the transfer described in clause (I) in the case of a hardship described in clause (II) which is permitted to be made under the transferee plan.

(B) Hardship Exception.—The Secretary may authorize the transfer described in clause (I) which is permitted to be made under the transferee plan.

(B) Waiver of 60-Day Requirement.—The Secretary may authorize the transfer described in clause (I) in the case of a hardship described in clause (II) which is permitted to be made under the transferee plan.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to distributions after December 31, 2000.

“(ii) such single sum payment is based on the same or greater portion of the participant’s account as the form of distribution being eliminated.”.

(2) AMENDMENT TO ERISA.—Section 204(g) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1054(g)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(4)(A) A defined contribution plan (in this subparagraph referred to as the ‘transferor plan’) shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of this subsection merely because the transferor plan does not provide some or all of the forms of distribution previously available under another defined contribution plan (in this paragraph referred to as the ‘transferee plan’) to the extent that the forms of distribution previously available under the transferor plan applied to the account of a participant or beneficiary under the transferee plan that was transferred from the transferor plan to the transferee plan pursuant to a direct transfer rather than pursuant to a distribution from the transferor plan;

(ii) the terms of both the transferor plan and the transferee plan authorize the transfer described in clause (i);

(iii) the transfer described in clause (i) was made pursuant to a voluntary election by the participant or beneficiary whose account was transferred to the transferee plan;

(iv) the election described in clause (iii) was made after the participant or beneficiary received adequate information describing the consequences of making the election;

(v) if the transferor plan provides for an annuity as the normal form of distribution under the plan in accordance with section 417, the transfer is made with the consent of the participant’s spouse (if any), and such consent meets requirements similar to the requirements imposed by section 417(a)(2); and

(vi) the transferee plan allows the participant or beneficiary described in subclause (II) to receive any distribution to which the participant or beneficiary is entitled under the transferee plan in the form of a single sum distribution.

(B) Subparagraph (A) shall apply to plan mergers following the effect of a direct transfer, including consolidations of benefits attributable to different employers within a single employer plan.

(3) MODIFICATION OF DISTRIBUTION.—Except to the extent provided in regulations, a defined contribution plan shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of this section merely because of the elimination of a form of distribution previously available thereunder. This paragraph shall not apply to the elimination of a form of distribution with respect to any participant unless—

(A) a single sum payment is available to such participant at the same time or times as the form of distribution being eliminated; and

(B) such single sum payment is based on the same or greater portion of the participant’s account as the form of distribution being eliminated.”.

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to years beginning after December 31, 2000.

(b) REGULATIONS.—

(1) AMENDMENT TO INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1986.—The last sentence of paragraph (6)(B) of section 411(d) (relating to accrued benefit not to be decreased by amendment) is amended to read as follows: “The Secretary may by regulations provide that this subparagraph shall not apply to any plan amendment that does not adversely affect the rights of participants in a material manner.”

(2) AMENDMENT TO ERISA.—The last sentence of section 204(g)(2) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1054(g)(2)) is amended to read as follows: “The Secretary of the Treasury may by regulations provide that this paragraph shall not apply to any plan amendment that does not adversely affect the rights of participants in a material manner.”

(3) SECRETARY DIRECTED.—Not later than December 31, 2001, the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to issue final regulations under section 411(d)(6) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 and section 204(g)(2) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974. Such regulations are in effect as of December 31, 2001, or such earlier date as is specified by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Subtitle E—Strengthening Pension Security and Enforcement

SEC. 344. FAILURE TO PROVIDE NOTICE BY DEFINED BENEFIT PLANS SIGNIFICANTLY REDUCING FUTURE BENEFIT ACCRUALS.

(a) Excise Tax.—(1) In general.—Chapter 43 of subtitle D (relating to qualified pension, etc., plans) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“SEC. 4980F. FAILURE OF DEFINED BENEFIT PLANS REDUCING BENEFIT ACCRUALS.

(a) Imposition of Tax.—(1) In general.—There is hereby imposed a tax on the failure of an applicable pension plan to meet the requirements of subsection (c) with respect to any applicable individual.

(2) Amount of Tax.—(A) In general.—The amount of the tax imposed by subsection (a) with respect to any applicable individual shall be $100 for each day in the noncompliance period with respect to such failure.

(B) Noncompliance Period.—For purposes of this section, the term ‘noncompliance period’ means, with respect to any failure, the period beginning on the date the failure first occurs and ending on the date the failure is corrected.

(C) Minimum Tax for Noncompliance Period Where Failure First Occurs After Notice of Examination.—Notwithstanding paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (c)—

(A) in general.—In the case of 1 or more failures with respect to an applicable individual—

(i) which are not corrected before the date a notice of examination of income tax liability is sent to the employer plan, the employer.

(ii) which occurred or continued during the period under examination, the amount of tax imposed by subsection (a) by reason of such failures with respect to such beneficiary shall not be less than the lesser of $2,500 or the amount of tax which would be imposed by subsection (a) without regard to such paragraphs.

(B) Higher Minimum Tax Where Violations Are More Than De Minimis.—To the extent violations occurring during the period under examination (in the case of a multiemployer plan) for any year are more than de minimis, subparagraph (A) shall be applied by substituting ‘$15,000’ for ‘$2,500’ with respect to the applicable individual

(C) Limitations on Amount of Tax.—(1) Tax Not to Apply Where Failure Not Discovered through Reasonable Diligence.—No tax shall be imposed by subsection (a) on any failure during any period for which it is established to the satisfaction of the Secretary that such failure existed.

(2) Tax Not to Apply to Failures Corrected Within 30 Days.—No tax shall be imposed by subsection (a) on any failure if—

(A) such failure was due to reasonable cause and not due to willful neglect; or

(B) such failure is corrected during the 30-day period beginning on the first date any of the persons referred to in subsection (d) knew, or exercising reasonable diligence would have known, that such failure existed.

(3) Overall Limitation for Unintentional Failures.—

(A) in general.—In the case of failures that are due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect, the tax imposed by subsection (a) for failures during the taxable year of the employer plan (or, in the case of a multiemployer plan, any single employer for purposes of the failure which is due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect, the tax imposed by subsection (a) to the extent that the payment of such tax would be excessive relative to the failure involved.

(B) LIABILITY FOR TAX.—The following shall be liable for the tax imposed by subsection (a):—

(1) in the case of a plan other than a multiemployer plan, the employer.

(2) in the case of a multiemployer plan, the plan administrator.

(3) Notice Requirements for Plans Significantly Reducing Benefit Accruals.—

(A) General.—If an applicable individual chooses between 2 or more benefit formulas, and to each employee organization representing applicable individuals which—

(A) sets forth the plan amendment and its effective date, and

(B) includes sufficient information (as determined in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary) to allow such participants and beneficiaries to understand how the amendment generally affects different classes of employees.

(2) Additional Notice Required in Certain Cases.—

(A) in general.—If a plan amendment to which paragraph (1) applies—

(i) provides for a significant change in the manner in which the accrued benefit was described in subparagraph (4) of subsection (a) of section 4972, the applicable individual is determined under the plan, or

(ii) requires an applicable individual to choose between 2 or more benefit formulas, and

(iii) reasonably may be expected to affect such applicable individual, the plan shall, not later than the 30th day before the effective date of the amendment, provide written notice to such applicable individual which includes the information described in subparagraph (B), and

(3) Additional Notice to Individual.—The notice under subparagraph (A) shall include the following information:

(1) The accrued benefit (and if the amendment adds the option of an immediate lump sum distribution, the present value of the accrued benefit) as of the effective date, determined

August 2, 1999
under the terms of the plan in effect immediately before the effective date.

(ii) The accrued benefit in the form of a single life annuity commencing at normal retirement age (and by taking into account any early retirement subsidy).

(ii) by using the applicable mortality table and the applicable interest rate under section 410(d)(3)(A).

(3) If a plan amendment to which paragraph (1) applies requires an applicable individual to choose between 2 or more benefit formulas, the Secretary of the Treasury may, after consultation with the Secretary—

(A) require additional information to be provided in either of the notices described in paragraph (1) or (2), and

(B) require either of such notices to be provided at a time other than the time required under either such paragraph.

(4) NOTICE BEFORE ADOPTION OF AMENDMENT.—A plan shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of paragraph (1) or (2) merely because notice is provided before the adoption of the plan amendment if no material modification of the amendment occurs before the amendment is adopted.

(5) NOTICE TO DESIGNEE.—Any notice under paragraph (1) or (2) may reasonably be expected to affect such applicable individual.

(ii) may reasonably be expected to affect such applicable individual.

(6) APPLICABLE INDIVIDUAL.—For purposes of this section—

(A) any participant in the plan, and

(B) any beneficiary who is an alternate payee (within the meaning of section 414(p)(8)) under an applicable domestic relations order (within the meaning of section 414(p)(1)(B)).

(2) Exception for Participants With Less Than 1 Year of Participation.—Such term shall not include a participant who has less than 1 year of participation (within the meaning of section 411(b)(4)) under the plan as of the effective date of the plan amendment.

(3) TERMINATION OF BENEFITS.—Such term shall not include a participant or beneficiary who, under the terms of the plan as of the effective date of the plan amendment, is entitled to the greater of the accrued benefit under such terms or the accrued benefit under the terms of the plan in effect immediately before the effective date.
is 3 months after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply to elective deferrals for plan years beginning after December 31, 1998.

(2) APPLICABILITY TO PREVIOUSLY ACQUIRED PROPERTY.—The amendments made by this section shall not apply to any elective deferral used to acquire an interest in the income or gain from employer securities or employer real property acquired—

'(A) before January 1, 1999, or

'(B) after such date pursuant to a written contract which was binding on such date and at all times thereafter on such plan.'.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply as if included in the provision of the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 to which it relates.

SEC. 346. TREATMENT OF MULTIEmployER PLANS UNDER SECTION 415.

(a) Combining.—Section 415(b) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (relating to limitation for defined benefit plans) is amended to read as follows:

``(11) SPECIAL LIMITATION RULE FOR GOVERNMENTAL AND MULTIEmployER PLANS.—In the case of a governmental plan (as defined in section 414(d)) or a multiemployer plan (as defined in section 414(i)), subparagraph (B) of paragraph (1) shall not apply.

(b) COMBINING AND AGGREGATION OF PLANS.—

(1) COMBINING OF PLANS.—Subsection (f) of section 415 (relating to combining of plans) is amended to read as follows:

``(f) COMBINING OF PLANS.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1) and subsection (g), a multiemployer plan (as defined in section 414(f)) shall not be combined or aggregated with any other plan maintained by an employer for purposes of applying the limitations established in this subsection. The preceding sentence shall not apply for purposes of applying subsection (b)(1)(A) to a plan which is not a multiemployer plan.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 401(m)(4)(A), plus (c) of section 401(m)(4)(A), plus (d) of section 401(m)(4)(A), is amended by inserting ''a multiemployer plan'' after ''3 or more defined contribution plans which are not deductible''.

SEC. 347. MAXIMUM CONTRIBUTION DEDUCTION RULES MODIFIED AND APPLIED TO BENEFIT PLAN CONTRIBUTIONS.

(a) In General.—Subparagraph (D) of section 401(a)(1) (relating to special rule in case of certain plans) is amended to read as follows:

``(D) SPECIAL RULE IN CASE OF CERTAIN PLANS.—

'(i) In General.—In the case of any defined benefit plan, except as provided in regulations, the maximum amount deductible under the limitations of this paragraph shall not be less than the unfunded termination liability (determined as if the proposed termination date referred to in section 401(b)(2)(A)(ii) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 were the last day of the plan year).

'(ii) PLANS WITH LESS THAN 100 PARTICIPANTS.—For purposes of this subparagraph, in the case of a plan with less than 100 participants for the plan year, termination liability shall not include the liability attributable to benefit increases for highly compensated employees maintained in section 414(g) resulting from a plan amendment which is made or becomes effective, whichever is later, within the last 2 years before the termination date.

'(iii) PLANS ESTABLISHED AND MAINTAINED BY PROFESSIONAL SERVICE EMPLOYERS.—For purposes of determining whether a plan has more than 100 participants, all defined benefit plans maintained by the same employer (or any member of such employer's controlled group (within the meaning of section 412(l)(3)(C))) shall be treated as 1 plan, but only employees of such member or employer shall be taken into account.

'(iv) PLANS ESTABLISHED AND MAINTAINED BY GOVERNMENTAL AND MULTIEmployER PLANS.—In the case of any defined benefit plan, except as provided in regulations, the limitations of this paragraph shall not be less than the unfunded termination liability (determined as if the proposed termination date referred to in section 401(b)(2)(A)(ii) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 were the last day of the plan year).

'(B) the administrator of a defined benefit plan shall furnish a pension benefit statement—

'(i) at least once every 3 years to each participant with a nonforfeitable accrued benefit who is employed by the employer maintaining the pension benefit plan on any day on which the statement is furnished to participants, and

'(ii) to a participant or beneficiary of the plan upon written request.

'(C) Provided that if a plan is a defined benefit plan the requirements of paragraph (1)(B)(i) shall be treated as met with respect to a participant if the administrator provides the participant at least once each year with notice of the availability of the pension benefit statement and the ways in which the participant may obtain such statement. Such notice shall be provided in written, electronic, telephonic, or other appropriate form, and may be included with other communications to the participant if done in a manner reasonably designed to attract the attention of the participant.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—(1) Section 105(b) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1053(b)) is amended to read as follows:

``(a) In no case shall a participant or beneficiary of a plan be entitled to more than one statement described in subsection (a)(1)(A) or (B), whichever is applicable, in any 12-month period.''.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to plan years beginning after December 31, 1999.

SEC. 352. CLARIFICATION OF TREATMENT OF EMPLOYER-PROVIDED RETIREMENT ADVICE.

SEC. 1001. SEVERING OF TRUSTS.

SEC. 1002. SEVERING OF TRUSTS.

SEC. 1003. SEVERING OF TRUSTS.

Subtitle B—Conservation Easements

SEC. 711. EXPANSION OF ESTATE TAX RULE FOR CONSERVATION EASEMENTS.

(a) Where Applicable.—If a gift or transfer of an interest in land to a qualified conservation organization is made—

(1) by striking paragraphs (4) and (5), and replacing such paragraphs with the following:

"(i) $60,000, or

"(ii) an amount of $175,000 which the value of that part of the decedent’s gross estate which at the time of his death was situated in the United States bears to the value of his entire gross estate wherever situated.

"(C) Coordination with Treaties.—To the extent required under any treaty obligation of the United States, the exemption allowed under this paragraph shall be reduced by the amount of any treaty obligation of the United States.

"(D) Coordination with Gift Tax Exemption and Unified Credit.—If an exemption has been such severance shall be treated as separate trusts therefor for purposes of this chapter.

(‘‘B’’ QUALIFIED SEVERANCE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A)—
(i) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘‘qualified severance’’ means a division of a single trust in the creation (by any means available under the governing instrument or under local law) of 2 or more trusts if—
(I) the single trust was divided on a fractional basis, and
(II) the terms of the new trusts, in the aggregate, provide for the same succession of interests of beneficiaries as are provided in the original trust.

(ii) TRUSTS WITH INCLUSION RATIO GREATER THAN ZERO.—If a trust has an inclusion ratio of greater than zero and less than 1, a severance is a qualified severance only if the single trust is divided into 2 trusts, one of which receives a fractional share of the total value of all trust assets equal to the applicable fraction of the single trust immediately before the severance. In such case, the trust receiving such fractional share shall have an inclusion ratio of zero and the other trust shall have an inclusion ratio of 1.

(iii) REGULATIONS.—The term ‘‘qualified severance’’ includes any other severance permitted under regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

(2) SEVERANCE DURING ESTATE TAX INCLUSION PERIOD.—A severance pursuant to this paragraph may be made at any time. The Secretary shall prescribe by forms or regulations the manner in which the qualified severance shall be reported to the Secretary.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to severances after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 732. MODIFICATION OF CERTAIN VALUATION RULES.

(a) GIFTS FOR WHICH GIFT TAX RETURN FILED OR DEEMED ALLOCATION MADE.—Paragraph (1) of section 2642(b) (relating to valuation rules, etc.) is amended to read as follows:

‘‘(1) GIFTS FOR WHICH GIFT TAX RETURN FILED OR DEEMED ALLOCATION MADE.—If the allocation of GST exemption with respect to a transfer of property is made on a gift tax return filed on or before the date prescribed by section 5052(b) for such transfer or is deemed to be made under section 2632(b)(1),—

(A) any property for purposes of subsection (a) shall be its value as finally determined for purposes of chapter 12 (within the meaning of section 2601(f)(2)), or, in the case of an allocation of post-death changes in the estate tax inclusion period, its value at the time of the close of the estate tax inclusion period, and

(B) such allocation shall be effective on and after the date of such transfer, or, in the case of an allocation deemed to have been made at the close of an estate tax inclusion period, on and after the close of such estate tax inclusion period.''

(b) TRANSFERS AT DEATH.—Subparagraph (A) of section 2642(b)(2) is amended to read as follows:

‘‘(A) TRANSFERS AT DEATH.—If property is transferred as a result of the death of the transferor, other than property for purposes of subsection (a) shall be its value as finally determined for purposes of chapter 11; except that, if the requirements prescribed by the Secretary respecting the valuation of post-death changes in the estate tax inclusion period are not met, the value of such property shall be determined as of the time of the distribution concerned.''

(c) TRANSITIONAL RULE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect as if included in the amendments made by section 1431 of the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (13) of section 512(b) is amended by redesignating subparagraphs (A) through (J) as subparagraphs (B) through (K), respectively, and by inserting after subparagraph (J) the following new paragraph:

‘‘(K) PARAGRAPHS TO APPLY ONLY TO EXCESS PAYMENTS.—

(I) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (A) shall apply only to the portion of a specified payment

(II) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (A) shall apply only to the portion of a specified payment

(III) to pay reasonable and necessary administrative expenses in connection with the establishment and operation of the association and

(IV) to make remittances pursuant to State law to be used by the State to provide for the payment of claims on policies written by the insurance company, purchase reinsurance covering losses under such policies, or to support governmental programs to prepare for or mitigate the effects of natural catastrophic events.

(iii) The State law governing the association permits the association to levy assessments on insurance companies authorized to sell property and casualty insurance in the State, or on property and casualty insurance policyholders with insurable interests in property located in the State to fund deficits of the association, including the creation of reserves.

(iv) the plan of operation of the association is subject to approval by the chief executive officer or other executive branch official of the State by the State legislature or by order of any State or political subdivision thereof.

(v) the assets of the association revert upon dissolution to the State, the State's designee, or an entity designated by the State law governing the association and the laws of the State do not permit the dissolution of the association.

(vi) An entity described in clause (ii) shall be disregarded as a separate entity and treated as part of the association described in subparagraph (A) from which it receives remittances described in clause (ii) if an election is made within 30 days after the date that such association is determined to be exempt from tax.

(vii) An entity is described in this clause if it is an entity or fund created before January 1, 1999, pursuant to State law and organized and operated exclusively to receive, hold, and invest remittances from an association described in subparagraph (A) and exempt from tax under subsection (a) and to make disbursements to pay claims on insurance contracts issued by such association, and to make disbursements to support governmental programs to prepare for or mitigate the effects of natural catastrophic events.

(viii) SPECIAL RULE APPLICABLE TO ORGANIZATIONS DESCRIBED IN SECTION 501(c)(28).—In the case of an organization described in section 501(c)(28), the term ‘‘unrelated business taxable income’’ means taxable income for a taxable year computed without the application of section 501(c)(28) if, at the end of the immediately preceding taxable year, the organization's net equity exceeded 15 percent of the total coverage in force under insurance contracts issued by the organization and outstanding at the end of such preceding year.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1999.

"(8) Allocation of Expenditures Relating to Exterior of Building.—If a taxpayer participates in a rehabilitation mortgage for purposes of this section, the amount which the taxpayer is entitled to occupy as such stockholder.

"(9) When Expenditures Taken into Account.—In the case of a building other than a building to which subsection (g) applies, qualified rehabilitation expenditures shall be treated for purposes of this section as made on the date the rehabilitation is completed.

"(10) Allowance for Purchase of Rehabilitated Historic Home.—

"(A) In General.—In the case of a qualified purchased historic home, the taxpayer shall be treated as having made (on the date of purchase) the qualified rehabilitation expenditures made by the seller of such home. For purposes of the preceding sentence, expenditures made by the seller shall be deemed to be qualified rehabilitation expenditures if such expenditures, if made by the purchaser, would be qualified rehabilitation expenditures.

"(B) Qualified Purchased Historic Home.—For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘qualified purchased historic home’ means any substantially rehabilitated certified historic structure purchased by the taxpayer if—

"(A) the taxpayer is the first purchaser of such structure after the date rehabilitation is completed, and the purchase occurs within 5 years after such date,

"(B) the structure (or a portion thereof) will, within a reasonable period, be the principal residence of the taxpayer.

"(C) Deduction.—The credit was allowed to the seller under this section or section 47 with respect to such rehabilitation, and

"(D) the taxpayer is furnished with such information as the Secretary determines is necessary to determine the credit under this subsection.

"(2) Historic Rehabilitation Mortgage Credit Certificate.—

"(1) In General.—The taxpayer may elect, in lieu of the credit otherwise allowable under this

"(2) General Rule.—In the case of a qualified purchased historic home, the taxpayer shall be treated as having made (on the date of purchase) the qualified rehabilitation expenditures made by the seller of such home. For purposes of the preceding sentence, expenditures made by the seller shall be deemed to be qualified rehabilitation expenditures if such expenditures, if made by the purchaser, would be qualified rehabilitation expenditures.

"(A) What Is a Qualified Census Tract? —For purposes of this section and the term ‘qualified census tract’ means a tract in which the median family income is less than twice the statewide median family income.

"(B) When Expenditures Taken into Account.—In the case of a building other than a building to which subsection (g) applies, qualified rehabilitation expenditures shall be treated for purposes of this section as made on the date the rehabilitation is completed.

"(3) Allowance for Purchase of Rehabilitated Historic Home.—

"(A) In General.—In the case of a qualified purchased historic home, the taxpayer shall be treated as having made (on the date of purchase) the qualified rehabilitation expenditures made by the seller of such home. For purposes of the preceding sentence, expenditures made by the seller shall be deemed to be qualified rehabilitation expenditures if such expenditures, if made by the purchaser, would be qualified rehabilitation expenditures.

"(B) Qualified Purchased Historic Home.—For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘qualified purchased historic home’ means any substantially rehabilitated certified historic structure purchased by the taxpayer if—

"(A) the taxpayer is the first purchaser of such structure after the date rehabilitation is completed, and the purchase occurs within 5 years after such date,

"(B) the structure (or a portion thereof) will, within a reasonable period, be the principal residence of the taxpayer.

"(C) Deduction.—The credit was allowed to the seller under this section or section 47 with respect to such rehabilitation, and

"(D) the taxpayer is furnished with such information as the Secretary determines is necessary to determine the credit under this subsection.

"(2) Historic Rehabilitation Mortgage Credit Certificate.—

"(1) In General.—The taxpayer may elect, in lieu of the credit otherwise allowable under this section, to receive a historic rehabilitation mortgage credit certificate in an election under this paragraph shall be made—

(A) in the case of a building to which subsection (g) applies, at the time of purchase, or
(B) in any other case, at the time rehabilitation is completed.

(2) HISTORIC REHABILITATION MORTGAGE CREDIT CERTIFICATE.—For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘historic rehabilitation mortgage credit certificate’ means a certificate—

(A) issued to the taxpayer, in accordance with procedures prescribed by the Secretary, with respect to rehabilitation,
(B) the face amount of which shall be equal to the credit which would (but for this subsection) be allowable under subsection (a) to the taxpayer with respect to such rehabilitation,
(C) which may only be transferred by the taxpayer to a lending institution (including a non-depository institution) in connection with a loan—

(i) that is secured by the building with respect to which the credit relates, and
(ii) the proceeds of which may not be used for any purpose other than the acquisition or rehabilitation of such building, and
(D) in exchange for which such lending institution provides the taxpayer—

(i) a reduction of the rate of interest on the loan which results in interest payment reductions which are substantially equivalent on a present value basis to the face amount of such certificate, or
(ii) if the taxpayer so elects with respect to a specified amount of the face amount of such certificate relating to a building—

(I) which is a targeted area residence within the meaning of section 142(i)(1), or
(II) which is located in an enterprise community or empowerment zone as designated under section 199,
(a) a payment which is substantially equivalent to such specified amount to be used to reduce the taxpayer’s cost of purchasing the building (and only the remainder of such face amount shall be taken into account under clause (i)),

(3) METHOD OF DISCOUNTING.—The present value under paragraph (2)(D)(i) shall be determined—

(A) for a period equal to the term of the loan referred to in subparagraph (D)(i),
(B) by using the convention that any payment of interest due on any taxable year within such period is deemed to have been made on the last day of such taxable year,
(C) by using a discount rate equal to 65 percent of the average of the annual Federal mid-term rate and the annual Federal long-term rate applicable under section 1274(d)(1) to the month in which the taxpayer makes an election under paragraph (1) and compounded annually, and
(D) by assuming that the credit allowable under this section for any year is received on the last day of such year.

(4) USE OF CERTIFICATE BY LENDER.—The amount of the credit specified in the certificate shall be allowed to the lender only to offset the regular tax (as defined in section 55(c)) of such lender. The lender may carry forward all unused amounts under this subsection until exhausted.

(5) HISTORIC REHABILITATION MORTGAGE CREDIT CERTIFICATE NOT TREATED AS TAXABLE INCOME.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no benefit accruing to the taxpayer through the use of an historic rehabilitation mortgage credit certificate shall be treated as taxable income for purposes of this title.

(i) RECAPTURE.—

In general.—If, before the end of the 5-year period beginning on the date on which the rehabilitation of the building is completed (or, if subsection (g) applies, the date of purchase of such building by the taxpayer, or, if subsection (h) applies, the date of such transfer), the taxpayer disposes of such taxpayer’s interest in such building, or

(B) such building ceases to be used as the principal residence of the taxpayer at any time during the last year of the period described in clause (i), the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year in which such disposition or cessation occurs shall be increased by the recapture percentage of the credit allowed under this section for all prior taxable years with respect to such rehabilitation.

(2) RECAPTURE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the recapture percentage shall be determined in accordance with the following table:

If the disposition or cessation occurs within—
The recapture percentage is—

(i) one full year after the taxpayer—

(II) under the terms of the new lease, such trust receives a substantially similar or lesser benefit in comparison to the lease referred to in subsection (I).

(5) QUALIFIED LODGING FACILITY.—For purposes of this paragraph—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘qualified lodging facility’ means any lodging facility unless dealings are conducted at or in connection with such facility by any person who is engaged in such business or in connection with such facility, and any person who is engaged in such business or in connection with such facility, and

(B) LODGING FACILITY.—The term ‘lodging facility’ means a hotel, motel, or other establishment more than one-half of the dwelling units in which are used on a transient basis.

(C) CUSTOMARY AMENITIES AND FACILITIES.—The term ‘lodging facility’ includes customary amenities and facilities operated as part of, or associated with, the lodging facility so long as such amenities and facilities are customarily associated with properties of a comparable size and class owned by other owners unrelated to such real estate investment trust.

(D) OPERATE INCLUDES MANAGE.—References in this subparagraph to operating a property shall be treated as including a reference to managing the property.

(E) RELATED PERSON.—Persons shall be treated as related to each other if such persons are treated as a single employer under section (a) or (b) of section 52.

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (B) of section 856(d)(3) is amended by inserting ‘‘except as provided in paragraph (6),’’ after ‘‘(B).’’

(3) DETERMINING RENTS FROM REAL PROPERTY.—(A)(i) Paragraph (1) of section 856(d) is amended by striking ‘‘adjacent bases’’ in each place that it occurs and inserting ‘‘fair market value’’ in each reference thereto.

(ii) The amendment made by this paragraph shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1999.

(B)(i) Clause (i) of section 856(d)(2)(B) is amended by striking ‘‘number’’ and inserting ‘‘value’’.

(ii) The amendment made by this paragraph shall apply to amounts received or accrued in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1999, except for amounts paid pursuant to leases in effect on July 12, 1999 or pursuant to a binding contract in effect on such date and at all times thereafter.

SEC. 1023. TAXABLE REAL ESTATE SUBSIDIARY.—(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 856 is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

‘‘(l) TAXABLE REAL ESTATE SUBSIDIARY.—For purposes of this part—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘taxable real estate subsidiary’ means, with respect to a real estate investment trust, a corporation (other than a real estate investment trust) if—

(A) such trust (directly or indirectly) owns stock in such corporation, and

(B) such trust and such corporation jointly elect that such corporation shall be treated as a taxable real estate subsidiary of such trust for purposes of this part.

Such an election, once made, shall be irrevocable unless both such trust and corporation consent to its revocation, and, until any revocation thereof, may be made without the consent of the Secretary.

(2) 35 PERCENT OWNERSHIP IN ANOTHER TAXABLE REAL ESTATE SUBSIDIARY.—The term ‘taxable real estate subsidiary’ includes, with respect to any real estate investment trust, any corporation (other than a real estate investment trust) with respect to which a taxable real estate subsidiary of such trust owns directly or indirectly—

(A) securities possessing more than 35 percent of the total voting power of the outstanding securities of such corporation, or

(B) securities having a value of more than 35 percent of the total value of the outstanding securities of such corporation.

The preceding sentence shall not apply to a taxable REIT subsidiary of such trust that provides substantially similar or lesser benefit in comparison to the lease referred to in subsection (I).

(3) EXCEPTION.—The term ‘taxable real estate subsidiary’ shall not include—

(A) any corporation which directly or indirectly operates or manages a lodging facility or a health care facility, and

(B) any corporation which directly or indirectly provides to any other person (under a franchise, license, or otherwise) rights to any brand name under which any lodging facility or health care facility is operated.

Subparagraph (B) shall not apply to rights provided to an eligible independent contractor to operate or manage a lodging facility if such rights are held by such corporation as a franchise, licensee, or in a similar capacity and such lodging facility is operated by such corporation or is leased to such corporation from the real estate investment trust.

(C) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of paragraph (3)—

(1) LODGING FACILITY.—The term ‘lodging facility’ has the meaning given to such term by paragraph (4).

(2) HEALTH CARE FACILITY.—The term ‘health care facility’ has the meaning given to such term by section 856(d)(2)(D)."

SEC. 1024. LIMITATION ON EARNINGS STRIPPING.—Paragraph (3) of section 163(j)(relating to limitation on deduction for interest on certain indebtedness) is amended by striking ‘‘and’’ at the end of subparagraph (A)(i), by striking ‘‘on or after the date when the period referred to in subparagraph (A)(i) expires’’ and inserting ‘‘on or after the date when the period referred to in subparagraph (A)(i) expires and at the end of the following new subparagraph—

(i) interest paid or accrued (directly or indirectly) by a taxable REIT subsidiary (as defined in section 856(i)(1)) of a real estate investment trust to such trust.’’

SEC. 1025. 100 PERCENT TAX ON IMPROPRIETY-ALLOCATED AMOUNTS.—(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (b) of section 857 (relating to method of taxation of real estate investment trusts and holders of share certificates of beneficial interest) is amended by redesignating paragraphs (7) and (8) as paragraphs (9) and (10), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (8) the following new paragraph:

‘‘(7) INCOME FROM REDETERMINED RENTS, REDETERMINED DEDUCTIONS, AND EXCESS INTEREST.—

(A) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—There is hereby imposed on each taxable year of the real estate investment trust a tax equal to 100 percent of redetermined rents, redetermined deductions, and excess interest.

(B) RENDETERMINED RENTS.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘renetermined rents’ means rents from real estate investment trusts and holders of share certificates of beneficial interest in a taxable REIT subsidiary, and tenants, except for amounts paid pursuant to leases in effect on July 12, 1999 or pursuant to a binding contract in effect on such date and at all times thereafter.

(ii) EXCEPTION FOR COMPARED PRICED SERVICES.—Clause (i) shall not apply to amounts received directly or indirectly by a real estate investment trust for services described in paragraph (1) or (2) of section 856(d)."

(iii) EXCEPTION FOR MINIMUM AMOUNTS.—Clause (i) shall not apply to amounts described in section 856(d)(7) with respect to such property.

(iv) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN SEPARATELY CHARGED SERVICES.—Clause (i) shall not apply to any service rendered by a taxable REIT subsidiary of a real estate investment trust to a tenant of such trust.

(v) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN SEPARATELY CHARGED SERVICES.—Clause (i) shall not apply to any service rendered by a taxable REIT subsidiary of a real estate investment trust to a tenant of such trust if—

(I) the rent paid to the trust by tenants (leasing at least 25 percent of the net leasable space in the trust’s property) who are not receiving such service from such subsidiary is substantially comparable to the charge for such service rendered to tenants referred to in subsection (I).

(II) the charge for such service from such subsidiary is separately stated.

(III) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN SERVICES BASED ON SUBSIDIARY’S INCOME FROM THE SERVICES.—Clause (i) shall not apply to any service rendered by a taxable REIT subsidiary of a real estate investment trust to a tenant of such trust if the gross income of such subsidiary from such services is not less than 150 percent of such subsidiary’s direct cost in furnishing or rendering the service.
EXCEPTIONS GRANTED BY SECRETARY.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

(b) TRANSITIONAL RULES RELATED TO SECTION 1021.—

(1) EXISTING ARRANGEMENTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the amendment made by section 1021 shall not apply to a real estate investment trust with respect to—

(i) securities of a corporation held directly or indirectly by such trust on July 12, 1999;

(ii) securities of a corporation held by an entity on July 12, 1999, if such trust acquires control of such entity pursuant to a written binding contract in effect on such date and at all times thereafter before such acquisition;

(iii) securities received by such trust (or a successor) in exchange for, or with respect to, securities described in clause (i) or (ii) in a transaction in which gain or loss is not recognized, and

(iv) securities acquired directly or indirectly by such trust as part of a reorganization (as defined in section 382(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) with respect to such trust if such securities are described in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) with respect to any other real estate investment trust.

Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, such securities shall be taken into account in determining whether such trust fails to meet the requirements applicable to real estate investment trusts. Such elections (as amended by such amendments) if such trust acquires or receives securities to which the preceding sentence does not apply.

(B) NEW TRADE OR PREVIOUSLY HELD SUBSTANTIAL NEW ASSETS.—Subparagraph (A) shall cease to apply to securities of a corporation as of the first day after July 12, 1999, on which such corporation is substantially new.
SEC. 1091. RECOVERY PERIOD FOR DEPRECIATION OF CERTAIN LEASEHOLD IMPROVEMENTS.

(b) QUALIFIED LEASEHOLD IMPROVEMENT PROPERTY.—Subsection (e) of section 168 is amended by inserting at the end the following new clause:

“(6) QUALIFIED LEASEHOLD IMPROVEMENT PROPERTY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘qualified leasehold improvement property’ means any improvement to an interior portion of a building which is nonresidential real property if—

(i) such improvement is made under or pursuant to a lease (as defined in subsection (k)(7)) at any time, a beneficial interest in a Settlement Trust ending after December 31, 1999, and

(ii) by reason of a contribution to the Settlement Trust made by reason of a contribution to the Settlement Trust made during such taxable year, and

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to qualified leasehold improvement property placed in service after December 31, 1999.

TITLE XI—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 1101. REPEAL OF CERTAIN MOTOR FUEL EXCISE TAXES ON RAILROADS AND INLAND WATERWAY TRANSPORTATION.

(a) REPEAL OF 4.3-CENT MOTOR FUEL EXCISE TAXES ON RAILROADS AND INLAND WATERWAY TRANSPORTATION WHICH REMAIN IN GENERAL FUND.—

(1) TAXES ON TRAINS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (A) of section 4044(a)(1) is amended by inserting “a diesel-powered train” each place it appears and by striking “or train”.

(B) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(i) Subparagraph (C) of section 4044(b)(1) is amended by striking clause (ii) and by redesignating clause (iii) as clause (ii).

(ii) Subparagraph (C) of section 4044(b)(1) is amended by striking all that follows “section 6421(e)(2)” and inserting a period.

(iii) Paragraph (3) of section 4083(a) is amended by striking “or a diesel-powered train”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to the 1st taxable year described in subparagraph (B)(i) and all subsequent taxable years, and

(ii) may not be revoked once it is made.

(3) SPECIAL RULES WHERE TRANSFER RESTRICTIONS MODIFIED.—

(A) TRANSFER OF BENEFICIAL INTERESTS.—If, at any time, a beneficial interest in a Settlement Trust may be disposed of in a manner which would not be permitted by section 7(h) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1696(h)) if the interest were Settlement Common Stock—

(i) no election may be made under paragraph (2)(A) with respect to such trust, and

(ii) if an election under paragraph (2)(A) is in effect as of such time—

(I) such election is revoked as of the 1st day of the taxable year following the taxable year in which such disposition is first permitted, and

(II) there is hereby imposed on such trust a tax equal to the product of the fair market value of the assets held by the trust as of the close of the taxable year in which such disposition was first permitted and the highest rate of tax under subchapter S.

The tax imposed by clause (II) shall be in lieu of any other tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year.
(B) STOCK IN CORPORATION.—If—

(i) the Settlement Common Stock in any Native Corporation which transferred assets to a Settlement Trust making an election under paragraph (2)(A) may be disposed of in a manner not permitted by section 7(h) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1606(h)), and

(ii) at any time after such disposition of stock is first permitted, such corporation transfers assets to such trust, clause (ii) of subparagraph (A) shall be applied to such trust on and after the date of the transfer in the same manner as if the trust permitted dispositions of beneficial interests in the trust in a manner not permitted by such section 7(h).

(C) ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.—For purposes of subsection (F), any tax imposed by subparagraph (A) shall be treated as an excise tax with respect to which the deficiency procedures of such subtitle apply.

(4) DISTRIBUTION REQUIREMENT ON ELECTING SETTLEMENT TRUST.

(A) IN GENERAL.—If an election is in effect under paragraph (2) for any taxable year, a Settlement Trust shall not distribute in cash to any beneficiary any income as provided under subchapter J.

(B) TAX IMPOSED IF INSUFFICIENT DISTRIBUTION.—If a Settlement Trust fails to meet the distribution requirement of subparagraph (A) for any taxable year, then, notwithstanding subsection (c)(29), a tax shall be imposed on the trust under section 651 or 661 in an amount equal to the excess of its adjusted taxable income for such taxable year.

(5) ADJUSTED TAXABLE INCOME.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘adjusted taxable income’ means taxable income determined under section 61(b) without regard to any deduction under section 651 or 661.

(6) RECONSTRUCTION OF DISTRIBUTIONS TO BENEFICIARIES.

(A) ELECTING TRUST.—If an election is in effect under paragraph (2) for any taxable year, any distribution to a beneficiary shall be included in gross income of the beneficiary as or subject to withholding under this subtitle.

(B) NON-ELECTING TRUSTS.—Any distribution to a beneficiary from a Settlement Trust not described in subparagraph (A) shall be included in income as provided under subchapter J.

(C) EARNINGS AND PROFITS.—The earnings and profits of any Native Corporation making a contribution to a Settlement Trust shall not be reduced on account thereof at the time of such contribution, but such earnings and profits shall be reduced up to the amount of such contribution as distributions are thereafter made by the Settlement Trust which exceed the sum of—

(i) such Trust’s total undistributed net income for all prior years during which an election under paragraph (2) is in effect, and

(ii) such Trust’s distributable net income.

(7) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

(A) NATIVE CORPORATION.—The term ‘Native Corporation’ has the meaning given such term by section 3(m) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1620(m)).

(B) SETTLEMENT TRUST.—The term ‘Settlement Trust’ means a trust which constitutes a Settlement Trust under section 1(e) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1629(e)).

(c) WITHHOLDING ON DISTRIBUTIONS BY ELECTING ANCSA SETTLEMENT TRUSTS.—Section 6041 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

(1) TAX WITHHOLDING ON DISTRIBUTIONS BY ELECTING ANCSA SETTLEMENT TRUSTS.

(A) IN GENERAL.—Any Settlement Trust (as defined in section 501(p)(6)(B)) which is exempt from income tax under section 501(c)(29) (in this subsection referred to as an ‘electing trust’) and which makes a payment to any beneficiary shall deduct and withhold from such payment a tax in an amount equal to such payment’s proportionate share of the tax imposed by section 6041 on such payment.

(B) EXCEPTION.—The tax imposed by paragraph (1) shall not apply to any payment to the extent that such payment, when annualized, does not exceed an amount equal to the amount in effect under section 602(a)(1)(A)(i) for taxable years beginning in the calendar year in which an election is in effect.

(C) ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.—For purposes of paragraph (1), a Settlement Trust making an election under section 1(e) on an amount of taxable income as provided under subchapter J shall be treated as if the trust permitted dispositions of beneficial interests in the trust in a manner not permitted by such section 7(h).

(2) AMOUNT OF DEDUCTIBLE INTEREST.—With respect to any payment, the amount of tax imposed under paragraph (1) shall be taken into account in effectuating any distribution under section 651 or 661.

(3) AMOUNT OF DEDUCTIBLE INTEREST.—The amount of tax deductible by a non-electing trust is, for purposes of section 651, determined under paragraph (2).

(4) AMOUNT DETERMINED UNDER PARAGRAPH (2).—(A) IN GENERAL.—If—

(i) the amount of taxable income of the trust during the 65-day period following the close of any taxable year as made on the last day of such taxable year is less than $5 per person, such distribution (or portion) may not be taken into account under this paragraph for any other taxable year.

(ii) the total amount of such distributions as determined under paragraph (2) is greater than $5 per person, such distribution (or portion) may not be treated as an excise tax with respect to which the deficiency procedures of such subtitle apply.

(B) NON-ELECTING TRUSTS.—Any distribution to a beneficiary from a Settlement Trust not described in subparagraph (A) shall be included in gross income of the beneficiary as or subject to withholding under this subtitle.

(5) ELECTING ANCSA SETTLEMENT TRUSTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—If—

(i) the Settlement Trust is an electing trust, (ii) the amount determined under paragraph (5)(B), and (iii) the filing of any return or statement required by this section shall apply to taxable years of the Settlement Trust making an election under such section for the taxable year in which an election is in effect, and

(B) the amount determined under paragraph (2).

(6) SPECIFIC RULE FOR CORPORATIONS WITH LONG-TERM UNEXPOSED CREDITS.—(A) IN GENERAL.—If—

(i) a corporation (as defined in section 56(g)) applies for the long-term unused minimum tax credit for a taxable year, and

(ii) no credit would be allocable under this section for the taxable year by reason of paragraph (1), then there shall be allowed a credit under subsection (a) for the taxable year in the amount determined under subparagraph (B).

(B) AMOUNT OF CREDIT FOR Purposes of subparagraph (A), the amount of the credit shall be equal to the least of the following for the taxable year:

(i) The long-term unused minimum tax credit.

(ii) 50 percent of the taxpayer’s tentative minimum tax.

(iii) The excess (if any) of the amount under paragraph (1)(B) over the amount under paragraph (1)(A).

(C) LONG-TERM UNUSED MINIMUM TAX CREDIT.—For purposes of subparagraph—

(i) IN GENERAL.—The long-term unused minimum tax credit for any taxable year is the portion of the minimum tax credit determined under subsection (b) attributable to the net long-term unused minimum tax for taxable years beginning after August 2, 1999 and ending before the 5th taxable year immediately preceding the taxable year for which determination is being made.

(ii) FIRST-IN, FIRST-OUT ORDERING RULE.—For purposes of clause (i), credits shall be treated as allowed under subsection (a) on a first-in, first-out basis.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 53(c)(1) (as in effect before the amendment made by subsection (a)) is amended—

(1) by striking ‘‘The’’ and inserting the following:

(2) by redesigning paragraphs (1) and (2) as subparagraphs (A) and (B), respectively.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2002.

SEC. 1104. 5-YEAR NET OPERATING LOSS CARRYBACK FOR LOSSES ATTRIB-UTABLE TO OPERATING MINERAL IN-TERESTS OF INDEPENDENT OIL AND GAS PRODUCERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 172(b) (relating to years to which loss may be carried back) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

(H) LOSSES ON OPERATING MINERAL INTER-

ESTS OF INDEPENDENT OIL AND GAS PRODUCERS.

In the case of a taxpayer—

(i) which has an eligible oil and gas loss (as defined in subsection (j)) for a taxable year, and

(ii) which is not an integrated oil company (as defined in section 29(b)(4)), such eligible oil and gas loss shall be a net operating loss carryback to each of the 5 taxable years preceding the taxable year of such loss.

(b) ELIGIBLE OIL AND GAS LOSS.—Section 172 is amended by redesignating subsection (i) as subsection (k) and by inserting after subsection (i) the following new subsection:

(1) ELIGIBLE OIL AND GAS LOSS.—For purposes of this section—

(i) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘eligible oil and gas loss’ means the lesser of—

(A) the amount which would be the net operating loss for the taxable year if only income and deductions attributable to operating mineral interests (as defined in section 614(d) in oil and gas wells are taken into account, or

(B) the amount of the net operating loss for such taxable year.

(2) COORDINATION WITH SUBSECTION (B)(2).—For Purposes of applying subsection (b)(2), an eligible oil and gas loss for any taxable year shall be treated in a manner similar to the manner in which a specified liability loss is treated.

(3) AMOUNT OF CREDIT.—Any taxpayer entitled to a 5-year carryback under subsection (b)(1)(H) from any loss year may elect to have the carryback period with respect to such loss year determined without regard to subsection (b)(1)(H).

(c) Effective Date.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to losses for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1999.

(a) In general.—Paragraph (6) of section 542(c) (defining personal holding company) is amended—

(1) by striking “rents,” in subparagraph (B), and

(2) by adding “and” at the end of subparagraph (B).

(b) Exception for lending or finance companies determined on affiliated group basis.—Subsection (d) of section 542 is amended by striking paragraphs (C), (D), and (E) and by redesignating paragraph (F) as paragraph (C).

SEC. 1115. TAX-EXEMPT FINANCING OF QUALIFIED HIGHWAY INFRASTRUCTURE PROJECTS.

(a) Treatment as exempt facility bond.—A bond described in subsection (b) shall be treated as described in section 141(c)(1)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, except that—

(1) section 146 of such Code shall not apply to such bond, and

(2) section 141(c)(1) of such Code shall be applied by substituting “any portion of” for “25 percent or more”.

(b) Bond described.—

(1) In general.—A bond is described in this subsection if such bond is issued after December 31, 1999, and part of an issue—

(A) 95 percent or more of the net proceeds of which are to be used to finance a qualified highway infrastructure project, and

(B) to which there has been allocated a portion of the allocation to the project under paragraph (2) of section 147(c) of such Code.

(2) Qualified highway infrastructure project.—

(A) In general.—A qualified highway infrastructure project shall be treated as meeting the requirements of section 103(b)(1)(B) if—

(i) the aggregate face amount of bonds to be issued in connection with the project is $30,000,000 or less, and

(ii) the requirements of section 103(b)(1)(B) are satisfied with respect to such bonds.

(B) Allocation.—The Secretary of Treasury, in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, shall allocate the amount described in clause (i) among the eligible pilot projects designated under subparagraph (B) of subsection (c).

(c) Effective date.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on January 1, 2012.

SEC. 1116. INCREASED DEDUCTIBILITY OF BUSINESS MEAL EXPENSES FOR INDIVIDUALS SUBJECT TO FEDERAL LIMITATIONS ON HOURS OF SERVICE.

(1) In General.—As provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply to contributions made in taxable years beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) Certain Contributions.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to contributions made to an organization or entity not described in section 45E(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as added by subsection (a), in taxable years beginning after the date that is one year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 1127. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING SAVINGS INCENTIVES.

It is the sense of the Senate that before December 31, 1999, Congress should pass legislation to encourage and incentivize by providing a partial Federal income tax exclusion for income derived from interest and dividends of no less than $400 for married taxpayers and $200 for single taxpayers.

SEC. 1128. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING THE NEED FOR ADDITIONAL FEDERAL FUNDING AND TAX INCENTIVES FOR ENTERPRISE ZONES AND OTHER ENTERPRISE COMMUNITIES AUTHORIZED AND DESIGNATED PURSUANT TO 1993 AND 1996 LAWS.

(a) Findings.—Congress finds that—

(1) under current tax law, small businesses in enterprise zones and other enterprise communities authorized by the 1993 omnibus budget reconciliation bill and enterprise communities authorized by the 1996 tax reduction and working families tax act are not as helpful as it could be for some small businesses because it does not cover their investments in improving the storefront or the building in which they conduct their business;

(2) in many small towns, the local drug store, shoe store, or grocery store doesn’t have much need for new equipment, but it does need to improve the storefront or the interior;

(3) such investments are good for Main Streets across this Nation, our current tax law creates a disincentive to make them by requiring a small business owner to deprecate the costs of the building improvements over 20 years for tax purposes;

(4) legislation to expand the current expensing provision to cover investments in depreciable real property was recently introduced in the Senate with broad bipartisan cosponsorship, including the leaders of the Republican and Democratic parties;

(5) this proposal is also strongly supported by small business-oriented trade groups, including the National Federation of Independent Business, the Small Business Legislative Council, and the National Association of Realtors;
