The mother presents herself, on the third day of the cervix being dilated, to the abortionist. The abortionist uses an ultrasound to examine the mother and guide the abortionist to insert forceps in through the cervix, up into the uterus.

Those of you who have been involved in the birth of children know—we have six children—babies are usually at that age in a head-down position. They move around, but as they go further in pregnancy, the baby usually has its head in the down position.

They reach up with the forceps and grab the baby by the foot or the leg. Again, this is a 20-week-plus baby. We have plenty of documentation that this has gone on at 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, and even older—but rare as it gets older, I admit that. This is a fully developed baby that would otherwise, if delivered at this week of gestation, be born alive.

They take the baby and grab the leg with the forceps. Then they turn the baby around in the uterus. Many of you are familiar with the term “breech birth.” When you present yourself for delivery of a baby and you are told your baby is in a breech position, bells and whistles go off. Obstetricians get very nervous because there are a lot of difficulties with delivering a baby in a breech position. There are a lot of complications, obviously for the baby, but also for the mother. To deliberately turn a baby into a breech position, by common sense, endangers the mother. Obviously, in abortion it dramatically endangers the baby.

They take the leg, and they pull the baby feet first out of the uterus through the birth canal. All of the baby is delivered except for the head. The entire baby is outside the mother with the exception of the baby's head. Again, we get back to the question, Is this an abortion or is this infanticide?

The reason this debate is so crucial is that it is where worlds intersect. It is the line we are going to draw. There are a lot of people who are for abortion rights who say: Look, the line is, the baby is inside the mother; the mother can abort the baby, period. And they say: But yes, obviously, when the baby is outside the mother, you cannot kill the baby.

This is where the worlds intersect because we have a situation where the baby is almost outside the mother. This baby would be born alive because this procedure occurs after 20 weeks. What the abortionist does is deliver the baby, all but the head. Why? Because the head is the largest part of the body at that age, so the most difficult to deliver.

There is also some question that if the baby comes out head first and once the head is delivered, will the Constitution treat it differently, if the head comes out first as opposed to the feet coming out first? Some have argued that once the baby's head is through the cervix, that is birth, so maybe they are under constitutional rights.

Do you see how fuzzy this line is, and do you see why some on both sides of this issue believe it is important to draw the line so we do not get into this rather difficult situation?

The baby is delivered, all but the head. The abortionist then does a barbaric thing. I even think those who support this procedure would argue and would agree with me that this is barbaric. This is a living baby, a human being. It is delivered outside of the mother. Its arms, its legs, its torso are outside the mother. The doctor, because they cannot see; it is a blind procedure—the baby is face down—feels up the spine to the base of the neck, base of the skull, top of the neck, finds the point at the bottom of the base of the skull, takes a pair of scissors, and jams it into the base of the baby's skull.

I do not have to tell you, a baby at 20-plus weeks has a fully developed—I should not say fully—has a developed nervous system and feels pain, acutely some have suggested, more than you would feel pain. A medical doctor takes a pair of scissors and jabs the baby in the skull.

Nurse Brenda Shafer, who testified before the Senate and House Judiciary Committees, described the reaction of one of the babies when this occurred. The baby threw out its arms and legs. If you ever held a little baby and you gently bounced them in your arms, they stick out their arms because they are not sure, they lose their equilibrium. She said it was just like that. The little baby lost its equilibrium and then fell down.

The baby is dead now. The abortionist has killed the baby that was 3 inches from being protected by the Constitution. Three inches more and everybody in America would say—everybody but a couple of people in Princeton—that baby should no longer be able to be killed. But for those 3 inches, that little baby is allowed to be executed in the most painful, brutal, insensitive, barbaric fashion of which I think any of us have heard.

To add insult to injury—let me put it a different way. To add insult to execution, they take the suction catheter, insert it in the hole made by the scissors, and they suction out the baby's brains. And a baby's skull is soft. It has those plates that move, grow, allow the baby's head to expand. The baby's head just collapses as a result of the suction. And then this otherwise beautiful, healthy, normal baby—that would otherwise be born alive and, in a vast majority of the numbers, particularly after 22 weeks, would not only be born alive but then be viable outside the mother—is then extracted completely from the womb.

If you described what I just described as a procedure done on any human being in some foreign country as a way of torture, the American public would be aghast, they would be outraged, outraged that such barbarism could occur in a civilized country. But this barbarism occurs every single day in America. Thousands of times a year, little babies are killed in this brutal fashion. Why? I will get to that in a minute.

Who performs this? And where, by the way? Is this performed in hospitals? The answer to that is no. No hospital would do an abortion such as this. Is this in the medical literature? The answer is no. It is not taught in any medical school. It is not taught anywhere except by the developer and another person from Ohio who developed this procedure.

Is the person who developed this abortion technique a well-known obstetrician, someone who is board certified, someone who is an expert in internal fetal medicine? No. No. Not only is this person not board certified, not only is this person not an expert in internal fetal medicine, this person is not even an obstetrician.

The person who developed this procedure was a family practice doctor who, I guess, could not make it saving children so went into the abortion business and developed this procedure, not because this was a procedure that was in the best interest of anybody concerned, except the abortionist, but because this is a much simpler procedure in the sense it takes less time, so you can do more abortions during a day. It takes less time than other late-term abortions, so you can do more of them. And, of course, when you get paid for these, the more you can do, the more money you make.

Why is this procedure done? You will hear arguments today that this procedure is done to protect the life and health of the mother—that is what you will hear: life and health—and another thing which is health related: the future fertility of the mother. We will have a long debate about that. I am not going to take a lot of time in my opening statement about that, but I do want to address it briefly.

No. 1, life. There is a clear life-of-the-mother exception in this bill. If this procedure needs to be used to protect the life of the mother, it can be used. Having said that, the person who developed this procedure, the person who does, from what we know—again, we do not have good information—most of these kinds of procedures, a guy named Dr. Haskell from Ohio, has said under oath in a court of law—in a court of law, under oath—that this procedure is never used to protect the life of the mother.

Under oath, in a court of law, what would seemingly be an admission against his own interest, in one of these suits that challenges the constitutionality of this, he admitted, as, frankly, has everybody else—except a few folks on the other side of the aisle who have it in their mind that somehow this is needed to save the life of the mother—it is never used.

Do you know what we say? Fine. It is never used? We will still put it in the bill. If there is some strange occurrence that no obstetrician I have heard of has come forward with to say needs to be used to protect the life of the mother, it is covered.

Think about this intuitively. This is why the doctor arrived and why everybody who has looked at this issue has arrived at the conclusion that this is never used to protect the life of the mother.

If you had a mother who presents herself in a life-threatening situation, would you give her two pills and say come back in 3 days? You do not have to be an obstetrician to figure this one out, folks. If someone is in a life-threatening situation, you do not give them two pills and say go home and come back in 3 days, and dilate their cervix during that 3-day period.

So the argument that this is somehow used to protect the life of the mother is as bogus as a number of other lies I will go through here in a minute that have been put forward by the other side to stop this procedure from being banned.

Second, health. Again, same doctor, same case. Different question: Is this procedure ever necessary to protect the health of the mother? Again, the abortionist who helped develop the procedure, who uses it more than anybody else, testifying in court, under oath: Is this necessary to protect the health of the mother? Answer: No. No.

But you will see people come to the floor and talk about, oh, how this is absolutely necessary, how this is an important health issue for women. We have over 400 obstetricians, most of them board certified, many of them specialists in maternal-fetal medicine, who have written letters, who have signed documents, including the AMA—which is not a pro-life organization, I might add—who have signed letters saying this is bad medicine; it is never necessary to protect the health of the mother to do this procedure.

Yet people will come down to this floor and say: Well, I can't be for this because I need a health-of-the-mother exception and put up "cases" where this was done and, as a result of this, the mother was able to have more children, was able to do other things; and if this procedure were not done, then they would not have this opportunity.

I would not argue that this procedure could result in a positive outcome for the mother's health. Certainly it could. But that is not the question. The question here is, Is it necessary—the answer is, no—to protect the health of the mother or the life of the mother.

And second, is it the best method? Clearly, given what we know about this procedure and its profound implications on who we are as a society, the answer has to be emphatically—I hope from this body, which is so concerned about the consuming problem of violence in our society—I think a group of people who stand up and complain about shootings at Columbine will look at this and say: Wait a minute. If we're saying this kind of brutality is OK, if the Senate and the President of the United States say this kind of brutality of our children is OK, then how in the world can we be aghast when other violence is done to our children?

If we can stand here, with straight faces, and with passion in some cases, and argue that this kind of execution is not only legitimate but preferable, proper, constitutional, necessary, how can we be even the least surprised that young people, looking at what goes on in the world around them—obviously, they get a lot of bad messages from Hollywood and from the media, but they only need to look to the Senate and to this President to get their cue. The cue is violence is OK, as long as there is some purpose to be served. And the purpose is to make sure we don't have a chink in the armor of abortion rights. That is the purpose.

The question is, Why are they fighting this so hard? What is really the problem? Why are they fighting what is an abomination? It is uncomfortable to talk about it. I am sure for those listening it is very difficult to listen. This is not a pleasant subject. Why would you want to get up year after year and fight this issue? What is the great cause at stake that we have to draw the line in the sand?

They will argue it is the health of the mother. It is not true. That has never stopped them from arguing that. But when you have the people who perform the abortions saying under oath that it is not true, it is darn hard to come here and say this is why we want to do it, and for those of us who have to listen to it, to say: Is this really what is at stake? Is this really the issue? Or is there something else going on? Is there an agenda?

I can tell you what the agenda is on our side. The agenda is very simple. At a time when we are faced with senseless, irrational violence, with a culture that is insensitive to life and promotes death through our music, through videos, just a little beacon of hope, a little grain of sand of affirmation that life is, in fact, something to be cherished, not to be brutalized; that there are lines in our society that we can't blur, that we shouldn't cross, because when we do that, we throw in doubt, for millions of children and adults, the issue of, well, maybe this isn't so wrong. We cloud the issue, the issue of life for children that are 3 inches away from constitutional protection. Don't you think that is a good place to draw the line? Don't you think that is a reasonable place to say, OK, enough is enough?

No one is standing here arguing overturning Roe v. Wade. In fact, I will make the argument, this is legitimate under Roe v. Wade. There is nothing here that will, even if it goes to the Court, overturn Roe v. Wade. It is not our intention with this act.

This act is an attempt, and I would argue a feeble attempt—many of you listening were around 30, 40 years ago. Could you imagine walking onto the Senate floor 40 years ago, turning on the television and seeing Walter Cronkite report on the debate on the Senate floor about whether this should be legal in America? Can you imagine 40 years ago that we would even have a debate in the Senate about whether this would be allowed in America?

There isn't a person in the Senate who, 40 years ago, would have said this is OK. They would have been appalled. Well, maybe in Nazi Germany or maybe in the Soviet Union, but in America, this? No. But how far we have come. How much more civilized we have become. How cultured we have become that now 40 years hence we can have these kinds of rational debates and people can come to the floor of the Senate and say that thrusting a pair of scissors in the base of the skull of a little baby is OK. How far we have come. How humanity has grown and developed. How sophisticated we are that we can find precise legal arguments that will weave us through this web of destruction and say, but it is OK. Americans go to sleep at night knowing that thousands of children, almost born, inches from reaching toward that constitutional protection, can be executed. We are all better for it. We are better as a society for this.

They will not say that, but underneath the argument is this: This being legal is better for America. When people come and cast their votes, you will have to cast the vote saying that allowing this to occur in America is better for us. It is preferable in the United States of America that this occurs. We want this to continue. We believe this is right. We believe this is just. We believe this is humane. We believe this is in the best spirit of America, liberty, and freedom.

How twisted, how twisted we have become. How we contort ourselves to find that path through rights to allow this to be the best that we are in America. We are better than that. This country stands for higher ideals and principles than that. A majority of the Senate will agree with me. A majority of the House will agree with me, a majority of Americans. But that is not enough.

So this contorted construction of freedom will continue to be legal. Can you envision our Founding Fathers with these charts in front of them saying: This is the product of liberty? This is the product of the high ideals that we suffered through in revolutionary, civil, and major world wars to preserve? This is what it has come to? This is the personification of liberty in America today? It is no wonder we are concerned when we tuck our children into bed at night and we see what kind of world is ahead of them. How much more will we be able to twist freedom and liberty to destroy their true freedoms? I tuck five little ones in bed every night. I wonder, I wonder what is in store for them, if we continue as the Senate, the greatest deliberative body in the world, to allow this wanton destruction of the most vulnerable in our society. Where are we headed?

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mrs. BOXER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, for those who have followed this debate since it opened about an hour ago, you have heard that those of us who will fight on the floor of the Senate for moms, for our daughters, for their health, for their lives, are somehow evil and bad people. You have heard in this debate, in some of the most inflammatory language, which I think is, in essence, very dangerous for this country, that those of us who stand up to fight to make sure that every child is a wanted child, that every child who comes into this world is wanted and loved, that every woman has a right to be respected—you have heard that somehow we want to bring violence to children. You have heard the word “executioners” relating to doctors who take an oath “to do no harm,” who save lives, who bring babies into the world. Executioners. I am stunned by the tenor of the debate. I am troubled by the tenor of the debate.

The majority leader was sent a letter by a number of groups asking him to please not bring this issue up this week, could he wait a week. They noted that on Saturday, we will have the 1-year anniversary of the assassination of a doctor, Dr. Barnett Slepian, who was murdered in his home, through a window, by a coward who took this man from his family. The majority leader was told there have been five sniper attacks on U.S. and Canadian physicians who performed abortions since 1994. All of those victims were shot in their homes by a hidden sniper who used a long-range rifle. Dr. Slepian was killed, and three other physicians were seriously wounded in these attacks—for making sure that women had their legal rights protected and their health protected.

I think it is sad that we would have this debate, with the most inflammatory language I have ever heard on the Senate floor to date. I know the FBI and the Attorney General are going to be ever more vigilant because of this debate. I know that and I am glad about that. It is very hard for me to imagine that we could not have put this off a week. Here we are. And instead of having a debate that should be based on the merits of the discussion, it has been inflamed.

Yesterday, I said if 100 doctors walked into the Senate and sat down in our chairs to practice being Senators, they would be arrested and dragged out of here. Yet here we are in the Senate—100 of us, and not one of us an obstetrician, not one of us a gynecologist—deciding what procedures should or should not be used, and under what circumstances, in a matter that should be left to the medical profession, left to the families of this country, left to loving moms and dads. So here we are practicing medicine in the Senate and not even doing a very good job of it, I might say, if you listen to the physicians who have written to us on this matter.

I am going to place into the RECORD several letters from organizations consisting of physicians. Here is one from the Society of Physicians for Reproductive Choice and Health—the people my colleague has called “executioners.”

Ladies and gentlemen of the Senate and of this country, these are the people who bring our children into the world. These are the people who save their lives when they are hurt. These are the people we run to when they have to go to an emergency room.

This is the statement:

In what it claims as a tribute to mothers, the United States Senate today will vote on a bill criminalizing a procedure . . .

. . . legislators supporting this ban are not celebrating mothers—but, in fact, are dishonoring and condemning motherhood by placing pregnant women at greater risk for infertility and death.

These are the people to whom we turn when we are sick, and they are telling us not to pass the SANTORUM bill. They bring back the days before 1973:

Prior to abortion's legalization in 1973, the leading cause of maternal death in this nation was illegal abortion. As Congress attempts to ban abortion, procedure by procedure, more and more pregnant women will die. As physicians concerned about the health and lives of our women patients, we believe this is a shameful celebration of motherhood.

I ask unanimous consent that letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT ON SANTORUM BILL (H.R. 1122/S. 6) BANNING A PROCEDURE KNOWN MEDICALLY AS DILATATION AND EXTRACTION, MAY 20, 1997

In what it claims is a tribute to mothers, the United States Senate today will vote on a bill criminalizing a procedure known medically as dilatation and extraction. Ironically, legislators supporting this ban are not celebrating mothers—but, in fact, are dishonoring and condemning motherhood by placing pregnant women at greater risk for infertility and death.

Congressional supporters of this ban are hiding from women and their families the true consequences of this bill: it makes unavailable to physicians and their women patients a safer, less risky medical option during health- and life-threatening events that can occur during pregnancy. Women, their families and their physicians must be alarmed by Congressional plans to deny a medical option that preserves women's health and lives.

Contrary to popular belief, it already is illegal to perform a third trimester abortion on a healthy mother carrying a healthy fetus. Abortion opponents who present graphics of darling, full-developed babies being aborted are gravely misleading and misinforming the public and policymakers.

Opponent admit these graphics are false, but continue to use them anyway.

Annually, 300 to 600 third trimester post-viability pregnancies are terminated legally for specific medical complications that can develop during the pregnancy's course. These conditions pose severe health and life threats to the women—including infertility and death. When maternal complications develop, these pregnancies are terminated only after attempts are made to deliver the fetus safely while preserving the health and life of the mother. Decisions to terminate pregnancy at this stage are not considered by one physician alone. In fact physicians and their patients seek second and third medical opinions.

Some severe complications that can affect pregnancy include; The development of cancer during pregnancy; severe pre-eclampsia (toxemia) accompanied by kidney or liver failure; uncontrollable health failure; long-standing insulin dependent diabetes causing declining renal kidney function; Lou Gehrig's disease and other conditions causing respiratory failure; or, severe hypertension (high blood pressure) diseases causing maternal organ failure and maternal death.

The severity of these complications may make labor or caesarean section fatal.

Approximately one percent of all legal abortions occur late in the second trimester before fetal viability. Some are performed on women facing medical complications described earlier. Other women carry fetuses with serious genetic or developmental anomalies, including abnormal fetal kidneys, heart and brains—complications not usually detected until the second trimester.

Legal late second trimester abortions also are performed on women who, lacking health insurance and access to healthcare facilities, are unaware they are pregnant or unable to terminate the pregnancy earlier. Some women with irregular menstrual cycles may be unaware of their pregnancy. For some of these women, dilatation and extraction is the safest medical option because the fetal head is disproportionately large and trapped in the dilated cervix during delivery.

Banning dilatation and extraction will force competent physicians to choose riskier medical options that increase danger to patients. For women, these options are lengthy and painful, including the placement of surgical instruments into the uterus, increasing the risk of uterine perforation and infertility. Another option uses medication to induce labor, increasing the risk of maternal death from blood clotting failure and hemorrhage.

Prior to abortion's legalization in 1973, the leading cause of maternal death in this nation was illegal abortion. As Congress attempts to ban abortion, procedure by procedure, more and more pregnant women will die. As physicians concerned about the health and lives of our women patients, we believe this is a shameful celebration of motherhood.

Physicians for Reproductive Choice and Health oppose the Santorum Bill (H.R. 1122/S.6).

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, we have a letter from the executive vice president of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists. These are the men and women who bring life into the world. These are the men and women who deliver our babies. I find it interesting when the Senator from Pennsylvania talks about breach births—I had a breach birth; I don't think he ever did, and I know what it is. I know what the risks are. I am a mother of two beautiful children. I am a grandmother of one beautiful grandson, and I tuck him in and I read him stories and I love him. I want him to grow up in a world where families are respected, where physicians are respected, where no one stands up on the floor of the Senate and calls a physician an executioner. I don't think that is a good country. I don't think that is respect. I don't think that brings healing to this issue.

The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists said:

[This bill] is vague and broad. . . . It fails to use recognized medical terminology and fails to define explicitly the prohibited medical techniques it criminalizes.

That is an important point. Bills just like this one have been ruled unconstitutional 20 times. One of those decisions was in the State of Arkansas, and I am going to share those decisions with you because I think it is important. So many of us say: local control, let the States decide.

The States have passed these laws, and not one of them yet has been proven constitutional or declared constitutional. But they have been declared unconstitutional because of what the doctors are saying—the language in this bill is so vague. And the language in all those bills is that they would, in fact, outlaw all abortion at any particular time during the pregnancy.

So when my colleague from Pennsylvania says, well, we don't want to overturn Roe v. Wade—and perhaps we will have a chance to vote on that as well—but when he says that, that is not what the courts are saying. The courts are saying his law does, in fact, make all abortions illegal and would criminalize abortion.

I ask unanimous consent that this letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AMERICAN COLLEGE OF OBSTETRICIANS AND GYNECOLOGISTS, WOMEN'S HEALTH CARE PHYSICIANS,

Washington, DC, October 7, 1999.

Hon. THOMAS DASCHLE,
Minority Leader, U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DASCHLE: The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG), an organization representing 40,000 physicians dedicated to improving women's health, continues to oppose S. 928, the "Partial Birth Abortion Ban Act of 1999." ACOG urges the Senate to reject this legislation.

ACOG believes that S. 928, as amended, continues to represent an inappropriate, ill advised and dangerous intervention into medical decision-making. The amended bill still fails to include an exception for the protection for the health of the woman.

Further, the bill violates a fundamental principle at the very heart of the doctor-patient relationship: that the doctor, in consultation with the patient, based on that patient's individual circumstances, must choose the most appropriate method of care for the patient. This bill removes decision-making about medical appropriateness from the physician and the patient.

S. 928 is vague and broad, with the potential to restrict other techniques in obstetrics and gynecology. It fails to use recognized medical terminology and fails to define explicitly the prohibited medical techniques it criminalizes. In the most recent court action, the Eighth US Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the "partial birth" abortion laws in three states were unconstitutionally vague.

Moreover, the ban applies to all stages of pregnancy. It would have a chilling effect on medical behavior and decision-making, with the potential to outlaw techniques that are critical to the lives and health of American women. Chief Judge Richard Arnold wrote in the Eighth Circuit decision that, "Such a prohibition places an undue burden on the right of women to choose whether to have an abortion."

Sincerely,

RALPH W. HALE, MD,
Executive Vice President.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, there is a letter from the American Medical Women's Association.

Are these executioners, too? They work in the medical field. They say they are gravely concerned with governmental attempts to legislate medical decisionmaking through measures that do not protect a woman's physical and mental health, including future fertility, or fail to consider other pertinent issues such as fetal abnormality. And they strongly oppose governmental efforts to interfere with physician-patient autonomy.

I ask unanimous consent that this letter printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF THE AMERICAN MEDICAL WOMEN'S ASSOCIATION ON ABORTION LEGISLATION IN THE 105TH CONGRESS

ALEXANDRIA, VA (MAY 20, 1997).—The American Medical Women's Association, "is committed to protecting the reproductive rights of American women and has opposed any legislative intervention for medical and or surgical care decisions," says current AMWA President Debra R. Judelson, MD. This week, AMWA reiterated its opposition to H.R. 1122 and S. 6, which seek to ban a particular medical procedure.

It is the opinion of AMWA's Executive Committee that legislative efforts to regulate abortion have been flawed. Concerns in the following areas have prevented AMWA from taking a position on recent legislative efforts focusing on abortion in the 105th Congress.

AMWA is gravely concerned with governmental attempts to legislate medical decisionmaking through measures that do not protect a woman's physical and mental health, including future fertility, or fail to consider other pertinent issues, such as fetal abnormalities. Physicians and their patients base their decisions on the best available information at the time, often in emergency situations. AMWA strongly opposes governmental efforts to interfere with physician-patient autonomy.

It is irresponsible to legislate a particular test of viability without recognition that viability cannot always be reliably determined. Length of gestation is not the sole measure of viability because fetal dating is an inexact science.

AMWA resolutely opposes the levying of civil and criminal penalties for care provided in the best interest of the patient. AMWA strongly supports the principle that medical care decisions be left to the judgment of a woman and her physician without fear of civil action or criminal prosecution.

Any forthcoming legislation will be carefully reviewed by AMWA based on the criteria outlined above, and AMWA will seek to ensure that there is no further erosion of the constitutionally protected rights guaranteed by Roe v. Wade. Says AMWA President Debra R. Judelson, MD, "AMWA firmly believes that physicians, not the President or Congress, should determine appropriate medical options. We cannot and will not support any measures that seek to undermine the ability of physicians to make medical decisions."

AMWA has long supported a woman's right to determine whether to continue or terminate her pregnancy without government restrictions placed on her physician's medical judgment and without spousal or parental interference.

Founded in 1915, the American Medical Women's Association represents more than 10,000 women physicians and medical students and is dedicated to furthering the professional and personal development of its members and promoting women's health.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, the American Nurses Association—are they executioners or are they loving people who choose this field of work because they want to make people well because they have compassion in their hearts—what do they say about this?

They oppose the Santorum bill. They say it is inappropriate for Congress to mandate a course of action for a woman who is already faced with an intensely personal and difficult decision. They represent 2.2 million registered nurses. They ask us to defeat this.

I ask unanimous consent to have this letter printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN NURSES ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, May 20, 1997.

Hon. BARBARA BOXER,
United States Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BOXER: I am writing to reiterate the opposition of the American Nurses Association to H.R. 1122, the "Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act of 1997", which is being considered by the Senate this week. This legislation would impose Federal criminal penalties and provide for civil actions against health care providers who perform certain late-term abortions.

It is the view of the American Nurses Association that this proposal would involve an inappropriate intrusion of the federal government into a therapeutic decision that should be left in the hands of a pregnant woman and her health care provider. ANA has long supported freedom of choice and equitable access of all women to basic health services, including services related to reproductive health. This legislation would impose a significant barrier to those principles. It is inappropriate for Congress to mandate a course of action for a woman who is already faced with an intensely personal and difficult decision.

The American Nurses Association is the only full-service professional organization representing the nation's 2.2 million Registered Nurses through its 53 constituent associations. ANA advances the nursing profession by fostering high standards of nursing practice, promoting the economic and general welfare of nurses in the workplace, projecting a positive and realistic view of nursing, and by lobbying the Congress and regulatory agencies on health care issues affecting nurses and the public.

The American Nurses Association appreciates your work in safeguarding women's access to reproductive health care and respectfully urges members of the Senate to vote against H.R. 1122.

Sincerely,

GERI MARULLO, RN,
Executive Director.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, if someone wants to stand up here on the Senate floor and attack a whole part of our America, and if they want to use cartoons on the floor of the Senate to depict a woman's body, that is up to them. But I ask the American people to be the judge both of the substance of what is happening here, the techniques that have been used, and the inflammatory level of the debate.

I want you to meet a real person. I want to picture a real face—not a cartoon, but a real face—on the floor of this Senate. I want to tell a little bit about her story.

This is Tiffany Benjamin:

My husband and I waited until we established in our careers and could provide the best possible environment for a child. In 1994, we were thrilled with the news that we were expecting a baby. My first five months were joyous months of pregnancy. During a routine checkup my physician performed a standard AFT test. The results were abnormal. So my doctor ordered another test. Unfortunately, this test was also irregular. In my 20th week of pregnancy we discovered that our child had trisomy 13.

In plain English, each cell of her body carried an additional 13th chromosome. Doctors advised that her condition was lethal.

No one could offer us hope. Sadly we determined that the most merciful decision for our child—would be to terminate my pregnancy. Although the years have passed, for us the depth of our loss is vivid in our mind. We are astounded that anyone could believe that this type of decision is made irresponsibly and without a great deal of soul searching and anxiousness. These choices were undoubtedly the most painful decisions of our lives. Please don't compound the pain of other families like ours by taking away our ability to make the difficult choices that only we can make in consultation with our physician. Please reject S. 1692 and protect our families from this dangerous legislation.

Our child in our family—

I ask you to look at Tiffany with her child. Does she look like an executioner to you? Does she look like someone who didn't want to have this child and suddenly woke up and said: I have changed my mind? No. This is a loving woman, a loving family member. She had to have this procedure, and this legislation would stop her from having it.

I want to tell you about another woman, Cindy, a 30-year-old mother of five living in Kansas City who said very proudly that she is a Catholic.

In June of 1998, Cindy noticed a lump on her neck and called her doctor. Within weeks, she found that she had thyroid cancer and, after surgery, began iodine radiation treatment. Contrary to medical protocol, she was not given a pregnancy test prior to the radiation treatment. Cindy's body did not respond to the radiation, and blood results indicated her body still contained the deadly disease. After returning to the hospital for another treatment, her blood was drawn for a pregnancy test, but the staff did not wait for the results; they gave her another iodine radiation pill.

Due to the radioactive iodine in her body, she was placed in an isolation room. No one could enter—not her husband, or her nurses, or her physician.

Two hours later, she received a phone call from her physician telling her they had made a terrible mistake. Her pregnancy test came back positive. She immediately started drinking water because the doctors told her all she could do in an attempt to shield her baby from the radiation was to drink a lot of water.

The next day, a second pregnancy test confirmed the first and a sonogram was ordered. That is when Cindy and her husband learned that not only was she 13 weeks pregnant but she was expecting twins, the twins they had always hoped for.

Imagine the feeling of that family. Within hours, the family learned that their babies would not survive, not grow, not develop. The radiation her babies received was equivalent to the bomb dropped on Hiroshima.

Cindy says:

We decided that termination would be best for our family and our babies. Through our research, our insurance company told us, however, that we were on our own.

And she adds:

You see, as a Federal employee my insurance will not pay for elective abortions.

She says because this abortion was meant to preserve her health, because of the votes in this Congress, she could not get help. She says:

I have five little ones at home who depend on their mommy ever day. I didn't want to have an abortion but I needed one. And the abortion that I had would have clearly been banned by this bill, and I thank God that this bill didn't tie my doctor's hands.

Let me just say that again. This is a woman who is religious. This is a woman who says to us thank God that bill wasn't law, the bill that the Senator from Pennsylvania is fighting so hard to become law. She says thank God it wasn't the law. She says this is clearly an intensely private, torturous decision.

Are proponents willing to tie the hands of both parents and physicians and say to a woman: You must carry your child to term despite the fact that it has been determined the child won't live and your health will be affected?

I have to say that these women who are proud to come forward to help us in a very difficult issue deserve our thanks because here they are being called the worst names in the book, being essentially told that they don't love children, that they don't care about children, when in fact these are loving moms and, in many cases, quite religious.

This is the third time the Republican leadership has brought this bill before the Senate. Again, it is playing doctor without one obstetrician or one gynecologist among us. The obstetricians and the gynecologists say we shouldn't do this. The women who have had this procedure say we shouldn't do it.

We are going to have a lot more debate. I know my colleague from Illinois is here, and he has a very important piece of legislation to offer. But before I give up the floor this time, I want to talk about what has happened in the courts because my colleague from Pennsylvania has made a statement I think that is fairly dismissive of what has actually happened. He says some of the courts have upheld this procedure and some have not.

I will discuss what the courts have done not because I am telling my colleagues to vote against their conscience; if they want to vote for something unconstitutional, that is their right. They ought to hear the arguments made in the 20 States in which this particular procedure has been called unconstitutional.

This chart shows which States have enjoined these bans. I put "partial-birth abortion bans" in quotes because there is no such thing. This is the political terminology. Nearly every court to rule on the merits of an abortion ban since the Senate last voted on the issue has ruled this abortion ban is unconstitutional. These are the States that have so far enjoined this Santorum-like legislation from going into effect: Alaska, Arizona, Arkansas, Florida, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Jersey, Ohio, Rhode Island, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and in Georgia and Alabama there has been limited enforcement.

We have a string of decisions. I will read quotes of judges from these States—and as so many of my colleagues have said, as our President has said, we ought to listen to the States. Let's hear what the State judges are saying when they have overturned these types of bans.

First, from a Federal judge in Arizona:

The term "partial-birth abortion" is not a term found in the medical literature.

Let me repeat that. The judge writes:

The term "partial-birth abortion" is not a term found in the medical literature. The testimony of witnesses at trial indicates that this term is ambiguous and susceptible to different interpretations.

The important point is, when my colleague from Pennsylvania says he only means it to be a handful of procedures, this particular judge, Judge Bilby in Arizona says no, the term is so vaguely worded it could apply to many other abortions, and that essentially would overturn a woman's right to choose.

In Arkansas, Judge Richard Arnold says:

As we shall explain, "partial" delivery occurs as part of other recognized abortion procedures, methods that are concededly constitutionally protected. Under precedents laid out by the Supreme Court, which is our duty to follow, such a prohibition is overbroad and places an undue burden on the right of women to decide whether to have an abortion.

This is a judge in Arkansas saying the Santorum-type language is so broad and the procedure is so broadly explained it could, in fact, apply to any type of abortion. He ruled it unconstitutional.

In Illinois, U.S. District Court Judge Charles Kocoras, said:

First, the statute, as written, has the potential effect of banning the most common and safest abortion procedures.

He looked at the Santorum-like bill and said it also was unconstitutional.

U.S. District Court Judge Heyburn in Kentucky says:

By choosing words having a broader scope, the legislature moved from arguably firm constitutional ground—banning a very limited procedure use for late-term abortions—to a quagmire of constitutional infirmity.

There is a common thread among the judges—by the way, from very conservative areas of our country—who are saying the Santorum-type of ban is so broadly worded it would take away a woman's right to choose even at the early stages of pregnancy.

In Nebraska, Judge Richard Arnold says:

The law refers to "partial-birth abortion" but this term, though widely used by lawmakers and in the popular press, has no fixed medical or legal content.

It would also prohibit in many circumstances the most common method of second trimester abortions . . . under the controlling precedents laid down by court, such a prohibition places an undue burden on the right of women to choose whether to have an abortion.

For colleagues who say vote for Santorum; it doesn't take away a woman's right to choose, we have 20 court decisions that say it does. In certain States, they have stopped performing abortions because the doctor was afraid he would be arrested for performing an early-stage abortion.

In summing up, we were elected to be Senators. We have a lot of work to do. We weren't elected to be the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.

They have their own organization. We should vote down this unconstitutional bill. If we do not—because I know this is political—why else would it be before the Senate? This is politics at its worst. This is the third time the President will veto this bill. We all know we will have the votes to sustain that veto. Why go through this if not for politics?

This is a debate we should not be having right now. It has been, unfortunately, in my view, very divisive so far. I hope we can get back on solid ground. Let Members not call people executioners; let Members not call families unimportant; let Members not demean women, and say the other side says the health of the woman is important. Yes, the health of women, the health of men, the health of families, that should be our paramount concern. We are not physicians. Within the context of the law, Roe v. Wade, which was decided in 1973, let Members make the decision as to what is best for our women, our families, and our children.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I consider my service in the Senate representing the people of Illinois to be the highest honor I have ever been given. I continue to believe it is the very best job in American politics. As I go back to my home State and meet with people who have entrusted me with this responsibility, I literally thank them for giving me this opportunity.

However, this debate may be one of the most painful aspects of serving in the Congress, and specifically in the Senate, because it raises before the Senate an issue which most Senators would rather not look at again. In the course of 17 years, I have voted on this abortion issue countless times. Each time has been a struggle.

I am sure those who are listening to this debate might question what I just said. Don't you get used to it? Isn't it automatic? Don't you just vote the same way you did last time?

That has never been the case for me. I have tried in every instance to be honest about the specific debate that was involved. My views on this issue have changed over the years as I have listened to the debate of those with various positions.

I have come to a position now that I am at peace with personally. Though I know that I am at peace, the people I represent may see differently.

The best I can say in the course of this debate is what I am about to say and what I am about to offer in terms of an amendment which represents my best good-faith effort to deal with a painful issue. This is not like most issues we face in the Senate. I can go home after a week of working most times and people do not have a clue as to what we have even talked about or debated. I can go to family reunions and get-togethers and people do not ask me how did you vote on a certain bill involving grazing rights in the West. It never comes up.

But this issue, the issue of abortion, is one that most Americans have an opinion on because we have been confronted, since the Roe v. Wade decision, with a huge national debate, a very divisive debate as to whether the Supreme Court was correct or incorrect in giving a woman in the United States the right to choose whether to have an abortion procedure.

There are people dug in on both sides of this debate. What I am saying, I am sure, is no surprise to anyone who observes it. There are some who believe that Roe v. Wade was just plain wrong; that the Supreme Court never should have legalized abortion procedures under any circumstances. There are those on the opposite side of the spectrum who believe that Roe v. Wade did not go far enough with respect to a woman's right to choose and her privacy. I think you will find the majority of Americans in between those two groups; struggling, on one hand, I think, to keep abortion safe and legal but, on the other hand, to put restrictions on it which are common sense.

The Senator from Pennsylvania comes before us today with a bill which seeks to address one aspect. He has focused on one particular abortion procedure. It goes by a lot of different names. The common parlance is partial-birth abortion. There are some who say that is just a made-up name for politics; it has nothing to do with medical terminology. But for better or for worse, that is how this debate is characterized, the partial-birth abortion debate, which has been around so many times on this floor and in Congress.

It now has a further shorthand, PBA. I do not think that is fair to the Senator offering the amendment, the Senator from Pennsylvania, nor to the gravity of the issue. This is a serious issue. The Senator from Pennsylvania focuses on this procedure which I will tell you, as I view it, is a gruesome procedure. It is gruesome. I don't know if his description of it is accurate, but if it is close to accurate it is gruesome.

He believes this procedure should be banned at every stage of pregnancy. Let me address that from two perspectives. First, there has been a lot said on the floor already this morning as to whether or not this kind of procedure is ever medically necessary. I am not a doctor. I cannot reach that conclusion on my own. I have to turn to others for advice.

Let me tell you what I did last year, in July. I had just read an article published in the Chicago Tribune in my home State that quoted former Surgeon General Everett Koop. Because of that article and what I read and my respect for him, I sent a letter. My letter was addressed to Dr. Ralph Hale, the executive director of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists here in Washington.

I am going to read the letter because I want you to understand I tried my very best to give an open-ended opportunity for this medical doctor in the specialty of obstetrics and gynecology to tell me his professional opinion. Let me read the letter:

DEAR DR. HALE, enclosed is a commentary that appeared in yesterday's Chicago Tribune. It quotes former Surgeon General C. Everett Koop as saying that "Partial-birth abortion is never medically necessary to protect a mother's health or future fertility."

I am writing to request your College's response to this statement. In the medical judgment of the experts among your members, is it true that partial-birth abortion is never medically necessary to protect a mother's health or future fertility?

As I am sure you know, this is a matter of great concern to many members of Congress including myself, and I would appreciate your timely response to this important question.

I sent that letter on July 28, 1998. I received a reply on August 13, 1998, from Dr. Ralph Hale, executive vice president of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists. When I finish reading it, I will ask it be printed in the RECORD. But I would like to read it in its entirety so there is no doubt I asked an open-ended question of experts in the field, and this is Dr. Hale's reply:

DEAR SENATOR DURBIN: I am writing in response to your July 28th letter in which you asked for the College's response to Dr. Koop's statement that "Partial-birth abortion is never medically necessary to protect a mother's health or future fertility."

The letter went on to say:

The College's position on this is contained in the statement of policy entitled Statement on Intact Dilatation and Extraction. In that statement we say, "Terminating a pregnancy is performed in some circumstances to save the life or preserve the health of the mother." It continues, "A select panel convened by ACOG could identify no circumstances under which this procedure, as defined above, would be the only option to save the life or preserve the health of the woman." Our statement goes on to say, "An intact D & X however, may be the best or most appropriate procedure in a particular circumstance to save the life or preserve the health of a woman, and only the doctor, in consultation with the patient based upon the woman's particular circumstances can make this decision." For this reason, we have consistently opposed "partial-birth abortion" legislation.

It goes to say:

Please find enclosed ACOG's statement on intact D & X. Thank you for seeking the views of the College. As always, we are pleased to work with you.

Sincerely,

RALPH W. HALE, MD,
Executive Vice President.

Mr. SANTORUM. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DURBIN. I yield for the question.

Mr. SANTORUM. I thank the Senator very much for yielding. The reason I am going to ask the question is an article written by two Northwestern health care physicians from Northwestern University in Evanston, IL, who cited the same statement out of the select panel. They went on to say, after they quoted what you quoted in your letter:

However, no specific examples of circumstances under which intact D&X will be the appropriate.

In fact, in subsequent communications with ACOG and others, we have asked, give us one set of medical—any set of medical circumstances where you believe that this "may be—what-ever."

Never have we gotten any circumstance where that was the case. So they say it may be, but no one to date has provided any circumstance, as hypothetical as you want, where, in fact, it would be.

Just to say it may be without giving evidence of what it was, I think my question is—I think the next question to which you hopefully can get an answer, I can't—you say it may be. Give me a for instance. So far, we have not been able to get any for instance.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania. That is a reasonable question.

I would say to him, though, there is clearly, at least, a difference of opinion within the medical community as to medical necessity.

Dr. Koop, whom I respect very much and have worked with on a lot of issues, says: Never. The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists says it is never the only thing you can do, but it may be the most appropriate thing to do for the health of the mother. And then, of course, you go on to say give us some examples. I think that is reasonable.

I ask we continue the debate at least to find out what those examples might be. That is reasonable.

But you have to say at this moment in time there at least is a difference of opinion, based on the letters introduced by the Senator from California, among medical professionals as to whether this is ever medically necessary or the most appropriate thing.

This raises a policy question. When we get to the point where doctors differ about the use of a procedure, is it appropriate, then, for the Senate to decide that we will ban a procedure, a medical procedure? That is what the Santorum amendment does. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania would concede it.

He attempts to ban the use of this procedure. Based on this letter I received from the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, to do so would say to doctors in some circumstances: You may not use the safest procedure for my wife, my daughter, my sister; Congress has banned that procedure. That is where I struggle with what the Senator from Pennsylvania is attempting to do.

I am not the doctor. I will not play one in the Senate. When I rely on doctors' opinions, they are at best divided on the question.

Let me address the second issue in relation to the Santorum legislation, and that is why we are doing this again and again. I do not question the sincerity of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I know his feelings on this subject are heartfelt, but I do question why we continue to bring this same legislation time and time again before the Senate, not because it is not important to the Senator from Pennsylvania and others, but, frankly, we have been getting readings from courts across America that this language he is proposing today is, on its face, unconstitutional.

We are spending our time in a debate over a bill which 19 States have stricken. These States have all tried to model some type of legislation based on his banning this procedure, and time after time, Federal courts have come forward and said, no, this is unconstitutional. The judges making the decisions are not so-called liberal jurists. You will find within their ranks appointees of President Reagan and President Bush, some very conservative jurists who say on its face this is not constitutional.

We took an oath as Members of the Senate to uphold that Constitution. There are times when interpretations can differ as to what that oath means. But in this case, the Santorum legislation before us has consistently been stricken by the courts, I believe, with only one exception, in the United States. Because of that, I have to ask this question, not questioning the Senator's sincerity, but why are we doing this? Why are we engaged in this debate over language which time and time again has been found unconstitutional and enjoined in my home State of Illinois and across the Nation?

This is a political exercise. It is not an attempt to pass a bill which will become a law. Forget for a moment the President's veto, if you will, and take a look at the merits of the legislation which time and time again has been found by the courts to violate the Constitution.

I would think that at this point in time, the author, whose feelings on this are heartfelt, would have changed his approach, changed his language, tried to address some of the constitutional questions, but it has not happened. We get a rerun every year. This is all about a record vote. This is all about raising this issue for public consciousness and a record vote of the Members of the Senate.

Some people want a scorecard. Some people want to use it politically. So be it. That happens around here. It is a shame that it happens on an issue of this gravity and importance because, honestly, I do believe there are things we can and should do which will address what I raised earlier. The feeling of the vast majority of Americans is that abortions should remain safe and legal and that restrictions on abortion should be in place only when necessary.

I am going to offer an amendment shortly which addresses my approach to this. As I said earlier, although I am honored to have nine cosponsors, nine other Senators who join me in this amendment—it is a bipartisan amendment—including the two Senators from the State of Maine, both Republican, I do not suggest it is the point of view of anyone other than ourselves. A vote will demonstrate whether I am right or wrong. I hope a majority sees this as a reasonable way to bring this contentious debate to a constitutional and fairminded conclusion.

If we do not, I predict we will have another vote next year on the unconstitutional Santorum legislation and perhaps in years in the future. But what will we have achieved? Contentious, painful debate with no resolution other than a political scorecard, and that for me is a troubling outcome.

I hope we can find a better way to do it because I believe there is a more sensible way. Let me tell you why I think there is.

I am going to offer an amendment which addresses not an abortion procedure but addresses a stage in pregnancy. It is a stage which is known as postviability, that moment in time where the decision is reached that the fetus can sustain survival outside the womb with or without artificial support. That is a moving target. Viability has changed because medicine has changed. Go into any neonatal intensive care unit in America and look at the size of the babies who are surviving. They are smaller than your hand, tiny little babies who are surviving.

Viability is a moving target, and it was a standard that was used in the Roe v. Wade decision. They said until that moment in time when that fetus is viable, could survive outside the womb, then there are certain legal rights in this country. But once viability is reached, those rights change, and we start acknowledging the fact that this fetus has now become a potential human being at birth. Roe v. Wade said we will define the laws of America based on viability.

The problem with the Santorum legislation, the reason why this bill and versions similar to it have been found unconstitutional time and again, is they refuse to accept this basic premise, the premise of Roe v. Wade, the premise of existing law in this country. They will not acknowledge that you should have a law banning a certain procedure only after viability. Each time it is stricken because it would, in fact, restrict the right to abortion before viability, before the fetus can survive. Court after court after court has stricken down State laws that have followed this Santorum model. Yet here we are again.

My amendment, the one which I will offer to the Santorum bill, accepts the Roe v. Wade premise that any changes which we are going to make have to be consistent with Roe v. Wade, and this is what it says: Any late-term abortion—that is, an abortion after viability—is disallowed or prohibited under law. We are talking usually 7th, 8th, 9th month of gestation. Those abortions are prohibited under law except in two specific cases: where continuing the pregnancy threatens the life of the mother or in those cases where continuing the pregnancy poses a risk of grievous physical injury to the mother. That is it. Grievous physical injury. There are those who disagree with me and say it should include emotional injury as well. I have drawn this line at physical injury.

Here is why I believe this is a reasonable standard: At this late stage in the pregnancy, the 7th, 8th, or 9th month, I believe Roe v. Wade tells us we have to look at the pregnancy in different terms. We are now postviability. We are now in a position where the fetus can survive. In those circumstances, what I have said is, the only reason legally you could terminate the pregnancy is if continuing it could literally kill the mother or continuing it could subject her to the possibility of grievous physical injury, which is defined in the amendment.

I go on. One of the objections customarily made is that if you allow a doctor to certify that a mother's life is at stake or she runs the risk of grievous physical injury if the pregnancy continues, you are playing right into the hands of the people who perform the abortions.

I have heard this argument so many times on the other side of the aisle. They argue doctors will say anything, the ones who perform these procedures, because they just want to make the money; they don't care.

I take an additional step. I require a second doctor to certify. You will have two doctors in those decisions, two doctors who come forward and say: If this pregnancy continues, this mother could die, or, if this pregnancy continues, this mother could risk grievous physical injury.

What risks do these doctors take if they are falsifying this information? Substantial fines and the suspension of their licenses to practice medicine are included in this amendment. It is very serious.

When we get to this stage in the pregnancy, I do believe the rules should be a lot stricter. That is why I am offering this as an alternative, one which I believe deals with some very fundamental questions.

S. 1692 is the bill offered by Senator SANTORUM. We have to ask ourselves several questions:

Should just one or all postviability abortion procedures be banned? Senator SANTORUM addresses one. The amendment I offer addresses all postviability abortion procedures.

No. 2: Should a mother's health be protected throughout pregnancy? Under the Santorum legislation that is before us, the mother's health is not an issue; only if her life is at stake could you engage in certain procedures. In the amendment I offer, it will protect a mother's life and a mother's health, the health in terms of the risk of grievous physical injury.

No. 3: Should a woman's constitutional right to choose before viability be preserved? There are differences of opinion on this. Perhaps the Senator from Pennsylvania has a difference of opinion. But Roe v. Wade said—and I agree—that previability, a woman, in consultation with her doctor, her husband, her family, and her conscience, has the right to make this decision. They protect that right in Roe v. Wade.

Oh, I know there are those who disagree. I respect that. I have been in lots of debates with them. That is where I come down. The reason the Santorum language has been rejected in court after court after court as unconstitutional is that, I believe, those on his side just do not accept the basic premise that, previability, this is a decision, a choice, to be made by a mother and her doctor.

As I said, I respect their position, but as long as they fly in the face of this basic principle, as long as they defy Roe v. Wade, with the language in the Santorum bill or the language in the State legislation, it will continue to fall time after time after time; we will continue to go through these political exercises; we will debate until our voices are gone. Then we will have a vote, and then we will go on to the next item of business. And, unfortunately, we will have missed an opportunity to do something that is meaningful. That is why I offer this amendment.

My amendment—I will go to the second chart—in comparison to the Santorum approach, can be spelled out with three specifics.

The Santorum approach bans only one procedure and allows others in its place. Make no mistake, if the Senator from Pennsylvania is successful someday in somehow enacting this legislation, he will not even tell you that is going to stop abortion from occurring. He deals with one procedure. My amendment bans all postviability abortions regardless of procedure.

The Santorum bill violates a woman's constitutional right to have her health protected. We preserve exceptions for life and health of the mother—narrowly defined.

The Santorum approach violates a woman's constitutional right to choose under Roe v. Wade before viability. My amendment specifically protects a woman's constitutional right to choose before viability.

Let me tell you what I am talking about when I talk about grievous injury. Grievous injury in this amendment is narrowly defined. And I quote:

a severely debilitating disease or impairment specifically caused or exacerbated by the pregnancy; or an inability to provide necessary treatment for a life-threatening condition.

What could that be? You can all understand the first part: If continuing the pregnancy could kill the mother is clear. But what would the second one be? What if you diagnosed a mother, during the course of her pregnancy, with serious cancer? And what if you found continuing the pregnancy somehow compromised your ability to treat her for that cancer? That is what I am driving at here, to make sure it is serious and grievous, because we are literally talking about late-term, where I think the rules should be much stricter, as does the Court in Roe v. Wade.

My amendment also requires the attending physician who makes the call on these decisions to have the benefit as well—and it requires it—of an independent physician to certify, in writing, that in their medical judgment the continuation of the pregnancy would threaten the mother's life or risk grievous injury to her physical health.

I make an exception. I want to make it clear for the record. The certification requirement by the doctors can be waived in a medical emergency. But the physician would have to subsequently certify, in writing, what specific medical condition formed the basis for determining that a medical emergency existed.

This legislation will reduce the number of late-term abortions. In contrast, the so-called partial-birth abortion ban will not stop a single abortion at any stage of gestation. The partial-birth abortion ban, by prohibiting only one particular procedure, will merely induce physicians to switch to a different procedure that is not banned by Senator SANTORUM.

Other procedures, such as induction, hysterotomy, or dilation and evacuation, can all pose a greater risk to the mother's health in certain cases. My alternative amendment will stop abortions by any method after a fetus is viable, except when medical necessity indicates otherwise.

Can we or should we try to define "viability" in this? I did not. And the courts have warned us: Don't even try. That is a medical judgment and, as I mentioned earlier, is a moving target. Viability today, in other words, fetal survivability today, is different from what it will be tomorrow or next month because these procedures are changing so dramatically in terms of saving the fetus and giving it an opportunity for life.

My alternative fits clearly within the constitutional parameters set forth by the Supreme Court for government restriction of abortion. In Planned Parenthood v. Casey, the Supreme Court reiterated Roe's determination that, after viability, the State may limit or ban abortion.

In contrast, the partial birth abortion ban, by prohibiting certain types of abortions before viability, breaches the Court's standard that the Government does not have a compelling interest in restricting abortions prior to viability.

Nineteen Federal courts in 19 States have enjoined, have stopped, the enforcement of the so-called partial-birth abortion bans. Senator SANTORUM brings to the floor. The States include: Alaska, Arkansas, Arizona, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Jersey, Ohio, Rhode Island, Wisconsin, and West Virginia.

The Santorum bill is clearly unconstitutional. It will be struck down by the courts and have no lasting impact.

My alternative retains the abortion option for mothers facing extraordinary medical conditions, such as breast cancer discovered during the course of pregnancy, uterine rupture, or non-Hodgkins lymphoma, for which termination of the pregnancy may be recommended by the woman's physician due to the risk of grievous injury to the woman's physical health or life.

In contrast, the partial-birth abortion ban provides no such exception to protect the mother from grievous injury to her physical health.

To this point, this debate has been fairly general. To this point, with the exception of the Senator from California, in noting a few mothers who have been through experiences which they have shared publicly, we have talked in generalities.

The Senator from Pennsylvania has brought up a chart that is not a human depiction; it is an effort to put forth some drawing that depicts this procedure.

We have talked about the Constitution. But I will tell you this. My ambivalence over this issue—I was ambivalent when I first heard of this procedure—was put to rest because I sat down with real people, with mothers and fathers, husbands and wives, who faced medical emergencies. And when each of them told me their stories, I thought to myself: How can I possibly vote for the Santorum bill which would have endangered the life of the woman I am talking to? That is why I opposed his legislation in the past and will continue to do so. For the record, I will at this point tell two or three stories that have been a matter of public record and testimony before Congress and that I think demonstrate when you get beyond the theory of this debate and to the reality of it, life gets complicated, very complicated. It is easy to step back and make a moral decision involving other people, if you are not in their shoes. Listen to some of these and you will see what I mean.

This is the story of Coreen Costello from Agoura, CA. Coreen, her husband Jim and their son Chad and daughter Carlyn live in Agoura, CA. Coreen is a full-time stay-at-home wife and mom. She describes herself as a registered Republican and very conservative. She does not believe in abortion. In fact, she never thought she would be testifying before Congress supporting an abortion procedure, which is exactly what she did, on March 21, 1996, before the House Judiciary Subcommittee on the Constitution.

In March 1995, the Costellos were joyfully expecting their third child. However, when she was 7 months pregnant, Coreen began having premature contractions and had to be rushed to the hospital. After reviewing the results of the ultrasound, Coreen's doctor informed her he did not expect the baby to live. Coreen's child, a girl she had named "Katherine Grace," was unable to absorb the amniotic fluid. As a result, the fluid was puddling into Coreen's uterus. Katherine Grace had a lethal neurological disorder and had been unable to move for almost 2 months. Her chest cavity was unable to rise and fall to stretch her lungs and prepare them for air. It was as if she had no lungs at all. Her vital organs were atrophying. Katherine Grace was going to die.

A perinatologist recommended terminating the pregnancy. All the doctors agreed. The Costellos' safest option was an intact D&E, the very procedure banned by this bill by the Senator from Pennsylvania. For Coreen and her husband, this was not an option. They chose to wait to go into labor naturally, which wouldn't be long. Due to the excess amniotic fluid, a condition called polyhydramnios, premature labor, was imminent. Despite the difficulty of knowing her baby was going to die, Coreen continued with the pregnancy. Over the course of the next few weeks, she saw many experts. If possible, the results were even grimmer than those she had earlier.

Her baby's body was rigid and wedged in a transverse position in her womb. Most babies are in a fetal position. Katherine Grace's position was exactly the opposite. It was as if she were doing a swan dive. The soles of her feet were touching the back of her head. Her body was in a U-shape. Due to swelling, her head was already larger than that of a full-term baby. Coreen, her mother, did daily exercises trying to change Katherine Grace's position so she could be delivered naturally.

Meanwhile, the amniotic fluid continued to puddle in Coreen's uterus. In the ensuing weeks, the condition had grown worse. Everyone started to fear for the mother's health. The mother could no longer sit or lie down for more than 10 minutes because the pressure on her lungs was so great. During one of her last ultrasounds, Coreen's doctor told her she could not deliver the baby via caesarean under the circumstances because the risk was too great. The doctor told Coreen there was a safer way for her to deliver. It was at this point Coreen realized this was not a choice anymore, that it was not up to her or her husband. There was no reason to risk leaving her children, Chad and Carlyn, motherless, if there was no hope of saving their new baby.

The Costellos drove to Los Angeles for a D&E. They expected a cold gray building. They found a doctor and a staff willing to help them. It was at this point Coreen realized she had done the right thing. This was the safest thing for her. The fact this option was open to Coreen is important in this story. This option would be closed to her by the Santorum bill.

After the procedure, she went on to say Katherine Grace was beautiful. She was not missing part of her brain. She had not been stabbed in the head with scissors. She looked peaceful and she did not suffer. Because of the safety of this procedure, Coreen became pregnant again with another baby, after losing Katherine Grace. Thanks to the skill and compassion of the doctors and the procedure she was forced to use under these extraordinary circumstances, Coreen was able to have a healthy baby.

If you outlaw the surgical procedure, which the Santorum bill seeks to do, women such as Coreen will be denied the safest and best medical procedure they need under these emergency circumstances and their ability to have more children and the happiness in life which children bring us will be compromised severely.

The next story is about a lady who I met several times. I like her a lot. Her name is Vikki Stella. She is from my home State of Illinois, and she came to Washington, DC, to tell her story. Vikki, her husband Archer and their two daughters, Lindsay, age 11, and Natalie, age 7, live in Naperville, the western suburbs of Illinois right outside Chicago.

In 1993, Vikki discovered she was pregnant with a much-wanted son. Because she is diabetic, she had more prenatal tests than most pregnant women—amnios, ultrasounds, the works.

After the first round of tests, her doctor brought her in and said: Your pregnancy is disgustingly normal.

Then at 32 weeks, she went in for another ultrasound, and everything fell apart—32 weeks into the pregnancy. Vikki's son was diagnosed, the one she was carrying, with nine major anomalies, including a fluid-filled cranium with no brain tissue at all. Vikki's much-wanted son would never survive outside her womb. The only thing keeping him alive was his mother's body.

The Stellas found the only answer they could: a surgical abortion procedure performed by a physician in Los Angeles. Because Vikki was diabetic, the controlled gentle nature of this surgery was much safer than induced labor or a C section. Vikki's son died peacefully and painlessly from the combination of steps taken in preparation for the surgery. He was brought out intact and the family was able to hold him and say their goodbyes.

That is a sad story about a couple that dearly wanted a baby and then found late in the pregnancy this terrible news that the baby would not survive and continuing the pregnancy could threaten the life of the mother. The procedure Vikki Stella used is the procedure banned by the Santorum bill, a procedure which her doctor thought was best for her.

There is an end to this story which is much happier. The ending to the story is that in 1995, Vikki gave birth to a little boy. They finally got their son. She came up to Capitol Hill with the little fellow in a stroller and a big smile on everyone's face.

It is hard for me, when I hear the intense rhetoric of this debate, to believe we are talking about the same thing. Some people refer to this as "cruel" and "execution-like." This family didn't ask for this medical emergency. They wanted to have their little boy and be happy, as all of us. They found late in the pregnancy something terrible happened. When they went to the doctor, the doctor said, this is what you have to do, and they did it. As painful as it was, they did it. This bill says, no, this will not be a decision of the Stella family, the mother and father in a room with the doctor. This will be a decision of the Stella family in a room with the doctor and the Federal Government. If that doctor decides this procedure is the safest to save this mother's life or to give her a chance to have another baby, the Santorum law will say, no, the Government will make the decision—not a decision by a mother and father and a physician, a decision which has to be so painful and emotional.

The last story is about a lady who testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee in 1995 named Viki Wilson. She is a registered nurse, 18 years of experience, 10 in pediatrics. Her husband Bill is an emergency room physician—a nurse and a doctor.

We have three beautiful children: Jon is 10, Katie is 8, and Abigail is in heaven with God.

In the spring of 1994, I was pregnant and expecting my third child on Mother's Day. The nursery was ready and we were very excited anticipating the arrival of our baby. Bill had delivered our other two children, and he was going to deliver Abigail. Jon was going to cut the cord and Katie was going to be the first to hold her. She had already become a very important part of our family.

At 36 weeks of pregnancy all of our dreams of happy expectations came crashing down around us. My doctor ordered an ultrasound that detected what all my previous prenatal testing, including a chorionic villus sampling, an alpha fetoprotein and an earlier ultrasound had failed to detect, an encephalocele. Approximately two-thirds of my daughter's brain had formed on the outside of her skull.

Viki Wilson said:

I literally fell to my knees from the shock.

This is a woman who was a nurse. When she heard this news, she literally fell to her knees from the shock.

I immediately knew that [my baby] would not be able to survive outside my womb. My doctor sent me to a perinatologist, a pediatric radiologist, and geneticist, all desperately trying to find a way to save [the baby girl].

Her husband is a doctor.

My husband and I were praying that there would be some new surgical technique to fix her brain. But all the experts concurred. Abigail would not survive outside my womb. And she could not survive the birthing process, because of the size of her anomaly, her head would be crushed and she would suffocate. Because of the size of her anomaly, the doctors also feared that my uterus would rupture in the birthing process, most likely rendering me sterile. It was also discovered that what I thought were big, healthy, strong baby movements were, in fact, seizures. They were being caused by compression of the encephalocele that continued to increase as she continued to grow inside my womb.

Viki Wilson asked:

"What about a C-section?" Sadly, my doctor told me, "Viki, we do C-sections to save babies. We can't save [Abigail]. A C-section is dangerous for you and I can't justify those risks."

The biggest question for me and my husband was not "is [Abigail] going to die?" A higher power had already decided that for us. The question now was: [Am I going to die? Is the mother going to die with the child?] "How is she going to die?" We wanted to help her leave this world as painlessly and peacefully as possible, and in a way to protect my life and health and allow us to try again to have more children.

They used the procedure that would be banned by the Santorum legislation, which is before us today.

Mr. President, I give these three examples because I think it is important for all of us, despite our values and principles and the things we hold dear, to listen to people who struggle with these tragedies. I didn't think in any of those cases, the 5 or 6 women I have met who ever used this procedure to save their lives or protect their health, that I ever detected selfishness or greed. In every single case, these were mothers and fathers who wanted their babies. They had painted nurseries, and they had given them names. They were prepared for this joyful home coming that never happened.

This was not some casual decision. This was a decision that would haunt them for a lifetime. Why had they been singled out to lose that baby? Why did they have to go through the emotion and the trauma of all the decisions that came with that? I can't answer that. All I can do is sympathize with them for what they had to live through and to say to myself as a Senator, do you really want to say that you know better in terms of that mother's life and health? That is what the Santorum legislation says. It says we know better; we want to be the doctors here; we want to decide which abortion procedure you can use and which you can't use.

As I said at the outset, I am not a doctor, and I am not going to play one in the Senate. The doctors that I have relied on and the patients I have spoken to have led me to conclude that the Santorum approach is the wrong approach. I know that it will be an issue in every campaign forever. I have already faced that. I am sure I will face it again. But I am confident in my position that I can go back not only to my home State but even to my family where this is debated and explain to them why I have done what I am doing today.

This amendment I am offering is a sensible approach. It is one consistent with Roe v. Wade. It deals with late-term abortion, and it is one that is sensitive to a mother's health. It is one that attempts to protect that mother when she runs the risk of grievous physical injury.

AMENDMENT NO. 2319

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for part I of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 73 the following new item:

“74. Ban on certain abortions 1531.”

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks of the Senator, and I appreciate his good faith in offering this amendment. I am not going to discuss that amendment specifically right now, although I certainly will.

I have a couple of comments. First off, it has to be noted here that partial-birth abortions are performed—this is according to the people who perform them—well over 90 percent of the partial-birth abortions that are performed—and some have suggested much higher than 90 percent—on healthy babies and healthy mothers. Healthy babies, healthy mothers. A very small percentage are the cases that you have heard brought up here today.

The question is then posed: Well, who are we to make the decision about these tough cases? I think even the Senator from Illinois would say, if it is a healthy mother and baby and this procedure isn’t necessary, I have some problems. I think a lot of Members who have voted against this bill have said, if it is that case—but there are these cases. I am happy to address those cases, but let me do it in a broader context.

The reason we inject ourselves is the same reason the Supreme Court has injected itself into the debate on second- and third-trimester abortions. It is because we are not talking about removing a tumor. It is not where we are going to say you should not remove this cancerous tumor this way or that way or that appendix that way. What we are talking about here is killing a baby—from my perspective, particularly killing a baby in such a barbaric fashion—which is almost born and is almost protected by the Constitution. So I understand the concern that we should not be practicing medicine. No one is practicing medicine here. What we are doing here is drawing a very important line about what we will allow in our society when it comes to killing a living human being. I don’t think anybody is going to question that the baby is living and it is a human being. So what we are talking about here is how can you kill a living human being?

What we are saying is you should not be able to kill a living human being that is almost born, especially in a brutal fashion. The reason is because of how horrendous this is. It creates some real slippery slopes when the Senator from California gets up and says, “I want every child to be wanted.” So now if you are not wanted, you are not protected by the Constitution and that is the way it works? If you are not wanted as a child, you don’t get protection. What if you’re not wanted as a Senator. Do you not get protection? I don’t think we want to go down that road.

I am concerned, particularly as we talk about this procedure, where the baby is three inches away from protection from the Constitution, and when you get into this area and say, people have to have all the rights to do whatever they want. That is not what the Constitution says. That is not what we have said here. We have drawn a line because we think it is important for society to draw lines about what is, in fact, legal and what is not.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SANTORUM. Yes.

Mr. DURBIN. I want to explore this, because I really want to understand what we are driving at here. I gave an example of a baby inside a mother’s womb with its brain outside of its skull. This brain was growing in size. It was very clear that the baby was alive through the mother that continued to detect a fetal heart beat, and there is an obvious question as to whether this baby could ever survive. At the moment, they had to make a decision. They knew if they went through certain procedures, the mother could have her uterus rupture because of the size of this abnormal growth of the baby, and they decided to use the procedure that the Senator would ban.

Now, conceding everything you have said, does the Senator from Pennsylvania not acknowledge the fact that the baby’s life was something that, frankly, was not going to last but a few seconds? As soon as that baby was disconnected from the mother’s umbilical cord, the placenta, that baby was not going to survive at that point. The doctor had to say: This baby is not going to live and if I don’t use the procedure that you are going to ban here, I can do damage to this woman where she would never have another baby. That is the kind of case. I understand the Senator says it is a living thing, but it is living because of the mother’s body and it cannot live on its own.

Mr. SANTORUM. I understand that very well. I just say this. What we have been told by the overwhelming amount of medical evidence—and, again, it gets back to the discussion we had earlier about whether this procedure is the only appropriate procedure—what we have been told over and over again is that this is never medically necessary. In this circumstance, this is not the only procedure that could be used, No. 1.

Again, we have overwhelming medical evidence saying that this is, in fact, not the safest—in fact, is the most dangerous. Even the person who wrote the textbook on second- and third-trimester abortions, a guy by the name of Warren Hern, who talks about this procedure—he does more second- and third-trimester abortions than any other abortionist in the country—says, “I have serious reservations about this procedure. You really can’t defend it. I would dispute any statement that says this is the safest procedure to use.”

This is an abortionist from Colorado who does more third-trimester abortions than anybody in the country.

My point is not that we should say you can’t have an abortion if that is what the person wants at that point. But there are other options other than an intact D&E. There are other abortion options, as the Senator explored in his statement. There is the caesarean section, depending on what the problem is. You have the Alan Guttmacher Institute which looked at statistics on abortion. They say that abortion is twice as risky to the life of the mother as is delivery in the second- and third-trimester.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield so I understand the Senator’s point of view?

I don’t want to put words in his mouth. But what I hear him say is you can find some other abortion procedure in that instance other than the one you are banning. That is fine. The Senator may not personally like abortion at all. But from his point of view, he is saying just as long as you use a different kind of procedure, this bill is OK.

Mr. SANTORUM. That is correct.

Mr. DURBIN. This bill is going after one procedure.

Mr. SANTORUM. We are very clear. I don’t think this is a problem under Roe v. Wade. I think we are very clear, and are, frankly, working on making it clearer in the definition dealing with the issue of vagueness because that has been raised, as the Senator mentioned, in the court cases across the country. Even though one case held it to be constitutional, we are looking into ways in which we can tighten that definition.

To make sure, what we are saying is, look, if an abortion is what the mother chooses, or a family chooses, it is legal under certain circumstances in the second- and third-trimester, in almost all circumstances. But we are saying this procedure, because of the very difficult slippery slope of having an almost born child being killed, should not be allowed.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Let me say this: The American Council of Obstetricians and Gynecologists comes to a different conclusion. They say in some circumstances this is the safest.

Mr. SANTORUM. But they do not identify any.

Mr. DURBIN. Having said that, there are choices where these women use this procedure under extraordinary circumstances. In the cases the Senator was talking about, they were literally dealing with the birth of a fetus which was not going to survive which was so abnormally sized that it caused a danger and the possibility that the mother would never have another child. Why would we want to preclude any medical procedure that might save that mother's life or give her a chance to have another child, if the Senator from Pennsylvania concedes that he is not arguing against all abortion procedures?

Mr. SANTORUM. Because there are safer alternatives available according to all of the medical literature, and we have definitive statements from obstetricians, hundreds of them, as well as people from Northwestern—I will be happy to share the article with the Senator—from a fairly reputable medical school; I am sure the Senator would say one of the best medical schools. But we have overwhelming evidence that there are safer procedures to use, that this is a rogue practice. It is not used much. And, again, according to Warren Hern, he can't defend this procedure. It is something that should not be used. It is not safe.

I will show you arguments. I don't have it handy, but we will enter into the RECORD an analysis of the cases that you have made by obstetricians who will say under these circumstances there would have been a safer course, a better course than what was done by the physicians in this case. What we are saying is it is not the best medicine, period. It is not medically necessary, period. And it is a barbaric infringement on the rights of an almost born child.

I agree. This is a very narrow bill.

Mr. DURBIN. Let me ask this question, if I might. I ask this question in good faith because I think we should have this dialogue.

Step aside from the argument about whether we should have abortion at all, and go to the first two points; that this procedure is never medically necessary and is especially risky.

Before I was elected to Congress, I used to practice law as a trial lawyer in medical malpractice cases.

I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, why would any physician subject themselves to a medical malpractice case if the two points that the Senator made are so obvious; that is, this procedure is never medically necessary, and it is more dangerous than other procedures for the mother? Why in the world would they ever take the risk of a lawsuit by using this procedure unless they believe they could justify that it is medically necessary and that in effect it was the safest procedure for the mother to use?

Mr. SANTORUM. This is not commonly practiced. It is only practiced with a few thousand abortions a year. Given the fact there are 1.4 million abortions, a few thousand abortions, it is not something that is practiced in every abortion clinic. I think a lot of abortion clinics will say this is a rogue practice. That is not to say people do not practice medicine that is somewhat strange. There are a lot of people who do things in medicine that are not considered to be medically sound judgments. That doesn't mean that they aren't done. They are, in fact, done. This is a situation where we believe that is the case. This is a rogue procedure. Someone may be sued. I don't know. Maybe someone has. I am not aware of someone being sued. But, again, the person most likely to sue would be the child that is dead. I am not too sure that in the case of the mother that is necessarily a most common thing you will see. I don't think a lot of abortionists are sued, period.

I would like to address a couple of issues that the Senator from California brought up, and then the Senator from Illinois.

First, to state very clearly what the Senator from California said, talking about the murder of abortionists and snipers firing at people, I am against murder. I think everybody who supports this legislation—and, frankly, everybody in this Chamber agrees—believes that acts of violence against anybody on the issue of abortion is counterproductive to an effort that seeks to affirm life. Certainly, taking the law into their own hands is an outrage, is offensive to me, is wrong, and should be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. There is no room in a movement that talks about non-violence—and violence toward babies in utero—for condoning actions of violence of any sort, whether it is murder or attempted murder or destruction of property, et cetera. I don't stand here condoning that, and I would join with the Senator from California to condemn it and condemn it in the strongest words possible. That is no service to those who are trying to get the country's ear in defense of innocent human life.

I want to correct what the Senator from California said also about no court has found our language in this bill constitutional. That is not true. The court in Wisconsin has found this language to be constitutional. It is now being appealed to the Seventh Circuit. The law is enjoined upon appeal. But, again, we have a district court that has found this to be constitutional.

I would like to go through again, quoting from the Journal of the American Medical Association, an article printed in 1998, a year ago in August, by two obstetricians from Northwestern University, and go through again why this procedure—it keeps coming back to two issues, as the Senator from Illinois talked about.

One, the term is too vague. The definition is too vague.

I will be addressing that. Hopefully, in the next couple of days we will work on that, although I think, frankly, the definition is perfectly clear. We are willing to work and to see whether we can make it a little bit more definitive.

Second, that this may be necessary to protect the health of the mother, again, that is the discussion in which the Senator from Illinois and I were just engaged.

I want to restate again how overwhelming the evidence is of people who can definitively state without question that over 400 obstetricians around the country say it is never medically necessary.

C. Everett Koop—as the Senator from Illinois said, is never medically necessary. It is a pretty strong term to say it is never medically necessary.

What do we have on the other side? We have some anecdotes about cases where it was used, but in no case do they state that was the only option or that was the best option.

On our side we have the abortionist, Dr. Haskell from Ohio, who probably does more of these abortions than any other person. He says it is never—underline never—medically necessary to protect the life of the mother and not medically necessary to protect the health of the mother. The abortionist himself says that.

On the other side, we have the statement from the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists. That is the argument on the other side. This whole debate on health is centered around an organization that is very pro-abortion that says they put together a select panel that:

... could identify no circumstances under which this procedure would be the only option to save the life or preserve the health of the woman.

This is an organization that opposes this bill. This is an organization they rely upon to hold on to the "health exception." That is the cover behind not voting for this bill.

There are two arguments: Health of the mother—we need that, otherwise we can't vote for this if we don't have that—and it is too vague, the definition is too vague.

The organization they rely upon says they can:

... identify no circumstances under which this procedure would be the only option to save the life or preserve the health of the woman and that an intact D&X, however—

This is what they hold on to—

... may be the best or most appropriate procedure in a particular circumstance to save the life or preserve the health of the woman, and only the doctor, in consultation with the patient, based upon the woman's particular circumstances, can make this decision.

That is their rationale. It "may be," and we should "leave it to the doctor and the patient." "May be." OK, fine. It may be.

We have asked this organization to provide one circumstance—just one. By the way, we have asked them now for 3 years to give one circumstance where we can have peer review by obstetricians, have them look at their circumstance where this "may be" the best option. Give a hypothetical; give an example we can actually examine.

What is the answer from that organization? Nothing.

They say it "may be." We can't say how, we can't give any evidence of it, but "it may be." Because it may be—which is not substantiated—that is the health exception they need.

It is pretty lame. If they cannot come forward and give facts, we need a health exception because it "may be," but if we cannot give circumstances where that is the case, where is the health exception?

They admit it is not the only way. The AMA has said it is not good medicine; it is a rogue procedure, and the AMA is a pro-choice organization. That is what their board votes.

Again, it is hard for me to argue against "May be's," without specifics. That is what we have. Members are hiding behind "we need a health exception because it may be." This is a debate about facts. We have hundreds and hundreds of physicians who say it may be never the best option; it will never be the best option; there are always better alternatives.

From the point of view of someone who is on the Senate floor and whose job it is to look at all the information, to be able to make a judgment, don't hide behind a health exception that doesn't exist and is not substantiated. Just because it is substantiated by anecdotes of people who used them because it happened to save them, that doesn't mean there weren't better options at the same time. Just because this worked to save the health of the mother doesn't mean there weren't better options.

Mr. President, 400 years ago we used to bleed people, and it probably helped some people, but that doesn't mean there weren't better options. We are saying, what is the best option? Why do we want the best option? This is not removing a tumor. This is killing a baby that is outside the mother. That is why we don't like this procedure.

This is not practicing medicine and telling doctors how to do their business. If this were about an ingrown toenail, we wouldn't care. This is about killing a living human being—about killing a living human being. I don't think anybody on the floor will argue with that. We are talking about killing a living human being. That is this far away from the Constitution saying "no." This far.

I will read from this article the rationale given by these physicians as to why they believe this is not the best procedure for mothers from a health perspective.

There exist no credible studies on intact D&X—

This is a rogue procedure—

... that evaluate or attest to its safety. The procedure is not recognized in medical textbooks nor is it taught in medical schools or in obstetrics and gynecology residencies. Intact D&X poses serious medical risks to the mother. Patients who undergo an intact D&X—

Intact D&X is a partial-birth abortion as defined in the bill—

are at risk for the potential complications with any surgical midtrimester termination, including hemorrhage, infection, and uterine perforation. However, intact D&X places these patients at increased risk of two additional complications.

So a traditional late-term abortion has certain risks associated with it, according to these doctors from Northwestern University. But this procedure has two other complications in addition to the ones already inherent in a late-term abortion:

First, the risk of uterine rupture may be increased. An integral part of the D&X procedure is an internal podalic version, during which the physician instrumentally reaches into the uterus, grasps the fetus' feet, and pulls the feet down into the cervix, thus converting the lie to a footling breach. The internal version carries risk of uterine rupture, abruption, amniotic fluid embolus, and trauma to the uterus.

The second potential complication of intact D&X is the risk of iatrogenic laceration and secondary hemorrhage. Following internal version and partial breech extraction, scissors are forced into the base of the fetal skull while it is lodged in the birth canal. This blind procedure risks maternal injury from laceration of the uterus or cervix by the scissors and could result in severe bleeding and the threat of shock or even maternal death.

These risks have not been adequately quantified.

None of these risks are medically necessary because other procedures are available to physicians who deem it necessary to perform an abortion late in pregnancy. As ACOG policy clearly states, intact D&X is never the only procedure available. Some clinicians have considered intact D&X necessary when hydrocephalus is present.

Water on the brain.

However, a hydrocephalic fetus could be aborted by first draining the excess fluid from the fetal skull through ultrasound-guided . . . [procedures.] Some physicians who perform abortions have been concerned that a ban on late term abortions would affect their ability to provide other abortion services. Because of the proposed changes in federal legislation, it is clear that only intact D&X would be banned.

I can and I will, throughout the course of the next couple of days, provide letter after letter signed by hundreds and hundreds of obstetricians, the best in their field, perinatologists, people who deal with maternal and fetal medicine, who say this procedure is dangerous, more dangerous to a woman. So the issue of health is a bogus one. It is a bogus issue.

Again I go back to Warren Hern, the author of "Abortion Practice," the author who does more third-trimester abortions, I am told, than anybody else in America. He says:

I have very serious reservations about this procedure. You really can't defend it. I would dispute any statement that this is the safest procedure to use.

This is not a fan of this bill. So, again, all these comments and concerns about "we have to protect health, we have to protect health"—if we outlawed this procedure, we would be protecting health. We would be protecting the health of women where doctors who do it for the convenience of the abortionist.

Do you want to know why it is done? It is done for the convenience of the abortionist, because they can do more in 1 day. That is why this procedure was developed. That is what they will tell you. That is, the doctor who invented this procedure, he will tell you that is why he did it.

On the other issue—and we will get to this a little later in the debate—the issue of vagueness, the Senator from California said every court in the country that has ruled on this has ruled it is vague or ruled it is unconstitutional.

First off, that is not true. Wisconsin ruled in fact it is constitutional. But I am willing to work with those who have genuine concerns about the issue of vagueness, to get a definition that makes people perfectly comfortable that we are not talking about any other form of abortion because it is not my intent, as has been ascribed to me, that what I am trying to do is eliminate all second- and third-trimester abortions.

What is clear about this debate and the debate that has been going on now for three Congresses is that we are not trying to do that. I think we have stood on the floor and said that is not our intent. Our intent is to get rid of a dangerous procedure. Yes, it is painful to the baby. Yes, it is dangerous to the mother. But it is also dangerous to our society, to be able to kill a baby that is this close to being born. I think it is something we have to stand up and draw the line on clearly, and that is what we are asking to do.

So to me it is pretty simple. We have no evidence this jeopardizes the health of the mother—none. We have speculation, no facts. We have the vagueness concern. Again, I am willing to work on that issue. If that is a genuine concern that people have, I am willing to work on it to make sure we can make people comfortable that what we are talking about is only this procedure.

But once you get past those two concerns, I do not know what is left. I do not know why you defend this. I do not know why you defend killing a baby this far away from being born who would otherwise be born alive. I do not know how you defend it.

So I look forward to this debate over the next couple of days. I know the Senator from California feels very passionately about this, but I think the issue of where we draw the line constitutionally is very important. I am sure the Senator from California agrees with me. I think the Senator from California would say that she and I, the Senator from Illinois, the Senators from Arkansas and Kansas, we are all protected by the Constitution with the right to life.

Would you agree with that, Senator from California? Do you answer that question?

Mrs. BOXER. I support the Roe v. Wade decision.

Mr. SANTORUM. Do you agree any child who is born has the right to life, is protected by the Constitution once that child is born?

Mrs. BOXER. I agree with the Roe v. Wade decision, and what you are doing goes against it and will harm the women of this country. And I will address that when I get the floor.

Mr. SANTORUM. But I would like to ask you this question. You agree, once the child is born, separated from the mother, that that child is protected by the Constitution and cannot be killed? Do you agree with that?

Mrs. BOXER. I would make this statement. That this Constitution as it currently is—some want to amend it to say life begins at conception. I think when you bring your baby home, when your baby is born—and there is no such thing as partial-birth—the baby belongs to your family and has the rights. But I am not willing to amend the Constitution to say that a fetus is a person, which I know you would. But we will get to that later. I know my colleague is engaging me in a colloquy on his time. I appreciate it. I will answer these questions.

I think what my friend is doing, by asking me these questions, is off point.

My friend wants to tell the doctors in this country what to do. My friend from Pennsylvania says they are rogue doctors. The AMA will tell you they no longer support the bill. The American Nurses don't support the bill. The obstetricians and gynecologists don't support the bill. So my friend can ask me my philosophy all day; on my own time I will talk about it.

Mr. SANTORUM. If I may reclaim my time, first of all, the AMA still believes this is bad medicine. They do not support the criminal penalties provisions in this bill, but they still believe—I think you know that to be the case—this procedure is not medically necessary, and they stand by that statement.

I ask the Senator from California, again, you believe—you said “once the baby comes home.” Obviously, you don't mean they have to take the baby out of the hospital for it to be protected by the Constitution. Once the baby is separated from the mother, you would agree—completely separated from the mother—you would agree that baby is entitled to constitutional protection?

Mrs. BOXER. I will tell you why I don't want to engage in this. You had the same conversation with a colleague of mine, and I never saw such a twisting of his remarks.

Mr. SANTORUM. Let me be clear, then. Let's try to be clear.

Mrs. BOXER. I am going to be clear when I get the floor. What you are trying to do is take away the rights of women and their families and their doctors to have a procedure. And now you are trying to turn the question into, When does life begin? I will talk about that on my own time.

Mr. SANTORUM. If I may reclaim the time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUNNING). The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. SANTORUM. What I am trying to do is get an answer from the Senator from California as to where you would draw the line because that really is the important part of this debate.

Mrs. BOXER. I will repeat. I will repeat, the Senator has asked me a question—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mrs. BOXER. I am answering the question I have been posed by the Senator, and the answer to the question is, I stand by Roe v. Wade. I stand by it. I hope we have a chance to vote on it. It is very clear, Roe v. Wade. That is what I stand by; my friend doesn't.

Mr. SANTORUM. Are you suggesting Roe v. Wade covered the issue of a baby in the process of being born?

Mrs. BOXER. I am saying what Roe v. Wade says is, in the early stages of a pregnancy, a woman has the right to choose; in the later stages, the States have the right—yes—to come in and restrict. I support those restrictions, as long as two things happen: They respect the life of the mother and the health of the mother.

Mr. SANTORUM. I understand that.

Mrs. BOXER. That is where I stand. No matter how you try to twist it, that is where I stand.

Mr. SANTORUM. I say to the Senator from California, I am not twisting anything. I am simply asking a very straightforward question. There is no hidden question here. The question is—

Mrs. BOXER. I will answer it again.

Mr. SANTORUM. Once the baby is born, is completely separated from the mother, you will support that that baby has, in fact, the right to life and cannot be killed? You accept that; right?

Mrs. BOXER. I don't believe in killing any human being. That is absolutely correct. Nor do you, I am sure.

Mr. SANTORUM. So you would accept the fact that once the baby is separated from the mother, that baby cannot be killed?

Mrs. BOXER. I support the right—and I will repeat this, again, because I saw you ask the same question to another Senator.

Mr. SANTORUM. All the Senator has to do is give me a straight answer.

Mrs. BOXER. Define “separation.” You answer that question.

Mr. SANTORUM. Let's define that. Let's say the baby is completely separated; in other words, no part of the baby is inside the mother.

Mrs. BOXER. You mean the baby has been birthed and is now in the mother's arms? It is a human being? It takes a second, it takes a minute—

Mr. SANTORUM. Say it is in the obstetrician's hands.

Mrs. BOXER. I had two babies, and within seconds of them being born—

Mr. SANTORUM. We had six.

Mrs. BOXER. You didn't have any.

Mr. SANTORUM. My wife and I did. We do things together in my family.

Mrs. BOXER. Your wife gave birth. I gave birth. I can tell you, I know when the baby was born.

Mr. SANTORUM. Good. All I am asking you is, once the baby leaves the mother's birth canal and is through the vaginal orifice and is in the hands of the obstetrician, you would agree you cannot then abort the baby?

Mrs. BOXER. I would say when the baby is born, the baby is born and would then have every right of every other human being living in this country, and I don't know why this would even be a question.

Mr. SANTORUM. Because we are talking about a situation here where the baby is almost born. So I ask the question of the Senator from California, if the baby was born except for the baby's foot, if the baby's foot was inside the mother but the rest of the baby was outside, could that baby be killed?

Mrs. BOXER. The baby is born when the baby is born.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mrs. BOXER. That is the answer to the question.

Mr. SANTORUM. I am asking for you to define for me what that is.

Mrs. BOXER. I can't believe the Senator from Pennsylvania has a question with it. I have never been troubled by this question. You give birth to a baby. The baby is there, and it is born, and that is my answer to the question.

Mr. SANTORUM. What we are talking about here with partial birth, as the Senator from California knows, is the baby is in the process of being born—

Mrs. BOXER. In the process of being born. This is why this conversation makes no sense, because to me it is obvious when a baby is born; to you it isn't obvious.

Mr. SANTORUM. Maybe you can make it obvious to me. What you are suggesting is if the baby's foot is still inside of the mother, that baby can then still be killed.

Mrs. BOXER. I am not suggesting that.

Mr. SANTORUM. I am asking.

Mrs. BOXER. I am absolutely not suggesting that. You asked me a question, in essence, when the baby is born.

Mr. SANTORUM. I am asking you again. Can you answer that?

Mrs. BOXER. I will answer the question when the baby is born. The baby is born when the baby is outside the mother's body. The baby is born.

Mr. SANTORUM. I am not going to put words in your mouth—

Mrs. BOXER. I hope not.

Mr. SANTORUM. But, again, what you are suggesting is if the baby's toe is inside the mother, you can, in fact, kill that baby.

Mrs. BOXER. Absolutely not.

Mr. SANTORUM. OK. So if the baby's toe is in, you can't kill the baby. How about if the baby's foot is in?

Mrs. BOXER. You are the one who is making these statements.

Mr. SANTORUM. We are trying to draw a line here.

Mrs. BOXER. I am not answering these questions.

Mr. SANTORUM. If the head is inside the mother, you can kill the baby.

Mrs. BOXER. My friend is losing his temper. Let me say to my friend once again—and he is laughing—

Mr. SANTORUM. I am not laughing.

Mrs. BOXER. Let me say, this woman is not laughing right now because if this bill was the law of the land, she might either be dead or infertile. So if the Senator wants to laugh about this, he can laugh all he wants.

Mr. SANTORUM. Reclaiming my time, Mr. President. All I suggest is I was not laughing about the discussions. It is a very serious discussion.

Mrs. BOXER. Well, you were.

Mr. SANTORUM. I was smiling at your characterization of my demeanor.

I have not lost my temper. I think I am, frankly, very composed at this point. What I will say—and the Senator is walking away—is the Senator said, again, the baby is born when the baby is born. I said: If the foot is still inside the mother? She said: Well, no, you can't kill the baby. If the foot is inside, you can't, but if the head is the only thing inside, you can.

Here is the line. See this is where it gets a little funny.

Mrs. BOXER. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Let the RECORD show that I did not say what the Senator from Pennsylvania said that I did. Thank you.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I hate to do this, but could we have the clerk read back what the Senator from California said with respect to that question?

I understand it will take some time for us to do that. I will be happy—

Mrs. BOXER. I say to my friend, I know what I said. I am saying your characterization of what I said is incorrect. I didn't talk about the head or the foot. That was what my colleague talked about. And I don't appreciate it being misquoted on the floor over a subject that involves the health and life of the women of this country and the children of this country and the families of this country.

Mr. SANTORUM. It also involves—and that is the point I think the Senator from California is missing—it also involves when in the process—that is why people on both sides of the abortion issue support this bill, because it also involves what is infanticide and what is not. A lot of people who agree with you on the issue of abortion say this is too close to infanticide. This is a baby who is outside the mother.

Again, I will not put words in the Senator's mouth, but what I heard—and again I am willing to have that corrected by the RECORD and the Senator can correct me right now—what I heard her say is if the foot is inside the mother, no, you cannot kill the baby, but when the head is, you can. That is a pretty slippery slope.

Mrs. BOXER. I say to my friend, what I said was I wasn't answering those questions. What the Senator was trying to do was to bait me on his terms of how he sees this issue.

We have a situation where this procedure is outlawed. It will hurt the women and the families of this country. My friend can disagree with that, but I never got into the issue of when is someone born. I said to you I am very clear on that, and I understand that completely, but it was my friend who kept on asking these questions, which to me do not make any sense because the issue here is an emergency procedure that my friend from Pennsylvania wants to make illegal, and it will hurt the women and it will hurt the families of this country.

Mr. SANTORUM. If I can reclaim my time, first off, the Senator from California said this was an emergency procedure. Name me an emergency procedure that takes 3 days. That is what the procedure takes. That is one of the things that was put forward early in the debate, now risen again, that this is somehow an emergency procedure. It is not an emergency procedure. It is a 3-day procedure.

No emergency do you present yourself in an emergency condition and get sent home with pills for 3 days to present yourself back.

Again, I want to finalize, and then the Senator from Arkansas has been waiting for quite sometime, and I want to allow him to speak. This is not a clean issue. This is not a removal of a tumor. We are talking about drawing the line between what is infanticide and what is abortion, and that is why many of us are disturbed about this. No one is trying to reach in and outlaw abortions.

The Senator from Illinois and I were very clear about the limited scope of this bill. What we are saying is, this is too close to infanticide. This is barbaric. This fuzzies the line that is dangerous for the future of this country. And what you saw, as the Senator from California was hesitant to get involved in that because she realizes how slippery this slope is, that you can say the foot does, the head doesn't, maybe the ankle—folks, we don't want to go there. It is not necessary for the health of the mother, it is not necessary for the life of the mother, and if you don't believe me, believe the person who developed it because they said so.

I think we need to have a full debate, not just on narrow issues, but on the broader issue of what this means to the rights of every one of us born and unborn, sick and well, wanted and unwanted. I think the line needs to be a bright one. I yield the floor.

Mr. HUTCHINSON addressed the Chair.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VOINOVICH). The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise in support of this legislation to ban the partial-birth abortion procedure. I commend the Senator from Pennsylvania for his passionate, eloquent, and articulate explanation in defense of this legislation.

I had the privilege of presiding during Senator SANTORUM's statement. I cannot say as well, I cannot say as passionately what the Senator from Pennsylvania said so very well in explaining the need for this legislation and why we are taking the time on the floor of the Senate to debate it and to vote on it. I am here so he might not stand alone, and he does not stand alone.

There will be better than 60 percent of the Senate voting for this legislation, and better than 80 percent of the American people support a ban on this horrible procedure. But this is not a subject, it is not a topic, it is not an issue about which people like to talk. It is not something Senators feel comfortable coming down and talking about; it is not something I feel comfortable talking about, but I do think it is very important.

Once again, I commend my colleague for the leadership he has shown on this issue.

Mr. President, the Nation was shaken with a sense of disbelief over 5 years ago in 1994 when we discovered that a young mother in South Carolina, Susan Smith, had murdered her own children and then pretended they had been kidnapped.

In my home State of Arkansas, in recent days, a young woman in her ninth month of pregnancy was savagely attacked by three young men who had been hired by the woman's boyfriend and the father of her unborn child to force her to lose her baby. That was the reason he contracted with these thugs, to, in effect, murder that unborn child. They beat her with severe blows to her stomach and explicitly told her that their intent was to kill her child, a child the father did not want.

As we were dealing with the shock of this gruesome tragedy, we learned of a Memphis man who confessed to driving across the river last summer into the Arkansas Delta with his wife and throwing the couple's 18-month-old child down into a 15-foot levee, leaving the child to die a slow and painful death of exposure to the elements. After this horrific event, the same couple allegedly returned 3 days later and drowned their other child in a pond.

Last month, the Washington papers were filled with the news of a Maryland man who stands accused of killing his two small children and then reporting their deaths as the result of a carjacking.

Unfortunately, these kinds of incidents become all too frequent today. The list goes on and on.

The question I raise is, Are the tragedies I have recounted, and the scores of others that could be enumerated, related to the debate that we are having about partial-birth abortion?

I know there are people who will howl there is no connection. There will be people who would object strenuously to even the suggestion being made that the all-too-frequent violence toward children could be related to a society's permissive attitude toward a procedure that would allow a baby to be partially born and then killed.

But I would suggest that, in fact, there is a connection; that violence begets violence; that dehumanizing one part of mankind contributes to the dehumanizing of all vulnerable human beings—whether they are the disabled, whether they are the elderly, or whether they are the newborn.

Many Americans were shocked—I was shocked—to hear of the Princeton professor of bioethics, who was recently hired, assumed a seat on the faculty at Princeton University, one of our most distinguished universities—a professor of bioethics, ironically—who said:

I do not think it is always wrong to kill an innocent human being. Simply killing an infant is never equivalent to killing a person.

A professor of bioethics, at a major American university, who can say that publicly and be defended.

The questions Senator SANTORUM posed a few moments ago to the Senator from California—well, Professor Singer would not have had difficulty in answering the questions that he posed. He simply says: It is not always wrong to kill an innocent human being. Killing an infant is not the equivalent of killing a person.

Is this where we are going?

This professor believes parents should be allowed, 28 days after the birth of a severely disabled child, to decide whether or not they want to kill the child or keep the child.

It was suggested earlier in the opening comments of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the debate we are having about this kind of procedure, 40 years ago, would have been unheard of in our society. No one can doubt that in this so-called age of enlightenment we have moved so far in what we view as acceptable in the area of taking the lives of those who are innocent.

I listened very closely to the objections to this legislation as I presided in the chair during the opening statements of both sides earlier today. It seemed to me that every issue that was raised in opposition to this legislation was an effort to divert attention from the horror of this procedure.

There was the issue of the timing of the vote. Whether this vote occurs this week or whether this vote would have occurred last week or next week does not change the horror of what we are talking about; it does not change the terrible nature of a procedure that kills a child that is partially born.

I think every objection that has been raised is an effort to turn our attention away, divert our attention away from that chart that Senator SANTORUM had on the floor earlier today, which was far from being a cartoon but was very similar to medical charts.

Then there was the objection that we were practicing medicine; that the Senate was seeking to practice medicine; that we should not make this decision; that it is a decision that should be made within the profession.

It was Thomas Jefferson who said—and I will say it as close to his words as I can: The first and fundamental purpose of Government is the protection of innocent human life.

There is no more fundamental goal and object of Government than the protection of its citizens, the protection of human life. We could not find a subject more relevant to what Government ought to be doing than this subject.

To say we should not be involved in it because it is a medical issue is simply an effort to divert us from what really is the issue; that is, whether human life should be protected by law or not.

It is always ironic to me that those who say Government should not be involved in this issue are the first to say Government should pay for this procedure, or at least abortions in general.

Then there was the argument that the courts may rule this unconstitutional; therefore we should not even be voting on this because the courts, and the Supreme Court eventually, might rule this legislation unconstitutional.

Isn't that ironic? Because I just listened to 4 days of debate in which the constitutionality of campaign finance reform proposals were argued on the floor of this Senate. No one said, well, we shouldn't even debate this proposal because the courts—in fact, the evidence is the courts have and will rule many portions of the so-called Shays-Meehan legislation unconstitutional as a violation of the first amendment—but it did not prevent us from having a healthy, prolonged debate about the need for campaign finance reform.

I think it is an absolute red herring to say: Well, ultimately when the Supreme Court makes a definitive ruling on this subject, they may or may not rule that it is constitutional. That, in no way, abrogates our responsibility to debate it and to pass legislation that we believe is not only constitutional but in the best interests of this country.

Then it was said: Well, we have had repeated votes on this before. We have had repeated votes on a lot of issues. The fact is, we have new Senators now. We are going to have some different votes. We voted repeatedly on campaign finance reform. It is a debate, I suspect, that will go on year after year.

Because we have voted on this legislation before is no reason that we should not, once again, raise what many believe is the fundamental moral issue facing our culture today; that is, the issue of life.

Senator SANTORUM so eloquently demonstrated the folly of where this ultimately leads. If killing an unborn child, who is partially delivered, with only his or her head still within the body of the mother, is legal, where then do we draw the line? Could we have a more basic, fundamental issue of gravity before this body than that? So time and time again we will hear, during the debate, the effort to take our attention away from where the focus should be, and that is unborn child and this horrible procedure.

Every effort will be made to bring up the timing of the vote, the issue of whether or not this is in our purview, the practicing of medicine, which, of course, is very much within our purview, this issue of human life; the fact of what the courts have ruled or may yet rule on this or similar legislation—all of these are efforts to take the Nation's eyes off what this legislation is all about, and that is eliminating a barbaric, uncivilized procedure that no right-minded person can surely defend.

It is a Federal crime to harm a spotted owl or a bald eagle or even its egg, but a helpless infant, completely dependent on its mother, is not accorded the same protections we afford the spotted owl or the bald eagle.

In this body—I say to my colleagues who say we shouldn't take the time of the Senate to debate this issue—in this body, we debated an amendment to the Interior appropriations bill that would have prohibited the use of steel leg hold traps. Perhaps that was a debate we should have had, but I believe it pales in comparison to the gravity and the seriousness of the issue we are now debating. We would protect the spotted owl, the bald eagle, or the inhuman practice of steel leg hold traps, but we have trouble protecting infants who are pulled from their mother's womb by the legs and killed.

One of the finest writers in this Nation, I believe, hails from the State of Arkansas. He is a Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist whose name is Paul Greenberg. He is one of the most brilliant and, I think, articulate defenders of human life I have ever had the opportunity to read. I want to read for the record a couple of short paragraphs from the many columns this Pulitzer Prize winner has written:

As always, verbal engineering has preceded social engineering. The least of these must be aborted in words before it becomes permissible to abort them in deed. Those whom we want out of the way must first be dehumanized or something within might hold us back.

I wonder why there was such objection to even the term "partial-birth abortion." Clearly, it describes what this procedure is. I think the author, Mr. Greenberg, has said it right: We have to do the verbal engineering before we do the social engineering, because to use the term "partial-birth abortion" suggests the humanity of that child.

Then Greenberg wrote:

What once would have inspired horror is now the mundane, even the scientific, the advanced, the enlightened. What once might have inspired dread is now sanctioned in the elastic name of constitutional right and individual freedom.

That is what we are hearing today. We are hearing the defense of an indefensible procedure, sanctioned in the elastic name of constitutional right and individual freedom. When a question is raised, it is simply: I support Roe v. Wade; that is our right. What an elastic right it has become, to defend under Roe v. Wade a procedure that no one, no civilized person, could suggest is either good medicine or humane practice.

I ask my colleagues to not be diverted from the issue but to think about the baby, think about the procedure, this horrible procedure, think about the pain that little baby feels, think about what kind of country we want to be.

I yield the floor.

Mrs. BOXER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I will make a unanimous consent request. I hope it is OK with my colleague from Pennsylvania. I would like to speak for 2 minutes. I would like to ask unanimous consent that following that, Senator WELLSTONE take 10 minutes and, following that, Senator LIEBERMAN be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SANTORUM. If I may amend that to say, following that, Senator BROWNBACK would be recognized after Senator LIEBERMAN.

Mrs. BOXER. Absolutely.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will repeat the understanding.

Mrs. BOXER. I will repeat it, as amended by my friend from Pennsylvania. It would be BOXER for 2 minutes, WELLSTONE for 10 minutes.

How much time would Senator LIEBERMAN like to have?

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Ten minutes is fine.

Mrs. BOXER. Ten minutes for Senator LIEBERMAN, at which time we would go to Senator BROWNBACK for 10 minutes. That is my unanimous consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank the Chair.

Let me say, the Senator from Arkansas said the charge of government is to protect innocent life. We all want to protect every life. But when it comes to pregnancy, we do have a law that prevails in this country, which my friend may not agree with—I have a hunch he doesn't—called Roe v. Wade. It was decided in 1973. In that decision, the Court said when it comes to abortion, in the first trimester a woman has the right to choose, without any interference by the Government; and after that time, the States can regulate and restrict, but always the life of the woman and the health of the woman must be protected. That is Roe. That is, it seems to me, a very sound decision.

What we have in the Santorum bill is an out-and-out attack on that philosophy because there is no exception for health.

My friend from Illinois, Senator DURBIN, is trying to deal with that issue. I say to him, my compliments for working on his bill.

The bottom line for this Senator: I want to make sure if my daughter or anybody else's daughter is in an emergency situation, that the doctor or doctors do not have to open up the law books and decide whether or not they can do what is necessary to save the health and life of my daughter.

When one talks about innocent life, one must look at the faces involved. Here is a face of a beautiful young woman who wanted desperately to have children. I will tell her story later. She is an innocent person. Roe protects her; the Santorum bill leaves her out in the cold.

So the Senator from Pennsylvania can engage me in debates all he wants as to when I believe life begins and when I think a baby is born. To me, it is very obvious when a baby is born. When it leaves the mother, it is born. That is pretty straightforward.

I would prefer to leave the medical emergencies to the physicians. I think they know. This isn't a Roe procedure we are talking about. This is a procedure that the American College of Gynecologists and Obstetricians supports. They say they need it in their arsenal when they work to protect a woman's life and her health. The American Nurses Association—I could go on and on.

At this time, I yield the floor and will come back to this as often as we have to until this debate concludes.

I know Senator WELLSTONE has something to offer to the debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from California. I shall be brief. First, I ask unanimous consent that I be included as an original cosponsor of the Durbin amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I will describe the amendment one more time for those who are following this debate. I think it is important what the amendment says. It would ban all postviability abortions, except in cases where both the attending physician and an independent nontreating physician both certify in writing, in their medical judgment, the continuation of the pregnancy would threaten the mother's life or risk grievous injury to her physical health, with then a very strict and very clear definition of "grievous injury." That is what the amendment says.

It would actually reduce the number of late-term abortions. This legislation fits in with the constitutional parameters set forth by the Supreme Court for government restriction of abortion. This legislation retains the abortion option for mothers facing extraordinary medical conditions such as breast cancer or non-Hodgkin's lymphoma. At the same time, this amendment clearly limits the medical circumstances where postviability abortions are permitted. By doing that, this legislation protects fetal life in cases where the mother's health is not at high risk.

I came to the floor to speak about this amendment because I believe the Durbin amendment is, if you will, where I am kind of within me. This is what I believe. I think it makes sense to move in this direction. I think it makes sense to set up a strict standard. I think it is terribly important, when we look at postviability abortions, to have this test, to have this standard that has to be met. I am certainly not going to vote for an amendment or a piece of legislation which is so open-ended that where there clearly are the medical circumstances, the life of a mother is threatened, she can't go forward with this procedure.

Here is why I come to the floor. I don't understand why those who want to see some change would not support this compromise. If you are interested, I say to my colleagues, in trying to make a difference, if you are concerned about some of these late-term abortions, if you think there ought to be a more stringent standard, then that is what this Durbin amendment says. If you are interested in passing legislation, if you are interested in making a change, if you are interested in passing a bill that isn't going to be vetoed by the President, if you are interested in passing legislation, as opposed to one more time going through this political war and making this a big political issue, then you ought to support this amendment.

There are some people from the other side who think this amendment is a mistake. They don't want to see this amendment pass. I think this amendment is reasonable. I think it is a compromise that makes sense. I think it deserves our support.

I actually will make this not at all personal in terms of what other Senators have said. It is simply not true that there aren't many people in the Senate who are not concerned, that don't share some of the concerns that have been reflected by speeches given on the floor. Sheila and I have three children, and we also were confronted with two miscarriages—6 weeks and over 4 months. Anybody who goes through that knows what this debate is all about. I also know it is about a woman, a mother, a family having their right to choose. I am very nervous about a State coming in and telling a family they are going to make this decision. But I also understand the concerns, especially the concerns—again, I go to the language about postviability abortions. But here we have an amendment that says it will ban this except in the cases where the attending physician and an independent, nontreating physician certify that, in their medical judgment, if you don't do this, then you are going to see a threat to the mother's life or she is going to risk grievous injury to her physical health.

Isn't that reasonable? I am so tired of the sharp drawing of the line and the polarization and the accusations and the emotion and the bitterness. Why don't we pass this amendment? It is a reasonable compromise.

For those who want to overturn Roe v. Wade, that is never going to happen. That is the law of the land. But if we want to make a difference and we have this concern, I think we should support this Durbin amendment. I come to the floor of the Senate to thank him for his effort. I am comfortable with this amendment. I think it would make a difference. I think it would meet some of the agonizing concerns that I and other Senators have. I am not about to support legislation that is so open ended that it makes no allowance at all for the health of a mother. That is my position.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Connecticut is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I rise to support the amendment offered by my colleague from Illinois, Senator DURBIN. The underlying bill and this amendment bring us back to these morally perplexing questions. We heard it in the sincerity of the speech by the Senator from Minnesota and the sincerity of all of my colleagues speaking on either side, for either of these approaches.

This problem, more than any I have confronted in my public life, seems to me to join our personal value systems, our personal understanding about profound philosophical medical questions, such as "When does life begin?" with our role as legislators, with our role as lawmakers, with the limits of what our capacities are in making law and, ultimately, of course, also with what the reality is that the courts have stated as they have applied our Constitution, as the ultimate arbiter of our values and our rights in this country.

I support this proposal of Senator DURBIN's because, once again, I think it actually will do what I believe most everybody—I would say everybody—in this Chamber would like the law to do, and that is to reduce the number of abortions that are performed. I support it also because I think it can be upheld as constitutional, and I sincerely and respectfully doubt the underlying proposal, the so-called Partial-Birth Abortion Act, will be upheld as constitutional.

I remember I first dealt with these issues when I was a State senator in Connecticut in the 1970s, after the Roe

v. Wade decision was first passed down by the Supreme Court, and the swelter of conflicting questions: What is the appropriate place for my convictions about abortion, my personal conviction that potential life begins at conception and, therefore, my personal conviction that all abortions are unacceptable? How do I relate that to my role as a lawmaker, to the limits of the law, to the right of privacy that the Supreme Court found in Roe v. Wade?

This proposal that deals with partial-birth abortion, or intact dilation and extraction, brings us back once again to all of those questions. I have received letters from constituents in support of Senator SANTORUM's proposal. I have had calls and conversations with constituents and friends—people I not only respect and trust but love—who have urged me to support Senator SANTORUM's proposal.

When you hear the description of this procedure, it is horrific; it is abominable. There is a temptation, of course, to want to respond and do what the underlying proposal asks us to do in the law by adopting this law. And then I come back to my own personal opinion, which is every abortion, no matter when performed during pregnancy—this is my personal view—is unacceptable and is, in its way, a termination of potential life.

So as I step back and reach that conclusion, I have to place the proposal Senator SANTORUM puts before us and the one Senator DURBIN puts before us now in the context, one might say, of some humility of what the appropriate role for each of us is as lawmakers, what the appropriate role for this institution is as a lawmaking body, and what does the Court tell us is appropriate under the Constitution. I cannot reach any other conclusion, personally, than that Senator SANTORUM's proposal is not constitutional, that Senator DURBIN's is, and will, in fact, reduce the number of postviability abortions and, therefore, the number of abortions that are performed in our country.

That is why I have added my name as a cosponsor to Senator DURBIN's proposal.

The courts have created well-defined boundaries for legislative action. Under Planned Parenthood versus Casey, the Supreme Court held that "subsequent to viability, the State in promoting its interest in the potentiality of human life may, if it chooses, regulate, and even proscribe, abortion except where it is necessary, in appropriate medical judgment, for the preservation of the life or health of the mother." Partial birth legislation has been challenged 22 times in the courts resulting in 19 injunctions. The court-imposed constraints must be reflected in legislative efforts if we are going to achieve our goal of reducing late-term abortions. Enacting legislation that courts have struck down time and again is unlikely to reduce abortions.

Most recently, of course, that conclusion was reached by the Eighth Circuit Court on September 24, little less than a month ago, when the court said:

Several states have enacted statutes seeking to ban "partial-birth abortion." The precise wording of the statutes, and how far the statutes go in their attempts to regulate pre-viability abortions, differ from state to state. The results from constitutional challenges to the statutes, however, have been almost unvarying. In most of the cases that reached the federal courts, the courts have held the statutes unconstitutional.

So the constitutional impediment to the proposal Senator SANTORUM makes is that, notwithstanding the horrific nature of the so-called partial-birth abortion, the intact dilation and extraction method of abortion, you cannot prohibit by law, according to the Supreme Court of the United States, any particular form of terminating a pregnancy at all stages of the pregnancy. You can prohibit almost all forms of terminating a pregnancy after viability. That is what the Durbin amendment will do.

Incidentally, viability as medical science has advanced, has become an earlier and earlier time in the pregnancy.

There are exceptions.

Incidentally, the language in the Durbin proposal is not full of loopholes. It is very strict and demanding. It requires a certification by a physician that the continuation of the pregnancy would threaten the mother's life or risk grievous injury to her physical health. Those are serious requirements not meant to create a series of loopholes through which people intending to violate the law can go.

As has been said, a new provision has been added to this amendment which requires that an independent physician who will not perform nor be present at the abortion, who was not previously involved in the treatment of the mother, can affirm the first physician's opinion by a certification in writing.

A physician who knowingly violates the act may be subject to suspension of license and penalties as high as $250,000.

The limitations are specific. They are narrow. And they are, if I may say so, inflexible. In that sense, they respond in the most narrow way to the health exception required by the Supreme Court.

This is such a good proposal which Senator DURBIN has offered that I hope we may come back to it at some other time when it is not seen by the proponents of Senator SANTORUM's legislation as a negation of that legislation because this amendment in that sense never gets a fair vote or a clear vote. I think if we brought it up on its own, perhaps it could allow us the common ground on this difficult moral question toward which I think so many Members of the Chamber on both sides aspire. I hope we can find the occasion to do that.

I thank the Chair. I thank my friend from Illinois for the work he has done in preparing this amendment and bringing it before us.

I yield the floor.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I know Senator BROWNBACK is going to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator BROWNBACK is recognized.

Mrs. BOXER. Will the Senator yield for a unanimous-consent request so that Senator MIKULSKI could follow the Senator?

Mr. BROWNBACK. I have no objection.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous-consent that Senator MIKULSKI follow Senator BROWNBACK and be recognized for 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Thank you very much. I thank my colleague, Senator SANTORUM, for once again bringing this important issue in front of this body and to this floor.

Once again, I join Senator SANTORUM as an original cosponsor of this legislation to end partial-birth abortion in this country. Last year, the Senate failed to override the President's veto by three votes. President Clinton has twice vetoed similar measures in 1996 and 1997. We will continue, however, to raise this issue until the President signs this into law, or until this procedure is banned for forever.

I follow my colleague from Connecticut, who I rarely disagree with on matters of this nature. But this happens to be one of those which I do. I view this as an abhorrent procedure, as my colleague from Connecticut does as well. I also view it as a constitutional issue that we can raise, that we can deal with, and this body should deal with.

This goes to one of the most fundamental issues for us as a country, for us as a people, and that is when life begins and when it should be protected. These lives should be protected.

As I sat and listened to much of this discussion, I have to say I am sad as I listened to this discussion because it is so difficult, and it is such an awful thing—the birth of a child, and then it is killed by a blunt instrument.

I think some medical facts bear mentioning at this point in time.

Brain wave activity is detectable in human beings at 41 days after conception—just 41 days. A heartbeat is detectable 24 days after conception.

Consistently, State statutory or case law establishes a criteria of dead as the irreversible cessation of brain wave activity or spontaneous cardiac arrest.

In short, these are lives of individuals that are ended by this process. It is death. These are heartbeats and brain waves. They are stopped. They are denied life by this abhorrent procedure.

I would like to share some thoughts with you from a writer, a Jewish writer, Sandi Merl, when he was asked about this procedure of partial-birth abortion. He said this:

When I think of Partial-Birth Abortion, I hear only the first two words—"partial birth." To me, this procedure is not abortion. It is pre-term delivery followed by an act of destruction leading to a painful death . . . This is infanticide, clearly and simply, and must be stopped . . . This is about leaving no fingerprints when committing a murder of convenience.

That is why I will once again vote to end partial-birth abortion when it comes to the Senate floor. It is a cruel and shameless procedure which robs us of our humanity with every operation performed. It is not true that the anesthesia kills the child before removal from the womb. Instead, it is the fact that the baby is actually alive and experiences extraordinary pain when undergoing the operation.

Nor is this brutality only reserved for the most extreme circumstances. According to the executive director of the National Coalition of Abortion Providers, the "vast majority" of partial-birth abortions are performed in the fifth and sixth months of pregnancy on healthy babies of healthy mothers.

The facts speak for themselves. Bluntly put, this involves the death of a child in a brutal fashion, and all of it legally condoned by the current President of the United States.

Our institutionalized indifference to this extraordinary suffering makes me wonder, what has happened to our collective conscience as a nation? Are we really so callous that we knowingly condone this form of death for our very weakest, which we would never force on any adult, no matter how bad the crime? Even murderers on death row are given more consideration when executed. Yet our babies are painfully killed while conscious. This extraordinary cruelty should cause us to bow our heads in shame.

In a Wall Street Journal article, Peggy Noonan rightly labeled events such as that at Columbine High School as evidence of a much deeper problem, one she identified as the "culture of death." Quoting Pope John Paul II from his recent visit to Mexico City, he urged a rejection of this increasingly influential culture of death, instead embracing the dignity and principles of life for everyone.

It is obvious, especially after the Columbine tragedy, that a culture of death is playing in our land. Lately, the volume has been turned up very loudly. The words to this song include the extremes we know now by heart: Excessively high murder rates, the repeated rampages of violence by schoolchildren against schoolchildren, the unending tawdriness of television programming and other media, to name only a few cultural malfunctions.

As Noonan went on to observe:

No longer say, if you don't like it, change the channel. [People] now realize something they didn't realize ten years ago: There is no channel to change to.

Perhaps our increasingly violent culture has dulled our consciences and worn us down to this place where it no longer is politically expedient to protest the obscene suffering of infants. This explains why we continue to tolerate such a brutal practice as partial-birth abortion—what a dreadful name. I hope it isn't so. It is to this conscience that I appeal. I appeal to those who recognize the suffering and do not turn their heads, who take personal responsibility to correct this course of destruction, no matter the political consequences.

Please, please, open your hearts and listen. Hear that voice in there, the cries of thousands of little children, saying: Hear me, let me live.

Every once in a while, something happens which shakes us from our dullness. I want to share an event reported in the Washington Times that described an incident in April of this year in Cincinnati where a botched partial-birth abortion resulted in the birth of a little girl who lived for 3 hours. It is reported that the emergency room technician rocked and sang to her. After the inevitable death of the baby, the staff members grieved so badly that hours were spent in counseling and venting to get over the emotional trauma of the incident. One person observed that the real tragedy is that no laws were broken.

I hope we will continue to let ourselves be troubled by this event and by this practice and instead of turning a cold heart to it or saying, "I'm tied into a certain political position I can't change." I hope we will prayerfully consider and at night go and search ourselves and ask: Is this something we want to continue in America? Is this something I want to be a part of allowing to continue in America?

People of great tradition serve in this body who seek to protect and to serve the poorest of the poor and the weakest of the weak in our culture and society. They serve so admirably, and they speak glowingly about the need to protect those who are weakest. Yet, is it not this child in the womb who is the weakest of all in our society and in our culture? And that child cries right now. If we will just for a moment listen, we will hear the cry of that child. Can't we just for a moment turn from our locked in, dug in positions and say, OK, just for a moment I will listen, I will see if I can hear that small voice that is crying out to me: Just let me live. Let me have that God-given life that has been promised to me. Let me have that God-given life of which we speak so eloquently in our Declaration of Independence and our Constitution.

We hold these Truths to be self-evident, that all Men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life. . . .

Let's live. Let's stop this culture of death from going forward. Let's appeal to that inner voice that says let that life live.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise to speak against the Santorum amendment and on behalf of the Durbin amendment of which I am a cosponsor. I wish to speak on the merits of the amendment, but I will say a few words before I debate the amendment about an issue the Senator from Kansas has raised. I have had the opportunity to get to know and so respect the position of the Senator from Kansas.

The Senator spoke about the culture of death. I believe we should have a debate on the culture of death here in the Senate. I believe it should occur among Members privately, when we are having conversations in the lunchroom. I believe one of the things we should do as we end this century, which has been such a ghoulish, grim, violent century, is think about how we can affirm a life-giving culture.

I speak to my colleague from Kansas with all due respect and a desire to work with him on those issues. The Pope, the leader of my own faith, and the Catholic bishops of America have spoken about the culture of death. They say when we choose life, it is ending all forms of violence—the violence of poverty, hunger, armed conflict, weapons of war, the violence of drug trafficking, the violence of racism, and the violence of mindless damage to our environment.

In other statements from both the Pope and the bishops, they speak out on famine, starvation, the spread of drugs, domestic violence, and the denial of health care.

I say to my colleagues in the Senate, when we think about a defense against the culture of death, we need a broader view. We are need to talk not only about one amendment or one procedure—which I say is quite grim—but also to talk about what we are going to do to address these other critical issues.

We rejected a judicial nomination last week because of the nominee's position on the death penalty. I don't know how we can be against the culture of death and yet vote against a distinguished man who makes serious, prudent, judicial decisions on certain death penalty cases.

We defeated an arms control treaty, with no real serious opportunity for full debate and development of side agreements. There were legitimate "yellow flashing lights" about the agreement that deserved thorough debate. But we rushed to a vote with only hasty, last minute hearings and no opportunity for complete investigation of the treaty.

I say to my colleagues, let's look at what we are going to do to protect our own families and how we can look at promoting a culture of life. I say that with sincerity. I say it with the utmost respect for people whose position I will disagree with on this amendment. We need to reach out to each other, think these issues through, and put aside message amendments, put aside tactical advantages, put aside partisan lines.

I say to my colleague from Kansas, I know he is deeply concerned about the issues of culture in our own country. Many of those issues I do share. I reach out and say to my colleagues, let's think through what we are doing.

Having said that, I rise to support the Durbin amendment. In this debate, I say to my colleagues, the first question is: Who really should decide whether someone should have an abortion or not? I believe that decision should not be made by government. I believe when government interferes in decisionmaking, we have ghoulish, grim policies.

Look at China, with their one child/one family official practice. The government of China mandated abortions.

Look at Romania under the vile leadership of Ceausescu, who said any woman of childbearing age had to prove she was not on any form of birth control or natural method. They were mandated to have as many children as they could.

I don't want government interfering. I think government should be silent. We have a Supreme Court decision in Roe v. Wade. We should respect that decision. I think it is in the interests of our country that government now be silent on this. We should move forward. Medical practitioners should make decisions on medical matters. It should not be left up to politicians with very little scientific or theological training.

There is a substantial difference on when life begins. Science and theologians disagree on this. Some say at the moment of conception. St. Thomas Aquinas, in my own faith, said the soul comes into a male in 6 weeks, but it takes 10 weeks for the soul to enter the body of a woman. We would take issue with Thomas Aquinas on that. Our Supreme Court said that given conflicting scientific viewpoints, fetal viability should determine to what extent a state may limit access to abortion.

The Durbin amendment is consistent with the Court's framework. It would ban all post-viability abortions except when the life or health of the woman is at risk. The Durbin amendment provides clear guidelines, which are narrowly but compassionately drawn, to allow doctors to use a variety of procedures, based on medical necessity in a particular woman's situation. It must be medically necessary in the opinion of not one but two doctors. Both the doctor who recommends this as a procedure and then an independent physician must certify that this is the medically necessary and appropriate course for a particular woman facing a health crisis.

This is why I think the Durbin amendment is a superior amendment. It acknowledges the grave seriousness of the possibility of a medical crisis in a late-term pregnancy that can only be resolved with the family and the physician. To single out only one procedure means other procedures could be used, equally as grim. What we want to do is preserve the integrity of the doctor-patient relationship, and make sure there is no loophole, by requiring two physicians to independently evaluate the woman's medical needs.

So I believe the Durbin amendment is a superior way to address this most serious issue, and I intend to support the Durbin amendment. I recommend to my colleagues that they, too, give the Durbin amendment serious consideration.

Let me say again what I think this debate is about. I believe it is about the right of women facing the most tragic and rare set of complications affecting her pregnancy to make medically appropriate or necessary choices.

This is not a debate that should take place in the U.S. Senate. This is a discussion that should remain for women, their health care providers, their families and their clergy. The Senate has no standing, no competency and no business interfering in this most private and anguishing of decisions a woman and her family can possibly face.

That is why I so strongly oppose the Santorum bill. It would violate to an alarming degree the right of women and their physicians to make major medical decisions.

And that is why I rise in strong support of the Durbin amendment. I support the Durbin alternative for four reasons.

First, it respects the constitutional underpinnings of Roe v. Wade.

Second, it prohibits all post-viability abortions.

Third, it provides an exception for the life and health of a woman which is both intellectually rigorous and compassionate.

Finally, it leaves medical decisions in the hands of physicians—not politicians.

The Durbin alternative addresses this difficult issue with the intellectual rigor and seriousness of purpose it deserves. We are not being casual. We are not angling for political advantage. We are not looking for cover.

We are offering the Senate a sensible alternative—one that will stop post-viability abortions, while respecting the Constitution. We believe that it is an alternative that reflects the views of the American people.

The Durbin amendment respects the Supreme Court's ruling in the Roe v. Wade decision. When the Court decided Roe, it was faced with the task of defining "When does life begin?" Theologians and scientists differ on this. People of good will and good conscience differ on this.

So the Supreme Court used viability as its standard. Once a fetus is viable, it is presumed to have not only a body, but a mind and spirit. Therefore it has standing under the law as a person.

The Roe decision is quite clear. States can prohibit abortion after viability, so long as they permit exceptions in cases involving the woman's life or health. Let me be clear. Under Roe, states can prohibit most late term abortions. And many states have done so.

In my own state of Maryland, we have a law that does just that. It was adopted by the Maryland General Assembly and approved by the people of Maryland by referendum. It prohibits post viability abortions. As the Constitution requires, it provides an exception to protect the life or health of the woman.

Like the Maryland law, the Durbin alternative respects that key holding of Roe. It says that after the point of viability, no woman should be able to abort a viable fetus. The only exception can be when the woman faces a threat to her life or serious and debilitating risk to her health.

The bill before us—the Santorum bill—only bans one particular abortion procedure at any point in a pregnancy. By violating the Supreme Court's standard on viability, this language would in all probability be struck down by the courts.

In fact, this language has already been struck down in many states because of this very reason. The proponents of the legislation know this.

The Durbin alternative, though, bans all post viability abortions. It doesn't create loopholes by allowing other procedures to be used.

I believe there is no Senator who thinks a woman should abort a viable fetus for a frivolous, non-medical reason. It does not matter what procedure is used. It is wrong, and we know it.

The Durbin alternative bans those abortions. It is a real solution.

On the other hand, S. 1692, proposed by Senator Santorum and others, does not stop a single abortion. For those who think they support this approach, know that it is both hollow and ineffective.

S. 1692 attempts to ban one particular abortion procedure. All it does, though, is divert doctors to other procedures. Those procedures may pose greater risks to the woman's health. But let me be clear—late term abortions would still be allowed to happen.

And for that reason, the Santorum approach is ineffective.

The Durbin amendment provides a tough and narrow health exception that is intellectually rigorous, but it is compassionate as well. It will ensure that women who confront a grave health crisis late in a pregnancy can receive the treatment they need.

The Amendment defines such a crisis as a "severely debilitating disease or impairment caused or exacerbated by pregnancy." And we don't leave it up to her doctor alone. We require that a second, independent physician also certify that the procedure is the most appropriate for the unique circumstances of the woman's life.

But I want to be very clear in this. The Durbin amendment does not create a loophole with its health exception. We are not loophole shopping when we insist that an exception be made in the case of serious and debilitating threats to a woman's physical health. This is what the Constitution requires and the reality of women's lives demands.

Let's face it, women do sometimes face profound medical crises during pregnancy. Some of these traumas are caused or aggravated by the pregnancy itself. I'm referring to conditions like severe hypertension or heart conditions.

I'm referring to pre-existing conditions—like diabetes or breast cancer—that require treatments which are incompatible with continuing pregnancy. Would anyone argue that these are not profound health crises?

The Durbin amendment recognizes that to deny these women access to the abortion that could save their lives and physical health would be unconscionable. When the continuation of the pregnancy is causing profound health problems, a woman's doctor must have every tool available to respond.

I readily acknowledge that the procedure described by my colleagues on the other side is a grim one. I do not deny that. But there are times when the realities of women's lives and health dictates that this medical tool be available.

I support the Durbin alternative because it leaves medical decisions up to doctors—not legislators. It relies on medical judgement—not political judgement—about what is best for a patient.

Not only does the Santorum bill not let doctors be doctors, it criminalizes them for making the best choice for their patients. Under this bill a doctor could be sent to prison for up to two years for doing what he or she thinks is necessary to save a woman's life or health. I say that's wrong.

In fact, those who oppose the Durbin amendment say it is flawed precisely because it leaves medical judgements up to physicians.

Well, who else should decide? Would the other side prefer to have the government make medical decisions? I disagree with that. I believe we should not substitute political judgement for medical judgement.

We need to let doctors be doctors. This is my principle whether we are talking about reproductive choice or any health care matter.

Physicians have the training and expertise to make medical decisions. They are in the best position to recommend what is necessary or appropriate for their patients. Not bureaucrats. Not managed care accountants. And certainly not legislators.

The Durbin alternative provides sound public policy, not a political soundbite. It is our best chance to address the concerns many of us have about late term abortions. The President has already vetoed the Santorum bill and other similar legislation in earlier Congresses. I believe he will veto it again.

But today we have a chance to do something real. We have an opportunity to let logic and common sense win the day. We can do something which I know reflects the views of the American people.

Today we can pass the Durbin amendment. We can say that we value life and that we value our Constitution. We can make clear that a viable fetus should not be aborted. We can say that we want to save women's lives and women's health. The only way to do all this, Mr. President, is to vote for the Durbin amendment.

I urge my colleagues to support the Durbin amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

AMENDMENT NO. 2320 TO THE TEXT INTENDED TO BE STRICKEN BY AMENDMENT 2319

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California [Mrs. BOXER] proposes an amendment numbered 2320 to the text intended to be stricken by amendment 2319.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:
SEC. . SENSE OF CONGRESS.

It is the Sense of the Congress that, consistent with the rulings of the Supreme Court, a woman's life and health must always be protected in any reproductive health legislation passed by Congress.

AMENDMENT NO. 2321 TO AMENDMENT NO. 2320
(Purpose: To express the sense of the Congress in support of the Supreme Court's decision in Roe v. Wade)

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN] proposes amendment numbered 2321 to amendment No. 2320.

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . SENSE OF CONGRESS CONCERNING ROE V. WADE.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) reproductive rights are central to the ability of women to exercise their full rights under Federal and State law;

(2) abortion has been a legal and constitutionally protected medical procedure throughout the United States since the Supreme Court decision in Roe v. Wade (410 U.S. 113 (1973));

(3) the 1973 Supreme Court decision in Roe v. Wade established constitutionally based limits on the power of States to restrict the right of a woman to choose to terminate a pregnancy; and

(4) women should not be forced into illegal and dangerous abortions as they often were prior to the Roe v. Wade decision.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) Roe v. Wade was an appropriate decision and secures an important constitutional right; and

(2) such decision should not be overturned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

Mr. HARKIN. I will ask it again, Mr. President.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I believe I had the floor. I had the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will note the Senator lost the floor when he asked for the yeas and nays.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I withdraw my request for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. HARKIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, the amendment I have offered will basically express the sense of the Congress in support of the Supreme Court's decision in Roe v. Wade. With all of the amendments that keep coming up and trying to chip away at Roe v. Wade, Senator BOXER and I decided that it was important for us to see if there was support in the Congress for Roe v. Wade.

I know there are some groups around the United States that believe Roe v. Wade should be overturned. I do not believe that. I think it was an eminently wise decision. As time goes on, and as we reflect back, the decision enunciated by Justice Blackmun becomes more and more profound and more elegant in its simplicity and its straightforwardness.

However, it seems as we get wrapped up in these emotionally charged debates on partial birth abortion, we lose sight of what it is that gave women their full rights under the laws of our Nation and our States.

I was interested a couple of minutes ago in what Senator MIKULSKI pointed out; that the eminent theologian, St. Thomas Aquinas, had basically stipulated that in soul man—that is the putting of the soul in the human body—occurred 6 weeks after conception for a man but 10 weeks after conception for a woman. That was a theology that held for a long time.

I studied Saint Thomas Aquinas when I was in Catholic school. He was an eminent theologian, as I said. We look back and we say: That is ridiculous. The very division of 6 weeks for a man and 10 weeks for a woman is kind of ridiculous. Medical science has progressed. We know a lot of things they did not know at that time. What will we know 50 years from now that we do not know today?

Women, through the centuries, as we have developed more and more the concept of the rights of man—and I use man in the terms of mankind, all humans, the human race—that as we enlarge the concept of human rights—those rights we have that cannot legitimately be interfered with or trespassed upon by the power of any government—as we progressed in our thinking about those human rights, all too often women were left out of the equation.

It was not until recent times, even in our own country, that women had the right to own property. It was not until recent times that women even had the right to vote in this country, not to say what rights are still denied women in other countries around the globe.

As we progressed in our thinking of human rights, we have come a long way from Thomas Aquinas who said that for some reason a man gets a soul a lot earlier than a woman gets a soul. Yes, we've come a long way.

I believe our concept of human rights now is basically that human rights applies to all of us, regardless of gender, regardless of position at birth, regardless of nationality or station in life, race, religion, nationality; that human rights inure to the person.

One of the expansions of those human rights was for women to have the right to choose. After all, it is the female who bears children. That particular right inures to a woman. It was the particular genius of Roe v. Wade that Justice Blackmun laid out an approach to reproductive rights that basically guarantees to the woman in the first trimester a total restriction on the State's power to interfere with that decision. In the second trimester, the State may, under certain inscriptions, interfere. And in the third trimester, after the further decision of the Casey case, the States may interfere to save the life or health of the mother.

We have a situation now where women in our country are given—I should not use the word “given”—but have attained their equal rights and their full human rights under law.

That was Roe v. Wade. Since that time, many in the legislatures of our States and many in this legislature, the Congress of the United States—the House and the Senate—have sought repeatedly to overturn Roe v. Wade; if not totally to overturn it, but to chip away at it—a little bit here, a little bit there, with the final goal to overturn Roe v. Wade.

According to CRS, only 10 pieces of legislation were introduced in either the House or Senate before the Roe decision. Since 1973, more than 1,000 separate legislative proposals have been introduced. The majority of these bills have sought to restrict abortions.

Unfortunately, what is often lost in the rhetoric and in some of this legislation—is the real significance of the Roe decision.

The Roe decision recognized the right of women to make their own decisions about their reproductive health. The decision whether to bear a child is profoundly private and life altering. As the Roe Court understood, without the right to make autonomous decisions about pregnancy, a woman could not participate freely and equally in society.

I do not believe that any abortion is desirable—nobody does. As Catholic and a father, I've struggled with it myself. However, I do not believe that it is appropriate to insist that my personal views be the law of the land.

I think there are some things that Congress can do to prevent unintended pregnancy and reduce abortion by increasing funding for family planning, mandating insurance coverage for contraception and supporting contraception research.

Mr. President, I strongly urge my colleagues to support this resolution. I believe it would establish the one important principle that we can agree on—that despite the difference in our views, we will not strip away a woman's fundamental right to choose.

So I think we need to make it clear, we need to make it clear that we have no business—especially we in the Congress of the United States—have no business interfering with a woman's fundamental right to choose.

Mrs. BOXER. Would my friend yield for a question?

Mr. HARKIN. Without losing my right to the floor, I would be delighted to yield for a question.

Mrs. BOXER. I am very grateful to the Senator from Iowa for this amendment. It is interesting to me; in all the years I have been in the Senate, we have never had a straight up-or-down vote on whether this Senate agrees with the Supreme Court decision that gave women the right to choose.

Mr. HARKIN. Yes.

Mrs. BOXER. So I am very grateful to my friend for giving us a chance to talk about that because I wonder if my friend was aware that prior to the legalization of abortion, which is what Roe did in 1973, the leading cause of maternal death in this Nation was illegal abortion. Was my friend aware of that?

Mr. HARKIN. Yes, I was. I didn't know the exact figure, but I knew many women died or were permanently injured and disabled because of illegal abortions performed in this country—because they had no other option.

Mrs. BOXER. Exactly.

Mr. HARKIN. I say to my colleague from California, I want to thank her for her stalwart support and defense of Roe v. Wade through all these years. I follow in her footsteps, I can assure you. But I remember as a kid growing up in a small town in rural Iowa, that it was commonplace knowledge, if you had the money, and you were a young woman who became pregnant, you could go out of State; you could go someplace and have an abortion. But if you were poor and had nowhere else to go, you went down to sought out someone who would do an illegal abortion. Those are the women who suffered and died and were permanently disfigured.

Mrs. BOXER. I say to my friend, I remember those days. Further, even when women who did have the wherewithal, sometimes they resorted to a back-alley abortion and paid the money—

Mr. HARKIN. Sure.

Mrs. BOXER. Under the table and risked their lives and their ability to have children later and were scarred for life.

Mr. HARKIN. Sure.

Mrs. BOXER. So the Roe v. Wade decision, as my friend has pointed out, in his words, was an “elegant decision.” And why does he say that? Because it did balance the mother's rights with the rights of the fetus. Because it said, previability, the woman had the unfettered right to choose and in the later-term the State could regulate.

Roe v. Wade was a “Solomon-like” decision in that sense. I again want to say to my friend, I greatly appreciate him offering this second-degree amendment to my amendment. I think it is important for us to support Roe v. Wade in this Congress. I think if we do, it will be a relief to many women and families in this country who are concerned that that basic right might be taken away because there are many people running for the highest office in the land who do not support Roe, who want to see it overturned, who might well appoint Judges to the Court who would take away this right to choose, which is hanging by a thread in Court as it is. So I, most of all, thank my friend for offering this amendment.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the Senator from California. I thank her for the question. I will elaborate on that in just a minute.

Again, I say to the Senator from California, we do need to send a strong message that the freedom to choose is no more negotiable than the freedom to speak or the freedom to worship. It is nonnegotiable.

This ruling of Roe v. Wade has touched all of us in very different ways. As the Senator from California just pointed out, it is estimated that as many as 5,000 women died yearly from illegal abortions before Roe.

In the 25 years since Roe, the variety and level of women's achievements have reached unprecedented levels. The Supreme Court recently observed:

The ability of women to participate equally in the economic and social life of the Nation has been facilitated by their ability to control their reproductive lives.

I will also quote Justices O'Connor, Kennedy, and Souter in the Casey case:

At the heart of liberty is the right to define one's own concept of existence, of meaning, of the universe, and of the mystery of human life. Beliefs about these matters could not define the attributes of personhood were they formed under compulsion of the State.

I think that is what this is all about—whether we will use the heavy hand of the State to enforce certain individuals' concepts of when life begins, how life begins, when can a person have an abortion, when can a person not. People are divided on this issue. Some people are uncertain about it. I quarrel with myself all the time about it because it is as multifaceted as there are individual humans on the face of the Earth.

I would not sit in judgment on any person who would choose to have an abortion, especially a woman who went through the terrifying, agonizing, soul-wrenching procedure of having a late-term abortion because her health and her life was in danger. That must be one of the most soul-wrenching experiences a person can go through.

And you want me to sit in judgment on that? The Senator from Pennsylvania wants to be able to say: Here it is. You can't deviate from that. I am sorry; that is not our role; that is not the role of the Government or the State.

That is why, again, I believe it is particularly important that we cut through the fog that surrounds this issue and get to the heart of it, which is Roe v. Wade.

I used the word “elegant.” It means simplistic, simplicity. Elegant: Not convoluted, not hard to understand, not shrouded and complex, but elegant, straightforward, simple in its definition. That is Roe v. Wade.

There are now those who want to come along and change it and make it complex, indecipherable, benefiting maybe one person one way, adding to the detriment of another person another way, so that we are right back where we were before Roe v. Wade.

So I believe very strongly that we need to express ourselves on this sense-of-the-Senate resolution. That is why I will be asking for a rollcall vote at the appropriate time because it is going to be important for us to send a message on how important it is to preserve a woman's fundamental right to choose under Roe v. Wade.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HARKIN. I am delighted to yield for a question.

Mr. DURBIN. I want to make sure it is clear, for those who may be following this debate, that the underlying bill is the Santorum bill, which would ban a particular procedure at any point in the stage of pregnancy.

Mr. HARKIN. Right.

Mr. DURBIN. This type of approach has been stricken, I believe, in 19 different States as unconstitutional.

I offered a substitute which related strictly to late-term abortions, those occurring after viability, after a fetus could survive, and said that we would only allow an abortion in an emergency circumstance where the life of the mother was at stake or the situation where continuing the pregnancy ran the risk of grievous physical injury to the mother. I believe, of course, the Court will, if it comes to that, ultimately decide what I have offered, being postviability, is consistent with Roe v. Wade which drew that line. Before that fetus is viable and can survive outside the womb, the woman has certain rights. When the viability occurs, then those rights change, according to Roe v. Wade.

To make sure I understand, the Senator from Iowa is offering an amendment that is not antagonistic to my amendment but, rather, wants to put the Senate on record on the most basic question about Roe v. Wade as to whether or not the Senate supports it.

My question to the Senator is this: Is the Senator saying in his amendment, in the conclusion of the amendment, Roe v. Wade was an appropriate decision and secures an important constitutional right, and such decision should not be overturned—that is the conclusion of his amendment—is he saying that if we are to keep abortion legal in this country and safe under Roe v. Wade, we vote for his amendment and those who believe abortion should be outlawed or prohibited or illegal would vote against his amendment? Is that the choice?

Mr. HARKIN. The Senator from Illinois has stated it elegantly, very simply and straightforward. That is the essence of the amendment, and the Senator is correct. Voting on the amendment, which I offered, a vote in favor of my amendment would be a vote to uphold Roe v. Wade and a woman's right to choose. A vote against it would be a vote to overturn Roe v. Wade and to take away a woman's right to choose.

The amendment I have offered would be consistent with the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Senator from Iowa.

A further question to the Senator from Iowa, if he will yield. The Senator is from a neighboring State. There are many parts of Iowa that look similar to my State, particularly in downstate Illinois. On this controversial issue—there are those who have heartfelt strong feelings against abortion, Roe v. Wade; those who have heartfelt strong feelings on the other side in support of a woman's right to choose and Roe v. Wade—I have found the vast majority of people I meet somewhere in between. It is my impression most people in America have concluded abortion should be safe and legal, but it should have some restrictions. I ask the Senator from Iowa, has the Senator from Iowa had that same experience in his State of Iowa?

Mr. HARKIN. I answer the Senator affirmatively. I have had that same experience, yes.

Mr. DURBIN. If I might further ask the Senator from Iowa a question, what he is saying is this vote on the Harkin amendment tries to answer the first and most basic question: Should abortion procedures in America remain safe and legal, consistent with Roe v. Wade, should we acknowledge a woman's right of privacy and her right to choose with her physician and her family and her conscience as to the future of her pregnancy within the confines of Roe v. Wade? That is the bottom line, is it not, of his amendment?

Mr. HARKIN. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. DURBIN. I say to the Senator, in closing, I think this is an important vote. I think we have walked around this issue in 15 different directions in the time I have served on Capitol Hill. I commend the Senator from Iowa for offering this amendment. I think it gets to the heart of the question as to those who would basically outlaw abortion in America and those who believe Roe v. Wade should be continued.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank my colleague and friend from Illinois for enlightening this issue and for clearly drawing what this amendment is all about.

Again, a vote in favor of the amendment which I have offered states we will support Roe v. Wade, that Roe v. Wade should be the law, that a woman's right to choose should be kept under the provisions of Roe v. Wade, as further elaborated in the Casey case. A vote against my amendment would say you would be in favor of overturning Roe v. Wade and taking away a woman's fundamental right to choose.

I agree with the Senator from Illinois.

In closing my remarks, knowing others want to speak, the Roe decision recognized the right of women to make their own decisions about their reproductive health. The decision is a profoundly private, life-altering decision. As the Roe Court understood, without the right to make autonomous decisions about pregnancy, a woman could not participate freely and equally in our society.

I think there are some things we ought to be doing to prevent unintended pregnancies and reduce abortions. We could, for example, increase funding for family planning. Every time we try to do that, there are those who are opposed to increasing funding for family planning. We could mandate insurance coverage for contraception. That could help. But, no, there are those who say we shouldn't do that either. We could have more support for contraception research. There are those who say, no, we shouldn't do that either. And those who are opposed, by and large, to increasing funding for family planning and insurance coverage for contraception and contraception research are the same ones who want to overturn Roe v. Wade or take away a woman's right to have a late-term abortion in the case of grievous health or life-threatening situations.

A little bit off the subject of Roe v. Wade, but which I think is particularly important to point out, is that Saturday, October 23, 3 days from today, will mark the 1-year anniversary of the assassination of Dr. Barnett Slepian, who was murdered in his home in Amherst, NY, 1 year ago this Saturday. As most are aware, there have been five sniper attacks on U.S. and Canadian physicians who perform abortions since 1994. Each of these attacks has occurred on or close to Canada's Remembrance Day, November 11.

All of the victims in these attacks were shot in their homes by a hidden sniper who used a long-range rifle. Dr. Slepian tragically was killed. Three other physicians were seriously wounded in these attacks.

I am reading a letter sent to the majority leader, Senator LOTT, dated October 18, signed by the executive director of the National Abortion Federation, the president of Planned Parenthood Federation of America, the executive director of the American Medical Women's Association, the executive director of Medical Students for Choice, the president and CEO of the Association of Reproductive Health Professionals, and the executive director of Physicians for Reproductive Choice and Health. All of these signed the letter to Senator LOTT spelling out what I said. The letter goes on:

Federal law enforcement officials are urging all women's health care providers, regardless of their geographic location, to be on a high state of alert and to take appropriate protective precautions during the next several weeks. Security directives have been issued to all physicians who perform abortions for clinics or in their private practices, and to all individuals who have been prominent on the abortion issue.

Senator Lott, on behalf of our physician members, and in the interest of the public safety of the citizens of the US and Canada, we urge you to reconsider the scheduling of a floor debate on S-1692 at this time. As you are aware, each time this legislation has been considered, extremely explicit, emotional and impassioned debate has been aroused.

We have grave fears that the movement of this bill during this particularly dangerous period has the potential to inflame anti-abortion violence that might result in tragic consequences.

We sincerely hope that you will take the threats of this October-November period as seriously as we do, and that you will use your considerable influence to ensure that the Senate does not inadvertently play into the hands of extremists who might well be inspired to violence during this time. We urge you to halt the movement of S. 1692. Please work with us to ensure that the senseless acts of violence against U.S. citizens are not repeated in 1999.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of this letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OCTOBER 18, 1999.

Hon. TRENT LOTT,

DEAR SENATOR LOTT: Saturday, October 23, will mark the one-year anniversary of the assassination of Dr. Barnett Slepian, who was murdered in his home in Amherst, New York. As you are undoubtedly aware, there have been five sniper attacks on U.S. and Canadian physicians who perform abortions since 1994. Each of these attacks has occurred on or close to Canada's Remembrance Day, November 11. All of the victims in these attacks were shot in their homes by a hidden sniper who used a long-range rifle. Senator Lott, on behalf our physician members, and in the interest of the public safety of the citizens of the US and Canada, we urge you to reconsider the scheduling of a floor debate on S-1692 at this time. As you are aware, each time this legislation has been considered, extremely explicit, emotional, and impassioned debate has been aroused. Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, there is one other thing I want to mention. I am going to read a letter because this person is a personal friend of mine, someone I have gotten to know over the years. I believe the Senator from California has a picture of Kim Koster. I ask a page to bring me the picture back here, if I may have that.

This photo is Kim Koster and her husband, Dr. Barrett Koster. They are both friends of mine, whom I have known for I guess about 3 or 4 years. I am going to read her letter in its entirety:

My name is Kim Koster. My husband, Dr. Barrett Koster, and I have been married for more than seven years. We have known since before we were married that we wanted very much to have children.

To our joy, in November of 1996 we discovered that we were expecting. The news was a thrill, to us and to our family and friends. We were showered with gifts and hand-me-downs, new toys, books and love. Barry's family gave us a 19th-century cradle which had rocked his family to sleep since before his grandmother Sophie was born more than 100 years ago.

Our first ultrasound was scheduled a little more than four months into the pregnancy. On Thursday, February 20, we saw our baby and spent five short minutes rejoicing in the new life, and then the blow fell. The radiologist informed us that he had "significant concerns" about the size of the baby's head. His diagnosis was the fatal neural tube defect known as anencephaly, or the lack of a brain. After four months of excitement and joy, our world came crashing down around us.

Once the diagnosis was made, there was no further medical treatment available for me in our hometown, and we were referred to the University of Iowa Hospitals and Clinics in Iowa City. Our first OB appointment there was set for Monday morning. My husband and I spent that long weekend, the longest of our lives, doing research on anencephaly, talking with family and friends, and hearing personal stories about the fate of anencephalic babies.

In Iowa City, a genetics OB specialist examined a new ultrasound and immediately confirmed the diagnosis. An alpha-feto-protein blood test and amniotic fluid sample only drove the truth harder home. Our fetus had only a rudimentary brain. There were blood vessels, which enabled the heart to beat, and ganglion, which enabled basic motor function. There was no cerebellum and no cerebral cortex. There was no skull above the eyes.

I had been preparing for pregnancy for more than a year with diet, exercise and prenatal vitamins, including the dose of folic recommended to prevent neural tube defects. Yet we still lost our child to one of the most severe and lethal birth defects known. Our baby had no brain—would never hear the Mozart and Bach I played for it every day on our great-grandmother's piano, would never look up into our eyes or snuggle close to our hearts, would never even have an awareness of its own life.

On Tuesday, February 25, 1997, my husband and I chose to end my pregnancy with a common abortion procedure known as "D and E." As difficult as it was, I literally thank God that I had that option. As long as there are families who face the devastating diagnosis we received, abortions must remain a safe and legal alternative.

In 1998, Barry and I discovered to our delight that I was pregnant again. Although we were overjoyed, our happiness was tempered by the knowledge that we had a 1-in-25 chance of a second anencephalic pregnancy. This time, we asked our loved ones to hold off on the baby gifts, we played no Bach, and every week was a mix of excitement and unavoidable worry. And on July 17, 1998, an ultrasound revealed the worst. We had a second anencephalic pregnancy—a second daughter lost to this lethal birth defect.

Fortunately for my medical care, the so-called "partial birth abortion" bans have been vetoed by President Clinton, and my doctors were able to provide me with a safe, compassionate procedure that brought this second tragic pregnancy to an end. And thanks to those doctors and their ability to give me that care, my recovery has been rapid—enabling Barry and I to plan to try again.

But if this bill becomes law, we would not be able to do so. For the chances of our having a third anencephalic pregnancy are all the way up to 1 in 4, and this bill would ban any procedures that would help us. It would force me to carry another doomed child through all nine months. That idea is far more horrifying than all the unreal anti-choice rhetoric that can be manufactured, for the reality is that this is a terrible law, a grievous interference between doctor and patient, and would only compound the tragedy and heartache faced by families like us.

Please protect the health of women and families like mine, and reject S. 1692.

There is nothing one can add to that. S. 1692 would say that the Kim Kosters in families across the country that we legislators—I am not a doctor, I am not a theologian, I am not a psychiatrist or a psychologist; but the bill proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania would say that we know more than all of them, that we stand in the judgment seat of the Mrs. Kosters: We are going to decide for you.

Attorneys? I am an attorney. Maybe some of us are teachers, I don't know. Maybe some are social workers or business people. There are a variety of different people here on the floor of the Senate. But somehow we get to tell you: Mrs. Koster, you and your husband have no right to decide. We are going to do it for you. Our decision is, no matter what—even under these terrible circumstances—you are going to have to carry that to term and bear the consequences of that. Maybe there are some in this body who want to sit in that kind of judgment seat. Count me out. Count me out. I leave these decisions to Kim and her husband, to her doctor, to her own faith, to her own religion to make those very profound, anxiety-producing, soul-wrenching decisions. That is why I have fought for this amendment—to state loudly and clearly that Roe v. Wade gave women that right and we don't want it overturned.

I yield the floor.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, will my friend hold the floor for a moment so I may ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield the floor?

Mr. HARKIN. I yield for a question. I didn't realize. I apologize.

Mrs. BOXER. Thank you very much.

I say to my friend that I thank him for sharing the story on the floor of the Senate. He has the photo of Kim and her husband up there. He read the story into the RECORD. I think it is very appropriate that the Senator from Iowa do so because this is a couple whom he knows.

I am, in a way, happy that my friend was not on the floor when the Senator from Pennsylvania used some very tough words in talking about this procedure and calling doctors who perform it executioners.

I say to my friend, in light of the poignant story he read to us, when he thinks of the doctor who helped this couple through a traumatic, horrific experience twice, what are his feelings about the doctor who performed that particular procedure?

Mr. HARKIN. I am sorry if someone referred to them as executioners. That, I think, is totally inappropriate and inflammatory and could lead to tragic consequences in our country.

I don't know the doctors who helped Kim Koster. But from talking to her, they were sensitive. They are doctors who wanted Kim and her husband to know every facet of what was happening and wanted them to make their own decision. They are doctors who have a lot of compassion and professionalism and, under the legal framework, were able to help this couple get through a very bad time and enabled them to move on with their lives and to plan on another child.

If that had not been there—if we had taken Roe v. Wade away or if we had adopted S. 1692—I don't know what would have happened to Kim Koster and her husband or whether they would be here today planning to try again to raise a family.

I say to my colleague from California that I believe Kim Koster is an extremely brave individual. In fact, I would say to anyone who wants to talk to her about what happened to her, she is out in the reception room right now. She would be glad to tell them why it is important to not only adhere to Roe v. Wade but to defeat S. 1692 that would have taken away her reproductive rights and under very tragic circumstances.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I ask my friend a final question. Will my friend be willing to read one more time, if he can find it, the statement that was made by Justices O'Connor, Kennedy, and Souter, all Justices appointed under a Republican President, when they made their statement on Casey because I really hope colleagues will listen to this. I think if they listen to it, they will vote for my friend's amendment to reaffirm Roe v. Wade and will also be against the Santorum underlying bill.

If my friend would repeat that, I would greatly appreciate it.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank my friend from California because I believe this statement by Justices O'Connor, Kennedy, and Souter is really aimed at us. They are aiming it at legislators who somehow sit in judgment—legislators who would put themselves in the position of defining for women what their reproductive rights are. Here is the quote:

At the heart of liberty—

is the right to define one's own concept of existence, of meaning, of the universe, and of the mystery of human life. Beliefs about these matters could not define the attributes of personhood were they formed under the compulsion of the state.

That is the quote. I believe it is directed at us.

Mr. President, I don't know how long people want to talk on this. I know the day is getting late. I ask unanimous consent that we have 30 minutes equally divided before we have an up-or-down vote on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SANTORUM. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we have 60 minutes equally divided before a vote.

Mr. SANTORUM. I will be happy to work out—reserving the right to object—a time arrangement once people on our side want to proceed. But at this point I have to object. We would be happy to work something out. Right now, I just can't do that.

Mr. HARKIN. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. Thank you, Mr. President.

I am not going to debate the Harkin amendment. The Harkin amendment has nothing to do with the bill that is before us. The bill that is before us, as I have said over and over again, and I will say it again, is not about Roe v. Wade. One of the reasons we believe this bill is getting bipartisan support, as well as supporters on both sides of the abortion issue, is that it is outside the realm of Roe v. Wade.

I remind everyone that this is a baby in the process of being born. This is a baby who is almost outside of the mother except for 3 inches.

Again, I repeat that in Roe v. Wade, the original decision, which the Senator from Iowa was referring to, the Court let stand a Texas law that said you cannot kill a baby in the process of being born.

Again, we can have a vote on this. But we might as well be having a vote or another vote on the chemical weapons treaty. It is as related. This is not the subject. It is a completely different subject. If they want to have a vote on it, obviously the Senator has the right to offer an amendment. That is within the rights here in the Senate, and I certainly will stand by his right to offer that.

But to suggest somehow that the underlying bill is an assault on Roe v. Wade is again proof positive that when it comes to the real factual debate on what this procedure does, the response is: Well, let's change the subject.

I don't want to change the subject. Let's focus in on the facts. The facts are not anecdotes from people who aren't physicians about what happened to them. What happened in these cases you see and the pictures you see—I always believe, if you argue the facts, argue the facts; if you can't argue the facts, argue the law; if you can't argue the law, then appeal to the sentimentality or emotion of the situation.

That is what this is. These are horrible situations, tragic situations, of pregnancies that have gone awry late in pregnancy. I sympathize with these people more than you know, to have something such as this happen for a child that you want desperately. I know the difficult decisions they have to make. I know what doctors tell you and how they influence your decision.

But the fact of the matter is, we can't in a legislative forum dealing with such an important issue deal with emotional stories as powerful as they are unless we look at the facts underlying those stories. The facts underlying those stories are very clear.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD letters from the Physicians' Ad Hoc Coalition for Truth—fact—about two cases discussed by the Senator from Illinois where they talk about how this was the only option available, or this saved our life, or our future fertility, et cetera. Again, letters from this Physicians' Ad Hoc Coalition for Truth. One is from Pamela Smith, a director of medical education of the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology at Mount Sinai Medical Center in Chicago, about the case of Vicki Stella and the case of Coreen Costello, another letter from the Physicians' Ad Hoc Coalition for Truth.

I ask unanimous consent to have those printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PHYSICIANS' AD HOC COALITION FOR TRUTH,
Alexandria, VA, September 23, 1996.

DEAR MEMBER OF CONGRESS: My name is Dr. Pamela E. Smith. I am a founding member of PHACT (Physicians' Ad-hoc Coalition for Truth). This coalition of over three hundred medical providers nationwide (which is open to everyone, irrespective of their political stance on abortion) was specifically formed to educate the public, as well as those involved in government, in regards to disseminating medical facts as they relate to the Partial-Birth Abortion procedure.

In this regard, it has come to my attention that an individual (Ms. Vicki Stella, a diabetic) who underwent this procedure, who is not medically trained, has appeared on television and in Roll Call proclaiming that it was necessary for her to have this particular form of abortion to enable her to bear children in the future. In response to these claims I would invite you to note the following:

1. Although Ms. Stella proclaims this procedure was the only thing that could be done to preserve her fertility, the fact of the matter is that the standard of care that is used by medical personnel to terminate a pregnancy in its later stages does not include partial-birth abortion. Cesarean section, inducing labor with pitocin or protoglandins, or (if the baby has excess fluid in the head as I believe was the case with Ms. Stella) draining the fluid from the baby's head to allow a normal delivery are all techniques taught and used by obstetrical providers throughout this country. These are techniques for which we have safety statistics in regards to their impact on the health of both the woman and the child. In contrast, there are no safety statistics on partial-birth abortion, no reference of this technique on the national library of medicine database, and no long term studies published that prove it does not negatively affect a woman's capability of successfully carrying a pregnancy to term in the future. Ms. Stella may have been told this procedure was necessary and safe, but she was sorely misinformed.

2. Diabetes is a chronic medical condition that tends to get worse over time and that predisposes individuals to infections that can be harder to treat. If Ms. Stella was advised to have an abortion most likely this was secondary to the fact that her child was diagnosed with conditions that were incompatible with life. The fact that Ms. Stella is a diabetic, coupled with the fact that diabetics are prone to infection and the partial-birth abortion procedure requires manipulating a normally contaminated vagina over a course of three days (a technique that invites infection) medically I would contend of all the abortion techniques currently available to her this was the worse one that could have been recommended for her. The others are quicker, cheaper and do not place a diabetic at such extreme risks for life-threatening infections.

3. Partial-birth abortion is, in fact, a public health hazard in regards to women's health in that one employs techniques that have been demonstrated in the scientific literature to place women at increased risks for uterine rupture, infection, hemorrhage, inability to carry pregnancies to term in the future and material death. Such risks have even been acknowledged by abortion providers such as Dr. Warren Hern.

4. Dr. C. Everett Koop, the former Surgeon General, recently stated in the AMA News that he believes that people, including the President, have been misled as to "fact and fiction" in regards to third trimester pregnancy terminations. He said, and I quote, "in no way can I twist my mind to see that the late term abortion described . . . is a medical necessity for the mother . . . I am opposed to partial-birth abortions." He later went on to describe a baby that he operated on who had some of the anomalies that babies of women who have partial-birth abortions had. His particular patient, however, went on to become the head nurse in his intensive care unit years later!

I realize that abortion continues to be an extremely divisive issue in our society. However, when considering public policy on such a matter that indeed has medical dimensions, it is of the utmost importance that decisions are based on facts as well as emotions and feelings. Banning this dangerous technique will not infringe on a woman's ability to obtain an abortion in the early stage of pregnancy or if a pregnancy truly needs to be ended to preserve the life or health of the mother. What a ban will do is insure that women will not have their lives jeopardized when they seek an abortion procedure.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,
PAMELA SMITH, M.D.,
Director of Medical Education, Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology, Mt. Sinai Medical Center, Chicago, IL, Member, Association of Professors of Obstetrics and Gynecology.

THE CASE OF COREEN COSTELLO—PARTIAL-BIRTH ABORTION WAS NOT A MEDICAL NECESSITY FOR THE MOST VISIBLE "PERSONAL CASE" PROPONENT OF PROCEDURE

Coreen Costello is one of five women who appeared with President Clinton when he vetoed the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act (4/10/96). She has probably been the most active and the most visible of those women who have chosen to share with the public the very tragic circumstances of their pregnancies which, they say, made the partial-birth abortion procedure their only medical option to protect their health and future fertility.

But based on what Ms. Costello has publicly said so far, her abortion was not, in fact, medically necessary.

In addition to appearing with the President at the veto ceremony, Ms. Costello has twice recounted her story in testimony before both the House and Senate; the New York Times published an op-ed by Ms.

Costello based on this testimony; she was featured in a full page ad in the Washington Post sponsored by several abortion advocacy groups; and, most recently (7/9/96) she has recounted her story for a "Dear Colleague" letter being circulated to House members by Rep. Peter Deutsch (FL).

Unless she were to decide otherwise, Ms. Costello's full medical records remain, of course, unavailable to the public, being a matter between her and her doctors. However, Ms. Costello has voluntarily chosen to share significant parts of her very tragic story with the general public and in very highly visible venues. Based on what Ms. Costello has revealed of the medical history—of her own record and for the stated purpose of defeating the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act—doctors with PHACT can only conclude that Ms. Costello and others who have publicly acknowledged undergoing this procedure "are honest women who were sadly misinformed and whose decision to have a partial-birth abortion was based on a great deal of misinformation" (Dr. Joseph DeCook, Ob/Gyn, PHACT Congressional Briefing, 7/4/96). Ms. Costello's experience does not change the reality that a partial birth abortion is never medically indicated—in fact, there are available several alternative, standard medical procedures to treat women confronting unfortunate situations like Ms. Costello had to face.

The following analysis is based on Ms. Costello's public statements regarding events leading up to her abortion performed by the late Dr. James McMahon. This analysis was done by Dr. Curtis Cook, a perinatologist with the Michigan State College of Human Medicine and member of PHACT.

"Ms. Costello's child suffered from at least two conditions: 'polyhydramnios secondary to abnormal fetal swallowing,' and 'hydrocephalus'. In the first, the child could not swallow the amniotic fluid, and an excess of the fluid therefore collected in the mother's uterus. The second condition, hydrocephalus, is one that causes an excessive amount of fluid to accumulate in the fetal head. Because of the swallowing defect, the child's lungs were not properly stimulated, and an underdevelopment of the lungs would likely be the cause of death if abortion had not intervened. The child had no significant chance of survival, but also would not likely die as soon as the umbilical cord was cut.

The usual treatment for removing the large amount of fluid in the uterus is a procedure called amniocentesis. The usual treatment for draining excess fluid from the fetal head is a procedure called cephalocentesis. In both cases the excess fluid is drained by using a thin needle that can be placed inside the womb through the abdomen ("transabdominally"—the preferred route) or through the vagina ("transvaginally.") The transvaginal approach however, as performed by Dr. McMahon on Ms. Costello, puts the woman at an increased risk of infection because of the non-sterile environment of the vagina. Dr. McMahon used this approach most likely because he had no significant expertise in obstetrics and gynecology. In other words, he may not have been able to do it well transabdominally—the standard method used by ob/gyns—because that takes a degree of expertise he did not possess. After the fluid has been drained, and the head decreased in size, labor would be induced and attempts made to deliver the child vaginally.

Ms. Costello's statement that she was unable to have a vaginal delivery, or, as she called it, 'natural birth or an induced labor,' is contradicted by the fact that she did indeed have a vaginal delivery, conducted by Dr. McMahon. What Ms. Costello had was a breech vaginal delivery for purposes of aborting the child, however, as opposed to a vaginal delivery intended to result in a live birth. A cesarean section in this case would not be medically indicated—not because of any inherent danger—but because the baby could be safely delivered vaginally."

Given these medical realities, the partial-birth abortion procedure can in no way be considered the standard, medically necessary or appropriate procedure appropriate to address the medical complications described by Ms. Costello or any of the other women who were tragically misled into believing they had no other options."

Mr. SANTORUM. They clearly state this was not medically necessary; this, in fact, was not in the best interests of the patient in this case; and this was, in fact, not good medicine.

Did it have a good result? Yes, it did in the sense the health of the women was not jeopardized. That does not mean there is a good result. It was the best practice. A lot of things are done that turn out OK that may not have been the best thing to do. I think that is what we are saying. More importantly, it is not medically necessary. In fact, it is medically more dangerous.

A group that said it "may be" necessary, the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, 3 years ago said: Clearly, it is not the only option. The proponents of partial-birth abortion are saying it is medically necessary. They want to keep this option open. If they don't, it is a violation of Roe v. Wade.

They stand behind anecdotes. In some cases, including the Viki Wilson case that Senator DURBIN brought up, it is clear from her testimony she did not have a partial-birth abortion. She says in her testimony the baby was dead inside of her womb and then the baby was delivered. If the baby dies inside the womb, it is outside the definition of the bill. The definition of the bill says a living baby is born. The baby was not living.

I don't want to pick apart the very tragic stories and make a very difficult situation even more difficult for these people because I understand the pain they have gone through. Our job is to not be clouded by personal anguish and tragic circumstances. Ours is to look at the underlying facts of what happened and what can happen in the future.

Again, we have over 600 obstetricians and gynecologists, specialists in perinatology, who say this is never medically necessary. The AMA says it is never medically necessary and is bad medicine. It is not a peer review procedure. It is not in the medical textbook. It is not taught in medical schools. It is not performed in hospitals. It is only performed at abortion clinics. Again, this is a rogue procedure.

They present case after case, as if this is some wonderful creation of medical science by some genius in obstetrics. I remind Members the person who created this procedure is not an obstetrician, much less a specialist in perinatology or difficult pregnancies. It is a family practitioner who only does abortions.

Again, I stress over and over again what seems to be the compassionate argument is a smokescreen. It is a smokescreen. It is not true. There is no compassion in allowing a procedure that is dangerous to the health of the woman to be continued any more than it is compassionate to prescribe any kind of medical treatment that is inappropriate. We have an overwhelming body of evidence saying it is bad medicine; it is inappropriate.

On the other side we have two things: One, stories, stories that turned out OK. In other words, the procedure was used—not in all cases; sometimes some of the people brought up in stories actually didn't have the procedure, and even those who did may have resulted in a good outcome—but it wasn't the proper course according to the overwhelming body of evidence.

The only thing counter, as far as factual comments by physicians, is the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists. The pillar upon which they rest the health-of-the-mother exception, the select panel they put together says they:

... could identify no circumstances under which this procedure would be the only option to save the life or preserve the health of the woman.

It is not the only option. It is not the only option.

From the Wisconsin case that upheld the Wisconsin statute, quoting the judges:

Haskell, who invented the procedure, admitted that the D&X procedure is never medically necessary to save the life or preserve the health of the woman.

We have the person who invented it saying it is not medically necessary.

ACOG goes further and talks about whether it is preferable in some cases. Here is what they say:

An intact D&X [partial-birth abortion] however, may be the best or most appropriate procedure in a particular circumstance to save the life or preserve the health of a woman, and only the doctor, in consultation with the patient, based upon the woman's particular circumstances, can make this decision.

We have asked them to identify one of these circumstances. Give an example. They cannot say this may be the best thing for the health and life of the mother, may be preferable, and yet give no situation which can be reviewed by the medical community. That is what we have to base the judgment on. The medical community is saying it is necessary to protect the health of the mother. Yet they give no example, give no example as to when this, in fact, would be preferable.

We have a thorough smokescreen, anecdotes with many of the cases having nothing to do with partial-birth abortions; those that did, argued by hundreds of physicians as being bad practice of medicine, were an improper course of conduct. Then we have the only scientific group that says it is never medically necessary, never the only option, only that it "may be" the best thing. Yet they give no example and after repeated inquiry are still giving no examples.

Again, we come back to the health question. There is a dearth of evidence to support the position.

I am hopeful the Senator from Iowa can debate his amendment, saying somehow this is important vis-a-vis Roe v. Wade. I argue the opposite. This legislation has nothing to do with Roe v. Wade. I think when we are looking at specific amendments to deal with that issue, the constitutional issue of vagueness—again, that is not necessarily a Roe v. Wade issue, although it gets into the issue of undue burden. From my point of view, if we can tailor that definition narrowly to make sure we are talking about partial-birth abortion, it leaves open other methods of abortion to be used. It gets to the counterargument some have suggested, that all we are doing is trying to outlaw abortion, trying to restrict a woman's right.

No. All we are doing is, for gosh sakes, drawing a line about who is protected. When a baby is 3 inches from being completely born, that is too close. That is too close. We are going to get into a whole lot of issues when we start drawing lines. In fact, we have gotten into a lot of issues with respect to drawing the line. Now we are talking about assisted suicide. We talk about quality of life instead of life itself.

As the Senator from California said, we want everyone to be wanted. What if everyone isn't wanted? Is that license to get rid of them? It certainly is if you are in the womb. Now we are suggesting it certainly is if you are just outside the womb; it certainly is if you are within 3 inches of being born. If you are not wanted, too bad. If we draw the line that close, it is not a very long way to go to get where our new theologian at Princeton University, Dr. Singer, is coming from. He suggested that it is, in fact, the moral thing to do; that once the baby is born, if we don't like it, to kill it.

One might suggest this is outrageous; this could never happen in America. This is a professor at Princeton, whose works, unfortunately, have been published in the popular press and hundreds of thousands of copies of this radical—I would consider it radical but on this floor maybe it is not radical. Maybe killing a baby after it is born, if it is not a healthy baby, is not a radical thing anymore. Certainly killing a baby who is 3 inches from being born is not a radical thing anymore, so I don't know where 3 inches—maybe that does not make any difference. If you do not like what you have, then you can sort of exchange it.

But that is where we are. Someone suggests: Senator, this is outrageous. How can you make the comment that once a baby is born you can kill it?

I am not making that argument. But Dr. Singer is, and there are those who follow him. There will be judges who follow him. There will be judges who say the mother was distraught and she killed her baby, but it is sort of normal. If the baby was not perfect, it is probably better—we are probably all better off.

But what is the rationale given for partial-birth abortion, as extreme as that sounds, that Dr. Singer is proposing? What is the rationale for partial-birth abortion? Why do we need to keep it legal? Because we have pregnancies that have gone awry and these babies, they are not perfect. They might not live long. They may have cleft palate—in fact, yes, many partial-birth abortions were performed because the babies had cleft palate and mom and dad just didn't want the baby because it was not perfect.

So we have gotten to the point where the defenders of partial-birth abortion are defending it on the basis that things go bad in pregnancy and these children just do not deserve our protection because they are not normal like you and me. They should be given less rights. Because of their imperfections, they should be allowed—why would you bring a baby into this world who is going to die? Kill it first before it has a chance to die. That is the argument. It sounds rough. Let's cut to the chase. That is exactly what they are saying.

All we are suggesting is, first off, we do not stop you from doing that. This bill does not stop anyone who wants to have a late-term abortion from having it. If you want to have a late-term abortion, you can have a late-term abortion if this bill we propose passes. All we say is, don't have the baby outside the mother, don't have the baby 3 inches away from the protection of the Constitution, and then brutally execute the baby. That is just too close. That creates this nebulous area that the Dr. Singers of this world will gladly fill in. Because if we say 3 inches, then why not 3 inches later? What is the big deal? If the baby is not wanted, the baby is not wanted.

Many listening to this will say that is a ridiculous argument. There is no such slippery slope. Although, by the way, the people who oppose these often themselves provide a slippery slope argument. Certainly they do here. They say, if you restrict this right in abortion, it is a slippery slope; we are going to get rid of Roe v. Wade completely. That is why we have this amendment, to get at the Roe v. Wade amendment, to make sure we are not providing the slippery slope. Fine. Let's have a Roe v. Wade amendment to show we don't have a slippery slope. No problem. Let's have a vote.

But allowing a baby who is almost born to be killed, that is not a slippery slope? The Senator from California—we were talking about what if the foot or the leg were the part not born, would it be OK to kill the baby? I have the transcript, by the way. I asked that question. I will read it:

What you are suggesting—

This is me talking.

What you are suggesting is if the baby's toe is inside the mother you can, in fact, kill that baby.

Mrs. Boxer. Absolutely not.

So she said if the toe or foot is inside the baby, you can't kill the baby. But if the head is, you can. No slippery slope there, is there? No problems with a bright line there, is there?

We are headed down a very dangerous path if we start differentiating between what body part is outside the mother and what is inside the mother, as to whether an abortion is legal or not. The reason we have trouble differentiating is because this is not about abortion. This is about killing a baby. It is in the process of being born that under Roe v. Wade was protected. The Texas law was not stricken under Roe v. Wade that said you couldn't kill a baby in the process of being born.

Under Roe v. Wade, the seminal decision of the right of privacy, even that Court understood that once the baby is in the process of being born you should not be able to kill it. That is what we are saying. We are not restricting the right of Roe v. Wade. Roe v. Wade ruled on this by not striking that law down.

So fine, we are going to have a vote on Roe v. Wade. Fine, have a vote on Roe v. Wade. But this is not about Roe v. Wade. This is about infanticide. A lot of folks want to try to change the subject. They want to talk about these difficult cases.

Again, there is no one in this Chamber who sympathizes as much with these men and women, mothers and fathers, who dealt with a pregnancy gone awry. It is incredibly painful to have that hit your family. I hesitate to talk about it because I know how painful it is to revisit them. But they have brought their situation into the public square to prove a point. The problem is, it does not prove the point.

Again and again there is no medical reason. It is never medically necessary to do this procedure. So I hope we can get to the facts, that we can stay away from anecdotes that are inapplicable or not relevant; and we can get to, hopefully, from the other side, a factual discussion as to when this is medically necessary. Once I would like to see a peer-reviewed document where everyone examined the case and someone will say: You know what, there is a situation where this is medically necessary, where no other option is as safe or safer.

To date, that has not occurred. Let me underline that. To date, no such evidence has ever been put before the Senate.

Yet there are people who will stand here and say, "We need it, we need it to protect the health of the mother," when there is not a shred of evidence, not a shred of evidence before the Senate, these stories aside. There is not a shred of evidence that suggests these stories, or all the other instances that have been brought up, were the most safe or there were not things as safe that could be used in place of a procedure that is infanticide. What we are hoping is we can get to that discussion.

I understand the process now; we want to play some games on Roe v. Wade. But that is not the issue before us. I cannot reiterate that enough. The issue before us is should this procedure remain legal. And it should be overturned. It should not remain legal.

It does not surprise me we are seeing smokescreens. This is the Roe v. Wade smokescreen. We have the anecdote smokescreen. We can get the charts up about the previous attempts by supporters of this procedure. They have tried case after case to misinform the Senate. The advocates of this legislation, the abortion rights groups, have deliberately—and this is according to their own people now who have come clean—deliberately misled the Congress, deliberately lied, as Ron Fitzsimmons, who is a lobbyist for a great number, if not all, of the abortion clinics in America, said that he lied through his teeth and that the industry lied through their teeth.

Now after lie after lie—and I will go through all the lies—after lie after lie, they now are going to come up with new stories and say: Well, no, believe us now; OK, yes, we may have lied to you before, but believe us, health is really an issue.

There is not one shred of substantive evidence to support that claim—not one shred of substantive evidence. And yet, a group of people that has come to the Congress in opposition to this bill, they have lied in at least six cases, and, after those, we are now supposed to believe them when they have no evidence to support what they are asserting.

What are they? The National Abortion Federation called illustrations of the partial-birth abortion procedure "highly imaginative and artistically designed, but with little relationship to the truth or to medicine."

You heard the Senator from California talk about the cartoons that showed how a partial-birth abortion is done, and proponents of the procedure argued early on: These are cartoons; they are not factual; they have nothing to do with how the procedure actually works, until Dr. Haskell publicly described this procedure at the National Abortion Federation meeting on September 1992. Dr. Haskell told the AMA News the drawings depicting partial-birth abortion were accurate "from a technical point of view." Strike 1.

Argument 1: This does not occur; this thing is not factually correct; this is not how partial-birth abortions are done; you are wrong. Strike 1.

By the way, they went even farther than that. Many of them argued this did not exist. First they said this is just a cartoon, these things do not happen at all, much less the drawings, but Dr. Haskell straightened them out.

Believe it or not, people actually came to committee meetings in the Capitol and suggested the anesthesia that is given to the woman during this procedure ensures the fetus feels no pain; in other words, it passes through and assures us the fetus does not feel any pain during this procedure.

Again, this is Dr. James McMahon, who is one of the originators of this procedure:

The fetus feels no pain through the entire series of the procedures. This is because the mother is given narcotic analgesia at a dose based upon her weight. The narcotic is passed, via the placenta, directly into the fetal bloodstream. Due to the enormous weight difference, a medical coma is induced in the fetus. There is a neurological fetal demise. There is never a live birth.

That was testimony before Congress under oath. When this happened, the American Society of Anesthesiologists went bananas. Why? Again, having gone through six births, one of the options available to women during childbirth is to receive a narcotic to help with the pain. Women were justifiably very nervous about receiving a narcotic for pain that would kill their baby. One of the pain management procedures during childbirth is, in fact, the giving of a pain killer, a narcotic.

Immediately we got response from them and this letter later on:

In my medical judgment, it would be necessary in order to achieve neurological demise of the fetus in a partial-birth abortion to anesthetize the mother to such a degree as to place her own health in serious jeopardy.

The community of experts responded saying this is not true; you would have to give so much in the way of narcotics, you could jeopardize the life of the mother, which is certainly something I am sure no one on either side would like to do.

Lie No. 2: The baby does not feel any pain. The fact is that after 20 weeks, babies have developed nervous systems; they feel pain. In fact, some have suggested because their nervous system is, in fact, not in a full developmental state, they feel increased pain as a result of this procedure. As described by Nurse Brenda Shafer when she witnessed a partial-birth abortion, when that scissor was plunged into the base of the skull, when those scissors were rammed into the base of that skull, the baby's arms and legs shot out, similar to if you held a little baby and the baby thought it was going to fall; it would spasm out, and then the baby's arms fell limp and legs fell limp.

Again, in October of 1995, during this period of time after McMahon's testimony, "the fetus dies of an overdose of anesthesia given to the mother intravenously."

Again we have Dr. Haskell, who is another one of these abortion providers—Dr. McMahon is one and Dr. Haskell; they are the two who do the most in the country—who says: Let's talk about whether or not the fetus is dead beforehand.

Haskell says: No, it's not. No, it's really not.

That is pretty clear. Again, people fighting this bill are putting information out that is not true. Why? To try to get support for this position.

Fourth: Partial-birth abortion is a rare procedure.

We had this debate the first time. We are in a very difficult situation because we have to rely upon the information of the abortion industry. When Senator SMITH, who is here, argued this debate 4 years ago, he had to deal with a deck that was stacked against him. He did not have the information we have today.

The organizations out there were saying—there were just a couple hundred of these—it was very rare, only done on babies who were sick and mothers whose health was in jeopardy or life was in jeopardy, but this was a very rare procedure.

This is the Alan Guttmacher Institute, Planned Parenthood, National Organization of Women, Zero Population Growth, Population Action International, National Abortion Federation, and a whole list of other organizations that wrote to Congress saying:

This surgical procedure is used only in rare cases, fewer than 500 per year. It is most often performed in the cases of wanted pregnancies gone tragically wrong, when a family learns late in the pregnancy of severe fetal anomalies or a medical condition that threatens the pregnant woman's life or health.

Lie. What is the truth? We have two sources outside of the industry. By the way, we still do not know the truth. We do not know the truth because the folks who provide us with the statistics on partial-birth abortions are the very organizations that oppose the bill. How would you like to go into a courtroom and argue with a set of facts that is given to you by your opponents? That is what we have to do here right now.

Most of what we have to deal with certainly on this issue—the numbers—we have to take from people who vehemently oppose this bill.

We have one source of independent judgment. Our crack news staff on the Hill of which—let me look up in the news gallery: Gee, nobody is up there. Our crack news staff on the Hill, whom we have challenged time and time again to get the facts, why don't you ask a few abortion clinics how many of these they do. A couple of people have. I know a reporter for the Baltimore Sun did. Do you know what the abortion clinics said in Baltimore? "None of your business; none of your business. We don't have to tell you."

Maybe some other crack staff, who really, I am sure, in their heart of hearts, want to get down to the bottom of this because I know they care deeply about this issue, will call around some of their communities and find out what the Bergen County Record did in New Jersey.

What did they find out? That at least 1,500 partial-birth abortions are performed each year, three times the national rate at one clinic in northern New Jersey.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Would the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SANTORUM. I am happy to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. I ask the Senator if he is aware, during the time a few years ago when I stood on the floor and debated this issue, as well, that there were a number of people who said this was only happening a few times a year; some said as few as 15 or 20 times a year; some said, well, maybe it happened a couple hundred times a year, that it was the exception rather than the rule; it was usually when there was an anomaly?

Is the Senator also aware, we began to receive testimony from inside the abortion industry itself, which indicated—from those who had performed them—that this, indeed, was not the case, that we found that in about 80 percent of the cases, if not more, the child was perfectly healthy? So the idea that these were performed in only a few cases, when the child was in a so-called anomaly, if you will, is clearly untrue.

I would also ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, is he aware that there is numerous medical testimony, much medical testimony to the effect of how one partially delivers a child, and then restrains the child from exiting the birth canal? And how does that, in fact, help the safety, the health, or even to promote the life of the mother? Is the Senator also aware that on numerous occasions doctors have said, it doesn't?

As a matter of fact, I wondered if the Senator was aware that when President Clinton had several women down at the White House a short time ago after one of these override votes that he is so good at, he also indicated that these were people who had "needed" these for their own health. Then we found one particular case of a woman by the name of Claudia Ades, who appeared by telephone on a radio show in which she said during the course of the show: "This procedure was not performed in order to save my life. This procedure was totally elective. This is considered an elective procedure, as were the procedures of all the other women who were at the White House veto ceremony."

So I think the Senator would probably agree with me that this was orchestrated and used to promote this terrible procedure which, as the Senator has so eloquently described, is infanticide, is the killing of children.

And to think that somehow you are basically coming to the conclusion that this is OK, based on the part of the child that is outside of the birth canal. I did not hear whether the Senator pointed this out, but is the Senator aware that if you were to turn the child around, and the head would exit first, that would be illegal under the law? That child could not be killed in this way. Yet 90 percent of the child is still inside the mother's body.

So it is an outrageous procedure. I want to compliment him for his leadership and look forward to joining him a little later on in the debate.

Mr. SANTORUM. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire. The Senator from New Hampshire is someone who deserves a tremendous amount of credit for his courage in coming to the floor 4 years ago, offering this bill, fighting for this, and beginning the battle in the Senate. And he continues to be a stalwart supporter and someone who deserves a lot of credit for the movement that has occurred already.

I will finish my charts, and that is, again, getting back to where this abortion procedure is "rare." Ron Fitzsimmons on "Nightline," in 1997, said that between 3,000 and 5,000 partial-birth abortions could be performed annually. They say they didn't even know because, again, they do not get reports—at least we are told they do not get reports as to how many of these late-term abortions are done in this manner.

The Centers for Disease Control does not track the method of abortion. So we know 1,500 are done in one clinic. And the people at that clinic said they have trained others to do it in New York City. So I hesitate to guess of the thousands upon thousands of living human beings—living human beings—who are brutalized in this fashion, 3 inches away.

As the Senator from New Hampshire just said, if that baby was born head first, even though a smaller portion of the baby's body is out, I think most people in this body would say: Well, you couldn't kill the baby then.

Isn't that funny? Isn't that funny in the sense that we draw these artificial lines that don't exist? We would say, it depends on which way the baby exited the mother as to whether you could kill the baby or not. Think about that.

This is the bright line. This is the bright line that we will never cross in our society as to who deserves the protection of our Constitution or not. That is the issue, folks. That is the issue.

Who in this Senate Chamber, who within the sound of my voice is safe if that is the bright line? Who is safe from a group of Senators who think they are being compassionate, who decide that maybe we are better off drawing the line somewhere else, maybe drawing the line that after the baby is born, if the baby isn't what we want. As, again, Dr. Singer, a noted professor at Princeton University, now suggests, why don't we draw the line afterwards?

There is not much difference, folks, is there? There really isn't. Let's get honest about this. What is the difference? It is just a couple of inches. We will be back someday. If we keep this procedure legal, we will be back someday. We will be back someday arguing whether that 3 inches really means anything. It is an artificial line. That will be the argument. Come on. "What is the difference because it is 3 inches if the baby is really deformed? Let it die. Kill it. Put it out of its misery. This baby is going to die anyway."

The arguments you are hearing this very day about children who are not wanted because they are not perfect, in our eyes—I know whose eyes they are very perfect in. In the eyes that matter most in this; they are perfect little children. But to those on the Senate floor who argue that because of their imperfection we have to keep this legal, so we can dispose of unwanted, imperfect children—3 inches from legal protection—folks, when the issue is 3 inches, it might as well be 1 inch or half an inch and eventually it is no inches because the 3-inch line is the Maginot Line. It will be blown through at some point when it suits the majority of Americans that they do not want to be bothered with this burden—with this burden. "It would be better off for this child." I am sure the argument will be, "that we let this baby die or we kill this baby. Why let it suffer?" That is the argument now—3 inches from protection.

Oh, how those 3 inches will shrink; mark my word. This is not a far-out debate. It is the mainstream of political debate right now that we can kill children 3 inches from birth because they are not perfect. That is the argument. That is the mainstream of thought in America right now.

On the horizon, the Dr. Singers of this world will say: Why quibble over 3 inches? I remind you, step back in your mind, those of you who were here on this Earth 40 years ago, and imagine—close your eyes and imagine—the Senate Chamber without television cameras, without the bright lights, without the microphones, and people on the Senate floor debating whether it is OK to kill a child who is almost born. It would be beyond anyone's possible comprehension that that could have occurred in Manhattan, much less Washington, DC, here in the Senate Chamber. But here we are. Where will we go from here? The Senate can take a stand on that. So far it hasn't in the numbers necessary, but we are working on it.

Lie No. 5: Partial birth abortion is used only to save the woman's life and health and when the fetus is deformed.

Again, Ron Fitzsimmons said:

The procedure was used rarely and only on women whose lives were in danger or whose fetuses were damaged.

That was 1995. Fast forward to 2 years later. Ron Fitzsimmons admitted he lied through his teeth when he said the procedure was used rarely and only on women whose lives were in danger or whose fetuses were damaged. Yet that is the debate you continue to hear on the floor of the Senate, case after case after case after case of this.

But what did Ron Fitzsimmons say:

What the abortion rights supporters failed to acknowledge [the people on this floor] is that the vast majority of these abortions are performed in the 20-plus week range on healthy fetuses and healthy mothers. The abortion rights folks know it, the anti-abortion folks know it, and so, probably does everyone else.

Would you please inform the rest of the Senate, Mr. Fitzsimmons, so they can begin to discuss the facts of this case, not the smoke and the mirrors of this legislation. I guarantee my colleagues, we will have clouds and clouds of smoke hovering over this Chamber over the next 2 days in an attempt to obfuscate what really is going on.

Lie No. 6: Partial-birth abortion protects a woman's health.

I understand the desire to eliminate the use of a procedure that appears inhumane but to eliminate it without taking into consideration the rare and tragic circumstances in which its use may be necessary would be even more inhumane.

The argument that this protects a woman's health.

President Clinton, again, veto message of 1997:

H.R. 1122 does not contain an exception to the measure's ban that will adequately protect the lives and health of a small group of women in tragic circumstances who need an abortion performed at a late stage of pregnancy to avert death or serious injury.

A, there is a provision in the bill that says life of the mother is an exception to the ban. Factually incorrect. There is a life of the mother exception. I think it is agreed on all sides that that is not necessary because it would never be used, but we have a prohibition there anyway.

Going to the truth:

The American Medical Association endorsed the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act. The AMA stated that partial-birth abortion is not medically indicated.

I have talked about hundreds of physicians, over 600 obstetricians, not medically necessary.

The partial-birth abortion procedure, as described by Martin Haskell [the nation's leading practitioner of the procedure] and defined in the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act, is never medically indicated and can itself pose serious risks to the health and future fertility of women.

Over 600 obstetricians signed this, over 600, pro-life, pro-choice, signed this.

Those are the facts. This attempt by those who oppose this bill to change the subject to get to Roe v. Wade doesn't obscure those facts.

I will get back to that.

MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I move to commit the bill, and I send a motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SESSIONS). The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SANTORUM] moves to commit the bill to the HELP Committee with instructions to report back forthwith.

Mr. SANTORUM. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is not.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative assistant proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2322 TO THE INSTRUCTIONS OF THE MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk to the motion to commit with instructions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Until the Senator has the yeas and nays on the motion, the amendment is not in order.

Mr. SANTORUM. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SANTORUM] proposes an amendment numbered 2322.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the instructions, insert the following:

SEC. . SENSE OF CONGRESS CONCERNING ROE V. WADE AND PARTIAL-BIRTH ABORTION BANS.

FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) abortion has been a legal and constitutionally protected medical procedure throughout the United States since the Supreme Court decision in Roe v. Wae (410 U.S. 113 (1973));

(2) no partial birth abortion ban shall apply to a partial-birth abortion that is necessary to save the life of a mother whose life is endangered by a physical disorder, illness, or injury.

SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that—

Partial birth abortions are horrific and gruesome procedures that should be banned.

Mr. SANTORUM. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a vote occur on or in relation to the SANTORUM amendment No. 2322 and the DURBIN amendment No. 2319 in 10 minutes, with the time between now and then to be equally divided, and if the amendment is agreed to, it be considered as an amendment to the bill and the motion to commit be immediately withdrawn.

I further ask consent that there be 2 hours total for debate equally divided prior to a motion to table amendment No. 2321, with the minority time under the control of Senator BOXER, and the vote to occur on or in relation to the amendment no later than 11 a.m. on Thursday, and the Boxer amendment, as amended, if amended, be agreed to without any intervening action.

Mr. DURBIN. Reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania on my amendment whether or not it is a straight up-or-down vote on the amendment or a motion to table.

Mr. SANTORUM. I will move to table the amendment.

Mr. DURBIN. Is that the same situation in terms of the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SANTORUM. They could be tabled under this unanimous consent agreement.

Mrs. BOXER. If I may ask my friend to yield for a question, it appears to me that everyone is going to wind up tabling someone else's amendment. So if he can make that clear, it would be helpful.

Mr. SANTORUM. It does say "on or in relation to" the amendment, so that means on the amendment or in relation, which is a tabling motion. It is clear under the UC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURBIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

AMENDMENT NO. 2319

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to add two additional cosponsors to my amendment No. 2319: Senator BLANCHE LAMBERT LINCOLN and Senator CHRIS DODD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. COLLINS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my friend and colleague from Illinois, Senator DURBIN, and the senior Senator from Maine to ban all late-term abortions, including partial-birth abortions that are not necessary to save the mother's life or to protect her health from grievous physical harm.

Let me be clear from the outset. I am strongly opposed to all late-term abortions, including partial-birth abortions. I agree they should be banned. However, I also believe that an exception must be made for those rare cases when it is necessary to save the life of the mother or to protect her physical health from grievous harm. Fortunately, late-term abortions are extremely rare in my State where, according to the Maine Department of Human Services, just two late-term abortions have been performed in the last 16 years.

This debate should not be about one particular method of abortion but, rather, about the larger question of under what circumstances should late-term or postviability abortions be legally available. The sponsors of this amendment—and I am pleased to be a cosponsor—believe that all late-term abortions, regardless of the procedure used, should be banned except in those rare cases where the life or the physical health of the mother is at serious risk.

In my view, Congress is ill equipped to make judgments on specific medical procedures. As the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, which represents over 90 percent of OB/GYNs and which opposes the legislation introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania, has said:

The intervention of legislative bodies into medical decisionmaking is inappropriate, ill advised, and dangerous.

Most of us have neither the training nor the experience to decide which procedure is most appropriate in a given case. These medically difficult and highly personal decisions should be left for families to make in consultation with their physicians and their clergy. The Maine Medical Association agrees with this assessment. I ask unanimous consent that an April 1999 statement from the Maine Medical Association be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBERTS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 1.)

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, in its statement, the Maine Medical Association states that "such a ban would deny a patient and her physician the right to make medically appropriate decisions about the best course for that patient's care. . . . The intervention of legislative bodies into medical decisionmaking is inappropriate, ill advised and dangerous."

The MMA statement goes on to say: . . . when serious fetal anomalies are discovered or a pregnant woman develops a life or health-threatening medical condition that makes continuation of the pregnancy dangerous, abortion—may be medically necessary. In these cases, intact dilation and evacuation procedures may provide substantial medical benefits or, in fact, may be the only option. This procedure may be safer than the alternatives . . . [may] reduce blood loss, and reduce the potential for other complications.

That is what the experts are telling us. That is what the doctors are telling us.

Our amendment goes far beyond, in many ways, what the Senator from Pennsylvania is attempting to accomplish. His legislation would only prohibit one specific medical procedure. It will not prevent a single late-term abortion. Let me emphasize that point. The partial-birth legislation before us would not prevent a single late-term abortion. A physician could simply use another, perhaps more dangerous, method to end the pregnancy.

By contrast, the Durbin-Snowe proposal would prohibit the abortion of any viable fetus by any method unless the abortion is necessary to preserve the life of the mother or to prevent grievous injury to her physical health.

We have taken great care to tightly limit the health exception in our bill to grievous injury to the mother's physical health. It would not allow late-term abortions to be performed simply because a woman is depressed or feeling stressed or has some minor physical health problem because of pregnancy.

Moreover, we have included a very important second safeguard. The initial opinion of the treating physician that the continuation of pregnancy would threaten the mother's life or risk grievous injury to her physical health must be confirmed by a second opinion from an independent physician.

This second opinion must come from an independent physician who will not be involved in the abortion procedure and who has not been involved in the treatment of the mother. This second physician must also certify—in writing—that, in his or her medical judgment, the continuation of the pregnancy would threaten the mother's life or risk grievous injury to her physical health.

What we are talking about are the severe, medically diagnosable threats to a woman's physical health that are sometimes brought on or aggravated by pregnancy.

Let me give you a few examples: Primary pulmonary hypertension, which can cause sudden death or intractable congestive heart failure; severe pregnancy-aggravated hypertension with accompanying kidney or liver failure; complications from aggravated diabetes such as amputation or blindness; or an inability to treat aggressive cancers such as leukemia, breast cancer, or non-Hodgkins lymphoma.

These are all obstetric conditions that are cited in the medical literature as possible indications for pregnancy terminations. In these extremely rare cases—where the mother has been certified by two physicians to be at risk of losing her life or suffering grievous physical harm—I believe that we should leave the very difficult decisions about what should be done to the best judgment of the women, families, and physicians involved.

The Durbin-Snowe-Collins amendment is a fair and compassionate compromise on this extremely difficult issue. It would ensure that all late-term abortions—including partial-birth abortions—are strictly limited to those rare and tragic cases where the life or the physical health of the mother is in serious jeopardy. This amendment presents an unusual opportunity for both "pro-choice" and "pro-life" advocates to work together on a reasonable approach, and I urge our colleagues to join us in supporting it.

The Maine Medical Association takes no position on the moral or ethical issue of abortion. Our membership includes individuals who are "pro-choice" and "pro-life."

Still, abortion currently is a legal medical procedure in the United States. Accordingly, the Maine Medical Association opposes any legislation proposed to ban any legal medical procedure whether that be abortion, "intact dilation and extraction" (partial birth abortion), or another medical procedure. Such a ban would deny a patient and her physician the right to make medical-appropriate decisions about the best course for that patient's care. The determination of the medical need for and effectiveness of a particular medical procedure must be left to the patient and her physician acting in conformity with standards of good medical care.

In addition, imposing civil or criminal sanctions on physicians who perform abortions would have a chilling effect on physicians' willingness to perform legal abortions. Doing so would limit patients' access to safe abortions. The Maine Medical Association opposes such efforts to "criminalize" the practice of medicine.

An abortion performed in the second or third trimester or after viability is extremely difficult for everyone involved. The Maine Medical Association does not support elective abortions in the last stage of pregnancy. However, when serious fetal anomalies are discovered or the pregnant woman develops a life or health-threatening medical condition that makes continuation of the pregnancy dangerous, abortion may be medically necessary. In these cases, intact dilation and evacuation procedures may provide substantial medical benefits or, in fact, may be the only option. This procedure may be safer than the alternatives, maintain uterine integrity, reduce blood loss, and reduce the potential for other complications. Also, this procedure permits the performance of a careful autopsy and, therefore, a more accurate diagnosis of a fetal anomaly. This would permit women who wish to have additional children to receive appropriate genetic counseling and better prenatal care and testing in future pregnancies. The intact dilation and extraction procedure may be the most medically appropriate procedure for a woman in a particular case.

The intervention of legislative bodies into medical decision-making is inappropriate, ill-advised, and dangerous. The Maine Medical Association urges the Maine Legislature and the People of Maine to allow the patient and her doctor to determine the most appropriate method of care based upon accepted standards of care in the medical profession and upon the patient's individual circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 5 minutes on the majority side has expired. The Senator from Illinois has 5 minutes.

Mr. DURBIN. May I inquire of the Chair, pursuant to the unanimous consent request, I understood 10 minutes would be allotted for discussion on my pending amendment, and if the Presiding Officer can please clarify what is the current status of that time request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 10 minutes allotted to Senators was for two amendments.

Mr. SANTORUM. I ask unanimous consent that I be given 5 minutes against the Durbin amendment and the Senator from Illinois be given 5 minutes for the Durbin amendment. It will be 5 minutes. I was not aware the Senator was using our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mrs. BOXER. Reserving the right to object, since we are adding some time here—and I think we should—I want to have about 2 minutes to speak before we vote on the Santorum amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, one last inquiry, so I understand it. As it presently stands, there will be 12 minutes of debate before two votes: First on the Santorum amendment, then the Durbin amendment; then in that 12-minute period, 5 minutes allotted to me, 5 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania, and 2 minutes to the Senator from California?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Chair.

I want to say something to my colleagues who are following this debate in their offices. There are not that many on the floor, but many do watch these debates in their offices.

We are coming perilously close to reaching a consensus opinion on one of the most divisive topics that this Congress has ever faced. The Senator from Maine, Ms. COLLINS, and my colleague, Senator SNOWE, on the Republican side of the aisle, and about 10 Members on the Democratic side, finally have said:

Let us try to get down to the bottom line and see if we can come out with some commonsense answer to such a divisive issue as late-term abortions.

I respect the Senator from Pennsylvania and his heartfelt views on this. I have said it repeatedly on the floor. But I think if we are going to finally be able to say to the American people, we have followed what we think are your feelings; first, keep abortion safe and legal for women across America; but second, restrict abortions so that they are in situations which are necessary, postviability in particular, that is what the Durbin amendment strives to do. And I thank the Senator from Maine for her kind words.

Here is what it says, very basically: All late-term abortions, regardless of the type of procedure, are prohibited after the fetus is viable; that is, after the moment when it can survive outside the womb, except for two specific exceptions: One, if continuing the pregnancy threatens the life of the mother, or if continuing the pregnancy means the mother runs the risk of grievous physical injury.

We then go on to say—we are serious about this—not only the treating doctor but an independent physician has to certify, in writing, that one of those two conditions are met for any late-term abortion postviability. If the doctor misleads or states something that is not truthful in that certification, he is subject to a civil fine, and with repeated offenses the fine grows and his license to practice medicine can be suspended.

The reason I think we should take care—and I hope my colleagues will look carefully at this amendment—is that we would finally emerge from this tangled debate with something that many of us can agree on.

I am characterized as a pro-choice Senator. I am offering an amendment which some pro-choice groups do not support. I would hope that some on the pro-life side would look at this as a reasonable way to restrict late-term abortions.

If Senator SANTORUM's amendment passes, and restricts one rare procedure, it will reduce the number of abortions that are involved in that procedure, and they are very small relative to the total number. In all honesty, if my amendment passes, the bipartisan amendment, even more abortions will be restricted after viability. So for those on the pro-life side, it is a situation they should accept, too.

I urge my colleagues to seize this opportunity. It has come along so seldom in the time that I have been up here on this contentious issue. I hope they will understand that ours is an attempt to strike a good-faith compromise, consistent with Roe v. Wade, consistent with the Constitution, that protects a woman's health, as well as her life, in medical emergency circumstances.

I think if we pass this amendment that I have offered, with the help of so many of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, we will finally say to the American people: Yes, we did come together on the issue of late-term abortion, and we think this is a reasonable way to deal with it.

I will readily concede there are differences of opinion and those on both sides of the aisle who see it differently. But I think I can go before my voters in Illinois, and my family because we talk about this, and explain to them the case histories that I presented on the Senate floor—where mothers, anxious for the birth of their babies, having painted the nursery and named the baby, found, at the last minute in the pregnancy that some terrible complication had occurred, and the doctor said: If you continue the pregnancy, you could die. And if you don't die, you might lose your chance to ever have another baby. Think about that, what the families face; and the doctors said, in that circumstance: We have to go forward with an abortion procedure.

Some of the women involved said: I've been conservative, antiabortion my whole life, and it struck me that it was going to hit me right in the face. I had to deal with it. And they did.

Frankly, any of our families faced with that would want to have every available medical option to save the life of the mother or to protect her from grievous physical injury.

I urge my colleagues to please look carefully at this amendment. We are perilously close to doing something by way of consensus that is a commonsense answer to a very contentious issue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the distinguished Senator has expired.

Mr. DURBIN. I yield back my time.

Mr. SANTORUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, first, I ask unanimous consent that Heather MacLean and Adam Pallotto from my staff have access to the floor during the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SANTORUM. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, the Durbin amendment purports to ban certain kinds of abortion, and I wish that were true because I think that would be constructive. But it does not.

I do not question the motives of Senator DURBIN, Senator COLLINS, and many others, who, I think, are trying to find some ground where we might be able to meet. But the problem with this amendment is the problem with all these amendments that deal with the issue of health of the mother.

The courts have defined "health" so broadly that it includes everything.

This definition in the amendment talks about serious, grievous physical injury, and it requires a second opinion.

Here is the second opinion. If I put the phone number on here, and if this bill were to become law, you could call Dr. Warren Hern, who performs many second- and third-trimester abortions, and he will say this: "I will certify that any pregnancy is a threat to a woman's life and could cause grievous injury to her physical health."

See, the problem is there are lots of people in this country who would argue that pregnancy itself, following through with a pregnancy, can cause grievous physical injury. And in fact, it could.

So signing a document that says if we did not do this abortion, grievous physical injury would occur, is, by definition, something any doctor—or at least any doctor, Dr. Hern would say—could sign in good faith.

So what you have is a loophole, a loophole that would make this prohibition void. So as good as it sounds—and I do not question the intentions. Senator DASCHLE had offered this amendment in the past, and I certainly did not question his intention. I think there is an honest attempt to say, and I take the speakers at their word, that they do not want to see these kinds of abortions performed. However, when you provide a health exception, in reality the health exception becomes the operation of the bill, which is: There is no limitation.

So as much as I would like to see what the Senator from Illinois purports to have happen with his amendment, his language does not accomplish what he purports to accomplish. So voting for something that, frankly, is hollow, is not effective.

Our bill would, in fact, ban a particular procedure, period, and that is with the life of the mother exception.

If the Durbin amendment was amended to just provide for the life-of-the-mother exception, it would be a different story. But it does not do that.

So as much as I, again, commend those who have signed on to this as an attempt on their part to try to search for some sort of middle ground, I do not think they have found it yet. I am hopeful that good faith and open-mindedness will continue and that they will understand where I am coming from.

This is not a limitation at all, and to put forward such as a limitation would be misleading and I think not particularly constructive to getting at the real problem.

Again, I say—and my amendment that we will be voting on, which is a sense of the Senate, alludes to this—this is a debate about a procedure. And the reason we are debating this procedure is because it is the line in our society that we have drawn about who is covered by our Constitution and who isn't.

I think everyone will agree, once the baby is born, you have constitutional protections. When the baby is inside the womb, the Court has been very clear: you don't. The point is, when the baby is in the process of being born, it is almost completely outside of the mother. How can one suggest that that baby does not have some additional protection or full protection?

We heard the Senator from California say, if the foot was in the mother, they wouldn't be entitled to protection. What is the difference between the foot being inside the mother and the head being inside the mother? Why does one give protection and the other one doesn't? We are going to get into that very kind of fuzzy line. I am not too sure that is a line we want to say is our line of demarcation as to when rights begin or not.

I think we want to be very clear: Once the baby is in the process of being born, that is where the right to abortion ends and that is where infanticide begins. I am hopeful the Senate will make that choice today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time requested by the distinguished Senator has expired.

The Senator from California is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I urge Senators to read the text. It was the Senator from Pennsylvania who talked about the feet. I talked about a baby and when a baby is born.

The Santorum amendment, just as his bill, is a direct overturning of Roe v. Wade, which gave women the right to choose in 1973. Before Roe, 5,000 women a year died because of illegal abortion. Now abortion is safe, and it is legal. Why don't we keep it that way? It is working. It is working for women and their families. It balances the rights of the woman with the rights of the fetus. That is why it says in Roe, in the beginning of a pregnancy, a woman has an unfettered right to choose, and later there can be restrictions. But this is where the Santorum bill steps over the line. It makes no exception for the health of the woman. Senator DURBIN reaches to that issue. I commend him for his effort.

The fact is, if you make no exception for the health of the woman, you are overturning Roe; there is no question about it. And by using the term "partial-birth abortion," which has never been in any medical directory in the history of medicine—it is a political term—it is so ill-defined that the courts have ruled it would in fact make most abortion illegal.

Listen to what some of the judges have said. In the State of Alaska: It would restrict abortion in general; in the State of Florida: This statute may endanger the health of women who might seek abortion; in Idaho: The act bans the safest and most common method of abortion used in Idaho and, therefore, imposes an undue burden on a woman. It goes on and on.

Nineteen States have said this Santorum language goes against Roe, endangers the life, the health—in particular, the health—of a woman.

I hope we will table the Santorum amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 2 minutes on the Durbin amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Arkansas is recognized.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I rise today to support the Late Term Abortion Limitation Act of 1999.

I would like to thank Senator DURBIN for working with me and others who oppose later term abortions like the procedure being discussed today, which some have called partial-birth abortion.

Let me start by saying that this is a difficult issue for anyone to discuss. And it is an emotional issue. It is not easy for any of us in this Chamber to discuss terminating a pregnancy.

As a mother who has gotten infinite joy from twin 3-year-old boys and was blessed with a safe and healthy natural delivery, it is an especially sensitive topic for me.

Like many of the people that I represent in Arkansas, I do not believe the so-called partial-birth abortion should be an elective procedure.

We should put an end to all forms of abortion after viability except in cases where a late term abortion is medically necessary to save the life of the mother or when "grievous injury" could harm the mother.

Congress has attempted to eliminate what some people call partial-birth abortions in the past. And 30 states have enacted similar legislation. But most efforts to end this horrific procedure have been unsuccessful thus far because the courts have overturned them.

As I have shown during debate on HMO reform and tax reform, I am result-oriented. I believe we're here to get things done, to effect change, instead of scoring political points.

For that reason, I have chosen to support Senator DURBIN's approach to eliminating late term abortions because Senator DURBIN has taken care of the concerns raised by courts and because this legislation will actually reduce the number of late term abortions.

I should point out that, while serving in the House of Representatives, I twice voted in favor of a ban on partial-birth abortions, expressing my concern that the life and serious health of the mother be considered.

Much has happened since then. Nineteen courts have overturned laws very similar to the one I supported. Some rule that the term "partial-birth abortion" is too vague.

While I am not a lawyer, I understand the courts' point because all of the doctors I have discussed this issue with tell me that there is no such procedure as partial birth abortion.

In addition, the courts have noted that states cannot regulate or prohibit abortion prior to viability. So it is very important, if we want results from this debate, to specify that we are talking about post-viability.

Senator DURBIN has corrected these prior legislative flaws by referring to abortions after viability rather than partial-birth abortions.

In addition, the Durbin late term abortion ban would eliminate elective late term abortions by requiring not one but two doctors to certify the need for a late term abortion to save the life or serious health of the mother.

I support the Durbin amendment because if Senators really want to ensure that we stop late term abortions, then we should pass legislation that can stand the test of the courts.

The Durbin amendment could stand the test and become law. It has the best chance of producing results.

So if results are what we're looking, if stopping late term abortions—including the so-called partial-birth abortions—is our goal, then this is the right option.

If we vote for other vague measures, we will be right back here next year, and the next year, still debating this issue—without results.

Let's do the right thing and ban unnecessary late term abortions by voting for the Durbin amendment which can stand up to federal court tests.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I move to table the Santorum amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table amendment No. 2322. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the yeas and nays are vitiated.

The question now is on agreeing to the Santorum amendment, as modified.

The amendment (No. 2322) was agreed to, as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

SEC. . SENSE OF CONGRESS CONCERNING ROE V. WADE, AND PARTIAL BIRTH ABORTION BANS.

FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) abortion has been a legal and constitutionally protected medical procedure throughout the United States since the Supreme Court decision in Roe v. Wade (410 U.S. 113 (1973));

(2) No partial birth abortion ban shall apply to a partial-birth abortion that is necessary to save the life of a mother whose life is endangered by a physical disorder, illness, or injury.

SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of the Congress that—partial birth abortions are horrific and gruesome procedures that should be banned.

DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2000—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. LOTT. I ask consent that the Senate proceed to the conference report on the bill (H.R. 2670) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The report will be stated.

The clerk read as follows:

The committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill, H.R. 2670, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by all of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of October 19, 1999.)

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my subcommittee chairman, Senator GREGG, in presenting to the Senate the fiscal year 2000, Commerce, Justice, State, the Judiciary, and related agencies appropriations conference report. I would like to thank Senator GREGG for his efforts in resolving many of the difficult issues that were encompassed in this bill. As a result of over four weeks of negotiations, the conference report before the Senator today—for the most part—is good and balanced.

As Senator GREGG stated, this agreement includes $39 billion and exceeds last year's appropriation by almost $3 billion. While this sounds like a tremendous increase in funding, for all intent and purpose, this increase is for the 2000 decennial census. Consequently, the funding decisions encompassed in this bill were difficult. Senator GREGG has already covered many of the major issues in this bill so I will not go into great detail. But, I would like to point out to my colleagues some of the highlights of this bill:

The Justice Department accounts for the largest portion of this bill and contains $18.5 billion for many important law enforcement agencies including the FBI, DEA, INS, and Marshals Service. This level of funding is only an increase of $287 million above last year's appropriated level. Within DOJ, the conferees agreed to recede to the Senate's position the Office of Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) program, and funded the program at the Senate level of $325 million. In addition, $250 million in carryover is available bringing the total budget authority for this program for fiscal year 2000 to $575 million. While many of us would like to see a higher level of funding for this program, I believe that we have provided a responsible level given the austere funding constraints this year.

Mr. President, the conferees also agreed to continue the Safe Schools Initiative that Senator GREGG and I began funding last year. To further efforts in combating violence in and around our schools, we have included $225 million in funding. Included in that funding is $180 million for school resource officers and $30 million for prevention programs.

Regarding the Commerce Department, $8.7 billion is provided for the numerous missions undertaken by the various agencies of the Commerce Department, including stewardship of our nation's oceans and waterways, satellite coverage and weather forecasting, regulation of trade and telecommunications, assistance to rural areas, high risk technology research, and assistance to small manufacturers. Also within this level of funding for the Commerce Department is the $4.47 billion necessary for conducting the constitutionally mandated decennial census. I would like to thank Chairman GREGG for working to resolve the issues around census funding without lengthy and counter-productive debate.

I am pleased that the conference report reflects a level of funding for the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) that is closer to the Senate position than the House. NOAA is the premier agency for addressing catastrophic weather conditions as well as daily forecasts. This year has been one filled with natural disasters—everything from droughts, floods, tornadoes, and hurricanes. During this past month while our staff was negotiating on this bill, about 10 million people were evacuated from the coast during Hurricane Floyd. Thanks to NOAA's hurricane research, their flights into the storm their satellite coverage and weather forecasts, the loss of life, while still very tragic, was significantly less than what it otherwise would have been. Mr. President, when we went into conference 6 weeks ago, there was a $600 million difference in funding for NOAA between the House and Senate. The Senate worked diligently to restore NOAA's funding and the conference report reflects those efforts with NOAA funded at an increase of $137 million above last year's appropriated level. Given this agency's missions that include everything from weather forecasting and atmospheric research to ocean and fisheries research and ocean and coastal management, this level of funding is still insufficient, but given the fiscal constraints, it is enough to allow the agency to continue forward with its critical missions.

This conference report provides $5.9 billion for the Department of State and related agencies. This will fund security upgrades for State Department facilities, construction and maintenance of U.S. missions, payment of international organization and peace-keeping funds, and educational and cultural exchanges. This year we are providing $313.6 million in funding for much needed security upgrades at State Department facilities around the world. Incidents such as the bombings in Kenya and Tanzania have reminded us that we cannot dismiss the safety and security of our citizens abroad.

Now I would like to take a moment to thank the staff for all their hard work in bringing this agreement to the floor. Specifically I would like to thank Jim Morhard, Paddy Link, Kevin Linskey, Eric Harnischfeger, Clayton Heil, and Dana Quam of Senator GREGG's staff and Lila Helms, Emelie East, and Tim Harding of my staff. I know that they have all worked long hours during the past 4 weeks, including weekends and late evenings to reach a compromise and I appreciate their efforts. This a large bill that funds the Federal law enforcement, oceans and fisheries, our nations courts and everything in between. Reaching compromise on these myriad accounts is no small task and I thank them for their diligence.

Mr. President, I take this opportunity to give a few words of thanks to someone who has been a tremendous help to me and the Commerce, Justice, State Subcommittee over this last year. That person is Tim Harding, an extremely bright young man who was detailed to me by the Department of Justice COPS on the Beat program.

Tim worked with me and my staff since last winter. He has seen this process through—from receipt of the President's budget, to our congressional hearings, to markup, through our whirlwind day on the Senate floor, and through this month and a half of conference. At every point, Tim was willing and ready to give 100 percent. While we all know the Senate is like no other place, Tim took the time to learn what makes this process work, and he was able to easily adapt. He provided me with memos, helped me with my constituent relations, and drafted good-quality statements for my use during hearings, markup, and floor consideration of our bill. His work will be sorely missed by me and my staff, and I wish him all the best in what promises to be a bright future.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I bring to the floor the conference agreement for the Commerce, Justice, State, and judiciary appropriations for fiscal year 2000.

This conference agreement includes $39 billion for these and other related agencies. This is $2.8 billion above last year's level and $7.9 billion below the President's request. Also, it is $3.6 billion above the Senate level, which includes the additional funding requested for the census.

To start out with, I want to address the department that comprises almost half of the funding in this bill, the Department of Justice. We provide it with $18.5 billion.

Within Justice, we continue counterterrorism measures. A total of $152 million is directed to the counterterrorism program to bolster current counterterrorism initiatives. The conference agreement provides $14 million to the National Domestic Preparedness Consortium for their cooperative efforts. We put emphasis this year on equipment for first responders so that they have what is needed when they arrive first-on-the-scene of any terrorist attack.

We also remain concerned about attacks on computer systems, these being a primary target to sabotage. The conferees agreed to $18.6 million for the National Infrastructure and Protection Center, through the FBI account, which serves as the central clearinghouse for threats and warnings or actual cyber-attacks on critical infrastructures. The FBI has field computer crime-intrusion squads and computer analysis and response teams to combat cyber crime and sabotage.

However, I remain concerned by the release of the FALN members by the President, and its effect on our overall counterterrorism policy. In the past few years, the Appropriations Committee has worked closely with all aspects of the law enforcement community to hammer out a united, comprehensive counterterrorism strategy. There has been marked improvement in understanding where we need to go to prevent and to be ready for terrorist incidents. The President's clemency agreement takes that understanding and drives a stake in it. The President chose to release members of a known terrorist organization, against the recommendation of the pardon attorney and the Federal Bureau of Investigations.

The FBI is one of the lead agencies on terrorism policy, and the President disregarded their opposition to the clemency agreement. The President's actions went against his own administration and congressional efforts to craft and implement a strong counterterrorism policy.

Ironically, his argument was that none of these individuals had been charged with murder. Terry Nicholas was not charged with murder, but 168 died in the Oklahoma City bombing.

Unfortunately, the President's actions have created a schism in our terrorist policy that may take years to overcome.

Moving to an area that is as horrifying as a terrorist attack, the conference agreement provides funding to address child abductions and missing children. We were able to retain the Senate's Missing Children program, which provides $19.9 million to help law enforcers find and care for missing children. We also fund the FBI's programs to prevent child sexual exploitation on the Internet. These efforts help solve investigations involving missing children by creating specialized cyber units whose purpose is to monitor and react to Internet pedophiles. The FBI works closely with the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children to find the victims of these attacks and return them to their families.

To protect children in schools, the conference agreement recommends $225 million through the Safe Schools Initiative. The availability of these funds for schools, groups, and law enforcement should encourage communities to work together to address the escalation of violence in schools throughout the Nation.

The conferees believe it is also important to encourage out-of-school prevention methods as well. One way to stop juvenile violence is to get young people involved in programs outside of school. The conference agreement includes the Senate number, $50 million, for the Boys and Girls Clubs of America. It retains the Senate language regarding the use of the Internet in the clubs. Additionally, $13.5 is provided for Juvenile Mentoring Programs (JUMP), such as Big Brothers and Big Sisters and similar community programs that bring responsible adults together with children in a mentoring capacity. I believe prevention is preferable to punishment, and these programs can redirect the energies of high risk youth into positive activities.

The conference agreement provides over $537 million for juvenile programs through the juvenile justice budget and accountability incentive grants.

In an effort to combat another problem our society faces daily, the conference agreement supports counter drug efforts by the Justice Department. We provide DEA with $53.9 million for mobile enforcement teams and $17.4 million for regional drug enforcement teams. These teams have the flexibility to go to the hot spots in small cities and towns and provide an immediate, effective response to drug trafficking. They come in at the request of State and local law enforcement and work together to stop drug trafficking.

The agreement also includes $27.1 million for the DEA and $35.6 million for State and local enforcement efforts to end methamphetamine production and distribution.

Under my tenure as chairman, this committee has been supportive of the Violence Against Women Act Programs. The conference agreement includes the Senate level of $284 million. Within this level, $207 million is available for general formula grants to the States. Within those grants, $10 million will be available for programs on college campuses and $10 million for Safe Start programs. In addition, we retained the increase for court appointed special advocates and provide $10 million.

The Senate will be glad to hear we were able to bolster some accounts in conference that had been reduced this year in the Senate bill. The local law enforcement block grant was raised to last year's level of $523 million.

The conferees provide $30 million for police corps; $25 million for grants for bullet proof vests; and $40 million for the Indian country law enforcement initiative.

The State prison grants were increased above the Senate proposed level to $686.5 million, and $420 million was designated for SCAAP.

The last issue I want to address within the Justice Department is funding for law enforcement technology grants. As we approach the new millennium and provide funding for fiscal year 2000, it is important that we ensure that law enforcement is not behind in technology. The conference agreement includes funding of $250 million for law enforcement technology grants. These grants will be available for State and local law enforcement to acquire equipment and training to address criminal activities in our communities.

Moving to Commerce, the conferees recommend a level of $25.6 million for the United States Trade Representative. The International Trade Commission is funded at $44.5 million, and the International Trade Administration is funded at a level of $313.5 million. The funding level for the Bureau of Export Administration is $54 million.

The conferees provide full funding for the Bureau of the Census at a level of $4.8 billion. The decennial census is funded at the Administration's requested level. The Administration sent a budget amendment to Congress as the Senate's Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations measure was being reported to the Senate. Therefore, the committee was unable to incorporate this amendment in the original bill. A hearing was held on the Administration's budget amendment in late July, and the conference report before us today contains all of the funds requested by the administration.

The funding for the National Telecommunications and Information Administration includes $26.5 million for the public broadcasting grant program and $15.5 million for information infrastructure grants.

The agreement funds the programs of the National Institute for Standards and Technology (NIST) at a total of $639 million for fiscal year 2000. Of this amount, $283.1 million is for NIST's scientific and technical research and services programs.

NIST's external activities, the Advanced Technology Program (ATP) and Manufacturing Extension Program (MEP) are funded at the levels of $211 million, including carryover balances, and $104.8 million, respectively.

The agreement funds the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration programs at a level of $2.3 billion. This funding level will continue vital funding for oceanic and atmospheric research programs which have such strong support in the Senate.

The five major line offices of the agency are funded as follows: the National Ocean Service at a level of $267.3 million; the National Marine Fisheries Service at $403.7 million; the Office of Oceanic and Atmospheric Research at $300 million; the National Weather Service at $603.8 million; and, the National Environmental Satellite, Data and Information Service at a level of $111.4 million.

The agreement also provides funding for the first new fishery research vessel approved for the agency in several years.

The conference agreement contains $10 million to capitalize two funds created under the Pacific Salmon Treaty, and $50 million for a Pacific Salmon Restoration Fund requested by the administration.

A small part of our bill—$3.7 billion—is the judiciary. The conference agreement provides the judiciary with $122 million more than the Senate level. We fully fund defender services, and increase the hourly rate for court appointed public defenders. In addition, the Senate COLA provision was retained.

Now, for the last department in this bill, we provide $5.8 billion to the State Department.

The conferees recommend $254 million for worldwide security under Diplomatic and Consular Programs. We also provided $313.6 million in security-related construction under the Security and Maintenance of U.S. Missions account. These levels will address infrastructure concerns raised by the Dar Es Salaam and Nairobi bombings last year.

Cultural and Educational Exchange Programs are funded at $205 million. These programs give U.S. and foreign citizens the chance to interact on an educational level where cultural diversity can be explored.

The conference agreement includes adequate funding for the agencies related to the State Department, including the Asia Foundation and the National Endowment for Democracy.

Lastly in State, we provide $351 million to cover U.N. arrears, subject to authorization. This represents the final payment associated with the Helms-Biden agreement on UN reforms.

This bill contains a handful of related agencies that act independently of the departments within this bill, and comprise $2 billion of the total of this conference agreement.

For the Maritime Administration, the conference agreement recommends $178.1 million. Within the level, the Maritime Academy receives $34.1 million. The Maritime Security Program is funded at $98.7 million, including carryover balances.

The conference agreement funds the Federal Communications Commission at a level of $210 million. This funding level permits the agency to pay rent in its new location, but does not provide funding for some of the new technology initiatives the agency had hoped to implement in FY 2000.

As requested in the FCC budget, the Senate bill contained a provision permitting the FCC to protect our national spectrum assets. The provision in the Senate bill, Section 618, would have permitted the FCC to re-auction licenses currently entangled in bankruptcy court proceedings. This provision was dropped in conference at the insistence of the House. I regret that it was dropped.

The FCC began auctioning licenses for spectrum in late 1994, and some of the companies who were successful bidders subsequently filed for bankruptcy. The bankruptcy courts have permitted some of these companies to avoid paying their debt to the Federal Government for obtaining these licenses. Billions of dollars are being lost to the treasury because of these rulings. These companies should not be permitted to use these licenses, for which they have not paid in full, as assets in a bankruptcy proceeding. Spectrum licenses are national assets, and the proceeds from the sale of these licenses are the taxpayers' assets. I hope we will be able to revisit this provision at a later date.

The Small Businesses Administration (SBA) is one of the larger agencies in this bill. The conference agreement provides $803.5 million for their SBA. Within the amount, $84.5 million goes to the Small Business Development Centers.

We also provide the Senate level of funding for the Women's Business Centers and National Women's Business Council.

The SBA disaster loan assistance program is funded at a level of $255.4 million.

And, as a last mention on this bill, the agreement before us recommends $125 million for the Federal Trade Commission. Of particular importance is the Senate language regarding the Internet.

The conference agreement contains modified language regarding efforts to police the Internet and U.S. electronic financial markets within the Federal Trade Commission and the Securities and Exchange Commission. The conferees are aware that the explosion of Internet commerce also increases the opportunities for fraud and abuse. We want to ensure that those agencies that monitor the Internet are able to adapt to the increasing activity and match their consumer protection efforts in equal measure.

I think this agreement addresses the issue, yet believe there is still much more to do in the areas of Internet policy.

Overall, I believe this conference agreement of the House and Senate bills provides funding required to execute the needed services and programs under our purview. We have not reduced these accounts like we had to to meet the low Senate allocation. We were able to provide additional funding to these accounts that Senators and the administration thought were not given their due in the Senate bill. The ranking member and his staff participated fully in bringing this agreement to you. I want to extend my thanks for their collegian efforts. They worked with us side-by-side to construct what we believe is a respectable bill.

I urge my colleagues to pass this conference agreement as being a sound compromise.

I would like to take a moment to thank the staff for all their efforts on this conference agreement. Every year they do their best to get this particular bill completed quickly, and, every year we find ourselves jockeying for last position. I know they work hard to avoid this situation. The diverse jurisdiction of this bill tends to lead to controversy somewhere within its realms even in the best of years. I appreciate the staff giving up weekends and countless nights to bring to Congress a passable CJS appropriations bill. Thanks to my staff, Jim Morhard, Paddy Link, Kevin Linskey, Eric Harnischfeger, Clayton Heil, Vas Alexopoulos, Dane Quam, Brian McLaughlin, and Jackie Cooney.

HATE CRIMES

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, civil rights is still the unfinished business of America. It is unconscionable that Congress would signal that the Federal Government has no role in combating hate crimes in this country. Yet, that is exactly the signal the Republican leadership has sent by eliminating the Senate-passed provisions on hate crimes from the final report of the Commerce-Justice-State Appropriations Act.

Since just after the Civil War, Congress has repeatedly recognized the special Federal role in protecting civil rights and preventing discrimination. This Federal responsibility, based on the 14th amendment to the Constitution, is reflected in a large body of Federal civil rights laws, including many criminal law provisions. These laws are aimed at conduct that deprives persons of their rights because of their membership in certain disadvantaged groups. The Federal criminal law, among other prohibitions, bars depriving individuals of housing rights, destroying religious property because of religious bias, and committing violent acts because of racial hatred.

The point of these laws is not to protect only certain people from violence—we all deserve to be protected. The point is to recognize this special Federal responsibility to stop especially vicious forms of discrimination, and penalize it with the full force of Federal law.

Hate crimes legislation recognizes that violence based on deep-seated prejudice, like all forms of discrimination, inflicts an especially serious injury on society. These crimes can divide whole nations along racial, religious and other lines, as are seen too often in countries throughout the world. These crimes send a poisonous message that the majority in society feels free to oppress the minority. The strongest antidote to that unacceptable poison is for the majority to speak out strongly, and insist that these flagrant acts of violent bigotry will not be tolerated. That is why it is essential for hate crimes legislation to be endorsed by our nation and our communities at every level—Federal, State, and local.

The Hate Crimes Prevention Act of 1999, that so many of us support, is bipartisan. It is endorsed by a broad range of religious, civil rights and law enforcement organizations. It takes two needed steps. It strengthens current laws against crimes based on race, religion, or national origin. And it adds gender, sexual orientation, and disability to the protections in current law.

Earlier this year, the Senate added these important provisions to the Commerce-Justice-State Appropriations Act. But last Monday evening, the Senate-House conferees approved a conference report that does not contain the hate crimes provision. Behind closed doors, the conferees dropped the provisions. As a result, Congress is now MIA—missing in action on this basic issue of tolerance and justice and civil rights in our society.

Clearly, we must find a way to act on this important issue before the session ends. The Federal Government should be doing all it can to halt these vicious crimes that shock the conscience of the nation. State and local governments are doing their part to prevent hate crimes, and so must Congress.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, one of the most significant amendments that the Senate adopted this summer as part of the Commerce-Justice-State appropriations bill was the Hate Crimes Prevention Act. This legislation strengthens current law by making it easier for federal authorities to investigate and prosecute crimes based on race, color, religion, and national origin. It also focuses the attention and resources of the federal government on the problem of hate crimes committed against people because of their sexual orientation, gender, or disability.

I commend Senator KENNEDY for his leadership on this bill, and I am proud to have been an original cosponsor. Now is the time to pass this important legislation.

Recent incidents of violent crimes motivated by hate and bigotry have shocked the American conscience and made it painfully clear that we as a nation still have serious work to do in protecting all Americans from these crimes and in ensuring equal rights for all our citizens. The answer to hate and bigotry must ultimately be found in increased respect and tolerance. But strengthening our Federal hate crimes legislation is a step in the right direction.

All Americans have the right to live, travel and gather where they choose. In the past we have responded as a nation to deter and to punish violent denials of civil rights. We have enacted federal laws to protect the civil rights of all of our citizens for more than 100 years. The Hate Crimes Prevention Act continues that great and honorable tradition.

Five months ago, Judy Shepard, the mother of hate crimes victim Matthew Shepard, called upon Congress to pass the Hate Crimes Prevention Act without delay. Let me close by quoting her eloquent words:

Today, we have it within our power to send a very different message than the one received by the people who killed my son. It is time to stop living in denial and to address a real problem that is destroying families like mine, James Byrd Jr.'s, Billy Jack Gaither's and many others across America. . . . We need to decide what kind of nation we want to be. One that treats all people with dignity and respect, or one that allows some people and their family members to be marginalized.

There are still a few weeks left in this session; we should pass the Hate Crimes Prevention Act this year.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I feel compelled to express my concerns with the Commerce, Justice, State, and the judiciary appropriations bill for fiscal year 2000. I am disappointed by the inadequate funding for coastal salmon recovery and the Pacific Salmon Treaty. While I cannot complain about the funding for Washington State in relation to Alaska, California, and Oregon, I do believe the overall funding is woefully inadequate to address the tremendous crisis facing threatened and endangered salmon runs. Each state and their counties and cities are prepared to face the challenge of salmon recovery, but they must be given the tools to do so. The funds for Pacific coastal salmon recovery should be at the President's request level of $100 million.

In relation to the Pacific Salmon Treaty, I must again bemoan the lack of adequate funding. The treaty agreement was signed late in the appropriation process and thus it is understandable that large scale funding would be difficult. However, the funding provided under this conference report does not approach our obligations under the treaty. We need to be signaling the intention of the U.S. to meet its treaty obligations and this bill does not do this. I believe the funding for the Northern and Southern Funds called for under the treaty should be more than the $10 million provided. Furthermore, the elimination of the buy-back money for fishers is not only cruel to the families affected by the fishing reductions, but again does not send the right message to Canada.

In a related matter, the conference report contains legislative language that exempts Alaska from the provisions and requirements of the Endangered Species Act in relation to salmon. While I appreciate the State of Alaska's desire to have the Pacific Salmon Treaty protect its salmon fishery from any jeopardy findings, the provision is not in the spirit of the treaty. The states of Oregon and Washington, as well as the Pacific Northwest tribes, negotiated in good-faith to conclude the treaty. I must support Governor Kitzhaber and Governor Locke and the tribes in their opposition to this provision. This legislative provision is in effect an addendum to the treaty that the treaty negotiators did not agree to. It should be removed.

I am very disappointed the conference did not adopt the language of the Hate Crimes Prevention Act. Hate crime is real. Despite great gains in equality and civil rights over the latter part of the century, hate crimes are still being committed and offenders must be punished. Including this provision would have given us more tools to fight hate. The proposal would have expanded the definition of a hate crime and improved prosecution of those who act out their hate with violence. If someone harms another because of race, gender, color, religion, disability or sexual orientation, they would be punished.

I am very disappointed that the conference failed to include the Senate language of the Hate Crime Prevention Act. Along with many of my colleagues, I will continue to push this legislation. It is about basic human rights for those who all too often persecuted while the majority looks the other way.

I am also unhappy the Community Oriented Policing Services Program (COPS) was so underfunded. The Subcommittee mark in the Senate included no funding for COPS. Some of us on the full Appropriations Committee restored a modest amount of money to the program. The President requested $1.2 billion, but the conference funded COPS at only $325 million. That is wrong.

COPS is one of the most successful programs of this decade. The initiative to get an additional 100,000 new police officers on the streets was widely criticized by many from the other side of the aisle. They said that the federal government could never successfully assist local law enforcement. They were wrong. The program is now praised by former opponents, the states are happy with it, and it has proven to be very effective.

Another problem is that once again behind closed doors, we continue to assault reproductive health care for women. Section 625 of this conference report includes a major authorizing change that was not part of the House or Senate passed bills. We did not debate or discuss this major expansion of the conscience clause included in Public Law 106-58, FY00 Treasury Postal Appropriations.

For those members who were not in this closed door meeting, let me explain. Section 625 would allow a pharmacist to object to providing a woman with a prescribed contraceptive if he or she felt the use of this contraceptive was contrary to their own individual religious beliefs or moral convictions. Pharmacists can make a moral judgment and deny women access to emergency contraceptives or any form of contraceptive.

We already allow plans participating in the FEHBP to object on religious grounds to providing reproductive health services; we now will allow pharmacists to deny women access. A small town pharmacist could simply object to filling a prescription because she morally objects to the use of contraceptives. A woman is now subjected to the moral judgment of her pharmacists. Is she free to simply go to another pharmacy? In many rural communities there really aren't nearby other options. In addition, many plans require use of a preferred provider for pharmacy benefits. What happens if your preferred provider is morally opposed to providing contraceptives?

I do not oppose conscience clauses, but I do oppose denying women access to legally prescribed contraceptives simply based on moral objections. This is simply outrageous and once again the threat to women's health is ignored.

Let me end on a positive note. I am appreciative of the subcommittee's work to provide $5 million in State Department monies for costs related to the World Trade Organization Ministerial meeting which will be held in Seattle, WA. The President requested $2 million and I am pleased Senator GREGG and Senator HOLLINGS agreed to my request for a significant increase for WTO expenses. I had hoped for some additional language to ensure that the State Department reimbursed localities in Washington State for legitimate WTO police and fire expenses. The WTO Ministerial will be the largest trade meeting ever held in the United States, both the Federal Government and Washington State are bearing significant costs to host the world's trade negotiators. I expect and I will push the State Department to be responsive to the needs of local governments in Washington State in the expenditure of these additional monies.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I thank Senator GREGG for recognizing the need of three Vermont towns to upgrade, modernize and acquire technology for their police departments in this Conference Report. Allowing these police departments to improve their technology will permit them to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of the services they provide.

Reflecting the needs of the police departments, the $1 million in technology funds for these three towns should be divided on the following basis: one-half ($500,000) to the Burlington Police Department, one-third ($333,000) to the Rutland Police Department, and one-sixth ($167,000) to the St. Johnsbury Police Department. Again, I appreciate his help in addressing the technology problems these towns' police departments are facing. I look forward to working with him to get this important appropriations bill signed into law.

Mr. LOTT. I ask unanimous consent the conference report be agreed to and the motion to consider be immediately laid upon the table.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Brittany Feiner be granted the privilege of the floor for the duration of Senate consideration of S. 1692.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, I rise this evening to, once again, strongly urge my colleagues to vote to ban partial-birth abortion. Three times Congress has voted to pass legislation to ban the barbaric practice of partial-birth abortion—but tragically, at every opportunity, the President of the United States has vetoed the act of Congress to ban this needless and horrific procedure.

The words of Frederick Douglass uttered more than 100 years ago I believe are very applicable to this discussion. This is what Frederick Douglass said:

Find out just what any people will quietly submit to and you have found out the exact measure of injustice and wrong which will be imposed upon them, and these will continue till they are resisted. . . .

We must continue our struggle to ban partial-birth abortion in this country. We are debating a national question that in my ways, is not unlike the issue of slavery, in part, because opponents of this legislation are truly using artificial arguments to justify why certain people, in their opinion, have no legal status and no civil, social, or political rights. Those opposing the partial-birth abortion ban imply that the almost-born child has no right to live. Clearly, the vast majority of the American people, and a majority of Congress disagree.

Every year the tragic effect of this extreme indifference to human life becomes more and more apparent. We must ban this procedure. We must simply say that enough is enough.

In my home State of Ohio, two tragic cases of partial-birth abortions did not go “according to plan.” Each reveals, in its own way, the unpleasant facts of this horrible tragedy of partial-birth abortion.

On April 6, in Dayton, OH, a woman went into the Dayton Medical Center to undergo a partial-birth abortion.

This facility is operated by Dr. Martin Haskell, a pioneer of the partial-birth abortion procedure. Usually this procedure takes place behind closed doors, where it can be ignored—its morality left outside.

But, this particular procedure was different. Here is what happened.

The Dayton abortionist inserted instruments known as laminaria into the woman, to dilate her cervix, so the child could eventually be removed and killed. This procedure usually takes 3 days.

This woman went home to Cincinnati, expecting to return to Dayton for completion of the procedure in 2 or 3 days. But, her cervix dilated too quickly and so shortly after midnight, she was admitted to Bethesda North Hospital in Cincinnati.

The child was born. A medical technician pointed out that the child was alive. But apparently her chances of survival were slim. After 3 hours and 8 minutes, this baby died. The baby was named Hope.

On the death certificate is a space for “Method of Death.” And it said, in the case of Baby Hope, “Method of Death: Natural.” That, of course, is not true. There was nothing natural about the events that led to the death of this poor innocent child.

Baby Hope did not die of natural causes. Baby Hope was the victim of this barbaric procedure—a procedure that is opposed by the vast majority of the American people. It is a procedure that has been banned three times by an act of Congress—only to see the ban overturned by a veto by the President of the United States.

The death of Baby Hope did not take place behind the closed doors of an abortion clinic. The death of this baby took place in public—in a hospital dedicated to saving lives, not taking them. This episode reminds us of the brutal reality and tragedy of what partial-birth abortion really is, the killing of a baby—plain and simple.

And, almost to underscore the inhumanity of this procedure—4 months later, in my home State of Ohio it happened again. This time, though, something quite different occurred.

Once again, the scene is Dayton, OH. This time on August 18, a woman who was 25-weeks pregnant, went into Dr. Haskell’s office for a partial-birth abortion. As usual, the abortionist performed the preparatory steps for the barbaric procedure by dilating the mother’s cervix. The next day, August 19, the mother went into labor, and was rushed to Good Samaritan Hospital. This time, however, despite the massive trauma to this baby’s environment, a miracle occurred. By grace, this little baby survived, and so she now is called “Baby Grace.”

I am appalled by the fact that both of these heinous partial-birth abortion attempts occurred anywhere, but particularly because in my home State. When I think about the brutal death of Baby Hope and then ponder the miracle of Baby Grace, I am confronted with the question—a haunting question that we all face—Why can’t we just allow these babies to live?

Opponents of the ban on this “procedure” say that this procedure is necessary to protect the health of women. We know from testimony that we heard in our Judiciary Committee that that simply is not true. The American Medical Association says that this procedure is never—never—medically necessary. In fact, many physicians have found that the procedure itself can pose immediate and significant risks to a woman’s health and future fertility. Clearly, the babies did not have to be killed in the Ohio cases I just cited. No. The babies were both born alive. One survived; one did not.

Why does the baby have to be killed?

Opponents of this legislation say that this procedure is only used in emergency situations, when women’s lives are in danger. Again, from the testimony that we heard in the Judiciary Committee, we know this is absolutely not true. It seems strange that a 3-day procedure would be used and the mother sent home if, in fact, we were dealing with an emergency. Nevertheless, even abortionists say that the vast majority of partial-birth abortions are elective. Dr. Haskell, the Ohio abortionist, stated as follows: “And I’ll be quite frank; most of my abortions are elective in that 20–24 week range.”

Why? Why? Why does the baby have to be killed?

Opponents of this bill say that this procedure is necessary when a fetus is abnormal. Now, I do not believe the condition of the fetus ever warrants killing it. But, even abortionists and some opponents of this ban agree that most partial-birth abortions involve healthy fetuses. The inventor of this procedure himself, the late Dr. James McMahan, said “I think, ‘Gee, it’s too bad that this child couldn’t be adopted.’”

So, again, the question: Why does the baby have to be killed?

Opponents of this bill say that this partial-birth procedure is rare. But, again, that is not true either. Even the director of the National Coalition of Abortion Providers admitted that there are up to 5,000 partial-birth abortion procedures in the United States.

Why? Why does the baby have to be killed?

Opponents say that this ban violates Roe v. Wade, and so it is unconstitutional. But, anyone who has read the case knows that Roe declined to consider the constitutionality of the part of the Texas statute banning the killing of a child who was in the process of delivery. And, the Supreme Court again declined to decide this issue in Planned Parenthood v. Casey.

Again, we must ask, why does the baby have to be killed?

Opponents say this bill is unconstitutional because it doesn't have a "health exception." First, the "health exception" is defined by Doe v. Bolton so broadly as to make the ban unenforceable—effectively gutting the bill. We know that is how the courts have defined the "health exception" in abortion legislation. Both sides of this debate fully understand that.

The American Medical Association itself has stated:

There is no health reason for this procedure. In fact, there is ample testimony to show that all of the health consequences are more severe for this procedure than any other procedure used.

Further, the AMA concluded:

The partial delivery of a living fetus for the purpose of killing it outside the womb is ethically offensive to most Americans and physicians. (New York Times, May 26, 1997).

I ask my colleagues who wish to continue to allow this heinous procedure by upholding the President's veto, why? Why does the baby have to be killed? Why do babies, inches away from their first breath, have to die? Something is terribly wrong in this country when these babies continue to be killed.

With the advent of modern technology, we can sustain young life in ways we could not have just a few short years ago. Those of us who have had the privilege of going into neonatal intensive care units in our States have seen the miracles being worked today with precious, tiny children. Medical science can keep babies alive who are only 22 weeks, 23 weeks, children who before would simply not have survived.

While we have this great technology, while we have made such great advances, while we are saving so many innocent children, at the same time we have also perfected and created more and more savage ways of killing other children, other babies who are the same level of development.

I think we are destroying ourselves by not admitting as a society that partial-birth abortion is an evil against humanity. I believe there will be more and more horrible consequences for our Nation if we do not ban this cruel procedure. As a friend of mine reminded me, no culture can be demolished without the voluntary cooperation of at least a number of its own members. We must stop and ask, to what depths has the American conscience sunk? When it comes to abortion, is there nothing to which we will say no? Is there nothing so wrong, so cruel that we will not say, as a society, we will not tolerate this; we will not put up with this; this is going simply too far?

Partial-birth abortion is a very clear matter of right and wrong, good versus evil. It is my wish that there will come a day when my colleagues and I no longer have to come to the floor, to debate this issue. I hope we have the votes this year to not only pass the partial-birth abortion ban, but also to override the President's veto. We have to do it. It is the right thing to do, because innocent children are dying every day in America because of this horrible, barbaric procedure.

Let us ban this procedure which kills our partially born children, and let's do it for our children.

I thank the Chair, and thank my colleagues. I congratulate Senator SANTORUM for bringing this matter to the floor, and Senator SMITH, who has so long been a proponent of doing away with partial-birth abortion.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Ohio, Senator DEWINE for his eloquent remarks that were delivered in such a way as to touch the conscience of all of us. I join him in also thanking Senator SANTORUM for his insightful, intelligent, and passionate commitment to ending this horrible procedure which, by any definition, is not good for this country.

I also appreciate the leadership of Senator BOB SMITH, who is here tonight. Senator SMITH started this debate a number of years ago. I don't know if people thought he was even telling the truth about it or not. They didn't know it was really going on. But as time has gone by, we have seen more and more that this procedure is horribly true and much more common than we knew.

This is a bipartisan effort, Republicans and Democrats. We have joined together, and I think it is important we work together to not just talk about this problem but to end it.

Some, I think, would prefer not knowing about it. They do not want to be told the gruesome details of this procedure; how a child, a baby, just 3 inches from birth, is deliberately and systematically killed. That is not something people want to talk about. They cringe and wish it would go away. I wish the procedure would go away. Unfortunately, it has not. It is so cruel, so inhumane, and so unnecessary, I believe this legislation is justified and necessary to prevent it.

A number of people during this debate have expressed concern about the life of the mother. I have heard this argument during my time on the Senate Judiciary Committee, serving with Senator DEWINE and others. We have had a number of hearings on this subject.

The bill, crafted by Senator SANTORUM, provides for this contingency. It would permit this procedure, partial-birth abortion, but only "to save the life of a mother whose life is endangered by physical disorder, physical illness, or physical injury, including a life-endangering physical condition caused by or arising from pregnancy itself."

These are the kinds of exceptions that are in this bill. Some may say, as most physicians do, that these exceptions are not necessary. It is never the kind of occurrence that would justify this procedure. But it is in this bill. It makes me wonder why those who are concerned about the health of the mother are not able to read those words and understand them. The truth is clear. This bill will not endanger the life of the mother.

The fact is, the American Medical Association has noted that this procedure is never medically necessary. It is not the kind of procedure we need to use. It is a convenient procedure that abortionists have found they like to use. I don't think it is necessary and it should be outlawed.

So there is broad bipartisan support for the bill from both pro-life and pro-choice people. I think that shows what we are debating goes beyond the traditional debate on abortion. This support exists because the partial-birth abortion procedure deeply offends our sensibilities as human beings and as a people who care for one another, who know that life is fragile and believe that people need to be treated with respect and dignity and compassion. The Declaration of Independence notes life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, those are ideals of American life. A child partially born has those rights ripped from them in a most vicious way.

This is a dangerous policy. It is a thin line, a thin thread that we are justifying a procedure that is so much and, I think, in fact is infanticide. It is an unjustifiable procedure we are dealing with.

There has been a tremendous amount of debate on the number of partial-birth abortions performed each year. The pro-abortion groups and others have emphatically insisted that the total number of partial-birth abortions performed was small, and they were only performed in extreme medical circumstances. Therefore, they say the Federal Government should not pass laws about it. But now we know the truth. It has come out in dramatic form. Their issue, that this procedure is rare and only for extreme circumstances, has plainly been established to be false. These claims were either manufactured or disseminated in an attempt to minimize the significance of the issue.

As reported in a 1997 front-page article in the Washington Times, Mr. Ron Fitzsimmons, executive director of the National Coalition of Abortion Providers—let me say that again, the executive director of the National Coalition of Abortion Providers, who has been traveling the country and saying these procedures were rare—admitted, that he had "lied through his teeth" about the numbers of partial-birth abortions performed. Mr. Fitzsimmons estimated "that up to 5,000 partial-birth abortions are performed annually and that they're primarily done on healthy women and healthy fetuses."

That is a fact. That is what we are dealing with today. Those who would oppose this procedure, I believe, are not as concerned—or at least are not thinking clearly—when they suggest their opposition is based on their concern for the health and safety of the mother. I say to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, how can we answer to our children, our constituents, and others if we allow children to be destroyed through this brutal partial-birth abortion procedure? So I think if we are a nation that aspires to goodness, that aspires to be above the course and to reach minimum standards of decency, this legislation is needed.

I find it very puzzling that there is such resistance to the banning of just this one brutal procedure. I ask myself, what is it? I have heard it said that, well, the people who oppose partial-birth abortions do so for religious reasons, as if that is an illegitimate reason. Was it illegitimate for Martin Luther King to march for freedom based on his belief in the Scriptures? It is not an illegitimate reason if you have a religious motivation. But that has been a complaint about those who would question this.

I have analyzed the opposition to this partial-birth abortion bill and I can't see that it can be founded on law. I can't see that it can be founded on science; the AMA says it is not necessary. I can't see that it can be founded on ethics. Certainly, it seems to me that it is so close to infanticide—if not in fact infanticide—that it is difficult to see how it could be argued ethically. Why is it? The only thing I can see is that there is a sort of secular religious opposition to any control whatsoever on abortion—we will never agree to anything, any time, anywhere, no matter what you say. We are going to allow these procedures to go forward just as long as the abortionists wish to perform them and you, Congress, should never intervene in any aspect of it.

I don't believe that is a rational argument. It is not justified. This legislation is specific; it is directed to a procedure that all good and decent people, I believe, if they knew the facts and studied it, would know to be an unacceptable procedure. It would ban one procedure and it would not affect other abortions. I think all good Americans should be for it. I will be deeply disappointed if the President of the United States insists once again on vetoing this legislation, which has the overwhelming support of the Members of Congress and the American people. I don't see how it is possible that we continue to come back to this floor again and again over this issue. But it is going to continue because the procedure continues. Lives are being eliminated in a way that is unhealthy and not good for America. It is below the standards to which we ought to adhere. I thank Senator SMITH, who is here, and Senator SANTORUM for their leadership and dedication to this issue.

I yield the floor.

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, I offer my support today of S. 1692, the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act of 1999, introduced by my colleague, Senator SANTORUM. Congress has twice passed legislation outlawing partial-birth abortion, only to have it vetoed by the President for fallacious reasons. It is time that we close this shameful chapter in our nation's history during which we have permitted the destruction of fully-formed, viable human beings in a most gruesome and shockingly cold-hearted manner. If there is a meaningful distinction between this abortion procedure and infanticide, it escapes me.

I know that there is a certain numbing fatigue that sets in when we are forced to once again review the details of the partial-birth abortion procedure. But we must not let our aversion to the particulars of the procedure cause us to turn away from addressing the cruel injustice of it. I commend Senator SANTORUM for his persistence in pursuing this legislation. Congress must keep the pressure on President Clinton to stop opposing the bill and sign it into law.

It is time for President Clinton to abandon the false claim that somehow this bill would jeopardize the health of a mother unless a so-called health exception permitting the procedure is not added to the bill. President Clinton knows that the term "health" in the context of abortion has become so broadly defined by the Supreme Court that it would strip this bill of any force, and would render the entire bill meaningless. Former Surgeon General C. Everett Koop has denounced this false argument, asserting that "partial-birth abortion is never medically necessary to protect a mother's health or her future fertility. On the contrary, this procedure can pose a significant threat to both." The American Medical Association has also expressed support for the partial-birth abortion ban, noting that the Santorum bill "would allow a legitimate exception where the life of the mother was endangered, thereby preserving the physician's judgment to take any medically necessary steps to save the life of the mother."

The bottom line is, the alternative bill that has been offered by the minority leaders in the past, and which we will likely see again, extends no real protection at all to unborn children. Again, the so-called health exception it adopts essentially renders the bill meaningless, and offers opponents to the Santorum bill only a cosmetic, public relations cover to veil their commitment that abortion should be free of any reasonable restrictions.

To allow this partial-birth procedure to continue to be performed across our land cheapens the value of life at all stages, for the unborn, the physically handicapped, and the feeble elderly. Our government must affirm life and not let our civil society decay into a mentality that only the strong and self-sufficient should survive and the weak can be considered expendable.

President Clinton once said that he wanted abortion to be "safe, legal, and rare." He has worked very hard to keep it "legal," in the sense of being completely free of any restrictions. It is now time for Congress and the President to make the partial-birth method of abortion truly rare by passing and signing S. 1692.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President I rise today to oppose the so-called "Partial Birth" Abortion Ban.

In 1973 the Supreme Court held that women have a constitutional right to an abortion. That decision—Roe v. Wade—was carefully crafted to be both balanced and responsible while holding the rights of women in America paramount in reproductive decisions. This decision held that women have a constitutional right to an abortion, but after viability, states could ban abortions as long as they allowed exceptions for cases in which a woman's life or health is endangered.

The legislation before us today is in direct violation of the Court's ruling. It does not ban postviability abortions as its sponsors claim, but it does ban an abortion procedure regardless of where the woman is in her pregnancy. And this legislation, as drafted, does not provide an exception for the health of the mother as required by law, and provides a very narrow life exception. In fact, the legislation's exception only allows that the ban, and please let me quote from the bill here, "shall not apply to a partial-birth abortion that is necessary to save the life of a mother whose life is endangered by a physical disorder, illness, or injury." Not her health, but only her life.

There is no question that any abortion is an emotional, wrenching decision for a woman. No one would debate this. And when a woman must confront this decision during the later stages of a pregnancy because she knows the pregnancy presents a direct threat to her own life or health, the ramifications of such a decision multiply dramatically.

We stand on the floor of this body day after day and pontificate on laws, treaties, appropriations bills, and budget resolutions. But how often do we really, truly consider how a piece of legislation will affect someone specific

. . . a wife or a husband . . . a mother or a father? And I don't mean knowing how the budget numbers or appropriations will generally help our constituents, I mean considering the very, very personal lives of our constituents.

This last March the Lewiston Sun Journal, a paper in my home state of Maine, ran an article about a woman in Maine, one of the women that I was elected to represent, who had faced the heartbreaking decision of a late-term abortion. Before I tell my colleagues her story, I ask unanimous consent that this article be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 1.)

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, Barbara and her husband had been ecstatic when they discovered that they were expecting a child—an unborn daughter they would name Tristan. But this anticipation and delight turned to profound sorrow when, at 20 weeks into the pregnancy Tristan was diagnosed with a rare genetic disease called Edwards' syndrome. An extra chromosome in Tristan's DNA had caused lethal abnormalities.

The Sun Journal reports that "Their daughter would have severe heart and gastrointestinal problems, they were told. In an ultrasound image, they could already see cystic tissue forming on top of Tristan's brain and partly outside of the skull tissue. The shape of her stomach and diaphragm muscle were abnormal. Her diaphragm was perforated. Her stomach was growing in her heart and lung cavity. In all likelihood Tristan wouldn't be born alive. She probably would suffocate before that because her lungs would be so underdeveloped. Barbara and her husband were told that no surgery could or would be possible." In fact, doctors predicted that Tristan would probably die before she was born. And if not, she had a 95 percent chance of dying before her first birthday.

Barbara told the Sun Journal that "It seemed to us that it would be cruel, that it would be absolute torture to put our little girl through the pregnancy. . . . With her heart and her lungs being crushed by her stomach and her diaphragm. We were worrying what it would feel like. What sensation she might be experiencing as the cystic tissue continued to grow on her brain." And as Barbara and her husband consulted other medical specialists and prayed over the fate of their daughter, Barbara remembers that "I was so afraid for my baby. I didn't want her to feel any pain in the last hours of her life. . . . It wasn't really life yet. She wasn't born."

Barbara remembers that "Loving the baby was never part of the discussion. . . . Of course you would love the baby no matter what was going on, disability or healthy. I think sometimes there's a misperception about that, that love might be conditional based on whether it's a perfect fetus or not."

This family in Maine is what the debate today is really about—when does the State have the right to tell Barbara and her husband that they cannot have the abortion they believe to be the best medical procedure? A procedure that will protect her health and her future fertility? At the very end of her story, Barbara tells the Sun Journal that women who have abortions are unfortunately "portrayed as some kind of careless monsters without any kind of moral direction. The people who know me would be aghast that that's how I'm seen by people who don't even know me."

I stand before this body today and I am saddened that there are those out there who would so judge Barbara and her husband. Because I do believe they have moral direction—and I don't believe that I or my fellow Senators should be able to tell them when a decision such as this is wrong or medically inappropriate. I don't believe that I have the medical training necessary to decide when one type of medical procedure is best used over an alternative procedure.

And let there be no doubt about it, this legislation does nothing but create an inflammatory political issue. This legislation does nothing to end postviability abortion—nothing—or to prevent unwanted pregnancies. And courts around the country have recognized this.

In fact, of the 30 states that have enacted legislation banning so-called "partial birth" abortions, there have been 21 court challenges and 19 of these challenges have been either partially or fully enjoined while their constitutionality is considered. Four U.S. Courts of Appeal have ruled on the issue—and just this September, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit affirmed three trial court injunctions on partial birth abortion bans in Arkansas, Iowa, and Nebraska.

When the Kentucky District Court overturned its State's ban on these so-called "partial birth" abortions this year, the author of the decision, the Honorable John G. Heyburn, II, said "By adopting a considerably less precise definition of a partial birth abortion, the legislature not only defined the terms of its prohibition, but also said a lot about its own collective intent. Though the Act calls itself a partial birth abortion ban, it is not. The title is misleading, both medically and historically. . . . A few [legislators] seem to disregard the constitutional arguments and push for language which they believed would make abortions more controllable."

And though proponents of this legislation claim that these bans address only one abortion procedure, courts have disagreed. Last year, the Honorable Charles P. Kocoras, a U.S. District Judge for the Northern District of Illinois, also struck down an Illinois law banning these so-called partial birth abortions. In his opinion Judge Kocoras stated that, "[The Act] has the potential effect of banning the most common and safest abortion procedures. . . . To ensure that her conduct does not fall within the statute's reach, the physician will probably stop performing [all] such procedures. . . . Because the standard in [the Act] effectively chills physicians from performing most abortion procedures, the statute is an undue burden on a woman's constitutional right to seek an abortion before viability."

And this year, the Honorable G. Thomas Porteous, writing for U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Louisiana said that the Louisiana "Partial Birth" Abortion ban "advances neither maternal health nor potential life and clearly would create undue burdens on a woman's right to choose abortion. At most, the Act may force women seeking abortions to accept riskier or costlier abortion procedures which nevertheless result in fetal death."

Riskier or costlier? At what price? Can you ask Barbara and her husband to risk that? They desperately wanted their baby—and though they were faced with losing her they knew that they would want to try again. Four years later they have a beautiful 2½-year-old daughter. But they would not have this daughter nor even had the chance to try again had Barbara been forced to have a procedure that threatened her ability to have another child. What if the riskier or costlier procedure Judge Porteous referred to had been a total hysterectomy?

Is this what we really want? To put Barbara's health and life at risk? To put women's health and lives at risk? Shouldn't these most critical decisions be left to those with medical training, and not politicians?

I believe so. I believe that a decision such as this should only be discussed between a woman, her family, and her physician. I am absolutely and fundamentally opposed to all post-viability abortions except in the instances of preserving the life of or preventing grievous physical injury to the woman. This legislation neither provides for those exceptions nor does it prevent post-viability abortions.

I yield the floor.

EXHIBIT I

ABORTION: ONE WOMAN'S STORY

(By Christopher Williams)

For weeks Barbara and her husband had consulted medical experts and researched scientific journals. They meditated and prayed.

To the visible mound protruding above her waist Barbara spoke quietly, lovingly. She sang to it. She sometimes felt the light flutter of kicks.

The day before final tests had confirmed the diagnosis, Barbara and her husband had named their unborn daughter Tristan, which means tears and sadness.

Then the time came for Barbara's decision. It's not the kind of choice that any mother ever wants to have to make.

She would have an abortion.
 "I didn't feel like I was taking my baby's life away," she says "I felt like it had already been taken away from her. And all that was left for me to have any control over was what was going to be the least painful for her."

QUALITY OF LIFE

It was the last day of summer.

Barbara made the 2½-hour trip from her Camden home to Portland. She rocked all night in a motel room, crying, unable to stop.

At 20-weeks, Tristan had been diagnosed with a rare genetic disease called Edwards' syndrome. An extra chromosome had caused "lethal" abnormalities.

Doctors said Tristan would probably die before she was born. If not, she had a 95 percent chance of dying before her first birthday. No surgical options could correct the multiple birth defects.

"It seemed to us that it would be cruel, that it would be absolute torture to put our little girl through the pregnancy," Barbara recalls. "With her heart and her lungs being crushed by her stomach and her diaphragm. We were worrying what it would feel like. What sensation she might be experiencing as the cystic tissue continued to grow on her brain."

As Barbara continued rocking in her motel room, cramps from medicine preparing her for the abortion gripped her insides.

"I was so afraid for my baby. I didn't want her to feel any pain in the last hours of her life," she says adding, "It wasn't really life yet. She wasn't born."

She also was "grateful" that she didn't live in a state that would "force me to carry her to term because I knew at that moment, in those hours, that if I had, I probably would have cracked up."

The strain would likely have landed end of the process. To have done that, feels to me, like it would have been the epitome of selfishness."

The last few days, Barbara had been jolted awake by nightmares, including "ghastly images." In one of the dreams, a python had devoured her youngest niece.

The dishes had piled up in the sink. Household work was forgotten. Tristan was the only thing they talked about.

THE ABORTION

The abortion was scheduled for Sept. 23, the first day of fall.

There was only one place in Maine where an abortion could be performed in the 20th week of a pregnancy.

Barbara would have a procedure called a dilation and extraction. Her cervix was slowly dilated. Then the fetus was extracted. The method would be less damaging to her uterus and therefore to her future fertility.

Rain poured down. By noon the sky had darkened, turning an eerie greenish yellow. Barbara imagined it was "crying as deeply as I was because that day I was losing Tristan."

She wandered around the halls of the hospital guided by her husband's hand on her elbow. She remembers staring at signs, but not understanding their meaning. Studying the words, she didn't know what she was reading.

In the waiting room, she shook uncontrollably and kept breaking into sobs, consoled by her husband.

"I couldn't stop them. I kept trying to think of anything to shut down the tears. Sitting in that waiting area. Just kept crying and waiting."

A nurse's clipboard recorded Barbara's demeanor as "appears emotional."

The abortion took 45 minutes. She asked for general anesthesia. Then she spent about an hour recovering before she was allowed to leave the hospital.

Driving back to Camden, she reclined in the seat, putting her feet on the dashboard. It was raining even harder.

"The sky was so dark. And it was only mid-afternoon, early evening. It was much darker than it should have been."

GRIEF

But that was just the beginning, Barbara says.

For the next two years, she cried every day. The first year, several times a day.

"I don't mean light crying, where you can sort of keep it back. I mean it would kind of well up from my center and it just didn't seem to stop. It seemed to be bigger than the person who's doing the crying. There was so much grief over the baby I'd hoped for," she says.

She wasn't grieving her decision to have the abortion, Barbara says, "That's a very important distinction." That decision was the "most humane choice possible for Tristan."

Instead, she was grieving for the child she didn't have.

"I had so much grief for the baby that I had fantasized about. A vibrant, healthy little girl.

For the two years following her abortion, Barbara was treated by a therapist who helped her to work through the grief.

She decided not to join the support groups for parents who suffered the loss of babies due to stillbirth, miscarriage or "other means," as if it's a "dirty phrase" to say abortion.

Yet, Barbara says she is "very careful" about revealing the details of how her pregnancy ended.

"By and large most of the people I'm close with I would describe as moral, ethical people and without exception they were all supportive about the decision we had made, which is not to say they would have done the same thing," she says.

"But they seemed to inherently understand that if you're not in the situation, how could you possibly know all the ins and outs of the circumstances and come up with the universal which is right and which is wrong, a cookie-cutter answer for someone else's baby."

FEAR

Four years later, Barbara sits on the couch in her cottage overlooking the water. Her legs are tucked under her and her 2½-year-old daughter is asleep on her breast.

Outside, in the garden, a dark gray angel cherub perched on the edge of a scallop shell keeps watch.

A week after the abortion, Barbara and her husband bought the sculpture, which doubles as a bird bath. Each summer, they plant marigolds around it and a bleeding heart behind it.

On the first day of November every year, they sprinkle marigold petals from the garden to the steps of the house. It's a Catholic tradition in Mexico performed during the day of the dead, she explains. The petals are intended to lead Tristan back to hearth and home. Barbara learned of the ceremony when she lived in New Mexico and made frequent trips over the border.

Their daughter knows about Tristan. Sometimes she wanders over to the angel, talking to the statute and stroking its smooth stone surface.

"She knows there was a baby named Tristan who wasn't born, who was in mommy's tummy," Barbara says.

Barbara asked that her last name not be used, fearing harassment or intimidation by those who disagree with her decision to seek an abortion.

She sees a growing threat to abortion access around the state. A citizens' petition aimed at "partial birth" abortions is clearly an attempt to further erode reproduction rights, she says.

Although she and her husband collected all of the information about Tristan and discussed the options for weeks, Barbara says he recognized who had to make the final choice.

"He was being very clear that ultimately it was my body that we were talking about." But others don't.

"Today, we're portrayed as some kind of careless monsters without any kind of moral direction. The people who know me would be aghast that that's how I'm seen by people who don't even know me."

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I want to take the opportunity to state my position on S. 1692, and to explain the reasons why I will again oppose this legislation.

I respect the deeply held views of those who oppose abortion in any circumstances. I have always believed that the decisions in this area are best handled by the individuals involved, guided by their own beliefs and unique circumstances, rather than by government mandates.

Second, like most Americans, I would prefer to live in a world where abortion is unnecessary. I support efforts to reduce the number of abortions through family planning and counseling to avoid unintended pregnancies.

I support Roe v. Wade, but I also understand that some restrictions on abortion can be constitutional when there is a compelling State interest at stake. I have previously voted to ban post-viability abortions unless the woman's life is at risk or the procedure is necessary to protect the woman from grievous injury to her physical health. That is why I will vote for the Durbin alternative to S. 1692. I conduct a Listening Session in every one of Wisconsin's 72 counties every year. In 1997 and 1998, hundreds of Wisconsin citizens came to talk to me about their serious and sincere concerns that, in some nearby states, abortions are being performed very late in pregnancy for reasons that they believe are not medically indicated. I support legislation that will actually reduce the total number of late-term abortions while providing reasonable exceptions when necessary to deal with serious medical situations. I am disappointed that the proponents of S. 1692 have steadfastly refused to accept any amendment, no matter how tightly crafted, which would include provisions to protect women's physical health. This intentionally polarizing approach is the reason people suspect that the objective of the bill is to further a political issue rather than change the law.

I am concerned that S. 1692 will not stop a single abortion late in pregnancy. The bill, by prohibiting only one particular procedure, creates an incentive for an abortion provider to switch to a different procedure that is not banned. The Durbin alternative amendment would stop abortions by any method after a fetus is viable, except when serious medical situations dictate otherwise.

I am supporting the Durbin amendment because it recognizes that, in some circumstances, women suffer from severely debilitating diseases specifically caused or exacerbated by a pregnancy or are unable to obtain necessary treatment for a life-threatening condition while carrying a pregnancy to term. The exceptions in the Durbin amendment are limited to conditions for which termination of the pregnancy is medically indicated. It retains the option of abortion for mothers facing extraordinary medical conditions, such as: breast cancer, preeclampsia, uterine rupture, or non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, for which termination of the pregnancy may be recommended by the woman's physician due to the risk of grievous injury to the mother's physical health or life. In contrast, S. 1692 provides no such exception to protect the mother from grievous injury to her physical health. At the same time, by clearly limiting the medical circumstances where post-viability abortions are permitted, this legislation prohibits these procedures in cases where the mother's health is not at such high risk.

I also feel very strongly that Congress should seek to restrict abortions only within the constitutional parameters set forth by the U.S. Supreme Court. I would have preferred that S. 1692 had been reviewed by the Judiciary Committee on which I serve, rather than having been placed straight on the Senate calendar. I believe S. 1692 raises significant constitutional questions, and with court decisions in 19 of the 21 states where state legislation similar to S. 1692 has been challenged, the Judiciary Committee should have reviewed this bill prior to its consideration on the Senate floor.

S. 1692, by prohibiting a procedure whenever it is used, breaches the Court's standard that the government does not have a compelling interest in restricting abortions prior to fetal viability. However, I am also aware that some of the recent decisions on state legislation similar to S. 1692 raises questions about whether an exception for grievous physical injury may be too narrow. To date I have supported this very narrow definition of the exception necessary to protect the physical health of the woman while balancing concerns that abortion late in pregnancy should only be used in rare circumstances. I have specifically voted for the Daschle amendment last Congress, legislation which exactly reflects this position. The Durbin amendment contains similar language.

The Durbin amendment goes farther than the Daschle amendment in ensuring that the exceptions to the ban on post-viability abortions are properly exercised. It requires a second doctor to certify the medical need for a post-viability abortion. The second doctor requirement is intended to ensure that post-viability abortions take place only when continuing the pregnancy would prevent the woman from receiving treatment for a life-threatening condition related to her physical health or would cause a severely debilitating disease or impairment to her physical health.

The Durbin alternative amendment strikes the right balance between protecting a woman's constitutional right to choose abortion and the right of the state to protect future life. It protects a woman's physical health throughout her pregnancy, while insisting that only grievous, medically diagnosable conditions could justify aborting a viable fetus. Both fetal viability and women's health would be determined by the physician's best medical judgement, as they must be, in concurrence with another physician.

I hope, as we vote today, we do so in full knowledge of the strong feelings about this issue on all sides. We should respect these differences, avoid efforts to confuse or trick each other and the public, and maintain a level of debate that reflects the importance of ascertaining the truth about this issue and finding responses that are sensitive and constitutionally sound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWNBACK). The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that immediately following my remarks there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I thank my colleagues, the Senators from Ohio, Mr. DEWINE, and Alabama, Mr. SESSIONS, for their kind remarks. It has been a long, long struggle, and we are still not there yet. It is very frustrating to this Senator, who initially came to the floor in the mid-1990s, the early 1990s, in 1994 and 1995, where I found out these kinds of procedures were occurring, the so-called partial-birth abortions. I was shocked and I could not believe that in America we would be doing anything like this. This is America, I thought, we can't be killing children inches from birth. It makes no sense.

So I sought answers and talked to a number of people, including a nurse who had witnessed them. After getting all of that information together, I decided to write a bill banning partial-birth abortions. Here we are. Each time we have passed it here, it has been vetoed by the President of the United States, regrettably. I think it has been two or three times now. There will be another veto coming if we pass it again. But initially, when we started, we only had 25 to 35 votes on the floor because we were told it was only four or five times a year. Then we were told it was maybe 15 times a year. As the years progressed, we found out this is on demand and is not strictly for abnormalities at all but, rather, on demand, for any reason, if a woman chooses to have such a procedure.

So it has been a long struggle. As I listened to the debate—and I have been on the floor all day listening to my friend, RICK SANTORUM, the Senator from Pennsylvania, who has done such an outstanding job on this issue. He is very passionate. You need to be passionate on this issue. I don't know how anybody can come down on the floor of the Senate and talk about this issue and not be passionate. We are killing unborn children who are in the process of exiting the birth canal. That is what needs to be understood. I ask my fellow Americans and my colleagues, don't we have better things to do than that here in America?

I am proud to say that I, to some extent, exposed this horrible procedure, establishing that it did take place. I am proud to say that I exposed it for what it is—infanticide, or murder. That is what it is. We are killing children as they exit the birth canal, and we are putting all kinds of labels on this process. We are saying all kinds of things to cover up what is happening. I remember—how well I remember—the incredible amount of flack I got for standing on the Senate floor with a plastic medical doll. The liberal press called it a plastic fetus. There is no such thing. It was a medical doll. And with a pair of scissors, I demonstrated how this process worked because I thought the American people needed to know what was happening.

I was terrorized, if you will, by the press, bashed, called a "right-wing extremist," and "out of the mainstream." Of course, those people who commit these acts of violence against these children are not extreme in the eyes of the media, which is fascinating.

President Bill Clinton personally came to my State, as did Vice President Gore, as did Mrs. Clinton, and campaigned against my reelection in 1996 on this issue. It was ugly; it was nasty; it was brutal. But, you know, for every one of those arrows that I took, I said to myself, it is all worth it because these children can't speak for themselves. They do not have the opportunity to stand here on the Senate floor. They don't have a representative here unless we do it for them. They don't get a chance to say I would like to be born. They don't have that opportunity.

So I am proud to take every arrow they can throw, shoot, or whatever they want to do. I take it as a badge of honor. And I am glad to do it.

I got an incredible amount of flak from the media on this to the extent that they have distorted what I said. It is interesting to read "mainstream" respectable papers such as the New York Times and find that they cannot get it right. We called a number of times to correct these papers and reporters to tell them that the things they were saying I did I didn't do.

For example, they said, as I indicated earlier, that I waved a plastic fetus around on the floor of the Senate when it was a little medical doll. They did get the scissors right. They also then said I showed pictures of aborted children on the floor of the Senate, photographs, which was not true. I showed a photograph of a child who had been born prematurely and had lived. That, I did show. In fact, some of them went so far as to say that I actually showed photographs of an actual abortion, which, again, was not true. They had a heyday at my expense. I lived through it all. I am proud of it.

People said, well, you know you made a mistake, Senator, that almost cost you your election last time. You know you did all of this on the Senate floor.

I would do it again. I am going to do it again right now for whatever time it takes for me to make the point that I want to make tonight.

There are several points that I want to make.

One of them that I want to make is that this is a disgusting, dark, horrible game we are in, this abortion industry. And somebody needs to take a flashlight or, bigger than that, a searchlight and shine it into this industry so that we find out exactly what is going on in this abortion industry. It is not just partial-birth abortion. It is abortion in general.

It is a dirty business. It is a profitable business. There are people making money out there at the expense of young women, young mothers, who are in a terrible dilemma. They are making money on them.

We are going to find out, as I move through my presentation tonight, that we are going to be talking about some things in this industry that aren't too pleasant. It is not just that they are making money on the women. We will get into that a little bit further in a moment.

But I think most Americans, if they knew what was going on, would be disgusted, appalled, sickened, and angry that such a brutal act as killing a child with scissors to the back of the head, with no anesthesia, in the act of birth, would go on in this America—defenseless in America, a defenseless little unborn child. We do it at random. We do it 4,000 times a day, every day—not just partial birth but abortions in general, 4,000 of them every single day. We don't know how many partial births. It doesn't matter; it is still the killing of a child.

I ask my colleagues and those who may be watching out across America tonight: If you saw an article in your local paper tomorrow that said that all of the puppies and all of the kittens in your local SPCA that no one adopted were going to be killed tomorrow with no anesthetics, with a needle to the back of the head to suck out the brains of those animals, what would be your reaction? I guarantee you there would be people marching down in front of the SPCA, and it wouldn't happen. But that is what we are doing to our children.

I know it is not pleasant to talk about. I don't like to talk about it.

I wish I didn't have to stand on the floor of the Senate as some of the great orators and great Senators of all time have stood and debated the issues of the day. Think about it, the issues of the Civil War, the issues of federalism, and civil rights, all of the great issues of the day that have been debated right here with some of the greatest people—John C. Calhoun, Daniel Webster, at whose desk I sit—the great debates that have taken place in here. Yet because this President refuses to stop this procedure, we are down here now again for the fifth or sixth time debating this again trying to stop this horrible, horrible procedure that kills unborn children.

Why are we surprised, my fellow Americans, when we pick up the newspaper and read somewhere that a mother flushes her child down the toilet or that somebody shoots somebody in school? Why should that surprise you? What message are we giving to our children? We are telling them every day: Children, you are expendable. You are not important. Go to school today, Johnny. You be a good boy. While you are in school doing your class work, and then you come home to do your homework, we are going to abort your sister.

Kids understand. They know what is going on. They are smarter than you think they are. They know what is going on. They read about this stuff. They hear it. Some of them are listening to this debate right now. They know what is happening.

Yet as horrible as this procedure is, and as many times as so many people have been down on this floor, as my two colleagues a moment ago did, eloquently discussing this issue and talking about how horrible it is, as I have done, as Senator SANTORUM has done in great detail over the years, as many times as we talk about it, we still can't get enough votes to override the veto of the President of the United States.

It is frustrating. I tried one time to meet with the President of the United States personally on this issue. I asked him for 15 minutes of his time. I said, I will go on the record, off the record, with staff, without staff, personally, with just you and me, whatever you want. Just give me 15 minutes. I couldn't get it. He wouldn't deal with me. He wouldn't talk with me about it.

This procedure that kills a child, as you have seen it described—I will not go through the description again—is legal in all 50 States of the United States of America.

In addressing the controversy over the partial-birth abortion method, the National Abortion Federation has written to its membership and said don't apologize for this process. Do not be on the defensive for killing children this way because it is a legal procedure. It is legal to do this. So don't apologize for it. When somebody says, oh, you know, you took scissors to the back of a head and you killed a little baby coming out of the birth canal, don't apologize for that, they say. It is right in their literature because it is legal.

This is America. America, America, we sure need help. If we ever needed God to shed his grace on this great country, it is now. We are killing the posterity that the Founding Fathers talked about—our posterity, our children. We are killing them every single day—not just with partial-birth abortion but with all abortions—4,000 a day. Think of it: 4,000 abortions a day in this country; 4,000 children—children. Let's use the correct term.

Many of my opponents argue that this procedure is necessary to preserve the health of the mother. I am going to dispel that myth in great detail in a little while. I hope you are listening because it is a myth. It is not done for the health of the mother; it is done for the profit of the abortionist.

President Clinton twice vetoed this legislation with false and deceptive information and justification.

How does partially delivering a living child and then restraining it from exiting the birth canal so that only the head remains in the womb possibly enhance the health of a mother?

I have asked that question on the floor 100 times, and I can't get an answer. You have to understand now. The child is exiting the birth canal. The abortionist is holding the child—actually holding that child—in his or her hands and forcefully stopping the head from exiting the birth canal because once the head exits the birth canal, it is a birth. It is a birth.

What is he holding? Is that not a child? What is that part of the body? The feet, the legs, the torso, the shoulders, the hands, what is that? That is not supposed to be a child? If the baby turned around and exited headfirst, you couldn't do it because then it is born.

That is a pretty fine line. That is a pretty fine line. They do that in the name of the mother's health? You have got to be kidding me.

What is wrong with this country? Where are we going? We have to stand down here on the floor of this Senate and protect and fight to protect the lives of children, our children, killed in this way every day in America, every day. We can't win because the President will veto what we pass with about 63 or 64 votes. He will veto it. We need 67 votes.

President Clinton's claim that partial-birth abortions are only undertaken to protect the mother from serious injury to her health has been conclusively proven to be false. When he says that—and he will when he vetoes it—he is not telling the truth. In fact, the vast majority of partial-birth abortions are performed on perfectly healthy women with perfectly healthy babies—that is the truth—80 to 90 percent, perfectly healthy women, mothers and babies.

The Nation's leading practitioner of partial-birth abortion, Dr. Martin Haskell of Ohio, has been quoted extensively today. He said in the American Medical Association's American Medical News:

I'll be quite frank. Most of my abortions are elective, in that 20 to 24 week range. In my particular case, probably 20 percent are for genetic reasons and the other 80 percent are purely elective.

That is the abortionist speaking. That is not me. It is not some pro-life organization. That is the abortionist.

He said 20 to 24 weeks; 24 weeks is a 6-month fetus.

I want to share with my colleagues a phone call I received in my office a few months ago from a 9-year-old girl. She said to me: Senator, I heard you were very much pro-life. I want to give a message that I would like you to share with your colleagues and with the American people as you travel around the country.

She said: I want them to know that I'm now 9 years old but my Mommy gave birth to me at 5 months; she was 5 months pregnant, and I lived and am here to tell you and tell America that babies at 5 or 6 months in the womb can survive. I'm glad my Mommy didn't pick that option.

When somebody says we are not taking the lives of unborn children, we are not taking the lives of people who have an opportunity to be productive members of our society, they are wrong.

At the White House veto ceremony Mr. Clinton hosted the last time he vetoed the partial-birth abortion ban, he presented five women at a press conference whom the President said "had to make a lifesaving, certainly health saving but still tragic decision, to have the kind of procedure that would be banned by H.R. 1833." That is, the ban of partial-birth abortions.

The President around this town and around America doesn't have the greatest reputation for telling the truth, and he didn't tell the truth there either. Despite saying those five women had health-saving partial-birth abortions, one of the women involved in the press conference later publicly admitted neither her abortion nor those of any of the other four women was actually medically necessary.

Two days after the ceremony, one of the five women, Claudia Ades, appeared by telephone on a radio show in Mobile, AL, and quotations from the interview appear in the May-June 1996 edition of the newspaper Heterodoxy. During the course of the radio show, she told Mr. Malone, the MC: This procedure was not performed in order to save my life. This procedure was not performed in order to save my life.

This procedure was elective. That is considered an elective procedure, as were the procedures of all the other women who were at the White House veto ceremony.

Here again, President Bill Clinton is using people and not telling the truth.

The health-of-the-mother exception is so broadly defined, it would include the mother's emotional health, let alone physical health.

I don't enjoy talking about this stuff on the Senate floor. I don't enjoy standing here and talking about the fact we are killing our children. Who does? If we don't, it will keep on happening. Some in politics, some even in the Republican Party, the pro-life party in America supposedly, said we shouldn't talk about this issue; it is too controversial; let's sweep it under the rug and try to be less confrontational, be more together.

I don't believe we ever would have ended slavery or segregation or any of the other great issues we resolved in American history if we hadn't talked about it, if we hadn't faced it. Suppose Lincoln had said: I'm totally opposed to slavery, but my neighbor wants to own a couple of slaves; that is OK with me; I will not make a big deal out of it.

So we can take that approach on abortion and say, I'm personally opposed to abortion but my neighbor wants to have an abortion; that is OK with me.

Somebody has to stand up for 4,000 babies a day who are being killed in this country by all abortions. I don't mind being that person, I will be very honest. If that means I lose an election somewhere, that is fine with me. I am not here to compromise my views to win elections. I am here to lead, to stand up on principle. Otherwise, I don't want to be here. Anybody who stands here and says they are afraid to discuss this issue or won't come down here and discuss this issue because they are afraid they might leave ought to resign because they are not bringing dignity to this body. They should stand up and passionately fight for what they believe.

I will review in a few moments some very dirty, disgusting little secrets about the abortion industry in this country. It doesn't apply strictly to any one type of abortion; it applies to abortions in general. It is not pleasant. It is not pretty. It is pretty graphic. But I am going to talk about it because the American people need to understand what is going on. These children don't have a voice. They can't ask for the opportunity to be born.

Imagine, since Roe v. Wade passed—and we will have a vote on that very shortly, tomorrow, this infamous Roe v. Wade decision in 1973—40 million babies have died in this country. I don't want anyone to misunderstand me lest I be accused of misusing facts. All abortions, including partial-birth abortions—40 million babies.

Have you ever stopped to think what some of those babies might have grown up to be had they had the chance? I wonder if there is a President in that group. How about a doctor? How about a cure for cancer? Maybe there is a scientist who would cure breast cancer—wouldn't that be ironic—or cure any type of cancer, or perhaps discover some big secret in the universe, maybe even a Senator. Never to have a chance to live their dream, never to have a chance to grow up, have a family, to pursue their dreams—gone, down the drain. They didn't have a chance to talk about it, didn't have a chance to even ask for mercy; they were just eliminated.

Do the math. We have about 260 million Americans. We have killed 40 million of them in the years since Roe v. Wade, and we have people on this floor bragging about Roe v. Wade, what an important decision it is and has been in American history. You bet it is important; they are right about that.

We took the lives of 40 million of our fellow citizens, 40 million people who never get a chance to pay Social Security taxes or pay any taxes or build any bridges or buy any products or contribute any money to the U.S. Treasury, if you want to put it in those terms, never, never had a chance. Mr. President, 40 million children, one-seventh of the entire U.S. population, one-seventh, and we are killing them.

You do not think we have some cultural problems in America? Unbelievable. I would like to ask all of you listening to answer this question silently to yourself: If you knew a woman who had three children born blind, two children born deaf, and one child born retarded, she was pregnant again and she had syphilis, would you recommend she have an abortion? Answer to yourselves out there. I will give you a second.

Guess who you just killed? Beethoven. That was Beethoven's mother, a pretty fair contributor, I would say, to the arts of the world, and this country. Who are we, Roe v. Wade? Who are we to do that to the Beethovens, the potential Beethovens of the world? This is a sick society, for people to stand down here and defend that, and that is what we are doing.

Mr. President, 95 percent or more of all abortions are used for birth control, 1 or 2 percent of all abortions performed are done because the life of the mother was threatened or she was raped or sexually abused by a member of her family—a small minority. That means over 38 million abortions occurred for a variety of reasons that boil down to one word—convenience. It is convenient. That is what it is, convenience. The mother was too old, maybe too young, in high school, maybe in college, had to work, didn't have a husband, didn't have a boyfriend; it wasn't in her best interests to have the baby; she had her whole life ahead of her. Pick any excuse, pick any reason. Pick the one you like, but that is the reason—convenience. It is a little inconvenient, isn't it? I have raised three children. Sure, it is inconvenient. But they are beautiful and I am sure glad I have them, and I am sure glad nobody made the decision to end their lives.

I know many of these desperate young mothers myself. I serve on the board of a home for unwed mothers. I have raised money for homes for unwed mothers. I have compassion for these mothers and for those who have gone through a horrible experience of having an abortion, or struggling in terms of whether to have the abortion or not, or whether to give the child up for adoption or to keep it.

I must say to any woman out there listening to me tonight, any mother, there are people out there who will help you. There are people out there who will help you. You do not have to have an abortion and you don't have to listen to one side of the argument. Ask. If you want help, call my office; I will put you in touch with people who will help you. It would be my honor and privilege to do that. Don't have an abortion; have your child like I did, my wife and I. You will be glad you did when you get down the road. You will be very glad you did.

You have other options available, options that will benefit you, that will benefit your child. Choose adoption or choose to keep your child. There are people out there who want to love that child. In either case, adoption or keep your baby, choose life. I beg you to do that, please. Do it for yourself; don't do it for me. Do it for yourself and for your baby. You will be glad you did. I promise you will. It will be tough for awhile but you will.

All across the fruited plains of America runs a river of abortion—blood.

School shootings, we blame guns for that. After all, it could not possibly be our fault. Babies born alive left in trash cans: A young woman who goes into a restroom, gives birth to a child and throws it in the trash can can be prosecuted for murder. If she had a partial-birth abortion 5 minutes before that happened, it is all legal. Is there any difference in terms of the result, the child? It is still a child, isn't it?

Why are we here today? I just told you a few moments ago. It is to outlaw a cruel, inhuman procedure used for late-term abortions, a process so barbaric and so inhuman we would not even do it to animals. We wouldn't even think of it, I promise you. It is not being done to animals anywhere in the country.

We fell three votes short last time to override this President. I would give anything to have this President change his mind and not veto this. Do you realize how many children died since then? We don't really know. We know there are thousands who die from partial-birth abortions every year. If you multiply that by 4 or 5 years, we know it is probably in the vicinity of 15,000. I don't know what the number is. Whatever it is, it is too many. But hundreds, if not thousands, of young children are gone, just because the President of the United States refused to sign that bill; three votes short of an override. You talk about whether one vote means something or two votes mean something? You bet they do. If you are out there somewhere in America and you think I am right, you ought to take a look at who your Senators are and see how they are voting on this because those votes are going to cost lives. We are not talking about budgets. We are not talking about taxes. We are not talking about things such as that. We are not talking about anything other than lives, American lives, little babies.

Generically, without singling anybody out, let me speak to those Senators out there who might be wavering. I know some of you have been struggling with this vote for 4 years. You know in your heart it is wrong to kill unborn children this way. You know it, but you have connections to the abortion industry, the National Abortion Rights League, and others. I know they pressure you. I know I get pressured on the other side, too. I know what pressure is. We all do. But in your heart you know it is wrong. You can stop it. Three more votes or four more votes here can stop this. We can save thousands of lives down the road—thousands.

Imagine, if you could, all those children who have died from just partial-birth abortion in the last 25 years coming here today. If they had the opportunity to live, what do you think they would say? I don't think they would be with those who say, no, we ought to have this process. I don't think so. Maybe I am wrong. I have been wrong before.

Hold your grandchild in your arms, or your child, and ask yourself: How far removed is that grandchild or child from the process that you are voting to allow? A year? A month? Maybe you have a newborn. Think about it. I have.

According to the American Medical Association, the partial-birth abortion method is never medically necessary—never medically necessary. According to the Physicians' Ad Hoc Coalition for Truth, partial-birth abortion is likened to infanticide and is considered an extremely dangerous procedure.

Let me quote from these physicians:

The prolonged manipulation of the cervix introduces a serious risk of infection and excessive bleeding. Turning the child inside the womb using forceps risks rupture or puncture of the uterus, infection, and hemorrhage from displacing the placenta. Inserting the scissors—a blind procedure—risks cutting the cervix.

That is one doctor.

Another one says:

Beyond the immediate risks, partial-birth abortion can undermine a woman's future fertility and compromise future pregnancies.

Many pro-abortion advocates have publicly stated their opposition to the partial-birth-abortion technique. Warren Hern, the author of the Nation's most widely used textbooks on late-term abortions, said:

You really can't defend it. I would dispute any statement that this is the safest procedure to use.

This leads me to another dirty little secret about the industry which is that abortion clinics are losing doctors who are willing to perform abortions. Do you know what happens when you lose the ability to perform abortions? You lose the ability to make money.

My colleagues on the left will assert that they are afraid they are going to get killed by a pro-life activist. That has happened seven times, and it is seven times too many, but it has happened. I have statements from the media, the abortion industry, and the doctors themselves that say the reason abortion clinics cannot find doctors is because they are considered losers in the medical field.

Those of us who have been pro-life who have been talking about this are making a difference in some of these abortions. Abortionists are losers. They are having such a tough time recruiting abortionists. They are actively lobbying right now to force medical students to perform abortions. What happened to choice? It is very interesting, isn't it?

Listen to these quotes from the abortion industry. I am making these points because I want to lead you into the next issue of what is happening in the industry and why these things are occurring and what you will see where I am leading you in terms of another ugly little secret, dirty little secret about what is happening in addition to the abortionists. Here is what Morris Wortman, abortionist, Democrat and Chronicle, 1992, said:

Abortion has failed to escape its back-alley associations . . . [it is the] dark side of medicine . . . Even when abortion became legal, it was still considered dirty.

That was the abortionist.

Joe Thompson, retired abortionist, South Bend Tribune, December 26, 1992:

In obstetrics and gynecology, the term abortionist is a dirty word.

Jean Hunt, former executive director, Elizabeth Blackwell Center, Philadelphia, PA, Westchester Daily Local News, November 26, 1992:

Doctors today see abortion as a mud puddle not worth jumping into.

David Zbaraz, abortionist, Washington Post, 1980:

[Abortion is] a nasty, dirty, yukky thing and I always come home angry.

Another:

. . . some residents are concerned about being stigmatized for performing abortions and feel they are likely to perform abortions once in practice.

Abortionist Trent MacKay and Andrea Phillips MacKay, Family Planning Perspectives, May and June, 1995.

Organized medicine has been sympathetic to abortion—not abortionists.

Carol Joffe, pro-abortion author, 1998.

A couple more:

[Abortion] is a difficult field from an emotional aspect. Some of us, and all of us, I suspect, to some degree or another, have emotional isolation and separation and distance from some of our social friends, certainly from the community and from our professional colleagues.

George Tiller, abortionist, St. Louis, MO.

On the status of abortionists, Warren Hern says.

. . . status of [abortionists] is somewhere well below the average garage mechanic . . . patients do not value what we do.

Richard Hausknecht, abortionist, January 1998:

It's true that abortion providers are perceived as not very good doctors—that they have no alternative so they do abortions, that they cannot earn a living any other way.

Is that the kind of person you want to send a woman to because you want to protect her health?

Another one. Merle Hoffman, president, Choices Women's Medical Center, Queens, NY, 1995:

The medical establishment has yet to welcome in abortion providers . . .

Tom Kring, director, California Planning Clinic:

Abortion has a stigma attached to it that is increasingly scaring doctors and clinics.

I think, I say to my colleagues, one of the reasons clinics are closing is because of the doctors. You cannot get a good doctor.

Eileen Adams, former administrator for Park Medical Center in Illinois which closed after 13 years of operation:

You cannot get a good doctor.

Then she said:

I hate to have that in the paper so the anti-abortionists would say they've won—but they did.

That is what Eileen Adams said.

A 1993 Boston Globe article had this so say:

Opponents of abortion in New England may have lost the battle of public opinion, but they appear to be winning the war . . . there are no longer enough doctors and hospitals in some areas to provide abortions.

With all that testimony from within the industry—dirty, yucky, not protecting the health of the mothers—why is it still going on? Because there is another dirty little secret, and it is called fetal tissue marketing. We will take a look at this chart.

I want everybody to see what happens in this dirty little secret of the abortion industry. I want my colleagues to know this is the abortion industry in general, but abortion is abortion. There are different types of abortion. Partial-birth abortion is what is on the agenda today. But fetal body parts marketing is what I am talking about.

A woman comes into an abortion clinic. It could be Planned Parenthood. She goes into the clinic, and she is talked to, advised to have an abortion. But what she may or may not know is that inside that clinic in a little room somewhere or some office that is not necessarily visible to her, is the harvester, the wholesaler, the person who is going to take her baby, cut it into pieces and sell it.

They are going to say: Oh, no, no, no, nobody is selling any babies. Listen to what I have to say, and then you tell me.

The wholesaler and the harvester is in the clinic. This poor woman, this mother, this woman who has probably gone through unimaginable trauma, is now faced with this little secret because she has to sign a waiver that allows them to do it.

You have the harvester now who is in that building. Anatomic Gift Foundation, Opening Lines—those are the names of a couple of the wholesalers.

What happens? We will get into that in a few moments.

But here is the buyer over here. If you are pro-life, you will be pleased to know, I am sure, that maybe a university in your State, Government agencies to which you are paying taxes, pharmaceutical companies, private researchers, and research organizations are buying body parts.

How does this work?

Here is step 1. The buyer orders the fetal body parts from the wholesaler/harvester. The buyer says: We need a couple of eyes, or whatever. The abortion clinic provides space for the wholesaler and harvester in the clinic where that woman goes to procure fetal body parts. The wholesaler/harvester faxes an order to the abortion clinic, faxes an order to the clinic, and says: We need this, and we need this, and we need this. The wholesaler's technician harvests the organs: Skin, limbs, whatever, from aborted babies.

Now, bear in mind how gruesome this really is. This is the abortion industry, ladies and gentlemen. Here is a woman coming into that clinic, thinking she needs an abortion. She is advised to have it. And these people are sitting around the room, the harvesters. When they are looking at that woman, there is a living child there that has not been aborted yet, and they are placing orders for body parts—placing orders for body parts—before the child is even dead.

The wholesaler's technician harvests the organs. Then the clinic "donates" fetal body parts to the wholesaler/harvester, who in turn pays the clinic a "site fee" for access to the aborted babies. Then the wholesaler/harvester "donates" the fetal body parts to the buyer. The buyer then "reimburses" the wholesaler/harvester for the cost of retrieving the fetal body parts. We are going to get into a little more detail on this.

You might say: This is a debate about partial-birth abortion. What does the sale of fetal tissue have to do with partial-birth abortion?

First, like partial-birth abortions, the selling of fetal tissue is immoral and unethical. It is illegal. And it is a reprehensible, dirty practice that is going on in the shadows of the industry. It is a practice I had never even heard of. Again, I could not believe this was going on. But it is.

Second, it is a practice that very graphically shows how this industry has gone far beyond the ethical boundaries that even most pro-choice Americans would find repugnant.

Third, like partial-birth abortion, the industry has taken the practice of selling fetal body parts, which is illegal under Federal criminal law, and created a loophole to allow them to do it.

In partial-birth abortion, they use the head loophole. In other words, what I mean by that is: Arms, feet, body, neck, heart, toes. That is not birth. That is not the baby—until the head comes into the world. Then it is a baby. Really? It is a legal mumbo jumbo, as Senator SANTORUM talked about. It is a bunch of garbage. It makes lawyers around the country very rich, and it allows these clinics to kill our children.

I am sure the legal team that came up with the head loophole is very proud of themselves, just as we have the fetal harvesting loophole. In a sense, we call it "donations" or "reimbursements" rather than selling parts. They are both loopholes to hide the facts.

Stabbing a baby in the back of the head and sucking its brains out is illegal; it is murder; it is infanticide—whether that child is sitting in a play pen or whether that child is trying to exit the birth canal to become a member of this world. But its head is conveniently, under this stupid legal definition, “stuck” in the womb. And it is not stuck; it is held there. And they call it medicine. We have people standing down here saying: This is medicine. We’re doing this for the health of the mother. Really?

Let’s go back to the sale of fetal body parts. I have here the United States Code. Here is what the United States Code says:

Prohibitions Regarding Human Fetal Tissue.

That is the topic. That is the heading right here in the United States Code.

Purchase of tissue. It shall be unlawful for any person to knowingly acquire, receive, or otherwise transfer any fetal tissue for valuable consideration if the transfer affects interstate commerce.

Criminal penalties for such violations.

In general, any person who violates subsection—

The one I just referenced—shall be fined in accordance with title 18, U.S. Code, subject to paragraph 2, or imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both.

The term “valuable consideration” does not include reasonable payments associated with the transportation, implantation, processing, preservation, quality control, or storage of human fetal tissue.

It is against the law, ladies and gentlemen, my fellow Americans, and colleagues, it is against the law to do this. And they are doing it every day to our children—every day. So 10 years in jail if you sell human fetal tissue. That was signed into law, ironically, by President William Jefferson Clinton. It took effect on June 3, 1993.

But the lawyers went to work, as only lawyers can do. They found a loophole: How can we sell this tissue, make a profit at the expense of this poor woman victim, and get it to research, and hide it all by calling it research? How do we do that without getting caught and getting our tails thrown in jail?

That was the question. So they found it in section D(3) which:

... allows reasonable payments associated with the transportation, implantation, processing, preservation, quality control, or storage of human fetal tissue.

That is the loophole I just read out of the book.

But because there is no documentation, no disclosure, no government oversight, this section has become a gigantic loophole to allow this industry to engage in the illegal trafficking of body parts of fetal tissue without any prosecution.

Mr. President, we need a big beam of light to shine into this industry, to get into the darkness and find out what is going on in this for-profit industry. We need some sunshine. We need it so badly. I am not looking to get into the medical records of individuals. That is not what I am about. But I believe if we are going to allow the use of fetal tissue from aborted fetuses—I mean aborted fetuses for research, which I believe we should not—if we are, we need at least a minimum of documentation to ensure this tissue is not being sold in violation of Federal criminal law.

Is partial-birth abortion used for this? I don’t know. Why not find out? Let’s shine the light in. Let’s talk about a few things that might make you think, however, that there is a link here. Your call. You listen. You make your own determination.

Let us talk about dilation and evacuation, the so-called D&E, for a moment. This method, which is performed during months 4 to 6, 6 months, is particularly gruesome in that the doctor must tear out the baby parts with a pliers-like instrument. Literally disassembles it in the womb. It is horrible. No wonder they are angry when they get home and sick, sick before they start. Then the nurse gruesomely has to take all these body parts of this child who was torn apart in the womb and reassemble them in a pan to be sure they got it all. That is the first method.

I will just ask you to think, as we go through this, if you are in the business of selling body parts, how is that going to work with your buyer, if all the body parts are torn apart? I think you would say, well, probably it isn’t going to be much good. There might be some tissue, but if you need intact organs, disassembling the organs ought to lead you to believe, reasonably, I think, they are probably not very good. If you need a liver and it is all chopped up in this procedure, it is probably not going to do you much good. So the D&E method is not real good for selling body parts. But that is one type of abortion.

The next is the saline abortion. This occurs after the first trimester. The abortionist injects a strong salt solution into the amniotic sac and, over a period of an hour, the baby is basically poisoned and burned to death in her mother’s womb. That is the saline solution. So now I ask you again, if you are selling body parts, and the buyers want good body parts, good condition, that is not going to do a lot of good. That is not going to make your product very marketable. That is probably not a good method either.

The next one is a little more grotesque, if you can imagine that. This is called the dig method, or digoxin method. It is called harpooning the whale inside the industry. You see, even in the industry they can’t even be respectful to the child or even the woman in some cases, the mother. They use terms such as that, “harpooning the whale.” The abortionist inserts a needle containing digoxin into the abdomen of the woman. In order to make sure the doctor hits the baby and not the woman, which would be lethal for her as well, he must watch to see the needle begin moving wildly. And when it does move wildly, he knows he has harpooned the whale and can push his needle all the way through and kill the baby. This abortion procedure is probably the least desired method for the body parts people because the baby’s organs are, in essence, liquefied by this horrible poison. They are basically worthless to the body parts market.

Those are three types of abortions. They have nothing to do with partial-birth abortion. I use these examples of three types of abortions to show you they basically make the sale of body parts worthless for the most part. Some tissue I am sure they can use.

So where are they getting these things? Ask yourself, what have we been talking about all day? How can we get a good specimen, a baby whose organs are intact, a good cadaver? You can do it two ways. You could have a live birth and kill it, or you could have a partial-birth abortion, kill it that way, and damage only the brain so the rest of the body is good for research.

Now, is this happening? Shine the light in. There are going to be people who say that I have made this link. I will tell you right now, I haven’t. I am asking you to shine the light into this industry. Bring in the sunshine. Let’s look in the clinics. Let’s find out what is going on. Are they being used? We will take a look in a few moments at some of the things going on here. I ask you whether or not you think they might be getting these parts from some other source of abortion other than partial-birth abortions. I don’t know. I know one thing. It is a black market. It is illegal. It is unreported, and it is unregulated. If it is the last thing I do before I leave this body, I will change that. I am going to change that.

The good news is abortion rates are down. That is good. But the problem is, because they are down and because the doctors aren’t doing them, they have to make it up somewhere. The industry has to make up the money. They have to make it up. Where do they do that? By selling body parts. That is where they make it up. It is really the dark side of the industry.

This is the testimony of a woman who calls herself Kelly, a fictitious name. Kelly was working and received a service fee from the Anatomic Gift Foundation, which is the wholesaler, the harvester, of these organs.

Listen to what Kelly had to say. Kelly fears for her life. That is why Kelly is a fictitious name and why Kelly is not being identified.

“We were never employees of the abortion clinic,” Kelly explains.

That is when they would sit in the clinic, in this room, and the lady comes in pregnant.

"We would have a contract with the clinic . . ."

Listen very carefully to what I am saying. A woman comes in. I am sorry. I am confusing the stenographer. I will go through the quote first and then explain it.

We were never employees of the abortion clinic. We would have a contract with an abortion clinic that would allow us to go in to procure fetal tissue for research. We would get a generated list each day to tell us what tissue researchers, pharmaceuticals and universities were looking for. Then we would go and look at the particular patient charts. We had to screen out anyone who had STDs or fetal anomalies. These had to be the most perfect specimens we could give these researchers for the best value that we could sell for. Probably only 10 percent of fetuses were ruled out for anomalies. The rest were healthy donors.

To capsulate, a woman is in the abortion clinic, and basically they are eyeing up the source. It is like a hunter going out and seeing, I guess in this case, a trophy doe rather than a trophy buck, and saying, there is a good specimen there. I hope that baby is fairly normal so I can sell the body parts. And they looked at the patients' charts while this child was alive in the womb. This girl might change her mind on whether to have this abortion, and nobody is helping her change her mind or asking her if she would like to change her mind. Oh, no, we have a contract here. We have a patient chart here. We have somebody looking at her, looking at the trophy and then saying: Hey, this chart looks real good, this gal has what we want; she has a normal baby there. My goodness, a perfect specimen, the most perfect specimen we could find. So give the researchers the best value we could sell for. Her words. Probably only 10 percent of fetuses were ruled out for anomalies; the rest were healthy donors. So said Kelly.

Let's look at a work order. This is a work order. Mailing address, shipping address, everything. OK. Tissue, fetal lung; one or both from the same donor, 12 to 16 weeks. Preservation: Fresh. Gestation: 12 to 16. Shipping: Wet ice. Constraints: No known abnormalities. We don't want any babies who have any problems. Obtain tissue under sterile or clean conditions.

Let me ask you a question, colleagues. In this filthy, dirty, disgusting business we are talking about, do you really think you can get a perfect lung, with no cuts and no abnormalities, by chopping up the child in the womb or putting all of this poison in the body, in the womb, in the embryonic sack? Or do you think it might be possible that the best way to get a normal lung is to bring a child through the birth canal in perfect condition, damaging only the brain, or perhaps even a live birth? Oh, you think that would not happen? Well, we will talk about that in a little while. Oh, yes, it happens.

Look here: "Normal fetal liver." A normal fetal liver is not one filled with poison. It is not a liver that has been chopped up. It is a normal fetal liver. There aren't too many ways you can get a normal fetal liver in an abortion clinic. "Dissect fetal liver and thymus and occasional lymph node from fetal cadaver within 10 minutes of the time it is extracted, and ship within 12 hours." "No abnormal donors."

There is a whole lot of money in this business, folks. With abortions down, they will charge a woman anywhere from $300 to $1,000 for an abortion and make several thousand dollars on the parts of her child. But she doesn't get any of that money, you can bet on that.

Let's look at another work order. The National Institutes of Health gets the delivery here. If you are pro-life, you will be "pleased" to know they are getting some of this stuff. "I would prefer tissues without identified anomalies; in particular, bone anomalies."

Let's look at another one. This is just the tip of the iceberg. I could give you hundreds of these work orders. I am picking a few of them.

Now, this one is particularly disturbing—as if the others weren't. Here is the donor criterion on this. We are talking about whole eyes. Now, the donor criterion is that the child be "brain dead." Think about that for a minute. Why would you put that on there? Are we to assume this child is going to be delivered to them live?

I assume if a child has been aborted and it is being sold, or provided, or donated, or whatever it is, to some research center, we ought to assume it is dead. Well, they are not assuming it. They are not assuming it at all. They are directing it: Make sure it is "brain dead." If anything else is moving, that is OK. Maybe the heart is beating, and that is OK. But make sure it is brain dead, noncadaver, and post 4 to 6 hours, any age. Again, no contagious diseases. "Remove eye with as much nerve"—they go into that. Federal Express—send it out. That is against the law.

So let's say a girl walks into a clinic and sits down to wait. I want to try to paint you a picture of what happens. A girl walks into a clinic and sits down to wait. A fax comes in, and the fax contains a list of what body parts are needed for that day. So here she comes. She still hasn't had the abortion. But they now have this list—the abortionist perhaps, but I don't know; I have not seen this. Perhaps he looks through the glass window, and maybe there is a one-way glass. He looks out into the waiting room and stares at her stomach and knows this is the very same child who is very much alive now, perhaps even moving and kicking; he knows that child will be dead in a few moments, and they already have the work order. They have already checked the charts, already know it is normal; they already know what they need. They are already planning it all.

If that is not sick, if that doesn't bother you, then, man, there is something wrong with the people in this country—big-time wrong.

After her abortion, in a matter of 10 minutes, if it is done then, that baby can be shipped on wet ice to researchers across the country, just like going into a supermarket and buying a piece of meat.

There are four illegal and immoral things happening with this issue. First, as I said before, current law prohibits receiving any consideration, valuable consideration, from the tissue of aborted children for research purposes. This is happening. So that is wrong. Violation No. 1.

Secondly, it has been reported that, in fact, live births are occurring at these clinics. Oh, that is a dirty little secret we don't want anybody to talk about. Let's not talk about that. It doesn't happen a lot, but in 100 abortions it could be as few as 5, 6, maybe 7, maybe 10 times—live births. Oh, boy, that is a real problem. What better way to get a good sample than a live birth?

It is the law of every State to make every medical effort to save the life of that child. I am going to show you proof that that isn't done. It is not happening in every case.

Thirdly, our tax dollars are being used to fund Planned Parenthood on the one end to kill the children, and NIH on the other end to do research on them. If you are pro-life, as I am, you won't like it; I don't like it. I am going to do something about it if it is humanly possible.

In 1996, Planned Parenthood received $158 million in taxpayer dollars. Who knows how much in addition is being funneled through the valuable consideration loophole from NIH research labs. The taxpayers and Congress deserve an answer. The chart shows Federal funds supporting Planned Parenthood Federation of America and its affiliates, in fiscal year 1994, $120 million; in 1995, $120 million; in 1996, $123 million. Add it all together. It is $158 million.

The fetal body parts industry is a big business, ladies and gentlemen, and it is not being honest. Mothers are not being given their consent forms sometimes. Sometimes they are. And the wholesalers are not forthcoming about how they ship the babies, among other things. These people are in the business of selling dead humans, so I guess maybe we should not expect too much in terms of ethics.

There are two statutes that govern fetal tissue research, and both statutes were passed as part of S. 1 in 1993, the National Institutes of Health and Revitalization Act of 1993. I was one of four Senators who voted no, as usual, because I don't believe Government should be doing any research on induced abortions, aborted fetuses. Up until 1992, we had a President, George Bush, who agreed. But Bill Clinton changed all of that. But even President Clinton, who signed the fetal tissue research Executive order as one of the first acts of his Presidency, was unwilling to accept the sale of fetal tissues.

Prior to 1993, there was a moratorium prohibiting Federal funding of fetal tissue research. That was overturned by President Clinton by Executive order on January 22, 1993. And Senator KENNEDY introduced S. 1 to codify Clinton's Executive order. Part of that was because this "statute permits the National Research Institutes to conduct support research on the transplantation of human fetal tissue for therapeutic purposes." The source of the tissue may be from an abortion where the informed consent of the donor is granted. This statute allows for Federal money to be used in fetal tissue research. And you will see that NIH is involved in this.

The second statute made it unlawful to transfer any human fetal tissue for valuable consideration. I talked about this statute. In other words, it is illegal to give monetary value to the various body parts being sold. And it is illegal to profit from the sale. The guilty receive fines and imprisonment for not more than 10 years. As long as the tissue is donated, it is OK. But large amounts of cash are changing hands.

Again, abortion clinics and the wholesalers are making a killing—that is a sick pun, a killing—literally with the abortion and with the sale of human baby parts.

Listen to what one of the leaders of fetal body parts marketing said in an interview with a pro-life publication: "Nearly 75 percent of the women who chose abortion agree to donate the fetal tissue."

Granted, this organization claims to only operate out of two abortion clinics. But if you apply their statistic nationwide, for theoretical purposes, you are talking about a lot of aborted babies being sold for cold, hard cash.

In addition, the consulting firm of Frost & Sullivan recently reported that the worldwide market for sale in tissue cultures brought in nearly $428 million in 1996, and they predict that market will continue to expand and will grow at an annual rate of 13.5 percent a year, and by 2002 will be worth nearly $1 billion. That is a whole lot of money at the expense of these unfortunate women.

In a taped conversation with the wholesaler, she says they do not buy the tissue. That is the way it works. That is really what happens.

In a taped conversation with another marketer of fetal body parts, they admit to try to get abortion clinics to alter procedures to get better tissue, which is a violation of Federal law.

This person then offers discounts for being a "high volume" user, and that the buyer can save money by purchasing their cost-effective, lower-range product.

Let's look now at a chart offered by Opening Lines, and you tell me if this isn't a business transaction for profit. Bear in mind the sale of body parts is illegal. You are not supposed to receive any consideration. Well, then maybe you could tell me why—this is one of those wholesalers, Opening Lines. Maybe you could tell me why they have a price list. Has anybody ever done any marketing before?

Look. You can get a kidney for $125. You can get a spinal cord for $325. Then down at the bottom, it says prices in effect through December 31, 1999. That is a price list, ladies and gentlemen. I suppose there will be somebody who will come down here and say, "Well, Senator, that is not a price list. That is fee-for-service."

That is what it says at the top.

What is the service? You say: Well, you know it is expensive. You have to take the brain out, or you have to take the spinal cord out. OK. We take the spinal cord out. I am not a doctor. I am not going to pretend to be. I am not going to make any reference to how difficult that might be.

But let's assume to remove a spinal cord from a child is a difficult operation. They are charging $325 for the spinal cord. I would think it would be safe to assume—I am not a doctor, but if you want to send an intact cadaver, that doesn't involve any research at all. Does it? They don't have to cut anything. We will just ship that along. But it cost $600. It doesn't have anything to do with what the service is in terms of finding the spinal cord and getting it out. It has nothing to do with it at all.

I will tell you why this is $600—the cadaver. Because when they get the cadaver; they can get the spinal cord; they can get the eyes; they can get the nose; they can get the ears; they can get the liver; they can get the thyroid, whatever they want. That is why it is $600. That is why the price list is there. You can even get a discount if you buy enough.

This is a dirty business. It is bad. It stinks.

The brochure boasts that it offers researchers "the highest quality, most affordable and freshest tissue prepared to your specifications and delivered in the quantities you need when you need it."

Here is the copy of the brochure. I didn't make it up. This is their brochure, Opening Lines. This is what they said.

Think about it. "We are professionally staffed and directed," it says. "We have over 10 years of experience in harvesting tissue and preservation. Our full-time medical director is active in all phases of our operation. We are very pleased to provide you with our services. Our goal is to offer you and your staff the highest quality, most affordable, and freshest tissue prepared to your specifications."

Please tell me how you can do that if it is simply a matter of taking an aborted child and sending it off to a research laboratory somewhere.

My colleagues and American people, I don't know what is going to happen to this country. But I just want to recap for you what has happened here.

A woman comes into a clinic, an abortion clinic. She is pregnant. She is in trouble. She needs help. They already have somebody who has read her charts. They know her baby is normal. They know it has no abnormal functions. They know they need to get that baby out of there quickly. They know they can't do damage to the cadaver. They cannot do damage to the fetus. They can't poison it. They can't cut it because, to their specifications, they need perfect eyes, or they need perfect skin, or good lungs, even the gonads, the ultimate. The poor little child just has no privacy here. Limbs, brains, spinal, spleen, liver, all of it, price list, all the way down—they have it all figured out.

And they have the gall to stand out here and tell you these clinics care for the women. They care for the profit. They cannot make it because abortions are going down. They can't charge these women any more because they are too poor to pay. So they take it from their bodies, from the children. It is a filthy, disgusting, dirty business, and it needs to be exposed and eliminated.

How much more should we tolerate in this country? How much more degradation must these children absorb and endure?

Look at that list. Look at it and tell me that is fee-for-service—to your specifications, your specifications. You give us the order, and we will make sure you get perfect eyes that weren't hurt by any abortionist's knife, or they weren't poisoned by digoxin, or saline. Oh, we will make sure. We will get you a live birth, if we have to, or a partial birth, if we have to. We will get it for you because there is a lot of money in it. That is why we will get it.

This is a filthy, disgusting, dirty business.

People say: Oh, you are antiresearch. I am not antiresearch. If a woman has a miscarriage and wishes to donate that miscarried child to research, she has every right to do that. I am proresearch.

The Department of Health and Human Services under President Bush determined there was plenty of tissue available through spontaneous abortions and ectopic pregnancies to satisfy research needs—plenty. But oh, no, we have to get into this. We have to make up for the loss of revenue because, thank God, abortions are starting to go down in this country. We have to make it up. Doctors don't want to do them anymore. It is a dirty business, they say. I'm sick when I go home. We are going down a slippery slope, my fellow Americans.

I used to teach history. I used to tell my kids in those classes: If you forget everything else I said, I want you to remember you have a responsibility to pass on America to your children, hopefully in better shape than we gave her to you. If you do that, America will always be here; if you fail, we could lose it.

What message are we giving to our children when we tolerate this—an order form before the woman even has the abortion.

Henry Hyde said: I deplore any medical procedure that treats human beings as chattel, personal property, as a subject fit for harvesting. The humanity of every fetus should be respected and treated with dignity and not like some laboratory animal.

Is that dignity? Is that respect?

Let me tell a story about a girl name Christy. This is not a pleasant story. These are the abortion clinics, there to protect the mother and make her healthy again. She went in to have her safe, healthy, legal abortion. Something went wrong. On July 1, 1993, Christy—fictitious name—underwent an abortion by John Roe, abortionist. After the procedure, Roe looked up to find Christy pale with bluish lips and no pulse or respiration. Christy's heart had stopped and there were no records that her vital signs were monitored during the procedure. Additionally, Roe was not trained in anesthesia and the clinic had no anesthesia emergency equipment or staff trained to handle a complication. Paramedics were able to restore Christy's pulse and respiration, but she was left blind and in a permanent vegetative state. Today, she requires 24-hour-a-day care and is fed through a tube in her abdomen. She is not expected to recover and is being cared for by her family. Christy had a legal abortion on her 18th birthday.

They took good care of her, didn't they? I have in my hand a consent form that Christy signed. Do you know what they tell you in the industry? Ask them; don't believe me. Ask them. They say: We know the woman is in a terrible emotional condition when she comes in, so we don't always ask her to sign these forms. We wait until after the procedure.

Is that so? Well, you have to do it within 10 minutes if you want to get some of these buyers for organs because they say they need them in 10 or 15 minutes from the time they exit the birth canal; otherwise, they are no good in some cases. They have to do it quickly. So the poor girl is just coming out of the anesthetic. I know she is not coming out in 10 minutes. "Here, Christy, want to sign this? We want to send your 6-month old boy to be chopped up for medical research. Would you sign this?"

They say we don't bother the women before. OK, can a woman who is in a 24-hour-a-day coma sign a consent form? Can she? Here is the form. It is signed and she didn't sign it after the procedure. She signed it before the procedure and she signed it because they needed the body parts of her fetus and they wanted to make doggone sure they got them. They didn't want anything to get in the way of that. They didn't want anything to interrupt that little profit they had coming, so they just said we will get this signed by Christy.

Maybe they should have taken a little time to counsel her. "Would you like to have some other discussion perhaps about adoption?"

We gave her that. OK, fine.

How about the anesthesiologist. Did someone know what in the hell they were doing when they put this poor woman under?

Oh, no, we have to get this, because this is money.

Here is what Christy signed:

I grant permission to one of these agencies and each of its authorized agents and representatives to distribute and dispense tissue from the surgery. I release all my property and financial interests therein and any product or process which may result therefrom. I read and I understand this document and I have been given the opportunity to ask questions. I am aware I may refuse to participate. I understand I will receive no compensation for consenting to this study.

As I said, if anybody thinks she signed it after the surgery, I will sell you some ocean-front property in Colorado. They say they don't bother them beforehand because they are too distraught, they are too emotional, or they don't want to bring all this up.

That is Christy.

I saw a bumper sticker once that said:

Abortion: One dead; one wounded.

Can't sum it up any better than that. One dead and one wounded. And the people who were in charge of the health and safety of the mother in these cases are more interested in the dead than the wounded because they are going to make a big profit.

Let's talk about the dirtiest most disgusting secret of all. This is not pleasant. I had somebody from the National Right to Life tell me today, believe it or not—I won't mention names—that we don't have any evidence of any link here. Fine. I am not asking anyone to tell me whether they think this is evidence or not. I am asking everyone to make their own decisions. I am not making any links. I am giving facts. Make your own links.

There is a little complication called "live birth." Uh-oh. Live birth. It happens. When it does, what happens?

I was at an award dinner several years ago when a young woman who is known by many in the right-to-life movement by the name of Gianna Jessen, who then was about 21, so she is probably 25, 26, maybe a little older now. She had been aborted. She was a beautiful girl. She was aborted. There were 1,000 people at this event. She stood up and sang "Amazing Grace." There wasn't a dry eye in the place, including mine. When it was all over she said: I want all of you to know something. My mother made a terrible mistake because I wanted to live. If I had had my choice, if I could have said, spare me, I would have said that. I didn't, but I survived, and I am meaningful. I just sang to you. And she said: I love my mother and I forgive her.

There is a lot more power in that than these people that run these clinics that do this.

Why can't we bring this debate to that level? There is no way to know how many live births actually occur. It happens in partial-birth abortions because they are alive until they are executed as they come through the birth canal. Feet first, they are executed; headfirst, they are born. Any difference? Maybe somebody can explain it.

Many of you may have heard of a gentleman by the name of Eric Harrah. About 10 years ago he left the abortion business. One night Eric and his staff were called to the clinic—remember, he was an abortionist then—because a pregnant girl had given birth in a motel room. The baby was wrapped in a towel. She had been given medication to begin the process of dilation. So it was wrapped in a towel and they thought it was dead, so she came from the motel room carrying this little child in the towel.

Eric, the abortionist, saw the baby's arm fly up and he screamed, "My God, that baby is alive."

The doctors sent Rick and the nurse out of the room. When he came back in the baby was dead. A live birth? You might ask yourself, did they take any means to save the child? Or did they kill the child? Who knows? In either case, they let it die.

I have been in this business of doing research on this issue since 1984. I have been involved in the pro-life movement. I have read, I don't know how many thousands of pages. What I am going to read to you now is the worst I have ever come across in everything and anything that I have read. I have never seen anything to equal it. I do not understand how we can tolerate this in this country, but it shows you how sick we really are. We are sick. Oh, we are sick, collectively, believe me. This is a story from Kelly. A short paragraph, what she said. It is very difficult for me even to read it, but you need to hear it.

The doctor walked into the lab. This is in an abortion clinic. Kelly is the wholesaler for the fetal tissue. She is the person who has to take this fetus and do what has to be done to it to get it to the supplier.

The doctor walked into the lab and set a steel pan on the table. "Got you some good specimens," he said. "Twins." The technician looked down at a pair of perfectly formed 24-week-old fetuses, moving and gasping for air. Except for a few nicks from the surgical tongs that had pulled them out, they seemed uninjured.

This is pretty difficult. I have witnessed the birth of my three children, so forgive me if I have a little trouble.

The wholesaler, Kelly, said, "There is something wrong here. They are moving. I don't do this. That's not in my contract."

She watched the doctor take a bottle of sterile water and fill the pan until the water ran up over the babies' mouths and noses. Then she left the room. "I couldn't watch those fetuses moving. That's when I decided it was wrong."

So the abortionist, twin live births, 6 months—the little girl I spoke to you about earlier who wrote to me was born prematurely at 5 months. Two little twins drowned in a pan so their body parts could be sold because they had an order for the body parts. America.

Many of you may have heard about Jill Stanek, the nurse at Chicago's Christ Hospital who has openly admitted that live births occur at her hospital. We are going to have some testimony from Jill. She will be up here on the Hill very soon so you do not have to believe me; you can listen to her. The hospital staff, when it happens, offer comfort care, which amounts to holding the child until it dies. If they are lucky, they get a little love on the way out. Perhaps it is better than being drowned in a dish.

Jill Stanek says:

What do you call an abortion procedure in which the fetus is born alive, then is left to die without medical care? Infanticide? Murder?

Most people would recoil at just the thought of such a gruesome, uncaring procedure, but it is practiced at least one Chicago suburban hospital. When I called Christ Hospital, the Medical Center at Oak Lawn, I frankly expected a denial that it uses the procedure, but instead the spokeswoman explained it is used for "a variety of second-trimester" abortions when the fetus has not yet reached viability. That's up to 23 weeks of life, when a fetus is considered not yet developed enough to survive on its own.

Instead of medical care, the child is provided "comfort care," wrapped in a blanket and held when possible.

This is very interesting.

The procedure is chosen by parents and doctors instead of another method in which the fetus is terminated within the womb by, for example, injection with a chemical that stops the heart.

She says further: One day there was a newborn who survived the abortion with no one around to hold it. It was left to die in a soiled-linen closet.

The hospital denies it. She says it happened. Interesting, the hospital says abortions are elective, but they are done only to protect the life or health of the mother or when the fetus is nonviable due to extreme prematurity or lethal abnormalities.

The nurse, Jill Stanek, said she has seen some elective abortions done on newborns whose physical or mental defects are deemed incompatible only with the "quality of life."

That is pretty heavy stuff. This is going on in America. People come down here on this floor, year after year, and defend it. That is what they are doing, defending it: A woman's right to choose. The bassinet or the hospital sterile bucket, which is it? Right—right to choose. Put the child in the bassinet or throw it in the garbage or send it off to some research lab.

Here is a headline, a transcript from the WTVN-TV in Columbus, OH, 20 April, 1999:

Partial-Birth Abortion Baby Survives 3 Hours.

A woman 5 months pregnant came to Women's Medical Center in Dayton, Ohio, to get a partial-birth abortion. During the 3 days it takes to have the procedure she began to have stomach pains and was rushed to a nearby hospital. Within minutes she was giving birth.

Nurse Shelly Lowe in an emergency room at the hospital was shocked when the baby took a gasp of air. [Lowe] "I just held her and it really got to me that anybody could do that to a baby. . . I rocked her and talked to her because I felt that no one should die alone." The little girl survived 3 hours.

Mark Lally, Director of Ohio Right to Life, believes this is why partial birth abortions should be banned. [Lally] "This shows what we've been trying to make clear to people. Abortion isn't something that happens just early in pregnancy, it happens in all stages of pregnancy. It's legal in this state any time."

Like it is in any State.

Warren Hern is the author of the most widely used textbook on abortion procedures. Dr. Hern says, in this article:

A number of practitioners attempt to ensure live fetuses after late abortions so that genetic tests can be conducted on them.

There is a link. They say there is no link? There is one.

It is his position that practitioners do this without offering a woman the option of fetal demise before abortion in a morally unacceptable manner since they place research before the good of their patients.

(Mr. SANTORUM assumed the Chair.)

Here is an admission from the industry itself that when they want to—I am not saying all do it, I am saying some do it—when they want to, practitioners can do this. They can ensure a live birth to fall within that 10-minute window, to get that child chopped up quickly and on ice so those limbs are better for the researcher and worth more money. You don't want any abnormalities, don't want any problems.

There was an article in the Philadelphia Inquirer a few years ago called "Abortion Dreaded Complication." The patient had been admitted for an abortion, but instead of a stillborn fetus, a live 2½-pound baby boy appeared. A dismayed nurse took a squirming infant to the closet where dirty linens are stored. When the head nurse telephoned the patient's physician at home, he said: "Leave it where it is. He will die in a few minutes."

I used a term in a speech over the weekend referring to doctors such as that. I said they took a hypocritical oath. Someone corrected me and said: "Don't you mean Hippocratic oath?"

I said: "No, hypocritical; they are total hypocrites because they are not protecting the lives of unborn children. They should not even be taking the oath."

In this article, there are some very interesting headlines in this dreaded complication. Listen to what some of the people in the industry say:

Reporting abortion livebirths is like turning yourself into the IRS for an audit. What is there to gain?

Another article says:

How things sometimes go wrong.

Another one:

You have to have a fetus—

Whatever; I can't pronounce the word—dose of saline solution. It is almost a breach of contract not to. Otherwise, what are you going to do, hand her back a baby, having done it questionable damage?

What a bunch of insensitive, uncaring individuals.

Then they say:

If a baby has rejected an abortion and lives, then it is a person under the Constitution. . . .

I think it is a person under the Constitution before it is born, not under Roe v. Wade but under the Constitution. Roe v. Wade did not let the Constitution get in its way when it made that terrible decision.

Then another guy says:

I find [late-term abortions] pretty heavy weather, both for myself and for my patients.

I stood by and watched that baby die.

They are real caring people, aren't they? They are compassionate, caring people. I think I have made my point on that.

You will notice from these charts I have been putting up that many of the highlights suggest the baby be put on ice within 10 minutes of exiting the womb. I mentioned that earlier.

Stop and think about this. If you do any of the other types of abortions—saline, digoxin, and these other procedures, D&E—what are you going to get? You are going to get something that is going to be an abnormality. No abnormal donors. Within 10 minutes, we want it on ice.

The point I am trying to make is, there are only two ways you can get a baby, a fetus, on ice that quickly. One is a live birth; you instantly kill it. Another is partial-birth. If there is another method, I am open-minded. I would like to hear about it. Maybe somebody has it.

Let me read a letter I received today. This letter is pretty devastating. I want you to think about this 10 minutes on these charts. Within 10 minutes, we need to be able to ship it to give you no abnormal donors, to make sure the fetus is in good shape:

This is from Raymond Bandy, Jr., M.D., Dallas, TX:

Dear Senator SMITH: As a physician and pastor in the Dallas, Texas suburb of Lewisville, I was shocked and outraged several months ago when my friend Mark Crutcher invited me to the offices of Life Dynamics to review for him from a medical perspective of several requisitions for fetal tissue and body parts.

There were 2 areas particularly disturbing: No. 1, It was almost unfathomable to be reading requests for arms, legs, brains, etc., from aborted babies. Leading institutions in our country with research scientists requesting in mail-order catalog format, body parts from babies killed in abortion clinics.

Leading institutions were requesting these parts.

No. 2, My attention was drawn to the fashion in which the requests were made. Over and over again the requests would mention that the tissue must be "fresh"—

It says ship on wet ice. Another one says fresh, remove specimen and prepare within 15 minutes.

This is the process, a doctor talking now:

(a) The baby must in some fashion be killed in its mother's womb. (b) The baby must then be extracted from the womb. (c) It must then be delivered in some fashion to a technician who would then proceed to amputate limbs; extract eyes, brains, hearts, and then process them; (d) all within 10 minutes. I am not an abortionist, nor have I performed an abortion, but to require these procedures to be accomplished in 10 minutes, means of necessity that the baby be extracted as close to life as possible, and would lead to in many cases babies . . . being born living, in order to be able to have them on ice, or otherwise processed within this short period of time.

As a community physician, I find this barbaric, cruel, evil, and intolerable to the greatest degree. This is a return to the medical practices of the [Nazis] of 1940s. . . .

Can anyone with even the most remote conscience, or moral decency, tolerate this practice?

He closes with that.

Here is a doctor. He is telling us and he is reinforcing everything I have said. Fresh, wet ice, no known abnormalities; get it on the ice. How do you get a fetus that is not chopped up, that is not poisoned? There are only two places. I talked to you about both of them: Live births, partial births.

The dirty little secret is that Planned Parenthood takes Federal taxpayers' dollars. American workers, especially pro-life workers, all of us—but those especially who are pro-life, I am sure, would be opposed to it—are having money taken out of their paychecks to pay for the marketing of babies' body parts. I talked about the $158 million grant from the Federal Government for Planned Parenthood, NIH, $17.6 billion in this year's labor bill—not all for that but just in the bill.

I am not against the funding of the National Institutes of Health, but I think when research is being conducted by the Government, where taxpayer dollars are involved, there is a much higher ethical standard to meet.

In addition, universities receive Federal funding, lots of it. In fact, there are some universities that receive Federal funding specifically for fetal tissue research.

I want to point out one chart that I did not highlight before because this really drives the point home in terms of whether or not there is any particular reason to believe that in the industry they are looking for live births or partial births.

Look what it says on this memo: "Please send list of current frozen tissues." And they go down the list: Liver and blood and kidney and lung, and all this down here. And then what does it say? No digoxin donors. "No DIG." That is the term for digoxin donors.

I want you to understand this and think about this: This is an order form. They are saying here: We don't want any digoxin babies.

Well, why don't they want them? Because they cannot sell them. The parts are no good. It is in their own writing. They are incriminating themselves. They are violating the law, and they ought to be prosecuted.

Shine in the light. Bring in the sunshine. Live births are a big problem, but DIG is not good for research. Abortion clinics and harvesters are also deliberately hiding the fact that they are shipping these parts all over the United States. They even use vague language to trick and deceive shippers such as Federal Express who will not do it, to their credit. But they are not told. They are hidden. One marketer says: "We've learned through the years of doing this" how to avoid problems with shippers like Federal Express.

But they have. If you are violating the law, you do everything you can.

As I have gone through this now for I don't know how long here on the floor, you probably say to yourself: Could it get any worse? Can it be any more humiliating?

We have covered pretty well what is happening to the child. Recapping: A woman, pregnant—abortions are down, the industry is losing money, and they can only charge so much. So they find a buyer of the body parts of the fetus. There it is: "Fee For Services." As I said before, $600 for a cadaver, $125 for this, $75 for that. The lower numbers are probably so common that they are not worth much. So they sell the body parts. Then they do unimaginable things to the emotional life of this unfortunate woman who is in so much need of help and counseling.

But there is another dirty little secret, which isn't very well talked about; that is, untold numbers of women in some clinics are being sexually assaulted, harassed, physically harmed, and sometimes killed, as I said before, in these "safe" and "legal" clinics.

I will give you two examples.

Two months later, [fictitious Dr.] Roe was performing a first-trimester abortion on 23-year-old "Lucy" when she began to hemorrhage from a perforation he had made. Still operating without a back-up supply of blood, Roe gave her a transfusion of his own blood. . . .

The only problem was, it was not her blood type. He did not bother to check that out.

Lucy then went into cardiac arrest. . . . In Texas, private ambulances are limited to transfers of stable patients and are prohibited from responding to emergency calls. Therefore, they do not respond with any sense of urgency. When the ambulance crew finally arrived and discovered the case was a life-and-death emergency, they transported Lucy immediately rather than call for a fire department ambulance. Unfortunately, Lucy was not as lucky as Claudia [another girl] and she bled to death—on November 4, 1977.

She bled to death—

That was a long time ago, so I will probably be criticized for bringing something up that long ago.

On June 2, 1989, "Margaret" went to [an abortion clinic] to have an abortion performed. . . . After she was dismissed, she started experiencing pain and bleeding, and called the facility about her symptoms. They did not advise her to seek medical care. Two days later, she sought medical treatment on her own and was told that she had a perforated uterus and retained fetal tissue. A D&C was performed to complete the abortion and, due to infection, a hysterectomy was also necessary. Unfortunately, despite all efforts to save her life, Margaret died of the complications of her abortion, leaving behind her husband and one-year-old son.

Taking good care of mom, aren't they? They really are.

And more recently in 1997, in San Diego:

An abortion doctor is being charged with murder by the district attorney of Riverside County, east of Los Angeles.

Dr. Bruce Steir faces a February hearing on a murder charge stemming from the December 1996 death of Sharon Hampton, 27, following an abortion at A Lady's Choice Clinic in Moreno Valley, near Riverside.

Miss Hampton died from internal bleeding as the result of a perforated uterus. The pathologist in the case found "gross negligence" and recommended that the death be considered a homicide.

You see, it is getting more serious because the better trained doctors in all types of abortions are not doing them anymore. So they want to go where the money is: Body parts. I am not going to go into the gory details and some of the sick things that have been done by some in terms of the humiliation of patients, in terms of sexual abuse, and so forth.

Tomorrow, at some point, I intend to offer an amendment that shines the light into the industry. I intend to push for a full investigation into this industry. I intend to find out whether live births are, in fact, used for the sale of body parts. I intend to find out whether in fact partial-birth abortions are used for the sale of body parts. I intend to find out whether laws are being violated in this country and, if so, who is violating them.

This amendment will provide for the light to shine into these clinics so we can get these answers. We deserve these answers. If you are pro-woman, and you are pro-child, you ought to be for my amendment. If you do not like the fact that women die horrible deaths, that children are being chopped up and sold illegally, I don't care which side of the debate you are on, if you wonder whether or not and you are not sure whether or not partial-birth abortions are used for the sale of body parts in some cases, if you want to know whether they are, then let's find out. Let's look into it. Let's see if we can get the answers. And that is what my amendment does.

This has been a long, difficult speech for me to make. But I want my colleagues to know that just about everything in America is regulated—unfortunately, in some cases. There is no reason why this industry should not be regulated. Let's find out what is going on. Let's shine the light in. Let's bring the sunshine in. And let's get answers. And let's find out about the sale of body parts. Let's find out what the source of those body parts are. Let's shine the light in on the industry.

Tomorrow, I will have an amendment on that subject. I truly hope all Americans will be supportive—pro-life, pro-abortion. If you want to see to it that women are not abused, if you want to see to it that women are treated with respect and dignity, if you want to see to it that if an abortion occurs and there is a live birth, that that child should get help, should be allowed to live, if you want all that, and you care, then you should support this amendment because all it does is shine the light in. It is a disclosure amendment. That is all it is. It requires disclosure to shippers for any package containing human fetal tissue. It also contains language to limit the payment of a site fee from the transferee entity to the abortionist to be reasonable in terms of reimbursement for the actual real estate or facilities used by such an entity.

We are going to find out whether these people are in the business of selling body parts or abortions or both. What is the percentage? How much are they making on each? Shine in the light.

I have been on the floor year after year and in the House before that, for 15 to 16 years, trying to end this horrible industry, this disgusting exploitation of children and women, to no avail. If we just had a President who would pick up his pen and say, "I don't want to see another few thousand people die in the next 5 years; I am willing to sign the ban on one type of abortion," we could get a good start. But he won't do it. We are going to lose again.

So let's win with this amendment. Let's try to get an amendment passed that will shine the light in so we can find out what goes on in the industry.

I yield the floor.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWNBACK). Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to a period of morning business with Senators permitted to speak.

The Senator from Pennsylvania.

THOUGHTS ON DISCUSSION OF PARTIAL-BIRTH ABORTION

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I will speak briefly. The Senator from Tennessee, Mr. FRIST, is here. I know he is planning to come and talk about this issue. Under our agreement, I agreed I would yield the floor when he gets here to make a speech.

I, first, thank the Senator from New Hampshire. I did not catch all of his remarks. I caught the last 45 minutes or so. He is talking about a very difficult issue. It is an amendment we will have to vote on tomorrow. It is not a difficult issue. It is a difficult issue to talk about. I think it is a rather simple issue. I am hopeful, again, this will be an issue where we put the politics of abortion aside and understand this kind of action should at least be looked into by some sort of study to determine whether this activity occurs and how pervasive this is.

What I would like to do tonight is share some thoughts in response to a discussion today about the anecdotes of cases that were presented in defense of partial-birth abortions. We heard about cases of women who needed this procedure to save the mother's health or the mother's life. I would like to review what the medical evidence is, again, and also bring up some cases where people took a different option and show how that option, as humane as the other side, with their wonderful pictures of husbands and wives and in some cases children, as warm and fuzzy as they would make it out to be, the fact is, in every one of those cases a child was killed. A baby was killed. That is a tragedy.

In many cases the baby would not have lived long, but the baby was killed before its time. Many of the people I am going to talk about tonight understood their baby was not going to live long or might suffer from severe abnormalities, but they were willing to take their child's life for what it was, as we all do when we are confronted with it in our own lives. We find out a son or daughter is afflicted with a horrible illness. Our immediate reaction is, well, how can I put my child out of its misery? Or my child isn't going to live very much longer; how can I end it sooner?

I don't think that is the immediate reaction of mothers and fathers in America. But yet, when it comes to the baby in the womb, we have many people who believe that is the logical thing to do. I argue that it is not the logical thing. It is not the humane thing. It is not in the best interest of the health of the mother. All those other things, in fact, in this debate don't matter.

What does matter in this debate is, is it in the best health interest of the mother? I will talk tonight about cases where people made a different choice and, I argue, from a health perspective, a better choice. When I say "health," I mean not only the physical health of the mother but also the mental health of the mother.

We will talk about some of those cases. I will talk about some of the cases that were brought up today and explain why those cases, again, were not medically necessary to protect the health of the mother. There were other options available, even if they wanted to choose abortion.

Then I will share with you some things that have happened to me as a result of this debate and provide to my colleagues that, while we may not win all the votes, at times there are things even more important than that.

I see the Senator from Tennessee, Dr. FRIST, is here. I yield the floor to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I rise to continue the debate on the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act of 1999. I rise to follow the Senator from Pennsylvania, who has taken a leadership position and a moral position. I am delighted to hear he will tonight concentrate on an issue that I think has been for far too long overlooked in this debate; that is, the effects of this procedure, which is a barbaric procedure, on women. Those women are our sisters, our mothers, our daughters. That health effect is something that gets lost too often in the debate, which is not the politics. It is not the rhetoric. It is not the emotion. It is the health of the woman involved.

This is the third time I have had the opportunity to come to the floor and participate in this debate on the issue of partial-birth abortion. Each time I come, as a physician, I take the time to review the recent medical literature to see what the facts are, what the clinical studies are, what is the information and the medical armamentarium, and the literature that is out there. That is where the medical profession, that is where the scientists involved in medicine, that is where the surgeons publish their experience, where you talk about indications, you talk about the side effects, you talk about risk, you talk about complications. That is where you share it with your colleagues.

Each time before coming to the floor to debate this issue and discuss this issue, I talk to my colleagues at the various institutions where I have trained and have been, on the east coast, the west coast in training. I picked up the phone and talked to several of them today, colleagues who are obstetricians directly involved in the surgical aspects of this procedure.

Each time this issue comes to the floor of the Senate, I step back and look at what studies, what developments there have been since we last discussed this issue. I rise tonight to talk about this procedure as a medical procedure. It has been interesting to me because over the course of today I have heard again and again that there is no obstetrician in this body of the Senate. I am not an obstetrician. I am a surgeon, which means I am trained to perform surgical procedures.

I am trained. I spent 20 years in both training and engaged in surgery to make surgical diagnoses, to perform technical operations, to evaluate the risk of these operations, and to assess the outcome of these operations. No, I am not an obstetrician, and I don't pretend to be. I call obstetricians. I call people who are on the frontline. But I am a surgeon. I know something about surgical procedures. That is what I did before coming to the Senate. I am board certified in surgery. I am board certified in two different specialties.

When people talk about this medical procedure, I want to make it clear I am not an obstetrician. But I am board certified in general surgery. I am board certified in cardiothoracic surgery. I have spent 20 years studying and performing surgical procedures.

This is background. A lot of what I did is publish and research surgical procedures. But this is background. I have focused not, as I mentioned earlier, on the politics or the rhetoric, but on the medical use of this specific procedure, partial-birth abortion. As my colleagues know by now—but I want to restate it because I have gone back and reviewed the medical literature and have talked to colleagues at other institutions, and I have looked at developments since last year—I conclude partial-birth abortion is a brutal, barbaric procedure that has no place in the mainstream practice of medicine today.

Again, partial-birth abortion is a brutal, barbaric procedure that has abolutely no place in the mainstream practice of medicine today. Partial-birth abortion is a procedure that is rarely, if ever, needed in today's practice of medicine. Alternative methods of abortion, if abortion is necessary, are always available—even when the abortion is performed very late in pregnancy.

Now, we have had the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists quoted on the floor, and they will continue to be, which I think is appropriate. A number of their statements, I think, are taken out of context and put forward. Ultimately, their recommendation is, I believe, against the procedure; but for a lot of different reasons they are against passage of what is being proposed. I will come back to that. But it is interesting, when it comes back to answering the question, "Are there always alternative procedures available," their answer would be yes.

Again, I refer to a number of documents, but this is the Journal of the American Medical Association of August 26, 1996, volume 280, No. 8. In an article this quotation is made:

An ACOG policy statement emanating from the review declared that the select panel "could identify no circumstances under which this procedure would be the only option to save the life or preserve the health of the woman."

There are always alternative procedures available. This is important because the procedure of partial-birth abortion, as we have described and laid out—a procedure in which the fetus is manipulated in the uterus, partially evacuated from the uterus, scissors inserted to puncture the skull or the cranium with evacuation of the contents of the cranium, the brain—that procedure has not been studied. We know there are certain risks, but the alternative procedures that are available in every case have been studied. You can go to a medical textbook and look up those alternative procedures, and you can go to the clinical literature and read the studies. It has been peer reviewed and presented at meetings. Debate has been carried out. There are comparisons between one surgeon's results and another's. You can identify the risks for the alternative procedures, but you cannot for the partial-birth abortion.

Now, ACOG, as has been mentioned on the floor, does take the position that the procedure "may" be superior to other procedures, as its basis for justifying opposition to this legislation. But with everything I have read, ACOG did not identify those specific circumstances under which partial-birth abortion would be the preferred procedure. And thus, as a scientist, where you want to look at outcomes, risks, and results in determining whether or not to use a certain procedure or recommend such a procedure, the data is clearly not there. It is not there. Thus, you have a procedure which, as I have said, is a brutal, barbaric procedure, with no data substantiating it or identifying the risks, compared to alternative procedures that have been defined, where we know what those risks are. Thus, this use of the word "may," I would flip around and say "may not." I would say the burden of proof is to go to the literature and present the clinical studies that show this barbaric procedure, in any case, is the best or most appropriate. The data, I can tell you, is not there.

So I think the next question to ask is: Are we talking about a procedure, partial-birth abortion, which this legislation would prohibit, which is a part of mainstream medicine? Is it part of the surgical armamentarium out there that is talked about in textbooks, in the literature, or in medical schools?

The answer is, no, it is not. It is a fringe procedure. It is out of the mainstream. This procedure is not taught. This procedure is not taught in the vast majority of medical schools in the United States of America. Yet we will hear some medical schools talk about some types of dilatation and extraction, and they will talk about it at 16 weeks, at 14 weeks, and even 18 weeks. I think we need to make very clear we are talking about a procedure that requires manipulation in the uterus, partial delivery; thus, the partial-birth aspects of this procedure, with the insertion of the scissors and the evacuation of the contents of the cranium. I can tell you, that procedure is not taught in medical schools today. When an obstetrician says, "Oh, yes, but we teach late-term abortions," some do, but they don't teach this procedure.

Surgical training. Again, I am not an obstetrician, but I did spend 7 years in surgical training learning every day. What do you learn as part of that? You learn the specific indications for a particular procedure. In your surgical training, you learn the various surgical techniques that have been described on the floor. Although it is very difficult for people to talk about and listen to on the floor of the Senate, that is part of it, that is the barbarism, the brutality of the way this procedure has evolved. In your surgical training, you look at the complications, outcomes, and risks of these accepted surgical procedures.

The indications for a partial-birth abortion, for the surgical techniques as described, the complications, the outcomes, and the risks are not taught in medical schools today. The procedure of partial-birth abortion is not routinely part of the residency programs today. Why? Because it is dangerous, because it is a fringe procedure, because it is outside of the mainstream of generally accepted medical practice. It has not been comprehensively studied or reviewed in the peer-reviewed literature. There are no clinical studies of it in the medical literature.

As I said, when this debate comes to the floor and you want to make the case, you look at the medical literature, which I have done, and then you want to say: What about the textbooks? Surely, it is in the textbooks if people are out there doing this procedure on women, which I contend is harmful to women; surely, it is written in the medical obstetric textbooks. That is what you study. That is the foundation.

So what I have done over the last couple of days is I have gone to the medical textbooks and reviewed 17 of those textbooks. I can tell you, after reviewing those 17 textbooks, only 1 of the 17 even mentioned partial-birth abortion, and that 1 of the 17 mentioned it in one little paragraph. It mentioned the fact there have been vetoes of the partial-birth abortion legislation from last Congress and the Congress before.

The textbooks that I reviewed were Williams Obstetrics, which is one of the foundations of obstetrical education today by Cunningham and Williams.

I reviewed the manual of obstetrics by Niswander and Evans.

I reviewed the Essentials of Obstetrics and Gynecology by Hacker and Moore.

I reviewed the Practice Guidelines for Obstetrics and Gynecology by Skoggin and Morgan.

I reviewed the Blueprints in Obstetrics and Gynecology by Callahan and Caughey.

I reviewed Novak's Gynecology by Novak and others.

I reviewed Operative Gynecology by Te Linde, Rock, and Thompson.

I reviewed Mishell Comprehensive Gynecology;

And Textbook of Women's Health by Wallis.

And the list goes on.

Again, I think it is important because it demonstrates that this procedure is outside of the mainstream. It is a fringe procedure, and, therefore, any defense of this procedure, which we know has complications, which we know affects women in a harmful way, should be justified in some way in the medical literature, where it is not.

The fringe nature of this procedure is also underscored by the fact that there are no credible statistics on partial-birth abortion.

Throughout the course of today—and really has been put forward on both sides—people cited certain numbers of how many are performed. We went through this again in the last Congress. Some say that there are 500 of these procedures performed annually. The more realistic estimate I believe is that there is somewhere—again, it is truly so hard to estimate to even mention specific numbers—between 3,000 and 5,000 of these partial-birth abortions performed every year.

The numbers do not matter, I don't think, because what we are talking about is this barbaric procedure. It is harmful to women. So 1 is too many, or 5 is too many, or 10, or even 500—any is too many.

What data do we have that this procedure can be performed safely? Absolutely none. Part of the problem is the absence of accurate data with which to judge the safety of this procedure, and because of, in part, the incomplete data that is accumulated, and the way we accumulate data on abortions. Although the CDC collects abortion statistics every year, not all States provide that information to the CDC, and the ones that do lack information on as many as 40 to 50 percent of the abortions performed in that particular State.

But I think most importantly the categories that the CDC, Centers for Disease Control, uses to report the method of abortion does not split out partial-birth abortions from the other procedures. So it gets mixed in with all of the other procedures.

It is this lack of data on this procedure that I think is especially troubling because of the grave risk, as the Senator from Pennsylvania pointed out earlier, of complications the grave risk that this procedure poses to women.

In the debate, we have opponents of abortion on the one hand, proponents of a right to choose on the other, and we have the debates that come forth with the tint of emotion and rhetoric. But the thing that gets lost is what the Senator from Pennsylvania mentioned, and that is that this procedure is terrible for women. He outlined some of the ways in terms of the physical and mental health.

But I would like to drop back and look at this safety issue because in all of the arguments for rights, we need to have this issue out there.

It is critically important, I believe—I say this as a physician—that we recognize that this procedure is dangerous and hurts women.

There are "no credible studies" on partial-birth abortions "that evaluate or attest to its safety" for the mother.

I take that from the Journal of American Medical Association, August 26, 1998.

There are "no credible studies" on partial-birth abortions "that evaluate or attest to the safety" for the mother.

The risk: I can tell you as a surgeon—again, I drop back to the fact that I am a surgeon and I spent 20 years of my adult life in surgery—that patients who undergo partial-birth abortion are at risk for hemorrhage, infection, and uterine perforation.

I can say that. And I can say it and be absolutely positive about it because these are the risks that exist with any surgical midtrimester termination of pregnancy.

The partial-birth abortion procedure itself involves manipulation of the fetus inside of the uterus, turning the fetus around, extracting the fetus from the uterus, and then punching scissors into the cranium or the base of the skull; requires spreading of those scissors to make the opening large enough to evacuate the brain.

That procedure has two additional complications than what would be with midtrimester abortion, and that is uterine rupture, No. 1; and, No. 2, laceration mid-laceration. That means the cutting of the uterus with secondary hemorrhage or secondary bleeding.

Uterine rupture: What does it mean? It means exactly as it sounds—that the uterus ruptures. And that can be catastrophic to the woman.

It may be increased during a partial-birth abortion because the physician in this procedure must perform a great deal of it blindly while reaching into the uterus with a blunt instrument and pulling the feet of the fetus down into the canal. Thus, you have uterine rupture.

I should also add that this type of manipulation is also associated—we know this from the medical literature because there are very few cases where you have to manipulate the fetus. That manipulation is also associated with other complications of abortion, amniotic fluid embolus, where the fluid goes to other parts of the body and other trauma to the uterus.

All of these are serious, potentially life-threatening complications from this fringe procedure that has not been studied, is outside the main stream medicine, not in the medical textbooks, not in the peer-review literature for which we have alternative procedures available.

The second complication is laceration, an accidental cutting of the uterus, occurs because, again, much of this procedure is done blindly. The surgeon has scissors that are inserted into the base of the fetal skull. It is not just the insertion of the scissors, but it takes a spreading of the scissors to establish a real puncture large enough to evacuate the brain.

Another example, an article dated August 26, 1998, another quotation. Let me open with the quotation marks.

"This blind procedure risks maternal injury from laceration of the uterus or cervix by the scissors and could result in severe bleeding and the threat of shock or even maternal death."

"Could result in severe bleeding and the threat of shock or even maternal death."

These risks, which I just outlined, have not been quantified for partial-birth abortions.

Would you want this untested procedure performed on anyone that you know? The answer, I believe, is absolutely not because there is always an alternative procedure available.

Mr. President, we are discussing a fringe procedure with very real risks to a woman's health. The lack of data on this procedure underscores my opposition to it. Just as we cannot ignore the risk to the mother, let's also look at the risk a little bit further down the line.

It leads me to a conclusion that partial-birth abortion is inhumane, and offends the very basic civil sensibilities of the American people. The procedure itself, yes. But what about the treatment of the perivable fetus? I say that because the point in the gestation period at which viability actually is realized is subject to debate. It shifts with technology and with our ability to intervene over time.

Most of these procedures are performed today in what is called the perivable period—somewhere between 20 and 24 weeks of gestation, and beyond.

The centers for pain perception in a fetus develop very early in that second trimester period. We cannot measure fetal pain directly, but we do know that infants of similar gestational age after delivery—28 weeks, 30 weeks, or 24 weeks—those babies, those fetuses that are delivered, do respond to pain. Again, we are talking about a procedure performed on an infant, a fetus, at 24, 26 weeks.

With partial-birth abortions, pain management is not provided for the fetus at that gestational age. That fetus, remember, is literally within inches of actually being delivered. Pain management is given for procedures if those 2 or 3 inches are realized and the baby is outside of the womb, at the same gestational age; if the fetus is in the womb, pain management is not given.

I say that again because we have to at least think of the fetus and think of the procedure, taking scissors and inserting them into the cranium, into the skull, and the spreading of those scissors. What is that doing? Is that humane?

Therefore, to my statement that this is a barbaric procedure, I say it is an inhumane, barbaric procedure regarding the woman—and I just went through those complications—and regarding the fetus.

Because of the "fringe" nature of this practice, because of the lack of peer review and study of this procedure, I have strong feelings about this issue. I have taken too much time walking through the medical aspects, but I think it is important to free up a lot of the intensity of the debate earlier in the day. I think it is important to have a discussion so the American people and my colleagues know at least one surgeon's view of this surgical procedure.

I close by saying that because of this lack of peer review study of this procedure, because of the fringe nature of this procedure, because of the grave risk it poses to the woman, because I believe it is inhumane treatment of that infant, that fetus, and because even as ACOG, the gynecologic society, concedes partial-birth abortion is never the only procedure that has to be used, I strongly support this legislation by the Senator from Pennsylvania to outlaw this barbaric and this inhumane practice.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRIST). The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SANTORUM. I know the hour is late, and I will not take a lot of time. I appreciate the indulgence of the Senator from Kansas for his marathon stay on the floor and the Chair tonight.

First, let me thank the Senator from Tennessee for his expert testimony. We hear a lot from those who oppose this procedure and the fact there is no obstetrician here. I think someone with the surgical skills and the international reputation of Dr. FRIST, combined with the obstetricians who, in fact, are Members of Congress on the other side of this Capitol who oppose this procedure, who support this bill—I think we have the medical community of the Congress clearly on our side. I think as I stated before, we have the medical community generally on our side, hundreds and hundreds of obstetricians who have come forward and talked about it.

I want to talk tonight about a few cases. I do that for a couple of reasons. I want to articulate again that there are alternatives available to a partial-birth abortion. We heard Dr. FRIST talk about other abortion techniques that are available in the medical literature, techniques available for later in pregnancy if a mother decides to have an abortion. I want to share with people, because I think it is important and this transcends the partial-birth abortion debate, but I think it is relevant to discuss that there are other ways to deal with this that are as healthy, and, I argue, even more healthy, for the mother involved.

We heard the Senator from Illinois, Mr. DURBIN, today talk about Viki Wilson, Coreen Costello, and Vikki Stella. I entered into the RECORD those three cases. All these women came to the Congress. They testified themselves. They brought their own stories forward. They are now being used by Members of Congress and have been used by Members for several years to support the claim this was the only method available to them and this saved their health and their future fertility. I will take them one by one very quickly, but I want to reemphasize that this was not the only option available to them. There were, in fact, more healthy procedures.

That does not mean if a certain procedure is performed—I am sure the doctor would affirm this—there is more than one procedure that can be used. Even if it is not the proper procedure, it may turn out OK with a good result. The point I am trying to make and I think the point the medical community is trying to make: It is not the best medicine, it is not proper, and it certainly isn't the only procedure available.

In the case of Viki Wilson, according to her own testimony, she didn't have a partial-birth abortion. She says in her testimony that the death of her daughter Abigail was induced inside the womb.

My daughter died with dignity inside my womb, after which the baby was delivered head first.

Partial-birth abortion, as we heard Dr. FRIST describe, is when the baby is delivered in a breach position alive, that all of the baby is taken out of the mother except for the head, and then a sharp instrument is inserted in the base of the skull, the baby is killed, and the brains are suctioned out.

That is not what happened. Yet we know that from her testimony, we have known that for several years, since 1995. Yet year after year after year, as we debate this bill, people come to the floor and hold up this case and say: Here is someone who was saved from health consequences by partial-birth abortion. It didn't happen. It didn't happen.

Let's take the cases where it did happen. I have two letters, one from a Dr. Pamela Smith who is at Mount Sinai Hospital in Chicago and another from Dr. Joseph DeCook who is at Michigan State University, discussing two different cases: First the Vikki Stella case, and second Coreen Costello.

It is very comfortable for me to stand here and talk about the very personal and tragic cases. I am sure it is very painful for those involved to hear their case being brought up by someone they disagree with in a very vociferous way. But if they are going to bring their case to support a conclusion that this procedure is medically necessary, then their story, their records, have to be examined to determine whether, in fact, it does support this medical determination, which has been arrived at by some, that this is a medically necessary procedure.

In the case of Miss Stella, she has proclaimed that this is the only thing that could be done to preserve her fertility.

This is what Dr. Pamela Smith writes:

The fact of the matter is that the standard care of that is used by medical personnel to terminate a pregnancy in its later stages does not include partial-birth abortion. Caesarean section, inducing labor with petosin or proglandins or, if the baby has excess fluid in the head, as I believe was the case with Miss Stella, draining the fluid from the baby's head to allow a normal delivery, all are techniques taught and used by obstetrical providers throughout this country. These are techniques for which we have safe statistics in regard to their impact with regard to the health of both the woman and the child. In contrast, there are no safety statistics on partial-birth abortion.

We heard Dr. FRIST say that. This is not a peer-reviewed procedure. We do not know from any kind of peer-reviewed study as to whether this is proper.

There is no reference on this technique in the National Library of Medicine database, and no long-term studies published to prove it does not negatively affect a woman's ability to successfully carry a pregnancy to term in the future. Miss Stella may have been told this procedure was necessary and safe, but she was sorely misinformed.

We all want to believe what our doctor tells us. We all put faith in our doctor. When our doctor says this is the only thing that could have helped you, I am not surprised that that is repeated by people who had the service performed on them. But what this doctor is saying, what 600 obstetricians have said, what Dr. FRIST has said, what Dr. COBURN in the House has said, what Dr. Koop has said—Dr. C. Everett Koop—what the AMA has said, is that this is not good medicine. So she was sorely misinformed.

One of the complicating factors here that Senator DURBIN brought up was that Vikki Stella had diabetes. And Dr. Smith addresses that. She says:

Diabetes is a chronic medical condition that tends to get worse over time, and it predisposes individuals to infections that can be harder to treat. If Miss Stella was advised to have an abortion, most likely this was secondary to the fact that her child was diagnosed with conditions that were incompatible with life. The fact that Ms. Stella is a diabetic, coupled with the fact that diabetics are prone to infection and the partial-birth abortion procedure requires manipulating a normally contaminated vagina over a course of 3 days, a technique that invites infection, medically I would contend that of all the abortion techniques currently available to her, this was the worst one that could have been recommended for her. The others are quicker, cheaper, and do not place a diabetic in such extreme risk of life-threatening infections.

Again, for all of the argument that we need this procedure to protect the health of the mother, and here are cases in which it was used to protect the life and health of the mother, the fact is it was not the best thing. The evidence is it was not the best thing. So the very cases we are to rely upon to make a judgment that this was in fact a case in point as to why this procedure is necessary do not substantiate the claim. These are their best cases. You don't bring out your worst cases. This is the best evidence.

This goes back to what Dr. FRIST just mentioned, what I have mentioned earlier in the day. We are still waiting to hear what case is necessary: In what case is this the best procedure? Give us the set of facts and circumstances where this is, in fact, a preferable option, where it has been peer reviewed, where there is consensus in the field that this problem with the child and problem with the mother, that combination, requires partial-birth abortion as the preferred method.

Organizations have said this may be the best. If you say "may," then you have to come forward saying where can it be the best; tell me what circumstances. They have not. Yet, incredibly, with all of the evidence we have presented on our side of this issue, of how it is bad medicine, how it is not peer reviewed, how it is rogue medicine, how it was developed by an abortionist who was not an obstetrician, how it is only done in abortion clinics, how it is not taught in medical schools, it is not in any of the literature—all of this information is overwhelming that this is a bad procedure—the only thing they hold onto on the other side is, it may be necessary, with no instance, no hypothetical.

Pull out your worst set of facts for me, put them on paper, and tell me what it is. They will not do it. You have to wonder, don't you, if this is the evidence they want to use to claim that health is a necessary provision. It is bogus. It is bogus.

Coreen Costello—again, this is based on what she has revealed of her medical history of her own accord. Again, Dr. DeCook states that a partial-birth abortion is never medically indicated. In fact, there are several alternative standard medical procedures to treat women confronting unfortunate situations such as what Miss Costello had to face.

According to what she presented to us, the Congress, Miss Costello's child suffered from at least two conditions, polyhydramnios secondary to abnormal fetal swallowing and hydrocephalus.

In the first the child could not swallow the amniotic fluid and an excess of the fluid, therefore, collected in the mother's uterus.

The second condition, hydrocephalus, is one that causes an excessive amount of fluid to accumulate in the fetal head. Because of the swallowing defect, the child's lungs were not properly stimulated, and underdevelopment of the lungs would likely be the cause of death if abortion had not intervened. The child had no significant chance of survival, but also would not likely die as soon as the umbilical cord was cut.

The usual treatment for removing the large amount of fluid in the uterus is called amniocentesis. The usual treatment for draining excess fluid from the fetal head is a process called cephalocentesis. In both cases, the excess fluid is drained by using a thin needle that can be placed inside the womb through the abdomen, transabdominally or through the vagina. The transvaginal approach, however, as performed by Dr. McMahon on Miss Costello, puts a woman at an increased risk of infection because of the nonsterile environment of the vagina. Dr. McMahon used this approach most likely because he had no significant experience in obstetrics and gynecology.

Again, using a higher risk procedure. Why? This man was not an obstetrician; he was an abortionist.

In other words, he may not have been able to do as well transabdominally in the standard method used by OB/GYNs because that takes a degree of expertise he did not possess.

After the fluid has been drained and the head decreased in size, labor will be induced and attempts made to deliver the child vaginally. Miss Costello's statement that she was unable to have a vaginal delivery or, as she called it, natural birth or induced labor, is contradicted by the fact that she did indeed have a vaginal delivery conduct by Dr. McMahon. What Miss Costello had was a breach vaginal delivery for purposes of aborting the child, however, as opposed to a vaginal delivery intended to result in a live birth. A cesarean section in this case would not be medically indicated, not because of any inherent danger but because the baby could have been delivered safely vaginally.

We have heard testimony after testimony from hundreds of obstetricians saying there may be cases where separation has to occur between the mother and the child because of the health of the mother, because of the life of the mother. There may be a case—there are cases where the baby within the mother's womb is a threat to the mother's life and health. But what these doctors have said over and over and over again is, just because we have to separate the mother from the child does not mean you have to kill the child in the process.

In the case of partial-birth abortion—take Coreen Costello—fluid was drained. The baby could have been delivered. The baby could have been delivered and given a chance to survive. By killing the baby, you increase the risk to the mother. When you do a procedure inside of the mother that causes the destruction of the child through shattering the base of the skull, you are performing a brutal procedure, a very bloody, barbaric procedure inside of the mother that could result in laceration, and bony fragments or shards perforating that birth canal area. That is much more dangerous to the health of the mother than simply delivering the baby intact.

It seems almost incredible to me that in the overwhelming—overwhelming—status of the medical evidence presented on the floor we would have any question as to whether this is really necessary to protect the health of the mom.

My argument goes a little further because I think these doctors are saying that you may need to deliver the child prematurely, but you never need to kill the baby to protect the health and life of the mother. There is always a way to deliver the child. At least give this child the dignity of being born.

Remember, most of these abortions are done on healthy mothers and healthy babies. I think everyone looks at this debate and says: Oh, this is a debate; about sick moms and sick kids.

It is not a debate about sick mothers and sick kids. This is a debate primarily about healthy mothers who decide late in pregnancy not to have a child, and the child is healthy. The child would be born alive if it were not killed by the partial-birth abortion. The child, in many cases, would not only be born alive but would survive that birth. We in the Senate say too bad; too bad.

I am going to talk now about the small percentage of cases where there are the difficult choices because that is the real powerful argument. That is why they make it because they believe it is the most powerful argument they have to keep this procedure legal. They do not want to talk about the 90 percent of the cases because they cannot defend that. You cannot defend a 25-week abortion with a healthy mother and a healthy baby where that baby would be born alive, survive, develop, and live normally. You cannot defend that.

And guess what. Surprise, surprise, nobody does. They do not talk about those cases. That is the norm here. That is the norm. That is what goes on out there. They do not talk about that. They want to bring in the sick kids and the sick moms and say: We need this for these small percentage of cases.

Again, let's get to the argument again. In every one of those cases where there is a maternal health issue, there is overwhelming evidence this procedure is not in the best interest of the mother, but they want to bring in the sick kids.

That bothers me because it assumes that you, the American public, out there listening to what I am saying, somehow look at sick children as less important, as less worthy of life, as disposable, as a burden, as a freak, as pain and suffering, not as a beautiful, wonderful gift from God. That is why they argue these cases, and they argue these cases because there are millions of Americans who, when they hear about this child who is deformed or not going to live long, see this child as a burden, as unwanted, as imperfect.

It is a sad commentary on our country if we look at God's creations and see only what their utility is to our country, to our lives, to our world. And if their utility is not how we can quantify it in terms of what kind of job they can have, how smart they will be or how beautiful they will be, what they will add to the value of life in America, they are seen as less useful, less needed, less wanted, a burden.

The fact that the people who make this debate, oppose this bill, bring this up and talk about just these cases sends a chill down my spine, because they are appealing to the darker side of us when they do that. They are appealing to our prejudice against people who do not look like us, who do not act like us, who are not perfect like us, and yet they are the very people who will fight heroic fights. And I give credit to many who will fight the heroic fights to give rights to that disabled child after it survives. But once the child is delivered and once it is alive, then they will fight the battle to make sure it gets a proper education under IDEA.

The Senator in the Chair, Dr. FRIST, was a great leader on that and worked with some of the opponents of this bill on ensuring disabled individuals have rights. But I wonder how they can justify using these cases to appeal to this dark side of us, the cultural phenomenon in this country that demands perfection, that is poisoning our little girls with what perfect little girls must look like, that is leading to disorder after disorder as a result of the striving for perfection that has permeated our culture, what you have to look like, what you have to smell like, what you have to wear.

They feed into that by saying these poor children are not quite worthy of life. While we will fight for them once they are born, I think what they are actually saying is: But we really hope they are not born in the first place.

That is very disturbing because I am going to share with you tonight some stories about parents who made a different choice, who, when they heard about the child inside, decided they were going to look at that child the way God looks at that child, as a beautiful, wonderful creature of God, perfect in every way in His most important eyes, and accepted children for as long or as short a time as their life was to be.

I am going to share with you a story first of Andrew Goin.

Last time we debated this issue on the override of the President's veto last year—it was last fall—I had this picture up here. We talked about Andrew. And I will do so again. But I have a little addendum to this story.

First, let me tell you about Andrew. That is Andrew. Andrew's mother is Whitney Goin. She had a feeling something was wrong 5 months into her pregnancy. When she went in for her first sonogram, a large abdominal wall defect was detected. She described her condition after learning there was a problem with the pregnancy:

My husband was unreachable so I sat alone, until my mother arrived, as the doctor described my baby as being severely deformed with a gigantic defect and most likely many other defects that he could not detect with their equipment. He went on to explain that babies with this large of a defect are often stillborn, live very shortly, or could survive with extensive surgeries and treatments, depending on the presence of additional anomalies and complications after birth. The complications and associated problems that a baby in this condition could suffer include but are not limited to: bladder exstrophy, imperforate anus, collapsed lungs, diseased liver, fatal infections, cardiovascular malformations . . .

And so on.

A perinatologist suggested she strongly consider having a partial-birth abortion. The doctor told her it may be something that she "needs" to do—that she "needs" to do. He described the procedure as "a late-term abortion where the fetus would be almost completely delivered and then terminated."

The Goins chose to carry their baby to term. But complications related to a drop in the amniotic fluid level created some concerns. Doctors advised the Goins that the baby's chances for survival would be greater outside the womb. So on October 26, 1995, Andrew Hewitt Goin was delivered by C-section. He was born with an abdominal wall defect known as omphalocele, a condition in which the abdominal organs—stomach, liver, spleen, small and large intestines—are outside of the baby's body but still contained in a protective envelope of tissue. Andrew had his first of several major operations 2 hours after he was born.

Andrew's first months were not easy. He suffered excruciating pain. He was on a respirator for 6 weeks. He needed tubes in his nose and throat to continually suction his stomach and lungs. He needed eight blood transfusions. His mother recalled:

The enormous pressure of the organs being replaced slowly into his body caused chronic lung disease for which he received extensive oxygen and steroid treatments as he overcame a physical addiction to the numerous pain killers he was given.

It broke his parents' hearts to see him suffering so badly.

Andrew fought hard to live. In fact, Baby Andrew did live. On March 1, 1999, Bruce and Whitney Goin welcomed their second child, Matthew, into the family.

Here is a picture of the two of them.

Contrary to the misinformation about partial-birth abortion that has been so recklessly repeated, carrying Andrew to term did not affect Whitney's ability to have future children.

This is that little boy who "needed" to be aborted, who was not "perfect" in our eyes. It is one of these "abnormalities" that we need to get rid of. What a beautiful little boy. What a gift he is to his parents. What a gift he is to all of us for his courage and inspiration. What inspiration we get as a society from those who overcome the great odds and pain and strife. How ennobled we are by it.

Are we ennobled by partial-birth abortions? Would we be ennobled in this country today if Whitney Goin did what she "needed" to do according to the doctor?

Andrew Goin touched more than one life directly.

When I had this previous picture up of Andrew last year, I was here at about this time of night. At that time, Senator DEWINE was in the Chair. I was thinking, and I called my wife about an hour before, as I did tonight, and I said: Honey, I just have to get up and talk some more. I just feel it in me. I have to say more. I know it's not going to change anybody's vote, but I have to say it. I know there is nobody on the floor other than MIKE DEWINE—at that time; and now BILL FRIST at this time—who will be listening to what I'm going to say, but I have to say it.

So here I am again. I remember finishing that night a little after 10 o'clock. And it was after 10 o'clock, because the pages always encourage me, when I speak late at night, to speak until after 10 o'clock so they don't have to go to school in the morning. So congratulations, you are 3 minutes away from it.

So it was after 10 o'clock. And I remember closing down the Senate and Mike coming up here, and I just felt this sense that this was all for nothing—as much as I care about this issue and as wrong as I believe this is for our country—that all that was said that night was falling on deaf ears.

In fact, the next day we lost the override vote. So my feeling of futility, if you will, was compounded—until a few days later when I received an e-mail from a young man who said:

Recently my girlfriend and I were flipping through the channels, and we came across C-SPAN, and were fortunate enough to hear your speech regarding the evils of partial-birth abortion. We saw the picture of the little boy with the headphones on, who was lucky enough to have had parents who loved him and brought him into this world instead of ending his life prenatally. Both of us were moved to tears by your speech.

And my girlfriend confessed to me that she had scheduled an appointment for an abortion the following week. She never told me about her pregnancy because she knew that I would object to any decision to kill our child. But after watching your emotional speech, she looked at me, as tears rolled down her cheeks, and told me that she could not go through with it.

We're not ready to be parents. We still have a couple years left at college. And then we will have a large student loan to pay back. But I am grateful that my child will live. It is a true tragedy that the partial-birth abortion ban failed to override Clinton's veto. But please take some comfort in knowing that at least one life was saved because of your speech. You have saved the life of our child. May God bless you and keep you.

Fortunately for me, the writer of this e-mail stayed in touch. I received an e-mail a couple of weeks ago that reported back what had happened over the previous year. He says:

We reevaluated our ability to raise a child at this point in time in our lives, and we finally decided to put our baby up for adoption. I know that she is being raised by a loving couple that cares deeply for her. I often wonder if we did the right thing by putting her up for adoption, but I know we did the right thing by bringing her into the world. Every now and then I think that one day she is going to grow up and be a part of the lives of many people. Then I wonder what would have happened if I had just kept on clicking through the channels and not stopped to see you speaking on C-SPAN. A terrible thing might have happened and I probably would never have known about it. I will always have in my mind the thoughts about her life that she is living and the people that she is important to. Once again, thank you so much for your speech on C-SPAN that day. It is a terrible tragedy that you were unable to override Clinton's veto, what it meant to us, of course, our daughter and her adopted parents.

There is something ennobling about that story, something that touches all of us, something that gives us hope. What I am saying is, I don't think partial-birth abortion does that to anyone. I don't think it is ennobling to kill a child 3 inches away from being born. I don't think it is inspiring. I don't think it is the better angels of our nature. I don't think it is going to go down in the annals of the Senate as one of our great compassionate civil rights votes or constitutional votes.

It doesn't lift up our spirits. It doesn't make us walk with that longer stride, with our head held high. It is sanctioning the killing of an innocent baby who is 3 inches away from constitutional protection, and it blurs the line of what is permissible in this country. If we can kill a little baby that would otherwise be born alive, 3 inches away from being born, what else are we capable of?

Unfortunately, we are answering that question every day, with the violence we see reported on television, with the insensitivity to life that we see occurring in our daily lives, with the calls for assisted suicide, with the calls for mercy killings, even with this debate, with the argument the Senator from California made earlier. She wants to make sure that every child is wanted.

Mother Teresa said it best at the National Prayer Breakfast a few years ago. "Give me your children," she said. Give me your children. If you don't want your children, give them to me; I want them.

Tens of thousands of mothers and fathers who cannot have children want those children and will love those children. There is not a shortage of wanting in America when it comes to children. The most debilitating thing to think about is that the life of a child can be snuffed out, a life that could include 90 or 100 years. A little girl born this year has a 1-in-3 chance to live to be 100. So for those little girls who are aborted through partial-birth abortion, 100 years of loving and making a contribution to our society, finding the cure to cancer, of enriching our lives is snuffed out because for a period of time, a short period of time, your mother didn't want you. How many of us in our lives today would be snuffed out or could be snuffed out because someone doesn't want you?

We have a chance to make a statement tomorrow in the Senate. We have a chance to stand as a body for these little children, these imperfect little children who the world and, unfortunately, Members of the Senate believe are somehow less worthy of being born because they may not live long or they may be in pain and it would be merciful to put them out of their misery. I am sure Andrew Goin would say, please don't show me that kind of mercy. In fact, we have lots of other children who were born who I am sure would say, please don't show me that kind of mercy.

A picture here of Tony Melendez. Tony was born with no arms, 11 toes, and severe clubfoot. That is little Tony. I am sure what he would say to you today is, please don't show me that kind of mercy because I am not perfect like you would like me to be. Tony didn't let all the prejudice that comes with having no arms, a clubfoot, 11 toes stop him from being one of the greatest inspirations we have had in our time. Tony is now a musician. Tony plays the guitar with his feet. He has performed for the Pope on three occasions, has traveled to 16 foreign countries, played the national anthem in game 5 of the 1989 World Series, on and on and on.

If you would listen to the debate today on the floor of the Senate, you would think it might be more merciful to let him die before he gets the chance to prove that he is worthy.

Donna Joy Watts. Donna Joy was here a couple of years ago. Donna Joy is an amazing story. It has been put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for a long time. We had it in here several times. Lori Watts, her mom, found out that her child had hydrocephalus, an excessive amount of cerebral fluid, water on the brain. She was told her daughter would virtually have no brain, that most of her brain would be gone. So the obstetrician, when she found out on the sonogram, said Donna Joy should be aborted, that a partial-birth abortion should be performed—yes, a partial-birth abortion. Mr. Watts said, "No, we don't want to do an abortion." So they sent the Wattses to see a high-risk obstetrics group. They went to three hospitals in the Baltimore area. All three hospitals said they would abort Donna Joy, but they would not deliver her. Let me repeat that. They would perform an abortion, but they would not deliver her. So people are worried about safe access to abortion. We are getting to the point where we need safe access to birth. Finally, she found a team that would deliver her. Again, this group also advised an abortion but then agreed to deliver. She was born with severe health problems.

What the Wattses expected was that, as soon as the baby was born, a team would go into action to see what they could do to help save this little girl. They found out that they did nothing. They did nothing. They put the baby in a neonatal unit and kept it warm and they said to the Wattses, your baby is going to die. We are not going to do anything. This baby is so sick, has such a little brain, so many complications, we are not going to deal with it. Guess what. She didn't give up. She kept living. So now the doctors had this baby, now alive three days, and they don't know what to do with her. This baby keeps living and she should have been dead.

Finally, three days later, they implanted a shunt to drain off the excess fluid. Of course, the shunt should have been in as soon as possible to minimize the damage, but they waited three days. What has happened ever since then has been remarkable. Yes, there were complications. The shunts haven't worked. They have had to go back in several times to fix that. They had trouble feeding her. And so her mother came up with an ingenious way of fixing a mixture of baby food and giving it by syringe, one drop at a time, because that is all she could handle eating. She had other complications.

Meningoencephalocele is another complication, and I can go on with epilepsy, sleep disorders, digestive complications. She has had a lot of problems. But she has survived them all. She has survived them all.

Donna Joy is about to celebrate, next month, her eighth birthday. And, yes, I have met her. She has been in my office. She walks and talks and plays with my kids. She takes karate and she goes around with her mom to various places. We are fortunate to have the Watts living in Pennsylvania. She provides living testimony to hope and to the horrors of partial-birth abortion, because she should not be alive today. She should not be in this picture. If you accept the arguments on the other side, it is probably better if she wasn't there.

I don't accept those arguments. I don't accept the arguments that because a child may not have the kind of life that you want, she cannot have a life worth living, because all life is worth living.

There are several other cases here that I would like to put in the RECORD. One I want to talk about, finally, is the case of Christian Matthew McNaughton. I talk about this because this is somewhat personal because I know the McNaughtons. They are a wonderful family. Mark is a State legislator up in Pennsylvania. Christian was born in 1993. Before he was born, the McNaughtons found, when Dianne went in for a sonogram, that Christian had hydrocephalus, water on the brain. By the way, in several of the stories we heard about why we need to have partial-birth abortion, the abnormality was hydrocephalus. So these are parallel cases. The radiologist said the baby seemed to have more fluid on the brain than tissue. They cautioned that it was possible the baby had no brain at all. They were told their prospects were dim, and they were advised that they could have an abortion. It would be preferable to have an abortion. In fact, they were offered a partial-birth abortion.

Again, as the doctor explained it, the baby would be partially delivered, the surgical instrument inserted into the base of the skull, the brains would be extracted, or what there was of the brain, and the rest of the body would be delivered. Of course, they rejected that option. One of the doctors said, after they rejected the option, that shunt surgery to relieve the pressure, the fluid on the baby's brain, would not be performed if the child's quality of life prospects did not warrant it. That goes back to the Donna Joy situation.

Christian was born in June of 1993. He required special medical care. A CAT Scan revealed he suffered a stroke in utero, which caused excess fluid to build up in his brain. It showed that the lower level quadrant of his brain was missing. Within a week of his birth, he had the first shunt surgery to drain fluid, and he had a follow-up procedure in three months. He exceeded everybody's expectations. So a baby, which doctors initially believed was blind, had no capacity for learning, grew to a little boy who talked, walked, ran, sang, enjoyed playing baseball and basketball. He attended preschool. His heroes were Cal Ripken, Jr., Batman, Spiderman, and the Backstreet Boys. He loved whales and dolphins. His favorite movie was Angels in the Outfield. And he especially loved his baby sister, who was two years younger than he. Christian brought joy to all who were fortunate enough to know him.

In August, Christian began experiencing head pains. Here is little Christian in this photo, and this is his little baby sister. His shunt was malfunctioning, and it had to be replaced.

After surgery, Christian experienced cardiac arrest respiratory distress. He slipped into a coma. Fluid continued to accumulate on his brain. He fought hard to live. But he didn't. He died 2 years ago on August 8 at the age of 4.

If you think these kids don't matter, if you think this option is just all pain, ask Mark and Dianne whether they would trade the 4 years. They have those wonderful memories—difficult, sure; painful, sure. But they believed in their child. They loved him. They nurtured him. And he returned much more than they ever gave—not just to them but to all of us.

Do you want to know how they felt about their little brother?

Last year, on his anniversary, these are little ads taken out in the Harrisburg Patriot News by his sisters, his brother, his mom and dad.

His sister said:

Christian, we love you, we miss you, we wish we could kiss you just one more time.

His brother, Mark:

I have a poem for you.

Blue jays are blue, and I love you; robins are red, and I miss you in bed; sparrows are black, I wish you were back; I am sorry for the bad things I did to you, you are the best and the only brother I ever had, please watch over us and take care of us. Love Mark.

His mom and dad:

Our arms ache to hold you again. Our hearts are forever broken, but we thank God we had a chance to love you. We know your smile is brightening up the heavens, and that Jesus loves the little children. Please help us to carry on until the day we can all play together again.

What would be missed, as some would suggest, if we just take all of this pain away, and kill this baby before it would suffer through this horrible life?

The McNaughtons would not trade a minute. I think it is obvious they wouldn't trade a minute.

All of the stories are not happy ones. All of the sad stories do not have a bright side. Some are just tragic and tragic and tragic.

But I can tell you as a family who has gone through the loss of a child, and what we thought was a normal pregnancy didn't go the way we had hoped, accepting your child, loving your child, taking your children as they are, for as long as they are to be may be the hardest thing you can do. But it is the best that we can do—not just for the child whose life you have affirmed and accepted but in your life.

In the case of Mark, the little boy knew he was loved. He lived a couple of hours. Karen and I and our family have the knowledge that for those hours we opened up our arms to him, and during those 2 hours he knew he was loved.

What a wonderful life we could all have if that is all we had.

We have a chance tomorrow to draw a bright line. A bright line needs to be drawn for this country. If there is a time in our society and in our world when we need a bright line separating life and death, I can think of no better time.

This debate today and tomorrow is drawing that line, affirming that once a baby is in the process of being born and there is a partial-birth abortion outside of the mother, the line has been crossed. It is not a fuzzy line. If we perform that kind of brutality to a little baby who would otherwise be born alive, it is beneath us as a country.

History will look back at this debate, I am sure, and wonder how it could have ever occurred. How we could ever have done that to the most helpless among us? How did we ever cross the line?

But tomorrow those Members of the Senate will have a chance to tell a different story for history, to say that the greatest deliberative body in the world will strike a clear blow for the right to life for little children during the process of being born.

I don't think it is too much to ask. But I do ask it of my colleagues. I plead with them to find somewhere in their hearts the strength to stand up and do what is right for this country, what is right for the little children, and say no to partial-birth abortions.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

EXPLANATION OF VOTE

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I was necessarily absent while attending to a family member's medical condition during Senate action on rollcall votes Nos. 328 and 329.

Had I been present for the votes, I would have voted as follows: On rollcall vote No. 328, adoption of the conference report on H.R. 2684, a bill making appropriations for the Departments of Veterans Affairs and Housing and Urban Development, and for sundry independent agencies, boards, commissions, corporations, and offices for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, I would have agreed to the conference report. On rollcall vote No. 329, the motion to table Senate Amendment No. 2299, a Reid perfecting amendment to the campaign finance reform bill, I would have voted not to table the amendment.

CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, we have now set aside—until the next time!—the McCain-Feingold legislation on campaign finance reform. I did not speak during this most recent debate. The third in three years, and for certain not the last as Senator FEINGOLD made clear last evening on the “NewsHour with Jim Lehrer.” I supported the reform with only a faint sense of familiarity. Here we are, reforming the results of the last reform. A not infrequent task of Congress. But now it might be useful to offer a few related observations.

The first is to state that raising money for political campaigns has never been a great burden for this Senator, and for the simple reason that I hardly do any. One dinner a term, perhaps two. Some receptions. Lots of mail. Not surprisingly the results are not exactly spectacular. In 1994, my last campaign, and which will be my last campaign, the Federal Elections Commission records our having raised $6,100,147. This is for the State of New York, the third most populous in the nation. But it sufficed. For practical purposes, all the money went to television, with the incomparable Doug Schoen keeping an eye on the numbers lest trouble appear unexpectedly. Our campaign staff never had ten persons, which may sound small to some, but I believe was our largest ever. Even so, we have done well. In 1988, I received some 4,000,000 votes and won by more than 2,000,000 votes, the largest numerical margin of victory in any legislative election in history. I say all this simply to note that just possibly money isn't everything. But if we think it is, it might as well be. And so we must persevere.

This July, in his celebrated Wall Street Journal column, Paul Gigot referred to me as an “old pol” and an “ever loyal Democrat.” I wrote to thank him, for this is pretty close to the truth. If I have spent time in universities it was usually seeking sanctuary after a failed election, my own or others. I go back before polling, and before television. (Although in 1953 I did write a 15-minute television speech for the Democratic candidate for Mayor of New York City, Robert F. Wagner, Jr. It might have been seen by 10,000 people.) But of course polling caught on, as the mathematics got better, and television has never stopped. And these, of course, are the technologies that seemingly confound us today. But this subject has been with us the longest while.

Congress first placed restrictions on political spending with the Naval Appropriations Bill of 1867 which prohibited Navy officers and Federal employees from soliciting campaign funds from navy yard workers.

Faced with allegations that corporations had bought influence with contributions to his campaign, President Theodore Roosevelt called for campaign finance reform in his 1905 and 1906 State of the Union addresses. In response, Congress passed the Tillman Act of 1907, banning corporate gifts to Federal candidates. And during World War II, the War Labor Disputes Act of 1943, known as the Smith-Connally Act, temporarily prohibited unions from making contributions in Federal elections. In 1947, the Taft-Hartley Act made this wartime measure permanent. As my colleagues well know, these bans have been made virtually irrelevant with the advent of so-called “soft money.”

Requirements for the disclosure of donors originated in the so-called Publicity Act of 1910 which required the treasurer of political committees to reveal the names of all contributors of $100 or more. Congress expanded the disclosure rules with the 1925 Federal Corrupt Practices Act, requiring political committees to report total contributions and expenditures. The Court upheld this Act in Burroughs v. United States, declaring that Congress has the prerogative to “pass appropriate legislation to safeguard (a Presidential) election from the improper use of money to influence the result.” We continue to debate how to exercise that prerogative today.

But may I focus on one particular aspect of campaign funding, which is relatively new? Money for television. Ease this by providing free television time—those are public airways—and as much about the problem goes away as will ever be managed in this vale of toil and sin.

Max Frankel, the long-time and venerable editor of the New York Times and a wise and seasoned observer of American politics, addressed this issue in the October 26, 1997 New York Times Magazine:

The movement to clean up campaign financing is going nowhere for the simple reason that the reformers are aiming at the wrong target. They are laboring to limit the flow of money into politics when they should be looking to limit the candidates' need for money to pay for television time. It is the staggering price of addressing the voters that drives the unseemly money chase.

To run effectively for major office nowadays one needs to spend millions for television commercials that spread your fame, shout your slogans, denounce your opponents, and counteract television attacks. A campaign costing $10 million for a governorship or seat in the Senate is a bargain in many states. The President, even with all the advantages of the White House at his command, appears to have spent more than $250 million on television ads promoting his reelection in 1996. $250 million!

The problem of so-called "issue advocacy" is only fueling the amount of money going into television ads and further distorting our electoral system. On February 10, 1998, Tim Russert delivered the fifth annual Marver H. Bernstein Symposium on Governmental Reform at Georgetown University. In his address, he asserted that "television ads paid for by the candidates themselves are (not) going to be the problem in future election cycles. That distinction will be earned by so-called 'issue advocacy' advertising by ideological and single issue groups." He made the point that, unlike candidates, these groups are not subject to campaign contribution limits or disclosure requirements.

In Buckley v. Valeo the Supreme court held that these ads are protected speech under the First Amendment. We are told that requiring such groups to disclose their list of contributors might be a violation of the First Amendment under NAACP v. Alabama. Mr. Russert contends that "unless the Fourth Estate is able to identify these groups and ferret out their funding, and explain their agenda, many elections could very well be taken hostage by a select band of anonymous donors and political hit men." There must be a better way.

Might I suggest that the way to reduce the influence of these "select band of anonymous donors and political hit men" and to reduce the ungodly amount of money being used in campaigns is free television time for candidates. Frankel writes:

It would be cheaper by far if Federal and State treasuries paid directly for the television time that candidates need to define themselves to the public—provided they purchased no commercial time of their own. Democracy would be further enhanced if television stations that sold time to special interest groups in election years were required, in return for the use of the public spectrum, to give equal time to opposing views. But so long as expensive television commercials are our society's main campaign weapons, politicians will not abandon the demeaning and often corrupt quest for ever more money from ever more suspect sources.

The version of the McCain-Feingold bill we have been considering restricts so-called "soft money"—contributions that national, state, county, and local party organizations may collect and spend freely provided only that the television messages they produce with the funds are disguised to appear "uncoordinated" with any candidate's campaign. This is a good first step. But it is not enough. Even if soft money and slimy variants were prohibited, political money would reappear in liquid or vaporous form. If we want to make significant changes with regard to how we conduct campaigns, we must—to repeat Frankel—look beyond limiting the flow of money into politics and rather look to limiting the candidates' need for money to pay for television time. Frankel concludes his piece on campaign finance reform by stating that "there is no point dreaming of a law that says 'you may not' so long as the political system daily teaches the participants 'you must.' Until candidates for office in America are relieved of the costly burden of buying television time, the scandals will grow." He could not be more right.

DEPARTMENTS OF VETERANS AFFAIRS AND HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT APPROPRIATIONS

VERMONT RURAL FIRE PROTECTION TASK FORCE

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I first thank Senator BOND for all of his hard work on the FY 2000 Departments of Veterans Affairs and Housing and Urban Development Appropriations bill, and the attention he paid to priorities in my home State of Vermont. I would like to briefly discuss with the Senator from Missouri the $600,000 provided in the Conference Report for the Vermont Rural Fire Protection Task Force.

It is my understanding that the funds provided are for the purchase of personal safety equipment that includes, but is not limited to the following: self-contained breathing apparatus, fire resistant turn out gear (helmets, coats pants, boots, hoods, gloves, and the like), personal pagers, personal accountability system to fulfill requirements of OSHA's two in two out rule, portable radios and personal hand lights. The need for new firefighting equipment is great in Vermont, because of the new OSHA regulations. I hope that the funds provided in this bill will be matched 50 percent with non-federal funds.

Further, it is my understanding that the funds will be administered by the Vermont Rural Fire Protection Task Force supported by the George D. Aiken and the Northern Vermont Resource Conservation and Development Council.

Mr. BOND. The Senator from Vermont has accurately described the intentions of the Conference Report accompanying the FY 2000 Departments of Veterans Affairs and Housing and Urban Development Appropriations bill.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM-367. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of California relative to trucks entering California from foreign nations; to the Committee on Finance.

ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 16

Whereas, A recent study by the United States Government Accounting Office (GAO) found that Mexican commercial trucks entering the United States often fail to meet basic safety standards; and

Whereas, The GAO reported that Mexican trucks entering the United States may have serious safety violations impacting highway safety, including broken suspension systems, substandard tires, inoperable brakes, overweight loads, and improperly maintained hazardous material loads; and

Whereas, The report of the federal Office of the Inspector General titled, "Motor Carrier Safety Program for Commercial Trucks at U.S. Borders," issued on December 28, 1998, identified California as the only state that enforces the Federal Operating Authority Regulation and complimented California for having both the best inspection practices and the lowest out-of-service rate; and

Whereas, Mexico has no automated system by which California law enforcement officials can determine whether a Mexican commercial driver has a valid license or a driving or criminal record; and

Whereas, The government of Mexico has no laws limiting the maximum number of hours that drivers may safely operate a commercial vehicle and no system of worker's compensation insurance to protect drivers who are injured while at work; and

Whereas, Mexico's mandatory alcohol and drug testing program does not adequately test commercial drivers and its substance-abuse testing laboratory has not been certified by the United States Department of Transportation to meet internationally agreed-upon standards for accuracy; and

Whereas, "Operation Alliance," a federally sponsored drug-enforcement coordinating agency and the United States Customs Service drug-inspection program found that drug traffickers are becoming owners of, or are obtaining controlling interests in, transportation businesses, such as trucking companies, warehouses, and semi-trailer manufacturing companies, in order to take advantage of the increased trucking trade authorized by the North American Free Trade Agreement; and

Whereas, The Southern California Association of Governments recently passed a resolution authorizing its regional council to alert the President of the United States to the "major safety issues involved in trucking regulations under the North American Free Trade Agreement"; and

Whereas, The federal government has chosen not to implement the provisions of the North American Free Trade Agreement that call for unlimited access by Mexican trucks to the territory of the State of California; now therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to maintain the existing restrictions on trucks from Mexico and other foreign nations entering California and to continue efforts to ensure full compliance by the owners and drivers of those trucks with all highway safety, environmental, and drug-enforcement laws; and be it further

Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and the Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States, and to the Governor.

POM-368. A resolution adopted by the House of the Legislature of the State of Michigan relative to block grant amounts to the states through the Temporary Assistance to Needy Families program; to the Committee on Finance.

HOUSE RESOLUTION NO. 48

Whereas, A key component of the welfare reforms enacted in 1996 is the Temporary Assistance to Needy Families block grant program. The levels of these block grants were guaranteed for a five-year period as a means to help in the transformation of the nation's approach to welfare and helping people help themselves; and

Whereas, A proposal has surfaced in Washington to have the states return unobligated balances from the TANF block grant funding. The proposal has raised the concerns and opposition of state policymakers around the country who do not want the success of welfare reform to be derailed or threatened by reductions in this funding. This funding, as well as the flexibility to administer federal programs, is critical to genuine, meaningful, longstanding welfare reform; and

Whereas, Discussions on altering or reducing block grant programs for needy families also include proposed changes in Medicaid options, social services block grants, child support initiatives, and efforts to secure health insurance coverages for children. The possibility of bringing new conditions for the expenditure of funds or cuts in the amounts of block grants has generated considerable concern across the country; and

Whereas, The reforms brought to the country's approach to welfare in 1996 also represented a significant step in the relationship between Washington and the states. This new partnership allowed and even encouraged the "laboratories of democracy" to find solutions that account for the unique resources and needs of each state. Michigan's success and the similar achievements across the nation should not be jeopardized by Washington reclaiming money promised to the states; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That we memorialize the Congress of the United States to reject any reduction in block grant amounts to the states through the Temporary Assistance to Needy Families (TANF) program or any changes in conditions or requirements that reduce the flexibility of the states, and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and the members of the Michigan congressional delegation.

S. 1752. A bill to reauthorize and amend the Coastal Barrier Resources Act; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

THE COASTAL BARRIER RESOURCES REAUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1999

• Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am here today to introduce a bill to reauthorize the Coastal Barrier Resources Act (CBRA). Most people do not realize that coastal barriers are the first line of defense protecting the mainland from major storms and hurricanes, and this extremely vulnerable area is under increasing developmental pressure. From 1960 to 1990, the population of coastal areas increased from 80 to 110 million and is projected to reach over 160 million by 2015. Continued development on and around coastal barriers place people, property and the environment at risk.

To address this problem Congress passed CBRA in 1982. This extremely important legislation prohibits the Federal government from subsidizing flood insurance, and providing other financial assistance such as beach replenishment within the Coastal Barrier Resources System. Nothing in CBRA prohibits development on coastal barriers, it just gets the Federal government out of the business of subsidizing risky development.

The law proved to be so successful that we expanded the Coastal Barrier System in 1990 with the support of the National Taxpayers Union, the American Red Cross, Coast Alliance and Tax Payers for Common Sense, to name just a few. The 1990 Act doubled the size of the System to include coastal barriers in Puerto Rico, the U.S. Virgin Islands, the Great Lakes and additional areas along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts. We also allowed the inclusion of areas that are already protected for conservation purposes such as parks and refuges. Currently the System is comprised of 3 million acres and 2,500 shoreline miles.

Development of these areas decreases their ability to absorb the force of storms and buffer the mainland. The devastating floods of Hurricane Floyd are a reminder of the susceptibility of coastal development to the power of nature. The Federal Emergency Management Agency reports that 10 major disaster declarations were issued for this hurricane, more than for any other single hurricane or natural disaster. In fact, 1999 sets a record for major disaster declarations—a total of 14 in this year alone. As the number of disaster declarations has crept up steadily since the 1980's, so has the cost to taxpayers. Congress has approved on average $3.7 billion a year in supplemental disaster aid in the 1990's, compared to less than $1 billion a year in the decade prior.

Homeowners know the risk of building in these highly threatened areas. Despite this taxpayers are continually being asked to rebuild homes and businesses in flood-prone areas. The National Wildlife Federation came out with a study that found that over forty percent of the damage payments from the National Flood Insurance Program go to people who have had at least one previous claim. A New Jersey auto repair shop made 31 damage claims in 15 years.

At a time when climatologists believe that Floyd and other major hurricanes signal the beginning of a period of turbulent hurricane activity after three decades of relative calm, safety factors of continuing to develop coastal barrier regions must also be considered. As roadway systems have not kept up with population growth, it will become increasingly difficult to evacuate coastal areas in the face of a major storm.

Beyond the economic and safety issues, another compelling reason to support the Coastal Barrier Resources Act is that it contributes to the protection of our Nation's coastal resources. Coastal barriers protect and maintain the wetlands and estuaries essential to the survival of innumerable species of fish and wildlife. Large populations of waterfowl and other migratory birds depend on the habitat protected by coastal barriers for wintering areas. Undeveloped coastal barriers also provide unique recreational opportunities, and deserve protection for present and future public enjoyment.

The legislation which I am introducing today would reauthorize the Act for eight years and make some necessary changes to improve implementation. A new provision would establish a set of criteria for determining whether a coastal barrier is developed. Codifying the criteria will make it easier for homeowners, Congress and the Fish and Wildlife Service to determine if an area qualifies as an undeveloped coastal barrier. The legislation would also require the Secretary of the Interior to complete a pilot project to determine the feasibility of creating digital versions of the coastal barrier system maps. Digital maps would improve the accuracy of the older coastal barrier maps, and make it easier for the Department of Interior and homeowners to determine where a structure is located. Eventually, we hope that the entire System can be accessed by the Internet.

I believe that Congress should make every effort to conserve barrier islands and beaches. This legislation offers an opportunity to increase protection of coastal barriers, and at the same time, saves taxpayers money. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.●

S. 1753. A bill to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to provide that an adopted alien who is less than 18 years of age may be considered a child under such Act if adopted with or after a sibling who is a child under such Act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

KEEPING IMMIGRANT SIBLINGS TOGETHER

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill corresponding to one introduced by Congressman HORN of California and passed the House of Representatives this week. The intent of this bill is to allow immigrant orphan siblings to stay together when being adopted by U.S. citizens.

Under current law, a U.S. citizen may bring an immigrant child they have adopted to the United States if the child is under the age of 16. This bill would allow U.S. citizens to adopt immigrant children ages 16-17 if the adoption would keep a group of siblings together.

Mr. President, I agree with Mr. HORN's conclusion that family unity is a frequently cited goal of our immigration policy, and this proposal would promote that goal. Under current law, if children are adopted by U.S. citizens and the oldest sibling is 16 or 17, the oldest sibling cannot come to the United States with his or her brothers and sisters under current law. It seems clear to me that siblings of these young ages ought not to be separated.

Further, foreign adoption authorities in some cases do not allow the separation of siblings. In such cases, if a U.S. citizen wanted to adopt a group of siblings and one of them is 16 or older, the citizen would lose the opportunity to adopt any of them under current law.

As Mr. HORN's analysis of the consequences of this bill confirm, this bill is unlikely to cause a significant increase in immigration levels overall. During fiscal year 1996, a total a 351 immigrant orphans older than age 9 were adopted by U.S. citizens, out of 11,316 immigrant orphans adopted by U.S. citizens overall that year.

I thank Congressman HORN for his leadership in this issue. I certainly hope that we can act of this measure before we adjourn.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1753

S. 1754. A bill entitled “Denying Safe Havens to International and War

Criminals Act of 1999; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DENYING SAFE HAVENS TO INTERNATIONAL AND WAR CRIMINALS ACT OF 1999

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President. I rise today to introduce, along with Senator LEAHY of Vermont, a bill titled “Denying Safe Havens to International and War Criminals Act of 1999.” This is an important measure that I hope can move promptly through the Senate Judiciary Committee and through the Senate. The provisions contained in this bill are crucial in combating crime internationally. I believe that it will give law enforcement critical tools in more effectively pursuing fugitives and ware criminals.

I thank my ranking member for his work on this matter. This bill incorporates in title III, his own bill dealing with war criminals and it is an important component of this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent to include the text of the bill in the RECORD.

[Data not available at time of printing.]

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today with Senator HATCH a bill to give United States law enforcement agencies important tools to help them combat international crime. The “Denying Safe Haven to International and War Criminals Act of 1999” contains a number of provisions that I have long supported.

Unfortunately, crime and terrorism directed at Americans and American interests abroad are part of our modern reality. Furthermore, organized criminal activity does not recognize national boundaries. With improvements in technology, criminals now can move about the world with ease. They can transfer funds with the push of a button, or use computers and credit card numbers to steal from American citizens and businesses from any spot on the globe. They can strike at Americans here and abroad. They can commit crimes abroad and flee quickly to another jurisdiction or country. The playing field keeps changing, and we need to change with it.

This bill would help make needed modifications in our laws, not with sweeping changes but with thoughtful provisions carefully targeted at specific problems faced by law enforcement. We cannot stop international crime without international cooperation, and this bill gives additional tools to investigators and prosecutors to promote such cooperation, while narrowing the room for maneuver that international criminals and terrorists now enjoy.

I initially introduced title I, section 4 of this bill, regarding fugitive disentanglement, on April 30, 1998, in the “Money Laundering Enforcement and Combating Drugs in Prisons Act of 1998,” S. 2011, with Senators DASCHLE, KOHL, FEINSTEIN and CLELAND. Again, on July 14, 1998, I introduced with Senator BIDEN, on behalf of the Administration, the “International Crime Control Act of 1998,” S. 2303, which contains most of the provisions set forth in this bill. Virtually all of the provisions in the bill were also included in another major anti-crime bill, the “Safe Schools, Safe Streets, and Secure Borders Act of 1998,” S. 2484, that I introduced on September 16, 1998, along with Senators DASCHLE, BIDEN, Moseley-Braun, KENNEDY, KERRY, LAUTENBERG, MIKULSKI, BINGAMAN, REID, MURRAY, DORGAN, and TORRICELLI. In addition, Senator HATCH and I included title II, section 1 of this bill regarding streamlined procedures for MLAT requests in our “International Crime and Anti-Terrorism Amendments of 1998”, S. 2536, which passed the Senate last October 15, 1998.

We have drawn from these more comprehensive bills a set of discrete improvements that enjoy bipartisan support so that important provisions may be enacted promptly. Each of these provisions has been a law enforcement priority.

Title I sets forth important proposals for combating international crime and denying safe havens to international criminals. In particular, section 1 would provide for extradition under certain circumstances for offenses not covered in a treaty. Treaties negotiated many years ago specified the crimes for which extradition would be allowed. Developments in criminal activity, however, have outpaced the ability of countries to renegotiate treaties to include newly developing criminal activity. Under the bill, extradition would nevertheless proceed as if the crime were covered by a treaty for “serious offenses,” which are defined to include crimes of violence, drug crimes, bribery of public officials, obstruction of justice, money laundering, fraud or theft involving over $100,000, counterfeiting over $100,000, a conspiracy to commit any of these crimes, and sex crimes involving children. The section sets forth detailed procedures and safeguards for proceeding with extradition under these circumstances.

Section 2 contains technical and conforming amendments.

Section 3 would give the Attorney General authority to transfer a person in custody in the United States to a foreign country to stand trial where the Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary of State, determines that such transfer would be consistent with the international obligations of the United States. The section also allows for the transfer of a person in state custody in the United States to a foreign country to stand trial after a similar determination by the Attorney General and the consent of the State authorities. Similarly, the Attorney General is authorized to request the temporary transfer of a person in custody in a foreign country to face prosecution in a federal or state proceeding.

Section 4 is designed to stop drug kingpins, terrorists and other international fugitives from using our courts to fight to keep the proceeds of the very crimes for which they are wanted. Criminals should not be able to use our courts at the same time they are evading our laws.

Section 5 would permit the transfer of prisoners to their home country to serve their sentences, on a case-by-case basis, where such transfer is provided by treaty. Under this section, the prisoner need not consent to the transfer.

Section 6 would provide a statutory basis for holding and transferring prisoners who are sent from one foreign country to another through United States airports, preventing them from claiming asylum while they are temporarily in the United States.

Title II of the bill is designed to promote global cooperation in the fight against international crime. Specifically, section 1 would permit United States courts involved in multi-district litigation to enforce mutual legal assistance treaties and other agreements to execute foreign requests for assistance in criminal matters in all districts involved in the litigation.

Section 2 outlines procedures for the temporary transfer of incarcerated witnesses. Specifically, the bill would permit the United States, as a matter of reciprocity, to send persons in custody in the United States to a foreign country and to receive foreign prisoners to testify in judicial proceedings, with the consent of the prisoner and, where applicable, the State holding the prisoner. A transfer may not create a platform for an application for asylum or other legal proceeding in the United States. Decisions of the Attorney General respecting such transfers are to be made in conjunction with the Secretary of State.

Title III of the bill is the "Anti-Atrocity Alien Deportation Act," S. 1235, which I introduced on July 15, 1999, with Senator KOHL and is cosponsored by Senator LIEBERMAN. This bill has also been introduced in the House with bipartisan support as H.R. 2642 and H.R. 3058. This title of the bill would amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to expand the grounds for inadmissibility and deportation to cover aliens who have engaged in acts of torture abroad. "Torture" is already defined in the Federal criminal code, 18 U.S.C. § 2340, in a law passed as part of the implementing legislation for the "Convention Against Torture." Under this Convention, the United States has an affirmative duty to prosecute torturers within its boundaries regardless of their respective nationalities. 18 U.S.C. § 2340A (1994).

This legislation would also provide statutory authorization for OSI, which currently owes its existence to an Attorney General order, and would expand its jurisdiction to authorize investigations, prosecutions, and removal of any alien who participated in torture and genocide abroad—not just Nazis. The success of OSI in hunting Nazi war criminals demonstrates the effectiveness of centralized resources and expertise in these cases. OSI has worked, and it is time to update its mission. The knowledge of the people, politics and pathologies of particular regimes engaged in genocide and human rights abuses is often necessary for effective prosecutions of these cases and may best be accomplished by the concentrated efforts of a single office, rather than in piecemeal litigation around the country or in offices that have more diverse missions.

Unquestionably, the need to bring Nazi war criminals to justice remains a matter of great importance. Funds would not be diverted from the OSI's current mission. Additional resources are authorized in the bill for OSI's expanded duties.

These are important provisions that I have advocated for some time. They are helpful, solid law enforcement provisions. I thank my friend from Utah, Senator HATCH, for his help in making this bill a reality. Working together, we were able to craft a bipartisan bill that will accomplish what all of us want, to make America a safer and more secure place.

I ask that the attached sectional analysis of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The summary follows:

DENYING SAFE HAVENS TO INTERNATIONAL AND WAR CRIMINALS ACT OF 1999—SECTION BY SECTION ANALYSIS

TITLE I—DENYING SAFE HAVENS TO INTERNATIONAL CRIMINALS

Section 1. Extradition for Offenses Not Covered by a List Treaty

This section allows the Attorney General to seek extradition of a person for specified crimes not covered by a treaty. Treaties negotiated many years ago specified the crimes for which extradition would be allowed, and developments in criminal activity have outpaced the ability of countries to renegotiate treaties to include newly developing criminal activity. Extradition would proceed as if the crime were covered by treaty, and the section sets forth detailed procedures and safeguards. Applicable crimes include crimes of violence, drug crimes, obstruction of justice, money laundering, fraud or theft involving over $100,000, counterfeiting over $100,000, conspiracy to commit any of these crimes, and sex crimes involving children.

Section 2. Technical and Conforming Amendments

This section amends related statutes to conform with Section 1.

Section 3. Temporary Transfer of Persons in Custody for Prosecution

This section allows a temporary transfer of a person from another country to the United States to stand trial where the Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary of State determines that such transfer would be consistent with the international obligations of the United States. The section also allows for the transfer of a person in custody in the United States to a foreign country to stand trial after a similar determination by the Attorney General.

Section 4. Prohibiting Fugitives From Benefiting From Fugitive Status

This section adds a new section 2466 (Fugitive Disentitlement) to Title 28 to provide that a person cannot stay outside the United States, avoiding extradition, and at the same time participate as a party in a civil action over a related civil forfeiture claim. The Supreme Court recently decided that a previous judge-made rule to the same effect required a statutory basis. This section provides that basis.

Section 5. Transfer of Foreign Person to Serve Sentences in Country of Origin

This section permits transfer, on a case-by-case basis, of prisoners to their home country where such transfer is provided by treaty. Under this section the prisoner need not consent to the transfer.

Section 6. Transit of Fugitives for Prosecution in Foreign Countries

This section would provide a statutory basis for holding and transferring prisoners who are sent from one foreign country to another through United States airports, at the discretion of the Attorney General. The temporary presence in the United States would not be the basis for a claim for asylum.

TITLE II—PROMOTING GLOBAL COOPERATION IN THE FIGHT AGAINST INTERNATIONAL CRIME

Section 1. Streamlined Procedures for Execution of MLAT Requests

This section permits United States courts involved in multi-district litigation to enforce mutual legal assistance treaties and other agreements to execute foreign requests for assistance in criminal matters in all districts involved in the litigation or request.

Section 2. Temporary Transfer of Incarcerated Witnesses

This section permits the United States, as a matter of reciprocity, to send persons in custody in the United States to a foreign country and to receive foreign prisoners to testify in judicial proceedings, with the consent of the prisoner and, where applicable, the State holding the prisoner. A transfer may not create a platform for an application for asylum or other legal proceeding in the United States. Decisions of the Attorney General respecting such transfers are to be made in conjunction with the Secretary of State.

TITLE III—ANTI-ATROCITY ALIEN DEPORTATION

Section 1. Inadmissibility and Removability of Aliens Who Have Committed Acts of Torture Abroad

Currently, the Immigration and Nationality Act provides that (i) participants in Nazi persecutions during the time period from March 23, 1933 to May 8, 1945, and (ii) aliens who engaged in genocide, are inadmissible to the United States and deportable. See 8 U.S.C. §1182(a)(3)(E)(i) and §1227(a)(4)(D). The bill would amend these sections of the Immigration and Nationality Act by expanding the grounds for inadmissibility and deportation to cover aliens who have engaged in acts of torture abroad. The United Nations' "Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment" entered into force with respect to the United States on November 20, 1994. This Convention, and the implementing legislation, the Torture Victims Protection Act, 18 U.S.C. §§2340 et seq., includes the definition of "torture" incorporated in the bill and imposed an affirmative duty on the United States to prosecute torturers within its jurisdiction.

Section 2. Establishment of the Office of Special Investigations

Attorney General Civiletti established OSI in 1979 within the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice, consolidating within it all "investigative and litigation activities involving individuals, who prior to and during World War II, under the supervision of or in association with the Nazi government of Germany, its allies, and other affiliated [sic] governments, are alleged to have ordered, incited, assisted, or otherwise participated in the persecution of any person because of race, religion, national origin, or political opinion." (Attorney Gen. Order No. 851-79). The OSI's mission continues to be limited by that Attorney General Order.

This section would amend the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. §1103, by directing the Attorney General to establish an Office of Special Investigations within the Department of Justice with authorization to investigate, remove, denaturalize, or prosecute any alien who has participated in torture or genocide abroad. This would expand OSI's current authorized mission. Additional funds are authorized for these expanded duties to ensure that OSI fulfills its continuing obligations regarding Nazi war criminals.

By Mr. BROWNBACk (for himself and Mr. DORGAN):

S. 1755. A bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to regulate interstate commerce in the use of mobile telephones; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

THE MOBILE TELECOMMUNICATIONS SOURCING ACT

Mr. BROWNBACk. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce, on behalf of myself and Senator DORGAN, the Mobile Telecommunications Sourcing Act of 1999. This legislation is the product of more than a year's worth of negotiations between the Governors, cities, State tax and local tax authorities, and the wireless industry.

The legislation represents an historic agreement between State and local governments and the wireless industry to bring sanity to the manner in which wireless telecommunications services are taxed.

For as long as we have had wireless telecommunications in this country, we have had a taxation system that is incredibly complex for carriers and costly for consumers. Today, there are several different methodologies that determine whether a taxing jurisdiction may tax a wireless call.

If a call originates at a cell site located in a jurisdiction, it may impose a tax. If a call originates at a switch in the jurisdiction, a tax may be imposed. And if the billing address is in the jurisdiction, a tax can be imposed.

As a result, many different taxing authorities can tax the same wireless call. The farther you travel during a call, the greater the number of taxes that can be imposed upon it.

This system is simply not sustainable as wireless calls represent an increasing portion of the total number of calls made throughout the United States. To reduce the cost of making wireless calls, Senator DORGAN and I are introducing this legislation.

The legislation would create a nationwide, uniform system for the taxation of wireless calls. The only jurisdictions that would have the authority to tax mobile calls would be the taxing authorities of the customer's place of primary use, which would essentially be the customer's home or office.

By creating this uniform system, Congress would be greatly simplifying the taxation and billing of wireless calls. The wireless industry would not have to keep track of countless tax laws for each wireless transaction. State and local taxing authorities would be relieved of burdensome audit and oversight responsibilities without losing the authority to tax wireless calls. And, most importantly, consumers would see reduced wireless rates and fewer billing headaches.

The Mobile Telecommunications Sourcing Act is a win-win-win. It's a win for industry, a win for government, and a win for consumers. I thank Senator DORGAN for working with me in crafting this bill. And, most of all, I thank government and industry for coming together and reaching agreement on this important issue.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

[Data not available at time of printing.]

• Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, today my colleague Senator BROWNBACk and I are introducing legislation that is designed to address a highly complex issue with respect to the taxation of mobile telecommunications service. Although the issue is complex, the solution has a simple goal: to create a reliable and uniform method of taxation on wireless telecommunications services that works best for consumers.

Currently, the mobility of wireless telecommunications services makes the taxation by state and local jurisdictions a complicated and expensive task for carriers and consumers because questions arise as to whether the tax is levied in the location in which the call is placed or where the user resides. Because this situation is difficult to monitor, state and local jurisdictions the prospects of non-compliance and double taxation are also of concern. For example, a person driving between Baltimore, Maryland and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania can pass through 12 separate state and local taxing jurisdictions. In the two hours it would take someone to make that 100 mile drive, several phone calls could be made under a cloud of tax ambiguity that works for no one, not the consumer, not the carrier, and not the taxing jurisdictions. This scenario presents us with challenge to the traditional method of taxation in the face of the growing popularity of mobile communications systems. It is a case that needs to be changed.

The Mobile Telecommunications Sourcing Act is, in itself, an achievement. This legislation was developed through 3 years of dedicated, good faith negotiations between the industry and state and local government organizations. Rather than allow an unworkable situation to continue unresolved and rather than ignite a polemical political debate over a special interest solution, the industry and several state and local government organizations sat down and worked out a solution that satisfies all the stake holders. I extend my congratulations and gratitude to the leaders and staff members of the organizations that participated in the development of this consensus legislation.

Under this legislation, a consumer's primary place of residence would be designated as the taxing jurisdiction for the purposes of taxing roaming and other charges that are subject to state and local taxation. This legislation does not impose any new taxes nor does it change the authority of state and local governments to tax wireless services. It does, however, provide consumers with simplified billing, reduce the chances of double taxation, preserve the authority of state and local jurisdictions to tax wireless services, and reduce the costs of tax administration for carriers and governments. In the end, the consumer will benefit through this tax clarification legislation that is badly needed.

As many of my colleagues in the Senate know, I have been involved in many battles over the years where state and local governments have attempted to preserve their taxation authority as Congress has sought to preempt that authority on behalf of some special interest. I am very pleased to be in a position today to sponsor legislation which addresses a legitimate need to clarify and simplify state and local taxation in a manner that works for consumers, industry, and state and local governments alike.

I also want to express my gratitude to my colleague Senator BROWNBACk for his work on this measure. I hope that our colleagues will take note that Senator BROWNBACk and I stand together on this consensus, bipartisan legislation and join us to advance this bill expeditiously. •

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself and Mrs. MURRAY):

S. 1756. A bill to enhance the ability of the National Laboratories to meet Department of Energy missions and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, today I'm pleased to be joined by Senator MURRAY in introducing the "National Laboratories Partnership Improvement Act of 1999". This bill will make it easier for our national labs to collaborate and build strong technical relationships with other technical organizations, particularly universities and companies right near the labs. That will yield two major benefits. It will improve the labs' ability to do their missions, and it will promote high tech economic growth around the labs, thus, helping the labs as it helps the labs' communities.

Many of you know that making it easier to work with our national labs is a cause I've pursued for many years. And we've made solid progress. The labs are now involved in an array of technical collaborations, usually under cooperative research and development agreements or CRADAs, that would have been impossible a decade ago. In 1989, there were no CRADAs with the Department of Energy's national labs; in 1998, the number was over 800.

So, we've come a long way. But there's still work to be done. It's still not as easy to collaborate with the national labs as it should be, nor are collaborations as common as they need to be to keep our labs on the cutting edge of science and technology. This legislation takes the next steps in that direction.

There are three fundamental ideas running through this bill. The first is that scientific and technical collaboration with the national labs is good for our economy and essential to the future of the labs. The labs will be unable to succeed in their missions unless they can easily work with other technical institutions. Why? Because that's where the bulk of cutting edge technology is today. Consider the following. Real federal spending on R&D peaked in 1987, but from 1987 to 1997, national R&D grew by 20%. The federal government was responsible for none of that growth, and now accounts for only about a quarter of national R&D spending. In the same period, industrial R&D grew by over 50% and accounted for around 95% of the growth in national R&D. As Nobel laureate Dr. Burt Richter stated during his testimony on DOE's reorganization, "All of the science needed for stockpile stewardship in not in the weapons labs." That's why I was so concerned with the ability of the labs to collaborate during the reorganization debate.

I emphasize how collaboration helps the labs because it's a point that's often missed in our discussions of tech transfer, CRADAs, and other such things. When legislation making it easier to work with the labs was passed in 1989, we were in the midst of a "competitiveness crisis" and looking for ways to use technology to improve our economic performance. After all, innovation is responsible for 50% or more of our long term economic growth. With these roots, people usually focus on how collaborating with the labs helps US industry by giving it access to a treasure trove of technology and expertise. For example, over a 100 new companies were started around DOE technology in the last four years. And, the fact that industry has been collaborating with the labs and recently paying for a greater share of those partnerships is good evidence that its getting something of value. The economic benefits from these collaborations are real and a primary reason I've pushed them for many years.

But the benefits back to the labs are real too. A recent letter from Los Alamos to me stated, "Working with industry has validated our ability to predict . . . changes in materials . . . , improved our ability to manufacture . . . replacement parts with greater precision and lower cost, and enhanced our ability to assure the safety and reliability of the stockpile without testing."

As an example, Sandia's collaboration with Goodyear Tire has helped Goodyear produce computer simulations of tires—an extremely complex problem—and helped Sandia improve its modeling and production of neutron generators, a critical component of nuclear weapons. Technical collaborations with our labs that have a clear mission focus by the lab and a clear business focus by the company are good for our economy and good for the labs' missions.

The second fundamental idea flows from the first. If collaborations with the labs are beneficial, we should keep working to make them better, faster, and more flexible—much like the collaborations we see sprouting throughout the private sector. Hence, this bill includes provisions to:

Establish a small business advocate at the labs charged with increasing small business participation in lab procurement and collaborative research;

Establish a technology partnership ombudsman at the labs to ensure that the labs are known as good faith partners in their technical relationships;

Authorize DOE to use a very flexible contracting authority called "other transactions," which was successfully pioneered by the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency to manage some of its collaborative projects in innovative ways; and Significantly streamline the CRADA approval process for government owned, contractor operated laboratories like Sandia, allowing the labs to handle more of the routine CRADAs themselves, and allowing more flexibility in the negotiation of intellectual property rights—all to make CRADA's more attractive to industry.

The third fundamental idea that runs through this bill is that if collaboration is important to our economy and to the success of the labs, then the local technical institutions near the lab—the universities and companies that might work with the lab—matter a great deal. We know that the environment inside an institution, how it's managed, will help determine how innovative it is. Managing innovation is more art than science, and that's why people are always visiting places like 3M.

Well, just as the internal environment affects how innovative an organization is, its external environment, the organizations near it that might collaborate with it, also help determine how innovative it is. When the technical institutions in a region form a high quality, dynamic network, they can meld into what's been called a "technology cluster" that dramatically boosts innovation and economic growth throughout the region. We see this most famously in places like Silicon Valley, or Route 128, or Austin, TX. In most of these places, there is a large research university that serves as the anchor innovator seeding the cluster.

With that phenomenon in mind, this bill seeks to harness the power of technology clusters for the benefit of the labs' missions and the labs' communities, with the labs as the anchor innovator. The bill authorizes the labs to work with their local communities to foster commercially oriented technology clusters that will help them do their job. Projects under this "Regional Technology Infrastructure Program" would be cost shared partnerships between a lab and nearby organizations with the clear potential to help the lab achieve its mission, leverage commercial technology, and commercialize lab technology. This is not about outsourcing a lab's functions, but about promoting technical capabilities near the lab that are commercially viable and useful to the lab. Thus, the lab gets highly competent collaborators nearby and the region gets high tech economic growth.

Let me give an example. Imagine a lab that does research in optics that has optics companies nearby. The lab and the companies discover they both need better training for their machinists and skilled workers. So they agree to set up and share the cost of an advanced training program for their workers at the local community college. This is good for the workers, good for the companies, good for the lab. Other types of projects this program might fund include:

Local economic surveys and strategic planning efforts;

Technology roadmaps for local industry;

Personnel exchanges among local universities, firms, and the lab;

Lab based small business incubators or research parks; and Joint research programs between a group of local firms and the lab.

We have some real life examples of this kind of thinking in the research parks Sandia and Los Alamos are setting up to collaborate with industry and promote economic growth. And Argonne, Idaho National Engineering and Environmental Laboratory, and Sandia have programs to link their technology with venture capital, to get it into the marketplace, which can only help advance the lab's mission. This bill will encourage the labs to systematically experiment with more projects like those.

Now, some might think that the Internet will make proximity irrelevant to collaboration. But that's not the case, as simple observation of Silicon Valley shows; it's not been dissipating, it's been growing. Close collaboration will remain easier among close neighbors, because it partly depends on people who know each other and are rooted in a community—which is why one provision of this bill is a study on how to ease employee mobility between the labs and nearby technical organizations. The Internet complements and strengthens collaborations, but is not a complete substitute for having collaborators nearby. Thus, even as the Internet grows in influence, it will still make sense to harness the power of technology clusters to help our labs do their jobs and to promote high tech economic growth in their communities.

Mr. President, for many years I've pushed for and supported efforts to make it easier for our national labs to work with industry, universities, and other institutions. I've done this because I think it's good for the science and security missions of our labs, good for our economy, and good for my home state of New Mexico. I think this bill is a comprehensive package that will yield more of those benefits, and I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill, a summary, and letters of support for this bill from the Technology Industries Association of New Mexico and the City of Albuquerque be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL LABORATORIES PARTNERSHIP IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1999
SUMMARY

The National Laboratories Partnership Improvement Act of 1999 will build stronger technical relationships between the Department of Energy's national laboratories and other institutions, particularly those near the labs. These relationships will help the labs achieve their missions by leveraging the scientific and technical resources of the private sector and universities and will also promote high tech economic growth around the labs.

BACKGROUND/DISCUSSION

More and more of our nation's innovation occurs outside the federal sector. Since 1987, around 95% of the real growth in our national R&D has come from the private sector, and none from the federal government. Industry now funds almost 70% of our national R&D.

Scientific and technical collaborations between our national labs and other technical institutions improve the lab's access to the huge pool of science, technology, and talent outside their gates. Technical collaboration with the national labs is both good for the companies that do it and essential for keeping the labs on the cutting edge of research.

This bill takes the next step in making it easier for our national laboratories to work with other institutions. In addition to improving the CRADA process, the bill also focuses on improving the "regional technology infrastructure" around the labs. This refers to things like the companies, universities, labor force, and non-profit organizations near a lab that are not formally part of it but that nonetheless contribute to its technical success.

Places like Silicon Valley show that when these technical institutions form a high quality, dynamic network, they can develop into a "technology cluster" that dramatically improves innovation and economic growth throughout a region. This bill will promote the development of technology clusters around the national labs both to help the labs harness the power of technology clusters to achieve their missions and to stimulate high tech economic growth around the labs.

SECTION BY SECTION DESCRIPTION

Sec. 1-3—Titles, findings, and definitions.

Sec. 4—Regional Technology Infrastructure Program—Authorizes the Department of Energy to promote the development of technology clusters around the national labs that will help them achieve their missions. The idea is to foster commercially oriented, dynamic networks of local institutions, broadly analogous to that in Silicon Valley, that will improve innovation and economic growth around the labs—thereby helping the labs as they help the labs' communities. Projects under this program will be competitively selected, cost shared partnerships between a lab and nearby organizations. Projects with the clear potential to help a lab achieve its mission, leverage commercial innovation, and commercialize lab technology will be selected. The program begins with $1M of funding at each of the nine, large multiprogram labs. Examples of the kinds of projects that might be funded are: local economic surveys and strategic planning efforts; technology roadmaps for local industry; personnel exchanges and specialized workforce training programs among local universities, firms, and the lab; lab based small business incubators or research parks; and joint research programs between a group of local firms and the lab.

Sec. 5—Small Business Advocacy and Assistance—Establishes a Small Business Advocate charged with increasing small businesses' participation in procurements and collaborative research at each of the nine, large multiprogram labs. Authorizes the labs to give small businesses advice to make them better suppliers and general technical assistance. For example, a lab could point them to venture capitalists or technical partners that would strengthen their ability to work for the lab. Or, a small business could get technical advice from a lab on how to fix a product design problem. Complements Sec. 4, but is focused directly on small businesses.

Sec. 6—Technology Partnership Ombudsman—Establishes an ombudsman at the nine, large multiprogram labs to quickly and inexpensively resolve complaints or disputes with the labs over technology partnerships, patents, and licensing.

Sec. 7—Mobility of Technical Personnel—Requires DOE to remove any disincentives to technical personnel moving among the national labs. Creates a study to recommend how to ease the movement of technical personnel between the labs and nearby industry with the long term goal of promoting start-ups and stronger networks of technical collaboration near the labs.

Sec. 8—Other Transactions—Standard government contracts, grants, or cooperative agreements can be ill-suited to collaborative projects that have a variety of actors and equities. This section gives DOE "other transactions," an exceptionally flexible contracting authority that allows a "clean sheet of paper" negotiation with non-federal organizations. Other transactions were successfully pioneered by the Defense Advance Research Projects Agency to manage many of its innovative relationships with industry; more recently they've been adopted by the military services and Department of Transportation.

Sec. 9—Amendments to the Stevenson-Wylder Act—The current law governing CRADAs can make them slower to negotiate and less attractive to industry than they should be. This section amends that law to make the negotiation process faster, more flexible, and more attractive to industry. More specifically, this section: shortens the time federal agencies have to review, modify, and approve CRADAs with government owned, contractor operated (GOCO) labs, making it the same as that for government owned, government operated labs; allows more negotiation over the allocation of intellectual property rights developed under a CRADA; and allows federal agencies to permit routine CRADAs to be simply handled by a GOCO lab by eliminating extra steps now required for CRADA with them.

TECHNOLOGY INDUSTRIES
ASSOCIATION OF NEW MEXICO,
Albuquerque, NM, October 13, 1999.

Hon. JEFF BINGAMAN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BINGAMAN: On behalf of the board of directors of the Technology Industries Association of New Mexico (TIA), I am sending this letter to express our support of legislation you are introducing, the National Laboratories Partnership Improvement Act of 1999.

Members of our organization are well aware of the benefits that already have occurred via the "technology transfer" process begun with the Stevenson-Wylder Act of 1980 and continuing since with various improvements and changes to the original measure. Although most of the member companies in TIA do not engage in direct sales to or contracting with the Federal government or military a number of these companies have benefited due to the technology transfer process.

At least one of our TIA members was created as a spin-off of Sandia National Laboratories. Some of the larger multinational companies with divisions in New Mexico have benefited via CRADA arrangements. And some of our other smaller member companies have been greatly aided through the simple but effective mechanism of the technology assistance program run by Sandia.

After reviewing draft versions of your proposed legislation, we particularly like two features:

The provision that the national laboratories can link with private companies, rather than the other way around. We think this is important, because, as much as private companies can and have been aided via access to the vast R&D capabilities of the national labs, it is also important that the government institutions learn from private companies those skills necessary to succeed in the intensely competitive international free-market economies.

The section which promotes the development of technology clusters in the local economies where national laboratories are located. This strategic approach to economic development is beginning to emerge in central New Mexico with the help of your office and others. We think the development of technology clusters provides a focus for issues and for building vertical infrastructure that often has been lacking in the previous well-meaning, but scattergun approach to economic development.

TIA thanks you for your effort and is hopeful the legislation will be enacted.

Sincerely,

JOHN P. JEKOWSKI,
President.

CITY OF ALBUQUERQUE,
Albuquerque, NM, October 13, 1999.

JEFF BINGAMAN,
*U.S. Senator, Hart Building,
Washington, DC.*

DEAR SENATOR BINGAMAN: On behalf of the citizens of Albuquerque, I want to state my strong support of your proposed legislation, "The National Laboratories Partnership Improvement Act of 1999." For the past 50 years the synergy among our scientific, civic, and educational communities and the Department of Energy's national laboratories has helped to build and enhance our modern city. While we welcome these working partnerships, we recognize that stronger technical relationships between the labs, private businesses, and other nearby institutions are needed to leverage additional resources, both public and private, and promote high tech economic growth at the local, regional, and national levels.

Your leadership in the past and your thorough understanding of the complex issues involving tech transfer has deeply benefited Albuquerque's economic diversification, job growth, and stability. This legislation provides an important and timely framework for the future, and we look forward to working with you and your staff in whatever way necessary to implement it. To this end, we would hope that monies generated by the legislation might come directly to the community, and not go to existing or proposed lab tech transfer programs. This will enable our business, institutional and civic leadership to develop the infrastructure required by this well-crafted, thoughtful, and far-reaching proposal.

Sincerely,

JIM BACA,
Mayor.

By Mr. COVERDELL (for himself,
Mr. DEWINE, and Mr. GRASSLEY):

S. 1758. A bill to authorize urgent support for Colombia and front line states to secure peace and the rule of law, to enhance the effectiveness of anti-drug efforts that are essential to impeding the flow of deadly cocaine and heroin from Colombia to the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, the current situation in Colombia is a nightmare. Embroiled in a bloody, complex, three decade-long civil war, Colombia is spiraling toward collapse. Since the early 1990s, more than 35,000 Colombians have lost their lives at the hands of two well-financed, heavily-armed guerrilla insurgency groups, along with a competing band of ruthless paramilitary operatives, hell bent on crushing the group of leftist guerrillas. Sadly, many of those killed so far have been innocent civilians caught in the constant cross-fire.

The American drug habit is at the core of the Colombian crisis, with drug users and pushers in this country subsidizing the anti-democratic leftists. Americans want drugs. The drug traffickers want money. To ensure their prosperity and to maintain a profitable industry, the traffickers essentially hire the guerrillas and, increasingly, the paramilitary groups to protect their livelihoods. Violence and instability reign. Democracy is crumbling.

That's why, Mr. President, today, along with my colleague Senator COVERDELL, we are introducing the Anti-Drug Alliance with Colombia and the Andean Region Act of 1999. This comprehensive bill is designed to promote peace and stability in Colombia and the Latin American region. Our colleague, Senator GRASSLEY also joins us as a co-sponsor. We believe it is time that our government work in conjunction with the government and the people of Colombia to help lessen the growing crisis in the region.

The problems in Colombia run deep. There are no easy "overnight" solutions. If we are to assist in creating and sustaining long-term stability in Colombia, we must commit the resources to achieving that end. It is in our national interest to support Colombia in its effort to thwart further destabilization. Without a strong Colombia, narco-traffickers will flourish, an abundant and steady flow of illicit drugs will head for the United States, one of our largest export markets in the western hemisphere will continue to falter, and a democratic government will further erode.

Just a couple of weeks ago, I met with Colombian President Pastrana during his visit to Washington. We discussed how our two countries can work together—in cooperation—to eliminate drugs from our hemisphere and to begin restoring democracy and the rule of law in Colombia.

For more than three decades, the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, otherwise known as the FARC, and the National Liberation Army (ELN) have waged the longest-running guerrilla insurgency in Latin America. Both rebel groups have a combined strength of between 15,000 and 20,000 full-time guerrillas. These armed terrorists control or influence up to 60% of rural Colombia. At present, the Colombian military does not appear to have the strength and resources to counter these menacing forces.

Well over a decade ago, the biggest threat to stability from within our hemisphere was communism—Soviet and Cuban communists pushing their anti-democratic propaganda in Central America. We overcame that threat. Under the Reagan and Bush Administrations, Democracy prevailed. Today, in our hemisphere, the communists have been replaced by drug traffickers and the rebels they hire to protect their lucrative industry. These drug traffickers also are financing the roughly 5,000 armed paramilitary combatants, whose self-appointed mission is to counter the strength of the leftist guerrillas. If we hope to have any impact at all in eliminating the drugs in our cities, in our schools, and in our homes, we need to attack drug trafficking head on—here and abroad. This is how we can help both the people of Colombia and the people of our own country.

With the help of my colleagues, Senators PAUL COVERDELL, BOB GRAHAM and CHARLES GRASSLEY, last year we passed the Western Hemisphere Drug Elimination Act. This was a much-needed step toward attacking the drug problem at its core. This Act is a $2.7 billion, three-year investment to rebuild our drug fighting capability outside our borders. This law is about reclaiming the federal government's exclusive responsibility to prevent drugs from ever reaching our borders. This law is about building a hemisphere free from the violent and decaying influence of drug traffickers. This is a law about stopping drugs before they ever reach our kids in Ohio.

This bill was necessary because the Clinton Administration, since coming into office, has slashed funding levels for international counter-narcotics efforts. By turning its back for the better part of this decade on the fight against drugs abroad, this Administration has contributed inadvertently to the growing strength of drug trafficking organizations, as well as the narco-terrorists in the region.

If one principle has guided American foreign policy consistently since the dawn of our nation, it is this: The peace and stability of our own hemisphere must come first. That certainly has been the case throughout the last century. The Spanish-American War, the Cuban Missile Crisis, the democratization of Central America in the 1980s, and the North American Free Trade Agreement in the 1990s—all of these key events were approached with the same premise: A strong, free, and prosperous hemisphere means a strong, free, and prosperous United States.

Consistent with that principle, the United States must take an active role in seeking a peaceful, democratic Colombia. That is why Senator COVERDELL, who just came back from Colombia, and I have developed a comprehensive assistance plan for Colombia. The Alliance Act of 1999 would authorize $1.6 billion over three years to support: 1. Alternative crop and economic development; 2. Drug interdiction programs; 3. Human rights and rule of law programs; and 4. Military and police counter-narcotics operations. Our plan also contains provisions for counter-narcotics assistance and crop alternative development programs for other Latin American countries, including Brazil, Bolivia, Peru, Panama, Venezuela, and Ecuador.

Our plan not only provides the means to eradicate and interdict illicit drugs, but it also provides the training and resources to strengthen both the civilian and military justice systems to preserve the rule of law and democracy in Colombia. A hemispheric commitment to the rule of law is essential. When I visited with Americans living in Colombia during a trip to the region last year, judicial reform was a central focus of our discussion on ways our nation can better assist Colombia. With our plan, our government would take a leadership role in promoting a strong judiciary and rule of law in Colombia by providing our own technical expertise.

Our plan promotes the sanctity of human rights and provides humanitarian assistance to the hundreds of thousands of people who have been displaced due to the violence and instability.

We not only focus on the economy of Colombia, but also on the stability of the region, as a whole. We provide support for the front-line states and call on them and the international community to assist and support the Government of Colombia. This is a cooperative effort to help Colombia begin to help itself.

Our plan would monitor the assistance to the Colombian security forces, so we can be sure that this assistance is used effectively for its intended purpose and does not fall into the hands of those who engage in gross violations of human rights and drug trafficking.

We urge the Colombian government to take a tough stance against the often over-looked paramilitaries. They are a growing part of the problem in Colombia and should not be ignored.

Our plan is comprehensive. Our plan is balanced. It demonstrates our commitment to assisting the Government of Colombia and our interest in working together to bring peace and security to the hemisphere.

Mr. President, this is not an "America Knows Best" plan. We consulted with those who are on the front-lines in Colombia—those who know best what Colombia needs right now. We have talked with the Colombian government, including President Pastrana, to inquire about Colombia's specific needs. We also have consulted with U.S. government officials, who have confirmed our belief that a plan for Colombia must be balanced if we hope to address the complex and dangerous elements of the current situation.

Frankly, Mr. President, it is my hope that the Administration will proactively work with Congress—and most importantly, Colombia—to turn the tide against those seeking to undermine democracy in the region. We must act now—too much is at risk to wait any longer.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 2. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to prescribe proactive measures to confront the threat to United States interests of continued instability in Colombia;

(2) to defend constitutional order, the rule of law, and human rights, which will benefit all persons;

(3) to support the democratically elected Government of the Republic of Colombia to secure a firm and lasting end to the armed conflict and lawlessness within its territory, which now costs countless lives, threatens regional security, and undermines effective anti-drug efforts;

(4) to require the President to design and implement an urgent, comprehensive, and adequately funded plan of support for Colombia and its neighbors;

(5) to authorize adequate funds to implement an urgent and comprehensive plan of economic development and anti-drug support for Colombia and the front line states;

(6) to authorize indispensable material, technical, and logistical support to enhance the effectiveness of anti-drug efforts that are essential to impeding the flow of deadly cocaine and heroin from Colombia to the United States; and

(7) to bolster the capacity of the front line states to confront the current destabilizing effects of the Colombia conflict and to resist illicit narcotics trafficking activities that may seek to elude enhanced law enforcement efforts in Colombia.

SEC. 3. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The armed conflict and resulting lawlessness in Colombia present a clear and present danger to the security of the front line states, to law enforcement efforts intended to impede the flow of cocaine and heroin, and, therefore, to the well-being of the people of the United States.

(2) Colombia is a democratic country fighting multiple wars, against the Colombian Revolutionary Armed Forces (FARC), the National Liberation Army (ELN), paramilitary organizations, and international narcotics trafficking kingpins.

(3) With 34 percent of world terrorist acts committed there, Colombia is the world's third most dangerous country in terms of political violence.

(4) Colombia is the world's kidnapping capital of the world with 2,609 kidnappings reported in 1998 and 513 reported in the first three months of 1999.

(5) In 1998 alone, 308,000 Colombians were internally displaced in Colombia. During the last decade, 35,000 Colombians have been killed.

(6) The FARC and the ELN are the two main guerrilla groups that have waged the longest-running anti-government insurgency in Latin America.

(7) The FARC and the ELN engage in systematic extortion through the abduction of United States citizens, have murdered United States citizens, profit from the illegal drug trade, and engage in systematic and indiscriminate crimes, including kidnapping, torture, and murder, against Colombian civilian and security forces.

(8) The FARC and the ELN have targeted United States Government personnel, private United States citizens, and United States business interests.

(9) In March 1999, the FARC murdered three kidnapped United States human rights workers near the international border between Colombia and Venezuela.

(10) The Colombian rebels are estimated to have a combined strength of 10,000 to 20,000 full-time guerrillas, and they have initiated armed action in nearly 700 of the country's 1,073 municipalities and control or influence roughly 60 percent of rural Colombia.

(11) The Government of Colombia has recovered 5,000 new AK-47s from guerrilla caches in 1 month, and the FARC has plotted to use $3,000,000 in funds earned from drug trafficking to buy 30,000 AK-47s.

(12) Although the Colombian Army has 122,000 soldiers, there are no more than 40,000 soldiers available for offensive combat operations.

(13) Colombia faces the threat of an estimated 5,000 armed persons who comprise paramilitary organizations, who engage in lawless acts and undermine the peace process.

(14) Paramilitary organizations profit from the illegal drug trade and engage in systematic and indiscriminate crimes, including extortion, kidnapping, torture, and murder, against Colombian civilians.

(15) The conflict in Colombia is creating instability along its borders with neighboring countries, Ecuador, Panama, Peru, and Venezuela, several of which have deployed forces to their border with Colombia.

(16) Coca production has increased 28 percent in Colombia since 1998, and already 75 percent of the world's cocaine and 75 percent of the heroin seized in the northeast United States is of Colombian origin.

(17) The first 900-soldier Counternarcotics Battalion has been established within the Colombian Army with training and logistical support of the United States military and the Department of State international narcotics and law enforcement program, and it will be ready for deployment in areas of new illicit coca cultivation in southern Colombia by November 1999.

(18) In response to serious human rights abuse allegations by the Colombian military, the Government of Colombia has dismissed alleged abusers and undertaken military reforms, and, while the Colombian military was implicated in 50 percent of human rights violations in 1995, by 1998, the number of incidents attributed to the military plummeted to 4-6 percent.

(19) The Government of Colombia has convicted 240 members of the military and police accused of human rights violations.

(20) In 1998, two-way trade between the United States and Colombia was more than $11,000,000,000, making the United States Colombia's number one trading partner and Colombia the fifth largest market for United States exports in the region.

(21) Colombia is experiencing a historic economic recession, with unemployment rising to approximately 20 percent in 1999 after 40 years of annual economic growth averaging 5 percent per year.

(22) The Colombian judicial system is inefficient and ineffective in bringing to justice those who violate the rule of law.

(23) The FARC continue to press for an exchange of detained rebels, which, if granted, will enable the FARC to increase its manpower in the short term by as many as 4,000 combatants.

(24) The Drug Enforcement Administration has reported that the Colombian irregular forces are involved in drug trafficking and that certain irregular forces leaders have become major drug traffickers.

SEC. 4. DEFINITIONS.

(1) APPROPRIATE CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES.—Except as provided in section 218, the term "appropriate congressional committees" means—

“(d) HEARING.—With respect to an action under subsection (a), the appropriate State medical licensing authority shall be given notification of and an opportunity to be heard at a hearing to determine the penalty to be imposed under this section.

“(e) CERTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS.—At the time of the commencement of an action under subsection (a), the Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney General, the Associate Attorney General, or any Assistant Attorney General or United States Attorney who has been specifically designated by the Attorney General to commence a civil action under this chapter, shall certify to the court involved that, at least 30 calendar days prior to the filing of such action, the Attorney General, the Deputy Attorney General, the Associate Attorney General, or any Assistant Attorney General or United States Attorney involved—

“(1) has provided notice of the alleged violation of this chapter, in writing, to the Governor or Chief Executive Officer and Attorney General or Chief Legal Officer of the State or political subdivision involved, as well as to the State medical licensing board or other appropriate State agency; and

“(2) believes that such an action by the United States is in the public interest and necessary to secure substantial justice.

“§ 1533. Regulations.

“(a) FEDERAL REGULATIONS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this chapter, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall publish proposed regulations for the filing of certifications by physicians under this chapter.

“(2) REQUIREMENTS.—The regulations under paragraph (1) shall require that a certification filed under this chapter contain—

“(A) a certification by the physician performing the abortion, under threat of criminal prosecution under section 1746 of title 28, that, in his or her best medical judgment, the abortion performed was medically necessary pursuant to this chapter;

“(B) a description by the physician of the medical indications supporting his or her judgment;

“(C) a certification by an independent physician pursuant to section 1531(a)(2), under threat of criminal prosecution under section

1746 of title 28, that, in his or her best medical judgment, the abortion performed was medically necessary pursuant to this chapter; and

“(D) a certification by the physician performing an abortion under a medical emergency pursuant to section 1531(c), under threat of criminal prosecution under section 1746 of title 28, that, in his or her best medical judgment, a medical emergency existed, and the specific medical condition upon which the physician based his or her decision.

“(3) CONFIDENTIALITY.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall promulgate regulations to ensure that the identity of a mother described in section 1531(a)(1) is kept confidential, with respect to a certification filed by a physician under this chapter.

“(b) STATE REGULATIONS.—A State, and the medical licensing authority of the State, shall develop regulations and procedures for the revocation or suspension of the medical license of a physician upon a finding under section 1532 that the physician has violated a provision of this chapter. A State that fails to implement such procedures shall be subject to loss of funding under title XIX of the Social Security Act.

“§ 1534. State Law.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of this chapter shall not apply with respect to postviability abortions in a State if there is a State law in effect in that State that regulates, restricts, or prohibits such abortions to the extent permitted by the Constitution of the United States.

“(b) DEFINITION.—In subsection (a), the term ‘State law’ means all laws, decisions, rules, or regulations of any State, or any other State action, having the effect of law.

“§ 1535. Definitions.

“(B) LIMITATION.—The term ‘grievous injury’ does not include any condition that is not medically diagnosable or any condition for which termination of the pregnancy is not medically indicated.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of chapters for part I of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 73 the following new item:

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

NATIONAL WOMEN'S BUSINESS WEEK

• Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of the tremendous economic contributions made by women business owners in Illinois and to recognize the work of the Women's Business Development Center, a woman's business training and technical assistance center that has assisted over 30,000 women in realizing their dreams of business ownership.

The newest statistics from the National Foundation for Women's Business Ownership confirm that women entrepreneurs now make up more than 38 percent of all business and continue to be the most dynamic, fastest growing sector of our Nation's economy. I am proud to tell you that there are now 384,700 women-owned businesses in Illinois, employing 1.5 million workers and generating $195 billion in annual sales, a growth of 139 percent in 7 years.

Women business owners in Illinois area vibrant sector of our State economy and strong advocates for women's business ownership nationwide. Recently one of Illinois's own, Sheila G. Talton, president and CEO of Unisource Network Services, Inc., headquartered in Chicago, was appointed to serve on the National Women's Business Council. Unisource Network Services provides network interrogation consulting, including voice, data and multimedia consulting. Ms. Talton, who has 20 years of experience in the information systems and telecommunications field, formed the company in 1986 and sales are projected at $17 million this fiscal year. The company services an elite class of Fortune 500 companies, major educational and health care institutions and public agencies.

Unisource Network Services exemplifies the type of high-growth business that is attractive to investors in Illinois and around the country. In fact, Ms. Talton financed the growth of her technology company with venture capital investments. Unfortunately her story is usual; I'm told that most women entrepreneurs are having difficulties raising the capital they need to take their technology-based companies to the next level. Though women are starting high-growth business at unprecedented rates, they currently access less than 5 percent of all venture capital investments.

Mr. President, the strength of the economy of Illinois and the Nation depends upon the success of enterprises like Unisource. The opportunities to launch and grow businesses and the demand for training and capital have never been greater. In order for these new businesses to flourish, we must ensure that their access to capital and markets is unimpeded and that they have information and resources they need to compete at the speed of the Internet.●

IN RECOGNITION OF NATIONAL WOMEN'S BUSINESS WEEK

● Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of "National Women's Business Week" and of the vital role women business-owners play in our economy.

I would also like to recognize the appointment of Vivian L. Shimoyama to the National Women's Business Council. Ms. Shimoyama is the Founder and President of Breakthru Unlimited, a California company that designs and manufactures projects with a message: hand-made glass artwork of jewelry, executive gifts, limited editions, and custom awards. A brilliant sample of her work is her "Breaking the Ceiling" line of jewelry that has adorned the lapels of Hillary Clinton and Elizabeth Dole. Currently, she serves as the Chair of the National Association of Women Business Owners—Los Angeles. In 1999, she was honored as the Small Business Administration's "Women Business Advocate of the Year".

Ms. Shimoyama runs one of the 1.2 million women-owned businesses headquartered in California. According to a study by the National Foundation for Women Business Owners (NFWBO), these businesses employ 3.8 million workers and generate $548 billion in annual sales, a growth of 164 percent in seven years.

Without a doubt, women entrepreneurs have played a crucial part in the growth of our economy. NFWBO reports that between 1987 and 1999, the number of women-owned firms increased by 103 percent nationwide, employment increased by 320 percent, and sales increased by 436 percent. As of 1999, there are 9.1 million women-owned businesses in the U.S., which employ 27.5 million people and generate over $3.6 trillion in sales. To put the sales of these businesses into context, they are twice the size of the Federal budget, and greater than the Gross National Product of every country in the world but the United States and Japan.

An increasing number of these businesses have focused on emerging industries such as high technology. These businesses demand a greater access to capital and information resources than ever before.

Mr. President, I will do all I can to ensure that the women in my state and all over the country have access to the opportunities and resources they need to start new business ventures. However it is also imperative that we invest in the business development resources that will help women sustain and grow these new businesses. This small investment yields big returns in the form of job creation, revenues, and overall growth of the nation's economy.●

MEDICARE BENEFICIARY ACCESS TO QUALITY NURSING HOME
CARE ACT OF 1999

● Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, on the 13th of October, I was proud to cosponsor S. 1500, the Medicare Beneficiary Access to Quality Nursing Home Care Act of 1999. When Congress worked with the President to craft and pass the Balanced Budget Act of 1997, it included a number of desperately needed cost-saving measures to ensure that Medicare did not go bankrupt. At the time, Medicare was projected to be bankrupt by 2001 with annual costs rising at three times the rate of inflation.

However, the Health Care Financing Administration, which oversees the administration of Medicare, has far exceeded the scope of the Balanced Budget Act of 1997, and gone beyond the intent of Congress in scaling back health care provider reimbursements. Driven by a philosophy that the Federal Government knows best how to handle your health care decisions, this administration has uniformly adopted policies that limit Medicare beneficiary choice, obstruct critically needed market-based reforms, and relentlessly pursued a strategy of reducing payments to providers as the prime method to reduce outlays.

Sometimes such a "Washington-knows-best" strategy just doesn't work. The fact of the matter is, health care providers will bear costs that cannot be overlooked or undervalued simply because HCFA wishes to declare it so. This has been especially prevalent in the area of Skilled Nursing Facility care. The recently implemented Prospective Payment System (PPS) fails to account for the full range of services required by most Medicare beneficiaries provided care in these facilities.

Specifically, the PPS implemented by HCFA has a payment schedule called Resource Utilization Groups (RUGs) that are intended to account for the needs of individual beneficiaries. However, these RUGs have failed to account for the full range of needs of these beneficiaries, especially for the medically complex patient. While private market insurance is significantly better at recognizing the needs of the medically complex patient, the failure of this administration to allow for any type of market-based reform to move forward has forced us to rely upon the implementation of the PPS by HCFA, which, as I discussed before, seems to have a predisposition towards underpaying for necessary services.

The result, Mr. President, is that beneficiaries are increasingly denied access to lower-cost Skilled Nursing Facilities and are forced to continue care in higher-cost hospitals where they also may not be able to get the most appropriate level of rehabilitative care. S. 1500, introduced by Senator HATCH, attempts to address the overreaching of HCFA directly and swiftly. First, it would provide for payment "add-ons" for the provision of additional treatment in the care of the medically complex patient. Second, it restores one percentage point of the reductions to the annual inflation adjuster mandated by BBA-97. Although the inflation adjustment reduction was directly written in the BBA-97 language, it's revision provides Congress the most direct and simplest way to counteract the excesses of HCFA.

Mr. President, I am heartened that HCFA has recognized the flaws in the current PPS system and is undertaking a review of this system. However, that review will not be completed until next year. Our Skilled Nursing Facilities need these restorations now in order to continue to provide our Medicare beneficiaries continued and uninterrupted care. That is why I fully support this legislation, am cosponsoring it, and call on my colleagues to do the same as soon as possible.●

THIRD ANNUAL CAUCUS FOR POTOMAC HERITAGE NATIONAL SCENIC TRAIL

● Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I rise to recognize the Third Annual Caucus for the Potomac Heritage National Scenic Trail, to be held on October 22, 1999.

Designated by Congress in 1983, the Potomac Heritage Trail is unlike any other trail in the National Trails System. The corridor which follows "Our Nation's River" includes both the boathouse home and Mt. Vernon estate of our first President, George Washington, significant greenways and parks, and nearby centers of commerce which are vital to the economic vitality of Virginia and the capital region.

I congratulate the National Park Service, the Potomac Heritage Partnership, the Northern Virginia Planning District Commission and other advocates of this National Scenic Trail in persevering in their efforts to increase opportunities for enhancing commerce, conservation and cultural initiatives along the Potomac River. I wish them continued success in the years to come.●

IN RECOGNITION OF DOUGLAS C.
STRAIN

● Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I am pleased today to recognize the 55th anniversary of Electro Scientific Industries, Incorporated, ESI, and to honor the accomplishments of Mr. Douglas C. Strain, ESI's founder and first president and chairman of ESI's board.

Established in Portland in 1944, ESI was among the first high-technology companies in Oregon. Since that time, ESI has grown into a global leader in the manufacturer of precision laser trimmers and memory repair equipment, as well as a worldwide supplier of electronic production equipment. From humble beginnings, ESI has become a $200 million company, employing more than 900 individuals in Oregon and around the world, and helping to establish Oregon as one of this country's high-tech capitals.

Accomplishments such as these are often born of tough challenges. Having overcome a devastating fire in the 1950's, ESI had to rebuild itself from the ground up, and has had to re-invent itself on a number of occasions since that time. The company has proven itself adept at adapting to the fast-pace that characterizes the high-technology sector. From test and calibration equipment, electron microscopy, and analog computing to laser trimming, memory repair and vision, handling, packaging, and drilling technologies, ESI products have always been at the leading edge of technology developments.

I especially pay tribute to a remarkable Oregonian, Electro Scientific's founder, Mr. Douglas C. Strain. On October 24, Doug will celebrate both his 80th birthday and his retirement from ESI's board of directors. Mr. Strain's vision and perseverance have brought the company successfully to the end of this century, and I believe that ESI will continue on with equal success well into the next century. I congratulate Doug on his accomplishments and wish him the very best as he undertakes new challenges in his life.●

IN PRAISE OF METS OUTFIELDER BENNY AGBAYANI

● Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, the boys of summer rarely disappoint us, and last night's final game of the National League playoffs once again confirmed that baseball is truly America's pastime. The series captivated television audiences as the Mets and Braves went head to head in extra innings in their last two games: Sunday's game was the longest in playoff history—lasting more than five hours, and last night's game was not decided until the bottom of the 11th—just past midnight.

I want to single out Hawaii's own, Benny Agbayani, the star New York outfielder, who proudly wears number 50 for the 50th state. Benny had an illustrious playoff season and proved he is an invaluable addition to the Mets starting lineup. After playing in Triple A since 1993, the Hawaii outfielder was called up by the Mets in early May to replace the injured Bobby Bonilla. He secured his slot by batting .400 and hitting 10 home runs by mid-June. The former St. Louis School and Hawaii Pacific University all-state athlete has made Hawaii proud and has captured the nation's attention with his strength at bat, agility on the field, and grace in waiting for his place in baseball history.

My aloha to Benny, his recent bride Niela, and their families.●

PRAYER

Rabbi Robert J. Orkand, Temple Israel, Westport, Connecticut, offered the following prayer:

Let us pause in reverence before the gift of self, a gift freely given by God, the Creator. Let us pause in reverence before the mystery of the presence, the near and far reality of God. Let us pause in reverence before the gift of human purpose by which we would approach the mystery of God with deeds. Let us pause in reverence before the gift of life and the meaning of our being in this nexus of time's history. Let there be a divine reason for our presence so that the lives we touch may know a goodness and the days we live may be brighter for our compassion. And if our names be forgotten by those we serve, then at least may our works evoke an eternal amen.

And let faith be to us life and joy, let it be a voice of renewing challenge to the best we have and may be; let faith be for us a dissatisfaction with things that are; let faith bid us serve more eagerly the true and the right. Let faith be the sorrow that opens for us the way of sympathy, understanding and service to suffering humanity. Let faith be to us the wonder and lure of that which is only partly known and understood. Let it be an awe in the glories of nature's majesty and beauty and a heart that rejoices in deeds of kindness and of courage. Let our faith be for us hope and purpose and the discovery of opportunities to express our best through our daily tasks, both large and small. And let us say, Amen.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Lundregan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 2841. An act to amend the Revised Organic Act of the Virgin Islands to provide for greater fiscal autonomy consistent with other United States jurisdictions, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 974. An act to establish a program to afford high school graduates from the District of Columbia the benefits of in-State tuition at State colleges and universities outside the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate has passed a bill of the following title in which concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1652. An act to designate the Old Executive Office Building located at 17th Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, NW, in Washington, District of Columbia, as the Dwight D. Eisenhower Executive Office Building.

WELCOME TO RABBI ROBERT ORKAND

(Mr. SHAYS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, it is my great pleasure to welcome Rabbi Robert Orkand and to thank him for his special opening prayer this morning.

It is also my pleasure to be given this opportunity to share this great man and community leader with my colleagues. For a quarter of a century Rabbi Orkand has been a source of wisdom, inspiration, and pride to his family, wife Joyce and son Seth, friends, congregation, and the larger community in which he lives. From Miami, Florida; to Rockford, Illinois; to Westport, Connecticut, his commitment to education, activism, and religious pluralism have benefited the lives of so many.

Rabbi Orkand's energy and compassion are testament to his dedication and to all that he believes and cherishes. On a national level, he is currently chair of the National Commission on Jewish Education of the Reform Movement, co-chair of the Rabbinic Cabinet of the Association of Reform Zionists of America, and a member of the Executive Board of the Rabbinic Cabinet of the United Jewish Appeal. And locally he is a member of the Human Services Commission of the Town of Westport and has served as past president of the United Way, a member of the Board of Directors of the United Jewish Appeal Federation, and president of the Westport-Weston Clergy Association. Rabbi Orkand has coauthored three prayer books for children, "Gates of Wonder", "Gates of Awe", and "A Child's Haggadah."

This House salutes Rabbi Orkand for his dedication to duty and his love of God and humanity. He has left a wonderful mark on his congregation and all the communities he has touched over the years. Rabbi Orkand is a man of God and a true healer.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain fifteen 1-minute notices on each side.

MOTHER NATURE IS WARNING US—WE SHOULD LISTEN

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1

□ This symbol represents the time of day during the House proceedings, e.g., □ 1407 is 2:07 p.m.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, "Shake Rattle and Roll" may be the words of a famous rock and roll tune, but it is also Mother Nature pointing her finger and writing on the wall. Because less than just 1 week ago last Saturday, Mother Nature sent a 7.0 magnitude earthquake rolling through the western United States. Its epicenter was just about 100 miles east of Los Angeles, but this powerful quake made its way quickly to Las Vegas, derailing a train, and passing through and over Yucca Mountain, the proposed site to bury the Nation's most deadly toxic substance, nuclear waste.

Mr. Speaker, this quake shook Las Vegas with a 5.0- plus magnitude by the time it reached Las Vegas, and it was felt 100 miles away from the earthquake's epicenter. Mother Nature is pointing her finger at this country urging us to stop the nuclear waste lobbyists from sticking the deadliest wastes known to man into one of man's most seismically active areas of the country.

Mr. Speaker, this latest earthquake is yet another sign that Yucca Mountain is not the right place to store nuclear waste. Let us tell Mother Nature that we have heard her loud and clear. Let us stop the Yucca Mountain project. Mother knows best.

CONGRATULATIONS TO AMERICA'S TEAM, THE ATLANTA BRAVES

(Mr. LEWIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise this morning to congratulate the Atlanta Braves, America's team. I wish Bobby Cox and all the members of the Braves family the very best in their great nonviolent struggle against the New York Yankees.

I say this morning: Braves, go Braves. Go and win. You must win. When you win, America wins. Go Braves. Go Braves.

PROMOTE PUBLIC AWARENESS OF ALZHEIMER'S

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, have you ever put down your car keys and just 1 hour later forgotten where you left them? Have you ever forgotten the answer to the question for what you had for lunch yesterday? Well, fortunately, most everyone has experienced this very common type of forgetfulness. But imagine a person finding their car keys and forgetting what they are used for. Persons suffering with Alzheimer's Disease suffer similar memory losses. And as the disease progresses, forgetfulness can become more destructive. Alzheimer's affects approximately 4 million Americans now, and experts predict that about 8 to 10 million will suffer from Alzheimer's by the year 2020.

By stating that he was beginning the journey that would lead him into the sunset of his life, former President and Republican revolutionary Ronald Reagan announced to the world just 5 years ago that he too has been diagnosed with Alzheimer's. Ronald Reagan felt it necessary to share this disclosure with those he loved most, the American people. As valiantly as Ronald Reagan, my colleagues, I am sure, will promote greater public awareness about the disease of Alzheimer's.

WAR ON DRUGS IS A JOKE

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, the governor of New Mexico says, and I quote, "America has lost the war on drugs. It is time to legalize drugs." Think about it. Cocaine and heroin, legal. Eleven- and 12-year-olds strung out.

This is a joke. While our drug czar worries about Olympic athletes, our borders are wide open, literally tons of heroin and cocaine flooding our streets, and now politicians are calling for legalization of narcotics.

Beam me up. This is not a war on drugs; this is absolute surrender. I yield back all the catchy, get-tough, rah-rah, gung-ho slogans of America's great charade on drugs.

DEMOCRATS TRY TO FRACTURE REPUBLICANS

(Mr. STEARNS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday and for the past week the folks on this side of the aisle, the Democrats, have said the Republicans are going to take money from the Social Security Trust Fund to balance the budget.

Now, CBO, of course, issued a letter to the Speaker of the House on October 1, 1999 saying this was not true. Yet we have the Democrats continuing to say the opposite.

Now we have in the Associated Press an interesting quotation. The Democrats admit a raid on Social Security. "Privately, some Democrats say a final budget deal that uses some of the pension program's surpluses would be a political victory for them, because it would fracture the GOP by infuriating conservatives." That was October 19, 1999.

The bottom line is that Democrats are using this whole thing of Social Security as a political gimmick. They are politicizing this whole process because they are trying to fracture Republicans. The bottom line is Republicans are not going to raid the Social Security Trust Fund.

APPROPRIATION BILLS NEED TO BE ON THE FLOOR

(Mr. GREEN of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is amazing to follow my colleague from Florida, because once again we are seeing where the Republican leadership's values are. According to the CBO, the Congressional Budget Office, they are already borrowing $13 billion more in Social Security dollars than they have available. Thirteen billion more in Social Security dollars.

But my concern this morning is that we have not even talked about the education funding. We have not even got to Labor-HHS yet. It is estimated that education could be reduced as much as $16 billion, and yet the Republicans are already borrowing more than $13 billion from Social Security before we have even gotten to education.

Education is the number one issue for most people in this country. They want more money put into it, not less. Yet what we are seeing is that we have not even gotten to one of the appropriation bills on the floor and they are still $13 billion in the hole on Social Security. That is what bothers me, and I think it bothers a lot of people in this country. I think they should get their appropriations bills all lined up so we can look at them, instead of holding education funding till the last so they can use education as an ATM machine.

PRESIDENT IS NOW ON BOARD WITH REPUBLICANS

(Mr. TIAHRT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, we have not spent one dime of the Social Security surplus. And in Kansas, there is a saying, "Don't change horses in the middle of the stream." There is a reason for that. If one did try to change horses, he could run the unnecessary risk of falling into the river and possibly drowning.

That is exactly what the President has done. In the middle of the stream of spending bills that we have, the President has gotten off the horse he had during his State of the Union speech, where he said he would spend 40 percent of the Social Security surplus, on to the horse the Republicans have been riding when we said we will not spend one dime of the Social Security Trust Fund.

□ 1015

Welcome, Mr. President. We will extend our hand so that you will not fall. Together we can take a big red pen like the one I am holding in my hand and cut wasteful Government programs, protecting the Social Security surplus.

Congratulations, Mr. President. Come on over.

REPUBLICANS USE SOCIAL SECURITY AS A PIGGY BANK

(Mr. DOGGETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, it is so very refreshing to see the Republicans here on the floor professing an interest in protecting the Social Security surplus.

It was only a short time ago that their majority leader was condemning Social Security as a bad deal and saying he never would have created it in the first place.

What we do know this year is, after jeopardizing Social Security with a near trillion-dollar irresponsible tax break for those at the top of the economic ladder, that the Republicans' own Congressional Budget Office has verified that they have gone $13 billion already, if we stop right now and went home, $13 billion into the Social Security surplus. That is without ever having come to this House floor, 3 weeks after the Federal fiscal deadline, and presented the bill to fund education and health and a wide variety of other measures.

The Republicans, if they stay on their current course, are going to dip into Social Security another $24 billion dollars. That is without any help from anyone but themselves. Apparently, their new interest in Social Security is to use it as a piggy bank.

PRESIDENT'S TAX VETO ALLOWS "DEATH TAX" TO CONTINUE TO CLOSE SMALL BUSINESSES

(Mr. HEFLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have here a headline from the Colorado Springs Gazette newspaper. It says, "Brookhart's Lumber Business Selling to Avoid 'Death Tax,' Company Says."

I have known this company for over 30 years. I watched their struggle over this issue. This is a company that is 52 years old, locally owned, three generations. They wanted to continue to operate this profitable small business. They wanted their boys to inherit it when they are gone. But they cannot because of the death tax.

Locally-owned company sells out to a Dallas conglomerate. We lose a locally-owned company.

Be proud, Mr. President, your veto saved the Nation from this evil tax cut that would have gotten rid of the death tax and prevented incidences like the Brookharts which are occurring all over the Nation with small farms and businesses everywhere.

In his passion for more tax dollars and for the bigger Government he so loves, he should remember that there are real-life consequences to his irresponsible actions.

Be proud, Mr. President. But I am ashamed of you and your thirst for the hard-earned tax dollars of working Americans.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BE-REUTER). The Chair will remind Members to address the Chair, the Speaker, and not other persons.

PEACE WEEK

(Mrs. CAPPS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. CAPPS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to celebrate Peace Week.

The award-winning Peace Week program has brought together three communities I am so proud to represent: Guadalupe, Orcutt, and Santa Maria. During the week, residents of these communities united to show their commitment to creating and building a more peaceful society.

The success of this innovative week is due in no small part to the great contributions made by Sister Janet Corcoran at the Marion Medical Center in Santa Maria.

Sister Janet started this program 3 years ago when she noticed such an increase in the number of victims of violence admitted to Marion's Emergency Room. Sister Janet saw the need for leaders throughout the community to get involved. With their leadership, Peace Week has developed into an effective series of workshops and activities to promote non-violence strategies.

It is fitting that Peace Week corresponds with our own Voices Against Violence Teen Conference here in the Capitol, which includes a young student from Santa Maria. Both are excellent examples of programs aimed at preventing violence.

Peace Week illustrates well how communities can come together and make real change. I am so proud that this is taking place in my district.

"HOUSE CLOBBERS CLINTON TAX BOOST"

(Mr. WELLER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, let me share with my colleagues a headline from the front page of one of the leading newspapers in the country. Today the front page headline in The Washington Times says, "House Clobbers Clinton Tax Boost."

That is right. Did my colleagues know that Bill Clinton and AL GORE wanted to raise taxes again? In fact, yesterday this House voted on the $238-billion Clinton-Gore tax increase. And even House Democrats who joined with Bill Clinton and AL GORE in 1993 giving our Nation the biggest tax hike in the history of our country voted against another round of tax increases.

The question I am asked also besides the Bill Clinton tax increases is, is it true that Bill Clinton wants to raid Social Security again? And we recall earlier in the President's budget that he submitted to Congress he called for setting aside 62 percent of Social Security for Social Security and taking the other 38 percent, almost $340 billion of Social Security, and spending it on other things. I would point out this House has rejected that, as well.

My colleagues, we can balance the budget without increasing taxes. We can balance the budget without raiding Social Security.

REPUBLICAN LEADERSHIP CLAIMS THEY ARE SAVING SOCIAL SECURITY

(Ms. DELAURO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, the Republican leadership is stealing eggs from the hen house while pretending to guard the door. They claim that they are saving Social Security. But their own office, their own office, the Congressional Budget Office, points out that they have already spent $13 billion worth of Social Security money.

Their leadership budget is so full of gimmicks and budget tricks that it would make an accountant cry. In an attempt to fudge the numbers, the leadership created a 13th month so that they can crunch more numbers into the fiscal year.

But the facts are very stubborn things. The Republican leadership is not saving Social Security. They have no plans to do so. The Republican majority leader himself has called Social Security a "rotten trick" and "bad retirement." He has called for Social Security to be phased out.

Earlier this year the Republican leadership tried to spend nearly $1 trillion of the surplus on tax breaks for the wealthiest people of this country instead of strengthening Social Security.

SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE DE-SERVES CREDIT FOR FISCAL DISCIPLINE

(Mr. HILL of Montana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HILL of Montana. Mr. Speaker, a year ago the President and the Congress said that we should set aside the future Social Security surpluses 100 percent for Social Security. Then the President startled us all because he came here for the State of the Union and he said let us spend 38 percent of Social Security on 71 new spending programs. Then he submitted a budget that said, no, let us spend 42 percent of Social Security on those new spending programs.

The House rejected that budget and yesterday the House sent a strong message to the President that it was not going to support his tax increase, and last night it appears that the President finally got the message and he has agreed to a budget that will save Social Security.

It appears that we have broken the President's addiction to new taxes and higher spending. I applaud the President for joining Republicans saying we are going to balance the budget, save Social Security, and do without taxes.

But I cannot applaud the minority leader, who still remains addicted to spending and taxes, who press accounts say have instructed Democrats to obstruct the process, vote no on everything, make sure we tie up everything as much as we can.

The person who deserves credit, Mr. Speaker, is Speaker HASTERT who has led us with this fiscal discipline.

SAVE US FROM REPUBLICAN GRAB BAG OF GIMMICKS

(Mr. WYNN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my alarm over the Republicans' handling of the budget.

First they gave us the Robin-Hood-in-reverse strategy, take from the poor and give to the rich. That was a big tax cut for the rich where most of the money went to the wealthiest Americans and regular, average citizens got very little.

When that did not work they now come up with a grab bag of gimmicks. That is $46 billion in gimmicks to disguise the fact that they are in fact raiding the Social Security Trust Fund. They are trying to tell us now that the census is emergency funding. They are trying to tell us that routine military funding is emergency spending, a grab bag of gimmicks.

But third, they now have the fiction of saving Social Security, when the Congressional Budget Office has clearly stated they are already raiding the Social Security Trust Fund to the tune of $13 billion and at the rate they are going they will reach $24 billion.

So save us from their strategy, save us from their gimmicks, and save us from their fiction.

What we need is real cooperation on addressing America's real needs and a sound budget that does not benefit the wealthy.

TALK IS CHEAP—TIME FOR ACTION HAS ARRIVED

(Mr. OSE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to essentially commend the leadership of this House and the administration for getting together and agreeing that Social Security needs to be saved. But the time for talk is done. The time for action has arrived.

The problem that we face is that we have yet to receive a single piece of evidence as to what the administration's plan for saving Social Security is.

We have gone from January 6, the day I arrived here, now 293 days without any evidence whatsoever from the administration as to what their plan is for saving Social Security.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate but true. Facts are facts. There is no plan yet put forward by the administration to save Social Security. Talk is cheap. The time for action is now. Every day older, the further behind we get.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the President to put his plan forward.

VOICES AGAINST VIOLENCE TEEN CONFERENCE

(Mr. KIND asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the outstanding efforts of three of my constituents who are participating in the Voices Against Violence Teen Conference in the Capitol this week.

Susan Yang is a senior from La Crosse Central High School. Susan has been involved in efforts to curb youth violence and drug use throughout her teens and is a real role model within the Hmong community in western Wisconsin.

Lucas Meyers is a senior at Hudson Senior High School in Wisconsin. Lucas is the student body President and editor-in-chief of his school paper and is a natural leader involved in many aspects of his community and school.

Finally, Sergeant Roger Barnes of La Crosse Police Department, who is a coordinator for the D.A.R.E. and the G.R.E.A.T. programs back home. Sergeant Barnes has dedicated his law enforcement career to the betterment of youth in our community and works tirelessly to see that all our children have better options in their lives.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to pay attention to what they and the other 350 students who have assembled here in the Capitol this week have to say at this conference so that we may work together in a bipartisan fashion to implement policy to prevent youth violence in all of our communities.

EDUCATION IN AMERICA

(Mr. BALLENGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, let us talk education. We can all agree on the need to spend money on our public schools. And I hope we can also agree that America's parents have not been getting their money's worth.

Student achievements continues to lag even as spending rises. A lack of discipline plagues thousands of classrooms. School accountability to parents is sorely missing. Many teachers are not getting the training they need to teach their students what they need to know.

So why do so many liberal Democrats continue to oppose real education reform? How can they say they want strong public schools while they vote for the very regulations that weaken public schools?

These advocates of the status quo are defending the indefensible. They are trapping America's most disadvantaged children in a system that has failed them. And they are putting the future of millions of American children in jeopardy. It is long past time to fix the broken system. It is past time to try new ways of doing things, but it is not too late.

PRESIDENT'S BUDGET ON THE TABLE AND BALANCED

(Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to some of our earlier speakers this morning and I wonder what their question is and why they do not have an answer.

Mr. Speaker, the President's budget has been on the table, and it is a balanced budget. It does protect Social Security and Medicare. It is interesting that they are on a fishing expedition on the other side of the aisle, looking for the President's budget and wondering what is the direction that this Congress should take.

Well, the one direction we should not take is the gimmickry that we see on the other side. Republicans will have the kinds of gimmicks that will result in a $13-billion, if you will, deficit resulting on-budget deficit to about $23 billion or $24 billion.

I think there is plain common sense. Adopt the President's budget. Be serious about saving Social Security and Medicare. Stop misrepresenting to the American people. And begin to fund the great needs that we have in this country.

But, most of all, tell our seniors and those who are looking for Social Security that we are committed in a bipartisan way to save Social Security and to save Medicare.

STOP THE RAID ON SOCIAL SECURITY

(Mr. KNOLLENBERG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, as everybody knows, last week the Congressional Budget Office reported that the Federal Government, for the first time in nearly 40 years, avoided spending any of the Social Security Trust Fund forward other Government programs.

I hear this business about $13 billion from the other side. They know that that was based on an inquiry with false presumptions, none of which ever came about.

What I would like to say is, for the first time, the Social Security surplus bottom line is in the black. This in itself is the single-most important budgetary accomplishment that Congress, and I mean all of Congress, has achieved in years.

But we should not lose sight how we got here. In 1995, when the Republican Congress took charge, we organized spending priorities. We got a lot of bipartisan support. All of this was done in an effort to protect the American taxpayers' money and strengthen vital programs like Social Security.

Yet earlier this year, the President proposed dipping into the surplus by $57 billion. Now he is threatening to veto certain bills because they do not spend enough. That is hardly an effort to protect Social Security. Stop the raid on Social Security.

VOICES AGAINST VIOLENCE

(Mrs. JONES of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, over the past 2 days, students and their chaperons from all over the country have come here to be voices against violence. This poster board has postcards from chaperons across the country. I read one:

Please talk about the importance of developing a new model of education in this country. We now need a longer school day built around a holistic health model with education as a component. Children need to know themselves, feel good about themselves and have a hope about the future. We must have a system that cultivates and nurtures youth to become productive, well-adjusted citizens.

These 2 days have been wonderful days wherein our folk can come to the Hill and they are saying to us, let us get on with funding education appropriately. They are saying, let us deal with violence, let us deal with gun control, and let us see that the children of our Nation are nurtured, well-developed, healthy and have an opportunity to become useful citizens.

PROTECT SOCIAL SECURITY: STOP THE FOREIGN AID RAID

(Mr. CHABOT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CHABOT. Mr. Speaker, we were told all along that the President would veto the foreign operations bill because he wanted to spend more money on foreign aid. And sure enough, he vetoed the bill.

Then we were told that he really did not want to spend more money on foreign aid like we had been told all along, what he really wanted was more money in the bill so he could reduce foreign aid and spend the money elsewhere. Uh-huh.

Look. Republicans in Congress have made a commitment to protect Social Security. We have stopped the 30-year raid on the Social Security trust fund. And we are not about to begin to renew that raid in order to satisfy the President's insatiable appetite for foreign aid spending.

Mr. Speaker, thanks to the Republican Congress, those who receive Social Security benefits today and those who hope to benefit from the Social Security fund tomorrow finally have reason to believe that the trust fund is protected. Let us not return to the bad old days. Let us stop the foreign aid raid.

ON THE GOP BUDGET

(Mr. CROWLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is time for a history quiz. Who created Social Security in April 1935?

The answer, a Democratic President and a Democratic-led Congress despite fierce opposition from the Republican Party. In fact, only one Republican voted in favor of maintaining Social Security. Now we are expected to believe that the Republicans are going to save Social Security, something they never wanted in the first place?

Let us just listen to Republican Majority Leader DICK ARMEY. During his first campaign for the House in 1984, ARMEY said that Social Security was a "bad retirement" and a "rotten trick" on the American people. He continued, and I quote, "I think we're going to have to bite the bullet on Social Security and phase it out over a period of time." That was from the Fort Worth Star-Telegram in 1984.

In January 1985, ARMEY said, and I quote, "One thing that is very clear to us from the history of the Social Security system in this country is that the Federal Government is incapable of administering a compulsory retirement program in a manner that gives the public a secure and predictable future."

The GOP's own CBO estimates say that the Republican budget already dips into Social Security by more than $18 billion.

REGARDING FOREIGN OPERATIONS APPROPRIATIONS BILL

(Mr. PITTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, in Washington it is important not just to listen to the words people say. It is important to watch what they do.

This week, President Clinton vetoed the foreign ops appropriations bill because he said it did not spend enough money. The President wants Congress to give him more money even though any extra spending would have had to come from the Social Security surplus.

It is revealing that the President would veto a foreign aid bill that spends $12 billion, billions for ensuring peace in the Middle East, millions for fighting disease throughout the world, millions more for fighting the war on drugs, among other things. How much more money does the President need, Mr. Speaker?

Instead of working with Congress to fight the spread of narcotics and to preserve democracy and freedom in the world, the President applied the ink of the veto pen. The President said "no" to a reasonable bill and he says he needs more money, higher spending. What else is new?

OPPOSE THE REPUBLICAN STRAIGHT F'S BILL

(Mr. ETHERIDGE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, this morning I rise as the former superintendent of my State's schools to express my concerns about H.R. 2300, a bill which the House will consider later this week.

The Republican leadership has labeled this bill the "Straight A's" bill.

But as someone who knows a little something about education in this country, I can tell my colleagues that this bill should be called the "Straight F's" bill. The Straight F's bill fails our children, it fails our schools and it fails our taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support flexibility in Federal education funds. As a longtime school reformer, I strongly support innovation that will improve education for all of our children. However, this bill fails to meet these standards in several ways.

The Straight F's bill fails our schools by undermining the national commitment to education, the Straight F's bill fails our children by eliminating the targeting of funds to high poverty areas, and the Straight F's bill fails our taxpayers by doing away with accountability standards and allowing tax money to be spent on ways that will not best suit our students.

Mr. Speaker, I call on this Congress to reject H.R. 2300.

We should reverse course and support school construction, teacher training, technology upgrades, after school care, year-round schools, School Resource Officers, character education and class size reduction initiatives that will improve education for our children.

USE THE BIG RED PEN

(Mr. HAYWORTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, 9 months ago the President of the United States came to this Chamber and delivered his State of the Union message where he proposed a budget that would only save about 60 percent of the Social Security surplus and take the other 40 percent and put it into more spending. And here is where that spending rests in this budget proposed by the President of the United States.

Now, there is good news, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday, the leadership of the House and Senate went to the White House and at long last the President now agrees with the congressional majority. He says he wants to save 100 percent of the Social Security surplus. Now, Mr. Speaker, the real work begins.

Mr. Speaker, I would invite the American people to do as one of our leaders did. Senator LOTT took a big red pen to the White House as a gift when they sat down to talk over the budget and invited the President to go through his massive spending programs and start using the red pen.

Let us cut out wasteful Washington spending, Mr. Speaker. Folks should dial the White House at 202/456-1414 and say, Mr. Speaker, "Use the big red pen." Cut Washington waste.

SOCIAL SECURITY

(Ms. MILLENDER-McDONALD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. MILLENDER-McDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I think I heard last January this President saying that he did not want to do anything with Social Security, that he wanted to put it aside to make sure that it was solvent, that he was not going to use any parts of any Social Security until we have fixed it.

Now, I do remember that. It seems like my Republican colleagues are continuing to say that the President is spending Social Security. It is outrageous for the Republicans to pose as defenders of Social Security, Mr. Speaker, when we know that they have raided the Social Security funds. Remember who these people are. They are the enemies of Social Security. They want to eliminate it through privatization.

Listen to this gimmick. Listen to the rhetoric. Please, American people, remember January of this year, it was the President who said that he did not want to use Social Security funds, that he wanted to ensure Social Security solvency and Medicare reform. Do not listen to the rhetoric of the folks on the other side.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BEREUTER). Members are reminded again that they are to address their remarks to the Chair, to the Speaker.

STATE FLEXIBILITY FOR THE MINIMUM WAGE

(Mr. DEMINT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DEMINT. Mr. Speaker, Americans are most secure when they are most free. Because of welfare reform, the poorest Americans in every State have begun to realize the benefits of freedom because we have asked the States to find jobs for people on welfare. The States have responded. In fact, the number of people on welfare in my home State of South Carolina has fallen by 63 percent in just 3 years. Over 70,000 South Carolinians now have productive jobs and have been set free from government dependency.

I believe it is time to give our States more flexibility so they can build upon these successes. It is time to trust our States with the minimum wage.

Mr. Speaker, another increase in the national minimum wage will make it harder to get people off of welfare. One size does not fit all and Washington does not know what is best for every State.

I urge my colleagues to support State flexibility for the minimum wage and help secure the future for Americans now on welfare.

VOICES AGAINST VIOLENCE

(Mr. UNDERWOOD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, there is a wonderful event going on in Washington, D.C. these past 2 days, and this is the Voices Against Violence event which is sponsored under the leadership of Democratic Leader DICK GEPHARDT.

Under this event, a number of young people, over 350, and their chaperons, have come to Washington to discuss the issue of violence in schools and safety in schools. I am proud to announce that our own representative, which ironically came the farthest to Washington for this, Joanna Manuel, a 10th grader at Simon Sanchez High School, and her chaperon, Mrs. Jennifer Shiroma, are avidly participating in Voices Against Violence.

As a former high school administrator, I know full well that the key to education is feeling safe and secure, particularly at the secondary school level where there are so many issues that young people have to attend to, so many temptations as they go through their development and trying to find their way in life and trying to learn content at the same time.

I want to congratulate the Democratic leadership for this fine event.

SOCIAL SECURITY LOCKBOX HELD HOSTAGE

(Mr. HERGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HERGER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday congressional leaders and the President agreed not to raid Social Security funds to pay for next year's government spending. I wholeheartedly congratulate them on this agreement. Social Security was created in 1935 for the purpose of protecting senior Americans, not as a pool of cash accessible to those wishing to grow big government.

Mr. Speaker, this House approved my Social Security lockbox legislation 145 days ago. Yet, on six separate occasions, the minority party in the other body has voted to stop this Social Security lockbox legislation from even coming to the floor for a vote.

Mr. President, please join me in calling for the other body to free our Social Security lockbox bill they have held hostage for 145 days.

DEMOCRATS WILL PROTECT SOCIAL SECURITY

(Mr. UDALL of New Mexico asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to tell you that our friends on the other side of the aisle have picked the lockbox on the Social Security lockbox that they talk about so much. As Democrats, we have said that we would protect Social Security. We have done that in our votes and we have shown that consistently. That is not the case with our friends on the other side of the aisle.

Let us take the case of the $18 billion; $18 billion of gimmicks. One of them, almost a third of that is the U.S. census which has been in existence since this Nation started. That is not an emergency. They have said we have $18 billion in emergencies. These are not emergencies. They are gimmicks.

What we need to do is focus in this body on making sure we do not raid Social Security, we do not rely on gimmicks, and we be truthful with the American people.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2670, DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2000

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 335 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 335

Resolved, That upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider the conference report to accompany the bill (H.R. 2670) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes. All points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are waived. The conference report shall be considered as read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BE-REUTER). The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HALL), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, H. Res. 335 is a typical rule providing for consideration of H.R. 2670, the conference report for the Commerce, State, Justice appropriations bill for fiscal year 2000.

The rule waives all points of order against the conference report and its consideration, and provides that the conference report shall be considered as read.

House rules provide 1 hour of general debate divided equally between the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations and one motion to recommit with or without instructions, as is the right of the minority.

I want to discuss briefly the conference report that this rule makes in order. The conference report appropriates a total of $37.8 billion for the Departments of Commerce, Justice and State, the Federal judiciary and 18 related agencies, and focuses on the enhancement of numerous crime enforcement and crime reduction initiatives.

First, I want to say that I am pleased that the bill provides $3 billion for State and local law enforcement assistance so that local officials can successfully continue their efforts to fight crimes against our citizens. This provision is $37 million more than last year, including $287 million for juvenile crime and prevention programs; $523 million for the Local Law Enforcement Block Grant program, which was terminated in the President's request; $250 million for the Juvenile Accountability and Intensive Block Grant, which was also terminated in the President's request; $686 million for Truth in Sentencing State Prison Grants, which the President also requested we terminate.

Conferees also provided $552 million for the Edward Byrne Memorial State and Local Law Enforcement Assistance Grant program, which was $92 million more than the President requested.

I am also pleased that the committee has provided $3 billion in direct funding, a $460 million increase over FY 1999, to enforce our immigration laws. The conferees have included funding for 1,000 new border patrol agents, increased detention of criminal and illegal aliens, and the continuation of naturalization backlog reduction and interior enforcement initiatives. The conference report also includes $585 million to reimburse States for the incarceration of illegal aliens.

Finally, I want to point out the good work done by the committee in providing $1.3 billion for the Drug Enforcement Administration to continue the fight against drugs in our neighborhoods. This $70 million increase over last year indicates our commitment to win the war on drugs, and I commend the committee for this increase and funding enhancements to bolster this Nation's enforcement strategy and drug intelligence capabilities.

This rule was favorably reported by the Committee on Rules yesterday. I urge my colleagues to support the rule today on the floor so we may proceed with the general debate and consideration of this important conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I want to thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) for yielding me the time.

This rule waives all points of order against the consideration of the conference report on H.R. 2670. Though better than the original House version, the conference report falls very short. The President has not agreed to sign it. This bill slashes spending in the community-oriented policing program which helps local law enforcement agencies hire more police officers and reduce crime. It drops the Hate Crimes Prevention Act, which was included in the Senate version of the bill. This provision is aimed at reducing crimes motivated by hatred and bigotry.

Most disappointing to me is the requirement in the bill that United Nations arrearage payments are subject to an authorization. Our country must pay the back dues we owe to the United Nations. This funding is too important to hold it hostage to an authorization bill that might or might not ever pass.

□ 1115

The United Nations is running out of money at a time when demand is greater for its peace-keeping activities. We all know about the horrible tragedies in Kosovo and East Timor and Sierra Leone. In all of these cases, the U.N. played a critical role in reducing military conflict and saving lives. Failure to pay our dues will ultimately hamper the U.N.'s ability to maintain its role as a world peacekeeper. Lives are at stake.

I recently met with U.S. Ambassador to the U.N. Richard Holbrooke. He has made payment of the U.S. debt to the U.N. one of his top priorities. Mr. Speaker, our integrity is at stake. The United States owes the money to the U.N.

Our ability to influence world decisions is at stake. Unless we pay our back dues, the United States will lose our vote in the General Assembly.

Our honor is at stake. Our position as a world leader will be diminished if we turn our back on the United Nations.

This is not a question of money. The money is already in the bill. The question is whether this Nation is going to stop playing games and pay our debt.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER), chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of both the rule and the conference report, and I thank my friend, the gentleman from Atlanta, Georgia (Mr. LINDER), for yielding me the time.

I want to compliment the gentleman from Kentucky (Chairman ROGERS) for the superb job he has done in what is obviously a very difficult and challenging situation.

This bill is a very important measure as we look at a number of critical items that are out there for us to address.

First and foremost for me, as a Californian, I have got to say that the $585 million that is included in here for the State Criminal Alien Assistance Plan, known as SCAAP, is very, very high on our priority list, because if we look at the problems of illegal immigration, which have been very great, the Federal Government has a responsibility to step up to the plate and meet those obligations. They should not be thrust onto the shoulders of State and local taxpayers.

The other issue that is very key is that of international trade. Also as a Californian, I have got to say that our State is the gateway to the Pacific Rim and Latin America. Within this bill are very important items dealing with the facilitation of international trade, creating new exports for new markets for U.S. products and services.

We have just gotten the report this morning of the strengthening of economies in the Pacific Rim; and through that, they have been able to purchase more U.S. goods and services. We need to do what we can to facilitate that, and that is done in this bill.

Also, another issue that is of very great importance to me and for us nationally in looking at situations that exist around the world, back in 1985, Ronald Reagan envisioned the establishment of the National Endowment for Democracy. It was to say that simply dealing with weapons systems was not going to bring about freedom and political pluralism. We had to put into place the infrastructure, the institutions that are necessary for political pluralism to succeed. In fact, this bill does just that.

The National Endowment for Democracy has had great success all over the world. One of the countries we spend a great deal of time talking about happens to be the problems that exist in the People's Republic of China.

One of the core groups within the National Endowment for Democracy is the International Republican Institute. Last night, there was a very important freedom dinner that was held. I will say that I serve on the board of that organization, and we have participated in 50 village elections since 1994 in the People's Republic of China. We have been encouraging non-Communist candidates there. We have had success at letting people see for the first time that they can participate in those kinds of political organizations. So this is a very important measure. It deserves our support.

The rule is a very fair and standard rule for consideration of this sort of conference report, and I hope my colleagues will support both.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), who is the former chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, the two gentlemen who will handle this bill shortly are both good legislators, and I regard them both as good friends of mine. I think that they are bringing a conference bill back to the House which is a far better bill than the one that left the House. I wish I could vote for it, but I cannot. I would like to explain the five reasons that require me to vote "No."

First of all, there is not nearly enough money in this bill for the President's top anticrime priority, the Cops on the Street bill. I know that the majority will cite various marginally or unrelated programs to try to pump up artificially the impression that they have put a lot of money in this bill for cops, but the hard reality is that, out of $1.275 billion, that is, 1 billion 275 million dollars, that the President has asked for this program in new money, he is only getting $325 million. That is not enough. He is also not getting the funds he asked for for community prosecutors.

Second reason, this bill, in a sense, has walked into an accident that started out to happen to somebody else. This bill tries to fund a lot of worthwhile programs, but it does so with some pretty incredible gimmicks.

Example, we have to do a census under the Constitution every 10 years. This bill avoids counting $4 billion in spending under the budget ceiling by designating the census funding as being emergency spending. I guess we did not know that the clock was going to tick and that we were going to run into another 10-year census requirement.

There are other gimmicks. We have delayed obligations for the crime victims' fund. We have budget authority which seems to have materialized out of authority. It has really been pulled out from other bills, including Foreign Operations and Labor, Health and Social Services, I suppose, which makes it more difficult to meet those obligations.

Thirdly, this bill waives the Endangered Species Act in the case of the controversy involving Alaska salmon. I find that a quaint provision to be in this bill, and I think persons interested in that issue will be startled to find it here.

Fourth, this bill resurrects an old debate that was on the Treasury, Post Office appropriation bill. It resurrects an old provision that limits the contraceptive services available to Federal employees in order to try to mollify a Member who was unhappy with the result of the conference on the Treasury, Post Office bill. That has no business on this bill, and I think it will cause considerable controversy because it is attached.

Fifth, I would ask my colleagues one question: What do the following six countries have in common, Burundi, Somalia, Iraq, Haiti, Dominica, and the United States of America? The answer is, thanks to this bill, they will all lose their vote in the United Nations.

The other five countries have already lost their vote. The United States will lose its vote because, while it appropriates the funds that are necessary to pay our back-due bills at the United Nations, it does not give the authorization to spend those funds until other legislative decisions are made. As we well know, those decisions have been hung up for 2 years.

So we have the continued spectacle of a majority party which has an obligation to govern in conjunction with the President, instead, throwing roadblocks in his way when it comes to foreign policy. The same party that blew up the Test Ban Treaty last week, the same party whose leader in the other body, or deputy leader, who told the President, standing 6 feet away from him in the White House, that we had no business engaging in military action against Mr. Milosevic. Then after we had a successful conclusion in that operation, he then went to the press and attacked the President for agreeing to a settlement that left Mr. Milosevic in power. Now, that is the fastest U-turn I have seen in my life in this place.

The same party that held up our contributions to the International Monetary Fund at a time we desperately needed to try to stabilize the currency situation in Asia last year in order to protect our own economy. That same party is now saying that we are going to continue to withhold our funds from the United Nations because of an unrelated dispute with the President. That to me is illegitimate, and those are the reasons why this bill is going nowhere. When it leaves here, this bill will be vetoed by the President. When it is vetoed, it will be sustained.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield such time as he might consume to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS).

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia for yielding this time. I want to take a couple of minutes only at this point in the debate. I will reserve my main argument until we get to the bill itself.

But I wanted to correct a couple of statements that the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) has just made. In the COPS program, one of the sticking points, admittedly, with the administration, the House-passed bill contained $268 million. We agreed to the Senate version, which is $325 million. But on top of that, we freed up another $250 million in carryover funds that were not being spent last year into the COPS program. On top of that, we then added an additional $150 million which the administration requested in the COPS technology program. We funded that under the COPS program.

So lo and behold, all of a sudden, in the COPS program, there is not the $325 million the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) just said there was. There is $725 million.

We have gone a long way toward meeting the administration's problem with this bill. We have gone more than halfway. I would hope that the administration and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) would compliment us for that and, in fact, would quit this rampage against this and all other spending bills, and realize there is an effort here to try to meet them halfway and be reasonable.

We are trying to be fair with them. When we offer them fairness, they come back with this tirade. I do not understand that kind of business.

The gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) on the subcommittee, my ranking Democrat, has been perfectly capable in working with us. He has worked in a bipartisan, nonpartisan way, as have we. With reward for that, what we get from the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) is a tirade. I do not work that way. We have tried to go more than halfway on the COPS program, and we have.

Now, all the appropriators can do, speaking of U.N. arrears, all we can do is provide money. The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) knows that above anybody. He is ranking on the full committee. We have laid the money on the table, every single penny that it would take to pay off our arrears at the U.N. We all want to do that. We laid the money on the table. We are not the authorizing committee.

What is the Committee on International Relations of the House? It is the authorizing committee. We said, here is the money. Pass an authorization bill, and it will be paid. All we can do is offer the money. We have done that. Every single penny to pay the U.N. arrears is laying on the table. All they have to do is reach down, pick it up and pay that bill, and it is all over with.

In addition, we have provided every single penny for our current dues to the U.N. It is laying there ready to be paid when the President signs the bill.

All he has to do is sign this bill. We will pay the U.N. current assessment, and we will pay the arrears. The President, and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) should recommend it to him; he can sign the bill. The money is laying there. All he has to do is reach down and pick it up. No worries about the votes in the U.N., no worries about current assessments. All is at peace with the world. Just pick it up and take it and pay the bills.

So I find it strange, I find it partisanly strange, that the gentleman from Wisconsin takes the floor in a tirade against a bill that we have gone so far in being fair in addressing the concerns of the White House. And if the bill is vetoed, I assure the gentleman this bill will come back in a much different form.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) to respond.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I would simply say if the gentleman from Kentucky thinks I launched a tirade against this bill, he has not seen me when I am in a tirade mode.

Let me simply say that what the gentleman has just said is incorrect. He says all we can do is provide the money. It is not the money that is holding this up. The committee has put in the money and then it has refused to waive the requirements for authorization, although it has provided waivers for many other authorization requirements in the bill. That is number one point of inconsistency.

The second point of inconsistency is simply that then, contrary to what the gentleman said, his own committee has gone beyond the authorization and interposed additional conditions of its own which must be met for the release of those funds, conditions which the gentleman well knows cannot be met, in part because Congress was so obstructive on this matter last year and prevented the United Nations from taking the actions necessary to free up the money.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, how much time is remaining on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BE-REUTER). The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) has 20 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HALL) has 19 minutes remaining.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. HASTINGS), my colleague on the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about one very positive element in this underlying bill, and I support the rule and the underlying bill and would like to congratulate the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from New York for their efforts on this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, on the night of September 7 in Pasco, Washington, tragedy struck when a Washington State Patrol Officer, James Saunders, was shot and killed in the line of duty while making a routine traffic stop. The suspect in the shooting was an illegal alien who had a history of criminal convictions in this country. In fact, the suspect had been deported three different times by the U.S. Border Patrol and was detained once again this year on a cocaine charge. However, instead of remaining in jail under detention, he was allowed to post bail and was released. This tragic mistake cost Trooper Saunders his life.

How could this criminal be set free? The details of his release are still coming to light; but unfortunately, it appears that the border patrol officer who had detained the suspect in the past was transferred to Arizona and unable to identify the suspect and place him in immigration detention. We must ensure that these ill-conceived transfers of agents that needlessly remove knowledgeable agents from a post for extended periods of time do not continue. It is time to stop robbing Peter to pay Paul in our border enforcement strategy.

Just 1 week before the tragic death of Trooper Saunders, I joined my colleagues, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. METCALF) and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. NETHERCUTT), in a letter to INS Commissioner Doris Meissner stating our disappointment that she had reinstated these inappropriate transfers from the northern border to the southern border. As a result of these transfers, our northern border is understaffed, leading to decreased enforcement. I am deeply saddened and outraged that our concerns were proved true by the killing of Trooper Saunders.

Mr. Speaker, nothing in this legislation nor anything that this House considers can bring back Trooper Saunders or help his pregnant wife and 2-year-old daughter come to terms expressing his unnecessary death; but we can ensure that the border patrol is given adequate manpower and resources to keep illegal aliens locked up until deportation and ensure that, once deported, these illegal aliens do not reenter the United States.

The underlying legislation goes a long way towards ensuring this goal. The fiscal year 2000 conference report contains funding for 1,000 new border patrol agents and increases detention for criminal and illegal aliens. I urge the committee to ensure that this year the INS goes forward with the mandate to strengthen our border patrol by hiring those officers as soon as possible. We must do everything possible to hopefully spare another community the senseless tragedy the family of Trooper Saunders and the local citizens must now endure.

Once again I congratulate the chairman and the ranking member for an excellent piece of legislation and urge support of the rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes and 10 seconds to the gentleman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY).

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise to address an issue of critical importance to our Nation, the upcoming decennial census of the population of the U.S., a constitutionally mandated activity, which will be the largest peace-time mobilization ever undertaken by our Nation.

The administration requested $4.5 billion this fiscal year in order to count everyone in our country. The conference report before us today contains all but about $11 million of that request, and I commend the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS) and the ranking member, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) for their hard work with the other body in providing the necessary funds.

I also commend the chairman in that this bill contains none of the onerous, contentious language prohibiting the use of modern statistical methods which has been in previous CJS conference reports. While this report still designates the funding for the 2000 census as emergency funding, if all the funding was not there, then it truly would be an emergency. So I am glad the funding is there, whatever the designation.

However, a number of important problems remain. First and foremost is the language in the conference report regarding frameworks which would require the Census Bureau to go through a long and complex process before shifting money from one activity in the decennial census to another, for example, for spending money on census takers or additional computers.

Such congressional micromanagement is unprecedented in the decennial census. A programming request could take months. In fact, the most recent request in the Commerce Department took 7 months. But the 2000 census cannot possibly operate under that kind of framework. The census is a massive undertaking which must be completed on an extremely tight time frame. A Congress of 535 Members cannot possibly make the decisions necessary or quickly enough to cover the unpredictable events which might occur.

In conclusion, this restrictive language must be removed, and, hopefully, the President will remove this language when he vetoes this bill. I call upon my colleagues to vote against the bill for the funding for the U.N. and the cops on our streets.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS) for the purpose of a response.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

If the gentlewoman would hear me. The gentlewoman is concerned about the earmarked monies by category in the census appropriations. The gentlewoman would understand that is what we do in every agency. That is a routine practice of the Congress, when the gentlewoman was in the majority and as well here. We are an oversight committee. That is done in every single agency that we have.

I talked to the Director of the Census a few days ago about, he was concerned, and I assured him that that is an oversight matter that the Congress does in every agency that we fund, and that if he needed to reprogram monies from one account to the other, we can do it in a matter of hours, really, days at most. It just requires the signature of myself and my counterpart in the Senate.

We want to see a good count. We have not insisted on a banning sampling. All the money is there. We will reprogram the monies as necessary during the year. We do it routinely in other agencies, dozens of requests come to our desk to reprogram funds. That is not a problem, and I think the director understands that.

I would hope the gentlewoman would not vote against the conference report on that account because that is a routine practice of the Congress.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. The Director of the Census, Dr. Prewitt, is very concerned about this restrictive language. The framework language was in report language before; now it has been legislated, which is more restrictive.

Mr. ROGERS. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Speaker. As I said, I talked to the director a few days ago. I think we resolved that problem. Perhaps the gentleman needs to talk to him now.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 seconds to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY).

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's attention to this matter. When the President vetoes this bill, I hope the gentleman will accept the language that will remove the framework restrictive language on the census from the report, but I appreciate the gentleman's other efforts.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SAWYER).

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HALL) for yielding me this time, and I rise to emphasize the point my colleague from New York has just made. I do so in gratitude to the gentleman from Kentucky, whose efforts have been to make sure the census is fully funded in a way that will allow for timely execution on the very tight timetables that remain between now and its conclusion next year. I want to thank him for his concern.

Mr. Speaker, I just simply would like to add to what the gentlewoman from New York said by quoting from a letter from the Director of the Census when he says, "Congressional approval in the form of a reprogramming would be required for any movement of funds between decennial program components. This is a dramatic departure from past practices and takes place at precisely the time when Census 2000 activities peak, when the need for program flexibility is most crucial. If the need to obtain congressional approval significantly delays the transfer of funds, Census 2000 operations could be compromised."

I lived through the 1990 census. We went through a time when the economy was far more fragile than it is today. The difficulty in recruiting and retaining sufficient numbers of adequately prepared workers in differential ways across the country was an enormous problem. At that time it required actual additional enactments of authorizing legislation to permit the Bureau the flexibility in order to respond to that. If they do not have that kind of flexibility, which was initially built into the plans for this census, then I am concerned that the problem that was significant 10 years ago will be multiplied many, many times because of the vast differences in unemployment rates across the United States.

So I would only ask that the gentleman from Kentucky, as we revisit this language in coming weeks, would consider that and find alternative ways to develop more controls.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS).

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Ohio would stay at the microphone, I will try to respond.

The frameworks that the gentleman is talking about, where we have placed specific amounts of monies in each framework, one of those frameworks is $3.5 billion. The Congress, as the gentleman well knows, exercises oversight through the Committee on Appropriations of every agency that we fund, including the Census Bureau. And I think that is the duty to the taxpayers that we owe to oversee these agencies, particularly one with the leeway to spend $3.5 billion with no accounting to the Congress. The reason it is in bill language is because in the past, with report language, they simply ignored the Congress. We simply cannot let that happen again.

Now, I will say this to the gentleman. If the Director of the Census Bureau, during the course of the year, needs to reprogram monies from one account to the other through the reprogramming process, it only requires the signature of the chairman of the House subcommittee, myself, and my counterpart in the Senate. I assured the director and I assure the gentleman that if that reprogramming request is in order and is legitimate and needed, he will have the approval within 72 hours, maximum, of the time he requests it.

There will be no huge delays. There will be no harassment. There will be no intimidation or anything of that sort. But there will be some oversight. I think the gentleman, as a Member of this body, would want the Congress to exercise oversight over every agency that we fund of the executive branch, because that is our duty under the Constitution.

I would hope the gentleman would recognize that that is necessary in this respect.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I appreciate his assurances. I have no reason to doubt his good faith. The way in which he has brought the initial funding for the census to this floor reflects that good faith.

I simply hope that, in coming weeks, we will pay close attention and that they will have the opportunity to go back and forth, as they have, with the census director so that we can make sure we get this language right.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I shall stay in touch with the Census Bureau Director, and we will respond to his legitimate need.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HALL) for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, let me acknowledge the bipartisan work of the ranking member and chairman of this committee. I appreciate their attempt to work together.

I am, unfortunately, opposing this bill on several accounts. Because of the brevity of the time, let me just cite the short funding, if you will, $300 million plus, to the President's $1 billion request for "Cops on the Beat."

It is evident that in the last 24 to 48 hours, with the reports coming out on the decrease in crime, that the "Cops on the Beat" had to be a very vital aspect of that even in my own home community. In the Montrose area, the 18th Congressional District, they note that they have been able to have a neighborhood police station because of "Cops on the Beat."

What a tragedy. How long are we going to say to the world, we want to be a player but we refuse to pay our debt and our responsibility in the United Nations?

As much as we may critique the United Nations, it is a world forum for discussions that help to alleviate the various wars and breakouts that we would have if we had not had the United Nations. What a shame on us.

Additionally, the hate crimes bill, I am absolutely shocked that we could not get the hate crimes legislation added. The Senate passed it. It is the right thing to do. It is a statement on behalf of the American public that we abhor hateful acts and violent acts against individuals.

Then I would like to just lastly focus on, as a member of the authorizing committee for the INS, my concern about the distribution of funds in the separate agencies, giving $900 million to enforcement but yet $500 million only to the citizen activities.

The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) and myself and others were in Chicago just a few weeks ago hearing the crying of so many individuals who are appalled at the long wait and long lines of getting processed the legal way. If we want to promote legal immigration, then we need to do it the legal way.

A thousand border patrol agents what the INS told us, we cannot recruit. We do not have enough individuals out there. With the thousand border patrol agents, let me say that all of us had pain in our hearts with the Resendez-Ramirez situation. I come from Texas. But the INS has indicated that it is very difficult to recruit at these salary levels.

Although I appreciate the recruitment incentives, the recruitment agency, the bonus incentives, I do question whether or not we could have considered raising the GS level of the hiring individuals and whether or not we should have done it in that way.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) would be happy to hear that we funded every single penny the administration requested for the services in the INS. Every penny they wanted, they got.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, it may be that the administration does not realize the great need out there. I appreciate the funding of what the administration has required.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentlewoman will continue to yield, I cannot argue with the characterization of the gentlewoman.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, but I am out in the field and I see the pain of the people who are waiting in line.

I would simply say that there are things that we could have done a little better, Mr. Speaker, on the INS funding. I hope we can fix the INS as every-one else can.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN).

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule and the conference report for the Commerce, Justice, State appropriations.

This bill is a testament to the leadership and the dedication of the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS) and of the gentleman from Florida (Chairman YOUNG) of the full Committee on Appropriations. It is a shining example of the commitment and cooperative spirit between the majority and the minority, who worked diligently to bring before us a bill which effectively addresses recent developments and ensuing concerns by providing the necessary funding for three important agencies of our U.S. Government.

This bill provides a total of $18.4 billion for the Department of Justice. It restores key programs. It funds increases to maintain current operating levels of critical law enforcement agencies and increases funding for State and local law enforcement by actually $1.4 billion over the President's request. It provides $3.5 billion more than fiscal year 1999 to the Department of Commerce and to the Census Department.

This bill before us addresses the threats also posed to our overseas facilities and to our brave men and women in diplomatic and counselor corps by including $568 million for the reconstruction and strengthening of our posts overseas.

These worldwide security improvements and replacements of vulnerable embassies started in fiscal year 1999 with emergency funding and will continue thanks to the foresight and leadership of the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG) and the members of that subcommittee.

Lastly, this bill ensures that our concerns worldwide will be met. It is a just and balanced bill which merits our full support. I am proud to be voting in favor of the rule and the conference report this afternoon.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK).

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to the rule and the underlying conference report on the Commerce, Justice, State appropriations bill.

I oppose this bill because it drastically cuts one of our most important crime prevention programs we have today, the COPS program. Since its creation in 1994, the COPS program has awarded over $6 billion in grants to law enforcement agencies nationwide. And in May of this year, the program has funded its 100,000th police officer, a year and a half ahead of schedule and $2.5 billion below the authorized funding.

These officers work with the communities to fight crime in our cities, our suburbs, and even in the vast rural district of my northern Michigan district.

The COPS program not only adds these officers to the front line to fight crime, it funds important community prosecution, crime prevention, and law enforcement technology initiatives. These programs are crucial to ensuring that our families live in a safe community.

Crime rates have been falling over the last several consecutive years, and we cannot now rest on our laurels. We need to build on the success of the COPS program. And it is successful.

Local law enforcement officials from all over the country will tell us that the COPS program is critically important to their ability to reduce crime. The COPS program works well, and that is why it is supported by every major law enforcement organization in the United States, the United States Conference of Mayors, the National League of Cities, and the National Governors' Association.

The President, who recognizes the importance of this community policing program in reducing crime, has requested $1.3 billion for the COPS program. Instead, unfortunately, the conference committee does not meet the President's request in the need of law enforcement, especially in the COPS in School program.

Mr. Speaker, this bill ignores our communities' urgent call for more police officers in the streets and in our schools to fight crime and violence.

I will vote in favor of safe communities and against the majority's attempt to roll back our successful battle against crime. Vote against the bill and the rule.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STUPAK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK) realizes that the bill contains $725 million for programs which the President has requested in COPS. The authorized level is only $268 million. We are funding it at $500 million more than the authorization level.

In fact, the $325 million that we agreed to with the Senate was the amount that Senator BIDEN had asked for on the Senate side, and the Senate approved that, and we agreed to that.

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, if I may, to answer the question of the gentleman. The President's request was $1.3 billion. And I agree, they did put in 725. That is about half of it.

The COPS program is more than just police officers. It is COPS in School, it is the Youth Firearms Violence Initiative, community policing to combat domestic violence, anti-gang initiative.

Those programs have not been adequately funded to meet the President's request. I thank the gentleman for his leadership on that issue. I wish we had more funding for it.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of response, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS).

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

What we did on COPS, if the gentleman would like to hear this, we agreed to the amount that Senator BIDEN on the Senate side, a Democrat, asked for. Plus we added on top of that $250 million in carry-over funds which were not being spent. On top of that, we also agreed to $150 million more for the COPS program for the technology portion of the Administration requested under the COPS program. For a total of $725 million.

That is twice what Senator BIDEN on the Senate side asked for, and it is almost $500 million more than the authorization by law that exists in the Congress.

Now, on top of that, we also provided $523 million for the local law enforcement block grant, which I am sure the gentleman would want his local police to be able to get at. They do not have to go through a bureaucracy at the State level or the regional level to get those dollars, and they do not have to pay a local match. It is 100 percent money that we will give to their local police.

They can use it for bulletproof vests. They can use it for police radios. They can use it for salaries if they want, firearms, bullets, whatever they want. It is not restricted like the COPS program is.

So what I am saying to the gentleman is, there is $725 million in the COPS program. There is $523 million in the local law enforcement block grant program. That brings us to $1.3 billion, which is what the administration requested.

Mr. Speaker, what is their problem? We have provided tons and tons of money for the COPS and associated programs, not to mention the Byrne Grant program for local law enforcement funded at $552 million and the State Truth-in-Sentencing Grant funded at $686 million. There is the Juvenile Justice programs funded at $28.7 million. There is the School Violence Program funded at $225 million. There is Violence Against Women Act monies funded at $28.4 million. There is $40 million for drug courts. There is $40 million for the Weed and Seed program. And I could go on.

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, those programs that the gentleman mentioned are good programs, and they have been funded in the past. Our quarrel here, our dispute is that we want them all funded to the level requested by the President, not what Senator BIDEN said, but what the President requested.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, do I understand the gentleman to say that we are not spending enough money out of the Social Security Trust Fund?

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, do not use red herring program. We are talking about the COPS program here. Let us stick to the COPS program that we are talking about. To throw in Social Security is disingenuous to their side and to the senior citizens back home.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, does the gentleman realize that the President's request was for zero dollars for the Local Law Enforcement Block Grant which funds your local law enforcement agencies, sheriff's offices, and police departments? The President's request was zero.

Now, yes, we did include money there, $523 million. But I think we could count that toward the COPS total, which would get us up to the total of $1.3 billion, which was the President's request.

I think the bill is absolutely fair, more than fair, even in getting monies to their local law enforcement agencies. I would argue with anybody who says we were not generous, overly generous, more than the Administration's request, in fact, for their local law enforcement agencies.

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, I have 15 pages of grants in COPS and equipment that have been given to the First Congressional District in Michigan. And, therefore, whether they are the First Congressional District in Michigan or Kentucky or wherever, under the totality of funding for the COPS program, they would be satisfying their local law enforcement needs.

□ 1200

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE).

Ms. LEE. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I do also rise in strong opposition to the Commerce, Justice, State appropriations conference report. I too believe that the very successful Community Oriented Policing Service program, familiarly known as COPS, which has been reduced has been a program that has allowed for the reduction of crime in this country. And I believe that the President is right to say that this is one of the three main reasons why he will veto the bill.

A second major problem with this bill is the repeated denial by the majority of the United Nations debt which makes us an embarrassing deadbeat country in the international community. The list of nations that have lost their vote in the United Nations General Assembly for failure to pay dues is largely a list of small, war-torn nations such as Sierra Leone, Bosnia and Iraq. It is shameful that the United States would stiff the United Nations. I certainly hope that we do not lose our vote.

Another major flaw of this bill is that it fails to respond adequately to the investigation and prosecution of hate crimes and freezes funding for the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. The horrendous murders of Mr. James BYRD in Jasper, Texas and Mr. Matthew Shepard in Wyoming are just two instances of crimes for which we should have zero tolerance. The gutting of this portion of this bill is a strong indication of the lack of commitment to move against hate crimes by the majority.

For all of these reasons, I ask my colleagues to vote against H.R. 2670.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Oregon (Ms. HOOLEY).

Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the Commerce, Justice, State appropriations bill and to express my dismay at the bill that fails to fully fund the COPS program, the community policing program.

Since Congress authorized the COPS program in 1994, the Justice Department has kept its promise by disbursing grants to hire 100,000 community police officers ahead of schedule and under budget. The COPS program has successfully put police officers in over 11,000 police departments and sheriffs offices. Fifty thousand officers are on the street and working in the communities to reduce crime today, and our streets are safer than ever. It is a program that works. It gives communities the ability to employ local solutions to fighting crime.

Mr. Speaker, I have talked to a lot of sheriffs and police chiefs in my district. They tell me this is the one program that has done more than any other program they have received from the Federal Government to deter crime, to work with the community, to have the community involved in helping to reduce crime.

Mr. Speaker, American communities are safer than they have ever been and COPS is one of the reasons why. Last July, 67 of my colleagues signed a letter with me asking the appropriators for full funding of this program. But most importantly, my local police support COPS, my county officials support COPS, my school districts support COPS, my neighbors support COPS, and so do I.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), the minority leader.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I would urge Members to vote against this bill. It is a bill that the President will not sign. It does not address the priorities that the American people care about. And it betrays the words of the Republican leadership last night that they are interested in finding a sensible compromise to the budget mess in which we find ourselves.

There was an important statement made by the President last night, and I believe agreed to by the Republican leadership, and that is that we are not going to approach this budget on a micro basis but we are going to look at it on a macro basis. This concession by the leadership is critical to our ability ultimately to achieve a successful outcome on the budget in the days ahead. We can no longer engage in a process of dealing with the appropriations bills one at a time because there are several other important issues that this Congress wants to address this year, minimum wage, Medicare buybacks, and tax extenders. We have to deal with the remaining bills in this context if we want to reach an agreement on the budget.

The fact that we are voting on the Commerce, Justice, State bill today shows that Republicans are not keeping this agreement. The Republicans cannot see the forest for the trees. And the President has said no more signing of the trees until we see the forest.

Unless we sit down and negotiate the whole picture, we are not going to pass any of these bills. We should not even be voting on this bill if we are serious about looking at the entire picture. Clearly, the Republicans still are not serious about negotiating with the President 3 weeks into fiscal year 2000, and we should not be voting on this bill if Republicans are serious about not dipping into the Social Security surplus. The CBO says that Republicans have already spent $13 billion of the surplus and are on their way to spending $24 billion. This bill is just going to make things worse because the spending is not paid for and will come right out of the Social Security surplus.

Apart from the simple futility of even considering this bill, I am compelled to point out how this is a bad bill that shortchanges our priorities. First, the bill fails to build on the success of the last several years in putting additional police on the streets and in our neighborhoods. We have seen a 7-year consecutive decline in violent crime. Why would we want to reverse that now? The Republican plan is a retreat and it is unacceptable.

Second, it is not surprising the bill fails to live up to our obligations to the United Nations. The Republican Party used to be the party of George Bush, willing to make difficult choices to uphold our role in the world. Now, even though Pat Buchanan says he is leaving the Republican Party, Buchananism remains. This is a neo-isolationist view that is hurting our strength and our prestige abroad. They do not care about stopping nuclear proliferation to developing countries. They are willing to put politics above doing the right thing as we saw in the Senate for the test ban vote.

Finally, on hate crimes. We continue to see these horrendous crimes, but for the second year in a row Republican leaders stand in the way of taking strong action to combat this violence.

It is an outrage that the hate crimes provision was left out of this bill once again. Republicans continue to listen to the far right on this issue instead of doing what is decent and right.

If we keep rolling out these bills that are dead on arrival before the vote is taken, we will not find any solution to the overall budget problem anytime soon. If we insist on rolling out phony bills filled with gimmicks and waist-deep into Social Security, we will be here at Thanksgiving and maybe even Christmas.

This is another Republican tree. Knock it down. Vote it down. Let us get back to the real negotiations to settle the budget, not phony votes which spend time and accomplish nothing and set us further back from finding the solution to this problem that the American people sent us here to find.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would just say simply that I will be calling for two votes, on the previous question and on the rule. It is not so much that we are against the rule, but we are against the bill itself and the conference committee for a number of reasons that have been mentioned here, because of the lack of having hate crime legislation, because of not fulfilling what we think is important in the COPS program and mainly in my opinion for not including U.N. arrears. I think for us to lose the chance, to lose our vote in the U.N. would be an absolute embarrassment and it would be a shame. We are coming very close to the edge right now. We are riding that precipice. I think it really fits this tremendous saying that Evanberg said once, "All it takes for evil to prevail is for good people to do nothing." And evil will prevail in this world because this is the kind of world that we live in. And if we do not fund the kinds of programs that are important in the U.N., we allow evil to prevail.

Mr. Speaker I urge that we vote against this conference report. We will be calling for a couple of votes, on the previous question and on the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

At the risk of sounding remedial, I would like to point out to my friend from Ohio that he will have ample opportunity to vote against the bill when the bill comes up. It is not going to be any more defeated by calling for two additional votes.

I encourage my colleagues to come to the floor and vote "yes" on the previous question, "yes" on the rule and then give them the opportunity to debate the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BE-REUTER). The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

Pursuant to clause 9 of rule XX, the Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the minimum time for electronic voting, if ordered, on the question of agreeing to the resolution.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 221, nays 204, not voting 8, as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 335, I call up the conference report to accompany the bill (H.R. 2670) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 335, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of October 19, 1999, at page H10283.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) each will control 30 minutes.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the conference report. It is my understanding that the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) supports the conference report, and given that case, under clause 8(d) of rule XXII, I ask for one-third of the time on the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New York support the conference report?

Mr. SERRANO. Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8(d) of rule XXII, the time will be equally divided among the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS), the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY).

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report to accompany H.R. 2670, and that I may include tabular and extraneous material.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

□ 1245

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to bring this conference report on the fiscal year 2000 Commerce Justice, State and Judiciary appropriations bill to the floor. We have brought to a successful conclusion the very long, arduous work of reconciling the differences between the very different House-passed and Senate-passed versions of this bill.

This conference report is a sound compromise. It makes a number of significant improvements, I think, over the House-passed version of the bill. We moved forward within the guidelines set for the bill by our leadership, consistent with their plan for meeting the budget targets and protecting Social Security.

For law enforcement, the Senate came in a billion dollars below the House. We were able to restore those funds, and those funds, of course, will keep intact at their current operating levels, the FBI, the Drug Enforcement Administration, the United States Attorneys, and the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

We provide 1,000 new border patrol agents for the INS. We maintain funding for local law enforcement agencies, local sheriffs, and local police departments—monies direct to them, not going through their State agencies but going directly from here to that local agency—the local law enforcement grants, the juvenile accountability grants, the truth-in-sentencing State prison grant program directly to the States, and the SCAAP program to reimburse States for the costs of incarcerating illegal aliens.

For the COPS program, we provided the Senate level. We went up from the House level of $268 million, which is the authorized level. We went up to $325 million, the Senate level that was a result of the amendment offered by Senator BIDEN on the other side of the Capitol.

On top of that, though, we added the unused, unobligated balances that exist in the COPS program of $250 million. We freed that money up, a quarter of a billion dollars for COPS. On top of that, we gave nearly every penny the administration requested under the COPS program for technology programs. That is added in, for a grand total of $725 million for the COPS program.

That is for COPS II, which is not authorized. COPS I runs out this year. We gave in this bill the $268 million in the House version that would have funded the authorized level. We went beyond that to a total of $725 million, even though it is not authorized, in an attempt to meet the administration's request for more funds.

In Commerce, we fully fund the census. We do not require that there be a ban on sampling. We will let the courts decide that one.

For the rest of Commerce, the Senate was $850 million above the House level, much of it in NOAA. We have come up significantly above the House level, $275 million in NOAA alone above the House, and $60 million for the Pacific Salmon Recovery program to be of great assistance to the West Coast States of Washington, Oregon, California, and Alaska.

For the Judiciary, we provide $60 million more than the House. We solve the judges' cost-of-living adjustment that is required, and we solve the life insurance problem that had been of such great concern to the Judiciary.

For the Department of State, we fully fund the request for embassy security overseas, every penny. In fact, we made the administration request more money. We have fulfilled that request.

We fully fund and pay for every penny of our current contributions to the U.N. We are paying our dues annually. We provide the money for the arrears, subject to authorization.

Overall, Mr. Speaker, it is a good bill. I would hope our colleagues would support it.

1/ The Administration's request proposes to eliminate this account and distribute the funding to GLA, US Attorneys, US Marshals, FBI, DEA and INS.

2/ The Administration's June 8, 1999 budget amendment proposes to reinstate the 245(f) adjustment of status fee, which would increase receipts in the Breached Bond Fund by $110 million.

3/ The President's request includes $30 million for the Police Corps within the hiring program.

4/ As a result of the Foreign Affairs Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998 and other changes, the amounts requested and recommended in FY 2000 include amounts appropriated separately in previous fiscal years for State Department, USIA and ACDA salaries and expenses.

5/ The President's budget proposed $5 million for State Justice Institute.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Speaker, today we take up the conference report of H.R. 2670, the bill making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice and State, the Judiciary and several related agencies.

Mr. Speaker, this year I jumped from not being a member of the subcommittee at all to the ranking Democrat on the subcommittee. Learning this large and challenging bill practically from scratch has made this an interesting and educational year, but it has been made much easier by our chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS), who has graciously shared his considerable expertise and made necessary allowances for the new guy on the block. Working with the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS) has been a great personal pleasure for me, and I thank him for his support and understanding.

I must also mention our very professional and able staff, some of whom we always see on the floor during the debate and others who are back in our offices. They have worked long and hard, including just about every night and weekend since conferees were appointed, to bring this conference report to the floor.

The chairman has explained the conference report so I will just add a few words. First, while there are still problems and concerns with certain provisions, the conference report is much better than the bill that passed the House in August. I think that is an important thing to note. So I repeat it. There are still concerns with the content of this bill, but this is a much better bill than the one that passed the House in August. If what I hear on radio this morning is correct and the President and the leadership of this House will take care of this problem this weekend, then this bill, I suspect, will get much better way before the Yankees win the World Series.

Additional resources were provided to the conferees and the result is much closer to the President's request in many areas. The conference agreement provides $1.5 billion over the House-passed level and $3.6 billion over the Senate-passed level. Like the House-passed bill, the conference report provides the Census Bureau with the resources it needs to do both the 2000 census and the necessary quality checks on it. This, Mr. Speaker, is a tremendous accomplishment and probably at the center of my support for this bill.

Like the House-passed bill, the conference report includes funding for U.N. arrears, but unfortunately it continues to restrict the State Department's ability to actually pay the U.N. dues, and I am very concerned that this will cost us our vote in the General Assembly. Along with the vote, we may lose any leverage we would hope to exercise over U.N. management and budget reforms.

The conference agreement, like the Senate-passed bill, provides resources to begin implementation of the Pacific Salmon Treaty, but one troubling provision waives the Endangered Species Act for the State of Alaska. This is an issue on which I have had many visits from Members and they should know the efforts that have been made on this issue.

The House-passed cut to SBA's salaries and expenses is largely restored, although partially subject to reprogramming procedures.

If I may depart from my text, if I could get the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS), the chairman, to answer a question, and I am departing from my text just to ask the chairman, I understand that he might be willing to entertain reprogramming requests from SBA, something which is of great interest to me, to the agency obviously, and to our side of the aisle.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SERRANO. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, we have worked with the gentleman to significantly increase funding for the SBA's operations in this conference report, and that is due solely to the pleas and arguments and very persuasive arguments for SBA, of the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO). So we are $45 million over what we passed in the House thanks to the gentleman, plus the SBA has the ability, as he suggested, to transfer additional funds if they are needed.

So we reserve that possibility as we go along during the year. I am very happy to continue to work with the gentleman on any further concerns he may have during the course of the year.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS) for his response.

We still have to look, of course, at the losses associated with Hurricanes Floyd and Irene. I, unfortunately, note that there is a new hurricane, Jose. He is not on the floor today, but he would be creating problems that we will have to deal with.

Now, one area where we have improved dramatically and which I am very proud of is the Legal Services Corporation. It was initially underfunded at only $141 million, and as in past years the House amendment raised that to $250 million, and the conferees agreed to set it at the higher $300 million level, which is equal to the fiscal year 1999 level.

I would have preferred to provide more, such as the President's request, which was $340 million; but this is an improvement, a significant one, over the House-passed bill.

The conference agreement continues to underfund the COPS program and therein lies perhaps the most difficult part of this bill. This is a program that is a good program. This is a program that needs to be improved and to grow, and I think it is important that especially in the area of universal hiring that this bill be improved. Perhaps we will have that opportunity, as I said, before the Yankees win the World Series.

NOAA, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, while slated to receive more than $340 million above the House-passed level, is still $200 million below the President's request for important initiatives to protect our ocean resources and to help us better understand and predict weather and climate changes.

The State Department numbers have been increased over the House-passed level; and I think that this is, while still below some of the levels that were presented before, it is still something to note and something that we can be supportive of.

There are, unfortunately, some troubling issues that still remain and issues that could have been dealt with and were not, specifically the issue of hate crimes. We believe that on this bill we could have easily included the language that dealt with the issue of hate crimes legislation. We should not waste time trying to figure out the intricacies of where this language belongs. We should only deal with the fact that this is one of the most pressing issues in our country and that we have to address it properly.

I really think we missed our opportunity on this bill and hopefully this House will somehow deal with this.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, there are problems with the bill but I did rise today and will continue to rise in favor of this conference report. One of the reasons, as I said before, is my relationship to the chairman, his support of many of the requests that I made and the hope that as this process keeps going along we can, in fact, take care of those items that we did not take care of. So with that in mind, Mr. Speaker, I will ask for a positive, a yes vote, on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier in debate on the rule, this bill is a lot better than it was when it left the House. Frankly, that is damning with thin praise but it certainly is.

There are five basic reasons why this bill is going to be vetoed by the President of the United States. The first is that no matter what accounting schemes are cited by the committee, the fact is that the new funding, new dollars for the President's Cops on the Beat program, and its successor program are only $325 million out of the over $1 billion the President has requested.

The universal hiring program, which is the program that all communities will be eligible to try to receive funds from, is funded at a level of only $92 million as opposed to the $600 million that the President is asking for.

□ 1300

Secondly, this bill resurrects an old argument left over from another bill on the Treasury, Post Office appropriations, and it renews legislative attempts to place limitations on the kinds of contraceptive services that will be available to Federal employees in their own insurance program. That should not be in this bill.

Thirdly, this bill contains an exemption from the Endangered Species Act for the Alaska salmon controversy. That should not be in this bill.

Fourth, this bill is part of a huge charade, which is pretending that the Congress is spending billions of dollars less than it is actually spending. Under our budget rules, if we call something an emergency, it then is not counted under budget spending ceilings.

We are told that the majority party does not want to sit down in the same room with the President and his negotiators and negotiate an omnibus budget arrangement because they say, when we did it last year, that resulted in $20 billion of emergency spending being jammed into last year's omnibus appropriation bill, in fact, $21 billion, as this bar graph shows. This represents last year's problems which our Republican friends say they want to avoid.

But the fact is that, without sitting down for that kind of a meeting, the majority has already produced bills which contain $25 billion in emergency spending, thereby exempted from the budget caps.

This bill contains over $4 billion of those phony emergencies, because it claims that the census, which, by constitutional edict, we must conduct every 10 years, this bill claims that the funding for that is an emergency. The budget act says that something is an emergency if it was unforeseen. Well, I did not know many people in this place did not know that the end of the millennium was coming and we would need another census. That is simply a $4 billion device to hide spending and to pretend that we are not over the budget caps.

But most seriously of all, this bill is part of a continued onslaught on the part of the majority party in this House, on the President's ability to defend our national interest abroad diplomatically.

The Senate last week turned down the comprehensive Test Ban Treaty. Now this bill provides the money for us to contribute to the United Nations what we are obligated to contribute, but it does not give the authorization authority to actually provide that money to the United Nations. So it is a let-us-pretend appropriation.

What does that mean? It means that, because we cannot actually cut the check to the United Nations under this proposal, we will lose our vote in the United Nations. We will thus be joining Burundi, Djibouti, Dominica, Equatorial Guinea, Gambia, Haiti, Iraq, and Somalia as the countries in the United Nations who lose our votes because we did not pay our bills.

What a wonderful performance on the part of this Congress. My colleagues really ought to be thrilled by putting the United States in this disgraceful condition.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa (Mr. LATHAM), a very hardworking member of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State, and Judiciary.

Mr. LATHAM. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Kentucky very much for yielding me this time.

First of all, I just want to give my most sincere thanks to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS), the chairman, and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), the ranking member, for a tremendous job, and compliment, I think, the best staff in Washington on this subcommittee.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is very unfortunate that people try to politicize this bill because it is so important what this bill accomplishes as far as I am going to focus mostly on law enforcement. But when we look at the Commerce, Justice, Justice Department, the State Department, the Supreme Court, Judiciary, it is an extraordinarily important and wide-ranging bill. I would hope that we would not politicize this bill.

I want to particularly point out the funding in Iowa in my district for the Meth Training Center in Sioux City that has been such a tremendous success to fight this major problem that we have in the upper Midwest, funding in this bill for video conferencing so that local communities can contact directly with the INS to get verification of identification of people they may suspect of being illegal, funding for the tri-State drug task force for local law enforcement for all the overtime hours that they put in in this great war we have on drugs today.

I want to stand in strong support of the local law enforcement block grants, the $523 million which is included in this bill. This allows my communities, my small communities, to get the resources they so desperately need for equipment, for computers, for radios, for bulletproof vests. This is the only way for these small communities, and I come from a town of 153 people. We need this kind of help in the local law enforcement battle that we are fighting with the drug problem and with criminals throughout the country. This is essential. I compliment the committee.

Also, the truth in sentencing block grants for the State are extremely important.

Again, I want to compliment the chairman, the ranking member, and the great staff.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON), a great member of the committee.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this conference report, but I certainly have some reservations that I had when I voted "no" on the floor when the bill was originally here.

I cannot quarrel with those that say that this conference report should not be on the floor, but the fact of the matter is it is on the floor. Certainly I would like to have seen more money for COPS, but the truth is that there is a substantial amount of money for COPS. I would like to have seen the fully funded request for the Justice Department Civil Rights Division, but that was not to be in this conference.

But important, it does have significant money for juvenile justice and crime prevention for juveniles. It has $287 million. As both the chairman and the ranking member have pointed out, it has $585 million for the Criminal Alien Assistance Program, a very important program to border States.

It also contains full funding for the census. Yes, it is contained under a gimmick, but the important thing is that the money is there to have an accurate and a full count in the census.

I certainly agree that it could be a better bill, but it is here, and the issue is whether the glass is half full or half empty. We can certainly make a case on either side. As a member of the committee, I see that the chairman and the ranking member have been exceptionally fair, and I prefer to see this glass as half full.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mrs. LOWEY).

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Speaker, regrettably, I rise in opposition to this conference report, with great respect to the gentleman from Kentucky (Chairman ROGERS) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO).

Unfortunately, I have to stand here again, as I have before, embarrassed and ashamed that the United States is the United Nation's number one deadbeat. If my colleagues want to help restore our good name and regain our influence in the UN, they will oppose this conference report and join me in demanding today that we pay immediate and full payment of our over $1 billion in UN arrears.

This conference report provides only $351 million to pay off our arrears, only after separate authorization, and only after onerous and impractical conditions have been met.

We have gone through this before. We voiced our concerns, and the UN has responded, maintaining a no-growth budget from 1994 to 1998, creating an Office of the Inspector General, eliminating over 1,000 positions, implementing other cost saving measures.

Withholding our arrears is irresponsible and short-sighted. We have already begun to feel the effects of our diminishing influence, and this is just the beginning.

How can we expect the United Nations to continue to take our interest into account around the world? How can we expect them to fund the projects we support and to send peace-keeping troops to areas where we want to see more stability when we do not contribute? How do we expect to help continue to reform the United Nations in a meaningful way to cut down on its bureaucracy and decrease our annual dues if we do not pay our debt?

This funding is critical to United States foreign policy. It shows the international community that a commitment made by the United States means something, and it is a cost effective way for us to leverage U.S. funding with that of the other members of the United Nations to make a difference around the world.

Our continued participation in the UN is critical to United States global leadership, which in turn is the cornerstone of our national security.

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I did not also express my outrage about a trick played on us in this bill. The majority has violated the jurisdiction of the Subcommittee on Treasury, Postal Service, and General Government appropriation by modifying the newly signed fiscal year 2000 Treasury, Postal law in the Commerce, Justice, State bill.

It goes without saying that the Commerce, Justice bill has no jurisdiction over the programs in the Treasury, Postal bill. This conference report passed the House 292 to 126, a broad bipartisan margin, and was signed by the President on September 29. Not even 3 weeks later, the Republicans undo the bipartisan agreement, one of the few bipartisan bills that this ridiculous process has produced.

I urge my colleagues to reject this conference report. Let us get serious about the budget process. Let us make the modifications to what is a good bill and reject this proposal.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), one of the more valued members in our subcommittee. He is also, incidentally, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Interior of the full Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding me this time, and I yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN).

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report on the Departments of Commerce, Justice, State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies. I commend the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS), the distinguished subcommittee chairman, and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), the ranking minority member and the outstanding work in crafting a very important legislative product.

With regard to our UN arrearages, this measure contains full funding for the payment of our UN arrears over a 3-year period. I fully support that provision. It is our hope that this will soon be followed by an authorization measure for the so-called Helms-Biden UN arrears payments which our Committee on International Relations is working on rapidly.

I also commend the committee for providing substantial funding for the security of our embassies abroad, something that is sorely needed.

Accordingly, I urge our colleagues to support this conference report on H.R. 2670, and I urge the President to sign this measure.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Speaker, I certainly urge my colleagues to support this bill. We cover a diverse number of functions such as Federal law enforcement, trade negotiations, diplomatic functions, and Federal courts.

A couple of things I would highlight. First of all, we have increased funding for the United States Trade Representative. I think our Trade Ambassador Mrs. Barshefsky has done an excellent job and along with the Commerce Department and Secretary Daley. They have a big challenge ahead to represent the United States interest at the WTO meeting in Seattle in about 6 weeks. It is important that we have trade opening initiatives to get more exports of American products, and they are working hard at that.

Secondly, embassy safety, there was no money requested in the original budget from the administration. It is a very important function because of the proliferation of terrorists. We recognize this fact and put substantial amounts in this bill to upgrade the safety programs at our embassies around the world.

Thirdly, the bill continues funding for the manufacturing extension program in small business development, again programs that are very important to our economy because probably 70 percent or more of the jobs in our economy are from small business development. We need to encourage and enhance the opportunities in small business.

Fourthly, the JASON program is a very innovative program that is funded in this bill. It basically is the electronic school bus. This is a program whereby students can go, as they have, to the rain forest, they can go to the bottom of Monterey Bay, they can go to the National Park at Yellowstone, and next year I think they will go into space all by the electronic bus.

Under the JASON program, for the schools that are wired properly, they can have two-way conversations between the students and the people and the locations I have mentioned. Very innovative. It is the future in education, and I am pleased that we could do that. It is long-distance learning at its best.

I rise in support of the Fiscal Year 2000 Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations conference report. This is a good and balanced bill that was put together under tight funding restraints.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill which contains many diverse functions from federal law enforcement programs, to trade negotiation and enforcement programs, to diplomatic functions, to the funding of our federal courts.

I will highlight just three areas that are of importance to the people of Ohio.

This bill provides funding levels that are necessary to continue the important work of opening new markets for U.S. goods and of protecting our domestic industries against unfair foreign trading practices.

The United States Trade Representative's Office received a much-needed increase of over $1 million to continue the work of that our trading partners reciprocate and opening their markets in the same manner as the U.S., which remains the most open market of the world.

The important trade functions that reside in the Commerce Department to promote our exports abroad and to protect domestic industries are also provided adequate funding levels.

The bill continues funding for the Manufacturing Extension Program and the Small Business Development Centers, both programs which are critical to small businesses as they modernize and prepare to compete in the global marketplace.

Finally, the bill funds two innovative programs. The first provides an additional $2 million to the JASON Program which makes available to over 3 million students the good work that is occurring in the Commerce Department with regard to oceans and ocean research. The JASON Program is an exciting interactive education program which I call the "electronic school bus" because after a year of studying a science curriculum, students participate in an expedition via interactive telecommunications means. This program represents the future of our education system.

The bill also funds the National Inventors Hall of Fame at $3.6 million to continue the partnership with the U.S. Patent and Trade Office to highlight to the public the importance of our national patent system. This system is critical for the U.S. in maintaining its preeminent position with the world with regard to development of technology.

This is a fair bill that funds many critical federal functions and I urge your support for it.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to pick up on something the gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON) said in support of the conference report. He did say he was unhappy and perhaps questioned the way that the census was being funded, but he emphasized the fact that the important aspect was that the census was being fully funded. And I have to tell my colleagues that for the many people that I deal with on the House floor on a daily basis, that is a very important issue.

I personally have a great deal to look forward to in this census. I represent the most undercounted district in the Nation. My district was undercounted by a very large number of people in terms of what we thought we should have, not to mention what I consider the hidden undercount, which is people that have a difficult time just coming forward and allowing themselves to be counted. So I have the undercount, and then there is that other problem.

To me, the census is crucial. And to the city and the county that I represent, the Bronx, New York, a census count is perhaps at the center of how we look at our future and what we can do to better our condition. Of particular importance for me is the idea of being able to spend dollars on a census that will go beyond certain limits imposed in the past to reach out to people, such as advertising in languages other than English. This is very important to me, to be able to reach people and to send a message out that not only is it a constitutional mandate for us to conduct it, but perhaps it is a constitutional responsibility for them to participate in it.

So I cannot emphasize enough the importance to me of the fact that after a very difficult time in the past, we were able to reach agreement in a proper way on the census issue. So I cannot say enough as to how important that is and how important that is, in my opinion, for my community, for my State, and for the future of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MILLER), who is the chairman of the House Subcommittee on Census of the Committee on Government Reform.

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and it is a pleasure to serve my first year on this particular subcommittee. I get to wear two hats with respect to the census, and that is as a member of the subcommittee that funds it, but also as the chairman of the authorizing committee.

This is a good bill that has lots of really great programs in it, from the JASON project, to the law enforcement and embassy security issues. But with respect to the census, there have been a couple of questions raised.

First of all, is it an emergency. I think we would all have preferred it not to have been classified as an emergency. But, unfortunately, it was not included in the original budget agreement in 1997, and this was the only way to really include it without taking it from somewhere else and to provide the full $4.5 billion, which is a very large amount, obviously. Now, this is for this one year.

Next year there will be a cost to the census, but it will not be anything near what we are spending this time around. And this Congress and previous Congresses have always fully funded the census. In fact, we have gone beyond the President's request. We have put in emergency spending bills, and the money has always been there.

The question has been raised about this issue of frameworks. And the frameworks idea is that of the $4.5 billion there are classifications. These are the exact classifications as requested by the Census Bureau. So it is their numbers. It has nothing to do with a sampling fight or anything else; it is just their numbers that are put in these classifications. The question is how to shift it back and forth.

The gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS) has given us his assurances that he will act within 72 hours. I will do everything I can to help support and provide for that type of ability to move around the money. Most of the money is in one program, which is $3.5 billion alone. Where we got into this problem is, and we have had it in report language in the past, but the Census Bureau's management finance people have ignored that, and we have an oversight responsibility. We do have a responsibility to make sure this $4.5 billion is spent according to the law.

So I think this is very reasonable, to say we want to know how money is being shifted around. That is common sense. This is amazing. When they sent us the request for the $4.5 billion, we got 10 pages of information to document that. Ten pages. Normally we get thousands of pages of documentation to show why we need to spend that money. So I think we have gone beyond what would be good common sense because of the fact that we have that.

GAO is also raising questions, so I think it is important we stick with this. This is not an unreasonable request. It is common in other departments of the Government, and I am really pleased that the census is fully funded, and I fully support this bill.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time is remaining on all three sides.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS from Washington). The gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS) has 9 minutes remaining, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) has 8½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 4½ minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I find this a very strange debate. The gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) and I, for instance, agree on about 90 percent of the issues before this place, and yet today we find ourselves on the opposite side of this bill, and I think we need to ask why. The reason is very simple, in my view.

The Republican majority in this House decided that they were going to spend $7 billion to $10 billion more on the Pentagon budget than the President and the Pentagon had asked for. The Republican majority has decided now, in the Labor, Health, and Education budget, to fund a program level which is $2.2 billion above the President. They did that at the same time managing not to fund his education and health and job training priorities. The VA-HUD bill wound up being several billion dollars above the President. The agriculture bill wound up being about $8 billion above the President. The military construction bill wound up being a good amount of money above the President.

So the issue today is not whether we on the Democratic side want to spend more money. The issue is simply whether we are going to agree to the labeling of different kinds and categories of spending that the majority party would like so that we can fit it all into the TV ads of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY). That is what the issue is.

Now, the Committee on Appropriations, if left to its own devices, could come up with compromises on all of these bills by next Tuesday. The gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) knows that, I know that, and I think the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS) knows that. We have always been able to resolve appropriations differences between us. But the problem is that we are also now being asked to do something very different. We are being asked to invent a new system of accounting in order to fit into the TV ads of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY).

So I would simply say this, our Republican friends cannot seem to take back even one dime of the spending that they have already voted for. Example: NIH. I happen to be a strong supporter of NIH. But the House bill for NIH contained $1.4 billion. The Senate bill contained $1.7 billion. We are supposed to resolve those differences by coming in somewhere in the middle. The conference at this point is now at $2 billion for NIH.

I would submit if our Republican friends cannot compromise on money which they have already spent, if they cannot, for instance, agree to give back the billion dollars that the Pentagon did not want, that they put in the military budget anyway for the ship that the Senate majority leader wanted, if they cannot give back some of that money, then we are going to have to put some additional money into the remaining bills. But we will agree to pay for it, just as the administration found the offsets to pay for the increases that they wanted in the VA-HUD bill.

So the question today is not whether we are talking about the Democrats' demand to spend more money. And the question today is not whether or not Democrats are going to be spending Social Security money. The question is how much of Social Security money has the Republican majority in this Congress already committed us to spend.

And the question is how do we deal with those issues in an honest way, rather than conducting what Time magazine referred to as "A $150 billion shell game" where they said "This debate over Social Security surplus is more about politics than it is money."

To me, it comes down to a simple question of honesty. And when we get enough of it, we will get an agreement between both sides; and until we do, we will not.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. KOLBE), the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Treasury, Postal Service, and General Government of the Committee on Appropriations, and also a very hard working member of our subcommittee.

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I do rise in strong support of this conference report. I want to commend both the chairman and the ranking member, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO), for the work that they have done. I think they bent over backwards to provide fairness and equity for the competing interests that we find in this bill.

Obviously, not everything that I would like is in here. Some things that are in here I would perhaps prefer not be in here. But it is a good bill, and I think it is a good balance. And I think it does a good job of providing funding for the diverse range of programs that we find in this bill.

Now, I am a representative of a border State, so I care a lot about border problems and funding for the Immigration and Naturalization Service. This bill provides $3 billion for direct funding of the INS. That is $460 million more than last year. Very importantly, it provides full funding so that we can add another 1,000 agents. That is a commitment that we made as part of the immigration legislation that we passed a few years ago. It is very important if we are going to get a handle on the problem of illegal immigration along our border.

We also have funding in there for increased detention of criminal and illegal aliens, and adequate funding to reduce the naturalization backlog. These are issues that those of us who live along the border deal with every single day, and that is why they are so important.

I also want to congratulate the subcommittee for making other parts of law enforcement a priority; the flexibility that this bill gives to law enforcement at the local level. It restores the Local Law Enforcement Block Grant; the Juvenile Accountability Incentive Block Grant; the Truth-in-Sentencing State Prison Grants; the Byrne Law Enforcement Grants. It fully funds the FBI and Violence Against Women Act. Overall, for local law enforcement, there is $1.4 billion more in this bill than we have had before.

Much was made on the floor about the census. That issue, too, is important to us. We have heard about the U.N. arrearages, but the money is in here to fully fund the U.N. arrearages, subject to an authorization bill.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think this bill is one that is carefully balanced, not perfect, but carefully balanced, does what it is supposed to do in terms of meeting our priorities; and I urge support for this legislation.

□ 1330

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), the very distinguished and very able chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I think we are in the middle of a very interesting discussion. We all agree that we need better law enforcement and we think the practice of community policing is a very effective way to fight crime.

Well, what we are arguing about is the subject of flexibility and the efficiency, the efficacy of the 100,000 cops promised. That has a nice ring to it. Those are nice round figures. But the fact is, with less than a year to go in the existing program, less than half of the 100,000 cops we were promised have been hired and some of them are not engaged in active police work but only in ancillary administrative tasks.

We think an appropriate way to do this is not to cut the money but to provide flexibility, some ability to go elsewhere than simply hiring cops. A community may have adequate policemen but may lack radio equipment, squad cars, other law enforcement equipment that helps them do the job.

We are simply trying to provide adequate funding to hire the cops where they are needed and when necessary but also to have flexibility for other programs that help law enforcement.

This is not a policemen's benefit bill. This is law enforcement, safe streets, safer communities. And that means some flexibility in where this money can go. That is an intelligent, useful way to handle this appropriation.

There is new spending for COPS, $325 million in new spending, which is $7 million dollars more than the amount that the Democratically controlled Congress authorized for this program when it was put into law. So there are unused monies. There is $250 million unused from prior years which is available only for the COPS program.

No, this is intelligent. This will help the big problem of law enforcement. I urge its support.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MCCOLLUM) the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Crime.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the chairman for the product he has brought out here today overall in the crime area. I think it is a good piece of legislation and it appropriates money in the right way.

The debate today, in large measure, is over flexibility, that is, over who gets to make the decisions on where to fight crime. Most of us on this side of the aisle believe that those who are on the beat, the cops on the street, the local county police, the local county commissioners, the city commissioners, are the ones that ought to be making these decisions. We have for years supported law enforcement block grant programs that sends the money back to the local communities to make those decisions on how to best fight crime.

The President, in his request, never has requested in this cycle funding for this program that has been very effective over the last few years. And so, I think that putting all of this in context it is important to see how this legislation proceeds.

There is $1.25 billion, a little over that, that was asked by the President for his COPS program. There is over $1.25 billion going to local law enforcement in this bill. It is just that about half of that is going to this program we have always thought was a great program to have, and that is a program of law enforcement block grants to let the cities and the counties and the local police decide exactly how they are going to spend this money in fighting crime, whether that is for a new jail facility, or whether that is for more cops, or whether that is for more technical equipment, or whether that is for more training, or whatever it might be. It is very important to know that that is the case.

With regard to the COPS program, the issue there is that there is actual money in here for the COPS program, $325 million in new spending in the COPS program in this bill. I think that is really significant in addition to the $250 million already there that has not been spent in the past.

And then there is a problem in the COPS program of it not being distributed in the right way. A lot of it has not gone to the localities that really need it. Many of the localities are telling us, and we are going to have an oversight hearing in our Subcommittee on Crime this next week, that they are not getting these COPS monies and they are in need of some of it.

Others are saying we can apply for this but then we do not have any funding that goes on beyond the couple of years and we cannot afford it.

So the COPS program has its problems this bill balances, and I think it is a very important approach that the chairman has drafted here.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR).

Mr. FARR of California. Mr. Speaker, I think this is probably a good conference report, but I really want to take issue with my colleagues on the block granting to local law enforcement.

I was in local law enforcement, local board of supervisors, when we had the revenue sharing program. I will tell my colleagues that a lot of these cities and counties just misuse these funds. They did not put them into the programs that are really trying to fight crimes.

I think it is unfortunate that the demand out there is in issues like drug courts. And this was level funded for drug courts. That is where we need these monies. Just to go out and buy more equipment, more fancy stuff to spruce up, that ought to be the object of local government. The big salary costs are where we can really help.

I think that the grants program is not the way to end crime in America. The way to do it is to pour more people, more personnel where the problem is. I wish the committee would put more into that effort and certainly more into the drug courts program.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington). The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) has 7½ minutes remaining.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would simply say to my colleagues here today, if they feel good about the fact that, under this bill, the United States, the greatest Nation in the world, will lose the right to cast a vote in the United Nations, then, by all means, vote for this bill. If they feel good about denying women who work for the Federal Government access to a full range of contraceptive services, then, by all means, vote for this bill. If they feel good about providing an exemption to the Endangered Species Act for the State of Alaska, then, by all means, vote for this bill. If they feel good about slashing the President's Cops on the Beat program, then, by all means, vote for this bill.

I know that the other side will bring in all kinds of whistles and bells and try to suggest that they have funded the President's program adequately. The President does not believe that, which is why, among other reasons, he is going to veto this bill.

And most of all I would say, if they believe the fantasy of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY) about Social Security, then, by all means, vote for this bill. But keep in mind, when they do that, they will make it more difficult, not easier, for us to resolve the remaining differences between us and they will simply extend the fantasy debate which has plagued Washington for the past 3 years on budgeting.

We have seen all kinds of arguments made for all kinds of appropriation bills that have come through this House so far, most of which I have voted against. I would simply say, if they feel good about voting for a bill which will contribute to the ability of this Congress to hide almost $40 billion in spending that it is actually making through gimmicks such as so-called advance appropriations or mislabeled emergencies and the like, then, by all means, vote for the bill.

I have come quite accustomed to hearing fantasy spoken on the House floor. I guess one day more will not surprise me. We will hear a lot of fantasy expressed when I sit down; and, under the rules of the House, I will not be able to answer because the other side has the right to close.

Just because they have the right to repeat fallacious arguments one more time unanswered does not mean those arguments are true. I think a lot of Members understand that, which is why this bill is going to be vetoed by the President and that veto will be sustained.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) has 7½ minutes remaining.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Speaker, as my ranking member the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) said, I find myself in a unique and somewhat, if not very much, uncomfortable situation in that I support this conference report and my ranking member, who I respect very much, does not.

I suspect when the vote is taken, it will get pretty lonely in this seat right here, as most Members of my party will probably not support this conference report. But I would like to take a few minutes to explain a couple of reasons why I do that.

First of all, I do it honestly and sincerely because I believe that the negotiations that I was involved in and my staff were involved in made this bill a much better bill than the bill that left the House. I do it with the full understanding, as I said before, that there are still problems with the bill and some are very serious.

But I also do it for another reason and a reason that very few people, if ever, mention on the House floor when it comes to discussing a bill; and that is my desire to continue to create a working atmosphere both for myself, for the subcommittee that I participate in, and perhaps for this House that goes back to a time when the bitterness was not here the way it is these days and when people could work together.

We live in a society where sometimes people from different parts of this country and from different backgrounds find it very hard to get along with each other. Perhaps if they were to be a reporter writing about the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS) and the gentleman from the Bronx, New York (Mr. SERRANO), previously from Puerto Rico, one could say there is a fine example of two people that would have a hard time working together.

It turns out to be just the opposite, that we have worked together to try to make a better bill is a fact. That we have accomplished some things is a fact. That we still disagree on some very serious points is a fact. That I believe that the philosophy between his party and mine are totally different and that I believe ours is correct and his is not, that is a fact. But to me the idea of establishing this relationship and working to make life for people in this country better on a daily basis is important for me enough to stand here in support of a conference report today that may not be supported by many on my side. But I do it, and I repeat it again, with the hope and thought that it is part of a larger picture.

But I know some will say, oh, what a naive ranking member to think that if we are nice to people and work with them they will respond. Well, sometimes it works. Sometimes if we respond properly, people respond to us.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SERRANO. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to me to say this at this moment. I want to say how much I admire and respect the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) for taking the position that he is taking.

□ 1345

It is not easy, I know, the position that he is taking. It takes a lot of courage. It takes a lot of determination, it takes a lot of perseverance and it takes a lot of plain old guts. That is what I like about the gentleman. I also like the fact that he is so easy to work with and he is also very effective.

We have mentioned some of the things in this conference report that the gentleman has been responsible for getting included since the bill passed the House and it is substantial, matters of great import not only to him but to the country. I mention briefly the SBA increases which is due solely to the gentleman's insistence, but there are many others. And so this political odd couple that he has alluded to, the gentleman from New York, this gentleman from Kentucky, sometimes we have difficulty understanding what each other is saying, but that is beside the point. I wish we had a major league baseball team in Kentucky so that I could be on an equal footing with the gentleman. He has been a model to work with. I would only say this: If others on that side of the aisle would have the good sense and the wisdom that the gentleman has exhibited during this process, we would have much better bills across the board and we would not be at standoffs. The gentleman has been a wonderful example of being the creative minority leader. I appreciate him very much.

Mr. SERRANO. I thank the gentleman. Just to cover my tracks, let me say that if other Members on his side were as courteous as he is, we could have a better working relationship, also, as parties.

Let me just close, Mr. Speaker, by saying from everything I am reading in today's papers and hearing on radio, the leaders in this House will get together with the White House this weekend, and as I said and I will say it for the third time, before the Yankees win the World Series, this will be in place.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that they listen to the fact that we tried to give them a better bill than left this House and when they make it better, they at least turn to the gentleman from Kentucky and say, "Well, it wasn't all in vain."

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I wanted just to say a word of thanks not only to the gentleman from New York and the members of the subcommittee who have worked so hard on this but most importantly I think our staffs. They are here in the room at this time and we would not be here without them. They do the work, they stay up all night, they read these bills by the thousands of pages, and we get up and take credit for it. It is really the staff that did the work. We say thank you to our staff. And, of course, to our distinguished chairman the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG) for his great work in helping us.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY), the distinguished whip.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington). The gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY) is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this bill. I think fighting crime is serious business and this legislation works to make America safer. I want to commend the two gentlemen, the ranking member and the chairman, for working together in the manner that the process is supposed to work, in working together, fashioning a bill and bringing it down without any politics involved.

Among many other provisions in this bill, there are very strong commitments to local law enforcement, juvenile crime prevention, the Drug Enforcement Agency and truth-in-sentencing programs. Important priorities are funded and the entire package keeps the budget in balance and does not spend a dime of the Social Security surplus.

This is a good bill. But it does not silence the critics of common sense who want to increase spending on everything. No matter how much funding we provide in this bill, there are always screams from the left that too much is not enough. This sophistry coming from the other side of the aisle must come to an end. The Democrats go on and on with a line of reasoning and they do not stop for anything except the truth as revealed by the facts and the bills that we are actually passing. They refer to press reports as if press are the gospel, as if you read something in the press and it is true. I have found the Washington press have yet to get it right. They use assumptions on spending that we are not doing and claim that we are spending the Social Security surplus. They say that they want more spending and they are willing to pay for it by making the tough choices. Well, that is the old shell game of tax and spend. When they say tough choices, that means increased taxes and they want more spending and they will pay for it with increased taxes.

When the Democrats were in control, they spent every dime of the Social Security surplus on government programs for over 40 years. When the Democrats were in control of this place, they never passed a balanced budget. Yet we are to believe all their Washington press reports and their specious figures.

This is not a fantasy debate. A balanced budget for 2 years in a row is not a fantasy. Paying down the debt now for 3 years in a row is not a fantasy. Locking up the Social Security surplus for 2 years in a row is not a fantasy. It is very real. The problem is their arguments are all wrong despite the evidence to the contrary.

They maintain that the Republican budget plan is irresponsible. Actually the opposite is true. I think it is very responsible to balance the budget without raiding Social Security and increasing taxes. The Democrats cannot make such claims, so they attack the budget with specious arguments. The trend is clear. We pass bills and the President vetoes them because he wants more spending. But there are only three ways to maintain a balanced budget and pay for the President's big spending programs. We are not going to raid Social Security, we are not going to raise taxes, so he will have to find cuts in the budget to spend more money. That is what we are doing.

Vote "yes" on this bill.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to comment on H.R. 2670, the Commerce, Justice, State, and the Judiciary Appropriations Act of 1999 conference report. This bill contains funding for the Department of Commerce's (DOC) Science and Technology programs.

In May of this year, the Committee on Science passed H.R. 1552, the Marine Research and Related Environmental Research and Development Programs Authorization Act of 1999, and H.R. 1553, the National Weather Service and Related Agencies Authorization Act of 1999. H.R. 1553 subsequently passed the House on May 19th and awaits Senate action.

In H.R. 2670, NOAA is funded at $2.3 billion. Within this amount, the National Weather Service (NWS) is funded at $604 million, which is a $43 million increase over the FY 1999 enacted level. This level is $13 million below the authorization in H.R. 1553 of $617.9 million, however, I believe it will provide adequate resources for the NWS. It is NOAA's highest duty to protect our citizens' life and property from severe weather and this amount is sufficient for NWS to finish its modernization and deploy critical weather observation systems. I also am pleased that the appropriators kept the Award Weather Interactive Processing Systems (AWIPS) cost-cap of 1996. This cap will protect taxpayers from unnecessary cost overruns.

This bill funds the Office of Oceanic and Atmospheric Research at NOAA at a level of $300.2 million which is $18 million over the President's request. This amount is also $16 million over the total authorizations in H.R. 1552 and H.R. 1553.

The National Sea Grant College Program is funded at $59.2 million. This is $7.7 million above the President's request. I am pleased that this total includes money for zebra mussel research. Sea Grant's cost-sharing approach with states provides a good bang for the research buck and is a good way to stretch scarce research dollars.

However, Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed that the conferees decided to include funding for a new Fisheries Research Vessel. The Commerce Inspector General and the Government Accounting Office have pointed out time and time again the need for outsourcing NOAA fleet operations. While NOAA is making some progress in the oceanographic and hydrographic outsourcing areas, there is little to no progress in the fisheries research area. In H.R. 1552, the Marine Research and Related Environmental Research and Development Programs Authorization Act of 1999, the Committee on Science directed NOAA to transfer resources to NSF to avoid having the taxpayer foot the bill for a new NOAA vessel. I urge NOAA to follow the recommendations of the Commerce I.G. and GAO and contract for vessel time instead of building new ships.

H.R. 2670 also funds the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) at $639 million for FY 2000. This amount is $99 million below the President's request and $8 million below the FY 1999 enacted amount.

First, I want to remind my colleagues that last year we appropriated $197.5 million for the Advanced Technology Program (ATP) program. We were recently informed by the Commerce Department that the ATP program would carryover $69 million of this total. Once carryover from previous years is considered, ATP spent less than $190 million in FY 1999. This bill includes $142 million in new appropriations for ATP. With the 1999 carryover, ATP will have $211 million for FY 2000. I see no reason to increase the money available for ATP when the program could not efficiently and effectively use its FY 1999 appropriation.

The Manufacturing Extension Partnership (MEP) at NIST is funded at a level of $104.8 million or $5 million over the President's request.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the construction account at NIST is funded at $108.4 million for FY 2000. After deducting a modest amount to maintain NIST facilities in Colorado and Maryland, I am optimistic that enough funds will remain to start construction of the Advanced Measurements Laboratory (AML). AML is necessary due to the precise measurements required for establishing standards associated with today's increasingly complex technologies. It is my hope that the additional funding that has resulted from this conference will enable NIST to begin construction of AML in FY 2000.

Mr. FARR of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 2670. It includes sufficiency language removing the taking of listed salmon in Alaska from the Endangered Species Act (ESA). A wholesale waiver from ESA is unacceptable for any state because it undermines the purpose of the Act and for this reason alone it will probably draw a Presidential veto.

This bill is also inadequate in its funding of our nation's ocean research, fisheries and conservation needs. The observers' program received no increase in funding; marine sanctuaries are funded $10 million below the President's request; fisheries habitat restoration was zeroed out—that's $23 million below the President's budget. Now is not the time to be neglecting the oceans or reducing our commitment to understanding their processes. Not now, when we have disasters occurring around the country and we do not understand the causes nor can we suggest solutions.

In Alaska, Stellar Sea Lions continue to decline despite decreased interference with the pollack fishery and we don't know why. The Bering Sea ecosystem has changed in some way resulting in the deaths of 10 percent of the Gray Whale population, but we don't understand what the changes in the ecosystem are that have led to this.

On Long Island Sound, lobster men and women began reporting dead lobsters last month. From 8 percent to 13 percent of the lobsters caught in traps are dead or dying, and a total of as many as a million lobsters may have died. Although die-offs have occurred in other years, this appears to be the worst in nearly a decade. Why are the lobster dying? No one knows.

Runoff from Hurricane Floyd has resulted in a 350 square mile dead zone off of Pamlico Sound, North Carolina and no one has any idea what the lasting effects will be. In the Gulf of Mexico, we have a dead zone the size of the state of New Jersey. Some say this is the result of nutrient runoff, but no one really knows. We have insufficient funds to study this disaster.

In the Northeast, the groundfish population declines while the Canadian seal herd population climbs. Is there a relationship? We don't know because there are no funds to study the factors decimating the groundfish population in New England. In my own district the Pacific Fishery Management Council is about to reduce the catch for my fishermen by 75 percent because of overfishing. However, there is a dispute between the fishermen and scientists on whether or not management decisions are based on data collected from the right fish populations. No one really knows for sure because fishery management studies are underfunded.

In Florida we have 3 toxic, deadly, and unexplainable red tides. Red tides have become much more common in the last decade, but we do not know what causes them.

Mr. Speaker, we do know that the sea drives climate and weather, regulates and stabilizes the planet's temperature, generates more than 70 percent of the oxygen in the atmosphere, absorbs much of the carbon dioxide that is generated, and otherwise shapes planetary chemistry. We also know that ocean community is in crisis. Therefore, I must oppose this bill that places our oceans as such a low priority.

Equally as troubling as the shortfall in funding for our oceans, is lack of adequate funding for the COPS program. It is unconscionable that this year's federal budget contains only $325 million for the COPS program.

COPS has awarded state and local law enforcement agencies with nearly $6 billion to fund hiring and redeployment of more than 100,000 officers. I have heard repeatedly from local law enforcement officials on the Central Coast that the need for continued robust federal funding for the COPS program is critical to help them continue highly successful crime-fighting initiatives. But providing Central Coast residents with safe communities requires resources beyond local capabilities.

Several of my communities have been awarded special COPS grants including the Youth Firearms Violence Initiative and the Community Policing to Combating Domestic Violence. These programs have helped local law enforcement officials implement highly effective community policing strategies to target specific problems, neighborhoods and crimes. If all politics is local, certainly all crime is local.

Crime doesn't wear a political button identifying party affiliation. Republican conferees shouldn't be playing politics with highly effective anti-crime programs.

Furthermore, conferees shouldn't be playing politics with arrearage funds. The United States currently owes more than $1 billion in unpaid dues to the United Nations—giving our country the dubious distinction of being the single largest debtor nation to the U.N. Tying those funds to an authorization bill that hasn't been signed into law since 1994 is a sham.

The United Nations provides educational and economic assistance to people around the world, working to reduce hunger and malnutrition, improve education, and provide assistance to refugees. In short, the role of the U.N. in world affairs is critical and invaluable, and our unwillingness to contribute our fair share to the U.N. threatens the health, welfare, and security of our country and others.

I encourage my colleagues to oppose this bill and demand that conferees address these issues that affect our national security, safety and environmental health.

Mr. RODRIGUEZ. Mr. Speaker, I oppose the conference report on H.R. 2670, the Commerce, Justice, State and Judiciary Appropriations Act of 1999. The funding cuts for the Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS), fund usage restriction on the U.S. Census Bureau, and failure to include the Hate Crimes Prevention Act, make this bill unacceptable.

COPS has helped make America safe. Crime rates have dropped dramatically since the program's inception. Texas alone has received funding totaling more than $300 million, placing almost 5,000 additional law enforcement officers on our streets to protect neighborhoods, schools and businesses. My district has received more than $15 million in COPS funding, allowing local police and sheriff's departments to add 238 officers. I am a strong believer in this hallmark program which has been a substantial investment in the security of schools, cities, counties and states across the country.

After more than two years of negotiations, a Supreme Court decision, and a final budget agreement on the 2000 census, I was disappointed to hear of the undue "frameworks" restriction on census funding. Congress should not continue to micro-manage an institution that has historically remained independent in discharging its constitutional duty. I cannot support this language and believe the Census Bureau's objections to it are well-founded.

Finally, as a co-sponsor of the Hate Crimes Prevention Act, I am disappointed that the conference report does not include this language. In light of recent incidents involving hate motivated killings across America, we in Congress need to send a strong signal that federal law will add a level of protection to currently unprotected classes while posing a deterrent to those who would use physical violence to further their prejudiced passions.

I urge my colleagues to oppose this legislation and work with the Administration in fashioning acceptable levels of funding for COPS, removing restrictive language on the Census, and including language which would further punish those who commit crimes of hate.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations bill before us today. I wish to express my appreciation for the efforts of the Ranking Member, Mr. SERRANO, and Chairman ROGERS in working with members thus far. I want to stress that this is not a perfect bill. There is still much work to be done. However, I will be voting for the bill to express my optimism that those concerns will be addressed, as many others have been throughout this process. It is my hope that the final version of this bill will illustrate the bi-partisan manner that the Chairman and Ranking Member have stressed all along.

I am particularly pleased that $1.5 million is allocated for construction of a plant studies research laboratory at the New York Botanical Garden. The Garden is recognized as the premier institution in botanical research in the United States. Funding this new facility ensures that the Garden will enhance its pre-eminent status and continue to attract scientists and scholars from around the world. It is my sincere hope that continued research at the Garden will improve public health, generate economic growth, and secure our place as the world leader in plant research.

Mr. Speaker, as I vote in favor of the CJS Appropriations bill today, I am confident that the continued efforts of the Chairman and the Ranking Member will result in overwhelming support for this legislation.

Mr. CAPUANO. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in opposition to the FY 2000 Commerce, Justice, State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Conference Report. I opposed H.R. 2670 because it lacked sufficient funding for several essential federal programs, and I once again must oppose the conference report because it fails to address the vital funding shortfalls identified in the House bill.

More than 200 years ago our founding fathers provided within the Constitution a framework for a national census to be conducted every ten years. Unfortunately, language contained in the conference report places unnecessary restrictions that will ultimately obstruct the Census Bureau's ability to conduct a complete and accurate census. While the conference report provides $4.47 billion for the Census Bureau, it contains language that restricts the Bureau's management of these funds. This language would require congressional approval in the form of a reprogramming for any movement of funds between decennial program components. Counting every man, woman, and child within the United States requires a tremendous amount of effort, support, and resources. This represents a dramatic departure from past practices and takes place at precisely the time when Census 2000 activities peak and when the need for program flexibility is most crucial to ensure a successful count.

With respect to the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS), the conference report provides $3 billion, $26 million below the Administration's request. INS must receive adequate funding if it is to be successful in providing enhanced border patrols, reducing its enormous backlog and maintaining its current applications. The $26 million shortfall will hurt the INS in its efforts to become more effective and efficient.

Another area of insufficient funding can be found within the Advanced Technology Program (ATP) conducted by the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST). The ATP was established in 1988 to encourage companies to take greater risks in new and innovative basic research technologies. Successfully partnering public and private businesses working together to develop technology in all areas, over 700 organizations in 40 states including 104 joint ventures have a role in ATP projects. Last year's appropriation levels provided $197.5 million for ATP. This year the Administration requested $238.7 million, of which $137.6 million would continue to fund existing projects. However, the conference report provides only $142 million, barely enough to keep existing programs alive. The ATP is a catalyst for industries to develop and invest in high-risk technologies. Without this important program, individual companies will be less inclined to pursue these technological developments.

Additionally, international programs within the State Department are abhorrently underfunded. Only $885.2 million is provided for contributions to international organizations. Not only is this funding level $78 million below the President's request, but it is also $37 million below last year's appropriation levels. Due to the unforeseen breakout of conflicts in Kosovo, and more recently in East Timor, the United States directed large amounts of federal funds toward restoring and maintaining peace in these regions. In order to continue our efforts to preserve peace and promote human rights and democratic principles throughout the world, we must sufficiently support our men and women who are acting as peacekeepers. Much to my dismay, this report provides only $200 million for contributions to international peacekeeping efforts, nearly $35 million below the Administration's request and $31 million less than FY99.

Adding insult to injury, this report fails to adequately address U.S. payments to the United Nations (UN). Currently, the United States owes over $1 billion in back dues to the UN. In recent years, $508 million has been provided to address this issue, but these funds have not gone to the UN because the funds are connected to controversial family planning legislation. According to Article 19 of the UN Charter, if we fail to pay at least $153 million, we will automatically lose our vote in the UN General Assembly. Unfortunately, the $351 million for UN arrearage payments provided in this report is contingent upon passage of possibly contentious legislation. By holding these funds hostage, we are playing a dangerous game with a highly respected international organization, and we are losing face, force, and credibility within the international community.

I also have deep reservations regarding the funding that is contained in the conference report for programs under the jurisdiction of the Department of Justice. The conference report significantly limits the ability of law enforcement officials to enforce and maintain a safe and secure environment. I am disappointed by the drastic reduction in funding for the Community Oriented Policing Initiative (COPS), in which only $325 million of the $1.275 billion that the President requested was provided for the program. These funds were to have been used to extend the COPS Initiative and allow local police departments to hire up to an additional 50,000 police officers over the next few years. Such a significant reduction in funding threatens to undermine the efficacy of the COPS Initiative, which has been a major contributor to the dramatic drop in the crime rate since 1994 and has resulted in the hiring of an additional 100,000 police officers nationwide.

Lastly, the conference report fails to include the Hate Crimes Prevention Act, a measure of which I am a cosponsor. Though included in the Senate-passed version of the bill, this language is not contained in the conference report. The Hate Crimes legislation strengthens the current federal hate crimes statute by making it easier to prosecute crimes based on race, color, religion, and national origin. The measure also expands coverage to include hate crimes based on sexual orientation, gender and disability. By failing to include this legislation, I believe Congress is missing an opportunity to strengthen the current hate crime statute.

Mr. Speaker, I am frustrated and disappointed that many of these valuable and essential programs were not adequately funded in this conference report and urge my colleagues to oppose final passage. If this report passes, I urge the President to veto this legislation so that we may have another opportunity to correct this seriously flawed bill.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Commerce, Justice, State and Judiciary Appropriations Conference Report for FY 2000. I continue to have reservations about this legislation some of which led me to oppose the initial bill presented to the House. I understand the strong opposition the bill may encounter, as well as the President's anticipated veto of the conference report in its current form. However, the legislation before us is greatly improved and Chairman ROGERS, under very difficult conditions, has made his best efforts to accommodate the needs of the minority on the subcommittee.

I want to thank Chairman ROGERS; our ranking member, Mr. SERRANO; and their capable staffs for their hard work in bringing this conference report to the floor. This is a bill that is problematic in the best of circumstances; the current circumstances—where spending constraints, budget gamesmanship and gimmickry, and political posturing have hampered the Appropriations Committee's ability to do its job—have made it much more contentious.

Let me highlight a few important provisions and positive additions to the legislation contained in this conference report.

I agree that the emergency designation for census funding is inappropriate. But I am relieved that we have fully funded the 2000 census and hope we can now all concentrate our efforts on obtaining the most accurate count possible.

The legislation provides $585 million in funding for State criminal alien assistance—the same level as last year and $85 million above the budget request. While we need to keep in mind that this level provides reimbursement for less than half of the costs that incarceration of criminal illegal aliens imposes on States and localities, the conference level is substantially above the $100 million approved by the Senate.

The conference report includes $287 million in funding for juvenile crime and delinquency prevention programs. These important programs help deter young people from becoming involved in criminal activity.

The conference report continues an important initiative to fight methamphetamine which is the fastest growing abused drug in our Nation. The legislation provides $36 million in grants to States for this purpose, including $18 million for the California Bureau of Narcotics Enforcement. Unfortunately, labs in my State continue to be major suppliers of this lethal drug.

The funding level for the Legal Services Corporation (LSC) has been greatly improved in conference, increasing from $250 million in the House passed bill to $300 million in the legislation before us. This will enable LSC to continue its support to local legal aid agencies which provide vital civil legal services for the poor—ensuring access to legal redress for all Americans.

Funding for the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) has been increased to $1.66 billion from the inadequate House passed level of $1.475 billion—which was nearly $300 million below the budget request. The extreme weather this Nation has experienced from the El Nino and La Nina events of recent years to this year's hurricanes underscores the importance of NOAA's work. In California, the agency's climate observation programs and coastal and marine stewardship are essential to our environment and economy.

The Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice was underfunded in the House bill. The division's work is vital to safeguarding the interests of the American consumer and the fair operation of the market in our economy. The conference committee provides the division with $110 million, a needed increase over the $105 million passed by the House.

Some of my colleagues will raise serious, legitimate concerns about this conference report—many of which I share. I too am unsatisfied with several funding levels in this bill, as well as certain legislative provisions that were added in conference.

The conference report provides only $325 million for the Cops on the Beat Program, $950 million below the President's request. While this level is an improvement from the House bill, it is woefully inadequate. This program has enabled communities all across this Nation, including Los Angeles, to hire additional police officers which has contributed to the significant reduction in crime we now enjoy—seven consecutive years of reductions in crime, and the lowest murder rate since 1967. We should continue to build on this success by funding this program and providing more police officers, better policing technology, and hiring community prosecutors.

I also am disturbed by the funding levels in this conference report for the enforcement of our civil rights laws—particularly in light of many recent events.

This conference report reduces the funding passed by the House for the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department to $72 million, $10 million below the President's request. At a time when many of our communities are experiencing serious crises of confidence in law enforcement agencies, we should be fully funding an agency that can help restore that confidence. Recent police shootings in my congressional district, as well as in the ranking member's district, have undermined community trust in law enforcement. By providing independent investigation into the pattern or practice of discrimination by law enforcement, the Civil Rights Division helps restore trust in communities like Los Angeles.

The conference report provides no increase for the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, which protects our civil rights in the workplace. The agency continues to reduce its backlog of cases, but needs and deserves Congressional support to enhance those efforts.

While funding levels for the programs of the Small Business Administration are increased, I continue to be concerned about the adequacy of the "salaries and expenses" account. We need to take care that the SBA's efforts to expand Small Business opportunities are not undermined by inadequate staffing levels.

Clearly, I wish that the bill before you addressed these and other unmet needs. I regret that the House and Senate could not reach out in a bipartisan fashion and embrace the hate crimes legislation contained in the Senate bill. I also regret the addition of a provision waiving the Endangered Species Act with respect to Alaskan salmon; the majority continues to use appropriations bills to thwart important environmental protections.

Notwithstanding these concerns, the conference report before you is a significant improvement over the version the House adopted in August. Based on those improvements and the importance of many of these programs to my community, my State, and the Nation, I choose to give it my support today.

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to voice my objections to the FY 2000 Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations Conference Report. The Conference Report before us today is deficient in two key areas: it lacks the Hate Crimes legislation that was included by the Senate version and it withholds payment of our financial obligations to the United Nations unless the State Department Authorization bill is first signed into law.

Mr. Speaker, the Hate Crimes Prevention Act of 1999 is cosponsored by myself and 184 of my colleagues and has passed the Senate. It is disappointing that the Conferees receded to the House on this measure, when it enjoys such broad support and is so sorely needed.

Just a few weeks ago, our Country was shocked when a gunman entered a Jewish Community Center in Los Angeles shooting at innocent children. His intent "sending a message by killing Jews."

One year ago, in Laramie, Wyoming, a young man named Matthew Shepard was killed. The reason, because he was gay. Now, with the removal of the Hate Crimes provision by the Conferees on the anniversary of his brutal murder, it is a double tragedy for his family.

In Jasper, Texas, a man was murdered and dragged through the streets because he was African-American.

All of these incidents are Hate Crimes, and they do not just affect the group that was killed, they affect all Americans.

This is especially troubling to me because of the rash of anti-immigrant billboards and posters in my district, which falsely blame immigrants for societal problems. Having spent my entire life in Queens, I recognize the problems faced daily by minorities and strive to eliminate any form of discrimination still present in our society.

I believe the "Hate Crimes Prevention Act of 1999" is a constructive and measured response to a problem that continues to plague our nation—violence motivated by prejudice.

This legislation is also needed because many States lack comprehensive hate crimes laws.

Now, I know some people believe that hate is not an issue when prosecuting a crime. They say our laws already punish the criminal act and that our laws are strong enough.

I answer with the most recent figures from 1997, when 8,049 hate crimes were reported in the United States. And, according to the FBI, hate crimes are under reported, so the actual figure is much higher.

And I say to my colleagues, penalties for committing a murder are increased if the murder happens during the commission of a crime. Murdering a police officer is considered first degree murder, even if there was no premeditation. Committing armed robbery carries a higher punishment than petty larceny.

There are degrees to crime. And committing a crime against someone because of their race, color, sex, sexual orientation, religion, ethnicity or other group should warrant a different penalty. These crimes are designed to send a message. We don't like your kind and here is what we are going to do about it.

So why can't we punish crimes motivated by hate differently than other crimes?

Mr. Speaker, this legislation does not punish free speech as some have contended. Nowhere does it say, you can't hold a certain political view or believe in a particular philosophy. What it does say, is that if you commit a violent act because of those beliefs, you will be punished.

Hate crimes laws are also constitutional. The U.S. Supreme Court's ruling in Wisconsin v. Mitchell unanimously upheld a Wisconsin statute which gave enhanced sentences to a defendant who intentionally selects a victim because of the person's race, religion, color, disability, sexual orientation, or nation of origin. Once again, I would like to express my disappointment and frustration at the actions of the Conferees for failing to include this provision.

Mr. Speaker, the second area of deficiency in this legislation is the provision withholding the U.S. payment of our financial obligations to the United Nations until the State Department Authorization bill is signed into law. I am both saddened and troubled by this provision because in all likelihood, this legislation will not be signed into law because of the continuing fight over linking the unrelated issue of family planning to our U.N. arrears payment.

For several years, critical funds earmarked for payment of America's debt to the U.N. have been linked to the unrelated issue of U.S. bilateral family planning programs.

These issues deserve to be considered on their own individual merits and should not be linked. Withholding money from the United Nations damages the financial viability of this essential institution. In addition, it jeopardizes our relations with even our closest allies, who are owed millions in peacekeeping reimbursements that have gone unpaid due to the financial shortfall at the U.N. created by the more than $1 billion in U.S. debt. Our credibility has been damaged. We must stand by our legal responsibility and moral obligation to pay our outstanding debts to the U.N.

The U.N. plays an important role in the world today. Efforts to reduce infant mortality, immunize children, eradicate deadly diseases, protect innocent civilians in war torn nations, and feed starving families serve to clearly demonstrate that supporting the United Nations saves lives.

I believe we should do everything we can to prevent and reduce the number of abortions. That is why I am committed to de-linking the Smith amendment policy from UN arrears. U.S. law already states that no money can be spent on abortions; this includes our overseas funding. And, neither the United Nations nor United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA, which provides voluntary family planning services to poor countries) provide abortion services of any kind, nor do they promote abortion as a method of family planning. UNFPA actually reduces the number of abortions by teaching women how to practice safe and effective birth control.

The Smith amendment policy is a prohibition on activities supported by USAID, not the United Nations. Put another way, the Smith amendment language relates to US-supported family planning activities in other countries, not the activities of the United Nations. There is no link whatsoever between the Smith amendment and the United Nations. This policy doesn't apply to the United Nations because, as I said, the UN does not promote or perform abortions. Nonetheless, some Members of the House have consistently linked it to the UN, creating the US debt to the UN of more than $1 billion.

Mr. Speaker, the issue of our UN arrears is a serious one. The United States has been quick to criticize the UN for a host of perceived failures. The slow response to the needs of refugees from Kosova, the failure to stop Slobodan Milosevic and paramilitaries in East Timor, and the list goes on. But what many fail to realize, is that for the UN to succeed in its endeavors, it takes the necessary resources.

By failing to pay our obligations, we limit the UN's ability to prevent the spread of violence. And in the end, this costs the U.S. more money. How much would we have saved if we didn't need to fight an air war in the Balkans? How much would we have saved if the UN had the resources to prevent the crisis in Bosnia? And how much money would we save if the UN had the resources to prevent future crises before they start? By not paying our obligation, we are costing the American taxpayer more in the long run.

Mr. Speaker, when we fail to pay our financial obligation to the United Nations, we are also hurting America's credibility. Many have made this statement, but what does it mean? It means that the US's ability to effectively influence international treaties and conferences is being negatively impacted. It means countries want us off the UN Budget Committee, where many of the US's criticisms about the UN are debated. And, even worse, it means the US is in danger of losing its vote in the General Assembly. There will be no vote on this, no one to sway or cajole, the UN charter is clear, members who do not meet their financial obligations for two years lose their vote. How can the US promote its agenda when we can't even vote on the outcome? Who will listen to us on such vital issues as gaining Israel admittance to the Western Europe and Other Group at the UN? Who will take our reform efforts seriously?

How would my colleagues feel if a deadbeat dad said our system of child support payments needed to be reformed? Well, that is how our allies feel about us. We are the deadbeat dad at the UN. We helped create this organization. We helped instill it with democratic principles. We ensured our place on the Security Council where the most important UN decisions are made. And we have shut off our support. This must stop.

Mr. Speaker, I do not speak for myself alone on this, I speak for a vast majority of the American people. According to our best polling data, Americans support the United Nations. In fact, 73 percent of Americans support paying our UN dues and believe UN membership is beneficial to the US. This issue is too important to ignore and hope it will go away. As we debate this issue, UN employees are being killed, UN resources are dwindling and US credibility is melting away. It must stop and I am casting my vote against this Conference, like many of my colleagues, because it fails to live up to our international commitments.

Mr. Speaker, while the failure to include Hate Crimes legislation and the provision preventing US payment of our financial obligations are two key issues for my opposition to this Conference Report, I am also concerned about two other important provisions. First, the Conference Report under funds the COPS Initiative. The President had requested $1.275 billion to extend the COPS program and effectively put 50,000 more police officers on the street. This Conference Report only includes $325 million of that request.

Second, I am concerned about the provision limiting the ability of the Census to move funds around from one activity to another when they have problems during the Census. Such a provision is unprecedented and places in danger an accurate census count of every American. A number of my colleagues and I have been working very closely with Census Bureau Director D. Kenneth Prewitt to make the 2000 Census the most accurate one in history. To include language preventing an accurate Census breaks the pact the US Government has with the American people to ensure they receive the services and representation they are Constitutionally entitled to through an accurate census.

Mr. Speaker, the President has already indicated his intention to veto this legislation. I hope that when negotiations take place on this measure these important issues will be resolved favorably.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the conference report.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

Pursuant to clause 10 of rule XX, the yeas and nays are ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 215, nays 213, not voting 6, as follows:

STUDENT RESULTS ACT OF 1999

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Madam Speaker, by the direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 336 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 336

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 2) to send more dollars to the classroom and for certain other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against consideration of the bill are waived. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed 90 minutes equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Education and the Workforce. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule for a period not to exceed six hours. It shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Education and the Workforce now printed in the bill. The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered as read. All points of order against the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute are waived. No amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be in order except those printed in the portion of the Congressional Record designated for that purpose in clause 8 of rule XVIII and except pro forma amendments for the purpose of debate. Each amendment so printed may be offered only by the Member who caused it to be printed or his designee and shall be considered as read. The amendment numbered 5 shall not be subject to amendment and shall not be subject to a demand for division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may: (1) postpone until a time during further consideration in the Committee of the Whole a request for a recorded vote on any amendment; and (2) reduce to five minutes the minimum time for electronic voting on any postponed question that follows another electronic vote without intervening business, provided that the minimum time for electronic voting on the first in any series of questions shall be 15 minutes. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommend with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. EMERSON). The gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. PRYCE) is recognized for 1 hour.

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Madam Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield 30 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Madam Speaker, House Resolution 336 is a modified, open rule that provides for consideration of H.R. 2, the Student Results Act. The legislation authorizes Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, as well as a number of other programs, which assist some of our Nation's neediest students.

Over the years, educational programs for the disadvantaged have failed to accomplish their core mission: closing the achievement gap between wealthy and poor students. And while the Title I program has its faults, its shortcomings have not led us to abandon it. We believe that through thoughtful, common sense reforms in Title I, we can make some real progress for children and achieve the results we have been striving for for more than 30 years.

The Students Results Act improves upon the existing Title I program not only by increasing our investment in education, but also providing for greater accountability, more parental involvement, well-trained teachers and local flexibility to implement school reforms that work. I, for one, am looking forward to today's debate, because it is not about who can spend more money; we are increasing Title I funding in this bill. Instead, it is about new ideas and having the courage to admit some failures and move in a new direction.

Under the rule, the House will have 90 minutes to engage in general debate, which will be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Education and the Workforce. Let me take this opportunity to congratulate the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING), the chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, for his hard work and determination through a lengthy markup process to put this bipartisan legislation together. His committee reported it by a vote of 42-to-6.

It is always great to have bipartisan agreement on an issue as crucial to our Nation's future as education. The bill has earned even the administration's support. Still, some of our colleagues would like a chance to amend it. Therefore, the Committee on Rules has provided for an open amendment process.

Under this rule, any Member who wishes to improve upon H.R. 2 may offer any germane amendment, as long as it is preprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

In the case of the manager's amendment numbered 5 in the RECORD, the rule provides that it will not be subject to amendment or to a demand for a division of the question.

To ensure that debate on H.R. 2 is adequate, yet focused, the rule provides for a reasonable time cap of 6 hours during which amendments may be considered. Overall, the House will have almost 9 hours to debate the provisions of and changes to the Students Results Act, which should be more than ample time, given the bill's widespread support.

To further facilitate consideration of H.R. 2, the rule allows the Chair to postpone votes and reduce voting time to 5 minutes on a postponed question, as long as it is followed by a 15-minute vote. After the bill is considered for amendment, the rule provides for another chance to make changes to the bill through the customary motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Madam Speaker, Title I is the anchor of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act and it is the largest Federal and elementary education program.

Since its creation in 1965, taxpayers have provided over $120 billion in funding to teach disadvantaged children.

The initial investment in title I back in 1965 was $960 million, which grew to $7.7 billion by 1999. H.R. 2 continues our commitment to disadvantaged kids by authorizing more than $8 billion for title I next year, but we are not just throwing more money at education and claiming victory. We know that more dollars will not automatically translate into smarter kids. H.R. 2 strengthens academic performance by holding all States, school districts and individual schools accountable for ensuring that their students meet high academic standards.

One incentive to produce results will come through the promise of cash rewards to title I schools that close the achievement gap between students.

The success or failure of title I schools will be documented in annual report cards that will be distributed to parents and communities; and when schools fail to show improvement parents will be given the opportunity to take their children out of failing schools and enroll them in other public or charter schools. It is simply unfair to trap children in schools where they cannot learn so we give them a bit of freedom, including money for transportation to a new school through this legislation.

The Student Results Act also recognizes that good results cannot be gotten without well-trained teachers. Good teachers are our best chance to help our children succeed. H.R. 2 ensures that all newly hired teachers funded by title I dollars are fully qualified by raising the standard for teachers' aides.

Under the bill, teaching assistants will need to have 2 or more years of college education or an associates degree. Local communities will have greater flexibility to ensure their Federal dollars are meeting the real needs of their student population. For example, local education agencies will be able to combine and commingle Federal funds to address the needs of small rural school districts or the needs of Indian children.

These are just a few of the reforms the Student Results Act will make to move our Federal education policy toward the principle of accountability, quality teaching, and local control.

There are also a number of other programs authorized in this legislation, including migrant education; neglected and delinquent youth; magnet school assistance; Native American, Hawaiian and Alaskan programs; gifted and talented students; rural education; and the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance program.

The reforms made in these programs through H.R. 2 will move us away from the Washington-knows-best model of the past to a policy that equips parents, communities, and schools with the resources, authority, and accountability to ensure that every uniquely talented child has the opportunity to succeed.

Madam Speaker, I encourage my colleagues to join in today's debate about the future of our children and our Nation by supporting this fair rule that will provide for a full debate on a key component of our Federal education policy. I urge a yes vote on both the rule and the Student Results Act.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I thank my good friend, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. PRYCE), for yielding me the time.

Madam Speaker, House Resolution 336 provides for the consideration of the underlying bill H.R. 2, the Student Results Act. This is a modified open rule which limits debate on amendments to the bill to 6 hours. This means the clock may run out on amendments which Members have prepared and which deserve to be heard.

Madam Speaker, it is not as though the House has considered such a plethora of landmark legislation that we do not have a little extra time to discuss and debate how best we give our children a quality education, but the rule inhibits that debate. Last night in the Committee on Rules a motion was offered for an open rule with no limitation on time, but it was rejected.

The rule also depends on a preprinting requirement which further works to limit the exchange of ideas. These are defects in this rule which should not go unnoticed. At the same time, I should point out the rule expressly includes the opportunity for a very important amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK) and numerous other colleagues who share my very deep concern with the issue of gender equity.

Since 1974, the Women's Educational Equity Act has provided teachers, administrators, and parents with the resources, materials, and tools to combat inequitable educational practices. The act trains teachers to treat girls and boys fairly in the classroom, and allows the training of teachers to encourage girls to pursue the careers and higher-education degrees in science, engineering, and technology, careers they very well may want but are actually discouraged from pursuing.

The act also funds the Center for Women's Educational Programming, which conducts vital research on effective approaches to closing the gender gap in education, as well as developing curriculum and model programs to ensure that these effective approaches are implemented.

From its inception, this act has funded over 700 programs while requests for information and assistance continue to grow. From February to August of this year, the Resource Center received over 750 requests for technical assistance, and that is a lot of requests for a country that presumes it has reached gender equity, as my colleagues on the other side of the aisle would have us believe.

The question today is not, What needs does it meet? It is obvious that it meets the important gender equity needs of our public education system. And the question before us today is why should we reauthorize the Women's Educational Equity Act? The majority would have us believe that we should not reauthorize it. They argue that gender equity has been accomplished and gender inequity or discrimination in the classroom is a thing of the past or does not exist, but this is not the case.

According to a recent report conducted by the American Association of University Women, women are close to 50 percent of America's population. Yet they earn only 7 percent of the engineering degrees and 36 percent of the math degrees. Women are only 3 percent of CEOs at Fortune 500 companies, but in the face of such statistics the majority considers gender equity programs no longer useful. They would rather ignore these statistics and allow girls' educational needs to be neglected. They would rather we eliminate a current long-standing program that ensures fairness and equal opportunities in our classrooms that would ultimately undermine our commitment to title IX, which has been so helpful to young women in this society.

Madam Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote in support of the Mink/Woolsey/Sanchez/Morella amendment to the Student Results Act. This amendment will reauthorize the Women's Equity Act and reaffirm our commitment to gender equity. The importance is as important today as it was in 1974. To this very day, guidance counselors are advising young women away from the careers that they would like to have, careers in science and math, and urging them to go into five fields which have generally over the years been delegated only to women.

We cannot afford to waste that brain power in the United States, Madam Speaker; and those of us who are the mothers and grandmothers of young women insist that they be given equal opportunity to achieve everything that they want to achieve. So I want to urge my colleagues, please do not slam the door to gender equity on America's girls, just as they are starting to walk through it. The gender equity provision being left out is a glaring omission in a bill which otherwise has many meritorious provisions.

Madam Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER), the very distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DREIER. Madam Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. PRYCE), for yielding me this time.

Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of this very fair and balanced modified open rule. Improving public education, when we put together the list of priorities that we wanted to address in the 106th Congress, was number one. We went through the issues of providing tax relief to working families, rebuilding our defense capabilities, saving Social Security and Medicare; but when we began that list, we had improving public education up there because we know that if our Nation is going to remain competitive globally we have to do what we can to bring about that kind of improvement.

We moved forward earlier in this Congress by passing the Education Flexibility Act, and I am very pleased that the President agreed to sign that measure. It took a little while to get him there, but I am very pleased that he did. This legislation is similar in that it enjoys bipartisan support, and I hope it will gain the President's signature also.

The public education improvement bill is based on four very simple basic and easily understandable principles: quality, accountability, public school choice, which is very important, and flexibility.

The bill will improve educational opportunities available for children that already face the many challenges that accompany poverty in this country. It is simply not acceptable that the public education system is failing our Nation's disadvantaged children. It is clearly time to shift our focus to a results-based education system. For the sake of the children, we cannot accept anything less than the best. We need clear improvements in academic achievement at the local and the State level.

As we focus on actual results, we need to reward progress. This legislation will allow States to reward the schools that are successful at closing the achievement gap between children of different income levels. We are moving in the right direction on education; and, again, it is good that we are enjoying bipartisan support in that quest.

We are investing in quality public schools, and we are demanding real results. We are showing that Congress is committed to success, but we are giving State and local leaders the flexibility to develop the solutions. Most important, we are relying on parents, teachers, and principals to make good choices because we trust them to do what is best for our Nation's young people. This is a very, very good piece of legislation. I know that we are going to be dealing with several amendments on it; but when we finally get through with it, I hope we will have a very strong, overwhelming vote and that we will be able to again get a presidential signature on it.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. RODRIGUEZ).

Mr. RODRIGUEZ. Madam Speaker, I rise today in opposition to H.R. 2, the so-called Student Results Act. What this really is is an attempt to block access to educational services for certain groups of this country. As we all know, title I serves as the cornerstone of Federal support for students most at risk of low educational achievement. Included in this profile for serving at risk students are limited English proficiency youngsters.

During the last reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, it was decided that the limited English proficiency students were entitled to educational services under the same basis that other children receive under title I; and I repeat, they are entitled to the same basis of education under title I.

All of a sudden now we have a different provision in H.R. 2 that will essentially deny access for millions of limited English proficiency youngsters in title I educational services. The schools in my district and throughout the State of Texas and this country are committed to providing limited English proficiency youngsters with the necessary language support services to ensure that limited English proficiency students achieve high academic standards.

The language in the legislation as it stands now would prohibit schools in my district and throughout the country from providing this necessary language support services for students until the parent provides consent. Why are we picking only on this particular group? Why do we not have, for example, the disabled ask for consent? Why do we not have Anglo children have to get their parents to get an okay? We do not have that. We have decided to pick on limited English proficiency youngsters. As we move forward, in terms of students, we have to look at them as a whole. It is simply ridiculous to think that by singling out the limited English proficiency youngsters to say that it is fair, it is not.

It is discriminatory. It is discriminatory unless it is applied to every single child. If we look at the language the way it is written, it is very obvious that anyone could see that those youngsters are being picked on.

If we want to talk about parental involvement, then I am ready to support parental involvement. I am ready to require that parents need to show up in the classroom. I am ready to make sure that we have those programs to get them involved.

□ 1445

But for them to be the only ones within this particular piece of legislation, for them to be required to have to come up and sign for parental consent, it is unfair, and it is discriminatory.

I would like to urge my colleagues to think long and hard about supporting legislation that picks on children. Plus this legislation raises serious questions about the whole issue in terms of how we are denying access of these educational opportunities to these individuals.

As far as I am concerned, the parental consent provision on Title I violates the Civil Rights Act of 1964, and there is no way that we should stand for that. I ask my colleagues to seriously consider voting no.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK).

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Madam Speaker, I never thought the time would come again when I would have to come to the floor and speak out against any changes in gender equity for our women and for our girls. Each of my colleagues has women and girls in their family, and we must continue to be sure that they receive the equity that they deserve.

So I rise in support of efforts being made today, particularly the Woolsey-Sanchez-Morella amendment, an amendment which is coming up pretty soon, to reauthorize the Women's Educational Equity Act.

Because of our far-reaching legislative efforts to ensure gender equity, America is much more equal today and more educated, and it is a more prosperous Nation. But to be sure, we cannot relax any of our efforts as long as we are leaning toward equity. To be sure, much has been accomplished, but there is still a gender gap in America's schools, and we cannot afford that to happen.

The changing Nation that we live in today, and it is constantly changing as we enter the new millennium, demands a more gender-fair education, not a less one. It is even more important now than it was years ago to be sure to prepare our women to enter the new century.

Prior to the enactment of the Women's Educational Equity Act in 1974, only 18 percent of women had completed 4 or more years of college compared to 26 percent of all men. Though America is far more equal since the enactment of the Women's Educational Equity Act, it is not equal. Because it is not equal, we must continue our efforts.

Despite many gains women have made toward equal education attainment and our accompanying gains in the labor force, our earnings are only 80 percent of the earnings of our male counterparts. What do my colleagues think led to that? What led to that was that the educational efforts have been improved, but our salaries have not.

If America is to be her true creed and to her level best, we must continue the work we have begun to eradicate discrimination based on gender. Discrimination anywhere, Madam Speaker, whether it is based on gender, whether it is based on race, whatever it is based upon is unequal, and it is not good for our wonderful country of America.

Yes, there have been peaks and valleys in this process, but we cannot ignore the fact that inequality and discrimination still remain in the fabric of our lives even as we close out this century.

Madam Speaker, we want to be sure to support every facet of the Women's Educational Equity Act as well as the Woolsey amendment.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Madam Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. CLEMENT).

Mr. CLEMENT. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER) who does such a wonderful job representing our interests, like the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLAY).

I know on this particular issue I want to brag on the Republicans, too. It appears like we do have something that we can agree on. This year has not been the most productive year I have been in Congress. But I will say to my colleagues that, if we can rally around the flag and do something for education, that is important for all of us. Because I stand before my colleagues as a former college president for 4½ years prior to being elected to the United States Congress. I am also co-chair of the House Education Caucus with the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BLUNT).

I stand in strong support of the rule and in strong support of H.R. 2 and our Nation's public schools.

I place a high priority on Title I programs and improving our schools. Quite simply, H.R. 2 is a good, sound bill that emphasizes and builds on what we know works. It expands public school choice, improves the quality of instruction in Title I classrooms, and drastically improves the accountability measures in these programs.

It continues the targeting of Title I resources to the schools with the highest poverty level and adds a new focus to include State, school district, and school report cards to help parents and States monitor student achievement. Strengthening the quality of instruction provided in the classroom is essential in achieving results for all students. In addition, all students and their teachers should be held to high standards. We cannot afford to let any of our schools or students fall through the cracks.

Madam Speaker, I have four very intelligent students visiting Washington, D.C. just this week to participate in the Voices Against Violence conference. They are shining examples of the best of what our schools can produce.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 2, to continue to provide these students and their peers with the programs and opportunities they need to be the leaders in their schools and communities.

I am pleased that the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) has been very active as well, and has offered a lot of new initiatives and new programs in order to move this country forward.

Education is the best, cheapest, and fastest way to keep and retain a strong middle class in America. Support H.R. 2.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Madam Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. OWENS), an expert in education.

Mr. OWENS. Madam Speaker, I rise in protest of a rule which limits the debate on the most important education bill that we will have in the next 3 or 4 years. This is a reauthorization of Title I, which is the core of the Elementary and Secondary Education Assistance Act. They have chosen to break up the Elementary and Secondary Education Assistance Act in small parts. But this is the part that is most important.

Why do we have to have a limited debate if we are not busy doing many other constructive things here? Why cannot we have an open debate and let every Member have a chance to speak who wants to speak? I think that this is an issue that probably every Member of Congress should go on record on.

The American people have made it quite clear that they think education is of utmost importance. Recent polls have just continued to reaffirm what the old polls have been showing us for years. The ABC News and Washington Post poll, which was released on September 5, 1999, said that improving education was the top issue when people were asked to list 15 issues of great importance. Improving education was listed by 79 percent as number one; handling the economy was 74 percent; managing the budget, 74 percent; handling crime, 71 percent; Social Security was 68 percent, in fifth place compared to education.

Education, in the minds of the public, both the Republicans and Democrats and Independents, clearly they see with their common-sense vision that this is the most important issue right now that we should be addressing.

They do not make an issue out of whether the Federal Government should do it or the State government or the city government. In their common-sense wisdom, they understand that all levels of government are involved already. They probably understand that local governments and State governments have the greatest responsibilities and contribute the greatest amount of money, but they want the Federal Government to be involved still.

They said also that, among the education priorities—this is the National Public Radio, Kaiser Family Foundation, Kennedy School of Government survey, which was conducted September 7, 1999—they said that among the education priorities within that category, fixing rundown schools is number one. Ninety-two percent said that we should fix rundown schools first; reducing class sizes was number two, 86 percent; placing more computers in the classroom, 81 percent.

My colleagues know that the people have spoken. Why do we only have 6 hours for the amendments and 2 hours for the general debate? Why do we not come and respond to the people? They are saying this is most important. They did not talk about any F-22s, and they did not say we should go search for billions of dollars to keep the F-22s in testing or engineering. They said education is number one. If education is number one, then why not spend all the time we need to discuss it?

There are some basic items which we now must come to grips with. People are still running around saying that the Federal Government is not responsible for education; therefore, the Federal Government should play a limited role; the Federal Government should not get into school construction; the Federal Government should not do this.

We play a limited role, and we want to increase the Federal involvement threefold, fourfold. We still would be playing a limited role. The Federal Government expenditures for education now is about 7 percent. Most of that goes to higher education. If we increased it by up to 25 percent, it is still a 25 percent Federal role, 75 percent State and local government. State and local government clearly are responsible primarily, but why not have more of the Federal role?

All taxes are local. They begin at the local level. The taxes that come to Washington come from local areas. We manufacture money in the mint here, but that money represents the wealth that has come up from the States.

So my plea on the rule is that it should be an open rule that really gives all the time necessary. Every Member was allowed to speak, I remember, when we had the debate on the Gulf War. It was a matter of war and peace, and they felt we should all be able to express ourselves.

This is a matter of the peace for the future. The key to the peace for the future is education, starting with education in America. We are ahead of everybody else. We should stay ahead of everybody else. But we need a great pool of well-educated people. That pool is going to have to come from the poorest people.

The middle-class sons and daughters are already committed. They are going to be the doctors and lawyers and Wall Street bankers. They are not going to be information technology workers. They are not going to be the people who do the sheet metal work. I went to the sheet metal work training center, and they have more computers in the sheet metal training center than they have in the schools. They now use computers to do the sheet metal work.

Everything is driven by computers, and they need people who have a basic education. The Army and the Navy, they need recruits who have some aptitude for handling high-tech weapons. Everything needs education, and we should spend the time talking about how we, as a Congress, are going to respond to the public's call for more help with education.

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Madam Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. BILBRAY).

Mr. BILBRAY. Madam Speaker, I stand here today in support of this rule. I think it is a very fair rule. For those of us that want to introduce amendments, we have 7 to 8 hours to be able to improve this base bill.

One of the things I would like us to take a look at that we have sort of forgotten over the last years is that, in 1996, we had an immigration reform bill, and there was a very heated discussion on this floor about the issue of should the Federal Government, should Congress mandate that local school districts had to educate illegal aliens, not the children of illegal aliens, but illegals.

I think we came to a consensus one way or the other, some did not agree, that this was important enough to the national well-being to require that all school districts have to provide education to those who are in this country, legal or illegal.

Now, I am going to introduce an amendment that will revisit that issue because I think it is only appropriate that, in a city that we say that we want the poor, we want the needy, we want the disadvantaged to have equal access, we also need to say that those working-class communities should have equal access to their tax money, and that the Federal Government should not be requiring the education of illegals at the disadvantage of the legal residents in those school districts.

So all my amendment is going to say is, just as we recognize the Federal impact on local schools when the military goes into an area and requires education of military children, we also are going to now finally recognize the Federal impact on local school districts when we basically have illegal immigrants in the school districts and are requiring them to be educated.

So what I am talking about right now, Madam Speaker, is the fact that it is time that Washington starts paying for the unfunded mandate that we clarified in 1996. And let me point out that that unfunded mandate does not impact the rich, powerful districts. It impacts disproportionately the poor working-class districts of color. This is an issue of fairness, that those who have the least are being required to pay the most for this problem, and it is time for us to address that.

So I ask my colleagues on both sides of the aisle not to walk away from this issue. We made lofty statements and made a decision that we were going to mandate this service. Now it is time that we revisit it and say let us back up our kind words with dollars and cents and let us send the reimbursement to those working-class neighborhoods across America that are being asked to bear the burden of our mandate. I think we not only have a right to start paying for this expense, Madam Speaker, we have a responsibility to start paying our fair share.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Madam Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Madam Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time and, in closing, I would remind my colleagues this rule provides for consideration of a bipartisan bill through an open amendment process. Any Member may offer any germane amendment as long as it is preprinted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The rule does impose a 6-hour time limit on the consideration of amendments; but, overall, the House will have almost 9 hours to debate the Student Results Act and propose changes to it. On top of the 4-day markup held by the Committee on Education and the Workforce, 9 hours of debate on the House floor is wholly adequate.

Madam Speaker, with the passage of this rule, the House will embark on a very important debate over Federal education policy. Today, we are not squabbling about money, we are talking about kids and the tremendous investment that we are making in them. Let us make sure that that investment pays off and our success is measured by the academic performance of students in schools. Where there is failure, let us expose it and be bold enough to try something new. Where there is success, let us reward it and strive to repeat it. And in all of this, let us remember that the best interests of the children must always be paramount.

Madam Speaker, I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting this fair rule so that we can move on to debate legislation that represents the single largest component of our effort to improve elementary and secondary education. I urge a "yes" vote on the rule and the Student Results Act.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BARRETT of Nebraska). Pursuant to House Resolution 336 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 2.

□ 1504

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2) to send more dollars to the classroom and for certain other purposes, with Mrs. EMERSON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING) and the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLAY) each will control 45 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING).

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, today the House will consider H.R. 2, the Student Results Act, and the major focus of this bill is to reauthorize but, above all, improve title I, which is the single largest Federal grant program for helping educate disadvantaged students.

The bill includes a number of other programs targeted at disadvantaged students, including Indian education, gifted and talented, magnet schools, rural education and homeless education; and I am especially pleased that H.R. 2 also includes key changes to the migrant education program for which I have fought long and hard over the years.

This bill has broad bipartisan support. It was reported from our committee by a vote of 42 to 6, and I would like to thank the full committee ranking member, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLAY); the subcommittee member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE); and the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), above all; and many others for their key contributions to putting this legislation together.

The Student Results Act was put together with four overarching principles in mind: quality, accountability, choice, and flexibility. And let me review briefly how each of these has been embedded throughout H.R. 2.

The notion of focusing Federal education programs and quality has been my mission since joining Congress some 25 years ago. Coming here as a superintendent and as a school board president, I knew Head Start was not working, and I knew how to fix it. I knew chapter 1 was not working, which became title I, and I knew how to fix it. But I could not do anything about it. It was so obvious. And I am so happy that, finally, when we reauthorized Head Start, not the last time but the time before, it was the first time we talked about quality. And the last time we reauthorized it, we really talked about quality; and I thank Secretary Shalala because she shut down 100 dysfunctional Head Start programs. I could not get my people to do that when they were down there. So, finally, we are talking about quality.

We have to do the same thing with title I, because it is obvious, all the studies have indicated, that we are not helping disadvantaged youngsters close the academic gap between disadvantaged and nondisadvantaged. So we have to do something to make sure that we do that.

So let me start with the issue of quality, the most important issue facing us today. One of the most distressing features of the title I program for too long and in too many places was that it became a jobs program rather than a program to try to change the disadvantaged to become advantaged academically. So we have dealt with that issue.

And we now have, for instance, over 75,000 teacher aides. Big news. All they had to do was have a GED 2 years after they got the job. Somehow or other, unfortunately, they were teaching reading and they were teaching mathematics, many times without the supervision of a qualified teacher. And these youngsters need the most qualified teachers we can possibly find in order to help them.

So we are freezing the number of teacher aides that they can hire, and we are telling them there are a lot of things they have to do in order to make sure that they continue as teacher aides. Now, my side, some of my Members, do not like that. They say we are telling local districts what to do. Well, it is Federal tax dollars, 100 percent. The program has failed, and we simply cannot fail these youngsters any longer. We cannot have 50 percent of our children in this country in a failing mode.

The Student Results Act includes a lot of other quality issues. One is that they can use some of their new money to reward those who are doing well.

The most devastating letter that I got was from one of the largest lobbying groups that deals with these disadvantaged youngsters. And in there they indicate to not reward anybody for doing well, just give them the money and they will continue doing poorly, not giving these children an opportunity for anything that every other child has an opportunity to receive. That is pretty disheartening to get that kind of thing from one of the largest lobbying groups for these particular youngsters and their parents.

Let me make a couple of very important points about accountability. The bill does not provide for more accountability to the Federal Government. Instead, what we are insisting on is more accountability to parents. We thank the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) for a lot of the information and a lot of the parts that have been put in here in relationship to the accountability provision.

The Student Results Act says that children attending schools classified as low performing must be given the opportunity to attend a higher quality public school in their area. In other words, if that school is a poor performing school, and designated as such, those parents and those children should be able to escape and go to another school within that school district that is not a poor performing school. And we say that in order to get there, there will have to be some transportation money, and they can use some of this money in order to transport their youngsters to that particular point.

We also do things for those school districts that are small, rural school districts particularly. School districts with less than 1,500 students, which is more than 10 percent of the school districts in America, will be exempted from several formula requirements, giving them the flexibility to target funds in a manner which best suits their needs.

In conclusion, I would ask that we consider this bill in the context of our larger efforts at the Federal level to improve education in this country. We started with EdFlex, which passed the House with an overwhelming majority. We followed up with the Teacher Empowerment Act. Now we are considering title I. Again, I would like to emphasize that 50 percent of the youngsters in this country are not getting a quality education. And if we are going to remain a number one country, we positively cannot continue that. They must be in a position to do well in our 21st century.

So I would hope that we get bipartisan support in passing this legislation.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Madam Chairman, next April will mark the 35th anniversary of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, a flagship great society program that underscored our country's national commitment to help communities improve their public schools.

We have come a long way since the deplorable, segregated, and neglected public schools of yesteryear, but not far enough. Today, too many States and too many communities lack either the political will or the financial resources to ensure that poor children get a good education. Too many poor communities lack fully qualified teachers, safe schools, and access to emerging school technology.

Recent reports show that title I is making strides in increasing student achievement. Ten of 12 urban school districts and five of six States reviewed showed increases in the percentage of students in the highest poverty schools who met district or State standards for proficiency in reading and math. These results should serve to broaden our commitment to increase investment in public schools while strengthening accountability for results.

I support this legislation because it strengthens our commitment to improve educational opportunities for students, regardless of their race, economic status. Or special needs. It targets funds to our most disadvantaged children and schools, it requires States to have rigorous standards and assessments, and it increases the title I authorization to $8.35 billion.

The bill imposes strong sanctions for schools who continue to fail after receiving substantial assistance. It also ensures that teachers and teacher aides are fully qualified. I am very pleased that we will include title VII, bilingual education, as part of the manager's amendment, and I commend the gentleman from California (Mr. MARTINEZ), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HINOJOSA), and the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. ROMERO-BARCELÓ) on our committee who helped forge a compromise on this critical program.

Madam Chairman, H.R. 2 clearly prohibits the use of title I funds for private school vouchers. The proposal to allow vouchers was overwhelmingly rejected by our committee members.

The bill is not a perfect bill, however. There are some provisions that undermine programs for women's equity in education, that repeal the Women's Educational Equity Act, that eliminate the provision that trains teachers to eliminate gender bias in the classroom, and terminates dropout prevention programs for pregnant and parenting teens. The gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) have prepared amendments to restore these provisions, and I hope that this body will vote in favor of them.

Madam Chairman, I want to thank the subcommittee ranking member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE), for his work on this bill and the committee members on our side, each of whom made important contributions to the bill. I also want to thank the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING), and the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE), for working with us in a bipartisan manner.

□ 1515

I urge support of H.R. 2.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. PETRI) a member of our committee.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETRI. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, I just wanted to indicate that we want to make sure that all the school districts know that the next time we test them, they have to test all children. We do not want any of this nonsense of pulling people out to show that they have improved. The Department is now investigating that issue, as a matter of fact.

Mr. PETRI. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of this bill. It is a great credit to our chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING); our ranking member, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLAY); the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE); and, of course, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE). It is a great tribute to all of them that the bill passed our committee with an overwhelming vote of 42-6.

The Student Results Act was put together with four principles in mind: Quality, accountability, choice, and flexibility. It contains several noteworthy provisions.

For the first time, it encourages public school choice, at least in those situations that cry out for it most. The public school choice provision is a simple concept. Children should not be forced to attend failing schools.

One of the problems in education today is that some students, especially many of those participating in Title I programs, are trapped in substandard schools without a way out. The bill allows children attending schools classified consistently as low performing to be given the opportunity to attend a higher quality public school in the area. And if there is no such school in the area, then the school district is authorized to work out a school choice program with another school or schools in a neighboring school district.

Surely, if we cannot fix our worst schools, we should give their students a way out, at least to a better school. Failure to do that is completely unfair to those children and robs our Nation of the contributions they could make if their talents were better developed.

Although Title I has traditionally tried to engage parents in the education of their children through measures such as parental compacts and formal parental involvement policies, I am pleased to note that there are new provisions in H.R. 2 that attempt to address this issue better.

A significant parental empowerment provision is the annual State academic reports on schools and the school district reports. Through these report cards and annual State reports, H.R. 2 makes available to parents information on the academic quality of Title I schools.

Among other things, such information would include test scores at the school as compared to other Title I schools in the district.

H.R. 2 would also require school districts to make available upon request information regarding the qualifications of the Title I student's classroom teachers, including such information as whether the teacher has met State qualifications and licensing criteria for the grade levels and subject areas in which he or she provides instruction.

In an effort to provide a higher caliber of teachers, H.R. 2 also places a freeze on the number of teacher aides that can be hired with Title I funds. For those aides employed with such funds, the bill increases the minimum qualifications that must be met by all teacher aides within 3 years.

Finally, the bill attempts to reward excellence by giving States the option of setting aside up to 30 percent of all new Title I funding to provide cash rewards to schools that make substantial progress in closing achievement gaps between students.

Madam Chairman, when it comes down to it, this is what we are attempting to do. Not only must we improve all our schools, it is especially vital to close the achievement gaps between them and to find ways for low-income students to have equal access to high-quality education.

This bill makes positive steps in that direction; and, therefore, I am pleased to support it.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE).

Mr. KILDEE. Madam Chairman, I thank the ranking member for yielding me the time.

Madam Chairman, since last spring, our staffs have been working on the reauthorization of this bill. I am pleased that we have finally been able to put forth the reauthorization proposal that establishes a strong foundation for student achievement as we enter the 21st century. During these negotiations, I believe that we have created a balance between the priorities of both parties. Several of the bill's provisions are worthy of mention.

With regard to Title I, the amendment maintains and preserves many of the core advances that the last reauthorization of ESEA in 1994 instituted. Preserved are the requirements for State education reform, based on challenging standards and aligned assessments. Preserved are Title I's targeting of resources to high poverty school districts and schools.

Most importantly, I believe, the strong accountability requirements we have maintained and added to Title I are very critical. Among them are disaggregation of data based on at-risk populations, increased teacher quality requirements, and a focus on turning around failing schools through the investment of additional help and resources.

We can no longer tolerate low-performing schools that place the education of our children at risk. This means that States and school districts will need to provide substantive intervention to help the students of low-performing schools reach high standards.

If schools are still failing after substantive intervention and assistance, then consequences must and should exist. This bill will accomplish this feat.

I will also be supporting the Mink-Morella-Woolsey-Sanchez amendment to restore the Women's Education Equity Act, or WEEA. This act plays a critical role in providing leadership in women's issues. For too long, I have seen the inequities that exist between the genders, especially in fields that produce high economic returns: technology, mathematics, and science.

I am troubled that the base legislation does not include this important program. I urge Members on both sides of the aisle to adopt this amendment.

I also want to express my appreciation to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Chairman GOODLING) and the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. SALMON) for working with me to modify the parental consent provisions of this legislation.

These modifications, which are included in the Goodling manager's amendment, will ensure that limited-English proficient students do not go without educational services. And while this compromise is not perfect, I intend to support it.

I want to thank the ranking gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLAY), the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER), the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Chairman GOODLING), and the gentleman from Delaware (Chairman CASTLE) for their hard work on this bill.

Madam Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BARRETT), another important member of the committee.

Mr. BARRETT of Nebraska. Madam Chairman, I thank my chairman for yielding me the time.

Madam Chairman, I rise certainly in strong support of H.R. 2 today. This bill's renewed emphasis on accountability, local initiative, and student performance provides a very strong foundation for our Nation's schools as we move into the 21st century.

I am particularly pleased with provisions found in Title VI that address the needs of small, rural schools based on a bill I introduced this past summer, the Rural Education Initiative Act, H.R. 2725.

Over 20 percent of the students in this country attend small, rural schools; and many of these schools, of course, are found in my Nebraska district.

For the most part, these schools offer students excellent educations and many benefits, including small classes, personal attention, strong family and community involvement. However, until now, the Federal formula grant programs have not addressed some of the unique funding needs of these districts because they do not produce enough revenue to carry out the program that the grant is intended to fund.

The rural education initiative in H.R. 2 is completely optional. However, if a school district chooses to participate in exchange for strong accountability, the rural provisions will allow a small rural school district with fewer than 600 students to flex the small amounts that they receive from selected Federal formula grants into a lump sum and then receive a supplemental grant. No school district would receive less than $20,000. And to these very small districts, this can make a huge difference.

The rural education initiative has broad bipartisan support and has been endorsed by over 80 education organizations including the National Education Association and the Association of School Administrators. It does provide a common-sense approach to using Federal dollars in the way that Congress intended, that is, to ensure all students, regardless of their background, have the opportunity to receive a high-quality education.

I encourage support for the program and, of course, for the passage of H.R. 2.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND).

Mr. KIND. Madam Chairman, I thank the ranking member for yielding me the time.

Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2. It is a good bill I think we can support with bipartisan effort today. But it can be better. And it can also be made worse.

It can be better by the acceptance, I feel, of some crucial amendments that will be offered later today, one of which will be offered by the gentleman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY), the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs.

MINK), and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SANCHEZ) on gender equity issues; one by the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) which will increase the authorization level of this program by $1.5 billion.

But it is also a bill that can be made worse through a variety of amendments that may also be offered, one of which is the portability amendment, which I think given the roughly per capita $600 share that a student receives under Title I funding really does not go that far if it is attached as a voucher or portability type of provision rather than a targeted one.

This week, we had over 350 students from around the country come to our Nation's Capitol to have a serious discussion about school violence. One of the common refrains that I have heard in speaking to a lot of the students which are from western Wisconsin is that we here at the Federal level and the State legislatures have an obligation to ensure that all the students in the country receive a quality education regardless of the wealth of their community, regardless of their own socioeconomic background.

And in essence, in a nutshell, that is what the Elementary and Secondary Education Act was really geared to do over the last 35 years and specifically the Title I funding.

The Federal role in K-12 public education is relatively small, roughly 6 or 7 percent of the total spending that is going on out there, but it is a very important role because of the targeted nature in the limited funds in this bill, roughly $8.3 billion. It is targeted more to the disadvantaged, lower-income students in our school system. And because of that, we are able to leverage the money to get a bigger bang out of the buck.

I am concerned with the directions that some of the amendments will go to as far as vouchers, portability that would dilute that leverage effect on the quality of education.

I certainly hope that after today's debate and the amendment process that we go through and, hopefully, at the conclusion when we receive bipartisan support that we do not take up another measure tomorrow, referred to as "Straight A's" that would effectively blow up everything that we do in essence today by just block-granting all the money back to the States, and we would lose that crucial targeted priority effect that we currently have right now in Title I funding.

But one component of the bill I want to speak on, and I want to commend the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BARRETT) in this regard, and that is the rural school initiative. We have got some changes in Title X funding that targets rural schools because of the unique nature that they always face and the challenges that they face, the isolated nature, the difficulty in recruiting teachers and administrators, the difficulty of them to join professional partnerships, consortiums for professional development purposes.

What the rural school initiative will do is add greater flexibility, along with some accountability provisions, to give them more leeway in targeting this money and how best they can use it to get the best results in rural school districts.

So I commend both the chairman and the ranking member for the efforts that they have put into it and the ranking members on the subcommittee that truly believe that this is a good bipartisan bill that, hopefully, at the end of the day, will receive all of our support.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. ISAKSON), our newest member on the committee.

Mr. ISAKSON. Madam Chairman, I thank the chairman for yielding me the time.

Madam Chairman, I would like to also address this House on a point, as a new Member, which I would like to make from the outset. I want to thank the chairman for his time and his dedication to allow all sides to have their way in committee and have their say. I want to thank the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLAY) for the amount of time that he put in and the amount that he afforded to all of us, and the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE), the subcommittee chairman, and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) as well.

My purpose in rising to speak on this is because I have had the unique opportunity during the past 2 years in Georgia before I came to Congress to be the recipient of Title I funds as chairman of the State Board of Education to see actually what happened with Title I funds and to see actually what the effect of Federal regulations and lack of flexibility in some cases or lack of direction in others or in some cases too much direction really did.

All of us have been frustrated that this program, which is targeted to the most needy in our country, never seemed to bring about the results that we had hoped for. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania's efforts and the efforts of the committee in this bill, which I sincerely hope this House will pass in an overwhelming and bipartisan fashion, will bring about results, and I do so for four specific reasons:

Number one, for the first time these funds go to systems and accountability is required in return. For the first time we are going to measure the response of systems in terms of the effectiveness of the use of this money in Title I, our most disadvantaged students.

Number two, one of the most difficult problems in public education in dealing with Title I students is having the transportation necessary sometimes to move those students to the best possible school. Under the leadership of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the school choice in this bill within the school district itself allows local superintendents to use Title I funds for the transportation of a Title I student out of one school to any other school regardless of the percentage of Title I students in that school. Environment oftentimes can be the main change in a child's attitude and in a child's learning ability, and the leadership of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in providing this is essential.

Third, the reduction from the 50 percent requirement to the 40 percent requirement in terms of percentage of Title I students in order to use funds for a schoolwide project is essential. I found in committee there was a little bit of a lack of understanding about what a schoolwide project is. A schoolwide project is the ability to take Title I funds, merge them with other funds, State, local and in some cases Federal, and use them in a broad-based program in the school that benefits all students. The reason this is important to Title I is as follows, and I want to use some very specific examples.

In our youngest children, in kindergarten and in first grade, basic things like eye-hand coordination and team building programs necessary in the building blocks of learning are essential to involve not only children who are disadvantaged but children who may not fall in that category, because kids learn by example. And a schoolwide program allows money to be merged, money to be enhanced and kids to be put together in that learning experience. A second example is reading. To assume that all money should be targeted in Title I outside of a schoolwide project or with an overwhelmingly high requirement means that you lose the ability to merge those disadvantaged children with more advantaged children in the process of reading. In kindergarten through third grade, the most essential thing we can do in America's schools is improve the reading ability and reading comprehension of our children. This move by widening the ability to use funds and merge them for schoolwide programs and by lowering the threshold from 50 percent to 40 percent is going to ensure that those children most in need of better education also are exposed more to programs that involve those children who are already performing.

I rise to support the chairman, the ranking member and the committee and urge this House to pass the reauthorization of ESEA.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER).

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Madam Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I want to thank him and the gentleman from Pennsylvania for all their work on this legislation. The gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLAY) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING) put in a lot of hours as have the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) who have really carried the bulk of the work around this legislation. But I think we had an opportunity in the markup of this legislation for all members to participate, and I think it was one of our better hours in this committee. I also want to thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. ISAKSON) who just spoke because of his willingness to sift through many hours of hearings and also the markup and contribute, I think, a unique perspective to some of the deliberations that we were having about this legislation and the impacts of some of the things that we wanted to do on local districts.

The Federal Government has spent roughly $120 billion over the last three decades funding this program and the results have been mixed. We have closed the gap to some extent between rich and poor, majority and minority students, but the gap remains wide and it remains open. We ought to see in this legislation if in fact we can close that gap, and I think that this legislation has a chance of finishing the job.

In return for our investment over the next 5 years of $40 to $50 billion, we are asking that the States measure the performance of all students and that it set goals of closing the gap of achievement between majority and minority and the rich and poor students; we ask that children be taught by fully qualified teachers; we ask that schools and teachers be recognized and rewarded for their successes in improving student achievement; and that parents be given clear and accurate information about their child's educational progress and about the quality of their schools. And what we ask most of all in this bill is that we educate all children, each and every child, that no child is left behind. This can be done, it has been our rhetoric for 20 years, but it has not been what is happening in the classroom and it has not been what is happening on the ground.

We understand now that all children can learn. We have enough information to fully understand that children from disadvantaged backgrounds can learn as well as children from the suburbs and elsewhere. If we set standards, if we have high expectations of those students, we now know that that kind of success is possible. But we must have those expectations of success and we must have qualified teachers and we must monitor the achievement. It can be done.

Just this last week, we learned that it happened again in the State of Texas where this same kind of decision that we are making here today was made in Texas under the leadership of everybody from Ross Perot to Ann Richards to George W. Bush. We learned last week that in Houston and Fort Worth, the gap was closed between majority and minority students, that in fact the achievement was coming closer together. We have seen it in Kentucky where many schools achieving the highest scores last year in reading and writing were in high poverty schools, in the South Bronx in the KIPP Academy, once again where we ask students to achieve high standards, where we have the expectations that they can achieve and we put them together with qualified teachers and good curriculum, those children in fact throw aside mediocrity, they throw aside the failure and they achieve as our expectations are in this country for all of our children.

I believe that this legislation starts that process on a national scale. I believe that we can have qualified teachers in all classrooms, that we can have these expectations of our young children and they can meet those standards of achievement and we can have rich and poor children, majority and minority children learning at the same rate. But we will have to hold on to these standards as this bill continues to progress. I think we continue to need to provide additional funding and there will be amendments that address that, because one of the things we know about this system is it is, in fact, resource poor. But we will get to that later in the deliberations on this legislation.

I want to thank every member of the committee and especially the committee chair and the ranking member and the subcommittee chair and the ranking member. This was long hours of negotiations, some of which went on until this morning, I guess, over some of this legislation. I want to thank the staff on both sides for all of their effort.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL), another member of our committee.

Mr. PAUL. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to this legislation. I know that the goal of everyone here is to have quality education for everyone in this country. I do not like the approach. The approach has been going on for 30 years with us here in the Congress at the national level controlling and financing education. But the evidence is pretty clear there has been no success. It is really a total failure. Yet the money goes up continuously. This year it is an 8 percent increase for Title I over last year.

In 1963, the Federal Government spent less than $900,000 on education programs. This year, if we add up all the programs, it is over $60 billion. Where is the evidence? The scores keep going down. The violence keeps going up. We cannot keep drugs out of the schools. There is no evidence that our approach to education is working.

I just ask my colleagues to think about whether or not we should continue on this same course. I know the chairman of the committee has made a concerted effort in trying to get more local control over the schools, and I think this is commendable. I think there should be more local control. But I am also convinced that once the money comes from Washington, you really never can deliver the control back to the local authorities. So that we should give it serious thought on whether or not this approach is correct.

Now, I know it is not a very powerful argument, but I might just point out that if Members read carefully the doctrine of enumerated powers, we find that it does not mention that we have the authority, but I concede that we have gotten around that for more than 35 years so we are not likely to reconsider that today. But as far as the practicality goes, we should rethink it.

If we had a tremendous success with our educational system, if everybody was being taken care of, if these $60 billion were really doing the job, if we were not having the violence and the drugs in the school, maybe you could say, well, let us change the Constitution or let me reassess my position. But I think we are on weak grounds if we think we can continue to do this.

There are more mandates in this bill. Even though we like to talk about local control, there are more mandates, and this bill will authorize not only the $8 billion and an 8 percent increase this year, but over the next 5 years there will be an additional $28 billion added to the budget because of this particular piece of legislation.

I ask my colleagues, give it serious thought. This does not deserve passage.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I rise as a graduate of and a believer in American public schools to support this legislation. I think there is a broad consensus among the Members of this Congress that a very top priority is that we improve our public schools. Our employers are asking for it, our parents are asking for it, our students and our teachers are asking for it, and I believe this legislation takes an important step in that direction.

I commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING) and the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLAY), the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) for their excellent bipartisan cooperation in bringing this legislation to the floor. I think we should do more, and I hope that before we adjourn for the year, we find it in our agenda to enact the President's class size reduction initiative and put 100,000 qualified teachers in America's classrooms. I hope that we enact for the first time a meaningful Federal program to assist in the construction and reconstruction of our crumbling schools. But I think this legislation is an important step in the right direction.

It is important for what it does, by placing tutors and learning materials and new opportunities in the hands of the children who are least likely to have those opportunities without this law. As the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND) said, it is important for what it does not do, because it does not take us down the false promise path of vouchers and the privatization of our public schools. I commend the leaders of our committee for reaching that delicate balance.

I would also like to thank the leaders of the committee for including in this bill two initiatives which I have sponsored and supported, one which attempts to stem the tide of school violence that we have seen in this country by the enactment of peer mediation programs that help young people work out their differences among themselves. I also thank the leadership for their inclusion of an effort that the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) and I have worked on to promote the education of young people in entrepreneurship, so that young people may learn ways that they may build businesses into successes to pay taxes to support our public school system.

I will be offering an amendment later today which attempts to give local educators a new tool to expand the benefits of the ESEA to preschoolers, to 3-, 4- and 5-year-olds who are not yet in kindergarten. There is no rule that says that we should wait until our children are 5 years old before they start to learn. They sure do not wait until they are 5 years old. I believe that my amendment will liberate the resources of this bill to help local school decisionmakers make prekindergarten programs a more viable success in the future.

I would urge my Republican and Democratic colleagues to step forward, show the country that we can act together for the benefit of America's education and pass this bill.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SAM JOHNSON).

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Madam Chairman, education is about providing our children with the tools they need to get a good education, like flexibility, accountability and choice. After 30 years and $120 billion, Washington needs to realize it is not how much you spend but what you spend it on that counts.

For too long, we have spent money educating bureaucrats in regulation, red tape and Federal control. But now we are returning control and flexibility to the States while at the same time demanding more accountability for your tax dollars.

□ 1545

I am especially proud that many of the reforms provided in this bill are mirrored after the efforts of my home State of Texas. Under the proven leadership of Governor George Bush, Texas has become the model for school accountability and student achievement. In fact, the 1998 national assessment of education progress recently reported that eighth grade students in Texas scored higher on average than the entire Nation in writing skills.

Madam Chairman, this proves once and for all that giving the States, teachers, and parents greater control over their children's education works. That is what this Congress is doing today.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER).

Mr. ROEMER. Madam Chairman, I rise, first of all, to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING) and the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE) and my ranking members on the Democrat side, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLAY) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE), for crafting, I think, very significant and important bipartisan education legislation that will hopefully be signed by the President of the United States into law. That is a difficult task today in Washington.

I also want to talk about three parts of this bill. First of all who, who does this bill help; secondly, what do we do to help those children; and, thirdly, why, why might we need to do more through the amendment process?

First of all: Who?

This is the title I bill for education that is targeted at the children who are most likely to drop out of our Nation's schools and possibly get into trouble, crime-related trouble. This is legislation targeted at children that are eligible for free and reduced lunches that oftentimes get their only hot meal at school. This is targeted at children who are below the poverty line, children that are in families making less than $16,600 per year. That is who we are trying to help. I think it is the most important thing that we can do in a bipartisan way as Members of Congress.

Now what do we do in this legislation? Well, with the majority, some in the majority's help, and with the minority's help I attached an amendment in committee to broaden public school choice to give parents more choice as to where they send their children to school and hopefully not wait until the school fails and hopefully share good ideas. If Indiana has a good idea in public school choice, let us share it with Wisconsin and California.

We have report cards in this legislation to share academic and report academic progress. We have teacher certification by the year 2003. We have school-wide projects.

So, many good things, but it is not enough. What else do we need to do and why?

I will be offering an amendment to increase title I funds by 1.5 billion more dollars. I will offer that as the Roemer-Quinn-Kelly and Etheridge amendment, two Democrats and two Republicans. Why do we need to do that? Because of the strength of this bill. We put a good Republican-Democrat bill together that does require more from para-professionals, that does require more from teachers, that is not fully funded. We need $18 billion more to fully fund this bill to get to every eligible child. Let us make sure we have this bill have the opportunity to work. I ask for bipartisan support for that amendment.

To paraphrase President Kennedy, if not now, when for these poorest children; and if not for the poorest, the most disadvantaged and the most needy, who should we help in this society? Let us pass this bipartisan amendment to increase funding for the most needy, the poorest, and the most disadvantaged children.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, I yield 3½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey (Mrs. ROUKEMA).

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Madam Chairman, I certainly rise in strong support of this bill, and as a member of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, I was really proud to see that we came together across the aisle on the committee and by a vote of 42 to 6 demonstrating that there is genuine and real evidence that on a bipartisan basis we can do what is right for the American people and for these children, children who are our future, and that is not just silly rhetoric; but we are facing a new millennium. I mean it genuinely. We are doing this for the children who are the future, and I think it is most important for me from my side of the aisle and in something that I have learned over the years, whether I was in the Parent/Teacher Association or a member of the Board of Education or someone on the committee, that we are really focusing on student achievement, because that is what this is all about, and not filling out the right forms and not supporting more red tape and regulation, but making sure that the Government's program, that our dollars are really going for quality programs, academic accountability, and local flexibility.

That is something I believe deeply in, local control and the flexibility.

I think that the most important thing is that we recognize that all States, school districts and schools should be held accountable for ensuring that students are raising their standards of academic accountability. Otherwise, why are we giving out more money into the classrooms? And the reports that will be issued to the parents and the community on student achievement and teacher qualifications, which is another component of this bill, all will be indicators of quality schools.

I think that one of the most important things in the bill to stress again in another way is that we are sending dollars to the classroom and less dollars for bureaucracy, and to state it with precision. Ninety-five percent of the funds in this bill, as prescribed, will go to the classroom and very limited amount for State or local bureaucracies and reporting requirements.

I think the thing that we must understand is that we are basing our instructional practices on the most current and proven research, and we are not using them as incentives for more trendy fads or more experimentation, but we want proven results and proven research to be funded.

Then I guess finally I must say, and I hope that this will prove to be the case in the implementation of this legislation, that parent involvement will be an essential component of this title I legislation. Parents must be notified if their children are failing or if their schools are failing, and so we are including parents.

As a former teacher and a mother, I just want to say, and I think my colleagues know this, but I want to stress it, I am not speaking out of theory here, but I am a former school teacher, a mother of three who went and graduated from public schools and also a school board member, and I know firsthand that State and local school districts will use that flexibility to build better schools and to ensure accountability and higher achievement levels, and I think that is what we owe this country as we face the new millennium.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY).

Mr. TIERNEY. Madam Chairman, I also want to add my congratulations to the chairman and to the ranking members for their good work in putting together a bill that moves us forward on the work that was begun in 1994, the idea of having a bill that gives all students the best chance to have the kind of education that we want our children to have.

This bill focuses on accountability. It allows us to determine the academic progress based on disaggregated information so that we can assure that every student, majority and minority, whether they are rich or they are poor, are getting the kind of improvement and the kind of success that we want them to have in our public educational system. The bill allows for reporting to parents so that they know that the teachers are qualified and that their children are getting the kind of attention that they want, and they get to measure the performance of their schools so they can make decisions about where they send their children.

This would allow us for the first time to define and require fully qualified teachers; and when put together with other legislation this committee has passed this year, it allows us to make sure that we give teachers the kind of support they need to be the very best. We are providing for mentoring; we are providing for good professional development, and that moves the whole system across because the most important thing, of course, is a qualified teacher in every classroom.

We need to know that this bill also authorizes, it brings from a demonstration program to a fully authorized program the comprehensive school reform that allows schools to get sufficient moneys, to look out and see what programs are research based, proven effective, for that school to implement for a curriculum with standards that can be measured that brings in the parents, brings in volunteers, and brings in the kind of work that we need in our schools and gives them the flexibility of putting together a program to lift that entire school from literacy right through to every other subject and focus where they know that school needs the most attention.

This is a bill that is worth supporting but still needs some attention, and we hope that before we wrap this up we will look at passing the bill of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. FATTAH). I am going to join the gentleman from Pennsylvania in an amendment that will make sure that all of the services the children get are comparable, that they have equal access to quality teachers, curriculum, and learning resources.

With those things done, Madam Chairman, it is a good bill, and we would urge support.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. FLETCHER), another new member on the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Madam Chairman, I rise to speak in support of the Student Results Act of 1999, the reauthorizations of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, and certainly laud the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING) for all of his work along with the ranking member in this bipartisan effort.

Now the education of our children is one of our greatest responsibilities, and this bill is about children that often are born and know only poverty and failure. It is based on some very important principles, the first being accountability and rewards. For about 34 years we spent $120 billion on programs in title I to help those disadvantaged students, and yet we have not seen the kind of results that we should have seen spending taxpayers' money to that degree. But we have a bill here now that gives that money and holds the students and the teachers, the local education administration, accountable. Certainly it empowers them, but it also has the kind of accountability that we can ensure that those students show improvement like we have seen in many other States.

Flexibility is another important principle here with local control. It allows local teachers, parents, and local education administrators to really use the resources that match the local needs. A one-size-fits all does not work. The needs of my home State differ even within my own district in different counties, and I think this bill gives the kind of flexibility that is needed.

Thirdly, it gives choice. It gives disadvantaged students the choice of public schools; and with this choice, I think it renews hope to those students. As my colleagues know, some schools in some areas, we could put a banner over them and say that all who enter, abandon hope, because they have continued to operate without empowering the students, without showing the students that they can improve, without giving them what they need; and yet this bill gives those students when schools fail to have a choice to go to another school, not to be robbed of hope, but to enter a school where they can be taught and mentored.

It also empowers teachers. It also gives the students the hope of having a mentor or a teacher that is well trained, that is capable, as well as the classroom aides that have the kind of instruction and training that they need.

□ 1600

I am very glad to stand and speak in support of this bill and the work that the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING), the chairman of the committee, has done, and I certainly laud him. I am thankful for the opportunity to work on the committee.

Again, the education of our children is one of our greatest responsibilities. I think this bill moves us in the direction of giving more local control and restoring hope to children.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. OWENS).

Mr. OWENS. Madam Chairman, I would like to join in the celebration of bipartisanship on this bill. However, I think it is too early to celebrate, and we have to look at the context in which this bill is being offered today. It is being offered in a context where we have already this year passed an Ed-Flex bill which set the stage for giving a great deal of power and decision-making authority to the governors. Tomorrow or next week, we are going to be considering something called a Straight As bill, which is going to wipe out most of what we say today about the Title I concentration on the poorest youngsters in America.

Within this context, we have to consider what we are doing today. When they move today to take the first step as sort of a guerilla, beachhead action, we are going to reduce the concentration required of poverty youngsters in a school from 50 percent to 40 percent, and this bill is just the beginning.

This bill looks like a status quo bill with just a few innovations here and there, and a little increase, but it is setting the stage for something very different. I would certainly be quite happy if we could leave it up to our leadership on the Committee on Education and the Workforce. The people there have the institutional memory, and they have the dedication to education. We could do a great job if we did not have these overriding forces of the majority of the Republicans here who are pushing still to minimize the role of the Federal Government in education. One way or another they are going to do that, and the stage is being set today for the block grant. By reducing the thresholds from 50 percent to 40 percent, that is the first stage, and then the Straight As bill will come along and it will push out the decision-making of the Federal Government to a great degree and hand it over to the States. We are moving toward a block grant rapidly. The Senate, the other body, has a bill which is probably going to lead up to that block grant and move us in a direction that we do not want to go.

I have several amendments that I will introduce later dealing with innovative programs which I think we should undertake at this time. This should not be a status quo bill. At a time when the United States is at peace and with unprecedented prosperity, we should be taking a great leap forward in education. This bill, which is going to be our reauthorization for 5 years, ought to be an omnibus-cyber-civilization education program to guarantee the brain power and leadership that we need in our present and for our expanding and future digitalized economy in a high-tech world.

This Congress should take that step now. At the heart of this kind of an initiative, we should set the important revitalization of the infrastructure of our schools. That is, we should have a major program in this bill. It is germane. It is possible that in this bill we could have a program for school construction. I will be introducing an amendment which calls for a 25 percent increase in the Title I funding for health, safety and security improvements in infrastructure.

I will also introduce an amendment for training paraprofessionals. That is the best source of teachers, and we have a shortage now and one that is going to get worse. The source for new teachers is paraprofessionals. Also, I will offer an amendment for an increase to train and develop staff for technology.

We should not be content with the status quo. We should not accept the leadership outside of the Committee on Education and the Workforce which wants us to do the least possible and to turn over the role and authority of the Federal Government to somebody else. We should push for what the American voters demand, and that is a major innovative, creative approach to the improvement of education.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, could I inquire as to the division of time.

The Chairman pro tempore (Mrs. EMERSON). The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING) has 17½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLAY) has 19½ minutes remaining.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD).

Mr. FORD. Madam Chairman, I thank my colleague for yielding me this time. I want to congratulate all of the members on the Committee on Education and the Workforce for all of their hard work, certainly the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) and the gentleman from California (Mr. MCKEON) and to all of the chairs and ranking members who worked so hard and diligently to provide us here in the Congress with something that all of us could be proud of and something that all of us could vote for.

Title I, Madam Chairman, as you know, is our Nation's educational safety net. In 1999 and 2000, the State of Tennessee's public schools will receive more than $130 million in Title I funding. These resources play a vital role in helping to keep poor schools or schools with a high percentage of poor students on a fiscal par with wealthy ones. Our responsibility is to ensure that these dollars drive better performance. This bill seeks to do that. This year, the Memphis City school system, which is in my district, received a Title I grant of approximately $27 million. This grant fully funds 114 schools which have a poverty index of at least 70 percent.

Our challenge, as we consider legislation today that would authorize nearly $10 billion in programs for the Nation's low-income students, is to reverse the quality drain in our public schools and prepare every child for the 21st century marketplace. As important as Title I is to my district and State and Nation, Madam Chairman, we must recognize that it is not perfect.

Three principles should guide our deliberations: investment, quality, and accountability. We must acknowledge Title I shortcomings and look to it for the 21st century, but we must resist the extremist impulse to gut the Federal role in support of our neediest students. We must focus our limited Federal education dollars on policies and practices that work to raise teacher achievement and improve teacher quality. Unfortunately, we will consider something very soon, a Straight As proposal that will not quite bring the bipartisanship and the cooperation and really the comity that we see pervading this debate right now, because quite frankly, many of us on this side of the aisle believe that Straight As guts many of the accountability provisions and, quite frankly, does not direct and channel the resources to those students who need it most.

With regard to the reauthorization of this ESEA, what we need to do, it means allowing school districts to establish pre-K education programs; helping to equalize per pupil expenditures across States; providing parents and communities with valuable information about the qualifications of their teachers; training teachers that use technology in Title I schools; providing violence prevention training and early childhood and education programs, and ensuring gender equity.

Madam Chairman, as we proceed with this debate, I believe it is imperative that we understand the direct connection between enhancing Title I and broader goals in our society. When I travel around my district and my State, principals describe for me the importance of providing all children with opportunities early and often. Principals and teachers recognize that if we fail to serve these children, we will see not only low achievement, but higher dropout rates. They know firsthand that this results in higher rates of incarceration and in lower overall levels of productivity.

It is important to note that here in this body and State legislative bodies around the Nation, no one objects when we talk about building new prisons. No one objects to constructing new prison cells. We have an opportunity now to expand opportunities in the classroom. I support my colleagues on the Republican aisle and my colleagues on the Democratic aisle. We are ready to support this bill and move forward.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE), a member of the committee.

Mr. CASTLE. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2, the Student Results Act, a bill to authorize a number of special population programs under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. H.R. 2 renews most importantly the Title I program, our Federal commitment to help our most disadvantaged children achieve equal education opportunity.

Since its inception in 1965, Congress has recognized the importance of the Title I program and has sought to strengthen it. Today, the purpose of Title I is to narrow gaps in academic achievement and help all students meet high academic standards. Yet, without clear performance measures and real accountability, Title I will do little to positively impact student achievement.

With the help of the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLAY); the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE); and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING), the chairman of the committee; a lot of very good steps are included in this bill; and for that we should all be thankful.

H.R. 2 maintains State content and performance standards; and, for the first time, sets a date certain for the implementation of State student performance assessments. These standards and assessments, which were first established during the 1994 reauthorization, which was another positive step for Title I, will help States and local districts and schools measure the academic progress of its students and identify those schools in need of assistance.

H.R. 2 also strengthens existing accountability provisions by requiring States, school districts, and schools to report performance data by separate subgroups of students such as those who are economically disadvantaged and limited-English proficient. By encouraging States to make decisions about academic achievement based on disaggregated data, we eliminate averages, which can mask the shortfalls of certain groups and open the door to improvement for all children. And, in addition, H.R. 2 requires States who choose to participate in the Title I program to widely distribute information on the academic performance to parents and the public through report cards or other means. This change will help parents access the information they need to become a full partner in their child's education.

The Student Results Act also ensures that the nearly 75,000 teachers' aides hired with Title I funds are qualified to provide instruction in reading, language arts, and math. Under current law, many of these aides provide direct instruction to our most disadvantaged students and with a minimum of a high school diploma or GED. We freeze the number of teachers' aides that could be hired with Title I funds; and within 3 years, we require all aides to demonstrate the knowledge and ability to assist with instruction based on a local assessment.

Finally, H.R. 2 ensures that no student will be forced to attend a failing school. Specifically, it requires schools to notify parents of their ability to transfer to another public or charter school as soon as the home school is identified as one in need of school improvement. In addition, the bill makes the existing choice program viable by allowing States, if they so choose, to use Title I funds for transportation.

With new flexibility and new authority to operate school-wide programs, the Student Results Act, when combined with Ed-Flex waivers, makes the Title I program extremely pliable. We challenge all States, school districts, and schools to determine how best to raise the academic standards of all children.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. PHELPS).

Mr. PHELPS. Madam Chairman, I want to first commend the chairman and the ranking member for their hard work together in a bipartisan manner to bring to us this important legislation today.

I rise in support of H.R. 2 because it continues to provide the necessary investment in education to the low-income schools that need it the most. At the same time, it ensures that schools must produce results for the assistance they receive.

As a former teacher and the husband of a teacher, I have seen firsthand the benefits investing in our kids can make and how, with quality education, even the poorest of our children can find better opportunities.

I agree that education policy should remain a local issue, and that is why I cosponsored and supported the education flexibility act. But we as a Nation have a responsibility to ensure that no child is left out of the opportunities education provides. That is why I will support this bill because it says that no one will be left behind with substandard education.

Madam Chairman, H.R. 2 focuses this limited Federal role on impoverished students and requires that schools and localities receiving Title I funds are held accountable for student performance. In addition, H.R. 2 ensures that our kids get a quality education with quality instructors. I also cosponsored the rural school initiative that targets the same children and will help us utilize the resources and allow flexibility to reach these same children.

I want to urge my colleagues to remember these children and that we do our best for them and leave no child behind. Vote for H.R. 2.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, I yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER), another member of the committee.

Mr. SCHAFFER. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Madam Chairman, a couple of comments that I would like to make. As a member of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, I sat through the 3½ days of comment and testimony and debate about the bill before us today, and it is with a certain amount of reluctance that I rise to oppose the bill and urge Members to vote against it.

I do so because I have come to the conclusion, one that I think is easy to reach by reading the bill, that this bill, while it proposes to offer more flexibility to States, it actually does quite the opposite. This bill is loaded with new mandates. It is heavy on prescriptions from the Federal Government. And it does so in a program that over the last 30 years has spent some $120 billion on a program that members of both parties, and in fact, some of the program's strongest advocates have described as a dismal failure.

I would like to read a quote that was issued today describing the bill from former Assistant U.S. Secretary of Education. It says, "The depressing bill on the House floor today suggests that when it comes to Federal education policy it matters not whether or not the Congress is Republican or Democrat. Neither seems to care about the kids. Neither is willing to preserve the status quo. Both are willing to throw good money after bad. This Title I bill is essentially more of the same, which is why the education establishment likes it, why the establishment's cheerleaders in the media have praised it and why it will not do anything good for America's neediest children, though it will continue to pump billions into the pockets of those employed by their failing schools. It perpetuates failed programs, failed reform strategies and a failed conception of the Federal role. To all intents and purposes, Lyndon Johnson is still making Federal education policy, despite 3½ decades of evidence that this approach does not work. A huge opportunity is being wasted. Needy kids are being neglected. The blob is being pacified. States and districts with broken reform strategies are being spurned and the so-called reforms in this package, while not harmful do not amount to a hill of beans. Every important idea for real change has been defeated, though some brave House members are going to try to resuscitate them," and I will end the quote there.

It goes on to talk about tomorrow's debate on Straight A's as an opportunity for real reform and that we should keep our fingers crossed.

The author of that quote, Chester Finn, again a former Assistant U.S. Secretary of Education, is right on the mark, Madam Chairman. We are for accountability. Accountability is a nice topic. It is one that we should be in favor of. This bill takes a bad program, adds $900 million in new authorization and proposes to fix this broken system with new Federal controls, new Federal definitions of quality and new Federal prescriptions for change at the local level.

I submit that it will not work, and we should not have any reasonable expectation that it will work. I do not doubt that it makes us feel good here in Washington. From that perspective, this bill certainly satisfies a certain therapeutic need that we may have because we care about these children, and we want to see the dollars get to their classrooms, and we want to see them progress and improve academically. That is a goal to which we all can agree.

The notion that we here in Washington, D.C. can establish new rules, new regulations, new mandates and expect them to take hold in all 50 States, in tens of thousands of school districts, and make some meaningful improvement is the same failed philosophy that this Congress has pursued for decades. This bill truly is more of the same, and I am afraid to say that.

One of the opportunities that we missed is in full portability. If we really believe that the fairness in education should be measured by the relationship between students, we should allow the dollars that are spent in this bill to follow the students when they try to seek the academic opportunity in the best setting, according to their parents' choice.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GREEN).

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Madam Chairman, I am glad to follow my colleague, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER), because obviously I support the bill generally; but I had some concern about the committee mark, and I am told that it has been corrected in dealing with limited English proficient children under title I. The concern I had was a parent would actually have to give permission for their children to be in a bilingual program or even be in title I if they were limited in English proficiency.

I do not have any problem with parents being able to take their children out of a program, but to get that parent's permission before, and the wife that is a schoolteacher, oftentimes they do not have the correct address sometimes and the teachers are the ones that are going to have to follow up on making sure that parent gives that permission; and it is the children who will be in a no-man's land for a period of time. I know the manager's amendment, I think, corrected it where that child will be in that program and if the parent wants to remove them that is fine because it ought to always be the parent's decision.

In fact, that is the way the practice is today because in my own district children say they do not want their children in bilingual, and it is not that difficult to remove them from that if the parent wants it.

The bill overall is very good. In fact, even in the administration statement where it said that in supporting the bill that the House should change or should delete the provisions that would require parental consent for title I services and jeopardize student access to the full title I benefit and opportunities of the high standards and, again, I think the manager amendment has done that and I congratulate both the chairman and the ranking member and the committee for being able to do that, because I have been in every public school in my district. I have watched bilingual programs work, and they do work. Students do not stay in there for their full life. They stay in there typically 2 to 4 years, depending on the students.

Although I have to admit I was in a kindergarten class a few years ago, went to that class in September when they were first bilingual, went back in May and those children were speaking English. I read to them first in September in Spanish, and when I went back in May they were speaking English; and I read them an English book.

So it works. That is what we need to make sure that we continue that.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA), another member of the committee, a subcommittee chair.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Madam Chairman, I thank the chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING), for yielding me this time; and I congratulate him on the pair of bills that he passed out of the subcommittee last week.

I think if we take a look at the bills in context as a pair they are a very positive step forward, and tomorrow I will strongly urge my colleagues to support the Straight A's bill because I really believe that this is the type of program that addresses the needs of our neediest children.

Today, however, we are talking about H.R. 2. H.R. 2 is what I believe is a tinkering around the edges of a program that needs much more radical reform. If we take a look at this program and the results that it has generated over the last 35 years, here are some of what my colleagues on the full committee have said about title I: all of the reports would indicate that we are not doing very well. Another quote, to date, 34 years later, title I, since its inception, we still see a huge gap in the achievement levels between students from poor families and students from nonpoor families.

The message is consistent that title I has not achieved the kinds of results that we want, and that is why we need more significant reform than what we find in this bill. Other quotes, I do not want new money for title I until we fix it. I am not sure there ever was a time when title I was unbroken, but it is certainly broken now.

I know what is currently the law. It is not working. We have failed those students over and over and over again. That is why we need more significant reform than what we have.

Over the last couple of years, we have had the opportunity to travel around the country and also take a look at education programs here in Washington. The project was called Education at a Crossroads. It went to many of these areas where title I is, and what the people at the local level wanted is they did not want more mandates from Washington. What they wanted is more flexibility to serve the needs of their kids. They know the names of their kids. They know the needs of the kids in their classroom, and they said please free us up from the regulations and the mandates and let us serve the needs of our kids.

What we have is, yes, we have reforms but we have a thick bill that is going to impose significantly more mandates on those schools that are going to end up focusing on red tape and meeting the process requirements rather than focusing on the needs of our kids. That is why tomorrow when we talk about Straight A's, that is what represents the type of change that we need, because what it says is, in exchange for accountability, where we measure the results of the learning for each of our kids, which is a huge new mandate on the States, but in exchange for that mandate we give the States and the local education agencies a tremendous amount of flexibility for how they meet the needs of their kids, so we measure performance and we give them flexibility. That is the kind of mirror package that we need to put together.

The Education Department has hundreds of programs and hundreds of mandates. It is why we need reform. It is why we need flexibility with accountability.

I am disappointed I have to oppose this bill, but I look forward tomorrow when we pass the Straight A's bill which will give States and local education agencies the types of flexibility they need to really improve education.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK).

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Madam Chairman, I believe very strongly in the Federal responsibility for public education. As we come to the end of this century, it is extremely heartwarming to me to be told by all sectors of our society that education is the most important responsibility that any level of government has and must assume if we are to fulfill the responsibilities that each of us has been given: the local school boards, the local communities, the parents, the State government, and finally the Federal Government.

I was here in 1965 when Public Law 8910 passed and the first steps by the Federal Government were taken to try to encourage the Nation to do better in public education. After 25 years of debate, the one area that everybody, all of the different sectors of disagreement could come together on, was that the Federal Government at the very least had responsibility for the poor, the disadvantaged, the economically disadvantaged, educationally disadvantaged children of our country.

That is how Public Law 8910 came to pass. It has made tremendous strides. I disparage to hear that people are saying that it has made no difference. It has made tremendous difference, and there are numerous reports that document that. If that were not true, we would not be here today under a new majority leadership of this Congress again talking about the importance of Federal education programs. That is what we are here today under H.R. 2 debating.

Title I has been a success. We in each of our districts are terribly frustrated when we pick up the test results and see the same schools at the bottom of the list, and so we want to do everything we can to help them; but I am not sure that standardizing everything, holding everything into precise measurement, is going to fit in each of our circumstances. So I would hope that we look at this legislation and look at its creative dynamic for us to meet our responsibilities in the next century.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. FATTAH).

Mr. FATTAH. Madam Chairman, let me thank my ranking member and his counterpart in my home State, the chairman of the committee. These two gentlemen, along with the former governor, the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE), and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE), have done an extraordinary job crafting the legislation that is now before the House, and I am pleased to rise in support of it.

This is a major step forward. It is a bipartisan bill. It responds to the national cry that we focus more on the next generation and their education than perhaps we ordinarily would do.

It is said that the difference between a statesman and a politician is the focus on the next generation versus the next election.

□ 1630

Well, this bill focuses on the next generation in an important way. I want to commend the chairman and the ranking member for their work on this bill and the subcommittee chairs.

I want to say that I want to have the opportunity to offer a couple of amendments that I hope that will improve the bill. I know all who offer amendments are hopeful that we will be able to improve this bill. But the work that has been done should be applauded by this House.

This is a bill that today represents a significant step forward; and, rather than take time out of the general debate to focus on my amendments, I really wanted to just rise and to ask this House to make sure that, at the conclusion, we have a bill that is at least as good that has been presented to us today, because I think this bill is worthy of this House's support.

The amendments that I am going to offer is just going to attempt to even the playing field between Title I students and non-Title I students, between disadvantaged students and those who have a little more advantage in our States.

This is supposedly one Nation under God. We should work through this bill to make sure that each child has an equal opportunity. We say that a lot, but we know that, in each of our States, different children have different sets of opportunities.

The amendments that I am going to offer are going to seek to close those gaps and to make sure that, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Chairman GOODLING) said in his opening remarks, that the children who most need to have a qualified teacher have a qualified teacher, and that we have the opportunity in terms of equalizing spending to encourage our States to make sure that they are providing an equal playing field as the Federal Government comes in and hopefully provides a hand up for those who may be starting out in a deficit position.

I would encourage my colleagues to support the Student Results Act, H.R. 2.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. HILLEARY), a member of the committee.

Mr. HILLEARY. Madam Chairman, I am proud to be before the House today to support H.R. 2. This legislation will take a step in the right direction, without question, to improve the Title I education program for our children.

Providing more flexibility and accountability for Title I is exactly what our children need in disadvantaged areas. The improvement in Title I would be felt most in our inner cities where Title I funds repeatedly get caught in a bureaucratic maze and too few of those dollars actually reach our children.

However, I also want to commend the committee for realizing that rural schools must also be helped. Within H.R. 2, there is a section that specifically will allow the rural schools to receive the aid that they might not otherwise receive.

Often rural schools are at a disadvantage in receiving formula grants, like

Title I, and competitive grants. These communities simply do not have the tax base and the access to grant writers that some of their bigger urban counterparts do. In addition, the formulas are skewed in some cases to strike against rural areas even if they have a high poverty quotient.

H.R. 2 successfully, although not completely, addresses this problem by including a rural schools initiative that will provide additional flexibility and funds for those underserved populations.

I hope that all of my colleagues can join together and support this great piece of legislation.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR).

Mr. BONIOR. Madam chairman, I thank the gentleman from Missouri, my ranking member, for his time.

Madam Chairman, I want to say at the beginning how much I appreciate the efforts by the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SANCHEZ) and my distinguished colleague on the other side of the aisle, the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) and for their amendment; and that is the issue to which I would like to speak for just a second, Madam Chairman.

Their voices on this issue will and have made an enormous difference, not just in this Congress, but in the lives of young girls who will grow up to be women and leaders in their communities for decades and generations to come.

This amendment that they are offering reaffirms our commitment, our Nation's commitment to offer girls equal educational opportunities from the day they start school. That is when the difference has to be made, right out of the box, right from the beginning.

This amendment will provide important training and resources for our teachers so that they are aware of their need to be equitable in how they pursue their educational instructions in the classroom.

Different expectations lead to different academic performances. So if a girl in the classroom is not expected to excel in math or in science, which leads to careers that are lucrative in terms of their financial ability and are productive and are important in terms of the overall community, if they are not expected to excel in those areas, they will not excel in those areas.

So the attitude that is brought into the classroom by the teacher is critical, and that requires training and understanding.

Over time, if this is not done, what we have is a situation which leads to inequality and then just enormous missed opportunities later on for these girls and then eventually women. With training, teachers could learn to get the most out of every student regardless of their gender.

Then, fourthly, let me just say that this amendment will help America close an alarming gender gap between boys and girls in technology: math, science, but also in technology. Experts predict that 65 percent of all the jobs in the year 2010 will require technological skills, but only a small percentage of girls take computer science classes or go on to pursue degrees in math and science. If girls are not being encouraged in these fields, they and their families are, as I said, going to suffer economically in the future.

In conclusion, Madam Chairman, let me just say that it used to be said that teachers can change lives with just the right mix of chalk and challenges. Well, in today's high-tech world, the challenges are there, but the chalk is not enough.

This amendment will put resources into our schools that will pay dividends for generations to come. It will create a sensitivity. It will create a training. It will create an aura that girls can do anything they set their minds to do. They can be challenged. They can meet that challenge. They can grow up with careers that will provide them, their families, and their communities great, not only challenge, but reward in the future.

I want to thank the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK) and the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLAY), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR), the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER), and all my colleagues who have worked on this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will rise informally.

The Speaker pro tempore (Mr. OSE) assumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Sherman Williams, one of his secretaries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee will resume its sitting.

STUDENT RESULTS ACT OF 1999

The Committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 4½ minutes, the balance of the time.

Madam Chairman, I am extremely happy that this is not a status quo piece of legislation. We have had status quo in this program for the first 20 years of this program, and it was a disaster. In 1994, we added a little bit of accountability. We are not sure what that brought us yet. We will find that out after the studies are done by the Department as to how they messed up the scoring on the tests.

I am also pleased that this has been a bipartisan effort, as most of our education bills have. I am happy to say that, so far, we passed the Flexibility Act in a bipartisan fashion. I am happy to say that we passed the Teacher Empowerment Act in a bipartisan fashion. The bipartisan Teacher Empowerment Act takes care of the class size reduction problem. The tax bill takes care of the building problem. I am happy that all of those have been passed out of our committee and on the floor of the House.

I am happy to say that, when we get to the amendment process, we will model all the preschool programs that they talk about after a program that has worked. It is called Even Start. We will make sure that, as a matter of fact, that is the model.

I think we better be careful about increasing funds. Generally, if you failed for a period of time, they say, okay, show us what you are going to do to be successful, and then we will see whether you are successful, and then we will determine whether you should receive considerably more money.

I am sure that, by the time we implement this and it is in vogue for a couple of years, we will be able to go to the appropriators and say look how successful we have been, and they will be very happy to increase funds.

So when we get to the amendment process, we will all have different ideas of how we make this bill better. I have heard the subcommittee ranking member say that on many occasions, and I always say, "but that means we have to do it your way." So we will see how that process goes.

But to this point, we have had a wonderful time. We had a horrible 4-day markup. But everybody had an opportunity to vent their emotions and whatever else they were doing at that particular time. The end result will be that the most disadvantaged youngsters, the children who need us the most, will benefit from this program. They will not continue to be left behind. We cannot afford to leave them behind.

Mr. MANZULLO. Madam Chairman, I reluctantly rise today to express my concerns about the Student Results Act, H.R. 2.

The proponents of this bill attempt to accomplish many positive reforms to several federal education programs, such as reinforcing parental rights in the bilingual education program; offering school choice, if states want it, for students in low performing schools; and changing the poverty threshold requirement for school-wide program eligibility.

However, while I believe this legislation is well intended, I am deeply concerned by this bill's overstepping of the authority of the federal government. Just because the federal government is responsible for about 6 percent of a state's (or local district's) total education budget, it appears that some of my colleagues believe we can exercise power to impose our education policies on states and local schools districts.

For example, the Illinois Administrative Code contains a state-adopted standard for all teachers' aids. This federal legislation preempts all state requirements for teachers' aids, and, of course, if a state did not follow the federal requirements, then the state or local school agency would not be eligible to receive Title I funding. The federal government has no authority for dictating standards for teachers' aides. The next step is dictating standards for teachers.

Also, a provision has been included in H.R. 2 that would supersede and interfere with state laws for tort liability in an area where there is no interstate commerce or other justification for federal preemption. This provision would provide limited civil litigation immunity to teachers, principals, and other local school officials who engage in "reasonable actions to maintain school discipline." This is not a federal issue. It is a state issue, and every state, including Illinois, has a tort immunity act involving State employees, such as teachers. However, H.R. 2 mandates a one-size-fits-all plan on how states should handle their local claims.

I appreciate the efforts that my colleagues have made to reform the current education program that funds low-income students. I believe that a new approach is needed and applaud many of the innovative ideas that have found their way into this legislation. If I were a member of the state legislature, I would support this bill. Unfortunately, H.R. 2 goes way beyond what our Constitution envisions as the proper role for the federal government with regard to education policies.

Mr. CANNON. Madam Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 2, the Student Results Act of 1999. I would like to thank Chairman GOODLING for his work on this bill.

Several weeks ago, I approached the Chairman to discuss some of the education issues facing Utah, including a 20 percent cut in Title I funding due to changes in the allocation formulas implemented this past year. The Chairman has graciously addressed those issues by including language to "Hold Harmless" those states that are experiencing dramatic cuts in their Title I funding.

This provision will allow Utah, and several other small states, to continue funding levels for the education of disadvantaged students.

Today we seek to empower disadvantaged students across the country by providing them access to a better education. We desire to help them develop a foundation from which they can succeed. By providing educational opportunities we will ensure that these children will have the tools to become productive members of society.

A good education is essential to achieving success in life. Through this bill we will help to provide funding for teachers, books, and supplies to contribute to a quality education for disadvantaged students, helping them to build confidence and self esteem. We need to provide them with the tools to enter society and not only survive but thrive. In doing so we seek to guarantee the future of our nation and our way of life.

I believe that a good education is one of the greatest gifts that we can give our children. By passing this bill we will be improving the education of disadvantaged students all across the country. I urge my colleagues' support of H.R. 2, the Student Results Act of 1999.

Mr. GARY MILLER of California. Madam Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 2 the "Student Results Act of 1999."

H.R. 2 authorizes the Title of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act and other programs assisting disadvantaged students.

Under H.R. 2:

States, School Districts and Schools Held Accountable to Demonstrate Results to Parents.—All states, school districts and schools will be held accountable for ensuring their students meet high academic standards set by states.

H.R. 2 Closes Achievement Gaps.—States, local school districts and schools must improve the achievement of all groups of students so that no one is left behind.

H.R. 2 Rewards Excellence.—Rewards Title I schools that make substantial progress in closing achievement gaps.

H.R. 2 Empowers Parents.—Parents and the community will be provided report cards on student achievement, teacher qualifications, and other important indicators of school quality in Title I schools.

H.R. 2 Expands School Choice Opportunities.—Gives families the option to take children out of failing Title I schools and enroll in other public or charter schools.

H.R. 2 Sends More Dollars to the Classroom.—95 percent of Title I school district dollars are directed to the classroom.

H.R. 2 Protects Local Control and Flexibility.—States and Local school districts may request waivers to tailor these programs to their unique needs through Ed-Flex or from the Secretary.

H.R. 2 Focuses on What Works.—Ensures that federal education programs will fund instruction based on the most current, proven research—not the latest trends.

Once again, I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support the Student Results Act.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the bill is considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendment and is considered read.

The text of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

TITLE I—STUDENT RESULTS

PART A—BASIC PROGRAM

SEC. 101. LOW-ACHIEVING CHILDREN MEET HIGH STANDARDS.

The heading for title I is amended by striking “DISADVANTAGED” and inserting “LOW-ACHIEVING”.

SEC. 102. PURPOSES AND INTENT.

Section 1001 (20 U.S.C. 6301) is amended to read as follows:

“SEC. 1001. FINDINGS; STATEMENT OF PURPOSE; AND RECOGNITION OF NEED.

“(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

“(1) Schools that enroll high concentrations of children living in poverty face the greatest challenges but effective educational strategies based on scientifically based research can succeed in educating children to high standards.

“(2) High-poverty schools are much more likely to be identified as failing to meet State standards for satisfactory progress. As a result, these schools are generally the most in need of additional resources and technical assistance to build the capacity of these schools to address the many needs of their students.

“(3) The educational progress of children participating in programs under this title is closely associated with their being taught by a highly qualified staff, particularly in schools with the highest concentrations of poverty, where paraprofessionals, uncertified teachers, and teachers teaching out of field frequently provide instructional services.

“(4) Congress and the public would benefit from additional data in order to evaluate the efficacy of the changes made to this title in the Improving America’s Schools Act of 1994.

“(5) States, local educational agencies, and schools should be given as much flexibility as possible in exchange for greater accountability for improving student achievement.

“(6) Programs funded under this part must demonstrate increased effectiveness in improving schools in order to ensure all children achieve to high standards.

“(b) PURPOSE AND INTENT.—The purpose and intent of this title are to ensure that all children have a fair and equal opportunity to obtain a high quality education.

“(c) RECOGNITION OF NEED.—The Congress recognizes the following:

“(1) Educational needs are particularly great for low-achieving children in our Nation’s highest-poverty schools, children with limited English proficiency, children of migrant workers, children with disabilities, Indian children, children who are neglected or delinquent and young children and their parents who are in need of family literacy services.

“(2) Despite more than 3 decades of Federal assistance, a sizable achievement gap remains between minority and nonminority students, and between disadvantaged students and their more advantaged peers.

“(3) Too many students must attend local schools that fail to provide them with a quality education, and are given no alternatives to enable them to receive a quality education.

“(4) States, local educational agencies and schools should be held accountable for improving the academic achievement of all students, and for identifying and turning around low-performing schools.

“(5) Federal education assistance is intended not only to increase pupil achievement overall, but also more specifically and importantly, to help ensure that all pupils, especially the disadvantaged, meet challenging standards for curriculum content and pupil performance. It can only be determined if schools, local educational agencies, and States, are reaching this goal if pupil achievement results are reported specifically by disadvantaged and minority status.”

SEC. 103. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY GRANTS.—Subsection (a) of section 1002 (20 U.S.C. 6302(a)) is amended by striking “$7,400,000,000 for fiscal year 1995” and inserting “$8,350,000,000 for fiscal year 2000”.

(b) EDUCATION OF MIGRATORY CHILDREN.—Subsection (c) of section 1002 (20 U.S.C. 6302(c)) is amended by striking “$310,000,000 for fiscal year 1995” and inserting “$400,000,000 for fiscal year 2000”.

(c) PREVENTION AND INTERVENTION PROGRAMS FOR YOUTH WHO ARE NEGLECTED, DELINQUENT, OR AT RISK OF DROPPING OUT.—Subsection (d) of section 1002 (20 U.S.C. 6302(d)) is amended by striking “$40,000,000 for fiscal year 1995” and inserting “$50,000,000 for fiscal year 2000”.

(d) CAPITAL EXPENSES.—Subsection (e) of section 1002 (20 U.S.C. 6302(e)) is amended to read as follows:

“(e) CAPITAL EXPENSES.—For the purpose of carrying out section 1120(e), there are authorized to be appropriated $15,000,000 for fiscal year 2000, $15,000,000 for fiscal year 2001, and $5,000,000 for fiscal year 2002.”

(e) ADDITIONAL ASSISTANCE.—Subsection (f) of section 1002 is amended to read as follows:

“(f) SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT.—Each State may reserve for the purpose of carrying out its duties under section 1116 and 1117, the greater of one half of 1 percent of the amount allocated under this part, or $200,000.”

(f) STATE ADMINISTRATION.—Section 1002 is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(h) STATE ADMINISTRATION.—

“(1) STATE RESERVATION.—Each State may reserve, from the grants it receives under parts A, C, and D, of this title, an amount equal to the greater of 1 percent of the amount it received under parts A, C, and D, for fiscal year 1999, or $400,000 ($50,000 for each outlying area), to carry out administrative duties assigned under parts A, C, and D.

“(2) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for fiscal year 2000 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years for additional State administration grants. Any such additional grants shall be allocated among the States in proportion to the grants received by each State for that fiscal year under parts A, C, and D of this title.

“(3) SPECIAL RULE.—The amount allocated to each State under this subsection may not exceed the amount of State funds expended by the State educational agency to administer elementary and secondary education programs in such State.”

SEC. 104. RESERVATION AND ALLOCATION.

Section 1003 (20 U.S.C. 6303) is repealed.

SEC. 105. STATE PLANS.

Section 1111 (20 U.S.C. 6311) is amended to read as follows:

“SEC. 1111. STATE PLANS.

“(a) PLANS REQUIRED.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Any State desiring to receive a grant under this part shall submit to the Secretary a plan, developed in consultation with local educational agencies, teachers, pupil services personnel, administrators (including administrators of programs described in other parts of this title), other staff, and parents, that satisfies the requirements of this section and that is coordinated with other programs under this Act, the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, the Carl D. Perkins Vocational and Technical Education Act of 1998, and the Head Start Act.

“(2) CONSOLIDATED PLAN.—A State plan submitted under paragraph (1) may be submitted as part of a consolidated plan under section 14302.

“(b) STANDARDS, ASSESSMENTS, AND ACCOUNTABILITY.—

“(1) CHALLENGING STANDARDS.—(A) Each State plan shall demonstrate that the State has adopted challenging content standards and challenging student performance standards that will be used by the State, its local educational agencies, and its schools to carry out this part, except that a State shall not be required to submit such standards to the Secretary.

“(B) The standards required by subparagraph (A) shall be the same standards that the State applies to all schools and children in the State.

“(C) The State shall have such standards for elementary and secondary school children served under this part in subjects determined by the State, but including at least mathematics and reading or language arts, which shall include the same knowledge, skills, and levels of performance expected of all children.

“(D) Standards under this paragraph shall include—

“(i) challenging content standards in academic subjects that—

“(I) specify what children are expected to know and be able to do;

“(II) contain coherent and rigorous content; and

“(III) encourage the teaching of advanced skills;

“(ii) challenging student performance standards that—

“(I) are aligned with the State’s content standards;

“(II) describe two levels of high performance, proficient and advanced, that determine how well children are mastering the material in the State content standards; and

“(III) describe a third level of performance, basic, to provide complete information about the progress of the lower performing children toward achieving to the proficient and advanced levels of performance.

“(E) For the subjects in which students will be served under this part, but for which a State is not required by subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) to develop, and has not otherwise developed such standards, the State plan shall describe a strategy for ensuring that such students are taught the same knowledge and skills and held to the same expectations as are all children.

“(2) ADEQUATE YEARLY PROGRESS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Each State plan shall demonstrate, based on assessments described under paragraph (4), what constitutes adequate yearly progress of—

“(i) any school served under this part toward enabling all children to meet the State’s challenging student performance standards;

“(ii) any local educational agency that received funds under this part toward enabling all children in schools receiving assistance under this part to meet the State's challenging student performance standards; and “(iii) the State in enabling all children in schools receiving assistance under this part to meet the State's challenging student performance standards.

“(B) DEFINITION.—Adequate yearly progress shall be defined in a manner that—“(i) applies the same high standards of academic performance to all students in the State;

“(ii) takes into account the progress of all students in the State and in each local educational agency and school served under section 1114 or 1115;

“(iii) uses the State challenging content and challenging student performance standards and assessments described in paragraphs (1) and (4);

“(iv) compares separately, within each State, local educational agency, and school, the performance and progress of students by gender, each major ethnic and racial group, by English proficiency status, by migrant status, by students with disabilities as compared to non-disabled students, and by economically disadvantaged students as compared to students who are not economically disadvantaged (except that such disaggregation shall not be required in a case in which the number of students in a category is insufficient to yield statistically reliable information or the results would reveal individually identifiable information about an individual student);

“(v) compares the proportions of students at the ‘basic’, ‘proficient’, and ‘advanced’ levels of performance with the proportions of students at each of the 3 levels in the same grade in the previous school year;

“(vi) at the State's discretion, may also include other academic measures such as promotion, completion of college preparatory courses, and high school completion, except that inclusion of such other measures may not change which schools or local educational agencies would otherwise be subject to improvement or corrective action under section 1116 if the discretionary indicators were not included;

“(vii) includes annual numerical goals for improving the performance of all groups specified in clause (iv) and narrowing gaps in performance between these groups; and

“(viii) includes a timeline for ensuring that each group of students described in clause (iv) meets or exceeds the State's proficient level of performance on each State assessment used for the purposes of section 1111 and section 1116 within 10 years from the date of enactment of the Student Results Act of 1999.

“(C) ANNUAL IMPROVEMENT FOR STATES.—For a State to make adequate yearly progress under subparagraph (A)(iii), not less than 90 percent of the local educational agencies within its jurisdiction shall meet the State's criteria for adequate yearly progress.

“(D) ANNUAL IMPROVEMENT FOR LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—For a local educational agency to make adequate yearly progress under subparagraph (A)(ii), not less than 90 percent of the schools within its jurisdiction must meet the State's criteria for adequate yearly progress.

“(E) ANNUAL IMPROVEMENT FOR SCHOOLS.—For a school to make adequate yearly progress under subparagraph (A)(i), not less than 90 percent of each group of students described in subparagraph (A)(iv) who are enrolled in such school are required to take the assessments consistent with section 612(a)(17)(A) of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act and paragraph (4)(F)(iv) on which adequate yearly progress is based.

“(F) PUBLIC NOTICE AND COMMENT.—Each State shall ensure that in developing its plan for adequate yearly progress, it diligently seeks public comment from a range of institutions and individuals in the State with an interest in improved student achievement and that the State makes and will continue to make a substantial effort to ensure that information under this part is widely known and understood by the public, parents, teachers, and school administrators throughout the State. Such efforts shall include, at a minimum, publication of such information and explanatory text, broadly to the public through such means as the Internet, the media, and public agencies.

“(G) REVIEW.—The Secretary shall review the information from States on the adequate yearly progress of schools and local educational agencies required under subparagraphs (A) and (B) for the purpose of determining State and local compliance with section 1116.

“(3) STATE AUTHORITY.—If a State educational agency provides evidence, which is satisfactory to the Secretary, that neither the State educational agency nor any other State government official, agency, or entity has sufficient authority, under State law, to adopt curriculum content and student performance standards, and assessments aligned with such standards, which will be applicable to all students enrolled in the State's public schools, then the State educational agency may meet the requirements of this subsection by—

“(A) adopting standards and assessments that meet the requirements of this subsection, on a statewide basis, limiting their applicability to students served under this part; or

“(B) adopting and implementing policies that ensure that each local educational agency in the State which receives grants under this part will adopt curriculum content and student performance standards, and assessments aligned with such standards, which meet all of the criteria in this subsection and any regulations regarding such standards and assessments which the Secretary may publish, and which are applicable to all students served by each such local educational agency.

“(4) ASSESSMENTS.—Each State plan shall demonstrate that the State has implemented a set of high-quality, yearly student assessments that include, at a minimum, assessments in mathematics and reading or language arts, that will be used, starting not later than the 2000–2001 school year, as the primary means of determining the yearly performance of each local educational agency and school served under this title in enabling all children served under this part to meet the State's challenging student performance standards. Such assessments shall—

“(A) be the same assessments used to measure the performance of all children, if the State measures the performance of all children;

“(B) be aligned with the State's challenging content and student performance standards and provide coherent information about student attainment of such standards;

“(C) be used for purposes for which such assessments are valid and reliable, and be consistent with relevant, nationally recognized professional and technical standards for such assessments;

“(D) measure the proficiency of students in the academic subjects in which a State has adopted challenging content and student performance standards and be administered not less than one or more times during—

“(i) grades 3 through 5;

“(ii) grades 6 through 9; and

“(iii) grades 10 through 12;

“(E) involve multiple up-to-date measures of student performance, including measures that assess higher order thinking skills and understanding;

“(F) provide for—

“(i) the participation in such assessments of all students;

“(ii) the reasonable adaptations and accommodations for students with disabilities defined under 602(3) of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act necessary to measure the achievement of such students relative to State content and State student performance standards;

“(iii) the inclusion of limited English proficient students who shall be assessed, to the extent practicable, in the language and form most likely to yield accurate and reliable information on what such students know and can do in content areas;

“(iv) notwithstanding clause (iii), the assessment (using tests written in English) of reading or language arts of any student who has attended school in the United States (not including Puerto Rico) for 3 or more consecutive school years, except if the local educational agency determines, on a case-by-case individual basis, that assessments in another language and form would likely yield more accurate and reliable information on what such students know and can do, the local educational agency may assess such students in the appropriate language other than English for 1 additional year; and

“(G) include students who have attended schools in a local educational agency for a full academic year but have not attended a single school for a full academic year, except that the performance of students who have attended more than one school in the local educational agency in any academic year shall be used only in determining the progress of the local educational agency;

“(H) provide individual student reports, which include assessment scores, or other information on the attainment of student performance standards; and

“(I) enable results to be disaggregated within each State, local educational agency, and school by gender, by each major racial and ethnic group, by English proficiency status, by migrant status, by students with disabilities as compared to nondisabled students, and by economically disadvantaged students as compared to students who are not economically disadvantaged.

“(5) SPECIAL RULE.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Assessment measures that do not meet the requirements of paragraph (4)(C) may be included as one of the multiple measures, if a State includes in the State plan information regarding the State's efforts to validate such measures.

“(B) STUDENT PROFICIENCY IN GRADES K–2.—States may measure the proficiency of students in the academic subjects in which a State has adopted challenging content and student performance standards one or more times during grades K–2.

“(6) LANGUAGE ASSESSMENTS.—Each State plan shall identify the languages other than English that are present in the participating student population and indicate the languages for which yearly student assessments are not available and are needed. The State shall make every effort to develop such assessments and may request assistance from the Secretary if linguistically accessible assessment measures are needed. Upon request, the Secretary shall assist with the identification of appropriate assessment measures in the needed languages, but shall not mandate a specific assessment or mode of instruction.

“(7) ASSESSMENT DEVELOPMENT.—A State shall develop, and implement State assessments that are aligned to challenging State content standards that include, at a minimum, mathematics and reading or language arts by the 2000–2001 school year.

“(8) REQUIREMENT.—Each State plan shall describe—

“(A) how the State educational agency will assist each local educational agency and school affected by the State plan to develop the capacity to comply with each of the requirements of sections 1112(c)(1)(D), 1114(c), and 1115(c) that is applicable to such agency or school; and

“(B) such other factors the State considers appropriate to provide students an opportunity to achieve the knowledge and skills described in the challenging content standards adopted by the State.

“(c) OTHER PROVISIONS TO SUPPORT TEACHING AND LEARNING.—Each State plan shall contain assurances that—

“(1) the State educational agency will work with other agencies, including educational service agencies or other local consortia, and institutions to provide technical assistance to local educational agencies and schools to carry out the State educational agency’s responsibilities under this part, including technical assistance in providing professional development under section 1119 and technical assistance under section 1117; and

“(2)(A) where educational service agencies exist, the State educational agency will consider providing professional development and technical assistance through such agencies; and

“(1) IN GENERAL.—If the sums made available under this part for any fiscal year are insufficient to pay the full amounts that all States are eligible to receive under subsection (c) for such year, the Secretary shall ratably reduce such amounts for such year.

“(2) ADDITIONAL FUNDS.—If additional funds become available for making payments under subsection (c) for such fiscal year, amounts that were reduced under paragraph (1) shall be increased on the same basis as such amounts were reduced.

“(e) DEFINITION.—For the purpose of this section and sections 1124, 1124A, and 1125, the term ‘State’ means each of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.”

SEC. 121. BASIC GRANTS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.

Section 1124 (20 U.S.C. 6333 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

“SEC. 1124. BASIC GRANTS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.“(a) AMOUNT OF GRANTS.—

“(1) GRANTS FOR LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES AND PUERTO RICO.—Except as provided in paragraph (4) and in section 1126, the grant that a local educational agency is eligible to receive under this section for a fiscal year is the amount determined by multiplying—

“(A) the number of children counted under subsection (c); and

“(B) 40 percent of the average per-pupil expenditure in the State, except that the amount determined under this subparagraph shall not be less than 32 percent or more than 48 percent, of the average per-pupil expenditure in the United States.

“(2) CALCULATION OF GRANTS.—

“(A) ALLOCATIONS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—The Secretary shall calculate grants under this section on the basis of the number of children counted under subsection (c) for local educational agencies, unless the Secretary and the Secretary of Commerce determine that some or all of those data are unreliable or that their use would be otherwise inappropriate, in which case—

“(i) the 2 Secretaries shall publicly disclose the reasons for their determination in detail; and “(ii) paragraph (3) shall apply.

“(B) ALLOCATIONS TO LARGE AND SMALL LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—(i) For any fiscal year in which this paragraph applies, the Secretary shall calculate grants under this section for each local educational agency.

“(ii) The amount of a grant under this section for each large local educational agency shall be the amount determined under clause (i).

“(iii) For small local educational agencies, the State educational agency may either—

“(I) distribute grants under this section in amounts determined by the Secretary under clause (i); or “(II) use an alternative method approved by the Secretary to distribute the portion of the State’s total grants under this section that is based on those small agencies.

“(iv) An alternative method under clause (iii)(II) shall be based on population data that the State educational agency determines best reflect the current distribution of children in poor families among the State’s small local educational agencies that meet the eligibility criteria of subsection (b).

“(v) If a small local educational agency is dissatisfied with the determination of its grant by the State educational agency under clause (iii)(II), it may appeal that determination to the Secretary, who shall respond not later than 45 days after receipt of such appeal.

“(vi) As used in this subparagraph—

“(I) the term ‘large local educational agency’ means a local educational agency serving an area with a total population of 20,000 or more; and “(II) the term ‘small local educational agency’ means a local educational agency serving an area with a total population of less than 20,000.

“(3) ALLOCATIONS TO COUNTIES.—

“(A) CALCULATION.—For any fiscal year to which this paragraph applies, the Secretary shall calculate grants under this section on the basis of the number of children counted under section 1124(c) for counties, and State educational agencies shall suballocate county amounts to local educational agencies, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary.

“(B) DIRECT ALLOCATIONS.—In any State in which a large number of local educational agencies overlap county boundaries, or for which the State believes it has data that would better target funds than allocating them by county, the State educational agency may apply to the Secretary for authority to make the allocations under this part for a particular fiscal year directly to local educational agencies without regard to counties.

“(C) ASSURANCES.—If the Secretary approves the State educational agency’s application under subparagraph (B), the State educational agency shall provide the Secretary an assurance that such allocations shall be made—

“(i) using precisely the same factors for determining a grant as are used under this part; or

“(ii) using data that the State educational agency submits to the Secretary for approval that more accurately target poverty.

“(D) APPEAL.—The State educational agency shall provide the Secretary an assurance that it shall establish a procedure through which a local educational agency that is dissatisfied with its determinations under subparagraph (B) may appeal directly to the Secretary for a final determination.

“(4) PUERTO RICO.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—For each fiscal year, the grant which the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico shall be eligible to receive under this section shall be the amount determined by multiplying the number of children counted under subsection (c) for the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico by the product of—

“(i) the percentage which the average per pupil expenditure in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico is of the lowest average per pupil expenditure of any of the 50 States; and “(ii) 32 percent of the average per pupil expenditure in the United States.

“(B) MINIMUM PERCENTAGE.—The percentage in subparagraph (A)(i) shall not be less than—

“(i) for fiscal year 2000, 75.0 percent;

“(ii) for fiscal year 2001, 77.5 percent;

“(iii) for fiscal year 2002, 80.0 percent;

“(iv) for fiscal year 2003, 82.5 percent;

“(v) for fiscal year 2004 and succeeding fiscal years, 85.0 percent.

“(C) LIMITATION.—If the application of subparagraph (B) would result in any of the 50 States or the District of Columbia receiving less under this part than it received under this part for the preceding fiscal year, the percentage in subparagraph (A) shall be the greater of the percentage in subparagraph (A)(i) or the percentage used for the preceding fiscal year.

“(5) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘State’ does not include Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Northern Mariana Islands.

“(b) MINIMUM NUMBER OF CHILDREN TO QUALIFY.—A local educational agency is eligible for a basic grant under this section for any fiscal year only if the number of children counted under subsection (c) for that agency is both—

“(1) 10 or more; and

“(2) more than 2 percent of the total school-age population in the agency’s jurisdiction.

“(c) CHILDREN TO BE COUNTED.—

“(1) CATEGORIES OF CHILDREN.—The number of children to be counted for purposes of this section is the aggregate of—

“(A) the number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, in the school district of the local educational agency from families below the poverty level as determined under paragraph (2); and

“(B) the number of children (determined under paragraph (4) for either the preceding year as described in that paragraph, or for the second preceding year, as the Secretary finds appropriate) aged 5 to 17, inclusive, in the school district of such agency in institutions for neglected and delinquent children (other than such institutions operated by the United States), but not counted pursuant to subpart 1 of part D for the purposes of a grant to a State agency, or being supported in foster homes with public funds.

“(2) DETERMINATION OF NUMBER OF CHILDREN.—For the purposes of this section, the Secretary shall determine the number of children aged 5 to 17, inclusive, from families below the poverty level on the basis of the most recent satisfactory data, described in paragraph (3), available from the Department of Commerce. The District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico shall be treated as individual local educational agencies. If a local educational agency contains two or more counties in their entirety, then each county will be treated as if such county were a separate local educational agency for purposes of calculating grants under this part. The total of grants for such counties shall be allocated to such a local educational agency, which local educational agency shall distribute to schools in each county within such agency a share of the local educational agency’s total grant that is no less than the county’s share of the population counts used to calculate the local educational agency’s grant.

“(3) POPULATION UPDATES.—In fiscal year 2001 and every 2 years thereafter, the Secretary shall use updated data on the number of children, aged 5 to 17, inclusive, from families below the poverty level for local educational agencies or counties, published by the Department of Commerce, unless the Secretary and the Secretary of Commerce determine that use of the updated population data would be inappropriate or unreliable. If the Secretary and the Secretary of Commerce determine that some or all of the data referred to in this paragraph are inappropriate or unreliable, they shall publicly disclose their reasons. In determining the families which are below the poverty level, the Secretary shall utilize the criteria of poverty used by the Bureau of the Census in compiling the most recent decennial census, in such form as those criteria have been updated by increases in the Consumer Price Index for all urban consumers, published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

“(4) OTHER CHILDREN TO BE COUNTED.—The Secretary shall determine the number of children aged 5 through 17 living in institutions for neglected or delinquent children, or being supported in foster homes with public funds, on the basis of the caseload data for the month of October of the preceding fiscal year or, to the extent that such data are not available to the Secretary before January of the calendar year in which the Secretary’s determination is made, then on the basis of the most recent reliable data available to the Secretary at the time of such determination. The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall collect and transmit the information required by this subparagraph to the Secretary not later than January 1 of each year. For the purpose of this section, the Secretary shall consider all children who are in correctional institutions to be living in institutions for delinquent children.

“(5) ESTIMATE.—When requested by the Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce shall make a special updated estimate of the number of children of such ages who are from families below the poverty level (as determined under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph) in each school district, and the Secretary is authorized to pay (either in advance or by way of reimbursement) the Secretary of Commerce the cost of making this special estimate. The Secretary of Commerce shall give consideration to any request of the chief executive of a State for the collection of additional census information.

“(d) STATE MINIMUM.—Notwithstanding section 1122, the aggregate amount allotted for all local educational agencies within a State may not be less than the lesser of—

“(1) 0.25 percent of total grants under this section; or

“(2) the average of—

“(A) one-quarter of 1 percent of the total amount available for such fiscal year under this section; and

“(B) the number of children in such State counted under subsection (c) in the fiscal year multiplied by 150 percent of the national average per pupil payment made with funds available under this section for that year.”

SEC. 122. CONCENTRATION GRANTS.

Section 1124A (20 U.S.C. 6334 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

“SEC. 1124A. CONCENTRATION GRANTS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.

“(a) ELIGIBILITY FOR AND AMOUNT OF GRANTS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—(A) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, each local educational agency, in a State other than Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, which is eligible for a grant under section 1124 for any fiscal year is eligible for an additional grant under this section for that fiscal year if the number of children counted under section 1124(c) in the agency exceeds either—

“(i) 6,500; or

“(ii) 15 percent of the total number of children aged 5 through 17 in the agency.

“(B) Notwithstanding section 1122, no State described in subparagraph (A) shall receive less than the lesser of—

“(i) 0.25 percent of total grants; or

“(ii) the average of—

“(I) one-quarter of 1 percent of the sums available to carry out this section for such fiscal year; and

“(II) the greater of—“(aa) $340,000; or

“(bb) the number of children in such State counted for purposes of this section in that fiscal year multiplied by 150 percent of the national average per pupil payment made with funds available under this section for that year.

“(2) SPECIAL RULE.—For each county or local educational agency eligible to receive an additional grant under this section for any fiscal year the Secretary shall determine the product of—

“(A) the number of children counted under section 1124(c) for that fiscal year; and

“(B) the quotient resulting from the division of the amount determined for those agencies under section 1124(a)(1) for the fiscal year for which the determination is being made divided by the total number of children counted under section 1124(c) for that agency for that fiscal year.

“(3) AMOUNT.—The amount of the additional grant for which an eligible local educational agency or county is eligible under this section for any fiscal year shall be an amount which bears the same ratio to the amount available to carry out this section for that fiscal year as the product determined under paragraph (2) for such local educational agency for that fiscal year bears to the sum of such products for all local educational agencies in the United States for that fiscal year.

“(4) LOCAL ALLOCATIONS.—(A) Grant amounts under this section shall be determined in accordance with section 1124(a)(2) and (3).

“(B) For any fiscal year for which the Secretary allocates funds under this section on the basis of counties, a State may reserve not more than 2 percent of its allocation under this section to make grants to local educational agencies that meet the criteria of paragraph (1)(A)(i) or (ii) but that are in ineligible counties that do not meet these criteria.

“(b) STATES RECEIVING MINIMUM GRANTS.—In States that receive the minimum grant under subsection (a)(1)(B), the State educational agency shall allocate such funds among the local educational agencies in each State either—

“(1) in accordance with paragraphs (2) and (4) of subsection (a); or

“(2) based on their respective concentrations and numbers of children counted under section 1124(c), except that only those local educational agencies with concentrations or numbers of children counted under section 1124(c) that exceed the statewide average percentage of such children or the statewide average number of such children shall receive any funds on the basis of this paragraph.”

SEC. 123. TARGETED GRANTS.

Section 1125 (20 U.S.C. 6335 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

“SEC. 1125. TARGETED GRANTS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.

“(a) ELIGIBILITY OF LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—A local educational agency in a State is eligible to receive a targeted grant under this section for any fiscal year if the number of children in the local educational agency counted under subsection 1124(c), before application of the weighting factor described in subsection (c), is at least 10, and if the number of children counted for grants under section 1124 is at least 5 percent of the total population aged 5 to 17 years, inclusive, in the local educational agency. For each fiscal year for which the Secretary uses county population data to calculate grants, funds made available as a result of applying this subsection shall be reallocated by the State educational agency to other eligible local educational agencies in the State in proportion to the distribution of other funds under this section.

“(b) GRANTS FOR LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES, THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, AND PUERTO RICO.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount of the grant that a local educational agency in a State or that the District of Columbia is eligible to receive under this section for any fiscal year shall be the product of—

“(A) the weighted child count determined under subsection (c); and “(B) the amount in paragraph 1124(a)(1)(B).

“(2) PUERTO RICO.—For each fiscal year, the amount of the grant for which the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico is eligible under this section shall be equal to the number of children counted under subsection (c) for Puerto Rico, multiplied by the amount determined in subparagraph 1124(a)(4).

“(c) WEIGHTED CHILD COUNT.—

“(1) WEIGHTS FOR ALLOCATIONS TO COUNTIES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—For each fiscal year for which the Secretary uses county population data to calculate grants, the weighted child count used to determine a county's allocation under this section is the larger of the two amounts determined under clause (i) or (ii), as follows:

“(i) BY PERCENTAGE OF CHILDREN.—This amount is determined by adding—

“(I) the number of children determined under section 1124(c) for that county constituting up to 12.20 percent, inclusive, of the county's total population aged 5 to 17, inclusive, multiplied by 1.0;

“(II) the number of such children constituting more than 12.20 percent, but not more than 17.70 percent, of such population, multiplied by 1.75;

“(III) the number of such children constituting more than 17.70 percent, but not more than 22.80 percent, of such population, multiplied by 2.5;

“(IV) the number of such children constituting more than 22.80 percent, but not more than 29.70 percent, of such population, multiplied by 3.25; and

“(V) the number of such children constituting more than 29.70 percent of such population, multiplied by 4.0.

“(ii) BY NUMBER OF CHILDREN.—This amount is determined by adding—

“(I) the number of children determined under section 1124(c) constituting up to 1,917, inclusive, of the county's total population aged 5 to 17, inclusive, multiplied by 1.0;

“(II) the number of such children between 1,918 and 5,938, inclusive, in such population, multiplied by 1.5;

“(III) the number of such children between 5,939 and 20,199, inclusive, in such population, multiplied by 2.0;

“(IV) the number of such children between 20,200 and 77,999, inclusive, in such population, multiplied by 2.5; and

“(V) the number of such children in excess of 77,999 in such population, multiplied by 3.0.

“(B) PUERTO RICO.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), the weighted child count for Puerto Rico under this paragraph shall not be greater than the total number of children counted under subsection 1124(c) multiplied by 1.72.

“(2) WEIGHTS FOR ALLOCATIONS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—For each fiscal year for which the Secretary uses local educational agency data, the weighted child count used to determine a local educational agency's grant under this section is the larger of the two amounts determined under clauses (i) and (ii), as follows:

“(i) BY PERCENTAGE OF CHILDREN.—This amount is determined by adding—

“(I) the number of children determined under section 1124(c) for that local educational agency constituting up to 14.265 percent, inclusive, of the agency's total population aged 5 to 17, inclusive, multiplied by 1.0;

“(II) the number of such children constituting more than 14.265 percent, but not more than 21.553 percent, of such population, multiplied by 1.75;

“(III) the number of such children constituting more than 21.553 percent, but not more than 29.223 percent, of such population, multiplied by 2.5;

“(IV) the number of such children constituting more than 29.223 percent, but not more than 36.538 percent, of such population, multiplied by 3.25; and

“(V) the number of such children constituting more than 36.538 percent of such population, multiplied by 4.0.

“(ii) BY NUMBER OF CHILDREN.—This amount is determined by adding—

“(I) the number of children determined under section 1124(c) constituting up to 575, inclusive, of the agency's total population aged 5 to 17, inclusive, multiplied by 1.0;

“(II) the number of such children between 576 and 1,870, inclusive, in such population, multiplied by 1.5;

“(III) the number of such children between 1,871 and 6,910, inclusive, in such population, multiplied by 2.0;

“(IV) the number of such children between 6,911 and 42,000, inclusive, in such population, multiplied by 2.5; and

“(V) the number of such children in excess of 42,000 in such population, multiplied by 3.0.

“(B) PUERTO RICO.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), the weighted child count for Puerto Rico under this paragraph shall not be greater than the total number of children counted under section 1124(c) multiplied by 1.72.

“(d) CALCULATION OF GRANT AMOUNTS.—Grants under this section shall be calculated in accordance with section 1124(a)(2) and (3).

“(e) STATE MINIMUM.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section or section 1122, from the total amount available for any fiscal year to carry out this section, each State shall be allotted at least the lesser of—

“(1) 0.25 percent of total appropriations; or

“(2) the average of—

“(A) one-quarter of 1 percent of the total amount available to carry out this section; and
“(B) 150 percent of the national average grant under this section per child described in section 1124(c), without application of a weighting factor, multiplied by the State’s total number of children described in section 1124(c), without application of a weighting factor.”

SEC. 124. SPECIAL ALLOCATION PROCEDURES.

Section 1126 (20 U.S.C. 6337 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

“SEC. 1126. SPECIAL ALLOCATION PROCEDURES.

“(a) ALLOCATIONS FOR NEGLECTED CHILDREN.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—If a State educational agency determines that a local educational agency in the State is unable or unwilling to provide for the special educational needs of children who are living in institutions for neglected children as described in subparagraph (B) of section 1124(c)(1), the State educational agency shall, if such agency assumes responsibility for the special educational needs of such children, receive the portion of such local educational agency’s allocation under sections 1124, 1124A, and 1125 that is attributable to such children.

“(2) SPECIAL RULE.—If the State educational agency does not assume such responsibility, any other State or local public agency that does assume such responsibility shall receive that portion of the local educational agency’s allocation.

“(b) ALLOCATIONS AMONG LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—The State educational agency may allocate the amounts of grants under sections 1124, 1124A, and 1125 among the affected local educational agencies—

“(1) if two or more local educational agencies serve, in whole or in part, the same geographical area;

“(2) if a local educational agency provides free public education for children who reside in the school district of another local educational agency; or

“(3) to reflect the merger, creation, or change of boundaries of one or more local educational agencies.

“(c) REALLOCATION.—If a State educational agency determines that the amount of a grant a local educational agency would receive under sections 1124, 1124A, and 1125 is more than such local agency will use, the State educational agency shall make the excess amount available to other local educational agencies in the State that need additional funds in accordance with criteria established by the State educational agency.”

SEC. 125. SECULAR, NEUTRAL, AND NONIDEOLOGICAL.

Part A is amended by adding at the end the following:

“SEC. 1128. SECULAR, NEUTRAL, AND NONIDEOLOGICAL.

TITLE II—MAGNET SCHOOLS ASSISTANCE AND PUBLIC SCHOOL CHOICE

SEC. 201. MAGNET SCHOOLS ASSISTANCE.

Title V of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 7201 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

“TITLE V—MAGNET SCHOOLS ASSISTANCE AND PUBLIC SCHOOL CHOICE

“PART A—MAGNET SCHOOL ASSISTANCE

“SEC. 5101. FINDINGS.

“The Congress finds that—

“(1) magnet schools are a significant part of our Nation’s effort to achieve voluntary desegregation in our Nation’s schools;

“(2) the use of magnet schools has increased dramatically since the date of enactment of the Magnet Schools Assistance program, with approximately 2,000,000 students nationwide now attending such schools, of which more than 65 percent of the students are nonwhite;

“(3) magnet schools offer a wide range of distinctive programs that have served as models for school improvement efforts;

“(4) in administering the Magnet Schools Assistance program, the Federal Government has learned that—

“(A) where magnet programs are implemented for only a portion of a school’s student body, special efforts must be made to discourage the isolation of—

“(i) magnet school students from other students in the school; and

“(ii) students by racial characteristics;

“(B) local educational agencies can maximize their effectiveness in achieving the purposes of the Magnet Schools Assistance program if such agencies have more flexibility in the administration of such program in order to serve students attending a school who are not enrolled in the magnet school program;

“(C) local educational agencies must be creative in designing magnet schools for students at all academic levels, so that school districts do not select only the highest achieving students to attend the magnet schools;

“(D) consistent with desegregation guidelines, local educational agencies must seek to enable participation in magnet school programs by students who reside in the neighborhoods where the programs operate; and

“(E) in order to ensure that magnet schools are sustained after Federal funding ends, the Federal Government must assist school districts to improve their capacity to continue to operate magnet schools at a high level of performance; and

“(5) it is in the best interest of the Federal Government to—

“(A) continue the Federal Government’s support of school districts implementing court-ordered desegregation plans and school districts voluntarily seeking to foster meaningful interaction among students of different racial and ethnic backgrounds, beginning at the earliest stage of such students’ education;

“(B) ensure that all students have equitable access to quality education that will prepare such students to function well in a technologically oriented society and a highly competitive economy;

“(C) maximize the ability of local educational agencies to plan, develop, implement and continue effective and innovative magnet schools that contribute to State and local systemic reform; and “(D) ensure that grant recipients provide adequate data which demonstrates an ability to improve student achievement.

“SEC. 5102. STATEMENT OF PURPOSE.

“The purpose of this part is to assist in the desegregation of schools served by local educational agencies by providing financial assistance to eligible local educational agencies for—

“(1) the elimination, reduction, or prevention of minority group isolation in elementary and secondary schools with substantial proportions of minority students;

“(2) the development and implementation of magnet school projects that will assist local educational agencies in achieving systemic reforms and providing all students the opportunity to meet challenging State content standards and challenging State student performance standards;

“(3) the development and design of innovative educational methods and practices that promote diversity and increase choices in public elementary and secondary schools and educational programs; and

“(4) courses of instruction within magnet schools that will substantially strengthen the knowledge of academic subjects and the grasp of tangible and marketable vocational and technical skills of students attending such schools.

“SEC. 5103. PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.

“The Secretary, in accordance with this part, is authorized to make grants to eligible local educational agencies, and consortia of such agencies where appropriate, to carry out the purpose of this part for magnet schools that are—

“(1) part of an approved desegregation plan; and

“(2) designed to bring students from different social, economic, ethnic, and racial backgrounds together.

“SEC. 5104. DEFINITION.

“For the purpose of this part, the term ‘magnet school’ means a public elementary or secondary school or public elementary or secondary education center that offers a special curriculum capable of attracting substantial numbers of students of different racial backgrounds.

“SEC. 5105. ELIGIBILITY.

“(2) without having been required to do so, has adopted and is implementing, or will, if assistance is made available to such local educational agency or consortium of such agencies under this part, adopt and implement a plan that has been approved by the Secretary as adequate under title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 for the desegregation of minority-group-segregated children or faculty in such schools.

“SEC. 5106. APPLICATIONS AND REQUIREMENTS.

“(3) WAIVER.—(A) The Secretary may waive the requirement of paragraph (1), for not more than 1 year at a time, if the Secretary determines that the failure to comply with such requirement is due to exceptional or uncontrollable circumstances, such as a natural disaster or a precipitous and unforeseen decline in the agency's financial resources.

“(B) The Secretary shall not use the reduced amount of such agency's expenditures for the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which a waiver is granted to determine compliance with paragraph (1) for any succeeding fiscal year, but shall use the amount of expenditures that would have been required to comply with paragraph (1) in the absence of the waiver.

“(d) REALLOCATIONS.—The Secretary may reallocate, in a manner that the Secretary determines will best carry out the purpose of this subpart, any amounts that—

Any tribe may petition the Secretary for revision of existing attendance area boundaries. The Secretary shall cause such revisions to be published in the Federal Register.

Nothing in this section shall require termination of the operations of any facility which does not comply with such provisions and which is in use on the date of enactment of the Student Results Act of 1999.

“(b) COMPLIANCE PLAN.—At the time that the annual budget request for Bureau educational services is presented, the Secretary shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a detailed plan to bring all facilities covered under subsection (a) of this section into compliance with the standards referred to in subsection (a). Such plan shall include detailed information on the status of each facility’s compliance with such standards, specific cost estimates for meeting such standards at each school, and specific timelines for bringing each school into compliance with such standards.

“(c) CONSTRUCTION PRIORITIES.—

“(1) SYSTEM TO ESTABLISH PRIORITIES.—On an annual basis the Secretary shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress and cause to be published in the Federal Register, the system used to establish priorities for replacement and construction projects for Bureau funded schools and home-living schools, including boarding schools and dormitories. At the time any budget request for education is presented, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register and submit with the budget request the current list of all Bureau funded school construction priorities.

“(2) LONG-TERM CONSTRUCTION AND REPLACEMENT LIST.—In addition to the plan submitted under subsection (b), the Secretary shall—

“(A) not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of the Student Results Act of 1999, establish a long-term construction and replacement list for all Bureau funded schools;

“(B) using the list prepared under subparagraph (A), propose a list for the orderly replacement of all Bureau funded education-related facilities over a period of 40 years to enable planning and scheduling of budget requests;

“(C) cause the list prepared under subsection (B) to be published in the Federal Register and allow a period of not less than 120 days for public comment;

“(D) make such revisions to the list prepared under subparagraph (B) as are appropriate based on the comments received; and “(E) cause the final list to be published in the Federal Register.

“(3) EFFECT ON OTHER LIST.—Nothing in this section shall be construed as interfering with or changing in any way the construction priority list as it exists on the date of the enactment of the Student Results Act of 1999.

“(d) HAZARDOUS CONDITION AT BUREAU SCHOOL.—

“(1) CLOSURE OR CONSOLIDATION.—A Bureau funded school may be closed or consolidated, and the programs of a Bureau funded school may be substantially curtailed by reason of plant conditions that constitute an immediate hazard to health and safety only if a health and safety officer of the Bureau determines that such conditions exist at the Bureau funded school.

“(2) INSPECTION.—(A) After making a determination described in paragraph (1), the Bureau health and safety officer shall conduct an inspection of the condition of such plant accompanied by an appropriate tribal, county, municipal, or State health and safety officer in order to determine whether conditions at such plant constitute an immediate hazard to health and safety. Such inspection shall be completed by not later than the date that is 30 days after the date on which the action described in paragraph (1) is taken. No further negative action may be taken unless the findings are concurred in by the second, non-Bureau of Indian Affairs inspector.

“(B) If the health and safety officer conducting the inspection of a plant required under subparagraph (A) determines that conditions at the plant do not constitute an immediate hazard to health and safety, any consolidation or curtailment that was made under paragraph (1) shall immediately cease and any school closed by reason of conditions at the plant shall be reopened immediately.

“(C) If a Bureau funded school is temporarily closed or consolidated or the programs of a Bureau funded school are substantially curtailed under this subsection and the Secretary determines that the closure, consolidation, or curtailment will exceed 1 year, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress, by not later than 6 months after the date on which the closure, consolidation, or curtailment was initiated, a report which sets forth the reasons for such temporary actions, the actions the Secretary is taking to eliminate the conditions that constitute the hazard, and an estimated date by which such actions will be concluded.

“(e) FUNDING REQUIREMENT.—

“(1) DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS.—Beginning with the fiscal year following the year of the date of the enactment of the Student Results Act of 1999, all funds appropriated for the operations and maintenance of Bureau funded schools shall be distributed by formula to the schools. No funds from this account may be retained or segregated by the Bureau to pay for administrative or other costs of any facilities branch or office, at any level of the Bureau.

“(2) REQUIREMENTS FOR CERTAIN USES.—No funds shall be withheld from the distribution to the budget of any school operated under contract or grant by the Bureau for maintenance or any other facilities or road related purpose, unless such school has consented, as a modification to the contract or in writing for grants schools, to the withholding of such funds, including the amount thereof, the purpose for which the funds will be used, and the timeline for the services to be provided. The school may, at the end of any fiscal year, cancel an agreement under this paragraph upon giving the Bureau 30 days notice of its intent to do so.

“(D) such other relevant factors as the Secretary determines are appropriate.

“(2) REVISION OF FORMULA.—Upon the establishment of the standards required in sections 1121 and 1122, the Secretary shall revise the formula established under this subsection to reflect the cost of funding such standards. Not later than January 1, 2001, the Secretary shall review the formula established under this section and shall take such steps as are necessary to increase the availability of counseling and therapeutic programs for students in off-reservation home-living (dormitory) schools and other Bureau operated residential facilities. Concurrent with such action, the Secretary shall review the standards established under section 1122 to be certain that adequate provision is made for parental notification regarding, and consent for, such counseling and therapeutic programs.

The adjustment required under subparagraph (E) shall be used for such school after—

“(i) the certification of the Indian or Native language curriculum by the school board of such school to the Secretary, together with an estimate of the number of full-time students expected to be enrolled in the curriculum in the second school year for which the certification is made; and

(ii) the funds appropriated for allotment under this section are designated by the appropriations Act appropriating such funds as the amount necessary to implement such adjustment at such school without reducing allotments made under this section to any school by virtue of such adjustment.

“(2) RESERVATION OF AMOUNT.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—From the funds allotted in accordance with the formula established under subsection (a) for each Bureau school, the local school board of such school may reserve an amount which does not exceed the greater of—

“(d) RESERVATION OF AMOUNT FOR EMERGENCIES.—The Secretary shall reserve from the funds available for distribution for each fiscal year under this section an amount which, in the aggregate, shall equal 1 percent of the funds available for such purpose for that fiscal year. Such funds shall be used, at the discretion of the Director of the Office of Indian Education Programs, to meet emergencies and unforeseen contingencies affecting the education programs funded under this section. Funds reserved under this subsection may only be expended for education services or programs, including emergency repairs of educational facilities, at a schoolsite (as defined by section 5204(c)(2) of the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988). Funds reserved under this subsection shall remain available without fiscal year limitation until expended. “(2) ATTENDANCE OF NON-INDIAN STUDENTS AT BUREAU SCHOOLS.—The Secretary may permit the attendance at a Bureau school of a student who is not an eligible Indian student if—

“(A) the Secretary determines that the student's attendance will not adversely affect the school's program for eligible Indian students because of cost, overcrowding, or violation of standards or accreditation;

“(B) the school board consents;

“(C) the student is a dependent of a Bureau, Indian Health Service, or tribal government employee who lives on or near the school site; or

“(A) enable tribes and tribal organizations operating such schools, without reducing direct program services to the beneficiaries of the program, to provide all related administrative overhead services and operations necessary to meet the requirements of law and prudent management practice; and

“(B) carry out other necessary support functions which would otherwise be provided by the Secretary or other Federal officers or employees, from resources other than direct program funds, in support of comparable Bureau operated programs.

“(2) EFFECT UPON APPROPRIATED AMOUNTS.—Amounts appropriated to fund the grants provided under this section shall be in addition to, and shall not reduce, the amounts appropriated for the program being administered by the contract or grant school.

“(b) DETERMINATION OF GRANT AMOUNT.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount of the grant provided to each tribe or tribal organization under this section for each fiscal year shall be determined by applying the administrative cost percentage rate of the tribe or tribal organization to the aggregate of the Bureau elementary and secondary functions operated by the tribe or tribal organization for which funds are received from or through the Bureau. The administrative cost percentage rate determined under subsection (c) does not apply to other programs operated by the tribe or tribal organization.

“(2) DIRECT COST BASE FUNDS.—The Secretary shall—

“(A) reduce the amount of the grant determined under paragraph (1) to the extent that payments for administrative costs are actually received by an Indian tribe or tribal organization under any Federal education program included in the direct cost base of the tribe or tribal organization; and

“(B) take such actions as may be necessary to be reimbursed by any other department or agency of the Federal Government for the portion of grants made under this section for the costs of administering any program for Indians that is funded by appropriations made to such other department or agency.

“(c) ADMINISTRATIVE COST PERCENTAGE RATE.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, the administrative cost percentage rate for a contract or grant school for a fiscal year is equal to the percentage determined by dividing—

“(i) the amount equal to—

“(I) the direct cost base of the tribe or tribal organization for the fiscal year, multiplied by

“(II) the minimum base rate; plus

“(ii) the amount equal to—

“(I) the standard direct cost base; multiplied by

“(II) the maximum base rate; by

“(B) the sum of—

“(i) the direct cost base of the tribe or tribal organization for the fiscal year; plus

“(ii) the standard direct cost base.

“(2) ROUNDING.—The administrative cost percentage rate shall be determined to the $\frac{1}{100}$ of a decimal point.

“(d) COMBINING FUNDS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Funds received by a tribe or contract or grant school as grants under this section for tribal elementary or secondary educational programs may be combined by the tribe or contract or grant school into a single administrative cost account without the necessity of maintaining separate funding source accounting.

“(2) INDIRECT COST FUNDS.—Indirect cost funds for programs at the school which share common administrative services with tribal elementary or secondary educational programs may be included in the administrative cost account described in paragraph (1).

“(e) AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS.—Funds received as grants under this section with respect to tribal elementary or secondary education programs shall remain available to the contract or grant school without fiscal year limitation and without diminishing the amount of any grants otherwise payable to the school under this section for any fiscal year beginning after the fiscal year for which the grant is provided.

“(f) TREATMENT OF FUNDS.—Funds received as grants under this section for Bureau funded programs operated by a tribe or tribal organization under a contract or agreement shall not be taken into consideration for purposes of indirect cost underrecovery and overrecovery determinations by any Federal agency for any other funds, from whatever source derived.

“(g) TREATMENT OF ENTITY OPERATING OTHER PROGRAMS.—In applying this section and section 105 of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act with respect to an Indian tribe or tribal organization that—

“(1) receives funds under this section for administrative costs incurred in operating a contract or grant school or a school operated under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988; and

“(2) operates 1 or more other programs under a contract or grant provided under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act;

the Secretary shall ensure that the Indian tribe or tribal organization is provided with the full amount of the administrative costs that are associated with operating the contract or grant school, and of the indirect costs, that are associated with all of such other programs, provided that funds appropriated for implementation of this section shall be used only to supply the amount of the grant required to be provided by this section.

“(h) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

“(1) ADMINISTRATIVE COST.—(A) The term ‘administrative cost’ means the costs of necessary administrative functions which—

“(i) the tribe or tribal organization incurs as a result of operating a tribal elementary or secondary educational program;

“(i) the second fiscal year preceding such fiscal year; or

“(ii) if such programs have not been operated by the tribe or tribal organization during the 2 preceding fiscal years, the first fiscal year preceding such fiscal year.

“(B) In the case of Bureau elementary or secondary education functions which have not previously been operated by a tribe or tribal organization under contract, grant, or agreement with the Bureau, the direct cost base for the initial year shall be the projected aggregate direct cost program funding for all Bureau elementary and secondary functions to be operated by the tribe or tribal organization during that fiscal year.

“(4) MAXIMUM BASE RATE.—The term ‘maximum base rate’ means 50 percent.

“(5) MINIMUM BASE RATE.—The term ‘minimum base rate’ means 11 percent.

“(i) STUDIES FOR DETERMINATION OF FACTORS AFFECTING COSTS; BASE RATES LIMITS; STANDARD DIRECT COST BASE; REPORT TO CONGRESS.—

“(1) STUDIES.—Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of the Student Results Act of 1999, the Director of the Office of Indian Education Programs shall—

“(A) conduct such studies as may be needed to establish an empirical basis for determining relevant factors substantially affecting required administrative costs of tribal elementary and secondary education programs, using the formula set forth in subsection (c); and

“(B) conduct a study to determine—

“(i) a maximum base rate which ensures that the amount of the grants provided under this section will provide adequate (but not excessive) funding of the administrative costs of the smallest tribal elementary or secondary educational programs;

“(ii) a minimum base rate which ensures that the amount of the grants provided under this section will provide adequate (but not excessive) funding of the administrative costs of the largest tribal elementary or secondary educational programs; and

“(iii) a standard direct cost base which is the aggregate direct cost funding level for which the percentage determined under subsection (c) will—

“(I) be equal to the median between the maximum base rate and the minimum base rate; and

“(II) ensure that the amount of the grants provided under this section will provide adequate (but not excessive) funding of the administrative costs of tribal elementary or secondary educational programs closest to the size of the program.

“(2) GUIDELINES.—The studies required under paragraph (1) shall—

“(A) be conducted in full consultation (in accordance with section 1131) with—

“(C) take into account the availability of skilled labor; commodities, business and automatic data processing services, related Indian preference and Indian control of education requirements, and any other market factors found substantially to affect the administrative costs and efficiency of each such tribal elementary or secondary educational program studied in order to assure that all required administrative activities can reasonably be delivered in a cost effective manner for each such program, given an administrative cost allowance generated by the values, percentages, or other factors found in the studies to be relevant in such formula;

“(D) identify, and quantify in terms of percentages of direct program costs, any general factors arising from geographic isolation, or numbers of programs administered, independent of program size factors used to compute a base administrative cost percentage in such formula; and

“(E) identify any other incremental cost factors substantially affecting the costs of required administrative cost functions at any of the tribal elementary or secondary educational programs studied and determine whether the factors are of general applicability to other such programs, and (if so) how the factors may effectively be incorporated into such formula.

“(3) CONSULTATION WITH INSPECTOR GENERAL.—In carrying out the studies required under this subsection, the Director shall obtain the input of, and afford an opportunity to participate to, the Inspector General of the Department of the Interior.

“(4) CONSIDERATION OF DELIVERY OF ADMINISTRATIVE SERVICES.—Determinations described in paragraph (2)(C) shall be based on what is practicable at each location studied, given prudent management practice, irrespective of whether required administrative services were actually or fully delivered at these sites, or whether other services were delivered instead, during the period of the study.

“(5) REPORT.—Upon completion of the studies conducted under paragraph (1), the Director shall submit to Congress a report on the findings of the studies, together with determinations based upon such studies that would affect the definitions set forth under subsection (e) that are used in the formula set forth in subsection (c).

“(j) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as necessary to carry out this section.

“(2) REDUCTIONS.—If the total amount of funds necessary to provide grants to tribes and tribal organizations in the amounts determined under subsection (b) for a fiscal year exceeds the amount of funds appropriated to carry out this section for such fiscal year, the Secretary shall reduce the amount of each grant determined under subsection (b) for such fiscal year by an amount that bears the same relationship to such excess as the amount of such grants determined under subsection (b) bears to the total of all grants determined under subsection (b) section for all tribes and tribal organizations for such fiscal year.

“(k) APPLICABILITY TO SCHOOLS OPERATING UNDER TRIBALLY CONTROLLED SCHOOLS ACT OF 1988.—The provisions of this section shall also apply to those schools operating under the Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988.

Upon giving notice of proposed discharge to an educator, the supervisor involved shall immediately notify the local school board for the school of such action. A determination by the local school board that such educator shall not be discharged shall be followed by the supervisor. The supervisor shall have the right to appeal such action to the education line officer of the appropriate agency office of the Bureau. Such term shall not include section 7(b) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act.

“(g) COMPENSATION OR ANNUAL SALARY.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—(A) Except as otherwise provided in this section, the Secretary shall fix the basic compensation for educators and education positions at rates in effect under the General Schedule for individuals with comparable qualifications, and holding comparable positions, to whom chapter 51 of title 5, United States Code, is applicable or on the basis of the Federal Wage System schedule in effect for the locality, and for the comparable positions, the rates of compensation in effect for the senior executive service.

“(B) The Secretary shall establish the rate of basic compensation, or annual salary rates, for the positions of teachers and counselors (including dormitory counselors and home-living counselors) at the rates of basic compensation applicable (on the date of enactment of the Student Results Act of 1999 and thereafter) to comparable positions in the overseas schools under the Defense Department Overseas Teachers Pay Act. The Secretary shall allow the local school boards authority to implement only the aspects of the Defense Department Overseas Teacher pay provisions that are considered essential for recruitment and retention. Implementation of such provisions shall not be construed to require the implementation of the Act in its entirety.

“(C)(i) Beginning with the fiscal year following the date of enactment of the Student Results Act of 1999, each school board may set the rate of compensation or annual salary rate for teachers and counselors (including academic counselors) who are new hires at the school and who have not worked at the school on the date of implementation of this provision, at rates consistent with the rates paid for individuals in the same positions, with the same tenure and training, in any other school within whose boundaries the Bureau school lies. In instances where the adoption of such rates cause a reduction in the payment of compensation from that which was in effect for the fiscal year following the date of enactment of the Student Results Act of 1999, the new rate may be applied to the compensation of employees of the school who worked at the school on the date of enactment of that Act by applying those rates to each contract renewal such that the reduction takes effect in three equal installments. Where adoption of such rates lead to an increase in the payment of compensation from that which was in effect for the fiscal year following the date of enactment of the Student Results Act of 1999, the school board may make such rates applicable at the next contract renewal such that either—

“(I) the increase occurs in its entirety; or

“(II) the increase is applied in 3 equal installments.

“(ii) The establishment of rates of basic compensation and annual salary rates under subparagraphs (B) and (C) shall not preclude the use of regulations and procedures used by the Bureau prior to April 28, 1988, in making determinations regarding promotions and advancements through levels of pay that are based on the merit, education, experience, or tenure of the educator.

“(D) The establishment of rates of basic compensation and annual salary rates under subparagraphs (B) and (C) shall not affect the continued employment or compensation of an educator who was employed in an education position on October 31, 1979, and who did not make an election under subsection (p) is in effect on January 1, 1990.

“(2) POST-DIFFERENTIAL RATES.—(A) The Secretary may pay a post-differential rate not to exceed 25 percent of the rate of basic compensation, on the basis of conditions of environment or work which warrant additional pay as a recruitment and retention incentive.

“(B)(i) Upon the request of the supervisor and the local school board of a Bureau school, the Secretary shall grant the supervisor of the school authorization to provide 1 or more post-differentials under subparagraph (A) unless the Secretary determines for clear and convincing reasons (and advises the board in writing of those reasons) that certain of the requested post-differentials should be disapproved or decreased because there is no disparity of compensation for the involved employees or positions in the Bureau school, as compared with the nearest public school, that is either—

“(I) at least 5 percent, or

“(II) less than 5 percent and affects the recruitment or retention of employees at the school.

“(ii) A request under clause (i) shall be deemed granted at the end of the 60th day after the request is received in the Central Office of the Bureau unless before that time the request is approved, approved with modification, or disapproved by the Secretary.

“(iii) The Secretary or the supervisor of a Bureau school may discontinue or decrease a post-differential authorized under this subparagraph at the beginning of a school year if—

“(I) the local school board requests that such differential be discontinued or decreased; or

“(II) the Secretary or the supervisor determines for clear and convincing reasons (and advises the board in writing of those reasons) that there is no disparity of compensation that would affect the recruitment or retention of employees at the school after the differential is discontinued or decreased.

the Bureau before the expiration of the existing employment contract between such educator and the Bureau shall not be eligible to be employed in another education position in the Bureau during the remainder of the term of such contract.

“(1) ELECTION OF EMPLOYEE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, including laws relating to dual compensation, the Secretary, at the election of the employee, shall prorate the salary of an employee employed in an education position for the academic school year over the entire 12-month period. Each educator employed for the academic school year shall annually elect to be paid on a 12-month basis or for those months while school is in session. No educator shall suffer a loss of pay or benefits, including benefits under unemployment or other Federal or federally assisted programs, because of such election.

“(2) CHANGE OF ELECTION.—During the course of such year the employee may change election once.

“(3) LUMP SUM PAYMENT.—That portion of the employee's pay which would be paid between academic school years may be paid in a lump sum at the election of the employee.

Such stipend shall be paid as a supplement to the employee's base pay.

All published proposed regulations shall conform to agreements resulting from such negotiated rulemaking unless the Secretary reopens the negotiated rulemaking process or provides a written explanation to the participants in that process why the Secretary has decided to depart from such agreements. Subtitle C—Tribally Controlled Schools Act of 1988

SEC. 420. TRIBALLY CONTROLLED SCHOOLS.

Sections 5202 through 5212 of Public Law 100–297 (25 U.S.C. 2501 et seq.) are amended to read as follows:

“SEC. 5202. FINDINGS.

“Congress, after careful review of the Federal Government’s historical and special legal relationship with, and resulting responsibilities to, Indians, finds that—

“(1) the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, which was a product of the legitimate aspirations and a recognition of the inherent authority of Indian nations, was and is a crucial positive step towards tribal and community control;

“(2) the Bureau of Indian Affairs’ administration and domination of the contracting process under such Act has not provided the full opportunity to develop leadership skills crucial to the realization of self-government and has denied Indians an effective voice in the planning and implementation of programs for the benefit of Indians which are responsive to the true needs of Indian communities;

“(3) Indians will never surrender their desire to control their relationships both among themselves and with non-Indian governments, organizations, and persons;

“(4) true self-determination in any society of people is dependent upon an educational process which will ensure the development of qualified people to fulfill meaningful leadership roles;

“(5) the Federal administration of education for Indian children has not effected the desired level of educational achievement or created the diverse opportunities and personal satisfaction that education can and should provide;

“(6) true local control requires the least possible Federal interference; and

“(7) the time has come to enhance the concepts made manifest in the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act.

“SEC. 5203. DECLARATION OF POLICY.

“(a) RECOGNITION.—Congress recognizes the obligation of the United States to respond to the strong expression of the Indian people for self-determination by assuring maximum Indian participation in the direction of educational services so as to render such services more responsive to the needs and desires of those communities.

“(b) COMMITMENT.—Congress declares its commitment to the maintenance of the Federal Government’s unique and continuing trust relationship with and responsibility to the Indian people through the establishment of a meaningful Indian self-determination policy for education which will deter further perpetuation of Federal bureaucratic domination of programs.

“(c) NATIONAL GOAL.—Congress declares that a major national goal of the United States is to provide the resources, processes, and structure which will enable tribes and local communities to effect the quantity and quality of educational services and opportunities which will permit Indian children to compete and excel in the life areas of their choice and to achieve the measure of self-determination essential to their social and economic well-being.

“(d) EDUCATIONAL NEEDS.—Congress affirms the reality of the special and unique educational needs of Indian peoples, including the need for programs to meet the linguistic and cultural aspirations of Indian tribes and communities. These may best be met through a grant process.

“(e) FEDERAL RELATIONS.—Congress declares its commitment to these policies and its support, to the full extent of its responsibility, for Federal relations with the Indian Nations.

“(f) TERMINATION.—Congress hereby repudiates and rejects House Resolution 108 of the 83d Congress and any policy of unilateral termination of Federal relations with any Indian Nation.

“SEC. 5204. GRANTS AUTHORIZED.

Nothing in this part may be construed as allowing or requiring any grant with any entity other than the entity to which the grant is provided.

A later date as may be specified if mutually agreed upon by the Secretary and the tribal governing body. “(2) STATUS AFTER RETROCESSION.—The tribe requesting retrocession shall specify whether the retrocession is to status as a Bureau operated school or as a school operated under contract under title XI of the Education Amendments of 1978.

“(3) TRANSFER OF EQUIPMENT AND MATERIALS.—Except as otherwise determined by the Secretary, the tribe or tribal organization operating the program to be retroceded must transfer to the Secretary (or to the tribe or tribal organization which will operate the program as a contract school) the existing equipment and materials which were acquired—

“(A) with assistance under this part; or

“(B) upon assumption of operation of the program under this part if the school was a Bureau funded school under title XI of the Education Amendments of 1978 before receiving assistance under this part.

TITLE V—GIFTED AND TALENTED CHILDREN

SEC. 501. AMENDMENT TO ESEA RELATING TO GIFTED AND TALENTED CHILDREN.

Part B of title X of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 8031 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

“PART B—GIFTED AND TALENTED CHILDREN

“SEC. 10201. SHORT TITLE.

“This part may be cited as the ‘Jacob K. Javits Gifted and Talented Students Education Act of 1999’.

“SEC. 10202. FINDINGS.

“The Congress finds the following:

“(1) While the families or communities of some gifted students can provide private programs with appropriately trained staff to supplement public educational offerings, most high-ability students, especially those from inner cities, rural communities, or low-income families, must rely on the services and personnel provided by public schools. Therefore, gifted education programs, provided by qualified professionals in the public schools, are needed to provide equal educational opportunities.

“(2) Due to the wide dispersal of students who are gifted and talented and the national interest in a well-educated populace, the Federal Government can most effectively and appropriately conduct scientifically based research and development to provide an infrastructure and to ensure that there is a national capacity to educate students who are gifted and talented to meet the needs of the 21st century.

“(3) State and local educational agencies often lack the specialized resources and trained personnel to consistently plan and implement effective programs for the identification of gifted and talented students and for the provision of educational services and programs appropriate for their needs.

“(4) Because gifted and talented students generally are more advanced academically, are able to learn more quickly, and study in more depth and complexity than others their age, their educational needs require opportunities and experiences that are different from those generally available in regular education programs.

“(5) Typical elementary school students who are academically gifted and talented already have mastered 35 to 50 percent of the school year’s content in several subject areas before the year begins. Without an advanced and challenging curriculum, they often lose their motivation and develop poor study habits that are difficult to break.

“(6) Elementary and secondary teachers have students in their classrooms with a wide variety of traits, characteristics, and needs. Most teachers receive some training to meet the needs of these students, such as students with limited English proficiency, students with disabilities, and students from diverse cultural and racial backgrounds. However, most teachers do not receive training on meeting the needs of students who are gifted and talented.

“SEC. 10203. CONDITIONS ON EFFECTIVENESS OF SUBPARTS 1 AND 2.

TITLE VI—RURAL EDUCATION ASSISTANCESEC. 601. RURAL EDUCATION.

Part J of title X of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 8271 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

“PART J—RURAL EDUCATION INITIATIVE“SEC. 10951. SHORT TITLE.

“This part may be cited as the ‘Rural Education Initiative Act of 1999’.

“SEC. 10952. FINDINGS.

“Congress finds the following:

“(1) The National Center for Educational Statistics reports that 46 percent of our Nation’s public schools serve rural areas.

“(2) While there are rural education initiatives identified at the State and local level, no Federal education policy focuses on the specific and unique needs of rural school districts and schools.

“(3) Small school districts often cannot use Federal grant funds distributed by formula because the formula allocation does not provide enough revenue to carry out the program the grant is intended to fund.

“(4) Rural schools often cannot compete for Federal funding distributed by competitive grants because the schools lack the personnel needed to prepare grant applications and the resources to hire specialists in the writing of Federal grant proposals.

“(5) A critical problem for rural school districts involves the hiring and retention of qualified administrators and certified teachers (especially in reading, science, and mathematics). As a result, teachers in rural schools are almost twice as likely to provide instruction in 3 or more subject areas than teachers in urban schools. Rural schools also face other tough challenges, such as shrinking local educational tax bases, high transportation costs, aging buildings, limited course offerings, and limited resources.

“Subpart 1—Small and Rural School Program

TITLE VII—MCKINNEY HOMELESS EDUCATION IMPROVEMENTS ACT OF 1999

SEC. 701. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the “Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Education Assistance Improvements Act of 1999”.

SEC. 702. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) An estimated 1,000,000 children in the United States will experience homelessness this year.

(2) Homelessness has a devastating impact on the educational opportunities of children and youth; homeless children go hungry at more than twice the rate of other children; have 4 times the rate of delayed development; and are twice as likely to repeat a grade.

(3) Despite steady progress in school enrollment and attendance resulting from the passage in 1987 of the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act, homeless students still face numerous barriers to education, including residency, guardianship and registration requirements, as well as delays in the transfer of school records, and inadequate transportation service.

(4) School is one of the few secure factors in the lives of homeless children and youth, providing stability, structure, and accomplishment during a time of great upheaval.

(5) Homeless children and youth need to remain in school so that they acquire the skills necessary to escape poverty and lead productive, healthy lives as adults.

(6) In the 12 years since the passage of the McKinney Act, educators and service providers have learned much about policies and practices which help remove the barriers described.

SEC. 703. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this title is to strengthen subtitle B of title VII of the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 11431 et seq.) by amending it—

(1) to include innovative practices, proven to be effective in helping homeless children and youth enroll, attend, and succeed in school; and

(2) to help ensure that such individuals receive a quality education and secure their chance for a brighter future.

SEC. 704. EDUCATION FOR HOMELESS CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

Subtitle B of title VII of the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Education Assistance Act

(42 U.S.C. 11431 et seq.) is amended to read as follows:

“It is the policy of Congress that—

“(1) each State educational agency ensure that each child of a homeless individual and each homeless youth has equal access to the same free, public education, including a public preschool education, as provided to other children and youth;

“(2) in any State that has a compulsory residency requirement as a component of the State’s compulsory school attendance laws or other laws, regulations, practices, or policies that may act as a barrier to the enrollment, attendance, or success in school of homeless children and youth, the State review and undertake steps to revise such laws, regulations, practices, or policies to ensure that homeless children and youth are afforded the same free, public education as provided to other children and youth;

“(3) homelessness alone is not sufficient reason to separate students from the mainstream school environment; and

“(4) homeless children and youth should have access to the education and other services that such children and youth need to ensure that such children and youth have an opportunity to meet the same challenging State student performance standards to which all students are held.

“SEC. 722. GRANTS FOR STATE AND LOCAL ACTIVITIES FOR THE EDUCATION OF HOMELESS CHILDREN AND YOUTH.

“(B)(i) The Secretary shall transfer one percent of the amount appropriated for each fiscal year under section 726 to the Department of the Interior for programs for Indian students served by schools funded by the Secretary of the Interior, as determined under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act, that are consistent with the purposes of this Act.

“(ii) The Secretary and the Secretary of the Interior shall enter into an agreement, consistent with the requirements of this part, for the distribution and use of the funds described in clause (i) under terms that the Secretary determines best meet the purposes of the programs described in such clause. “TITLE VII—EDUCATION OF LIMITED ENGLISH PROFICIENT CHILDREN AND EMERGENCY IMMIGRANT EDUCATION

“PART A—ENGLISH LANGUAGE EDUCATION

“SEC. 7101. SHORT TITLE.

“This part may be cited as the ‘English Language Proficiency and Academic Achievement Act’.

“SEC. 7102. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

“(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

“(1) English is the common language of the United States and every citizen and other person residing in the United States should have a command of the English language in order to develop to their full potential;

“(2) limited English proficient children must overcome a number of challenges in receiving an education in order to enable such children to participate fully in American society, including—

“(A) segregated education programs;

“(B) disproportionate and improper placement in special education and other special programs due to the use of inappropriate evaluation procedures;

“(C) the limited English proficiency of their own parents, which hinders the parents’ ability to fully participate in the education of their children; and

“(D) a need for additional teachers and other staff who are professionally trained and qualified to serve such children;

“(3) States and local educational agencies need assistance in developing the capacity to provide programs of instruction that offer and provide an equal educational opportunity to children who need special assistance because English is not their dominant language;

“(4) Native Americans and Native American languages (as such terms are defined in section 103 of the Native American Languages Act), including native residents of the outlying areas, have a unique status under Federal law that requires special policies within the broad purposes of this Act to serve the education needs of language minority students in the United States;

“(5) the Federal Government, as exemplified by title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and section 204(f) of the Equal Education Opportunities Act of 1974, has a special and continuing obligation to ensure that States and local educational agencies take appropriate action to provide equal educational opportunities to children of limited English proficiency; and

“(6) research, evaluation, and data collection capabilities in the field of instruction for limited English proficient children need to be strengthened so that educators and other staff teaching limited English proficient children in the classroom can better identify and promote programs, program implementation strategies, and instructional practices that result in the effective education of limited English proficient children.

“(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this part are—

“(1) to help ensure that children who are limited English proficient attain English proficiency, develop high levels of academic attainment in English, and meet the same challenging State content standards and challenging State student performance standards expected of all children; and

“(2) to develop high quality programs designed to assist local educational agencies in teaching limited English proficient children.

“SEC. 7103. PARENTAL NOTIFICATION AND CONSENT FOR ENGLISH LANGUAGE INSTRUCTION.

“(a) NOTIFICATION.—If a local educational agency uses funds under this part to provide English language instruction to limited English proficient children, the agency shall inform a parent or the parents of a child participating in an English language instruction program for limited English proficient children assisted under this part of—

“(1) the reasons for the identification of the child as being in need of English language instruction;

“(2) the child’s level of English proficiency, how such level was assessed, and the status of the child’s academic achievement;

“(3) how the English language instruction program will specifically help the child acquire English and meet age-appropriate standards for grade promotion and graduation;

“(4) what the specific exit requirements are for the program;

“(5) the expected rate of transition from the program into a classroom that is not tailored for limited English proficient children; and

“(6) the expected rate of graduation from high school for the program if funds under this part are used for children in secondary schools.

“(b) CONSENT.—

“(1) AGENCY REQUIREMENTS.—

“(A) INFORMED CONSENT.—For a child who has been identified as limited English proficient prior to the beginning of the school year, each local educational agency that receives funds under this part shall obtain informed parental consent prior to the placement of a child in an English language instruction program for limited English proficient children funded under this part, if—

“(i) the program does not include classes which exclusively or almost exclusively use the English language in instruction; or “(ii) instruction is tailored for limited English proficient children.

“(B) WRITTEN CONSENT NOT OBTAINED.—If written consent is not obtained, the local educational agency shall maintain a written record that includes the date and the manner in which such informed consent was obtained.

“(C) RESPONSE NOT OBTAINED.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—If a response cannot be obtained after a reasonable and substantial effort has been made to obtain such consent, the local educational agency shall document that it has given such notice and its specific efforts made to obtain such consent.

“(ii) DELIVERY OF PROOF OF DOCUMENTATION.—The proof of documentation shall be mailed or delivered in writing to the parents or guardian of the child prior to placing the child in a program described in subparagraph (A), and shall include a final notice requesting parental consent for such services. After such documentation has been mailed or delivered in writing, the local educational agency shall provide appropriate educational services.

“(iii) SPECIAL RULE APPLICABLE DURING SCHOOL YEAR.—A local educational agency may obtain parental consent under this clause only for children who have not been identified as limited English proficient prior to the beginning of a school year. For such children the agency shall document, in writing, its specific efforts made to obtain such consent prior to placing the child in a program described in subparagraph (A). After such documentation has been made, the local educational agency shall provide appropriate educational services to such child. The proof of documentation shall be mailed or delivered in writing to the parents or guardian of the child in a timely manner and shall include information on how to have their child immediately removed from the program upon their request. This clause shall not be construed as exempting a local educational agency from complying with the requirements of this paragraph.

“(2) PARENTAL RIGHTS.—A parent or the parents of a child participating in an English language instruction program for limited English proficient children assisted under subpart 1 or 2 shall—

“(A) select among methods of instruction, if more than one method is offered in the program; and

At a minimum, the parent or parents shall receive—

“(3) procedural information for removing a child from a program for limited English proficient children.

“(d) BASIS FOR ADMISSION OR EXCLUSION.—Students shall not be admitted to or excluded from any federally assisted education program on the basis of a surname or language-minority status.

“SEC. 7104. TESTING OF LIMITED ENGLISH PROFICIENT CHILDREN.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—Assessments of limited English proficient children participating in programs funded under this part, to the extent practicable, shall be in the language and form most likely to yield accurate and reliable information on what such students know and can do in content areas.

“(b) SPECIAL RULE.—Notwithstanding subsection (a), in the case of an assessment of reading or language arts of any student who has attended school in the United States (excluding Puerto Rico) for 3 or more consecutive school years, the assessment shall be in the form of a test written in English, except that, if the local educational agency determines, on a case-by-case individual basis, that assessments in another language and form would likely yield more accurate and reliable information on what such students know and can do, the local educational agency may assess such students in the appropriate language other than English for 1 additional year.

“SEC. 7105. CONDITIONS ON EFFECTIVENESS OF SUBPARTS 1 AND 2.

“(a) SUBPART 1.—Subpart 1 shall be in effect only for a fiscal year for which subpart 2 is not in effect.

Mr. GOODLING (during the reading). Madam Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the modification be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING)?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, this amendment is a bipartisan amendment that makes several technical and clarifying changes to the committee reported bill and includes long overdue reform of the Federal bilingual education program. I might say, I hope we have some final agreement. At 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, we did. At 10 o'clock last night, we did not. I would not have stepped 1 inch into the Hispanic caucus meeting going on out here in the Speaker's lobby. It sounded pretty ruckus, but, at any rate, I think we have everything worked out. So many long hours have been spent to reach this agreement.

I want to thank the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. SALMON) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) for bringing Members with diverse views together to craft this legislation that will truly help limited English proficient children learn English and excel in their academic subject.

As the number of limited English proficient children in this country increases, we must be sure that we are providing these children with the best possible education. Graduation rates for this population are very disappointing, and we cannot afford to support programs that do not ensure the academic success of children with limited English proficiency.

The key to success for these children is the legislation before my colleagues as it focuses on teaching English to those with limited proficiency and assists them to meet the same State content and performance standard as other students.

The bilingual education program contains several key reforms. First, it turns the current competitive grant program into a formula grant program to the States after appropriations reach $220 million. For the first time, when the threshold is reached, those individuals closest to the children will play a major role in deciding how to use funds under this program to provide them with the best possible education.

Second, thanks to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. SALMON), we ensure that the parents of limited English proficient children play a major role in determining which types of instructional services will be provided to their children. Too often we have heard testimony from parents who are unaware of the types of services offered to the children. It is our belief that parents must give their consent before placement of their child in a program for limited English proficient children.

□ 1645

This way, we will avoid the current battles between schools and parents who are trying to remove their child from a program that is failing to provide them with a quality education.

If parents believe their child is not obtaining the English language skills they need for academic success, they should have the right to remove their child from the current instructional program. It is just that simple.

Third, we provide local educational agencies the maximum flexibility to decide which instructional methods should be used to educate limited English proficient children. Currently, the Bilingual Education Act requires 75 percent of the funds available for grants to eligible entities to be spent on programs using a child's native language in instruction. We removed this provision because we do not believe the Federal Government should support any one method of instruction over another. The amendment does not mandate any one method of instruction over another. Instead, it merely allows schools to decide which instructional methods will yield the greatest success in helping our students learn English and achieve the same high degree of academic success as other students.

Finally, the legislation focuses on teaching children English as quickly as possible. Once this becomes a formula grant program, States will be required to remove founding from any program where the majority of limited English proficient children are not becoming proficient in English and meeting challenging State content and performance standards after 3 academic years of performance.

As a former educator, I agree that having the ability to speak more than one language is key. But for children who do not speak English, our major focus should be in providing them with the language skills they need to stay in school and succeed.

The amendment also makes several technical and clarifying changes to other sections of the Student Results Act. First, the amendment strengthens a provision related to local assessments given to para-professionals.

Under this bill, the local school districts may use title I funds to hire qualified para-professionals. This must be demonstrated through completion of 2 years of college, receipt of an associate's degree, or by passing a rigorous local standard of quality. Under this amendment, local school districts must simply include a description of these assessments as part of their plan to the State. This will ensure the States have an understanding of the criteria being set at the local level, which is important since many States set their own minimum qualifications for para-professionals.

The amendment also makes improvements to the new public school choice program that was added to the bill in committee. Because I believe one of the biggest barriers to school choice is the cost of transportation, the manager's amendment removes the prohibition on using these funds for that purpose.

The amendment specifically allows schools to use these funds to augment their existing transportation services in order to meet the needs of children participating in a public school choice program.

And, finally, this amendment modifies the McKinney Homeless Assistance Act, as reported by the committee, regarding documentation for the immediate enrollment of a homeless child in school. If a child needs to obtain immunization or immunization records, the enrolling school shall immediately refer the parent or guardian of the child to the homeless liaison who shall assist in obtaining these records. These provisions will not override State law or policy regarding immunizations and enrollment.

Mr. KILDEE. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of the manager's amendment.

Mr. MARTINEZ. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDEE. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MARTINEZ. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of the manager's amendment with great trepidation. The chairman spoke a little bit about the Hispanic caucus meeting, and I am here to tell my colleagues that the Hispanic caucus is devastated by the fact title VII was added to this bill in the manager's floor amendment.

Now, I understand that in the manager's floor amendment there are also a lot of things we negotiated to make the bill better, but the one thing we never got to negotiate to any great extent was title VII, which is very important to the Hispanic community and the limited English proficient children that it serves.

The fact is, if we had had a chance in committee markup to deal with title VII as we did with title I, we may have come out with the same bipartisan compromise on that as we did on title I. But it puts us kind of behind the 8 ball to be here having to make a presentation on the floor in support of title I but yet disturbed by the situation of title VII and what it really looks like as the Republicans entered it into this floor amendment.

I am going to vote for the bill, because I believe there are so many things that have been compromised. And even in title VII there was some compromise. We did raise the trigger from $210 million to $225 million. We then further got a little compromise on the language that would allow the children to opt in or opt out. That is, in my mind, one of the biggest hurdles or obstacles there was in title VII.

I am going to support the bill and support the manager's amendment because I strongly support all the programs that I believe H.R. 2 really does a good job of maintaining. It also maintains the integrity and original intent of the bill. Originally, when it passed out of committee, I was not able to support the bill. I was one of six people that voted no. It was more on process than it was on what were the contents of the bill even at that time.

I stand here again in objection to the process on title VII, although that is there and we have to deal with it. I am hopeful that as we move to the conference committee and deal with the Senators and their version, that we may be able to revisit title VII and make it better than it is as it presently stands in this bill.

I understand several of my colleagues on that side of the aisle were concerned about the parental involvement, and they did move to strengthen that parental involvement. And I support their desire to make sure that parents know everything that is going on with their children's education in school; but by the same token, a child should not suffer the lack of services because a bureaucrat is waiting for a parent to make a decision, or they cannot make a decision themselves.

I believe the way my amendment has been accepted into the bill that the children will receive services immediately upon entering school; that the final notification will take place quickly; that the school will be required to pick up the phone or make some direct contact as quickly as possible to make sure that that child does not lack any services.

Having said that, I feel that the bill is vastly improved. I believe the manager's amendment, which I hesitate to vote against because it does contain all of the agreements that we have made and made improvements to, but I do not believe this is the end of the situation. I believe that we have a process yet to go through in which we will have to meet with the Senate and have a conference, and the Senate will have to concur and we will have to yield to some of the Senate's desires, and I am hoping that the Senate's desires for bilingual education and for title I and parental notification is even stronger than it has been on this side of the aisle.

Along with that, let me tell my colleagues that one of the reasons that I support the bill is that we are able to increase or include language increasing the standards and accountability for instructions. This is something that the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) from our side has been a strong proponent of for many years. We were able to put it in the bill that is going to be marked up tomorrow.

I would have liked to come down earlier and join in the lovefest that was taking place on the floor in the general debate regarding this bill. The only problem is that I could not join in that lovefest because I believe the honeymoon is going to end tomorrow, as the gentleman from New York (Mr. OWENS) has stated. Tomorrow we are going to take up Straight A's, which destroys everything that was negotiated in this bill, which I think is absolutely ridiculous, although I am hopeful somebody will come to their senses and either not offer Straight A's or that Straight A's will be voted down. And if it is not voted down, I hope it will be vetoed by the President so that we will not have to deal with it and keeping intact what we have in title I.

I would also like to commend my colleague from Arizona (Mr. SALMON) for working with me on the parental consent portion of this bill. I believe his willingness to compromise gave us the ability to be able to vote for this bill. And, Madam Chairman, I do support the manager's amendment.

Madam Chairman, while I regret that the committee did not have an opportunity to mark up and fully debate title VII, the Bilingual Education Act, which is included in today's manager's amendment, and while I still have a number of concerns regarding the effects this bill will have on limited English instruction programs and the children they serve, I am going to vote yes on the manager's amendment because it is vastly improved over where it was a week ago, and because I hope it will be further improved in conference.

Last week, the Education Committee considered H.R. 2, which includes the reauthorization of several important Federal education programs, including title I, which provides nearly $8 billion for the education of disadvantaged children, the Magnet Schools Program, the Indian Education Program, the Javitz Gifted and Talented Program, and the McKinney Homeless Assistance Program.

Although I strongly support these programs and believe that H.R. 2 does a good job of maintaining their integrity and original intent, I was not able to support H.R. 2 when it was reported by the committee due primarily to what I consider to be unreasonable parental consent requirements placed on the education of limited English proficient children.

While I understand that several of my colleagues on that side of the aisle desire increased parental involvement and strengthened parental rights, and although I support that desire, I could not support the manner in which they were going about obtaining that involvement and those rights since it meant that a limited English proficient child could go for months without title I services.

However, over the past week, since this bill was reported from committee, staff have worked tirelessly to negotiate an agreement whereby parental involvement and rights are maintained, and more importantly, LEP children begin receiving educational services almost immediately.

In the process of those negotiations, we were also able to make headway on a number of issues in title VII.

For instance, we were able to increase the trigger point at which the instructional services program turns into a formula grant.

We were able to insert provisions ensuring that local education agencies measure the progress of LEP students not only on English proficiency but also on challenging academic and contents standards, and monitor the transition of LEP students into the mainstream classroom.

We were also able to include language increasing standards and accountability for instructional programs and teachers, and requiring the department to do research and collect data on best practices. And while I still have concerns regarding some of the provisions in title VII, I am pleased with the progress that has been made over the last week and would like to commend the staff for their hard work.

I would also like to commend my colleague from Arizona, Mr. SALMON, for working with me on the parental consent language although I know he feels as strongly about his original position on this issue as I feel about mine.

In all honesty, were the Democrats in charge of the House, many of the provisions in this bill, including those regarding parental involvement and consent, would look quite different and I am sure that Mr. SALMON would have rather stuck with his original language.

However, I believe that we have come up with an agreement that we can both live with and support. And I believe that H.R. 2, carefully crafted by Chairmen GOODLING and CASTLE and ranking members CLAY and KILDEE, is also something we can live with and support. And so Madam Chairman, as I said earlier, I will support the manager's amendment and urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to do the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment, as modified, offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING).

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

"PART C—WOMEN'S EDUCATIONAL EQUITY

"SEC. 5301. SHORT TITLE; FINDINGS.

"(a) SHORT TITLE.—This part may be cited as the 'Women's Educational Equity Act of 1994'.

"(b) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

"(1) since the enactment of title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, women and girls have made strides in educational achievement and in their ability to avail themselves of educational opportunities;

"(2) because of funding provided under the Women's Educational Equity Act, more curricula, training, and other educational materials concerning educational equity for women and girls are available for national dissemination;

"(3) teaching and learning practices in the United States are frequently inequitable as such practices relate to women and girls, for example—

"(A) sexual harassment, particularly that experienced by girls, undermines the ability of schools to provide a safe and equitable learning or workplace environment;

"(B) classroom textbooks and other educational materials do not sufficiently reflect the experiences, achievements, or concerns of women and, in most cases, are not written by women or persons of color;

"(C) girls do not take as many mathematics and science courses as boys, girls lose confidence in their mathematics and science ability as girls move through adolescence, and there are few women role models in the sciences; and

"(D) the low number of girls taking higher level computer science courses leading to technical careers, and the low degree of participation of women in the development of education technology, will perpetuate a cycle of disadvantage for girls in elementary schools and secondary schools as technology is increasingly integrated into the classroom; and"

"(E) pregnant and parenting teenagers are at high risk for dropping out of school and existing dropout prevention programs do not adequately address the needs of such teenagers;

"(4) efforts to improve the quality of public education also must include efforts to ensure equal access to quality education programs for all women and girls;

"(5) Federal support should address not only research and development of innovative model curricula and teaching and learning strategies to promote gender equity, but should also assist schools and local communities implement gender equitable practices;

"(6) Federal assistance for gender equity must be tied to systemic reform, involve collaborative efforts to implement effective gender practices at the local level, and encourage parental participation; and

"(7) excellence in education, high educational achievements and standards, and the full participation of women and girls in American society, cannot be achieved without educational equity for women and girls.

"SEC. 5302. STATEMENT OF PURPOSES.

"It is the purpose of this part—

"(1) to promote gender equity in education in the United States;

"(2) to provide financial assistance to enable educational agencies and institutions to meet the requirements of title IX of the Educational Amendments of 1972; and

"(3) to promote equity in education for women and girls who suffer from multiple forms of discrimination based on sex, race, ethnic origin, limited-English proficiency, disability, or age.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Madam Chairman, today I am pleased to join my colleagues, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SANCHEZ), and the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA), in offering this amendment to restore the gender equity provisions in the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, now referred to as the Student Results Act of 1999, H.R. 2.

The majority has argued that these equity provisions are no longer needed. However, girls continue to face barriers in the classroom. The Women's Educational Equity Act, WEAA, and other gender equity provisions are still needed to help overcome these barriers. For instance, while girls have improved in some areas, girls are still not learning the technology skills that will be needed to compete in the 21st century. In fact, only a very small percentage of girls take computer science courses, even though 65 percent of the jobs in the year 2000 will require these skills. The girls that do take computer classes tend to take data entry, while boys take advanced programming. Only 17 percent of the students who take computer science advanced placement tests are girls.

There is overwhelming evidence that it is not time now to terminate the programs that have been successful. In point of fact, the majority argues that women and girls have now advanced to such a point that these types of programs are not necessary. I ask my colleagues to examine that thesis; that the girls and women in our society have made it because they have had the constructive assistance of programs like the Women's Educational Equity Act that this year enjoyed its 25th anniversary. It has provided throughout the country a resource of information. It has been on call to anyone that wanted to inquire as to what programs were in place, in what community, and what the results were.

So often we criticize Federal research because it is not disseminated. One of the key provisions in the Women's Educational Equity Act was to establish a center where this type of dissemination would occur, and that is in fact what has happened. We do not have to replicate the trial mechanism in each community because we have the results of programs and other efforts and projects that have been instituted in different communities.

If we dismantle the Women's Educational Equity Act program now, we will dismantle 25 years of effort, of accumulated dialogue, of accumulated reports, and other types of things that will continue to be of tremendous benefit to the girls and women in our society. It is not time now to dismantle it. We are just about making progress in some areas. There is still a lot to go, and this is proven in so many of the studies we have seen.

There is a barrier beyond which women are not able to go forward in terms of their careers, in terms of their own benefits. And, therefore, we have to start early in the elementary and secondary schools to make sure that the teachers and the administration understand this special responsibility that they have to the girls in their community.

The Women's Educational Equity Center has a technical assistance service. It is there to answer these many, many questions. This year, up to now, there have been 758 positive, affirmative technical assistance programs offered to people who have called. It is in all sorts of areas. In the center is 73,332 publications that have been collected. If we dismantle this program and terminate the Women's Educational Equity Act, 73,000 documents will be gone. They will not be able to serve this community any more.

□ 1700

The Women's Educational Equity Center has established a Web site. Just between March 1 and August 31, there were 248,000 hits on that Web site, people wanting information about women's opportunity for careers, for education, for things that they could do within their community and within their schools.

There is no question that this program is utilized; it is needed; it is woefully underfunded. So I cannot believe that the majority truly feels that this program is no longer needed by our communities. It has made progress. But now is not the time to terminate this program and end the progress that we have made. Girls in our schools need this special assistance. Teachers need this assistance.

The AAUW report clearly demonstrates that when they went out to analyze what was happening in the classrooms, they found indeed in the best classrooms that female teachers were dealing with their students in a disproportionate way in which they favored the boys as against the girls in terms of assignments, in terms of grading, in terms of their dealing with the student.

So I plead with this House to reconsider this terrible move made by the majority of this committee and ask my colleagues to restore this provision and all the other provisions that are in this en bloc amendment and restore again our confidence that we as a society can implement programs that truly have equity, gender equity, at heart.

Mr. GALLEGLY. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 2, the Student Results Act, which renews Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act and other programs assisting low-achieving students.

I am particularly pleased that H.R. 2 includes a version of my bill, H.R. 637, the gifted and talented student education act. I want to thank the chairman and the other members of the committee for their work on this important legislation.

All children deserve to be educated to their fullest potential. Unfortunately, the educational needs of our most talented students are not being met. Gifted and talented students are not reaching their highest level of learning.

H.R. 637 provides incentives through formula grants to States to identify gifted and talented students from all economic, ethnic, and racial backgrounds, particularly students of limited English proficiency and students with disabilities.

The bill authorizes State educational agencies to distribute grants to local education agencies, including charter schools, on a competitive basis. Funding would be based on each State's student population.

H.R. 637 provides needed funds for gifted and talented students while leaving the decision on how best to serve these students to the States and local school districts.

I know we all are committed to ensuring our Nation's youth have all the tools they need for their future. Our gifted and talented students are one the Nation's greatest natural resources. I urge my colleagues to support this very important bill.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I, too, would like to compliment the chair of the Committee on Education and the Workforce and the ranking member for a good bill. But I am here to make H.R. 2 better.

I am sure that many of my colleagues are surprised, as I was, to learn that H.R. 2 eliminates the Women's Educational Equity Act, WEEA, and other gender equity provisions in the Elementary Secondary Education reauthorization.

I knew that WEEA and other gender equity provisions were doing a good job. What I did not know was that their success could be seen as an excuse to eliminate a good program. It is hard to believe that some Members think that gender equity provisions should be eliminated from ESEA because more women are enrolled in college, graduating from college, or because boys have reading scores that are not as good as girls. But that is shortsighted.

Women do earn more than half of all Bachelor's degrees, and WEEA and other gender equity provisions deserve credit for that. But women's degrees are still clustered in traditional fields such as nursing and teaching, fields that pay far less than jobs in science and technology.

While women are more than 50 percent of this country's population, they earn only 36 percent of math degrees and just 7 percent of engineering degrees. That is why, Madam Chairman, in addition to reinstating WEEA and other current gender equity provisions, the Mink-Woolsey-Sanchez-Morella amendment includes my language to allow schools to use professional development funds to instruct teachers in how to work with students, how to work with their parents in groups from under-represented areas of our country. And they do that to encourage them to pursue careers in math, in science, engineering, and technology.

Madam Chairman, just last week, Senator ROBB introduced a bill to create a new category of visas for foreign nationals with graduate degrees in high-technology fields. It does not take a rocket scientist to figure out why the high-tech companies want these visas for foreign workers. It is because there just are not enough U.S. citizens with educations needed for these high-tech positions in our own country.

In fact, the American Electronics Association, AEA, reports that the number of degrees awarded to Americans in computer science, engineering, math, and physics has been declining since 1990. One of the reasons for this decline is that girls and minorities are not pursuing these fields and they are not pursuing them in the early grades; and because they are not interested in the early grades, they do not get the background they need in elementary school to take the necessary precollege requirements in high school and they do not go on to major in these subjects in college.

If our schools do not change, females and minorities will continue to dominate the low-wage jobs, while America's high-wage, high-tech jobs go to foreign undergraduates and foreign graduates.

That is why Microsoft Corporation, Hewlett-Packard, Intel Corporation, Motorola, Apple, AutoDesk, and Compac Computers signed a letter to members of the Committee on Education and the Workforce strongly encouraging members to consider proposals that "not only strengthen math and science education broadly but that aim to target women, minorities, and other under-represented groups to pursue these courses of study."

But unless we use WEEA and other gender equity provisions to address the problem that exists for girls in our schools, women will continue to have fewer economic opportunities than men and less access to the careers that will support themselves and their families. Without these opportunities, this country will be deprived of the highly educated, highly skilled workforce we need in the United States to compete in a global economy.

Gender equity and education is not a women's thing. All Americans, men and women, have a stake in making sure that all students gain the skills and self-confidence they need in elementary and secondary school to become productive, self-supporting adults.

The Mink-Woolsey-Sanchez-Morella amendment is vital to the strength of the Nation, and I urge my colleagues to please support it.

Mr. HILL of Montana. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I do not rise to speak to this amendment, but I do rise to speak to the bill. I want to thank our chairman for his leadership in bringing this bill to the House. Of all the issues that we will be debating, none are more important than the issue that we are debating here today, the issue of education.

I also want to thank our leadership for providing such a large block of time for us to debate this bill and the issue of education.

Madam Chairman, every parent wants their child to succeed, succeed in school and succeed in life. I am fortunate to represent a State that has really good schools. Montana's students consistently perform very well on independent tests. We are fond of saying that Montana is the last best place. And many would say that Montana is what America used to be.

Many would say that we need to rebuild our schools like they used to be, schools where achievement is emphasized, where people are held accountable for results, where parents and local school boards make the decisions. Those are worthy objectives, Madam Chairman, and those objectives are incorporated into this bill, a bill that addresses Title I.

Under this bill, all States and school districts and schools will be held accountable to ensure that their students meet high academic standards. All schools would be required to issue report cards on student achievement, on teacher qualifications, and on school quality. The State and local schools would be required to close the achievement gap if they are trailing so that no student is left behind.

All students would be required to meet the same standard. So there would be no discrimination on the basis of race or other status. The families will be authorized to take their kids out of failing schools and put them into charter schools or into other public schools.

I will later be supporting an amendment that will broaden the scope to allow school choice and private education, as well. Under this bill, 95 percent of the dollars will go to the classroom.

I am particularly supportive of the new flexibility for rural schools, as well as the additional resources for rural schools. I support the provisions requiring English first, requiring that all third-year students to be tested for English proficiency.

Madam Chairman, it is clear that despite years and years and many billions of dollars in Federal assistance to local schools, excellence and quality and achievement and high standards still elude us. This bill has the potential to move us a long way in bringing these reforms to all of our schools to create schools that we can all be proud of.

When these Title I reforms are coupled with other measures, one that we will be taking up tomorrow, the Straight A's education bill, we will be on our way to making meaningful changes in education.

Again, I want to thank the chairman for his leadership and his hard work and diligence in getting this good bill to the floor that has broad bipartisan support. I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Ms. SANCHEZ. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, well, my colleagues, what a century it has been for women's progress. We could say that this century we got the vote, we own businesses and earn college degrees like never before, we control our own money, we are in the workplace, in the factories, in the corner offices, and on the playing field.

In fact, just this year, we rejoiced in the great successes of Title IX when the U.S. women's soccer team showed the world what it really means to kick like a girl at the World Cup.

Well, my colleagues, I knew it was a bad idea to win that soccer game. Because the Republican male leadership in Congress apparently took Brandi Chastain's winning kick as a sign that everything is fine, that we do not need the Women's Educational Equity Act anymore, that everything is suddenly A-okay.

Well, I have got news for my colleagues. Women are only 17 percent of students who take the computer science Advanced Placement test. Women are 50 percent of the population yet only 8 percent of the engineering workforce. Women are 3 percent of the top executives at the Fortune 500 companies.

So what do they want to do about that? Repeal the law that has helped American girls for 25 years.

Our role is to reduce the final Elementary and Secondary Education Act reauthorization of this 20th century. We have got to make it one that prepares all students, boys and girls, for the challenges and for the opportunities that await them.

So I urge my colleagues to support the Mink-Woolsey-Sanchez-Morella amendment to H.R. 2.

Mrs. BIGGERT. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I question whether this amendment is needed. But I do want to express my strong support for H.R. 2, the Student Results Act, which includes a provision that will have a direct and positive impact on the estimated one million homeless children and youth in our Nation.

Being without a home should not mean being without an education. Yet, that is what "homelessness" means for far too many of our children and youth today.

Congress recognized the importance of education to homeless youth when it enacted in 1987, the McKinney Education Program. But despite the progress made over the past decade, we know that homeless children continue to miss out on what often is the only source of stability and promise in their lives, school attendance.

□ 1715

H.R. 2 strengthens the McKinney program by incorporating the innovative provisions contained in my legislation, the McKinney Homeless Education Assistance Improvements Act. This bill will ensure that a homeless child is immediately enrolled in school. That means no red tape, no waiting for paperwork and no bureaucratic delays. It gives a homeless student the choice of enrolling in the nearest school or in the school he or she attended before becoming homeless. It also improves the way the Department of Education collects its data so that we no longer use unreliable figures that likely underreport the numbers of homeless students. It allows States to select a homeless education ombudsman whose sole job is to help homeless children and youth. And lastly, it authorizes the McKinney program for another 5 years.

Homelessness is and will likely be for the immediate future a part of our society. But being homeless should not limit a child's opportunity to learn. I commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING) as well as the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLAY) for understanding this and for addressing in the bill before us the needs of homeless children. I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support the Student Results Act.

Mr. ANDREWS. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I rise in very, very strong support of the Mink-Woolsey-

Sanchez-Morella amendment. Gender discrimination has been institutionalized in American life. It is important that we try to uproot that discrimination from its roots, and what better place to start than the classrooms of America.

I am particularly gratified that the authors of this amendment have included in it language that I suggested with respect to a special education program for gender equity that involves the birthplace of women's rights, in Mount Laurel, New Jersey, the Alice Paul Foundation. Alice Paul understood when she wrote the equal rights amendment, which we will yet ratify, and she understood when she led the fight for women's suffrage that discrimination on the basis of gender is rooted in American life.

My grandmother was born at a time when women did not have the right to vote. My wife was born at a time when the smartest girl in the class, which she was, was told that she could be a teacher but not the principal, that she could be a nurse but not a doctor. Now, nursing and teaching are honorable professions and if a young woman or young man chooses that profession, we should encourage them to do so, but we should educate them that if they choose to be the doctor or the principal or the President, that they have every right to do so. It is important that young women learn that from the word go.

My daughters are 6 and 4. They are being educated in their homes to understand that they can go as far as their abilities will take them. But I understand that in the institutions that they will encounter, they will not necessarily receive the same message. They will be paid 69 cents for every dollar that their brothers earn. They will be told that there are still glass ceilings that apply to them but not their boy cousins or brothers. This must change. The first and best place to change it is in America's classrooms, and the best way to change it today is for us to strongly support the retention of this program.

I applaud the authors for introducing it.

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, the region of America that I represent strongly supports the Women's Educational Equity Act. WEEA, as it is best known, represents the Federal commitment to helping schools eradicate sex discrimination from their programs and practices and to ensure that girls' future choices and success are determined not by their gender but by their own interests, aspirations and abilities.

I have four daughters, and I want the best for them. I want them to be able to reach as high as they can dream. Since 1974, WEEA has funded the following: Research, development and dissemination of curricular materials; training programs; guidance and testing activities; and other projects to combat inequitable educational practices.

Through an 800 number, through e-mail and a web site, the WEEA Publishing Center makes these materials and models widely available at low cost to teachers, administrators and parents throughout. WEEA is critical in assisting schools to achieve educational equity for women and girls. WEEA provides a resource for teachers, administrators and parents seeking proven methods to ensure equity in their school systems and communities. WEEA projects help so that girls can become confident, educated and self-sufficient women.

Since its inception, WEEA has funded over 700 programs. Past and current WEEA-funded projects include:

Programs such as Expanding Your Horizons, which exposes girls to women in nontraditional careers, have been replicated in communities throughout the country often by AAUW branches. Developing "Engaging Middle School Girls in Math and Science," a 9-week course for teachers and administrators which explores ways of creating classroom environments that are supportive of girls' successes in these subjects. Clarifying for schools the definition of sexual harassment and what the law requires them to do about it.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote to reinstate the Women's Educational Equity Act, and I commend the authors of this act, the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SANCHEZ), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) and the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA). Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, there are several gentlemen on this side of the aisle who relinquished their time to me, and I appreciate that very much. I thank the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BALLENGER) and the gentleman from Utah (Mr. COOK).

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Mink-Woolsey-Sanchez-Morella amendment. I am proud to have my name on it. It would restore gender equity provisions to Title I programs.

My colleagues on the Committee on Education and the Workforce have really worked hard on this legislation and for that I commend them. I commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I commend the members of the committee. H.R. 2 has some very good provisions. The bill encourages parent involvement, targets funds to those most in need, and supports gifted and talented programs.

However, H.R. 2 does not reauthorize the Women's Educational Equity Act, it does not ensure that teachers in Title I schools are trained to treat boys and girls equally, and does not train teachers to encourage children from underrepresented groups, including girls, to pursue careers and higher education degrees in math, science, engineering and technology.

It is my understanding that the gender equity provisions that are in current law have been eliminated because, quote, they have served their purpose and that gender equity has been accomplished and they are not needed. This is simply not true. While many girls are doing better in math and science classes in school, these generally are girls in more affluent schools in suburban areas. Many of these schools, such as Walt Whitman High School in Bethesda, Maryland, or Richard Montgomery in Rockville, Maryland, have made efforts to work with girls to encourage them to take high level math and science classes and correct gender bias in the classroom.

For disadvantaged students, however, it is another story. And those are the students whose needs are supposed to be addressed in this legislation. In Title I schools, boys as well as girls are not succeeding and we must ensure that these students are prepared for the job market as we approach the 21st century. For girls, we must address the problem of teen parenting and its impact on the female dropout rate. We must also address the new gender equity gap that is widening for girls in technology.

Statistics show that African-American and Hispanic students fare poorly in technology. For instance, only 127 Hispanic girls nationwide took the AP computer science exam in 1998. Only six Latinas in the State of California took the exam in 1998. African-American girls comprised 10 percent of the girls taking the exam but 83 percent made the lowest score of 1 out of 5.

The statistics for the general female student population are also disturbing. For example, more than 53 percent of female students take no further high school math beyond Algebra 2. Only 25 percent of female students have taken computer science courses in high school. Only 2 percent of female students have taken the advanced placement test in physics. I could go on and on. Only 20 percent of female students take the three core science courses, biology, chemistry and physics, in high school.

Mr. Chairman, as we prepare to enter the new millennium engaged in a competitive global economic market, we must ensure that our children are fully prepared for the future. Most jobs are going to be technology-based. They say that over 60 percent of them will be. People who can possess information to develop new goods and services and use technology effectively will excel in the next century. Nations that prepare their citizens for this new economy are going to be most successful, lower tax rates, better services, higher standard of living.

We are going to need a healthy pool of technically skilled persons, information technology workers. We can arrive this only if we educate both halves of the workforce. We cannot afford to dismiss 50 percent of our kinetic energy. We must ensure that we address the different learning needs and styles of girls in the classroom from kindergarten through high school. We all have the same interest at heart, both sides of the aisle, males, females. We all want to make sure that our children and grandchildren are afforded a quality education and that they are well prepared for the marketplace of the future. We can do that by voting "yes" on the Mink-Woolsey-Sanchez-Morella amendment.

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

First of all I would like to say that having read the information on the Mink amendment I am not necessarily for it, because it says in our description here, it is to identify and eliminate gender and racial bias in instruction materials, methods and practices. To me that sounds like building a whole new bureaucracy in the educational vein. I am not sure that Title I does not have enough problems already.

In the past, Title I funding has seen few results. However, H.R. 2, the Student Results Act of 1999, has strong accountability measures to ensure that these Federal funds are spent in the appropriate manner, on low-achieving, disadvantaged students of both sexes. It is important to let schools know that if we are going to give you Federal funding, we expect results.

This bipartisan bill creates the academic State reports which show the academic performance of all schools receiving Title I funding, allowing parents and local leaders to monitor the progress of these schools. H.R. 2 also allows students in low performing schools to have the choice of transferring to a public school or to a public charter school that is not low performing.

Accountability does not stop there. This bill requires that within 3 years of enactment, paraprofessionals, or teachers aides, as they say, at schools receiving Title I funding have to complete at least 2 years of study in an institution of higher learning, obtain an associate's degree or higher and meet rigorous standards of quality set by the local school district in math, reading and writing. You cannot really help low achieving students with unqualified teachers aides. These students need the best of the profession to move out of their low achieving status. In the past, this teaching effort was largely done by 75,000 teachers aides. With the additional training, we could almost reach the President's requested 100,000 more teachers with less money and the need to hire fewer teachers. This higher standard will ensure that our Federal funding is used in providing a higher quality of education to our youth, especially since 95 percent of the money must go to the classroom.

We should not use Title I funding again to go to students who have already been failed by the educational system before. Let us support H.R. 2.

Ms. MILLENDER-McDONALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, as a former director of gender equity programs for the largest unified school district in California and the second largest in the Nation, I know firsthand how important this extraordinary program is. I have seen teen mothers come, thinking that they had no other recourse but to stay at home and stay on welfare. With this program they have come to school, they have engaged in job training, with counseling, while their children were in a safe child care program.

I have seen single parents who thought that they had no other recourse but found job training programs while being counseled and were able to become self-sufficient. I have seen displaced homemakers who after a divorce were petrified in thinking that they had to go to work without skills. This is the type of program that we are talking about today, the gender equity programs and the provisions that are included in this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. MARTINEZ) who has worked with me for years when I was with Los Angeles Unified as the director of gender equity programs.

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this bill and associate my remarks with those of the gentlewoman that yielded to me. There is no reason why this amendment should not be accepted. Just think about it, gentlemen, when you vote against women, you are voting against over 50 percent of the voters.

Ms. MILLENDER-McDONALD. Mr. Chairman, I think that is noteworthy, to say that the majority of the voters in this Nation are women.

I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) who worked with me very closely when she was on the city council in Texas and I was on the council in Carson.

□ 1730

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman very much for her excellent leadership, just to say that I associate myself with her remarks and others in support of the Mink-Woolsey-Sanchez-Morella amendment restoring gender equity to H.R. 2 and providing opportunities for math and science be taught to our young women. We cannot tolerate any further less than 20 percent of the doctoral candidates in computer science, engineers and elsewhere, chemistry, not being part of the female population of the United States.

This must be corrected. I support this amendment.

Madam Chairman, I rise to strongly support this extremely important amendment. Gender equity remains a key issue in America's society, and nowhere is it more apparent than in education—especially in regards to educational opportunities in math, science, engineering, and technology.

We passed Title IX a quarter-century ago to ensure equal opportunities for girls as well as boys. Title IX has accomplished a great number of its goals. If we were to ever question the impact of Title IX, we simply need to recall the USA Women's Soccer Team during its glorious World Cup run and the Houston Comets' unprecedented 3 year reign as WNBA Champions.

Yet, although a great deal of progress has been made, a gender gap still exists in America's schools. Today's education field requires gender-fair policies more than ever. With advances in science and technology, we must work to narrow the gap that exists between boys and girls in these fields. Indeed, to empower young women to achieve economic independence and full participation in the new world of the 21st century, we must ensure that girls are educated fairly.

The Student Results Act, H.R. 2, maintains many standards for public education in the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. But it lacks many of the gender equity-related provisions that have been proposed—and some that have been part of ESEA for decades. For all students to achieve in school, educators, parents and policymakers must develop strategies to address the different learning styles of all students. Both genders deserve equal opportunity to excel and learn in the classroom.

The Mink-Woolsey-Sanchez-Morella amendment to the Student Results Act includes many gender equity provisions in current law that H.R. 2 has eliminated. These include the reauthorization of the Women's Educational Equity Act (WEEA) which has, since 1974, represented the federal commitment to ensuring that girls' future choices and success are determined not by their gender, but by their own interests, aspirations, and abilities.

This amendment also trains teachers in gender equitable methods and techniques and requiring the identification and elimination of gender and racial bias in instructional materials. The amendment also strives to ensure that dropout prevention programs target pregnant and parenting teens, thereby addressing one of the chief causes of young women's dropout rate.

In addition, the amendment allows Title I schools to set up programs to encourage girls and other underrepresented groups to pursue careers and higher education degrees in math, science, engineering and technology.

This latter issue is of great importance given our current dearth of science and math teachers. Elementary school districts report a 96 percent demand for science teachers and a 67 percent need for math teachers. These statistics are sobering, and we must act immediately.

It is clear that we are not cultivating enough scientists, mathematicians, and engineers from our K-12 schools. In the status quo, high tech firms are looking to import workers from abroad to keep them competitive in this ever-evolving industry. In a nation of innovation such as ours, this situation is unacceptable, and given the opportunity, I am certain that American women could easily fill these positions.

Yet, we find that women face barriers to entry and achievement at all stages of the academic ladder. We have identified a series of mechanisms that mitigate against the progress of women in academic careers in science and engineering. Extra-academic factors as the differential socialization of men and women and marriage and family impede the progress of women. The normal working of everyday features of academic science such as advising patterns have the unintended consequence of excluding women. This amendment could go a long way toward remedying these problems.

In 1983, only approximately 15 percent of undergraduate engineering students were women. Yet, in 1996, that number failed to rise substantially, and less than 20 percent of undergraduate engineering students were women. In 1995, over 50,000 male engineering students were awarded bachelor's degrees. During that same year, only around 10,000 female engineering students were awarded bachelor's degrees.

Just over 15 percent of doctoral computer scientists in the workforce were women. Women represented just over 10 percent of all math doctoral scientists and engineers in the workforce, women represented under 15 percent of all chemistry doctoral scientists in the workforce, and women composed under 5 percent of all engineers with doctoral degrees in the workforce.

H.R. 2 provides greater opportunities for many underprivileged groups. This amendment simply ensures that women are included in its coverage. We must continue the progress afforded by Title IX, and we must provide greater opportunities for women, especially in the fields of math, science, and technology.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Ms. MILLENDER-McDONALD. So, Madam Chairman, we are here today debating whether or not we should include a provision that has been included since 1974 that represents the Federal commitment to ensuring that girls' future choices and successes are determined not by their gender, but by their own interests, aspirations and abilities. I do not think that in 1999, as we prepare to enter a new century in which many jobs are based on a thorough understanding of math and science, we would be on this House floor debating whether or not our girls still need and deserve educational equity.

Today we will have the opportunity to vote on the Mink-Woolsey-Sanchez-

Morella amendment. This amendment includes many gender equity provisions that are in current law. In addition, the amendment allows title I schools to set up programs to encourage girls and other underrepresented groups to pursue careers and higher education degrees in math, science, engineering and technology.

I can recall, Madam Chairman, when I introduced an aviation program, being gender equity director in the Los Angeles Unified School District. Girls did not know anything about airplanes, and yet we have this program whereby they can do simulations on airplanes and really take an interest in becoming pilots. They were very enthused about that and indeed intrigued about that. These are the types of programs that we can introduce our young women to through a gender equity program.

So, I understand the necessity for gender equity programs and the continuance of a Federal commitment towards such programs.

Now in 1996, Madam Chairman, we were able to restore gender equity funding by a vote of 294 to 129 in this House. We had bipartisan participation then, and I do hope that we will continue to have this bipartisan participation today because our girls, all of us, I think, who are married who have children and have girls, and our girls meet these types of equity programs.

The gentleman will recall as the chairman of the Subcommittee on Special Small Business Problems that we had the digital divide hearing, and with that hearing we saw a disparity of the number of women and men in programs that talked about high tech.

We also saw minority groups that were disproportionately numbered in terms of being in high-tech programs or even having computers in schools or in their homes. This is the type of thing along with the study and the magazine Education Week that shows that only 14 percent of African American students and 25 percent of Latino students used computers for simulation and application rather than just drills. Compare these figures, Madam Chairman, to the 43 percent of Asian students and 31 percent of Caucasian students who use their computers for stimulation, simulation and application.

I know that time is out, the time is out for us to stop playing around with our girls' future and put this provision in for the sake of the future of this country.

Mr. COOK. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, improved student achievement and a quality education for every child is a top priority for all of us. That is why I am proud to support H.R. 2, which will accomplish just that, close achievement gaps and raise the academic performance of every student. This bill effectively responds to needs of our States and local communities by empowering them with the flexibility they need to achieve these important goals.

Just yesterday educators from my home State of Utah reiterated here in Washington their support for giving schools the flexibility to use funds in effective and innovative ways that will actually benefit students and improve achievement. A one-size-fits-all directive from Washington has failed to narrow these achievement gaps in the past. This bill targets students most in need to ensure that no one is left behind.

This is very important for States such as Utah where disadvantaged students are not concentrated in specific districts, but are spread throughout the State. This bill will help those students to finally receive the attention and the funding needed to reach their potential.

Accountability is the key component of this bill. School districts will have to report to parents on the academic progress of their children as well as their performance compared to other title I eligible children. This will provide parents with practical information about school quality, teacher qualifications, and academic performance within their State.

I would also like to thank the chairman and the committee for their willingness to insert the 85 percent harmless language that the gentleman from Utah (Mr. CANNON), my colleague, and others so diligently worked to have included. This will ensure that the children in my State and others will not be greatly impacted from a decrease in title I funding under the current formula.

Parents and teachers know what is best for their children, not bureaucrats in Washington. Ninety-five percent of title I funds will be sent directly to the classroom where those funds belong, not in Washington.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill which will help our children get the best education possible.

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I certainly want to thank my colleagues, the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK); the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY); the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SANCHEZ); and the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) for trying to restore the confidence and the conscience of this Congress by making sure that we do not forget that women and children and girls require equal treatment, particularly in education.

Education is the mainstream of our country. If it were not for education, then none of us would be here today because that is the backbone of our character and our ability to communicate and to help America understand.

Therefore, today we must focus all of our attention on the issue that no inequities exist anywhere in our society, and in order to do that we must be sure that there is a continued Federal commitment to solving these inequities. Fairness is extremely important to all of us. We must be sure that fairness is there. We must be sure that diversity is attended to in all levels of education, not just in higher education, but in K through 12 and into higher education that that fairness has to be there.

I did not receive it, Madam Chairman, when I was coming along. Now the time has come that we all be treated fairly. That is why this amendment is going to restore that, to be sure that no one is being treated unfairly.

So we must support this amendment. This amendment makes clear that we must retain these solid principles that will keep this Nation a Nation unified, a diversified Nation. We must treat boys and girls fairly and prepare the teachers so they will know how to do the kind of work they need to do. And in the name of my grandchildren, I have four strong girls, Madam Chairman, as hard headed as I am: Amber Kinui, Carrie Yoshimi Kinui, Ayo Raiford and Lauren Meek, and in the name of those four grand-girls I want them to become strong women, Madam Chairman, based on education, and certainly I thank us for the Federal commitment.

Mr. BILBRAY. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I was not going to speak on this amendment.

I am very sympathetic to the amendment, but I have to say quite clearly I was rather taken aback at a statement made by a dear, dear friend of mine from California; and the statement was made that somehow that we have got to be aware that when we vote against or for women we are voting for or against 50 percent of the voters, and I think that really, really is the kind of statement that Americans want to see less of from this House.

I say this sincerely, because when we vote against or for women and/or girls in this House, we are voting for or against our daughters, our mothers, our sisters and our grandmothers, not voters back and forth. We are here to serve, as my colleagues know, the people out there in the real world.

And the political jargon, I think people are really, really tired of bringing it up; and I am sure that my dear colleague from California did not mean for it to come out the way he said, as if this was a political ball to be used in this amendment.

Now I feel very sympathetic to this amendment, and I do see that we want equity, and I want to strongly make sure that when we implement our education strategies that we have equity. I have daughters and I have sons, and I would hope as a parent that every parent feels the way I do, that we want our children, no matter what their gender, to have access to quality education, to be able to achieve academically.

Now frankly in my family it is the boys that have the problem academically, and I hope that when they have trouble that there will be the resources there to make sure that they get through. But my daughters happen to have the ability right now to be able to achieve.

But, Madam Chairman, I just want to say clearly that I think that this is a well-intentioned amendment. I am not speaking in opposition to it, but I am speaking to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, that when we start using terminology here, let us remember that we are all working for our daughters and our sons and our granddaughters and our grandsons and try to bring it together; and I look forward to working with the sponsors of this amendment who are dear friends of mine at making sure that we implement a fair and equitable educational system in this country to make sure that our daughters and granddaughters and sons and grandsons all can work together for a better education.

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, just think about it like this:

Right here on the House floor in 1999 I am able to turn around and say, Thank you, Madam Chairwoman. But for programs like WEEA, it may well have not even happened. See, 25 years ago the first woman military pilot, Barbara Raines, was named, and then it took 10 more years for it even to happen for the first woman, Katherine Sullivan, to walk in space. Hopefully in 2004 we will not have to be counting the first woman. There will be many women who have had an opportunity in the technological world to participate.

I rise in support of the Mink-Woolsey-Sanchez-Morella amendment. This amendment has my full support because it will restore funding to the Women's Educational Equity Act. We have funds, instructional materials, teacher training, and it encourages women to pursue careers in the fields of math, science, technology, and engineering.

As my colleagues know, I wanted to go ahead and read my written words, but I just decided it would be more appropriate for me to talk from right here. In 1974, I graduated law school, and my daddy was so happy he said, Yes, she finished law school, and he said, Stephanie, what are you going to do next, and I said, Dad, you know I don't know, but whatever it is, please be with me.

In 1981, I ran for my first judgeship, 31-years-old, and but for programs like WEEA I never would have even been encouraged to go to law school. Made my daddy so happy when I got elected. Election night do my colleagues know what he said? See, I got a judge in the family and didn't even have to have a boy. My daddy thinking like that, who loved and was endeared to me.

I would suggest to my colleagues that there are young women all around this country who need the opportunity to be encouraged and supported.

Let us talk about right here in our own House, 57 women out of 435. Think about it. Think about it. Women need to be encouraged to be right here on the floor. They do not need just solely technological support, they need to think about how can we be here on the floor of the U.S. Congress talking about issues that impact the entire country and only 57 of us are women.

But let us even talk about major corporations. It is a wonderful woman who just became the head of a major corporation, and there are only three to five that head major corporations. It is in the technology; it is in the training that these young women have not been given the opportunity, the access, the encouragement, the support, the love, the nurturing, all of which they need to become what they want to be.

Now see, I appreciate the gentleman saying he is sympathetic to this piece of legislation. Do not give me sympathy; give me a vote. That is what we need right here on the floor. My colleague can be sympathetic if he wants to, but he should not tell his daughters he is sympathetic and he does not want her to go to medical school, he does not want her to go to law school, he does not want her to be an engineer.

□ 1745

As we stand here on the floor today, it is important to think about all the young women across this country, and we are 50 percent; and God willing, we may even in fact be 65 percent of the next election. We do know that women vote more than men do. It is not a political game we are playing here. We are playing with the lives of young women; we are playing with the heads of the families of young women. We are playing with the heads of our young men, because it is the women who raise the young men in this country.

So I would just ask my colleagues, support this amendment. It is important to you, it is important to our children; and in the end, we will all be paid off.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I have a grandmother and a mother that never had a chance to go to college. I have a wife that has a doctorate and two master's degrees. I have my oldest daughter is a gifted writer at the University of California, San Diego. My youngest daughter scored 1550 on her SATs as a junior in high school. She is head of the science team. She soloed, because I heard the gentlewoman talk about flying, she soloed at 16. We did not need a Federal law to have women to be able to participate. I introduced Barbara Raines, the first pilot, when she came into flying, and I knew her and I welcomed that, and I welcomed people that tried to achieve.

But let me tell my colleagues something about equity when we are talking about not just this amendment. I want to bring to Members' attention something that is not in this bill and should not be, but is in the Senate version of the education appropriations bill for fiscal year 2000.

We understand that the Senate has included a legislative rider in its 2000 Labor-HHS-Education bill placing a special 100 percent "hold-harmless" on State-by-State distribution of Title I grants. What that means is that in the States where population has grown, they get less money because the States where the population has fled from are held harmless, and they get the same amount of money.

What happens is we have hundreds of thousands of children that are being underserved in Title I, while other States that do not have as many students still get the same amount, and we think that is wrong.

There are three reasons that the Senate provision is bad for children, for men and for women, for boys and for girls. It unfairly penalizes schools located in States with growing populations of disadvantaged school-age children. It most directly impacts on those with the largest and fastest growing numbers of immigrant and Hispanic schoolchildren. The Senate provision, in my estimation, is anti-immigrant.

Now, I stand opposed to illegal immigration. We are talking about legal immigrants that are underserved under Title I because of the Senate's hold-harmless provision. I would hope my colleagues on both sides of the aisle would support the language in the House, and I hope the Committee on Rules does not make in order or protect authorization on an appropriations bill.

Mrs. CAPPS. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I want to offer my strong support for the Mink-Woolsey-Sanchez-Morella amendment to restore gender equity provisions in H.R. 2. We must restore funding for the Women's Educational Equity Act. This landmark legislation was established in 1974 to help school districts and educators provide equal opportunities for girls and young women in our schools. This equity act represents the commitment of our Federal Government to ensuring that the future choices and successes of girls are determined not by their gender, but by their own interests, their aspirations, their abilities. Without the support that this amendment makes possible, in fact, young women are held back because of their gender.

Now, girls have come a long way, but we still have work to do. Today, only 17 percent of the students who take computer science advanced placement tests are girls. This figure alone is enough to tell us that gender equity programs are still needed. Additionally, H.R. 2 does not continue funding for dropout prevention programs that target pregnant and parenting teens.

I spent 20 years working as a school nurse in the Santa Barbara School District where I was the director of the Pace Center, a program for teen parents called the Parent and Child Enrichment Program. This program encourages teenage mothers to stay in school, helping them to take responsibility for their lives, and to gain access to child care and other support services. It is essential that this Congress work hard to reduce teen pregnancy so that our teens do not become parents before the time is right. But, if teens do become pregnant, we must work to keep them in school, helping them to keep their lives on track, and teaching them to be nurturing parents.

I have seen firsthand the struggles that teenage parents face, and I know how important these dropout prevention programs are.

Madam Chairman, I strongly urge my colleagues to support these gender equity and dropout prevention programs. I am honored to have three students from my district here in the Capitol today, and they are accompanied by the program development director for Girls, Incorporated. These constituents of mine know firsthand and they know full well the importance of these gender equity programs.

Madam Chairman, we here in Congress, we must do our part to keep our promise to the students of this Nation to ensure that everyone receives equal educational opportunities.

Mr. TIAHRT. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Mink amendment. The GAO found that only 17 percent of these grants were being utilized. The resources were going to a relatively small number of agencies; but most of all, it discriminated against some children by preferences over others.

Let me tell my colleagues about a trip I recently took in Wichita, Kansas, to the Levy Special Education School along with superintendent Winston Brooks. I saw firsthand there how Title

I funding was changing the lives of special education students. Life has dealt these kids a bad hand, and as compassionate Americans collectively, we are trying to even the odds a little and close the gap between the average student and these specially challenged, loving children.

Madam Chairman, H.R. 2 gives the local school districts the flexibility to manage the Federal dollars, to meet the needs of these special people. At the Levy Special Education School, I met a special young man. I will call him Mark. Mark had a great potential, if someone could only draw it out of him by spending a little time with him. By teaching Mark, even though it was very tough, they were able to give him some of life's basic skills. Mark moved out of a small, dark, and quiet world into a bright day where he talks, he reads, and he now has the confidence to be productive in our community.

Mark is a success, but H.R. 2 can increase the possibilities of success for many others trapped in a dark world.

Over the next 5 years the Student Results Act will channel approximately $9.33 billion annually into programs for 10 million disadvantaged students like Mark, with more than $8.3 billion going specifically to Title II. The Student Results Act contains several provisions that I strongly support, such as quality instructions. In the past, Title I has been used as a "jobs program" for unqualified teacher aides. H.R. 2 increases the minimum qualifications that must be met by all teacher aides within 3 years. Furthermore, H.R. 2 ensures Title I teachers are more qualified and that parents are aware of the numbers of teachers and the teachers' aides that are hired with Title I dollars.

Also under the Student Results Act, parents have the option to exercise public school choice for the very first time. I agree with my colleague who is chairman of the Subcommittee on Early Childhood, Youth and Families when he said the public choice provision is a simple concept. Children should not be forced to attend failing schools. H.R. 2 allows children attending schools classified as low performing to have choices about their education, by giving them the opportunity to attend a higher quality public school in their area.

This act also includes academic accountability by modifying existing accountability standards to ensure that all students, not just a specific number, but all students, especially the most disadvantaged students, show increased academic achievement at school and State levels.

Madam Chairman, H.R. 2 rewards performance. It will reward excellence in education by giving States the option of setting aside 30 percent of all new Title I funding and provide cash rewards to schools to make substantial progress in closing the achievement gap between the students that are special-needs students and the average students.

One of the most important provisions in H.R. 2 for Kansas is that it gives rural schools new flexibility to consolidate Federal funds. With provisions similar to the Academic Achievement for All Act, under H.R. 2, school districts with less than 1,500 students will be exempted from several formula requirements, giving them the flexibility to target Federal funds where they are most needed within the school district. Under the Student Results Act, school districts receiving Title I funding will distribute information to parents so that they can make good decisions, and they will distribute it to the public; and it is going to be based on the academic performance of each Title I school. That is called the "school report card." There is also testing for students in English learning where students who have attended school in the U.S. for at least 3 consecutive years will have testing and reading and language arts and the English language.

But one of the other most important things is that H.R. 2 makes sure that ESEA programs are based on current scientifically based research and not on some unproven fad that has been plaguing our educational system in recent years.

Madam Chairman, H.R. 2 was overwhelmingly approved by the Committee on Education and the Workforce last week. I urge my colleagues to vote against the Mink amendment, but to vote in favor of this measure and encourage President Clinton to sign into law H.R. 2.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I come to the floor today in full support of the Mink-Woolsey-Sanchez-Morella amendment reauthorizing the Women's Educational Equity Act.

The Women's Educational Equity Act encourages the training of teachers to treat boys and girls in the classroom fairly. It helps to prevent teen mothers or teens who are pregnant from dropping out of school, and it allows teachers to be trained to promote education in math, science, engineering, and technology among girls.

According to the National Assessment of Education Programs, despite some gains for girls in math and science, gender differences in scores still exist. The University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign found that performance-based science classes did not ensure equal participation among boys and girls. In classes where teachers are not sensitive to gender issues, the study found that there had been even fewer opportunities to take an active role in hands-on learning.

Eliminating the Women's Educational Equity Act would signify the dissolution of the only Federal program that specifically tackles the barriers to educational opportunities for women and girls. Gender equity practices, policies and principles must continue to be an integral part of the Federal education legislation.

Five years ago, reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act included strong provisions for gender equity in education. We must not abandon those principles.

I urge every Member to vote for the Mink amendment and support gender equity in elementary and secondary education.

Mr. MCKEON. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I would just like to talk a little bit about my family. I very fortunately have a wife of about 38 years who is a wonderful woman and has been a great partner to me all through our life, and we have six children, three girls, three boys. My girls, daughters, have all graduated from college. The boys are trailing behind a little bit. They have not done quite as well as their sisters, but they are doing well in life and in providing for their families. We have 17 grandchildren. We have nine granddaughters and eight grandsons, and two on the way.

□ 1800

The thing that I am really proud about is that these daughters that graduated from college have done so without any special help or special benefit.

We taught our children that they are all good and that they can all do good things. They do not need special handouts or special help.

I have a little granddaughter that is competing. There is a boy in her class and she is in the second grade and one test he will be the best in the class and one test she will be the best in the class. She is very competitive, does very well in sports, in soccer and in her school work. I just hate to tell her that she needs special help to compete against the boys or other girls, and I just think that it would be good to be able to treat girls and boys as equals and give them both a chance to compete and do well in life.

That is all I want to say on the amendment, but I would like to say a little bit more about the bill.

I rise in strong support of the Student Results Act of 1999. H.R. 2 builds upon the public education reforms this Congress has already considered. First I would like to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING) and the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE), for their hard work. As a member and subcommittee chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, I am well aware of the time and effort it takes to put legislation together and to get it to this point, and I wanted to commend them for their work and their dedication and leadership in bringing this here.

Also, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE), the ranking member with whom I had the opportunity of working in the last Congress on our Higher Education Act, I know he has worked very hard and diligently on bringing this bill to the floor.

At the beginning of this year, House Republicans outlined our top priorities, and strengthening public education was at the top of that list. Enacting the Student Results Act will move us another step toward that goal. H.R. 2 reauthorizes title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act and other programs, which are the cornerstone of the Federal Government's role in education, to provide assistance to our most disadvantaged children.

While we have spent billions of dollars over the last 30-plus years, the research shows that these programs are not meeting the goals of the act. So we must change the failings of the past and replace them with real results, and we can do that by voting for H.R. 2.

For example, H.R. 2 places new qualifications on teachers' aides who are hired with title I funds. Too often they are providing instruction with little training. In fact, under current law these aides are not even required to have a high school diploma. All we ask for is that if they are going to be working in the classroom, they must meet basic standards. Quality teaching is mandatory in order for these children to succeed.

Finally, I would like to take a moment to discuss an issue that is very important to my home State of California and many other States with fast-growing populations of poor children, the title I funding formula. Five years ago when we last authorized the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, we called for periodic updates to the formula so funding will go to where the most disadvantaged students are living.

However, that provision has never been fully implemented because the Senate has substituted a hold-harmless each year the Labor/HHS does their appropriation. This simply is not fair and punishes our Nation's neediest students.

I am pleased that this year's bill retains the changes we made and also calls on the appropriators to abide by the authorizing language. For these reasons and more, I call on my colleagues to vote for this important legislation.

Mr. ALLEN. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Mink/Woolsey/Sanchez/Morella amendment which restores current gender equity provisions to ensure that girls succeed in school. We need to support gender equity and diversity through all levels of education. For decades, title I has included essential programs to address the gender gap in education. Now arguments have been made that gender inequities no longer warrant our attention. While it is true that girls have made some improvements, the statistics show there are still major gaps in areas such as technology.

In our fast-paced global economy, it is essential that girls receive the technology skills to compete successfully.

Another continuing problem is inequitable teaching. In 1998, an American Association of University Women report showed that gender inequities still persist in teacher practices. While in most cases teacher biases are unintentional, we need to develop and implement strategies to prevent classroom gender biases. These and other examples show why we must continue to address the need for gender equity in education. We should make this good bipartisan bill better and adopt the Mink amendment.

First, this amendment includes provisions to keep pregnant and parenting teenagers in schools. This is one of the most common reasons girls give for dropping out of high school. We should not and cannot turn our back on those who are at risk.

Second, the amendment continues to encourage title I schools to meet the educational needs of underserved populations, including girls.

Schools should develop strategies to treat boys and girls fairly in the classroom and to encourage girls to pursue higher degrees and careers in math, science, and technology.

Finally, this amendment would reauthorize the Women's Educational Equity Act, WEEA, which was enacted in 1974 under the leadership of the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK), to help schools and teachers meet the title IX requirements that prohibit sex discrimination in educational programs that receive Federal funding. WEEA provides resources for teachers and schools seeking equitable education models and methods. Girls all over this country have realized the success of WEEA and other currently working programs; and given the current continuing evidence of the need, we must reaffirm our commitment to ensuring that girls have choices in the future that are not limited by gender; and therefore I urge my colleagues to adopt the Mink/Woolsey/Sanchez/Morella amendment.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Maine (Mr. ALLEN) for raising the very important issue of technology. H.R. 2 is a very good bill because it really does address the inequities that exist throughout our public school system, but this amendment is also a terribly important one.

The gentleman talked about technology. I represent an area that currently has about 23,000 unfilled technology jobs, and yet I read in the paper that only 17 percent of the students in computer science classes are women. So in an area that is expanding so fast, where we so desperately need skilled, well-educated personnel, we really need to be making a special effort to get the other half of our population far more involved in the kinds of jobs that give them control over their lives economically and socially.

This amendment is designed to achieve that objective. It is a good amendment. I support it and it makes H.R. 2 all the finer piece of education legislation that should really set the direction for the 21st century.

Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of this legislation as a means of addressing the major inequities that disadvantaged students suffer as a result of our system of raising money through property taxes for our public schools. But it does lack an important measure which this amendment would restore and accordingly I would urge my colleague's support.

The Women's Equity Education Act is so important to ensuring that girls are afforded the same educational opportunities as boys. We have made great strides in this direction since the program was originally initiated 25 years ago. Some may even suggest that the program is no longer necessary. I disagree for many reasons, but one sticks with me.

My district and its surrounding community in Northern Virginia is home to many of the most prosperous high-tech companies in the world. Companies like America Online, Oracle and Network Solutions employ many thousands of my constituents. The Northern Virginia Technology Council estimates that there are 23,000 unfilled jobs in Northern Virginia in the high-tech field.

But here I read that only 17% of students in advanced programming computer science classes are young women. In a seemingly ever expanding economy based on new technologies, to not encourage women to fill these high paying, desirable jobs by encouraging their participation in these educational field would be unconscionable, and the result of leaving the Women's Educational Equity Act out of this bill.

I urge my colleagues to continue to strive for gender equity, to end the disparity between women and men in earnings and retirement savings, and most importantly to make sure that girls and young women are afforded the same opportunities as boys and young men in our public schools.

Mr. HAYES. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I probably somewhat reluctantly rise in opposition to the Mink amendment. I have a number of friends here who are ladies, and there is no question in my mind that they are here because of their ability and their desire to do a good job.

I think that H.R. 2 is a great bill. It does things that are badly needed, but as I sit and listen to the debate, I wonder do we really have a gender equity problem? I do not think so. In the past, there have been serious problems. These problems have been addressed in the process of governmental reform. If we have problems with equity now, it seems to me that this is a management problem, not a legislative problem. It is very clear in the law that we will treat everyone fairly. If someone does not know that by now, then management in the school system certainly is well equipped to deal with what is a management problem and not a legislative problem.

I hope we would not distract from the many fine qualities and features of H.R. 2 that are before us today by going off in a direction that ultimately may not be positive for all of our students.

Let me talk just briefly about H.R. 2. Recently, as recently as last week, I had the experience and pleasure of being in Fayetteville, North Carolina, in my home district. I witnessed the choice school, a local community addressing the needs of their children. It is known as 71st Classical Middle School. It is a school for middle schoolers sixth through eighth grades, a school that parents and students choose to go to in the public school system. This school is in its fourth year of existence and is already ranked as one of the top 20 middle schools in the State of North Carolina. There is a competitive, random selection application process that is used to select students for this school. Parents and teachers sign a contract, as do the students, in which they agree to strict adherence to discipline, prescribed codes of dress, high expectations, rigorous academic standards; in other words, the kind of flexibility that we all aspire to with H.R. 2. Wonderful atmosphere, young people who are excited about learning, teachers who are committed to the process; a building, interestingly, that was built in 1924, in pristine condition, restored at a cost of some $500,000, which is a stark contrast to a replacement of probably $15 million.

My point is, this was an atmosphere in which learning was taking place because local parents, teachers, superintendents had the flexibility to make choices that really worked for their young people.

Let me read just a portion of what that contract says: "In order to maintain a positive academic environment conducive to high standards in teaching and learning, students will be accountable for responsible, respectful behavior. Students must adhere to the rules contained in the Cumberland County Schools' Student Code of Conduct, the 71st Classical Middle School Dress Code. If failure to abide by these rules results in a 3-day suspension or more, the student shall be transferred to his or her home school unless disciplinary action results in a long-term suspension from all schools." As I say, what a wonderful atmosphere where learning was taking place.

With this contract comes accountability, just what H.R. 2 is about, both from students and from teachers, and even more importantly, respect. They wear uniforms. The school is pristine. They have seminar classes in which students gather to talk about subjects across the academic spectrum. They develop life-long learners. They utilize a variety of instructional methods, stimulate creative and critical thinking through seminars. They emphasize positive character development, ensure strict adherence to a code of conduct, mandate prescribed standards of dress. There is no peer pressure there.

I would read the code in part, if time would permit. Again, the goal is to have all of the schools in Cumberland County to have these kind of choices that result in this sort of atmosphere and give these kinds of results.

Madam Chairman, I recommend H.R. 2 and support it strongly.

Mr. KILDEE. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of this amendment to restore and strengthen title I's and ESEA's focus on gender equity. I have yet to find a school in this country, and I traveled throughout the country, where additional help on the area of gender equity would not be useful.

Girls continue to be educated at a lower level in the areas of mathematics, science, and technology and even other areas. This has the effect of denying women access to careers that are higher paying and to self-sufficiency. Since our girls continue to fall behind boys in these critical access areas, I cannot understand why this House would not adopt this very, very reasonable amendment.

Certain Members have stood up here and have stated that their daughters are doing well without the help of the Federal Government. Those daughters, I am sure, have benefited from the Women's Education Equity Act without even knowing about it. My daughter, I know, benefited from the Women's Education Equity Act, and she was not even aware of the fact that it was on the books.

□ 1815

So they stood, I am sure, in good faith, saying their daughters have not been affected by it. The laws may not be published on the wall to have an effect in the school. In fact, the schools are required to do certain things that have touched the lives of countless girls in the schools in this country. So

I certainly strongly support this amendment.

Madam Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. VENTO).

Mr. VENTO. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me. I rise in strong support of the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SANCHEZ) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) and the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) for offering this amendment.

Madam Chairman, the fact is that, generally, for thousands of years, we have had a circumstance in our society, in the Western society, where women have obviously not had the opportunity to develop their full potential.

In our Nation, some 2 decades ago, this legislation was enacted in an environment in which there is a recognition that as a society, if we want to grow, if we want to retain our full productivity, we need to obtain the participation of all race and color and gender in our society.

We have made some very positive progress. But to think that we could turn on its head 1,000 years of, basically, gender discrimination in the base of 2 years is, I think, arrogant.

I think the recognition of that is represented in wages that are paid, in the presence of women in the course studies of engineering and science and many other specialties where they basically are not able to participate on an equal basis.

I think, just as a society, this is a great bill in terms of investment in our people, investment in our communities to build a better society, have a more productive economy. But we cannot do that if we are going to not develop the full potential of both the men and women or the young men and women in our society.

So I look forward to this amendment receiving the type of support it deserves. Frankly, the small amount that is being asked here to help and encourage and to provide leadership in this Nation and globally; quite frankly, it is not just here. I mean, other nations look to us in terms of what we are doing and the leadership that we have provided in terms of women's rights and the involvement of women and the status of women around the globe, whether it is in international forums, whether it is in other countries where there is a persistent discrimination and alienation and rejection of the full participation.

This is, after all, a Nation where we have the franchise where we have changed many things. It is not time to rest on our laurels; it is time to move ahead. To move ahead with this amendment in this body for this small amount, we need to do this; and we need to do much more, quite frankly.

Some of the best teachers and some of the best folks that I have ever worked with in my career in developing my skills, starting with my mother, I am one of eight, and she was a great leader, and I would say with the teachers, instructors that I have had in my college and professional training, have been women, women scientists. Actually, I was a science teacher. So these scientists have devoted their lives. We need to develop and encourage more women to take up these fields so we can have the benefit of that in our society.

Madam Chairman, the American public time and again has rated education as a top priority—above tax cuts, above foreign affairs, above defense, even above gun control and protecting Social Security. I am pleased that this body has uncharacteristically set partisan politics aside for a moment to focus on the needs of our students. Title I is especially important because it provides funding to ensure that all children, despite financial background, ability, or language barriers, have the support they need to be successful in our schools and beyond. In fact, Title I is to education what preventative medicine is to health care; giving schools the opportunity early on to offer added services to students who are at risk of falling behind academically in their schooling.

The Saint Paul school district, one of the school areas I represent, has undertaken this year a new strategic plan entitled Raising Expectations. The school district is committed to establishing respectful working relationships with Saint Paul's diverse students and families. In short, they are holding themselves accountable for making our schools better places to learn and work. I am proud that the Saint Paul schools have made this initiative a priority. Passing Title I legislation today will demonstrate to them that the Federal government is truly interested in helping them achieve these goals.

The Student Results Act, H.R. 2, strengthens many of the provisions in current law. Overall, I support a number of provisions which retain the basic structure and focus of the Title I programs, but there are some areas in which I think the bill could be further improved. In particular, there are two initiatives which I believe will divert funds from those schools and students who would best benefit from them. I am disappointed to see that the current Title I eligibility requirement for the use of funds for school-wide programs was lowered from 50 percent to 40 percent. This would dilute the funds rather than concentrate on the most needed student population. Additionally, this bill would allow states to use Title I funds to provide financial rewards to schools that have succeeded in improving their students' academic achievement. While I certainly understand the importance of recognizing schools which have been successful, we should focus funding on schools which need those resources; not divert Title I funds as a reward, especially when so many factors in dispute are used as indices of success.

In addition, I have concerns with the provision which requires students with limited English proficiency to receive parental consent before being served by Title I programs. Nearly one-third of the Saint Paul school district's student body is comprised of Asian-American students, most of whose parents cannot read or write English. These kids need extra help and may fall through the cracks of the system if we focus resources on fulfilling bureaucratic requirements rather than on providing services to LEP students. Providing parents an "opt in" to an ESL program doesn't address the real needs and deficiencies of the student. Students should receive the instruction they need based on sound diagnosis, because a positive experience throughout their school career is based on the assumption of language competence.

Finally, this legislation regrettably does not provide funding for the promotion of fairness and equity. The Women's Educational Equity Act has, since 1974, represented the Federal commitment to ensuring that girls in the classroom have an equal chance to succeed. Teachers should be trained to treat all students fairly and ensure that instructional materials, methods and practices do not promote racial or gender bias. In fact, our school and society today must aggressively recruit and enroll women in technology, engineering, and other math and science based learning, and promote the foundation for such in our school settings. Therefore, I'll enthusiastically support Representative MINK's amendment that will be offered to this measure.

Title I is truly a cornerstone of Federal support for building the bridge between disadvantaged students and their peers. I encourage all of my colleagues to support funding for this important program.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, many of us have gotten up and talked about our children and grandchildren, and I am going to follow suit. I have a beautiful, bright, intelligent, exceptionally talented granddaughter, 18 months old. Do I need to worry about her? Probably not. She gets a lot of attention from her mom. We are all going to be nurturing her and making sure that, at school, she gets the best attention and that she does just fine. But what we need to be doing today is looking beyond our own families.

For anyone on this floor to get up and say we do not have a gender equity problem is not looking in the right places. All they have to do is look around here and see the small percentage of women, 11 percent of the Members of the United States Congress. I assure my colleagues that I did not grow up thinking that I could become a Member of the United States Congress. It was just not on the radar screen for girls.

That is what we are talking about. How are we going to put on the radar screen for the more disadvantaged girls in this country the opportunity to do and be anything that they want to be?

Do we have gender equity? Of course we do not. While educational opportunities for girls and young women have improved in some areas, many are not given the chance to learn the technology skills needed to compete in the 21st Century.

Let me give my colleagues a few numbers here. Although experts predict that 65 percent of all jobs in the year 2010 will require technology skills, a very small percentage of girls choose to take computer science courses. They are probably not encouraged to do this. There may be subtle differences there. Their teachers need training to encourage them. When they do take those courses, they use them for word processing, the 1990s version of typing.

Only 17 percent of students who take computer science advance placement tests are girls. Is that because 17 percent of the girls are smart enough? No. It is because 17 percent of the girls are all the ones that have been encouraged to do so. We need to make those numbers much, much higher; and we can.

Then there is a very real economic component to the lack of gender equity in our classrooms. They carry that burden with them all through their lives. Women are still paid 75 cents on the average for every dollar that a man with the same qualifications doing the same job earns. Over a third of all families headed by women alone were below the poverty level.

The training for women for low paying, traditional fields helps perpetuate the cycle of poverty and powerlessness for both women and their children. If we are truly committed to empowering young girls and young women and if we want to be able to stand up here at some point and say with truth that we no longer have a gender equity problem, then the least we can do today is support the Mink-Woolsey-Sanchez-Morella amendment which simply seeks to restore the gender equity provision that has been there for a long time in H.R. 2.

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, certainly I want to recognize the great work that has been accomplished in this amendment by my colleagues, the women of the Congress. I am very much in favor of and support this amendment to H.R. 2.

Had WEEA been in effect when I was in school, I do not think it would have taken me 40 years to get to this stage, to this floor, and to this Congress. Yet, while gender equity efforts have made gains, we talk about our women's performance, about how we want to help our young people, our young women; we are not in an age where we can say we can rest, it has been taken care of. We have a lot yet to do. We have made quite a few gains, but there is still a lot of work to be accomplished. The passage of this amendment will help us get there.

In my State of California, possessing high-tech skills is a key to success. However, far fewer young women take computer science courses compared to boys. My colleagues have heard those statistics. We do not want the next generation of women to be left behind. We want them to be able to have equity and to compete fairly.

It is our duty, and it is our responsibility as leaders of our communities to bring down those barriers that block young women from future success. Passage of this amendment to H.R. 2 will help ensure that the next generation of young women are not shut out of the high-tech revolution or out of any other career they choose to follow. Support and vote for this amendment to H.R. 2.

Madam Chairman, I yield to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI).

Ms. PELOSI. Madam Chairman, I commend the distinguished gentlewoman from California (Ms. NAPOLITANO) for her excellent statement on this subject, and I thank her for yielding to me.

Madam Chairman, it is very interesting to review why we are here tonight. Twenty-five years ago, under the leadership of the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK), our great colleague, the Congress of the United States passed legislation, the WEEA; and it has served as a resource to parents, administrators, and educators to guarantee academic equity in their educational institutions.

Here we are 25 years later, and Women's Educational Equity Act is being debated on the floor again. Why? It is really a remarkable tale, almost unbelievable if we had not been conditioned by events of the past years, few years.

The Republican majority in the House of Representatives has chosen to remove the gender equity language from this bill, H.R. 2, which in itself is a bill worthy of our support and which I intend to vote for, and I commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING) for his leadership on the bill.

But why would the Republican leadership in this House decide that, after 25 years of effectiveness in helping young girls receive equity in their education, that the Republican leadership would take this language out of the bill? This is not a positive initiative being advanced on the floor today by the Democrats and for education for young girls. This is an attempt to remedy the elimination of this important language from this bill which has served our country well for 25 years.

This is about helping young girls who fall under Title I, the most disadvantaged young people in our country. We want them to have the opportunity to study math and science.

We need to do this. We still need to do this. For example, only 17 percent of the students who take computer science advanced placement tests are female. While women comprise 50 percent of the population, indeed, over 50 percent of the population, they are only 8 percent of the engineering force. The technology gap will exacerbate as time goes by, and the glass ceiling will be affected by that.

We know that by the year 2010, 65 percent of all jobs will require advanced technology skills in order to work in them. So as technology becomes more important in the work force, this technology gender gap, if it is not addressed, women will fall behind further.

So, again, I commend the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY), the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA), and all of those who worked to put this amendment together to correct and to restore what the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK) worked for so hard those 25 years ago.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. This act represents the Federal Government's commitment to ensure that young girls will not be discriminated against in schools because of their gender.

We have struggled for years to level the playing field for boys and girls; and just as we are beginning to see the benefits of this program, the Republicans are attempting to roll back the clock. Let me say that again. Just as we are beginning to see the benefits, the Republicans are trying to roll back the clock. They are trying to gut this program in its mean spirit attempt to take valuable education tools out of the hands of our Nation's female students.

Since 1974, the Women Education Equity Act has funded the development of school material as well as training programs. It has served as a resource for teachers, administrators, and parents. The program also helps schools comply with Title IX, the Federal law that prohibits sex discrimination in public schools.

Although female students have made gains in education, they still lag behind boys in many important subjects such as math, science, and technology. This program is crucial for the continuation of the development of this program.

A young man, one student, an eighth grader, Garrett from Hilliard, Florida feels that boys should be able to have the opportunity to play volleyball, and girls should be able to have weight training if they want to. We found out that this weight training is very important for our bone development and other things.

Madam Chairman, with all of the problems that is going on in this country, all of the violence, we in Congress need to be doing all we can to make things better. We should not be gutting programs. We should be adding to various programs.

□ 1830

We should be doing all we can to assist the community, the parents, the school, the faculty in bringing the community together, not trying to gut programs.

Ms. McCARTHY of Missouri. Madam Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. BROWN of Florida. I yield to the gentlewoman from Missouri.

Ms. McCARTHY of Missouri. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding to me, and I rise today in strong support of the bipartisan amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Hawaii, and others, to reauthorize the Women's Educational Equity Act and to reaffirm the commitment of this House to the principle of gender equity. The amendment enables States and schools to eliminate the historic gender bias in education materials through teacher training and will encourage the participation of girls and minorities in high-tech careers.

Madam Chairman, I was a high school English teacher 25 years ago, when Congress made a commitment to encourage women to pursue quality educational opportunities. Congress authorized and appropriated funds to teach teachers how to break the cycles of sexism and gender bias. I can remember discussing with my high school students the possibility of a woman in space, and that conversation was met with general scoffing by the boys in the class and doubt by the girls in the class. But I had the honor, along with a number of women in this Congress to watch the first woman be commander of a NASA spaceship. This year, Eileen Collins proved this effort has made a difference.

For 25 years, Congress has reaffirmed its commitment. We have stood by the teachers and the young women, and we have begun to see real results. Test scores are improving; women are staying in school longer; and career choices are slowly expanding. The glass ceiling has not been shattered but it is moving, Madam Chairman. Sixty-five percent of all jobs in the year 2010 will require some technology skills. Do not let that ceiling come crashing back down on the young women of today.

Madam Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support the Mink amendment for education equity.

Ms. LEE. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I rise today in support of the Mink-Woolsey-Sanchez-Morella amendment, and I want to especially thank the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK) for her decades of hard work on behalf of all women in this country.

Now, we want our boys and girls to reach their optimum and not be restricted by false social limits. This amendment restores current gender equity provisions from Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act to H.R. 2 to ensure that boys and girls succeed in the classroom. This amendment allows Title I schools to set up programs to encourage girls and underrepresented groups to pursue careers in higher education degrees in math, science, engineering, and technology.

Now, I raised two boys. I have two sons. This amendment has nothing to do with stifling boys, as some may imply, and are implying, but what it will do is help to make sure that girls are provided with equal opportunities. We do have a gender gap problem. While gaps in math and science achievement have narrowed, a new gender gap in technology has emerged.

A recent report conducted by the American Association of University Women found that when we compare the performance of girls and boys in the classroom, girls appear to be at a significant disadvantage when it comes to their exposure to technology. Girls tend to come to the classroom with less exposure to computers and other forms of technology. They, in turn, become less proficient in using technology than boys. These early limited interactions with technology perpetuate a cycle of disadvantage in educational technology for girls.

When young women and girls are underrepresented in computer and technology courses, this means that fewer women will be eligible for high-paying, high-tech jobs in the future. This issue needs to be addressed considering that by the year 2000, 65 percent of all jobs will require technological skills.

Also, Madam Chairman, this amendment targets dropout prevention programs for pregnant and parenting teens. For young girls, pregnancy and parenting is one of the major reasons why they drop out of high school. We know that the United States has the highest teen pregnancy rate of any industrialized nation. Each year, almost 1 million teenagers become pregnant. For young girls, pregnancy and parenting account for half of the dropout rate and for one-fourth of the dropout rate for all students. Two-thirds of girls who give birth before the age of 18 will not complete high school. Further, the younger the girl is when she becomes pregnant, the more likely she is that she will not complete high school.

Again, we know that the less education a person obtains, the lower their lifetime earnings will be. This is particularly important because the new welfare reform law, enacted by the 105th Congress, provides little opportunity for education and training, and places time limits on public assistance in education.

Single women make up 95 to 98 percent of the 2.8 million single adult welfare recipients heading families. Of this group, one-third of welfare recipients have minimal skills, those skills that are similar to that of a high school dropout; and these women will face the most extreme employment situations. These women are employable, but only in the least skilled, lowest paying jobs. In fact, minimally skilled women employed year-round earn on the average $15,200 a year.

So as we enter the new millennium, we know the job opportunities for minimally skilled people will cease to grow. Only 10 percent of all new jobs will be generated at this new skill level. And by 2006, only 12 percent of all jobs will require minimal skill. So without the proper investments in education and training, many women will continue to rely on public assistance.

It is critical that parents and pregnant teenagers do not drop out of school but complete their high school education. So this reauthorization act must provide every proven alternative to strengthen and support programs to keep pregnant and parenting teens in school to receive a high school degree.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment. We are really talking about nothing more than plain old equity.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise to really thank my colleagues, the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SANCHEZ), and the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) for their bipartisan amendment.

Earlier today the gentlewoman from Hawaii told me that of all of her many achievements in her long career, she was most proud of having authored and enacted WEEA. We must restore gender equity language that helps girls succeed in schools. WEEA is the only Federal program dedicated to gender equity that has provided teaching materials, projects, programs to schools to eliminate gender bias. If the WEEA center is not funded, all the classroom records, program materials, anthology of women's voices, and years and years of research will be lost.

More than 55 organizations wrote me in support of this program, and I would provide that list for the RECORD.

There are those on the other side of the aisle that say this program is not needed. Whether it is the medical profession or engineering, these fields continue to change and evolve. Just like these fields, gender equity needs to be continually updated with new research and techniques.

The appropriators just funded WEEA for $3 million for fiscal year 2000. Even with the tight budget caps, they recognized the importance of this program. But today, some want to throw away over 25 years of research, assistance, and expertise. WEEA helps our Nation's girls, but some people think girls no longer need assistance in overcoming barriers. Yes, women have made great strides, however, these strides have not happened by themselves. It has been programs like WEEA that provide the training and the materials and the support for girls in education. In the last 6 months alone, WEEA has received over 700 requests for information on gender bias.

Glass ceilings still exist in the classroom, in universities, and in the marketplace. Women still only make 72 cents to every dollar a man earns. When girls are exposed to math and sciences, they tend to choose nontraditional female careers, careers such as bankers and engineers, that have lifetime earnings of more than 150 percent above their peers who choose traditional careers, such as nursing and secretaries. This glass ceiling still exists, and we will not break out of it until we break out of this pink collar ghetto.

Last year, more than 65 percent of all jobs will require technology skills. But girls make up only 17 percent of the students taking advanced placement computer science tests. Even in basic computer usage, girls repeatedly rate their computer skills as far lower than boys.

Yes, our underserved populations, girls and boys, need to have equal opportunities for success, yet girls in underserved populations have two barriers before them. They not only lack access to math and technology, but they still have the disadvantage of being a girl in a society that often treats them differently from boys. More than 60 percent of new teachers, when shown videotapes of their classroom instruction, were unaware of the disparity between how they treated boy and girl students. WEEA provides teachers with training and materials to help them adapt their teaching techniques to provide more equity in the classroom.

This essential, unique service provided by WEEA helps our teachers, administrators, and other school staff work with the learning needs of both boys and girls. Studies have shown that girls and boys learn differently.

Newer teaching techniques can help boys excel in greater numbers in the social sciences and with communication skills—an area typically favoring girls.

WEEA's training material help teachers address these issues, issues special to boys, in their classrooms too.

As we head into the next century, we cannot turn our backs on women and girls.

As the educational needs of our society change and grow, at math and technology continue to become prominent skills of our everyday lives, gender equity in our education system is more essential than ever girls must catch up with boys when it comes to math and technology.

To the critics who say there is no longer a need to assist girls and young women in America's education system—I say this: A quote from a former WEEA director: "If we as a nation had decided to stop funding research on heart disease after we made the first mechanical heart, we would have wasted our initial investment. Like medicine, equity is an evolving process and needs to be continually examined, revised, and supported. There is still a lot of work to do, and it changes over time, but gender equity is a real issue that needs to be addressed anew every year."

Even though only 12 percent of the House of Representatives are women I hope the rest of the House will vote bipartisan and vote for gender equity. I ask my colleagues to support the Mink/Woolsey/Sanchez/Morella Amendment.

Mr. OWENS. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and would like to associate myself with the remarks of the rest of my colleagues.

Mr. CLAY. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the Mink-Woolsey-Sanchez-Morella amendment.

Ms. NORTON. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, we owe a debt of thanks to the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SANCHEZ), and the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) for their work in helping us as we strive to save the Women's Educational Equity Act this evening.

Madam Chairman, it will be unbelievable to most Americans that there is a message going out from this body that women and girls have arrived. That will be news to the American people, especially to women and girls themselves.

I ask this body, please do not make girls a victim of their own success, for things are not as bad as they were when we last rose to speak about this bill, but who can but admit that they are not as good as they should be; and we should not extinguish prematurely one of the programs that is finally yielding results for girls and women.

It is a truism that special targeted programs are not permanent. The challenge is to allow them to get a sufficient foothold, or the advances we have achieved because of these programs may well all be lost. The work that remains for girls is across the board, is across the classes, is across the races, and is across geographical boundaries.

Look at the high pregnancy rates, for example, in Title I schools. We know that this is directly related to what happens at home; but, my colleagues, these high pregnancy rates are directly related to what happens at school before pregnancy occurs, and what happens at school after pregnancy occurs when these girls drop out of school wholesalely.

Every American, to take girls at the other end of the scale, should be greatly concerned about the gap of girls between girls and boys on standardized tests, again across racial lines and across class lines, precisely in those areas where proficiency is going to be required in the next century. We have to solve these mysteries before getting rid of programs like WEEA.

Why do males increase their advantage over girls in grades 8 to 12 in math concepts and geopolitical subjects and in natural sciences? If we continue to let that happen, the whole country is at risk.

Why is it that at the fourth grade girls and boys are about the same but the more they stay in school the more girls fall behind in standardized tests but not in the grades they yield in school?

We have got to solve those mysteries or we will leave our country in the lurch, because increasingly we depend upon the skills of these girls. Just ask the Armed Forces where they are drawing their most proficient members from. Girls make better grades in all the subjects but do not do as well on scientific tests. We have got to find out why if we want to get the most productivity out of our young people.

Why are girls almost 40 percent behind boys in SAT scores? Are my colleagues satisfied with that? If they are, get rid of WEEA tonight. Vote against this bill. Are my colleagues satisfied with the digital gap? If they think this is a minority gap, I ask them to look more closely. The digital gap is a female gap more than it is a minority gap.

Being a girl continues to put a person at a permanent disadvantage unless we do something to rescue her whether that girl is a so-called at-risk girl or whether that girl is a privileged girl. And yet, this is very different for boys. Because when a boy is a privileged boy or an at-risk boy makes a profound difference. We have got to understand why simply being a girl puts a person at a disadvantage.

There will come a time, my colleagues, if we keep programs like WEEA going long enough to get the job done, when this Member will come to the floor and say, well done. My colleagues may ask me this evening how long? I will say not long, but I will also say very much not yet.

Keep this program. America wants it. America needs it.

Mr. PAYNE. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of the gender equity act and the amendment offered by my colleagues, the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SANCHEZ), and the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA), to restore the current gender equity provisions in education, specifically, the 25-year-old program to help combat gender bias in the classroom.

I listened to my colleague from the other side who talked proudly of his daughter who did 1550 on the SATs and did not need any help from the gender equity program. That is great, and I think he should be very proud.

But I do not think that every child has the privilege of having a father who happens to have been a hero, a pilot, a person who had the privilege of being in a very prestigious position. I do not think that everyone has the advantage of having a father who is a Member of the United States Congress. As we know, there are only 435 of us.

It is totally illogical for people to go from the particular to the universal. The first thing I learned in basic logic is that we cannot say, because I did it or my daughter did it, everybody should do it. That is like saying, therefore, we should have 260 million presidents of the United States because a person makes it. This is totally illogical.

So as we take this debate forward, let me just say that women are still being discriminated against. Women still are paid only 75 cents on the dollar, but that is a 25-percent increase from the way it was 20 years ago when they only made 54 cents on the dollar. Women still, at age 65, will get less than 60 percent of what men will get from Social Security when they retire.

We have heard from the National Advisory Council on Economic Opportunity at the present rate, 5 years from now the poor will be made up almost entirely of women and children. And we call this phenomena feminization of poverty.

We look at the Congress, 10 percent are women. Even State legislatures are only 25 percent. So people say we do not need this gender equity. We need to keep it at the local level with schools. We must continue to fight for job equity, for pay equity, for credit equity, for insurance equity, for pension equity, for fringe benefit equity, for Social Security equity through legislation, through negotiations, through education and litigation even.

We must continue to have women break through the glass ceiling of the executive suites and break loose from the sticky floors, the dead end, low-wage jobs that keep women in poverty.

So when we hear people talk about there is no more need for this, I think we are going to set the clock back. I think we are moving ourselves in the wrong direction. As we move to the new millennium when we talk about the great opportunities in the future, we are taking away from women who have fought and struggled inch by inch to move themselves a little bit higher to then say we are going to push them back on the rough side of the mountain, they cannot continue to move forward in the manner in which they have been doing.

So I commend the women who have put this resolution in, the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SANCHEZ), and the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) to say let us continue the gender equity provision, let us not turn back the clock. We have been here for 25 years and it has been successful. Why take success and turn it around into failure? It makes no sense.

Madam Chairman, I yield to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. LOWEY).

Mrs. LOWEY. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Mink-Woolsey amendment, which would reauthorize the Women's Educational Act.

Madam Chairman, I rise today in support of the Mink-Woolsey amendment, which would reauthorize the Women's Educational Equity Act and restore other critical gender equity provisions to the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

And I must say that I feel like I've gone back in time—during consideration of the FY 97 Labor-HHS-Education Appropriations bill on the House floor in 1996, nearly 300 of my colleagues voted for an amendment I authored to fund the Women's Educational Equity Act. My colleagues overwhelmingly agreed then that this was an important and worthwhile program. They should do the same now and vote for this amendment.

No one can dispute that every child in America deserves the opportunity to learn and grow, and since the passage of Title IX twenty-five years ago, women face far fewer barriers in the classroom. But disparities remain in the educational opportunities available to young women. We continue to see female high school students fall behind their male counterparts in standardized math test scores. We also hear from the students themselves that a startling amount of gender bias—some inadvertent—still pervades American classrooms, preventing young women from achieving at their highest potential and discouraging them from pursuing certain subjects.

Treating girls and boys unequally in the classroom is a problem with disturbing implications for the young women who are losing out on opportunities and for our country's economic future.

By the year 2010, 65% of all jobs will require technology skills. So, it's very important that we act to implement policies that respond to a wealth of research, which demonstrates that the earlier girls are introduced to careers in mathematics and sciences, the more likely they are to pursue careers in technology and related fields. Yet more than half of female students take no high school math beyond Algebra 2. Only 20% of female students take the three core science courses—biology, chemistry and physics—in high school. Fewer than 20% report using a computer once a week. With the number of women in the work force increasing at twice the rate of men, how will our workforce be prepared for a global, fast-paced economy without the full participation of women?

It is obvious that America's schools need assistance to ensure that both men and women are equipped to compete for good jobs with good wages. That's why it's baffling, and in my judgment unconscionable, that the Women's Educational Equity Act and other gender equity provisions were stripped from this bill in committee. WEEA, which was developed over twenty-five years ago to help schools meet their commitment to Title IX, provides grants to ensure that women's future choices and accomplishments are not dictated by their gender but freely determined based on their skills, interests, and dreams. These grants have been used to develop dropout prevention programs, to help schools understand and combat sexual harassment, and to bolster female performance in math and science.

I think we can all agree the initiatives included in this amendment can meaningfully enhance the education of America's young women.

The Women's Educational Equity Act remains as important today as it was in 1974 for ensuring that girls succeed at school. I strongly urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the Mink-Woolsey amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. Madam Chairman, I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON).

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of this amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. Madam Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER).

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Mink-Woolsey-Sanchez-Morella amendment.

Since 1974, the Women's Educational Equity Act ("We-Uh") has provided resources to teachers, administrators, and parents to ensure equity in their schools and in their communities.

The Act was created in response to widespread recognition that girls had specified educational needs and learning styles that were not being met.

While we have made some progress in leveling the educational playing field for girls, we still have a long way to go.

A study released last year by the American Association of University Women entitled "Gender Gaps: Where Schools Still Fail Our Children" shows that girls, when compared to boys, are at a significant disadvantage as technology is increasingly incorporated into the classroom.

Girls tend to come to the classroom with less exposure to computers and other technology, and girls believe that they are less adept at using technology than boys.

Even though 65 percent of jobs in the year 2000 will require technology skills, only 17 percent of students who take computer science Advanced Placement tests are girls. And, compared with boys, girls receive lower scores on the AP test.

Last year, on the high-stakes college admissions test—the SAT—female students scored 496 on the math section, compared to an average of 531 for male students.

Similarly, on other standardized tests in the subject areas of math and science—such as the National Assessment of Educational Progress—girls continue to score lower than boys.

Let's make sure that we provide resources to teachers, administrators, and parents to meet the need of girls and women.

Let's make sure that we target dropout prevention programs for at-risk youth to pregnant and parenting teenagers.

Let's make sure that we provide training to teachers to encourage girls to pursue careers and higher education degrees in technology, mathematics, science, and engineering.

Vote for the Mink/Woolsey/Sanchez/Morella amendment so that all students will be prepared to compete in the everchanging global economy of the 21st century.

Mr. PAYNE. Madam Chairman, I yield to the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Ms. DELAURO).

Ms. DELAURO. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment to provide gender equity.

Mr. GOODLING. Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Madam Chairman, I was thinking as I was sitting there, where is former Congresswoman Millison Fenwick when we need her? She used to get up here in the well and say, "I don't even have a high school education, but I didn't need the Government to get me here in the Congress of the United States."

But that is not the issue. This is all a bad idea. The debate is a whole bad idea, because what it is doing is taking away from exactly what we are trying to do in this bill.

What we are trying to do in this bill is get poor youngsters and youngsters who are two grade levels below in achievement, we are trying to bring them up so they can be competitive. That is what this bill is all about. This bill is not about white children, black children, Hispanic children, boy children, girl children. This is about children who are disadvantaged academically. And we are trying our best to make sure that, as a matter of fact, they can compete with their peers academically. That is what it is all about.

Now, when we think about this, first of all, the children we are talking about, these are children, as I indicated, the money comes based on poverty and then it includes those who are two grade levels below in achievement.

Now, who is their first role model from the day they are born? Mother, grandmother. Who is their role model when they go into a preschool program? A woman. Who is their role model when they go into Headstart? Nine times out of ten it is a woman molding them all the time. And who is their role model when they get into elementary school? Ninety-nine times out of a hundred, it is a woman. And who is their elementary counselor? It is a woman.

Then they get into middle school, and then maybe it starts to level out a little. Now maybe only 75 percent of their teachers and their role models are women. And their guidance counselors, maybe only 75 percent now are women. The whole way down the line women, women, women are molding these young children whether they are male children or whether they are female children.

So when someone says women have to be there right out of the box, that is exactly where they are, right out of the box.

But again I go back to the point. We are trying in this legislation not to talk about women children, men children, black, Hispanic, white. We are trying to talk about children who are performing below grade level, who do not stand a chance in life to do well unless we can dramatically improve what they are getting.

That is why we said we failed in this program, as well-meaning and as well-intentioned as it was, we failed; and now we are trying to right that so every child has an opportunity to be successful academically.

The General Accounting Office found that only 17 percent of WEEA grants awards were received by State and local educational agencies, only 17 percent, and no evidence that other recipients of the funds are working with State or local educational agencies to address equity problems.

The GAO noted that WEEA activities appear to be out of balance. Specifically, too many resources go for direct services to small numbers of persons and too few resources go to eliminate systemic inequities. And they found that WEEA discriminates against some children in favor of others.

Now, going back again to the fact that this legislation is trying to make sure that all children have an equal opportunity for a quality education. We find also that by the time they reach middle school boys, boys I am talking about now, are now an average of two grade levels below girls.

Minority boys have fallen farthest behind their peers academically and emotionally and are least likely to receive the attention and resources they need.

So I hope we can once again focus what this legislation is all about. This legislation, again I repeat, is about trying to make sure, since we failed for 20-some years and $120 billion, we are now trying to make sure that every child who is eligible for Title I services has an opportunity to receive quality services, not baby-sitting, not anything else other than quality services, so that their academic achievement is dramatically increased.

We failed these youngsters dramatically. We cannot afford to do it any longer. We need them not only for their own self-esteem, but if we are going to compete in the 21st century, we positively cannot lose 50 percent of our children simply because they keep falling behind academically. If they fall behind in the first grade, we can be pretty sure they are a drop-out, maybe not physically, but they have dropped out.

So let us refocus. Let us talk about what this bill is all about, which is to improve the academic achievement of all children who are in need.

Ms. KILPATRICK. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by Representatives MINK, WOOLSEY, SANCHEZ, and MORELLA to restore the provisions of the Women's Educational Equity Act under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

I'm disappointed that the majority has turned away from the educational needs of girls and young women. Granted, women have made tremendous progress in formerly non-traditional fields where they are underrepresented such as sports and sciences, but let's not end this program with an unfinished agenda. We can point to the accomplishments of astronaut Sally Ride and soccer heroine Christie Chastain. But our schools must do more to mold girls and young women into captains of industry and technology.

When we've only just begun, the majority wants to cut short the record of our successes. I disagree, and that's why I support the continuance of the Women's Educational Equity Act.

This act is the only Federal program designed specifically to increase opportunities and resources for girls and young women—the only program, Madam Chairman. Now the majority wants to eliminate it.

Federal programs must show positive results to justify their reauthorization, and I am delighted to remind my colleagues of the work that's been implemented under the act. WEEA, as the act is known, supports research and development activities to help schools implement long-term practices and policies to support gender equity. Grants awarded under the program encourage women and girls to participate in academic fields and careers in which they have been traditionally underrepresented. WEEA grants go to support model teacher training programs, gender-equitable curricula, and other gender-sensitive educational materials. The program also provides funds to help educational institutions meet their Title IX obligations, which prohibits educational institutions from offering programs that discriminate on the basis of gender.

Funds authorized under WEEA go to operating a resource center that provides information to educators on gender-related issues such as gender equity awareness, sexual harassment, support for adolescent girls and instructional improvements in math, science, and technology.

Currently, WEEA must use two-thirds of its total appropriation of three million dollars to support gender equity implementation programs. The resources are insufficient to meet increasing demands for gender-equity technical assistance and the development of new model equity programs. With the demands for resource assistance authorized under WEEA increasing, it is native to suggest that the best days of this Act are "behind us."

Women have made advances under WEEA. But we still have miles to go before we can say with certainty that women have attained the level of full and equal access to all educational and career opportunities.

It is for the reasons that I urge my colleagues to continue the Women's Educational Equity Act and support this important amendment.

Ms. ROYBAL-ALLARD. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of the Mink/Woolsey/Sanchez/Morella amendment. This amendment restores the crucial gender equity provisions removed from the bill during committee consideration, most notably, the Women's Education Equity Act. Since 1974, the Women's Education Equity Act helped school districts and teachers meet the goals of title IX which require fair and equitable opportunities for girls in our schools.

This amendment helps to achieve these goals by providing—grants for the development of materials and model programs that ensure gender equity in education; information on methods and techniques teachers can use to promote gender equity; and it provides dropout prevention programs targeted to pregnant and parenting teen girls.

These are just some of the provisions in the Women's Education Equity Act that have contributed greatly to the progress we have made in ensuring that girls in this country have the same educational opportunities as our boys. The sad reality is, however, that although we have made progress, a gender gap still exists in America's schools, particularly in the areas of science and technology.

For example—only 17 percent of students taking the computer science advanced placement exam are girls and women continue to be sorely underrepresented in both undergraduate and graduate programs in engineering, math, the physical sciences, and computer science.

Hispanic and African-American girls fare even worse with respect to technology education. In fact, only 127 Hispanic girls nationwide took the computer science advanced placement exam in 1998.

These facts are strong evidence that we still have not reached many of our young girls who would excel in these and other areas. This is particularly alarming because, as we move into the new millennium, all our children must be prepared to compete in the even-growing, highly technological world economy. Equally important is addressing the crisis that can prevent many of our young girls from reaching their full potential: the near epidemic rate of teenage pregnancy in our country. The reality is that, teen mothers are more likely to drop-out of school and never go on to college than girls who delay pregnancy and motherhood. With the Women's Educational Equity Act we can continue to help address many of the barriers facing our girls today because this act will give our schools the help they need to give girls the confidence and direction necessary to pursue and excel in math, science, and technology. And it will help schools provide guidance and encouragement to pregnant and parenting teens through targeted dropout prevention programs.

If our country is to remain the leader in the next century, we must ensure that all our children, regardless of their race, sex, or socioeconomic background, have access to the highest-quality education. I urge all my colleagues to vote for this critical amendment.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Madam Chairman, title I is an important provision which has provided the resources to our schools. Its original intent was to target the most resources to those schools with the greatest need, and to provide equity to all segments of our Nation. It must remain that way.

Madam Chairman, I also rise today in support of the Mink/Woolsey/Sanchez/Morella amendment to H.R. 2, the Students Results Act. The amendment would restore current gender equity provisions to H.R. 2 in order to ensure that our young women succeed not only in school, but also in life.

The intent of this amendment is not to target a specific group, but rather, it is intended to continue into the millennium what the Women's Educational Equity Act has done for the past 25 years: provide teaching materials, projects and programs to schools to eliminate gender bias. Studies show that girls face an alarming new gender gap in technology as we approach the new millennium. Girls tend to come to the classroom with less exposure to computers. Experts predict that 65 percent of all jobs in the year 2000 will require technology skills, and only 17 percent of advanced placement test takers in computer science are girls.

Madam Chairman, I stand here before you today because I am a product of the Women's Educational Equity Act and so are all of my female colleagues. This act provides resources to empower our daughters, granddaughters, sisters and all young women to realize their dreams and become Congresswomen, physicians, lawyers, mechanics, and in sum, overcome gender barriers.

Madam Chairman, instead of eliminating the Women's Educational Equity Act, Congress should consider ways to improve and expand the program.

Madam Chairman, education is the foundation of our society. Our success is measured and determined by how well we educate all—not some—but all of our people, including women, people of color, the poor, and those for whom English is not their first language. We would be doing a grave disservice to this Nation to pass a weak reauthorization with such glaring deficiencies. I ask that the provisions for bilingual education be included, that the Women's Educational Equity Act be reauthorized, and that the Payne amendment be passed. The next century awaits us. We must move forward not backward, and we must do so together. Make H.R. 2, the Student Results Act whole. I ask for your support for these amendments.

Overall, the reauthorization of title I, is a good bipartisan effort, that addresses many of the important problems in the Nation's educational system, but I must call your attention to a very grave deficiency, which I feel strikes at the very heart of the title. Madam Chairman, I am speaking of the lowering of the poverty threshold that determines eligibility for schoolwide programs, and the failure to reauthorize the Women's Educational Equity Act. I also want to associate myself with the remarks of my colleague from Texas, Mr. RODRIGUEZ, with regard to this bill as well. In the case of the lowering of the poverty threshold, Madam Chairman, this measure is nothing more than a veiled attempt to undermine the public school system in some of our poorer neighborhoods, by draining funds that they would not otherwise have, and allowing them to go to schools in systems that are better off. Surely all of our children need our support for education, but some need more funding than others, and it is our responsibility to see that they get it.

Madam Chairman, we need to be working harder at fostering equity in our Nation's school system, not creating a greater divide. Lowering the threshold will increase the gap between schools' ability to educate the students who do well and those who do not.

Personally, I think the threshold should be higher, but certainly to reduce it below 50 percent is unacceptable. My colleagues, I ask your support for the Payne amendment. Our goal must be to leave no child behind.

Mr. WU. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the last word. I rise today in support of the Mink/Woolsey/Sanchez/Morella amendment to restore important gender equity provisions in the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

When Congress last reauthorized the act, measures were put into place to ensure that girls were getting equal education. These programs have only to show the positive results. Now, faced with the opportunity to continue the valuable work of gender equity programs, Congress is proposing that we turn our backs on them. I am pleased that this amendment allows teacher training to encourage girls to pursue careers and higher education degrees in technology, math, science, and engineering. According to Department of Labor statistics, nearly 75 percent of tomorrow's jobs will require use of computers; fewer than 33 percent of participants in computer courses and related activities are girls. Gender equity programs can increase the 33 percent by getting girls interested in math and science.

In Oregon, we've seen first-hand the positive work that gender equity programs provide. AWSEM (Advocates for Women in Science, Engineering and Mathematics) is a program that was started in Portland, OR to stimulate girls' interest in science and math during middle and high school years. Girls meet in after-school AWSEM clubs with their peers with similar interests. They meet regularly with college-age women studying science or math related-disciplines, and get to work with experienced women professionals from aeronautic engineers to zoologists. The program is successful. AWSEM groups are rapidly spreading throughout the country, and we should encourage their growth.

We need to do more to ensure that other girls will be able to benefit and achieve under similar gender equity programs. I strongly urge members to support this amendment.

Ms. MCKINNEY. Madam Chairman, why are we having this debate today?

Because in one sleight-of-hand, backroom maneuver, the Republican leadership has succeeded in turning back the clock 30 years on educational progress for girls and young women. We need the Mink amendment to protect our young girls and women who are helped by educational equity.

By dropping the Women's Educational Equity Act from the bill, the Republican leadership demonstrated that even without their guru, Newt Gingrich, they are still as meanspirited as ever.

We have a need for these programs that help level the playing field between boys and girls. For instance, girls are not learning the technology skills they need to compete in the new information revolution; a very small percentage of girls take computer science courses even though 65 percent of the jobs in the next millennium will require technology skills. Studies show that poor self-esteem as a result of unequal treatment is a factor in this persistent educational gender gap. Sometimes, without realizing it, teachers and administrators carry society's biases against girls into our schools and classrooms. This becomes yet another factor which discourages girls from achieving. Gender equity training, resources and materials are needed to counter stereotypes and to assure that girls and young women are given equal educational opportunities.

We all were so proud as we watched the USA Team in the Women's World Cup games. Even the Republican leadership scrambled to congratulate those young women. However, we want our women to score goals on and off the field. By supporting the Mink/Woolsey/Sanchez/Morella amendment, we can assure that this little piece of Republican misogyny is put into the trash heap where it belongs.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mrs. BIGGERT). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.
