Unquestionably, Brigadier General John L. Clay is a man of unwavering loyalty and dedication. He has earned the respect during the occasion of his retirement and express our appreciation for his service to our country. We wish them well as they embark on this new chapter in their lives.

MAYOR FRANCIS H. DUEHAY OF CAMBRIDGE

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, is it an honor to take this opportunity to recognize a leader who has given so much to the people of Cambridge, Massachusetts. Mayor Francis H. Duehay has been an elected official in the City of Cambridge for thirty-six consecutive years. Under his leadership, the city has made great progress in housing, welfare, employment, and other important issues for the people.

This year, Frank is retiring, and his loss will be felt deeply by all those whose lives he has touched. Frank's commitment to public service is extraordinary. Throughout his years as Mayor, City Councilor, and on the School Committee he has taken pride in his commitment to work directly with the people he represents, in order to learn their concerns firsthand. Frank's work with city officials and numerous other organizations to open new lines of communication between the city government and the people of Cambridge has created a local government at its best—responsive to the needs of the people, accountable for its actions, and always open to new ideas.

Frank worked tirelessly to improve the quality of life for Cambridge families. He served as the chairperson for the Cambridge Kids' Council, where he worked to create greater opportunities in the community, giving hope to children and families and providing a model for cities throughout the state. The Mayor's Summer Youth Employment Program has been extremely successful in giving young men and women the opportunity to serve their city during the summer months, enabling them to explore their interests and enhance their lives. Frank has fought hard for the families of Cambridge, and his legacy will live on through their success.

In all of these and many other ways, Frank Duehay has served the people of Cambridge with great distinction. I am honored to pay tribute to this remarkable leader. His public service and generosity are shining examples to us all. I know that all of the people of Cambridge when I say thank you, Frank, for your commitment and dedication to public service. You will be deeply missed.

MICHIGAN TEACHER OF THE YEAR MARGARET HOLTSCHLAG TRIBUTE

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize and congratulate Margaret Holtschlag as the Michigan Teacher of the Year Award given by the Michigan Department of Education.

Mrs. Holtschlag, a fourth grade teacher at Murphy Elementary School in the Haslet School District, was selected from nearly thirty regional finalists as the Michigan Teacher of the Year. Described by colleagues as an innovative, thoughtful and progressive teacher, her dedication is second to none. As the winning teacher, Mrs. Holtschlag will share her expertise as she travels across the state working with teachers to improve programs and teacher quality.

What is truly remarkable about Mrs. Holtschlag is that her classroom extends beyond a room filled with desks and chalkboards. Two years ago she took a group of students on a trip to Korea and set up an Internet pen-pal link between Haslet, China and Korea. In the past, her students have built weather stations and explored nearby wetlands. Additionally, her students have spent time at the Michigan Library and Historical Center, discovering and exploring aspects of Michigan history that can not be learned from a textbook.

For twenty-one years Mrs. Holtschlag has devoted her life to teaching and making a positive impact on each and every student she encounters. Her captivating teaching style inspires both students and colleagues alike. This is truly a rare gift.

A quality education is one of the most important tools that a child needs and it gives me great joy to know that such a dynamic and caring teacher is helping to shape the lives of Michigan students.

NICHOLAS W. ALLARD ON THE COLLEGE APPLICATION PROCESS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, families across the country know that a college education is essential for their children. A college graduate earns twice what a high school graduate earns in a year, and close to three times what a high school dropout earns. More and more students are applying for college each year—over 2 million freshmen began college last year. The result is increasingly heavy pressures on schools, families, and colleges.

No one understands these pressures more than prospective college students and their families who are now filling out applications, visiting college campuses, and preparing to make the all-important choices for their futures.

An article by Nicholas W. Allard, in the Washington Post last week, provides excellent common sense advice to prospective students and their families about the college application process. Mr. Allard, whom many of us recall for his many years of service on the Senate Judiciary Committee, has had extensive experience in interviewing college applicants. I believe his article will be of interest to all of us in the Senate, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows.

[From the Washington Post, Nov. 9, 1999] NAVIGATING THE COLLEGE ADMISSIONS PROCESS

(By Nicholas W. Allard, Associated Press)

A friend who is intelligent, high educated, and a wonderful parent recently called me in a meltdown panic over whether to give white or manila envelopes to their teenager’s teachers for college recommendations.

My anxious friend has lots of company. Every year this is the season when tree leaves turn color and drop, while common sense about college admissions heads south. Aside from the uselessness of self-inflicted pressure, important decisions by college prospects are often based on inadequate information and worse advice. So I can’t resist offering some food for thought.

APPLY TO THE COLLEGES YOU WANT TO ATTEND

Pretty basic, huh? Yet how many times have you heard advice such as: “You need some ‘reach’ schools.” Or “Where’s your ‘safety’ school?” In other words, you’re encouraged to think about schools in a way that ranks their desirability according to the difficulty of being admitted. This approach makes you feel you are “settling”: if you decide to attend anywhere but one of the most selective schools.

According to Peterson’s Annual Survey of Undergraduate Institutions, in the United States there are almost 2,000 accredited, public and private four-year colleges and universities. They vary tremendously.

To find a handful or so of colleges out of this very large number you would be enthusiastic about attending. Then, once you’ve got your working list together, turn to the issue of the EARLY APPLICATION PROGRAM

In your considering participating in an early application program because you are very, very sure that a college is your top choice, then go ahead. If you’re not sure, then don’t do it. Think about it. What if you succeed and are admitted to a place that you are not sure is your first choice?

If the early acceptance is nonbinding, you’re going to apply elsewhere anyway. If it is binding, then you are stuck. You are not going to find any college that will tell you it’s relatively easy to be admitted at the early stage. But you’ll tell me you are worried that some colleges admit so many students early that there seem to be very few places left if you wait.

Keep your head. Those people who are so well qualified that colleges are sure they want to offer them a binding offer at the early stage are taken off the pool of applicants. They are not filing multiple applications to schools that may interest you. You may appear to be a relatively strong candidate in the college pool come spring, especially after your strong academic performance this fall.

And, remember, many, if not most, college applicants are not accepted at the early stage. Are you sure that you want to go through the angst of applying to college for
