WOMEN’S HEALTH

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, I take this opportunity today to call my colleagues’ attention to the importance of women’s health care issues. I came to know the importance of women’s health early in life. Some of you may know that my mother suffered from tuberculosis. Back in those days, patients with TB had to be isolated, so my mother was living in a sanatorium. I could not see her in person, only through the windows.

In the past, women’s health did not receive the attention it deserves. I believe it is time to change that. If we are to eliminate the diseases that especially afflict women today, we will need real dedication to the task of developing new treatments and prevention techniques.

And because women make many of the health care decisions for families, their decisions touch the health of many other women, spouses, elderly parents and relatives. In this great country of ours, where we emphasize personal responsibility, good health care decisions are fundamental to quality health.

As medical science advances into new territory, expanded choices will give women unprecedented opportunities to live better and longer lives, and to affect the quality of health care in our country. Women will be called upon to take charge of their own health as well as to demand medical excellence for their families. Only with the help of such informed decision makers will we be able to develop policies which assure all Americans access to affordable, high quality health care.

In an effort to highlight women’s health care and to make women aware of the health care choices that are available to them, I recently co-hosted a forum. Health Care: What Every Woman Should Know, with our former colleague in the Senate, Hank Brown, now President of the University of Northern Colorado. The conference featured a number of panelists who discussed the latest research and treatment techniques.

And because women make many of the health care decisions for families, it is important to make women aware of the advances that are taking place in the areas of research, detection, treatment and prevention.

Personal health choices are fundamental to quality health care. Today’s forum will highlight approaches that can lead to early intervention, less invasive and less expensive treatment and cost-saving strategies.

I sincerely hope you will use what you learn today to make positive health care choices.

Sincerely,

BEN NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL, M.D., U.S. Senator.

GREETINGS: It is my pleasure to extend warm greetings and a welcome to you, my colleagues on this forum on Health Care: What Every Woman Should Know. The University is proud to sponsor this event with Senator Ben Nighthorse Campbell and the College of Health and Human Sciences. The College is dedicated to improving the human condition through its educational programs and fosters a desire of ‘giving back’ to the community. This is a special occasion for the University of Northern Colorado and a sign of our commitment to be an educational partner with our communities. I would like to acknowledge the North Colorado Medical Center, Inc. and the Western Plains Health Network who serve as partners in this important event. We hope to expand our partnerships with other institutions and communities to truly reflect our University mission in teaching, research, and service throughout the State of Colorado.

The forum is designed to help you recognize the warning signs and be aware of factors that affect your well-being; take responsibility for making wise decisions about your treatment and recovery; and, how to be an active, well-informed partner in health care. Your attitude, knowledge and involvement in the health care partnership can influence the progress of treatment and rehabilitation. This forum can help you make a difference.

PANELISTS

Susan Carter is a gynecologic surgeon, specializing in women’s health issues. She received a BA from the University of Texas, Austin and an MD from the University of...
Although women’s health is not being discussed as much as it should be, awareness of health problems facing women has increased in the past century, Blumenthal said.

For many years, serious health problems such as heart disease and lung cancer were thought only to occur in men. But through increasing research in women’s health issues, Blumenthal said, concerns such as these are being discussed.

Also, it’s important to include women and minorities in all research projects relating to health issues as well as men. Blumenthal said. Programs that don’t include women will lose their federal funding.

Marianne Dinges attended the conference Thursday and said the experience was valuable. She said she was impressed with the quality of the speakers and the topics they were scheduled to discuss.

“It appeared we were going to see a full gamut of issues and their political relevance,” she said. “A lot of us are involved in women’s issues and we had a lot about this, but we all got new information.”

The conference was sponsored by UNC and U.S. Sen. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, R-Colo. Campbell had pitched the idea to UNC after receiving many calls from women about health issues.

“It came from the community activists who wanted more,” he said.

The issues addressed at the conference need to be at the forefront of public debate, Campbell said.

He said he will take the information back to Washington, D.C., and enter it into the Congressional Record. He also wants to start a series of forums like the one Thursday to further address the issues.

“We just touched the surface of women’s health,” he said. “The time to endure is passed. It’s time to fight back.”

HEALTHY LIVING

Susan Blumenthal, assistant U.S. surgeon general, gave these tips for healthy lives:

- Find a doctor who respects you.
- Know your family health history; many diseases are inherited.
- If you smoke, stop. If you don’t, never do. It’s the No. 1 preventable cause of health problems among women.
- Exercise or do some other sort of physical activity at least 30 minutes every day.
- Eat smart.
- Get annual physical exams, and make sure you get your mammograms.
- Get routine physical exams.

A healthy care plan and make sure to include routine women’s health tests such as pap smears.

Blumenthal said.

“We must address these issues if we want to safeguard women’s health,” she said.

The problem stems from the fact that women’s health issues also are political issues, said Raisa Geary, a member of the U.S. Senate’s Health, Education, Labor and Pension Committee.

“This is more politically charged than almost anything we do,” she said. “We’re treated as a political issue when it comes to health care. We have wonderful, pure approaches to women’s health care policy, but it’s not in a vacuum.”

ASSISTANT SURGEON GENERAL SPEAKS ON ADVANCES

Although mammograms are responsible for saving the lives of thousands of women every year, the technology is 40 years old and still misses crucial early warning signs of breast cancer.

That was the challenge facing Susan Blumenthal, assistant surgeon general of the United States. Rather than waiting for new technology to be developed, she called the CIA. Together with NASA and the CIA, Blumenthal used spy-satellite technology to improve the success of mammograms.

“Some of the same imaging technology used to find tanks camouflaged behind trees can now be used to find cancer cells,” she said.

Blumenthal was in Greeley on Thursday to deliver the keynote address at a conference about women’s health.

The conference, held at the University of Northern Colorado, featured a variety of panelists who discussed everything from anorexia to breast cancer to political action.

Blumenthal handed out a “report card” on women’s health in the country today:

- The biggest problem facing women isn’t any one disease, but instead is a lack of focus on women’s health.
- “We must address these issues if we want to safeguard women’s health,” she said.

The problem stems from the fact that women’s health issues also are political issues, said Raisa Geary, a member of the U.S. Senate’s Health, Education, Labor and Pension Committee.

“This is more politically charged than almost anything we do,” she said. “We’re treated as a political issue when it comes to health care. We have wonderful, pure approaches to women’s health care policy, but it’s not in a vacuum.”
