Now, we did do something very phe- nomenal last week; and we recognized this in the House of Representatives. Mr. Speaker, we have the right to shoot down a bullet with a bullet in a national missile defense test.

Now, I have put up here, Mr. Speaker, the results of the last eight Patriot 3 tests. That is our smaller defensive system, that handles Scud-type miss-iles, and I put it up here to show that, in fact, we are now hitting a bullet with a bullet with missile defense. We can shoot a Scud missile that goes faster than a .30–06 bullet, that is a high-powered rifle bullet with a Patriot 3 missile that also goes faster than a .30–06 bullet. We have had now eight out of nine successful intercepts.

Mr. Speaker, at about 11:09 on Satur- day night last Saturday, 148 miles above a ground launched by Saddam Hussein at Vandenberg, California, some 11,000 feet per second. That is about four times the speed of a .30–06 bullet. We hit it with an Interceptor from Kwajalein Island, 4,800 miles from the west. We launched that Interceptor, and it also had a speed about four times faster than a .30–06 bullet, and they collided 148 miles above the earth.

That utilized radar capability, the Ballistic Missile Defense Agency, also our ex-band radar on Kwajalein, also radar at Hawaii with hundreds and hundreds of Navy and Air Force assets monitoring that test. And with some 35,000 Americans, whether they were members of the Army that helped de-velop the radar or the Air Force team that launched the missile from Van- denberg Air Base or the Navy and Coast Guard that provided security, some 35,000 plus Americans, engineers, scientists, technicians, blue-collar workers, participated in making that test a success.

It was a great day for the United States, but it was a chart along a very difficult road of trying to achieve mis-sile defense.

The Bush administration has the right idea about missile defense. They know it is necessary because we live in an age of missiles. We found that out when we had a number of our personnel killed in Desert Storm by a ballistic missile launched by Saddam Hussein at an American force concentration. We can defend today, even though we have a weakened defense, we still have de-fenses against ships, tanks, aircraft. We have no defense against an incom-ing ICBM coming into this country.

So that is why the administration is working with the Russians to try to de-velop a cooperation that will allow us to deploy defenses, and it is why also the Bush administration has the right idea, because the agreement with the Russian, it is in our na-tional interests to build a missile de-fense system, because it is the United States Government that has a con-stitutional responsibility to its people to provide for national security. Na-tional security must now and forever be depen-dent upon our defense against incoming ballistic missiles.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the administration would work over-time to try to increase this defense budget. Let us not look back on this Army of relative prosperity when the American people are doing well as an era that was similar to the era imme-diately preceding Korea, when we de-cided that there would not be any more wars and that we did not need to have a military that was ready to go. Then, on June 6 of 1950, we found ourselves pushed down the Korean peninsula by a third-rate military; and when the dust had cleared, over 30,000 Americans lay dead because we had underestimated the danger to the world; and we had also underestimated the drawdown of the American military that took place after World War II.

Mr. Speaker, we must keep a strong military. That is the underpinnings of our foreign policy, which is ultimately the underpinnings of our economic pol-icy. So let us try to get that $18 billion, Mr. Speaker. It is crucial to everybody that wears a uniform in the United States, and it is crucial to every Amer-i can.
