knives, some of whom were on the terrorist watch list. It’s safe to say that the airport security system failed us.

If we are passing legislation to improve the condition of the airline industry, shouldn’t we also address this issue? Perhaps airport security should truly be a security issue, not merely a business issue that, until last week, was mostly considered in terms of a company’s bottom line. Don’t get me wrong—the bottom line is important to our capitalist economy, but I have come to the conclusion that airport security should not be subject to those concerns. There are many interesting ideas out there for how to improve it, but I believe first and foremost we need to make airport security a responsibility of the Federal Government: perhaps under the Department of Transportation, or the Coast Guard.

In conclusion, I want to again express my disappointment at having to oppose this bill. I sincerely hope that the President, Senate leaders, and House leaders will work to address these important concerns before a package is signed into law.

AIR TRANSPORTATION SAFETY AND SYSTEM STABILIZATION ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. C.L. “BUTCH” OTTER
OF IDAHO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 21, 2001

Mr. OTTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share with my colleagues and constituents my reasons for voting against H.R. 2926, the Air Transportation Safety and Stabilization Act. I believe it is important for every member to make known their thinking behind such an important vote.

The terrorist attacks on Sep. 11 devastated the American aviation industry. Hundreds of passengers, dozens of airline employees and thousands of innocent people on the ground died in the fiery crashes of the four airliners.

America’s commercial airlines were grounded for 3 days. Most of general aviation was grounded for more than a week, and some components of the general aviation industry remain grounded today. Insurers of aviation airlines are canceling their policies, and banks are refusing to extend loans to keep the system intact. Under these circumstances some form of assistance to the airline industry is essential for our economy and national security.

H.R. 2926, however, is the wrong form of relief. What should have been immediate relief from the effects of the attacks has become a golden parachute for the aviation industry, indemnifying many airlines from the effects of calamitous business decisions made long before Sep 11. In a time of tragedy for our nation and the world this Congress has failed to closely examine this bill.

The airline industry takes in at most $400 million a day. With a grounding of 3 days, and the continued closure of Reagan National Airport, the direct losses to the industry by government action can be calculated at roughly $2 billion. This act makes available cash in the amount of $4.5 billion for the passenger airlines, more than twice the direct losses of the airlines. Furthermore, this cash will be apportioned among the airlines, not according to how much revenue they lost because of the attacks, but how much capacity they had. This preference for available seat miles over revenue passenger miles can only benefit those carriers whose own bad business decisions before September 11 had left them with too much capacity and too little sales.

H.R. 2926 supposedly contained extra funding for security. The $3 billion authorized for security measures, however, has already been appropriated by Congress from the $40 billion emergency spending package, which I supported. To claim that this bill had any new funding for security is simply not true. Without needed security improvements it is impossible to see how airline traffic can return to normal levels. The bailout legislation should have waited for a security package in order to comprehensively deal with this situation.

H.R. 2926 would have been constitutional if it had been drafted as a focused bill to keep our airlines flying in the wake of the devastating attacks on our country. The creation of an entitlement fund, the overcompensation of the airlines, rewards for inefficient carriers, and lack of new funding for airline security all combined to make this a deeply flawed bill. For all of these reasons and more I voted against H.R. 2926 and urged my colleagues to do the same.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

SPEECH BY U.N. SECRETARY GENERAL KOFI ANNAN

HON. JOHN M. SPRATT, JR.
OF SOUTH CAROLINA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 2001

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, as the Congress continues to move forward following the horrific and tragic events of September 11, 2001, I would like to insert for the record a recent and I think timely speech given by United Nations Secretary General Kofi Annan.

Mr. Annan’s speech is about the contributions and vision of former U.N. Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjöld. While the speech was given on September 6th, five days before the attacks, I believe it provides for interesting reading as we examine our notions of international security and multi-lateral cooperation.

TO HONOR MR. RICHARD FIMBRES AS A RECIPIENT OF THE 12TH ANNUAL PROFILES OF SUCCESS HISPANIC LEADERSHIP AWARD

HON. ED PASTOR
OF ARIZONA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 2001

Mr. PASTOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise before you today to recognize a special individual who was honored for his leadership qualities and service to his community. On September 5th, Mr. Richard G. Fimbres was honored by his peers at the Annual Profiles of Success Hispanic Leadership Awards presentation in Phoenix, Arizona. This event, coordinated by Valle del Sol, a local non-profit community based organization, kicks off National Hispanic Heritage Month in Arizona and is now in it’s twelfth year of honoring worthy individuals.

Honored in the category of Exemplary Leadership, Mr. Fimbres, of Tucson, Arizona, was recognized for his work as a community leader. He serves as a board member of Pima Community College, which helped to raise funds for the Hispanic Student Endowment Fund, create the Amigos de Pima, and partnered with the League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC) to create and fund a year-round program to assist young students with their reading skills. He is dedicated to various organizations such as LULAC, the Metropolitan Education Commission, the Knights of Columbus, and the Tucson Pima Arts Council. He also devotes his time to serving on the State’s Behavioral Health Planning Council, Arizona Supreme Courts Juvenile Detention Advisory Committee and the University of Arizona’s Diversity Action Council.

Mr. Fimbres’ standing as a community leader is evident by his commitment to these organizations and countless hours of volunteer work throughout the community. Mr. Speaker, I ask you to join me in recognizing this outstanding citizen and community leader for his fine work and dedication.
DAg Hammarskjold and the 21st Century
(By Kofi Annan)

As Secretary-General of the United Nations, I have to give many speeches, and even quite a few which I can think of as invitations to speak that is a greater honour, or a greater challenge, than this one.

It will not surprise you to hear that Dag Hammarskjold is a figure of great importance for me. This is especially of course for my successors—which is simply impossible to live up to.

Dag Hammarskjold was a man who could have come of age during the years when Hammarskjold personified the United Nations, and began my own career in the UN system within a year of his death.

And how much more true, also, for one who has the special relationship that I do with this, his home country!

So you see, it is quite a solemn thing for me to give a speech specifically so close to the 40th anniversary of Hammarskjold’s death. And I feel all the more solemn about it coming here, as I do, directly from the part of Africa where he met that death—and where, 40 years later, the United Nations is again struggling to help restore unity and peace to the Democratic Republic of Congo.

I can tell you that the Congolese have never forgotten Dag Hammarskjold. Four days ago, during my visit to the Congo, I met with representatives of the parties involved in the Inter-Congolese Dialogue. Their spokesman began the meeting by telling me how much he appreciated the late Secretary-General’s dedication, and the fact that his death is commemorated annually. The Zambian government, together with your own government, has no choice. He has to follow in the footsteps of Hammarskjold, upholding the purposes of this community to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war, and to do this it had to follow certain key principles.

These were:

First, “equality in all”—which encompassed both the “sovereign equality” of all Member States, in Article 2 of the Charter, and “respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms”, in Article 1.

Second, “equal economic opportunities”—spelt out in Article 55 as the promotion of “higher standards of living, full employment, and conditions of economic and social progress and development, as well as “relations of international economic, social, health, and related problems”.

Third, “Justice”—by which he meant that the international community must “be based, on law and justice, and apply”.

And finally the prohibition of the use of armed force, “save in the common interest”.

These principles, Hammarskjold argued, are incompatible with the idea of the United Nations as merely a conference or debating chamber—as indeed is the authority the Charter gives to its principal organs, and particularly to the Security Council, which clearly has both legislative and executive powers.

The context in which he put forward these arguments was, of course, the Cold War, and particularly the Soviet campaign against him during the Congo crisis of 1960-61.

Dag Hammarskjold’s memory by observing a minute of silence. I found it very moving that people could feel like that about him after 40 years.

In Zambia, too—which, as you know, was where he actually died—Hammarskjold’s death is commemorated annually. The Zambian government, together with your own and with the United Nations system, has launched a “Hammarskjold Week” which includes a programme to educate young Afri- cans as “messengers of peace”, as well as a Centre for Peace, Good Governance and Human Rights. There could be no better way to commemorate his life than by promoting these ideals, which he held so dear.

If Dag Hammarskjold were to walk through that door now, and ask me what are the main problems the United Nations is dealing with today, I could easily answer in a way that would make him think nothing much had changed.

I could talk to him not only about the Congo, but about the Middle East, or Cyprus, or the relations between India and Pakistan, and it would all seem very familiar.

But I could also tell him things that he would find very unfamiliar—though some would surprise him less than others, and some would gratify him more than others.

He would probably be relieved, but not surprised, to hear that China is now represented at the United Nations by the government that actually governs the vast majority of Chinese people.

It would surprise him much more to learn that the Soviet Union no longer exists. But he could only be pleased to find that there is no longer any need for a formal difference between the permanent members of the Security Council.

He might be struck by the number of conflicts the United Nations is dealing with today that are within, rather than between, States—though the experience of the Congo would have prepared him for this—and also by the number of regional organisations that have developed as partners for the UN in different parts of the world.

I feel sure, in any case, that he would be pleased to see the way United Nations peacekeeping has developed, from the model that he and his associates first put into effect back in 1956 to something much more diverse and complex, which is often more accurately described as “peace building”.

And I imagine he would be equally impressed by the wide range of issues that the United Nations is now called upon to face outside the traditional security arena—from climate change to HIV/AIDS.

He would be gratified, and perhaps not at all surprised, to hear that human rights and democracy are now generally accepted as world norms—though he might well be distressed to see how far, in many countries, the practice still falls short of the rhetoric.

He would definitely be distressed to learn that, within the last decade, genocide had once again disfigured the face of humanity—and that well over a billion people today are living in poverty. I think he would see the prevention of the recurrence of the former, and putting an end to the latter, as the most urgent tasks confronting us in this new century.

He would no doubt be impressed by the speed and intensity of modern communications, and momentarily confused by talk of fax and sat-phones—let alone e-mails and the Internet. But I’m sure he would be quick to grasp the advantages and disadvantages of all these innovations, both for civilisation as a whole and for the conduct of diplomacy in particular.

What is clear is that his core ideas remain highly relevant in this new international context. The challenge for us is to see how they can be adapted to take account of it.

One idea which inspired all his words and actions as Secretary-General was his belief that the United Nations had to be a “dynamic instrument”, through which its Members would collectively “develop forms of executive authority”.

During his time in office he became increasingly sensitive to the fact that some Member States did not share this vision, but regarded the United Nations as only “a statute book, and an expression”. The overriding purpose of this community, he argued, was to prevent the recurrence of the former, and put an end to the latter, as the most urgent tasks confronting us in this new century.

What is clear is that his core ideas remain highly relevant in this new international context. The challenge for us is to see how they can be adapted to take account of it.

One idea which inspired all his words and actions as Secretary-General was his belief that the United Nations had to be a “dynamic instrument”, through which its Members would collectively “develop forms of executive authority”.

During his time in office he became increasingly sensitive to the fact that some Member States did not share this vision, but regarded the United Nations as only “a statute book, and an expression”. The overriding purpose of this community, he argued, was to prevent the recurrence of the former, and put an end to the latter, as the most urgent tasks confronting us in this new century.

What is clear is that his core ideas remain highly relevant in this new international context. The challenge for us is to see how they can be adapted to take account of it.

One idea which inspired all his words and actions as Secretary-General was his belief that the United Nations had to be a “dynamic instrument”, through which its Members would collectively “develop forms of executive authority”.

During his time in office he became increasingly sensitive to the fact that some Member States did not share this vision, but regarded the United Nations as only “a statute book, and an expression”. The overriding purpose of this community, he argued, was to prevent the recurrence of the former, and put an end to the latter, as the most urgent tasks confronting us in this new century.

What is clear is that his core ideas remain highly relevant in this new international context. The challenge for us is to see how they can be adapted to take account of it.

One idea which inspired all his words and actions as Secretary-General was his belief that the United Nations had to be a “dynamic instrument”, through which its Members would collectively “develop forms of executive authority”.

During his time in office he became increasingly sensitive to the fact that some Member States did not share this vision, but regarded the United Nations as only “a statute book, and an expression”. The overriding purpose of this community, he argued, was to prevent the recurrence of the former, and put an end to the latter, as the most urgent tasks confronting us in this new century.

What is clear is that his core ideas remain highly relevant in this new international context. The challenge for us is to see how they can be adapted to take account of it.

One idea which inspired all his words and actions as Secretary-General was his belief that the United Nations had to be a “dynamic instrument”, through which its Members would collectively “develop forms of executive authority”.

During his time in office he became increasingly sensitive to the fact that some Member States did not share this vision, but regarded the United Nations as only “a statute book, and an expression”. The overriding purpose of this community, he argued, was to prevent the recurrence of the former, and put an end to the latter, as the most urgent tasks confronting us in this new century.

What is clear is that his core ideas remain highly relevant in this new international context. The challenge for us is to see how they can be adapted to take account of it.

One idea which inspired all his words and actions as Secretary-General was his belief that the United Nations had to be a “dynamic instrument”, through which its Members would collectively “develop forms of executive authority”.

During his time in office he became increasingly sensitive to the fact that some Member States did not share this vision, but regarded the United Nations as only “a statute book, and an expression”. The overriding purpose of this community, he argued, was to prevent the recurrence of the former, and put an end to the latter, as the most urgent tasks confronting us in this new century.

What is clear is that his core ideas remain highly relevant in this new international context. The challenge for us is to see how they can be adapted to take account of it.

One idea which inspired all his words and actions as Secretary-General was his belief that the United Nations had to be a “dynamic instrument”, through which its Members would collectively “develop forms of executive authority”.

During his time in office he became increasingly sensitive to the fact that some Member States did not share this vision, but regarded the United Nations as only “a statute book, and an expression”. The overriding purpose of this community, he argued, was to prevent the recurrence of the former, and put an end to the latter, as the most urgent tasks confronting us in this new century.

What is clear is that his core ideas remain highly relevant in this new international context. The challenge for us is to see how they can be adapted to take account of it.

One idea which inspired all his words and actions as Secretary-General was his belief that the United Nations had to be a “dynamic instrument”, through which its Members would collectively “develop forms of executive authority”.

During his time in office he became increasingly sensitive to the fact that some Member States did not share this vision, but regarded the United Nations as only “a statute book, and an expression”. The overriding purpose of this community, he argued, was to prevent the recurrence of the former, and put an end to the latter, as the most urgent tasks confronting us in this new century.

What is clear is that his core ideas remain highly relevant in this new international context. The challenge for us is to see how they can be adapted to take account of it.

One idea which inspired all his words and actions as Secretary-General was his belief that the United Nations had to be a “dynamic instrument”, through which its Members would collectively “develop forms of executive authority”.

During his time in office he became increasingly sensitive to the fact that some Member States did not share this vision, but regarded the United Nations as only “a statute book, and an expression”. The overriding purpose of this community, he argued, was to prevent the recurrence of the former, and put an end to the latter, as the most urgent tasks confronting us in this new century.
functions of the United Nations could not be neutral in relation to the principles of the Charter. Nor could they be regarded, or allowed to regard themselves, as nominees or representatives of their own nations. They had to represent the international community as a whole.

Here too, Hammarskjöld based his argument on a very careful reading of the Charter itself—in this case Articles 100 and 101. Article 100 forbids the Secretary-General or any of his staff either to seek or to receive instructions from States, and Article 101 prescribes “the highest standards of efficiency, competence, and integrity” as “the paramount consideration in the employment of the staff.”

Once again, Hammarskjöld was arguing in the context of the Cold War, in which first one side and then the other had tried to insist on the right to be represented, within the Secretariat, by people who were loyal to its political or ideological point of view. Again, the context has changed, and I am glad to say that States today, while extremely aware of their national interest, are generally no longer—or at least, not in the same way—to exercise political control over them, once appointed. But the principle is the same, independent national civil service, to which Hammarskjöld was so attached, remains as important as ever. Each successive Secretary-General must be vigilant in defending it, even if, on occasion, changing times require us to depart from the letter of his views, in order to preserve the spirit.

To give just one example: Hammarskjöld insisted that United Nations had to have permanent appointments and expect to spend their whole career with the Organisation. That may have been appropriate in his time. It is less so now that the role of the United Nations has expanded, and more than half of our employees are serving in missions in the field. This is a development which Hammarskjöld would surely have welcomed, since it reflects a transition from the “static conference” model to the “dynamic instrument” model which he so strongly believed in.

But what is clear is that his ideal of the United Nations as an expression of the international community, whose staff carry out decisions taken by States collectively rather than bending to the will of any one of them, is just as relevant in our times as in his.

And that, of course, has very important implications for the role of the Secretary-General himself.

Hammarskjöld pointed out that Article 99 of the Charter—which allows the Secretary-General, on his own initiative, to bring matters to the Security Council’s attention when in his view they may threaten the maintenance of international peace and security—makes him clearly a political rather than a purely administrative official.

In practice, successive Secretaries-General, including Hammarskjöld, have invoked this article very sparingly. I myself have never yet found it necessary to do so. But the fact that the Secretary-General has this power clearly affects the way he is treated by the Security Council, and by the Member States in general.

Few people now question the responsibility of the Secretary-General to act politically, or to make public pronouncements on political issues. In fact, the boot today is if anything on the other foot: I find myself called on to make official statements on almost everything that happens in the world, from royal marriages to the possibility of human cloning!

I do my best to satisfy this demand with due regard to the instructions of the Security Council and General Assembly. But those bodies would find it very strange if on each occasion I sought their approval before opening my mouth. Their members can, and do, take exception to some of my statements—and thank goodness they do. There must be freedom of speech for governments, as well as for international officials! But they do not question my right to make such statements, according to my own understanding of the purposes and principles of the United Nations as set out in the Charter.

No doubt Dag Hammarskjöld would also disagree with some of the specific positions I have taken. But I suspect he would envy me the discretion I enjoy in deciding what to say. And I have no doubt he would strongly endorse the principle that the Secretary-General must strive to make himself an authentic and independent voice of the international community.

What he might not have foreseen is the way our concept of the community has developed in recent years. In his time it was essentially a community of separate nations or peoples, for which all practical purposes were represented by States.

So if we go back to the things about today’s world that we would have to explain to him, if he unexpectedly joined us now, probably the most difficult for him to adjust to would be the sheer complexity of a world in which individuals and groups of all kinds are constantly interacting—across frontiers and across oceans, economically, socially and culturally—without expecting or receiving any permission, or alone assistance, from their national governments.

He might well find it difficult to identify the precise role, in such a world, of a body like the United Nations, whose Charter presupposes the division of the world into sovereign and equal States, and in which the peoples of the world are represented essentially by their governments.

He might find that difficult—and if so, he would not be alone! But I am convinced he would relish the challenge. And I am sure he would not stray from his fundamental conviction that the essential task of the United Nations is to protect the weak against the strong.

In the long term, the vitality and viability of the Organization depend on its ability to perform that task by adapting itself to changing realities. That, I believe, is the biggest test it faces in the new century.

How would Hammarskjöld approach that task?

First of all he would insist, quite correctly, that States are still the main holders of political authority in the world, and are likely to remain so. Indeed, the more democratic they become—the more genuinely representative of the peoples they become—the greater also will be their political legitimacy. And therefore it is entirely proper, as well as inevitable, that they will remain the political masters of the United Nations.

He would also insist, I am sure, on the continuing responsibility of States to maintain international order—and, indeed, on their collective responsibility, which their leaders solemnly recognised in last year’s Millennium Declaration, “to uphold the free principles of human dignity, equality and equity at the global level”.

And he might well say that, with a few, but not the exceptions, the more fortunate countries in this world are not living up to that responsibility, so long as they do not fulfill their long-standing commitments to much higher levels of development assistance, to much more generous debt relief, and to duty- and quota-free access for exports from the least developed countries.

But then he would also see that his own lifetime coincided, in most countries, with the high watermark of State control over the lives of citizens. And he would see that States today generally tax and spend a smaller proportion of their citizens’ wealth than they did 40 years ago.

From this he might well conclude that we should not rely exclusively on State action to achieve our objectives on the international level.

A great deal, he would think, is likely to depend on non-State actors in the system—private companies, voluntary agencies or pressure groups, philanthropic foundations, universities and think tanks, and, of course, creative individuals.

And that thought would surely feed into his reflection on the role of the United Nations.

Can it confine itself, in the 21st century, to the role of coordinating action by States? Or should it reach out further?

Perhaps it is presumptuous of me to suggest that this would be part of Hammarskjöld’s vision of the role of the United Nations in the 21st century—because it is, of course, my own vision.

But above all, to provide a framework of shared values and understanding, within which their free and voluntary efforts can interact, and reinforce each other, instead of getting in each other’s way?

Is it not obliged, in order to fulfill the purposes of the Charter, to form partnerships with all these different actors? To listen to them, to guide them, and to urge them on?

And in the role of coordinating action by States? Or should it reach out further? Is it not obliged, in order to fulfill the purposes of the Charter, to form partnerships with all these different actors? To listen to them, to guide them, and to urge them on?

All in all, to provide a framework of shared values and understanding, within which their free and voluntary efforts can interact, and reinforce each other, instead of getting in each other’s way?

It may be presumptuous of me to suggest that this would be part of Hammarskjöld’s vision of the role of the United Nations in the 21st century—because it is, of course, my own vision.

No doubt if he were alive today he would offer us something nobler and more profound.

But I like to think, Ladies and Gentlemen, that what I have just described would find some place in it.

Thank you very much.

HONORING MS. GARLAND MILLER

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, September 25, 2001

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I have a longstanding commitment to supporting women who venture out into the professional world. Today, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing and honoring a constituent, Ms. Garland Miller, as a woman who has had immense success in founding and running her own company.

Ms. Miller is the President of Schoolfield and Associates, a highly successful bookkeeping and association management firm in

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

September 25, 2001