But Polk makes no apologies. Surgery “is a serious, big deal and you need to take that seriously,” he said. “Striving to be the best you can be sometimes means telling people, ‘I think that’s stupid.’”

Colleagues said Polk, 68, held himself to those same high standards as he has helped build a nationally renowned surgery department.

He has written or co-written hundreds of papers and journal articles, dozens of textbook chapters and numerous books, and served as editor-in-chief of the American Journal of Surgery for 18 years.

He pioneered the practice of giving antibiotics within an hour of surgery to stave off infection, which has become commonplace.

And McMasters said residents who have risen to Polk’s challenge earn his loyalty, and return it. “Most people are pathologically loyal to Dr. Polk. He stands by his people 100 percent. . . . He’s made my career. While he was firm and strict as a teacher, he also has a very benevolent and loving side.”

LIFE-CHANGING DISCUSSION

Polk credits his father with making him a doctor. Polk attended Millsaps College in his hometown of Jackson, Miss., at the urging of his father. He graduated at the top of his class, and as a favor to a professor, he said, he applied to Medical School, only to turn down a chance to attend on scholarship because it was too far away. But Harvard sent a premier physiologist to try to persuade Polk to change his mind—an hourlong discussion that determined the direction of his life.

“He reinforced some of what my father said,” Polk said. “He said I ought to go, end of discussion.”

Polk hated medical school until he got interested in a medical resident in St. Louis and a young doctor and academic in Miami, Polk found mentors to emulate. His reputation grew, and universities began to court him.

In 1971, at 35, he became U of L’s surgery chairman, lured by the promise of a department with potential, a growing downtown medical community and a closet attraction to the horse-racing scene.

One early decision was to not renew the contracts of two residents who were there at the time, earning him the “Fire-em” nickname—although he said he has let only five more people go since then.

Colleagues who knew him during those early years remember how Polk honed his skills in the aging Louisville General Hospital, a relic of an older era with long hallways, an open ward and few of the technological amenities of today. Polk brought residents on bedside rounds there, firing questions at them and demanding good answers, recalled Dr. Gordon Tobin, a U of L professor and director of the division of plastic and reconstructive surgery.

“He fit right in with the other surgeons I met in that era,” Tobin said. “The surgical personality is very straightforward and blunt.”

Polk’s reputation for demanding excellence was a draw for some, said Dr. J. David Richardson, a professor and vice chairman of U of L’s surgery department.

“I have met all kinds of people who have really come here who are really unaware” how demanding it would be, Richardson said. “It’s not a place to come and rest on your laurels and enjoy that kind of life.”

Dr. William H. Mitchell, a retired surgeon in Richmond, Ky., was among Polk’s early residents. He said Polk expected him and his peers to be there around 7 a.m., “where we were bright-eyed and bushy-tailed or not.”

If you ran out of gas, you’d better pump it up. You were expected to be cogent, coherent and well thought out,” Mitchell said. But Polk was mindful of tailoring questions to a resident’s understanding, Mitchell said, and would be hardest on senior residents. Also, many doctors-in-training saw something beneath the harshness—intelligence, skill and rigor.

Mitchell remembers a case presented in a conference in which another resident stabilized the fractured jaw of a motorcycle accident victim. He was later fired for backup, even though he had never seen such a fracture.

“He fired him,” Mitchell said of Polk’s response. “He said ‘Don’t undertake something you’ve never done without backup.’”

“No question about it,” Mitchell said. “He made all of us better doctors because he made us think about what we’re doing.”

FAMILY—AND HORSES

Nurturing residents and building a department required long hours. “He was busy and gone a lot,” said his daughter, Susan Revere, with his first wife. “My mom kept everything running for us.”

That didn’t change her love and admiration for him, and the 6-foot-4, 230-pound man who has taken an active interest in the lives of her three sons, attending sporting events with them and talking medicine with two who have expressed an interest.

Dr. Susan Glandiuk, Polk’s 47-year-old second wife, said she understands the long hours and is a workaholic herself. She said Polk routinely gets calls at their East End home from doctors around the country asking for professional and personal advice—and sees this as a compliment, evidence of the relationships he has built over the years.

Some of Polk’s rare hours outside of work have been focused on his love of horses. He and Richardson together are owner-breeders whose horses have included Mrs. Revere, a four-time stakes winner at Churchill Downs in the mid-1980s for which a stakes race is named.

Richardson sees things in common between surgery and the horse business, such as the reminder every time a horse gets hurt, of the fragility of life and success. Polk sees common points, too, but noted: “A good horse is better than a good resident. You love them, and they try hard to be the best they can be.”

Polk claims to have mellowed over the years, and links it to his divorce, his remarriage, and the death of Mrs. Revere, whose memory still chokes him up.

He said he also gained new perspective through four major operations, including one for prostate cancer. And he has had to adjust to changing times in medicine; he has been sued for medical malpractice, usually in an administrative capacity, and has had to work within new national rules limiting residents’ working hours to 80 a week.

But current trainees and friends haven’t noticed a mellowing. Cornelia Poston, a third-year medical student, prepares diligently for rounds by writing questions on note cards, studying the night before and carrying a book called “Pocket Surgery” inside her white coat.

“You strive for perfection, and he demands that,” said Dr. Bryce Schuster, chief administrative resident. “At times it could be intimidating. But fear is a great motivator.”

Mitchell agreed. “The residents still get sweaty palms,” he said, “but they still stand and deliver and give a straight answer to a straight question.”

To celebrate Polk’s career, colleagues, residents and others have launched a $5 million campaign to rename the department in his honor and secure an endowment for clinical education and research activities.

But his true legacy, colleagues say, may be best symbolized by a picture of a tree in his office, where names of the surgeons he has trained near the many branches.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT
