FORT McDOWELL INDIAN COMMUNITY WATER RIGHTS SETTLEMENT REVISION ACT OF 2006

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 522, S. 2464.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2464) to revise a provision relating to a repayment obligation of the Fort McDowell Yavapai Nation under the Fort McDowell Indian Community Water Rights Settlement Act of 1990, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I am pleased that today the Senate has agreed to pass S. 2464, the Fort McDowell Indian Community Water Rights Settlement Revision Act of 2006, with an amendment that I have also offered. S. 2464 amends the Fort McDowell Indian Community Water Rights Settlement Act of 1990, which ratified a negotiated settlement of the Fort McDowell Yavapai Nation’s water entitlement to flow from the Verde River. I am pleased to be joined by Senator KYL as an original cosponsor of this bill and the amendment.

The 1990 Settlement Act provided, among other things, for the Secretary of the Interior to provide the Fort McDowell Yavapai Nation a no-interest loan pursuant to the Small Reclamation Project Act for construction of facilities for the conveyance and delivery of water to the Fort McDowell reservation. However, during environmental review conducted prior to construction of the irrigation system, 227 of the acres to be irrigated were discovered to contain significant cultural sites. With the agreement of the tribe, the Secretary withdrew those acres from development, but replacement lands have proven difficult and expensive to mitigate and implementation of the Act has been left uncompleted.

The current values of the no-interest loan outstanding and the current cost of the Department of the Interior’s obligation to mitigate replacement acreage are nearly identical, thus the tribe and the Department have agreed to resolve this issue by mutually releasing their remaining obligations under the reclamation provisions of the 1990 Settlement Act. S. 2464 would implement this mutually agreed upon resolution.

After approval of this measure by the Indian Affairs Committee, a potential ambiguity in the bill was identified, possibly calling into question the finality of the 1990 Settlement Act. The amendment offered strikes the potentially ambiguous language and inserts new language to clarify that the agreement of the Yavapai Nation and the Department of the Interior contained in S. 2464 achieves a full and final implementation to the Fort McDowell Water Rights Settlement Act of 1990.

I yield the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the amendment at the desk be agreed to, the bill, as amended, be read the third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 5006) was agreed to, as follows:

The resolution (S. Res. 550) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 550

Whereas the cost of retirement continues to rise, in part, because people in the United States are living longer than ever before, the number of employers providing retiree health coverage continues to decline, and retiree health care costs continue to increase at a rapid pace;

Whereas Social Security remains the bedrock of retirement income for the great majority of the people of the United States, but was never intended by Congress to be the sole source of retirement income for families;

Whereas recent data from the Employee Benefit Research Institute indicates that, in the United States, less than ⅓ of workers or their spouses are currently saving for retirement and that the actual amount of retirement savings of workers lags far behind the amount that is realistically needed to adequately fund retirement;

Whereas many employees have available to them through their employers access to defined benefit or defined contribution plans to assist them in preparing for retirement;

Whereas many employees may not be aware of their retirement savings options and may not have focused on the importance of and need for saving for their own retirement;

Whereas many employees may not be taking advantage of workplace defined contribution plans at all or to the full extent allowed by the plans or under Federal law; and

Whereas all workers, including public- and private-sector employees, employees of tax-exempt organizations, and self-employed individuals, can benefit from increased awareness of the need to save for retirement and the availability of tax-advantaged retirement savings vehicles to assist them in saving for retirement; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates October 22 through October 28, 2006, as “National Save for Retirement Week”;

(2) supports the goals and ideals of National Save for Retirement Week, including raising public awareness about the importance of adequate retirement savings and the availability of employer-sponsored retirement plans; and

(3) calls on the Federal Government, States, localities, schools, nonprofit organizations, businesses, other entities, and the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate programs and activities with the goal of increasing the retirement savings of all the people of the United States.

CALLING ON THE PRESIDENT TO TAKE IMMEDIATE STEPS TO HELP STOP THE VIOLENCE IN DARFUR

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 559

Whereas the Darfur Peace Agreement, signed on May 5, 2006, between the Government of Sudan and rebels in Darfur has not resulted in a cessation of hostilities in Darfur;

Whereas, although the United Nations Security Council approved Security Council Resolution 1706 (2006), which provides for a United Nations peacekeeping presence in Darfur to replace the African Union Mission in Sudan (AMIS), the Government of Sudan has rejected the deployment of United Nations peacekeepers;

Whereas the Government of Sudan is engaged in a major offensive in Darfur, in direct violation of the Darfur Peace Agreement;

Whereas violence in the Darfur region has increased since the signing of the Darfur Peace Agreement;

Whereas Jan Egeland, the United Nations Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, has stated that the coming weeks may result in a “man-made catastrophe of an unprecedented scale” in Darfur;

Whereas the African Union has decided to terminate the African Union Mission in Sudan (AMIS) at the end of September 2006;

Whereas it is unlikely that the United Nations will have the logistical means or capability to deploy peacekeepers to Sudan until the end of 2006;

Whereas the people of Darfur cannot wait that long for security to be re-established; and

Whereas the international community must renew its efforts to stop genocide, war crimes, and crimes against humanity in Darfur;

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) strongly condemns—

(A) the current military offensive of the Government of Sudan in Darfur in violation of the terms of the May 5, 2006, Darfur Peace Agreement and the April 8, 2004, N’Djamena cease-fire accord; and

(B) the rejection by the Government of Sudan of United Nations Security Council Resolution 1706 (2006);

(2) commends the African Union Mission in Sudan (AMIS) for its actions to date in monitoring the April 8, 2004, N’Djamena cease-fire agreement in Darfur and encourages the African Union to leave the AMIS force in place until a United Nations peacekeeping mission is deployed to Darfur;

(3) calls upon the Government of Sudan to immediately—

(A) cease its military offensive in Darfur; and

(B) comply with the deployment of United Nations peacekeepers to Darfur as called for by the United Nations Security Council;

(4) calls upon the United Nations—

(A) to deploy as quickly as practicable peacekeeping troops as authorized by United Nations Security Council Resolution 1706 (2006) that are well trained and equipped; and

(B) to begin considerations of sanctions as called for by paragraphs 6 and 7 of United Nations Security Council Resolution 1556 (2004) and paragraph 14 of United Nations Security Council Resolution 1564 (2004);

(5) urges the President to take urgent steps to help improve the security situation in Darfur, including by—

(A) pursuing the imposition of a “no-fly zone” in Darfur in cooperation with the United Nations, NATO, or NATO allies;

(B) garnering support for NATO assistance with the handover by the African Union of the AMIS mission to the United Nations;

(C) working through diplomatic channels to obtain the support of China, Russia, and United States allies in the Arab League in securing the compliance of the Government of Sudan with the deployment of United Nations peacekeepers as provided by United Nations Security Council Resolution 1706 (2006);

(D) supporting full funding for the United Nations Peacekeeping Mission in Sudan;

(E) securing the necessary support from United Nations member states to schedule a special session on Sudan in the United Nations Human Rights Council; and

(F) appointing a Special Envoy to Sudan to head the Office of the Presidential Special Envoy established pursuant to chapter 6 of title I of the Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act for Defense, the Global War on Terror, and Hurricane Recovery, 2006 (Public Law 109-234; 120 Stat. 439); and

(6) urges the international community—

(A) to support the deployment of United Nations peacekeepers to Darfur financially, with logistical and equipment support, or through troop contributions;

(B) to fulfill financial obligations to United Nations and international humanitarian aid agencies for responding to the crisis in Darfur or addressing humanitarian needs throughout Sudan;

(C) to impose targeted sanctions against members of the National Congress Party determined to be responsible for human rights violations, war crimes, and crimes against humanity; and

(D) to impose sanctions consistent with paragraphs 6 and 7 of United Nations Security Council Resolution 1556 (2004) and paragraph 14 of United Nations Security Council Resolution 1564 (2004).

(3) E-911 SERVICE.—The term “E-911 service” means a 911 service that automatically delivers the 911 call to the appropriate public safety answering point, and provides automatic identification data, including the originating number of an emergency call, the physical location of the caller, and the capability for the public safety answering point to call the user back if the call is disconnected.

(4) IP-ENABLED VOICE SERVICE.—The term “IP-enabled voice service” means the provi-

(5) PSAP.—The term “public safety answering point” or “PSAP” means a facility that has been designated to receive 911 or E-911 calls.

(b) COMMON TERMINOLOGY.—Except as otherwise provided in subsection (a), terms used in this title have the meanings provided under section 3 of the Communications Act of 1934.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, September 13, 2006

The House met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. PRICE of Georgia).

DESIGNATION OF THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
September 13, 2006.

I hereby appoint the Honorable TOM PRICE to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Reverend Louis V. Iasiello, President, Washington Theological Union, Washington, DC, offered the following prayer:

Most good and gracious God, You bless us and guide us at every moment of our lives, and most especially at times of great trial and adversity.

We thank You for the priceless gift of this great Nation and for the constitutional principles that guide it. We thank Thee for the many liberties that mark us as a blessed and a free people, and for myriad patriots who have worn the sacred cloth of military service throughout our proud history, citizen warriors who have defended those freedoms against the tyrannies of days past and those who continue the good fight this very day. We know their service honors You, for it stands as yet one more sign of the great bounty that is the United States of America.

And so at this troublesome time of national emergency, in the current struggle against global extremism, we ask for the strength to face adversity with pure and sincere hearts that You might empower us to be a light for all the nations and build a world with justice and peace for men and women of good will everywhere. So help us God, amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SHIMKUS) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. SHIMKUS led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Ms. Curtis, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 866. An act to make technical corrections to the United States Code.

SMALL BUSINESS NEEDS

(Mrs. KELLY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge my colleagues to continue addressing the needs of small businesses that create seven out of every 10 jobs in our communities. Small businesses are the backbone of our local economies.

During the past month, I held small business walks down the main streets and through the business districts of towns and villages in New York's Hudson Valley.

I talked directly to small business owners and employees in places like Warwick, Port Jervis, Beacon and Highland Falls to hear directly from them about the challenges they face every day.

They asked for continued tax relief so they can afford to pay their employees. They need to keep more of their earnings in order to create new, good paying jobs in our local communities.

They asked for affordable health insurance to be more accessible for them to be able to provide for their employees. Only 41 percent of the smallest businesses can afford to offer health benefits, compared with 99 percent of large companies.

When I discussed small business health plan legislation that we have passed in the House, they often agreed that would be a practical first step toward solving the problem of America's uninsured.

Mr. Speaker, these and other proposals are part of a five-point plan I have been pushing to help our small businesses, and I ask my colleagues to support these initiatives that level the playing field for small businesses and provide them the tax relief they need

A NEW DIRECTION FOR AMERICA

(Mr. BLUMENAUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, hard on the heels of the anniversary of 9/11, instead of dealing meaningfully with the concerns of the American people, like immigration and the economy, instead the House deals with horse slaughter rules and Indian gaming. There is no meaningful action or even debate on how the Bush administration's war of choice has left Iraq in shambles and civil war.

North Korea and Iran are more threatening and dangerous than when labeled the "Axis of Evil."

We are losing ground to the Taliban in Afghanistan, where the NATO commander cannot even get the troops he says he needs.

The good news is that there will be a chance in November's election where we will be able to not just send a message but change the leadership here in the House and start a new direction for America

BETRAYED IN THE LINE OF DUTY

(Mr. POE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. POE. Mr. Speaker, the battle on the second front continues, and the U.S. Government shows it is on the wrong side of the border war.

Two border patrol agents named Ramos and Compean chased a drug dealer down on the Mexico-Texas border. Gun shots were exchanged. The drug smuggler fled back to safety in Mexico, leaving his van and 800 pounds of dope on the American side.

The U.S. decided to prosecute. The U.S. Attorney went to Mexico, found the drug dealer, took him to America, treated his bullet wounds, and then, get this, gave him immunity to testify against agents Compean and Ramos for their shooting him, the criminal.

Both border agents were convicted by an overzealous prosecutor that was looking for pelts in her belt. She appeared to have more loyalty to Mexico than to America because she was on the wrong side.

☐ This symbol represents the time of day during the House proceedings, e.g., ☐ 1407 is 2:07 p.m.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

Both agents await sentencing. The two border agents should have been given medals and sent back down to the border to bag another drug dealer instead of being prosecuted.

Yet another example of how our government is more concerned about illegals and drug dealers than they are about America and Americans.

And that's just the way it is.

TAX CUTS FOR WEALTHY, PAY CUTS FOR MIDDLE CLASS

(Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, for a lot of American families it is becoming more and more difficult to make ends meet in the Bush economy. With sky-high gas prices this summer, rising health care costs and stagnant wages, working Americans are feeling a serious squeeze on their family finances.

Unfortunately, President Bush and the congressional Republicans refuse to address our economy because they think it is moving along smoothly. But that is simply not the case.

While full-time minimum wage earners face a 50-year low in buying power, and all Americans face wages that are falling after inflation, corporate profits have reached their highest share of the economy since the 1960s. It would be nice if corporate CEOs and shareholders were not the only ones benefiting from the production American workers are bringing in every day. Democrats believe it is time for them to get their fair share.

Mr. Speaker, working Americans are ready for a new economic direction, one where workers are justly compensated for their efforts and the benefits of increased productivity can be shared by all. The days of catering exclusively to the wealthiest have helped create the troubling economic conditions that our Nation now faces. It is time for a change.

NATO STRATEGIC AIRLIFT CAPABILITY

(Mr. SHIMKUS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SHIMKUS. Mr. Speaker, as a delegate of the NATO Parliamentary Assembly and very active in its defense subcommittee, and also the chairman of the Baltic Caucus, I am excited and extremely pleased with NATO's recent announcement in a letter of intent after 6 months of negotiation.

Thirteen Nations have developed a plan to create a NATO Strategic Airlift Capability based at Ramstein Air Force Base. Initially comprised of three to four C-17s, the SAC will be flown by multinational air crews, pilots and loadmasters, and a multinational military structure will be created to command and control these aircraft.

Boeing, who builds the C-17, is a great U.S. company. This aids in NATO's transformation and jobs for U.S. workers.

INTRODUCTION OF H. CON. RES. 453

(Mr. CARNAHAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CARNAHAN. Mr. Speaker, with record temperatures set in the first half of 2006, with hurricane season upon us, the need for Congress to address global climate change is more pressing than ever.

There is no longer debate within the scientific community. Global warming exists, and we need to do something about it.

We have the opportunity and the responsibility to take action to reverse the negative impacts of global climate change. However, this must be done both domestically and internationally.

It is time the U.S., with the international community, fully address the issue of global climate change.

Congressman Jim Leach and myself have introduced H. Con. Res. 453, a bipartisan resolution expressing the need for the U.S. to participate in international agreements that address global climate change.

I invite my colleagues to cosponsor this bill and join us in taking this step and begin addressing global climate change

CONGRATULATING THE 2006 LITTLE LEAGUE WORLD CHAMPIONS

(Mr. WESTMORELAND asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WESTMORELAND. Mr. Speaker, millions play our national pastime for the love of the game, but only the truly elite can claim the title of world champion.

I have the great pleasure of representing Columbus, Georgia, home of the 2006 Little League World Champions. Our community beams with pride for these incredible young sluggers and slingers.

The players for Columbus Northern are living the dream of every American boy who has ever slipped on a glove. In order to compete for the world championship, Columbus Northern first had to defeat the best Little League teams that the United States had to offer.

Then, as the American champions in the World Series, Columbus Northern took on a tough and talented Japanese team. The game was a defensive struggle, allowing Columbus Northern to win 2-1 after a 2-run homer by catcher Cody Walker, who also caught the fastball of winning pitcher Kyle Carter. The champs recently met one of the Nation's biggest baseball fans, President Bush, when he was in Atlanta.

The Columbus Northern team is on top of the world. It will have memories to last a lifetime.

Mr. Speaker, I salute the players of Columbus Northern. Georgians and Americans are thrilled with their success, and we are more than a little jealous, but very thankful, that they get to live every boy's dream

PRESIDENT BUSH CONTINUES TO MISREPRESENT THE WAR IN IRAQ

(Mr. MORAN of Virginia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in his speech on Monday night, President Bush continued to try to justify the invasion of Iraq by drawing nonexistent links to the 9/11 attacks. The President's misuse of the fifth anniversary of the attacks shows that he will go to any length to divert our attention from his failures in Iraq, which has diverted focus from America's real national security concerns.

President Bush, and most Republicans here in Congress, refuse to admit that things are not going well in Iraq. One has to only look at a report that we requested from the President's own Pentagon showing that the situation in Iraq has greatly worsened. The number of attacks against Americans and Iraqis has climbed to its highest level since the war began, and in the month of July alone 100 Iraqis a day were being killed.

U.S. troops continue to pay too high a price. To date, more than 2,600 brave American soldiers have lost their lives, an additional 19,000 have been wounded, and we have now spent over $320 billion in Iraq. Do we really need to lose 58,000 soldiers before we stop staying the same course in Iraq as we did in Vietnam?

It is time for a new strategy in Iraq, one where the Iraqis themselves, not foreign occupiers, are responsible for their Nation's future

UNITY AND RESOLVE WILL WIN THE WAR ON TERROR

(Mrs. MILLER of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MILLER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, Osama bin Laden himself has stated that victory for the extremists in Iraq will mean America's defeat and disgrace forever.

The terrorists clearly see Iraq has the central front in the global war on terror.

On Monday evening, the fifth anniversary of the attacks of 9/11 and the beginning of the war on terror, the President clearly stated the importance of success in Afghanistan and Iraq and winning that war. He understands the resolve that we need to meet the significant challenges faced by our Nation.

And what is the response of the Democratic leadership? To attack the President for even mentioning Iraq as a part of the war on terror. They seek, once again, to distract and divide America to score cheap political points.

For whatever reason, they do not take the terrorists at their word with regard to Iraq, or they do not care because they see a political benefit in undermining U.S. efforts.

The Democrats must understand that America must be united. We must have the resolve to defeat the terrorists in the heart of their power so we do not have to fight them on our own streets.

One has to wonder if the Democratic leadership cares as much about winning the war on terror as they do about winning the election in November.

PRESIDENT BUSH USES NATIONALLY TELEVISED SPEECH TO SPREAD DISINFORMATION

(Ms. SOLIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, just when you thought the Bush administration had finally faced reality and admitted that Iraq had nothing to do with 9/11, President Bush uses a nationally televised speech on 9/11 to once again blur the lines between the war on terror and the war in Iraq.

Last week, a bipartisan Senate Intelligence Committee report concluded that the U.S. intelligence analysts were strongly disputing any link between al Qaeda and Iraq, while the Bush administration officials were fabricating links to justify invading Iraq.

Over the last month, President Bush and Vice President CHENEY have admitted to the American people there was no link between the terrorist attack on September 11 and the Iraq war. Yet, during a nationally televised speech on Monday, the President once again had the audacity to say that the safety of America depends on the outcome of the battle in the streets of Baghdad, once again connecting in many people's minds 9/11 and Iraq.

The President can't have it both ways. And on an issue so important as this, national security, the President should level with the American people and admit it is time to make a change and change the course in Iraq.

IN MEMORY OF FORMER U.S. CONGRESSMAN CLAIR BURGNER

(Mr. DREIER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I inform the House of the passing of our former colleague, the gentleman from California, Clair Burgener. He was an amazing individual, and I have a load of articles here that have been written about him over the past several days.

I think the San Diego Union-Tribune put it extraordinarily well when it said: "Burgener earned a reputation for honesty and modesty in a three-decade career that began in San Diego city politics and ended in the hallways of the Nation's Capitol."

As we look at this time of partisan divide here, former nine-term Democratic Congressman Lionel Van Deerlin said, "He was a wonderful colleague. He and I were on different levels as far as our voting went, but we didn't try to hold back or fool each other."

And Herb Klein, the retired editor in chief of Copley Newspapers and director of communications for President Nixon, recalled a man of unbending ethics: "Clair Burgener was the epitome of a great American Congressman. He was honest and ethical, a strong leader dedicated to his community. He was a wonderful friend whose warmth never waned."

Mr. Speaker, our thoughts and prayers go to Clair's wife, Marvia. We thank him for his extraordinary service to the United States of America.

PRESIDENT ATTEMPTS TO CONNECT IRAQ WITH OVERALL WAR ON TERROR

(Mr. McDERMOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, on Monday night, President Bush continued this difficult job he has of trying to connect the war in Iraq with al Qaeda. He said it is the most difficult part of his job. Because there is no connection.

Even the Senate report this past week said, and it is a bipartisan report from the Senate Intelligence Committee, said there is no link between Saddam Hussein and al Qaeda. The Senators wrote: "Saddam expressed only negative opinions about Osama bin Laden."

Yet the President had the audacity on Sunday night to say that our Nation's safety depends on what happens in the streets of Baghdad. Now, Mr. Speaker, we have to ask the President, where were you when you set this war up and you told General Shinseki, head of the Army, we didn't need 350,000 people; we could go over there with a minimal force?

You led us into this quagmire, and you have got to give us a way out. We need the strategic redeployment that Mr. MURTHA is talking about

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members are reminded to direct their remarks to the Chair and not to the President

BORDER SECURITY

(Ms. FOXX asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to remind my colleagues that partisan bickering and ill-fated policies toward immigration reform will simply not solve the crisis we are facing today. We must produce a solution to border security and close a major loophole in our Nation's security, thereby fulfilling the most important role of the Federal Government.

It is time we turn off the faucet before we decide to fix the pipes. Now is not the time to work on comprehensive reform. During the District Work Period in August, my constituents delivered a clear message: no amnesty, just secure the borders now. After 22 immigration field hearings, an identical resounding and powerful message has been sent to officials in Washington: secure the borders now.

Why are my colleagues on the other side of the aisle so opposed to the will of the American people? Security is an issue that should not be taken lightly, much less used for political gain.

Mr. Speaker, we are now in Washington to represent those who voted to send us here, and we must not ignore the message they are sending. It is time to secure the borders and stop the unending flow of illegal aliens.

HOW SAFE IS AMERICA TODAY FROM TERRORIST ATTACKS?

(Ms. SCHAKOWSKY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. How safe is America today from terrorist attacks? Here are some of the results from Foreign Policy magazine's recently published "Terrorism Index," a survey of over 100 top national security experts from across the political spectrum, with the results weighted to ensure balance between conservatives and liberals.

Among the key findings are, one, 84 percent of the experts said we are losing the war on terror. Eighty-six percent said that the world is becoming more dangerous for the United States and the American people. Ninety-three percent said the war in Afghanistan had a positive impact on the war on terror, but 87 percent said the war in Iraq had a negative impact on the war on terror.

It is clear to the American people now that this country is moving in the wrong direction, the wrong direction in the war in Iraq; and it is time for a new direction. The Democrats offer a new direction for America.

GLOBAL WAR ON TERROR

(Mr. PITTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, in the 5 years since the 9/11 terrorist attacks, we have made great strides in fighting global terrorism, but this war is not over. The recently uncovered plot to bomb U.S.-bound passenger jets made it clear that we are still threatened.

As we remember 9/11, we must renew our commitment to winning this war against Islamic terrorists. Make no mistake, the enemy hasn't lost its resolve. Osama bin Laden put it this way. He said, "The whole world is watching this war and the two adversaries. It is either victory and glory or misery and humiliation."

Our enemies are determined, but they will be defeated if we remain vigilant. As Congress deliberates this month, we must continue to make the protection of the American people our top priority. America's greatest strength lies with our people's love of freedom. By doing what it takes to win this war, we will show that our love for freedom is stronger than our enemy's desire for bloodshed and tyranny.

DEMOCRATS SUPPORT DEMOCRACY AT HOME AS WELL AS ABROAD

(Mr. LEWIS of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the statement by Majority Leader BOEHNER was shameful and disgraceful. To suggest that my fellow Democrats care more about protecting the terrorists than the American people is not right, it is not fair, it is not just, and it is not the American way.

Mr. Speaker, Democrats will not stand by and let a single attack go unanswered. You may play the politics of fear, you may question the patriotism of those who use their constitutional rights to criticize this administration, but this dog will not hunt. This dog just will not hunt.

The American people know better. They want this Nation to take a new path. They want to move in a different direction. They want leaders who respect the dignity and the values of our democracy. We cannot defend democracy abroad if we don't practice it here at home.

CONGRATULATING HARALSON COUNTY, GEORGIA, ON ITS 150TH ANNIVERSARY

(Mr. GINGREY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GINGREY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Haralson County, Georgia, which this year is celebrating its 150th anniversary.

One hundred fifty years ago, back in 1856, the Georgia General Assembly created Haralson County from parts of Carroll and Polk Counties. Haralson County is forever tied to the statesman of its founding. The county was named after a distinguished soldier and a United States Congressman, Hugh Haralson, and the county's seat, Buchanan, was named several years later after President James Buchanan.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most recognizable sites in the city of Buchanan is the courthouse, built in 1891, and currently listed on the National Register of Historic Sites. The courthouse is symbolic of Haralson County, for as the county has grown and changed over the past 150 years, it has never lost sight of its history and founding.

And though the county's founders might not recognize some of the recent additions, like the Honda plant, I know they would feel right at home in the warm communities that populate this county. Mr. Speaker, I ask that you and all of my colleagues join me in congratulating the citizens of Bremen, Buchanan, Tallapoosa, Waco, and all of Haralson County on this historic occasion

PRESIDENTIAL RHETORIC VS. ECONOMIC REALITY

(Mr. PAYNE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Education and Workforce Committee, I am shocked at the difference between Presidential rhetoric and economic reality. Every time the President speaks about the state of our Nation, it becomes apparent just how out of touch he really is.

Last month, after meeting at Camp David with his economic team, the President told reporters that things are good for the American worker. Let me ask: What exactly is his economic team telling him?

The reality is that American workers are suffering, while corporate profits soar. Productivity in our Nation has increased, but the workers who are putting in the extra effort have no piece of that wealth they are helping to create. In fact, wages and salaries are at their lowest proportion of the economy, while corporate profits are at the highest level since 1960.

What that means for the average American worker is that they are working harder without receiving any real pay increase. Meanwhile, the companies they work for are reporting record profits. Something is wrong. We need to turn it around and have that reality work for the working people.

PRESIDENT HAS MISLED THE AMERICAN PEOPLE ON IRAQ

(Ms. WATERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States continues to try and sell Americans on the fact that we should be in Iraq.

Mr. President, where is Osama bin Laden? Mr. President, you have spent over $300 billion on this occupation in Iraq. You have misled this country. We have over 2,700 soldiers that are dead and the occupation continues. We are less safe.

The real war is in Afghanistan. We have not dedicated the soldiers or the money there. That border between Afghanistan and Pakistan is a staging ground for our soldiers to be attacked, yet we wrap our arms around Mr. Musharraf, the President of Pakistan. They won't even let us come into Pakistan to get the terrorists who are attacking our soldiers.

It is time for the President of the United States to own up to the fact that he has made a mistake. He has misled the American people. We cannot continue this occupation. It is draining us of our resources, and it is placing us in real danger. Mr. President, go get Osama bin Laden

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will request once again that Members address their remarks to the Chair and not to the President.

RAISING THE MINIMUM WAGE

(Ms. CORRINE BROWN of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. CORRINE BROWN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of raising the minimum wage. Less than a month ago in this body I voted against raising the minimum wage. Now why would I vote against raising the minimum wage? There is no Member in this House that supports raising the minimum wage more than I do. I clearly understand that a person cannot live on $10,700 a year. But it was a poison pill. As we said in the Florida House, it was the kiss of death because it was tied to an estate tax that would have taken trillions of dollars out of the budget and we would have had to cut education, health care and so many other programs that we care about.

The Bible says the poor will always be with us, but our job is to help raise the standard. Give us a clean bill on this floor and let's vote to help the American people.

IRAQ IS A DISTRACTION

(Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, on Monday night, our President had an opportunity, after 5 years of 9/11, to again unify this Nation as he did in 2001. Instead, he chose to give a political speech that focused more on the war in Iraq than what he is doing now to secure this Nation against those really responsible for the attacks of 9/11.

Last month, the Republican cochair of the 9/11 Commission Tom Kean said, "We're not protecting our people in this country. The government is not doing its job." That is from a Republican.

When Commissioner Kean was asked whether Iraq is preventing us from protecting our Nation, Kean admitted Iraq has been a distraction.

Five years ago and 2 days after 9/11, Osama bin Laden remains at large and the Taliban is resurging in Afghanistan. Since the Bush administration turned its attention away from Afghanistan to go into Iraq, roadside bombs have increased by 30 percent and suicide bombings have doubled.

Mr. Speaker, President Bush had a chance on Monday to level with the American people. It is time we turn our attention back to Osama bin Laden, who really was the one who was responsible for the 9/11 attacks. Let's get Osama bin Laden.

AMERICA CANNOT AFFORD TO STAY THE COURSE

(Mr. WU asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WU. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed time for a change in Iraq. Our troops are currently caught in a deadly civil war between the Sunnis and Shias, a war that is resulting in the death of American soldiers every night, and hundreds of Iraqi civilians every day. If there was ever a time to change tactics, now is that time.

House Republicans and President Bush cling stubbornly to the mantra

"stay the course," but slogans cannot substitute for strategy.

President Bush says American troops will still be on the ground in Iraq when he leaves office in 2009, and that would make the Iraq war longer than World War II. We cannot continue to be bogged down in Iraq's civil war. Conditions there are not getting better. According to the latest Pentagon report, things are actually getting worse and the war in Iraq has put an enormous strain on our military, resulting in military readiness levels at historic lows.

It is time we get back to fighting the real war on terror and not a civil war in Iraq.

REPUBLICANS PREFER TO PLAY POLITICS

(Mr. PALLONE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, this week Republicans have turned to their two favorite political tactics: Smear and fear. It is bad enough that President Bush chose to use a 9/11 anniversary speech on Monday night not to unite this Nation with facts but instead to once again divide us by using his bully pulpit to instill fear into Americans with misleading statements.

Just 2 weeks ago the President said Iraq had nothing to do with 9/11, but once again on Monday night he spent the majority of his speech in the Oval Office talking about Iraq.

Why would the President talk about Iraq if he knows it had nothing to do with 9/11?

Mr. Speaker, he is trying to blur the issue so Americans will continue to tolerate his failed stay-the-course strategy that a majority of Americans have already rejected.

Democrats want a new direction for Iraq, with the responsible redeployment of U.S. troops beginning this year, in order to strongly position America to confront the global challenge of terrorism. Unlike the administration's current plan, our real security plan is a strategy for taking the fight to the terrorists to better protect Americans.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2965, FEDERAL PRISON INDUSTRIES COMPETITION IN CONTRACTING ACT OF 2006

Mr. GINGREY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 997 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows

H. RES. 997

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 2965) to amend title 18, United States Code, to require Federal Prison Industries to compete for its contracts minimizing its unfair competition with private sector firms and their non-inmate workers and empowering Federal agencies to get the best value for taxpayers' dollars, to provide a five-year period during which Federal Prison Industries adjusts to obtaining inmate work opportunities through other than its mandatory source status, to enhance inmate access to remedial and vocational opportunities and other rehabilitative opportunities to better prepare inmates for a successful return to society, to authorize alternative inmate work opportunities in support of non-profit organizations and other public service programs, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against consideration of the bill are waived. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary now printed in the bill. The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered as read. Notwithstanding clause 11 of rule XVIII, no amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be in order except those printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution. Each such amendment may be offered only in the order printed in the report, may be offered only by a Member designated in the report, shall be considered as read, shall be debatable for the time specified in the report equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole. All points of order against such amendments are waived. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommend with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGREY) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. GINGREY. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, this is a structured rule providing for consideration of H.R. 2965, the Federal Prison Industries Competition in Contracting Act of 2006.

The rule provides 1 hour of general debate, equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary. It waives all points of order against consideration of the bill. It provides that the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary which is now printed in the bill shall be considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendments and shall be considered as read.

The rule makes in order only those amendments printed in the Rules Committee report accompanying the resolution, and it provides that the amendments made in order may be offered only in the order printed in the report, may be offered only by a Member designated in the report, shall be considered as read, shall be debatable for the time specified in the report, equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent, and shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the rule waives all points of order against the amendments printed in the report and allows one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, today we will debate reforming a government-owned corporation called UNICOR, which is more commonly known as the Federal Prison Industries. Federal Prison Industries, Incorporated, manufactures products and provides services that are sold to the executive agencies in the Federal Government. When the Federal prison system was established at the turn of the 20th century, factories were erected in Federal prisons to manufacture products for the Federal Government. President Roosevelt consolidated Federal Prison Industries into UNICOR in 1934 to provide training opportunities for inmates, control inmate behavior, and diversify production.

In fiscal year 2005, Federal Prison Industries generated $765 million in sales with all revenue reinvested in the purchase of raw materials and wages for inmates and staff. As of 2004, there were 102 UNICOR factories at 71 different correctional facilities working on operations such as metals, furniture, electronics, textiles and graphic arts. UNICOR currently employs 19,720 inmates, or 17 percent of eligible Federal prisoners, at a rate of 23 cents to $1.15 an hour and, by charter, must be economically self-sustaining without any Federal appropriations.

So, Mr. Speaker, the problem with the current system is the adverse impact it has had on small businesses which do not have the ability to compete with UNICOR's guaranteed market, even if they could provide a better deal for our government agencies.

Mr. HOEKSTRA introduced H.R. 2965, the Federal Prison Industries Competition in Contracting Act of 2005, with the fundamental objective of correcting this problem by eliminating the requirement for Federal agencies to purchase products from UNICOR under most circumstances.

H.R. 1829, the Federal Prison Industries Competition in Contracting Act of 2003 passed by a vote of 350-65 in the 108th Congress, and it is almost identical to this Federal Prison Industries Competition in Contracting Act of 2005, the notable exception being the authorization of a new work-based employment preparation program for Federal inmates where private sector firms can enter into agreements with UNICOR to prepare inmates to reenter society through real-world work and apprenticeships.

The Federal Prison Industries Competition in Contracting Act would change the 1934 statute of Federal Prison Industries by requiring UNICOR to compete, let me repeat, to compete for business opportunities instead of relying on a mandatory government purchasing, prohibits inmate labor from being sold separate from inmate products, provides more remedial education and vocational training opportunities for inmates, authorizes alternative inmate work opportunities in support of nonprofit community service organizations, and it allows the Attorney General oversight and discretion to award individual source contracts should UNICOR lose a contract and endanger the safety of a Federal correctional institution.

It establishes a $2.50 per hour minimum wage for prisoners who are within 2 years of release. It raises the maximum wage to half of the Federal minimum wage for all inmates by September 30, 2008, and equal to the Federal minimum wage by 2013.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it increases the ability for public comment on proposed Federal Prison Industries expansions and ensures direct access to these comments by the board of directors.

Considering our Nation's tradition on promoting fair competition and with the support of organizations and business interests such as the Associated Builders and Contractors, the Coalition for Government Procurement, the National Association of Manufacturers, the National Federation of Independent Business, the Uniform and Textile Service Association, the United States Chamber of Commerce, and the Prison and Justice Fellowship, it should be reasonable to apply good business practices to prison labor.

Beyond fair competition, it is important to modernize the Federal Prison Industries program for this 21st century. UNICOR has operated on the same base model since 1934, despite diverse changes in labor and technology.

Our Federal prisoners are beyond the days of simply stamping a license plate for a penny a day. If we are to remain committed to rehabilitation and our Federal system of prisons, then we need a serious commitment to give prisoners reasonable work skills, reinforce acceptable behavior, and reinstate these prisoners to a real world work environment.

Furthermore, we need a system that is business friendly and is cost effective to our Federal Government.

I urge my colleagues to vote for swift passage of this rule, and, of course, H.R. 2965, the Federal Prison Industries Competition in Contracting Act of 2006.

I, Mr. Speaker, stand in support for both the rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. I thank Mr. GINGREY for the time, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to this rule and to the underlying bill. In 1934, Congress had established Federal Prison Industries, or FPI, a government corporation that employs inmates in Federal prisons to produce goods and services for the Federal Government.

FPI employs nearly 20,000 inmates in more than 100 prison factories to manufacture a number of products for the United States Government. Prisoners manufacture such items as clothing, textiles, fleet management of the vehicle components, graphics and industrial products in return for cheap labor. Inmates receive valuable job training opportunities that teach them the necessary skills that may help them become productive, hardworking citizens once they reenter society.

Under current Federal law, FPI is a mandatory source of goods and services for Federal agencies. That means, Mr. Speaker, that any agency that wants to buy at least $2,500 worth of goods and services must first seek to do so through FPI. If FPI cannot process an order, the agency is then given a waiver to make the purchase from another source.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation seeks to phase out the preference given to Federal Prison Industries in contracts with Federal agencies. Supporters claim that it is unfair to exclusively employ prisoners when small businesses and private firms want to secure contracts with the Federal Government.

However, I claim if it ain't broke, don't fix it. I claim that it is unfair to spend more than half a billion tax dollars to dissolve an effective and self-sustaining program. I claim that it is unfair to obligate an additional $75 million a year for the next 5 years to implement an educational and vocational program to replace an already successful educational and vocational program.

This seems to me to be an extraordinarily wasteful way to spend American taxpayers' dollars. As a former judge, I know the importance of prison employment training programs. I personally witnessed the benefits of giving prisoners constructive work while they are incarcerated. While the Federal Prison Industries may need reform, I propose we seek other options. I propose we first ask the Bureau of Prisons what they think about reforming Federal Prison Industries.

I propose we ask the Federal agencies that receive FPI products and services what improvements can be made. I am not convinced that this particular bill is necessary or that it is the best solution in reforming Federal Prison Industries.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand why this bill could not have been considered under an open rule. It was in the last Congress, and this same measure passed in the last Congress, 350-65, was not taken up by the U.S. Senate, is not going to be taken up by the United States Senate in the next 2 weeks and probably not even in a lame duck session.

There weren't very many of our colleagues who offered amendments at the Rules Committee last night, and of the Members who were not permitted to offer their amendments, Mr. SCOTT from the Judiciary Committee and Mr. ROHRBACHER, a Democrat and a Republican, each had thoughtful amendments, which the full House should have been given the opportunity to debate.

We didn't vote yesterday until 6:30 in the evening, and there isn't anything at least firm on the schedule on the floor Friday. So why not let the House work its will? Why continue to stamp out democracy here in the people's House while feigning to advocate democracy around the globe. It really kind of makes you go hmm, and it makes me wonder, Mr. Speaker.

For all of the above reasons, I urge my colleagues to reject this rule and the underlying bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GINGREY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. COSTA).

Mr. COSTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on the rule, not due to the merits of the bill before us, but because I am compelled to call to attention the complete debacle that I think is existing at the Federal Bureau of Prisons.

I rise on behalf of my constituents in a small rural town in Mendota, California, to demand that the Federal Government stay true to its word, as a focus to the core of this issue, to focus on what I believe is smart budgeting in addressing the security demands that evolved with our country, as well as the Federal Government's commitment to make good on its commitments.

In May of 2000 the city of Mendota was approached by the Federal Bureau of Prisons to build a medium security Federal correctional institution. The local elected officials, the community leaders have been strong supporters of this project and proud to provide the public service to our country, which also has the effect of encouraging economic stimulus that this prison would create.

As you see here, over $100 million has already been spent on the facility. It is about 40 percent complete. This photograph was taken about a week ago.

The funding, though, is now in jeopardy. The administration has proposed a rescission of $57 million in fiscal year 2002 and 2004 that has jeopardized the entire completion of this project. Mendota's contract is set to expire in October of this year, which, in this case, is anticipated that any new contract that will have to be reissued will cost the Federal Government and our budget 20 percent in additional dollars.

Yet the Bush administration refuses the request to add additional dollars, dollars to complete this facility. The administration's approach to funding in this case, in my opinion, is penny-wise and pound foolish. There is no sound reasoning that would support cutting off the funding for the completion of this facility. We know what the issue is on the Federal level. We have, under the medium security facilities, currently over 37 percent over capacity throughout the country, 37 percent over capacity. The Federal Bureau of Prisons expects that they need to house 7,500 new Federal inmates annually.

In California, our institutional system is 89 percent over capacity, and the Department of Corrections expects an increase of over 4,000 inmates annually. This Mendota facility would provide 1,522 much-needed beds to help address this growing demand. The Federal Government has made a long-term commitment to construct and operate this facility.

To bring this project to a virtual halt would be unfair not only to the citizens of Mendota, who have over an 18 percent unemployment level, of which 42 percent of the population is living below the poverty line. The President would provide good jobs and a major boost to the very depressed local economy.

Now, when we talk about the administration's failure and their fiscal year irresponsibility to American taxpayers, I think this continues, when you begin to understand that the Bureau of Prisons proposes to begin the construction of two new facilities while they want to stop this one half completed. What sense does that make?

That is right, believe it or not, we have a half-built prison in California in the city of Mendota. It will cost the Federal Government $2 million a year to mothball this facility, to go in and to make sure that they flush the toilets and they do the other kinds of things necessary to keep it operational.

In closing, this is an untenable situation. It is an untenable situation for the city of Mendota. It is an embarrassment to this administration, which finds its credibility being shredded almost on a daily basis. It is clear that if the Bush administration refuses to provide the promised funding to this ongoing construction of this facility, this half-built facility will be standing proof to our administration's failure to keep its word and to honor its commitments.

Ladies and gentlemen, I urge that reconsideration be taken to this funding rescission and that, in fact, we offer good common sense as it relates to our Federal budget. It is not good fiscal responsibility to stop construction of a half-completed prison and begin the construction of two new facilities that have yet to be started.

Mr. GINGREY. Mr. Speaker, I don't question the gentleman from California's right to take an opportunity to advocate on behalf of his district and the construction of that Federal facility, and I am sure he knows of what he speaks. But getting more to the point of this particular bill, the gentleman, my good friend from Florida, wanted an open rule.

Of course, I understand that. I think if I were on the other side, I would always want an open rule as well. But in the spirit of openness, I want to point out to my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, that I think there were eight or nine amendments submitted. We accepted five. Three of those amendments to this bill were Democratic amendments, one was a bipartisan amendment. Yes, there was one Republican amendment. The last time we passed this bill, there were something like, we had an open rule, and there were 14 amendments that were accepted. All of those amendments are included now in the text of this bill that we are discussing today.

I just want to point out that the process of bipartisanship and openness, Mr. Speaker, let me just tell you, and remind my colleague from Florida, and I know he is aware of this, but in the committee, the ranking member, Mr. CONYERS, supported this bill as did Mr. WATT, Mrs. MALONEY, Ms. WATERS, and Mr. FRANK. The main amendment that came through committee concerned this issue of training, of better training of our current Federal prison population to help them be better rehabilitated and have an opportunity, as they go out into the 21st century.

As we point out, we are trying to revise something that started in 1934 with people stamping license plates.

There is a lot of modern technology, Mr. Speaker. I know all of our colleagues on both sides of the aisle understand that.

If there is some way that we can give that training to these people in the prison system who want to change their lives, and, as soon as they get out, they get a good job, maybe even go to work for one of these private companies that is helping provide for their training through this program, that was a wonderful addition to the bill.

That, in fact, was new since the last time this bill came up. Again, Mr. CONYERS, Mr. WATT, Mrs. MALONEY, Ms. WATERS and Mr. FRANK were all very supportive of that.

So the statement that “if it ain’t broke, don’t fix it,” I think it was broke, and I think my good friend from Florida’s colleagues felt that it was broken, and in a bipartisan way we are trying to fix it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume only to respond to my good friend from Georgia that I am prepared, as I am sure all Members in this body are, to stipulate that this is an important matter. The question that I would ask and answer rhetorically is, is this the most important thing that we could be doing here? If it is, I am missing something, because I did not see the minimum wage, I did not see port security, I did not see the appropriations bills. All we have done is two of the 13 up to now.

So if this is the most important thing, which has already passed in a previous session of Congress 350–65, and ain’t going to pass the other body this week or next or before September 29, when the majority leader has said that we will go sine die during that particular weekend, I am here to tell you that this is a woeful response, and it is more than credible that it will make the suggestion that people make come to fruition that this is a do-nothing Congress, when in fact we are taking up something that may very well be important, but it sure ain’t the most important thing to Jane and Joe Lunch Bucket in America.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GINGREY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume for the purpose of closing.

The gentleman says that is not the most important thing, and I don’t disagree with him. I think it is very important. It is not the most important thing. Of course, a lot of “the most important things” that he has mentioned this Republican majority has brought to the floor of this House and we have passed, some of that, most of it actually, in a bipartisan way, with support from the other side.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGREY. Of course, I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Most quickly, have we done the appropriations measures, and can the gentleman assure me that between now and September 29 we will pass the rest of the appropriations measures in the House of Representatives?

Mr. GINGREY. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Florida knows, we have passed I guess it is 10 out of 11. We may have one appropriations bill that has not passed the House. All of the rest have. We are waiting on the Senate. We are very confident that we will next week, given the leader’s colloquy for what our schedule is, I can’t say for sure, but it is my understanding we will be dealing with both the Homeland Security appropriation and the Department of Defense appropriation next week.

As I pointed out, we have passed all of these appropriations bills. We have done our work and we will continue to do our work. We are ready to receive those conference reports.

In the meantime then, what are we to do? Is the gentleman suggesting we sit over here on the leadership majority side and do nothing? Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. We are doing our work.

This is a very important piece of legislation, and I want to thank my colleague from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA) for sponsoring it and for being a tireless champion of reform for Federal Prison Industries.

As I discussed in my opening statement, it is important to protect the interests of business without diminishing the effectiveness of our Federal Prison Industries, also referred to as UNICOR. With H.R. 2965, the Federal Prison Industries Competition in Contracting Act of 2005, this Congress has an opportunity to promote fair competition and to update UNICOR for the 21st century, as I said earlier.

This body passed similar legislation with an overwhelming 350–65 majority. Federal Prison Industries are important for prisoner behavior control, for the safety of our Federal prison guards, and, furthermore, it serves as an opportunity, and this is most important, for inmates to learn skills necessary for life after prison. It helps reduce the number of repeat offenders and ultimately reduces the stress of our overcrowded prisons. My good friend the gentleman from California (Mr. COSTA), of course, mentioned that in describing the facility in his district that is so needed.

This current Federal Prison Industries system is outdated and it still operates off of the same executive order issued by President Franklin Delano Roosevelt in 1934. Considering the global economy and accounting for further changes and the needs and exchange of goods and services in this, the 21st century, it is important to update this program in order to preserve its efficiency for rehabilitating prisoners.

The Federal Prison Industries Competition in Contracting Act of 2005 would preserve the successful formula of the current system with the checks and balances of a competitive market. It is no longer in the best interests of our government or Federal prisons to have a guaranteed artificial market. Our current system is not fair to small businesses who wish to compete for government contracts, it is not fair to the executive agencies trying to work within a tight budget, and it is not fair for the education of prisoners who need to learn new job skills and the nature of a competitive market.

Outside of providing competition for outside businesses, H.R. 2965, the Federal Prison Industries Competition in Contracting Act of 2005 would prohibit inmate labor from being sold separate from inmate products, it would provide more remedial education and vocational opportunities for inmates, and it would authorize alternative inmate work opportunities in support of non-profit community service organizations.

So, Mr. Speaker, in closing, I want to reiterate the diverse support of H.R. 2965, the Federal Prison Industries Competition in Contracting Act of 2005, including businesses, civic organizations and the unions. It is important to pass legislation to reform Federal Prison Industries in order to sustain the program for the 21st century.

I ask my colleagues, please support this rule and the underlying legislation.

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of this legislation that will end the unfair government-sponsored monopoly enjoyed by Federal Prison Industries.

H.R. 2965 is a good bill that will protect the jobs of American taxpayers. According to the National Economic Council, 2.9 million manufacturing jobs have been lost since 2001. We should do everything possible to keep workers employed.

FPI is, not competing on a level playing field. It pays its workers just pennies and is not required to pay taxes. With its predatory practices, FPI has contributed to the closure of private companies and the loss of tens of thousands of jobs throughout the Nation. This legislation will ensure that contracts are awarded to the company that will provide the best products, delivered on time, and at the best prices, thereby saving taxpayer dollars and protecting good jobs. In short, the way the free market is supposed to operate.

H.R. 2965 also provides valuable alternative rehabilitative opportunities, including work in support of nonprofit, public service organizations, to better prepare inmates for a successful return to society.

The bill enjoys broad bipartisan support, and has previously passed the House overwhelmingly. Additionally, H.R. 2965 has support from much of the business community and organized labor.

I urge my colleagues to vote for this legislation and to oppose any amendment that will weaken the underlying bill.

Mr. GINGREY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H. RES. 994, EXPRESSING SENSE OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES ON FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF TERRORIST ATTACKS LAUNCHED AGAINST THE UNITED STATES ON SEPTEMBER 11, 2001

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 996 and ask for its immediate consideration.

H. RES. 996

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order without intervention of any point of order to consider in the House the resolution (H. Res. 994) expressing the sense of the House of Representatives on the fifth anniversary of the terrorist attacks launched against the United States on September 11, 2001. The resolution shall be considered as read. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution and preamble to final adoption without intervening motion or demand for division of the question except: (1) four hours of debate equally divided and controlled by the Majority Leader and Minority Leader or their designees; and (2) one motion to recommit which may not contain instructions.

SEC. 2. During consideration of House Resolution 994 pursuant to this resolution, notwithstanding the operation of the previous question, the Chair may postpone further consideration of the resolution to a time designated by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to my friend the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, this rule provides for 4 hours of debate in the House, equally divided and controlled by the majority leader and minority leader or their designees. It waives all points of order against consideration of the resolution and also provides one motion to recommit, which may not contain instructions.

Finally, it provides that notwithstanding the operation of the previous question, the Chair may postpone further consideration of the resolution to a time designated by the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, we are here today, 5 years after the tragedy of September 11, to speak with one voice to let the world know that we have not forgotten the lessons of that terrible day. We are here to remember the thousands ruthlessly murdered by our enemies who hijacked four civilian aircraft and crashed them into the World Trade Center towers, the Pentagon and a field in Pennsylvania, and to recognize the unimaginable losses suffered by their families. We are also here to honor the sacrifices and the courage shown by our first responders who selflessly rushed to the flaming buildings in order to rescue the victims of these attacks.

We are also here to let our allies in the war on terror know that we stand united with them in the war on terror, and to recognize the progress that continues to be made by our Federal intelligence, law enforcement and security agencies in conjunction with intelligence, law enforcement and security agencies of our allies, in keeping Americans safe. And we are here to remind these allies and to place our enemies on notice that we will never shirk from the war on terror and that we will never forget what happened on September 11, 2001.

The six-page resolution should be recognized by every Member of this body as an opportunity to remember our Nation's tragic loss and to encourage every American to do the same. It is an opportunity to extend our sympathies to the families of the lost and to honor those who risked their own lives and health trying to protect the lives and health of others.

It is an opportunity to extend our gratitude to our intelligence and military personnel serving at home and abroad and their families for their service. It is to thank the citizens of other nations who are contributing to the effort to defeat global terrorism.

More importantly, it is an opportunity by this body to reaffirm that we remain vigilant and steadfast in the war on terror, that we remember the sacrifices made by so many innocent Americans on September 11 and that we will never succumb to the cause of terrorists.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution that will be brought here before the House for a vote is an earnest, heart-felt and comprehensive resolution putting the House on record and standing once again against terrorism.

This House already has a strong record on this topic and has already passed a number of bills designed to accomplish the main goal laid out in this resolution, to remember the lessons of 9/11 and to honor the victims by preventing another attack on American soil. We have voted to give our law enforcement the tools they need to prosecute the war on terror in the United States and throughout the world, and through the passage of the USA PATRIOT Act and its reauthorization we have once again reaffirmed that.

We have voted to implement a key component of the 9/11 Commission by creating Federal standards for the application process in the issuing of State identification cards through the REAL ID Act.

And this House has voted to secure our borders through the Border Protection, Antiterrorism, and Illegal Immigration Control Act and to defend our ports through the Security and Accountability for Every Port Act. We have made important reforms in the intelligence community through the Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act and provided our first responders with the resources that they would need with our annual Homeland Security authorization and appropriations process.

Mr. Speaker, this House has accomplished a great deal on behalf of the American people to ensure the citizens of the United States that they can be safe here and abroad, but we understand that this job is not yet done. Next week the House is scheduled to consider legislation that will build upon all of this hard work, legislation to further boost our national security and to give our law enforcement the tools it needs to prevent our shadowy, ever-shifting, and determined enemy to once again demonstrate that we do not rest in the war on terror and that we will not forget.

I encourage all of my colleagues to join me in supporting this rule to let our allies and our enemies alike know that we will continue the war on terror both in memory of those murdered on September 11 and for the generations still to come who will look back and evaluate our ability to put partisanship aside and to stand together on behalf of our Nation, our citizens, and, in fact, our civilization.

I encourage all of my colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS), my friend, for yielding me the customary 30 minutes, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today we remember that terrible day of September 11, 2001. We continue to mourn for those who are lost. Our hearts continue to ache for the loved ones left behind. We honor those first responders who saved so many lives. We continue to stand firm as we pursue justice against those who perpetrated those attacks. And we remain committed to finding and eliminating terrorists around the world.

Mr. Speaker, almost every year since 2001, Congress has passed resolutions commemorating the September 11 attacks. In past years those resolutions have been thoughtful, appropriate, and solidly bipartisan, as they should be. Sadly and unfortunately, that is not the case this year.

Instead, the Republican leadership of this House has chosen to include controversial language in the resolution, including language celebrating the passage of legislation that many of us, both Democrats and Republicans, find to be deeply problematic.

For example, the resolution before us celebrates the passage of the USA PATRIOT Act, which I and many others, Republicans and Democrats, believe went too far in sacrificing American's constitutional civil liberties.

Rand Corporation terrorism expert Brian Michael Jenkins recently made this point very well. He argues that strengthening America must involve preserving American values. And I quote: "We cannot claim to be a Nation of laws, a champion of democracy, when we too easily accept a disturbing pattern of ignoring inconvenient rules, justifying our actions by extraordinary circumstances, readily resorting to extrajudicial actions based on broad assertions of unlimited executive authority, and espousing public arguments against any constraints on how we treat those in our custody. The defense of democracy demands the defense of democracy's ideals. To ignore this is to risk alienation and isolation. And defeat."

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, the resolution before us celebrates the 2005 passage of what many of us consider to be a punitive, controversial immigration bill, a bill that couldn't even pass the Republican Senate and a bill that President Bush does not even support.

Mr. Speaker, it did not have to be this way, and it should not be this way. On Monday night the United States Senate passed its own version of the September 11 resolution, S. Res. 565, and I will insert a copy of the Senate bill at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill approaches this issue the right way. It sticks to remembering the victims, condemning the attacks and their perpetrators, recommitting the United States to fighting terrorism, and commending the members of our Armed Forces, law enforcement personnel, first responders, members of the intelligence community, and others who are on the front lines of this effort. The Senate bill was cosponsored by every single Senator, Republican and Democrat. Every single Senator put their names on this bill, and it was passed unanimously. For the life of me, I cannot figure out why the same thing is not good enough for the leadership in this House. Why on this subject, where unity is vitally important, does the leadership of this House seek disunity? Let us commemorate, not politicize, September 11.

This resolution should not be a Republican resolution. It should be a resolution that defies party label. I am worried that some in this House are so consumed with politics that they would use this terrible tragedy for partisan gain, and I find that offensive.

The resolution before us also states as fact that "the Nation is safer than it was on September 11, 2001." Mr. Speaker, I would argue that the actions of this administration, particularly the war in Iraq, have made us less safe. Five years ago the world stood in sympathy and solidarity with America. Today, America's standing in the world is at the lowest point in history. Mr. Speaker, we invaded and now occupy a country that posed no imminent threat to the United States. Despite definitive and repeated findings that there were no ties between Iraq and al Qaeda, a finding most recently echoed by the Republican-controlled Senate Intelligence Committee, the President and Vice President continue their misleading efforts to link al Qaeda, Osama bin Laden, Iraq, and 9/11 all together.

The war in Iraq and the war against terrorism are distinct. The present Iraq policy, many of us believe, has made us less safe and must be changed. Even our top generals in Iraq have conceded that our policy in Iraq has actually produced more terrorists. This does not make us safer, Mr. Speaker. It makes us more isolated and more vulnerable in an increasingly dangerous world.

We know that resources were diverted from Afghanistan, where the 9/11 deadly plot was born, in order to invade and occupy Iraq. And we know now that the trail of Osama bin Laden, the mastermind of 9/11, has grown stone cold. We know that the President's policies in Iraq have put an enormous strain on our military, with U.S. military readiness levels now at historic lows.

We know that the independent 9/11 Commission has just issued a 5-year report card on President Bush and the Congress filled with D's and F's on homeland security. And I think we all know, if we are being honest with ourselves, that we in this Congress have underfunded so much of our homeland security.

We know that the invasion and occupation of Iraq has increased the budget deficit to record proportions because this administration and Congress have done what no other President and Congress have ever done in the history of the United States: they have continued to fund this war completely outside the normal budget and to grant a series of tax cuts to the wealthiest of the wealthy during a time of war.

And we know, Mr. Speaker, that Iraq is rapidly descending into an ethnic and religious civil war with a daily civilian toll that tells every single Iraqi that nowhere is safe from violence, not their homes, not their jobs, not their schools, not even their hospitals.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution could have been, should have been a thoughtful, bipartisan commemoration of September 11, its victims, and the men and women who fight to protect us each and every day. That is what we should have on the floor today. Unfortunately, the resolution before us does not meet that standard.

Members of this House have differences about policy. There are differences about the war in Iraq, and I respect and appreciate my colleagues on the other side of the aisle who have a very different opinion on this war than I do. We have differences about protecting civil liberties. We have differences about how best to deal with immigration. But there are no differences, there are no differences, when it comes to honoring the memories of those lost on September 11. There are no differences when it comes to commending the men and women on the front lines of the war on terror. And there are no differences when it comes to the desire to protect this country from future terrorist attacks.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that the leadership of this House, during this most solemn week, has chosen not to focus solely on the things that bring us together as Members of Congress and as Americans

S. RES. 565

Whereas on September 11, 2001, terrorists hijacked four civilian aircraft; crashed two of them into the towers of the World Trade Center in New York City; and crashed the third into the Pentagon outside Washington, DC;

Whereas the fourth hijacked plane, United Airlines Flight 93, crashed in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, near the town of Shanksville, after the passengers and crew of that flight struggled with the terrorist-hijackers to take back control of the plane, ultimately preventing the flight from reaching its likely destination in Washington, DC;

Whereas the heroic actions of the rescue workers, volunteers, Federal, State and local officials who responded to the attacks with courage, determination, and skill are to be commended;

Whereas thousands of innocent Americans, and civilians from many other countries, were killed and injured as a result of these attacks;

Whereas Congress declared, in the aftermath of the attacks, September 12, 2001 to be a National Day of Unity and Mourning;

Whereas there has not been a terrorist attack on the United States homeland since the terrorist attacks five years ago; but al Qaeda has perpetrated terrorist attacks throughout the world against U.S. persons, facilities, and interests, as well as U.S. allies during that time; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate:

(1) commemorates the life of each individual who died as a result of the attacks of September 11, 2001;

(2) extends its deepest condolences to the victims of these attacks, as well as to their families, friends, and loved ones;

(3) once again condemns in the strongest possible terms the attacks, the terrorists who perpetrated them, and their sponsors;

(4) commits to support the necessary steps to interdict and defeat terrorists who plot to do harm to the American people;

(5) recommits itself and the nation to bringing to justice the perpetrators of the attacks, along with their sponsors;

(6) honors and expresses its gratitude to members of its Armed Forces, law enforcement personnel, first responders, members of intelligence community and others who have bravely and faithfully participated in the War on Terrorism since September 11, 2001;

(7) declares September 11, 2006, to be a National Day of Remembrance, in commemoration of the terrorist attacks against the United States on September 11, 2001; and

(8) declares that when the Senate adjourns today, it stand adjourned as a further mark of respect to each individual who died as a result of the attacks of September 11, 2001.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman, my colleague, from Massachusetts does clearly talk about the differences of opinion that we have, and I respect that difference. I would also say that this body has an obligation to move forward and work on issues that we think are correct and right. And quite honestly, Republicans do see what has happened to this country, I believe, in a significantly different way than what my colleagues, the Democrats, see.

Several months ago we had a vote, and we have done this several times, but a vote on the intelligence bill where the Democrat Party wanted and had a vote on the floor that would require law enforcement and intelligence to release every single name of every single person under investigation by the FBI and intelligence agencies to the Congress, to nonlaw enforcement officials. These are the kinds of ideas that Ms. PELOSI and the Democrats have about how we go about protecting this country. We politely disagree.

The resolution here today is not about policy as it relates to what we are trying to pass today. It is about how this act that happened on 9/11 we will not forget. We will thank the men and women who protected us that day. We will stand behind the men and women of our military and intelligence organizations. We give thanks to the families who are here in this country whose loved ones serve on the front lines. And, lastly, we will let our allies know and the terrorists know that we will stay to the end. That is what this resolution is about.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the chairman of the Rules Committee, Mr. DREIER.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding. And I want to congratulate the gentleman from Dallas for his very hard work and superb management of this important resolution that we are considering here.

Mr. Speaker, 5 years ago this week, an act of war pierced the security and peace of our Nation. The murder of nearly 3,000 by terrorist fanatics shook our country to its core and stirred within each and every one of us the determination to defend our freedom and our liberty with all of our might.

The global war on terror, a war that we did not start, has delivered many successes. Most of the top leadership of al Qaeda have been captured or killed. In Iraq and Afghanistan, where terror was once cultivated and exported, 50 million people now have democratically elected governments. Some of the most wanted terrorists in Iraq, such as Osama bin Laden's deputy Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, are no longer free to wantonly murder.

There have been quiet successes that fall beyond the scope of the military and away from the field of battle, Mr. Speaker. Following passage of the PATRIOT Act, we have seen terrorist cells that have been broken up here in the United States, five in particular, domestic terrorist cells that have been broken up because of the existence of the PATRIOT Act.

And we have also seen the breakup around the world of these cells because of legislative initiatives that we have taken since September 11, 2001. The Justice Department has won 253 convictions in terror-related cases across the United States.

Intelligence gathering and cooperation between allies resulted in foiling a plot to blow up commercial airliners flying from London to the United States just weeks ago. It is absolutely essential that those in charge of keeping us safe have every tool necessary to do so.

The results of these diplomatic, intelligence, and military efforts are encouraging. Five years after September 11, 2001, our homeland has not been attacked again, and that seems to be so often forgotten, Mr. Speaker. Every day we thank God that, because of what we have done and because of the initiative of our courageous men and women, the United States of America has not seen an attack in 5 years, when many predicted that we would see them follow immediately following September 11, 2001. Yet, as the years prior to 9/11 proved, periods of security at home can lead to a false security. An enemy that has no regard for human life and no tolerance for freedom is an especially fierce foe. They act and operate according to the belief that, in the words of Osama bin Laden, and I quote, "death is better than living on this earth with the unbelievers amongst us." Those are the words of bin Laden.

Mr. Speaker, like the Cold War, the global struggle will be measured in decades, not years or months. While it is important and appropriate to question the tactics used in the global war on terror, there can be no doubt that it is critical to stay vigilant, stay committed, and stay on the offense. There have been many trying and somber days in the prosecution of this war, and there will be many more to come. We are especially thankful, as the gentleman from Dallas just said, to our men and women in uniform, from local law enforcement to those in the military. We offer our deepest appreciation for the opportunity they have given our Nation to know safety and freedom.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as we proceed with this legislation, I am convinced that, contrary to what was said by my friend from Massachusetts, this resolution will enjoy strong bipartisan support just as resolution after resolution that we have passed since September of 2001 have enjoyed.

Now, I have gone through and looked at past resolutions that have enjoyed great support from Democrats and Republicans in this House, and they have gone through many of the things that we have done to recognize what it has taken to be successful. And I believe that focusing on our border security is critical for that, and that is why the House-passed version of the border security measure was important. And I am pleased that we have the chairman of the Homeland Security committee, Mr. KING. He has worked very hard on this and testified yesterday on behalf of the nexus between our security and the fact that border security is national security.

Similarly, we have found that by breaking up the financial network through legislation like the SWIFT program, which has enjoyed great success, and unfortunately was disclosed in the media, we have had success in breaking up the financial aspect of those who would do us in because of the initiatives that we and this administration have taken. Mr. Speaker, I would argue that had we not taken the initiatives that we have over the past 5 years, things like the PATRIOT Act, we would not be here today without having suffered another attack on our soil.

Today, we express our condolences, our thoughts and prayers with the families and the loved ones of those what paid the ultimate price on September 11, 2001, and the single best thing that we can do for every single one of them and their families is to ensure that we put into place the tools necessary so that it will never, ever happen again.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments from both my friend from Texas and my chairman of the Rules Committee, Mr. DREIER, the gentleman from California, and I would just say that that was a really good campaign speech as he went through a litany of issues. But this is not a day for campaign speeches.

Mr. DREIER. Would the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Once I finish my sentence.

Mr. DREIER. I was just accused of making a campaign speech when I am talking about the reverence of September 11.

Mr. MCGOVERN. And I would say to the gentleman that on Monday, those Members who were in town, Republicans and Democrats, gathered on the East Front of the Capitol in solidarity. There were no campaign speeches, there was no politics. People gathered in solidarity together to commemorate those who lost their lives and to honor those who gave such tremendous sacrifice on September 11th.

The United States Senate on Monday night had a resolution that every single Member of the United States Senate, Republican and Democrat, both, all co-sponsored and passed unanimously. There was unity. There was a desire not to debate the PATRIOT Act, not to debate the House version of the Border Security bill which the Republican-controlled Senate doesn't like and even the President doesn't like. It was about putting all those issues aside where there are differences, not just between Democrats and Republicans, I would say to the gentleman from Texas, but on issues like the PATRIOT Act there were a number of Republicans who had concerns about it.

So this is not about one party versus the other. But on an issue like this involving commemorating the terrible tragedy of September 11 and honoring those who sacrificed their lives, I would like to think in the spirit here of what happened Monday night and using the example of what went on in the United States Senate, that we could rise to the occasion.

Mr. Speaker, I would yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER).

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying it was within our leadership that I first mentioned the idea of our once again singing God Bless America on the East Front of the Capitol, and I believe that that was a very important moment to once again let the American people know that we stand together, and it was my hope that we would be able to see strong bipartisanship as we proceed in these coming weeks following the fifth anniversary of September 11.

I also would like to say that as we look at this resolution, and a strong attempt was made by our leadership team to work with Members of the minority to fashion a resolution that would enjoy bipartisan support. And I believe that it is essential for us to recognize the tools that have allowed us to ensure that we have not suffered another September 11. And I deeply resent being accused of making a campaign speech as we revere the lives that were lost on September 11.

Mr. MCGOVERN. I thank the gentleman for his comments and reclaim my time.

Mr. Speaker, let me state for the record that in 2002, when we had a resolution on this issue, it passed unanimously. In 2004 and 2005, the resolutions that were brought to this floor were jointly sponsored by Representatives HYDE and LANTOS both times. There was an effort at bipartisanship then, and I think that is the model. That is the model we should be following here. The bottom line is this is not a resolution that has been produced as a result of bipartisan consultation.

But let me go back to the point I was trying to make in the beginning, and that is, this is a very solemn week, and we should not be doing anything but trying to bring this House together like they did in the United States Senate so that we speak with one voice and that we make it clear that we are together when it comes to commemorating those who lost their lives and those who have sacrificed so much and those who continue to put their lives on the line for the protection of all people.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER).

Mr. DREIER. I thank my friend for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to say that I think the gentleman from Massachusetts makes a very important point. We have seen resolutions since September 11, 2001 pass unanimously and enjoy strong bipartisan support. I would recommend that my colleagues look at the resolutions that were passed year after year since September 11, 2001, and recognize that in those resolutions we talked about the different tools and the things that have been utilized to ensure that we win the global war on terror. We want this to be bipartisan. Mr. Speaker, I will predict that when this resolution is voted on, that it will enjoy strong bipartisan support.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to yield to the gentleman from Georgia, Dr. GINGREY, 4 minutes.

Mr. GINGREY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of this rule and the underlying resolution. As we just marked the fifth anniversary of the September 11 terrorist attack launched against the United States, it is more important than ever that we stand united in condemning terrorism as we engage in this epic battle for the future of civilization.

In this war on terror, Mr. Speaker, we are not in a battle of civilizations, we are in a battle for civilization, and our enemies are actively and aggressively adjusting their tactics while waging their terrorist war of religious intolerance against the free nations of the world.

Our government has achieved many successes in this war and we have made substantial progress. We have enacted strong legislation, including the PATRIOT Act and the Homeland Security Act of 2002 which created the Department of Homeland Security. We have strengthened our borders and ports through the Enhanced Border Security and Visa Entry Reform Act of 2002 and the Maritime Transportation Security Act of 2002. We have funded our first responders in the amount of $41.5 billion. Our intelligence agencies are working together like never before, thanks in large part to the Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act of 2004.

While many of our political opponents have disagreed with our efforts, these changes are directly responsible for preventing another attack against our Nation since 9/11.

Thanks to our counterterrorism techniques, the United States and our allies have foiled several terrorist plots, disrupted terrorist cells, including several in our own country, and brought many high-profile terrorists to justice.

Just one month ago, Mr. Speaker, British authorities in London foiled a plot to blow up as many as 10 United States bound commercial airliners. The cooperation of British and American intelligence and counterterrorism authorities that led to the foiling of this plot is proof of two indisputable facts: First, we cannot let our guard down in the fight against terrorism; and, second, the steps Congress has taken since the tragic events of 9/11 are indeed working.

It is therefore critically important, Mr. Speaker, that we continue giving America the tools it needs to fight the global war on terror.

As stated by the 9/11 Commission, we must continue making strides and using terrorism finance as an intelligence tool. It is absolutely appalling that, in the light of this, 174 of my Democratic colleagues still voted against H. Res. 895, legislation supporting intelligence and law enforcement programs that track terrorists and condemning the publication of any classified information that could potentially impair the fight against terrorism. Not only did House Democrats vote against making the Committee on Homeland Security permanent at the beginning of this Congress, 120 of them opposed the creation of Homeland Security in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, no matter how much we have at times disagreed on how to prosecute the war on terror, none of us will ever forget the attacks of September 11. Let me be clear. By supporting this resolution, we are standing strong and sending a message that we will continue fighting the terrorists. We will prevail no matter how long it takes. We are telling the terrorists that they will never again catch us off guard, and that an enemy committed to the death and destruction of the American way of life will not prevail. I know the strength of America, I know the strength of her people, and I know that we will be victorious in this fight for freedom. We must continue honoring the memory of those heroes who died on 9/11 by standing strong against terrorism and taking the fight to the enemy.

This resolution simply reaffirms our commitment, and it deserves, as our chairman and Mr. SESSIONS said, the full support of this fight. I hope all of my colleagues will join me in supporting this rule and the underlying resolution.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind some of the previous speakers here that the title of this bill, H. Res. 994, is expressing the sense of the House of Representatives on the fifth anniversary of the terrorist attacks launched against the United States on September 11, 2001. And I do that because we have heard a lot of speeches here and we have talked about a lot of different issues that are separate from commemorating those who lost their lives, those who sacrificed on September 11, those who continue to protect our country.

We have talked about the PATRIOT Act and border security. We have talked about a whole litany of things, and those are all certainly important issues and legitimate issues for us to discuss, how best to protect this country. Those are things we should be debating here on a regular basis on the House floor, but they are controversial, some of these initiatives. They are controversial with a lot of Members of your own party.

I wish we would get back to the point that this resolution here today, and what some of us are troubled by, is that this should be about unity and this should be about honoring those who sacrificed, those who lost their lives, those who have served our country so well. That is what this should be about and not a litany of controversial items that you want to promote during a campaign year.

If you want to do that, do it in a separate resolution, take up a separate bill, but we should all be together when it comes to a resolution on September 11.

The United States Senate got it right. They got it right over in the United States Senate. We should do the same here in the House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, we think we got it right. We think we did the PATRIOT Act right. We think we did intelligence authorization right. We think we do a lot of things right around here. We are going to stand up for this country, Mr. Speaker. We are going to stand up for the men and women who protect our country. We are going to stand up and give the men and women of the intelligence community the things that they need.

Today, it is right and fitting to say thank you; we will not forget and we will be vigilant to protect this country. That is what this resolution is about.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. KING), the chairman of the Homeland Security Committee.

Mr. KING of New York. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I in particular appreciate the opportunity to be able to speak on this issue, an issue which I believe is vital to the history of our Nation and indeed to the future of our Nation.

As the sponsor of the legislation and chairman of the Homeland Security Committee, I took a special interest in doing all that I could to ensure that this resolution would reflect the thinking of the Congress and would not be at all provocative.

But the fact is, September 11 was the darkest day in our Nation's history. It was also a day of exceptional bravery and courage, and year after year since September 11, 2001, we have expressed this sense of the Congress, we have expressed the sense of the House. We have pointed to the tremendous bravery that occurred that day, the actions of the police and the fire and the emergency workers. We have certainly referred to the terrible suffering that occurred that day.

But also, it is essential we not just lament what happened that day, not just acknowledge the suffering of that day, but I believe we owe it to history to show what Congress has done. It is not enough just to say we feel sorry for what happened. It is important we show what we are doing, what we are doing as Members of Congress, to respond to the horrors of that day.

In putting together this resolution, the leadership on our side of the aisle reached out to the other leaders certainly. On my committee, we reached out to Democratic members of our committee trying to put together a resolution, and the fact is the gentleman from Massachusetts, who is a good friend of mine, he acts as if this resolution this year is so markedly different than what was passed in previous years.

Well, if you go back to 2004, the resolution referred to introduced by Mr. HYDE and Mr. LANTOS, H. Res. 757, it goes through a long listing of what has been done since September 11, 2001. It refers to the war in Iraq as being part of the war against terrorism. It refers to port security and border security, to the Terrorism Threat Immigration Center. It talks about taking away the financial assets of terrorists. It goes on and on, listing a number of issues which apparently today would be considered extremely controversial.

We make no reference at all to Iraq in today's resolution, other than to mention the men and women of our Armed Forces who are in Iraq and Afghanistan. We make no mention of the NSA electronic surveillance program which enjoys the support of the overwhelming majority of American citizens. We make no reference to the SWIFT program, which is going after the terrorist finances, which was to me in violation of the Espionage Act released on the front page of the New York Times. Even though it is entirely legal and entirely effective, we make no reference to that, but we do talk about the PATRIOT Act because that was a response of Congress.

Now, history may judge that we did the wrong thing. I am absolutely convinced we did the right thing in passing the PATRIOT Act, and I think we owe it to the American people to let them know what we did. Also, maritime security, intelligence reform, port security, immigration reform, all of these are tied to the issue of international terrorism.

This is the way Congress responded, and I think it is not enough just to say it was a tragedy that happened on September 11. Let us talk about what we did.

The gentleman from Massachusetts says he objects to the language in here that we are safer since September 11. Okay. Maybe we can have an honest difference of opinion on that. The fact is, even the co-chairmen of the 9/11 Commission say we are safer today than we were on September 11. The junior Senator from my State has said we are safer now than we were on September 11. These are certainly not Republican apologists.

Quite frankly, while I understand the good faith on the other side, I as a person who lost almost 150 friends, neighbors and constituents resent the fact that by us introducing the resolution this is a campaign speech.

As I was going to commemoration after commemoration on Monday, I did not say this as being part of the campaign. To me, this is our way of responding. Again, you may be right, and maybe in the future people will say it was wrong to break down the wall between the FBI and CIA and it may be wrong to be going after terrorist assets and it may be wrong to listen in on terrorist conversations. So be it. Let history be our judge.

But let this resolution stand for what Congress has done, is doing and wants to do if we are serious about winning the war against international terrorism.

If we want to talk about campaigns, I would wonder where were you in 2004 when a resolution, if you want some partisan references, by your definition would be far more partisan than we are introducing here today or is it perhaps that the political party has been changed somehow, and now what was more than acceptable in 2004 is not even remotely acceptable today?

So, if we are going to inject politics into it, let us be honest who is raising the political issue. I know that our leadership and the Speaker of the House went out of his way and their way to try to make this a bipartisan resolution. I certainly did. When you compare what we are stating today and what we stated in 2004, to me there is no doubt over who is being partisan and who is trying to exploit this issue. I find that wrong.

I am saying I am proud to stand with this resolution. I am proud to support it. I urge the overwhelming majority of Republicans and Democrats to put aside partisanship, you do not have to agree with every word of our resolution, to say that Congress has responded and has done its best to respond to the attacks of September 11.

Again, let history be our judge. I am more than willing for history to be our judge, and I am proud to stand on the record of the Congress, Republicans and Democrats, and I urge the adoption of the rule and urge the adoption of the underlying resolution.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would just respond to the gentleman by again pointing to what the other body, the United States Senate, did where 100 Senators, Democrats, Republicans, came together as one, cosponsored a resolution and voted unanimously for a resolution.

That is what we should be doing during this solemn week, not introducing legislation that inspires, quite frankly, the kind of debate that we have here today about issues that really are not about commemorating that day but issues that are highly controversial, ranging from everything to immigration to civil liberties to you name it. That is not the way we should be doing this.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. HINCHEY).

Mr. HINCHEY. Mr. Speaker, I am very much opposed to this rule. This is an issue that deserves a lot more attention than is allowed under this rule. It is a closed rule, has no opportunity for amendments.

Let me just cite one example of the language in this resolution which needs much more attention than is provided under this rule and frankly within the resolution itself.

In the resolution, it says that the United States today is safer than it was on September 11, 2001. I disagree with that, and I think a great many people disagree with it because all of the evidence points in the other direction. We are not safer today than we were.

Why are we not safer? Primarily because the administration and the leadership in this Congress corrupted the attack against the United States on September 11, 2001, and behaved in ways that have made the Nation less safe.

Instead of focusing on the perpetrators of the attack of September 11, 2001, the al Qaeda network and the leader, Osama bin Laden, the administration and the Defense Department backed off. They let him escape and he is free today.

The fact of the matter is 19 members of al Qaeda attacked the United States on September 11, 2001. There was a handful of them in addition to those 19. Now that number has grown enormously. There are far more members of al Qaeda and associate terrorist networks spread all over the Middle East, and they are engaged in activities which constitute a threat to our country and many others.

Subsequently, the attack against Iraq was a totally corrupt response to the attack of September 11, 2001. Iraq had nothing to do with that attack, nothing whatsoever.

The President in his speech to the country the other night said the regime of Saddam Hussein represented a great threat. That is not the case. All of the intelligence indicates that Saddam Hussein represented no threat whatsoever to the United States, just as all the intelligence now makes it very clear that there was no connection between Saddam Hussein or Iraq and the attack of September 11 against the United States, and there was no evidence of weapons of mass destruction in Iraq.

So, instead of attacking the people who attacked us, the administration, with the consent of this Congress, attack another country that had nothing to do with it. The fact of the matter is the world and our country today are far less safe as a result of the way in which the administration and the leaders of this Congress behaved.

We need to live up to our obligations here in the Congress. We need to conduct an investigation as to why the administration behaved the way it did. Why did it not pursue the people who attacked us, why did it let Osama bin Laden go free, why did we attack Iraq which had nothing to do with this, why did the President of the United States say that Iraq had weapons of mass destruction when all of the intelligence indicated that there was no evidence that there were weapons of mass destruction, no chemical or biological weapons left and no nuclear weapons program?

So the fact of the matter is that this resolution does not focus on the issue the way it ought to be focused upon, and this rule does not provide us the opportunity to expand the resolution, to offer amendments, to engage in the kind of debate that this issue needs so that the people of this country can understand exactly what has been happening to them.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The gentleman from New York described his disagreement with the administration. I understand that. We had seen the administration before this President ignore, completely ignore, the advice from the CIA. As a matter of fact, I remember at least one CIA director resigned under President Clinton because he could not get President Clinton to pay attention to more than 3 hours in a month to the intelligence needs of this country.

We have already talked about how vote after vote after vote by the Democrats that they choose to gut our ability, in my opinion, to effectively not only have law enforcement but to chase down those that may do harm against this country.

Some choose to characterize that we are not safer today than what we were before the attack. I completely disagree with that. I would completely disagree with that because I think every single American that day learned of the tremendous forces that were aimed at the United States that we had really been completely unaware of before.

So I think that we are better off today. Are we absolutely safe? No. Are we safer? Yes, we are, and we have a responsibility to maintain that line of defense.

This resolution has nothing to do with that. It is a resolution, the force of this body, to say we respect the men and women who on 9/11 gave their lives; we are sorry for the men and women who have been injured as a result of that; we are going to support our military; we are going to support the families and we will never forget; and we are going to back up our allies; and we are going to make sure that we get it right. That is what this resolution is about.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1200

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, let me just take issue with the gentleman from Texas. He says this whole question of the Nation being safer than it was on September 11, 2001, has nothing to do with this resolution. Well, that is what it says in this resolution, if he reads the resolution. There are some things contained in this resolution that people over here, and that people on both sides legitimately have some questions with.

Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time remains.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts has 11 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Texas has 2½ minutes remaining.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I will close for our side.

Mr. Speaker, the issue about whether or not the Nation is safer than it was on September 11, 2001, is a legitimate topic for debate, but not on this resolution. The issue of the PATRIOT Act, there are differences on that. I have a lot of reservations about the PATRIOT Act, as do many Republicans. That is a legitimate debate we should continue to have. The issue about how best to protect our borders is a serious and important and legitimate issue. President Bush and Senator MCCAIN have one opinion on how we should do it, which I think makes a heck of a lot more sense than the view of the Republican majority in this House, but that is certainly a legitimate debate. But it doesn't belong in a resolution commemorating the lives and the sacrifices of those individuals on September 11, 2001.

And I guess I wish that just once, just once the leadership on the other side of the aisle could bring to this floor a piece of legislation, especially on an issue like this, that is not stained with politics. Why does everything have to have a political slant to it? I think people are sick of it, I really do. I think on issues like this people want us to come together, as we have done in the past, as the other body has done, and speak with one voice. Let us not make this into something it shouldn't be.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am asking Members of this House to vote "no" on the previous question so that we can consider a much better resolution, one that respectfully commemorates this most somber occasion. If the previous question is defeated, I will amend the rule so that instead of voting on the divisive partisan resolution made in order under this rule, we will consider the text of the truly bipartisan resolution that was adopted in the Senate on the fifth anniversary of September 11.

Not only was this measure passed by unanimous consent in the Senate on September 11, the actual day of the anniversary, it was cosponsored by every single Member of the United States Senate: every single Democrat, every single Republican.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert the text of my amendment and extraneous materials immediately prior to the vote on the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, this is the resolution we should be considering today, and let me tell you why. It was not written for political gain or for 30-second sound bites. It was written with the sole intent and purpose of remembering the tragic events of September 11, 2001, and to honor and mourn the victims of that horrific day.

I think we owe it to the people of this great Nation to put politics aside for this one day and show that we are Americans first and that some things are sacred and should never be used for political purposes.

So I would urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the previous question so we can consider the Senate version of the September 11 commemorative.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote "yes," and I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" because it is the honorable and the right thing to do, to say thank you to the men and women who gave their lives, to say thank you to the men and women who were heroic in their efforts to try and save people, and it is the right thing to do to say to the men and women of our military and our intelligence communities that we believe you have not only done a great job but we thank your families also for those sacrifices.

We believe it is the right thing to do to remember this event 5 years later. We believe it is the right thing to do to let the world know that the United States Congress, this body, in this House resolution, believes that we will stay strong not only in the war on terrorism but that we believe that fighting for civilization and peace and opportunity in this world is the right thing.

We have heard from three of this Congress' greatest leaders, PHIL GINGREY, PETE KING, who is the chairman of the committee, and the young chairman of the Rules Committee, Mr. DREIER, as they have spoken eloquently about not only what this country stands for but about how our respectfully saying thank you and remembering this day is a part of our job and is the right thing to do.

I urge all of my colleagues to vote on behalf of this resolution.

The material previously referred to by Mr. MCGOVERN is as follows

PREVIOUS QUESTION FOR H. RES. 996, THE RULE FOR H. RES. 994 EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES ON THE 5TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE TERRORIST ATTACKS LAUNCHED AGAINST THE UNITED STATES ON SEPTEMBER 11, 2001

Strike all after the resolved clause and insert:

"Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order without intervention of any point of order to consider in the House the resolution printed in section 2 expressing the sense of the House of Representatives upon the five-year anniversary of the terrorist attacks against the United States on September 11, 2001. The resolution shall be considered as read. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution and preamble to final adoption without intervening motion or demand for division of the question except: (1) four hours of debate equally divided and controlled by the Majority Leader and Minority Leader or their designees; and (2) one motion to recommit."

SEC. 2. The following is the text referred to in Section 1:

RESOLUTION

"A resolution expressing the sense of the House of Representatives upon the five-year anniversary of the terrorist attacks against the United States on September 11, 2001.

Whereas on September 11, 2001, terrorists hijacked four civilian aircraft, crashed two of them into the towers of the World Trade Center in New York City, and crashed the third into the Pentagon outside Washington, D.C.;

Whereas the fourth hijacked plane, United Airlines Flight 93, crashed in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, near the town of Shanksville, after the passengers and crew of that flight struggled with the terrorist-hijackers to take back control of the plane, ultimately preventing the flight from reaching its likely destination in Washington, D.C.;

Whereas the heroic actions of the rescue workers, volunteers, and State and local officials who responded to the attacks with courage, determination, and skill are to be commended;

Whereas thousands of innocent Americans, and civilians from many other countries, were killed and injured as a result of these attacks;

Whereas Congress declared, in the aftermath of the attacks, September 12, 2001, to be a National Day of Unity and Mourning; and

Whereas there has not been a terrorist attack on the United States homeland since the terrorist attacks five years ago, but al Qaeda has perpetrated terrorist attacks throughout the world against United States persons, facilities, and interests, as well as United States allies during that time:

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives—

(1) commemorates the life of each individual who died as a result of the attacks of September 11, 2001;

(2) extends its deepest condolences to the victims of these attacks, as well as to their families, friends, and loved ones;

(3) once again condemns in the strongest possible terms the attacks, the terrorists who perpetrated them, and their sponsors;

(4) commits to support the necessary steps to interdict and defeat terrorists who plot to do harm to the American people;

(5) recommits itself and the Nation to bringing to justice the perpetrators of the attacks, along with their sponsors;

(6) honors and expresses its gratitude to members of the United States Armed Forces, law enforcement personnel, first responders, and others who have bravely and faithfully participated in the War on Terrorism since September 11, 2001; and

(7) declares September 11, 2006, to be a National Day of Remembrance, in commemoration of the terrorist attacks against the United States on September 11, 2001."

THE VOTE ON THE PREVIOUS QUESTION: WHAT IT REALLY MEANS

This vote, the vote on whether to order the previous question on a special rule, is not merely a procedural vote. A vote against ordering the previous question is a vote against the Republican majority agenda and a vote to allow the opposition, at least for the moment, to offer an alternative plan. It is a vote about what the House should be debating.

Mr. Clarence Cannon's Precedents of the House of Representatives, (VI, 308-311) describes the vote on the previous question on the rule as "a motion to direct or control the consideration of the subject before the House being made by the Member in charge." To defeat the previous question is to give the opposition a chance to decide the subject before the House. Cannon cites the Speaker's ruling of January 13, 1920, to the effect that "the refusal of the House to sustain the demand for the previous question passes the control of the resolution to the opposition" in order to offer an amendment. On March 15, 1909, a member of the majority party offered a rule resolution. The House defeated the previous question and a member of the opposition rose to a parliamentary inquiry, asking who was entitled to recognition. Speaker Joseph G. Cannon (R-Illinois) said: "The previous question having been refused, the gentleman from New York, Mr. Fitzgerald, who had asked the gentleman to yield to him for an amendment, is entitled to the first recognition."

Because the vote today may look bad for the Republican majority they will say "the vote on the previous question is simply a vote on whether to proceed to an immediate vote on adopting the resolution * * * [and] has no substantive legislative or policy implications whatsoever." But that is not what they have always said. Listen to the Republican Leadership Manual on the Legislative Process in the United States House of Representatives, (6th edition, page 135). Here's how the Republicans describe the previous question vote in their own manual: Although it is generally not possible to amend the rule because the majority Member controlling the time will not yield for the purpose of offering an amendment, the same result may be achieved by voting down the previous question on the rule * * * When the motion for the previous question is defeated, control of the time passes to the Member who led the opposition to ordering the previous question. That Member, because he then controls the time, may offer an amendment to the rule, or yield for the purpose of amendment."

Deschler's Procedure in the U.S. House of Representatives, the subchapter titled "Amending Special Rules" states: "a refusal to order the previous question on such a rule [a special rule reported from the Committee on Rules] opens the resolution to amendment and further debate." (Chapter 21, section 21.2) Section 21.3 continues: Upon rejection of the motion for the previous question on a resolution reported from the Committee on Rules, control shifts to the Member leading the opposition to the previous question, who may offer a proper amendment or motion and who controls the time for debate thereon."

Clearly, the vote on the previous question on a rule does have substantive policy implications. It is one of the only available tools for those who oppose the Republican majority's agenda to offer an alternative plan.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WAMP). The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will postpone further proceedings today on motions to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 6 of rule XX.

Record votes on postponed questions will be taken later today.

RESTRICTING INDIAN GAMING TO HOMELANDS OF TRIBES ACT OF 2006

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4893) to amend section 20 of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act to restrict off-reservation gaming, as amended.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Restricting Indian Gaming to Homelands of Tribes Act of 2006".

SEC. 2. RESTRICTION ON OFF-RESERVATION GAMING.

(1) by amending subsection (b)(1) to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Subsection (a) will not apply when lands are taken in trust for the benefit of an Indian tribe that is newly recognized, restored, or landless after the date of the enactment of subsection (f), including those newly recognized under the Federal Acknowledgment Process at the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and the following criteria are met:

"(A) The Secretary determines that such lands are within the State of such tribe and are within the primary geographic, social, historical, and temporal nexus of the Indian tribe.

"(B) The Secretary determines that the proposed gaming activity would not be detrimental to the surrounding community and nearby Indian tribes.

"(C) Concurrence by the Governor in conformance with laws of that State.

"(D) Mitigation by the Indian tribe in accordance with this subparagraph. For the purposes of the Indian tribe mitigating the direct impact on the county or parish infrastructure and services, the Indian tribe shall negotiate and sign, to the extent practicable during the compact negotiations described in section 11(d)(3), a memorandum of understanding with the county or parish government. Such mitigation requirements shall be limited to the direct effects of the tribal gaming activities on the affected county or parish infrastructure and services. If a memorandum of understanding is not signed within one year after the Indian tribe or county or parish has notified the other party and the Secretary, by certified mail, a request to initiate negotiations, then the Secretary shall appoint an arbitrator who shall establish mitigation requirements of the Indian tribe."; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(e)(1) In order to consolidate class II gaming and class III gaming development, an Indian tribe may host one or more other Indian tribes to participate in or benefit from gaming conducted under this Act and in conformance with a Tribal-State compact entered into by each invited Indian tribe and the State under this Act upon any portion of Indian land that was, as of

October 17, 1988, located within the boundaries of the reservation of the host Indian tribe, so long as each invited Indian tribe has no ownership interest in any other gaming facility on any other Indian lands and has its primary geographic, social, historical, and temporal nexus to land in the State in which the Indian land of the host Indian tribe is located.

"(2) An Indian tribe invited to conduct class II gaming or class III gaming under paragraph (1) may do so under authority of a lease with the host Indian tribe. Such a lease shall be lawful without the review or approval of the Secretary and shall be deemed by the Secretary to be sufficient evidence of the existence of Indian land of the invited Indian tribe for purposes of Secretarial approval of a Tribal-State compact under this Act.

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Indian tribes identified in paragraph (1) may establish the terms and conditions of their lease and other agreements between them in their sole discretion, except that in no case may the total payments to the host Indian tribe under the lease and other agreements exceed 40 percent of the net revenues (defined for such purposes as the revenue available to the 2 Indian tribes after deduction of costs of operating and financing the gaming facility developed on the leased land and of fees due to be paid under the Tribal-State compact) of the gaming activity conducted by the invited Indian tribe.

"(4) An invited Indian tribe under this subsection shall be deemed by the Secretary and the Commission to have the sole proprietary interest and responsibility for the conduct of any gaming on lands leased from a host Indian tribe.

"(5) Conduct of gaming by an invited Indian tribe on lands leased from a host Indian tribe under this subsection shall be deemed by the Secretary and the Commission to be conducted under the Act upon Indian lands—

"(A) of the invited Indian tribe;

"(f) An Indian tribe shall not conduct gaming regulated by this Act on Indian lands outside of the State in which the Indian tribe is primarily residing and exercising tribal government authority on the date of the enactment of this subsection, unless such Indian lands are contiguous to the lands in the State where the tribe is primarily residing and exercising tribal government authority."

SEC. 3. STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The amendment made by paragraph (1) of section 2 shall be applied prospectively. Compacts or other agreements that govern gaming regulated by the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act (25 U.S.C. 2701 et seq.) on Indian lands that were in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act shall not be affected by the amendments made by paragraph (1) of section 2.

(b) EXCEPTION.—The amendments made by section 2 shall not apply to any lands for which an Indian tribe, prior to March 7, 2006, has submitted to the Secretary or Chairman a fee-to-trust application or written request requiring an eligibility determination pursuant to section 20(b)(1)(A) or clause (ii) or (iii) of section 20(b)(1)(B) of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act (25 U.S.C. 2719(b)(1)(A), 2719(b)(1)(B)(ii), and 2719(b)(1)(B)(iii), respectively); provided that such lands are located within—

(1) the State where the Indian tribe primarily resides; and

(2) an area where the Indian Tribe has a primary geographical, historical, and temporal nexus.

(c) FURTHER EXCEPTION.—The amendments made by section 2 shall not affect the right of any Indian Tribe to conduct gaming on Indian lands that are eligible for gaming pursuant to section 20 of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act (25 U.S.C. 2719), as determined by the National Indian Gaming Commission, Secretary of the Interior or a Federal court prior to the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4. REGULATIONS REQUIRED.

Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior shall promulgate regulations to implement section 20 of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act (25 U.S.C. 2719). The regulations shall require tribal applicants for any of the exceptions listed in section 20 of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act to have an aboriginal or analogous historic connection to the lands upon which gaming activities are conducted under the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from California (Mr. POMBO) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the bill now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has a basic premise: Indian gaming should occur on Indian lands; and when a tribe is newly recognized, restored or landless, then it has to include the local community at the table for the simple purpose of signing a memorandum of understanding to address impacts. It is as simple as that.

Unfortunately, over the last 17 years, far too many tribes have drifted away from the original purpose and spirit of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act and have sought to develop off-reservation casinos in whatever location seemed to be the most lucrative, often far from their tribal lands. Those who have pursued this course have turned the spirit of IGRA on its head. Instead of seeking to bring economic development to the Indian reservation, they have instead sought to bring the Indian reservation to wherever there is economic development. This is wrong, and it threatens both the future of Native American economic development and the integrity of Indian tribal sovereignty itself.

When IGRA was written, it mandated that only lands held by tribes prior to October 17, 1988, or lands later acquired directly adjoining those lands, would be eligible for tribal gaming activities. It was a central principle of IGRA that, in general, lands acquired by tribes after enactment of IGRA would be ineligible for gaming.

However, IGRA provided for four exceptions, and it was expected that these would be used only rarely. Unfortunately, time has shown that the use of these four exceptions to IGRA's prohibition on gaming on after-acquired lands has been anything but rare. While opponents of reform make the oft-repeated claim that there have been only three off-reservation casinos since 1988, this claim is limited to only one of those exceptions, section 20. It ignores the fact that there are at least 38 casinos in operation today on land that was not held in trust in 1988, nearly 10 percent of the Nation's total number of tribal casinos.

Currently, there are at least 50 additional proposals for off-reservation casinos under those four exceptions. Beyond that, there have been dozens upon dozens of other projects announced or proposed over the last several years where paperwork has not yet been filed. Under the two-part determination of IGRA, virtually any land in the country could be targeted for gaming. Each one of those proposed casinos has had a very real and negative impact on public support for tribal gaming.

Over the last 2 years, the Committee on Resources has held nine hearings, heard from dozens of witnesses, and received thousands of communications documenting problems arising from off-reservation gaming. The committee has heard a compelling story and the heavy toll that off-reservation gaming proposals impose on local communities, and tribal sovereignty has become very clear.

Local citizens have told stories of waking up one day and being surprised to learn that a parcel of land in their community has been purchased by a developer who has announced that he intends to have that land declared a reservation where an Indian casino will be opened. This despite the fact that the community was hundreds of miles from the nearest existing tribal reservation land.

We have heard from private property and business owners about how the land-claims exception in IGRA has been abused by those seeking off-reservation casinos. Throughout the eastern United States, numerous land claims have been filed, resulting in costly litigation and the clouding of private property titles. These claims are filed in the hopes of forcing the State to settle the claim with an off-reservation casino. The current land claims exception in IGRA has become an incentive for this type of abusive lawsuit and must be brought to an end.

Local leaders have testified about the possibility of their community being significantly and permanently changed by the presence of a newly declared Indian reservation and tribal casino. They have told of their feelings of powerlessness to meaningfully participate and affect the process of the land being taken into trust. And they have spoken of their frustration that the impacts of the proposed casino facility will not be fully mitigated, because after the State's Governor and casino developer take their cut of the action, the tribe does not have enough revenue left to share to offset their impact on the community.

H.R. 4893 represents real reform of these abuses, while maintaining the opportunity for tribes to conduct gaming under IGRA on their tribal lands as per the original intent of the law. H.R. 4893 does away with the land-claim exception in the section 20 two-part determination. It reforms the procedures where newly recognized, landless and restored tribes can ask for lands to be placed in trust for an initial reservation. Tribes seeking these lands will now have to satisfy a three-part test to demonstrate that they have a primary historic, geographic, and temporal nexus to the land they wish to acquire for gaming. This will ensure that the initial reservation placement is determined by where the tribal people live and receive services, not by where the market for gaming seems best.

One of the most important parts of the bill is that State and local communities will play a more meaningful role in the process and will have an opportunity to give greater input into a casino proposed by a newly recognized and restored tribe. This bill requires the tribe to enter into a memorandum of understanding with the local county for the purpose of providing direct mitigation of impacts from a casino project.

H.R. 4893 is a real reform that will solve, once and for all, the problems with off-reservation gaming. It is the responsibility of this Congress to act now to bring the practice of off-reservation gaming to an end and to prevent further damage in the relationship between tribes and local communities over off-reservation casinos and to restore the original intent and spirit of IGRA to today's Indian gaming practice.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1215

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 4893, a bill that would amend section 20 of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act to impose on the poorest tribes new onerous requirements before those tribes could obtain trust land for gaming.

The provision that is most troublesome represents a drastic change in Federal law and policy because it undermines tribal sovereignty by requiring certain tribes to enter into a memorandum of understanding with counties and if the memorandum of understanding is not signed in 1 year would subject those tribes and counties to binding arbitration.

I do not believe by adding this provision to his bill Chairman POMBO acted with ill intent. I think we are all concerned about the possible proliferation of off-reservation gaming, but this bill goes far beyond that issue because it subverts tribal sovereignty by requiring tribes to negotiate with counties which are not sovereign governments at all but are creatures of the State.

Under current law, tribes must negotiate casino-style gaming compacts with State governments. As creatures of the State, the counties' interests should be protected by their State, as is the case in Michigan and other States. Never before has a Federal law equated sovereign tribes with counties.

We can address the issue of off-reservation gaming without equating those sovereign tribes with counties. But suspension of the rules forbids any amendments. I oppose setting a bad precedent in Federal law that undermines our long-standing policy of protecting tribal sovereignty.

In addition, there are a number of Members' concerns that remain unaddressed by this bill. During committee markup of this bill, several Members were told that their issues would be resolved before the bill was scheduled for consideration on the floor. Their concerns remain unaddressed, and consideration of this bill under suspension of the rules does not allow for modification or amendment.

Mr. Speaker, there was wide opposition to this bill. I and other Members of Congress have received letters from the National Congress of American Indians which represents 250 tribes throughout the Nation, the National Indian Gaming Association, the National Indian Business Association, California Nations Indian Gaming Association, Arizona Indian Gaming Association, Washington State Indian Gaming Association, New Mexico Indian Gaming Association, tribes from North Dakota, Montana, Oregon, Maine, Oklahoma, Wisconsin and my own State of Michigan.

Tribes and Indian organizations from all across the Nation overwhelmingly oppose this bill because it erodes tribal sovereignty. Therefore, in the interest of protecting tribal sovereignty and honoring our government-to-government relationship with tribes, I urge my colleagues to oppose this bill.

Mr. Speaker, when we all took our oath of office, we pledged and took an oath to uphold the Constitution of the United States. That Constitution reads, "The Congress shall have the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes." That Constitution lists the three sovereignties recognized by this Constitution.

I think we should be most careful when we diminish the sovereignty of one of those three by equating them with creatures of the State when those counties can have their interests protected by their own State government.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. COLE).

Mr. COLE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to H.R. 4893, a bill amending section 20 of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act.

Mr. Speaker, I know this bill has been forged in the cauldron of Indian country, and speaking from experience, I know Native American passion can be as powerful as any constituency in America. That is why I rise, first and foremost, to voice my utmost respect for the chairman of the Resources Committee, the gentleman from California (Mr. POMBO), who has attempted to address casino-style gaming outside tribal reservations in a fair and balanced fashion. I particularly want to thank him for working to accommodate many of my concerns in particular areas of this bill. Frankly, I wish we had had the opportunity to continue our discussions on the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the chairman is a tremendous ally of Indian country and anyone who doubts this to any degree need only to look to his record and to his committee's priorities. He has always had nothing but the best interest of tribes in mind from a policy perspective, and he understands their issues as well as anyone in Congress. Unfortunately, on this issue we simply disagree.

The Resources Committee has crafted this bill with the best of intentions. I recognize its members are trying to address a complex challenge. However, as the only enrolled member of a tribe in Congress, the Chickasaw Nation, I take my obligation to defend the concept of tribal sovereignty very seriously. This bill, however well-intentioned, in my opinion violates and erodes the sovereignty of all American Indian tribes. As a result, tribal governments in my State and all across the country have urged me to oppose this legislation. And most tribal organizations, as the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) has pointed out, also oppose the legislation.

Our Constitution recognizes three types of sovereign entities beyond our own country: First, foreign governments; second, the States; and third, Indian tribes. Existing law requires that to enter into gaming activities, tribes must negotiate agreements with the Federal Government and the State government.

Under this bill, for the first time in United States history, Indian tribes would be required to negotiate directly with local governments in order to engage in lawful activity. That diminishes the power of tribes and raises local governments to the level of sovereign entities.

This is wrong for two reasons. First, local governments are not sovereign units. They are the creation of State governments and it is the responsibility of State governments to look after their interests. Second, it is the responsibility of State governments to negotiate for and represent the interests of local governments in their dealings with tribes. To shift this burden from the States to the tribes is both wrong and irresponsible.

Mr. Speaker, as currently written, the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act works. It has provided tribes the opportunity to recapitalize, diversify their economies, and raise their voices in national politics. It reinforces the tribes' constitutional right to negotiate as a sovereign entity with the Federal Government and with State governments, and it protects the interest of local governments by ensuring they work with their State governor and legislature in the State compacting process.

Mr. Speaker, all things considered, I see no upside in subjecting tribes to local governments. Therefore, I see it as Congress' responsibility to continue the tradition enshrined in the Constitution, embedded in our laws, and reinforced by countless judicial decisions, and that is to preserve and protect Indian sovereignty. I strongly urge a "no" vote on H.R. 4893.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Again, I would hope that we would not suspend the rules today and I look forward to continuing to work with Mr. POMBO, my chairman. From the very beginning I told him he was taking on a very important task, but I think we do have a poison pill, not put in with ill-will but a poison pill in this bill.

I would be most happy to continue to work with him to try to find a solution to the possible proliferation of casinos.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. KENNEDY).

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and for his leadership on sovereignty in this country on behalf of Native Americans, our very first Americans, the people who had America before European settlers came here to take their land.

When the European settlers took their land, they took it and made one promise: We will give you what little land you have left, we will let you stay on that land and we will let you be in charge of it. And we will incorporate that into our various systems of government where we have a State government, we have city government, we have county government, and we will have tribal governments. But for purposes of tribal governments, they will have sovereignty that will surpass States so that the only relationship that these tribal governments will have will be the relationship between them and the Federal Government superseding States.

This was a part of the Constitution. It was decided by the Constitution and this legislation undermines that premise and forces tribes to negotiate with local counties, which is undermining 200 years of Federal policy for tribal sovereignty.

I ask for a "no" vote on this because its substance is bad, and the fact that it is being rushed through is bad as well.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WU).

Mr. WU. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to H.R. 4893 because of my opposition to a proposed Indian gambling casino in the Columbia River Gorge National Scenic Area in Oregon.

We should not be considering a bill of this importance on the suspension calendar with only 40 minutes of debate, no opportunity to amend. This is completely inappropriate.

Regardless of whether you are an opponent or proponent of off-reservation gaming, Members should have an opportunity to bring their concerns to the floor and offer amendments. There are many reasons to oppose this bill, and I have the largest one of them of all: This, an 80-mile long, 4,000-foot-deep gorge. It is our Yosemite. It is our Grand Canyon. It is a national treasure, and it is completely inappropriate to put a gambling casino smack-dab in the middle of this national treasure.

Vote "no" on this suspension bill so we can protect the Columbia River Gorge and we can bring a real bill to the floor and have Members debate their concerns and amend this bill appropriately.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Wisconsin (Ms. BALDWIN).

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, proponents of this bill claim that it will guarantee greater local control. But for my constituents, nothing could be further from the truth.

More than 5 years ago, the community of Beloit, Wisconsin, began working with the Bad River Band and the St. Croix Chippewa Indians to build a casino in their community. My constituents, through a referendum, expressed their very strong support for this project, and local governments have worked hand-in-hand with the tribes on a project that the community deems important to their economic development.

For 5 years they have played by the rules and they are now in the last weeks of the approval process. Now, as the community anticipates a final decision on the tribe's application, this bill abruptly changes the rules, possibly denying the local community what they seek.

The citizens of Beloit, the local governments in the area, and the tribes who seek to develop this project, are not seeking any special treatment. They simply want, and deserve, a fair decision on the merits of their application. After 5 years of following a fair process, this is no time to change the rules.

I urge my colleagues to oppose this bill.

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. DENT).

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak in favor of H.R. 4893, the Restricting Indian Gaming to Homelands of Tribes Act of 2006.

The expansion of tribal casinos to lands whose connection to Native American culture is limited or attenuated at best. This is a growing problem throughout the United States. No one wants to deny Native Americans the right to pursue government recognition of their tribal connections and to celebrate their native cultures.

Increasingly, however, groups anxious to promote casino gambling have aligned with some Native American groups for the sole purpose of utilizing the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, IGRA, to promote the establishment of casinos.

In my district, the Delaware Nation, which is headquartered in Oklahoma, has filed suit in Federal court to establish title to a 315-acre tract of land in Northampton County, Pennsylvania, so it can build a gambling facility. More than 25 families live on this property. It is also home to the Binney and Smith Company, on which it has placed a Crayola crayon manufacturing facility. The individuals trying to establish this casino, who all reside out-of-State, are not concerned about the area's homeowners, about the valuable manufacturing jobs potentially displaced by this casino, or about the fact that Binney and Smith's Crayola makes a useful product loved by children all over the world.

They are only interested in seeing working people and seniors gamble away their hard-earned dollars. H.R. 4893 would effectively end this kind of reservation shopping. It prohibits gambling on Indian lands outside of the State in which that tribe is primarily residing and exercising tribal authority as of the date of this law's enactment, unless those lands are contiguous to lands currently overseen and occupied by that tribe.

This prevents a tribe with headquarters, in, say, California or Oklahoma from acquiring lands in places like Ohio, Illinois and Pennsylvania, where there are no federally recognized Indian tribes, for the sole purpose of putting a casino on those properties.

Homeowners and business owners should not be held hostage to out-of-state casino interests that are willing to throw people out of their homes and destroy local businesses in order to further the expansion of casino gambling.

I would ask for all Members to support H.R. 4893.

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. COSTA).

Mr. COSTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill. As you may know, some of you, earlier this year I introduced a bill, H.R. 5125, that would, in essence, require States to undertake planning for the siting of Indian gaming facilities, essentially developing a State master plan before a new class III gaming license could be granted.

We have 22 States in the Nation that allow for class III gaming. Currently, if you look at those 22 States, take a snapshot, there are 339 sovereign nations within those 22 States that could potentially have legalized gaming.

What happens in the experience that I have determined in California over the last 15 years is too often Indian tribes are at the mercy of shifting political winds in State government. Negotiating a tribal-State compact for the right to engage in class III gaming on their tribal lands is a process that is complicated by elections, changing attitudes towards the tribe, as well as an understanding that tribal gaming also can be a lucrative process and business, therefore, to the State.

This process I call, or dubbed, is frequently understood as "let's make a deal" time. We have had three Governors in California in the last 15 years that have engaged in that process.

My legislation would not prevent tribes from engaging in their application process or affect any of those that have already had approval of a compact. But what it would do is develop some common sense in terms how we look in the future for prospective gaming under class III licensing with the 22 States that have 339 sovereign nations that could, but yet do not have compacts, that would allow them to have class III gaming.

I think it is time that we learned from the lessons of the last 15 years and the 22 States across the country that do have class III gaming. Let us require the States to submit a master plan to the Secretary of the Interior so that we know how we will go forward prospectively as to the impact of that class III gaming.

Common sense tells us that this makes, I think, the best process for planning future gaming in this country. Although my legislation isn't a part of this bill, I continue to work with Members on both sides of the aisle to try to put forth an effort to develop a master plan for those States that, in fact, do have class III gaming.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. RAHALL).

Mr. RAHALL. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, a very valued member of our Resources Committee, for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I share the concerns of some on my side of the aisle that this amendment should have been brought to the floor under a rule so that amendments could be offered by interested Members.

Indeed, during the Resources Committee's deliberations on this measure, several members issued concerns, and both the chairman and myself assured them that they would be considered as the process moved forward. Yet the Republican leadership chose to schedule this bill as a suspension, and as such amendments are not made in order.

With that said, the bill before the body today is the product of a negotiation which took place between Chairman POMBO and myself as the ranking member on the Resources Committee.

The original introduced version bill went too far in my opinion in interfering with tribal sovereignty. As a result of our negotiations, the version reported by the committee, which is pending before us, has a great deal more respect for tribal sovereignty while still achieving the goal of reining in off-reservation casino shopping.

Let me be very clear on this point. The letter the National Congress of American Indians has sent in opposition to this bill must be in reference to the original introduced version, not what is before us today. That letter alleges that a tribe would have to seek approval of a local government before gaming could commence. It alleges the bill would subordinate tribes to local governments. This is just plain false.

What the bill does require is that a tribe seeks to establish an agreement with a local community concerning the costs of mitigating the impact from public services that could arise from a new casino. That is nothing less and nothing more than good business practice. It is what most tribes do today.

On the broader issue, there should be no doubt that this legislation is necessary. According to United South and Eastern Tribes, which represents 24 federally recognized tribes in the east, this bill is critical on tracking down reservation-shopping abuses which are often funded by shadowy developers.

The president of the organization, Keller George, in a letter to Congress states: "This kind of reservation shopping runs counter to the intent of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act and well-established Indian policies." He urges the favorable approval of the pending legislation.

So while I remain concerned about the process, I am in support of the bill. I urge Members to vote in favor of it.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE).

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this bill. I think it is important to note that before we do violence to the existing situation here that there has been substantial success. In the existing relationships, we have had only three essential tribes, all of which have been done with largely local jurisdictions' approval. To do significant changes to upset that balance would erode, and I do believe this bill as currently written does erode, to a degree, tribal sovereignty in this regard. For that reason, I don't believe it is necessary at this time, and there can be and should be improvements.

It is disappointing again that democracy isn't functioning here in this body in that we are not allowed to offer amendments on the floor to a very critical issue involving tribal sovereignty. We have seen tribes abused historically in this country. I think that is happening again today where this bill is not allowed to be subject to the amendment process on the floor that it should.

But I also want to note that I believe that somehow the gaming process has not assisted folks in these tribes. I just want to attest, having seen boys and girls clubs established, in fact, first boys and girls club on a reservation in the Toledo reservation in the State of Washington, as a result of this economic activity, there are a lot of good economic activities happening in these communities. I think this bill will not foster them and we should oppose it.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, how much time remains on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan has 4½ minutes. The gentleman from California has 9 minutes.

Mr. KILDEE. Who has the right to close?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I was here in 1988 as a Member of the Interior Committee, and I helped write IGRA. I am very familiar with it. All laws here are written on Capitol Hill, not Mount Sinai, so I know that they are not perfect bills. But this has been a good bill.

As I said, from the very beginning, I told Mr. POMBO that I admired his courage to address this situation, but I do think that it has not been addressed properly, particularly with equating sovereign tribes with counties. I would be glad to work with him, bring this bill out on regular order where people could offer amendments on a very, very important bill.

This bill took us a long time to write in 1988. We had great debate in 1988 and great input. We wrote a good bill.

So I date back to those, probably one of the few who were here when we wrote that law, and I think that to amend it in this fashion, particularly on suspension, and, secondly, treating sovereign tribes as if they were like counties which are creatures of States, treat them as two equals. The Constitution does not say, Congress shall regulate commerce with foreign nations, the several States, the Indian tribes and the various counties. It mentions the three sovereignties here. That is very, very important to me, and we bore that in mind when we wrote this bill back in 1988.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that we will be able to defeat this today, and Mr. POMBO knows. I have talked to him repeatedly on this. We should sit down and see if we can bring a bill out with some of the provisions, especially the one treating as equals, two entities that are not equals, included in a rule where we can offer amendments on the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico (Mr. UDALL).

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. I very much appreciate the honorable gentleman from Michigan in his yielding to me, and his leadership on this issue. There is nobody in this Congress that respects tribal sovereignty more than DALE KILDEE. I am very proud to stand here today with him.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today against passage of H.R. 4893 under suspension of the rules. My district in northern New Mexico is home to more than 16 tribes. I have heard from many of my constituents, and they are strongly opposed to this bill. In fact, I do not know of a single tribe in the entire State of New Mexico who wants to see these changes. I know there are some States that have serious concerns surrounding tribal gaming issues, and I respect those concerns.

But my State of New Mexico and the tribes I interact with have approached gaming and the responsibilities related to this industry with the utmost integrity and transparency. I am afraid that this one-size-does-not-fit-all legislation will have the serious consequence of undermining 200 years of tribal sovereignty.

I ask that we take another look at this legislation and then bring it up for consideration under the regular order so that amendments are allowed. Members deserve a chance to amend this important legislation, and, sadly, once again the leadership is stifling debate.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, again, I wish we had a longer time to debate this very important bill, a bill that took us months to put together back in 1998. I regret that. I do look forward to, however, if we defeat this bill, which I hope we do, to sit down with Mr. POMBO. He knows that I recognize that there are some things that we can agree upon in this bill, then bring the bill out under regular order and let the House speak its mind.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back my last second.

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of our time.

Mr. Speaker, over the last 2 years, we have attempted to address this issue in the Resources Committee. Two years ago I put out a draft legislation for discussion that all of the members of the committee, all the Members of Congress, and the interested public had an opportunity to comment on.

We got thousands of comments. We held hearings, we got thousands of comments on that draft. We changed that draft. We took all of the input that we got, the testimony that we got, and we put that into that draft, and we continued to work on it.

Mr. KILDEE, from the very beginning, raised the issue of sovereignty; and it is an important issue to him, as it is to most of the members of the committee, that this is something that we wanted to protect, as it is our constitutional responsibility to protect the sovereignty of tribes and to negotiate with tribes, just as it is to negotiate with states in foreign countries.

We took all of that comment, and we came up with a new draft, and we put that out for additional comment. Finally, we introduced the underlying bill.

Mr. KILDEE brought up the issue of sovereignty and how we dealt with that. We changed the bill we are actually voting on today substantially from that original draft. The original draft did give cities a veto power in essence over trust lands. Many members of the committee and different attorneys that we talked to felt that that would not stand up to a court challenge, and we took that out.

But what we did do, as Mr. RAHALL pointed out, we gave local cities and counties the ability to negotiate with the tribes to come up with a memorandum of understanding so that they have the ability to make sure that if there is a major new development that is going to happen within their community that they are held harmless, that they have some input into that project going forward, that sewer and water and transportation needs and other things, just like if it was a private developer going in, would be met. That is the requirement that we put in. That somehow is now being deciphered as threatening sovereignty.

I will tell you though, and I want to make this perfectly clear, if you care about sovereignty of our Native American tribes in this country, then you better support this bill, because if we do not further regulate the expansion of off-reservation casinos, we will have an attempt made within this Congress to threaten that sovereignty, and we know that that is going to happen because we have seen it over the last few years. The proliferation of Indian gaming throughout the country is a threat to that sovereignty, and we need to do that.

Mr. KILDEE also talks about in IGRA, the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act in 1988. It took us years just to draft these amendments to it. This may have taken months, but it wasn't written on Mount Sinai.

When you helped to write that bill, it was a $200 million industry. Today it is a $23 billion industry. We have a responsibility to regulate that industry. We have a responsibility as Members of Congress and the Resources Committee to do what we have to do in order to ensure that that sovereignty continues, because if we don't that is a bigger threat to that sovereignty.

I would also say, Mr. Speaker, that the Speaker of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HASTERT) is a strong supporter of the bill. He asked me to mention that in my closing comments. Unfortunately, he was not able to make it down here on the floor, but he will have a statement to add into the RECORD.

Having said that, I urge passage of the legislation.

Mr. HASTERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 4893 and want to thank Chairman POMBO and Ranking Member RAHALL for their hard work on behalf of this important bipartisan legislation. The practice of Indian tribes acquiring lands outside the borders of their tribal homelands for the purposes of opening casinos—often called reservation shopping—is a problem that is spreading throughout the country. In most cases, it forces states and local governments into protracted and costly legal battles. This is especially true in the State of Illinois where off-reservation claims have affected thousands of landowners.

When Congress passed the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act (IGRA) in 1988, they did not intend to authorize reservation shopping by Tribes. In fact, IGRA prohibits gaming on all after-acquired lands and only permits off-reservation gaming under extremely limited circumstances. However, some Tribes are attempting to take advantage of IGRA's provisions and move into lucrative casino markets far from their reservations and lands where they have a historical connection.

This legislation puts an end to reservation shopping by prohibiting attempts to establish off-reservation casinos outside the state where the tribe currently resides. Most importantly, this legislation prevents tribes from filing lawsuits and land claims against private property owners in hopes of getting a casino in the settlement.

One example is in my district where the Prairie Band of Potawatomi Indian Tribe, based in Kansas, has laid claim to 1,280 acres of land in DeKalb County. Their claim is based on an 1829 Treaty between the United States and United Tribes of the Chippewa, Ottawa and Potawatomi that granted the DeKalb acreage for the "use" of a chief named Shabeh-nay and "his band." Shabeh-nay left the land in the 1830's and moved to Kansas with his band. In fact, on December 1, 1845, Shabeh-nay sold 640 acres of the property for $1200—a deed which I have a copy of right here—and federal agencies determined that the land had been reverted to federal ownership when he moved west.

Nonetheless, the Tribe asserts that the 1829 Treaty granted a permanent title to the land that could only be taken away by an Act of Congress. Their claim is based solely on a letter written on the final day of the Clinton Administration by U.S. Department of Interior Solicitor John Leshy that the Tribe had a "credible" claim to the land.

However, instead of requesting that the Department of Interior formally recognize that claim and have the land taken into trust, the Tribe made an open-market purchase of 128 acres of land and declared through a Tribal Council Resolution their sovereign authority and jurisdiction over the property.

It should be noted that according to the Department of Interior, the Tribe has never officially contacted the Department about their claim to this land. Not to mention that another tribe, the Ottawa Tribe of Oklahoma, has made a competing claim to the same land.

Shortly after presenting the resolution to the County, the Tribe attempted to begin work on construction of a satellite office on the property, which the land is not currently zoned for. As a result, the County was forced to issue a stop work order on the project. Subsequently, the Tribe scheduled a public hearing regarding their proposed change in land use. Ultimately, the Tribe's intention is to construct a $715 million "first class gaming, entertainment and resort complex on 1,280 acres of land" according to their proposal issued in 2003. This is despite the fact that tribal gaming is not allowed under State law.

Rather than take the steps outlined by IGRA, and apply to have their land taken into trust by the Department of Interior, the Tribe has instead chosen to force costly legal action by the County for the purpose of having their claim heard in court. This is clearly an attempt to circumvent the review process by the Department of Interior.

Mr. Speaker, even the Supreme Court ruled in 2005 that an Indian Nation cannot regain the sovereignty of lands through open market land purchases. Nonetheless, these claims persist and put private landowners and local governments at risk. Without congressional action, these claims could establish a dangerous precedent whereby tribes could, and would, locate casinos in any state where gaming is allowed.

Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that H.R. 4893 is especially important for the sake of protecting private landowners who have a legitimate right to their land, while providing fair and reasonable treatment for Indian Tribes. I strongly encourage my colleagues to support this important and commonsense legislation.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to H.R. 4893, amending section 20 of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act to restrict off-reservation gaming.

This bill amends the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act for the first time since 1988. The bill would require Tribes to enter into compacts with local government entities, in addition to State governments, to conduct casino-style and non-casino-style gaming (such as bingo).

The U.S. Constitution article 1, section 8 acknowledges Indian Tribes as governments, equal to states and foreign nations. H.R. 4893 includes a provision that forces Tribes to enter into binding negotiations and arbitration with counties and parishes. This is directly counter to the constitutional provision recognizing Tribal governments as sovereign nations equal to Federal and State governments.

I oppose this bill because it is inconsistent with and dismissive of current law and policy. The National Indian Gaming Association, National Congress of American Indians, Native American Rights Fund, and the National Indian Business Association have all expressed concern that this bill requires Indian tribes to negotiate financial arrangements with local municipalities and counties, rather than the arrangement of government-to-government interactions, which is the current precedent.

Indian tribes are sovereign entities, and as such negotiate in government-to-government settings. The provision in this bill to require Indian tribal governments to negotiate with municipalities and counties in effect replaces the state government partner with a sub-government entity. This intrusive action violates the constitutional principle of tribal sovereignty.

A bill with consequences this far-reaching deserves thorough consideration and debate. The fact that this bill has been placed on the suspension calendar, and thus is not subject to amendment, is irresponsible. Tribal sovereignty is a bedrock principle of American law. It should not be dismissed without proper debate that allows every concerned and affected Member of Congress to participate.

The Department of the Interior is presently reviewing Section 20 in order to publish regulations pertaining to the economic opportunities, liability and jurisdictional issues, and policy implications for the greater American Indian community. In March, the Committee on Resources heard Mr. James Cason, Associate Deputy Secretary of the Interior, give testimony in which he expressed the need to review and work on certain elements of the bill. To my knowledge, the issues have not been resolved to the satisfaction of all of the Members of the Committee, let alone Members of Congress who are not on the Resources Committee.

This bill does not belong on the suspension calendar, and should instead be open to review and amendment by all Members of Congress.

I urge my colleagues to speak up for proper procedure in this House, as well as respect the precedent that this bill ignores.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the proposition that it makes no sense to allow tribes to establish gambling casinos in territories that have no relationship to the tribe. But, I am voting against this bill because I believe that people who disagree with me ought to have the right to offer an amendment—for example, those who want to limit Indian tribes' ability to establish off-reservation casinos but would make an exception if the effort is supported by local officials—county board, city council, mayor—or if it is approved by referendum. But, this bill is arrogantly presented in a take it or leave it fashion which would not allow amendments to accomplish that.

Without amendments such as that, this bill is going nowhere. It is simply a cynical effort by the Committee Chairman and the House Republican leadership to pose for political holy pictures by pretending that they are doing something by pushing a bill that is going nowhere.

Even though I am troubled by some provisions of the bill, I could vote for it after the House has had an opportunity to consider legitimate amendments to it. But, I will not accept something that is arbitrarily presented on a take it or leave it basis.

One problem in dealing with this issue is that people on both sides of the question have abused the process. Some tribes have abused existing law and have established casinos in territory totally unrelated to their own territorial base and have attempted to run roughshod over local officials in the process. And, on the other side, the committee and the House leadership have abused the process by refusing to allow amendments to the bill.

If this bill were the product of negotiations, I could even accept that. But, the committee has chosen to arbitrarily bring this take it or leave it proposal to the House floor and has not even had the courtesy to provide a committee report to explain and help analyze the bill.

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, I stand in strong opposition to H.R. 4893. This legislation seeks to make drastic changes to the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act without the option to offer amendments or have a full debate on the floor of the House of Representatives.

Instead of offering legislation that would weaken tribal sovereignty, Congress should be working hard to ensure American Indians are protected from corrupt lobbyists and given the means to care for their members.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for this Congress to take a stand for millions of American Indians throughout the country by voting against H.R. 4893.

Ms. HERSETH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to H.R. 4893. All nine sovereign Tribes in South Dakota have asked me to oppose this legislation. I take my responsibility to consult with Tribes very seriously and share their concerns that this bill will create an unnecessary and unprecedented infringement on Tribal sovereignty.

Though gaming has transformed tribal economies in many places, the harsh reality is that Native Americans remain the poorest people in our country. This was confirmed only a few weeks ago in the Census Bureau's annual poverty report. Gaming alone has not—and will not—fix this problem.

The right of Tribes to conduct gaming is a manifestation of tribal sovereignty and one of its many benefits. Sovereignty allows tribes to move forward with economic development opportunities and to draw strength from their rich history. Sovereignty, and not gaming, is the most valuable tool to lift Indian Country out of poverty. I urge my colleagues to support sovereignty and vote against H.R. 4598.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. KILDEE, for all of his efforts to defend the rights of the first people to inhabit our great Nation.

I strongly oppose H.R. 4893, which would amend the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act to restrict Indian gaming and subject Indian tribes to the whims of local governments.

The United States Constitution recognizes Indian Tribes as sovereign governments, equal to States and Foreign Nations. H.R. 4893 would force Indian Tribes to enter into agreements with counties in order to operate gaming facilities. Tribes are already required to negotiate gaming compacts with State governments. Requiring Tribes to negotiate with local governments is a blatant violation of their sovereignty.

The California Nations Indian Gaming Association, which represents many tribes in my home State of California, is firmly opposed to this bill.

Never before in the history of our Nation have tribes been required to negotiate with local governments. I urge my colleagues to oppose this bill and protect the sovereign rights of American Indian Tribes.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, extreme care should be exercised when Congress legislates in areas affecting tribal sovereignty and issues important to Native Americans.

It is troubling that H.R. 4893 comes to the House floor under a suspension of the rules, which implies the bill is non-controversial and is one which has consensus support and no need of extensive debate or modification.

This is not the case with this attempt to amend the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act. The National Congress of American Indians, the National Indian Gaming Association, and several tribes in the State of Oregon have expressed their opposition. The rules suspension does not permit Congress to debate potential changes and indeed all debate is severely limited.

I am deeply concerned that any changes to the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act be carefully considered and fair and balanced for all parties involved. Sadly, this proposal does not meet that test.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, today the Republican leadership decided to consider legislation that would substantially revise the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act (IGRA)—the first time we have been allowed to address our concerns with IGRA since it was enacted in 1988. The bill we are voting for today, while it does much to stop the most egregious forms of reservation shopping allowed by IGRA, is not wholly adequate. Suspending the House rules to vote on this bill forces my colleagues and me to settle for a makeshift and inadequate solution to the proliferating problem of off-reservation gaming. Since Mr. POMBO'S bill fails to thoroughly address the gaming issues facing my constituents, I would have liked the opportunity to offer an amendment that reflects the concerns of the people in Marin and Sonoma Counties. I sincerely hope that the Republican Majority will allow for a full debate that includes the opportunity for Members to amend this bill, as we should not shortchange our constituents in the process of passing this important piece of legislation. Circumventing traditional House procedure, obstructing debate, and forcing us to vote on inadequate legislation is wrong, and I will be voting "no" on H.R. 4893.

Mr. SHADEGG. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 4893, the Restricting Indian Gaming to Homelands of Tribes Act. The bill before us improves upon the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act (IGRA) by restricting the interstate expansion of Indian gambling and including states and local communities in the application review process at the Department of Interior. I intend to vote in favor of this bill as it does improve upon the existing law, however I believe IGRA is deeply flawed and in need of more far-reaching reforms in the future.

Congress passed the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act in 1988 in reaction to an ongoing expansion of casino-style gambling on reservations. Following the Supreme Court's Cabazon ruling that states did not have the authority to regulate tribal casinos, Congress elected to establish a framework for Indian gambling in an effort to control its growth. Despite IGRA's passage, or some would say because of it, annual Indian gambling revenues exploded from $100 million in 1988 to over $23 billion in 2005 alone. Today, there are over 410 tribal gaming operations in 32 states.

IGRA requires states to negotiate compacts with tribes wishing to establish casinos. If a state refuses to negotiate, the tribe can sue or the Secretary of Interior can unilaterally grant a casino license to the tribe. In other words, tribes are free to operate casinos in states or communities that do not desire such enterprises. H.R. 4893 attempts to address this problem by requiring tribes applying for a casino license to enter into a memorandum of understanding with local communities regarding shared infrastructure needs, such as roads or utilities, and by requiring the concurrence of a state's governor. However, these provisions only apply on a prospective basis, exempting 23 pending casino applications from the additional requirements. I believe the bill should have applied to these applications as well. Furthermore, the underlying IGRA requirement on states to negotiate compacts or else have a compact dictated by federal officials raises serious constitutional and federalism concerns as a possible violation of the 10th Amendment.

I strongly support the RIGHT Act's ban on so-called "reservation shopping," preventing a tribe that already has land in trust from acquiring non-contiguous lands for gaming purposes. I also applaud the bill's ban on out-of-state off-reservation casinos.

Mr. Speaker, the RIGHT Act is a good bill. While I would like to have seen a stronger bill that undertook more basic reforms of IGRA, the RIGHT Act does take several steps forward by involving local communities and states and installing limits on the expansion of tribal gaming off-reservation and across state lines. I urge my colleagues to support the bill, and continue to work toward further reform in the future.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have always opposed using the suspension process for consideration of controversial legislation. Once again, the Republican leadership is abusing the suspension process to limit debate by bringing H.R. 4893 to the floor as a suspension item. Accordingly, I cannot vote to suspend the rules.

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I cannot vote for this bill, for several reasons.

To begin with, as the debate in the Resources Committee made clear, this is not the kind of measure that should be considered under a procedure that rigidly limits debate and prevents consideration of any amendments. Instead, it is a controversial proposal that can affect many parts of the country. All members whose districts could be affected—or who have concerns for other reasons—should have the opportunity to propose amendments that they think would improve the legislation.

But regardless of the procedures controlling debate today, I think the bill has such serious flaws that it should be rejected—which was why I voted against it in committee.

As others have noted, it would make a drastic change in current law regarding the regulation of Indian gaming, changes that do not properly reflect and respect the status of tribal governments and that have led the majority of tribes and tribal organizations to oppose the legislation.

I do not think such far-reaching changes are necessary to address the problems cited by the bill's supporters. On the contrary, I think the Interior Department already has ample authority to resolve those problems through regulation.

Finally, some have suggested that the legislation should be passed to resolve questions raised in 2004 when two tribes now based in Oklahoma asserted a claim to lands in Colorado. However, I do not think that is accurate.

Nothing in this bill would prevent tribes from making such land claims in the future. And because no legislation can bind a future Congress, the bill would not prevent a legislative settlement of such claims—the professed goal of those asserting the Colorado claim—which could involve authorization of Indian gaming on some of the lands involved.

I urge the House to reject this bill.

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, I have no additional speakers, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. POMBO) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4893, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

SEC. 13. REPORT ON OPTION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF A DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS MEDICAL CENTER IN OKALOOSA COUNTY, FLORIDA.

Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report identifying and outlining the various options available to the Department for the placement of a Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Okaloosa County, Florida. The report shall include the following:

(1) The feasibility of entering into a partnership with Eglin Air Force Base for the construction and operation of a new, joint Department of Veterans Affairs-Department of Defense facility.

(2) The medical, legal, and financial implications of each of the options identified, including recommendations regarding any statutory changes necessary for the Department to carry out any of the options identified.

(3) A detailed cost-benefit analysis of each of the options identified.

(4) Estimates regarding the length of time and associated costs needed to complete such a facility under each of the options identified.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BUYER) and the gentleman from Maine (Mr. MICHAUD) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

H.R. 5815, the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Facility Authorization Act of 2006, would ensure that we will act officially and provide the right facilities at the right places given the current veteran populations that we can expect in the coming years.

I thank my colleagues, HENRY BROWN, the chairman of our Subcommittee on Health, and MIKE MICHAUD, the subcommittee ranking member, for their hard work on a bipartisan bill that deploys new models for providing health care. These models show great promise for veterans who want cutting-edge care as close to their home as possible.

Mr. Speaker, the very nature of health care delivery has changed dramatically over the last 15 years, yet the VA has not built a single hospital in that time. Some challenges ahead of us deal with, for example, in New Orleans the damage by Hurricane Katrina and that along the coast of Mississippi. Some put a price tag on a new New Orleans VA facility at around $600 million. I recently toured a new cutting-edge tertiary care hospital in Indiana built for about $280 million. So trying to figure out how we build new hospitals for the government and at the same time trying to do one that is cost effective is the challenge.

When we look at the VA, the VA has some aging infrastructure and we must replace some facilities, not only the ones damaged by the hurricanes, but also we need to modernize others. This bill will help rationalize the work, including the actions necessary along the Gulf Coast where we restored the VA medical centers in Biloxi and in New Orleans.

We will also move forward with construction in Charleston, South Carolina, with regard to delivering a new model, and Mr. BROWN will be talking about that in a moment. We will be purchasing property in Denver. We will work toward a facility in San Juan, Puerto Rico. The bill would authorize the construction of 17 major facility projects authorized in the last session of Congress, including Las Vegas and Orlando, all of which align with the demand projected for the next two decades.

Mr. Speaker, after World War II, the VA faced a huge influx of returning service members and a worrisome shortage of doctors. Responding to the challenge, the VA in 1946 formed its affiliation program with medical schools.

A wise decision at the VA, made two generations ago by some far-seeing leaders, among them Army General Omar Bradley, a post war VA administrator, enabled the agency to avail itself of the country's best doctors and nurses, and opened VA to the country's best health care practices, ensuring it had the capacity to care for millions of new patients.

According to VA, more than 150 VA facilities have affiliations with more than 100 medical schools, dozens of dental schools and more than 1,200 other schools across the country. VA trains 50,000 students and residents each year, more than half of the physicians practicing in the United States, and a similar portion of nurses, I might add, have experienced parts of their professional education in the VA health care system. The VA has built up considerable experience leveraging service and quality throughout this collaboration.

As the visionaries of 1946 dared to look beyond the familiar patterns, we must now be willing to consider the possibilities that new ideas generate. These new ideas can also generate controversy. Some veterans are concerned that some form of collaboration may dilute the "veterans' identity" of a VA hospital. That is not an intention on our part at all.

Mr. Speaker, the facts show that the last 50 years of affiliation have meant better VA care for veterans. If a veteran in the Capital area went to Washington, DC Veteran Center for an emergency, that veteran would likely be seen by a doctor also on staff at the George Washington University Medical Center. A veteran being seen at the Ralph Johnson VA Medical Center in Charleston, South Carolina, is almost certain, the chances are about 90 percent, to be seen by a doctor also on staff with the Medical University of South Carolina. You do not hear complaints from veterans about these arrangements.

H.R. 5815 would position VA to leverage existing affiliation relationships with top notch medical universities and build a new relationship with these universities, while preserving the veterans' identity through a collaboration of shared facilities.

In Biloxi, the bill would take advantage of the joint-use facility being shared with Keesler Air Force Base in Biloxi.

Veterans in the New Orleans area would benefit from a new agreement that we are most hopeful could have fruition with Louisiana State University for the construction and operation of a collocated joint-use medical facility.

In Charleston, South Carolina, we would move forward with the building and operation of a joint-use facility with the Medical University of South Carolina.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation would authorize the purchase of a site in Denver for the ultimate replacement of the medical facility there and would require the VA to report to us and our Senate counterpart on the viability of engaging in a public-private partnership that would reduce taxpayer burden as construction begins.

Mr. Speaker, resources are not on the side of isolated facilities. Enhanced collaboration means that the most expensive equipment, such as medical imaging devices, could be shared between VA and university facilities. As new technology becomes available with its inevitable steep price tag, it could be more easily acquired through these collaborative efforts.

Sharing expensive capital assets reduces duplication and waste. Physicians can more easily travel from the university facility to the VA's facility. That, in turn, means that the veterans will get quality care much faster. This logic has appealed to veterans advocates with whom I have spoken.

This bill would also help the VA grow the expertise that has gone fallow over the past decade and a half, since VA's last construction project. H.R. 5815 would establish within the VA a senior Civil Service position whose role would be to provide department-wide executive leadership over all construction and facility management.

Mr. Speaker, the total cost of this legislation is approximately $2.4 billion.

Shortly I will turn to my distinguished colleague, Mr. BROWN of South Carolina, chairman of the Subcommittee on Health, for a detailed explanation of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MICHAUD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of H.R. 5815. This legislation will authorize the Department of Veterans Affairs major medical facility projects and leases for fiscal year 2006 and 2007. I wish to commend my good friend and colleague, the chairman of the committee, Chairman BUYER, for his willingness to bring this legislation forward to the House. It is an excellent piece of legislation. I want to commend also a good friend and colleague, the chairman of the Health Subcommittee, HENRY BROWN of South Carolina, for his work on this legislation as well.

It is a good bill. It is long overdue that the Committee on Veterans Affairs and this Congress get back to our job of authorizing construction of veterans medical facilities. This bill takes important steps forward in rebuilding the VA's presence in New Orleans and Mississippi. It is important that we do all that we can to help our veterans in the Gulf region. This bill also authorizes many of the VA's most urgent projects, projects whose authorization expires at the end of the month.

I am eagerly awaiting further study and discussion of possible collaborative efforts of the VA that may result in both enhanced care for patients and savings for our taxpayers. Although I am excited about these possibilities, we must also make sure that the needs of veterans are fully met and that the veterans health care system retains its distinct identity as a health care system dedicated to the unique needs of our veterans.

If this health care system is to maintain its position at the forefront of American medicine, then we must make prudent investments in the infrastructure that will enable this care to take place. We must modernize these facilities that are antiquated, we must build new facilities in areas that are seeing increased numbers of veterans and we must take steps to ensure that the underserved areas do not remain underserved for long.

I would like to thank the staff of both sides of the aisle for their hard work on this legislation. They put a lot of time and effort in this legislation.

This is a good, bipartisan bill, and I hope our committee can bring more good bills like this one to the floor before the end of the year. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 5815.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6½ minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. BROWN).

Mr. BROWN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I want to thank our committee chairman, Mr. BUYER, for all of his hard work in bringing this bill to the House floor this morning. Also I would like to recognize the work of my good friend and ranking member of the subcommittee, Mr. MICHAUD of Maine, for his contribution and bipartisanship and cooperation in moving this bill forward.

I believe it is vital that VA better manage their medical facility capital assets to meet the needs of our Nation's veterans. VA has not constructed a new hospital in nearly 15 years, and as a result, a good amount of this institutional memory has been lost. It is important that we reassemble the processes that will allow VA to build appropriately sized facilities where they are truly needed and, at the same time, be prudent stewards of the taxpayers' money. Opportunities exist to reevaluate the traditional thinking and create new models for facility financing and construction that take full advantage of existing and potential collaborative relationships with medical universities, research partners, and other nonprofit organizations.

My bill, H.R. 5815, as amended, would ensure that major medical facility projects are appropriately prioritized and support the out-year health care demands of the veteran population. It would reinstitute a sense of centralized, consolidated institutional knowledge within the VA in the areas of construction and project management and also require VA to embrace opportunities to improve the quality of the care delivered through collaborative partnerships.

Collaboration is becoming increasingly essential in delivering health care across the Nation. So long as we remain true to the distinct identity of the VA, and so long as we ensure the continued quality associated with VA care, VA collaboration on joint ventures with its extensive medical university affiliations and the Department of Defense can be mutually advantageous for all organizations by reducing capital and operational costs and eliminating duplications of clinical infrastructure such as operating rooms, labs, and expensive medical equipment.

Let me briefly highlight some of the measures included in the bill. H.R. 5815 would authorize a total of about $2.4 billion for VA medical facility construction projects and leases.

Section 2 of the bill would authorize $310 million to restore the VA medical center in Biloxi, Mississippi, and consolidate the services performed in Gulfport, Mississippi because of the damage from Hurricane Katrina. The project authorized may only be carried out as part of the joint-use facility shared by VA with Keesler Air Force Base, which is also in Biloxi and located in very close proximity to the existing VA medical center.

Section 3 of the bill would authorize $100 million for VA to enter into an agreement with the Louisiana State University to design, construct, and operate a co-located, joint-use medical facility in or near New Orleans to replace the medical center damaged by Hurricane Katrina in August of 2005. The $100 million for advance planning and design effectively places a ceiling on how much can be expended while LSU and VA work toward a viable, collaborative model of care. This allows Congress the ability to assess progress and exercise prudent oversight prior to the actual construction of the facility.

Section 4 of the bill would authorize $70 million for VA to enter into an agreement with the Medical University of South Carolina to design, construct, and operate a co-located, joint-use medical facility in Charleston, South Carolina, to replace the Ralph H. Johnson VA Medical Center. Similar to New Orleans, this provision allows the Department and Medical University the opportunity to thoroughly examine the opportunities and benefits that may exist as a result of co-location, while only providing the funding necessary to plan and design a new facility. I would like to share my special thanks with the chairman of the committee, STEVE BUYER, for his diligence on this project.

We have come a long way with the VA over the past years, and I appreciate the momentum you have helped provide. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Section 5 of the bill would authorize $98 million for VA to purchase a site for the replacement of the VA medical center in Denver, Colorado. It would also require VA to submit a report to this committee and our Senate counterpart on the viability of entering into a public-private partnership for the construction and operation of the anticipated replacement facility. This would allow the taxpayers a reprieve from front-end loading the capital costs associated with building a state-of-the-art facility.

Section 6 of the bill would extend authorization for 17 major medical facility construction projects previously authorized under Public Law 108-170, but for which VA is unlikely to have contracts awarded by the end of this fiscal year. The bill would authorize $1.76 billion for these projects. The projects include the construction of new medical centers in Las Vegas, Nevada, and Orlando, Florida, and the expansion of the Spinal Cord Injury Center in Tampa, Florida.

Section 7 of the bill would authorize the appropriation of $52 million and give VA the authorization to enter into certain major medical facility leases in eight different areas for needed outpatient clinics.

Section 9 of the bill expresses the sense of Congress that VA should take steps to explore all options prior to our approval of funding expensive renovations in San Juan, Puerto Rico, that in the end will still fall short of the capacity needed to handle the projected workload for the region. VA would be required to provide a report on the various options available, including the option of a public or nonprofit organization partnership to construct and operate a new facility that would replace the current medical center.

Section 11 of the bill would establish within VA a new career position with responsibility for construction and facilities management across all segments of the Department.

Mr. Speaker, this is a carefully developed bill that represents the diligence and bipartisan work of the committee in this jurisdiction over VA construction matters. The key provisions of H.R. 5815 are supported by the administration, and I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this legislation.

Mr. MICHAUD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the good gentleman from California, BOB FILNER.

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding and thank the committee and the Chair for moving this bill forward.

I rise also in support of H.R. 5815. It has been some time now since Congress acted to address the health care infrastructure of the Department of Veterans Affairs. I am pleased, along with everyone else, that the Committee on Veterans' Affairs has reasserted its traditional role in this area.

We have supported the CARES process, the Capital Asset Realignment for Enhanced Services, but have always maintained that the most important part of that acronym is at the end, that is, "enhanced services." Realignment is certainly essential, but enhanced services are critical.

As the CARES report to the Secretary stated in 2004: "VA infrastructure and support facilities, many built in the aftermath of World War II, are not all configured for contemporary health care delivery, and some are no longer appropriately located. Moreover, with an average age exceeding 50 years, these buildings are becoming more costly to maintain."

We all know that VA health care is a national asset. Our committee has been trying to ensure that veterans receive the health care they have earned and deserve. While health care funding should remain our biggest priority, we must also see to it that the facilities where veterans receive this health care are modern and up to date, as well as conveniently located to their place of residence. It is difficult to provide the most modern health care in facilities that are half a century old. It is time that we recognize this and move forward in bringing the aging VA infrastructure up to the standards of the 21st century.

This bill is an important step in the process. It provides the authorization for the VA to complete the projects it has started. It provides the authorization for us to rebuild VA facilities that were destroyed by Hurricane Katrina, and it provides authority to further the VA's collaborative efforts, efforts that hold the promise of enhancing health care for our veterans while maintaining the unique identity of the VA health care system.

We must ensure that VA construction projects are authorized, that the resources are provided to quickly complete them, and that we provide all the resources needed to maintain high quality health care in the Veterans Administration. We must keep our promises to the men and women who have served our Nation in the past and, of course, are serving us today.

So I thank my colleagues on the Veterans' Affairs Committee for their work on this issue and urge speedy passage of this important legislation

Mr. MICHAUD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman and fighter for veterans issues from the great State of Florida, CORRINE BROWN.

Ms. CORRINE BROWN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support this bill and the hard work put in by Chairman BROWN and Ranking Member MICHAUD.

I am especially pleased that the committee has chosen to authorize the construction of a new medical center facility in Orlando, Florida, for $377.7 million and to require the facility to be located at the site in Lake Nona known as site selection C.

It has been documented for 25 years, let me repeat, 25 years, that a VA hospital is badly needed in central Florida. As a 14-year member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, I have been working to obtain a hospital in this area, something that has always been one of my top committee priorities. When the Naval Training Center was closed, I was excited to work with former Secretary Jesse Brown to open the clinic that was badly needed for central Florida veterans. It is time for a full medical center.

It is important that the veterans of the central Florida region have a VA medical center that will serve all the needs to provide the type of health care that the VA is known for.

I am especially pleased that the VA medical center will be co-located with the new Florida State medical school near an urban medical complex, in an area where doctors and research professors can work collaboratively on the needs of our area veterans. As many studies have shown, teaching hospitals give the best care and for the veterans to have access to this care and the veterans to have the same access is invaluable. It is the ultimate urban model, one that needs to be followed at all levels of medical treatment from Florida and throughout the Nation.

The many hearings we have held to discuss the benefits of working together have shown the benefits, and the path has been set for success in other institutions. This is a win-win for everyone in the VA system in the central Florida area, and the veterans are truly deserving of this facility.

Again, this is a great day and long overdue day for the central Florida community and for central Florida veterans. It is also a great day for all veterans from all over the Nation who will come to central Florida.

Thank you again, Mr. Chairman and Mr. Ranking Member.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield 2½ minutes to the delegate from Puerto Rico (Mr. FORTUÑO).

Mr. FORTUÑO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Veterans Affairs Medical Facility Authorization Act. This bipartisan proposal, which I am honored to co-sponsor with Chairman BROWN and Ranking Member MICHAUD, would authorize major medical facility projects and major medical facility leases for the Department of Veterans Affairs for fiscal years 2006 and 2007.

As Puerto Rico's sole representative in Congress, I want to thank Chairman BROWN and Ranking Member MICHAUD for agreeing to include section 9 of this bill. This section recognizes the need for medical facility improvements in San Juan, Puerto Rico. I request that the Secretary of Veterans Affairs take steps to explore all options for addressing these concerns, including the option of a public/private partnership to construct and operate a facility that would replace the current Department of Veterans Affairs medical center in San Juan, Puerto Rico. The San Juan VA Medical Center is a 319-acute-care-bed facility with documented condition deficiencies.

In October of 2002, a decision was made to develop a two-phased strategy for the San Juan VA Medical Center: phase one, a new six-story tower with 314 beds; phase two, a main building renovation that will include asbestos abatement, sprinklers, utility improvements, and would correct seismic deficiencies.

On April 14, 2006, an $84.05 million construction contract was awarded for phase one. The building is expected to be completed in May 2009. The existing facility has approximately 630,845 gross square feet, and the proposed new tower would provide an additional 250,000 feet. However, the CARES review determined that San Juan, based on current and projected workload, requires a total of 1,283,547 gross square feet to efficiently service our veterans. The current two-phase plan still falls far short of the requirements identified under CARES by nearly 402,702 gross square feet.

Given the documented substantial facility deficiencies, I am concerned about the U.S. taxpayers continuing to fund expensive renovations in San Juan which will ultimately fail to meet the capacity needed to handle the predicted workload.

For this reason, this bill requires that no later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this act, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall submit to the Committee of Veterans' Affairs of the House and the Senate a report identifying and outlining the various options available to the Department for replacing the current Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Puerto Rico.

Mr. Speaker, Puerto Rican veterans have served with honor and distinction in the Armed Forces of the United States in all wars and conflicts since 1917. Currently, over 9,000 of our men and women are active in our Nation's war on terrorism. Puerto Ricans have always responded to the call of defending our Nation, ranking number sixth in per capita contribution in Army, Reserve, and National Guard, fourth in the Reserve deployments when compared to units, and four Medals of Honor in Korea.

In closing, I would like to once again thank Chairmen BUYER and BROWN, Ranking Members EVANS and MICHAUD, and committee staff for their report and their fine work.

Mr. BUYER. I thank the delegate for his work on this bill.

I yield 1¼ minutes to Mr. STEARNS of Florida.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the time from my distinguished colleague.

I am delighted today that we are voting today on H.R. 5815 that includes about $85 million for the Gainesville, Florida Malcom Randall Medical Center to correct patient privacy deficiencies. My colleagues, north Florida and south Georgia veterans rely on this hospital, and it will be well served by this appropriation. Further, this bill authorizes a long-awaited hospital in Orlando. And like the hospital in Gainesville, there is a synergistic collaboration of VA, academia, and industry research all coming together to make things better.

We initiated the Capital Asset Realignment for Enhanced Services (CARES) process a few years ago. It is a comprehensive, objective system-wide approach to projecting into the future the appropriate function, size, and location of VA facilities. Out of CARES and then-Secretary Principi's recommendation came the decisions on which we are voting today. It was carefully thought out, and I commend the chairman.

What we learned from CARES is nothing we don't all know: veterans, like many seniors, are retiring to Florida. Every day they are crossing the border coming into our hospitals in the southern States, and we need to put the care where the veterans are coming and where they are located, Mr. Speaker. So I look forward to voting on this, and I appreciate the chairman's help.

Mr. MICHAUD. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Nevada who has been a true advocate for veterans health care, Congresswoman SHELLEY BERKLEY.

Ms. BERKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I rise in strong support of this remarkably good piece of legislation, and I would like to thank both Mr. BROWN and Mr. MICHAUD, in particular the chairman Mr. BUYER and our ranking member Mr. FILNER, for bringing us to this point with this legislation.

I had the great pleasure of hosting both Mr. FILNER and Mr. BUYER in Las Vegas so they could see for themselves firsthand what the needs of my veterans were. The day that Mr. BUYER was touring our shared VA hospital facility, the hospital facility was on divert, and unfortunately every other hospital in the Las Vegas area was also on divert. It is a very common occurrence in the fastest growing community in the United States, and that is why this is such an important piece of legislation.

I represent the Las Vegas area of the State of Nevada. It is the fastest growing community in the United States. But I also have the fastest growing veterans population in the United States, and no health care facilities in which to treat these 200,000-plus veterans that call southern Nevada home.

After the CARES study, it was determined that Las Vegas was indeed entitled to an entire medical complex, and I am very happy to say that this piece of legislation authorizes a medical complex that is comprised of three buildings, an 80-bed VA hospital, full-service VA hospital, a full-service outpatient clinic to take care of the needs of our veterans, and a 120-bed long-term facility which is so desperately needed in the southern Nevada area.

It will be located on 147 acres in north Las Vegas on the corner of the 215 and Pecos Road. This land has already been transferred to the VA, so we don't have to worry about the land. This land has already been blessed by the Southern Nevada Paiute Tribe in a remarkable ceremony. We have already been allocated $259 million, and the VA Secretary in his testimony in front of our committee has stated on numerous occasions that the balance of the amount to finish this VA medical complex will be contained in the 2008 budget. I am absolutely delighted to be able to go back to the veterans in southern Nevada and let them know that my colleagues in the United States Congress recognized their needs and are answering the call and providing the needs for our veterans.

I am looking forward to the groundbreaking that will be taking place in October. I am waiting for the VA Secretary to let us know when this groundbreaking will take place. We will do vertical construction at the beginning of next year, and hopefully this complex will be completed for our veterans in 2010.

Mr. BUYER. I yield to Mr. FEENEY of Florida 2 minutes.

Mr. FEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Chairman BUYER, I want to thank Chairman BROWN, and I want to thank Ranking Member MICHAUD, because as several of my colleagues from central Florida have said, our community in central Florida, which is home to almost 850,000 veterans, has for 30 years waited to get service that much of the rest of the country has enjoyed.

Over 45 percent of our veterans are underserved, according to the veterans' own criteria in having to travel more than 2 hours for treatment. That doesn't include the many people that call central Florida their winter home from all over the districts from my friends around the rest of the country. It doesn't include the veterans that come as tourists that need immediate attention. We will be able to finally, after three decades, provide the attention that these much deserved veterans need.

I would tell you that over 50 percent of our veterans have a service-connected disability; 18 percent of them have posttraumatic stress syndrome, and it is very difficult for them to travel as far as Jacksonville or Tampa or beyond. We are the largest metropolitan area in the country that is not currently served by a VA medical center. We thank the CARES commission. We congratulate our friends in Las Vegas for their much needed funding for a new hospital, and we are very, very grateful for our colleagues.

I will finish by saying that this site is a very, very exciting site. Five years ago, there was simply nothing existing here. Within 5 years, we will have a University of Central Florida brand-new medical school. We will have a Burnham Institute, one of the finest research medical facilities in the entire world, all sorts of spin-off businesses. The University of Central Florida, the University of Florida, probably Florida State University will all have medical research facilities located nearby.

In sum I would say that, out of nowhere, we have built a medical city, and in the midst of it our great central Florida veterans will be being treated. They will remember what we have done here today. Again, I express my appreciation for all of you.

Today, there are more than 26.5 million veterans living in the United States and Puerto Rico with more than 1.8 million of them residing in the State of Florida. That is the second highest total in America, only behind California. More than one-third of these live in the Central Florida area alone. This number does not include those veterans who choose to make Florida their home during the winter months of the year and those veterans who visit the numerous vacation areas in Central Florida, which can number in the tens of thousands.

According to the VA, Central Florida is the number one destination for combat veterans and veterans 65 years of age or older. It is also the number one area for veterans who have 50 percent or more service connected disability, and 18 percent of our veterans have post traumatic stress disorder (PTSD).

Yet Orlando is the largest metropolitan area in the country that is not serviced by a VA medical center. In 2004, Orlando and its surrounding area was identified by the Department of Veterans Affairs through the Capital Asset Realignment for Enhanced Services (CARES) Commission as an area in need of a new VA medical center. CARES was intended to be a comprehensive, system-wide approach, identifying the demand for VA care and projecting into the future the appropriate function, size, and location for VA facilities. At this same time, CARES identified the need for a new medical complex in Las Vegas, Nevada. This need was appropriate and warranted, and the facility in Las Vegas has received funding and is scheduled to break ground this year. However, a hospital in Central Florida still remains an idea.

Orlando area veterans along with the 128 active veterans service organizations in the Central Florida region average 2 hours of travel time to get to VA hospitals located in Tampa, Gainesville, and Jacksonville. This includes veterans who live in Orange, Seminole, Brevard, and Volusia counties. In fact, only 45% of our veterans are within the VA's access standards for hospital care. An Orlando VA medical center would cut most drive times in half, making it more convenient and cut down travel costs. A closer facility would also mean veterans would pursue the medical services provided by the VA and lead to a better quality of life, which they deserve.

Concerns have arisen from Central Florida veterans associations in the area that a VA medical center will not come to fruition. At a May 1st public hearing administered by the Orlando VA Hospital Site Selection Committee, many veterans were accusing lawmakers of not caring for veterans because of the slow progress that has been made.

As of now, $25 million had been authorized by the VA for the Orlando VA Medical Center to assist in site selection, design, and planning. Choosing a site needs to be done while balancing the accessibility needs of Central Florida's veterans, along with the long-term economic impact the hospital will have on the State. This is essential as we look for ways to leverage funds to maximize investment benefit.

This bill would authorize more than $377 million for the construction of this desperately needed facility at the Lake Nona site. This site will include a proposed medical school for the University of Central Florida and the future site of a laboratory research facility from the Burnha Institute, one of the world's leading healthcare and cancer research institutes.

This stunning trifecta for Orlando: the VA hospital, the UCF Medical School, and the Burnham Institute will be valuable to both local veterans and the VA, as the medical school and research environment will provide insight into innovative and cutting-edge technologies which could serve as a vehicle for sharing expensive medical equipment. We also have confirmation from Orlando's Florida hospital that they look forward to partnering with the VA to help share in the costs of diagnostic equipment and contribute to residency and staffing needs. This commitment will ensure that those who have served our country have access to additional resources to further enhance the medical services the VA may offer to them.

Veterans in Central Florida have been waiting for nearly three decades for a new complex that has continuously met delays. I appreciate this opportunity to express Central Florida's immediate and urgent need for a medical facility and I strongly urge passage of this bill so that our growing veterans' population may finally have appropriate access to vital health care services.

Mr. MICHAUD. Mr. Speaker, once again I would like to thank the good chairman of the committee, Chairman BUYER, and chairman of the House Subcommittee, HENRY BROWN, for their hard work that they have done on this legislation, really making it a concerted effort to bringing on board today so that we can vote on this legislation. But, once again, the staff. I know this is not an easy process. The staff on both sides of the aisle have worked very diligently in this effort. So I do want to commend the staff on both sides of the aisle, and I really appreciate the chairman's strong advocacy for veterans and veterans issues, and enjoyed working with him on this legislation.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHAUD. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BUYER. Likewise, you do such good because you are a genuine human being, and I want to thank you for your leadership. And it was a treat and joy to work with you and Chairman BROWN on this, along with your staff.

I appreciate you also recognizing the staff. Mr. Tucker who is sitting there next to you, when I think of his work, and Mr. Weekly and Ms. Dunn, but also that of Jim Lariviere, Jim who now has been activated as a colonel in the Marine Corps in Afghanistan, Kelly Craven and Jim Holley who is also here on the floor for their hard work.

But I also want to pause and, if I might, this is a pretty large bill and we have had to work with a lot of different Members. So if I might, I would like to thank, in particular, Mr. MICHAUD for your work. I want to thank Mr. EVANS for his bipartisanship and his good work and his leadership. I also want to thank Chairman BROWN for his work on the Charleston project, Mr. FORTUÑO for his work in Puerto Rico, Ms. BERKLEY in Las Vegas, Mr. BEAUPREZ in Denver, Mr. BAKER for New Orleans.

And we got a full court press when it came to Orlando. We had leadership of Mr. STEARNS, Mr. FEENEY, Ms. BROWN, Chairman MILLER, Mr. KELLER, Chairman BILIRAKIS, and Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE. So we got the full court press when it came to Orlando; we got the message. And it was just a real treat in working with all of them, and I thank the gentleman for recognizing them.

Mr. MICHAUD. And, likewise, it has been a real treat. And even though I do not represent the State of Florida, there are a lot of snow birds from the State of Maine, veterans that go to Florida. So I have heard from my veterans as well as far as the facilities in Florida. I really appreciate your comments, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Speaker, I would yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5815 is a well-thought-out bill. It is the product of thorough bipartisan collaboration. I urge my colleagues to act favorably now and move this legislation to the Senate so that we can give our veterans the assurances of new and improved medical facilities.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of H.R. 5815, the VA construction authorization bill. I commend my colleagues on the Committee in producing this important piece of legislation.

I am glad to see Congress once again fulfilling its responsibility to authorize new health care facilities for veterans. This is an important task. Veterans deserve the highest quality of health care.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BUYER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5815, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material relative to H.R. 5815, as amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. GREEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I was absent from Washington on Wednesday morning, September 13, 2006. As a result, I was not recorded for rollcall votes Nos. 438 and 439. Had I been present, I would have voted “aye” on rollcall Nos. 438 and 439.

EXPRESSING SENSE OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES ON FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF TERRORIST ATTACKS LAUNCHED AGAINST THE UNITED STATES ON SEPTEMBER 11, 2001

Mr. KING of New York. Mr. Speaker, as the designee of the majority leader and pursuant to H. Res. 996, I call up the resolution (H. Res. 994) expressing the sense of the House of Representatives on the fifth anniversary of the terrorist attacks launched against the United States on September 11, 2001, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The text of the resolution is as follows

H. RES. 994

Whereas on the morning of September 11, 2001, while Americans were attending to their daily routines, terrorists hijacked four civilian aircraft, crashing two of them into the towers of the World Trade Center in New York City and a third into the Pentagon outside Washington, D.C.;

Whereas the heroic actions of the passengers and crew aboard United Flight 93 prevented it from being used as a weapon against America and ultimately led the terrorists to crash the aircraft into a rural field in Shanksville, Pennsylvania, killing all those aboard;

Whereas nearly 3,000 innocent people were murdered in these attacks;

Whereas the terrorist attacks were an act of war by al-Qaeda, its leadership and affiliates against the United States and the many peaceful, democratic nations of the world;

Whereas by targeting symbols of American strength and prosperity, the attacks were intended to assail the principles, values and freedoms of the American people and to intimidate the Nation and its allies;

Whereas when the gravest moments came that day, first responders and many ordinary citizens, relying on courage, instinct, and concern for their fellow man, rushed toward the flaming buildings in order to rescue the victims of the attacks;

Whereas in the days subsequent to the brutal attacks on the Nation, the Government vowed never to be caught off guard again, to take the fight to the terrorists, and to take immediate measures to prepare and protect the Nation against a new type of faceless, inhuman, and amorphous enemy committed to the death and destruction of the American way of life;

Whereas Congress passed, and the President signed, numerous laws to assist victims, combat the forces of terrorism, protect the Homeland and support the members of the Armed Forces who defend American interests at home and abroad, including the USA PATRIOT Act of 2001 and its 2006 reauthorization, the Homeland Security Act of 2002, the Enhanced Border Security and Visa Entry Reform Act of 2002, the Maritime Transportation Security Act of 2002, and the Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act of 2004;

Whereas the House of Representatives in the 109th Congress passed the Border Protection, Antiterrorism, and Illegal Immigration Control Act of 2005, the SAFE Port Act of 2006, and the 21st Century Emergency Communications Act of 2006;

Whereas terrorist attacks that have occurred since September 11, 2001, in Egypt, India, Indonesia, Jordan, Spain, the United Kingdom and elsewhere, remind all Americans of the brutal intentions of the terrorists and the ever-present threat they pose to the principles of freedom;

Whereas British authorities, in cooperation with United States and Pakistani officials, recently disrupted an airline terror plot to commit mass murder by blowing up civilian aircraft bound for the United States;

Whereas Federal agencies, including those within the Intelligence Community, the Department of Justice, and the Department of Homeland Security, worked effectively with American allies to investigate and disrupt the airline terror plot and to implement appropriate security procedures in response to the plot;

Whereas United States law enforcement and intelligence agencies and allies of the United States around the world have worked together to detect and disrupt terrorist networks and numerous terror plots since September 11, 2001, including a plan to attack targets on the west coast of the United States using hijacked aircraft in 2002, a plan to attack targets on the east coast of the United States using hijacked civilian aircraft in 2003, a plan to blow up apartment buildings in the United States in 2002, a plan to attack urban targets in the United Kingdom using explosives in 2004, a plan to attack Westerners in Karachi, Pakistan, in 2003, a plan to attack Heathrow Airport using hijacked aircraft in 2003, a plan to conduct large-scale bombings in the United Kingdom in 2004, a plan to attack ships in the Arabian Gulf in 2002, a plan to attack ships in the Straits of Hormuz in 2002, a plan to attack a United States tourist site outside the United States in 2003, a plan to attack Queen Alia Airport in Jordan in 2006, a plan to attack high-profile buildings in Ontario, Canada, in 2006, and a plan to attack an El Al aircraft in 2006;

Whereas the Nation is indebted to the brave military, intelligence, and law enforcement personnel serving in Afghanistan, Iraq, and elsewhere who are on the front lines of the global war on terrorism;

Whereas the Nation is safer than it was on September 11, 2001, but more must always be done because the terrorist threat is latently entrenched, nimble, resourceful, and dedicated to the murder of Americans and the destruction of freedom; and

Whereas the passage of five years has not diminished the pain caused by the senseless loss of nearly 3,000 persons killed on September 11, 2001: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the House of Representatives—

(1) continues to recognize September 11 as a day to remember and mourn those who lost their lives that fateful day;

(2) encourages Americans to make September 11 a day of national service;

(3) extends its deepest sympathies to the spouses, children, mothers, fathers, and other loved ones of the victims of September 11, 2001;

(4) honors the heroic actions of first responders, law enforcement personnel, State and local officials, volunteers, and others who aided the innocent victims and bravely risked their own lives and health following the September 11, 2001 attacks;

(5) extends its deepest gratitude to military, intelligence and law enforcement personnel serving both at home and abroad in the global war on terrorism and for the sacrifices of their families and loved ones;

(6) expresses its gratitude to all foreign nations and their citizens who have assisted and continue to assist the United States in the global war on terrorism;

(7) vows that it will remain vigilant in efforts to provide the Federal Government with all the tools necessary to fight and win the global war on terrorism; and

(8) reaffirms that the American people will never forget the tragedy of September 11, 2001, and the loss of innocent lives that day, will continue to fight the war on terrorism in their memory, and will never succumb to the cause of the terrorists.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KOLBE). Pursuant to House Resolution 996, the gentleman from New York (Mr. KING) and the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. THOMPSON) each will control 2 hours.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KING of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H. Res. 994.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KING of New York. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to yield 1 minute to the Speaker of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HASTERT).

Mr. HASTERT. Mr. Speaker, it was a day, September 11, 2001, of unforgettable horror and unforgettable heroes. It was the day our buildings fell, the day our people rose. The fear and anguish that we felt that bright blue morning 5 years ago will never leave us, but the courage and the iron resolve that carried us through the hours and days that followed must also remain.

The war on terror, today being fought here in our homeland, and around the world, must be won. Five years after 9/11, America is safer and much more alert to the dangers that lurk in the darker corners of our world.

Those dangers yet exist in Afghanistan and Iraq and Iran and Syria, Lebanon and elsewhere. They call themselves al Qaeda and Hamas and Hezbollah and many other names.

Mr. Speaker, their differences of names and nationality neither erase nor even obscure the menacing ideology that binds them together as a single indistinguishable enemy of freedom and justice and peace.

This ideology of evil seeks not simply to dominate, but to destroy the will of all mankind, to control at the tip of a sword our very thought, word and deed. Their ultimatum is simple: submit or die.

Beginning on the morning of September 11, 2001, aboard United Flight 93 in the skies over Pennsylvania, America decided to take a third option. We decided to fight back. Despite the overwhelming odds, despite circumstances that no other nation and no other military could hope to overcome, our resolve has not broken.

In the 5 years since 9/11, our military and our intelligence services have thwarted dozens of attacks, large and small. Their efforts have saved countless lives. Along with our coalition partners, we have overthrown dangerous dictatorships in Afghanistan and Iraq and started to free people of those nations on a road to democracy.

These facts are all laid out in the resolution before us. But as important as it is to recite what we have done, it is more important for this House to assert what it intends to do.

Let me quote from it. The House of Representatives "reaffirms that the American people will never forget the tragedy of September 11, 2001, and the loss of innocent lives that day, and will continue to fight the war on terrorism in their memory, and will never succumb to the cause of the terrorists."

To me, and I think to most Americans, after 5 years of security and success, a lapse in our resolve is unthinkable. Victory is not yet assured, and victory without resolve is impossible.

Adoption of this resolution today will be a signal to our Nation, to our troops, to our allies around the world, and especially to our enemies, that we will never forget and we will never surrender.

Mr. THOMPSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of all those whose lives were affected by September 11, 2001. I rise in memory of those who lost their lives that fateful day. I rise in support of the families and friends who lost loved ones and exhibited courage and strength in the face of adversity, and I rise in support of the firemen, police, EMTs, soldiers and others who put lives at risk every day to protect our Nation against terrorism.

□ 1430

Five years ago, every town, small and large, was jolted by 9/11. In the days and months that followed, Members of this very body vowed to do whatever it took to ensure that an attack like 9/11 never repeated itself. We joined hands and crossed party lines to stand up against an enemy that did not see us as Democrats or Republicans, but only as Americans. We made promises and swore that we would do everything we could to secure America.

Five years later, we are still making promises and America is still not as safe as it should be. And five years later, Mr. Speaker, the bipartisanship we had after 9/11 is mostly gone.

Indeed, just yesterday, I was disappointed to read that my colleagues across the aisle called Democrats "clueless" on national security. Meanwhile, the House majority leader had the audacity to question whether Democrats were "more interested in safeguarding the rights of accused terrorists than protecting Americans."

All I can say is, shame on you all for putting politics and partisanship above the security of our communities. Shame on you for using the memory of 9/11 during a charged political season as a coverup for Congress' do-nothing approach to homeland security.

There is nothing wrong with drafting a bipartisan resolution to honor our Nation and respect the memory of 9/11, but there is something wrong when this body takes upon itself to pat itself on the back about a few past deeds when we have left the bulk of the work of homeland security unfinished.

I ask anyone in this room to tell me whether this resolution gives first responders effective interoperability so that they have the tools and funding to talk to one another, or provide for a sufficient number of Border Patrol or ICE agents as well as equipment and technology so we don't have to tax an overworked National Guard to defend the border, or whether or not this resolution provides adequate funding for protecting our skies, our subways and our ports, or whether or not this resolution reverses the ongoing trend of wasting homeland security funds on bloated Beltway contractors that are making out with taxpayer dollars while security is left along the wayside. I think not, Mr. Speaker.

Eleanor Roosevelt once said, "What you don't do can be a destructive force," and that is what I fear. What this Congress does not do today will leave us less secure tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, last Friday I sent a letter to you urging that the House act on a number of proposed homeland security measures that have been offered in this Congress, some dating back as early as 2005. My letter details 21 specific bills that have been written by Members of Congress to protect our country and close security gaps plaguing our Nation's rail and mass transit security, emergency communications, chemical facilities security, cargo container security and much more. I have not yet heard back on my letter. These bills deserve an up or down vote or consideration as stand alone measures by this House.

The leaders of the 9/11 Commission said earlier this week that our Nation is still not as safe or prepared as it can be because we have failed to fulfill their "most elementary" recommendations. 9/11 Commission Chairman Kean added that "If everybody in Congress is for recommendations, what happened? How come they're not passed?"

Mr. Speaker, Democrats have already offered to fulfill the Commission's recommendations through these measures listed in my letter. Now is the time for action.

That said, Mr. Speaker, I am aware that the Republican leadership may push through a number of security measures in the House in the next 2 weeks to address certain vulnerabilities in an attempt to show that this body cares about security. While I am happy that we are finally seeing some action on some critical homeland security issues, I am concerned that what will come before this body are shell bills that claim to secure our Nation without allocating the funding, manpower or technology necessary.

Indeed, debate is ongoing right now to include FEMA reorganization in the Homeland Security appropriations bill, and my colleagues across the aisle have said that they won't provide funding for improving interoperability of first responder communication systems. Certainly we all remember the failures of 9/11, when many first responders lost their lives because communications didn't work. Yet my colleagues across the aisle are refusing to include interoperability funding in the proposed FEMA reorganization, because the White House doesn't want it.

"Security on the cheap" is no way to legislate our Nation's future. Americans are tired of Congress giving itself accolades while the Nation's business goes unfinished. America wants Congress to keep its promises and give all our citizens a country as secure as it needs to be.

Despite my Republican colleagues saying we Democrats don't have a clue about how to make our country safer, here it is: Join us and pass these 21 measures that provide real security to our Nation. Let's finally listen to the true bipartisan experts on this issue, the 9/11 Commission, and move forward with legislation to implement the 9/11 Commission recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time

Mr. KING of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, 9/11, September 11, 2001, was a day unlike any in our history. It was a day which saw the worst tragedy befall our Nation. It was a day and the days thereafter which demonstrated the very best in America, the heroism, the courage, the willingness to fight back, the determination never again to allow ourselves to be attacked the way we were on that day.

Since that time, Congress has achieved a lot. The purpose of this resolution today was to show that we are not just going to lament what happened on September 11, we are not just going to mourn what happened on September 11, but we are going to lay the record out as to what has been done and what should be done. And, quite frankly, as the prime author of this resolution, we did not in any way attempt to make it contentious.

For instance, I really wonder why at this stage on the fifth anniversary of September 11 my friends in the opposition have chosen to draw the line on this resolution, when 2 years ago, in a bipartisan resolution which was overwhelmingly adopted, there were far more, if you want to call them, partisan matters included. I don't consider them partisan. But if they are applying the standard they are applying today to the 2004 resolution, where it went through so many items, as the war in Iraq, the war in Afghanistan, Libya, port security, border security, Terrorist Threat Information Center, going after financial assets, all of those matters, very few of which are mentioned in our resolution today.

But for some reason, I guess with election day less than 60 days away, they have chosen to say what was non-partisan 2 years ago is extremely partisan today.

I regret that, because there is a lot that we still have to do as a Congress, but there is much we achieved, and I believe it is important for us not to just talk about the horror of September 11, but to chronicle for history what we have done, what we intend to do and let history be our judge.

That is why we included the PATRIOT Act, that is why we included the Maritime Security Act, the intelligence reform and port security legislation, because we do believe they are significant achievements by Congress.

Now, maybe history will show it was not right to break down the wall between the FBI and CIA, or it was not right to have to have intelligence reform, but I am content and I think we have an obligation to lay that out and let the American people decide and let history decide.

If we wanted to make this partisan, we could have certainly put in about the NSA electronic surveillance, which the overwhelming majority of Americans support because they believe it makes common sense to listen to the conversations of foreign terrorists. But because of the controversy of that, it was not put in. Nor was the SWIFT

Plan, which was illegally disclosed by the New York Times. Did we include that in our resolution, even though that has also been extraordinarily effective?

As far as the issue of whether or not we are safer today than on September 11, both the chairman and cochairman of the 9/11 Commission say we are, the junior Senator from New York says we are, any number of people say we are. We can debate that. But I think it is certainly fair comment to put that in this 9/11 resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I will end on this before I finish my remarks. But I just want to say no one has any monopoly on grief in this Chamber. I lost well over 150 friends, neighbors and constituents on September 11, 2001. I spent all day Monday at cemeteries and commemorations and meeting with families.

I think it is really wrong to somehow attack this resolution as our attempt to be partisan. We could have found much more ways to be partisan if we wanted to. It was an attempt to come together. For whatever reason, the opposition has chosen to draw the line today on the fifth anniversary, when they could have done it 2 years ago. For whatever reason they decided now is the time. I think history will show they are wrong.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time

Mr. THOMPSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I am proud at this time to yield such time as he may consume to the chairman of the Democratic Caucus, the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. CLYBURN).

Mr. CLYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my friend Mr. THOMPSON for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, 5 years after 9/11, we have still failed to capture or kill Osama bin Laden. We have not destroyed al Qaeda. A new Pentagon report shows that the situation in Iraq is worsening, with the number of attacks against Americans and Iraqis climbing to the highest average per week since the war began; 2,700 United States soldiers have died in Iraq, over 20,000 have been wounded; and United States taxpayers have paid more than $300 billion for the Iraq war. Yet we are spending 4 hours debating a partisan resolution about one of the most tragic days in American history.

Mr. Speaker, now is not the time to divide the country. Slogans and partisanship will not bring us victory. "Stay the course" and "you are either with us or against us" are not military strategies.

Five years after 9/11, we must be clear: The war in Iraq has distracted us from finding Osama bin Laden, dismantling al Qaeda and fighting the war on terrorism. We must put the future of Iraq in the hands of the Iraqis so we can focus on our primary goal, winning the war on terrorism. We must end the stonewalling and pass the 9/11 Commission recommendations.

But the Republican leadership keeps fighting the wrong battles. They announced yesterday a war against Democrats on security.

Mr. Speaker, our Nation is engaged in a war against a real and brutal enemy who finds pleasure in taking innocent life and who works every day to undermine the freedom and democracy we hold dear. I suggest the Republican leadership focus its energy on fighting that enemy, not their fellow Americans.

As this Nation faces the greatest challenge of our generation, defeating terrorism, our leaders must preach strength and unity, not partisanship and divisiveness.

Mr. KING of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. PRYCE).

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for the time.

Mr. Speaker, 5 years ago this week our Nation suffered an unspeakable terrorist attack that resulted in the deaths of almost 3,000 Americans. This resolution is to honor them.

No American will ever forget the horror of that day, but neither will we forget what else we saw in the days that followed: The courage, the generosity, the selflessness of ordinary Americans who raced in to help in any way they possibly could.

One of those heroes lives in my own backyard. Sergeant Jason Thomas, a former marine who upon learning of the hit on Tower 1, raced to Ground Zero, donning his marine uniform which was in the trunk of his car, to join the search for survivors.

His seemingly illogical instinct to race into that danger saved the lives of two Port Authority police officers who were trapped beneath 20 feet of debris when the towers collapsed. Yet he asked for no notice, no thanks, no praise. No one even knew of his bravery.

As remarkable as Sergeant Thomas' story is, it is just one of the hundreds and thousands of stories of courage and compassion that came out of that day. Mr. Speaker, the hijackers hoped to terrorize and demoralize our Nation. Instead, they brought out the very best that is in us.

Inspired by the heroes of 9/11, today we reaffirm our commitment to defending our liberty from every threat and combating the evil of terrorism wherever it is found. And it is sad that there are so many "shame on you's" and finger-shakings going on. And I say shame on those who continue the constant drumbeat to dampen this country's spirit and to demoralize those men and women who are so bravely defending us from the terror that could strike again.

Mr. THOMPSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PASCRELL).

Mr. PASCRELL. Mr. Speaker, there is no Democratic or Republican way to honor America. Let's get that straight.

This legislation minimizes the hurt of the families of 9/11. I make that contention. This is not acceptable. I don't say this as a Democrat. I am proud of that fact. I say this as an American who believes in God.

My friend, the gentleman from New York, is absolutely wrong when he says this is the same legislation as 2 years ago. I can agree with all of the "resolves" in this legislation, but when you look back into the "whereases," to be very specific, the legislation 2 years ago had nothing in there about immigration when your party does not even agree on a position nor does ours. Why do we put in such a politically contentious issue when basically what we are saying here is we feel your hurt, families, and we want you to know we honor this?

Today I harbor great disappointment. I really do. The possibility for reaching true bipartisanship, which was done in the Senate, has been thwarted. A long list of shameful acts on this floor continues. We could have honored the lives lost during the terrorist attacks 5 years ago by voting on a truly bipartisan bill. When there is an opportunity for crass, in many ways cynical, politics in regard to security, these gentlemen and ladies have taken it. For shame.

Placing a commendation for this immigration security bill that barely passed the House last year within this resolution is from left field. We all know that the bill we are lauding here is one of the most divisive, mean-spirited pieces of legislation we have seen in recent years. So it is the "resolved" in this resolution that we agree with, but the "whereases" leave much to be desired. Inserting this in this 9/11 anniversary resolution is simply wrong. It is so typical of what we have come to expect.

We should be concerned about what the 9/11 Commission Public Discourse Project has given Congress for its efforts on homeland security. We should try in a bipartisan fashion to correct the D's and the F's, and many of us on both sides of the aisle have attempted to do that. Maybe we could actually improve how we screen baggage and cargo. Maybe we could address the vulnerabilities presented to our rail and our mass transit problems. Maybe, just maybe, we should finally give out grants to States and locals based on risk.

So I say, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I think we could have done better, particularly on this hurtful incident in our country's history. And that is my point today.

Mr. KING of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would remind the gentleman from New Jersey that the resolution he voted for 2 years, the 9/11 commemoration resolution, specifically said that Iraq was part of the war on terrorism, that the capture of Saddam Hussein was part of the war against terrorism, all in the "whereases" clauses. It also cited the fact of port security achievements we had made there. It mentioned the Terrorist Threat Integration Center, all of which was there in that resolution 2 years ago, which for whatever reason they did not object to then.

And I would say one of the reasons we didn't put the immigration bill in the legislation 2 years ago, it was not passed until last year, and the 9/11 Commission specifically stated that addressing border security is a major element of homeland security.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from California, the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. LUNGREN.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, like many, I was affected by 9/11. As a matter of fact, that is the reason I decided to return to public service and sought an opportunity to serve in this body after a 16-year absence. I have spent a considerable amount of time with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle attempting to fulfill my obligation in that regard. And I am reminded, basically because of my service as attorney general of California, that oftentimes we not only need to mark something that has happened in the past but we need to also talk about the things that we have effectively done to respond to whatever challenges occurred out of that event, because if we do not, we fail to help lead the people, that is, we fail to tell our constituents that those sacrifices that they have made, the programs that they have enacted through us, have had merit. Because if you do not do that, after a while those you seek to represent have no sense that we are actually doing something effective.

So it seems to me very much appropriate, not shameful, that the chairman of my committee would construct this resolution that not only cites the tragedy of 9/11 but talks about the efforts we have made in this Congress, with the executive branch, to respond to the challenges that came out of that tragedy.

Earlier this year the House overwhelmingly passed the SAFE Port Act on a bipartisan basis, 421-2. This act addresses port security defenses within and beyond U.S. ports. As a matter of fact, as we are now speaking, the United States Senate is dealing with that.

We have taken steps to prevent our own facilities from being used against us as weapons of mass destruction and to protect our critical infrastructure. A few months ago our committee passed legislation to guard against terrorist attacks on our chemical facilities on a bipartisan basis.

Finally, we have taken steps, as importantly, to respond to the suggestion by the 9/11 Commission to do something about securing our country by preventing terrorists and their weapons from being smuggled across the borders. So that is the reason why, in fact, we have this included in this resolution.

So, Mr. Speaker, rather than taking exception to this resolution, I would hope that we would join together on a bipartisan basis to say certainly the journey has not ended, but we have done a lot. And anyone who stands here and says that we are not safer today than we were on 9/11 either is tragically uninformed or is intentionally misinforming the American people.

Yes, we have more to do. But we should look back on those things that we have joined together to do successfully.

Mr. THOMPSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PASCRELL) for a response.

Mr. PASCRELL. Mr. Speaker, there is a difference between what the Senate passed unanimously and what we are discussing today.

You will admit that.

And you did not mention the specific item that I mentioned and my problem with the legislation "whereases" is on the immigration legislation, which was passed last year. You know quite well it is a contentious subject on your side as well as in the entire Congress.

I have mentioned nothing about the other things and have no problems with the other things that you mentioned, but I think that is enough for me to express myself, and I want to just correct the gentleman.

Mr. THOMPSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I now yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY)

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, the Republican Party has taken an opportunity to make a positive contribution to the commemoration of the 9/11 anniversary and turned it into a partisan ploy that divides our country and this Congress. What a huge missed opportunity and disservice to our Nation.

At the same time, they have undertaken a coordinated, cynical, political campaign to impugn the patriotism of any Democrat who dares to question, dares to criticize, dares to suggest that there may be a better, safer way of protecting our country.

The Republicans include in this resolution legislation that divides our country, not just Democrats and Republicans in Congress; but they include in this resolution the Republican border security bill, the PATRIOT Act, other bills that they know divide Democrats from Republicans and Americans from other Americans.

If they want to go down the path, there are other issues that divide Democrats from Republicans. Democrats want to implement all of the recommendations of the 9/11 Commission. They want to make sure that every one of them is put on the books. The Republicans oppose implementing all of the recommendations of the 9/11 Commission.

In other areas they oppose having full security built around chemical plants in the United States. There are nightclubs in New York City that are harder to get into than chemical plants in our country.

Nuclear power plants, they oppose the hardening of the spent fuel facilities next to nuclear power plants in our country. They nickel and dime security for public transit. They refuse to support the requirement that hazardous materials, where possible, are shipped around densely populated areas instead of through them in our country.

In aviation they still oppose screening of the cargo which goes on to passenger planes in our country. Each one of us has to take off our shoes, has to put our bag through security, and then nearly 6 billion pounds of cargo are placed under the feet of passengers on planes across our country.

And then, unbelievably, rejecting the recommendation of the 9/11 Commission, knowing that al Qaeda puts at the top of their terrorist target list putting a nuclear bomb on a cargo container in a ship and bringing it into port in the United States, the Republicans object to the requirement that all of these containers be screened in ports overseas before they are ever allowed to leave for the United States. They say it is too expensive. Well, the price we will pay in security for the Republicans objecting to the screening for a nuclear bomb is that when a nuclear bomb goes off in an American city, as Vice President CHENEY said, more deaths will occur than all the lives that were lost in all the battles that the United States fought all the way back to the Revolutionary War. They refuse to impose this mandate for screening of nuclear bombs in cargo container ships. They want to screen it after it gets to a port in the United States. By then it is too late. The 9/11 Commission says screen for nuclear bombs as they are being put into containers overseas before they take off for the ports of the United States.

This resolution is just a complete and total undermining of the solidarity which we should have on this occasion of the fifth anniversary of that loss of life

Mr. KING of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would remind my friend from Massachusetts, or at least suggest to him, that you don't have to agree with every word of every resolution to vote for it.

For instance, the overwhelming majority of Democrats voted for the 9/11 resolution 2 years ago, which specifically cited the war in Iraq as being an effective part of the war against terrorism. It also cited the arrest of Saddam Hussein and also cited the many accomplishments that had been made by Congress, and they voted for that then. For some reason they have now chosen to make this a very partisan issue.

Also, the gentleman said that Democrats have supported every recommendation of the 9/11 Commission. In fact, 152 Democrats voted against the REAL ID Act, which was supported by the 9/11 Commission.

And as far as the whole issue of the nuclear screening, even the Washington Post said that is nothing but a grandstand.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. MCCAUL).

Mr. MCCAUL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, we stand here today not as Republicans or Democrats, but united as Americans to remember the events of September 11, as it should be.

I find this debate should not fall into election year politics. It is fitting the resolution contains border security in it, as the 9/11 Commission recommended border security. It is an issue of national security.

Five years ago this week, our generation was defined by the heroic actions of the hundreds of first responders, brave Americans, and innocent victims who gave their lives on 9/11. That day, 19 al Qaeda hijackers murdered nearly 3,000 Americans. Those terrorists had a simple cause, inflict the highest loss of life and the most damage they could to our Nation. They may have succeeded in murdering thousands of people going about their daily lives, but they failed miserably to defeat the patriotic spirit of America and of freedom everywhere.

When we remember the events of September 11, we must also remember the police officers and firefighters that responded to the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon who went in to save lives but gave their own lives in the process. We must remember the first responders from every corner of our Nation who came to Ground Zero in the days after to lend their strength, their skills, and their support. And we must remember the innocent people, the husbands and wives, the parents and children, and the entire families who were ripped apart that fateful day that the Towers fell. We must always remember. We will never forget and we will never surrender. That is our duty as Americans, and that is our charge as patriots.

Mr. THOMPSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to join my colleagues and millions of Americans in mourning and honoring those who bravely lost their lives on September 11, 5 years ago. Their memories must be honored and they must not be forgotten, and we must ensure that they did not die in vain. It is our job as elected officials to learn from those vulnerabilities that terrorists were able to exploit to ensure that similar tragedies never happen again.

Unfortunately, the resolution before us today places politics ahead of honoring our fallen heroes, and it does nothing to ensure that our Nation becomes safer. It is nothing but a divisive and partisan measure that allows Republicans to pat themselves on the back and give them peace of mind. Well, I refuse to be complacent. There is simply too much that remains to be done to secure our homeland. We need to get back on track in implementing the 9/11 Commission's recommendations. Our borders, ports, and virtually every entry into our country remain unsecured, and the 9/11 Public Discourse Project has given the administration a D on their efforts to protect against weapons of mass destruction.

Mr. Speaker, one of the worst case scenarios experts fear is that terrorists would be able to smuggle nuclear material across our borders or through our ports. This is an unacceptable reality. As the lead Democrat on the Subcommittee for the Prevention of Nuclear and Biological Attack, I have called for the installation of radiation portal monitors at designated ports of entry to screen all inbound cargo for radiological and nuclear materials in and at our border crossings. Mr. Speaker, we need to significantly strengthen our radiation detection technology, and we need to do it now. Five years after the terrorists attacked our country, we still lack the capability to identify exactly what comes through our ports.

I urge my colleagues to refocus our efforts on implementing the recommendations of the 9/11 Commission, as this is truly the way to honor the heroes who lost their lives on that devastating day 5 years ago.

Mr. KING of New York. Mr. Speaker, again I would remind my friends on the Democratic side that the resolution that the overwhelming majority of them voted for 2 years ago, for instance, on the issue of port security, in the whereas clauses specifically cited the innovative programs which have done so much to make our ports more secure and to screen cargo. And, again, we don't have to agree with every aspect of every bill, but if it was good enough 2 years ago for them to cite it, I don't know why it suddenly now becomes such an extreme partisan issue.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut, who I must say is an extremely strong and very independent voice and advocate for Homeland Security.

Mr. SHAYS. I thank my chairman of the Homeland Security Committee for yielding to me, I thank him for his sincerity, I thank him for his good work, and I thank him for reaching out to the other side of the aisle on every occasion. I am sorry he is having to deal with the criticism that he is now having to deal with. But this is close, I guess, to an election time.

As chairman of the 9/11 Caucus and chairman of the National Security Emerging Threats and International Relations Subcommittee, I rise to salute and honor the 2,976 individuals who lost their lives on this fateful day, 81 who were residents of the 17 towns I am privileged to represent. I salute the first responders who did what first responders do, run into danger while those they seek to protect run out. I salute as well all who labored after the buildings imploded to first save lives and then ultimately find the body parts of those who perished.

Many of these individuals, particularly those who labored on this site during the first few weeks and months breathing highly toxic air, now find their own lives at risk. May God bless them, may God bless those who perished on September 11, and may God bless this great and enduring county. I thank you very much.

Mr. THOMPSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Los Angeles (Mr. BECERRA).

Mr. BECERRA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 994 was our opportunity in this House for the Members of the House of Representatives to speak, not as Republicans, not as Democrats, not as conservatives or liberals, but as proud Americans, one Nation commemorating the events of 9/11.

That is in fact what the 100 Members of the other body, the Senate, did when they unanimously, 100 Members, passed their resolution commemorating America's faith, its determination, and certainly our response to the vicious attacks perpetrated on 9/11.

We could have demonstrated our faith in our country by acknowledging the heroes, all of them, the men and women who gave their lives on 9/11. We could have acknowledged the families who have suffered tremendous loss. We could have acknowledged our law enforcement and military personnel, our safety servicemembers, those who work every day to protect us. Instead, cloaked within this resolution in this House is language that is controversial, that is not supported by many Members in this House, that indeed is not supported by many people in the public, and it is cloaked within the words to commemorate the events and the people that make us proud about how we responded on September 11, 2001.

Many believe in this country that we are not as safe as we should be. Many of us believe that we have a right to be tough today as we respond to those who wish to harm us. Many of us believe we must act smartly as we respond to those who wish to harm us. But many of us believe we need to have a great deal more hope that we can do things in a better way. And, unfortunately, today we must report to the world, as did the 9/11 Commission that explored the events after 9/11 and our response, that indeed today we have failed our people in responding adequately with the government that we have with us today.

Five years after 9/11, the members of the 10-member bipartisan Commission on 9/11 issued a report card on how the Federal Government has responded to their recommendations. Their report card included five Fs, 12 Ds, and two incompletes. It is irresponsible for this resolution today to say the Nation is safer than it was on September 11, 2001, when there is still so much work ahead of us and so much that is preoccupying our time outside of our own domestic borders.

Our failures are critical. Today, only one in every 16 cargo containers that come into all of our ports throughout our Nation are ever inspected before they enter into our territories. Today in America we talk about our broken immigration system, and yet today we stand some 11 days before we are closing this 2-year legislative session without having addressed comprehensive immigration reform the way the American public has demanded, and today we know that there are some 10 to 20 million people who live in the shadows of America working every day in this country, not able to come out because they don't have documents to be here but still working, and we go on and do nothing to address the fact that there are some 12 million people who live in our shadows. We don't know what they are doing, we don't know how they are doing. And today we have a resolution that doesn't treat all of these different issues that are coming before us.

Mr. Speaker, we could do this much differently. If you talk to America's troops in Iraq and throughout the world, they could give you some answers of what we should be doing. If you talk to the American families who suffered from 9/11, they could tell you what we could be doing. I believe we should be not speaking politics, and I urge my colleagues to let's move forward together bipartisanly to move forward commemorations that really do have the support of all Americans.

Mr. KING of New York. Mr. Speaker, I would just again remind my friends on the other side that we are definitely safer than we were on September 11. It is not just me saying that or the Republican majority saying that. It is the chairman and cochairman of the 9/11 Commission, people such as the junior Senator from New York who was saying that.

As far as our resolution, it certainly goes out of its way, and appropriately so, to extend the deepest sympathies to all those who lost their lives, to their family members and friends. It honors the heroic actions of the first responders.

If we made a mistake in drafting this resolution, it was I guess laboring under the misconception that the people on the other side would adhere to the same standards and principles that we set for ourselves 2 years ago when we adopted the 9/11 resolution at that time, which again goes into far more detail than anything we mentioned at all today.

And I would also mention to the gentleman from California who said that we should speak to the families of those who lost relatives on September 11. I spent Monday morning to night with those families, and I can tell you, after speaking with them, I am more proud than ever to have introduced and sponsored this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE), a member of the committee.

Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the committee who has worked very, very hard on these issues and trying to put together bipartisan agreement on many of the issues that come before our committee.

Five years later, the terrible events of September 11 are still fresh in the minds of Americans. On the same day we saw heroism and sorrow so many, we saw the hatred and evil of a few. These events served as notice to our Nation that we were not as secure as we had thought.

In response, our country has made substantial progress towards securing our borders, infrastructure, and airlines. There is still a ways to go, but we are safer today than we were on September 10.

Despite chaos surrounding the events of September 11, America showed great, great strength. We witnessed an outpouring of goodwill, patriotism, and togetherness all across the country. In the face of such adversity, Americans came together under a unified front. Republicans and Democrats worked side by side to address the critical needs of those people devastated by terrorist attacks.

Listen up, America. Today, 5 years later, partisanship and political bickering have replaced the solidarity the entire world once witnessed.

This is the last thing that our country needs.

This past Monday, many of us were back in our districts attending events relating to the tragic events of 9/11. There are many first responders who previously, I admit, probably lived in the chairman's district and other areas around New York City who have since moved to Florida. Many of them retired after seeing the tragic events of 9/11, after working hard, very, very hard at the site of the World Trade Center. They moved to other States. Many of them also moved because they lost loved ones in 9/11, and they could not be there. They just could not be there every single day to see the hole where the World Trade Center once was.

Those are the people who gave so much, who lost their family members, that we should be consoling today, and certainly, this resolution does exactly that.

Mr. Speaker, in these trying times it is important that we remember that all Americans are in this fight against terrorism together. I ask that my colleagues find it within themselves to put aside their political differences and do what is best for the United States of America, and that is to vote for this resolution.

Mr. THOMPSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I yield as much time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY).

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, like many of my colleagues, I spent Monday commemorating the horrific attacks on our Nation 5 years ago. It was a day to reflect on the courage and the compassion demonstrated on September 11, 2001, by police officers, firefighters, medical personnel and average, ordinary citizens.

It was also a day to remember those who could not be saved and to say a prayer for the families, especially the young children, who were left behind.

But with this resolution, the Republican leadership has chosen to exploit a national day of mourning to again justify the occupation of Iraq, a disastrous policy and a failure that has led to untold death and destruction, a policy which has been rejected by the American people.

Again, the Republican leadership is trying to blur the distinction between Osama bin Laden and Saddam Hussein, even though it has been well-established that one had nothing to do with the other.

The fact is, we never honored the memory of the victims of 9/11 by finishing the job in Afghanistan. Bin Laden remains on the run, even though we had him surrounded in Tora Bora nearly 5 years ago.

Far from some paragon of freedom, much of Afghanistan is still dominated by Taliban rebels and warlords, with the opium trade remaining the country's dominant economic force.

From 9/11 on, the President and the Republican leadership have used that day of terror to run roughshod over the Constitution; wiretapping American citizens without a warrant and setting up secret gulags around the world.

This 5-year anniversary cried out for genuine bipartisan leadership to comfort the Nation while acting intelligently, rather than impulsively, in the face of new security threats.

To this day, however, the Republicans use 9/11 as a talking point to make a dishonest argument.

It is shameful that some are taking one of the gravest moments in our Nation's history to pursue their own political agendas. It is with great sadness that I rise in opposition to this bill.

This Congress owes it to those who gave their lives on the hallowed ground in New York, in Washington and in Pennsylvania to consider a balanced bill, a bill which truly honors their memories.

How dare anyone try to capitalize on the heartbreaking events of September 11.

Shame on this Congress if this bill passes and shame on those who let politics get in the way of a solemn opportunity in order to honor the very innocent victims of September 11.

Mr. KING of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would just urge my friends on the other side to perhaps read the resolution instead of just reading Democratic talking points.

The fact is there was nothing in this resolution at all that talks about the war in Iraq other than to commend the soldiers who are fighting in Iraq and Afghanistan, but the overwhelming majority of Democrats 2 years ago did vote for the resolution which said Iraq was an integral part of the war against terrorism. Again, I wonder why this disconnect between 2004 and 2006.

Also, the gentlewoman from California seems very concerned about the fact that bin Laden has not been captured. Yet, the leader of her party yesterday said that capturing bin Laden would have no impact on the security of the United States.

Also, talking of the families, as far as the impact this would have on the families, this resolution, I have talked to the families in my district, the Boyle family, the Haskell family, the Cain family, the Vigiano family, or the Howard family, or any of them, who I can assure you strongly stand behind this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. PRICE).

Mr. PRICE of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, it is truly fitting and proper that we pause to recognize the fifth anniversary of the tragic and cowardly acts of 9/11, and it is important for a number of reasons. It is important for reasons of memory and of gratitude and of resolve.

For we must remember and celebrate the lives of those unmercifully taken from us on 9/11. Their deaths must always bring focus to the challenge and the enemy that our Nation faces. This is a real war. Not recognizing that fact presents grave peril to our Nation. Yes, we must remember.

We must also be forever grateful to those who ran toward danger to help those in need, to be forever grateful to the heroes of Flight 93 whose collective action resulted in the first victory in what is truly the war for the free world, and to be forever grateful to our fellow citizens, men and women in our military, first responders, intelligence communities and communities large and small across this Nation, who courageously labor to keep us safe and free.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we must resolve to recognize the gravity of the challenge and the enemy that we face, and with unity as a Nation, continually gather the will, the strength and the courage to defeat our enemy at every single turn. This is not a war we desired. However, it is a war in which we must prevail.

May we always remember, may we always give thanks, and may we always be resolved so that generations of Americans yet born may know the opportunity, the responsibility, the freedom and the liberty that we so cherish.

Mr. THOMPSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) and for him to be the manager.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from California will be recognized to control the remainder of the time of the gentleman from Mississippi.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KING of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. GARRETT).

Mr. GARRETT of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, from the day of America's birth, our story in this country has been one of heroism. Our movies, our literature, our music paint a colorful panorama of the dreams and inspirations of the men and women who built our Nation up with their own blood and sweat, ingenuity and spirit, courage and perseverance. Ours is a rich and proud history.

The efforts and actions following the tragic events of September 11 have magnified our sense of heroism. The men and women who perished that day have left an indelible mark on the American psyche. The men and women who were helpless victims of the attacks and the brave first responders who rushed into those burning buildings to save them have redefined heroism.

This week, as we mark the fifth anniversary of their last day, we ask God's continued blessing on their souls. We also ask that God continue to shed grace on the families that were left behind. Those families who stood watch by makeshift memorials to their children, their spouses, their parents and the loved ones, they are also heroes. They were the rock, the foundation upon which America rose to even greater heights than ever before. And now we should come together to be their strength.

To those spouses and children who patiently awaited word that their firefighter would emerge from the rubble, to those parents who painfully watched those towering buildings crumble down knowing that your child worked on one of those floors, you are strangers to us no longer. You are family to us all.

September 11 was a day of great tragedy in America and to the world, but in true American spirit it has become a day of great inspiration as well. The lives that were lost shall not have been lost in vain. Let them be what motivates us to live better, to dream bigger and to believe in our own destiny.

Let the angels who carried all those who are lost to peace that fateful day, who cried tears of pain for the lost here on Earth, they also cry tears of joy for heaven's gain.

May we work together on this floor and this House so that someday no child will have to ask again is my daddy coming home.

May God bless the victims of September 11, both those still with us today and those who have moved to a better place. May God bless the men and women fighting overseas, both here and abroad, and may God bless the United States of America.

Mr. KING of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Michigan (Mrs. MILLER).

Mrs. MILLER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, on September 11, 2001, terrorists murdered nearly 3,000 of our fellow Americans who were simply going about their everyday, daily lives. Their goal: to attack our freedom and change our way of life.

They believed America to be decadent and weak. They believed that we would not forcefully respond. They believed that America would recoil or retreat, and they could not have been more wrong.

That horrible day broke our hearts, but out of our collective broken heart came everything that is great about this great Nation, America.

Police officers and firefighters ran into burning buildings, risking their lives to save people they did not know.

The passengers aboard United Flight 93 who, knowing the intention of the terrorists, built the resolve that they would not allow the terrorists to determine their fate, they fought back to give America our first victory in the war on terror.

This resolution shows that we in this House share that resolve to defeat terror. This resolution honors the victims of 9/11 and the sacrifice of so many who have fought for our freedom since that day.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all our colleagues to support this resolution.

Mr. KING of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, quite frankly I have been both shocked and disappointed by the reaction we have seen on the House floor today. Not that we cannot have honest differences over the resolution, not that we cannot have honest differences about various whereas clauses. I have certainly voted for many resolutions where I did not agree with everything that was in there. I have also opposed certain resolutions because there was too much in there that I could not support, without questioning the motives and impugning the character of those who drafted the resolution.

Quite frankly, in working on this resolution and working with the Speaker and working with Members on the other side, the model that we tried to use in putting this resolution together was the resolution which was adopted 2 years ago which did have some contentious language in it, but quite frankly listed far more achievements, if you will, or far more actions taken by the Congress than ours did today.

What we did today was try to strike the balance by commemorating the memories of those who died, by honoring those who gave their lives, by expressing our deep sorrow and support and solidarity with the families who lost relatives on September 11 and lost friends on September 11.

And then also, not just rely on words but also to show actions, and lay out how we in Congress have tried to deal with the issues that involve homeland security and fighting terrorism.

We did avoid any reference to the war in Iraq, other than to say we support the men and women who are fighting in Iraq and Afghanistan. No mention at all of Iraq being part of the war against terrorism. No mention at all of the NSA electronic surveillance program. No mention at all of the swift program.

What we did was try to lay out exactly what Congress has done so it would be out there for history to see what we have done, what we have tried to do, where we have succeeded, perhaps where we haven't. I am content to let history be our judge.

But to somehow say this is part of some conspiracy or campaign, to me, it really does cheapen the memory of September 11. As I said before, no one has a monopoly on grief. I certainly lost many, many friends and neighbors and constituents on September 11, as did other Members of this body. And probably everyone here at least knows someone who died that day, or knows someone who knows someone who died that day or suffered from the horrific events of September 11.

I really thought on September 11 and September 12, 2001 that we would try to work together. This resolution is an attempt to do that, an honest attempt from the heart to do it. I am proud of this resolution. I urge the adoption of this resolution so we can send a message not just to those who died on September 11, to the families of those who died on September 11, but indeed a message to the world that we are united against Islamic terrorism. We are united as one to prevent another attack from ever occurring in this country. And there has not been an attack for 5 years.

And, yes, there is much more that must be done, that has to be done. We are safer than we were on September 11, but not as safe as we should be. There is so much more that we can do, but we have made this start. Let us stand behind what we have done together. Those honest differences that we have, let us treat them as honest differences and not try to make shameful partisan attacks.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the resolution, and I pray to God that we will find a way to come together and not resort to the type of cheap demagoguery that I think characterized the debate on the floor today.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 28 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), the chairman of the International Relations Committee, who will do so much to elevate the level of rhetoric on our side than what we have seen in the last half hour from me; 28 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA), the chairman of the Intelligence Committee; and the balance of the time to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. COBLE); and I ask unanimous consent that each Member be allowed to control that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois will be recognized for 28 minutes of the time controlled by the gentleman from New York; the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA) will be recognized for 28 minutes; and the gentleman from North Carolina will be recognized for 35 minutes, to control the remaining time.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

It has been 5 years since the world watched the impossible happen, and yet it is difficult to believe that the days and months have passed so quickly. The calendar's relentless progress gradually consigns all mortal events to the past, whether tragedies or triumphs. But we would deceive ourselves were we to believe that the consequences of those events will fade as well, for we will continue to live with them all of our lives.

Modern communications have brought us many new and wonderful things, but they have also made possible the communal experience of tragedy. In this new age, distance will no longer spare us, nor can an absence of personal ties insulate us from sorrow. All who witnessed the events of September 11 still bear the scars of seeing inconceivable images and impossible events unfold in real time. But our own experiences, however painful, can't compare with those of the innocents who bore the horror directly, nor with those of their families and friends who were suddenly and violently severed from their former lives and from the touch of those deeply loved.

We Americans are practical. Instead of resigning ourselves to the difficulties of life, we instinctively seek to identify problems in order to focus our efforts and move towards solutions. And over the past 5 years we have done so. We have come to know our enemies and direct our determination and resources to uncovering their hiding places and their plans. We are deeply engaged in designing and implementing measures to destroy their ability to harm us. The challenge is an entirely new one for us, but one which gains in clarity with each day. I hope all of us now are aware that in addition to our successes, we must prepare for the likelihood of failures in a struggle that may have no end.

By infusing purpose, action can thus fill many voids. But the need remains to understand what happened and to comprehend the meaning of the events of that day. Here, words give way to silence, for reflection is the predicate to understanding.

Our modern rational world once promised, in time, to reveal all secrets to us. But can we still cling to that belief now that we have been confronted with things we thought long past, vanquished and erased from the world by reason and light?

The modern world has seen many efforts to eliminate God from our lives, but we have not been able to eliminate evil. The last century was unparalleled in human history in its celebration of the savagery that human beings can wreak upon one another. We had hoped that we might escape that fate in this century, but now we know that we will not. We have been forcibly awakened from our dreams of an earthly heaven by the bitter knowledge that evil still roams freely in our world.

We can't allow ourselves to be paralyzed with despair or fear, but neither can we permit our natural optimism to shield us from the realities of the world. If there is any useful thing to be drawn from this terrible experience, it is that we have been given an unmistakable warning that in this new century unknown and fearsome challenges await us, challenges that will impose the severest tests on our national character.

Knowing this, we have a duty to prepare ourselves to defend not only lives and those of our children, not only our beloved country, not even our freedoms, but civilization itself.

We are Rome, beset by new barbarians who are driven and sustained by their savage hatred of us, of our happiness and our success of the promise America represents for the world. For our enemies have no aim but destruction. Nothing to offer but a forced march back to a bleak and dismal past. Theirs is a world without light, their all-encompassing hatred a repudiation of any saving grace. Their victory would impose a new Dark Age. But this time, perhaps an endless one. They are enemies of the future itself.

As we resolve ourselves to our task, as we grieve for all those linked to us by tragedy, we may also see ourselves more truly and thereby understand that our great strengths are interwoven with many fragile things. The threats we face have given us a greater sense of how rare and wonderful is the world we have made, and of our responsibility to protect it from the storms outside. For we need but shield our eyes, lay down our burden, and it will vanish into air, a world in which those we remember today were once allowed to be innocents.

It is for these reasons that we remember our 3,000 fellow citizens who, asking nothing other than to live their lives in peace, were brutally murdered by men without conscience or mercy. We remember because, in Lincoln's phrase, "the mystic chords of memory" forever bind us to the victims and the heroes of September 11 and to all Americans, from the honored past to the living present. We remember because to forget them would be to betray our own selves and our duty to the generations to come.

May those who died in the attacks of September 11, 2001, rest in the mercy of God. May those of us who remain be steadfast, courageous, and live lives worthy of their great sacrifice.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and let me first commend my dear friend from Illinois, the distinguished chairman of our committee, on his powerful and eloquent statement.

Mr. Speaker, on the fifth anniversary of the September 11 attacks, our colleagues in the other Chamber unanimously passed the resolution calling for a day of remembrance throughout this great Nation. Their beautifully crafted and clearly heartfelt statement expressed condolences to the families of those who were lost, respect for those who lived through the ordeal, and the renewed commitment to support whatever steps are needed to defeat terrorists who plot against the people of this country.

And here we are in this House, 2 days later, some may say 2 days late, deliberating over a document that mocks the concept of commemoration. The resolution before us includes claims known to be divisive, not among congressional Democrats but among the American people. And we should all recognize that certain legislation referenced in this resolution was not the product of a proud bipartisan majority, but the object of deep and great controversy that remains with us today.

Mr. Speaker, this should be a time for solemnity, not self-congratulation, and most certainly not political tactics cooked up in the back rooms of the RNC or the bowels of the White House. We must all agree to that.

The focus today should be on the victims and heroes of the 9/11 attack and the families they left behind. We commit to memory the thousands who died or were injured 5 years ago. They included firemen, who voluntarily rushed with their heavy gear up the stairs of the Twin Towers and into the flames, all the while urging the people they served to move faster to safety below.

We remember the police officers who put their lives on the line every single day and lost them all at once when the towers collapsed.

We think of the people at the Pentagon, just across the river from here, military as well as civilian, who were on duty when their fortress was breached and their world, and ours, imploded.

We recall the passengers and the crew trapped on airplanes turned into missiles, helpless and hurting as they used whatever means that were available to them to get word to their families or to affect some sort of rescue. And in this House in particular, Mr. Speaker, we ought never to forget the brave souls on United Flight 93, which was on a path toward Washington and may well have been headed for our Capitol. Among their number were those who overcame panic, said good-bye to their loved ones, and gave their lives to remove a threat to our Nation from the skies.

Our hearts go out to all of these heroes and victims and survivors, along with their families, who have suffered at the hands of thugs who wish nothing but harm to us all.

We also take time to remember those Americans in our Armed Services who choose to risk everything to ensure our safety, our peace, and our liberty, and to the U.S. diplomats and intelligence officers who face countless dangers to protect our Nation.

The greatest honor we can pay to all those currently serving our Nation in battle, to those who perished on that fateful day 5 years ago, is to recommit ourselves to providing true security to the American people.

Progress has been made to protect our homeland, Mr. Speaker, but much more needs to be done. We must ensure that our first responders are well prepared, that funds for homeland security are distributed on the basis of risk, not on a per capita or on a political basis. Our ports are still not visually examining 95 percent of the cargo that passes through, and the administration has yet to implement the many excellent and considered recommendations of the bipartisan 9/11 Commission.

If we are serious about making our country safer, these and many other issues must be addressed.

Mr. Speaker, 5 years ago we all met on this spot as our Nation came to recognize the magnitude of the struggle we were starting in earnest against the enemies of tolerance and progress and peace and freedom. We engaged in the most sobering and moving debate that I have ever witnessed on the floor of this House in the more than a quarter century that I have had the privilege to serve here as a Member.

With this fifth anniversary of the terrorist mass murder of September 11, it is only right that we remember the victims, we honor the heroes, and we contemplate the lessons. We are still engaged in the battle against terrorism, and we are a long way from victory.

I deeply regret that the resolution before the House goes needlessly beyond the necessary and appropriate sentiments for such an occasion and includes pointless boasts about the actions taken by a narrow majority of our Members, along with rhetoric that has been crafted deliberately to divide us.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN).

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I am so pleased to share this same floor with our distinguished chairman of the House International Relations Committee. Today we had what probably would be the last markup of the session and the last markup of his incredible tenure as chairman of our committee and great statesman of our country.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of this resolution to reaffirm our country's commitment to freedom, to democracy and to the right to live without fear, free from the threat of Islamic jihadists.

I rise to pay homage to those at the forefront against this insidious enemy.

And more importantly, I rise today to honor the victims and the heroes of this deplorable attack against our Nation on that fateful day 5 years ago. Those who died working in the towers, spent their days helping our country grow financially and globally, while those in the Pentagon worked to defend it. The brave men and women on Flight 93 and the first responders sacrificed themselves for others, sending a strong message to the jihadists worldwide that America would not be intimidated.

The resolution before us recognizes the threat that we face today against Islamic terrorism. It is essential that not only Americans but indeed citizens from all countries acknowledge the imminent threat of these radical ideologies that are manipulating Islam for their own selfish destructive ends. These jihadists didn't just declare war on the United States, but on the West as a whole. Lady Thatcher recently said in a statement released during her visit when she was accompanying President Bush and the First Lady at the 9/11 remembrance ceremony, "That heinous attack on America was an attack on us all."

Ultimately it will be our strength of character and our moral fiber, our unity of purpose which will help freedom prevail over tyranny and help us triumph over evil. As Thomas Jefferson wrote in 1811: "It is impossible to subdue a people acting with an undivided will."

We must never forget the sacrifices of all who died on September 11. They were not just victims, they were the first warriors in the new struggle of our survival.

With today's discussion taking place in the shadow of this sad fifth anniversary of the September 11 attack, it will help us to remember the brutal nature of these extremists. It will provide us greater insight into their nature in order to refine our policies and defeat them.

We must never, never forget. We must remain vigilant. The enemy is just waiting for us to flinch, before its agents descend like vultures to prey on our weakness.

Some are prepared to murder in what they feel are their religious duty. Others are supportive or protective of these jihadists. Still others do not embrace the tactics employed by the jihadists, but share the convictions and the perceptions of these extremists. We must remain vigilant and I hope that all of our colleagues support this strong resolution before us today.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 4 minutes to my good friend, our distinguished colleague from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH).

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend, Mr. LANTOS, Mr. HYDE and Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN.

I want to present a different perspective here because I think it is possible to address 9/11 in a way that is not particularly partisan, and maybe it is time that we do that as a Nation.

As jarring as 9/11 was to all of us, what is even more jarring is that many of us have forgotten who we were on 9/10, what our dreams and aspirations were for America before 9/11.

I ask you to think about this because if we are going to create for America a new direction, it is really imperative that we reconnect with the high aspirations that we had for ourselves, for our community, our Nation and the world. 9/11 caused a truncation of that kind of thinking, and it really detached us from our higher aspirations.

It was many years ago on September 13, 1814, that Francis Scott Key was inspired by the American defense of Fort McHenry to write the Star-Spangled Banner. We should remember that the Star-Spangled Banner is a map to our future, it is not just about the past because Francis Scott Key raised the question: "O say, does that star-spangled banner yet wave o'er the land of the free and the home of the brave?"

In that he made a connection between freedom and bravery, between freedom and courage.

We have a moment in this country's history that challenged us to our core on September 11; but we should never let it be a point at which we cause ourselves to be so fixed that we forget who we were on September 10.

For that reason, Mr. Chairman, my wife came up with this idea that I want to share with you right now. It is to create what is called a 9/10 Forum, discussions all over the country, Republicans, Democrats, whatever your politics, so we can reconnect with the deeper truths of who we are. In a 9/10 Forum, we would talk about who we are as Americans. It goes way beyond Republicans and Democrats, to create new possibilities and a new future for America.

The 9/10 Forum is born of this idea that there is something more essential in all of us than the partisan politics that has racked this Nation for the last few years. We need to find a way to transform this tragedy, but we can do it in a way that remembers the strength of who we are and who we were. So we are having discussions like this around the country, but it is important that we bring it into this forum. We can find our way. We can become secure again. We need to remember those times in our lives when we felt the most secure, felt courage and felt a deep love of our country.

I think that Lincoln, who looked at a Nation that had been racked by a Civil War, at his second inaugural Lincoln said "with malice towards none and charity towards all." I think that could be a guiding principle for America as we seek to heal our Nation in the face of this great tragedy of 9/11.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE).

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, on September 11 I saw things I never thought I would live to see and pray I will never see again. I was here on Capitol Hill standing under a tree at 10 in the morning as I saw columns of smoke billow out of the Pentagon in what was the first attack on this Nation's capital since 1812. People were running in every direction. Jet fighter aircraft were at virtually tree-top level. It was the sight and sounds of war.

And then 10 days later I accompanied more than 100 of my colleagues as we walked through the ashes of Ground Zero and saw the horror of what for all the world was the front door of hell in the ashes of the World Trade Center.

I saw the firefighters launching themselves into a scene there and at the Pentagon that was still aflame. I have seen Americans launch themselves into recruiting stations to respond in the last 5 years. And I also saw one unusual and extraordinary sight which has shaped my career since, and that is on that day, September 11, 2001, I saw Republicans and Democrats completely set aside their differences and work in the national interest, to pray together, to sing together, to set aside whatever might be contentious among us and do that which is necessary to heal our Nation and to launch a counter strike against our enemies. For that day truly, there were no Republicans in Washington, there were no Democrats in Washington, there were just Americans. I live to see that, and it gives me hope as we go into the contentious debates of our time.

In my four trips to Afghanistan and Iraq, I have also seen the extraordinary bravery and commitment of the American soldier. I am convinced that we are winning the war on terror because of the courage and valor of the men and women in uniform, both home and abroad. It is to them that I will close my remarks today.

When I went home that afternoon on September 11 and sat down with my three small children and wife to tell them what was happening, that we were likely going to war, Audrey, my 6-year-old daughter, grabbed me by the leg and said, "Daddy, if we have to make a war, do you have to go?"

I buckled down on my knee and I gave her a hug and I told her, "No, daddy's too old." But not a day has gone by in the last 5 years, Mr. Speaker, that I haven't thought about all of the daddies and moms and sons and daughters who answered that with a "yes," and some of them with a "yes" that rings into eternity.

And so we remember those that fell on 9/11, the victims. We remember the brave soldiers who have fought the war since, and we commend them this day as we remember 9/11.

□ 1600

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 6 minutes to the distinguished Democratic whip, my good friend from the State of Maryland (Mr. HOYER).

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, our commemoration of September 11 is a solemn occasion. It is a day of remembrance and a day of resolve. We remember those, Mr. Speaker, who perished or were injured 5 years ago in New York, Virginia at the Pentagon, and Pennsylvania due to the evil acts of men consumed by a murderous ideology filled with hate.

We mourn the loss of the innocent, and we pray for their loved ones. We also recall with pride, yes, with sorrow as well, though, the heroism of our first responder, and in many cases civilians turned rescuers, who put their own lives in harm's way as they sought to help others. Their selflessness on a day of fire, destruction and death reminds us of the courageous American spirit, and it renews our faith in humankind.

The commemoration of 9/11 also is a time for this Congress to express our collective national resolve. We resolved to protect the American people and our beloved homeland and to combat and defeat the perpetrators of terrorism and tyranny, and to fight for freedom, for democracy, for respect for human rights, and for the rule of law.

Now, the resolution before us today in many respects is not objectionable. Indeed, I will vote for this resolution. I do not quarrel, for example, with the propriety or the sentiments expressed in any of the resolved clauses in this measure. This resolution commemorating the worst terrorist attack on American soil in our history, a wound that has not yet healed, ought to be a unifying document that virtually every single Member of this House can support without reservation.

I regret, therefore, that in my discussions with the majority leader, and in Ms. PELOSI's discussion with the Speaker, that the Republicans did not see fit to make this a fully bipartisan resolution.

While I will support it, I lament the continuing partisanship which seeks to divide this House in sentiments that ought to see a unified House. I lament the fact that in the face of a Nation at war that we are not working to bring us together. But that effort was not made; and it is a failure of leadership, in my opinion.

Despite the fact that the Senate passed a 9/11 resolution this year by unanimous consent, and despite the fact that this body passed a 9/11 resolution last year by a vote of 402-6, the Republican leadership still attempts to gain political advantage through this measure. I think that is unfortunate.

I am going to support this measure, but there are conclusions in the "whereas" clauses with which I do not agree and which were not necessary for expressing our remembrance and our resolve. The majority presents a resolution that includes extraneous and inappropriate, divisive, self-serving and, in my opinion, politically motivated language. How sad that you would do that in a resolution that seeks to express the unanimous opinion of the representatives of the American people.

I ask my Republican friends what is the point of including a reference in this resolution to controversial legislation that has not even become law.

Specifically, I refer to the mention in the House Republicans' immigration reform bill. That bill was controversial in this House. That bill has not passed the Senate. That bill has been rejected, essentially, by the Senate. They have come together with a compromise with which the House has not agreed. Yet we reference in this resolution that which seeks to express our united opinion. How sad.

The reference to this bill, which is opposed by even many Republicans, has no place in a resolution commemorating this solemn occasion, notwithstanding the importance of that particular issue.

It is deeply regrettable, Mr. Speaker, that on this, the fifth anniversary of the worst terrorist attack in our history, that the Republican leadership has made political expedience a priority. I lament that, but I will vote for this because I do not want any confusion among those whom we confront.

I want no confusion on those we confront. I want no confusion by terrorists who wish us ill. I want no confusion that we are not united, not just as a Congress but as a American people, and a resolve to defeat and deter terrorists and protect our people and our great country.

Like the Senate, we should be voting on a resolution designed to inspire and demonstrate unity, not division.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. BARRETT).

Mr. BARRETT of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H. Res. 994. This week we solemnly remember those Americans who lost their lives 5 years ago when our Nation came under attack by enemies of freedom. Their families and loved ones will always remain in our prayers.

The terrorists underestimated our country on that fateful day, Mr. Speaker. They thought our spirit could be broken and our Nation divided. While our hearts continue to break for those we lost, our American spirit is strong. While we may disagree on some issues, we stand united in the desire to protect our Nation.

Mr. Speaker, on September 11, 2001, America witnessed horrifying, cowardly acts of evil and responded with heroism and courage. The passengers aboard United 93 were the first to fight back in this war on terror.

Over the past 5 years, we have taken the fight to the terrorists. We are fighting them in the streets of Afghanistan and in Iraq so we will never have to witness the evil in our city streets again.

As we remember the innocent victims of September 11, we also remember all of those brave souls who have lost their lives in defense of this country. America will never retreat in the face of adversity, Mr. Speaker. We will answer the call of history, and we will prevail in this war on terror.

I ask my colleagues to unanimously support H. Res. 994.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 1½ minutes to my good friend and neighbor, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE).

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Mr. LANTOS for yielding and for your leadership and for your commitment to global peace and security.

Today we should be reflecting on the fifth anniversary of the terrible terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. It should be a time when we come together as a Nation to grieve and to remember the men, women and children who lost their lives that day. It should also be a time to honor the courage and the heroism of our first responders and those who put themselves in harm's way to help and to save others.

Instead, we have before us a resolution that simply politicizes the somber occasion. What is glaring today is that the Bush administration's complete failure in apprehending Osama bin Laden, once again, is before us. Even worse, the Bush administration pulled our troops out of Afghanistan to put them into Iraq, which had nothing to do with the tragic attacks of 9/11. Even the President acknowledged this.

Unfortunately, our country is less safe today than it was 5 years ago. Iraq has become a haven for terrorists. It was not before 9/11. This Congress and this administration gets Ds and Fs in implementing the 9/11 Commission's recommendations.

Yet the Republican majority hasn't received the message. It chooses willfully to ignore it. By politicizing this resolution, the Republican majority seeks to detract from their utter complicity in this failed war and their utter failure to demand accountability for this war. The memories of those who lost their lives in New York and the Pentagon and Shanksville, Pennsylvania, deserve better.

We should be united as a country in commemorating those who paid the supreme price on that day 5 years ago. Yet today, once again, because of this resolution and the divisiveness of it, we are divided.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROYCE).

Mr. ROYCE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution marking the fifth anniversary of the al Qaeda terrorist attacks on the United States, and, inevitably, Americans are asking are we safer today. Yes, we are.

But the unfortunate reality is that this threat to our country continues. Last week, my terrorism subcommittee held a hearing on this threat. We heard the point made that to fight terrorism effectively, we must identify the enemy. As reported by the 9/11 Commission, the catastrophic threat of this moment in history, they say, is Islamist terrorism, especially al Qaeda and its organization. This threat, mounted for years, going largely ignored.

Many witnesses observed that al Qaeda, now under attack by the United States and others, has had to reconfigure. But just as the terrorists have evolved, we must evolve too. The desperate need today is to find out who the terrorists are.

To do this, we need powerful tools, and they have included the USA PATRIOT Act and other programs we passed.

With WMD proliferating, such efforts are all the more important. One area where we did receive a good grade from the 9/11 Commission was on our legislation for a REAL ID Act, to make certain that the next Mohammed Atta and his team of 15 couldn't obtain 60 phony driver's licenses. We established those Federal standards for State driver's licenses to make sure that again they couldn't use something like that to plan and attack and then board jetliners to attack the United States.

We made certain also that we passed the PATRIOT Act. Frankly, I believe that most Americans are glad that we have the PATRIOT Act to break down barriers between intelligence and law enforcement officials that hampered their efforts before 9/11.

Before the PATRIOT Act, these same tools were already being used to go after drug traffickers. Now, with the PATRIOT Act, we have applied those approaches to terrorists, and Americans are safer for it.

I believe we need border security, like the House-passed legislation. Frankly, if that legislation were taken up in the Senate, we would get better grades from the 9/11 Commission. Why? Because the 9/11 Commission understood that border security has become national security.

This resolution remembers those who lost their lives on 9/11. That was 3,000 people. Countless more were scarred on that day. But September 11 is also a call to action for our country and a day to recognize those who are in the field taking on Islamist terrorism, including law enforcement officers, Border Patrol officers, and our Armed Forces.

We saw many acts of heroism on September 11. We had acts of heroism on September 11, 2006, also, many in far-away lands, and we will see more acts of terrorism in the days and years ahead.

Mr. Speaker, as summed up recently by a top British official, the threat from Islamist terrorists is real. It is here. It is deadly. And, as he said, it is enduring.

□ 1615

That it is. But it is not as enduring as the spirit of our Nation so evident on 9/11. We will prevail.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 3 minutes to my good friend, our distinguished colleague from Florida (Ms. CORRINE BROWN).

Ms. CORRINE BROWN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor those who lost their lives on September 11, 2001, and those who risked their lives in the fight on terrorism. I also rise today to discuss the slow pace, or rather the lack of pace, in the reforms called for by the 9/11 Commission.

The 9/11 Commission was chartered by Congress to examine and report on the facts and causes relating to the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. What of those recommendations have we enacted? Every time the polls go down for the Bush administration a new threat is discovered.

Since September 11, in fact, I have been lobbying the Bush administration for additional security funding for our Nation's ports and other areas of our Nation's infrastructure, such as freight and passenger rail, our subway system, busses, tunnels and bridges. There are other areas of vulnerability that are outside of aviation security.

The Bush administration has been telling the American people that they are checking only 3 to 4 percent of all cargo that comes into our ports, but in reality all they are checking is the manifest that lists the inventories of the ship.

Now, I think the American people are smart enough to know that if reading a piece of paper provided by the shipper is what passes for port security, then we are all in trouble.

We spent $4.4 billion alone on aviation security, while only $36 million is being spent on all surface transportation security programs. And with respect to our Nation's ports, which serve as the main economic engine for many of the areas in which they are found, an attack would not only be extremely dangerous to the local citizens, but economically disastrous as well.

The Bush administration and the Republicans talk a great talk about security, but they do not, and I repeat, do not walk the walk.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. MCHENRY).

Mr. MCHENRY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman.

As Manhattan's skyline fell down, Americans stood up. We took to our feet and raised the flag, pledging solidarity to our Nation and our fellow countrymen and our values. But foremost, we pledged solidarity with our fellow Americans.

On that day we confirmed what we had long known: Being an American is more than simply a title; it is a duty. And the images of first responders risking their lives, their safety, rushing headlong into crumbling towers, affirm that courage, that honor, that privilege that we have to call ourselves Americans.

The events of that day didn't begin, but certainly brought to the forefront the war we have with Islamic extremists, an enemy that despises the very idea of America. History shows that every American generation is tasked with defending the ideals of America. And, make no mistake about it, this challenge, this fight, is our generational challenge.

These events, now woven into the fabric of America, the fabric of human history, will not be remembered for the destruction that occurred 5 years ago. It will not be remembered for the destruction that transpired on that sad day. It will be remembered for the compassion that followed and the unity which we have as Americans. And the world will know for generations to come that as Manhattan's skyline fell down, Americans stood up.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentlewoman from California (Ms. HARMAN) be permitted to control the balance of the time of the minority leader.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. HARMAN) will control the balance of the time, which is 1 hour and 14 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER).

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank Chairman HYDE for the time. I hope my colleagues will all join in support of H. Res. 994.

Mr. Speaker, 5 years ago I stood on the House floor and proclaimed that I was not without hope for America's ability to eliminate the scourge of terrorism. I was convinced that the people of this great Nation would, much like they did on December 8, 1941, come together to defeat a common enemy rooted in intolerance and fear.

To be sure, much is left to be accomplished. We cannot, we must not, ever forget the prayers we said that day, the tears we shed, and the memories of those who now belong to the ages.

Yes, Osama bin Laden has yet to personally receive justice, but over the course of the last 5 years, the international communications, financing, state sponsorship and success that al Qaeda enjoyed on September 11 has been significantly degraded. The world now knows that America will not bow to the forces of evil, but will instead fight until evil has been eradicated.

Congress has, as this resolution indicates, provided many of the necessary tools, but the people themselves also deserve most of the credit for this Nation's progress. While the threat of terrorism continues to loom in the distance, I believe we are safer as a nation because the people of this country are paying attention. They are the soldiers, they are the intelligence gatherers and they are the first line of defense. They are the personnel who were given a responsibility on September 11, 2001, to finally take the fight to terrorism, and they are succeeding.

Five years later I have seen an America that has exceeded our expectations. Rather than cowering to those who blackened the beautiful New York skyline on that day, the American people are emboldened in their resolve to live free and prosperous lives. They have renewed their faith and our faith in the hope of democracy. Freedom, as I stated then, continues to work.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished leader for yielding the time. I rise in support of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I was at the site of 9/11, but the first time I was there in 1993, and I went because that was the first time bin Laden hit us. Representing all the first responders in America, I go to where they are, not with the cameras and the TV lights blaring, but as one of them.

I went in 1993 when Howard Safer, the Fire Commissioner for New York, asked me to go down to Ground Zero to see the damage caused by the first hit of the terrorists against us. And the young firefighter who took me through that complex was a man by the name of Ray Downey. Ray Downey became one of my best friends. He didn't live in my district, he lived in New York.

But Ray Downey was an active firefighter, a former marine, who told me the lessons that we should learn because he said, "Curt, you have to understand, bin Laden is going to hit us again and again and again," and, boy, was he right. They hit us at the Khobar Towers, they hit us at the African embassies. They bombed the USS Cole. And what was our response? Nothing. We shook our head in disbelief.

So it was with a great deal of sadness on September 11 that I was called while walking out of the Capitol building and I was told that Ray Downey had been killed. You see, Mr. Speaker, on September 11, Ray Downey was the Chief of all rescue for the New York City Fire Department. He was the guy at the base of the tower that was overseeing the largest and most successful rescue in the history of mankind. 70,000 people were brought out alive. Ray Downey was killed.

I went to New York the next day. I did not wait again for the cameras and the suits. I went up as a member of the first responder community and at Ground Zero I spent the whole day.

As they took me around the back of these two seven-story piles of rubble, after being briefed by Joe Allbaugh, the head of FEMA, I saw two firefighters on their knees sifting through the debris with their hands. As I got closer I could read their turnout gear, and there were the names Downey and Downey.

You see, Mr. Speaker, two of Ray Downey's five kids are also firefighters, today they are battalion chiefs in New York, and there they were looking for their father. In fact, I brought Ray's family and his widow down to my district one month after 9/11 and we honored them as American heroes.

I tell you all of this, Mr. Speaker, because the passion that I have for the first responders is the reason I come to the floor today to honor the memory of those who paid the ultimate price.

The last thing we should be doing is playing politics with this. After all, it was in 1995, I think there was a different President back then, when the Public Safety Wireless Advisory Committee said that we didn't have an interoperable communications system, and we did nothing about it. In fact, it wasn't until Jane Harman and I introduced legislation that passed last December that in fact corrected that problem and put $1 billion on the table.

It was in 1999 that I sat in my office on November 4 with the Deputy Head of the CIA and the Deputy Director of the FBI and the Deputy Secretary of Defense to convince them to have an interoperable capability linking all 33 classified systems together. And you know what the CIA said, Mr. Speaker? They said, "Congressman, we don't need that. Even though there are emerging transnational terrorist threats, we don't need that capability." It was the single biggest failure on 9/11 not to have that interoperable capability to link together 33 classified systems.

Mr. Speaker, all of us could have done a better job. When my colleagues on the other side were in charge, they didn't fund a dime for the first responders, not one dime of money. We did that in 2000, one year before 9/11, when working with Republicans and Democrats we put into place both the Assistance to Firefighter Grant Program and the SAFER Program.

I couldn't believe the rhetoric last night I heard on the House floor, because it was Democrats and Republicans together who did that. But it was Republican leadership who made it happen.

I am proud of our record. I am proud of the fact that today we have linked up the 33 classified systems. First of all it was the TTIC, the Terrorism Threat Integration Center. Today it is the NCTC, the National Counterterrorism Center.

I am proud of the fact that we have put together almost $4 billion to 24,000 of our 32,000 fire and EMS departments around the country. I am proud of the fact that Democrats and Republicans finally have solved the problem of putting money with interoperable communications together.

I am also a little frustrated. We hear our colleagues on the other side. The Gilmore Commission, which Ray Downey encouraged me to put into law, which I did, made three reports before 9/11, most of them in the previous administration. Forty percent of the 9/11 recommendations had already been made by the Gilmore Commission before 9/11 ever happened. But we don't hear that today on the House floor, that there were recommendations that we could have put into place before 9/11 and we didn't do it.

So stop the blame. This is not fair to Ray Downey and his family. It is not fair to my constituent Michael Horrocks, who left behind two kids and a wife. What was his mistake on 9/11? He climbed in the front seat of one of United's planes and he had his throat slit as the plane traveled into the Trade Center towers.

This resolution needs our support in a bipartisan way. That is the only way we can protect America.

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA) will control the next block of time for the majority leader.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to roughly the next hour of time that we will spend here on the floor, myself and our ranking member and the members of the Intelligence Committee, to remember those who died, those who served on 9/11, the tremendous work of hundreds of thousands of people in our military forces and the folks who are working in the intelligence community that have helped keep this country safe over the last 5 years.

I know that there are disagreements about some of the strategy, some of the particulars, some of the execution and those types of things, but much as in my home district on Monday, I hope that that spirit can continue through the next hour.

Monday was kind of one of those days where we recognized that in many ways it was kind of a sacred day. People took the day off from partisan politics, and we reflected back on what happened 5 years earlier when we were so brutally attacked, where almost 3,000 Americans lost their lives. Many of us recounted the places where we were, the things that we were doing, and how in comparison those things were so minor to what happened and how that transformed America.

And perhaps for so ever a brief moment, or briefer than what we would have hoped or envisioned, it brought America together and focused us on who we are and focused us on the threat that we had faced, that we now face, a threat that we had all witnessed and experienced maybe as early as 1979 when the embassy in Iran was seized. Perhaps it was when Hezbollah attacked our Marine barracks in 1983. But regardless of the times leading up to 2001, we recognized that that was history, 9/11 is today, and that we were going to be facing some serious challenges in the future. And this is very, very hard.

It is a different kind of enemy than we had ever faced before. It is an enemy that does not wear uniforms. It is an enemy that does not have a government as we know it. It is an enemy that does not represent a specific geographic territory. It does not have a capital. It does not have bureaucracies. It has not signed on to any international agreements, as ironic as it may sound, international agreements as to how we will fight and conduct wars. It is an organization that celebrates the deaths of its suicide bombers. It is in sharp contrast to who we are and what we have done.

We responded. The ranking member and I, along with Senator LIEBERMAN and Senator COLLINS, worked on a project that many said could not be done, on a project that for almost 50 years had never been done, which was the reform of an intelligence community, an intelligence community that needed to respond to the threats that radical Islam posed. We have made much progress in that area. But as we both had said in a report that was issued in a bipartisan way from our committee, there is still much work to be done.

The bottom line is we continue to be a Nation at war. We continue to be a Nation at risk. We continue to, I believe, be a Nation that is united in a desire to win this war, recognizing that there are real differences about how we will fight this war to be successful and to be consistent with American ideals. Because the biggest tribute that we can leave to the victims of 9/11 is to make sure that we win this war but also to make sure that we do not change how we are as we go about winning that war.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, nothing we say today can erase the pain that America felt on September 11, 2001. No resolution we pass, no speech we make can bring back the loved ones we lost or repay the heroes who rushed to their rescue.

As I stood at Ground Zero again on Monday amidst the anguished faces, the shopworn photos of loved ones lost, the sad music, the reading of names, flags everywhere, the memories of 5 years ago came rushing back. The frantic calls to my children in New York and Washington. The disbelief that we could be so vulnerable. And as the day wore on, the immense sadness for 3,000 innocent victims and the resolve to demonstrate that this Congress would not bow to terror.

This resolution, however, contains more than memories. It makes a statement about how much progress we have made in this House.

The sad, unalterable fact is that 5 years after 9/11 we have not made as much progress as this resolution claims. We have not brought to justice the most senior leaders responsible for the attacks. We have not plugged some gaping holes in our homeland defense, and we have not shared the sacrifice or stayed united as a Nation in the face of grave danger.

As ranking member on the Intelligence Committee, I want to focus my remarks on how this House has responded to the major intelligence failures of our time, the tragic failure to connect the dots of the 9/11 plot; the inexcusable failure to recognize that Saddam Hussein did not have WMD; and the catastrophic failure to predict the violence insurgency that would follow our military action in Iraq, and take the prudent steps necessary to prevent it.

The news, Mr. Speaker, is uneven. I believe our committee did a good job of assessing the performance of the FBI, CIA, and NSA leading up to 9/11; and so did the Congressional Joint Inquiry into 9/11, which held 24 days of hearings, including 9 days of open hearings, provided an excellent, bipartisan report with legislative recommendations, and was the basis for the 9/11 Commission's final report.

Over major opposition from some in this body, Congress acted on some of those recommendations and, as our chairman just said, created a Director of National Intelligence and a National Counterterrorism Center, thanks to the courageous lobbying of the 9/11 family members. Our current chairman and I helped lead that effort, and I am very proud of what we did.

As for WMD failures, our committee was the first to document that clandestine sources in Iraq were thin and that the analysis was poor. But then our former chairman shut down the House's inquiry into Iraq WMD. And again in this Congress, our current chairman ceded jurisdiction on this critically important issue to our counterparts in the other body.

Just last Friday that committee released a compelling report showing that our sources were unreliable and that facts claimed by this administration are not supported by the intelligence. According to that report and other available sources, there were no links between al Qaeda and Iraq before 9/11. Yet as recently as last Sunday, the Vice President said "we don't know" whether Mohammed Atta ever met with an Iraqi intelligence officer in Prague. Mr. Speaker, we do know. We know the meeting never took place, and yet the Vice President refuses to acknowledge the facts.

It is one thing to have inadequate intelligence. In an intelligence war, you are never going to have pristine intelligence. But it is another thing to ignore professional intelligence assessments, make end-runs around intelligence agencies, issue hyped statements about intelligence, and use intelligence for partisan gain.

The third failure, the failure to predict and prevent the insurgency, has been in some ways the most painful. More than 2,500 U.S. personnel have been killed since President Bush declared "Mission Accomplished" in May 2003, nearly as many as died on 9/11.

Our committee has conducted virtually no oversight over this particular failure. We have not examined whether the intelligence on the insurgency was flawed or whether policymakers deliberately ignored warnings and professional assessments.

Press reports indicate that the administration may still be trying to paint a rosy picture of the situation in Iraq. The August casualty reporting excluded statistics on people killed by bombs, mortars, rockets, and other mass attacks. The result is that the August statistics for murder rates in Baghdad appear 52 percent lower than the daily rate for July. Mr. Speaker, I do not think policymakers should engage in creative accounting when it comes to the lives of our sons and daughters or the lives of innocent Iraqis.

According to some reports, a draft "National Intelligence Estimate on Iraq," which reportedly paints a very negative picture of the situation there now, is being held by the administration until after the November election. If that reporting is true, it is deeply troubling and could needlessly endanger the lives of our military and intelligence professionals in the field. And, Mr. Speaker, it would also keep Congress in the dark one more time.

Mr. Speaker, I often say that the point of looking back is to look forward to avoid making the same mistakes again. North Korea is test-firing missiles. Iran is defying the world community on its nuclear program. Yet we do not have solid intelligence on either target. Mr. Speaker, good intelligence leads to good policy.

But instead of insisting on better intelligence, our committee may rush through dangerous legislation on warrantless surveillance without any testimony from administration witnesses. We are issuing staff-written "brochures" hyping the threats posed by al Qaeda, Iran, and North Korea that do little to explain how little we truly know. It is no wonder that the 9/11 Commission gave Congress a D for intelligence oversight reform.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude where I began. 9/11 forged our Nation into common purpose. It brought out a common humanity and engendered a common resolve to protect America. Our response to 9/11 has been and will continue to be a measure of us. Mr. Speaker, what we should really resolve to do today is to do better together.

At Ground Zero on Monday, the survivors shared something so precious: the hope that their grief and suffering would inspire a Nation to prevent another attack. They were all ages, all colors, all religions, and all backgrounds. The one thing they were not was partisan.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield 2 minutes to our colleague, Mrs. DAVIS.

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Resolution 994.

The terrorist attacks upon our country changed the way that we live forever and provided us with a cruel reminder that freedom and liberty have a price. The attacks reminded us there are extremists in this world that would do anything, including sacrificing their own lives to destroy ours and our way of life. The attacks reminded us that democracy and the benefits of a free government cannot be taken for granted and must continually be fought for.

Mr. Speaker, we are safer than we were 5 years ago. But until we can say with confidence that we are safe, the constant fight for freedom can never end. Until families can go to bed at night feeling secure, we cannot stop the fight for freedom. Until our young people can know without a doubt that America holds a safe, prosperous future for them, our battle can never cease.

We in Congress are tasked by the Constitution to defend the homeland, and we take this task very seriously. Our men and women in uniform are getting the job done, and our first responders have answered the call. Our intelligence forces have played a vast role in protecting America. And together we are safer today.

However, we must remain vigilant and prepare to fight these radical Islamic terrorists whenever and wherever they may strike. Retreat has never made us stronger and, by Osama bin Laden's own words, is a sign of America's weakness.

There is no room for halfway approaches here. We must do what is needed to protect our country. We are using and must continue to use both diplomatic and military measures and tools available to protect America.

As we look back 5 years ago this week, we must remember the horrors of that time. But more importantly, we must remember the resolve adopted by all of us to defend freedom and fight with all our might to combat the forces that look to destroy us. It is through vigilance and the passion for freedom that we will win this war and truly make America safe.

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is now my pleasure to yield to a dear friend, the ranking member on the Armed Services Committee, Mr. SKELTON, 4 minutes.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman, my good friend from California.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize September 11 as a national day of mourning, to commemorate and honor America's 5-year-long national sacrifice, and to warn of clear and present danger in the days ahead.

Our Nation will never forget the terrorist attacks on September 11, 2001. Nearly 3,000 innocent Americans perished in that day, and the lives of many thousands more were forever changed. The tools and the national power were mobilized to bring justice to those responsible.

To each and all experiencing personal loss, we honor and we pay respect. To each and all responding to the call of duty, we extend a note of appreciation. Their sacrifice in our Nation's initial response led to a successful military strike against terror strongholds in Afghanistan. As we all agreed, it was an impressive operational display of technological might. It was swift and it was right, and it enjoyed widespread support among the world's family and nations. In short, it was a step toward a more safe and secure environment for Americans.

Mr. Speaker, in the past 5 years, much of the initial gain has been squandered. We have failed to implement the recommendations of the 9/11 Commission. We found ourselves bogged down in a costly war in Iraq that detracts from our pursuit of those responsible for attacking American soil. We are also facing a resurgence in Afghanistan.

Our Nation is engaged in two wars, the first against terrorism; and the second, a war of choice to effect a regime change in Iraq, has dragged us into a sectarian clash on the verge of civil war. The war on terrorism rightfully continues, and by all account remains a war of necessity. In contrast, the war in Iraq was initiated with faulty intelligence, without proper planning and aftermath, that is, after the initial strike planning has created for our Nation a strategic risk.

More than 40 percent of Army and Marine Corps ground equipment is committed to the combat theater. That equipment is wearing out, according to experts, nine times faster than the normal rate. Not one Army combat brigade in the continental United States is fully ready for its wartime mission.

Simply put, the war in Iraq has sapped our strategic base and threatens to break our Army. Regrettably, our Nation is not safer than it was on September 10, 5 years ago. Because this war of choice has tapped our resources, our Nation's ability to confront future security challenges, it is less than it was only 5 years ago. That is a sad commentary, but sadly true.

As we commemorate the heroes of September 11 and beyond, let us not forget the solemn oath to protect and defend this Nation and to protect and defend our Constitution. Let us not forget our responsibility to take every step necessary to make America stronger, not weaker, than before. And let us never forget our duty to prevent the occurrence of another similar tragedy. We must have the best, we must have the most capable military to meet any threat that faces this wonderful Nation. If we fail in this endeavor, then we will surely have failed to honor the memory of those who have fallen.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the majority whip, Mr. BLUNT.

Mr. BLUNT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, today we live in a country of great opportunity, we live in a country of great freedom, but we live in a dangerous world. We came face to face with that danger 5 years ago, we came face to face with the evil in the world 5 years ago, and today we commemorate what we have done in the last minutes and hours and what we have done in the last years to try to prevent that evil from replicating itself again.

For years before 9/11, we pretended that evil somehow didn't exist; or if it did exist, it couldn't touch us. A series of events that government after government after government in our country chose to minimize or ignore led to 9/11. The bombing of the barracks at Beirut, the bombing of the barracks at Khobar Towers, the attack on the USS Cole, the attack on two of our embassies, the first attack on the World Trade Center were all part of a concentrated effort of a narrow sliver of totalitarian activists that don't like the way we live and don't like who we are, who have vowed to destroy our very way of life.

Now, it is nice, whether it is at work or whether it is at home or in your neighborhood, to pretend you don't have enemies in the world. But we do have enemies in the world. As the Prime Minister of Iraq said when he spoke to this body just weeks ago: this is not Islam, it is a perverted view, I think he said specifically as was translated, a false view or a fake view of Islam. But there are people who believe it. There are people who believe that we, because of who we are, are their sworn enemies.

And this resolution today just commemorates the great work of those individuals that we recognize, those individuals that we recognize who defend our country, who defend our freedom, who defend our flag; those individuals we recognize who take chances every day to find out the information that we need to find out on a human level, from those people every day who analyze the things that need to be analyzed and those resources we have given them to be able to make those choices, whether it was the PATRIOT Act or the other things that we have done since 9/11 that bring terrorism to the level of other crimes, even though the danger of terrorism may be much more dangerous than those crimes that various investigative arms of our government and the tools that they had available to them were given after 9/11.

We need to continue to move forward and we need to continue to be committed somewhat, and many people have said that someone had to be the first person that said we have to be right every single time, the terrorists only have to be right once.

Nobody will stand here today in good conscience and say a terrorist attack can't happen again. But we can say in good conscience that we will do everything we possibly can to prevent that attack from happening again. We will do everything we can possibly do, from naively looking at the present and assuming that we won't have enemies in the future. We need to address our enemies; we need to address the world the way we find it. Thank goodness for the many American men and women and our allies overseas who joined us in trying to prevent the cowardly terrorist attacks that happened in this country 5 years ago and other countries since then.

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to a great member of our committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY) for 3 minutes.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from California.

Mr. Speaker, many Members recently voted against the previous question on the rule. We did so because we wanted a substitute, a resolution that mirrored Senate Resolution 565, which was a measure which was bipartisan and which was designed to unite this Congress and the country. That is the way in fact that we wish to remember and honor those 9/11 victims.

Unfortunately, the Speaker and the majority of the House have chosen division and partisanship. The gentleman from Michigan mentioned a moment ago that on Monday, September 11, the Nation took off a day from partisanship. We only wish that the Speaker had joined in that. But by proposing a resolution referring to issues that are partisan and divisive, once again, a chance for unity has been missed not in the Senate but here in the House.

New York Times columnist Frank Rich this past Sunday recalled FDR's use of the phrase "the warm courage of national unity in a time of challenge." That is exactly what we need in these times of challenge.

FDR mentioned his realization of our interdependence on each other, that we cannot merely take but that we must give as well; and that if we are going to move forward, we must move as a trained and loyal army willing to sacrifice for the good of a common discipline.

Since September 11, this Nation has not been called to that higher unity and shared sacrifice. Instead, we have seen divisive legislation and tax cuts favoring the few. We should instead honor the fallen victims of 9/11 and their families' sacrifices and the first responders and our military and our intelligence communities for their bipartisan efforts. We should resolve to implement the recommendations of the 9/11 Commission.

Now, Chairmen Kean and Hamilton wrote on September 11, 2006, that their commission's December report card on implementation garnered 10 C's, 12 D's, and 4 F's. And they listed there as still remaining to be done at least 10 things, the acceptance of which and the completion of which would in fact honor the September 11 people.

We should allocate our homeland security dollars wisely, because now they are being spread around like revenue sharing. States have to be held to create and practice emergency response plans. Congress shouldn't wait until 2009, three years from now, to give first responders a slice of the broadest spectrum for emergency communication.

We still need to do a better job with information sharing among government agencies, particularly those at the State and local levels. The FBI reform must be sped up even as it moves in the right direction. The Privacy and Civil Liberties Oversight Board must be empowered as a strong voice on behalf of individual and civil liberties, especially as the executive gets stronger authorities. We need to better screen passengers against a comprehensive terrorist watch list before they board craft. We need to do a better job of reaching out to the Muslim world so that America can be seen as a source of hope and opportunity and not despair.

Congress needs to reform itself. The oversight committees need stronger powers over budgets and jurisdictions. And the prevention of terrorists' access to nuclear weapons must be elevated above all other problems of national security. To do all this, we need the warm courage of unity, not partisanship, not divisive resolutions.

Mr. Speaker, this would be an excellent time for the leadership of this House to match rhetoric with unifying actions.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. I would like to yield 2 minutes to my colleague, a member of the committee, Mr. MCHUGH.

Mr. MCHUGH. Mr. Speaker, as a New Yorker, this past Monday had a particular impact on me and on my fellow New Yorkers. It is obviously a time of great sorrow and sadness and reflection for each and every American. But of the 2,997 who perished that day, a large number and obviously the main focus of the attack was in our State.

There is little we can do to rewind that as a day and as the circumstances that led up to it. I noted my good friend, the gentlewoman from California's remarks about intelligence failures, and she is right. They are real and they were longstanding. You heard the majority whip of the House speak of the attacks that were levied against this country that, frankly, the intelligence systems were not up to providing long before this particular era, long before we were in Iraq: the USS Cole, the attack on our two embassies, the first World Trade Center attack, Khobar Towers, and on and on and on.

If 9/11 teaches us anything, it is that as Americans, and particularly as ones who have the great honor and great responsibility of representing the people of this Nation, we must continue as we did on that day, September 11, to work together to make us safe.

We are safer. We can never be safe. This land is too free, too open, too many opportunities that we enjoy and our basic liberties to ever be fully safe, but we can be, as I would argue we are today, safer.

I would hope we would be even safer tomorrow and the day after that, but to do that, we are going to have to continue our joint initiatives.

We have come a long way. We have instilled leadership and coordination of multiple agencies. We have addressed how terrorism information gets to the analysts and the policymakers who need that information most. We have had to change the culture of the FBI from one of being single-minded in a criminal investigation agency to one that pursues those who wish to harm us through proactive intelligence investigations.

We have done these things. We need to continue. We must make 9/11 a rallying cry for a safer tomorrow.

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas for a unanimous consent request.

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will place a statement in the RECORD on H. Res. 994 on the 9/11 5-year anniversary at this point.

Mr. Speaker, on Monday, this Nation took time to remember the events of five years earlier on September 11, 2001—events that changed the way we viewed the world and our own Nation. Our prayers are with the families of those that lost their lives that day. We never imagined that something like that could happen on American soil and it is still hard to comprehend the number of innocent lives lost that day.

The five year anniversary brought back memories of planes crashing into the World Trade Center Building, the Pentagon, and Flight 93 going down in Pennsylvania, but more importantly, we remembered the images of the brave Americans—fire fighters, law enforcement, medical personnel, and everyday citizens—that rushed to help their fellow Americans that were injured or trapped in the rubble of the fallen buildings.

The courage these individuals showed is the reason the terrorists were not successful in weakening our Nation. They took innocent American lives and destroyed our buildings that day, but they did not destroy our Nation's resolve because Americans will always answer the call and the first responders that day did so selflessly in an environment of chaos and uncertainty.

Over the past five years we have seen this country grow stronger in the face of the new threat that became apparent that day. As citizens we are more vigilant and as a Nation we have committed to a new war to fight terrorism across the globe.

The attacks in Spain, Jordan, Britain and elsewhere since 9/11 demonstrate that we are not alone in this fight and that we have not deterred the terrorists' intentions or will to carry out attacks against innocent people. We will continue to hunt down terrorists and terrorist cells where they are and we will lead the world in defeating their ideology.

We all have different ideas about how to do this. Over the past five years, we have seen heated debates in this House, throughout our government, and across the Nation over how to best protect our country, secure our borders, patrol our ports, and carry out the war against these extremists while protecting the American way of life and our individual liberties. But this tragedy reminded us that we are all Americans first and foremost. We may not always agree on how best to do this, but the goal of every person here is the same: to succeed in protecting our country, our way of life, and preventing another 9/11.

No one will forget where they were, or what they were doing when they learned of the attacks. This anniversary marks one of the gravest days in our Nation's history, but it also reminds us of the bravery displayed by those that reacted to the tragedy with unwavering courage and heroism.

Mr. Speaker, September 11, 2001 is five years behind us, but it will guide us for the foreseeable future. I pray for the families that lost loved ones that day and I thank those that served bravely. God be with those that are not here because of 9/11 and God bless America.

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. REYES).

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the victims of 9/11 al Qaeda attacks, as well as the family members who mourn them, the first responders who helped their communities recover, and the brave men and women in the armed services who are risking their lives to make us safer.

Honoring the memories of those who gave their lives on September 11 should not, however, be a once-a-year endeavor. This should not be an occasion for speeches and ceremonies. Talk is cheap, but our actions, what we do in the war on terror, that is what speaks volumes. Through our actions, we honor our dead. I would like to talk about a couple of ways in which we could better honor their memories, ways in which we can actually act.

After September 11, we began a war of necessity, the war on terror. The whole world was with us. We made enormous strides quickly in Afghanistan in that war, but then we began another war, a war of choice, in Iraq. Now, because more than 130,000 of our troops are bogged down in Iraq, we have punted the ball in Afghanistan.

Let me be clear. Today, we are in danger in Afghanistan, the original breeding ground for al Qaeda. The Taliban is gaining ground and inflicting casualties on coalition forces. If we need reinforcements, will we have them? The major victory in the war of necessity, the war on terror, that was so close now appears to be fading because we are bogged down in a war of choice in Iraq.

The best way to honor our departed heroes and friends is by winning that war of necessity. The terrorists started the war on September 11, but if we set our priorities right we can finish it.

The men and women who died on September 11 deserve victory in the war on terror, our war of necessity. They deserve more than empty rhetoric. They deserve more than talking points and slogans. They deserve more than chicken hawk mud slinging. They also deserve more than insulting those as unpatriotic or weak anyone who dares to say that we need to make some changes in the way we are fighting the war of necessity. And finally, they deserve more than siphoning off resources from the war of necessity by a war of choice.

Yes, talk is cheap. If we want to remember those who died on September 11, let us give them a victory.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to my colleague from the great State of Michigan (Mr. ROGERS).

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, today is really an important day because what we celebrate today are those people who sacrificed of themselves and gave of their all to save the lives of someone else, and that is the real difference between us and our enemy. We celebrate those who save lives. They celebrate those who take lives. That is the difference to remember.

Al Qaeda has a very radical plan, and this attack was not just to poke America in the eye and to kill our civilians. It was to obtain a goal, a goal that they had publicly stated, a tale of faith that ranges from all of the Mideast, northern Africa, southern parts of Europe, including Spain and Indonesia.

This is a war not only of ideology but about a political geography that they believe they own and they are willing to kill Jews and Christians and men and women and Muslims to get it.

Amrullah Saleh visited the United States. He is now head of the intelligence services in Afghanistan, and he said when he was visiting here, "Only we in Afghanistan have seen what happens when Osama bin Laden is king or prime minister or commander-in-chief of a nation. Our freedom, our culture, our way of life was completely taken from us."

Under the Taliban, it was against the law to teach women to read or to drive. They could not go outside unless they were escorted by a male relative. They had burned buses because they were a modern necessity. They could not listen to music, watch movies or television, shave or use the Internet.

Osama bin Laden said, "The war is for you or for us to win. If we win, it means your defeat and your disgrace forever."

Strong words by a cowardly enemy, but we know that threat is real, and sometimes we get lost in the haggling when we all know that this is the time that we pull together and celebrate those who celebrate life, pull together against those who celebrate death.

Today is our day that we rededicate ourselves to the task of protecting and defending this Nation against a vicious and merciless enemy. We must not forget and we must do what it takes to prevail against those perpetrators of 9/11.

This is what we commemorate in today's resolution, and I would urge all of us to remember who the enemy is

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is now my pleasure to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. RUPPERSBERGER).

Mr. RUPPERSBERGER. Mr. Speaker, first, I thank Ranking Member HARMAN, and Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the heroes of September 11.

Our citizens will forever remember September 11 as a day on which our values, our liberties, and our freedoms were attacked.

Our Nation's intelligence agencies and law enforcement officials learned to do business differently after 9/11.

We learned we need to give our law enforcement and intelligence agencies more powerful and flexible, modern tools to detect terrorists' plans and intentions.

As a former prosecutor, I understand the need to balance tough justice issues for criminals but also to respect human rights.

By the same logic, we have to learn what terrorists are plotting before they act so that we can keep the country safe, but we have to fight terrorists in a way that also protects Americans' rights. In passing the PATRIOT Act, Congress struck a balance between civil liberties and strong law enforcement. Not a perfect balance but a good one.

However, not every effort strikes this balance. The President ordered the National Security Agency to conduct a surveillance program in a way that avoids certain required constitutional checks and balances. The House Intelligence Committee could not oversee the NSA program because most of us were not briefed. At the administration's direction, the judicial branch, in the form of the FISA court, was bypassed.

If the administration needs new authorities to monitor terrorists, they should ask Congress for them. I see no reason, however, why this program could not be conducted under the rubric of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act.

The district I represent includes NSA. So I have a special interest in the men and women of the NSA who professionally and honorably serve their country, often in secret. They should not have to worry if they are breaking the law when they follow instructions of the White House and the Attorney General.

Our counterterrorism efforts must be governed by the rule of law. To do otherwise would dishonor the heroes of September 11 and their loved ones.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT), another member of the Intelligence Committee

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman.

On September 11, 2001, life in America was irreversibly changed. That day we were drawn into a war to confront a threat we did not fully understand.

Although we still cannot fully understand why terrorists hate our way of life so much, we do understand this much. We are still very much at war. Almost 5 years after the attacks on September 11, 2001, Islamic extremist groups continue to represent the most immediate threat to the United States and our allies. They have struck London, Madrid, and have bombed restaurants and hotels in the Middle East, Asia, and Africa. At the urging of Osama bin Laden, every American man, woman and child has become a legitimate target for their jihad, and American interests continue to be targeted by al Qaeda affiliates around the globe.

This year alone we have unearthed terrorist plots in Canada and the U.K. that remind us just how close the terrorist threat is as these individuals did travel into the United States with some frequency.

Mr. Speaker, we are blessed with an outstanding military that has taken the battle to the enemy, in places where every American carries a gun, rather than on the streets of New York, Washington, or Wichita, Kansas.

But the United States remains a Nation at war, a war for which we did not ask. We are safer, though, not simply because there has been no successful attack on U.S. soil since September 11, 2001. We are safer today because of the professionals of the worldwide network of intelligence, military and law enforcement officials who continue to pressure and strike al Qaeda and its followers.

We have turned a corner, and we must continue to pressure these radical Islamic organizations until victory on all fronts for freedom-loving people around the world is assured.

September 11, 2001, showed us the danger of Islamic terrorism. It also taught us that the deficiencies in our own system made it possible for terrorists to operate right under our noses.

Our most important duty as Members of Congress is to protect our Nation from ever experiencing that lesson again. For that reason, we must continue to focus on improving our national security, our homeland security, and our intelligence systems so that we can beat this threat, not only today and tomorrow but for the future, for our children and grandchildren.

I thank the chairman

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is now my pleasure to yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLT), ranking member on our Intelligence Policy Subcommittee.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentlewoman from California.

Like every American, I spent the past week reflecting on that terrible day 5 years ago. I too attended a number of memorials and observances during the week. We came out of 9/11/2001 mourning with the families, praising the first responders, and vowing to catch and punish those responsible and vowing to do everything possible to prevent a recurrence.

For the families affected, well over 100 in my district in central New Jersey alone, the pain will never go away. The hole in their hearts and their lives is mirrored by the void that remains at Ground Zero, and that in part is what I wanted to talk about, the unfinished work in the aftermath of September 11, 2001.

Today, Congress, following the President, has veered off course. We have engaged in a war with an undefined enemy, undefined objectives and no plan for success. We have suffered a tremendous loss of American life, money and international prestige, the latter almost entirely self-inflicted. We have alienated and embittered traditional allies, some of whom believe we might even attack them at some point in the future, and we have given our enemies, unfortunately, ample material with which they can recruit new terrorists.

The families left behind on 9/11 made a clear request of us: make Americans safer from terrorism. We have not taken those specific steps, even though we should have taken them.

What are those specific steps? Well, my friend from Ohio, the majority leader, and the chairman, they know. Every Member knows. The bipartisan 9/11 Commission worked hard and well and presented a specific list on everything from securing our borders to screening shipments in ports.

□ 1715

By the way, the list did not include a suggestion that we invade Iraq.

The commission gave these specific recommendations, a blueprint on how to protect Americans. Not long ago, the 9/11 Commission gave the government about two dozen inadequate grades for failing to take those specific steps to protect Americans.

So instead of self-congratulatory and divisive resolutions, let us have an up-or-down vote to implement each of their recommendations.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to a member of our leadership, Mr. KINGSTON.

Mr. KINGSTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I wanted to say that there have been a lot of steps we have taken since 9/11. Many of these steps have been taken against the Democrat leadership's will. I think it is sad that so soon after 9/11 there seemed to be so much partisan division, and yet there still was some bipartisan unity.

We were able to, for example, increase funding for first responders on homeland security. We were able to pass the PATRIOT Act. We were able to pass the REAL ID Act that revamps the requirements for State identification cards. We passed the Homeland Security Act of 2002, which established the U.S. Department of Homeland Security. And we passed more border security, including physical barriers, more Border Patrol agents, and more state-of-the-art technology. We ended the catch-and-release program. Unfortunately, 164 Democrats voted against it. We passed the Safe Port Act, which enhances our port safety. We did the Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act of 2004, which set up a lot of intelligence-gathering information, and part of this was the NSA program on surveillance.

And I want to say this, that I don't want the Federal Government listening to any conversation that I might have or you may have or constituents may have. But if they are suspected terrorists, and they are calling to Baghdad, I kind of want Uncle Sam to know about that.

I was actually shocked to hear that on Monday NANCY PELOSI, the leader of the Democrat Party, said that capturing Osama bin Laden would not make the world more safe. I was appalled that a Member of Congress would say such a thing. But I want you to know that that is a minority opinion. Most Democrats, most Republicans think capturing Osama bin Laden would be a good thing for the world's security and would, in fact, make the world safer. And I am glad that we have these intelligence surveillance programs so that we can close in on him.

I am also glad that we passed the BioShield program to enhance our defense against chemical and biological weapons. We have also passed an Emergency Communications Act that will help us communicate during times of disaster, and a Maritime Security Act.

All of these are done in reaction to 9/11, but also looking to prevent future attacks, and I think we are moving in the right direction. A lot of work has yet to be done, but we have got to stay the fight and we need to be unified.

Mr. Speaker, I submit for the RECORD an Associated Press article regarding events leading up to September 11, and a document entitled "The Post-9/11 Facts."

According to a recent study released by Mount Sinai Medical Center in New York (The New York Times, September 6, 2006), about 70% of a 10,000-person sampling of workers who labored at Ground Zero (excluding NYFD), have developed new or substantially worsened respiratory problems.

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, how much time remains on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlewoman from California has 51½ minutes; the gentleman from Michigan has 9¼ minutes remaining. There is 35 minutes that has been yielded to the Judiciary Committee following his 9¼ minutes.

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I just have a very short closing comment to make for our portion of the debate, and then I plan to yield the remainder of my time to the ranking member on the Judiciary Committee. So I will make those comments now.

Mr. Speaker, let me close this portion of the debate by once again paying tribute to those who lost their lives on 9/11, to those who came to their rescue, and to those sent to the front lines in the 5 years since. The individual stories of bravery and heroism have provided some measure of light in an otherwise dark, dark chapter.

Five years ago, Mr. Speaker, Members of this body stood shoulder to shoulder on the steps of the Capitol in a show of bipartisan unity. We actually did that again on Monday, but I am not sure we recovered the spirit that we had 5 years ago. How I wish we could have, as another member of our committee said, considered a different resolution today, the one that passed the other body by unanimous consent and that was cosponsored by every single Member.

Mr. Speaker, let us not use 9/11 for political fodder. Let us speak with one voice. We owe the American people nothing less.

Mr. Speaker, it is now my pleasure to yield the remainder of the time on our side to my good friend, Mr. CONYERS, the ranking member on the House Judiciary Committee and coauthor, with me, of H.R. 5371, the LISTEN Act, legislation supported by many of our Members and a broad range of civil liberties groups that would require the so-called NSA program to comply fully with the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act as presently drafted.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I welcome to this discussion and debate my colleague from the State of Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), who is also a great cosponsor of our Federal Prison Industries legislation, which we will consider tomorrow. You have good friends on the Intelligence Committee, my friend.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield 2 minutes to my colleague from the State of Alabama (Mr. EVERETT).

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of House Resolution 994, commemorating the cowardly September 11, 2001, attacks on the United States. Many Americans think the war on terror we are fighting began on September 11, 2001. However, 9/11 was just the deadliest attack in a war that began over 25 years ago.

For the first 20 years, we allowed terrorists to fight this war on their terms.

9/11 served as a wake-up call for us in the sense that we could no longer afford to sit on our hands and let terrorists continue to kill Americans and kill Americans and kill Americans. Under the leadership of President Bush, and with the support of this Republican-led Congress, we took the fight to the terrorists.

In Afghanistan, Operation Enduring Freedom removed the oppressive Taliban regime that ruled the Afghan people with brutality. In Iraq, we continue to make progress after a series of historic elections in which millions of Iraqis defied the threats of terrorism and voted to establish a national assembly. While much remains to be done in Iraq, it is important that we continue to remain there against those who want to cast Iraq into a civil war.

Mr. Speaker, we have accomplished so much in the global war on terror. We have significantly degraded the al Qaeda network by capturing and killing many of their leaders and associates. Despite these successes, the terrorists remain committed to launching another attack. It is not a question of if, but rather when.

As we mark the anniversary of these attacks, we must remain resolute to fight and win this war against terror. Mr. Speaker, this war on terror must be fought. We can do it in the streets of our own towns, or we can fight the terrorists wherever they are. Either way, it has to be done.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to our colleague Mr. ISSA.

Mr. ISSA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding to me. I am part of the class that came in and were freshmen, we were just getting our feet wet at that time in Judiciary and International Relations, when September 11 occurred. For the class of 2000 that came in with the President, this has been our entire career. So I don't have a reference point that is particularly good of how the House was before, but I did watch a profound change, a focus after September 11 that I am very proud of.

And I stand before this body today in hopes that after this election and after this resolution passes we will get back to being the Congress that we were after September 11. Because after September 11, we came together. We accepted the compromises necessary to go out and find out who killed us, who hated us, who wanted to kill us, who would be next, and where they would attack.

Today, serving on the Select Intelligence Committee, I am concerned that partisan bickering, that in fact those who want to change who runs the Congress or those who want to retain it have begun to look in those terms rather than in terms of how do we keep America safe.

So I look forward to this passage, I look forward to going back to work, and I look forward to in fact the Congress, on a bipartisan basis, coming back together in a way that we have not been. And I am deeply disturbed at some of the statements made here today, because I think that for those who listen throughout America, Mr. Speaker, they are going to hear that many are, like me, concerned for America, concerned that we come together and we continue to do the people's work of making this country safe in the war on terrorism. And I hope that those who speak out with other ideas are also considered.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, since 9/11, we have made a tremendous amount of progress against this war on radical Islam. We have recognized that it is a war. We are not sure exactly when this war began. Did it begin in 1979 when radical Islamists took over our embassy in Iran? Did it begin in the early 1980s, when Hezbollah attacked our barracks in Beirut, killing over 240 Marines? Did it begin in the early 1990s, when the World Trade Centers were attacked for the first time? Or did it begin when our embassies in Africa were attacked, our barracks in Saudi Arabia, the USS Cole? Or did it really finally begin on 9/11 in 2001? How about when bin Laden issued his fatwa in 1996, where he declared war against the West?

Since 9/11, there has never been any question that we are a Nation at war. While for much of the 1990s we ignored this threat and did not respond effectively to it, since 9/11 we have. We have put in place many things where we have recognized that we face a very dangerous and a very different kind of enemy than we have ever faced before. We have recognized that this is a global enemy.

Take a look at the progress we have made in fighting this very strange enemy. It was only 4 weeks ago that a very similar plot was disrupted and stopped in the United Kingdom: a global plot, with leadership, financing, and direction perhaps coming out of Pakistan, and the perpetrators of the plot living in the United Kingdom. A very different and a very dangerous type of terrorist. A home-grown terrorist.

These were not people going through the U.K. from some other country, these were people whose parents, maybe their grandparents, had moved to the U.K. They had gone to their schools and established their families, they were working.

But 4 weeks ago, they were in the final stages of putting together a plot that might have taken down 10 to 12 planes with a loss of life that would have been as great as what we suffered on 9/11. The plot was stopped. Why, because we had foreign intelligence communities of Pakistan, the United Kingdom and the U.S. working seamlessly together. That couldn't have happened on 9/11.

We also had foreign intelligence working with law enforcement. There is no wall anymore between foreign intelligence and law enforcement. Again, it is a seamless operation enabling people to work effectively together.

On a third principle, we are now on offense. No longer will radical Islam have a safe haven where they can plan, where they can train and prepare to attack the West again. Our intelligence community, our armed services, they are on offense finding these individuals where they are. And our intelligence community and other law enforcement agencies have put in place the tools necessary to wage this war effectively. That's the testimony and the testament to the people of 9/11. We have responded to that, to the horrific attack of 9/11.

Those are the things that we as a government can do. It hasn't been perfect. This is a very, very difficult enemy but we are making progress. These are the things that man can do and government can do as we try to create a world that will be safer for our families, for our kids, for our neighbors and that will make the world a safer place.

But one of the things that I believe that many who died on 9/11 believed, and their families believe, and one of the things that is very interesting is that one of the most common things between the Islamic faith, the Jewish faith and the Christian faith is that we all view Jesus as a great teacher.

As a closing comment I would like to leave a quote from the book "Light Force": "I pray that the message of the Prince of Peace will again be a light from Bethlehem to all corners of the world."

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) will control the remainder of the time on the minority side, 50 minutes, and the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. COBLE) on behalf of the Judiciary Committee will control 35 minutes.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H. Res. 994. I will never forget, and neither will you, the sense of helplessness as we watched the events of September 11 unfold before our very eyes. As the entire world witnesses the unthinkable, we in the United States could only look to one another and pray for the strength and courage to cope with what was happening.

I don't know if there is anything that the Congress or the President could do short of capturing Osama bin Laden that everyone would agree was an appropriate response. Our critics claim we are no safer now than before the attacks of 9/11. Although there is no measure to evaluate our efforts in the war on terrorism, I do suggest that the absence of additional attacks in the United States and the apprehension of would-be attackers throughout the world bodes well for the actions we have taken.

Mr. Speaker, the legislative effort by the Committee on the Judiciary and the Congress to secure our Nation and prevent another attack on our homeland is unparalleled during my tenure in this House. Unfortunately, we know weaknesses exist. Our borders are porous, and my Coast Guard instincts fear that the enemy may be focusing his next attack on one of our ports.

I have repeatedly expressed concern about overcrowding in our prisons which may be a ticking bomb waiting to explode. Recent media reports detail that our prisons may be fertile ground for terrorist groups interested in recruiting new members. The plot to blow up jetliners recently prevented by British authorities underscores the urgency of this situation.

I fear there are many other security gaps that terrorists have already planned to exploit. We have to stay one step ahead of those people who would do us harm. This is like no other challenge this country has ever faced. These enemies would like to walk into this Chamber today, destroy all of us, and at the same time destroy themselves in an activity that would be generously laced with evil.

The only way we can defend ourselves is to improvise and continue to adjust to their changing threats. I support this resolution and I thank my Republican and Democratic colleagues for their work to defend our homeland.

I also want to express thanks to our constituents for their patience and understanding with our shortcomings and their recognition of our successes in our war against terrorism. After all, Mr. Speaker, it is they who we are trying to protect.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, and ladies and gentlemen of the House, 5 years have passed since the tragedy of 9/11; September 11, 2001, when the whole country remembers where we were, the images we saw on television, and the pain we felt in our hearts. That day will be remembered forever as a day of mourning, of suffering, and of incalculable loss.

Today as a Nation, we mourned with those who lost loved ones and for those who gave their lives that day to save others. We forgot our differences, uniting behind a common purpose seeking justice.

As I look back on that day, I remember the promise we showed as a Nation and the strength we exhibited when joining together in the days and the weeks after the horrific attacks of September 11. Members of both political parties recognized the need to ensure that law enforcement had the tools and the resources to respond to terrorist threats while at the same time respecting our Nation's core constitutional values.

But I also remember Keith Olbermann of MSNBC who in his criticisms, in his special comment section made this observation about Abraham Lincoln: "At the dedication of the Gettysburg Memorial, barely 4 months after the last soldier staggered from another Pennsylvania field, Mr. Lincoln said 'We cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow, this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it, far above our poor power to add or detract.'

"Lincoln used those words to immortalize their sacrifice.

"Today our leaders could use those same words to rationalize their inaction. We cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground, so we won't.

"Instead," Olbermann said, "they bicker and buck-pass. They thwart private efforts, and jostle to claim credit for initiatives that go nowhere. They spend money on irrelevant wars, and elaborate self-congratulations, and buying off columnists to write how good a job they are doing instead of doing any job at all."

Unfortunately, 5 years later it seems that we have lost our way. It is most unfortunate that the situation has become so dire that the majority and minority parties can't even come together on a simple resolution to commemorate the tragic and pivotal day in our Nation's history.

We were able to do so in the past. The other body was able to do so earlier this week. But for some reason the majority insisted on changing the text of prior resolutions and adding superfluous language touting their legislative record.

I wish I could say this was the only instance in which the majority party has sought to politicize the events of September 11, but that would not be accurate. One need only go back as far as Monday of this week when the President used a nationwide speech to somehow equate the situation in Iraq with September 11.

And last weekend, the Vice President also sought to link the war in Iraq with the September 11 attack even though a bipartisan Senate report just a few days earlier had again thoroughly debunked that myth. And there are other things that I will not bother to bring up now.

But the Secretary of Defense has compared the principal critics of the war with the appeasers of the despotic Nazi regime. Some on the other side have asserted that those who speak in favor of constitutional rights put forward by the Founding Fathers are somehow soft on terrorism.

In 2002, they even questioned the patriotism of the then-junior Senator of Georgia, a war veteran who lost his arms and legs fighting for our Nation in battle, because he insisted on protecting worker rights as part of a bill creating the Homeland Security Committee.

So it is altogether fitting and appropriate that we remember the dead, the wounded, and the families of the tragedy of September 11. But surely we can do so without also seeking to trumpet our legislation or inserting unnecessary spin and public relations language into the resolution.

If there was anything that should bring us together as a Nation, it would be the commemoration of September 11. I hope, I pray that we can do a better job for the American people in the future.

And so, my colleagues, I ask of you, let's commemorate 9/11 the right way.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa (Mr. KING) who sits on the Judiciary, Agriculture and Small Business Committees.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I thank Mr. COBLE for recognizing me and giving me the privilege to speak on this issue today before this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, since the attacks by al Qaeda on September 11, 2001, future attacks on American soil and around the world have been thwarted by intelligence gathered by terrorist detainees. These terrorists have confirmed that al Qaeda operatives are relentlessly planning and pursuing future attacks against our citizens and infrastructure that could dwarf in comparison the destruction caused 5 years ago about now.

Information gathered from terrorists detainees has led to the capture of other al Qaeda terrorists, such as those held by the CIA and currently transferred to Guantanamo Bay. I have here some pictures of these individuals to help familiarize the Congress and the people with the kind of enemy we are up against.

This is a picture of Khalid Shaykh Muhammad, commonly known as the mastermind of the 9/11 attacks, those cowardly attacks on the United States. There is a long list of the transgressions of Khalid Shaykh Mohammed, including his role in the failed Bojinka plot, which was designed to detonate explosives on commercial airliners over the Pacific.

He asked Osama bin Laden for the manpower and the funds to carry out the attacks on the United States on 9/11. He plotted several other attacks, and he is, right now, under the custody of the United States of America, in the process of being brought to justice.

This is Abu Faraj al-Libi. Al-Libi had direct operational responsibilities, and he serves as a trainer at al Qaeda training camps in Afghanistan. He is another individual who is dangerous who plotted against the United States, who had no motivation, from my value system, to do so.

Another terrorist, Abu Zubaydah. Zubaydah was the third detainee here and was, at the time of his capture, trying to organize a terrorist attack in Israel. As well, he has been active in smuggling terrorists, and dangerous chemicals for the purpose of manufacturing weapons, into Afghanistan.

Then I would submit the fourth terrorist, being Ramzi Bin al-Shibh. Ramzi pledged allegiance to Osama bin Laden in person and accepted proposals to martyr himself in an operation against the U.S. Ramzi was the primary communications intermediary between the 9/11 hijackers and al Qaeda leadership in Afghanistan.

He relayed messages by e-mail and by cell phone. This man knows a lot about the terrorist network, and I believe we have learned a lot from him, but he needs to face justice as well.

Mr. Speaker, this is the face of the enemy in this global war on terror. It is a unique war in our time. Past wars have always been against a clear enemy, which had been another sovereign nation; but we are now fighting a hateful ideology that infiltrates many different nations.

Unfortunately, sometimes surveillance programs are not as tight as they need to be. We need to turn them up.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT), a distinguished member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SCOTT of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the events of 9/11 were a tragedy and continue to affect Americans and our way of life today. On the anniversary of this sad day, we should be coming together, in a display of unity, understanding and common values, commending those selfless firefighters, police officers and others who provided aid without regard to their own lives, honoring the memory of those who are not with us today, and consulting those who continue to grieve.

Instead, the majority in this body has used this day in our history as an excuse to create more partisan legislation and mislead the American people about the state of America's safety. I am saddened by the use of 9/11 in this distorted manner, and I ask my colleagues to consider, instead, taking action that is more appropriate to mark this tragic event in our lifetime and to prepare ourselves against another such tragedy.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas (Mr. GOHMERT), who sits as a member of the Judiciary, Resources and Small Business Committees.

Mr. GOHMERT. There are many now who want to blame our current President and the Secretary of Defense or the prior President and his hapless administration for the brutal 9/11 attacks. There were certainly things that could have been done better over the last 30 years, but playing the blame game now can cause us to lose sight of the following truth:

No U.S. President destroyed our buildings on 9/11. No Secretary of Defense killed innocent people on 9/11. Those acts of hatred were committed by terrorists, by jihadists who want to destroy, pure and simple, our way of life.

An example on September 11, a brilliant mathematician from Tyler, Texas, Brian Jack, was a Ph.D., worked for the Department of Defense. He, ironically that day, left and did not go to the Pentagon. He went and got on an airplane. Yet evil, terrible men hijacked that airplane and flew it and crashed it into the very spot where he would have been working, killing him. That, my friends, was an act of war. We should not be blaming any American for it.

Brian, and all of those who died that horrible day, deserved better. We need to unite now. We need to recognize that terrorist Islamic extremists killed Americans and are at war with us. We must weigh into that and blame them, go after them and not each other.

Bashing our leaders, instead of showing our brutal enemies our steadfast resolve, is truly the hobgoblin of little minds. That is putting the desire for a new Speaker or other leaders above pursuit of our mutual and destructive enemy.

Our protectors deserve to be honored, not slandered. They deserve to have people come to this very floor of the House of Representatives and rave about every medal won, about every good deed, about every life saved by our servicemembers and not verbally abuse themselves.

Remember September 11, the feelings you had that day. Most of us did not see the first plane crash, but we were horrified to see a second plane crash and then to see the results of a plane flying into the Pentagon, and then to hear about a missing plane over Pennsylvania. We began to see what looked like clothing falling off the top of the tower, the Twin Towers, and then we realized to our horror, O Father God, there are people in those clothes.

Then we wept to realize the true depth and the destruction occurring. At the end of that day, no one believed we would go 5 years without having another act of terror. Do you remember the day after September 11?

Do you remember when so many of us came together and held hands and prayed and sang praises. That is the America that will defeat our foes. But you remember that day, September 12, there were Euro Americans, African Americans, Hispanic Americans, Native Americans, these were all, we were just Americans. There were no hyphenated Americans.

That is the America I want for my children and their children. That is the America that will defeat all foes, foreign and domestic, and that is what will allow God to continue to bless America.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the ranking subcommittee chairman of the Committee on the Constitution in the House Judiciary Committee, the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER).

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, it is altogether fitting that we adopt the resolution commemorating the fifth anniversary of the terrorist attacks against the United States and specifically against the World Trade Center in my district on September 11, 2001.

The attacks were unprovoked, dastardly and a notice to us all that we are not, at our choosing, at war. Since that day, this Congress has taken many actions in response, some of which I agreed with, some of which I did not. I resent the Republican leadership's inclusion in this resolution of references to controversial legislation, as if to imply that any patriotic American who was appalled at the attacks on our country and who believes we must take resolute actions to defend ourselves must approve of all this legislation, and anyone who doesn't is either unpatriotic or foolish.

It may be, though I do not believe it so, that all this legislation was wise and appropriate. But that was a highly debatable proposition and should not be in this resolution.

The resolution quite correctly "honors the heroic actions of first responders, law enforcement personnel, State and local officials, volunteers and others, who aided the innocent victims and bravely risked their own lives and health following the September 11, 2001, attacks." Unfortunately, unless Congress acts quickly, future generations will regard this resolution as the culmination of 5 years of hypocrisy and betrayal.

While we praised the first responders, the Federal Government has betrayed their trust by first lying to them and causing them to work in conditions that destroyed the health of many and risked the lives of thousands. It has conducted a coverup that continues to this day. It has denied the reality of the resulting illnesses and has provided almost no help to assist with the medical and other costs imposed on thousands of first responders. It is not just the first responders.

Many resident school children and people who worked or lived near Ground Zero are still suffering from the devastating environmental effects of the attacks. In the days following the attacks, former EPA Administrator Christine Todd Whitman repeatedly declared the air safe to breathe.

A Federal judge found that "Whitman's deliberate and misleading statements to the press, where she reassured the public that the air was safe to breathe around Lower Manhattan and Brooklyn, and there would be no health risk for those returning to those areas, shocked the conscience." The EPA Inspector General confirmed the EPA's wrongdoing and reported 3 years ago that the White House had instructed EPA to downplay air quality concerns.

For this, Whitman and anyone at the White House who was involved ought to be criminally prosecuted, and I have demanded an independent counsel to look into this. Now thousands of people are sick and some have died from World Trade Center contamination because of the actions of the Federal Government in telling them to work and live in contaminated environments.

Studies come out every year showing that most of the people exposed to 9/11 dust and debris continue to suffer adverse health effects. On September 5, 2006, Mount Sinai Medical Center released a study that found that 70 percent of the first responders suffer lung problems because of their work at Ground Zero. Information collected about the health effects on residents, people who work in the area, and school children, show similar patterns.

This resolution before us today claims to honor the heroes of 9/11, but that is just sheer hypocrisy if we do not at the least provide health care for these people as they struggle with the effects of the attacks and of the betrayal by their own government. As Americans, let us resolve that just as we showed exemplary valor and compassion in the aftermath of the terrorist attacks, we should do the same for those who continue to suffer the health effects of living and working in a toxic environment.

Abraham Lincoln said that it was our job, our duty, to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and this we must do. We ought to provide comprehensive health care benefits for all those who are suffering. I suggest the easiest way to do this would be to extend Medicare benefits to those with 9/11-related illness who were exposed to World Trade Center dust.

I have introduced such a bill and urge my colleagues to support it and pass it without delay. As we mark this fifth anniversary, we still are not safe. We are not safer than we were on September 11, 2001, as this resolution claims.

The President and this Congress refused to do what we must to make us safe. We are not securing all the nuclear material in the former Soviet Union before it is smuggled to al Qaeda to make nuclear bombs. We are not screening all of the 12 million shipping containers coming into our ports to make sure that they do not contain nuclear or biological or chemical weapons. We are not hardening our nuclear and chemical plants from sabotage that could kill tens of thousands of Americans. We can and must do better. Now, the specific resolution before us ought to pass because we cannot let this occasion go unmarked.

But because of the cynical manipulation of the rules of the House two months before an election, the Republican leadership is using the memories of my murdered constituents to try to score political points. I find this offensive, and I for one will not fall for it.

I will not vote against the victims and heroes of 9/11 simply because the leadership distilled the resolution with highly charged political rhetoric. This type of resolution is not the way I would have chosen to honor 9/11, a day marked by unquestionable national unity.

Nonetheless, out of the respect for the families of the victims, and on behalf of all Americans, I urge my colleagues to see past the obviously political paragraphs inserted into the resolution and come together to support passage of the resolution that should really only be known for honoring a tragic day in American history.

In order that this resolution not go down in history as hypocritical, I urge my colleagues to join, finally, in helping the victims of 9/11, the victims of our government's inaction and betrayal after 9/11. My thoughts and prayers, as ever, are with the families and friends of those we lost.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE), a member of the Judiciary Committee and Chair of the House Agriculture Committee.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I rise in support of this important resolution.

Five years ago, America's collective national memory was seared with devastating images of crumbling skyscrapers, a smoldering Pennsylvania field, and the very symbol of our military might ablaze. The terrorists who perpetrated these acts sought to instill fear in the hearts of Americans, perceiving us as weak, unwilling or unable to fight back, thinking us content to shrink from the international stage. In this, they misjudged.

Hours after the attacks, homemade banners fluttered over railings of highway overpasses. Old Glory was flown proudly from porches and storefronts alike. Out of the ashes, Americans united, and found strength.

Since that deadly strike, America has been diligently working to eliminate the scourge of terrorism while making sure that the individual liberties of Americans are protected.

We established the Department of Homeland Security to coordinate our national antiterrorism efforts and increase information sharing among our intelligence agencies. We also created a specific committee in the House of Representatives to address homeland security issues and conduct oversight of that agency. We also enacted the PATRIOT Act, which contains important tools to fight terrorism, including the application of traditional wiretap and other electronic surveillance authority to new technologies such as the Internet, as well as the authority for Federal law enforcement officials to share foreign intelligence information with other government agencies to protect national defense. In addition, we enhanced the penalties for money laundering and for financing terrorists and increased the maximum criminal penalties for terrorist offenses.

While these tools are extremely important in the war on terror and have undoubtedly helped ensure that no further attacks have occurred on U.S. soil to date, the Congress has aggressively conducted oversight of this new law to ensure that civil liberties are not trampled.

From October 2001 through the end of 2005, Congress engaged in over 50 items of terrorism-related oversight, including letters to the Justice Department, oversight hearings and briefings. During the consideration of the PATRIOT Act reauthorization last year, the Judiciary Committee conducted 13 oversight hearings and received testimony from 36 witnesses, including extensive testimony from Attorney General Gonzales.

We must never forget the devastation of September 11 and we must remain vigilant in our quest to eliminate those forces that use terror to further their political and ideological goals.

I urge my colleagues to join in support of this resolution and to join together in remaining vigilant and protecting freedom.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY).

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I almost didn't want to talk about this, it is so painful for many of us to remember those tragic days and those tragic events. Monday was a very difficult day, and I thank my colleagues. Many of you came to New York to remember. Our President was there, and many others. It has been 5 years, and we spent the day with families and had many memorial ceremonies.

But it is important to remember that although it was a tragic loss, it was also considered by some to be the greatest rescue effort in our history. On 9/12, when I was in various meetings with government officials, they estimated that 25,000 people had died in the towers. But because of the heroic efforts by many, that number fell to almost 3,000. So on that fateful day, almost 3,000 lost their lives, but many thousands more lost their health. We have to remember that these heroes/heroines need to be taken care of.

To this day, not one single Federal dollar has been spent on the health care of the 9/11 responders who need our help. We need to change that. We need to stand by them and give them the support that they need.

Because of the efforts in this Congress, and I thank my colleagues, never have we been more united or determined. We came together and provided a lot of relief and support to New York, and I deeply thank you on behalf of all of my constituents and all New Yorkers.

But we have to remember that many people are sick. In the study that came out of Mount Sinai that was funded by this Congress, $90 million to track the health of the people, over half are still sick. Seventy percent are very sick and 40 percent have no health care.

We need to change that. We need to stand together and help these people, as we stood together after 9/11 to help our country.

In my hometown, nearly 3,000 of our neighbors, responders and friends were killed by the despicable terrorist acts of 9/11. They may be gone, but their memories are forever alive, especially when we honor them, as we do today. In reading this resolution before us, four words that are particularly poignant were our call for unity immediately after 9/11—"We will never forget."

When recovering and moving forward from 9/11, we must live by this mantra.

"We will never forget" means heeding the lessons 9/11 taught us about our security. Our deficiencies were expertly explained by the bipartisan 9/11 commission, and their recommendations provided a blueprint to make us safer. Two years ago, I helped pass the intelligence reform bill that implemented some of the commission's recommendations, but it took a monumental struggle. And since then, not a single remaining recommendation—of which there are many—has been implemented.

In its final progress report, the commission gave the government more F's than A's. The blueprint is sitting on the shelf, collecting dust. We cannot forget its existence.

"We will never forget" also means taking care of those who continue to suffer, even now. Thousands of responders, residents and workers who were at or near Ground Zero and inhaled the toxic dust are developing serious illnesses—and some are dying.

Many Americans became aware of their plight before of their plight before the fifth anniversary, but now the news cycle has changed. The ailing men and women are out of the headlines again, but they still suffer and struggle to get help.

Before the Federal Government failed to respond to the victims of Hurricane Katrina, it was failing to respond to the obvious and growing 9/11 health crisis affecting some of our bravest Americans. This is like Katrina in slow motion.

For five years, the Federal Government has either denied the problem or reluctantly offered weak assistance. The ailing men and women need their government to roll up its sleeves and tackle the problem with all its might, just like our responders did when acting for our country. Instead, their government is tiptoeing around the crisis.

"We will never forget" means ensuring everyone who was exposed to toxins is examined and everyone who is sick is treated. It is just that simple.

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY), who sits on the Energy and Commerce Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to yield the balance of my time to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN), and that he may yield time to Members seeking to speak.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from California (Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN) will control the remainder of the time.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania for 3 minutes.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, September 11, 2001, is a date which we will remember for many things. I will now remember it in a different way, because on September 11, 2006, I traveled with several other people to Shanksville to watch the families commemorate the fifth anniversary of this tragedy.

Where I was sitting, I spent much of that ceremony looking at their tear-filled eyes, the husbands, the wives, the fathers, the mothers, their brothers and sisters, the cousins, the sons and daughters, and knowing that much of what they must have been thinking then and now is what happened and what we will do to prevent it from happening again?

I also know that on September 11, 2001, as that plane, Flight 93, was flying back towards Washington, DC, it flew over areas south of Pittsburgh, and I could not help but think as they passed over our homes and schools that passengers on that plane delayed their action until they got away from populated areas. But what they did that day was they began an offense against what we have been taking for granted for 30 years.

For 30 years, the kidnapping in Iran, the USS Cole bombing, the bombing of the Khobar Towers, the bombings of our embassies, the bombing of the Marine barracks, for 30 years we did relatively nothing but fight back by taking people to court. And that did not work.

It is important that we see this as a battle, as part of a longer struggle to fight those radical extreme elements of Islamic fascists who want to take this as a war. Not all Muslims, but that small element that we must fight against.

We agree we have to win. But what we don't agree with is that we have to fight, we have to interrogate, we have to detain, we have to listen in on and we have to track their financial records. And that is why the acts this Congress has passed, the PATRIOT Act, intelligence reform, border security, are all an important part of us taking the fight back.

What we will learn from September 11 should be not just a day which stands alone, but like other September 11ths, this one, the battles that took place in New York and the Pentagon and Shanksville, September 11, at the Battle of Brandywine in 1777, that is not a stand-alone date, but it is a date of which we acknowledge the change of what happened to the American colonial forces in the Revolutionary War. Or September 11, 1683, a turning point for the Ottoman Empire in the Battle of Vienna. It ended the siege of the Turks and the turning point of a 300-year struggle, of which at that time those forces sought to control Europe.

For the families of 9/11, we must continue to recognize that all of this is part of a larger battle, not a single act, and if we sit back and we do nothing beyond that, we will not really be acknowledging all that these victims need. It is part of a battle we have to continue to fight.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. HINCHEY), a distinguished member of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. HINCHEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation to my dear friend and colleague, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, for providing us with this opportunity to speak.

Five years and 2 days after the brutal and vicious attack of September 11, 2001, it is impossible to contemplate this resolution without being aware, fully aware, of the way in which our government has failed.

Less than 4 months after that attack, I was in Afghanistan, thanks to the initiative and leadership of my friend and colleague, Representative JIM KOLBE from Arizona, who organized that mission. We met with President Karzai, among others, and with the new leaders of the country at that time. And when we asked him what was the most important thing that we could do to help his country now after the Taliban had been chased out and Osama bin Laden was on the run, he said, "Security. Help us with security. Make sure we are secure. We will be able to take care of everything else."

We have failed. Afghanistan is not secure under this government that we allowed to be put in there. It is not secure. The Taliban is reemerging. The warlords are back. More and more heroin is being produced in that country. The situation is becoming increasingly chaotic and increasingly dangerous. And that is just one example of the failure of this government.

While we were there, decisions were being made by the administration not to pursue Osama bin Laden, not to capture Osama bin Laden, and the likelihood motivating that decision was that if he were to be captured then that would have made it extremely difficult for the administration to attempt to justify their intention of attacking Iraq, which they intended to do at that moment and even earlier.

The situation in Iraq now has deteriorated seriously. We are confronting there a civil war. In spite of the fact that this Congress has appropriated more than $300 billion for the rebuilding of that country, that rebuilding has not occurred. Most of the electricity is not back on, most of the basic infrastructure is not in place, and the security situation there continues to deteriorate. There is no plan by the Pentagon or by this administration for dealing with the circumstances there. Once again the hallmark of this government is failure.

We are also now confronting difficulties in other situations because of this, because of the lack of leadership and because of the failure. North Korea has resumed its nuclear program. They may have as many as five or six nuclear warheads produced already. The world is a much more dangerous place as a result of the failure of this government.

Iran is now resuming its nuclear operations, and they will be in a position to produce nuclear weapons within the next several years, perhaps within the next 5 years, or maybe sooner. The world is a much more dangerous place than it was.

This administration and this Congress have failed miserably to protect the people of this country, to make us safer and to make the world a safer place. In fact, the situation is precisely opposite. The circumstances continue to deteriorate, day in and day out. And there is no plan. They have no plan for improving the situation, no plan for making things better, no plan for withdrawing our forces, no plan for strengthening the government in Iraq as they go deeper and deeper into civil war.

This Congress has failed miserably. It has failed miserably initially because it has failed to confront the administration in the deceptive way in which they justify the attack against Iraq, when Iraq had absolutely nothing to do with the attack of September 11; how they focused attention away from the perpetrators of that attack, the al Qaeda network and Osama bin Laden, for the personal and political reasons of the administration and focused them on Iraq.

There was no justification for that. And the responsibility of this House of Representatives to ensure that this House is not misled by an administration has been put aside. There has been no investigation of the way in which the administration misled the Congress. There has been no investigation of the way in which the administration presented the so-called intelligence to the Congress which was completely falsified. And when they presented it, they knew it was falsified. This House of Representatives has failed the people of our country.

Under the Constitution, we have an obligation to oversee the executive branch, to make certain that the executive branch is behaving in a lawful way, to make certain that the executive branch is organized and conducting itself in accordance with the law and that it is not violating the law by deceiving the Congress and the American people, which it has done. And the consequences of that deception is now being felt by everyone in this country, and the consequences will become deeper and deeper over time because there is no plan by this administration to alter the circumstances and to improve them.

So as we deal with this resolution, we ought to recognize how we ought to be dealing with our obligations and responsibilities as the legislative branch of this government, the branch that has the responsibility to make the law and to oversee the operation of those laws and how that operation has been mishandled by this House. It must stop. It has to end.

We have to stand up to our obligations and responsibilities under the Constitution and under the law, and our failure to do so places the people of this country in increasing jeopardy more and more every day.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, I am now pleased to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN), member of the Appropriations Committee and vice chairman of the Subcommittee on Defense Appropriations.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution marking the fifth anniversary of the vicious attacks on America.

It was 5 years ago this past Monday, our Nation utterly changed as tragedy struck in the streets of Lower Manhattan, the fields of Pennsylvania, and at the Pentagon.

On that day we also saw good rise in the face of evil and heroes rise in the face of danger. In Lower Manhattan, many of our brave first responders knew the risks they were taking, but they were determined to do their job. Police officers and EMS workers escorted workers out of the burning buildings as firefighters raced up stairwells of these same buildings to rescue those trapped high above.

When the day was over and as we learned more about the tragic and, yes, murderous attacks, we lost nearly 3,000 Americans, including 700 from my home State of New Jersey, and that is why I am here this afternoon. We witnessed neighbors and friends consoling one another and watched as Americans from all walks of life stood united.

As America rebounds and recovers, our Nation is responding to these acts of terrorism with the might of our military.

The war we continue to fight today began before September 11, as others have stated. But on September 11 it began without provocation and without warning. It was not a war of our choosing, but rather was made our priority. It was the slaughter of innocents by people with a twisted sense of religion who play by no rules.

So many of our heroes currently fighting terrorism around the globe put their lives on hold after September 11 to join the Guard and Reserve to serve our country and defend our freedom. They serve side by side with the regular military, volunteers all. We see the character and resolve of America in these brave young men and women, and we are grateful for their service and sacrifice and that of their families each and every day. They truly are doing the work of freedom, and they deserve our support and prayers.

May God bless those who continue to defend those freedoms, and may we never forget September 11, 2001, and those who lost their lives on that day of infamy.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas, Ms. SHEILA JACKSON-LEE, the ranking member on the Subcommittee on Immigration of the House Judiciary Committee.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished ranking member and my colleagues who are here.

There is not a single heart of a Member of this body that I would challenge on the basis of their commitment, their passion, and the sense of loss that we have experienced through these 5 years and now on the commemoration of this 5th year and certainly on 9/11. So I will read a section from this resolution, and I am going to attest to my complete loyalty and commitment to this language: That we reaffirm "that the American people will never forget the tragedy of September 11, 2001, and the loss of innocent lives that day," that we "will continue to fight the war on terrorism in their memory, and will never succumb to the cause of the terrorists." That should have been the guiding moral standard by which this body continued to do its work after 9/11.

I rise today, Mr. Speaker, to offer my deepest sympathy and empathy to those who still grieve. The families who lost their loved ones in the World Trade towers, those who lost their loved ones in United Flight 93, American Airlines 77, American Airlines 11, and United Airlines 175, and as well those who have since lost their lives, who may have lost their lives because they were first responders and they suffered terrible injuries that caused an early demise.

I wish we could bring them back, frankly. I wish we could tell them how much we appreciated them. I wish the children who had lost their family members, their moms, their dads, their grandparents, and others could again have the joy of hugging them and showing the love. But, unfortunately, we stand here acknowledging that this tragedy will live with us forever.

We noticed on September 11 we were not Democrats or Republicans. We were not red States or blue States. We made a commitment that we were going to do the right thing, and I can remember the sense of urgency of a united America as we instigated Operation Enduring Freedom and pursued the enemy and were diligent as we toppled the Taliban and liberated Afghanistan, and as has been said, we were hard fast on the heels of Osama bin Laden. But, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be both remiss and dishonest to not challenge us and ask the question, where are we today?

I recently came back from Afghanistan and Iraq, and it is interesting, as I listened to the distinguished gentleman from New York, the same question was asked of us by President Karzai. He gave the same answer, and that answer was that we need security. At the time we visited, the poppy fields were raging. The Taliban was alive and well. Members of the Afghanistan Parliament asked us whether or not they could have us provide security so that they could go home to their districts. All is not well. And, frankly, I believe it is important to note, Mr. Speaker, that it was not well because we detoured from our task. The commitment we gave on the steps of the United States Capitol, as we sang "God Bless America," to fight the terrorists was not kept because instead of staying the course in Afghanistan, we moved the ball. We detoured. We used up resources. We used up international capital. We used up the ability to do the job.

And I say that because I do it in the memory of the first responders, who still some of them are looking for health care benefits that we have not been able to give them. I say that in the name of an unwieldy war in Iraq that had nothing to do with the immediacy of the war on terror, a costly diversion, probably where the money for Afghanistan has gone, $308.58 billion. This red clearly gives us the picture. This is Iraq, a country that could afford to pay for many of its own needs. And in the course of that, we have failed. Our border enforcement and immigration enforcement have fallen drastically under this administration. Between 1999 and 2004, work-site immigration enforcement operations against companies were scaled back 99 percent by the Immigration and Naturalization Service, which subsequently was merged into the Department of Homeland Security. In 1999 the United States initiated fines against 417 companies. In 2004 it issued fines against only three. Years of neglect have brought us where we are today.

We know that Democrats offered amendments where there would be 6,600 more Border Patrol agents, 14,000 more detention beds, and 2,700 more immigration agents along our borders. And yet we failed. There is a concept called OTMs. Now we hear a raging voice on OTMs, "other than Mexicans," who come across the border who may, in fact, be the very ones who are here to do us harm. Those very porous aspects of our border have been defeated and the resources for such have been defeated time and time and time again.

So what we find is that 84 percent of the experts said we are losing the war on terror, 86 percent said that the world is becoming more dangerous for the U.S. and the American people, and 57 percent consider an attack on the scale of the London bombing against the U.S. to be likely or certain by the end of the year.

I stand committed and wedded to the concluding language of this resolution. We will not let the terrorists win. But the debt that we owe those who lost their lives on 9/11 has not yet been paid, and this Congress is at fault. This majority is at fault. And I beg today, as we vote on this resolution with all of its inadequacies in terms of its language, that our single commitment should be as every Member has stood on this floor to those who lost their lives and to the first responders. Can we, Mr. Speaker, do our job today? Can we do it united? Can we do it on behalf of those who sacrificed? Can we do the right thing?

Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on H. Res. 994, a resolution purporting to express the sense of the House of Representatives on the fifth anniversary of the terrorist attacks launched by Osama bin Ladin and al-Qaeda against the United States on September 11, 2006.

Mr. Speaker, in the life of this Nation there have been a few events of such consequence and moment that they have a transformative impact on the people of the country. For my parents' generation the death of President Franklin Roosevelt was such an occasion. For my generation, the assassination of President Kennedy in 1963 is a moment that lives with us forever. The explosion of the Shuttle Challenger in 1986 left a traumatic and indelible impression on my children's generation. The morning of September 11, 2001 is a day all living Americans will remember forever. Because not since Pearl Harbor have we witnessed such a dastardly and deadly attack on American soil.

As I stand here today, my heart still grieves for those who perished on flights United Airlines 93, American Airlines 77, American Airlines 11, and United Airlines 175. When the sun rose on the morning of September 11, none of us knew that it would end in an inferno in the magnificent World Trade Center Towers in New York City and the Pentagon and in the grassy fields of Shanksville, Pennsylvania. How I wish we could have hugged and kissed and held each of the victims one last time.

I stand here remembering those who still suffer, whose hearts still ache over the loss of so many innocent and interrupted lives. My prayer is that for those who lost a father, a mother, a husband, a wife, a child, or a friend will in the days and years ahead take comfort in the certain knowledge that they have gone on to claim the greatest prize, a place in the Lord's loving arms. And down here on the ground, their memory will never die so long as any of the many of us who loved them lives.

Mr. Speaker, as hard as it is to believe, out of a tragedy so overwhelming and horrific, something good and great emerged. In the aftermath of September 11, there were no Republicans or Democrats. There were no Northerners or Southerners or West or East Coasters. We were not Red State or Blue State. We were all simply Americans. On that day, we were united in our shock and anger and sadness. More importantly, we were united in our resolve to defend our country and protect the freedoms that has made America the greatest country in the history of the world. We lit candles, held hands, helped neighbors, and prayed for our country and its leaders.

A united America can never be defeated as Operation Enduring Freedom showed. The brave and valiant armed forces of the United States swiftly toppled the Taliban and liberated Afghanistan and was hard on the heels of Osama bin Ladin, who was trapped in Tora Bora. But before they could bring this mass murderer to justice, they were inexplicably diverted to Iraq, where the President had launched a new war against an enemy that posed no immediate threat to the security of America and had no involvement in the attack of September 11. In dividing our armed forces between Afghanistan and Iraq, this Administration divided the American people and alienated friendly nations who were helping us to win the Global War on Terror.

Victory in the Global War on Terror is the best way to honor those who lost and gave their lives on September 11. Ensuring that America is safe and secure and protected from another attack on American soil is the least we owe to the heroic passengers on Flight 93 and to the brave firefighters of the FDNY and officers of the NYPD and the officers and civilians we lost in the Pentagon who gave faithful service to our Nation.

So, Mr. Speaker, as we reflect back on the history-changing day 5 years ago, we need to ask ourselves today this haunting question: have we done everything necessary to make America as safe as it can be? The sad truth is we have not. Osama bin Ladin is still at large. Our seaports and trains and chemical plants are still vulnerable.

And most important, our borders are not as secure as they could be.

In recent months, the American public has been focusing on the lack of security we have on the Nation's borders. Four-and-a-half years after 9/11, it is clear that our borders remain alarmingly porous and that much needs to be done to truly make our borders secure.

The fact that our border is porous is not the fault of our hard-working Border Patrol agents and Customs and Immigration agents, who are doing the best they can with the staffing levels and resources that they have been provided. Rather, it is the result of the neglect and underfunding of border security over the last 4½ years by the Bush Administration and Congressional Republicans—who have failed to provide our border security agencies the resources and personnel they need to succeed in their mission.

Indeed, under this Administration and this Republican-led Congress, from 9/11 through April 2006, only 1,641 new Border Patrol agents had been hired—which is less than a 17 percent increase in 4½ years. Furthermore, border enforcement and immigration enforcement have fallen drastically under the Bush Administration. For example, between 1999 and 2004, worksite immigration enforcement operations against companies were scaled back 99 percent by the Immigration and Naturalization Service, which subsequently was merged into the Department of Homeland Security. In 1999, the United States initiated fines against 417 companies. In 2004, it issued fine notices to only three.

After years of neglect, Congressional Republicans and President Bush are now busying themselves with speeches about the importance of border security—but the question remains: where have the Republicans been for the past 4½ years?

Over the past 4½ years, Democrats have been attempting to highlight the serious security gaps that exist along both our southern and northern borders—and have been attempting to get the GaP-controlled Congress to focus on targeting resources on unfilled gaps. But the Republicans time and again resisted efforts to enhance border security and provide our borders the agents, equipment, and state-of-the-art technology that our borders so desperately need.

Seven times over the last 4½ years, Democrats have offered amendments to enhance border security resources. If these Democratic amendments had been adopted, there would be 6,600 more Border Patrol agents, 14,000 more detention beds, and 2,700 more immigration agents along our borders than now exist. Each time, these efforts have been rejected by the Republican Majority.

Mr. Speaker, consider these examples of the majority's failure to provide leadership for America on border security since 9/11.

1. 2001 Vote #454—November 28, 2001—H.R. 3338, FY 2002 Defense Appropriations/Emergency Supplemental: Republicans voted against consideration of an amendment that would have added $223 million for border security—to help meet the promises in the 2001 PATRIOT Act on border staffing and to build needed border facilities. After 9/11, experts recognized that the porousness of the northern border represented a major security threat to the United States. And everyone remembered the attempt by an Islamic extremist to get a large amount of explosives across the Canadian border in December 1999 to blow up the Los Angeles Airport in the Millennium bombing plot. Recognizing these concerns, Congress included a provision in the PATRIOT Act mandating the tripling of the number of border agents and inspectors along the northern border. This amendment included $145 million to make a down payment on the promise of Congress in the PATRIOT Act to triple northern border personnel, which the bill failed to do, and to purchase surveillance equipment. The amendment also included $78 million for the highest priority facility needs of the Border Patrol and other parts of the INS—particularly the Border Patrol's detention facility needs.

2. 2003 Vote #301—June 24, 2003—H.R. 2555, FY 2004 Homeland Security Appropriations: Republicans voted against consideration of an amendment that would have added $300 million for border security, including making a further downpayment on the promise of Congress in the 2001 PATRIOT Act to triple the number of border agents and inspectors along the northern border. The amendment was critically needed because the level of northern border personnel funded in the Republican bill was about 30 percent below the commitment made in the PATRIOT Act.

3. 2003 Vote #305—June 24, 2003—H.R. 2555, FY 2004 Homeland Security Appropriations: This vote was regarding the same amendment as 2003 Vote #301 above. On a vote on appealing the ruling of the chair, Republicans once again voted against consideration of this amendment that would have added $300 million for enhancing border security, including adding border agents and inspectors along the northern border.

4. 2004 Vote #243—June 16, 2004—H.R. 4567, FY 2005 Homeland Security Appropriations: Republicans voted against consideration of an amendment that would have added $750 million for border security—to help meet the promises in the PATRIOT Act on border staffing, better monitor our borders, and deploy radiation portal monitors. Under the GOP bill, the level of northern border personnel funded was still about 30 percent below the commitment made in the PATRIOT Act—so the amendment was designed to help Congress keep its promise. The $750 million would also have been used for giving Border Patrol more of the equipment they critically needed—including air stations for air patrols, radiation portal monitors, and state-of-the-art surveillance equipment.

5. 2005 Vote #160—May 5, 2005—H.R. 1268, FY 2005 Supplemental Appropriations Conference Report: Republicans voted against a motion to send the report back to conference with instructions to add $284 million for border security measures—that would bring funding for border security in the conference report up to the level in the Senate-passed bill. The $284 million included the funding for 550 additional Border Patrol agents and 200 additional immigration agents that was included in the Senate bill. It also included the funding in the Senate bill for unmanned border aerial vehicles, which have been used successfully in Arizona to assist in surveillance.

6. For FY 2006 and FY 2007, Republicans Have Repeatedly Broken the Promises They Made on Border Security in the Intelligence Reform (9/11) Act of 2004: In December 2004, the Congress enacted the Intelligence Reform (or 9/11) Act (PL 108–458). One of the key commitments Congress made in that Act was to beef up border security measures. This included the specific promise of providing 2,000 additional Border Patrol agents, 800 additional immigration agents, and 8,000 additional detention beds per year from FY 2006 through FY 2010. And yet, both for FY 2006 and FY 2007, the Republican Congress has repeatedly voted against efforts to meet this mandate, as seen below.

7. 2005 Vote #174—May 17, 2005—H.R. 2360, FY 2006 Homeland Security Appropriations: Republicans voted against consideration of an amendment that would have added $400 million for border security, to meet the promises Congress made on additional Border Patrol agents, immigration agents, and detention beds in the 9/11 Act. First, the President's budget for 2006 broke the promise of the 9/11 Act by providing funding for only 210 new Border Patrol agents in 2006—1,790 below the number promised. The Republican appropriations bill was better than the President's budget, funding 1,000 new agents—but this was still 1,000 agents short of the promise made in the 9/11 Act. The Republican bill also broke the promises on immigration agents and detention beds. This amendment was designed to live up to the commitments of the 9/11 Act. It added funding for Border Patrol agents, and also added funding for 600 additional immigration agents to get to the 800 promised and added funding for 4,000 additional detention beds to get to the 8,000 promised.

8. 2005 Vote #187—May 18, 2005—H.R. 1817, FY 2006 Homeland Security Authorization: Republicans voted against a Democratic substitute to the Homeland Security Authorization bill that was designed to fulfill the promises in the 9/11 Act. For example, the Democratic substitute included a full authorization for funding a total of 800 additional immigration agents for 2006 promised in the 9/11 Act and a full authorization for funding a total of 8,000 additional detention beds for 2006 promised in the 9/11 Act.

9. 2005 Vote #188—May 18, 2005—H.R. 1817, FY 2006 Homeland Security Authorization: Similarly, Republicans voted against a motion to recommit the Homeland Security Authorization bill with instructions to report it back immediately with instructions to add 15 mandates from the Intelligence Reform (or 9/11) Act that had not been included in the Republican bill, including full authorization for funding a total of 800 additional immigration agents for 2006 and full authorization for funding a total of 8,000 additional detention beds for 2006.

10. 2006 Vote #56—March 16, 2006—H.R. 4939, FY 2006 Supplemental Appropriations: Republicans defeated an amendment to H.R. 4939, FY 2006 Supplemental Appropriations, offered by Representative MARTIN SABO, which would have added $600 million for border security measures to the bill. The $600 million included $400 million for installation of 1,500 radiation portal monitors at locations along the border and $200 million for additional air patrols and other aviation assets at our land borders.

11. 2006 Vote #210—May 25, 2006—H.R. 5441, FY 2007 Homeland Security Appropriations: Republicans voted against consideration of an amendment that would have added $2.1 billion for border security, including $1.5 billion to meet the promises Congress made on additional Border Patrol agents, immigration agents, and detention beds in the 9/11 Act. The Republican Congress has failed to meet these mandates for both 2006 and 2007. This amendment provided enough funding to address the cumulative shortfalls that have resulted from underfunding in both 2006 and 2007.

For example, on Border Patrol agents, the Republican Congress had funded only 1,000 additional agents for 2006 and was funding only 1,200 additional agents for 2007—leaving the Congress 1,800 agents short of what it had promised in the 9/11 Act. Hence, the amendment provided funding for these 1,800 additional agents. Similarly, the amendment also funded the nearly 500 additional immigration agents and 9,000 additional detention beds beyond those in the bill that were promised by the 9/11 Act. The amendment also included $610 million to further increase border detection capabilities, including funding more radiation portal monitors along the borders and providing additional air patrols along the borders.

CONCLUSION

I believe it is the resolve of all Members of this House and of all Americans to prevail in the Global War on Terrorism. I believe all Americans want their country to remain safe, free, and invulnerable to another cowardly attack like the one we witnessed 5 years ago. We owe that much to the Americans who lost and gave their lives. We owe it to them to ensure that their children and loved ones will never again experience such pain, suffering, and loss. We can do this. We must do this. But to bring this new future into being, we need a new direction from the present course.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield for the purpose of making a unanimous consent request to the distinguished gentleman from Florida, the former chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. YOUNG.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Resolution 994.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Resolution 994, legislation that recognizes September 11th as a national day of mourning and service in remembrance of those who lost their lives in the terrorist attacks on that dark day in American history and of those too who have paid the ultimate price in our ongoing war against global terrorism.

With this resolution, we also honor the heroic actions of the first responders, law enforcement personnel, volunteers and others who aided the innocent victims and bravely risked their own lives and health to help the victims of terrorist attacks in our Nation's Capital, New York City, and the fields of Pennsylvania.

We also express our ongoing thanks for our men and women who serve our Nation in uniform in military service, as intelligence personnel, and as law enforcement officials as they continue to put their lives on the line every day here at home and around the world in the war on terrorism. This is indeed a global war and we also give thanks for all the nations of the world who have joined in this effort.

These efforts have met with tremendous success as our combined forces have thwarted a number of major terrorist organizations and specific planned attacks against American targets and our allies. We cannot, however, lessen our resolve if we are to successfully search out and eliminate these terrorists and their terror cells.

In adopting this resolution, we vow to remain vigilant in this war against terrorists and commit to providing every resource they require to win this fight. We also reaffirm our commitment to never forget the tragic loss of human life on September 11th and in doing so continue to fight the war against terrorists in their memory, never succumbing to the fear they generate.

Mr. Speaker, on that dark day, the American people came together as one in a way we have never seen in our Nation's history. We put politics and ideology aside and focused our attention on securing our Nation, healing our wounded, and consoling our grieving.

My hometown newspaper The St. Petersburg Times was right on the mark in its editorial Monday, saying, "On this anniversary, we would do well to put aside our rancorous divisions and crazy conspiracy theories and reflect on that post-9/11 period when Americans came together in purpose and spirit and much of the world felt our pain, even if it all was too brief. That memory is worth holding on to."

This editorial, which I will include in its entirety following my remarks, correctly states that we can never go all the way back to the way things were before terrorists struck here on our soil. However, the Times calls upon us as a nation to go back to that time five years ago in renewing our national unity to secure our shores and rebuff the threat of fear and destruction from cowardly terrorists in saying: "But we can—and we must—hold on to the values and the spirit that some call American exceptionalism. The terrorists would like nothing better than to see us surrender our most precious freedoms and bedrock values to fear. So on this fifth anniversary of that day of unspeakable savagery, let us remember how we felt on Sept. 12, 2001, not the fear and heartbreak so much as the unity and purpose we shared. Only then can we take a full measure of our loss."

Mr. Speaker, we recall that after 9/11 my colleagues and I in the Congress authorized the President to do whatever he deemed necessary to fight this new war on terrorism. Those who are engaged in this war today are patriots and we must all support them. While I support our current operations, I know that we have people in this country who disagree with our current war on terror. And you know what? They are patriots too. Those who agree with the President, they are patriots. Those who disagree with the President, they are patriots. Those who agree with me are patriots. Those who disagree with me are patriots. Republicans, Democrats, liberals, conservatives, we are concerned about our homeland and our security. And by and large everyone who remains engaged in this great debate is showing themselves to be patriots in their care and concern for our country and our men and women in uniform.

Let that be one of the most important lessons of September 11, 2001. While we may continue to disagree at times, let us give thanks for the freedom to disagree and at the end of the day come together in unity to support the brave men and women in all branches of service who fight the scourge of terrorism here and abroad. This can and should be the lasting tribute to all those who lost their lives five years ago.

[From the St. Petersburg Times, Sept. 11, 2006]

FREEDOM FROM FEAR

Five years ago today, on a lovely September morning, bolts of terror came out of a clear, blue sky. Nineteen men armed only with box cutters hijacked four passenger airliners and rammed three of them into the symbols of American military and financial might. Two of the planes flew into the twin towers of the World Trade Center in New York in a horrifying spectacle. A third plane demolished a wing of the Pentagon. A fourth, United Flight 93, believed to be headed for Washington, crashed in a field in Pennsylvania after passengers rose up against the hijackers. In less than an hour, 3,000 people died that day.

That was the day terrorism came to America, and we haven't been the same since. Neither has much of the world. Since then, terrorists have struck in London and Madrid and Indonesia, among other places—nothing as spectacular as 9/11 but still lethal to hundreds of innocents. But they have not hit the United States again, not that anyone doubts that they have been trying. President Bush said last week that scores of terrorist plots have been foiled, and that while America is safer than it was five years ago, it is still not safe. Will it ever be in a world of suicidal maniacs?

On this anniversary, we would do well to put aside our rancorous divisions and crazy conspiracy theories and reflect on that post-9/11 period when Americans came together in purpose and spirit and much of the world felt our pain, even if it all was too brief. That memory is worth holding on to.

There was something unreal about watching the horror of that day unfold on television. Who can forget the sight of people leaping to their deaths from the top floors of the burning twin towers? Or of the first responders—firefighters, police officers and rescue workers—who heroically braved smoke and fire and dust in their desperate attempt to reach any survivors? Americans lined up to donate blood and gave generously to aid the families of the victims. We knew the endless kindness of strangers. In Washington, bitter partisanship gave way to unity and the debate over domestic priorities was crushed by the question of how to protect the homeland from madmen bent on mass destruction.

The world wept with us and for us as they saw America as a victim instead of an arrogant superpower. Iranians held candlelight vigils to express support for the American people. Germans marched in the street to show solidarity. In France, a front-page editorial in Le Monde, reliably anti-American on most things, proclaimed: "We Are All Americans." The world stayed with us when Bush launched a "just war" in Afghanistan, where the Taliban was protecting Osama bin Laden and his al-Qaida terrorists.

Sadly, the good that came out of 9/11 was not to last. It began to unravel after the president, with the approval of most congressional Democrats, chose to go to war against Iraq, which had nothing to do with the 9/11 attacks. World opinion turned against us, and as Iraq became a huge debacle, Americans turned on each other.

America has taken quite a beating in world opinion in recent years on everything from prisoner abuse at Abu Ghraib and Guantanamo to secret CIA prisons abroad and warrantless eavesdropping at home. The debate over balancing our liberties and our security rages on in Washington, and America's image in the world has been badly tarnished.

We can never go back to the way things were before 9/11—or even to the way we were in the immediate aftermath of that calamity. It's hard to imagine a future not chilled by the threat of terrorism, which started as a cause and has now metastasized into a mentality among Islamic extremists.

But we can—and we must—hold on to the values and the spirit that some call American exceptionalism. The terrorists would like nothing better than to see us surrender our most precious freedoms and bedrock values to fear.

So on this fifth anniversary of that day of unspeakable savagery, let us remember how we felt on Sept. 12, 2001, not the fear and heartbreak so much as the unity and purpose we shared. Only then can we take a full measure of our loss.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, I am now pleased to yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS), a member of the Energy and Commerce Committee and vice chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, we are here today to commemorate the fateful events of a beautiful September morning. For most of us in this Chamber, September 11, 2001, started out like any other warm, sunny Tuesday morning. We were going about our daily business, meeting with constituents, and participating in committee hearings. The hint of fall hung in the air as we attended to pressing needs and kept tight schedules.

But everything changed in an instant. The images of the burning World Trade Center towers and the Pentagon rocked us to the core, shaking our sense of calm and filling us with fear, confusion, and heartbreak. Instead of arguing about some partisan issue or another, we spent the day consoling our families, our constituents, and each other. The entire country grieved as one for those who had perished.

Our hearts were broken that day, but they were not destroyed. We witnessed a rebirth of sorts in this Nation, Americans young and old finding common ground in their grief and fear, united in ways we never expected. They gave of themselves sacrificially to meet the needs of others. Houses of worship were packed with people praying for those who had lost loved ones in the buildings or on the planes.

In the days following September 11, we were inspired by the stories of valiant first responders and heroic Americans who thought little of their own welfare as they rescued others and brought down hijacked planes. We owe them a tremendous debt of gratitude. Their actions gave us hope in the American spirit and resolve to ensure that something like this never happened again.

Five years have passed, and we have made great strides in securing our homeland and protecting the American people from harm. We have passed laws designed to prevent acts of terrorism.

Our law enforcement and intelligence communities have disrupted terrorist plots. Our brave men and women in uniform have taken the fight to the terrorists abroad so we don't have to fight on our Nation's soil. The American people have resumed their daily activities even while continuing to grieve and comforting those who still mourn.

Mr. Speaker, the terrorists who committed the heinous atrocities on September 11 thought they would break the American spirit and send us whimpering into the history books with our tails between our legs. They were wrong. We have acted and will continue to act decisively against anyone who preys upon the innocent and threatens our freedom. The heart of America beats strong of our good and compassionate people. We will not be silenced and we will not back down. May God continue to bless the United States of America.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased now to recognize the minority leader of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI).

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, 5 years ago on Monday, on the day the terrorists attacked our Nation, Members of Congress gathered on the steps of the Capitol and sang God Bless America. Many speakers today have referenced that moment, because I think it had a profound effect on all of us. We really did need God's blessing. We put aside partisanship to respond with one voice that we would do everything in our power to ensure that our Nation would be fully healed and fully safe, and that the American people would know that we were working hard to bring those who were responsible for 9/11 to justice.

Today, we should have embraced that same spirit of 5 years ago on the steps of the Capitol. The United States Senate did. This week, they passed a resolution which mourned the innocent victims of the attacks, consoled their families, praised our troops for their valor, underscored our resolve to find all of those responsible for the attacks and bring them to justice, and emphasized our commitment to stopping terrorists who would harm the American people. Democrats and Republicans alike in the Senate came together in support of that resolution.

I would have hoped that that could have come to the floor here. We were prepared to support that, Democrats were, but the Republican leadership refused.

Instead, the Republican leadership gave us a resolution here this evening which is self-congratulatory. It praises Congress, for some reason. Instead of having the focus on the innocent victims of 9/11, it talks about the accomplishments of this Congress. I can't even imagine why they thought that was a good idea. But since they opened the door to what they have done, they have opened the door to what they have not done.

Two years ago, the bipartisan, independent 9/11 Commission concluded that the American people were failed by their government on 9/11. To prevent future similar incidents and failures, the Commission made 41 recommendations. Last December, the same independent Commission issued a report card on the implementation of those recommendations. Sixteen grades that were awarded were either D's and F's, and others were incompletes. In May of this year, the Commissioners reviewed the record on implementation once again; their conclusion on the poor grades, no progress.

Two days ago, the Commission's chairman and vice chairman, Democrat and Republican or Republican and Democrat, wrote about the December report card in an op ed in the Boston Globe, and I quote: "What we argued then is still true now; Americans are safer, but they are not yet safe." And concluded, "Our sense of national urgency is lacking."

Mr. Speaker, we have lost our focus on terrorism since the invasion of Iraq, and that is one of the chief reasons that the 9/11 Commission's report card reflected so poorly on the Bush administration and on the Republican Congress.

Our focus should have continued to be on Afghanistan. The war in Iraq is the wrong war. No matter how many times the President wants to say it, the war in Iraq is not the war on terror. The war in Afghanistan was. We had the opportunity to destroy al Qaeda in Afghanistan, and we missed the opportunity because we lost our focus. Instead, 5 years later, the Taliban is on the resurgence, violence has increased, the poppy crop, the opium crop is all pervasive.

Think of this. Afghanistan now supplies 90 percent of the opium supply to the world. 90 percent. The increase in just the last couple of years is 50 percent. They went from 4,000 metric tons to 6,100 metric tons of cultivation. This is what is happening in Afghanistan.

A missed opportunity to crush al Qaeda, an increase in violence, a rising resurgence in the Taliban, and the increase in the poppy crop.

Mr. Speaker, let us use the occasion that we have as we consider this flawed resolution to resolve to do better. Let us honor the memories of the innocent victims of 9/11 attacks and their families by doing the unfinished business of the 9/11 Commission. We have heard about it all day, it is in the public domain, it was in their best selling book a couple of years ago, and we still haven't gotten it done.

Isn't it hard to believe and to know that 5 years after 9/11 we still do not have real-time, that means immediate communication, among police, fire, and other first responders. We paid a price for this with Hurricane Katrina. Five years later, we still do not have the screening at our ports that we should have; we are at 5 percent, we should be at 100 percent of screening. That is possible, it is affordable, and it is technologically available to us.

Five years after 9/11, we still do not have our borders secure. We have not mandated, because this Congress refuses to do so and this administration does, too, we still have not mandated the private sector to protect our nuclear and chemical power plants.

The list goes on of shortcomings. The 9/11 Commission said we should increase the pace of reform at the FBI. There are so many things that are lacking in what we are doing to protect the American people. The biggest threat to the security and safety of the American people is the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, the unsafeguarded radioactive material that is out there. For about $10 billion, about a month in Iraq, we could buy up all of the known radioactive material that is out there that could fall into the hands of the terrorists. It is a lot of money. It is a small price to pay for the safety of the American people. And yet, for reasons that are hard to explain to anyone, we have refused over and over again to pass legislation that would appropriate the resources to do that.

Taking the actions to correct the unfinished business of the 9/11 Commission and others recommended by the Commission other than what I mentioned is consistent with the sacrifices of the people in New York and Virginia and Pennsylvania on 9/11, and the sacrifices made since then by the men and women serving in our Armed Forces. And God bless them. They have done a magnificent job for our country. We have to do better by them. We owe it to each and every one of them to do everything we can as quickly as we can to make America safe.

Mr. Speaker, it all comes down to the personal, now. Doesn't it? As we think back 5 years, we think about those families. Nearly 3,000 people were killed that day. Two thousand children lost their parents. The emotional toll is just incalculable. And yet, as our colleague Congresswoman MALONEY has pointed out, from New York, the heroes and heroines of 9/11, Congressman NADLER as well, are not having their needs met. It is the responsibility of government to meet the health care needs of the people who risked their lives, who went in there without even a thought of whether they would help save a life or not. And now, without a thought, their needs are ignored. We have an opportunity to do better by them. We owe them that obligation, because with all the talk that we can do about initiatives and proclamations and honoring and the rest, it all comes down to the people, to the personal, to the impact on their lives.

Of course we will vote for this flawed resolution. It could be better. But just because the Republicans decided that they wanted to praise themselves instead of focusing on the business at hand doesn't mean that we won't support it.

But as we vote for it, I call upon the Speaker of the House to bring to this floor before we adjourn for the elections legislation to enact the 9/11 Commission recommendations. We have all the time in the world to do it. Nothing is more important than the safety of the American people. We have no greater responsibility as elected officials than to provide for that public safety and the national security of our country, because nothing else matters if we don't protect the American people. Instead, we have ignored those needs. We are cutting the COPS programs so the neighborhoods are not safer. We are making matters worse. We have the opportunity to make matters better. If we do pass them, only then will we truly be honoring the memory of those who died. Only then will we truly be keeping our promise to their families that we will make America as safe as we can be.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution today, but join me in bipartisanship. We can do this in a bipartisan way without controversy. The list is clear. The support is there. The need is urgent. I urge the Speaker once again to bring the 9/11 Commission's recommendations to the floor to make America safer, to bring some peace to the families of 9/11, and to bring to justice those who are responsible for those heinous acts 5 years ago.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. I now yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. FORTENBERRY), a member of the Agriculture, International Relations, and Small Business Committees.

Mr. FORTENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, today we remember those who died tragically on September 11, 2001, and the family members who continue to mourn such terrible loss. We honor the strength of these Americans, and we also thank the brave men and women defending America today from those who continue to seek to do us harm.

Mr. Speaker, we live in a very special place. We live in a country that is built on the fundamental principle that all persons have inherent dignity and rights. The freedoms we enjoy depend upon this fundamental principle. And as many did in the aftermath of the 9/11 attacks, Americans are willing to risk their lives for the sake of their fellow citizens, for the good of the country, family, and community.

Last week, I had the privilege of formally welcoming home the soldiers of the 67th Area Support Group of the Nebraska National Guard as they all returned home safely from over a year-long deployment. What a beautiful scene, families reunited, husbands and wives in loving embraces, children scrambling to meet the mom or dad they had known only through letters or photos for the past year, parents taking up young children in their arms perhaps for the very first time.

In their commitment and patriotism, these soldiers had given more than a year away to family and home to serve their country. Many of our military service personnel will tell you that their service is driven by the events of that fateful day 5 years ago. They sacrifice so much personally to help protect our Nation.

Fortunately, there has not been another attack on America for 5 years. This is not due to wishful thinking. This is due to the extraordinary effort to rethink and reform our national security efforts. Our military, our homeland security forces, police officers, firefighters, and emergency first responders have all played a very important role in protecting our country.

Their work helps make America safer. Their sacrifice keeps our families more secure, and the compassion, resolve and support from the American people give their work all the more meaning and help keep our Nation strong.

We have faced difficult challenges of worldwide significance in the recent past: World War II and the Cold War. We prevailed then, and we must prevail now for the good of our country and the hope of a more peaceful world.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, 5 years ago there were a lot of questions as to who attacked us and why we were attacked. Answers came to that in fairly short order, but the question of why still remained and what those who attacked us had in order for us in the future.

In the book, "Nuclear Terrorism," there is a citation to Osama bin Laden's official press spokesman Suleiman Abu Gheith making a chilling announcement on the now defunct al Qaeda-associated Web site, and these are his words.

"We have the right," he said, "to kill 4 million Americans, 2 million of them children." Let me repeat that. The spokesman for Osama bin Laden said on their Web site, "We have the right to kill 4 million Americans, 2 million of them children, and to exile twice as many and wound and cripple hundreds of thousands."

He went on the Web site to explain what justified it, and these are his words. "America with the collaboration of the Jews is the leader of corruption and the breakdown of values, whether moral, ideological, political, or economic corruption. It disseminates abomination and licentiousness among the people via the cheap media and the vile curricula. America is the reason for all oppression, injustice, licentiousness, or suppression that is the Muslim's lot. It stands behind all the disasters that were caused and are still being caused to the Muslims; it is immersed in the blood of Muslims and cannot hide this."

Why do I mention this? I mention it because the threat is clear. They have officially said that they would not feel that they have succeeded until they have taken 1,400 assaults similar to those of 9/11, because that is what would be required, 1,400 times the loss of life that we had on 9/11.

They do not refer to any cleavage between Democrats and Republicans. They do not say they do this because of what this administration did or that administration did or because of what the Democrats did in the Congress or the Republicans. They did that because they reject everything we stand for.

That is why we bring this resolution to the floor. This resolution is brought to the floor in recognition of the threat against us, the challenges it presents and what we have done working together, Republicans and Democrats, men and women who are Americans first to try and respond to that threat for ourselves, our children and our grandchildren.

We need to remind the American people of the affirmative steps that we have taken: the PATRIOT Act, which changed the way we dealt with the threat of terrorism; other programs that we have supported and the administration has carried out.

So this is not a fight over partisanship. This is not a suggestion of onepartismanship. This is a recognition of the threat that faces us as Americans, and we are committed and united as Americans to respond to that.

That is what this resolution stands for. That is what it says. That is why we bring it to the floor, to ask all Members to support it so that we can show that there is unity in this body, not division, so that we can show that we understand the challenges that we face and that we are up to the challenges that face us as a Nation.

We can do no less than our parents' generation did in responding to the totalitarianism of their time as we respond to the totalitarianism of our time.

Mr. Speaker, this is not an effort to divide. It is an effort to unify. It is an effort to show the American people that we are together in this fight and we shall continue this fight.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS).

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, remembrance is a solemn obligation, a duty owed by every obligation to those whose honor, love and sacrifice light our way today. To the 2,996 souls who perished on September 11, we owe more than political rhetoric, more than annual ritual. They are remembered best, they live, not just what we say but in what we do to build a safer, more peaceful world.

So the resolution before us today rightly speaks of actions taken, and calls for all Americans to act in the generous, unified spirit born that deadly day. In calling for September 11 to be observed as a day of national service, we seek to build a living monument to all those who have died in the long simmering war that erupted onto our shores 5 years ago. Good done in their name has a special power against the evil we fight.

9/11 brought that evil home: to homes in New York, Pennsylvania and Virginia, and to shocked and grieving homes across our Nation. "Hostilities exist. There is no blinking at the fact that our people, our territory, and our interests are in grave danger. With confidence in our Armed Forces, with the unbounding determination of our people, we will gain the inevitable triumph, so help us God." That was spoken the day after the attack on Pearl Harbor. President Franklin Roosevelt's words evoke the realism and optimism needed to meet our present peril.

As then, we are at war and no political difference or debate can detract from the heroic work done every day by the men and women of America's military. The 184 people who gave their lives at the Pentagon 5 years ago fought on an unexpected battlefield, but toiled until the end in loyal service to the national ideals, liberty and justice, to which we pledge allegiance each day in this Chamber. Let us pledge in their memory to honor and support all those who fight to defend America and advance freedom.

Unlike the last global conflict, this war is being waged surreptitiously, the enemy lurking among us in shadowy networks and across cyberspace. On 9/11 America's first responders got a bitter taste of this new era, but their valor and grit carried us all through that day and those that followed. In memory of their fallen comrades, let us pledge through this resolution to honor and support the work of the public safety and public health professionals who work every day to protect us from terrorist attacks.

This resolution is also an opportunity to renew the sense of urgency forged in the crumbling inferno of the Twin Towers. With each passing year, what looked hugely urgent after 9/11 tends to get smaller in the viewfinder as more current problems loom large. But while we lose sight of the threat, an enemy who relentlessly worked to transform airplanes into guided missiles is maniacally focused on other ways to harm us.

Distance from the tragedy of 9/11 has also allowed some politics to seep into our security equations. Our vulnerabilities are many, and always will be. There will always be risks and there will always be those eager to take advantage of them. To those seeking to exploit fears rather than build trust, the glass will always be half empty. But genuine security after 9/11 is not a static goal or measurement; it is a process and a mindset. If we stay alert, get good intelligence on the evolving threat, and take the prudent precautions we are willing to tolerate and able to afford without crashing the economy or terrorizing ourselves, we will be safe. It is more than luck there has not been another major attack since 9/11.

So we remember and we pray for the dead and their families, friends and colleagues. And, as we face the certain challenges of an uncertain future, we take solace in the ancient Hebrew lesson, "There are stars whose light only reaches the earth long after they have fallen apart. There are people whose remembrance gives light in this world long after they have passed away. Their light shines in our darkest nights on the road we must follow."

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this has been an important discussion between ourselves. I feel better now that we have resolved to overlook those parts of this resolution that could be called congratulatory to the executive branch, to the Congress, to any parties.

We come together now to remember and memorialize once again the great contributions of those who served on the front lines and those who gave their lives and the families of those who died in this great tragedy of 9/11/01.

Mr. Speaker, it is in that spirit that we on this side yield back the balance of our time.

Mr. DANIEL E. LUNGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, we yield the balance of our time to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, let me thank my colleague from California for yielding the time, and today, the people's House has taken up legislation marking the 5-year anniversary of the terror attacks of September 11, 2001.

We remember the lives of the victims, the many moms, dads, children, grandparents, friends and neighbors, and we honor the police officers and the firefighters, and we salute their bravery and the sacrifices of these rescue workers, the EMT personnel and first responders who were there that day.

We offer America's sons and daughters in uniform our deepest gratitude, many of them on the other side of the world sacrificing so much so very far away from home.

Words can hardly capture the magnitude of horror that we suffered on that Tuesday morning 5 years ago. Much like finding out about the bombing of Pearl Harbor or the assassination of President Kennedy, all of us remember exactly where we were when we first heard that multiple planes had attacked the World Trade Center and the Pentagon in a massive, elaborate and coordinated attack from terrorists.

On September 11, 2001, we came face-to-face with evil but it was not the first time. During the 1990s, enemies of freedom used terror and violence in futile attempts to intimidate the United States and other countries around the world in the cause of freedom.

On February 26, 1993, the first World Trade Center bombing killed six people and injured more than 1,000 others.

On June 25, 1996, the Khobar Towers bombing in Saudi Arabia killed 20 people and injured 372 more.

On June 7, 1998, the Kenya embassy bombing killed 213 people and injured some 5,000 others.

On June 7, the same day, our embassy in Tanzania was bombed, killing 11 people and injuring 68.

And then on October 12, 2000, the USS Cole was bombed off the coast of Yemen, killing 17 people and injuring 39.

What was our response? During the 1990s, world leaders looked up at the problem of radical Islamic terrorism, they looked up, they looked away, and they hoped the problem would go away. This reaction led al Qaeda and others to believe they could attack us repeatedly, indefinitely and with impunity.

□ 1900

But they were wrong. On September 11, the terrorists targeted symbols of American strength and prosperity as an attack on our principles, our values, and our freedoms as an American people. Their aim was to shake our will and to intimidate our allies. But as the skies darkened over New York, Washington, and Pennsylvania, we made a simple vow: never again.

In a post-9/11 world, doing nothing is no longer an option. In a post-9/11 world, closing your eyes and hoping for the best is not an option. In a post-9/11 world, weakness in the face of evil is not an option.

Five years later, we have made significant progress in confronting those who would attack us again. When he addressed Congress in the days immediately following the attacks, President Bush said: "Whether we bring our enemies to justice or bring justice to our enemies, justice will be done." We have done just that.

Unlike the previous strikes by al Qaeda against our embassies, the USS Cole, and so on, September 11 brought a broad and global response from the United States. Congress acted swiftly in approving the USA PATRIOT Act, legislation providing law enforcement with the tools necessary to prevent another attack. We have waged two conflicts, one in Afghanistan, another in Iraq, liberating more than 50 million people and crushing despotic regimes with links to terrorist activities and a thirst for weapons of mass destruction.

We have more work to do, but our progress has been steady, and it has been measurable. The U.S. Department of Justice has convicted 253 defendants on terror-related charges, and our intelligence agencies and law enforcement working together have disrupted more than 150 terrorist threats and cells here in America, including plans to attack targets on both coasts using hijacked aircraft and plans to blow up apartment buildings here in our country.

Just last month, British and American intelligence officials, using the sort of tools we provided President Bush, thwarted a plot to bomb multiple American airliners headed from London.

This resolution today affirms the commitment of Congress to remain vigilant in efforts to provide law enforcement and our Armed Forces with all the tools necessary to fight and win the global war on terrorism. We have engaged in dramatic efforts to secure our ports and borders, with legislation on the way that will provide more Border Patrol agents, additional fencing and surveillance, and enhanced State and local law enforcement authority.

The House will vote next week on legislation authorizing military tribunals for terrorists, such as the alleged September 11 mastermind, Khalid Shaykh Mohammad. We are designing a system that not only brings these terrorists to justice but gives the President the tools that he needs to continue preventing terrorist plots before they happen.

Prevention must be the standard and prevention must be our goal. No longer can we simply respond to attacks. We must actively engage the enemy and seek to disrupt and thwart their twisted plans. We must continue to adapt and move forward, we must not yield, we must not grow complacent, and we must not rest until this threat is vanquished.

September 11 revealed for all to see the ruthless barbarity of an enemy that wishes to end America's way of life. Most of the nearly 3,000 who perished were regular folks going about their regular business. Others were the first heroes of the war on terror, climbing the stairs to the Twin Towers to help evacuate trapped workers or administering first aid to those at the scene. All of them were victims of a radical and poisonous ideology that we must be eternally committed to defeating.

This is our defining task in the early years of the 21st century, crushing the deadly and poisonous ideology of radical terrorism, and freeing from tyranny the millions threatened with its bondage is an effort for which the United States and her allies are uniquely suited. We are the primary target of radical terrorists, the leader of nations, with the capability and the fortitude to wage a prolonged fight. In my view, we must not shy away, if only so our children and their children may live in peace.

One of the last lines in the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" goes: "As He died to make men holy, let us live to make men free." I can think of no better tribute to those who perished in the merciless attacks of September 11 or in the 5 years since than to do just that: to live and to fight for the freedoms that we cherish and for which they have all given their lives.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to discuss H. Res. 994, legislation commemorating the fifth anniversary of the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks against our country.

I remember September 11, 2001, vividly. The weather in our nation's capital was warm and sunny. I was giving a speech on the House floor against privatizing Social Security. After I finished, the House clerk told me there had been a plane crash in New York. I asked what the weather was at the time of the crash. He said it was sunny and clear. I thought a crash in good weather was strange. I returned to the office in time to see the second plane hit the World Trade Center, and my office received a call from another congressional office saying there was smoke at the Pentagon. At that point, we knew our country was under attack. The Capitol Police then mandated the evacuation of the Capitol and all congressional office buildings.

I am profoundly grateful that the passengers aboard United Airlines Flight 93 bravely fought back, thinking of the safety of others, not of their own well-being. Their actions saved the lives of untold numbers of us who were in Washington, D.C. that day.

The resolution on the floor today appropriately honors those who lost their lives due to these heinous attacks. Thousands of husbands, fathers, mothers, wives, daughters, sisters, brothers, children, grandparents and others were lost on that day. We must never forget those individuals and their families.

The resolution before us today also appropriately honors the heroic actions and sacrifices of our men and women in the U.S. military and their families. I have had the privilege of visiting with our men and women in uniform, both here at home and in a war zone. I am continually awed by the professionalism, determination, and commitment of our troops.

I am also pleased that H. Res. 994 acknowledges the service and sacrifice of the first responders—emergency personnel, fire fighters, police officers, and others—who aided the innocent victims of the terrorist attacks. While these individuals humbly say they were merely doing their jobs that day, their selfless actions embody some of the best qualities of the American people.

The resolution congratulates the Congress and the President for various steps taken to improve the security of the American people in the wake of September 11th. Personally, I don't believe the self-congratulation is justified. While Congress has adopted some piecemeal improvements on the security front, al-Qaeda will not wait for us to make gradual improvements. Security must be improved today, not after the next attack.

Aviation security is not what it should be. Security screeners need upgraded equipment. We need to deploy technology to detect plastic, liquid and gel-like explosives carried on-board planes. All cargo baggage carried on passenger planes must be thoroughly screened for explosives. We need effective countermeasures and international agreements to reduce the threat of shoulder-fired missiles. The arbitrary cap on the number of security screeners should be lifted.

A fully unified terrorist watch list that is electronically accessible to necessary federal and state officials for real-time searches must be put in place now.

Border security is still notably lacking, five years after 9/11. I voted in favor of the immigration reform legislation in the House that included a number of provisions to improve border security. I have also voted for a number of efforts to increase funding for the border patrol, technology to improve border security, and other immigration enforcement measures. Regrettably, too often, this Congress has prioritized tax cuts for millionaires over adequately funding border security.

Astonishingly, on the fifth anniversary of the attacks, America's police, firefighters, and emergency response personnel still lack the fundamental ability to communicate with each other by radio. Congress must increase funding to help states and local governments purchase essential equipment.

Our nation has 95,000 miles of coastline and 361 ports. Yet, the federal government will spend only $168 million on port security grants this year while spending $10 billion to develop a missile defense system that doesn't work and is irrelevant to the threat posed by al-Qaeda. Congress should increase funding for radiation detection equipment to screen every cargo container, beef up the presence of U.S. inspectors at foreign ports to inspect cargo destined for the U.S., and enhance the Coast Guard fleet.

Five times as many Americans travel on trains and transit each day as on planes, but less than one percent of the transportation security budget goes to non-aviation programs. Congress and the Administration should increase funding for passenger rail and transit security. A baseline level of security for the transit systems in the 50 largest metropolitan areas would cost $2 billion.

Most of the 20 tons of nuclear material at 130 facilities in 40 countries has no more security than a night watchman and a chain link fence. In 2001, a bipartisan commission recommended tripling funding to $3 million a year for programs to help secure nuclear materials around the world from terrorists.

Finally, I want to say that I am disappointed that H. Res. 994 contains a handful of where-as clauses of dubious accuracy.

For example, one clause implies a link between al-Qaeda and Iraq, and Iraq and the September 11th attacks. A variety of experts, including the 9/11 Commission, the CIA, the Senate Intelligence Committee, and others, most recently the President, have concluded there was no cooperation between Iraq and al-Qaeda on the September 11, 2001, attacks or anything else. It is also inappropriate to link Iraq to the global war against al-Qaeda. Iraq did not pose an urgent threat to our national security. Iraq did not have ties to al-Qaeda. Iraq had not attacked the United States, nor is there any evidence Iraq planned to attack us. Iraq did not have weapons of mass destruction, nor any delivery system capable of attacking us.

I supported the war against the Taliban and al-Qaeda in Afghanistan, and I continue to support military action against al-Qaeda. But, to use a resolution commemorating the anniversary of 9/11 to peddle discredited theories about Iraq in order to cover for the failures of the Bush administration in Iraq and justify the diversion of resources from the war against our real national security threat—al-Qaeda—does a disservice to the American people.

And, I think the inclusion of the PATRIOT Act in the list of legislation that has helped in the war on terror is questionable to say the least. The PATRIOT Act did make a few reasonable improvements in our ability to go after terrorists using new technologies. But it also contained provisions that do nothing to enhance our security while posing a significant risk to the freedoms and liberties of law-abiding Americans. It is for the latter reason that I opposed the bill.

A lot has been made of the PATRIOT Act supposedly knocking down a wall that prohibited cooperation between the FBI and the CIA. In reality, the so-called wall was not really a wall at all. It was not a legal barrier, it was a cultural one. The PATRIOT Act was not necessary to get the FBI and CIA to cooperate. A change in culture was. Even today, cooperation among intelligence agencies and law enforcement is not what it should be.

I will vote in favor of H. Res. 994 because I want to honor those I mentioned at the outset of my statement—those who lost their lives in the attacks, those who tried valiantly to save lives on that day, and our men and women in uniform. But, I want to state for the record that I disagree with some of the rhetoric in the resolution.

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, today we join together to honor the nearly 3,000 people who perished in the heinous attack on our country five years ago. The images of that day remain vivid in our minds, as do the emotions we all felt—the shock the grief—as we realized that a handful of terrorists plotting halfway around the world were capable of destroying so many innocent lives on American soil. September 11, 2001, shattered the illusion that our homeland would always provide safe sanctuary from those who would do us harm.

Five years later, we also remember how the events of September 11 brought our country together. As we did after Pearl Harbor, America showed its true colors. After the twin towers fell, we put aside our political differences to unite behind a pledge to make our country safer and to track down and punish those responsible for the attacks. With the world on our side, we had a unique opportunity to marshal our vast resources to destroy the al Qaeda terrorist network for good.

We made a good start. At home, we moved quickly to tighten airport security and to reorganize our homeland defenses and intelligence infrastructure to close gaps that enabled the terrorists to use our own commercial airliners as weapons against us. Overseas, working with our allies, our military tools the fight to al Qaeda and the Taliban, who had provided safe harbor to the terrorists and their training camps in Afghanistan for far too long.

Today, however, it is clear that we have failed to finish the job we needed to do. Instead of committing our forces to pursuing al Qaeda's leaders—including Osama bin Laden, who is still at large—we embarked on an unnecessary war of choice in Iraq that has squandered our resources and the world's goodwill without making us measurably safer.

Domestically, we've spent billions to secure our airports, but we've neglected the security of our ports and the cyber security of our technological infrastructure and communications network. Chronic underfunding and lax security standards have left our nation's ports and cargo containers a soft underbelly, and the President's ongoing failure to appoint an Assistant Homeland Security Secretary for Cyber Security has created a leadership void in this critical sector, leaving us vulnerable to a telecom disaster on the scale of an "electronic Pearl Harbor."

It's not too late to change course to do what must be done to prevail in the real war against terrorism.

We must recommit to finishing the job in Afghanistan, to fully funding our counterterrorism intelligence programs at home and abroad, to increasing the size of our Special Forces, to improving our human intelligence capability and to securing nuclear materials around the world.

Only then will we truly be able to say that we have fully honored those who lost their lives on September 11.

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, five years ago, democracy and freedom were attacked when terrorists destroyed nearly 3,000 innocent lives in New York, Washington, and Pennsylvania. We mourn the passing of those taken too soon, celebrate the lives of the scores of volunteers and first responders who helped victims and their families, and vow to never forget the fateful day that changed the lives of millions of Americans. Today, Congress had an opportunity to do the right thing and remember September 11 without partisan motives or divisive tactics. Yet, H.R. 994 was motivated more by upcoming elections than honor and remembrance.

Today's 9–11 resolution to honor the victims and heroes of 9–11 includes controversial legislation which criminalizes immigrant families and strips Americans of those civil liberties which are the very fabric of our democracy. It links the thoughts and prayers for servicemen and women with efforts to deport the families of immigrant soldiers—many of whom are not U.S. citizens. The resolution also defends the practice of wiretapping—an invasion of privacy which neither Congress nor the courts have either expressly or implicitly approved and which undermines the right to privacy.

Debates about immigration and civil rights are important to the future and fabric of our country. America needs comprehensive immigration reform; policies which provide strong support for a more intelligent and realistic approach to controlling immigration, including enhanced border security, workplace and employer enforcement, and earned legalization for immigrants with a path to citizenship. But an enforcement only approach, such as H.R. 4437, has failed in the pass and is doomed to fail again.

We need a new direction for America's security and there are several steps that Congress must take now to keep our country safe. We must guard against future attacks by implementing all of the 9–11 Commission recommendations, screening 100 percent of containers and cargo bound for the United States in ships and planes, and ensuring our first responders have the training, equipment and technology they need. Yet our Nation will be not become more secure by partisan resolutions endorsing failed immigration approaches and programs which threaten our civil liberties.

As we remember the past, we must look toward the future to ensure our Nation and our world is safer. We must, at the same time, protect that which makes America's democracy so great—our civil liberties, and lead the world toward peace through diplomacy. Five years ago, families, friends, and strangers joined together to care for the fallen. This resolution is an attempt to divide that spirit. As we move forward, let us not forget the spirit of community which we embraced that day and work together to bring peace for future generations.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I stand in strong support of this resolution. It is critical that we, as a Nation, remember what took place on September 11, 2001—a day when we “woke up” to the fact that we were in a war that had been declared against us years before.

September 11th of every year should be a day to remember those who were lost on that day. But September 11th should also be a day when we reflect and remember why we are engaged in this War on Terror. We must continue to fight—aggressively—to ensure the defeat of Radical Islamic terrorists whose aim is to kill Americans.

As we commemorate the 5-year anniversary of that awful day, our thoughts and prayers are especially with those who lost loved ones; the spouses, children, and parents who are left behind. For their sake, and the sake of all Americans, we must not allow the passage of time to erode our resolve to remain vigilant in the War on Terror so that Americans will not relive similar attacks in the future.

We, at home in the comfort and security of the United States, have become complacent in our security. That is a dangerous place to be. That is where we were for several years leading up to 9–11, when several terrorist attacks on the U.S.—including attempts on our homeland—took place. But our government failed to act with resolve.

We must remember what we felt the days immediately after 9–11 . . . when we all felt, for the first time for many of us, that we were not safe in our own country. The anthrax attacks, stories and rumors that al-Qaida possessed old Soviet suitcase nuclear weapons—those were the stories of the time.

Because of the Homeland Security measures we have implemented and the War on Terror we are conducting—both militarily and non-militarily—we are once again in a period of calm.

There are those who believe that this period of calm is the time to pull back, and this undermines our resolve. No one wants to live in a constant state of fear, but we cannot be lulled into adopting a September 10th mindset.

It would be irresponsible to assume or “hope” that no one wants to strike us, once again, and kill even more Americans than were killed on 9–11.

And kill us is what they want to do. They want to kill all the “infidels”—a category that includes not just Americans, but people of all the world's free nations, and even Muslims who reject their militant vision for Islam. I fear that we have also lost the unity that existed after 9–11.

We must remember—whether in political or personal spheres of life—that we are all in this together. Whether Republican or Democrat, religious or atheist, we are all targets of this radical group.

And we must remember that it matters not whether we are fighting in Iraq—or any other country, for that matter—that makes us a target for the terrorists. Countries that have nothing to do with Iraq and Afghanistan are also experiencing terrorists incidents.

And while we are remembering the 5th Anniversary of 9–11, we must also remember that Iraq is a central part of the War on Terror.

President Bush is correct when he stated earlier this week in his address to the Nation that even if we pull out of Iraq, the terrorists would not leave us alone. They will never leave us alone.

For al-Qaida, Iraq is not a distraction, it is the central battlefield where the outcome of this struggle will be decided. Just read the comments from their leaders, don't take my word for it.

If they win in Iraq, they will establish a safe haven for terrorists and terrorist-training, much like Afghanistan was prior to 9–11. Iraq would become a factory for terrorists and weapons of mass destruction which they would export. This idea comes not from George Bush, but from Osama bin Laden and al-Qaida itself.

There is a clear link—withdrawing our troops before Iraq is fully stabilized would be a disaster for our safety here at home. We must remain vigilant at home, finish the job in Iraq and Afghanistan, and remain decisive in all our efforts in the War on Terror. Doing any less will weaken our security.

September 11th should remind us that we have real enemies in the world and that a September 10th mindset is unrealistic, irresponsible, and will only jeopardize the lives of the American people. We must remember that it was not the intention of the radical Islamic terrorists to kill 2,973 people that day in 2001. It was their intention to kill many, many more.

I will fulfill my oath of office to protect the American people from all enemies, foreign and domestic. Again, we must not allow the passage of time to erode our resolve to win the War on Terror.

On September 11, 2001 we finally woke up to the fact that we were at war . . . let's not be lulled back to sleep and back to disunity.

I urge the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not know if there is a more tragic day in the history of our Nation than September 11, 2001. Three thousand lives were snuffed out in the largest mass murder we have ever witnessed.

We are still grieving what was lost that day. The heroics of the fire fighters ascended the Twin Towers and the first responders who came to the Pentagon will never be forgotten. The passengers of United 93, who gave their lives to save ours, are heroes without parallel.

But I am saddened that the Republican leadership, rather than honoring the heroes and the victims of that day decided to offer a resolution that seems to be written by an RNC focus group rather than out of respect for the solemnity of the day.

When I woke up on September 12, 2001 this nation was as united as I had seen it since December 7, 1941. The intense partisan divide vanished overnight and was replaced by a national consensus. Political opportunism was replaced by notions of shared sacrifice for a common good.

Internationally, America had the world's sympathy. From London, to Tel Aviv, to Tehran spontaneous support rallies took place. American tourists spoke of hugs and flowers from complete strangers; in these days we had a chance to bring the world together.

Now we are more divided, more polarized, and more conflicted, at home and abroad, than ever before. The unanimity of purpose that we had on September 12 has been replaced by partisanship, and that partisanship has interfered with the very important work we must engage in to make this nation safe from terrorism.

Making America safe is work that cannot be reduced to simple slogans. Five years after however, Republican leadership has offered rhetoric but little more. We have yet to fully consider all of the bi-partisan recommendations of the 9/11 Commission. Our ports still do not inspect even ten percent of the cargo that comes into them; air cargo is unscreened; and nuclear material across the world remains unguarded.

In Afghanistan, the war with Al Qaeda and the Taliban is at risk of unraveling. Radicals are once again barring girls from schools; the reconstruction has stopped; and terrorists are targeting the elected government.

There have been victories, but much more needs to be done. Symbolic resolutions are a poor substitute for concrete policy. Our struggle to make America safe and to discredit the terrorist ideology will be a long one. It takes more than rhetoric.

It takes actions like fully funding our security needs; making sure our armed forces have the resources they need; supporting our intelligence agencies; and having a foreign policy that changes societies through good will and diplomacy rather than at gun point.

Our thoughts and prayers are with the families who lost loved ones that day and those Americans who continue to risk their lives for our safety here at home.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join my colleagues in marking the fifth anniversary of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks. Today we pause, as the nation did on Monday, to honor the brave Americans who lost their lives in New York, Washington, and Pennsylvania on that tragic day.

As we debate this resolution we cannot help but remember the chaos, fear and violence we faced 5 years ago. Terrorists struck the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, symbols of our economic and military strength, in an attempt to destroy our most basic freedoms and values. Yet, as we look back we also vividly recall that in the midst of the unprecedented horror of that day, we see the very best of America: Firefighters and first responders rushing into danger, airline passengers sacrificing themselves to save others, and Americans coming together in unity and common purpose.

It is in this spirit that we not only look back at the past 5 years but also look forward to the difficult challenges ahead of us and the sober reminder that the terrorist threat against our nation is still very real. Last month's disrupted plot to attack airliners reminds us why it is even more important today that we rededicate ourselves to securing our homeland by fully implementing all of the recommendations of the 9/11 Commission and closing the gaps that still exist in our aviation, transit and port security. While there may be disagreement over whether or not we are safer today, we can all agree that much more needs to be done to protect and defend the American people.

The War on Terror that started on that fateful day five years ago is still far from finished. The threat posed by Al Qaeda and other terrorist organizations remains very real. Osama bin Laden and many of his allies are still at large, yet his trail has grown "stone cold" over the past two years and the CIA has shut down their unit responsible for tracking him. Afghanistan has become the forgotten front in the war on terror, pushed aside in favor of a war of choice against a country that posed no real threat to our nation and in which we find ourselves mired in a seemingly endless occupation. The Taliban, the former rulers of Afghanistan who supported Al Qaeda's attack on our nation, has grown again in strength as we have grown distracted by Iraq.

This is a time of great consequence for our nation. Unfortunately, slogans and partisan attacks have once again become substitutes here for serious debate on the national security challenges we face. This is clearly evident in the resolution before us, which contains divisive language designed to score political points instead of bringing this country together. As we move ahead, I hope that we can remember that which unites us as Americans and not which divides us as partisans.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, H. Res. 994 states that America is safer today than it was on September 11th, 2001. This is hardly clear considering that the 9/11 Commission has given failing grades to how the government has responded to security needs.

Today, NATO lacks the troop strength in Afghanistan to combat the Taliban along the southern region. Today, we continue to fight a war of choice in Iraq longer than we have fought World War II. Today, 2,673 soldiers have died while our military continues to be stretched. And, today, Iran and North Korea continue to develop their nuclear technology unabated.

Here at home the situation is also troubling. Instead of debating any meaningful legislation for the American people, we spend our time debating things such as Horse Slaughter and Indian Gaming. We have yet to implement the 9/11 Commission's recommendations such as improving emergency communication technology that directly led to the deaths of many of our brave first responders on that sad day. Instead, the Majority party prefers to attempt to score some political points rather than doing the job the American people have sent us here to accomplish.

Today's resolution should have been a bipartisan effort to honor those who died and the family and friends they left behind. Sadly though, the Majority party has made it yet another day of divisive politics.

Mr. MICHAUD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to remember the terrible events of September 11, 2001. On that day, murderers hijacked four planes. They flew two into the World Trade Center and one into the Pentagon. Only the heroic actions of the passengers of United Flight 93 prevented the fourth from reaching its destructive destination in Washington, DC. Nearly 3,000 innocent people lost their lives in these senseless acts of violence.

Today, I stand with all America, and much of the world, to mourn and remember that terrible day. We mourn our loved ones who are no longer with us, but we remember the courage of the firefighters, police officers and other first responders who rushed into burning buildings to save lives. We mourn our lost innocence and sense of security, but we remember the resolve of our Nation and the strength of our spirit. I stand with all America looking to the future for a united strategy to ensure the safety of our country and defeat of violent, radical ideologies that threaten our way of life.

At this moment, we should be working together. We should be searching for the unity that we felt after September 11th. Unfortunately, and unlike the Senate which earlier this week passed a bipartisan resolution that I support, the House Leadership decided to turn this most solemn of moments into a bid to score partisan points.

This resolution is a disappointing attempt to justify failed foreign policies that have not made our country safer. Five years later, world opinion towards us is overwhelmingly negative. The war in Iraq was based on inaccurate intelligence and incorrect assumptions about how successful our exercise in democratic nation-building can be. Al-Qaeda had no presence in Iraq before our invasion. The terrorist organization is now firmly entrenched carrying out murderous attacks, recruiting new members and gaining deadly combat experience. Iraq is stumbling towards civil war because of the mismanagement of the civilian leadership at the Pentagon.

We have not found Osama bin Laden and brought him to justice. Instead, our flawed foreign policy provides bin Laden and his followers with fertile ground for new terrorist recruitment and training.

We have failed to fully implement the recommendations of the bi-partisan 9/11 Commission. We have not done enough to secure our ports or major transportation networks. Thousands of tons of cargo arrive in the U.S. each day without being thoroughly examined. Our borders are porous and no real solutions to secure them have been reached.

Despite the great work and dedication of our first responders, intelligence community and military personnel, this government has failed to meet the challenges of making our nation secure. We have also not offered any help to firefighters and other first-responders, who so selflessly rushed to the aid of their fellow Americans, and now are suffering from respiratory ailments and post-traumatic stress. As Tom Kean, Co-Chair of the 9/11 Commission recently stated, "We are not protecting our own people in our own country. The government is not doing its job."

At such a solemn moment, we should make every effort to unite to overcome the challenges that we face from a very real and terrible enemy. The Senate drafted and unanimously supported a respectful, honest and appropriate resolution remembering one of the worst days in American history. I am disappointed that we could not do the same in this body.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to a misguided resolution that caters to partisan politics more than it honors the victims of 9/11 and the sacrifices of our brave men and women in uniform.

The fifth anniversary of a national tragedy should be a time for bipartisan unity. But rather than follow the example of the Senate Republican and Democratic leadership and introduce a 9/11 Anniversary resolution designed to bring America together, House Republicans insisted on a divisive and partisan resolution.

Unfortunately, H. Res. 944 praises both a Patriot Act that undermines the most basic of our civil liberties and a hateful immigration bill that makes the provision of humanitarian services to undocumented workers a crime. It goes on to wrongly characterize Iraq as a "front line" response to 9/11 and ineffectually attempts to equate the distinct wars in Iraq and Afghanistan as part of a single conflict.

I would have liked nothing more than to today vote to honor the selflessness and sacrifice many demonstrated on and after the attacks. I encourage Americans to make September 11 a day of national service. But I cannot vote for a politically charged resolution that celebrates policies my constituents and I vehemently oppose.

Ms. LORETTA SANCHEZ of California. Mr. Speaker, I come to the floor today to remember and honor the people who lost their lives in the September 11, 2001, terrorist attack.

The victims of September 11th came from all walks of life and each and every one of them is sorely missed by the friends, family, and this country.

I would also like to honor the many brave first responders and volunteers that selflessly rushed to help save lives during the attack, and everyone who has worked to help individuals, families, cities, and our whole country start to recover and heal in the months and years since September 11th 2001.

Today the House was supposed to bring up a bill to honor the victims of 9/11, and all those who helped to respond after the attack.

Instead, the Republican Majority has brought up H. Res. 994, a politically divisive bill. A bill which is more of an exercise in self-congratulation, than a solemn and respectful memorial. I regret to say it, the Majority has, once again, chosen to use this occasion to score political points, to drive a wedge between Americans by talking about politics, instead of bringing us together as we were on September 11th.

This is not a time for partisanship.

This is a time to come together to honor the people who gave so much on 9/11.

If we are going to use this occasion to talk policy, then we should be looking ahead. Talking about what we can do in the future to prevent another terrorist attack, like passing a law which implements ALL of the 9/11 Commission recommendations.

There is much left that needs to be done on that front:

We need to ensure that all cargo and people passing through our border are screened and accounted for.

We need a law to increase the security of our rail and mass transit systems to ensure that we do not experience an attack like the ones that occurred in Madrid, London, and Mumbai.

We need to ensure that our law enforcement agencies have interoperable communication so that they can respond quickly and work together to save lives during any incident.

Together, I am confident, that we can implement all of the 9/11 Commission recommendations and prevent future terrorist attacks. And if we do that, we will truly honor the memories of 9/11.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in reluctant opposition to this resolution, as I strongly feel that we need to be careful about how we commemorate the tragic events of September 11, 2001. Several times over the past four years I have voted in favor of these annual 9/11 resolutions because they simply commemorated the tragic event and urged our continued vigilance in an increasingly dangerous world. I believe using the event to promote particular legislation or foreign policies, however, denigrates the memory of those who perished in that attack.

Much of the legislation referenced in this legislation is legislation that I supported. For example, I voted in favor of the Border Protection, Anti-terrorism, and Illegal Immigration Control Act of 2005 and for the SAFE Port Act of 2006. I continue to support measures that help secure our borders and thereby make us less vulnerable to future foreign attack. However, I find it particularly unacceptable to heap praise on the PATRIOT Act, as this bill does. This act expanded the federal government's power to an unprecedented degree at the expense not of foreign terrorists, but of law-abiding American citizens. It opened average Americans up to wide-ranging government snooping and surveillance in matters completely unrelated to terrorism. For example, the "sneak and peek" provisions of the PATRIOT Act allow law enforcement to enter someone's home without a warrant, search that property, and never inform that citizen they had been there. Also, libraries and book stores can be forced to provide the government with citizens' borrowing and purchasing history without showing probable cause. I see no reason to applaud such an un-American piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we should show due respect the victims of the attacks of September 11, 2001. Congress patting itself on the back over legislation it has passed since then strikes me as disrespectful to those who suffered and continue to suffer from the attacks on New York and the Pentagon.

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 994, "expressing the sense of the House of Representatives on the fifth anniversary of the terrorist attacks launched against the United States on September 11, 2001."

The terrorist attacks in New York and Washington, D.C. on September 11, 2001, were monstrous and cowardly acts that will be forever etched in our national memory. In remembrance of that tragic day, I wish to express my condolences, and the condolences of a mournful nation, to all those who suffered losses. Today, America again honors the courage and bravery of those who willingly risked their lives to save others and recognizes those dedicated men and women in service now, defending worldwide peace and security.

In the 5 years since the appalling acts of September 11th, our country has been fighting a global war on terrorism to protect America and our friends and allies. On July 22, 2004, the independent and bipartisan 9/11 Commission provided a full and complete report to Congress and the American public regarding the failures of the government and included 41 recommendations to improve homeland security. I praise the Commission for its excellent work, leadership, patriotism, and service to our country. We owe it to the families of the victims of 9/11 and to the citizens of our country to use the report to make certain such attacks never happen again. That is why I fully supported the unanimous and bipartisan recommendations of the 9/11 Commission and supported passage of H.R. 10 in December of 2004 to implement the recommendations of the 9/11 Commission. Almost 2 years have passed since passage of H.R. 10, and yet the President still has not fully implemented these recommendations.

In addition, despite the ongoing war in Iraq, I am very concerned that the main threat against the United States, al Qaeda, is still a global threat with global reach, and that the person who was directly responsible for 9/11, Osama bin Laden, is still at large. I believe the President has taken his eye off the ball in Afghanistan and is not doing everything in his power to bring those responsible for 9/11 to justice. It sends a terrible message to would-be terrorists who may be interested in striking us that all they have to do is go in hiding and lay low until our attention and resources are directed elsewhere.

Additionally, the big winners are countries with nuclear ambitions, like Iran and North Korea. Our message to the world during the Iraq and Afghanistan wars has been, if you have nuclear weapons we will not attack you, but if you do we will stay away. This sends the message to would-be terrorists that if they do not arm themselves, there is a potential for the United States to attack.

The President should have, with the support of the American people and international community which we enjoyed at the time, made it our mission to never rest, never sleep until those responsible for 9/11 were brought to justice. Instead, he diverted precious resources and personnel from Afghanistan and redirected them into Iraq. As a consequence, Osama bin Laden is still at large, the Taliban are reconstituting themselves, and al Qaeda remains a global threat.

Furthermore, last week NATO's top operational commander in Afghanistan, U.S. General James Jones, appealed for 2,500 more troops, saying the force was about 15 percent short of full strength. Once again, the President has failed to respond to a call from military commanders for reinforcements to try to quell the Taliban insurgency in southern Afghanistan, by denying the request for more troops. If as the President said on September 11, 2006, when speaking about bin Laden and other terrorists is true, "Our message to them is clear: No matter how long it takes, America will find you, and we will bring you to justice." Then we should be sending in these additional troops to Afghanistan, not ignoring another plea from our military commanders.

On this solemn day, I again stand up to recognize our brave men and women that tragically lost their lives on that fateful day in September of 2001. I wish to show my deepest appreciation to our military men and women fighting terrorism around the world. I feel the best tribute we as a Nation can give them and their families is to redirect our focus to bringing those responsible for the attacks against us on September 11th to justice. The opportunity has not yet passed to make serious and thoughtful change and to ensure that another tragedy does not befall our Nation.

May God bless our men and women in uniform and their families during this difficult time. May God provide his special blessings and care for those who fell in the line of duty. And may God continue to bless these United States of America.

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the nearly 3,000 innocent victims of the September 11 hijackers. It is only right that we remember September 11, its victims, and its heroes.

My East coast home is only a few blocks from the Pentagon. On that day I could see the black smoke billowing from its side, smell the acrid fumes of burning jet fuel, and hear the sounds of rescue and recovery. The smoke eventually faded, but the memory never will.

The United States is safer today than it was 5 years ago, but we are not safe. And we will not be safe until our enemies are defeated.

Just a month ago, British authorities, with help from United States intelligence agencies, stopped a plot to blow up numerous airliners flying from London to the United States. An al Qaeda tape released on the anniversary of September 11 warned of renewed attacks.

Our enemies are plotting constantly, and we must remain constantly vigilant.

Mr. Speaker, 5 years ago, we stood on the Capitol steps in a bipartisan show of strength and solidarity. We vowed then—and in the days, months, and years after—that cowardly thugs would not succeed in destroying our resolve to live in freedom and peace.

That resolve remains. There are honest disagreements about how to prosecute the war, but there is no disagreement that we will ultimately succeed.

We are Americans. We do not bow to terrorists.

The heroes who died in four planes and three buildings on September 11 will never be forgotten. May they forever rest in peace.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in solemn support of this resolution.

Five years after worst terror attack in U.S. history, the American people's steadfast support for the families and victims of 9/11 is a symbol of the perseverance that we, as a country, have maintained.

The memorial services held around the country on Monday were a sobering reminder of the horror we, as a nation, faced that day.

Ground Zero in New York, the Pentagon here in Washington, and Shanksville, Pennsylvania are sacred ground. I am proud to represent Shanksville, Pennsylvania in Congress—the heroes of Flight 93 did what all Americans hope and pray they would have the courage to do in the face of terror. They stood up for freedom and sacrificed themselves to save countless others. They were the first counter-attack in the War on Terror.

Flight 93 was believed to be headed for the Capitol that ill-fated day five years ago. Many of us here today may have been in mortal danger had it not been for the brave passengers on that flight.

I would like to thank the heroes of Flight 93 and their families for their sacrifice, for being the first line of defense against terror, and for showing the world our strength, our resolve and our courage as Americans.

My prayers are with the families of the victims of 9/11.

Mr. GARY G. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 994. This week, all Americans pause and remember the heroes of September 11, 2001. We honor their sacrifices, recall their courage, and pay tribute to their legacy. On that day five years ago, the strength of our nation was challenged and our resolve tested. The gallant actions of our fellow Americans showcased the resilience of our spirit and reinforced our ideals of life, liberty, and democracy.

The United States today is a nation far different than it was five years ago. We have come to recognize the dangers that hate and terrorism impose upon peaceful and freedom-loving people worldwide. We are better informed of terrorist threats and better organized to deter these dangers. Most importantly, we have learned that the Global War on Terror, this great struggle of our time, is a fight best waged on foreign soil, out of the reach of American streets, American neighborhoods, and American families.

As we pay tribute to the memory of September 11, 2001, Congress will take up several measures to ensure that our homeland is secure. These measures are designed to combat a new enemy that hides from sight, attacks the weak and unprotected, and uses innocent civilians as human shields. To prevent future terrorist attacks, we are working to disrupt terrorist activities internationally and domestically, including stopping terrorist networks and their financing schemes and securing our borders and critical infrastructure.

September 11, 2001 was a watershed moment in American history, when the defenders of freedom and democracy began the long struggle against fear and tyranny. Five years later, we pause as a nation to honor the memory of those who lost their lives that day and all those who have since made the ultimate sacrifice in the name of liberty. In addition, we honor the brave actions of all of our servicemembers during the War on Terror. Day in and day out, our military forces are making significant progress in weeding out violence and extremism, promoting peace, and training domestic security forces. Their actions have safeguarded life, liberty, and democracy for all Americans and prevented fear and violence from taking hold in America.

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 994, introduced by Homeland Security Committee Chairman PETER KING, observing the fifth anniversary of the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks against the United States.

On September 11, 2001, we were brought face to face with an elusive and dangerous enemy. As the world watched, America responded to these heinous attacks with a united front. We could no longer pretend that our oceans protected us from evil. We were determined to find the terrorists and bring them to justice. We would leave no rock unturned.

While the face of America was strong, the hearts of America were heavy. Nearly 3,000 people lost their lives that fateful day. The families of those who lost loved ones continued to grieve, and America grieves with them.

Five years later, we must maintain our resolve to defeat extremism worldwide and protect American families here at home. I am grateful our family is participating in the Global War on Terrorism with four sons currently in the military and my oldest son, Alan, served for a year in Iraq knowing this is the central front of the War on Terrorism as proclaimed by Osama Bin Laden.

Ms. BEAN. Mr. Speaker, every one of us in this chamber mourns the murder of the nearly 3,000 innocent people on September 11th. We all want to take the fight to the terrorists and protect America from those bent on harming us. Each of us wants to commemorate the deaths of the innocent and reaffirm our creed to never forget with an honest, humble, non-partisan Resolution.

We have shared goals, and we can come together and write a Resolution we can all support and of which the American people can be proud.

I am saddened today that partisan politics have entered into the debate of this Resolution today, and that language was deliberately used in this Resolution which is devisive and unnecessary.

Mr. Speaker, I will vote for this Resolution, but I regret that it could not have been more unifying, and I regret that the debate in the House could not have risen above the political fray for just one day.

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, on the fifth anniversary of the worst attack on American soil, my Republican colleagues have disgracefully politicized what should have been a solemn and sincere resolution. This week we are mourning the tragic losses of innocent lives as well as commemorating the unsurpassed heroism that was on display that day. We are expressing our gratitude to our Nation's law enforcement officers for their tireless dedication to make our country safer; and we are reaffirming our Nation's resolve to combat terrorism and secure our homeland. But rather than offering a bipartisan resolution that unites us on this solemn occasion, the Republican leadership converted the bill into an endorsement of the PATRIOT Act, punitive immigration bills, and other highly controversial measures, which many of my constituents oppose. This bill was cynically transformed from a memorial resolution to an endorsement of President Bush's failed policies. The Republicans show enormous disrespect to the 9/11 victims and families by playing election year politics with something as solemn as the fifth anniversary of 9/11; I will vote against the bill.

Mr. FORTENBERRY. Mr. Speaker, today we remember those who died tragically on September 11, 2001—and the family members who continue to mourn such terrible loss. We honor the strength of these Americans and we also thank the brave men and women defending America today from those who continue to seek to do us harm.

We live in a very special place. We live in a country that is built on the fundamental principle that all persons have inherent dignity and rights. The freedoms we enjoy depend on this fundamental principle. As many did in the immediate aftermath of the 9/11 attacks, Americans are willing to risk their lives for the sake of their fellow citizens—for the good of country, family, and community.

Last week I had the privilege of formally welcoming home the soldiers of the 67th Area Support Group of the Nebraska National Guard as they all returned home safely from a yearlong deployment.

What a beautiful scene! Families reunited . . . husbands and wives in loving embraces, children scrambling to greet the mom or dad they'd known only through letters and photos the year before. Parents taking up young children in their arms, some perhaps for the first time.

In their commitment and patriotism, these soldiers had given a year away from families and homes to serve their country. Many of our military service personnel will tell you that their service is driven by the events of that fateful day five years ago. They sacrifice so much personally to help protect our Nation.

Fortunately there has not been an attack on America for five years. This is not due to wishful thinking. This is due to the extraordinary effort to rethink and reform our national security efforts. Our military, our homeland security forces, police officers, firefighters, and emergency first responders have all played a very important role in protecting America.

Their work helps make America safer—their sacrifice keeps our families more secure.

And the compassion, sacrifice, and resolve of the American people help make our Nation great. We have faced difficult challenges of worldwide significance in the past—World War II and the Cold War. We prevailed then and we must now prevail for the good of our country and the hope of a more peaceful world.

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, it is with great honor and humility that I rise today to commemorate the lives of the thousands of victims and heroes of the terrorist attacks on September 11, 2001. I extend my heartfelt condolences to the loved ones of those whose lives were needlessly cut short on that day. In addition, I rise to pay tribute to those who have died at the hands of the same threat which brought the September 11th attacks. From 1983, with the bombing of the Marine barracks in Beirut, Lebanon killing 241 American service members, to the 1993 bombing of the World Trade Center, killing six, Islamic fascists have continued with attacks against the United States at the Khobar Towers in Saudi Arabia, our embassies in Kenya and Tanzania, and the USS Cole in Yemen. I mention these events because it is essential for Americans to remember that the threat responsible for perpetuating these attacks is the same unending threat against which we are fighting today in the Global War on Terror. This enemy is methodical, patient, determined, and bound by one unifying purpose: the complete annihilation of all who do not subscribe to their warped vision of Islam by pursuing a murderous ideology.

While some setbacks have occurred in our efforts, we have made tremendous progress in confronting this threat, head-on. We must acknowledge the steadfast resolution of the Administration and the commitment and diligence of those in our intelligence community. Over the past five years, the Republican-led Congress has spent over $150 billion on homeland security. Congressional action on a variety of policies has provided those in our intelligence community with the critical tools needed to prevent future terrorist attacks on our homeland. Today, our service men and women are engaging the enemy abroad so the terrorists will not bring their violence to America. Because of the exemplary service of those in our military, the terrorists can no longer establish safe havens in areas of the Middle East where they once roamed freely.

Our message to the families and friends of those who fell on September 11th, is that America remains united in ensuring your sacrifices and those of your loved ones were not made in vain. America will always cherish the memories of these heroes and will remain committed to defending the principles for which this Nation stands, including principles as fundamental as individual liberty, justice, and the rule of law.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Speaker, today the House considered House Resolution 994, to commemorate the fifth anniversary of the tragic events of September 11, 2001. Most of us were here in Washington on that fateful day, and after the attacks we knew our lives had changed forever. Although I may not agree with every provision of this resolution, I voted for it to support our troops and to commemorate that tragic day.

House Resolution 994 is an effort to honor those thousands of innocent people who lost their lives that day as well as remember the bravery and sacrifice of the fire fighters, law enforcement officers and rescue personnel who worked feverishly to save them.

This resolution also recognizes the brave men and women of our armed services who responded with authority, precision and when needed, force, to root out the cowardly perpetrators and protect Americans and our interests both here and abroad.

Although we pause on September 11th to reflect and say thanks, on this day we must also renew our commitment to securing the homeland and protecting our values every day.

It is our responsibility to remove bureaucratic roadblocks and provide our Nation's first responders with the interoperable communications equipment they so sorely need.

We must seek the correct balance between securing our Nation and protecting the civil rights that serve as the basis of our enduring democracy.

And we must honor our commitment with continued support of our troops overseas.

It seems like only yesterday when this Nation joined together in recognition that the forces that divide us from one another can never overcome the transcendent unity we have as Americans.

Five years ago Members of Congress stood shoulder to shoulder on the step of this Capitol and pledged to work together to remember this day and honor the sacrifice of the fallen.

This is a pledge we should remember every day and not just once a year.

Ms. LUCILLE ROYBAL-ALLARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to remember the men, women, and children who lost their lives in the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks on America and to honor the heroic efforts of our first responders on that fateful day.

It is more than fitting that the resolution before us today remember the innocent victims of September 11 and pay tribute to the countless first responders who at their own peril responded to the horror of that day.

It is unfortunate then that the Republican leadership has chosen this solemn time to play politics and divide this House by inserting into this legislation references to several controversial and partisan pieces of legislation.

It is true that Democrats and Republicans disagree over the policies of the administration and the Republican leadership. These policy differences include the Republican budget cuts in time of war, the failure to ensure the safety of our seaports, the failure to fully inspect aviation cargo against terrorist attacks, and the failure to provide our first responders with critical resources and equipment to adequately respond to a disaster.

It is also true that Democrats have a new direction to address these and other security concerns and the failures of this administration to adequately prepare our country for another large scale disaster. But the Republican leadership dishonors the spirit of this solemn anniversary by including divisive language in this resolution.

Controversial issues, such as certain provisions of the PATRIOT Act and the Border Protection Act, have no place in a resolution that commemorates the events of September 11, 2001. And I deeply regret that my Republican colleagues have unnecessarily cast a shadow on this solemn anniversary.

On the fifth anniversary of the September attacks, let us remember 9/11 not with political shenanigans but by respectfully remembering those who lost their lives and by honoring them with legislation that provides real homeland security for the families and friends they left behind and all Americans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time for debate has expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 996, the resolution is considered read and the previous question is ordered on the resolution and on the preamble.

SEC. 3. CLASSIFIED INFORMATION.

Nothing in this Act shall require the disclosure of classified information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. DAVIS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Majority Whip ROY BLUNT and I originally introduced H.R. 5060 to amend the Federal Financial Assistance Management Improvement Act of 1999 to require data with respect to Federal financial assistance to be available for public access in a searchable and user-friendly form. Our bill passed the House on June 21, 2006.

Today, we are taking up the Senate companion bill, S. 2590, introduced by Senator COBURN and Senator OBAMA, which would require Federal financial assistance data, as well as data about government contracts, to be available for public access.

This bill would require the Office of Management and Budget to create a Web site listing all grant awards and contracts in a manner that would be easily accessible and free of charge. In a nutshell, this is about information to taxpayers about how their hard-earned dollars are being spent. Each award or contract would have to be listed on the Web site within 30 days of enactment of this act. Currently, no such real-time disclosure is required to grant awards, and data that is available often is not timely.

Further, there is no central database of all entities receiving Federal funds, including the nearly 30,000 organizations that are awarded nearly $300 billion in Federal grants each year. In fact, several agencies have taken different approaches to publicizing information about grantees, and all too often little or no information is available online.

This legislation puts into place a framework that sheds light on the Federal grant process, allowing anyone with access to the Internet the ability to review and search financial assistance awards. Sunshine, Mr. Speaker, is the best disinfectant. This legislation will provide greater transparency in the grant-making process and require continued improvement of the already existing, but inadequate transparency, in Federal contract awards.

I want to thank the gentleman from Missouri for recognizing the importance of this issue. I want to congratulate him on bringing this measure forward. I also want to thank our ranking member, Mr. WAXMAN, for reaching across the aisle to move this legislation forward in a timely manner.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Speaker, S. 2590 calls for the creation of a new searchable database of all Federal grants and contracts to be made publicly available on the Internet. This will require the Office of Management and Budget to develop a database that can be useful to individuals and organizations researching Federal grant funding. In addition, it should allow the public to better access information about the billions of dollars spent on Federal contracting.

I would like to highlight one important difference between this bill and H.R. 5060, which passed the House in June. The database created under H.R. 5060 was missing a key component, information about Federal contract spending. Contract information is essential to meaningful public oversight. As Federal contract spending increases, and from 2000 to 2005, it has soared by 86 percent from $203.2 billion to $377.5 billion. There is a vital need for the public to be able to track and understand this spending.

I want to thank Chairman DAVIS and Majority Whip BLUNT for reconsidering their position on the contract information issue and hope that our efforts today will make Federal contract information freely and easily accessible to the public.

I also want to commend the hard work of Senator COBURN and Senator OBAMA on this legislation. As Members of Congress, we have a responsibility to increase public understanding of Federal spending and public access to information about how taxpayer dollars are spent.

Currently, the public has access to a grants data system, the Federal Assistance Award Data System, that provides limited information about domestic grants. But this system is unwieldy and difficult to use. In addition, there is a publicly available database of contracts, the Federal Procurement Data System, FPDS; but it is too plagued with problems.

So, today, we try to improve on those systems. The key to success will be implementation. Without it, we will be where we are now, with poor access to information. If implemented properly, public oversight of Federal spending will, indeed, increase.

In closing, I must admit that I find it incredible that it has taken an act of Congress to make this information public. All of this information should be already available to the public. This is just one victory in our continuing fight for public access to government information.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he might consume to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BLUNT), who has had a lot to do with originating this bill in the House and helping us work out the details with the Senate.

Mr. BLUNT. Chairman DAVIS, thank you for yielding, and thank you for your great work on this bill.

Mr. Speaker, this week we are having a discussion in the House about earmarks and earmark reform. Yet there is another process in the Federal Government that, despite spending $300 billion a year, has almost no access as we stand here today. Each year the Federal Government gives out thousands of grants to various organizations and entities. All told, some 30,000 organizations a year receive grants. Yet there is no central system available to the public or even to the Congress to determine who is receiving these taxpayer funds and how they are being spent.

That is why Chairman DAVIS and I introduced, and in June the House passed, H.R. 5060 with the support of Mr. WAXMAN and Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. This was a bill to require a publicly searchable database of all Federal grants. Our colleagues in the other body, led by Senator COBURN and Senator OBAMA, passed a slightly different bill that established a similar but different database for grants and Federal contracts.

Last week we were able to collectively announce a final agreement representing the best element of both bills. Our agreement requires the Office of Management and Budget to establish a searchable Web site listing all recipients of Federal financial assistance such as loans and grants, as well as a separate database covering all contracts over the $25,000 reporting threshold.

This site will provide an invaluable tool enabling the Congress, the public, and the media to easily determine who is receiving taxpayer funds and doing business with the government. This information will be critical in uncovering wasteful spending and ensuring compliance with existing Federal laws.

There are numerous examples of wasteful government grants, such as millions of dollars spent with the National Institute of Mental Health to study what makes a meaningful day for college students, or to study how college students decorate their dorm rooms. There was even one example of a grant for $700,000 at the EPA where the grant was given without any knowledge, apparently, of what work was to be performed as a result of the grant.

The bill we are passing today will empower everyone with access to the Internet to begin reviewing the Federal grants and other forms of taxpayer assistance to look for waste, fraud, abuse or just to simply know who, in their community, or in other communities they are aware of, are receiving these grants. This legislation will also help to ensure that Federal laws are adhered to by those receiving taxpayer funds.

Frequently, Federal law imposes various restrictions or requirements on Federal grantees. For example, the Congress has entities or has required that entities receiving funds under our Global AIDS Program have a firm policy opposing prostitution and sex trafficking.

Yet last year, the Government Reform Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, Drug Policy and Human Resources uncovered that a USAID grantee was subcontracting taxpayer funds to, in fact, a pro-prostitution organization. Our bill required grantees to also disclose their subgrantees, thus making it easier to ensure compliance with important Federal policies, like those applicable to the Global AIDS Program.

This legislation will also ensure compliance with existing lobbying restrictions. The 1995 Lobbying Disclosure Act prohibits 501(c)4 organizations from receiving Federal grants and lobbying, even with their own funds.

The restriction has been difficult to enforce. The Inspector General for the EPA determined in 2004, for example, that for 5 years the Consumer Federation of America had spent some of the $5 million it received in Federal grants to lobby the government. A central database of entities receiving Federal grants would provide an important tool to ensure compliance with existing law.

It is my belief that this bill will provide important information to all Americans and serve as a powerful tool to improve how government spends precious taxpayer funds.

I want to thank Chairman DAVIS and Ranking Member WAXMAN for their assistance in moving this legislation forward, and in particular I want to thank the staff of the Government Reform Committee, particularly Ellen Brown, John Brosnan and Ed Puccarella, for their efforts.

I urge passage of this important legislation.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER).

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I first want to thank our majority whip, the chairman of Government Reform Committee and Senator COBURN in particular for the way they moved this bill, introduced the bill and moved this bill through. We all realize that the government needs to be more transparent and we are working towards those directions.

But as you heard Mr. BLUNT mention earlier, our subcommittee, the one that I chair, had one of the more frustrating experiences. Chairman DAVIS, myself, many of the subcommittee chairmen in Government Reform's job is to do oversight over the executive branch, and it is very hard to get the data we need to do proper oversight.

We started in December, actually October 6, 2005, to ask USAID for some information on whether they were following congressional guidelines as far as a particular group and program that we had been tipped off may not have been following those guidelines. USAID at the meeting denied they were funding this organization.

We asked them for documentation. They said documentation didn't exist. My staff director, Marc Wheat, and our hard-working staff, dug up on Google in actuality documents that the State Department said didn't exist. We also had people from other agencies that leaked us documents. So they in effect came to us and told us a mistruth about what existed and didn't exist. They also buried it in subcontractors.

This organization, SANGRAM, had in fact been a high risk candidate already because they had publicly opposed having prostitution be illegal. They had written, "We believe that when involuntarily initiation into prostitution occurs, a process of socialization within the institution of prostitution exists, whereby the involuntary nature of the business changes increasingly into one of active acceptance, not necessarily with resignation. This is not a coercive process." In other words, they believe prostitution is a legitimate form of a job.

Now, that is contrary to Federal law. But even though this group had taken that position and even though our government had let them participate, they had tried to disguise in the grant process who was getting the money. We had a case of an organization that went in to rescue some women from prostitution, and when they were rescued, this organization, funded with taxpayer dollars, contrary to U.S. law, went and took the women back into prostitution in Asia.

We cannot on the one hand be trying to get women out of prostitution, and on the other hand be funding it contrary to law. The fundamental problem here was we couldn't follow the grants.

The reason you need transparency and the reason we need transparency in the executive branch and the reason we need transparency in the legislative branch is so we can at least see where the money goes. Then you can debate with your politicians whether it is the right policy or the wrong policy. But when you can't find where the money goes, it is impossible to do responsible legislation and absolutely impossible to do responsible oversight.

I thank the chairman of the Government Reform Committee for making the executive branch be accountable as well, and for our leader and for the cooperation of the Democrats on this issue. This should be a bipartisan effort. Let the sun shine on all earmarks and let the sun shine on all grants.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 2590, Federal Funding Accountability and Transparency Act. The database envisioned in this act will be a vital tool for creating a more open spending process.

As we all know, government spending is often an impenetrable web of confusion and dead-ends. Exactly who receives taxpayer money may be difficult to ascertain. In some instances, agencies cannot answer definitively if an organization receives taxpayer funding or not. Such messy records and bookkeeping would not be tolerated in the private sector. Furthermore, the government does not allow the private sector to keep such abysmal records. Establishing the database proposed in this bill will cut through this web and allow easy access to who receives money and for what purpose. The need for this type of system will help not only in area of earmarks, but also in the awarding of government grants and contracts.

The necessity of such a database is best illustrated by an exchange between USAID and the Government Reform Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, Drug Policy, and Human Resources. In my capacity as Chairman of the subcommittee, on October 6, 2005, I sent a letter to USAID seeking information about its funding of the pro-prostitution non-governmental organization called SANGRAM in violation of Public Law 108-25, the United States Leadership Against HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria Act of 2003.

According to an unclassified State Department memorandum obtained by subcommittee staff, Restore International, an anti-trafficking NGO that works with law enforcement agencies in India, was "confronted by a USAID-funded NGO [SANGRAM] while the former attempted to rescue and provide long-term care for child victims of sex trafficking. The confrontation led to the release of 17 minor girls—victims of trafficking—into the hands of traffickers and trafficking accomplices." According to this memorandum, SANGRAM "allowed a brothel keeper into a shelter to pressure the girls not to cooperate with counselors. The girls are now back in the brothels, being subjected to rape for profit."

On November 16, 2005, a USAID briefer asserted to Government Reform Committee staff that USAID had "nothing to do with" the grant to the pro-prostitution SANGRAM, and that the Committee's inquiries were "destructive." The Subcommittee is now in possession of documents that demonstrate that USAID must provide a revised briefing to Congress on its true role.

These documents prove that USAID money financed the pro-prostitution SANGRAM through a second organization named Avert, which was established with the assistance of four USAID employees as a pass-through entity. USAID has held the ex-officio Vice Chairmanship of Avert since inception.

According to these documents, the USAID board member of Avert voted twice to award funding to SANGRAM (July 27, 2002 and again on December 3, 2004), the last time being some 18 months after the provisions of Public Law 108-25 prohibited taxpayer funding of pro-prostitution groups like SANGRAM.

That SANGRAM was a high-risk candidate for not complying with Public Law 108-25 should not have been a surprise to USAID. SANGRAM was a cosigner, along with many other high-risk candidates, of a May 18, 2005 letter to President Bush opposing the anti-prostitution pledge. Subcommittee staff found posted on a USAID-sponsored Web site, a 5-year-old report from SANGRAM that states: "We believe that when involuntary initiation into prostitution occurs, a process of socialization within the institution of prostitution exists, whereby the involuntary nature of the business changes increasingly into one of active acceptance, not necessarily with resignation. This is not a coercive process."

I agree with President Bush that "It takes a special kind of depravity to exploit and hurt the most vulnerable members of society. Human traffickers rob children of their innocence; they expose them to the worst of life before they have seen much of life. Traffickers tear families apart. They treat their victims as nothing more than goods and commodities for sale to the highest bidder." It is inconceivable that an organization like SANGRAM could have received funding from the American taxpayer had USAID put in place an adequate management system to carry out Public Law 108-25.

On December 13, 2005, a large briefing team from the Department of State and USAID met with staff from the Subcommittee I chair concerning this matter, in order to demonstrate ownership of the problem and to lay-out corrective measures being taken. To my dismay and astonishment, the briefers were not prepared to discuss (and exhibited little knowledge of) the pass-through entity known as Avert that USAID established and which served as the mechanism whereby NGOs in India were monitored and financed with American tax dollars. Subcommittee staff knew more than the State/USAID briefing team about this matter thanks to Google searches on the web for critical documents that had not been provided to the Subcommittee by the Administration.

In the months since that December 13 appeal was made for an electronic registry, the Subcommittee request has inspired two pieces of legislation: first in the other body, and the second we are debating here today. This scandal of financing pro-prostitution groups by USAID was highlighted by the authors in both chambers as illustrating the need for this legislation.

I urge the swift passage of this legislation. If we are going to continue to spend taxpayer money, the American people deserve to know how it is being spent and by whom. Flagrantly disgusting examples of the misuse of taxpayer funds must be made known and eliminated.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I will close by just simply saying that I don't believe that we can overemphasize the importance of transparency in government, and especially as it relates to contracting. I would urge passage of this legislation. I am proud to be a cosponsor of it.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, the bill we are considering today, S. 2950, requires the Office of Management and Budget to create a searchable database of federal grants and contracts accessible to the public on the Internet. I am pleased to support this bill.

In June, the House considered a watered down version of this bill, H.R. 5060. The House bill included only grants, leaving out hundreds of billions of dollars in annual spending on federal contracts. At the time, I urged Chairman DAVIS to work with me to include contract disclosure in the legislation.

The bill before us today is stronger and more comprehensive than the bill passed by the House in June. While the House bill covered only grants, the database created under this legislation will include all federal grants and contracts. If this bill is implemented properly, any citizen with Internet access will be able to examine a comprehensive set of records for information about federal spending. For each grant or contract awarded, the database will include details about the recipient of the award, as well as the amount of the award, the purpose of the funding action, and other relevant information.

There has been considerable confusion about what this bill does and does not do. The information that this bill requires to be posted on the Internet is not secret. In fact, there are existing databases that are accessible to Congress and the public that are already required to include the information covered in this bill.

Under current law, for example, there is a federal procurement database maintained by the General Services Administration. This database, called the Federal Procurement Data System, is required to contain significant amount of information about each federal contract.

Similarly, there is a grants database maintained by the Census Bureau, the Federal Assistance Data System, which collects information about domestic financial assistance awards. In addition, grants.gov and various databases maintained by individual agencies, contain some of this information.

But these databases don't always contain the information that they are supposed to contain. They aren't always kept up to date. And they can be difficult to use.

In essence, what this bill does is require that these existing databases be compiled into a new database that is more organized and more accessible.

Ordinarily, I would not be in favor of legislation that requires the government to spend money repackaging data that is already in existence. But this bill is an exception. The current state of the existing databases is so poor that Congress is justified in passing new legislation.

Ultimately, implementation will be key to the success of this bill. If the administration is not committed to making the legislation work, all we will get is another incomplete and hard-to-use database. My hope is that by passing this bill with broad, bipartisan support, we are sending a signal to the administration that it needs to do a better job.

Members of Congress from both parties and both the House and Senate have worked hard to make this bill a reality. I want to compliment Senator OBAMA and Senator COBURN, in particular, for their leadership. They put aside partisanship to forge the bill we are considering today. I also want to thank Chairman DAVIS for agreeing to expand the scope of this bill to cover contracts.

The legislation we are passing today is not comprehensive reform; it will not restore honesty and accountability in government. It's a modest, bipartisan step in the direction of open government. But in the climate we're currently in, even a small step forward is worth supporting and celebrating.

I urge support of this legislation.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members to support the passage of S. 2590.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 2590.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 6033, offered by the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY) would designate the post office building in Woodside, New York, as the Thomas J. Manton Post Office Building.

Mr. Manton passed away in July of this year. The attendance of over 800 people at his service was a testament to his lasting impact as a public servant and friend to the New York community.

His history of public service began with his time in the Marine Corps and continued until his final day as Chair of the Queens County Democratic Organization. He also worked as a New York City police officer while simultaneously attending law school, and in 1970 he began the first of what would be 14 years as a New York City Council Member. In 1985, he was elected to Congress, where he served his country and constituents until 1999.

A steadfast advocate of diversity, Mr. Manton balanced the needs of the people from multiple backgrounds with heartfelt understanding and great compassion. His constituents remember him as a humanitarian and advocate who was never too busy to return a phone call or share his time.

With gratitude for his devotion and service to our country, I would ask all Members to join me in supporting H.R. 3063

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield such time as he may consume to the sponsor of this resolution, the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY).

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend and colleague for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise, and it is an honor for me to rise this evening, in support of H.R. 6033, legislation, as duly noted by my friend Mr. DAVIS, to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 39-25 61st Street in Woodside, New York, as the Thomas J. Manton Post Office Building.

I want to first extend my sincere thanks and gratitude to Chairman TOM DAVIS for his expediting this legislation to the floor. As was mentioned, Tom Manton died only recently, at the end of July, and to have this bill on the floor as quickly as we have, I owe a great deal of debt to TOM. Thank you, Mr. DAVIS, for your work on this.

I also want to thank the ranking member, Mr. HENRY WAXMAN, again a gentleman who saw fit to move this legislation quickly; the majority leader, JOHN BOEHNER, as well and his office. In particular I want to thank Denise Wilson of the Government Reform staff as well for her helping move this forward. I want to thank our leader, NANCY PELOSI, and Chairman BARTON and Ranking Member JOHN DINGELL for their help in moving this expeditiously to the floor.

I also want to thank all my colleagues from New York who unanimously supported this renaming, but particularly I want to thank the dean of our delegation from Long Island and Queens County, Representative GARY ACKERMAN, as well as CAROLYN MALONEY, NYDIA VELÁZQUEZ, GREG MEEKS, ANTHONY WEINER, and, of course, we can't forget the dean of the New York delegation, CHARLIE RANGEL, but all New Yorkers, with the support of both Democrat and Republican, without cause. NITA LOWEY, for her work and for all their friendship with Tom Manton and their kind words back in July when this House recognized his passing.

I appreciate that. My constituents certainly appreciate that as well. I know that the Manton family, in particular Diane Manton, is very appreciative of the honor that we bestow upon her late, great husband, former Congressman Tom Manton.

Many of my colleagues in Congress are familiar with the exemplary service of former Congressman Tom Manton because you served with him. But for those who don't recall, he served with honor and distinction in the United States House of Representatives from 1984 to 1999. He replaced the then legendary former Congresswoman Geraldine Ferraro.

Before that, Tom Manton came from humble Irish American roots. He loved his country, America, and certainly loved his ancestral homeland of Ireland as well, and that was reflected in the community he grew up in. Woodside, New York, was and still remains a community that has an Irish flavor to it.

Tom Manton served the City of New York first as a member of the New York City Police Department. He had worked for a time for IBM and there had been some discussion at one time that he sold computers for IBM. Let me just make it perfectly clear. When Tom Manton worked for IBM, computers were bigger than this room. He did not sell computers for IBM. I think it was he sold typewriters for IBM. It is important to make that distinction.

But after that he had gone to law school at St. John's and he graduated and ran for the New York City Council and served there with distinction for 15 years before coming on to serve here in the House of Representatives.

As I mentioned before, the neighborhood that this Post Office is located in, if you took a dart and threw it at the map of New York City and you hit bullseye, you would be right in Woodside-Queens, New York, as I mentioned before, a community that is known for its Irish American community and one of the still largest concentrations of Irish American immigrants in our Nation today. Woodside is also my hometown, my home neighborhood.

It is also very diverse. It is a multi-ethnic neighborhood, and an ever-changing part of my district, as it was for Tom Manton, and is often the first stop for new immigrants to our great country.

While we may hear less Irish and Italian accents and more Turkish, Bengali, Hindi and Spanish in local stores, the neighborhood of Woodside is as vibrant today as it was when I was a young child and it was when Tom Manton served as its legislator.

Naming this Post Office after Tom Manton, again, the son of Irish immigrants, who rose to serve in these hallowed halls, is a perfect reminder to that potential that exists for all immigrants and their children today in the United States that it is as unlimited as it was for Tom Manton and as it was for his parents to see him become a Member of Congress, as it is for my parents to be here to see me become a Member of Congress and for previous generations.

I want to thank all my colleagues again for their expediting this legislation. Tom Manton was more than my predecessor. He was my counsel, he was my mentor, and, more importantly, he was my friend. For you to recognize him in this way and in such a manner does more in many respects to my own heart, and I really appreciate this.

Again, on behalf of the Manton family, and in particular Diane Manton, his wife, and his children and his grandchildren and the people of the Seventh Congressional District, in particular Woodside, I thank this entire Congress for its unanimous support for renaming this Post Office after Tom Manton.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my friend for his very moving words. This is a tough partisan area right now, we even argued over a 9/11 resolution a minute ago, where partisanship sometimes gets in the way of other things.

Even though Tom Manton was a strong Democrat and a Democratic leader, he never let his partisanship get in the way of getting good results for his constituency and for the country. So this is a fitting memory to his legacy that he leaves here, and I join you. He was our friend on this side of the aisle as well.

Tonight we moved this quickly, Republicans and Democrats, in his honor, because of the great man that he was. I thank my friend for introducing the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I have no other speakers at this moment, so I yield back the balance of my time.

□ 2000

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

As a member of the House Government Reform Committee, I am pleased to join my colleagues in consideration of H.R. 6033, which names a postal facility in Woodside, New York, after the late Thomas J. Manton, former Member of Congress, who represented the Seventh Congressional District of New York.

I know that Representative CROWLEY has spoken eloquently about all of the exploits and all of what Representative Manton meant to New York. I know that there were a number of other New Yorkers who had intended to be here and probably were not able to make it. I know that Representative CAROLINE MALONEY had intended to be here and Representative NITA LOWEY had intended to be here, because they had indicated that they too wanted to express their appreciation for the tremendous and outstanding service that was indeed provided. And so just on their behalf and on behalf of all of the others who would want to have expressed themselves and could not, I would join with Representative CROWLEY and Chairman DAVIS in urging swift passage of this bill as we honor the life and the legacy of a true American and a great friend to all, Representative Thomas Manton.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in strong support of H.R. 6033, the Thomas J. Manton Post Office Building Designation Act. The legislation would designate a United States Postal Service Office in New York as the Thomas J. Manton Post Office Building.

Thomas Manton served this country with honor and integrity. He was a true public servant.

His distinguished public servant career includes: serving in the military, police officer with the New York City Police Department, serving in the New York City Council and being a Member of Congress representing the people of New York's 7th congressional district. Thomas Manton always fought for the people he represented and New Yorkers are better off because of his work.

I am honored to have worked with Thomas Manton while he was in Congress. We were both members of the Energy and Commerce Committee, and he was ranking member on the Subcommittee that I chaired. We sat through many long hearings together.

Throughout his life he approached his work with integrity. The dedication in Thomas Manton's honor will preserve his legacy and remind his constituents of his long and distinguished public career.

I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on this legislation.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 6033, a bill that would designate the United States Postal Service facility at 39–25 61st Street, in Woodside, Queens, New York City the "Thomas J. Manton Post Office Building." It is more than fitting that a federal facility will be named after Tom in a community that he so ably represented for so many years.

Tom lived a life seemingly from a movie script: a son of Irish immigrants; educated at St. John's University; earned his law degree at night from St. John's; Marine Corps Flight Navigator; New York City Police Officer; New York City Councilman from Queens; Member of Congress; and Queens County Democratic Chairman. Tom Manton's life was a perfect realization of the American Dream, and having achieved the American Dream himself, Tom always worked to ensure that everyone, native born and immigrant alike, had the opportunity to live the American Dream as well.

When Tom Manton became Chairman of the Queens County Democratic organization, he immediately revitalized a local party beset by front-page problems and the loss of public trust. Tom turned the party organization around while at the same time insisting on increasing its diversity to reflect the borough of Queens. Tom recruited and helped numerous political candidates from different ethnic backgrounds. As a result of Tom's hard work, discipline, and commitment, the Queens Democratic Committee is currently one of the strongest party organizations in the country.

In Congress, Tom was a tireless advocate for the people of New York. On the Committee on Energy and Commerce, Tom worked to help his constituents by bringing jobs and opportunity to his congressional district. Like many others, I turned to Tom for advice and guidance and found him to be a stand-up guy, the real deal. His word and handshake was his bond. Tom characteristically worked quietly behind the curtain, rather than grandstanding in front of the cameras. So, he might be a little embarrassed about having a federal facility named after him. But, Tom also believed in our government, and its ability to help each of us achieve our dreams of prosperity and justice for all Americans.

Mr. Speaker, Tom Manton's life of hard work, perseverance, and selflessness brought integrity and dignity to public office. It is appropriate that we pay tribute to his memory by naming this post office in Woodside, Queens in his honor. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 6033.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues in supporting H.R. 6033 which would designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 39–25 61st Street in Woodside, New York, as the "Thomas J. Manton Post Office Building".

As you know, we lost our dear friend Tom just a few short months ago, and I cannot think of a more fitting tribute to one of the most distinguished Members who ever served in this great House, than to see this renaming become a reality.

The character of Tom Manton's life might be summed up in a few words: he was a man of great commitment, hard-working, an inspiring leader, and he was deeply passionate about the causes he believed in and the work he did on behalf of his constituency.

Manton was a man of great intellect. During seven terms in Congress, from 1985 to 1998, he was an important figure on reauthorization of the Superfund program, which provides for the cleanup of uncontrolled or abandoned hazardous waste sites. However, most of his legislative initiatives were focused on various local issues: stopping the Long Island Rail Road from building a waste-transfer station in western Queens, barring the creation of composting plants for sewage sludge in New York City, and using amendments to the Clean Air Act to aid local businesses. As well, he also sponsored a law that made benefits to permanently injured police officers, on par with payments to officers killed in the line of duty.

This loving husband and devoted father was also a very dear friend and colleague to me through all the years we worked together here in the Congress.

It was my privilege to know him and to work with him on matters involving not only our Nation, but the great State of New York. He combined with his charm, an unlimited energy and the highest integrity and work ethic.

Tom Manton was indeed a well respected and revered Member of this institution who gave of himself diligently, and was ever zealous to carry through to its ultimate conclusion, the cause of those who would benefit from his direction. No one is likely to forget neither the courage of his faith nor the warmth of his friendship.

In Tom's memory, let us move this bill forward.

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 6033.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON
H.R. 2864, WATER RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 2005

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2864) to provide for the conservation and development of water and related resources, to authorize the Secretary of the Army to construct various projects for improvements to rivers and harbors of the United States, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and request a conference with the Senate thereon.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT OFFERED BY MR. MELANCON

Mr. MELANCON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to instruct conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Melancon moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendment to the bill H.R. 2864 be instructed to agree to provisions that will provide protection to communities located in the coastal area of Louisiana and Mississippi from the storm surge of a category 5 hurricane.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 7 of rule XXII, the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. MELANCON) and the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. MELANCON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I come here today in support of building a comprehensive hurricane protection system for the gulf coast. For years we in Congress have focused on various wants for our constituents. Today we have the opportunity to focus on the Nation's needs.

Earlier this year, I introduced in Congress the Meeting Authorization Requirements for Our Coast, or MARC, Act. This legislation would have authorized a comprehensive hurricane protection system for the gulf coast. Today's motion is a continuation of that effort.

Building a hurricane protection system that can protect our coastal citizens and businesses from category five hurricanes is the most important need in the U.S. Gulf Coast States. In Louisiana alone there are currently 200,000 people that have no protection, zero, from the next deadly hurricane. If Hurricane Katrina hit Louisiana just a few miles to the west, the devastation would have been like nothing you have seen on TV, and building a category five hurricane protection system will save the lives of these people in future events.

But a comprehensive hurricane protection system is also vital to supporting and safeguarding our Nation's energy supply. Louisiana has a long and distinguished history of oil and gas production, both on and offshore. Among the 50 States, we are first in crude oil production, second in natural gas production, and second in total energy production. Currently, approximately 34 percent of the Nation's natural gas supply and almost 30 percent of the Nation's crude oil supply is either produced in Louisiana, produced offshore Louisiana, or moves through the State and its coastal wetlands. Together with the infrastructure in the rest of the State, this production is connected to nearly 50 percent of the total refining capacity of this entire country.

Based on its energy-producing value to the Nation, acre for acre, Louisiana is the most valuable real estate in the Nation. Louisiana has 17 petroleum refineries, most of them large, world-scale facilities. These refineries have a combined crude oil distillation capacity of approximately 2.77 million barrels per day, which is 16.2 percent of the total U.S. refinery capacity of 17.1 million barrels a day, the second highest in this Nation. Two of the four Strategic Petroleum Reserve storage facilities are in south Louisiana along our coast. Just last week Chevron announced it discovered a deepwater oil and gas field off Louisiana's coast that could account for as much as 50 percent of our Nation's known reserves. The field would be largely serviced by Louisiana ports, ports that remain highly vulnerable. Louisiana is crucial to all parts of America because of its working "energy coast," and we need your help.

Supporting our Nation's energy needs has come at a price. In the past century, Louisiana has lost 1.2 million acres of coastal wetlands and barrier islands and stands to lose hundreds of thousands more acres if measures to stop the loss are not taken. That is a football field of land every 38 seconds along our vanishing coast. Without this protected buffer, Louisiana's people, businesses, and energy infrastructure are much more vulnerable to storm surges and hurricane-related flooding.

Comprehensive hurricane protection combined with coastal restoration will offer truly adequate hurricane protection necessary to protect the lives of over 2 million residents, over 50 percent of the State's population, and the entire infrastructure that supports our Nation's energy needs.

Some of my colleagues might question the cost of a comprehensive hurricane protection system. In response I say that you can pay now or you can pay much higher later. You can pay to build a category five protection system today or you could pay later with a disrupted national energy supply, ruined businesses, lives lost, and hundreds of billions of dollars of recovery costs to the citizens of this country.

The gulf coast has worked tirelessly and quietly for generations to provide the rest of the Nation with energy and transportation services needed to keep industry around the country on pace. Only now in this time of need does the gulf coast ask for something back, a category five hurricane protection system to protect lives, property, and energy production for future storms.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I am delighted we are moving to conference on the Water Resources Development Act. This is a very important piece of legislation that makes investments all around America. The projects in these bills will reduce transportation costs, protect our homes and businesses from damaging floods, and improve our environment for a better quality of life. The Water Resources Development Act is important legislation for the entire country.

The people of Louisiana and Mississippi suffered greatly from Hurricane Katrina last year. A great deal has been done by the Army Corps of Engineers to restore the hurricane protection works in the New Orleans area, but there is still much to do.

While I support the motion to instruct, I believe we have to recognize that there will be residual risk associated with any hurricane protection project we build. New Orleans needs to consider smart ways to rebuild that put fewer of their citizens at risk.

We also must recognize that the damaging effect of a hurricane is not measured strictly by its category, which basically measures wind speed. Other factors such as how fast it moves, how much rain is associated with it, what direction it takes, and how big a storm surge it is able to generate all contribute to whether a category five hurricane will be catastrophic or just very bad.

We are talking about protecting an important and unique region of our country, but we also have only a slight understanding at this point of how much money we will need to spend. It will certainly be tens of billions of dollars. And I will remind Members that there are other great cities in America at risk of flooding, some at higher risk than New Orleans.

While I would hope that there will be serious urban planning going on at the local level, I believe we need a well-thought-out plan for additional hurricane protection in this region of the gulf. It must be a comprehensive plan that also recognizes the navigation needs of one of America's great ports and waterways as well as the ecological importance of the coastal marshes.

I want to assure Mr. MELANCON that I will work in conference to make sure that the Corps of Engineers gets the authority it needs to provide the appropriate protection for coastal Louisiana and Mississippi.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, we were all horrified a year ago when New Orleans' levies broke under the force of the winds and storm surges caused by Hurricane Katrina. Katrina was at Category 3 strength when it made landfall that fateful day, yet it wrought destruction beyond our imagination. In the face of the devastation we witnessed, it borders on the absurd to consider authorizing levee funding for New Orleans at anything less than the Category 5 level. For that reason, I rise in strong support of the Melancon Motion to Instruct the WRDA conferees.

Mr. Speaker, past authorizations for hurricane protection took into account vast marshes and wetlands, as well as barrier islands that could absorb most of the force of tidal surges. Louisiana has lost 1.2 million acres of this land due to economic development in the past century, and stands to lose another 435,000 acres if measures to stop the loss aren't taken. Without this protective buffer, the people of Louisiana are that much more vulnerable to storm surges and other hurricane-related flooding.

Coastal and wetlands restoration combined with a strong levy system will offer the hurricane protection necessary to protect the lives of over 2 million residents and the nation's industries. However, we cannot rebuild all of the wetlands lost in the near term, so we must compensate with stronger, better levee protection. The Army Corps of Engineers has worked hard to bring levees back up to pre-Katrina standards, but we've already seen what that level of protection does—nothing. Anything less than Category 5 levee protection is totally inadequate and would be an insult to the memory of the more than 700 New Orleanians who lost their lives a year ago.

Mr. JEFFERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to request the conferees on the Water Development Resources Act guarantee levee protection at a Category 5 level. Hurricane Katrina served as a stark reminder that our levee system in south Louisiana is inadequate. We are responsible for ensuring the safety of its residents, and today we can make a commitment that they are not forgotten.

The economic and environmental benefits that south Louisiana provides to the nation are substantial. Coastal Louisiana produces over 30% of our nation's seafood, including 50% of our shrimp crop. Our wetlands are home to over 79 endangered species and serve as a vital habitat for migratory birds. The network of interconnected waterways and presence of several major port facilities are an important hub in our maritime industry. Over 70% of the grain produced in the United States travels through the area. 30% of our domestic crude oil and 34% of our natural gas is produced by or travels through south Louisiana, making us a centerpiece in America's Energy Coast. In addition to transporting much of our domestic oil supply, coastal Louisiana also refines 16% of our petroleum products. Knowing this, we must ensure that this valuable part of our nation's infrastructure remains intact and its people remain protected.

Our current levee system in New Orleans dates back to the 1960s, and since then our whole environment has changed. The loss of coastal barrier islands and the erosion of our wetlands have led to a weakened first line of defense against hurricanes. These islands and wetlands help absorb the storm's tidal surge and weaken the strength of an approaching storm. We are losing our wetlands at a rate of 25 to 30 square miles per year, while we are making areas further inland more susceptible to flooding. We have seen hurricanes become more powerful and more frequent as the years go by. The risk of hurricanes will always be present in south Louisiana, it is up to us to decide how to best mitigate their destructive impacts.

Looking at this situation, I am reminded of what I saw firsthand in the Netherlands. After the devastating North Sea floods of 1953, that nation committed itself to a system of water management projects that would ensure such a flood never happened again. Although the cost was high, their determination to provide absolute protection was justified. As a result, the Netherlands now has a significant number of its citizens living and produces 70% of its $480 billion GDP in areas that are fifteen to twenty feet below sea level, safely protected by flood control projects. By comparison, the lowest areas of New Orleans are only four and a half feet below sea level. Protecting the city is not beyond our technological capabilities, it is simply a matter of making the commitment necessary to do so. While the cost may seem substantial now, it pales in comparison to the cost we would face in human and economic losses should another hurricane strike south Louisiana directly.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to get it right. We must ensure the safety of the city of New Orleans and the rest of the Gulf Coast, because we have seen the horrible effects of substandard, poorly designed, inadequate levee protection in the face of a powerful storm. A working flood control system for south Louisiana begins with sound levees. I urge the conferees to support levee protection against a Category 5 storm surge.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support Congressman MELANCON's motion to instruct conferees on H.R. 2864. This motion would direct conferees to accept provisions that will protect coastal communities in Louisiana and Mississippi from the storm surge of a category 5 hurricane.

Hurricane Katrina hit the Gulf on August 29, 2005, and was a category 3 hurricane that did not even directly hit the affected areas.

Yet, Katrina was able to inflict monstrous and unimaginable damage upon Louisiana and the Gulf Coast of Mississippi. One year after Hurricane Katrina, the area remains a terrible, twisted portrait of lives and families and whole communities washed away; home by home, block by block, neighborhood by neighborhood.

As a result of Hurricane Katrina:

More than 1,000 people died.

The total number of immediately displaced people has never been determined. Estimates range from the hundreds of thousands to the millions.

The Louisiana parishes of Orleans and St. Bernard were especially hard hit by flooding, with an estimated 77% of Orleans's population affected, and nearly all residents of St. Bernard.

In Mississippi, 55% of Hancock County's population is estimated to have been affected by flooding and/or structural damage.

In the greater New Orleans area alone, there were 160,000 homes and apartments destroyed or heavily damaged by the storm.

The metro New Orleans area has lost approximately 400,000 residents.

The National Flood Insurance Program has paid out $17 billion in property damage claims in Louisiana alone, only a fraction of total damage.

Hospital capacity in Orleans parish dropped in half immediately after the storm. In St. Bernard, there are still no hospitals open.

The Army Corps of Engineers has only begun to raise sinking levees and deal with unfinished hurricane protection and flood prevention projects. But, they're only rebuilding the levees to withstand a Category 3 storm, Katrina's level. Prudent planning and common sense would dictate that they be raised to Category 5 levels to protect the more than two million residents along these coasts.

I urge my colleagues to support and vote for this motion to instruct.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this motion, offered by the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. MELANCON), to instruct the House conferees to support the maximum level of hurricane and storm damage protection for the communities of coastal Louisiana and Mississippi.

Two weeks ago, this nation honored the 1 year anniversary of Hurricane Katrina, and the devastating impact this storm had on the Gulf Coast communities. Over the past year, we have had the ability to reflect on the lives and livelihoods that were forever changed by Hurricane Katrina, as well as on efforts to restore some sense of normalcy to the families and communities impacted by the storm. Few national efforts have been more important than those to rebuild the City of New Orleans, and the surrounding communities of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama.

Not surprisingly, in the days immediately following Katrina's devastation, the Federal government spoke with one voice to support the rebuilding of Gulf Coast communities.

President Bush assured the residents of New Orleans and the outlying parishes, including St. Bernard and Plaquemine parishes, that "people are paying attention to them," and it was the Federal government's duty to "help the good folks of this part of the world to get back on their feet."

A few days later, the President stood in Jackson Square, New Orleans, and made a commitment to rebuild Gulf Coast communities "better and stronger than before the storm."

Recognizing the importance of flood protection of the Gulf Coast communities, the President assured its citizens that the "Corps of Engineers will work at [the side of state and local officials] to make the flood protection system stronger than it has ever been before."

Unfortunately, in the time that has elapsed since the President proclaimed these words from the heart of New Orleans, the administration's commitment to the Gulf Coast communities has wavered, and his pledge to rebuild all of the affected communities "better and stronger than before the storm" has fallen by the wayside—promises that have fallen victim to politics, and a renewed interest in fiscal conservatism.

While the administration may waiver in its commitment to help the families affected by Hurricane Katrina, I support this motion to instruct the conferees to renew Congressional commitment to adequately protect the entire Gulf Coast region.

Mr. Speaker, I find it ironic that this administration, which has gone on the offensive criticizing any individual who would question U.S. policy in Iraq as “cutting and running” would feel comfortable walking away from the plight of its own citizenry in the wake of Hurricane Katrina.

On Monday night, marking the fifth anniversary of the September 11th attacks, President Bush, speaking of Iraq, proclaimed to the American people that “We would not leave until the work is done.” However, it would appear that the message to the residents of in many Gulf coast communities is that the U.S. government will leave before the work has even commenced—and you may be on your own in rebuilding your lives.

That is unconscionable.

Mr. Speaker, one of the lessons learned from experiences of Hurricane Katrina is the importance of well designed, and properly maintained flood control structures in protecting lives and livelihoods in the coastal areas of Louisiana and Mississippi. These structures literally define the areas considered safe for homes and businesses to locate, and without which, communities, such as the City of New Orleans, could not exist.

While Hurricane Katrina did not destroy all of the more than 350 miles of flood control structures protecting southeast Louisiana, it did expose the weaknesses in a system vital to the more than one million residents of the region. Katrina was also a stark reminder of the importance of proper planning, construction, and maintenance of flood protection projects, because these projects literally protect the lives of families living behind these structures.

Mr. Speaker, this motion to instruct the conferees on H.R. 2864, the Water Resources Development Act of 2005, is important for two reasons.

First, it renews the commitment of Congress to provide the maximum level of flood protection for areas impacted by Hurricane Katrina to help its citizens restore their lives and livelihoods. Without adequate flood protection, many citizens of the Gulf Coast simply cannot start the process of trying to rebuild their lives, because, without protection against flood and storm surge, they may be unable to obtain affordable flood insurance, mortgages, or other financial arrangements necessary to begin the process of rebuilding.

This fact is especially true for the residents of St. Bernard Parish, which I inspected on foot this past April, and Lower Plaquemines Parish, Louisiana—the communities that bore the initial force of Hurricane Katrina. In Plaquemines Parish, close to one-half of all residents experienced some flooding or structural damage to their homes, and in St. Bernard Parish and the Lower 9th Ward, this number is close to 100 percent of homes.

It is inconceivable that this administration would walk away from communities that experienced such a traumatic devastation, especially after reassuring citizens that the government would help rebuild their communities “better and stronger than before the storm.” We, in Congress, need to stand with one voice in support of rebuilding all of the communities affected by this storm.

The second reason for supporting this motion is that it draws attention to the fact that hurricanes are more than just high wind events, but also carry the threat of massive storm surges. It is these “walls of water” that caused the greatest extent of the damage from Hurricane Katrina.

Those most affected by the hurricane are well aware of the impact of storm surges, and the headaches that have ensued in the aftermath trying to rebuild these communities. I have heard numerous stories of the difficulty in convincing insurance companies that hurricane damage can take the form both of wind damage and flooding damage. Any Member of Congress that has visited this region has heard that insurance companies are balking at settling claims for water damage, arguing that these damages are not covered by storm policies, because they are not wind damage.

However, a storm surge is the direct result of wind-driven water. As Hurricane Katrina moved into the Gulf of Mexico, it pushed water in front of the storm, and caused the sea to rise by as much as 25 feet in areas of coastal Mississippi. But for the hurricane, there would have been no storm surge.

As we move forward with efforts to protect communities along the Gulf Coast, we must be mindful of the impact both from a hurricane's winds, but also of the impact that such massive storms can cause from wind-driven waters. In authorizing new or restored flood protection projects to protect the communities of the Gulf region, the Corps must ensure that projects are designed and constructed to protect against both the dangers of hurricane force winds, but also the threat of massive storm-driven waters resulting from these storms.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this motion to instruct, and to renew the Congressional commitment to restore the lives and livelihoods of all residents impacted by Hurricane Katrina.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MELANCON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to instruct.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. MELANCON).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MELANCON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Florida.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on this legislation and insert extraneous material thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

As the House author of this legislation, I rise in strong support of Senate bill 2784, the 14th Dalai Lama Congressional Gold Medal Act.

I would like to thank my dear friend and colleague, the ranking member of International Relations Committee, Congressman TOM LANTOS, for his dedicated work on this legislation as the Democratic lead of this House bill. I also would like to commend the Financial Services chairman, MICHAEL OXLEY, and his staff for their great work on this resolution as well as the House leadership and their staff for their assistance in bringing this important legislation to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, as a senior member of the House International Relations Committee and as a member of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus, I have had the opportunity to meet personally with the Dalai Lama on several occasions, most recently in November 2005, when he spoke to Congress on issues relating to democracy, human rights, and Tibet.

Born to a peasant family, His Holiness was recognized at the age of two, in accordance with the tradition of Tibet, as the reincarnation of his predecessor, the 13th Dalai Lama, and thus an incarnation of the Buddha of Compassion.

His enthronement ceremony took place in the capital of Tibet on February 22, 1940, at the tender age of five. A decade later, on November 17, 1950, His Holiness was called upon to assume the position of head of state for the people of Tibet.

His Holiness is the embodiment of serenity and understandings. His inner peace and calm demeanor give us hope that a resolution can be reached on the issue of Tibet. As the 14th Dalai Lama, he is the manifestation of compassion. To look at him is to understand the meaning of Dalai Lama, which is "Oceans of Wisdom."

By awarding the Dalai Lama with the Congressional Gold Medal, we are recognizing his lifelong advocacy on behalf of peace, tolerance, human rights, nonviolence, and religious understanding throughout the world. By definition, a Congressional Gold Medal is the highest expression by Congress of national appreciation for the most heroic, courageous, and outstanding individuals.

Given the overwhelming support of this legislation as evidenced by the bipartisan support of 312 cosponsors in the House companion legislation, I am confident that Members of this Chamber deem that the Dalai Lama is indeed such an individual.

However, we are not the first to recognize the tremendous achievements of this humble man. In 1989, the 14th Dalai Lama received the Nobel Peace Prize for his work bringing democracy and freedom to his people. In the recommendation, the committee members of the Nobel Prize wrote: "The committee wants to emphasize the fact that the Dalai Lama in his struggle for the liberation of Tibet consistently has opposed the use of violence. He has instead advocated peaceful solutions based upon tolerance and mutual respect in order to preserve the historical and cultural heritage of his people."

The 14th Dalai Lama Congressional Gold Medal Act comes at a crucial and hopeful turning point in the ongoing negotiations between the Dalai Lama's representatives and the People's Republic of China.

In a speech delivered following His Holiness' acceptance of the Nobel Peace Prize, he said, "It is my dream that the entire Tibetan plateau should become a free refuge where humanity and nature can live in peace and in harmonious balance. It would be a place," he continues, "where people from all over the world could come to seek the true meaning of peace within themselves, away from the tension and pressures that occur in much of the rest of the world. Tibet could indeed become a creative center for the promotion and development of peace," he concluded.

Join me, I ask my colleagues, in paying homage to this fearless leader who has led the efforts to preserve the rich cultural, spiritual, and linguistic heritage of the people of Tibet while also promoting the safeguarding of other endangered cultures throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in voting "yes" on the 14th Dalai Lama Congressional Gold Medal Act.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important piece of legislation recognizing one of the truly great advocates of human rights in our time, a man who in the face of enormous adversity generated by the People's Republic of China's oppression has really held forth the banner of human rights.

I therefore am delighted to yield as much time as he may consume to our champion of human rights here in the House of Representatives, the ranking member of the Committee on International Relations who has for his entire life been a very vigorous defender of the cause of freedom in a variety of also adverse circumstances, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS).

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of our legislation to award the Congressional Gold Medal to His Holiness the Dalai Lama.

I would first like to express my great appreciation to my dear friend Congressman BARNEY FRANK not only for yielding me some time, but, far more importantly, for being a tireless champion in advancing human rights. Let me also thank the chairman of the Financial Services Committee, my friend, Mr. OXLEY, for expediting consideration of this legislation, as well as my colleague from the International Relations Committee, LEANA ROS-LEHTINEN, and for her leadership on this legislation on behalf of the Tibetan people and all human rights issues.

Mr. Speaker, 19 years ago this month, His Holiness the Dalai Lama at the invitation of my wife, Annette, addressed the Congressional Human Rights Caucus that I cofounded and which I currently chair with our colleague FRANK WOLF. The historic speech His Holiness delivered was his first major policy address outside of India and the first time he had ever appeared before the Congress.

The Dalai Lama unveiled his Five Point Peace Plan for Tibet. We did not know it at the time, but what we heard was to become the foundation for the Dalai Lama's fight on behalf of the people of Tibet.

While we were welcoming His Holiness on Capitol Hill, the State Department and the White House refused to meet with him. The individuals responsible for crafting our foreign policy back then crouched under their desks unwilling to risk the ire of the Chinese Government by meeting with the true leader of the Tibetan people.

Nearly two decades later, His Holiness regularly meets with Presidents and Secretaries of State. During his last visit to Washington, this brave man, small of stature but with an infinite heart, was greeted by dozens of Members of Congress. Tens of thousands of Washington residents packed an auditorium for several nights to hear his words of wisdom.

His Holiness has used his international acclaim to speak out forcefully against the cultural and religious annihilation of the Tibetan people. Rather than resorting to force, the Dalai Lama has actively pursued a negotiated solution to the Tibetan issue with the Chinese Government. In five rounds of discussions, representatives of the Dalai Lama have argued with determination to the Chinese that the Tibetan people must have true religious, cultural, and economic autonomy, and that the current marginalization of the Tibetan people in their own land must end.

Awarding the Congressional Gold Medal to His Holiness the Dalai Lama will send a strong signal of congressional support for a negotiated settlement to the Tibetan issue that preserves Tibetan culture and promotes genuine autonomy for the long-suffering people of Tibet.

Through his words and through his deeds, the Dalai Lama has made an enduring contribution to peace, non-violence, human rights, and religious understanding. With our action here today, Mr. Speaker, His Holiness will join the ranks of Pope John Paul II, Elie Wiesel, Nelson Mandela, and Mother Teresa, all of whom have been awarded the Congressional Gold Medal, a pantheon of peacemakers. I strongly support passage of this legislation.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to another staunch defender of human rights throughout the world, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH), such time as he may consume.

Mr. KUCINICH. I want to thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for his own commitment to human rights and thank Mr. LANTOS for the lifetime of work that characterizes not only himself but Mrs. Lantos as well.

This is an important moment for this Congress because through recognizing the Dalai Lama with the Congressional Gold Medal, we also recognize his lifetime of work which has been about elevating the human spirit. Because in that we transcend the little labels of Democrat and Republican, liberal and conservative, and we come to an understanding of human unity, those principles which unite us all. We learn through celebrating the Dalai Lama's life and his contributions the transformative power of love, the transformative power of compassion.

In his work, he has challenged us to look at those things in our lives which cause anger, to look at those things in our lives which relate to negativity, and to consciously work on those things so that we become more perfect.

Wasn't that really the message of our Founders with respect to the creation of the United States itself, that the work of our government should ever be to form a more perfect Union?

So it is that the spiritual work of the Dalai Lama informs all of us that we can perfect ourselves, that we can practice daily, taking a walk down the path towards a more meaningful life. He teaches us patience. And certainly, in this great body, patience is something that lends us to understanding of each other, to having compassion for each other.

This is an important moment for this Congress, when we understand that the Dalai Lama's teachings involve karma, an understanding of the power and the consequences of every thought, word, and deed, knowing that for every action there might be another action that follows. The symmetry between Buddhism and some of the teachings of Christianity is instructive here. Buddhists talk, and the Dalai Lama talks, about the law of karma. Christianity, we know of teachings that say as you sow, so shall you reap. So much of our lives are penetrated by spiritual dimensions that we often don't pay much attention to. But in moments like this when we celebrate the life and the work of a single person, we come to an understanding of not only his relationship to us and our relationship to him, but of our relationship to each other. And so when we celebrate him, we are celebrating ourselves, too, and our higher potential, not only as public servants but as human beings.

The Dalai Lama speaks about a path to tranquility. Is it possible in a public forum which is centered on such vigorous debate that we can find tranquility? His teachings would say, yes, because tranquility is an inner condition.

So, Mr. Speaker, the honorable ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN, our leader Ms. PELOSI, this is an important moment for this Congress, and I am proud to play a small part in recognizing the great work and person of the Dalai Lama.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. And to close out our side here, and I think the debate, I yield such time as she may consume to a woman who has not only been a leader in human rights but was an early advocate and personal friend of the Dalai Lama.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that a few years ago when he spoke at Brandeis University in the district of my colleague, Mr. MARKEY and I were there to meet him, and he had taken a stand that may have been a little controversial. And the first thing he said to me was, this was years before the gentleman from California had ascended to leadership. He said, "Congressman, please tell NANCY PELOSI not to be angry; I am going to explain this to her." So when the Dalai Lama is concerned about her opinion of him, I think that says a great deal about her own commitment and dedication. And, of course, he did explain; and, no, she was not angry. She respected him then, she respects him now, and I am delighted to yield to her such time as she may consume.

Ms. PELOSI. Well, at the time I think the message that I told myself was, we can't be holier than His Holiness. If it is okay with him, it was okay with me.

I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I thank him for all of his leadership and assistance in bringing this important legislation to the floor. And I also commend Congresswoman ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN for her leadership, not only on bringing the legislation, but her work on this important issue. TOM LANTOS, FRANK WOLF have just been relentless for His Holiness; and in the Senate, Senator DIANNE FEINSTEIN who represents California in the U.S. Senate but is a close personal friend also of His Holiness.

The Congressional Gold Medal is the most distinguished award bestowed by the United States Congress. It is reserved for the most heroic, most courageous, most outstanding individuals who have made lasting contributions to society, individuals such as John Paul II, Mother Teresa, Elie Wiesel, and Nelson Mandela.

Today, by honoring His Holiness the Dalai Lama, we not only honor him, but we add luster to this Congressional Gold Medal. We honor our Nation and the American people by awarding it to His Holiness. I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this legislation.

His Holiness often described himself in the following way: "I am just a simple monk, no more, no less." But he represents much more to people throughout the world.

Tibetan Buddhists believe that the Dalai Lama is the earthly manifestation of the living Buddha. On the world stage, he is seen as the head of state and the spiritual leader of the Tibetan people. For millions, he is seen as a source of spiritual refuge and a connection to inner peace and harmony, that my colleague Mr. KUCINICH was discussing.

His Holiness has traveled the world, building bridges between and among the different faiths. He has used his position to promote wisdom, compassion and nonviolence as a solution, not only in Tibet, but to other world conflicts.

His leadership is not only in the area of faith and harmony among people, but also in protecting the environment. I remember it was a great joy seeing him speak at the Earth Summit in Rio in 1992.

The Dalai Lama has made the human rights situation in Tibet an issue of international concern. Indeed, the situation in Tibet is a challenge to the conscience of the world. Under Chinese occupation, hundreds of thousands of Tibetans have died. Freedom to practice their religion and political expression have been severely curtailed. So powerful is the image of the Dalai Lama that Tibetans are imprisoned for simply owning a picture of him.

As a new Member of Congress in 1987, I was in attendance, at the invitation of my colleague from San Francisco TOM LANTOS, when the Dalai Lama proposed the historic Five-Point Peace Plan toward resolving the future status of Tibet. The Dalai Lama proposed a "Middle Way Approach" that seeks genuine autonomy for Tibetans within the framework of the People's Republic of China. Autonomy, not independence.

In recent years, Tibetan envoys have traveled to China for five rounds of discussions on the status of Tibet. While open dialogue is a first step, it is clear that the Chinese government has been stalling all along.

The Chinese are missing an historic opportunity to negotiate with a partner who has the authority and the legitimacy to implement a comprehensive agreement. The Chinese are missing an opportunity for a solution that would ensure internal stability in Tibet and bolster China's reputation in the world.

The Dalai Lama has asked for international support for his efforts to engage the Chinese government. I am proud to say that the U.S. Congress has been a bedrock of support for the Tibetan cause. By awarding the gold medal to the Dalai Lama, Congress is sending an important signal of support for going further.

This is not the first gift our country has given to His Holiness. Of course, for many years and decades, we have given the gift of respect, of reverence and appreciation for all that His Holiness is and does. But when he was a little boy, the special relationship he had with America was demonstrated when Franklin Roosevelt, as President of the United States, gave His Holiness one of his favorite gifts which was a gold watch which had the phases of the Moon on the watch. It was a wonderful thing, a gift from the President to this little boy who had been named the Dalai Lama.

When His Holiness was driven out of Tibet by the Chinese invasion, it was one of the few things that he carried with him. So he had the gold watch, and now all these many years later, out of respect and reverence for him, he will have the Congressional Gold Medal.

I urge my colleagues to support it and look forward to the day when we can present it to him in the halls of Congress.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I consume just to express to the government of the People's Republic of China, on behalf I think of this entire House, a plea that they understand that their desire to be recognized as a great Nation, their security in this world will be enhanced, not diminished, if they reach out to this great leader who has moved in a direction beyond what some would want him to go to try and reach a compromise involving autonomy for the people of Tibet.

It is simply unbecoming for a Nation with the economic might of China, with the potential military might of China to appear to be frightened of this gentle, loving advocate of human dignity.

So we urge the Chinese Government, the entire House does, to reconsider its unwillingness to meet halfway as the Dalai Lama has agreed to do, and to give him the ability to return to Tibet, to a people that yearns for him, to reconcile with the people of Tibet and with the Dalai Lama, and the Chinese Government will be the beneficiaries, not the victims.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the House is able to pass this bill, unanimously I believe we will be doing it

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge support of S. 2784, the "Fourteenth Dalai Lama Congressional Gold Medal Act," and urge its immediate passage.

This legislation was introduced by the Senator from California, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, and is identical to H.R. 4562, introduced by the gentle lady from Florida, Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. The House version currently has 312 co-sponsors, is compliant with all House and Financial Services Committee rules, and has been scored as budget-neutral by CBO.

Under the legislation, the Speaker and the President Pro Tempore of the Senate are authorized to present, on behalf of Congress, a gold medal to Tenzin Gyatso, the Fourteenth Dalai Lama, or spiritual, cultural and, in effect, governmental leader of Tibet, who has lived in exile from his native country since 1959, when he fled the power of the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Speaker, the Dalai Lama has spent the 47 years of his exile peacefully seeking to establish a form of autonomous self rule for Tibet. In doing so, he has earned the great respect of the world community for the quiet, disciplined and non-violent way he has chosen to lead his struggle—in fact, the respect is so great that in 1989, he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. The Nobel Committee said the award came "for his consistent resistance to the use of violence in his people's struggle to regain their liberty . . . He has instead advocated peaceful solutions based upon tolerance and mutual respect in order to preserve the historical and cultural heritage of his people."

Mr. Speaker, Tibet is a long way from the United States, and a far different land about which most Americans know little. But the Dalai Lama's basic beliefs—peace, human rights, preservation of culture and of the environment, and the promotion of harmony and respect among religions—are so familiar to all of us that we may feel we know this quiet man in some special way, and he us. In fact, at a ceremony in the Capitol Rotunda in 1991, the Dalai Lama said of his childhood view of the United States: "What truly inspired me were your ideas of freedom and democracy. I felt that your principles were identical to my own, the Buddhist belief in fundamental human rights, freedom, equality, tolerance and compassion for all."

Mr. Speaker, the Congressional Gold Medal is the highest civilian honor the Congress can bestow. Previous recipients have included Pope John Paul II, Mother Teresa and Elie Wiesel. His Holiness, the Fourteenth Dalai Lama, stands with them in his beliefs, and in the way his life embodies them. It is appropriate and, perhaps, overdue that we confer upon him this medal, this mark of respect and admiration. I urge immediate passage of this bill.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, with great sadness I must rise to oppose this measure granting a congressional gold medal to the 14th Dalai Lama. While I greatly admire and respect His Holiness the Dalai Lama, and fully recognize his tremendous status both as a Buddhist leader and international advocate for peace, I must object to the manner in which this body chooses to honor him.

I wonder if my colleagues see the irony in honoring a devout Buddhist monk with a material gift of gold. The Buddhist tradition, of course, eschews worldly possessions in favor of purity of thought and action. Buddhism urges its practitioners to alleviate the suffering of others whenever possible. I'm sure His Holiness the Dalai Lama would rather see $30,000 spent to help those less fortunate, rather than for a feel-good congressional gesture.

We cannot forget that Congress has no authority under the Constitution to spend taxpayer money on medals and awards, no matter how richly deserved. And I reiterate my offer of $100 from my own pocket to pay for this medal—if members wish to honor the Dalai Lama, all we need to do is pay for it ourselves. If all 435 of us contribute, the cost will be roughly $70 each. So while a gold medal sounds like a great idea, it becomes a bit strange when we see the actual cost involved.

If Congress truly wishes to honor the Dalai Lama, it could instead start by showing more respect for his views in the areas of foreign policy, war, and terrorism. The bellicosity often demonstrated on the floor of this institution toward entire nations and their people conflicts sharply with the peaceful teachings of the Dalai Lama.

Consider the following words of His Holiness:

"When September 11 happened, the next day I wrote a letter to President Bush as a friend—because I know him personally. I wrote this letter and expressed, besides my condolences and sadness, a countermeasure to this tragedy: a nonviolent response because that would have been more effective. So this is my stance. And then just before the Iraq crisis started, millions of people from countries like Australia and America expressed their opposition to violence. I really admired and appreciated this."

"When the war started, some people immediately asked me if it was justified or not, whether it was right or wrong. In principle, any resort to violence is wrong."

Consider also these thoughts from the Dalai Lama regarding the terrible pointlessness of war:

"We have seen that we cannot solve human problems by fighting. Problems resulting from differences in opinion must be resolved through the gradual process of dialogue. Undoubtedly, wars produce victors and losers; but only temporarily. Victory or defeat resulting from wars cannot be long-lasting. Secondly, our world has become so interdependent that the defeat of one country must impact the rest of the world, or cause all of us to suffer losses either directly or indirectly."

"Today, the world is so small and so interdependent that the concept of war has become anachronistic, an outmoded approach. As a rule, we always talk about reform and changes. Among the old traditions, there are many aspects that are either ill-suited to our present reality or are counterproductive due to their shortsightedness. These, we have consigned to the dustbin of history. War too should be relegated to the dustbin of history."

"Of course, the militaristic tradition may not end easily. But, let us think of this. If there were bloodshed, people in positions of power, or those who are responsible, will find safe places; they will escape the consequent hardship. They will find safety for themselves, one way or the other. But what about the poor people, the defenseless people, the children, the old and infirm. They are the ones who will have to bear the brunt of devastation. When weapons are fired, the result will be death and destruction. Weapons will not discriminate between the innocent and guilty. A missile, once fired, will show no respect to the innocent, poor, defenseless, or those worthy of compassion. Therefore, the real losers will be the poor and defenseless, ones who are completely innocent, and those who lead a hand-to-mouth existence."

Mr. Speaker, in closing let me join my colleagues in stating my tremendous respect for His Holiness the Dalai Lama. While I cannot agree with forcible taxation to pay for gold medals, I certainly hope Congress takes the teaching of His Holiness to heart and begins to rethink our aggressive, interventionist foreign policy.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of S. 2784, which authorizes the awarding of the Congressional Gold Medal to Tenzin Gyatso, the 14th Dalai Lama. The Congressional Gold Medal is the highest expression of national appreciation for exceptional service and for lifetime contributions. The medal has been awarded to individuals from all walks of life. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and Coretta Scott King, Pope John Paul II, the Navajo Code Talkers, Rosa Parks, Frank Sinatra, and Elie Wiesel are among those who have been honored. The Dalai Lama is well qualified to join the list of individuals who have received this most distinguished of honors.

Tenzin Gyatso, the Fourteenth Dalai Lama is recognized in the United States and throughout the world as a leading figure of moral and religious authority. He is the unrivaled spiritual and cultural leader of the Tibetan people, and has used his leadership to promote democracy, freedom, and peace for the Tibetan people through a negotiated settlement of the Tibet issue, based on autonomy within the People's Republic of China.

This Dalai Lama has led the effort to preserve the rich cultural, religious, and linguistic heritage of the Tibetan people and to promote the safeguarding of other endangered cultures throughout the world.

For his efforts on behalf of humanity, this Dalai Lama was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1989. His efforts to promote peace and nonviolence throughout the globe, and to find democratic reconciliation for the Tibetan people through his "Middle Way" approach has won him world-wide acclaim.

This Dalai Lama has significantly advanced the goal of greater understanding, tolerance, harmony, and respect among the different religious faiths of the world through interfaith dialogue and outreach to other religious leaders and, perhaps most important, he has used his moral authority to promote the concept of universal responsibility as a guiding tenet for how human beings should treat one another and the planet we share.

For these reasons, I strongly support S. 2784 and urge my colleagues to join me in voting to award the Congressional Gold Medal to Tenzin Gyatso, the 14th Dalai Lama.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. 2784 to award a congressional gold medal to Tenzin Gyatso, the Fourteenth Dalai Lama, in recognition of his many enduring and outstanding contributions to peace, non-violence, human rights, and religious understanding.

I am honored to support the Dalai Lama to receive the Congressional Gold Medal. He has dedicated himself to the Tibetan people and the pursuit of freedom. He is the head of state and spiritual leader of the Tibetan people—the epitome of strength and courage, revered around the world for his commitment to the cause of human rights and religious freedom—a man who wants only to be able to return to his country in peace and to lead his people in the practice of their religion. He had led the effort to preserve the rich cultural heritage of the Tibetan people.

I traveled to Tibet in 1997 and saw with my own eyes the suffering the Tibetan people endure. I visited monasteries and talked with many people. Several monks spoke to me in secret and shared with me the horrors taking place in Tibet. I heard stories of monks and nuns who were dragged away to prison and tortured.

These monks and nuns are not alone. Religious persecution is spread across China. Catholic bishops are in prisons and labor camps. Protestant House Church leaders are routinely harassed and detained. Large numbers of Muslims in China are in prison because of their faith. Young Muslim Uighur boys and girls are not even allowed to enter a mosque until they are 18-years-old.

I have been standing on the floor of this House talking about human rights in China and the Dalai Lama for two decades. The world is now looking for resolutions to the human rights problems in China and Tibet. There has been a dialogue taking place between the Dalai Lama's envoys and the Chinese, and that is good. But we now need to see some concrete results from these talks. The Tibetan people deserve to live in peace.

I am proud to support the Dalai Lama for the Congressional Gold Medal. He has kept the cause of human rights alive in Tibet and in other places around the globe. He is a true hero to me and many others throughout the world.

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, I fully support this legislation to bestow the Congressional Gold Medal upon Tenzin Gyatso, the 14th Dalai Lama. His Holiness is a spiritual beacon for thousands, and he has traveled the world to develop common ground among different faiths. He stands for and embodies peace and harmony.

I also honor the Dalai Lama for his continuing work to expand freedoms for the Tibetan people. Under Chinese rule, the human rights situation in Tibet is reprehensible—religious and political freedoms are severely curtailed and thousands of Tibetans have died. Practicing compassion and non-violence, the Dalai Lama has met with world leaders and has attempted to engage the Chinese government to reach a solution that will give freedom to his people. Regrettably, the Chinese government has been stubborn in its resistance, but I hope they will soon have a change of mind and heart about the situation in Tibet.

As a spiritual force and as a head of state, the Dalai Lama shows us all the meaning of peace and compassion. He deserves this honor, and I thank the leadership for bringing the bill before us.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of our time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN) that the House suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill, S. 2784.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SIMMONS) and the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BUTTERFIELD) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the resolution under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I am honored to rise in support of H. Con. Res. 444, recognizing the difficult, demanding and essential work of the Defense/POW Missing Personnel Office, or DPMO, and all the others devoted to bringing home fallen U.S. servicemembers. DPMO makes sure that none of our men and women in uniform are forgotten or left behind on the field of battle.

This Friday, we will observe National POW/MIA Recognition Day, and I am pleased that passage of this resolution will send a message of sincere thanks to all who remain dedicated, vigilant and loyal to unaccounted for Americans.

Although he cannot be here with us tonight, I would like to recognize my colleague and fellow Vietnam veteran Congressman LANE EVANS, who was a cosponsor of this resolution and a fellow member of the House Armed Services Committee. My good friend from Illinois also shares with me co-chair responsibilities on the United States-Vietnam Congressional Caucus which we established several years ago. Congressman EVANS is retiring at the end of this Congress, and I thank him for his friendship and for his service. He is a former marine, and he has been a great friend to members of all the branches of service. I say to him tonight, LANE, Semper Fi.

This resolution tonight is especially meaningful to Connecticut's Second District. In June 1972, CPT Arnold Holm of Waterford, Connecticut, was shot down over the central highlands of Vietnam. Captain Holm and the two members of his flight crew, PFC Wayne Bibbs and SP4 Robin Yeakley, were officially listed as missing in action.

Numerous searches for the crash site of their helicopter were unsuccessful, but the dedicated individuals of the DPMO did not give up. Just a few weeks ago, nearly 35 years after the helicopter was shot down, the field team in Vietnam appears to have located Captain Holm's crash site. I cannot tell you what this means to his wife Margarete Holm and to the family. It brings a sense of closure that is indescribable to anyone who has not experienced the profound emotions of personal loss that goes with having a family member as missing in action.

This resolution gives thanks to all of those who have worked to bring home America's POWs and MIAs. It reaffirms our commitment to our fellow Americans who have earned the right to be called heroes.

Americans are unique in this regard because we never leave our own behind. It is part of our national character that we do not write off those lost in defense of our Nation, no matter where they are, no matter how long they have been lost.

The U.S. Army Central Identification Laboratory located in Hawaii has an important mission. Their task is to search for, recover and identify the remains of servicemembers, certain civilian personnel and allied personnel unaccounted for from World War II, the Korean War, Vietnam War and all other conflicts. DPMO has brought home and identified hundreds of previously unaccounted for servicemembers, which is a costly and dangerous assignment. Americans, Vietnamese and others have lost their lives in search of their lost brothers, but we continue to support their mission because their work is a critical element of who we are.

DPMO's mission is critical to the military families who live with ambiguity and await closure. By continuing the search, we honor their service and their sacrifice.

I have already shared the story of Captain Holm. I have another. Robert Dumas lives in Canterbury, Connecticut. For more than 50 years, he has been searching for his brother Roger, who was a POW in Korea. He has been to Washington, D.C., more than 100 times and has met with Members of Congress and anyone else who might be able to help him uncover the fate of his brother. Bob Dumas promised his mother on her deathbed that he would never abandon the effort to find his brother, and he has kept his word. That is what this resolution is all about, keeping our word to those who have served and to their families.

Men like Roger Dumas, Arnie Holm and millions of others throughout our Nation's history have put their lives on the line for us. Some of them never returned and the fate of the others remains uncertain, but we owe it to them and to their families to try to bring them home.

The governments of Vietnam and Laos and Cambodia and other Nations throughout Southeast Asia also deserve our thanks. They have been instrumental in the search for missing U.S. servicemembers. In many cases, Vietnamese soldiers and officials have risked and lost their lives in the pursuit of American POWs and MIA remains.

When I put my dog tags on over 40 years ago, I noticed that they did not give any indication of my political affiliation, and when you visit the graves of our heroes at nearby Arlington Cemetery you will notice the same thing. None of the markers identify the soldiers' political affiliations. We do not wear the uniform of our country as members of a political party but as Americans. We do not continue to search for our missing servicemen and women as members of a political party but as Americans.

We will continue to support the efforts of the DPMO all around the world because these efforts are important. We will never give up the work, the hope or the commitment, and I ask all of my colleagues to join in support of this important resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BUTTERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in support of H. Con. Res. 444 and thank my friend Mr. SIMMONS from Connecticut for bringing this resolution forward this evening.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution is an expression of appreciation of the Congress and the Nation to the personnel of the Department of Defense organizations and military departments who are engaged in the mission to achieve the fullest possible accounting for all unaccounted servicemembers in past and current conflicts.

It also recognizes the POW/MIA families and the veterans for their support and foreign Nations that have assisted in these endeavors, and so I am pleased to join my friend from Connecticut in support of this measure, and I thank him for bringing it forward.

Mr. Speaker, on the third Friday of each September our Nation pays tribute to our prisoners of war and those still missing in action during National POW/MIA Recognition Day. On September 15, we will honor America's POWs and all those who have worked and continue the effort to leave no servicemember behind.

There are thousands of people that support these efforts, from teams on the ground who conduct investigations, analysis and recovery, to those within the Department of Defense Mission Personnel Office, who are responsible for developing the policies and the controls and oversight. Each and every day these dedicated individuals are working to bring home our missing sons and daughters who have served their Nation in uniform.

The joint POW/MIA Accounting Command in Hawaii oversees these missions. The Central Identification Laboratory is the largest forensic anthropology laboratory in the world. The Armed Forces DNA Identification Laboratory in Maryland is one of the leading laboratories in the world that handles degraded skeletal remains to determine DNA results, and the Air Force Life Sciences Equipment Laboratory in Texas is home to the most comprehensive technical library and collection of life sciences equipment used by the Armed Forces.

But all of our efforts would be for naught, Mr. Speaker, if we did not have the support and cooperation of other nations, such as the Laos People's Democratic Republic, the Socialist Republic of Vietnam, and the Kingdom of Cambodia, in helping us achieve the fullest possible accounting of all Americans who remain unaccounted from past and current conflicts.

However, even with the state-of-the-art laboratories and highly trained personnel and the support of foreign nations, we could not be successful as we have been without the support of the families. Yes, the families and the loved ones of those missing in action and those who were captured and returned home. The support of these families and that of our POWs has been immeasurable. We would not be here today in support of National POW/MIA Recognition Day without their encouragement and without their advocacy.

On Friday, National POW/MIA Recognition Day will be one of the six days specified by law that the National League of Families POW/MIA flag is required to be flown over certain Federal buildings, over certain national cemeteries, military installations, and post offices. The flag will fly as a reminder for all Americans to remember those who remain missing in action and those who were captured and have returned home.

And so, Mr. Speaker, let us also take this special moment to recognize those of the current conflict, the current conflict who remain missing: SGT Keith "Matt" Maupin, United States Army Reserves, and MAJ Jill Metzger, United States Air Force. Our thoughts and our prayers are with them and with their families and the families of those whose loved ones remain missing from previous conflicts.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to close by thanking my colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina, who serves with great distinction on the House Armed Services Committee, serves our country in a bipartisan fashion, for his contribution and his cooperation on this resolution here tonight.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, on June 29, 2006, my colleague, Mr. SIMMONS, and I introduced H. Con. Res. 444, extending the thanks of Congress and the Nation to the Defense POW/Missing Personnel Office, the Joint POW/MIA Accounting Command of the Department of Defense, the Armed Forces DNA Identification Laboratory, the Air Force Life Sciences Equipment Laboratory, and the military departments and to the Socialist Republic of Vietnam for their efforts to achieve the fullest possible accounting of all Americans unaccounted for as a result of the Nation's previous wars and conflicts. I am honored to stand before you today in support of this resolution.

On Friday we will celebrate National POW/MIA Recognition Day. As a Vietnam-era veteran I am deeply touched by the opportunity to discuss this resolution on the floor so close to this important day of recognition. It is difficult for me to understand that over 30 years after the end of hostilities in Vietnam, 1,802 Americans are still unaccounted for in Southeast Asia. It is only through the hard work and cooperation of the people, officials and governments of Vietnam and the United States that the remains of 604 Americans have been identified and returned to the United States. They are the heroes who are helping to bring closure and peace to so many American families.

I urge all my colleagues to vote in support of this long overdue recognition and send a heartfelt message to all the individuals involved in the identification and recovery efforts that a thankful Nation values and appreciates the work they do.

Mr. BUTTERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to learn of the recovery of one of our Nation's fighting women who had been missing in Kyrgyzstan for more than 3 days. After being kidnapped, Maj. Metzger spent 80 hours in captivity before escaping her abductors. Her resilience is remarkable and her resolve serves as another example of the superior character of the men and women of our Air Force and our other Armed Services.

I am most pleased to hear of her safe return. I wish the very best for the Metzger family, and continue to pray for the safe return of Sergeant Keith "Matt" Maupin, United States Army Reserves, who has been missing since April of 2004.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BUTTERFIELD. Likewise, Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SIMMONS) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 444, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The title of the concurrent resolution was amended so as to read: "Concurrent resolution extending the appreciation of Congress and the Nation to the Department of Defense organizations, military departments, and personnel engaged in the mission to achieve the fullest possible accounting for all Americans unaccounted for as a result of the Nation's wars, to the POW/MIA families and veterans who support the mission, and to foreign nations that assist in the mission."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 4, 2005, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each

NARCOTICS PROBLEM IN AFGHANISTAN

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to claim Mr. POE's time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

IN MEMORY OF TOM JEHL

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, my subject for tonight is on Afghanistan and the narcotics problem, but before I address that, I would like to insert into the RECORD an excellent newspaper article about Tom Jehl, who died Tuesday in Fort Wayne.

He had this tremendous love for the University of St. Francis and Fort Wayne football team, and that love and this story is about how it kept him alive in the drive for the national championship, and how this year it is the inspiration for that team.

This is in NAIA, not Notre Dame's division. They will be the national champ in that division, but the University of St. Francis has been in the championship for the last few years, and Tom Jehl was their biggest cheerleader, and he is going to be sorely missed in Fort Wayne, and I hope it inspires the team, the Cougars, to go all the way this year.

[From the Fort Wayne News—Sentinel, Sept. 13, 2006]

In January 2005, Fort Wayne businessman and Lifetime Sports Academy co-founder Tom Jehl was diagnosed with aggressive strains of carcinoma and sarcoma cancers. A few weeks later, doctors at the Mayo Clinic told Jehl he had six months to live.

Jehl died Tuesday at age 76. This story is how he turned that prediction into 21 months with the help of some young friends.

When Jehl was informed of his diagnosis, one of the first people he called was University of Saint Francis Football coach Kevin Donley. The pair had met eight years earlier while waiting to participate in an hour-long radio sports show.

"I didn't know anything about Lifetime Sports Academy and Tom Jehl," Donley said, "and he didn't know anything about me and thought I was a fool to start a football team at Saint Francis. I thought, 'This guy's getting a half-hour of my deal,' and he's thinking, 'I'm getting a half-hour of his deal and they'll never play a game.'"

Almost, but not quite.

"I was trying not to listen to him," Jehl said a few weeks ago, laughing. "Out of the corner of my ear I hear him say 'We intend to win a national championship,' and I was like, Oh, brother, are we bringing a caseload to Fort Wayne! And he's on before me?"

A former Central Catholic quarterback, class of 1948, Jehl's first love was football. He played his college ball at Loras College in Dubuque, Iowa, before joining the Air Force, and it had always been his dream that Fort Wayne high school players would have a closer option. A few weeks after their meeting, Jehl walked into Donley's office and asked how he could help.

Over the next few years, Jehl helped the school name the football stadium after Bishop John M. D'Arcy and then was the major contributor to get artificial turf for the stadium.

"I don't think we'd be where we are with our football program without him," Donley said. "He's been such a mentor to me and a friend to me and has helped me in this community to know what the heck to do. He turned out to be one of the best friends I have in life."

In April 2005, Donley and Saint Francis President Sister M. Elise Kriss asked Jehl to attend a healing prayer Mass at Trinity Hall. When Jehl and his wife, Marg, arrived early, Kriss said Donley wanted them to stop by a spring football practice.

As Jehl approached the field, Donley dismissed the players. The Jehls and Kriss walked to the front of the building where the team was waiting, pointing up to "Tom Jehl Football Complex" posted on the side of the building.

"I had no clue," Jehl said. "I never heard a cheer so loud in all my life. Then I thought, 'What the heck am I going to say?'"

Afterward Donley made a few remarks, talking about how the players had been praying for Jehl every day and were dedicating the season to him.

Jehl remembered making a few comments, mostly saying the right things, including telling the players maybe he could make it to the first game in September.

"Mr. Jehl, the final game is Dec. 15, and you aren't getting off the hook until then," linebacker Brian Kurtz said. "You're going to be around here until Dec. 15, and we're going to win it all for you."

The players presented Jehl with a silver ring from their runner-up finish in 2004 and told him the goal was to get him a gold one the next season. Jehl said he'd try. After all, the Cougars had lost the title in the final seconds and would be favored to return to the championship game.

"I kind of got revved up a little bit, and I had been pretty negative about the whole future of my health," Jehl said. "I wasn't doing myself any good walking around and talking about my time period and such. About a week after the Mass, I began to change completely. I figured they went to all that trouble, so who was I to walk around with such a negative attitude?"

The doctors' prognosis never wavered, but Jehl kept fighting with natural herbs, prayers and encouragement.

Inhaling energy from the children at Lifetime Sports Academy, he made it through the summer as the Cougars prepared for another title try. With Jehl watching every game from the sidelines, the Cougars kept rolling.

"It was like living in one of the most unbelievable stories of all time, and I felt it all the way," Jehl said. "They knew I was there, and I knew they were there. They put their heart into it, and many said they'd be praying for me every day."

The Cougars again reached the national title game. Jehl flew to the game with friends and gave a pre-game prayer, saying "Let's finish the job," at the end.

This time the score wasn't so close. Carroll College won 27-10.

After the game, Jehl didn't say anything to the players, just climbed on the plane for the ride home. He knew there was nothing he could say.

"The other team was more ready for us," he said. "It was a good fight, and a couple of plays turned things around. They came that close. I think that if they had won that game, I'd have been cured right there."

But the cancer was spreading, and Jehl spent more time than ever this summer at Lifetime Sports Academy, talking with coaches and enjoying the kids.

Though he was unable to go to the Cougars' season-opening game in Iowa last Saturday, he attended the Saint Francis pre-season scrimmage two weeks ago, 15 months past his original diagnosis.

NARCOTICS PROBLEM IN AFGHANISTAN

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the temptation in Afghanistan right now is to say, I told you so. I have been trying not to jump up and down and say, I told you so, but I can't resist doing it at least once: I told you so.

In the narcotics committee, we have been raising for years, since we went into Afghanistan, that the heroin problem was going to lead to a rerise of the Taliban. It was inevitable. Now, there are broad strategies in Afghanistan that are very complex. Afghanistan has never really been governed as a nation. It has always been much more tribal even than what now people are becoming familiar with between the Kurds the Shia and the Sunni in Iraq.

And for those who say in Iraq we should have allowed the Baath into the government, we should have let more territorial control, well, we did that in Afghanistan. So we tried both ways. In Afghanistan, President Karzai, a good man, a dedicated man who has understood the battle, has tried to work with the tribal leaders in the region. But in those regions, in the absence of a workable economy at this point, they went from a somewhat large narcotics country to the dominant heroin country in the world.

Let me give you some idea of that scale. Under the Taliban, they had produced, let's take this on an equivalency because I can't remember the numbers off the top of my head, but let's say 20 million hectare, or 100,000 hectares and 20 million tons of whatever the quantity of heroin is. A number of 20. Then they went down to zero. When the government changed in Afghanistan, initially there wasn't a growth in heroin, but it went up by a factor of three times. Then it went up again by a factor of four times what it was under the Taliban, an equivalent of 60, then an equivalent of 80 if you use a 20 base number.

Now, supposedly, this was getting stabilized. But again this year, the UNDCP, the narcotics office of the Department of the U.N., is saying that it rose 59 percent again. Now, 59 percent is an extraordinary number, but over a base that is four times the previous world record and now it is up 59 percent again, what you see is that what used to be the grain and bread basket of the world, down around Kandahar and the Helmand Province, is now heroin as far as the eye can see.

Afghanistan has not always been the heroin center of the world. They have always had some heroin, but they had it up and down over the years. Since we have moved in there, because the Department of Defense, and particularly the British, who had charge of this, have neglected to do the spray operations, have neglected to go after this, they now have a problem that is nearly insurmountable, and now it has spread to the Taliban.

Congressman HOEKSTRA as well as Congressman SHADEGG and Congressman RUPPERSBERGER and I were what may be the only delegation that will ever get into Helmand. With the battle between the State Department and the Defense Department, finally the State Department did let us get on the ground. We got down to Helmand. I have been to Colombia 12 times. I have been in Afghanistan before. But when we got down in the Kandahar-Helmand region, we got up in a Black Hawk and went for 45 minutes, and as far as the eye could see there was heroin, with poppies coming out.

And when you see the immensity of the heroin problem, that is going to move in to all the nations around it, spread from Afghanistan into the other stans, Uzbekistan and Kazihkstan, and move on into Turkey and into Europe. It is going to corrupt. It is not like Colombia, where you had the Medellin cartel and the Cali cartel. Here you don't have that same type of one dominant country moving through. The Afghans don't manage the heroin all the way through. It is going to corrupt the entire eastern side of Europe and move into Asia.

On top of that, it is corrupting the government inside. And every time I have gone to Afghanistan, I have asked the same question. They say, well, these guys have really sophisticated weapons. They are getting IEDs similar to what we see in Iraq. They are getting new rocket launchers that can take our airplanes out. What do you think they are buying them with? Do you think they are making Dell Computers in Afghanistan? Do you think they are making plastic parts for the auto industry in Afghanistan? No, they are buying them with heroin.

And we have been asleep. The British have been asleep, NATO's been asleep, and the U.N.'s been asleep while the heroin is on the ground growing in massive quantities and now funding the killing of troops from my district. Men and women from my district are being shot at with heroin money because of the addiction around the world and because our governments wouldn't act.

Now, there are some things we can do. First off, we need the Department of Defense and our Federal agencies, and particularly the British, who are extremely frustrating in this process, and the NATO people that are taking over to start to recognize that narcotics is the core funding of terrorism in Afghanistan. They have no other income.

Secondly, we need back the Schumer amendment in the DOD appropriations bill that put $700 million towards the drug problem in Afghanistan. And I am not always a big ally of Senator SCHUMER, but we need to back his amendment here. He is right. We need a unified campaign like in Colombia, where drugs and terror are treated the same way.

This is an inseparable problem, and we better get it now or we will never get Afghanistan back

THE PROBLEM

Counter-narcotics efforts in Afghanistan are failing. A recent report by the United Nations

Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) indicated that opium cultivation rose 59% in the past year. . . . from 104,000 to 165,000 hectares.

Afghanistan is producing 92% of the world's opiates including heroin and this total actually exceeds global consumption by an astounding 30%.

The problem is particularly acute in the southern provinces and most notably in Helmand. If one considered Helmand an independent nation, it would be the world's second largest opium producer following the rest of Afghanistan.

Afghanistan's central government has been unable to exert enough influence to stem the rising opium tide and this has fueled rampant corruption at the provincial level.

WHY IT'S IMPORTANT

This rise in opium production coincides with a resurgence of Taliban inspired violence especially prevalent in Afghanistan's southern provinces. The drug profits, totaling at least a third of Afghanistan's GDP, are fueling a deadly insurgency that has reached unprecedented levels since we toppled the Taliban regime in 2001. American and allied soldiers are fighting and dying every day because of this illicit relationship.

In a larger sense, the Taliban's resurrection is threatening Afghanistan's emerging democracy and restricting the growth of legitimate trade and commerce. It's no coincidence that the largest increases in opium production occurred in the areas where the central government is weak and the Taliban is strong.

At the provincial level, there is widespread corruption between government officials, narco-traffickers, tribal leaders and Taliban insurgents. The Taliban is encouraging farmers to grow poppy while providing protection for narcotics shipments through Afghanistan. This symbiotic relationship is destroying the fabric of Afghan democracy and threatening to reverse all of the nation's progress since 2001.

Afghanistan's drug based economy is destabilizing the entire region and providing the financial means for a return of radical Islamic fundamentalism to this fledgling democracy.

THE WAY FORWARD

The Department of Defense (DOD) and other federal agencies need to accept that narcotics smuggling in Afghanistan is fueling the Taliban-led insurgency. Defeating the Taliban is impossible without simultaneously addressing the drug problem so the DOD must play a greater role in non-eradication efforts.

On September 7th, the Schumer amendment was inserted into the DOD appropriations bill for $700 million towards the drug problem in Afghanistan. At conference, I recommend mandating this funding to jump-start a new, counter-narcotics policy in Afghanistan.

Since narcotics and terrorist operatives function in a mutually beneficial and symbiotic fashion, our national policy must shift toward a "Unified Campaign" against drugs and terror similar to the initiative in Colombia which has yielded significant results. Our national policy should not focus solely on eradication. Instead, the DOD must be mandated to support other federal/international agencies in pursuit of narcotics traffickers as well as terrorist organizations. More specifically:

Purchase or lease adequate DEA helicopter lift and support gun ships to support enforcement actions against drug kingpins (also known as High Valued Targets or HVTs) or heroin labs.

Utilize the State Department's ten Huey II helicopters, currently being used for eradication, to support DEA law enforcement operations.

Purchase an adequate number of counter-narcotic canines to support all drug enforcement operations including airport security/cargo inspection and road check-points.

Provide $18.5 million for the DEA to create human-intelligence networks.

The successful counter-narcotics lessons from Colombia are also clear. Upon the U.S. Congress' request, the Colombian National Police visited Afghanistan in July 2006 and made several recommendations to curb the narcotics problem. The Colombian police are experts at dealing with the terrorism and drug nexus so we should give great weight to their recommendations. They encouraged the Afghan police to develop their investigative and intelligence collection techniques to exploit human informants in order to take-down drug kingpins as well as to trace and eliminate the trafficking networks. In addition, the Afghan police needs to learn how to develop legal cases in order prosecute major drug kingpins.

A key mechanism of the DOD's efforts is the use of the Central Transfer Account (CTA). This account was developed to preserve the integrity of the Department's counter-narcotics efforts and should remain firewalled from other uses. A recent reorganization proposal within DOD to expand the Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense (DASD) for Counter-Narcotics responsibilities to also include counter-proliferation and other unspecified "global threats", derails the singular focus of the CTA. If the CTA's resources are combined with other responsibilities, such as the Nunn-Lugar program which focuses on dismantling Soviet-era nuclear warheads, the DOD's counter-narcotics mission would be seriously distracted if not compromised. Counter-proliferation and counter-narcotics are distinct activities and the DOD should not combine both functions under one office.

Finally, provincial corruption is the lubrication which keeps the narcotics engine running in Afghanistan. The potential profits from narcotics trafficking are a compelling temptation to many officials in this poverty stricken nation. Unless the Afghanistan government, with the support of the international community, can root out corruption at all levels and successfully prosecute those who violate their own laws, we'll struggle to gain any ground.

CONCLUSION

Narcotics smuggling is feeding the terrorist insurgency in Afghanistan. The two activities are inextricably linked and must be combated in a unified fashion.

We must succeed in Afghanistan. The maintenance of a stable and democratic Afghanistan is pivotal for regional and global security.

TRIBUTE TO FRANK WALKER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the House Resources Subcommittee of National Parks, I have had the privilege to visit many of our Nation's National Parks. From my own personal experiences, I have come to love the beauty of these parks and am grateful for the recreational opportunities they have to offer. Over 100 years ago, our predecessors displayed historic vision and took a bold step forward in a quest for protecting our Nation's natural wonders.

On March 1, 1872, Congress established the Yellowstone National Park, our Nation's first and still one of our most beautiful and pristine national parks. President Theodore Roosevelt strengthened our Nation's conservation system through the Antiquities Act of 1906, creating 18 national monuments by the end of his presidency, including the beautiful cliffs of Mesa Verde National Park in southwestern Colorado, Arizona's Petrified Forest, and our own natural wonder, the Grand Canyon. These monuments laid the groundwork for our current park system, a vision completed in 1916 as President Woodrow Wilson established the National Park Service.

There are thousands of individuals in the National Park Service as well as volunteers like Friends of our Parks, who dedicate their talent and lives to our National Parks. Without all of their hard work and dedication, our National Parks could not retain their immaculate beauty, nor could they continue to provide critical habitat for our nation's world-renowned wildlife. It is because of the work of these individuals that I, as well as my children and my grandchildren, will be able to enjoy the Park System. Today, there are 390 National Parks throughout America, with at least one in nearly every state and U.S. territory. These parks attract over 280 million visitors every year, for their beauty and their recreational opportunities. These figures far exceed any expectations that Presidents Roosevelt and Wilson may have had. Our National Park System is truly a triumph of American vision and commitment to responsible stewardship of our unparalleled natural heritage.

I rise today to not only emphasize the importance of our National Parks, but also to honor those who work to protect these invaluable resources. I would like to especially commend Frank Walker, who I recently met while on my family vacation to Yellowstone National Park in early August. Frank has dedicated over 39 years of his life to protecting our Nation's historical National Parks.

An avid outdoorsman and wildlife lover, Frank studied biology at the New Mexico State University. He then embarked on his career and years of service as a seasonal ranger at Yellowstone National Park in 1967, and he received his first permanent position in 1970, serving as a park technician at the White Sands National Monument in New Mexico. His success and dedication continually earned him challenging and rewarding positions all over the country. Frank has worked at the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial in Missouri, the Gulf Islands National Seashore in Mississippi, the Fort Clatsop National Memorial in Oregon, the Nez Perce National Historical Park in Idaho, and the Saguaro National Park in Arizona. After working for over two decades outside the prestigious Yellowstone National Park, Frank returned to Yellowstone in June 2001 as the Acting Superintendent, and he was promoted to his current position of Deputy Superintendent in February of 2002.

Frank has rightfully received numerous awards for his hard work and dedication to protecting our Nation's resources. These awards include the Interior Meritorious Service Award, the General Council Award from the Nez Perce Tribe, the Vail Partnership Award, the Western Region-Superintendent's Award for Cultural Resources Stewardship, and in 1985 the Southwest Region's Freeman Tilden Award.

Just as these awards have done, I want to honor Frank here today. I wish to congratulate him on his retirement and thank him for his life's dedication to our Nation's parks. It is because of his work, and the work of his colleagues, that America's resources will be enjoyed by future generations. I wish Frank and his wife, Judy, his two sons, Mark and Phillip, and his daughter, Kathy, all the luck and well-being in the future, and it is my hope that his work will inspire others to continue to protect our National Parks and other natural resources.

9/11 TRAGEDIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 4, 2005, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, we have seen these past few days events to remember the tragic incidents of September 11. And, frankly, when we were reliving that tragic day, among the many things that crossed my mind was the realization that thousands of Americans died. Thousands of Americans died in their place of work for the simple sin, their only crime being that they were free people who live in a free country. They were people who love freedom, and their only crime was that that morning, like every other morning, they went to work so that they could help their family, they could feed their children, they could pay their bills, and they could continue to live and prosper in freedom.

Mr. Speaker, 9/11 was not the only attack against America. It was the largest attack, the terrorists' most successful attack against America, but by no means was it the only attack or the first attack against America.

The problem, Mr. Speaker, however, was that America did not realize until that horrendous wake-up call of 9/11 that there were a number of radicals around this world who had already for a generation declared war. They had declared war against the United States and our allies for the simple reason that we live in freedom, that we cherish freedom, that women can work and live in freedom and have equal rights to men. For those reasons, there is a group of people who declared war against the United States. Not only did they declare it verbally, as they did, but they did so in actions. And again, we just didn't wake up to that realization.

When President Jimmy Carter withdrew the United States' support from the Shah of Iran, in essence facilitating and allowing the Ayatollah Khomeini to take power in Iran, he didn't realize the type of enemy we were dealing with.

More recently, in February of 1993 when the first bombing of the World Trade Center took place killing six people, the United States didn't realize who the enemy was, and we didn't fight back. But the killers persisted in trying to kill Americans.

In October of 1993, in Somalia 18 valuable, decent brave American soldiers were killed. Osama bin Laden later personally claimed credit for organizing the Somalia fighters. We didn't fight. On the contrary, we withdrew immediately from Somalia. I will quote what bin Laden said about our withdrawal. He said, "America exited, dragging its tail in failure, defeat and ruin. Caring for nothing, America left faster than anyone expected." Again, we didn't fight.

In June 1996, a truck bombing in the Khobar Towers barracks in Saudi Arabia, killing 19 Americans and we did nothing. We did not fight back. But the killers were not content. They kept trying to kill Americans.

And then in August 1998, the bombing of the U.S. embassies in Tanzania and Kenya where 224 people were killed, including many Americans, we didn't fight back. We did nothing.

In December 1999, the plot to bomb the Millennium celebrations in Seattle that was foiled when custom agents arrested an Algerian person smuggling explosives into the United States. The killers continued to persist, and we were not fighting back.

And then of course the tragic bombing of the USS Cole in the port of Yemen where U.S. 17 sailors were killed, and we did not fight back. But the killers were not satisfied and they continued to persist.

And then of course we got the big wake-up call, September 11, 2001, the destruction of the World Trade Center, the attack on the Pentagon where a total of 2,992 Americans were murdered on that horrendous day. Finally, America woke up to the realization that there had been a war declared on our country and our way of life and it was time that we fought back, that we started bringing justice to those terrorists wherever they may be so we would not have to fight them here on our streets, so we would not have to deal with another September 11 or another World Trade Center explosion like the first time or another attempt on the celebrations like those in Seattle.

America started fighting back finally because we found out that these killers are not going to stop if we don't fight because that is what we always did. We didn't fight back. In many cases we withdrew. Did that appease them? No. It emboldened them, like bin Laden said.

After that then, after September 11, this President and this Congress decided to fight back and decided to remove the Taliban from power. Our brave men and women in uniform have done an incredible job under the most difficult circumstances and removed the Taliban and that which was a state sponsor of terrorism is no longer a state sponsor of terrorism, and there is a struggling democracy that is gaining ground and taking root in that land where al Qaeda used that land to plan the horrible events of 9/11.

Also on a bipartisan vote of this House and the Senate there was a vote to basically remove a state sponsor of terrorism and a threat that was Saddam Hussein. Let me read a quote from December 16, 1998 about why Saddam Hussein was dangerous and what the bipartisan attitude here in Congress was. "The hard fact is that as long as Saddam remains in power he threatens the well-being of his people, the peace of his region, and the security of the world. The best way to end that threat once and for all is with a new Iraqi government, a government ready to live in peace with its neighbors, a government that respects the rights of its people."

That was not President Bush that I quoted, that was President Bill Clinton that I quoted when he mentioned the only way was to remove Saddam Hussein.

Let me read another quote on how Congress and the country was united against international terrorism. "Saddam Hussein in effect has thumbed his nose at the world community, and I think the President is approaching this in the right fashion." That is Senator REID, the now-minority leader in the Senate.

Let me give another quote about how the country felt in a bipartisan, unified, united front against international terrorism and against that state sponsor of terrorism that was Saddam Hussein. "I can support the President. I can support an action against Saddam Hussein because I think it is in the long-term interest of our national security." That is a quote from NBC Meet the Press, Senator HILLARY CLINTON. There was bipartisan support because there was a realization that Saddam Hussein was so dangerous.

One last quote, Mr. Speaker. This is I think a very powerful quote. "It would be unrealistic, if not downright foolish, to believe we can claim victory on the war on terrorism and a more secure world if Saddam Hussein is still in power 5 years from now." That sounds like I plagiarized President Bush; but no, that was by Senator JOE BIDEN in February of 2002.

Again, as Senator JOE BIDEN said, and I think it is worthwhile reading that quote again. He mentions that we cannot claim victory, in his words, he says, "the war on terrorism and a more secure world if Saddam Hussein is still in power." JOE BIDEN understood that Saddam Hussein, a state sponsor of terrorism, the leader of that terrorism, had to go for our national security and for the fight, as he said, against international terrorism.

It saddens me to see now how the very same people who I just read their quotes who were so united, who so supported this country's efforts in the fight against terrorism, including in the fight against Saddam Hussein, recognizing that he was a major state sponsor of terrorism, where Senator BIDEN says we cannot win or claim victory. And I will quote him again. "It is unrealistic, if not downright foolish, to believe that we can claim victory on the war on terrorism and a more secure world if Saddam Hussein is still in power."

Yes, that was the consensus. So what happened? I keep hearing now the country is divided. But the President has not changed his tune. The President agrees with what these fine Members of Congress from the other party said and believed and were sure of because they were right then. The United States is the source of good for the entire world. For all of the oppressed people, we are the source of good and the source of light, the beacon of light for the entire world.

When you had a regime like the Taliban or a regime like Saddam Hussein, it was a threat to our national security, as Senator CLINTON said and as Senator BIDEN said and as Senator REID said. But all of a sudden, when things get a little bit more difficult, then all of a sudden, oh, everything they said, everything they believed in, year after year, is thrown out the window because it is election season, because it is an election year.

The reality, Mr. Speaker, is that we are at war. The reality is that we have people, men and women in uniform, in harm's way doing an incredible job. The reality is we are winning the war against terrorism, against these evil thugs who murder, have murdered and would like to continue murdering Americans if they could.

I would like to talk about some of the many accomplishments, which is why we have not had another attack on U.S. soil despite the attempts of the terrorists because of what this Congress did under the leadership, the Republican leadership and the leadership of the President.

But before I go into more detail, I would like to yield to a man who is a leader on the fight for human rights anywhere around the world where human rights are violated, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP). It is a privilege to have you here, sir.

Mr. WAMP. I thank the gentleman for yielding, especially given the relationship I have with he and his brother because I am the middle of three sons. I have brothers on both sides of my life, and I know the bond between brothers and it is a privilege to serve with you and your brother and to fight the good fight with you.

Before I begin talking about the threats we face, the vulnerabilities that we have, and frankly the courage of the men and women in uniform that stand in harm's way on behalf of a very grateful Nation, let me first honor the sacrifices of September 11.

I was here with the leadership on the steps Monday night when a bipartisan group of Members of the House and Senate came together with extraordinary unity again to honor what happened because one of the great things I came away with on September 11 and that whole experience is that love overcomes fear, and really the only more powerful thing in the world than fear is love. Our country came together in a remarkable way. I feel even the greatest generation, which set the standard for sacrifice and courage in our country, was impressed with the bravery and the willingness to lay their life down of all of the first responders that entered burning buildings following the scriptural call that says, "No greater love hath any man than to lay down his life for a friend," and in this case lay down their life for people they never knew or would know.

We saw extraordinary heroism in the wake of September 11. That is what the character of this great Nation is all about. Just like in our own personal life, we gain our character out of these struggles. And boy, this has been a struggle. But I just want to pay tribute to all of those first responders. It seems that we still don't fully appreciate the heroism of men and women in uniform. It is not just soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines, it is those first responders at the local level that have now stepped up in an amazing way, and so we pay tribute to that as we begin.

But I came last week on Wednesday night and talked about the threats and specifically jihadism, which is really the great threat. As I was preparing some notes to come over tonight, I saw a scroll on Fox News that today the Pope spoke out and condemned fanaticism in the Islamic world and said we must be careful of this call for a holy war. I don't want to paraphrase the Pope, but I am really grateful to see that because I asked the question when we are looking at jihadism, or what they call in other countries the Islamists, which are the radicals in Islam that promote jihadism, waging war against anyone who doesn't believe as they believe, my question for all of the religious leaders in Islam is: Where are the mullahs?

Where are they in condemning suicide bombers and condemning this kind of violence and condemning this full-scale assault on people and nations that do not agree with them on their world view? That is the enemy, jihadism.

Last week I talked about how it is spreading like wildfire through Great Britain and Europe. A book called "Londonistan," talking about how jihadism has spread in London and Great Britain, calling even members of the Parliament like George Galloway by name in the book, and then his name surfaces in the conversation of the 24 hijackers who were apprehended just a month ago; talking about a book called "While Europe Slept" about other European countries that have, in the name of tolerance, just almost ignored the incredible rise of jihadism throughout Europe, and how this is a rampant problem.

Today I wanted to bring some more information to the floor from other writers that I have come across that I think is helpful.

The American Enterprise Institute, which is not exactly a conservative bastion or defender of this administration, one of their top analysts writes this, and I think it is instructive. Hamas and Hezbollah see themselves as part of a global movement of jihad. Hamas is, in fact, the Palestinian arm of the Muslim Brotherhood, founded in Egypt, with affiliates across the Muslim world. Although the Muslim Brotherhood in Egypt renounced violence in order to survive fierce government repression, it supports violence and terrorism in other places. Hezbollah was founded by Iran. These groups take pride in being the brothers and comrades-in-arms of the terrorists who attacked New York, Washington, London, Madrid, Bombay, Bali; and they celebrated when those atrocities happened.

As they also say, quite openly, they are aiming to establish a new caliphate that would create what they view as the golden age of Islam, and they want this caliphate to rule over all the lands of the Muslim empires of the past, from Morocco in Spain to the west, to the Philippines in the east, taking in the southern half of Europe, the northern half of Africa and most of Asia.

Now, as I said last week, we intercepted a letter between Zarqawi and Zawahiri before we killed Zarqawi. In that letter, it says exactly this, use the infidels', us, presence in the Middle East, to expand the caliphate, revive the caliphate, and they said in the letter, from Morocco to Indonesia, this same extraordinarily large territory, which they considered their rule, their empire.

So, if anyone is naive enough to think that this is all about our presence in Iraq, they are in denial. They are simply not wanting to face the facts of the threats of jihadism spreading around the world. That is really the enemy. We talk about a war on terror, but terror is a tactic used by the enemy. The enemy are the jihadists, and this is an aggressive plan. The Wall Street Journal editorialized 2 weeks ago and said that some people have an aversion to conflict. We just don't want to face this.

I mean, 5 years after September 11, in amazing unity, and I am grateful for that, in a bipartisan way we gathered. But some people that gathered don't want to face the facts that these threats are growing. History will sort out what caused it to grow and whether things that we have done or said aggravated it. But the truth is, it is a real threat.

You know, Mr. Speaker, a very prominent Tennessean, the former Vice President of the United States, he has a movie out called "An Inconvenient Truth."

I am glad that we talk about global warming. We had a great hearing today on it and talked about nuclear energy. Even the founder of Greenpeace reported today, at our hearing, the concept of nuclear energy to reduce CO<sub>2</sub> emissions to clean up the global air quality and save the planet. Nuclear energy is a solution. We need to face that.

But I want to tell you about another inconvenient truth. It is an inconvenient truth that over half of the Democrats in the United States Senate voted to remove Saddam Hussein by force, and almost half the Democrats in this House voted to remove Saddam Hussein by force, and now a whole lot of them are wanting to either leave early or publicly tell the world that it was a mistake.

Now, let me tell you, when you vote to do something, you need to understand when you vote to remove Saddam Hussein, a dictator, a tyrant, a genocidal mass murderer, who had invaded other countries and had built up its guard around Baghdad to protect his empire, that it is not going to be easy, and it could be tough. It could require extraordinary sacrifice and we, as a Nation, voted to do it, and it is an inconvenient truth for them that they voted to do it, because it would be real easy just to erase that and say, oh, I don't have anything to do with that. But we agreed to do it, and why can't we, any more in this country, stand at the water's edge together when men and women are in harm's way on our behalf at this critical moment in history.

Now, let me just get to our vulnerabilities. Maybe I should come back to our vulnerabilities.

Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART of Florida. If I may, I would like to, because I think the gentleman from Tennessee brings up some really, really important points, I guess that some of the fine men and women on the Democratic Party side believe that if we just went away, if the United States just left the Middle East, I assume that would be stop supporting Israel, I don't know.

But if we just pulled back from the Middle East as some have said, some have said we should pull back to Japan, to Okinawa, which, by the way, in military terms for the Navy is farther away than the Navy yards here in Virginia. So in other words if we left there, if we were just good, if we just behaved, that these terrorists would leave us alone, that they would go away.

I mentioned a little while ago a list of attacks against America that were way before 9/11, way before we were in Iraq. But I guess some just believed naively that if we just left Iraq, just left Afghanistan, that everything would be hunky dory.

Yet, I think it is important to kind of listen to what our enemy is saying. When you have Hezbollah leader Nasrallah saying, "Death to America," and let me quote him, regardless, this is a quote, regardless of how the world has changed after 9/11, after the 11th of September, death to America will remain a reverberating and powerful slogan. Death to America.

I guess some believe that he doesn't really mean it, that if we just, I don't know, retracted from the world that they would go away, bin Laden, who, by the way, very cleverly, started a media campaign to try to divide our country, very effectively, I might add. Let me quote you about that, by the way, what bin Laden said. He said, al Qaeda intends to launch a, quote, media campaign to create a wedge between the American people and their government.

He also said that the media campaign, and I am quoting him now, aimed at creating pressure from the American people on the American Government to stop their campaign. There are some that, I guess, because they are naive, are doing exactly, exactly what our enemy says that has to happen in order to defeat the United States, in order to defeat the United States.

Let us be very clear that the terrorists' aim, the aim of the terrorists is total destruction of the United States of our way of life and everything that we believe in. It is not because we may have been in Iraq; it is not because we support Israel. All those things, obviously, upset them.

But let me quote Osama bin Laden again, where he says, quote, the war is for you or for us to win, talking about the West. If we win, if we win it, it means your defeat and disgrace forever. That is how they think.

So I don't understand how, when there was such a consensus, how everybody understood that, how the terrorists continue to do the same thing, how to kill Americans, but because of the efforts of this President and this Congress, they have not been able to do so here, and the terrorists continue to say what they are going to do.

How is it possible that some refused to listen, like I guess happened in the 1930s, when some refused to listen to Winston Churchill when he said there is an evil out there, the Nazis. They are not going to go away, we have to confront them.

So I kind of pose that as a question to my colleague from Tennessee, because I don't get it, I don't get it. How much clearer can the actions and the words of the terrorists be before some of our men and women get it, understand it. Realize that we are not the bad guys, we are the good guys. It is the terrorists that we are fighting, and they are not going to stop, they are not going to go away if we just send our troops to Okinawa and Japan and pretend that they no longer exist. I mean, I don't get it.

Mr. WAMP. I think it was General Casey who said if we leave Iraq prematurely, they will follow us home. I will finish what the American Enterprise Institute analyst said about this presence in Iraq. He said jihadists from around the world have flocked to Iraq to fight America and its allies. They believe they will win and drive the infidels from Mesopotamia, the name they use to emphasize that they have no regard for modern national identities.

If they succeed in Iraq, they say they will use it as a base from which to conquer the rest of the lands surrounding the Persian Gulf, a jumping off point for further conquest. In Time magazine Sunday, Max Boot writes this. He says, if we believe that wholeheartedly supporting friendly dictators works, we should remember that our support for the Shah of Iran in the 1970s and Yasser Arafat in the 1990s has taught us that secular strongmen cannot keep the lid on forever.

Either we push for change now, or we risk a fundamentalist explosion later on, and we need to be honest with the American people, to my friend from Florida, and let the people know that we have difficult days ahead. I have been on the Homeland Security appropriations subcommittee for 4 years. I have been briefed at the highest level. I have been to the United Nations, I have met with our allies from Europe and the Middle East.

I have got deeply into the issue of the nuclear threats and how terrorists are very interested in the A.Q. Kahn network, an international nuclear arms broker who is now, frankly, under house arrest in Pakistan, and how Libya gave up their nuclear weapons.

The greatest threat of all is that these jihadists are able to get a nuclear weapon. We had better emphasize our security for the future of the free world.

Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Look, it is clear who our enemy is. It is clear that they have been there before Iraq, before the liberation of Iraq. Before Afghanistan, they were in Iraq. They have killed Americans for a generation. They are not going to go away if we just wish them to go away. But luckily we have had some great success. Is there a reason why there has not been an attack on American soil?

To talk a little bit about that, I would like to recognize a person who I greatly admire from the great State of New Jersey, but Mr. GARRETT has been a leader, particularly on cutting government waste, on fighting for the little guy for small business. I would like to recognize him. Maybe he could tell us a little bit about why we are succeeding, why we haven't had an attack. What is it that we have done that is working.

With that, I would like to yield to Mr. GARRETT.

Mr. GARRETT of New Jersey. I thank you for that. I thank the gentleman from Florida for bringing this matter to the floor tonight, and I appreciate your comment "fighting for the little guy" with regard to the economic issue, and I think we are all fighting for the little guy and the middle guy and the big guy in the sense that we want to have security here at home for America.

What I would like to do, if I may, just spend a couple of minutes speaking about some of the strides we have made in this country through the efforts of this House to make America stronger. I will touch on some of the comments made on the other side of the aisle where they are saying we have not made improvements, specifically in the area of port security.

I represent the Fifth Congressional District in New Jersey, the very top of the State of New Jersey. The people I represent in the Fifth District of New Jersey remember all too well the events of September 11. We live in the shadows, really, of the former World Trade Center as well as three major airports, the second busiest port in the Nation, Newark, and a number of national landmarks as well, such as the Statue of Liberty. So the threat of another attack in our area looms very large in our daily lives. Ensuring that government is doing its best to prevent terror attacks and prepare should the worst occur is more than just an important part of my work here in Washington.

It is a matter of life and death for my neighbors and fellow New Jerseyans. This last Wednesday I had the opportunity to tour Newark Seaport, along with U.S. customs and border protection officials. Basically, I went there to assess current procedures and technologies, since I had been there several years before, to see what they are using now to detect and prevent future threats.

While I was there, there was obviously, still, always things that we can do to make our security more airtight. But what I saw on this tour was encouraging, to say the least. You know, terrorists consistently alter their techniques and targets that keep Americans guessing where and when they might attack next and where we might be most vulnerable.

So that means that we must remain one step ahead of them in every facet, and the funding we have allocated towards port security has really gone a large step in that direction.

When we awoke to the very real dangers of the contemporary world on September 11, 2001, you can say we were shocked to discover the dangers hidden in our unsecured trade infrastructure. But today we have a layered approach to port security that has significantly increased our safety, an approach that is improving daily with the development of new tools, new technology, new methods to ensure that our trade is safe, yet as efficient as possible.

Right now, and I want to make a note of this, right now 100 percent of all containers coming into ports shipped to the U.S. receive a risk assessment. Each and every container must have a detailed manifest that accurately depicts what is being shipped in it and we know who is sending it and receiving that container as well. We also have detailed data on their shipping habits in the past and we can prioritize our inspection efforts now.

So the threat of weapons of mass destruction in the past has led to the efforts to push our borders actually out past where our borders are, all the way back to where the manufacturers who are building those items come from, whether it is in another country or another continent, all those items that come into this country for our consumption.

We now have CBP officers at 44 ports around the world. That is up from zero prior to 2001. By the end of this year, CBP will have officers at 50 ports around the world. That represents 90 percent of all the trade bound for the U.S.

These officers work with the host countries there, and what they do is they inspect the containers before they are even loaded. Then there is radiation detectors at each of these ports to ensure that the trucks entering the port are scanned for the most dangerous of weapons.

As I said before, the terrorist seeks to exploit whatever our weakest link is and find the easiest way to find access to our Nation. Our allies and trading partners have recognized the great risk to worldwide trade posed by terrorists, and they are now volunteering with our Customs Trade-Partnership Against Terrorism Plan, that is the CT-PAT.

This effort allows us to work all the way back with the shippers, the manufacturers, to secure every aspect of trade, from the factory to the railcar to the truck all the way right here to our port. So by strengthening the security before even shipping items reach our stateside ports, we make our ports dramatically safer.

This goes to a point made on the other side saying that all the security at our ports now, when it comes to items coming into our country, are done at our ports. The fact of the matter is that is absolutely wrong, what they were saying. To reiterate, 44 ports around the world right now, it is going to be up to 50 by the end of the year, 90 percent of everything coming into this country.

After the attacks on September 11, the Federal Government invested millions of dollars into new technology to enhance our port security. Scanning equipment that was unheard of literally 5 years ago is now installed and working in each of these ports. I have seen this stuff. It is amazing.

The latest scanning technology can not only detect radiation, but it can even determine what type of radiation is present within that container by simply a single sweep of that container. It is fascinating. If you are not an engineer, as I am not, it is just amazing what they can do.

Now what they have is new technology, even newer than just a couple of years ago, and what they have done is replaced a three-step process down to a one-step process. So now the entire scan is done in one step, not three, and what this does, of course, is give the agents even more time to scan more containers.

In the State of New Jersey, where I am from, we are fortunate to have Rutgers University. What our university has done through Federal funding is establish a multi-disciplinary Port Security Laboratory and research facility, which I had the opportunity to look at as well. They are using homeland security funds to develop still better detection systems for the future in tracking container ships.

There are also private companies out there as well, besides universities. One such company is SI International. This company, that I had the opportunity to check out as well, they are engaged in some of the most amazing and greatest advances in military technology and they are turning to homeland security that I have ever seen or any of us have seen before, coming up daily with better innovations.

So I sit back not as an engineer just to marvel at this and I applaud all of the brilliant minds for their efforts to make Americans safer. As one Member of Congress, I sleep a little bit better knowing there are great minds out there that are working on these projects from a technical point of view.

We have come great strides, made great improvements since 9/11, and it is in part because of the actions of this House. Just recently, as you know, we have invested $1.2 billion in further appropriations to go for the Security and Accountability of Every Port Act to make sure all the ports have the latest in technology, training and personnel at them.

We must agree here today that we will continue to ensure that our homeland security officials have those resources to prevent future terrorist attacks from using our global trade system ever to take lives of Americans again.

With that, I appreciate again your efforts here on the floor tonight, and applaud your work.

Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from New Jersey for bringing up those important points. The ports are such a huge part of our economy and the steps that have been taken to strengthen our ports

But there is so much more that has been done, the funding for the first responders in homeland security. Through a variety of programs, these are amazing programs. Over $30 billion in Federal funding has been allocated for the first responders since 2001.

The U.S. PATRIOT Act of 2001, which was reauthorized recently, which is obviously a key tool in preventing another domestic terrorist attack. By the way, that was a bill that was reauthorized, and 156 House Democrats voted to oppose the reauthorization of that essential tool to fight terrorism here, so the terrorism doesn't hit us here specifically.

So much more. The Homeland Security Act of 2002, which established the U.S. Department of Homeland Security as an executive department of the U.S., and tasked that department with preventing domestic terrorist attacks. That was opposed by 120 House Democrats who voted no against the creation of that department to protect the homeland against domestic terrorist attacks. Thank God, thank God, the majority prevailed and that took place.

The SAFE Port Act the Congressman just mentioned. The Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act of 2004, which made important reforms in the intelligence community, including the creation of the Director of National Intelligence to coordinate and oversee all intelligence-related gathering. A huge issue that this Congress got done, which is why we are a little safer.

Project BioShield, which delivered $5.6 billion, with a B, to enhance research and development and procurement and the use of biomedical countermeasures to keep us safer.

There are so many other issues that we have done, which is why America is safer now than it was before 9/11, despite the fact that many of those key pieces of legislation, the Democrats opposed them every single step of the way. They always opposed them. But we have to do more, such things as emergency communications, which we have to do better at.

The reason we have to do more, Mr. Speaker, is because the terrorists, they are not this little rag-tag group of people. They are organized. They are funded. They are out there. As a matter of fact, I understand there is a number of them meeting, state sponsors of terrorism, that are meeting really close to our shores here off the United States.

To give us an idea of who they are and what they are doing and how we have to be vigilant, I would like to now recognize the vice chairman of the House Rules Committee, the gentleman from Florida, Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART. Thank you very much. I want to commend you and all of the distinguished colleagues who have spoken in this hour on this special order on this ultimately important matter, especially always important, but especially in this week when we recall one of the greatly tragic dates in our history.

There have been other dates in our history that have been tragic, but in terms of an attack on unarmed civilians, September 11, 2001, is without precedent in terms of not only the cruelty with which harm was inflicted that day upon thousands of families, upon our great Nation, but in a cowardly way, in this way of unfortunately the new war, the war upon values, the war upon our way of life, the war where civilians are not only fair game, but the primary objective of the enemy.

We have to learn from history in order to be able to act as effectively as possible to protect the homeland. We have to learn from history. Sometimes we even have to learn from the strangest sources, most unorthodox sources, the animal kingdom. The ostrich, for example.

The ostrich, when in fear, adopts a curious position. It hides its head in the soil. Not only by doing so does it adopt physically a peculiar position, but it diminishes its security by doing so because it has not the ability to see what is happening in its surroundings.

So even from sources as unorthodox and unexpected as the animal kingdom, specifically with the ostrich, we have to learn, because I would maintain, always respectfully, that some have adopted the position of the ostrich with regard to political positions and positions with regard to public policy, even as important as with regard to our national security. Hiding our heads in the soil, in the sand, to avoid seeing the fact that we have many enemies, is not an appropriate, not only physical position, but one that is conducive to security.

On the contrary, we have many enemies. In recent history the enemy was acting with impunity. When the enemy acted in 1993, I remember I had just arrived in this Congress, Mr. Speaker. I had just arrived and we were meeting.

I remember the Speaker-to-be Newt Gingrich, who at that time was not yet Speaker, was addressing us in a retreat in February of 1993. I had just arrived the previous month to this Congress. As he spoke, the news arrived about a dreadful terrorist attack upon civilians in New York City. I recall how then Congressman Newt Gingrich, who was to be the Speaker in the next Congress, addressed us and very calmly and with great wisdom told us that we were living in a new era, an era that included the savage attacks upon unarmed civilians by cowardly enemies. February 1993.

The reality of the matter is that the enemy saw that it could act with impunity. And the years passed, and the enemy attacked again with impunity. And the enemy attacked again with impunity, attacked American embassies in different countries with impunity. The enemy went so far as to attack a vessel of the United States Navy, killing many sailors of the USS Cole, inflicting great harm upon the United States.

The enemy acted with impunity. The enemy was convinced that it could continue to act with impunity, so it organized what became the most horrendous attack upon unarmed civilians in the history of the United States.

And the enemy was convinced that it could continue to act with impunity. The enemy miscalculated because a new day had arrived in the United States of America and thus a new day had arrived in the world. The free world led as it is, and it must be by the United States of America. The enemy miscalculated.

So from where the enemy had prepared the most horrendous attack upon civilians in history, thousands of miles away in terrorist training camps in a desolate country with a great people and a great history but a country that has suffered much, in Afghanistan.

The enemy was convinced that geography, distance, and history, especially the lessons of recent history, would continue to protect it. But a new day had arrived, and, of course, the enemy did not act on September 11, 2001, with impunity. It acted in a cowardly way but not with impunity. And the United States of America, led by the Commander in Chief, attacked the enemy in Afghanistan and subsequently attacked the enemy in Iraq.

And today the reality of the matter is that those who would like to and who dream and who, if they can, they actually plan to attack unarmed civilians in American towns and cities, those terrorists to a great extent today are occupied, trying to defeat, trying to inflict damage upon the United States Armed Forces in Iraq and our allies in Iraq, not in American towns and cities. And the fact that there has been no attack upon American civilians, American towns and cities for 5 years, the anniversary that we commemorate this year, is not by chance nor is it by luck. It is by hard work.

Mr. GARRETT, I am so glad that he spoke, whom I admire so much, like Mr. WAMP, who is here also. And Mr. GARRETT talked about the actions of this Congress. I was tasked by Speaker HASTERT in the last Congress to chair the subcommittee of the then temporary Homeland Security Committee that Speaker HASTERT created. I was tasked with the job, a difficult job, among the most difficult jobs I have ever had because it is always difficult when you are dealing with committee chairmen and jurisdiction. It is a very difficult task. But he asked me to help him to create a permanent Homeland Security Committee. And in the last Congress that was what took up most of my time, and we succeeded, with the leadership of Speaker HASTERT and with the help of the majority of our colleagues. We succeeded. We created a permanent Homeland Security Committee.

And we have taken other steps that Mr. GARRETT outlined, the PATRIOT Act and its reauthorization and many other steps, to try to make the homeland, the people of the United States of America as secure as possible. And we are more secure. We are safer today than we were 5 years ago.

But when we see, as was pointed out, and it does not surprise me, but it is very rare to see the media talking about the fact that 90 miles from the shores of the United States this week, celebrating the fifth anniversary of 9/11, all of the state sponsors of terrorism throughout the world have gathered, and they are now gathering, receiving instructions and receiving orientation and inspiration from themselves and coordinating. They are today 90 miles from the shores of the United States. I think it is called, under the umbrella of the United Nations, the Summit of Nonaligned Countries. How interesting. Nonaligned.

You have Mr. Ahmadinejad, who does not stop in his extraordinary pursuit of the atomic weapon and publicly says that he wishes to wipe from the face of the map a democracy and friend of the United States, Israel. You have Mr. Ahmadinejad now receiving inspiration as we speak, receiving inspiration and guidance from the other state sponsors of terrorism. And, of course, the state sponsor of terrorism with all that experience, the dictator in Havana with 47 years of experience exporting terrorism, attacking the United States of America in every form and every way possible as long as he can protect his totalitarian power.

Mr. Ahmadinejad is there now, as is Mr. Chavez and all of the other state sponsors of terrorism. They are there. The North Koreans, the Syrians. You name them, Mr. Speaker, they are there.

So the enemies, our enemies, the enemies of freedom, they haven't stopped in their efforts. So we must not stop either, working to protect not only the national security of this great land but the security and the safety of the people of this great land and of all of the freedom-loving people in the world as we work to expand that sacred right of freedom that all people are entitled to, including those who are oppressed by those state sponsors of terrorism. They may be oppressed by totalitarian states, but they have freedom in their hearts and they long to be free, and they deserve our support and they always will have it.

I appreciate your convening us this evening on this ultimately important subject.

Mr. MARIO DIAZ-BALART of Florida. I thank the gentleman from Florida.

He mentioned how America had been attacked so many times with impunity, and yet some in this country still do not understand that we are at war. But listen to what our enemy is saying. Bin Laden calls the war against terrorism in Iraq the Third World War, and yet some in our country still refuse to admit that we are at war.

And he talks about how in Iraq the whole world is watching this war and the two adversaries, the Islamic nation on the one hand and the United States and its allies on the other. And he goes on to say, Mr. bin Laden does, it is either victory and glory or misery and humiliation.

What is hard for me to believe, though, is that Members of this body and of the Senate, and I think it is very important to be respectful of this institution, but there is a Member of the Senate who said that it would be unrealistic, if not downright foolish, in other words, you would be a fool, to believe that we can claim victory in the war on terrorism and a more secure world, that you would be a fool, according to this prestigious, recognized Democratic leader, if Saddam Hussein is still in power. You would be a fool is what Mr. BIDEN said. And yet now how is it possible

I would never say that those who said that and now have changed their minds are fools. But that is what Mr. BIDEN said. You would have to be a fool to believe that Saddam Hussein could have stayed in power and we could have been victorious in the war on terrorism. And I have a hard time believing how they don't unite with the President of the United States to support our troops on the field while we are at war.

Mr. Speaker, I will now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. WAMP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

And I will take us through the balance of our hour here in just a couple of minutes. I want to make myself perfectly clear as we close.

The enemy is not the Democratic Party. The enemy is al Qaeda, Hezbollah, Hamas, the jihadists. They are the enemy. Our opponents here in this very healthy discussion are the Democrats. But I have to say I believe deep in my soul that the members of the minority party in Washington who believe that we should pull out of Iraq by a date certain are wrong. Senator LIEBERMAN is right; Ned Lamont is wrong. And there is disagreement in their party over this, but it is a matter of life and death, war and peace, tyranny and freedom; and Ned Lamont and that mentality is wrong. We cannot afford to fail in Iraq.

I also want to talk about our vulnerabilities briefly. The border is a vulnerability. We had testimony yesterday by DUNCAN HUNTER, the chairman of the Armed Services Committee; and HAROLD ROGERS, my chairman of Homeland Security appropriations, about how the southern Border is being infiltrated by people not just from Mexico and Central America but from all over the world; and it is a vulnerability for us.

But I want to say it goes unreported, underreported that tremendous progress has been made, especially in the last 12 months. We heard the testimony yesterday, crystal clear, we now do not catch and release. Ninety-nine percent last month, certified, illegals coming across the border were detained and held to be returned to their country of origin, and the word is out. That is a tremendous deterrent, and the numbers are way down of people coming across the border. The fence below San Diego, two tiered, is making a big difference. The National Guard is making a difference. Billions of dollars having been spent is making a difference. As you heard the gentleman from New Jersey say, our ports are more secure. And most importantly, we are in the intelligence business again because that is why we failed prior to September 11.

And I want to close with this for our troops: John Stuart Mill said this: "War is an ugly thing, but not the ugliest of things." He said: "The decayed and degraded state of moral and patriotic feeling which thinks that nothing is worth war is much worse." He said: "The person who has nothing for which he is willing to fight, nothing which is more important than his own personal safety, is a miserable creature and has no chance of ever being free unless those very freedoms are made and kept so by the exertions of better men than himself."

And those people are our soldiers, sailors, airmen, and marines. And we hail them and thank them for their courage and their sacrifice.

THE 30-SOMETHING WORKING GROUP

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GOHMERT). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 4, 2005, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MEEK) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor coming before the House once again, and I must say that I am excited about being here tonight. It is another great day in this great country of ours.

And as you know, the 30-something Working Group, we come to the floor to share with the American people, not just Democrats but Republicans, Independents, those that are thinking about voting, those that have been turned off by political processes who are thinking about being engaged in the political process once again.

To those Americans who are not registered to vote, I would encourage them to register to vote. They can still vote in the upcoming November elections because there is a lot being said on the floor, Mr. Speaker, and we talked last night, the 30-something Working Group. We took 2 hours last night talking about the initiatives that we have with our Real Security Plan, talking about the memory and the sacrifice of those that gave their lives on 9/11 and those that are still living with the effects of 9/11, whether it be losing a family member or a first responder or someone that worked in the World Trade Center or was around the plane going down in Pennsylvania or the Pentagon here in Washington, D.C., those that are still living through it.

Today we had a resolution on the floor, Mr. Speaker, that dealt with addressing the memory of those that lost their lives on 9/11 and things that we have to do. The Republican majority found it fit to kind of put in a resolution about some things that they thought that they accomplished as it relates to making America safer. Some of that I join with them on as an American and as a Member of Congress, but a lot of it has not been achieved.

We have the 9/11 Commission Report that came out that said that we have to not only inspect 100 percent of cargo containers that are on ships and 100 percent of those cargo containers that go in the bellies of airplanes that are flying throughout the United States of America, it is still not accomplished today. We still have a dismal amount of Border Patrol officers to protect American borders. Democrats, we have asked for 2,000 Border Patrol officers; the President's budget request to this Congress was only 215 or 216 Border Patrol officers.

Now, the Republican majority can come to the floor night after night, day after day, do 5-minute speeches, 1-minute speeches, or take a special order and talk a good game. But I used to be a football player, Mr. Speaker, I played for Florida A&M Rattlers. I was an outside linebacker. And before the game, you would read all about what the other team is saying and all of the talking and taunting. And then you have folks that tailgate before the game, and the bus would roll in and they would talk about what they are going to do to us, and then the coach would talk about how better the other team is. But it really doesn't count until that whistle blows and that kick-off takes place and that you have an opportunity to get out there and hit somebody. And when you hit somebody and when you run the ball down the field and you end up winning the game, all of that talk was for naught.

But what is unfortunate about this situation, even though I use that analogy, Mr. Speaker, this is not a game, this is for real. This is flesh and blood. This is flesh and blood. And the bottom line is, is that one can come to the floor and talk about, well, you know, Democrats and this, that, and the other, and they are holding us back. What are we holding the Republican majority back from, Mr. Speaker? That is what I want to know. That is the prevailing question here.

The bottom line, the Republicans in this House have been in this control for double digit years. So who is holding them back? Now, let's talk a little bit about control. I want to make sure that every Member understands what control and majority means.

The majority means that any amendment, any bill, any appropriations that you want funded will be funded because you are in the majority. You have more numbers than the Democrats do at this particular time in the House.

Why are the American people saying that they want change? Why are the American people saying that they want to move in a new direction? They want to move in a new direction because they want accountability. They want oversight. They want Article I, Section 1 of the U.S. Constitution to be adhered to. They want to make sure that their vote counts here in the U.S. House of Representatives. Right now, it is just a lot of talk. And I can tell you, as a Member of the House and someone that studies what happens here on this floor and what does not happen here on this floor, I feel it is my obligation not as a Member of Congress but as an American to be able to come to this floor and say that it is just not happening.

We can talk about the facts, and like we do every night we talk about the facts. We have the vote number, down to the vote number when we start talking about border protection. No one can come on this floor in the Republican majority side and say that we have done an outstanding job as it relates to protecting our borders, period, dot. They cannot because they have not done it, Mr. Speaker, and they know it.

So I guess spending the time of 9/11, the fifth anniversary, coming to the floor, having control of a resolution dealing with the issue on 9/11, you can put anything that you want to put in it because you have the majority. It doesn't necessarily mean that it is true. And if the Americans want to move in a new direction, they will have an opportunity. And as we start looking at this whole piece on a new direction and real security, you go on HouseDemocrats.gov. I challenge the Republican majority to go on HouseDemocrats.gov, I challenge the Republicans to pick up the Democrats' bill here on this floor that fully implements the 9/11 recommendations. I ask the Republicans to do that, because it was a bipartisan commission that is respected by this whole country, had a Republican chair and a Democratic vice chair, and had former Members of Congress, members of the Intelligence Committee, the National Security Director come before them and the President of these United States come before them, 9/11 survivors come before them, clandestine organizations that we have within the Federal Government come before them. We have a number of individuals that put forth testimony, frontline first responders that came before them, individuals in academia who have been looking at this issue of homeland security come before them, and they put forth this document called the 9/11 Report, which was a book. Americans can go out to Barnes and Noble or what have you and go out and buy it, go on Yahoo and buy it. It was ready and accessible, and a number of Americans picked up and read it. And in that book, in that text and body: Safety for America.

What do we do in a democracy when the Congress put forth in the Commission to find out what we need to do? We try to implement at least 95 percent or 100 percent of it. But as I stand here today, Mr. Speaker, very little of that has been implemented as it relates to real security.

The Brits ended up intercepting a plot as relates to liquid explosives. Just today, Mr. Speaker, I am the ranking member of the Oversight Committee on Homeland Security, Management Integration and Oversight, and I must say that that in that committee the Under Secretary said, well, we are now starting to do tests as it relates to liquid explosives, 5 years later, Mr. Speaker. Foot dragging process. And we start talking about the whole issue of how do we get technology involved and how do we get industry involved in helping us resolve threats to the United States, 5 years later.

Do you know why the Department of Homeland Security is foot dragging on this issue? It is the fact that they don't have Members of Congress that are willing to call them out on the carpet and say that we are willing to protect Americans now. We don't want to wait to be a Monday morning quarterback. Mr. RYAN, we don't want to talk about, well, you know, we could have, should have done it, and then we have another commission, it may not be named 9/11, it may be 10/11 that will come forth with a report saying that we found the Department of Homeland Security didn't prioritize the issue on liquid explosives because they felt that there were other threats that are out there.

Well, the bottom line is this: The oversight is not happening, and this Republican Congress has rubber stamped everything that President Bush has handed down and said, so shall it be written, so shall it be done. Let's do it the way you originally wrote it; we are not going to ask any questions, you are the President of the United States. Forget about our legislative responsibilities, forget about oversight, and forget about moving in a new direction.

The bottom line is this. The leader took this podium on this floor here today down in the well and said, if you really want to honor those individuals that have lost their lives on 9/11, if you want to honor those first responders, if you want to honor every American that is fighting abroad as it relates to Afghanistan and the war in Iraq, then implement what the 9/11 Commission called for.

We have got American passengers, we have individuals, law-abiding citizens taking off shoes, giving up hand sanitizer, gulping down water before they get through security screening; meanwhile, containers unchecked, unchecked, there can be 10,000 explosives in the container. We would never know it because we haven't prioritized. We haven't said that we are willing to implement what the 9/11 Commission called for. I don't want to give the 9/11 Commission an opportunity to say, we told the Congress to do it and they didn't do it. I wish they would say we told the Republican majority to do it and they didn't do it.

So, one can get on the floor and say all they have to say, but the facts are this. The fact is that they have not implemented the 9/11 Commission Report. They have not implemented making sure that we go beyond 6 percent of containers that are going throughout the United States of America on 18-wheelers. I used to be a State trooper. They move throughout this country, in the heartland of this country, into the ports of major cities, and they are unchecked. I don't want to be able to say I told you so. I want to see it implemented.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I said last night, Mr. RYAN, I am done with asking the Republican majority to do the right thing. They have had double digit years to do it. They don't have the will nor the desire to do it. But they do have the will to come to the floor, Mr. RYAN, and to try to say, well, you know, we are doing all we can and the Democrats are holding us back. How can we hold the Republican majority back from securing America? That is not possible when you are in the minority.

The bottom line is, is that Republicans, Independents, Democrats, those that are thinking about voting, those that have not voted in a number of years will show up at the polls to put this country in a new direction. If you allow this kind of landslide policy making, this K Street Project policy making, pay-to-play, here on this floor, then we are going to find ourselves in a dismal situation.

I don't have to say it. Republicans are saying it, Independents are saying it, the media is saying it as you pick up the paper, as you turn on the news. So, you know, it is not like this is a Democrat-Republican issue. I will go ahead and give the benefit of the doubt, Mr. Speaker, and say that there are some Republicans that see it the way that we see it on this side of the aisle that we need to do better by the American people. But, guess what, they are not in the majority; they are not in the leadership of the American Congress. They are not the individuals that move policy through this process. We have the will and the desire to work in a bipartisan way if given the opportunity to make sure that we honor our members and women that have served in the military, that are now serving right now. There are men and women that have said in their teeth.

Mr. RYAN and I have been to Iraq, I have been to Afghanistan, I have been in the Middle East talking to these leaders, I have been to Central Command. I have been there in Qatar, and I have talked to these individuals, and they are dedicated and they have the will and the desire to follow up. But when we have a Secretary of Defense that is saying that he is going to fire the next person that starts talking about how do we move out of Iraq and how do we replace the force there to be able to empower the Iraqi people, I have a problem with that. And the only reason why Secretary Rumsfeld is not front and center in front of the Armed Services Committee is the fact that Republicans have control of this House; otherwise, there will be Article I, Section 1 of the U.S. Constitution that is blood, sweat, and tears that are on that Constitution right now that he will be front and center making a statement like that. The Secretary of Defense of the United States of America said, if one other person comes to him talking about how are we going to have this transfer of power, how are we going to draw down and redeploy U.S. troops, that they are going to be fired. That is not a democracy, that is kingdom politics, Mr. Speaker. And I will tell you this. The only people that can bring the kind of paradigm shift that we need in America right now is the American people. We can't count on the Republican Congress to do it. They have already shown that they cannot do it.

The attacks on U.S. troops are well above 700 attacks a week and climbing. Al Qaeda is sending more troops, more individuals to Iraq to train to carry out terror throughout the globe. And the bottom line is, the President said some sort of statement yesterday. Well, you know, if we were to redeploy troops or we were to leave Iraq, then they will follow us to the United States.

Well, you know something? We have this big department that is called the Department of Homeland Security that is supposed to protect Americans. And I can tell you this, under a Democratic controlled Congress we have already said within the 100 hours that full implementation of the 9/11 Commission Report will be implemented by this House and the Senate. We have already said it and we will do it, just like we balanced the budget without one Republican vote.

Mr. Speaker, the facts are on this side of the aisle. The will and the desire is on this side of the aisle. I am excited. I thank God that He preserved life long enough for me to make it here tonight to be able to share the sentiments on behalf of those that are on the National Security Committee, on behalf of U.S. troops in Afghanistan right now that are saying, "We need help." On behalf of those veterans, individuals who can't even walk straight right now, individuals that are still going through reflection, or memorizing what they went through in past conflicts. Those individuals in the PFWs, those individuals that possess what this country is all about and allowed us to salute one flag. On behalf of them, Mr. Speaker, I come tonight with the truth, to say we stand up for those individuals and for those Americans that prayed up our troops over the years: World War I, World War II. You name it. Korea. You name it. Grenada. You name it. Somalia. You name it. Gulf War I. You name it. We come to the floor on behalf of those individuals, those individuals who are veterans right now that have to wait twice a month for the veterans' assistance center to open, for the VA clinic to open in their rural America area, for those individuals that have to wait 4 months to be able to see an ophthalmologist, who served our country. We come to the floor for them. We come to the floor on behalf of those families that are praying for their loved ones that are in harm's way right now and making sure that we don't allow their sacrifice and their commitment to go to the side because someone came to the floor of the House to say that, Oh, well, yeah, we have al Qaeda and this, that and the other. We have to worry about those Democrats over there.

You don't need to worry about us, Republican majority. You need to worry about the American people and what they think and what they feel. And when they show up on Tuesday, come this November, they will let you know how they feel. They no longer want a rubber-stamp Congress. They want a Congress that is going to legislate and oversight on behalf of the American people, regardless of who they may be.

And so, Mr. Speaker, I am excited about being here tonight. I think I have said that about three times. I think it is important that we continue to come to the floor and give validation to those individuals that need the representation, if they are in our districts or not. They are Americans and they deserve it.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. I appreciate the gentleman's passion and want to thank you for inviting me to be down here with you again.

I think what you are trying to say is that this Congress, this President, has really put us and the American people in a lose-lose situation. Good Presidents and a good Congress do not put the American people and their military operation in a lose-lose situation. And now they have reverted back to just saying, Democrats don't care about national security. Democrats are more in favor of protecting the terrorists. Just name calling. It is like you are on the playground again.

The thing that we have to look at is the record. The record does not lie. And what the generals are telling the civilian side what to do and the civilian side not listening, as you expressed earlier. But here is what we are hearing from former generals who, once they get out, can all of a sudden start speaking the truth. Like General Shinseki tried to say to Rumsfeld, "You've got to send in a few hundred thousand troops." And Secretary Rumsfeld, Mr. Speaker, said, "No, no, no. Don't worry. We can do this on the cheap." Rumsfeld was wrong and Shinseki all of a sudden kind of disappears. Look what is happening now.

Lieutenant General Newbold: "What we are living with now is the consequences of successive policy failures." This man was the top operations officer for the Joint Chiefs, commanding general for the First Marine Division, Legion of Merit Navy and Marine Corps commendation medal.

How about General Eaton: "2½ more years of that leadership was too long for my Nation, for my Army and for my family."

These are generals.

How about General Riggs: "They only need the military advice when it satisfies their agenda."

I think what we want to do, Mr. Speaker, is get out of the politics and let's start solving problems. Seven hundred thousand people per Congressional district vote for us to come down here and fix problems, not to play politics with what is going on. And this has been all politics, all the time, from this administration. It doesn't matter if what they are saying is even remotely close to being based in reality. It doesn't matter what the facts on the ground are. You can sit here and say, the Democrats this and the Democrats that.

You're in charge of the House, the Senate and the White House. Don't go blame the minority party for your failures. That is what has happened here. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. MEEK of Florida. Thank you, Mr. RYAN.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. The debate coming out of D.C. and the old Potomac two-step is, "We'll blame the Democrats." What are you going to blame the Democrats for? We have bills sitting in committee. No one has given them even one hearing in a committee. We have got discharge petitions sitting over here for veterans benefits and all kinds of other things. They never see the light of day. We are the minority party. You can't blame us. You can try, but you can't blame us. Take responsibility for your actions. And if you solve problems, the American people would return you back. But you haven't.

Just look. The failure to execute basic governmental programs. Look at homeland security. Look at Katrina. Look at the war. You got Newt Gingrich, the father of the Republican revolution in 1994, basically saying, "Vote the Republicans out." Here is what Speaker Gingrich said in the Wall Street Journal just a couple of days ago. Just consider the following, he says:

"Osama bin Laden is still at large. Afghanistan is still insecure. Iraq is still violent. North Korea and Iran still building nuclear weapons and missiles. Terrorist recruiting still occurring in the U.S., Canada, Great Britain and across the planet."

This is not a Democrat. This is someone who cares about his country and saying, "We may even disagree on how to fix the problem, but can we please admit that we have got some serious problems in 2006 in the United States of America? We have a government that doesn't work because it thinks the government is built on a concept of an economy that was 1950. It doesn't work." This is from a few months ago, about the Republican majority.

"They are seen by the country as being in charge of a government that can't function."

We don't need to make this up. We don't need to create this. This is not fiction. This is about what is happening here. We come down here, Mr. Speaker, because we want to start solving these problems. When we are not included in the debate, you are basically saying half of the country has no solutions. Well, we have solutions. When we get in charge next year, we are going to show the American people our ability to govern. We are not trying to obstruct. We couldn't even obstruct if we wanted to. All we are saying is, every single aspect of the neoconservative political agenda has been implemented and it is not benefiting the American people.

Look at your energy costs. Look at your health care costs. Look at your tuition costs. Look at your tax burden. Look at the inefficiency of government. Look at how your government responds to natural disasters. Look how your government handles its foreign policy. Look at the prewar plan. When you have a problem with your political system and your leadership, when you have the Secretary of Defense. Just think about this. There is a problem when the Secretary of Defense wants to invade a country and doesn't want anyone around him talking about how we are going to get out once the war is over. We have got the best military machine the planet has ever seen. We knew we were going to march right to Baghdad. We didn't know it was going to be as quick as it was but we knew it would be quick. Certainly the Iraqis weren't going to be able to stop us. And then the Secretary of Defense, used to be called the Secretary of War, the same position. But the Secretary of Defense tells everyone around him that we're not allowed to talk about a post-war plan.

What? Mr. Speaker, that is crazy.

Mr. MEEK of Florida. I have to come in at this point.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Come in.

Mr. MEEK of Florida. You are making a great point, but I just have to come in at this point.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Supplement.

Mr. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the bottom line is over at the Department of Defense, it is almost like having what they call a 501(c)(3), kind of a community group that goes out and does good on behalf of the community. You go out and you pick board members to be on your board of this 501(c)(3). Let's just say it is the Boys Club or the Girls Club of America. You are the chairman of the board. You are saying, "I'm going to get everyone that says yes and agrees with me. I don't want anyone to disagree with me." We do know for any great organization that you need individuals that are going to question your original thoughts.

What we have now in America, in the Department of Defense and in this government, this Federal Government of ours, is a "yes" board of directors. The U.S. Congress, the Republican majority, is a "yes" board. They are a rubber-stamp board. They do anything and everything the President of the United States says, does, or whoever his advisers may say we should do.

But what is unfortunate is the fact that we are the superpower of the world and we are the United States of America. This is not the Boys and Girls Club. This is not One-Two-Three 501(c)(3), we want to do good for you. This is national security. This is protecting women and children. This is making sure that our troops that have gone in past conflicts, that their memory is not stepped upon. This is making sure that individuals have health care. This is making sure that small businesses are able to provide health care. This is making sure that we balance the budget. This is not a 501(c)(3). This is the government of the United States of America.

And when you have the Secretary of Defense saying, "If anyone comes to me that doesn't believe in what I believe in, you can get out of here. If you want to talk about an exit strategy or redeployment of troops in Iraq, you can't be around me. You're fired." And all you hear is cricket sounds from the Republican majority. Quiet. No one is saying anything. No one is doing anything. No one called a hearing. No one called the Secretary to the United States Congress to say, "Excuse me, Mr. Secretary. Wait a minute. I heard you give speeches saying that whatever the men and women need and the commanders need on the ground in Iraq, that you're here to hear their call. You want to hear from them."

The President of these United States, the Commander in Chief, said, "Whatever our commanders tell us on the ground or over at the Pentagon, we're here to take on their recommendations."

But, Mr. Speaker, things have gotten so bold now, because no one is here to question kingdom politics here in Washington, D.C. So shall it be written, so shall it be done politics from the White House and from the Pentagon. And so that the Secretary of Defense feels so confident that he can publicly say, anyone who has anything to say about redeployment of troops in the Pentagon, they are gone. That is not a democracy. That is a rubber-stamp democracy.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. I want to share a couple of other of these quotes that support what you are saying. Here is from General Batiste: "Rumsfeld and his team turned what should have been a deliberate victory in Iraq into a prolonged challenge."

General Zinni: "We are paying the price for the lack of credible planning or the lack of a plan. Ten years' worth of planning were thrown away."

How about General Swannack: "I do not believe Secretary Rumsfeld is the right person to fight that war based on his absolute failures in managing the war against Saddam in Iraq." That was from the New York Times in April. And on and on and on.

But here is the point I want to make before we yield to our other good friend from Florida about just not listening and not even accepting facts presented by nonpartisan people.

□ 2230

The 9/11 Commission was a bipartisan group that said you need to implement these. After months and months of study on what happened on 9/11, this is what you need to implement. And it has not been done.

And then the Senate Intelligence Committee comes out and says there was no tie between Saddam and al Qaeda, and yet the administration goes out and continues to perpetuate falsehoods. Excuse me, but, I mean, come on. It was the Senate Intelligence Committee report, and the Senate is controlled by Republicans. That was basically a Republican report and a nonpartisan report, and yet they continue to just go on and say things that just don't match with reality.

I yield to my friend from Florida.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. Well, thank you, Mr. RYAN. It is wonderful to be here again with both of you, as we take the floor each night to talk to our colleagues and any Americans that might be within the sound of our voices.

Last night, we had the opportunity to talk about and reflect upon September 11 and its commemoration, and we had a commemoration of sorts on the floor this evening, Mr. RYAN and Mr. MEEK. I thought it was really interesting that the majority, Republican majority, felt it necessary to politicize what should have been a solemn and commemorative event, and a solemn and commemorative resolution with their ra-ra stuff on some of the most controversial legislation that has come off this floor related to so-called national security.

And on Monday, when we were in our home communities, I was in south Florida with our first responders in my community. And I told you both last night that again and again all day on Monday people asked me, well, Debbie, are we safer than we were 5 years ago? And, you know, that was such an incredibly difficult question to field because you want to tell them, yes, we are safer. We are elected officials, and the public puts their trust in us, and it is our job to be able to unequivocally say, yes, we are safer. But here is the rhetorical questions I will ask you. Have we captured Osama bin Laden? Have we smoked out the terrorists, as the President promised? Three years after "mission accomplished," do we even know what the mission is? A year after the last throes of the insurgency in Iraq, are we closer to the date that our troops can come home? Does the President still want the insurgents to "bring it on?"

If you look at the point shortly after we toppled the Taliban in Afghanistan, we have made one misstep after another after another. I mean, repeatedly. I would be hard-pressed to think of a way in which the aftermath of September 11 and the last 5 years could have been handled worse than it has been. I mean, are we truly resting the sum total of our national security on whether we take our shoes off when we go through the magnetometer at the airport, or whether we check our Coke at the door?

I mean, if you asked Americans, as we walked down a city block, what they could put their arms around and tangibly identify as the national security steps we have taken, that is what most people would name.

Basically, the war on terror is a junkyard of missed opportunities. That is exactly what we have been doing since 9/11, squandering opportunity. And last night, Mr. MEEK, we talked about how unified and patriotic the country felt and our citizens felt after 9/11. You never had a less partisan environment or a more unified American environment than the hours and days after 9/11, and weeks and months.

In that whole year following 9/11, people drove around and you had American flags on either side of every car, and this President and this Republican majority squandered those opportunities to really bring the country together by adopting the bipartisan recommendations of the 9/11 Commission, which is why that commission was created, in spite of the President's objections, who didn't want the 9/11 Commission to even exist in the first place.

But then, finally, he really had to grudgingly agree he would be supportive of it. And to this day, in 2006, September 13, 2006, we have not fully implemented it. We have not even come close to implementing their recommendations. Squandered and missed opportunities. It is just disgusting.

So no, sadly, the answer I had to give my constituents was, well, we are somewhat safer. We are safer in spots, but there are major, major gaps. And it doesn't have to be that way, Mr. MEEK. It really doesn't.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. If I may inject here, the last attack, the attack prior to 9/11, was in 1993. This is a very patient group. Just because we haven't been hit yet does not mean we are executing the plan properly. And to just dismiss the 9/11 report and continue down the road of ignoring what the experts are telling us from Iraq and from everything else puts us in a certain amount of danger.

And you have the charts that we have shown night after night that are on our Web site, housedemocrats.gov/30something, night in and night out, about the ports and the amount of ships coming in and cargo that are coming in that are not checked, Mr. MEEK. You guys are in Florida, we have Lake Erie in Ohio. I mean, this country is surrounded by cargo coming in and out of our ports, for us not to check it all.

And then, when you think about what we are spending in Iraq, $2 billion a week, $8 billion a month, and what we could do with that money on addressing the issue of our ports, on our homeland security, on our first responders, on making sure everyone has the proper radios and the proper equipment to coordinate these kind of things; what we could do with technology at the borders, at our airports, the retinal scans, and all kinds of things that could spring up and even have some economic stimulus.

What economic stimulus are we getting out of Iraq right now? Nothing. Nothing. It is like putting money and just flushing it. And so I think it is time, and I yield to my friend, but I think it is time that we start straightening this out.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. I will just jump in on one thing. As you watch what they are doing unfold, because, again, we always remind people we don't have any control over this process right now. Hopefully, after November 7, we will be given that opportunity, because the American people, we know, want a new direction. But, Mr. MEEK, I don't know if you had a chance to read one of our papers in south Florida, the Sun Sentinel, the other day, but one of the Members in our delegation on the Republican side actually said the war in Iraq is over. He was actually quoted as saying the war in Iraq is over and that we won the war, and that now we are fighting a faceless enemy. Which is absolutely true, we are fighting a faceless enemy.

But I was flying here and reading the newspaper, reading that article, and wondering what planet this person was on and whether there an alternate universe he was observing. Because anyone that we know, no matter what their party affiliation, clearly recognizes that we are at war. This is called the war in Iraq. This is major, major conflict, where more than 2,600 troops have been killed. Ask the families of those troops whether they think the war is over. How about the wounded, the more than 20,000 wounded, whether they think the war is over and we won.

If that is the reality that our Republican colleagues are operating under, no wonder they are taking us in the direction that we are going in.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. And let us look at the colossal failure that has been made here. We have now, because of the decimation in Iraq and the inability of a post-war plan that Rumsfeld didn't want anyone to talk about, and not propping up some government there to combat Iran, now you have Iran as the major player in this region. And they are talking about nuclear weapons, they are funding terrorists through the back door in Iraq through Hamas. Through all of the terrorist organizations in the Middle East, Iran is the one stoking this fire.

We have put ourselves in such a position of weakness. Now, we have troops there and troops in Afghanistan, too, so what if something else happens? And I think it is interesting, and our ranking member on the Armed Services Committee, Mr. SKELTON, has been talking about this for a long time, and it is difficult to even fathom this, but one-half of all Army units, deployed and nondeployed, Active and Reserve, one-half of all Army units received the lowest readiness rating any fully formed unit can receive, with a decline in levels that haven't been seen since Vietnam.

So our army is not ready. Not only are we in a quagmire in Iraq, we have problems in Afghanistan, the poppy crop is growing like gang busters, it is a major parts of their underground economy that is going to the terrorists, now our army is not meeting the readiness capabilities in case something else happens.

And we are in a position of weakness with China because we are borrowing billions of dollars from them, so how do you negotiate with all these people from a position of weakness? You can't. It has been America that has always balanced the budgets so we didn't have to borrow money from people; very selective in our foreign policy; making sure we had friends and allies. All down the tubes in one presidency.

Yield to my friend.

Mr. MEEK of Florida. Mr. RYAN, I don't give the President total credit for all of this. He couldn't do it by himself. You have to have a rubber stamp Congress to give you full power, full power to be able to take the country down the track it has gone down. And the bottom line is that a Republican majority, from the leadership on down to the newly elected member of the Republican conference, has to take credit for giving the President the kind of power that he has right now.

We are fighting wars abroad for "democracy," when here at home we don't celebrate that very democracy that so many people speak of. We have individuals that are on their third and fourth deployment. I am on the Armed Services Committee, so I get the reports. I get the letters from my constituents saying my husband, my wife, my mother, my dad, my niece, my uncle, my next-door neighbor is on his way back to Iraq again. Because we went alone. We didn't go with a true coalition.

So I think it would be hard, if I was a part of the Republican majority, to try to muster up some talking points for the floor right now; to be able to say, well, okay, some of this stuff is not believable, so let's try to attack some members of the Democratic caucus. Let's try to muster up and embellish a "record" on possibly being weak on terrorism or being weak on national security. That's where the Republican majority is now. Mr. Speaker, they are gasping for political air right now.

But you know what is so important about this issue and this discussion about national security is that it is supposed to be nonpolitical. And, unfortunately, it is. And that is because the majority hasn't allowed bipartisanship in this House for so many years, and so they can hang it around their neck and say it is our war. It is our failure as it relates to national security and border security. Don't act like it is a crisis right now. You allowed it to happen under your watch. You have been the rubber stamp Congress.

Now, Mr. RYAN and Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ, let me just tell you what the rubber stamp Congress has accomplished borrowing $1.05 trillion from foreign nations in 4 years. In more than 224 years of this country's history, with 42 presidents. $1.01 trillion they were able to borrow in 4 years, and this Republican Congress and the President has allowed that to happen.

These are the countries here that own a part of the American apple pie: Japan, China, the U.K., the Caribbean, Taiwan, Germany, and OPEC nations. You know, this whole oil thing that we will talk about in a minute. Korea and Canada. They all have their hands in the pockets of the U.S. taxpayers, not because of the U.S. taxpayers but because of the Republican majority's out-of-control spending.

Oil companies? Oh, wow. At this time in history, when they unearth what happened under this Republican majority and this Presidency, they will see these record breaking profits. There was a meeting in the White House, I have the article to prove it, and I talk about it all time. It was a special meeting that took place in the White House, and the Vice President's aides and all met. And then the policymakers came here to the Congress, to the rubber stamp Congress.

Now, let me set this up here, because we believe in the 30-something Working Group, in third-party validators. Washington Post, Wednesday, November 16, 2005, White House document shows that executives from big oil companies met with Vice President CHENEY's Energy Task Force in 2001, something long expected by environmentalists but denied as recently as last week by the White House. Last week, industry officials testified before Congress. Document obtained by the Post on November 2005 shows that officials from Exxon Mobil, Phillips, Shell Oil Companies, and BP of America met in the White House complex with Cheney aides to develop a national energy policy, parts of which became law, and parts of which are still being debated in Congress.

That was 2001, Mr. Speaker. Look what happened:

2002, $34 billion, record-breaking profits; 2003, $53 billion; 2004, $84 billion; 2005, $113 billion in profits for oil companies. Meanwhile, average Americans are spending through the nose and trying to make it to work and to drop their kids off.

Look what happened here. This is what happened under the Republican majority and a rubber stamp Congress. So shall it be written and so shall it be done.

E-85, we talk about alternative fuels, flex vehicles. Every magazine I open talks about flex vehicles. Here is the bottom line. The Republican Congress have allowed these oil companies to be able to do anything they want to do when they want to do it. This is an actual pump here at an Exxon-Mobil station. It says you cannot use your Mobil credit card to buy E-85. Meanwhile, we can continue to feed off the Saudi Arabian Middle East, what got us in this thing in the first place policies. You can use your oil card there. You can buy a bag of chips, you can buy a carton cigarettes, but E-85 that is produced in the Midwest versus the Middle East, you cannot use your Mobil credit card for that.

And on retirement packages, and I don't know very much about Lee Raymond, but the bottom line is he is a retired executive from Exxon-Mobil with a $398 million retirement package and a $2 million tax break. This is what happens with a Republican majority.

Again, the Republican majority rubber stamp, don't worry about balancing the budget. Democrats, we tried to balance the budget. We have done it before. We have tried to do it under this Republican majority. Not one Republican vote to balance the budget on rollcall vote 87, March 17, 2005.

Ranking Member SPRATT and the Budget Committee put it forth again. Failed. Not one Republican vote on rollcall vote 91 in 2004. Their will and desire is not there. The American people deserve balance.

Minimum wage. Yes, there was some bill that came up before we left for the break to talk about minimum wage, a bill that the Republican majority knew that the Senate would not take up and would never make it to the President's desk. But because we were hammering them on it, they said let's pass this. They added all kinds of stuff. It is called the Potomac two-step.

This chart, the bottom line is these are not minimum wage increases, these are increases for Members of Congress. This is our pay. This is what we make. Oh, look at them. Since 1997 there hasn't been an increase in the minimum wage, and you not a minimum wage worker right now, and I am not talking to the Members of Congress, I am talking to the American people, the bottom line is if the minimum wage goes up, and that means if you are a salaried worker, then your wages will go up. But the bottom line is that it is a fact that the Republican Congress has said not over our dead body. We are going to get our increase, but we are not going to give the American people a minimum wage increase. It goes on and on and on.

I am going to close with this, the Prime Minister of Iraq and the President of Iran. Mr. DELAHUNT brought this picture out last night. I don't care whichever way you cut, $300 billion of spending, over 2,000 troops, thousands and thousands of American troops injured, here in Washington, D.C. "stay the course," no plan.

The Secretary of Defense says if you talk about or say anything about redeployment of troops or withdrawing from Iraq, you are fired. No question from the Congress, no response from the Congress. The Secretary of Defense is not called to the Hill immediately. The Republican Congress, what are they saying? They are saying nothing, Mr. Speaker. So accountability is guess what, this is a la the U.S. taxpayer through the Republican majority because of a lack of diplomacy and a lack of plan and going to a war of choice versus after Osama bin Laden in Afghanistan and giving those troops in Afghanistan the support they need.

So Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ, Mr. RYAN, I rest my case. The bottom line is that was not a message for Democrats or Republicans. It was not a message for Independents or the Green Party or other party affiliations. That is a message for Americans. The bottom line is whatever you may feel, if you are a member of the Republican Executive Committee or you have always voted Republican or you always voted Independent, you have to have issues with what the facts are.

I yield to Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ.

Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ. Thank you. I want to pick up on the litany of issues you were going through because we need to zero in on how we make ourselves safer because the other side is going to spend a lot of time and they are spending a lot of time claiming they are the party of national security and they are the ones that need to be entrusted to keep us safe.

The last time I checked, that is who was in charge of keeping us safe, and they are not doing such a hot job. Mr. RYAN talked about how we like to use third party validators here. We absolutely do. I am going to use a third-party validator of Governor Kean, former Governor Kean of New Jersey who co-chaired the bipartisan 9/11 Commission and Lee Hamilton, a former well-respected Democratic Congressman who was the other co-chair of the 9/11 Commission. Here is what they said on Monday, September 11, 2006. "As we mark the fifth anniversary of the terrorist attacks, Americans ask: Are we safer? Two years ago, the 9/11

Commission found that our government failed in its duty to protect us. The commission, which the two of us led, made 41 recommendations to ensure that this Nation does everything possible to protect its people.

"Many of our recommendations, including those to reorganize the intelligence community, were written into law. Yet no law is self-executing. Implementation is often the harder step."

We know that implementation is the job of the Congress. The 9/11 Commission couldn't recommend things into thin air and suddenly they would happen. They have to be adopted into law and funded.

They continued, "We issued a report card on our recommendations in December. It included 10 Cs, 12 Ds, and 4 Fs. What we argued then," and this was September 11, 2006, 2 days ago, "is still true now: Americans are safer, but we are not yet safe.

"So what do we need to do?" This is their words, not ours.

"First, homeland security dollars must be allocated wisely. Right now, those funds are spread around like revenue-sharing projects." We are basically using the opportunity to spend money on homeland security for turkeys, we used to call them in Florida. We call them earmarks here. That means little itty-bitty projects, and every Member knows that there are potential security targets in their own district, but we don't nitpick homeland security. You don't spread the money around so thinly so you never make truly one area or region or community truly safe.

They said that until Congress passes a law to allocate funding on the basis of risk and vulnerabilities, scarce dollars will continue to be squandered.

"Second, States and localities need to have emergency response plans and practice them regularly. Hurricane Katrina taught us a lesson that we should have learned from September 11: From the moment disaster strikes, all first responders need to know what to do and who is in charge."

Do they know that? No.

"Third, we called on Congress to give first responders a slice of the broadcast spectrum ideal for emergency communications." That won't happen until 2009. What in God's name are we waiting for? 2009? What happened to the interoperability in communications that was so essential that was the major problem on 9/11?

I don't have time to go through all of the recommendations, Mr. MEEK, because homeland security is so woefully lacking and the congressional leadership here has done, I can't even use that word, congressional leadership has done such a poor job of implementing their recommendations and making us safer that it is laughable. It is ridiculous. It is outrageous for them to suggest that they are the party of national security and safety. I could go on and on.

Mr. RYAN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I want to share as we end here from the Newt Gingrich commentary from the Wall Street Journal where he talks about some of this stuff, about trying to figure out what the solutions are by figuring or understanding what the problems are.

Then he talks about, and this is his advice to George Bush, "Then he should announce an honest review of what has not worked in the first 5 years of the war." That is what we have been saying. Let's find out what has not been working. Based on the findings, he should initiate a sweeping transformation of the White House national security apparatus. Good idea.

The current hopelessly slow and inefficient interagency system should be replaced by a new metrics-based and ruthlessly disciplined integrated system of accountability. That is what we want to do. Accountability. Let's sit down and have hearings and figure this out. The House of Representatives has a role to play in this oversight. The President should insist upon creating a new, aggressive, entrepreneurial national security system. It is time to do this.

Following this initiative, the President should propose a dramatic and deep overhaul of homeland security grounded in metrics-based performance to create a system capable of meeting the seriousness of the threat.

This is about reforming the institution of government. The former Speaker understands it. The Democratic Party understands it, and the only people who seem not to get it are the people who serve in this administration and the high levels of this Congress. I hope it changes. All of the charts that we are using tonight are available on this website, www.HouseDemocrats.gov/30Something. It has been an enjoyable evening once again.

Mr. MEEK of Florida. Mr. RYAN, I want to say that Ms. WASSERMAN SCHULTZ is going to get an opportunity to go through her homeland security piece when we are on the floor again.

I want to encourage members to go on HouseDemocrats.gov and get a copy of the real security plan that we have here. We even have it in Spanish. Also energizing America is on there, and also an innovation agenda that has a lot of CEOs and leaders in the education field. They say they endorse our plan.

With that, we thank the Democratic leadership for allowing us to have this time. It is an honor to address the House once again.

THE ROAD TO AFFORDABLE HEALTH CARE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. SCHMIDT). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 4, 2005, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BURGESS) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. BURGESS. Madam Speaker, I too would like to say it is a privilege to come to the floor of the House and be able to address the House on important matters of the day.

In my first term in the House, the 108th Congress, and my background is actually as a physician, and when I came to Congress in 2003, one of the things that you do with a doctor when you put them in Congress is put them on the Transportation Committee. So I had a very good session of Congress on the Transportation Committee. I was fortunate enough after my reelection in 2004 to be placed on the Energy and Commerce Committee on the Subcommittee on Health. So having had experience in Congress on both roads and now health, what I thought I would talk about tonight is the road to affordable health care.

Some of the things that I want to talk about tonight are the overall affordability of health care and where we are in this country and where we are going. I want to talk about the public versus the private systems in this country. We obviously need to talk about the uninsured and some of the programs to help with the uninsured, federally qualified health centers, association health plans and health savings accounts.

You almost can't talk about health care in this country without talking about liability reform, and, indeed, we do need to touch on that, and the sustainable growth rate, patient access for Medicare patients, how physicians are reimbursed under the Medicare system, an item that is becoming of critical importance if we want to keep some of our best doctors providing care for some of our most complex and challenging patients.

Information technology has been one of the buzzwords up here ever since I started my time in Congress, and, indeed, we need to talk about that. Preparedness, whether it be from terrorism, whether it be from natural disaster, or whether it be from an outside source like the worldwide flu pandemic that hit this country in 1918, we need to be prepared for that should it happen.

We need to talk a little bit about the number of State mandates that are on insurance policies that tend to drive the cost of health insurance up and thereby reduce the overall affordability of health care.

There are some interesting things that are being done in some of the States as they approach some of the difficulties they had in providing health care to their citizens. I would like to particularly talk about Governor Mitt Romney's plan up in Massachusetts that provides for personal responsibility in health care.

Finally, if there is time, we will talk a little bit about the reauthorization of trauma centers in this country. We will talk a little bit about transparency, raise transparency for price cost and quality in our health care system and maybe just a little bit about long-term care, because that is one of the drivers that is going to vastly increase the cost of Medicare and Medicaid as more and more baby boomers retire.

Let me just remove this for a minute so it is not distracting to any other Member of the House who might happen to come by and look at it.

We talk about the current problem facing us. We spend a fair amount of money in this country on health care. We have a gross domestic product of upwards of $11 trillion, and we spend about 16 percent of that on health care; $1.4 trillion is spent on health care in this country. In fact, Medicare and Medicaid alone in our HHS appropriations bill, which we have yet to pass, that bill will probably be upwards of $660 billion just for Medicare and Medicaid.

Of course, we have the Indian health service, the veterans health service, Federal prisons also providing health care, so there is a significant chunk of this Nation's health care that is already borne by the Federal Government. The other approximately 50 percent is broken down to that care that is just simply not compensated or not remunerated. You might call it charity care or just simply uncompensated care. Some of it is paid for out of pocket or self-pay, and certainly the lion's share is borne by the private insurance market in this country.

Well, between the public and the private sectors, how is the best way to get more health care coverage into the hands of more people? Should we just simply expand the public sector to the point where it encompasses all or nearly all of the health care expenditures in this country, a so-called Canadian system? I don't think so. Even the Canadian Supreme Court in 2004 and 2005 said that they had a problem with access in their country, and, in fact, access to a waiting list did not equate to access to care.

In the British national health service, some of the most expensive care in the world is in Great Britain. They have a two-tier system. They have their national health service, and then they have private care, and that private care in that country, the cost for that, has gone significantly up. The waiting time for someone who is over 80 years of age, that becomes really problematic. You put someone over 80 years of age on a waiting list for a procedure, a hip replacement, a heart bypass, and the likelihood of them being able to sustain themselves until they receive that service starts to go down. That's unfair as well.

Well, what about the private sector? I believe that we have the best health care system in the world in this country, largely because of contributions of the private sector.

We have more innovation in this country than almost anywhere else in the world. We have the ability to integrate new technologies rapidly into the treatment rooms, the operating rooms, into the health care system in general in this country.

Finally, because we have such a significant component that is borne by the private sector, we have willing sellers and willing buyers. The waiting list is not as big an issue, if an issue at all, in most parts of this country.

Some of the other things that we will talk about, as we talk about expanding the private sector, or at least maintaining the component of the private sector in this country, is the little bit of the history of what we called at one time "medical savings accounts." We now refer to them as health savings accounts as they were expanded significantly under the Medicare Modernization Act of 2003.

But the old medical savings accounts had a lot of restrictions on them. There weren't many companies who stepped up and provided that type of an insurance product, and, as a consequence, you never saw the savings with medical savings accounts that, really, should have been there.

I will contrast that with health savings accounts now. You can go to your search engine, you can type in "health savings account" into Google, and you are offered a vast array of different companies and plans that sell, market on the Internet. With, in fact, the competitive power of the Internet, many of these plans, these high-deductible health savings account plans are priced well within reach, of, say, a young person just getting out of college.

Contrast that with the mid-1990s when a young person getting out of college who didn't have an employer-based health insurance, who just wanted to go buy an individual policy, I know, because I had experience with that in my own family, you just almost could not buy an individual health insurance policy for a single individual in the marketplace. No one was interested in selling that to you at any price. But now you can go on the Internet, and you can find a lot of products that are available.

The last time I looked, which, albeit it was a couple of months ago, but for a young person, 25 years, male, in the State of Texas, for a high-deductible plan, would range between $50 and $60. There were some that were even cheaper, but they were companies that I didn't recognize the name of, and I certainly wouldn't recommend that someone buy from someone they have never heard of before. But there were some reputable names, named insurance companies that had providers, provider lists that were more than adequate, that were for sale at a price that I would consider affordable for a young entrepreneur just perhaps starting their own business or leaving the protective fold of a group health plan from their employer.

How we keep the private sector involved and keep health care affordable is truly one of the challenges that we in this Congress, not just Republicans and not just Democrats, but both sides of the aisle, need to take on and meet head on.

Some of the downsides of going to a complete nationalized system is I am afraid we will lose a lot of the energy toward innovation. When you stop and think about it, we have had three Presidents in my lifetime who have espoused programs of a nationalized health insurance, President Truman, President Nixon and President Clinton most recently.

Under Truman, if they had gotten their way and nationalized health care, what if, what if we had stifled innovation with that type of maneuver? The antibiotics that we used today would be penicillin and tetracycline, those that were most commonly in use in the late 1940s and early 1950s.

Under the Nixon administration, what if they had gotten their way with the nationalized health insurance with, again, a chilling effect on innovation? We might be looking at treating psychiatric illness still with Thorazine rather than having the availability of the very potent antipsychotics and the selective serotonin reuptake inhibitors that we have now today. During the Clinton administration in the 1990s, there are just untold innovations that have happened.

Even in the last 15 years, there are innovations in the treatment of arthritis, innovations in the treatment of osteoporosis. In fact, if innovation had been stifled in 1992, osteoporosis would be treated today with estrogen replacement and pain medicines, as opposed to having the newer phosphonates or medicines like Fosamax and Actonel and Boniva that are available to us today.

When we look at the uninsured in this country, it is an election year, so we can certainly expect the number to go up. The most recent U.S. Census Bureau was 46 million people uninsured.

Interestingly enough, between the years 2004 and 2005, there were 1 million more people who had health insurance in 2005 than had it in 2004, and I suspect the reason for that was because of the expansion of health savings accounts.

But when someone is labeled uninsured, it means that for any portion of a year they lacked health insurance. It doesn't always mean, though, that they have no access to health care. Access to health care, I will tell you as someone who made a career of being a physician, access to health care is uniformly available. It may be expensive care, it may be care that is accessed far later in the course of the disease than anyone would recommend, but access to health care does not, or not having health insurance, does not equate to not having access to health care.

In fact, this Congress in the 1980s mandated that anyone arriving in an emergency room would have access to health care, whether or not they had the ability to pay for it. In fact, as a physician, I was required to respond to that patient within 30 minutes or a reasonable timeframe or face some rather significant civil money penalties. So lack of insurance does not equate to lacking access to health care.

We also have a system in this country, under the Federally qualified health center system, that provides health care and continuation of care in a medical home to between 15 and 17 million recipients. That is a significant number of people who lack health insurance but have access to a medical home and have access to care when they need it and, in fact, have continuity of care that in a lot of cases rivals that of any HMO out there.

There are some things we could do, I think, to strengthen the ability of federally qualified health centers to provide care when it is needed. I represent an area of north Texas, Denton County, Tarrant County. Fort Worth is the largest city in my district.

Last year when Hurricane Katrina hit the gulf coast, we had a number of persons who were displaced by Hurricane Katrina, who came to the Dallas-Fort Worth area, individuals who came needing medical services and not being able to wait the 6 to 8 years that is now required to set up a federally qualified health center.

Indeed, last year, the Deficit Reduction Act, I tried to introduce amendments that would streamline the process of setting up a federally qualified health care that would make more of those facilities available to more patients so that they could have more services available to them.

Unfortunately, those amendments did not stand during the conference report. But there is still an opportunity to work on streamlining the startup procedures for federally qualified health centers. Indeed, in my district I am working on a couple of those even as we speak.

Another issue is having affordable products for companies to sell. You got 46 million uninsured. Don't think that Aetna Life and Casualty wouldn't look at that as potential market share if we would provide them the tools that they need to have an affordable policy available to individuals.

We will talk about this a little bit more in just a moment, but to give some relief for some of the mandates that are put on insurance companies, where they have to offer brow lifts and involved infertility treatments to every person who purchases their insurance when it may not be necessary, and, indeed, the cost of adding those benefits may be keeping insurance benefits from a greater segment of the population.

On the concept of health savings accounts, we did expand them significantly during the Medicare Modernization Act. There, in fact, is legislation out there this year. ERIC CANTOR, from Virginia, and myself have introduced legislation to expand and make a little bit more flexible the health savings account.

One of the things, in the interest of full disclosure, some employers will provide employees an amount of money to have each year to perhaps pay incidentals or eyeglasses or maybe even help pay for a higher deductible that is selected to offset some of the cost of the insurance premiums, these so-called use-it-or-lose-it funds that a company might provide a patient every year. But when you get toward the end of the year, and gosh, nobody wants to lose that money, they want to get the use of that money, it may be as much as $1,800 or $2,000, so we actually incent people to go out and spend more money on health care that perhaps they might not even need.

There was a big, full-page ad in the Dallas Morning News right before I left to come back up here about a doctor who provides refractive surgery, or LASIK, for someone's eyes, and if you have a use-it-or-lose-it policy at your work, look into buying yourself LASIK for Christmas this year, because you will lose that money if you don't spend it. Again, a kind of the wrong incentive and the wrong message to send to employees that yes, you have to spend at least $2,000 on health care every year or you are going to be penalized.

For people who are young and healthy who feel that they are bullet-proof and they don't even need to buy insurance, making these HSA premiums payable with pre-tax dollars would be a powerful incentive to get these individuals to buy into the concept that they do need to insure themselves.

For low-income individuals, people who don't make enough money to even cover the relatively low cost of a Health Savings Account insurance premium, provide them with a pre-fundable tax credit or a voucher, if you will, to be able to buy that insurance, or perhaps at least buy down the cost of the insurance premium for someone who is not unemployed but doesn't make enough money to pay for health insurance.

What about someone who has got a chronic disease? A Health Savings Account may not be the best option for them. It might be, if we allowed employers to make a larger contribution, a larger or greater HSA contribution for someone with a chronic illness, say someone with diabetes, someone who is in remission from leukemia, a valuable employee that an employer wants to be able to keep on the payroll and keep on providing their insurance benefit and would welcome the opportunity to be able to buy one of these lower cost Health Savings Accounts and yet contribute a greater amount to that person's deductible.

Allowing flexibility to coordinate Health Savings Accounts with existing health coverage, like a flexible spending account or a health reimbursement account, and allowing early retirees to use HSA savings to pay for insurance coverage premiums until they are of an age that they can be covered on Medicare.

But probably the most powerful tool that we could employ is providing a pre-tax treatment of health care expenses incurred under HSA compatible plans. That has been something that has met with some resistance, but truly I think it is time to investigate that and take that up.

Association Health Plans. You hear it talked about. I have heard it talked about every year since I have been in Congress. Over 60 percent of all uninsured workers are employed by small businesses with fewer than 100 employees. But what if we were to give small business, give those small employers the ability to pool together, and if they are of a similar business model, say they are chambers of commerce, or say they are realtors, or say they are physicians or dentists offices, if they could pool together to be able to get the purchasing power of a larger entity, then they would be able to command more control in the insurance market and command a more cost-effective premium.

What if we allowed them to do this across State lines? That has been the difficulty in allowing, or for the Senate or the other body to allow the institution of Health Savings Accounts. They came very close this past year. I know they worked very hard on that over there.

Association Health Plans may not immediately bring down the number of uninsured like expanding Health Savings Accounts will, but allowing Association Health Plans would provide some measure of stability and affordability in insurance premiums that would allow small businesses more certainty in that market and would keep them from leaving the health insurance market for their employees.

Well, as promised, it is almost impossible to talk about the affordability of health care and not bring up the question of liability, medical liability reform. We have done that I don't know how many times on the House side.

Some states, my home State of Texas, has made great strides in improving the liability picture back home in the State of Texas. But these State-by-State solutions are in constant jeopardy by special interests who will reappear every legislative session to try to undo, for example, the good that they did in my home State of Texas.

When we passed H.R. 5, which was the Medical Liability Reform Act in this body in 2003, the Congressional Budget Office scored that as a savings of $15 billion over 5 years. I believe the amount really will turn out to be much greater than that because of the pernicious effect from a spending standpoint of defensive medicine. In fact, a study done out of Stanford, California, in 1996, in the Medicare population alone showed that the practice of defensive medicine cost about $30 billion a year in 1996 dollars to the Medicare system. So there would be a significant cost savings across the board in this country if we would be able to pass some type of meaningful liability reform. We are wasting money by not pushing for this on a national level.

What happens if we don't change? Well, several years ago when I was on the transportation committee we had a field hearing up in ANWR. On the way back we stopped in Nome, Alaska, for lunch and kind of had a Chamber of Commerce type lunch there in Nome, Alaska.

Because it is unusual to have a congressional delegation come through Nome, Alaska, all of the people turned out for that, including all 19 members of the medical staff of the hospital there at Nome. They spoke to me with great concern saying, I hope you will be able to get that medical liability bill passed, because we can't afford the insurance premiums for an anesthesiologist at our hospital.

I said to the person sitting next to me, what kind of medicine do you practice, sir? He said I am an OB-GYN, just like you.

How do you practice OB-GYN without an anesthesiologist in your hospital? Forget an epidural for pain relief during labor. What do you do if the patient requires a C-section?

He said, we get an airplane and take the patient to Anchorage.

Anchorage is an hour-and-a-half away, and that is if the weather is good. Nome, Alaska, as I understand it, has episodes of bad weather where aircraft can't take off. I fail to see, Madam Speaker, how we are furthering the cause of medical safety, patient safety, by allowing this system to continue.

In addition, the head of one of the residency programs in New York was speaking with me one night. I asked if the medical liability climate was affecting their ability to get OB-GYN residents into their program. It was related to me that evening that, well, Congressman, we are taking people into our program that we wouldn't have interviewed 5 years ago.

Wait a minute. These are our children's doctors they are educating today. How are we furthering the cause of patient safety, how are we enhancing patient safety by allowing that system to continue? The best and the brightest are not going to go into fields like OB-GYN or neurosurgery, so-called high-risk specialties that might expose them to a greater degree of liability peril.

Well, in Texas, we did do what I consider a very good thing as far as medical liability was concerned, and we did pass a so-called cap in Texas, a cap on non-economic damages.

It was a little different from the House-passed bill. The House-passed bill was a $250,000 cap on non-economic damages. In Texas we passed a bill that would cap $250,000 of non-economic damages for the doctor, another $250,000 for the hospital, and another $250,000 for a second hospital or nursing home, if one was involved. This bill required the passage of a constitutional amendment in Texas in 2003, and it did indeed pass, and now Texas is well into its third year of this medical liability reform.

What have been the results? Texas Medical Liability Trust, my old insurer of record when I left the practice of medicine in early 2003, the cost for premiums from Texas Medical Liability Trust, coupled with the rebates that had been given to doctors who were their customers over the last 3 years, have now totaled to over 20 percent. That is significant, because in the 2 years before I left the practice of medicine, my rates went up by 20 percent and 30 percent for those 2 years before I left the active clinical practice of medicine. So it is a significant change that has happened in Texas.

One of the major advantages has been what has happened with mid-sized, not-for-profit hospitals who were self-insuring for medical liability before. Many of these smaller hospitals have found millions of dollars that are now returned to them in medical liability premiums that are available for capital expansion, to hire more nurses, the kinds of things you want your mid-size, not-for-profit community hospital to be able to do.

We have some other options in our Committee on Energy and Commerce on our Health Subcommittee. We have talked about some of the other options. Arbitration, mediation, certainly if there could be an expansion of those to allow for an earlier settlement or even the concept of an early offer for someone who actually has been harmed.

One of the really unspoken but one of the significant downsides of our medical liability system is it takes on the average of almost 8 years for a patient who is truly harmed to receive any type of compensation. Then the amount of compensation they receive is strikingly reduced by legal fees and court costs and preparation costs and all of the things that go into that. So there is a very lengthy process that doesn't really help anyone as far as getting money to someone who is truly injured.

The concept of an early offer or even arbitration or mediation, we will have to make some adjustments to what is referred to as the National Practitioner Data Bank, and hopefully my committee will be able to take that up in the near future.

Let's shift gears for just a minute and talk a little bit about something that significantly affects patient access to physicians, and that is the proposed reductions in physician payment that are going to occur under the Medicare system, the so-called reductions because of the sustainable growth rate formula, something that I believe needs to be fixed and it needs to be fixed this year.

Under the sustainable growth rate formula, physicians' compensation is basically set. It is an attempt to limit the amount of expenditures of medical care under the Medicare system by controlling volume and intensity of services.

Other parts of medical care delivered under the Medicare system, the year-over-year rate is calculated based on the cost of input, a market basket type of update that is based on medical inflation. This rather graphically shows the results of the two different types of formulas.

Compare the reimbursement for the Medicare Advantage Plans, compare the reimbursement rates for hospitals or nursing homes with the reimbursement rate of physicians. This blue line here represents the year 2002. That was the first year that a cut was allowed to proceed under the sustainable growth rate formula. It was about 4.4 percent, what is euphemistically referred to as a "negative update."

The next 3 years, Congress came in at the last minute and said, we will give you a little bit of a bump up. As you can see, a little bit less than 2 percent for each of those years.

Last year, we held the SGR rate at a zero percent update. It didn't go up or down. Almost anywhere else in Washington, if you hold spending level for a year, you are accused of having cut benefits. But that is what we did for our physicians last year. And really part of that story is we didn't do it by January 1, we had to come back after the first of the year to provide that zero percent update. In reality, January 1 physicians got again a 4.4 percent negative update.

Yes, the administrator of the Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services did come in and say that as long as Congress does what it is supposed to do at the end of January, which we did, that CMS would come back and reimburse physicians for that amount of money to bring them up to that zero percent. Unfortunately, there are many private insurance companies out there that pay into Medicare; so doctors took a pay cut for other private insurance, which was never the intent of this Congress. It was never the intent of the administration of the Senate, but nevertheless, that is what we did.

The purple line here represents the proposed 5.1 percent negative update that is to go into effect if we do not affirmatively do something before January 1, and that is why I say it is incumbent upon us to do something, in fact, this month before we wrap things up on the 30th of September.

I would just like to make a couple more points about this graph. Cutting Medicare rates hurts all physicians and patients. Private health plans and other government programs follow Medicare's reimbursement trends. They look at Medicare's reimbursement rates, and they structure their plans to pay physicians the same, regardless of how much it costs the physician to provide the care. TRICARE, for example, reimburses at a rate that is 85 percent of Medicare. Many of the private plans will reimburse at rates that vary between 85 percent and 120 percent of Medicare. But, again, it was never the intention of this Congress to provide a break for private insurance with the SGR formula.

Setting up the silos for Medicare reimbursement is itself flawed. We have a silo for the Medicare Advantage programs, a funding silo for hospitals, for nursing homes, and physicians. With more procedures and more services being delivered outside of hospitals, the payments should be based on the highest quality and most cost-effective treatment setting. Elements of the sustainable growth rate formula originally were designed to control utilization by reducing physician fees. The primary drivers of utilization, however, are new, improved technologies, patients' increased awareness of treatment options, and the general shift from inpatient to outpatient care. Physicians control none of these factors.

And there is even one more factor over which physicians have no control, and those are the mandates that this Congress puts on Medicare for types of medical care that have to be included. The Welcome to Medicare Physical, I personally think that is a good idea. I think you are going to pick up problems where you can more timely diagnose and treat those problems. But it costs money and that money comes out of the physicians' position of the SGR formula.

Again, in the Deficit Reduction Act, we passed a measure that would require every person on Medicare to have an EKG at age 65. That money comes from somewhere. It does not come out of the hospitals. It does not come out of the Medicare Advantage plans. It comes out of the physicians' part of the sustainable growth rate.

We also decided that everyone should have a screening for an abdominal aortic aneurism. It may or may not be worthwhile, but that money is going to be taken out of the physicians' portion of the SGR formula. And, again, physicians have no control over that utilization.

The legislation introduced right at the end of July, H.R. 5866, would put the focus to ensure that elderly patients have better access to the health care they need.

Four goals of this legislation: ensure that physicians receive a full and fair payment for services rendered; create quality performance measures that keep consumers informed; improve the quality improvement organizations' overall accountability and flexibility; and, finally, find reasonable methods, reasonable offsets for paying for these benefits.

For fixing the SGR, for title I of that bill, it ends the application of the sustainable growth rate formula January 1. So January 1, instead of a pay cut, SGR would go away. It substitutes for the sustainable growth rate formula a different formula. One that was derived by a group called MedPAC, the Medicare Payment Physicians Advisory Commission, called the Medicare economic index. And this shifts physician compensation so it will more closely mirror hospitals and Medicare Advantage plans. It bases updates and physicians' compensation on the market basket.

What does it cost to deliver the care and how much did that cost increase over the past year based on medical inflation? That is the Medicare economic index. We will use the Medicare economic index minus 1 percent, which will be an increase of about 2 percent for physicians for the year 2007. And it basically puts us back on a more market-sensitive system. What is health care inflation? What is it costing the hospitals, the Medicare Advantage plans, and the doctors to deliver the care and compensate them accordingly? Under the quality measures, in conjunction with physician specialty organizations, it creates a voluntary system of evidenced-based quality measures. It gives doctors feedback on their performance. As a physician, you are always wondering how you are doing; how do you compare to your peers; how do patients rate you. This is information that we are always seeking. It also allows patients to be selective. If a doctor elects not to voluntarily report, that information could be available to patients when they make their selection as to what physician they see.

There will be offsets in the bill. Currently, the offsets that are made are looking at the Medicare Stabilization Fund from the Medicare Modernization Act and eliminating the double payment for medical education costs in the Medicare Advantage plans.

The important thing here is it keeps the power in the health care community. It does not devolve that power to the Federal Government. And it is just a start. It is a start on the path of developing a product that will ultimately be satisfactory to all of the stakeholders.

A quote from the AMA news: "We are encouraged by the introduction of this legislation that would replace the current flawed Medicare formula," from the AMA Chair, Dr. Cecil B. Wilson.

One of the things that is talked about a lot here on the House floor, and, in fact, we passed H.R. 4157 in July, which is the Health Information Technology Promotion Act, there is no question that health information technology holds a great deal of promise for being able to streamline the delivery of medical care to provide a method of continuity of care if something happens. With electronic medical records, those are then available online. And if something happens to a patient's original medical record, all is not lost. You can go to a safe, secure, sequestered Web site in order to retrieve that patient's medical data.

I will admit I came late to the table on health information technology and its promise to improve medical care in this country. My own attempts at electronic medical records, electronic prescribing seemed to increase the time involved with every patient interaction. And, of course, there is no additional compensation for that increased time with every patient interaction.

But last January, my committee, the Oversight an Investigations Subcommittee of Energy and Commerce, went to New Orleans and had an opportunity to visit Charity Hospital. And there in the basement in Charity Hospital we were still walking through water that was still in some places ankle deep, looking in the medical records room there in the basement of Charity Hospital. Here were rows and rows and rows of medical records that were absolutely ruined when the basement flooded and the water came in and now had black mold growing up and down the sides to some places where you couldn't even read those bright pastel numbers that were on the sides of medical records.

Clearly, Katrina showed us how vulnerable our medical data can be even in a venerable institution like Charity Hospital in New Orleans that you just assume is always going to be there and those records are always going to be there. Well, this time they weren't. And when some of those individuals came to Texas and came to north Texas, it made delivery of their medical care much more difficult.

The bill that we passed does provide for updating some standards, reporting on the American health information community, with a strategic plan for coordinating the implementation of health information technology.

Well, talking about Charity Hospital, talking about New Orleans, I mentioned that we were going to discuss preparedness. And we are just beyond the 1-year anniversary of Hurricane Katrina. We have to step back and ask what we have learned. While we watched that hurricane, my wife and I, coming up the Gulf of Mexico, it was almost like watching a train wreck in process. We were transfixed by the hourly reports of the progress of the hurricane. It looked like it was just going to hit the central city of New Orleans and just at the last minute took a little bit of a turn back to the east, and the central city of New Orleans was spared. And I think the headline in my paper was "Bullet Dodged," or something to that effect. It was only later, not even that day but the next day, on Tuesday, when we realized how serious the situation had become because of the flooding caused by the breaches in the levees.

Back in my district, my home district in north Texas, we watched, of course, as people were taken into the Astrodome and then, of course, as the waters rose. And people who had not left the city of New Orleans had to be evacuated. Many of them were evacuated to Dallas, Texas, to Fort Worth, Texas, where my district office is in southern Fort Worth. A gymnasium on the same campus where my district office is was converted to a shelter for individuals who had been displaced. We set up 250 pallets that night. We had chicken dinners that were donated by a restaurant, waiting for displaced persons from Katrina when they arrived. Some very tragic stories from some of the individuals who arrived there over the next couple of days.

I got a call from my staff, and they asked me how soon can a woman who has had a C-section sleep on the floor? I said, why do you want to know this information? They said, well, we have three women here who just had C-sections, and we want to know if we can put them on pallets or if we have to find cots for them.

I said, I will be right there.

One of these individuals, her baby had been in intensive care. They were separated in the process of the evacuation. And it was only after several days with my staff spending every hour on the phone that we were finally able to reunite mother and baby. And just this past week they had a 1-year anniversary there in Mississippi with mother and baby, celebrating the anniversary of not the child's birth, but the mother and baby getting back together after the hurricane was over.

The Dallas County Medical Society, on a holiday weekend, Labor Day weekend, the blast fax went out to probably 800 members of the Dallas County Medical Society. A quarter of them showed up in the parking lot of Reunion Arena to help with the medical care for people who had been evacuated from the Louisiana Gulf Coast. What a tremendous story of all of the individuals getting off the buses that evening. They had a triage desk set up. If someone had been off their meds and simply needed meds, there was a mobile pharmacy set up where they could be administered those medications.

And of all of the people who got off the buses that night, in the thousands, only about 200 required hospitalization as a result of having been in a shelter and off their medications for several days. The doctors that were there did a tremendous job of identifying who was sick and who was simply in need of a hot shower and a warm place to sleep and getting back on their medications.

One of the other great stories was there was a lot of fear with this many people crowded into a shelter, would there be an outbreak of transmissible illnesses like gastrointestinal illnesses, infectious diarrhea? They had hand sanitizers. You could not walk 10 feet without someone putting a bottle of hand sanitizer in your hand. People used them repeatedly throughout the day and night, and as a consequence, only a very limited number of people actually had any type of gastrointestinal illness. They were quickly sequestered in another facility, and as a consequence, a public health crisis was averted.

In follow-up, I have traveled to New Orleans twice in the past year, once in October at the request of one of the hospitals down there to try to get some help for their medical providers. And then in January, as I mentioned, our Oversight and Investigation Subcommittee went to New Orleans, and we had a hearing down there. It really was remarkable to see what the difference in preparedness between the Charity Hospital and the private hospitals, Tulane University Medical Center.

HCA hadn't planned necessarily for a hurricane, but they had some disaster plans in place. They had been rehearsed. They had been practiced. And as a consequence, when we were there in January, they were about ready to open their emergency room again. Charity Hospital still appeared to be light years away from being able to reopen.

So some of the lessons that came out of that trip down there were when you have disaster plans, when you have preparedness plans, it is not good enough to just have them and have them on the shelf. And I heard this from nursing homes, and I heard this from hospitals that, unfortunately, there were places that had purchased disaster plans but no one had looked at them. You have got to take them off the shelf, you have got to break the seal, you have got to break the shrink wrap that surrounds them, and you have got to practice them.

Our chairman of the House Government Reform Committee held a series of hearings on what happened in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina. And for any House Member who hasn't read or at least looked at that publication that they put out as a result of those hearings, the title was "Failure of Initiative." That is truly an outstanding work that Chairman DAVIS did, and I know every House Member got a copy of that and I would recommend that they look at that. Remember, this was a committee, a special select committee. It was bipartisan, though many people on the other side of the aisle chose not to participate. It wasn't an unelected, unaccountable commission like the 9/11 Commission. These were our House Members who were truly interested in what happened in the aftermath of Katrina and were very interested in getting it right.

As you think about Hurricane Katrina, as you think about 9/11 and some of the disasters that have befallen not just this country but the world, with the tsunami right after Christmas in 2004, the fact of the matter is we just can't afford to fail next time, whether it is a hurricane, whether it is a terrorist, or whether in fact it is a problem with a worldwide pandemic.

And I won't spend a lot of time on this, because I can talk about the avian flu for an hour in and of its own right, but just a couple of points. As of September 8, 2006, just last week, the World Health Organization had confirmed 244 human cases of avian flu with 143 deaths.

What is so remarkable about this illness is that it seems to be so lethal. That is an over-50 percent mortality rate for influenza. That is unbelievable to have that type of mortality rate.

During the summer months on a trip over to Iraq and Afghanistan, I was actually able to stop in Geneva for a few hours and talk to some of the folks at the World Health Organization. At that time, when I was there, there were coordinating efforts between 192 different countries. Dr. Michael Ryan, who is the director of the Strategic Health Operations Center, provides strategic support and global coordination to the World Health Organization, the Center for Disease Control, and our own Health and Human Services Administration. Dr. Ryan, I should point out, is on loan to the World Health Organization from the Centers for Disease Control. And the idea is that we won't reinvent a global CDC over there, but we will take the expertise of the CDC, apply it to the World Health Organization, and allow them a greater reach as far as monitoring and notifying.

The concept is to control the disease at its source, culling of infected avian populations, isolation of infected avian populations, or humans should they become infected, vaccination and antivirals for people who are exposed or infected. We need intelligence, we need verification, and we need assessment, and we need a response, all of which can act globally, because as this map shows, it is indeed a global issue.

This shows eight areas where the avian flu has occurred and areas where human cases have occurred. If you notice the time line, the arrows are pointing from east to west. And with the migratory flyways, it is possible that in wild birds and wild water fowl, the carriage of this disease could occur from the eastern hemisphere to the western hemisphere perhaps as early as this fall or winter. To date, it has not been detected in the western hemisphere. To date, there has not been an easy or facile transmission from human-to-human. Human-to-human transmission only occurs with great difficulty. The virus hasn't undergone that mutation that would allow for facile transmission from human to human.

But clearly, with a disease that is so widespread in the avian population and with a disease that has shown such a striking lethality rate, it is critical to keep the surveillance up and to make certain that other countries do what they are supposed to do in this regard. International transparency is absolutely key. A country keeping silent on a problem it is having with this illness is not only not acceptable, but it may be lethal to other areas in the world as well.

It is already a pandemic in birds but not in humans. The best way to prevent a pandemic is to control it in animals before effective human-to-human transmission occurs, meaning to minimize cross-species contact and make certain that in countries where avian populations are infected that there is the proper culling of avian populations, and that it is done safely without unduly exposing those people who are handling the infected birds.

Protecting North and South America from this global health threat, all of the outbreaks have been contained so far. Indonesia was a point of particular concern a few months ago where many people appeared to be infected in a cluster, but it does appear that those were all a direct result of either living with infected birds or close human-to-human proximity that allowed for that human-to-human transmission.

Clearly, we have got to prevent the spread to the United States and Central and South America. The disease at this point may know no boundaries because of its distribution in the avian population. And other countries, it is critical we have got to monitor the disease at the border.

I did also take a trip just up the street to Bethesda, Maryland to meet with Dr. Anthony Fauci to talk with him about a vaccine development. There are some remarkable things that are going on as far as vaccine development.

I guess one of the important aspects of bird flu is we are going to develop more capacity for delivering more vaccine for just the regular flu as a consequence for the preparedness that is happening with getting ready for the possibility of a worldwide pandemic.

This may not be the one. Avian flu may sputter out and never be the pandemic that everyone fears. But the fact remains that almost for every century that anyone has kept track, about three pandemics per hundred years do occur. We did indeed have three during the last century, and even a relatively mild pandemic of the Hong Kong flu still claimed 50,000 lives in this country. So it is a matter of no small importance.

Additionally, we have got to be certain that, just like the nursing home in Louisiana that left their disaster preparedness plan on the shelf with the shrink wrap still on it, we have got to be certain that we take those plans down and we talk to our local first responders, our local health departments. And I had such a roundtable just last week in my district, very well received by the folks at the health department, by the administrators in all three hospitals in one of my counties. I wish we had a little more participation of the medical staff, but we did have some and I did at least receive an invitation to talk at one of their medical staff meetings.

But the key for us here in Congress is when faced with whether it be the avian flu, terrorist attack, another hurricane, we have got to be honest. No spin, no sugar-coating, no BS. And, above all, we have to communicate with our constituents and with our first responders back at home.

One other thing that I want to talk about as time runs short here is, and I mentioned this earlier, about a bill that is out there to reduce or restructure the number of mandates that are on health insurance. Again, Aetna Life and Casualty might look at 46 million uninsured individuals as potential market share if they only had a product that they could sell.

Now, in our Committee on Energy and Commerce we had a debate on a bill that would reduce significantly the number of State mandates on insurance policies in the individual market. This wasn't even discussed in the group health insurance market, but just the individual market. It was a pretty contentious debate and there wasn't a lot of agreement across both sides of the aisle, and that is unfortunate, because when the American people watch what this body does, they are really not interested in the tennis match or volleyball match that goes on from one side or the other. They want results. They want more affordable health care, health insurance. They want Aetna Life and Casualty to be able to look at that 46 million uninsured as a potential market share.

Well, what if we could get together across the aisle and discuss what is that basic package of benefits that we would like to see available in a health insurance policy, one that could be sold on the Internet from State to State. It seems like an almost impossible task, or at least it seemed almost impossible that night when we were debating this bill in the Energy and Commerce Committee. But the fact is we have already done that work. I say "we." I wasn't here 30 or 40 years ago when the federally qualified health center statutes were first written. But in fact, in that statute in law is identified a basic package of benefits that has to be offered at every federally qualified health center.

Well, we have already agreed then in principle what that basic package of information is. Now, the information may be 30 or 40 years old, but perhaps we could sit down and decide which of those things we could eliminate because they are no longer necessary, which of those things we would have to add because we have learned some stuff since then, and then go to our private insurers and say, here is a basic package of benefits that, if you will abide by these rules and make certain people know what they are buying, that there is full disclosure about what is covered and what is not covered in these insurance policies, that you can then market this to the uninsured. And then give individuals who are unemployed a voucher or a pre-fundable tax credit to purchase that insurance. Or give that family that is of a low-wage earner, give them some additional health, buy down that premium.

These are the types of concepts that, really, the American people are anxious to see us work on, and I for one would really welcome the day that we could do that.

Just one last brief thing about the Medicare part D, the Medicare prescription drug program that actually started the first of this year. At the end of the enrollment period, well over 38 million people had prescription drug coverage under Medicare. This was the population, the Medicare population that was the largest population that didn't have access to a prescription drug plan if their employer or retiree insurance did not offer it.

This is a tremendous benefit. We will and do hear a lot of discussion about people who are caught in the so-called gap coverage. But remember, there are plans out there that if a person is willing to consider a generic compound, there are plenty of plans that cover in the gap; and in my home State of Texas, there was at least one insurance company that would cover both brand and generic in the gap.

So I would encourage people who have looked at the difficulty they are having with the so-called donut hole, when they re-up on their insurance plan, their prescription drug plan in November in that open enrollment period, look at one of those plans that will provide for coverage in the gap.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HONORING STANFORD NEWMAN

HON. JIM DAVIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Stanford Newman, a man who transformed the Tampa Bay community and the cigar industry during his more than 70 years as head of the J.C. Newman Cigar Co., based in Ybor City.

Son of a Hungarian immigrant, Stanford worked in the family business alongside his father, and then his two sons, and built J.C. Newman Cigar Co. into one of the largest manufacturers and distributors of cigars. The company, which owns Cuesta-Rey and Diamond Crown Cigars, is recognized by cigar aficionados across the globe.

Even at 90 years old, Stanford continued to go to work 5 days a week, serving as chairman of the company. During his tenure, Stanford successfully guided his company through tremendous changes in the cigar industry, most notably, the Cuban embargo, which forced Newman to abandon the use of the Cuban tobacco leaf in their cigars. Not only did Stanford rise to meet this and many other challenges, but he went on to see his business flourish in the 1970s, when his Cuesta-Rey #95 cigar became the largest selling premium cigar in the nation.

Stanford's leadership did not stop at the company doors. He served as President of the Cigar Manufacturers Association of Tampa for more than 20 years and Board member of the Cigar Association of America for more than 56 years. His success and contributions earned him the 2001 Ernst and Young Florida Entrepreneur of the Year title and induction into the Cigar Aficionado's Hall of Fame.

Fortunately for the people of Tampa Bay, Stanford was not just a cornerstone of the cigar industry—he was a cornerstone of our community as well. Stanford dedicated his time, talent, and money to improving this community in countless ways.

He served as board member of the Tampa Chamber of Commerce and Second National Bank of Tampa. Stanford was a member of the board of trustees at Congregation Schaarai Zedek, a longtime member of Tampa's Rotary Club and a Paul Harris Fellow. He was one of the founders of the Ybor City State Museum, treasurer of the Berkeley Preparatory School and president of the Dad's Club. In addition, Stanford served as longtime director of the Latin America Fiesta and was a member of the Ye Mystic Krewe of Gasparilla, as well as a number of Tampa's social organizations.

It is particularly fitting that Stanford continues to serve his fellow man in death as he did in his long, rich life. Stanford donated his liver to a transplant patient upon his passing.

Mr. Speaker, Stanford Newman was an icon in the cigar industry and in Tampa Bay. His contributions to our community's economy and culture will leave a lasting impression. On behalf of the entire Tampa Bay community, I extend my deepest sympathies to his family.

TRIBUTE TO KANSAS AFL-CIO EXECUTIVE SECRETARY-TREASURER JIM DEHOFF

HON. DENNIS MOORE

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. MOORE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend Jim DeHoff, who is retiring after almost 20 years as Executive Secretary-Treasurer of the Kansas AFL-CIO.

Mr. DeHoff has served as Executive Secretary-Treasurer of the Kansas AFL-CIO since 1987. Previously, he served as Vice-President of the Kansas State Pipetrades Association, and served on the Lawrence Central Labor Council and the State of Kansas Apprenticeship Council.

Throughout his career, Mr. DeHoff was committed to the working families of Kansas, and to providing them with a safer workplace, job opportunities and health care.

In recent years, Mr. DeHoff worked tirelessly to unite all working men and women and to resolve some of the divisions among various labor organizations.

Working families in Kansas owe much to Jim DeHoff for the opportunities and benefits they now enjoy. All of Kansas is a better place to live and work thanks to the efforts of men like Jim.

I wish Jim the very best in a retirement well earned and deserved.

IN HONOR OF VENTURA COUNTY SHERIFF BOB BROOKS

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor my good friend, Bob Brooks, Sheriff of Ventura County, California.

Sheriff Brooks will be honored this Saturday at the Southeast Ventura County YMCA Leadership Award Banquet. The theme for the evening is "Touching Lives, Creating Peaceful Communities." They couldn't have picked a better theme with which to honor Bob Brooks. He is a dedicated husband and father, professional law enforcement executive, and community leader.

Bob Brooks is a 45-year resident of Ventura County and a 33-year veteran of the Ventura County Sheriff's Department. He has served as the county's elected sheriff since June 27, 1998.

Under his guidance, Ventura County is routinely rated one of the safest counties in the United States, despite the challenges of a growing gang presence in some parts of the county and the ever-present threat of terrorism. He oversees 1,200 sworn and civilian employees, 2,000 volunteers, and a budget of $187 million.

Bob's success comes partly from a supportive community of 800,000 people, but also from his own dedication to law enforcement.

Having already earned a bachelor's degree in Public Administration and a master's in Organizational Management, Bob is now pursuing a master's in Homeland Security from the Naval Post Graduate School. He is also a graduate of the National Sheriff's Institute, the National Executive Institute, and the P.O.S.T. Command College, where he graduated with distinction.

Because of his knowledge, experience, and success, Bob is in demand as a speaker at symposiums and seminars, has taught at colleges and universities, and has published articles in law enforcement, Department of Defense, and educational publications.

In his spare time, he serves on the Board of Directors of several professional, educational, and charitable organizations, including the YMCA, past president of the Ventura County Boy Scouts of America, and Executive Board memberships for the California State Sheriffs' Association and the Major County Sheriffs' Association.

Sheriff Brooks is also an honorary Rotarian and attends Sunrise Christian Fellowship. Bob and Debbie have been married 36 years and have two grown sons. In keeping with Bob's example of serving his community, Jeff is employed by the Ventura Police Department and Brian by the County of Ventura.

"Touching Lives, Creating Peaceful Communities." That's Bob Brooks. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Ventura County Sheriff Bob Brooks on this most deserved honor.

the United States Marine Corps. Following his military service, Chief Dean first joined the Detroit Police Department before returning to Waterford in 1975, where he continued his career in law enforcement. Over the next three decades, Chief Dean advanced through the ranks of the Waterford Police Department, eventually serving as a Patrol Officer, Undercover Officer, Patrol Sergeant, Detective Sergeant, Youth Liaison Officer, Patrol Lieutenant, and Detective Bureau Commander. In January of 2000, he was promoted to Chief of Police.

A Central Michigan University alumnus and graduate of the F.B.I. National Academy, Chief Dean also served on the Police and Fire Pension Board of Waterford Township, Board of Directors of the Boy Scouts of America, Board of Directors of the Oakland County Chiefs of Police, the State Police Advisory Board, and as Treasurer of the Michigan Association of Public Employee Retirement Systems. For his tireless service to the community, Chief Dean has been recognized with the Officer of the Year Award; the Medal for Bravery; the Meritorious Service Award; and was named Waterford Employee of the Year.

Mr. Speaker, for 31 years, Chief John B. Dean has unwaveringly upheld his oath to protect and defend the citizens of Michigan. As he enters the next phase of his life, he leaves behind a legacy of dedication, honor, and courage. Today, I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Chief Dean upon his retirement and recognizing his years of loyal service to our community and our country.

TRIBUTE TO GERALDINE BARNES

HON. JIM DAVIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Geraldine Barnes, a tireless activist in the West Tampa community, who lost her battle with colon cancer last month.

A Middleton High School and Hillsborough Community College graduate, Geraldine dedicated her life to helping improve her community. She worked for Hillsborough County as a community organization specialist for 36 years, served on the Tampa Housing Authority board for more than a decade, helped initiate the West Tampa Community Development Corp. to drive the rehabilitation of West Tampa, and worked at the West Tampa Neighborhood Service Center, providing services to low-income residents.

Young or old, Geraldine served anyone in need, always with a focus on strengthening her community, improving opportunities for its residents and giving the people of West Tampa a voice. Even throughout her struggle with cancer, Geraldine continued to volunteer her time and her strength.

We all owe a debt of gratitude to Geraldine Barnes, not only for her tireless efforts on our behalf, but also for the example she has set for all of us to follow. On behalf of the Tampa Bay community, I extend my deepest sympathies to Geraldine's family.

THE PRAIRIE ROSE CHAPTER OF THE DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION SALUTES CONSTITUTION WEEK

HON. DENNIS MOORE

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. MOORE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the week of September 17–23 has been officially designated as Constitution Week. This marks the 219th anniversary of the signing of our Constitution.

The guardian of our liberties, our Constitution established our republic as a self-governing nation dedicated to rule by law. This document is the cornerstone of our freedom. It was written to protect every American from the abuse of power by government. Without that restraint, our founders believed the republic would perish.

The ideals upon which our Constitution is based are reinforced each day by the success of our political system to which it gave birth. The success of our way of government requires an enlightened citizenry.

Constitution Week provides an opportunity for all Americans to recall the achievements of our founders, the nature of limited government, and the rights, privileges and responsibilities of citizenship. It provides us the opportunity to be better informed about our rights, freedoms and duties as citizens.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I particularly want to take note of the outstanding work of the Prairie Rose Chapter of the Kansas Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, which is actively involved in the Third Congressional District in events this week commemorating Constitution Week. The Prairie Rose Chapter has been involved with this effort in our communities for a number of years and I commend them for doing so.

Our Constitution has served us well for over 200 years, but it will continue as a strong, vibrant, and vitafoundation for freedom only so long as the American people remain dedicated to the basic principles on which it rests. Thus, as the United States continues into its third century of constitutional democracy, let us renew our commitment to, in the words of our Constitution's preamble: "form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity. . . ." I know that the Prairie Rose Chapter of the Kansas Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution joins with me in urging all Americans to renew their commitment to, and understanding of, our Constitution, particularly during our current time of crisis, when Americans are fighting overseas to defend our liberties here at home.

TRIBUTE TO JUSTO "BILL" NORIEGA

HON. JIM DAVIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Justo "Bill" Noriega, of Brandon, Florida, a pharmacist and family businessman who dedicated his life to helping his customers and his community.

Born in Ybor City, Bill earned his pharmacy degree at the University of Florida, graduating with high honors. Bill set up shop in the heart of Brandon, founding Bill's Prescription Center 50 years ago and working there until his cancer forced him to stay home.

Even in the face of growing competition, Bill's Prescription Center continues to be one of Brandon's longest-operating family businesses because of Bill's dedication to his customers. Bill took time with everyone who walked through his door—carefully listening to their concerns and patiently answering their questions—and he was known for helping patients who were unable to pay for their prescriptions. Always a servant to the community, Bill made sure his business continued delivering medicines to homebound customers, and his generosity extended beyond the pharmacy doors through his support of numerous community organizations.

On behalf of the entire Tampa Bay community, I would like to extend my deepest sympathies to the Noriega family. Bill was a role model for all of us, and I know that under his son John's watch, Bill's legacy of service will continue at Bill's Prescription Center.

IN HONOR OF SANTA CRUZ COUNTY DOMINICAN HOSPITAL

HON. SAM FARR

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Dominican Hospital on 65 years of high quality, passionate, and kindhearted healthcare in Santa Cruz County. Created by six Dominican Sisters from Adrian, Michigan, the Catholic hospital was duly named "Sisters Hospital." Today, the hospital continues to approach the healthcare needs of the region by partnering faith with scientific innovations.

Since its inception in 1941, "Dominican Santa Cruz Hospital" has consistently delivered comprehensive and modern medical care for the county. Part of the compassionate mission of Dominican Hospital is to "improve the health of the people of the greater Santa Cruz area, without distinguishing by race, creed, or source of payment . . ." The hospital is known for partnering with other healthcare providers in order to improve the quality of life for those who are less fortunate.

In 1951, "Sisters Hospital" became aware of the ever growing needs within the community for a comprehensive healthcare institution. Due to this realization, the hospital decided to expand its services and obtain a new location. The hospital acquired its Soquel Avenue location and renamed itself, Dominican Santa Cruz Hospital.

In 1984, Dominican Santa Cruz Hospital, in a partnership with the County of Santa Cruz, agreed to provide the first inpatient mental health services program in the county. This was in response to the ever growing needs the hospital saw emerging within the community. Dominican Hospital, time and time again, proves its love for the community by constantly evaluating and reacting to the needs of the people, and I am very grateful to them.

The hospital again expanded its services in 1988. It introduced the county to its first cardiac program. It also created Dominican Oaks, an assisted and independent living community, providing 206 residents with comprehensive medical support. Dominican also joined forces with Catholic Healthcare West, a hospital system of similar values and visions with locations throughout California, Arizona, and Nevada.

Dominican Hospital now serves about 150,000 patients annually, has birthed over 75,000 children, and currently counts 379 beds on two campuses. The medical specialties available at the hospital are numerous. They include, but are not limited to, complete Emergency Services, a renowned Intensive Care Service, the only Level 2 and Level 3 Neonatal Intensive Care Nursery in the county, Behavioral Health Services, and an array of outreach services, and educational options focusing on community needs and health prevention.

TRIBUTE TO ROBERT L. COLE

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the career of Robert L. Cole upon his retirement as the president of Peoples State Bank located in Madison Heights, Michigan.

Bob Cole has served as president of the Peoples State Bank for 10 years during which time this community bank grew from a vibrant financial institution with $500 million in assets and 12 branches in the southeast Michigan area.

Under Mr. Cole's leadership, the bank has played a major role in the local community. When a fire destroyed the municipal garage of Madison Heights in 2003, the bank donated $5,000 for a portion of the destroyed equipment. The bank extended loans to non-profit organizations in the Detroit area assisting young people to obtain marketable work skills, provided loans to a non-profit community organization for building improvements to its Head Start program as well as donated over $100,000 to various organizations that support affordable housing, low-income health care, food banks, homeless shelters, and small business development centers.

Bob Cole's career tracks the development of community banking in Michigan. Born in Howell, Michigan, and raised on a family farm, he graduated from Western Michigan and went to work as a banker in Fenton. In 1974, he became president of the First National Bank of Fenton. In 1987, he became president of the State Bank of Fenton and took it from $62 million in assets to $225 million. In 1996, he joined Peoples State Bank as president and CEO. In that role he modernized the institution, grew the bank into new communities, at the same time deepening the commitment of Peoples to serve the ethnic and small business markets of the Detroit Metropolitan area.

Bob Cole was attracted to community banking because of his strong sense of community. His involvement includes: past president of the Fenton Chamber of Commerce, Kiwanis, board of governors of the Fenton Community Center, Fenton Community Foundation, Madison Heights and Hazel Park Chambers of Commerce, past president and board member of the Michigan County Bankers, member of the Michigan Association of Community Bankers, and the Michigan Bankers Association. He is a recipient of the City of Fenton "Man of the Year" award.

Mr. Speaker, the residents of the 12th Congressional District have benefited from the leadership of Bob Cole in the field of community banking and I rise to pay tribute to his career and wish him good health and much happiness in his retirement.

HONORING FATHER JOSEPH
WEITENSTEINER

HON. CATHY McMORRIS RODGERS

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mrs. McMORRIS RODGERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Father Joseph Weitensteiner in honor of his retirement after almost 50 years of service to the Morning Star Boys Ranch. Through his dedication to the Morning Star Boys Ranch, and the greater Spokane community, nearly 1,300 boys have benefited from the care and oversight he has given them through the services offered by the ranch.

Father Weitensteiner's career began in 1957 when he became the ranch's first counselor. After completing studies for the priesthood, Father Joe was ordained on May 14, 1966, and was soon named Morning Star director. As director of the Morning Star Boys Ranch, many recognized Father Joe as the reason why the ranch has earned an excellent reputation for turning around the lives of hundreds of young men.

Throughout his five decades of service, Father Joe has not only been recognized for his leadership by his colleagues and Morning Star alumni, but has also been honored by numerous civic, educational, legal, and child care entities.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to acknowledge Father Joseph Weitensteiner for his leadership in our community and to thank him for the significant role he has played in mentoring and leading the many young men who have lived at the Morning Star Boys Ranch. I invite my colleagues to join me in congratulating Father Joe as he celebrates nearly 50 years of exceptional service to our community.

HONORING JEFFREY MESTON

HON. LYNN C. WOOLSEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise with pleasure today to honor Jeffrey Meston, one of our community's heroes. He is retiring as Chief of the Fire District in Novato, California, where his service to both the department and community has been an inspiration to all who worked with him.

Jeff started his career in 1976, working 10 years in Corte Madera and 20 in Novato. He became Chief of the Novato Fire District in 1999. His commitment to the community, to professional excellence, and to all firefighters is evident in his work. Locally, he has been president of the Marin County Fire Chief's Association and the Rotary Club of Ignacio as well as Treasurer of the Novato Chamber of Commerce. On the State level he serves as the chair of the Legislative Task Force and an Area Director for the Fire Districts Association of California and the Training Section Chief for the California Fire Chiefs Association. He is also nationally recognized as a course developer and speaker.

If you could hear him speak, as I have, you would understand why he is in high demand. In November, 2003, Jeff organized a moving memorial service for one of his own, Steve Rucker, a Novato firefighter killed battling wildfires in Southern California. He then related how he had taken Steve under his wing and added, "Steve was probably the most genuine, decent and straightforward human being I've ever known. There were never any hidden agendas with Steve—qualities which made him easy to tease, but easy to love like a brother. . . . I never knew anyone who wanted to be a firefighter as much as Steve. Steve lived and breathed his dream."

After Rucker's death, which may have been caused by lack of communication with State firefighters, Jeff advocated for better systems to prevent such tragedies in the future. "Rarely a day goes by when we don't think of him (Steve)," he says.

One of Jeff's proudest accomplishments is the development of a new operating culture called "Novato Way" which asks district personnel to go out of their way to provide superior customer service, from rescuing cats to passing the hat for a resident in need of a boost. The department gives back to the community in many ways and enjoys broad support in return.

Jeff holds a Masters Degree in Public Administration, is a State Certified Fire Chief, and has completed his Chief Fire Officer Designation by the International Association of Fire Chiefs. He also helped Fireman's Fund Insurance Company craft its Fireman's Fund Heritage program which awards millions of dollars in grants to fire departments and fire and burn prevention organizations across the country each year. Jeff continues his involvement, serving on the Heritage Advisory Committee, along with other national leaders in the fire service, to provide strategic guidance for the program.

Mr. Speaker, Jeff Meston says he plans to travel in retirement—and write a fire science textbook. His experience will make the textbook an important resource, and his deep appreciation for the job our firefighters do will make it invaluable. Jeff is definitely one of my heroes.

INTRODUCING A CONCURRENT RESOLUTION RECOGNIZING THE INDEPENDENCE OF THE COURTS OF THE UNITED STATES

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to introduce a Concurrent Resolution recognizing the independence of the courts of the United States, which I authored in response to recent "court-stripping" bills such as the Pledge Protection Act and the Marriage Protection Act of 2004. These bills threaten the foundation of American government by stifling productive discussion of social issues and undermining our system of checks and balances.

As explained in the resolution, the function of the Judiciary is to review the constitutionality of laws. It is thus undemocratic and blatantly partisan to use a procedural trick to protect certain legislation from being questioned in court. Not only does this indirectly violate the Constitution by devaluing the Judicial Branch, it also renders the entire document meaningless since constitutionality is no longer a standard by which all laws must be judged.

Moreover, as courts become functionally irrelevant when faced with certain Acts of Congress, minorities have no recourse and cannot challenge oppressive laws. The view endorsed by "court-stripping"—that a legislative vote constitutes the whole of American democracy—is myopic because it ignores that the Constitution guarantees certain rights to all, regardless of the whims of the majority. These rights must be protected by the Judiciary. I am sure my colleagues agree with me that the popular choice is not always the right one, and that a Congressional majority is not the arbiter of universal truth.

Discrepancies between Acts of Congress and the Constitution can always exist, so a body is necessary to adjudicate conflicts between the two sets of laws. Because courts fill this vital role and maintain American democracy, I strongly urge all of my colleagues to support this important legislation.

TRIBUTE TO RABBI SOLOMON
SCHIFF OF MIAMI

HON. KENDRICK B. MEEK

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor Rabbi Solomon Schiff who, after more than 40 years of public service, interfaith cooperation and community achievement will be retiring from his leadership positions with the Greater Miami Jewish Federation.

By any standard, Rabbi Schiff has had a remarkable career. He has served as Executive Vice President of the Rabbinical Association of Greater Miami for 42 years and as Director of Chaplaincy for the Greater Miami Jewish Federation.

He has served as Chairman of the Dade County Community Relations Board, as President of the National Association of Jewish Chaplains and as Director of Chaplaincy for Mount Sinai Medical Center.

Throughout his career, Rabbi Schiff has been honored for his dedication and community leadership. He has been awarded the Distinguished Community Leadership Service Award from the National Conference of Community and Justice and the Peacemaker Award from St. Thomas University. Rabbi Schiff received these awards for his efforts to develop an open dialogue between the Christian and Jewish communities in the Miami area. Rabbi Schiff was recognized as the "2005 Man of the Year" by the Men's Club of Douglas Gardens and has received a Special Recognition from the Founders of the Miami Jewish Home and Hospital for the Aged at Douglas Gardens.

Rabbi Schiff also has made great contributions to the community through his service. He was appointed by President George H.W. Bush in 1992 to serve on the "We Will Rebuild Committee." This committee helped restore the areas in South Florida that were severely damaged by Hurricane Andrew. Lawton Chiles, the late Governor of Florida, appointed Rabbi Schiff to serve on a task force to study the problem of homelessness in Miami. Thanks to that task force, two new homeless assistance centers were created in Miami-Dade County. More recently, Florida Governor Jeb Bush appointed him to the Governor's Faith-Based Advisory Board.

Rabbi Schiff also has served as a guest chaplain for the United States Senate in July of 1999 and for the United States House of Representatives on several occasions.

We pay tribute to him for his service and thank his wife, Shirley, his three grown sons, Elliot, Jeffrey and Steven, and their seven grandchildren for sharing him with a grateful community. Mr. Speaker, Rabbi Schiff has set a high standard of service for us all. I wish him happiness and success in the future.

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM OSKAR
GOGGINS

HON. LYNN C. WOOLSEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor William Oskar Goggins for the kindness and influence he showed the world during his 43 years here.

Billy was born at St Mary's Hospital in San Francisco, CA on Sunday, May 10, 1963—on Mother's Day. He was the first child of Patrick & Ute Goggins, both very well-known and respected individuals in the Bay Area and beyond.

From the hospital he was carried right into a civil rights demonstration in Golden Gate Park. Billy took his first trip to Ireland at 4 years old to meet his family relatives in the west of Ireland in County Mayo. Annual family trips by car to Montana & Dakota included reunions in the Bear's Paw Mountains, hi-balling on the Iron Road, the old Great Northern Railway and running brave with Chippewa, Cree, Blackfoot and Sioux Indian friends. The Goggins' adventured on two-month road trips to Baja and the Pacific Coast of Mexico where mother Ute painted, and sisters Cathy & Aimee followed in Bill's energetic footsteps. Billy toiled in family vineyards in Germany with equally embracing relatives. These things were the soul of his education.

Over the years Bill played soccer, drew cartoons, tutored younger students from Mill Valley and Marin City, played volleyball at Stinson Beach, surfed in Bolinas, and much much more. He graduated from Tamalpais High School as a National Merit Scholar and Salutatorian.

Summer jobs were at Bancroft-Whitney legal publishers, San Francisco and Wausau Paper Mill, Wisconsin. He worked at numerous restaurants including the Book Depot Cafe and Avenue Grill in Mill Valley, and Embarko in San Francisco. He also volunteered at St. Anthony Dining Room in the Tenderloin, providing free meals for the homeless.

Bill attended Georgetown University School of Foreign Service and San Francisco State University, Departments of Communication and Philosophy. He began his vital journalism career with Frisko Kids, KALW radio, and then moved on to the old SF Weekly.

Former SF Weekly editor and colleague Andrew O'Hehir remembers, "Of course he worked harder than anyone and became essential, and in three years moved from all-purpose intern to copy editor to running the Arts & Entertainment section. I can't remember exactly when he became the go-to guy for headline copy, but I'd say that by the time he'd been there a year, he was writing half the heads in the paper."

Bill thrived at Wired for 10 years. He started as a freelance copy editor and rose to become deputy editor. Bill served as a special link between the digital industry's pace-setting magazine in the center of San Francisco's media gulch and an eager, educated national and international readership. His colleagues admired him tremendously.

"Bill was that rarest of things: a true original," says Chris Anderson, the magazine's editor in chief. "He was brilliant, witty and culturally omnivorous, all of which combined in his signature headlines. They usually worked on at least three levels of meaning, from some remixed cultural reference to at least one pun. In many ways his winking style and clever turns of phrase became Wired house style for nearly a decade, and to look at our covers and headlines over those years is to hear Bill's voice again."

Bill's voice also made its mark through the alternative dot-com generation's website Suck.com where he wrote under the name 'Bartelby'. Bill recently enjoyed writing and editing with the new magazine Todo, and they remember him not just as a logophile, a wordsmith, a gifted editor, a true friend; but also as "one who tirelessly pursues perfection, fraternity and goodness."

A real linguist (German, Spanish and Bill-English) and traveler—Bill visited Tunisia, the Philippines, Bahamas, Mexico, Canada, and all over the United States and Europe. He was a dual citizen of the U.S. and Ireland. Bill was a citizen of the world.

Bill was a San Franciscan through and through. He openly embraced and explored all of the city's neighborhoods. He was an avid supporter of the arts, with active memberships to many museums and regular attendance at the symphony, opera, ballet, varied theatres and clubs.

Bill participated with his family and compatriots in the antiwar demonstrations from the Vietnam era to Iraq of today.

My daughter, Amy Critchett, had the good fortune to be a friend with and to work with Bill at Wired for many years. "Bill Goggins made work seem like work—because it was and he was so incredibly good at what he did—but with him around there was always a twist of irony and a splash of curly-haired, smiling-cheeked sunshine not far away," according to Amy. "Get ready to laugh all you up there."

Bill inexplicably collapsed and passed away suddenly during mile 24 of the San Francisco Marathon Benefit for Cancer on Sunday, July 30, 2006. He was in fit condition and many knew him as a wonderful, companionable runner, reconciled, strong and happy.

An outpouring of hundreds from around the globe, representing family, friends, colleagues, public officials on local, state and national levels, ambassadors, the Irish and British governments, the Democratic party, and diverse cultural non-profit organizations attended a memorial mass held at our Lady of Mount Carmel Church and a life celebration at the Outdoor Art Club in Mill Valley on August 4, 2006. Billy was a deeply-loved member of a very close family. He supported all of them individually and together—helping hang his mother Ute's art shows, assisting his father Pat with community outreach via organizations such as the Irish Forum, Irish Mexican Association, and Irish Literary and Historical Society to name a few, being the proud uncle to sister Cathy's two children, Lina Rose and Dominic Chester, and showing up for sister Aimee's various work events or helping edit her writing.

Bill believed in justice, peace and humanity. He connected with people everywhere he went. No one and nothing escaped his keen eye and warm words. His sense of community was broad and all-encompassing. Bill was a man of grace. He chipped in for everyone.

He had old-fashioned manners, was a staunch listener and he gave of himself enormously. His roughish grin, sparkle in his eye and love of discussion and opinion will live on with us forever.

Mr. Speaker, Bill had enormous integrity and loyalty, and taught us all how to be total human beings. To be fearless, to be bold, to be true to yourself. To be both gracious and outspoken. To pursue what matters in life and cherish each other. Bill knew all of these things and helped us be them too. Bill lived his life and made all of us proud. He will be deeply missed by many.

INTRODUCING THE REMOTE
MONITORING ACCESS ACT OF 2006

HON. CHARLES W. "CHIP" PICKERING

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Speaker, we in this country, unfortunately, don't always do what's good for us. The benefits of a regular check up are well known, but for one reason or another millions of Americans will only visit their physician when they think something is serious enough that they feel they have no choice.

I can only imagine how the reluctance to visit a doctor is exacerbated for the millions of people in the United States with chronic conditions—such as diabetes, congestive heart failure and arrhythmia—who need to see their physicians on a regular basis. The situation is even worse for seniors who have difficulties moving around or lack the means or resources to make frequent trips to the doctor.

Government statistics show that maintaining mobility is a serious challenge for many seniors: Over 20 percent of people 65 and older have difficulty going outside the home; approximately 17 percent of men and 28 percent of women find it very difficult or are unable to walk just three city blocks; every 10 years after reaching the age of 65 the odds of losing mobility double.

People who live in rural areas can face serious health care consequences because of the lack of easily accessible services. One out of every five Americans lives in rural areas; however, only one out of every 10 physicians practices in rural areas. Forty percent of our rural population lives in a medically underserved area, with access to care an average of 30 miles away.

I'm proud to stand here as a lead sponsor of the Remote Monitoring Access Act of 2006 because I believe this legislation will promote technologies that have the potential to transform how health care providers and their patients—particularly seniors with chronic conditions—communicate and manage their conditions.

Remote monitoring technologies collect, analyze and transmit vital patient information to health care providers hundreds of miles away, allowing physicians to manage a patient's condition in a more consistent and real-time fashion. This technology can not only improve the quality of care given to patients, it also reduces the need for frequent visits to the doctor's office, costly emergency room visits, and unnecessary hospitalizations.

Remote monitoring technologies allow patients to be in constant contact with their doctors without leaving the comfort of their homes. For seniors who find travel difficult or hard to afford, this will provide welcome relief. Beyond improving quality of life, remote monitoring technologies also improve quality of care, as physicians will be able to more closely monitor their patients and, by receiving more up-to-date information, detect and treat their patients' conditions earlier.

Remote monitoring technologies will bring 21st century health care to every individual regardless of their location, mobility, or age. The expertise of physicians and specialists and the resources of health care institutions will no longer be limited by geographic location but can be harnessed to help many more patients.

Currently, Medicare payments are primarily provided for face-to-face meetings between physicians and patients. The current system offers no incentives for physicians to adopt remote monitoring technologies even though they may provide better clinical information and save physicians time.

In addition, the payments often do not pay for the clinician time involved in non-face-to-face interactions that are necessary for interpreting and responding to data received via remote monitoring technologies.

Consequently, the Medicare payments may not adequately reflect the value of patient management services involving remote monitoring technologies.

The Remote Monitoring Access Act of 2006 will fix this gap in the Medicare payment system. This bipartisan legislation would provide reimbursement under the Medicare physician fee schedule for remote patient management services used to manage specific medical conditions such as diabetes, cardiac arrhythmia, congestive heart failure and sleep apnea, as well as any other condition the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines appropriate.

This bill also requires the HHS Secretary to develop standards of care and quality for the remote management services provided for each medical condition covered.

Cardiac arrhythmia, or abnormal heart rhythm, is just one of the chronic conditions that can be better managed through remote monitoring technologies. Cardiac arrhythmias affect more than five million people nationwide, and result in more than 1.2 million hospitalizations and 400,000 deaths each year in the United States. Atrial fibrillation, the most common form of cardiac arrhythmia, is also a leading indicator of stroke, with about 15 percent (or 105,000) of strokes occurring in people with atrial fibrillation.

The Remote Patient Monitoring Act will promote greater adoption and use of remote monitoring technologies so that patients suffering from cardiac arrhythmias, with their physicians, will be able to better manage this chronic condition.

I would like to thank my colleagues, Representative ESHOO, Representative HAYWORTH, and Representative TANNER, for joining with me to support this important legislation. I look forward to working with other Members of the House to ensure passage of this measure which will help millions of patients in the United States have better access to the latest medical technology and information.

REMEMBERING THE HEROES
OF 9-11

HON. TODD RUSSELL PLATTS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. PLATTS. Mr. Speaker, September 11, 2001 remains a day of both indescribable tragedy and awe-inspiring heroism in our Nation's mind. We mourn for the victims of the terrorist attacks that day, and keep their families in our prayers. But we also remember the heroism displayed by so many.

No one will forget, not ever, the courage seen on 9-11. Courage seen in the actions of firefighters and police officers, Pentagon employees, and everyday citizens. Courage seen by the choices these heroes made—to rush to the aid of others, to enter into burning buildings, to resist the hijackers of Flight 93. Many who work in the Capitol Building, both Members of Congress and staff, remember well that this symbol of democracy was most likely a target too—a target avoided only because of the heroes of Flight 93. We owe these heroes more than words can provide. We owe all these heroes more than words can provide.

We are fortunate that five years have passed without another terrorist strike on our own soil. We owe this to all those on the front lines of the War on Terror—in the military, law enforcement, and intelligence agencies. We should remember them, and their service, on this day too. We should ensure they are well-equipped, have the tools needed for their mission, and are properly recognized. They stand on the line for us—on behalf of life and hope, against an ideology that embraces death and hate.

The heroism of 9-11 is now part of what Lincoln called “the mystic chords of memory.” As time passes, the partisan disagreements of our day will fade into obscurity. But the heroism seen on 9-11 will not. Future generations of Americans, committed to the promise of a better world, united by the sacrifices of previous generations, will remember the heroes of September 11.

TRIBUTE TO DR. J. KENT MARLOR OF REXBURG, IDAHO

HON. MICHAEL K. SIMPSON

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Dr. J. Kent Marlor of Rexburg, Idaho. On August 24, 2006, Dr. Marlor retired from a 43-year career as a professor of Political Science at Ricks College and later Brigham Young University—Idaho.

Throughout his career, Dr. Marlor has proven himself to be a significant member of the academic community. His contributions have included detailed and important research and publications regarding the government's role in wildlife and public land management. Just as important as his intellectual contributions, Dr. Marlor has greatly contributed to the future of his students. He has been an advisor, guide, and most importantly a friend to countless students pursuing their educations. Due to Dr. Marlor's tireless concern for his students' wellbeing, many of them have gone on to a variety of successful careers in government, law, and education. In fact, several of his former students have been employed here on Capitol Hill and in other branches and departments of the government.

Dr. Marlor has positively contributed to the youth of Idaho not only through his teaching career, but also through his dedicated service in the Boy Scouts of America. For twenty-five years Dr. Marlor, an Eagle Scout himself, has selflessly served as a scoutmaster and on several scouting committees. For his devoted service, he has been awarded the prestigious Silver Beaver Award by the Boy Scouts of America.

Dr. Marlor's contributions have extended to Idaho's great natural environment as well. He has been a lifelong outdoor enthusiast and for many years has selflessly donated his time and efforts to conservation and wildlife management in Idaho. Dr. Marlor has served as a chairman on the Idaho Wildlife Council, the Idaho Fish and Game Advisory Committee, and he is currently the president of the Idaho Wildlife Federation. Due to his leadership in this field, Idahoans for generations to come can be ensured a continuation of Idaho's rugged outdoor legacy.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to have such a distinguished and dedicated constituent residing within Idaho's 2nd Congressional District. It is dedicated educators and volunteers like Dr. Marlor that ensure the continued success of our great nation. His contributions have been immeasurable. Men like Dr. Marlor rarely rest, and I am certain he will continue to positively contribute to Idaho and the Nation in his retirement.

WELCOME TO PRESIDENT ROH MOO-HYUN OF THE REPUBLIC OF KOREA

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, President Roh Moo-hyun of the Republic of Korea is scheduled to visit the United States from September 12-15, 2006, for a summit meeting with President George W. Bush. After meetings in Washington with President Bush and Members of the Congressional Leadership, President Roh will travel to San Francisco.

Mr. Speaker, recently I had the privilege of visiting South Korea and meeting with President Roh and other Korean officials, as well as with U.S. soldiers and members of the diplomatic community. The Korean people treated us with a warmth and hospitality, for which I am deeply grateful.

While in South Korea, I had an opportunity to lay a wreath in tribute to GEN Douglas MacArthur at his statue at Incheon harbor. The statue was erected by the citizens of the city of Incheon to commemorate the General's vital leadership during the Korean war, including his implementation of the daring landing at Incheon in the darkest days of the Korean war. In his farewell address before this Congress in 1951, General MacArthur said:

"Of the nations of the world, Korea alone, up to now, is the sole one which has risked its all against communism. The magnificence of the courage and fortitude of the Korean people defies description. They have chosen to risk death rather than slavery."

Korea and the United States have been allies and friends for more than half a century. Our economic ties are strong. With a per capita income of $14,162, South Korea is the world's eleventh-largest economy and the seventh largest trading partner of the United States, with a trade volume amounting to over $72 billion each year. The United States and South Korea are currently engaged in negotiations that will lead to a U.S.-Korea Free Trade Agreement, which will further solidify and expand U.S.-Korean economic ties.

With a population of well over 1 million, the Korean-American community has become, in the past century, a vital and important part of the American mosaic. The greater Los Angeles area, with its vibrant Korean-American community, is now one of the world's centers of Korean culture. But Korean-Americans are not only found in California. From Hawaii, east to New York, and from Alaska down to Florida, Korean-Americans are making a critical contribution to the United States in such diverse fields as medicine, education, science, engineering, martial arts, small business enterprises, entrepreneurship, music and the fine arts. America has been enriched by the Korean-American community's many contributions, and its existence has bonded us even closer to the Korean peninsula across the Pacific.

It should come as no surprise, then, that the United States is also a popular destination for travelers from South Korea, whether they are coming here to visit their family members who have become part of the American community, attending U.S. colleges and universities, or meeting with business colleagues in the pursuit of greater trade and investment.

The U.S. consular section at our Embassy in Seoul is the busiest non-immigrant visa issuing post in the world, processing between 1,800 and 2,000 visa applications each day. It is clear that South Koreans want to visit the United States, and they have good reasons for doing so.

There are currently efforts underway to bring South Korea under the umbrella of the U.S. Visa Waiver Program, which already applies to 27 other countries, including the United Kingdom, France, Canada, and Japan. This program, established in 1986 with the objective of promoting better relations with U.S. allies, also eliminates unnecessary barriers to travel, stimulates the tourism industry, and permits the U.S. Department of State to focus consular resources in other areas.

The South Korean government has made it clear that it intends to meet all of the statutory and regulatory requirements of the Visa Waiver Program. Seoul is working with the Departments of Homeland Security, Justice, and State in a diligent fashion to make sure that relevant South Korean governmental agencies have implemented the most up-to-date passport controls, using biometric and other technologies to prevent fraud and abuse. Mr. Speaker, I am almost certain that the Republic of Korea's entry into the Visa Waiver Program will be one of the topics discussed by President Roh and President Bush during their summit meeting this month.

There are, of course, other issues that certainly will be discussed at the White House by President Bush and President Roh, including the free trade negotiations, North Korean nuclear weapons development, and South Korea's active participation in the global War on Terrorism and its contributions to the war effort in Iraq. The United States and South Korea have enjoyed a long and productive alliance, which, based on blood ties forged in the Korean War, will deepen into the indefinite future.

The frequent meetings of U.S. and Korean leaders are a clear manifestation of the close relationship shared by our two countries. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, let me take this opportunity to welcome the President of the Republic of Korea, Roh Moo-hyun, to the United States as he visits Washington, D.C. and the Golden State of California. I invite all Members of the House to join me in offering President Roh our best wishes and hospitality as he visits our Nation's Capital.

CONGRATULATING THE ST. PAUL PUBLIC SCHOOLS ON THEIR
150TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. BETTY McCOLLUM

OF MINNESOTA

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Ms. McCOLLUM of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to congratulate the St. Paul Public Schools on their 150th anniversary. On the first day of this school year, more than 41,000 kindergarten through 12th graders entered one of the doors of the more than 70 schools staffed by more than 6,500 teachers and personnel in the St. Paul Public Schools. This school year marks 150 years of the district's commitment to educating the families of St. Paul and creating public spaces for civic and community engagement.

St. Paul Public Schools have a proud history. Harriet Bishop, originally a teacher in Vermont, traveled to St. Paul in the late 1840s and is credited with starting the first public school in St. Paul. It was in 1856 that a school district was formed in St. Paul in order to attract settlers and to educate the frontier children. Even before Minnesota was admitted into the Union as a State, the people understood the importance of education.

Over the past 150 years, the St. Paul Public Schools have created a "world of opportunities" for their students, teachers, staff, and community members. And the world has also come to St. Paul Public Schools. More than 80 native languages are spoken in its classrooms. And each year, St. Paul elementary, middle, and high schools welcome a more diverse student body. And, this school year, the St. Paul Public Schools' Language Academies will teach English to 1,650 new Americans.

As good stewards of public resources, St. Paul Public Schools are an integral part of our neighborhoods. They provide safe spaces for our children and youth to grow and learn where teachers and staff offer an enriched environment for students to develop into healthy, contributing adults. St. Paul Public Schools also provide the needed public community spaces to support a strong and engaged citizenry that is needed to support a strong democracy.

In honor of the students, parents, families, and St. Paul Public Schools teachers and staff, I submit this statement for the official CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I look forward to continued celebrations of success and milestones in the education of the people of St. Paul.

A SPECIAL RECOGNITION TO THE MEN AND WOMEN OF BACHMAN'S
BATTERY VETERAN'S FUNERAL
DETAIL VOLUNTEERS

HON. HENRY E. BROWN, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. BROWN of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to a group of South Carolinians who, for 10 years, have provided burial honors details through the South Carolina Military Department's Caisson Detachment for those killed in the line of duty, whether a member of the police, military, or civil service. How blessed our State and community are to have Steve Riggs, its founder, Jim Kenney, and their Bachman's Battery volunteers, gathered from far and wide, to provide this special service. For those who may not be familiar with the detachment's namesake, Bachman's Battery, in the War Between the States, Captain William K. Bachman commanded South Carolina's German Artillery, Battery B, part of the incomparable Hampton Legion. It came to be known as Bachman's Battery. Captain Bachman was the son of the prominent pastor of Charleston's St John's Lutheran Church, Dr. John Bachman. The Rev. Dr. Bachman, born in New York, was also a scientist and an associate of naturalist John James Audubon. His sisters were both married to Audubon's sons and his father has several species of birds named for him. To all of the Bachman Battery volunteers, thank you for your continued service in final tribute to the families of those who served.

Bachman's Battery—Veterans' Funeral Detail Volunteers List: Stephen R. Riggs, Eric Klatt, John Shuler, James A. Kenney, Lindsey E. Riggs, James Andrews, Archie D. Willis III, Theodore Phillips, Mark Shambley, Keith Purdy, Jay Ford, Mark D. Herron,

Jim Shelby, Jr., David M. Riggs, A.C. Fiveashe, W. Thomas Shealy, Kevin Shiflet, E.G. Sturgis, Michael Lussier, James J. Walker, Jr., John T. McNeill, Stephen M. Riggs, Richard Hippey.

TRIBUTE TO MONROE SWEETLAND

HON. DARLENE HOOLEY

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Ms. HOOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a great man, Monroe Sweetland. A political renaissance man who positively affected the lives of generations of Oregon students through his commitment to higher education.

A native of Salem, Oregon, Mr. Sweetland was a walking history book of Oregon and national politics. A former Oregon legislator, newspaper publisher, and education advocate, he counted among his friends many illustrious members of the national Democratic Party, including Eleanor Roosevelt, Harry Truman, John F. Kennedy, and Hubert Humphrey.

Despite the accolades and attention, Mr. Sweetland always considered the work that he did in the field of education to be his most important.

Through his efforts Portland State University was transformed from a struggling city college into a full-fledged urban university, thereby giving countless students the opportunity to study at a first-class institution.

In the mid 1960s Mr. Sweetland's career shifted beyond Oregon and he became the National Education Association's political director for 13 western States. It was in this capacity that he initiated what became the Bilingual Education Act of 1968, which provided Federal money to encourage school districts to try approaches such as teaching English as a second language.

His work at the NEA merely exemplified the compassion that he felt for all people, regardless of skin color. He was a vocal critic of the internment of Japanese Americans during World War II and is credited with helping build support for a civil rights bill passed by the Oregon Legislature in 1953, after 17 civil rights bills had been unsuccessful.

I know that I am joined by my fellow Oregonians, and many others across the country, when I express my deepest condolences to Monroe Sweetland's family for their loss.

Oregon has lost one of its greatest citizens, a person whose influence will continue to be felt for years to come, and we, as a State, are greater for his presence and lesser for his passing.

ADMINISTRATION STEM CELL VETO: "ASSAULT ON SCIENCE"

HON. GENE GREEN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring my colleagues' attention to the editorial entitled "Assault on Science," which was published on July 21, 2006 in the Baytown Sun. The editorial, which calls the President's veto of legislation to expand Federal embryonic stem cell research "a blow against scientific progress and human health," mirrors the views of more than 70 percent of the American public who support expanded embryonic stem cell research. I encourage each of my colleagues to read this well-written piece and ask unanimous consent that a copy of it be placed in the RECORD.

[From the Baytown Sun, July 21, 2006]

ASSAULT ON SCIENCE

(By David Bloom)

President Bush used his first veto Wednesday to block a bill that would have lifted some federal restrictions on funding for stem cell research that most Americans support.

In vetoing the bill, Bush made good on a promise he made in 2001 to limit federally funded embryonic research to the stem cell lines that had been created by the time. He also landed quite a blow against scientific progress and human health.

Bush and other opponents of embryonic stem cell research claim that their position is rooted in a respect for human life. They say that the embryos destroyed in the process of extracting stem cells are human beings with a right to life.

In truth, clinics destroy thousands upon thousands of embryos every year, the leftovers of the in-vitro fertilization process. The bill would have allowed federal funding only for stem cell lines made from embryos headed for destruction, not adoption. Thus, no lives will be saved by the president's veto.

Further, embryos used in embryonic stem cell research are not human beings—not in any rational sense of the term. These embryos are smaller than a grain of sand, and consist of at most a few hundred undifferentiated cells.

While they have the potential to become human beings—if implanted in a woman's uterus and brought to term—they are nowhere near actual human beings.

No one knows for certain all that can be helped by stem cells. Most scientists believe they hold extraordinary healing powers and may aid everything from brain function impaired by Alzheimer's and Parkinson's to pancreas function limited by diabetes and heart function after a heart attack.

It is revealing that Bush has used his first veto to oppose potentially life-saving research to shore up his support among people who regard destruction of an embryo as abortion.

Anyone who truly cares about human life should condemn this religious assault on medical progress.

Granted, it's difficult to balance the moral, ethical and economic considerations in life sciences research. Elected officials must set policy that is flexible but consistent with historic national values.

But in this case, the president's beliefs and his aim for better poll numbers are preventing research that offers hope to many ailing people.

HONORING THE 60TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FRENCH VILLAGE FIRE DEPARTMENT

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the 60th anniversary of the French Village Fire Department located in St. Clair County, Illinois.

In 1946, residents in the Dutch Hollow and French Village neighborhoods took action to provide fire protection for their communities by forming the French Village Fire Department. Initial funding for this new department came from bake sales and raffles, but they were able to purchase a fire engine from Towers Fire Apparatus in nearby Freeburg, Illinois. The first firehouse was located on a resident's property off Rural Route 5, which is now 2nd Avenue in Fairview Heights.

Raising funds for the department was a struggle during the early years in the late 1940s and early 1950s. Picnics, dances and fish fries were some of the fund-raising activities that were required to keep the department operational. Through an election in 1953, the French Village Fire District was formed. This provided tax revenue so that the fire department could begin to plan for equipment, supplies, and ongoing operations.

In addition to growth in residential property, the early years were also marked by tragedy. In 1952, firemen Frank Robinson and Francis Johnson, Jr., lost their lives when their fire truck was struck while en route to a call. In 1954, another firefighter, Paul Hodson, suffered a fatal heart attack while fighting a vehicle fire. This second tragedy provided the stimulus for the department to provide better emergency care.

The next decades saw continued growth for the French Village Fire Department. Additional trucks and advanced equipment were added to keep pace with the growing population as well as the new advances in technology.

In the 1980s an effort at the ballot to disband the department was defeated and a bond issue was passed to replace aging equipment and build a second fire station. The 1990s saw the opening of the new station and the department's 50th anniversary. In the new century, the French Village Fire Department continued to expand and improve with the addition of a 75-ft. aerial ladder.

The French Village Fire Department has been a shining example of dedication and professionalism, made possible by the sacrifices that their firefighters and their families have made since 1946. Their compassion, valor, and unselfish acts of courage make each of them an everyday hero.

I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring the 60th anniversary of the French Village Fire Department and to wish the best to them for continued service in the future.

PENSION PROTECTION ACT

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, last month President Bush signed into law the so-called Pension Protection Act. I opposed this legislation because it fails to address America's retirement security crisis—in fact, it accelerates the move away from defined-benefit pension plans and it makes it easier for companies to eliminate pensions or dump their obligations onto the backs of taxpayers. It also treats the pensions of CEOs and top executives as more sacred than those of workers.

The Federal Government should ensure that, after 30 years of service, workers will receive the pensions that they have been promised and that they have earned. Unfortunately, this bill does not live up to that responsibility. I opposed this legislation when it originally passed the House, and I had hoped that its shortcomings would be addressed in conference. I am disappointed that Democrats were excluded from the conference committee. This exclusion was a disservice to all American workers who will not benefit from their knowledge and experience in the subject.

Unfortunately, the shortcomings of the House bill were not addressed in conference. Far from protecting pensions for American workers, this legislation will allow companies to under-fund plans by simply promising to increase the contributions in future years. As the financial obligations on these companies grow, however, they will likely freeze or terminate pension plans, as they no longer make business sense to continue.

Some provisions blatantly discriminate against workers in favor of executives. The legislation allows plans that are only 60 percent funded to continue increasing the lavish benefits that executives enjoy. However, a plan must be 80 percent funded before employees can get any additional assistance. It is fundamentally unfair to hold these two groups to two different standards.

Most troubling to me is how American workers and retirees are increasingly being told, "You are on your own." As President Bush continues to advocate privatization of Social Security, and more and more companies convert their defined-benefit pensions to defined-contribution plans, retirees are having the rug pulled from under their feet. We have failed to apply the lesson that broad-based economic security facilitates sustainable growth, innovation, and productivity.

America's employees deserve retirement security. President Bush should have signed a bill that would protect employees, discourage companies from freezing or terminating their plans, address the financial shortfall at the Federal Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation, and treat all employees equally.

Although the "Pension Protection Act" is now law, our commitment to employees who are so integral to our economy is not fulfilled. As we come off of Labor Day, I urge this body to assure the financial security of American employees through policies that achieve economic growth that is broad-based, not concentrated at the top of the income ladder.

TRIBUTE TO CHLOE JANE SWEET

HON. MICHAEL T. McCAUL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. McCAUL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the birth of Chloe Jane Sweet. Chloe was born on September 3, 2006 to her very proud parents and my good friends, Julie and Chad.

There is no accomplishment or gift greater in life than the birth of a son or daughter. As the father of five wonderful children who are the light of my life, I know how happy and fulfilled Julie and Chad are to have a healthy and beautiful newborn baby daughter.

It is my hope, and the hope of all of their friends and family, that they continue to be blessed with the great fortune they have enjoyed in the birth of Chloe Jane.

Linda, my children and I wish them all the best as Julie and Chad begin their lives as Chloe's parents, and as Chloe begins her life as their daughter.

IN HONOR OF THE FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF SEPTEMBER 11, 2001

HON. JIM MATHESON

OF UTAH

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2001

Mr. MATHESON. Mr. Speaker, this anniversary is first, last, and always, a day of remembrance. The shock and horror of that day has diminished. But the sorrow and sadness is still present in our hearts. The mountains of debris are gone from the place where the towers of the World Trade Center once defined the skyline. But Ground Zero and a field near Shanksville, Pennsylvania, are burial grounds still, where grief is palpable. Two Utahns were aboard one of the hijacked planes that struck the first Tower; another Utahn died at his job in the Pentagon when a third jet crashed into it. People from many other countries also died that morning. In the hours and days following the tragedy, it seemed that much of the world mourned.

The passing days brought much heartache and—ever so gradually—glimmers of hope. The heroes of 9/11—members of the New York and Port Authority police departments, and the New York City Firefighters—replaced the frightening images of the hijackers. From across this country, ordinary people put comfortable lives on hold in order to join the rescue and recovery effort. Twenty people were pulled alive from the debris. For a time, all Americans put aside their differences and united in the desire to make life better for the survivors.

The families and friends of the victims of 9/11 will always—in the words of poet ee cummings "carry your heart (I carry it in my heart)." For the rest of us, a fitting tribute to their memory may be to renew our desire to put aside contention and partisanship. We honor them when we adopt their "can-do" spirit and strive—as one nation—to make America the beacon of hope it has always been.

HONORING MARY ELLEN MENAPACE

HON. TOM UDALL

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor Mary Ellen Menapace, who was chosen "New Mexico's Outstanding Older Worker of 2006." At the young age of 87, she continues to work and is currently the deputy village clerk of the village of Roy, located in eastern New Mexico, serving the residents with great honor, pride and distinction.

With only a few years' exception, Mrs. Menapace has worked continually since she was a high school student. She was only 17 when she began her first full-time job. Beginning in 1934, Mrs. Menapace's positions have been many and varied, including employment for the New Mexico State Health and Welfare Department, an abstract company, the Selective Service System during World War II and as a deputy county and court clerk, payroll clerk, secretary and an office manager. She proudly states that the key to her professional longevity and success has been the enjoyment she experienced in each and every job, and the total dedication she always gave during her many years of employment.

Noting all the advancements that have transpired in the workplace since high school, Mrs. Menapace's early years involved the use of a manual typewriter rather than a computer, carbon paper instead of a copier, and Gregg shorthand instead of e-mail. As the years passed, she committed to being the best she could be in every position she ever held. In order to accomplish that goal, and as office work became more technically advanced, Mrs. Menapace diligently took advantage of all training provided in order to enhance her knowledge and to improve her skills.

Mrs. Menapace could have completely retired at many junctures but instead chose to continue contributing to the betterment of her community. Her current position requires that she locate resources to fund village projects. One particular example of her success was securing grants to purchase trees and flowers to landscape both the main street and village park of Roy as part of the "Keep New Mexico Beautiful" State program. Another accomplishment was securing funds to purchase 75 trees that were planted to shield and shelter Roy's solid waste station.

Mary Ellen Menapace is truly a most remarkable lady. She helped support her parents and siblings during the Great Depression, was the sole provider for her own family during her husband's long illness and subsequent death, and is, herself, a cancer survivor. A devoted grandmother, she takes great pride and gratification that her later employment enabled her to raise and educate a grandson as well as assist a granddaughter-in-law in finishing law school. With all these responsibilities, Mrs. Menapace has somehow managed to be active in her community, in civic and professional organizations, and in her church. Another amazing talent is writing award-winning poetry and short stories, a gift she inherited from her father, who, she proudly proclaims, was also an agriculture and veterinary science visionary.

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully request that all my colleagues join me in giving tribute to Mary Ellen Menapace. She is an invaluable employee, a loving family member, a devoted member of her community, an exceptional New Mexican, and an honored American.

A TRIBUTE TO DR. JESUS M.
SIERRA

HON. ROBERT A. BRADY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. BRADY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Dr. Jesus M. Sierra, beloved husband of Catherine. M. Mass Sierra for 24 years, loving father of Jesus M. Sierra Jr., Abraham Sierra, Marta I. Sierra, Janina E. Sierra, Nicholas Sierra, and Adam Eric, and caring grandfather of 11, who passed away on Sunday August 13, 2006.

Dr. Sierra was the founder and former Executive Director of the Asociacion Puertorriquenos en Marcha (APM). A tireless advocate of Latino rights, his contribution to his dearly loved Puerto Rican community cannot be measured. His deep belief in the provision of critical needs: health, human services, and housing drove his work with the APM. Jesus was a pioneer in his efforts to help Philadelphia's poorest citizens advocating the use of economic development tools to fight racism, create equal opportunity for Latinos, and to generate change.

His founding of the APM is an accomplishment that will continue to have a positive impact into the future. Jesus headed this organization for 33 years and his indefatigable labors in building it from a two person office on Germantown Avenue to the largest non-profit development corporation in Pennsylvania is to be admired. His work directly saved countless lives and his contribution will continue to provide hope to thousands more. In tribute to a wonderful father, husband, and pillar of the Puerto Rican Community, I ask that you and my other distinguished colleagues rise to honor him and all of his accomplishments.

THE LOSS OF SGT. MOISES
JAZMIN

HON. JAMES R. LANGEVIN

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow that I rise to recognize the loss of a brave soldier in Iraq, Sergeant Moises Jazmin, a Rhode Island resident who served his country with dignity and honor. I join his family and the people of Rhode Island in mourning this great loss.

Sergeant Jazmin grew up in Providence, RI, and attended Central High School until he enlisted in the Army at the age of 17. He is remembered as a committed and loving member of his tight-knit family.

Sergeant Jazmin was serving in Iraq in the 1st Battalion, 66th Armor Regiment, 1st Brigade of the 4th Infantry Division. On Sunday, August 27, he was on patrol when an improvised explosive device detonated near their Bradley Fighting Vehicle. The blast killed him and three other soldiers in his unit.

This loss causes us to reflect on the bravery demonstrated by our men and women in uniform as they carry out their obligations in the face of danger. When Sergeant Jazmin's nation called him to duty, he answered without hesitation. We will remember him as a patriot who made the ultimate sacrifice for his country.

Sergeant Jazmin is survived by his parents, Leon and Rosa, and many other friends and family members. May we keep his loved ones in our thoughts and prayers as they endure this difficult period. We will also continue to hope for the safe and speedy return of all of our troops serving throughout the world.

JACK HARDIN DAY

HON. NICK J. RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of "Jack Hardin Day" which was celebrated in many towns in my District recently. No one is more deserving of this honor than the man for which the day was named—a man who has served southern West Virginia, both as a journalist and as a community activist, for more than 50 years.

Jack Hardin is an icon, an institution, to the people of Huntington, WV, and beyond. It was fitting then, that on Jack Hardin Day, also Jack's 80th birthday, the members of the community came together for a good-natured roasting of their favorite son. It is also fitting that the proceeds of this roast went to an important charity—the Hospitality House of Huntington. Jack wouldn't have had it any other way.

While I was unable to attend the roast of my friend Jack Hardin, I would have loved to have been there to hear the tales, the teasing and what I am sure was a good amount of praise for a man who has become a role model to so many.

Jack Hardin is a moral man, a family man, and southern West Virginia is lucky to have him. I thank Jack for his contributions to our area over the years and commend the community of Huntington and Jack's family for coming together to put together a celebration worthy of such a man.

May this be the first of many "Jack Hardin Days."

9/11 FIVE-YEAR ANNIVERSARY

HON. JUANITA MILLENDER-McDONALD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Ms. MILLENDER-McDONALD. Mr. Speaker, this week we mark the fifth anniversary of the tragic and unprecedented events of September 11, 2001. On this fateful day, we lost not only thousands of our fellow citizens, but a piece of our innocence as well.

On behalf of my constituents of the 37th District of California, I affirm that we will not forget those who lost their lives on that dreadful day. We offer our heartfelt prayers to the families of the victims, and assure them that time has not dulled our deepest sympathies.

We shall never fully recover from the loss of so many of our best and bravest and brightest.

This attack on our homeland showed us that great vigilance and effort are required to prevent terrorists from realizing their murderous aims. This important lesson was paid for dearly, and we owe it to all those who lost their lives to continue to work to protect our country from another attack.

In particular, I am acutely aware of the need to secure our Nation's ports, as my District is adjacent to the Port of Long Beach and the Port of Los Angeles, which are among our Nation's busiest. Some 95 percent of American trade enters the U.S. through 1 of 361 sea-ports on board over 8,500 foreign vessels and makes more than 55,000 port calls per year, which total worth is nearly $1 trillion. It is our duty to protect America's ports which remain highly vulnerable targets. In fact, over 52 percent of all waterborne cargo moves through the Ports of Long Beach and Los Angeles alone. Securing these and the rest of America's ports as well as the economic contributions they make must remain a top priority for each of us.

As such, I am pleased that Congress is finally working on a bipartisan basis to address this gaping hole in our security. I am a proud supporter of the SAFE Port Act, which would appropriate a dedicated stream of port security funding. I look forward to continuing to work on this important issue with my colleagues from both sides of the aisle.

I appeal to all Members of Congress to work toward these goals in the spirit of unity that we felt so poignantly 5 years ago in the wake of the terrorist attacks. This is really the greatest honor we could offer the victims of that day.

THE LOSS OF LANCE CORPORAL
ERIC VALDEPEÑAS

HON. JAMES R. LANGEVIN

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow that I rise to recognize the loss of a brave Marine in Iraq, Lance Corporal Eric Valdepeñas, who served his country with dignity and honor. I join his family and the people of Rhode Island and Massachusetts in mourning this great loss.

Lance Corporal Valdepeñas, a resident of Seekonk, Massachusetts, was a graduate of Bishop Hendricken High School in Warwick, Rhode Island, my own alma mater. He was an honors student and co-captain of the school's championship lacrosse team. He is remembered by his teachers and classmates as having tremendous energy and an exceptional character. After high school, he attended the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and was pursuing an engineering degree when his Marine Reserve unit was called up in December 2005.

Lance Corporal Valdepeñas served with the 1st Battalion, 25th Marine Regiment, 4th Marine Division. He demonstrated the same commitment and positive attitude in Iraq that his family and friends knew well, and he earned numerous military awards, including the Purple Heart. On September 4, while on patrol in al Anbar province, an improvised explosive device detonated next to his vehicle, killing him and two other Marines.

This loss causes us to reflect on the bravery demonstrated by our men and women in uniform as they carry out their obligations in the face of danger. When Lance Corporal Valdepeñas's nation called him to duty, he answered without hesitation. We will remember him as a patriot who made the ultimate sacrifice for his country.

He is survived by his parents, Jesus and Ann-Marie, and seven siblings Marie Drury, Karen Ing, Nora Lough, and Teresa, Edna-Anne, Neil, and Sean Valdepeñas. They will remember his great love for his family, his loyalty and his kindness. May we keep them and other friends and family in our thoughts and prayers as they endure this difficult period. We will also continue to hope for the safe and speedy return of all of our troops serving throughout the world.

A TRIBUTE TO ANTHONY J.
STAGLIANO

HON. ROBERT A. BRADY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. BRADY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to celebrate my friend Anthony Stagliano's 50th year in America. Fifty years ago a 9-year-old Anthony said goodbye to his father in Naples, Italy and boarded a ship to the United States of America. Little Anthony came to America seeking a land of opportunity and found it in Philadelphia. Anthony quickly mastered the English language and went on to graduate from Bok Vocational High School.

Anthony is a devoted family man married to his beloved American beauty Joanne. They have been fortunate to be blessed with four children—Maria, Angela, Gina, and Anthony, Jr. who have each graduated from college.

Anthony Stagliano served his country in the United States Army from 1961–1963. He also took an interest in civic affairs, having served as a committee person for over 30 years. He was an exemplar Temple University Corrections officer, Philadelphia Housing Authority officer, and was on the Court tipstaff. He is currently serving the Philadelphia City Council as the Sergeant-at-Arms.

It is an honor to recognize a person who exemplifies the positive impact immigrants can have on the United States. Anthony's service to the City of Philadelphia, military service, and wonderful family are to be praised. I ask you and my other distinguished colleagues to join me in commending Anthony Stagliano for his 50 years of contribution to our country.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. CAROLYN B. MALONEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Speaker, on September 12, 2006, I missed rollcall votes numbered 436 and 437. Rollcall vote 436 was on the motion to suspend the rules and pass as amended H.R. 5428, a bill to designate the facility of the United States Postal Service located at 202 East Washington Street in Morris, Illinois, as the "Joshua A. Terando Morris Post Office Building." Rollcall vote 437 was on the motion to suspend the rules and pass H. Res. 175, a bill to recognize the importance of establishing a national memorial at the World Trade Center site to commemorate and mourn the events of February 26, 1993, and September 11, 2001.

Had I been present I would have voted "yea" on rollcall votes 436 and 437.

HEALTH INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY PROMOTION ACT (H.R. 4157)

HON. RUSH D. HOLT

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 13, 2006

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of health information technology, which holds great promise for reducing medical errors, lowering costs, expediting diagnoses and treatments, and facilitating quality care. However, I must oppose this legislation due to the complete lack of a mechanism for safeguarding patient privacy, opening up the dangerous possibility of identity theft or personal infringement.

Estimates vary as to the amount of money that health information technology will save our healthcare system, but it could surely be in the tens of billions of dollars. Making health information accessible electronically by health care providers with the proper clearance would improve the quality of care by getting providers to patients' medical history quickly and efficiently. This would reduce medical errors, increase patient satisfaction, and decrease the number of lawsuits.

Unfortunately, the bill that the House passed will not accomplish any of these goals. Providers do not have access to any funding assistance, which they will need to purchase health information technology. We should be making grants and loans available to physicians so that they can take advantage of the promise of health IT, realizing the promise of improved care.

A larger problem is that this bill will jeopardize the privacy of medical records. We have all seen the unconscionable and irresponsible loss of sensitive personal information by federal agencies like the Veterans Administration, Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, and the Department of Transportation. This loss of personal information is a breach of trust by the federal government. Passing this legislation without reasonable privacy safeguards will only put patients at greater risk.

We should be doing more to protect the patients' names, medical history, and financial information. Unfortunately, this legislation abdicates that responsibility. The Rules Committee even disallowed consideration of amendments to accomplish that reasonable and important goal. Whereas the Senate worked on a bipartisan basis to pass a comprehensive and responsible bill, the House has wasted an opportunity to improve healthcare and reduce costs for all Americans.

I support health information technology, and I believe in the promise that it holds. Unfortunately, I cannot support legislation that makes American patients more likely to have their personal information stolen and their privacy violated.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, September 14, 2006 may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

We pray in Your holy Name. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, this morning, following a brief period of morning business, we will resume consideration of the port security bill, with an hour of debate equally divided, followed by a vote on the motion to invoke cloture on the bill. That cloture vote should occur at approximately 11 this morning, and that will be the first vote of today's session. I anticipate that cloture will be invoked, and I encourage all Senators to vote in favor of cloture. The bill managers have been diligently working through the amendments and working through the bill. If we invoke cloture, we expect to complete the bill at a reasonable time today. I encourage all of our colleagues to help the managers so we can finish that bill sometime in the late afternoon today. It means not doing our usual thing of trying to talk and spend a lot of time and then voting later into the night. We really do want to finish this late this afternoon. Senators are reminded that rollcall votes are likely throughout the day and that the filing deadline for second-degree amendments is 10 a.m. this morning.

SAFETY AND SECURITY OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, for this month's session of 4 weeks on the floor of the Senate prior to our recess for the elections, we have focused and will continue to focus on the safety and security of the American people.

There are a lot of issues that need to be dealt with that we are dealing with in committees and in conference, but the focus on the floor very much is the safety and security of families listening right now, and to our colleagues and their families. We know, having seen what had come close to happening with the events in Great Britain in terms of the terrorist attacks and the plot there that was foiled, we are at risk in this country. Therefore, it is our obligation to address these issues and to do it in a way where we know we are equipped to both obtain information that can undercut these plots and foil the terrorists in whatever activity they are dreaming up.

In addition, we have a challenge that is being addressed in committee today, was addressed in committee in the House yesterday, in terms of the terrorist tribunals and military commissions. It needs to be understood by my colleagues and the American people that the detainees we have today—the enemy combatants, people who have wished us harm, people who planned the 9/11 attack—until we act in Congress, in this Senate, they simply cannot be tried. They cannot be brought to justice. That is where we are today. That is why there is so much appropriate focus on making sure our Government, our military personnel, our intelligence officers have the tools they need to keep us safe.

So those two issues, the surveillance issue and the military commissions and tribunals, are issues we are addressing, again, in committee. The President has placed a bill before this body. I introduced it about a week and a half ago. That language is available, and I encourage my colleagues to study that.

Mr. President, that brings me to the issues of security that I mentioned in terms of surveillance, the detainees who are at Guantánamo Bay. Senator MCCONNELL and Senator SPECTER and I actually visited that naval base last week and learned a lot.

We have border security we are addressing in the Department of Defense appropriations bill that we passed a week and a half ago that is in conference and in our Homeland Security appropriations bill, both of which aggressively address border security. So we have border security. We have port security. We have the military commissions that are being addressed for those individuals at Guantánamo Bay. We have support for our troops in terms of maintaining our security through the Department of Defense appropriations bill that is currently in conference. And then we have the whole issue of surveillance.

Today we are going to finish on port security. We all know—and we are reminded by the events surrounding our remembrances of 9/11 with that fifth anniversary—we are fighting a war against radical ideologues. These are militant extremists, and they have a single-minded goal of destroying our Nation. Increasingly, people are realizing that, but it is taking these remembrances and the remembering of the great tragedy of 9/11, coupled with the reality of what very well could have happened to hundreds and, indeed, thousands of Americans if that plot had not been uncovered by the British.

We know the terrorists are not going to stop. And it is not just a war in one part of the world, it is a war against an ideology. They are not going to stop at anything. The enemy is creative. I mentioned the attacks that could have emerged out of the plot which was uncovered by the British. Who would have ever deemed imaginable a day when business travelers could not be carrying contact lens solution in their carry-on. It is because of an attempt with a "Gatorade" bomb.

The terrorists are always thinking. They are always thinking of how they can stay one step ahead of even what our imagination is. They are searching for our weak points. They are seeking ways to exploit our weak points. That is why we have to remain vigilant, and that is why we have to address these issues on the floor. The substance of the bill that is on the floor does just that, the port security bill. That is vigilance.

Nowhere is it clearer to me that we have to be vigilant than at America's 300 maritime ports of entry. We talk about border security. Well, part of border security is port security. It is a border we have to close and appropriately monitor to prevent the terrorists from doing us harm.

These ports are economic centers. As economic centers, our more than 300 sea and river ports are targets in and of themselves. For people who want to hurt us, want to hurt our economy, they can become a target. These ports become even more attractive when they are close to urban centers. These ports facilitate the rapid dissemination of cargo from around the globe to each of our cities and towns. Thus, we know the terrorists, when they want to hurt us, would potentially address these ports.

We have done a lot to secure our ports, but the fact remains, they are too porous. That brings us back to the importance of this bill. The bill before us plugs the holes that exist. It toughens security standards for all cargo. And it strengthens and improves programs designed to screen cargo at foreign ports and secures the international supply chain from the very start to the very end.

Technologies have advanced. We have developed more accurate detection tools. But we are not using those tools throughout our system. We are not using them universally. Terrorists have access to stealthier weapons, and that is a huge vulnerability just asking to be exploited if we do not keep up, if we do not keep pace. That is why we must pass this bill tonight.

The bill establishes a risk-based grant program to help assist ports with training personnel and implementing new security standards. The men and women who operate our ports are our first line of defense. We have entrusted these stewards of security with a serious, with a grave responsibility.

Accordingly, the bill ensures that the Department of Homeland Security will move forward with background checks for all port workers so we know who is on the ground at these critical facilities. It sets up procedures for resuming port operations and trade safely and quickly after a terrorist attack to help minimize any effect or any shock to our economy. It establishes the appropriate protocols to ensure that if a terrorist does strike, our ports are not closed longer than necessary.

And importantly, we also need protocols in place so we do not reopen ports too early. An incident at a port could be a red herring, a distraction to disguise other, more damaging terrorist activities.

These are just a few of the highlights of the Port Security Improvement Act. At its core, it is a multipronged approach to plugging the holes that exist in port security. It institutionalizes multiple and redundant security layers. From the factory of origin to cargo container, from cargo container to port warehouse, from port warehouse to cargo ship, from cargo ship to the port of calling, and from the port of calling to the final destination, at each step this bill toughens our standards. We are making it harder for a terrorist's dirty bomb to hide anonymously in a cargo container. We are making it harder for terrorists to tamper with cargo containers. We are making it harder for terrorists to use our ports as target practice. And we are making it harder for terrorists to use our ports to stealthily gain access to the rest of our homeland.

The terrorists we face have a radical agenda. They are ever-vigilant in monitoring and assessing our weaknesses and always looking for new ways to harm us. We must be ever-vigilant in identifying our weaknesses and minimizing and eradicating them. That is what this Port Security Improvement Act does. It is my hope my colleagues will join me in supporting it and in passing this important piece of legislation this afternoon.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will be a period for the transaction of morning business for up to 30 minutes, with the first half of the time under the control of the majority leader or his designee and the second half of the time under the control of the Democratic leader or his designee.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DEMINT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REPUBLICANS ARE COMMITTED TO MAKING AMERICA SAFER

Mr. DEMINT. Mr. President, I said yesterday I am thankful to be part of the Republican majority that understands that September 11, 2001, changed the way that we must look at the world. Republicans are committed to taking action and not just talking about making America safer.

We must track, capture, and eliminate our terrorist enemies before they attack us. We must provide the President and our military with every legal tool available to fight this war against Islamic extremists, and we must secure our homeland by securing our borders and ports.

Unfortunately, the Democratic Party does not seem to understand the true threat that we face with Islamic extremists. Instead, Senate Democrats continue to prove that they are dangerously naive about the grave danger of global terrorism.

Radical Islamic jihadists have made no secret of their goal, which is the complete subjugation of the world to their extreme form of Islamic nationalism.

Osama bin Laden said the attacks of 9/11 were "an unparalleled and magnificent feat of valor" and "a great step toward the unity of Muslims."

According to the al-Qaida charter:

There will be continuing enmity until everybody believes in Allah. We will not meet [the enemy] halfway, and there will be no room for dialog with them.

The Iranian President has called for a world "without the United States and Zionism," saying that the West's "doomed destiny will be annihilation, misfortune, and abjectness," and telling other nations that in order to have good relations with Iran, they must "bow down before the greatness of the Iranian nation and surrender."

Horrendous attacks in India, Madrid, London, as well as recent arrests in Canada, Miami, and the foiled London airplane plot have shown that terrorists and their state sponsors have the determination to back up their rhetoric with action.

President Bush and my Republican colleagues have proved that we understand the nature of the enemy we are facing and that we must be just as determined as they are.

Let's be clear. Republicans are not the ones fighting to preserve the status quo. Preserving the status quo is what we did for 8 long years under the Clinton administration—simply responding with a law enforcement mindset while Islamic extremists attacked us and built and financed their worldwide network of terror.

Now Democrats would have us return to the Clinton status quo—a pre-September 11, head-in-the-sand philosophy of "don't listen, don't track, don't challenge."

Republicans understand the world changed on September 11 and that we are fighting a dynamic and committed enemy. As we have responded to terrorists, they have adjusted their tactics, and we are continually evaluating and adapting our strategy to meet this evolving threat.

If we don't show the resolve to defeat radical Islamic terrorists in Afghanistan, Iraq, and Lebanon, we will never defeat them anywhere. No one understands the stakes better than the terrorists. That is why there is no in-between choice in Iraq. Either we cut and run and allow it to become a safe haven for terrorism and staging grounds for future attacks or we stay until victory over the terrorists is achieved and Iraq is a stable partner in democracy.

Republicans have proved that we will do what it takes to secure our homeland from all enemies. We are committed to completing our current mission in Iraq and Afghanistan with victory and honor and to create a new generation of freedom and security, of peace and prosperity, for America and the world.

The unfortunate truth is that when it comes to securing America's homeland, the Democrats are dangerously naive. They think if we pull out of Iraq, the terrorists will leave us alone. They have abandoned those in their own party who dare to disagree with the most radical liberals of the far left. Democrats, with the help of their misguided allies, such as media outlets like the New York Times, have signaled to the terrorists that America is tired, discouraged, and ready to quit, encouraging the terrorists to expand their attacks around the world.

Not content to simply heckle from the sidelines, Democrats have actively fought to block the tools that are critical to stopping future attacks. In fact, Senate Democrats united this week in opposition to the terrorist surveillance program, proposing an amendment to the port security bill that denounces this program that has saved American lives.

Just last Thursday, Democrats showed their continued tendency to flip-flop when they issued a media statement outlining their latest security agenda, pledging to "work to . . . ensure our intelligence agencies have the tools they need to defeat the terrorists." Then, 1 short hour later, they again played procedural games to block the Judiciary Committee from further consideration of the National Security Surveillance Act of 2006.

The Senator from Texas, Mr. CORNYN, got it right when he said:

It's little wonder that Democrats have a credibility gap with the American people on the issue of national security. Saying one thing [and then] doing another . . . doesn't help our efforts to win this war.

This week, Senate Democrats continued to prove they are willing to put politics ahead of the security and safety of American families by trying to kill the port security bill with partisan amendments.

The Senator from New York, Mr. SCHUMER, openly admitted the Democratic strategy of playing politics with national security. Yesterday, Congress Daily reported Senator SCHUMER "conceded Democrats were seeking to score political points" and quoted my Democratic colleague saying: "This is politics at its very best."

I believe the American people have a different view of the partisan games the Senate Democrats are playing. I think they believe that this is politics at its very worst.

If Democrats spent half as much time fighting terrorists as they do this administration, America would win this war a lot faster.

Democrats claim to be the ones listening to the American people, but, unfortunately, they are just posturing to win an election. Mr. President, I invite my Democratic colleagues to stop these political games and to join us in helping to win this war on terror and securing America's homeland.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, how much time remains on our side?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is 4 minutes 25 seconds remaining.

Mr. ENSIGN. I ask unanimous consent for an additional 5 minutes on each side for morning business.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I didn't hear the request.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has asked unanimous consent that each side have 5 additional minutes for morning business.

Ms. LANDRIEU. I have no objection.

AMERICA'S STATUS IN FIGHTING TERRORISM

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, I rise this morning to talk about our status in this fight against Islamic extremism around the world.

When the terrorists struck the World Trade Center on September 11, 2001, America was forced to realize that we were at war. We did not ask for this war. This conflict was brought to us by individuals who believe that America is evil. This is an enemy that hates us because we are a free nation, and our citizens are free to pursue their dreams and chart their own destiny.

The day the World Trade Center towers fell, our world—or at least our comprehension of it—changed forever. Our enemy stepped onto our soil, destroyed our buildings, killed more than 3,000 of our citizens, and made clear their intentions. They want nothing less than to cause our demise.

The world has changed much since that horrific day. Unfortunately, the will to fight extremists who planned and executed September 11, and many other attacks around the globe, has wavered since then. The united resolve of many nations has softened dramatically.

As Americans, we have no choice but to lead the way with an unwavering commitment to this fight. Remember, they asked for this fight. They, long ago, declared war on America and the free world and long before September 11 began attacking and killing our citizens.

They challenged us many times over the years and received little more than empty rhetoric and a slap on the wrist for such atrocities as striking the USS Cole, the first World Trade Center bombings, destruction of the Khobar Towers in Saudi Arabia and the Marine barracks in Lebanon; and, of course, they attacked our Embassies in Africa.

We were at war, but we didn't even know it. For too long we ignored the words of these terrorists. We attributed their declarations of hate as mere rantings of lunatics.

Time has shown us that the words of these Islamic extremists must be taken seriously, and we must continue to act decisively to stop them from achieving their aims.

In an effort to steal our collective resolve, it is important to remind ourselves just who the enemy really is in this global war against Islamic fascism. For too long America has seen our enemies through a prism that casts them in the mold of conventional powers, but the Islamic fascists are a different breed. They fight for no flag, nor do they adhere to any international agreement. They fight outside the box; whereas, our sense of what is right and wrong constrains us to adhere to recognized rules of engagement.

We all know the self-professed leader of al-Qaida is Osama bin Laden. His call to arms for his disciples is: Death is better than living on this Earth with the unbelievers amongst us.

We know Iraq is central to the war on terror because Osama bin Laden said it is. He said:

The most serious issue today for the whole world is this third world war that is raging in Iraq.

Zawahiri, Osama bin Laden's deputy, described Iraq as "the place for the greatest battle of Islam in this era."

Remember the blind sheikh? He was responsible for the 1993 World Trade Center bombing. From his prison cell, he has called on Muslims everywhere to "tear them apart, ruin their economy, instigate against their corporations, destroy their embassies, attack their interests, sink their ships, and shoot down their airplanes; kill them on land, at sea, in the air; kill them wherever you find them."

Those were their words, Mr. President. We are at war with an enemy that wants to see America wiped off the map. This is an enemy bent on destruction and Islamic domination—or at least their vision of Islam. Their goal is to establish a violent political utopia across the Middle East—which they call a caliphate—where all would be ruled according to their hateful ideology.

Osama bin Laden has called the 9/11 attacks, in his words, “a great step toward the unity of Muslims and establishing the righteous caliphate.” There are reports that some of Osama bin Laden’s supporters believe that he is the Mahdi, the 12th Imam. The Mahdi will lead believers in Islam to victory over the infidels, ushering in an era of peace and justice.

Even Iran’s President is on record as instructing America, in his words:

If you would like to have good relations with the Iranian nation in the future, bow down before the greatness of the Iranian nation and surrender. If you don’t accept to do this, the Iranian nation will force you to surrender and bow down.

Those are the Iranian President’s own words. It is not farfetched to believe that with nuclear weapons in his possession, he would use them to usher in this cataclysmic confrontation that he seeks. We must take these threats seriously and act accordingly.

Remember, the terrorists are traitors to their own faith trying, in effect, to hijack Islam itself. The enemy of America is not our many Muslim friends; it is not our many Arab friends. Our enemy is a radical network of terrorists and every government that supports them.

The terrorists’ directive commands them to kill Christians and Jews, to kill all Americans, and make no distinction among military leaders, ordinary troops, and civilians, including women and children. They want to overthrow existing governments in many Muslim countries such as Egypt, Saudi Arabia, and Jordan. They want to drive Israel out of the Middle East. They want to drive Christians and Jews out of vast regions of Asia and Africa. These terrorists kill not merely to end lives but to disrupt and end a way of life. With every atrocity, they hope that America grows fearful, retreating from the world and forsaking our friends. They stand against us because we stand in their way.

We cannot be deceived by their pretenses to piety. We have seen their kind before. They are the heirs of all the murderous ideologies of the 20th century.

By sacrificing human life to serve their radical visions, by abandoning every value except power, they follow the path of fascism and Nazism and totalitarianism. They will follow that path all the way to where it ends: In history’s unmarked graves of discarded lies.

This is not, however, just America’s fight. And what is at stake is not just America’s freedom. This is the world’s fight. This is civilization’s fight. This is the fight for all who believe in progress and pluralism, tolerance, and freedom.

The war we fight today is more than a military conflict; it is the decisive ideological struggle of the 21st century. Make no mistake: this is an enemy we cannot appease; this is an enemy we must defeat.

On September 11, 2001, and the days immediately following, this country stood united. We stood ready to protect all Americans. We must continue to show a united front against this enemy. We must understand that what we say has great consequences. If our enemy sees the country divided, it will also see an opportunity and a path to victory.

During our Civil War, General Lee often read northern papers to gauge the mood of the population in the North. As he saw the political discourse and the division among northern leaders prior to Gettysburg, he believed that it would take only one more victory to win the war. Lucky for us, the victory never came, but we can learn from Lee’s lesson.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 30 more seconds.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ENSIGN. Mr. President, al-Qaida reads our newspapers and watches our television stations. They see the lack of resolve in some of our leaders and they seek to exploit it. This is the time to lead, a time to unite, and a time to defeat an enemy that wants to bring an end to freedom around the world. We must lay down our party labels as Republicans, Democrats, or Independents and become Americans. We must not tire. We must not falter. We cannot fail.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

OSAMA BIN LADEN STILL LOOSE

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I came to the floor to speak briefly about one of our outstanding superintendents in Louisiana and to pay tribute to an accomplishment that has been made on education. But in light of the rantings that went on for the last 30 minutes in the Chamber from my two colleagues on the other side, I would like to state for the record that America is not tired of fighting terrorism. America is tired of the wrong-headed and bone-headed leadership of the Republican Party that has sent $6.5 billion a month to Iraq, when the front line was Afghanistan and Saudi Arabia. America is tired of leadership which led this country to attack Saddam Hussein when we were attacked by Osama bin Laden, and which captured a man who did not attack the country and left loose a man who did.

Americans are tired of bone-headed Republican leadership that alienates our allies when we need them the most. And Americans are most certainly tired of leadership that, despite documented mistake after mistake after mistake after mistake after mistake—and even their own party admitting mistakes—never admits that they do anything wrong. That is the kind of leadership Americans are tired of.

I didn’t come to the Senate to have partisan rantings on the floor, but I most certainly am not going to sit here as a Democrat and let the Republican leadership come to the floor and talk about how Democrats are not making us safe. They are the ones who are in charge, and Osama bin Laden is still loose.

RECOGNIZING LOUISIANA’S MADISON PARISH SCHOOL DISTRICT

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, now I will speak about what I came to the floor to speak about. We have had a very difficult time in Louisiana and Mississippi and the gulf coast this year, in part because our resources are short because our country is involved in so many other things, and I can appreciate and understand the dilemmas. But we still have a great effort underway to rebuild Louisiana, Mississippi, and the gulf coast. So we have been moving steadily ahead in fits and starts because, of course, this was an unprecedented disaster. And while it really wasn’t a natural disaster for Louisiana, it was a manmade disaster because our city went under water and the region, counties in Mississippi and parishes in Louisiana—for instance, one of our parishes, not New Orleans which we have heard a lot about, but St. Bernard Parish which sits right outside of New Orleans, 75,000 people live there, and every home was destroyed and every church was ruined and every business was destroyed. They were ruined not just because of the storms and the hurricanes which come and there is nothing much we can do to stop them, but because the levees broke which the Federal Government is supposed to maintain, and because of spending money in other places and not protecting people in their homes.

So as my colleagues know, we had water 15 feet high that stood for up to 6 to 8 and sometimes 10 weeks in some places. Our communities have been struggling with how we might better approach the recovery should something—and I see my colleague from Seattle, WA—should a tsunami hit Seattle, which is a major, very important American city, or should a category 5 storm hit Long Island like it did in 1938 when only a few hundred thousand people lived there but now millions of people do. We need to do a better job of responding. So Congress has been involved in that for this last year, and I predict will be involved in it for many years to come until we get it right.

But one of the things that we did get right is that the northern parishes of Louisiana came to the aid of those from the southern parishes, and one of those parishes that I am here to speak briefly about is Madison Parish. It is a small parish up in the northeastern part of our State, and it is a poor parish. It has great natural resources and very vibrant and vital agricultural land, but it is quite poor, generally. It is a district with only 3,000 students in school. But as the people fled from south Louisiana and south Mississippi and southeastern Texas to flee from the rising water of the storms, many of them found their way to Madison Parish.

Madison Parish superintendent Michael Johnson led this effort to absorb several hundred students into a very small school system that was already overburdened. The storm didn't, of course, hit Madison Parish directly but, of course, indirectly they were impacted by some high winds that made it up to north Louisiana, and were mostly impacted by students and families who ran there for shelter. There were many shelters put up. Superintendent Johnson, as many superintendents in north Louisiana, reached out their hands and, without a lot of help, without any textbooks, without a lot of information about how this was supposed to happen, took the children in. Not only did children find a safe place in Madison Parish school systems to attend school because their schools in south Louisiana were ruined, but with all of this, Madison Parish was one of the parishes that improved their test scores substantially on the last LEAP test given in Louisiana. Not only did their scores improve, but students and educators in Madison Parish at the same time were welcoming evacuated children with open arms.

Madison Parish is not the only parish that saw a substantial rise in test scores this year. Beauregard Parish has also done well. We are very proud of all of our school systems that did better in a very difficult year, but most certainly we are proud of those small, poor, rural school systems that, with good leadership, are making substantial progress.

We don't talk enough about education on the floor of the Senate, in my view, and we don't often at all talk about the small areas of our country that are making extraordinary progress in less populated areas. We talk a lot about New York and Chicago and Los Angeles, but we don't always get to hear about small places that are not even recognizable sometimes to many people on the map. But since I visited Madison Parish recently and had a great tour of north Louisiana, I thought I would take a minute to come and praise publicly this particular superintendent and to call attention to many of our superintendents who, despite the fact that we keep cutting their Federal funding, are managing to meet these high standards and to lift their children up and to make their school system and others better for the future of our States and our region.

Superintendent Johnson has been the impetuous for Madison Parish's recent success. Interestingly, Superintendent Johnson was working as superintendent of schools for New York City's District 29 when terrorists attacked the World Trade Center on September 11, 2001. Superintendent Johnson took over in August before Hurricanes Katrina and Rita hit and proceeded with the same positive energy he embodied in New York. The Madison Parish School District now has improved their LEAP test scores by reducing the percentage of students scoring Unsatisfactory and increased the percentage of students scoring Basic and above. They have also reduced suspensions at the elementary and middle school levels.

Not only have their scores improved, but the students and educators of Madison Parish have welcomed the evacuated children with open arms. Under Superintendent Johnson's leadership, they used their resources to provide the children lunch, buy clothes, books and other necessary items. They provided increased after school programs so these students would spend less time in shelters and have some sense of normalcy. The students and staff helped the displaced children and teachers begin to replace their personal possessions and helped them work through their feelings in the crisis. This was something that Superintendent Johnson understood very well from his experiences in New York and added to his success in caring for the children taken in after Hurricanes Katrina and Rita by Madison Parish.

As students come back into southern Louisiana and begin the new school year, I would like to recognize how beautifully our students were welcomed into schools systems like Madison Parish. Superintendent Johnson and his community are an example of the best in our society—the generosity and compassion that is found in the hearts of our people. I also want all of us to look to the Madison Parish School System and to Superintendent Michael Johnson as an example of how a low performing school can, not only turn their scores around, but offer help to those students who are less fortunate.

Thank you to all students, teachers, principals and superintendents who have taken that extra step and worked harder, improved their test scores and opened their arms and hearts to those who were affected by the storms. We should all live by this example. In closing, I would like to express my gratitude to the Madison Parish schools system and to Superintendent Michael Johnson for taking education seriously and improving their test scores while providing a safe, healthy learning environment for all children.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

REMEMBERING ANN RICHARDS

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I rise this morning on a very sad note for all of us who knew a very special, wonderful woman by the name of Governor Ann Richards. Last night she left this world, but she left behind a tremendous spirit that many of us will carry on. She was the kind of woman who could walk into a room and light it up, no matter where she was. She was a Governor of Texas, and I know that State knew and loved her well, but the rest of the country also loved her.

I was privileged to know this wonderful, compassionate human being. She made me laugh, she made me think, and she made me remember what I cared most about in this country. Her loss is a tragic one certainly for the State of Texas, certainly for the country, but absolutely for every one of us who knew her.

I know many people will be speaking throughout the next several days about the loss of Governor Richards, but I just wanted, on behalf of so many of us who cared for her so much, to express our condolences to all of her family, to her friends, to everyone who knew her, and to let them know that we will not forget and we will continue to carry her message of hope and passion as we continue in our lives.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, how much time do the Democrats have remaining?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is 10 minutes remaining.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 4 minutes of that time, if I could.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I would like to take a few minutes to add to Senator MURRAY's heartfelt and beautiful tribute to Governor Ann Richards. Many of us woke up this morning to read the newspaper and were stunned by the news that Governor Richards had passed away.

Many of us, of course, knew of her illness and that she struggled with it and fought it bravely, but I am not sure how many understood how close she was to death's door.

As a neighbor of hers who grew up right over the border from Texas, and as a young woman in the legislature, Ann Richards was at the top of the list of women I looked to early in my career. I did not have too many women to look to because there were just not that many women in public office in this country in 1976, the year when Governor Richards started her political career as Travis County Commissioner. There were 604 women in state legislatures nationwide. Not only was she an outstanding leader but she was an extraordinary administrator. I remember her days as State treasurer of Texas and followed many of her guidelines to leadership in trying to manage the budget of Texas. I followed that lead in trying to manage the budget of Louisiana. She showed that women could not only hold county commissioner seats, but high-level executive offices, managing finances and money. She became Governor of one of the largest States in America and served with extraordinary ability.

But more than just her service to the public at large, which was tremendous to the State of Texas and the country, Ann Richards encouraged women to think of things that had never been thought of before that women could to serve in corporate board rooms and as Governors and, hopefully, one day as President of the United States. And today, thanks to women like her, 1,686 women serve in state legislatures across the country. Without women such as Ann Richards, those dreams would never materialize or would be decades away.

There was a quote in the paper that I chuckled at because Governor Richards said once she didn't want to be remembered for keeping a clean house. She thought that women should be remembered for things greater than just how well they could vacuum how well they could cook or how well they could do things associated with the home.

While I do not in any way diminish the contribution that we make as wives and as mothers or diminish any of the things that we do inside of our homes that keep our families happy and keep our society going, I want to say emphatically that I agree with her. I hope women who are born and grow up today really think about what they want their tombstone to say.

Ann was always that kind of woman. She was born not only to be all a woman could be, but all a person could be, all a leader could be. Very few women in the generations that I am familiar with have accomplished that as well as she did. It is with great sadness that we recognize her passing, and I am sure there will be a more formal recognition in the Senate Chamber among men and women remembering the contributions this extraordinary American made to our country, to the world, to women and girls everywhere.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUNUNU). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Murray (for Stabenow) amendment No. 4967 to authorize grants for interoperable communications.

Nelson (NE) modified amendment No. 4945 to provide emergency agricultural disaster assistance.

Clinton/Schumer amendment No. 4958 to establish a grant program for individuals still suffering health effects as a result of the September 11, 2001, attacks in New York City.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will be 1 hour for debate equally divided in the usual form.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CARPER. I thank my colleagues for yielding.

Mr. President, earlier this week we all commemorated the fifth anniversary of 9/11. Much of that day was spent here and around the country discussing whether after 5 years we are safer and whether we are safe enough. While we have made real progress with respect to the security of our nuclear powerplants, with respect to airport security, far too little has been done to secure our Nation's seaports, railways, transit systems and, I might add, hundreds of chemical plants around this country.

After 9/11 we also recognized the need to protect our seaports. In 2002 we passed the Maritime Transportation Security Act, which was the start of developing a national and regional maritime security plan or plans. This legislation also required the Department of Homeland Security to help ports develop individual security plans and directed Customs and Border Protection to design a system for receiving information on ships' cargoes before they docked at a U.S. port.

Now, 4 years later, we are finally taking the next step. Still, port security has never received the same level of attention as airport security, and part of this is because 9/11 tragically exposed the vulnerabilities of our ports and it has been burned into our memories. I think it is also because most Americans do not have any direct interaction with a seaport on a daily basis, a weekly basis, a monthly basis or, in some cases, ever. However, a growing number of Americans have begun to recognize what an appealing target our seaports can be for terrorists.

First of all, many ports, including the ones we have in my State and the States of New Hampshire, Maine, and Washington, are located in or near densely populated urban areas. Also, ports are vital to the economy of our country. They are used by farmers to try to get their products to market and also industry to export products, but also we import everything from chemicals to oil and gas. As a result, many of us have concluded we must place a higher priority on addressing any vulnerability at our ports before any terrorist attack takes advantage of them. I applaud the work of Senator COLLINS and the great work Senator LIEBERMAN has done with her helping to craft this, and also the staffs and Senator MURRAY and her staff.

The American Association of Port Authorities believes that to do so will require roughly $400 million a year for physical enhancements for ports in this country. The bill before us would authorize Congress to do just that.

Now, $400 million is a lot of money, but it is significantly cheaper, I think we will agree, than responding to a devastating attack after the fact. My port, the Port of Wilmington, has received about $2 million since 9/11. The State has provided a fair amount of money, as has our port authority. These funds have been used, in part, to help build a gated entrance with cameras, with security checks, and to fence and light the port's perimeter.

While we are grateful to receive Federal support for these important security measures, our port, like many others, will require additional assistance. Some of that we should provide ourselves within our State. For some of that we look to the Federal Government for help. Obviously there is not enough funding for everyone to get everything they need. However, ports in Oklahoma, ports in Kansas, ports in Tennessee and Kentucky have all received port security grants over the years, as have ports along the eastern and western gulf coast. At the same time, the Port of Wilmington—I am told it is the busiest port on the Delaware River and the port of entry for much of our Nation's food supply, especially for the east coast—has been forced to make do with less. Therefore, I am pleased this bill requires the Department of Homeland Security to conduct a risk analysis of our Nation's seaports and establish a priority for security funding.

The Port of Wilmington also participated in something called a Transportation Security Administration pilot program, a program designed to screen port workers and block individuals with a terrorist connection from accessing sensitive areas at our ports. This pilot program was supposed to be the first step toward establishing a national program, with identification cards and equipment that could read biometric information, such as fingerprints and retinal patterns. But the Department of Homeland Security ended this pilot program before the national screening and identification system was ready. The national system was supposed to be implemented by last summer, but it has yet to occur. The implementation date, I am sorry to say, continues to slip. Now we are being told the ports will receive official identification cards by the end of this year, but the essential card readers will not be ready until sometime next year. That doesn't make a lot of sense.

This program is moving forward far too slowly, and that is why I offered an amendment, when the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee debated port security, to require the Department of Homeland Security to issue its regulations on the worker screening program not next year but by the end of this year. The bill before us today takes a slightly different approach but still addresses the need to get this important program up and running as soon as possible. Under the Port Security Improvement Act, this bill, the Department of Homeland Security would be required to fully implement the worker credentialing program at 10 ports by next summer and at all ports by January 1, 2009.

Let me conclude by saying that this week we have also passed rail and transit security amendments, something that is long overdue. I strongly support them. After the train bombing in Madrid 2 years ago and the London Underground attacks last summer, many of us hoped we would take steps to prevent a similar kind of attack here. But to date, the Federal Government has done far too little to address transit and rail security needs in this country. In fact, rail and transit security received less than 3 percent of the funding that has been dedicated thus far to airport security.

I want to be honest with you. Protecting our rail and transit lines will not be an easy task. Almost 10 billion transit trips were taken in 2004, and transit accommodates more than 16 times the number of daily travelers than do our Nation's airlines—16 times. There are more and more people using rail transit every day so they can avoid traffic and high gasoline prices. Also, it is much more difficult to protect an open system such as the ones at bus stops and train stations than it is to guard the closed systems we have at airports. You cannot physically check every bag that is brought onto a commuter train or ID every person who boards a bus, nor do I believe we ought to. The rail transit systems can only work if they are fluid. I believe long lines of people taking off their shoes to get on a train or bus would render them largely unworkable.

As much as anything, though, what we need to do in order to reduce the likelihood of a debilitating attack on our transit and rail systems is to improve surveillance, more security officers, use of canines, and heavy reliance on the use of new technologies. This requires strong leadership, vision, and enthusiasm for attacking the unique challenges of securing rail and transit.

It also requires effective partnerships. The Federal Government needs to be one of those principal partners. So far, the Department of Homeland Security has only shown a strong appetite for preventing the sort of attack that led to its creation. The White House proposes lumping together all nonaviation security into one competitive grant program, with less than 15 percent of the funding proposed for aircraft security. That is less than 15 percent for all of them—transit, ports, rail, and so forth.

Further, the tiny sums that have been appropriated for rail security have been very slow to move. Last year, the Department of Homeland Security took 9 months just to start sending appropriated funds to State and local transit authorities. I realize they can't turn the spigot on overnight, but 9 months? We can do better than that, and we need to. Rail and transit security should not be controversial issues. We know we need to upgrade the emergency exits and surveillance equipment at train stations. Further, we need to hire more police officers, we need to train and deploy more bomb-sniffing dogs, and we have to develop more sophisticated equipment that would allow us to detect threats without unduly slowing commute times. It will require smart people, a strong focus, and good leadership. That is why we must pass rail security legislation that lays out a national approach and framework.

While I am very happy we adopted the rail and transit security amendment to this bill, I simply cannot understand why this legislation has been so difficult to get passed and signed into law. What is controversial about hiring bomb-sniffing dogs or improving surveillance? Nothing. The threat has simply not been taken seriously.

How much more time do I have, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 45 seconds remaining.

Mr. CARPER. I hope this casual approach to a dangerous threat ends with the adoption of the rail and security amendments this week. I strongly support their passage and urge our leadership to fight to maintain them in the bill with the amendments we send to the President.

In conclusion, it has been 5 years since 9/11; 5 years of hearing that we need to take threats seriously and realize we live in a dangerous world. It is time we act on those words and protect the millions of Americans who rely on rail and transit every day, and on our ports, just as this legislation would better protect our ports and the communities around them in the years ahead.

Mr. President, I yield my time.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, we are in a time where we have equally divided time, and I am going to give 5 minutes to the Senator from Arkansas off of our time and ask unanimous consent that any quorum calls that occur from here on are equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized for 5 minutes.

AMENDMENT NO. 4959

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I thank the managers of this legislation. They have done a fantastic job in getting us to where we are today. Also, I thank Senator TALENT of Missouri, who has been my cosponsor on the amendment I wish to visit with you about, very briefly, today.

Port Security remains a major vulnerability for this country, and tied to port security is trucking security.

The 9/11 Commission identified foreign trucking entities entering the United States as a top homeland security concern. The DOT inspector general has recommended that various security enhancements to the trucking security provisions in this bill be made. This goes back to 2004, but they have largely been ignored since that time.

If you look at the reality of the situation in which we find ourselves today, we have NAFTA, where NAFTA allows foreign trucks to come into the United States within 25 miles of the U.S. border. They can pass between Mexico and Canada. But what we have found in reality is that, although most are playing by the rules, and that is good, there are some truckdrivers and trucking companies violating the provisions of U.S. law by delivering goods and picking up goods far outside the scope of where they are supposed to do it.

Trucking is very important to this country. It may not be very exciting to some people, but it is very important to this country because 70 percent of our Nation's cargo is carried by truck.

It is also important to homeland security because trucks have been used in terrorist attacks in years past. What Senator TALENT and I are trying to do with our amendment—and the managers have graciously agreed to accept it in the managers' package—is to direct the Department of Transportation and the Department of Homeland Security to first verify legal status of all licensed commercial truck drivers operating in the United States. Right now there are about 11 million of those, and there are about 40,000 new ones every month.

First, we have to verify legal status. Second, we eliminate commercial driver's license fraud. Of course, we know that it is not perfect. We will probably not eliminate every single incident of that, but we are going to make a very serious stab at eliminating as much as possible.

Third—this is very important—we give State governments and local law enforcement uniform guidelines and tools for enforcing immigration violations by truckers who are operating beyond the scope of their authority.

This is something that we have seen in Arkansas—I am sure that Senator TALENT has seen it in Missouri—and all around the country. People on the ground down in the trenches, local law enforcement—in our case, it is the highway police—don't have any clear direction on what they can do if they find someone who is driving illegally under these circumstances.

We do all this and give them 1 year to comply with this amendment.

We are basically taking areas that have been identified by the 9/11 Commission or by the DOT inspector general, and we are holding DOT's and DHS's feet to the fire to make sure they do the right thing when it comes to immigration and homeland security.

It is a win-win-win across the board. It is good for the United States economy, it is good for our trucking industry, and it is good for United States security and homeland security. It will reward the good guys and punish the bad guys.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendments? If not, without objection, the amendments, as modified, are agreed to en bloc.

The amendments (Nos. 4923, as modified, and 4986, as modified) were agreed to.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mrs. MURRAY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, very shortly we will be voting on cloture on the Port Security Act. I urge my colleagues to support the cloture motion. We hope to be able to complete action on this bill by 5 o'clock this afternoon. We are working toward that goal.

Senator MURRAY and I are happy to talk to our colleagues, but we will be moving through the amendments at a very rapid pace after cloture is invoked, as I hope it will be. We have made great progress on this bill. It is an important bill for our homeland security, and I urge all of our colleagues to support the cloture motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, we are about to vote on cloture on a very important maritime cargo security bill. This is a bill that will have a significant impact on the Nation's security, as it is implemented. A number of people have been working on the floor for the last several days to work our way through amendments. I think a lot of progress has been made, and I am very pleased with the number of improvements that have been made to this bill over the last several days.

When this bill is finally passed out of the Senate and conferenced with the House, which I hope will occur shortly, and signed by the President, we can all say that in a bipartisan way we have significantly made a difference in the lives of all Americans.

In a moment we will be voting on cloture. That means this bill is very close to the end. We have a few amendments we are going to be dealing with, but both the Republican leader and the Democratic leader have been clear they want this bill finished by early afternoon. That means if any of our colleagues on our side have an amendment they need to have discussed, they need to talk with us during this cloture vote or their amendment will not be considered. So I urge anybody on my side who has an amendment out there, an issue that needs to be dealt with, to talk with us during this coming cloture vote.

Mr. President, with that, I urge my colleagues on my side to vote for cloture and to move this very important piece of legislation forward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. SPECTER, be allowed to speak for 10 minutes as in morning business immediately after the cloture vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I would not object. If the Senator could withhold for just 1 minute to let me check on my side.

Ms. COLLINS. I would be happy to withhold.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I would ask the Senator from Maine to modify her request so that following the 10 minutes for the Senator from Pennsylvania that Senator BAUCUS be allowed to the speak for 10 minutes on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator so modify her unanimous consent request?

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I so modify my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the clerk will report the motion to invoke cloture.

The bill clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, do hereby move to bring to a close debate on Calendar No. 432, H.R. 4954, a bill to improve maritime and cargo security through enhanced layered defenses, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the mandatory quorum call has been waived.

The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on H.R. 4954, the Security and Accountability for Every Port Act, shall be brought to a close? The yeas and nays are mandatory under the rule.

The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I have 10 unanimous consent requests for committees to meet. They have the approval of the leaders. I ask unanimous consent that these requests be agreed to and printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I would make an inquiry. I inquire of the distinguished majority leader if the Senate Armed Services Committee could be added to that list and, therefore, be able to continue our hearing.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, right on top of the 10 requests is the unanimous consent request that the Armed Services Committee be authorized to meet during the session.

For the information of our colleagues, there had been an objection earlier today. I talked to the appropriate Members and that was readily agreed to. So the Armed Services Committee will be able to meet accordingly any time today.

Again, for the information of our colleagues, I ask the chairman of that committee to indicate what time they will resume the meeting.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I thank our distinguished leader. With the concurrence of the distinguished ranking member, Mr. LEVIN, we have agreed to resume in open session a markup in the Armed Services Committee in Hart 216 at 2:15.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. FRIST. Yes.

Mr. LEVIN. To make sure that the record is clear, there has never been and has not been any objection—I am sure the majority leader would concur—any objection from this side at any time to the Armed Services Committee meeting today.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. That is well known to this Senator—that the Senator from Michigan and that side of the aisle has been totally cooperative in having a mark-up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I believe I have consent to speak for 10 minutes as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

TERRORIST SURVEILLANCE

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought recognition to comment briefly about two subjects: One, the legislation providing for judicial review for the President's terrorist surveillance program; and, second, what we are going to do to comply with Hamdan v. Rumsfeld.

The Judiciary Committee reported out three bills yesterday. S. 2453, which is my bill, provides that the surveillance program will be submitted to the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court. There is no doubt that the President's program violates the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, which purports to be exclusive. But if there is constitutional authority under Article 2, that constitutional authority trumps the act. The only way there can be a determination on that is to have a court weigh the seriousness of the threat as opposed to the invasion on privacy.

This legislation, S. 2453, does not authorize the President's program, contrary to the assertions of many people. What it does is subject the President's program to judicial review. It does not mandate review because, understandably, the President does not want to curtail his institutional authority.

What I have sought to accomplish is to have this program reviewed; and the President has made a commitment, confirmed by the White House, that this program will be submitted for judicial review.

There has been a contention raised that there is an inconsistency between Senator FEINSTEIN's bill, S. 3001, and my bill, S. 2453, and it is not true. The provision in Senator FEINSTEIN's bill says that the FISA is the exclusive means for wiretapping. That is true, unless the statute is superseded by a constitutional provision.

My bill, S. 2453, says that nothing in the act limits the President's constitutional authority, because a statute cannot limit the President's constitutional authority.

We will be moving ahead, I hope shortly, with the leader calling the bill to the floor so that we can make a determination on judicial review to see to it that whatever wiretapping is going on is judicially approved. It may be that some cases will come up collaterally. There are a number of cases in district courts. The one in Portland may have standing. I do not propose, in my legislation, to strip any court of jurisdiction where a case has been started and has proceeded. I think, in the course of business, the matters ought to be referred to the FISA court, but not for any jurisdiction stripping where courts have proceeded.

With respect to the activities of the Congress seeking to comply with the ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States in Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, the primary responsibility goes to the Armed Services Committee. The Judiciary Committee does have jurisdiction because title 18 of the Criminal Code is implicated and we have jurisdiction over the interpretation of the Geneva Conventions.

There have been a number of controversial issues raised on which I would like to comment. One provision relates to classified information. It is my view that it is indispensable to have witnesses confront their accusers and know what the evidence is. Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions provides that there has to be an affording of all judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by civilized people. I think that would include telling somebody what the evidence is before they have a significant penalty which might include the death penalty.

We have a Confidential Information Protection Act which sets the guidelines that I think ought to be applicable here. The consequence is, if you cannot produce the evidence for the defendant to hear, the case may have to be dismissed. But that will not prejudice the government here because these individuals can be detained as enemy combatants for an indefinite period of time.

So we will not disclose sources and methods; we will not release anybody; we may not convict them if we can't produce the evidence, but they will be detained and not present a threat.

There is an issue raised as to coerced confessions. I do not believe that we can tolerate that and be consistent with United States law or consistent with the Geneva Conventions. Coerced confessions are unfair and they are unreliable.

With respect to Common Article 3, the Judiciary Committee has submitted for consideration and inclusion in the legislation being considered by the Armed Services Committee amendments to section 303 on war crimes.

I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, with respect to the controversy about whether there ought to be included the provisions of the Detainee Treatment Act, I believe that they should be because they further delineate what would constitute a violation of Common Article 3. But I do not believe they ought to be exclusive or foreclose other considerations under Common Article 3. In addition to the specification of the crimes under the War Crimes Act, which I have submitted, it would be useful to have the provisions of the Detainee Treatment Act included, which are the fifth amendment, the eighth amendment and the 14th amendment, where there has been considerable judicial interpretation as to what are prohibited acts.

General Hayden, Director of the CIA, thinks that is necessary in order to be able to give comprehensive advice.

I personally do not know that the interrogation has to go beyond what is in the Army Field Manual. In a visit to Guantanamo, the chief interrogator handling some 32 interrogators and thousands of interrogations thinks that the Army Field Manual is sufficient. It may or may not be. The CIA wants greater latitude, but there is some assurance of congressional oversight because the interrogation tactics have to be submitted to the Intelligence Committee. One other point that I want to comment on is my concern about the inclusion of habeas corpus relief. I believe that it is important to retain jurisdiction of the Federal courts on habeas corpus. This was a contested issue under the Detainee Treatment Act, but we have seen that the only real firm guidance has come from the Supreme Court of the United States.

In three cases regarding detainees from June of 2005, Jose Padilla, Hamdi, and the Hamdan v. Rumsfeld decision, the Congress has been unwilling or unable to act. I introduced legislation for military commissions shortly after September 11 as did other Senators. We didn't act. We punted to the Supreme Court.

These issues, regrettably, experience has shown, are just too hot to handle by the Congress. The Supreme Court of the United States under the rule of law has enforced compliance of detainees, and now compliance for those who are to be tried for war crimes under the Geneva Conventions' terms as well as under title 18.

It is simply insufficient to limit the great rift which seems embodied in our habeas corpus statute.

I have had some discussion with Senator LEVIN, who is on the floor at the present time, about offering an amendment if in fact the bill comes from the Armed Services cutting out habeas corpus.

It is my hope that we can move reasonably promptly to S. 2453 so that there may be set in motion the procedures to have the Federal courts rule on the constitutionality of the President's electronic surveillance program.

It would be highly desirable to bring the entire program under the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act. There are provisions in Senator FEINSTEIN's bill, S. 3001, which I have cosponsored, that I believe would enable us to bring individual live warrants for causes which originated in the United States and go overseas.

I have been advised that the calls which originate overseas are so numerous that it is not possible to have individual live warrants. So that under these circumstances the most that can be accomplished is to have the program submitted to the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court.

In one of the four hearings on this bill, four former judges of the FISA Court appeared and testified and commented that the bill was practical, that there was sufficient standing, that there were litigable issues and that the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court can handle it. They can handle it as a matter of expertise because of their extensive experience, and they can handle it because their proceedings are closed so that there is not a public disclosure of state secrets.

It may be, as I said very briefly earlier, that one of the cases coming out of Federal courts—there has been a decision from Detroit, and there is a case pending in San Francisco—my review of those cases suggests to me that the case which is coming out of Portland I think would have standing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairperson of the Homeland Security Committee for yielding me the time. I yield the floor.

EXHIBIT 1

SEC. 303. WAR CRIMES ACT AMENDMENT.

Section 2441 of title 18, United States Code is amended by replacing subsection (c)(3) with the following:

“(3) which constitutes any of the following serious violations of common Article 3 of the international conventions signed at Geneva 12 August 1949, when committed in the context of and in association with an armed conflict not of an international character:

“(1) TORTURE.—Any person who commits, or conspires or attempts to commit, an act specifically intended to inflict severe physical or mental pain or suffering (other than pain or suffering incidental to lawful sanctions) upon another person within his custody or physical control for the purpose of obtaining information or a confession, punishment, intimidation, coercion, or any reason based on discrimination of any kind, shall be guilty of a violation of this subsection. ‘Severe mental pain or suffering’ has the meaning provided in 18 U.S.C. 2340(2).

“(2) CRUEL OR INHUMAN TREATMENT.—Any person who commits, or conspires or attempts to commit, an act intended to inflict severe physical or mental pain or suffering (other than pain or suffering incidental to lawful sanctions), including severe physical abuse, upon another person within his custody or physical control shall be guilty of a violation of this subsection. ‘Severe mental pain or suffering’ has the meaning provided in 18 U.S.C. 2340(2).

“(3) PERFORMING BIOLOGICAL EXPERIMENTS.—Any person who subjects, or conspires or attempts to subject, one or more persons within his custody or physical control to biological experiments without a legitimate medical purpose and in so doing endangers the body or health of such person or persons shall be guilty of a violation of this subsection.

“(4) MURDER.—Any person who intentionally kills, or conspires or attempts to kill, or kills whether intentionally or unintentionally in the course of committing any other offense under this section, one or more persons taking no active part in the hostilities, including those placed out of active combat by sickness, wounds, detention, or any other cause, shall be guilty of a violation of this subsection. The intent required for this offense precludes its applicability with regard to collateral damage or to death, damage, or injury incident to a lawful attack.

“(5) MUTILATION OR MAIMING.—Any person who intentionally injures, or conspires or attempts to injure, or injures whether intentionally or unintentionally in the course of committing any other offense under this section, one or more persons taking no active part in the hostilities, including those placed out of active combat by sickness, wounds, detention, or any other cause, by disfiguring the person or persons by any mutilation thereof or by permanently disabling any member, limb, or organ of his body, or burning any individual without any legitimate medical or dental purpose, shall be guilty of a violation of this subsection. The intent required for this offense precludes its applicability with regard to collateral damage or to death, damage, or injury incident to a lawful attack.

“(6) INTENTIONALLY CAUSING GREAT SUFFERING OR SERIOUS INJURY.—Any person who intentionally causes, or conspires or attempts to cause, serious bodily injury to one or more persons taking no active part in the hostilities, including those placed out of active combat by sickness, wounds, detention, or any other cause, shall be guilty of a violation of this subsection. The intent required for this offense precludes its applicability with regard to collateral damage or to death, damage, or injury incident to a lawful attack. ‘Serious bodily injury’ has the meaning provided in 18 U.S.C. 113(b)(2).

“(6) RAPE.—Any person who forcibly or with coercion or threat of force wrongfully invades, or conspires or attempts to invade, the body of a person by penetrating, however slightly, the anal or genital opening of the victim with any part of the body of the accused or with any foreign object shall be guilty of a violation of this subsection.

“(7) SEXUAL ASSAULT OR ABUSE.—Any person who forcibly or with coercion or threat of force engages, or conspires or attempts to engage, in sexual contact with one or more persons, or causes, or conspires or attempts to cause, one or more persons to engage in sexual contact, shall be guilty of a violation of this subsection. For purposes of this offense, ‘sexual contact’ has the meaning provided in 18 U.S.C. 2246(3). Sexual assault or abuse may also include, but is not limited to forcing any person to engage in simulated sexual acts or to pose in an overtly sexual manner.

“(8) TAKING HOSTAGES.—Any person who, having knowingly seized or detained one or more persons, threatens to kill, injure, or continue to detain such person or persons with the intent of compelling any nation, person other than the hostage, or group of persons to act or refrain from acting as an explicit or implicit condition for the safety or release of such person or persons, shall be guilty of a violation of this subsection. This provision shall not apply to prisoner exchanges during wartime. Any person who attempts to engage or conspires to engage in this offense shall also be guilty under this subsection.”

Section 2441 of title 18, United States Code is amended by replacing the period at the end of subsection (c)(4) and adding the following new subsections:

“(5) involving ‘genocide’ as defined in title 18, United States Code, section 1091;

“(6) involving ‘sabotage’ as defined in title 18, United States Code, section 2151 et seq.; or “(7) involving forced oaths, conversions, or renouncements of one's allegiance to a nation or religion.

Section 2441 of title 18, United States Code is amended in subsection (a) by adding “attempts to commit a war crime, or conspires to commit a war crime,” after “commits a war crime.”

Section 2441 of title 18, United States Code is amended by adding the following sentence at the end of subsection (b):

The circumstances referred to in subsection (a) shall also include unprovoked attacks on American citizens on domestic or foreign soil by any private army, terrorist organization, or other ideological combination or alliance where such an attack would otherwise be considered a war crime if committed by a nation state or military force.

CHAPTER 3—JUDICIAL REVIEW; MISCELLANEOUS. SEC. 301. JUDICIAL REVIEW.

COMBATANT STATUS REVIEW TRIBUNALS.—The United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces shall, with the United States Supreme Court upon a petition for certiorari, have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any final decision of a Combatant Status Review Tribunal. The scope of such review is defined in section 1005(e)(2) of the Detainee Treatment Act of 2005. If the Court grants a detainee's petition for review, the Department of Defense may conduct a new Combatant Status Review Tribunal.

(1) MILITARY COMMISSION.—Review shall be had only of final judgments of military commissions as provided for pursuant to section 247 of the Military Commissions Act of 2006.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Montana is recognized for 10 minutes.

EXTENDERS PACKAGE

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, yesterday I tried to get the Senate to pass a bill extending the 2005 expired tax provisions, what we call the extenders package. The majority leader objected at that time and stated that it was his desire that the extenders continue to be part of the so-called “trifecta” package, married with estate tax relief and a minimum wage increase. I told him yesterday of my concern that since that strategy has already failed a number of times, and I don't think there is much hope of any change, and it is time to let the popular tax extenders package pass.

I want to take the leader at his word that there is hope for change. But I also read comments yesterday by one of our Senate colleagues tasked by the majority leader to try to find a solution to all of this, and that Member of that so-called task force is quoted as saying, "My counsel is to do it in the lame duck session."

I very much oppose that. I don't think it makes any sense to push all of this in a lame duck. Let me tell you why.

Last week, I asked the IRS Commissioner at a hearing of the Finance Committee what the drop-dead date was for tax extenders. By drop-dead date, I mean what is the latest date by which the IRS can receive changes to tax law and still have time to print and distribute tax forms for the 2006 tax year. He told me October 15. That is the drop-dead date. Clearly, that is after the recess and that is why this strategy makes no sense.

It makes no sense because after that date, it is very difficult for the IRS to print up the forms and, more than that, a lot of mistakes will be made.

Yesterday, I joined my good friend, the chairman of the Finance Committee, in releasing an analysis of just how the IRS will deal with all of these changes. Let me tell you what they concluded.

Senator GRASSLEY said upon releasing this analysis that, "A delay of legislative action beyond the anticipated recess date of September 29 will cause hardship, tax compliance problems, and confusion for the millions of taxpayers who claim these widely-applicable tax benefits."

It is just a mess that we need not cause.

I also add that Senator GRASSLEY's counterpart in the House, the chairman of Ways and Means Committee, said, "My job is to be responsible to the taxpayers, not a bureaucracy to make its job easier."

I might also add that we are here to get the extenders passed for the taxpayers, to help taxpayers because taxpayers need this relief.

The chairman of the Finance Committee went on to say that, "The failure to extend expired tax cuts will at best cause administrative snafus for the IRS and at worst cause taxpayers to miss out on the tax benefits they are entitled to."

This is a taxpayer problem—one that we should address now before we recess.

I would also like to point out something else which I think is important. A resolution was passed yesterday by the House Republican Study Committee. They surveyed their members, and developed a list of five priorities. One of these priorities adopted by the 110-member group in the House Republican Study Committee was to "pass a clean tax cut extenders bill."

I would guess that group would be invested as much anyone else in passing the so-called trifecta bill, but even the 110 members in the other body have decided it is time to move on and pass the extenders.

There are more than 3 million teachers who have been buying classroom supplies who are waiting for their deduction to be restored. There are more than 12 million families in States with sales taxes, including many in the leader's home State of Tennessee, hoping they can deduct those sales taxes, just like families in income tax States. And there are more than 20,000 businesses hoping for this worker credit, that have hired the hard-to-employ workers who have been on long-term public assistance, people who simply want to get back into the workplace, and need a boost from the work opportunity credit. Those taxpayers are hoping the Senate gets this passed.

Just this morning I received a letter signed by more than 600 American companies and 164 trade associations representing thousands of small, medium, and large companies employing high-tech workers in research. They urged us to end this "cloud of uncertainty." They are very concerned we are not going to pass this in time.

As I have said a couple of times, there are companies that have to restate their financials because of Congress's failure to pass these tax incentives which expired last year. It has not been the law for about 9 months, and they have to start restating their earnings on financial reports because of Congress's ineptitude, Congress's incompetence in not passing and continuing the research and development tax credit, teachers deduction, tuition deduction, and sales tax deduction.

School started just a short while ago. There are teachers who go to Wal-Mart to get supplies for their classroom because the school district is not providing enough to them. We should be giving them a tax deduction. School started and we are not giving it to them anymore. It makes no sense. It is wrong. It shows the competency of this Congress in doing its business is now very much in question.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAUCUS. I am happy to yield.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I compliment and applaud the leadership of Senator BAUCUS in working to get the retired tax incentives renewed.

Did I hear the Senator correctly, the welfare-to-work and work opportunity tax credits expired at the end of 2005? Is it true that these credits have expired and we in Washington have yet to renew them, and 20,000 businesses have not been able to use this important tool?

We are here to provide tools to businesses to grow the economy, to grow the jobs. I know the good Senator from Montana traveled his State, as I did in Arkansas, in August. People are concerned about the economy. They are concerned about their jobs.

We are talking 20,000 businesses? Did I hear the Senator correctly?

Mr. BAUCUS. The Senator is correct. That is the number that use this work opportunity tax credit. We are trying to employ people. People are trying to get to work.

Mrs. LINCOLN. That is amazing. The objective is to get people off welfare, get them independent and into the jobs.

I think I heard the Senator correctly, as well, because we failed to renew the teacher expense deductions, more than 3 million schoolteachers nationwide—and there are a tremendous amount of Arkansas schoolteachers who give out of their own pockets to bring those supplies in their classrooms—those teachers are going to be paying higher taxes this year if we don't act now?

Mr. BAUCUS. If we do not enact this legislation and make it retroactive this year.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, we have had numerous opportunities to renew important tax incentives. Earlier this year we had an opportunity in the tax reconciliation. The priority was to deal with tax cuts that had not even expired or were not going to expire—the dividend deduction and the capital gains.

With tax cuts that have expired, businesses are not going to be able to take advantage of work opportunity tax credits, in research and development. We know we are falling behind in stem cell research. We have businesses that want to make those investments in research and development and be the best they can be in the global marketplace.

These businesses have not been able, is that correct, to realize that tool and use that tax deduction for at least the first three quarters of this year?

Mr. BAUCUS. That is right, at a time when other countries give very generous assistance to their companies in developing research and development so those countries can compete in the global economy.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Once again, I applaud Senator BAUCUS's leadership and his tenacity to come out and say we have a limited amount of time left.

We have businesses out there that want to grow, that need the tools to grow. Yet these issues, things that we do every year to put into the toolboxes of our business, corporate America, our teachers, and others to be able to do the incredible things that make America great. Yet we are just sitting here.

We are not doing it. They are being held hostage because we want to put all these eggs into one basket.

I have been very outspoken about my support for the estate tax reform, but there is no reason these extenders should be held hostage to all of these other things that people want to crowd into one basket.

The bottom line is, by failing to renew these incentives, as Senator BAUCUS has said, for responsible behavior such as savings and getting a college education, we are raising the taxes on many of our hard-working American families this year.

I applaud the Senator and I appreciate and am grateful for the leadership.

Mr. BAUCUS. And the answer to the Senator's implied question is, yes, all of that will occur if we do not get this passed. That is correct.

I see another colleague on the Senate floor who may have a question to ask.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BAUCUS. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I am compelled to object because we have another Senator coming over shortly for an amendment. I have promised the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Montana that they would have a few minutes to talk about their amendment.

Mr. BAUCUS. I say to my good friend, we are talking about 2 minutes.

Ms. COLLINS. It will come out of the time of the Senator from Nebraska because we have the Senator from New York coming at 12:45 for his amendment. I have no objection with that understanding—that it will come out of the time of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I think the Senator has a question to ask.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAUCUS. I thank my colleague.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the committee and appreciate very much his leadership.

I rise to state I support what Senator BAUCUS has proposed. It affects a number of Nebraska teachers, Nebraska families. I appreciate what the Senator is doing.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators DURBIN, WYDEN, BIDEN, LAUTENBERG, NELSON of Nebraska, CONRAD, SARBANES, LEAHY, and BYRD be made cosponsors of my amendments Nos. 5003 and 5004.

Ms. COLLINS. I do not object.

Mr. BAUCUS. Now I proceed—

Ms. COLLINS. To the objectionable part.

Mr. BAUCUS. On the part of some.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST—H.R. 4096

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to Calendar No. 326, H.R. 4096; that the Senate adopt my amendments Nos. 5003 and 5004, which is the agreed-upon tax extenders package, the bill be read the third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, the Senate return to the port security bill—which is not objected to—and all this occur without intervening action.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, on behalf of the leader, I object. The leader objected yesterday. This is the same issue. He has asked I make this objection known.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, at this point I suggest time be yielded to the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Montana to briefly discuss a pending amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

AMENDMENT NO. 4945

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Mr. President, I appreciate the distinguished chairman from Maine. I ask my colleagues, Senators BURNS and CRAIG, who join with me—Senator BURNS is here—I ask unanimous consent that my amendment No. 4945 be in order notwithstanding rule XXII. I know there will be an objection to it, but I also know that Senator BURNS would like to speak to it if possible, before the objection is entered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, a point of order does lie against this amendment because it is not germane postcloture.

Prior to objecting to the Senator's unanimous consent request, I am happy to withhold so that the Senator from Montana may address this issue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I am very supportive of the Senator from Nebraska on this issue. I wish we could have gotten a vote and not have to deal with a point of order. I don't think the fires we have had in Montana and the dry weather we have had in Montana yield to a point of order. We do have people hurting.

I appreciate the work done by the Senator from Nebraska. We will continue this exercise, passing an emergency disaster package for agriculture before we go home. I appreciate him allowing me some time.

I pass along to the Senate and Montanans we are having a drought. In fact, our water is only testing 85 percent moisture.

I thank the Senator.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I do object to the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

Ms. COLLINS. I am very sympathetic to the concerns of both Senators but, unfortunately, this does not belong on the port security bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent it be in order to make the following point of order, en bloc. I make a point of order that the following amendments are not germane postcloture: amendment No. 4967, offered by Senator STABENOW; amendment No. 4957, offered by Senator CLINTON; amendment No. 4943, offered by Senator CLINTON; and amendment No. 4958, offered by Senator CLINTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct, the point of order is sustained, and the amendments fall, en bloc.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I further make a point of order that amendment No. 4945, offered by the Senator from Nebraska, as modified, is also not germane postcloture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

AMENDMENT NO. 4930, AS MODIFIED

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I rise in support of an amendment that is pending. It will be voted on at 3:30, as I understand.

The amendment is very simple. It mandates—no test study, no pilot—it mandates we inspect all cargo that comes here for nuclear weapons within 4 years.

I have offered this amendment, frankly, out of frustration. This is something that can be done. This is something that is being done. This is something where the technology is working. Yet we refuse to move forward.

I come from New York. Obviously, we lived through September 11. However, I stay up at night sometimes worried about the worst tragedy that could befall us. There is nothing worse, in my opinion—and there are a parade of "horribles" with the terrorists—than a nuclear weapon exploding in America. It would change our lives so dramatically for so long for those who survive. If we were ever going to focus on a single issue, this should be it.

But for 4 years I have come to the Senate—my good friend from Minnesota has done very good work on this, my colleague from Maine has, my colleague from Washington has.

They say: We are not ready. Let's do a pilot. Let's study it. Let's improve the technology.

My colleagues, what has changed with me is that I visited the Hong Kong Port run by Hutchison Whampoa last April, along with the Presiding Officer. And we saw it working in two lines. Trucks went through—it did not hold them up—and they were inspected for nuclear weapons in a system that everyone who has looked at it says works.

So what are we waiting for? The cost is not large. It is estimated, once it is up and running, the cost would be about $8 a container. Yet it costs $2,000 to move a container from Hong Kong to the West Coast. It works. The cost is reasonable. We are not asking the Federal Government to pay for it. In a competitive container world, it probably will not even be passed on. That minimal .2 percent addition to the cost of a container will probably not be added on.

So now is the time, my colleagues. We can have another excuse and wait another year and do another pilot, work more on the security and on the technology, or we can implement something now. The Homeland Security Department, in my opinion, is derelict in this responsibility. They have dithered and dallied. Every time we have offered amendments to put an adequate amount of money in to fund this, it has been cut by this body and by the other body.

The frustration, when we know we can really protect the people of this country and we let special interests, we let the fact that we need money for something else—although I do not know what else is more important—stand in our way. It is a monument to why people are frustrated with Washington.

Again, you and I have seen it, I say to the Presiding Officer. We have seen this technology at work. Hutchison Whampoa stands by it. Their leader was so frustrated that he implemented it himself in Hong Kong. And everyone who has studied it says it works. Would it take a little while for all these foreign ports, the 40 ports of the CSI, to set this up? Yes, but not very long. And when you compare this to the danger we face, all of the arguments against mandating that our containers be inspected for nuclear weapons fade away.

Mr. President, I salute my colleagues who have offered other amendments. I salute my colleagues who have worked on the bill. It is a good step forward. But there is a glaring deficiency. We need a mandate. We have been patient long enough. It works. It can protect us. It is not expensive. What are we waiting for?

I urge my colleagues, I hope, I pray we can have a broad bipartisan majority for this amendment because—coming from New York, I feel this keenly—we do not want to be in the “what if” situation. God forbid, the worst has happened, a nuclear weapon has been smuggled in on a container and exploded on our shores. We do not want to be in a situation where we say: What if? What if we had done more. Because clearly, as of now, we are not doing enough.

I yield back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. President, I share the deep concerns of my friend, high school classmate, colleague from New York, where I grew up, about the danger of a nuclear weapon, the danger of a weapon of mass destruction being smuggled into this country in 1 of 11 million containers. We have, no doubt, the same vision. We want America safe.

That is what we have been doing here. That is what the work of the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Washington is about and what we have put forth in the underlying bill that will change.

By the way, there were a lot of things in homeland security that I was frustrated with.

We spent 3 years, the Permanent Committee on Investigations spent 3 years on this issue, studying it, holding hearings. I encourage my colleague from New York to go to Hong Kong to take a look. My colleague and the Presiding Officer went to Hong Kong and took a look at the system that is operating on 2 lanes out of 40 to see what we could do to put in place a system that would scan each and every container that goes through. It is a wonderful system.

What we need is action. That is what we did yesterday. We got action. We have in this bill a pilot project that will put in place, in mandates, in directives, not a mandate of what is going to happen in 2008 and 2010, not playing into the sloganeering of “scan every container,” but the reality of action today to immediately put in place a pilot project to see if we can make it work in a wider, more systematic way.

I am taken aback when I hear my colleague talk about “we do not need any pilot projects” and “we do not need any test study.” We have a system in place in Hong Kong now that is 2 lanes out of 40. It is a wonderful system. What happens is—I call it kind of a moving CAT scan—trucks come in and they kind of go through this device, ISIS device, and it takes a scan of what is inside the truck. It has a radiation portal monitor, so you end up getting images. I have watched the images. Hong Kong is a CSI—Container Security Initiative—port, so I have worked with our folks there. But when a radiation alarm goes off in Hong Kong, our folks do not have the capacity to inspect it. There is no followup from us. The images that are received are not processed by the folks in Langley or somewhere else. They are not coordinated with what we do on national security. So you have in place a concept where we have to see whether it works. That is what we should be doing: action. That is what this is about.

It was fascinating; I was reading an editorial in the New York Times and was somewhat taken aback. I am trying to understand the motivation for moving forward with this amendment. This is what I call a wave-the-magic-wand amendment, that we are going to tell people we are mandating something we have already got on the table in front of us, something to test whether it works. That is what we should be doing.

I think, by the way, people in this country are frustrated with Washington when we promise things or sloganeer about something as important as this issue and somehow project the sense we are doing something when we are not doing anything, when there is already action in place—action, action—a pilot project and then a mandate that the Department, in 120 days, tells us: OK, what are the results. Show us how you have integrated this system which is now working in two lanes in Hong Kong—not integrated into anything in our operation—show us that it works, and then requiring the Secretary of Homeland Security, every 6 months, to come back to Congress and report on the status of 100 percent scanning, with specific criteria laid out. That is good government. That is good policy. In the end, I hope it is good politics.

I worry that this is about politics. There was an editorial, I have to say, in the New York Times, I believe today, and I was somewhat taken aback. It criticized Secretary Chertoff. That is OK. The Times can do that. I have criticized him on a number of occasions. But then the editorial talks about this issue of 100 percent scanning and then raised this issue of the cost of scanning—it is a small surcharge—and then it goes on to say: When it comes to homeland security, the Bush administration has completely allowed corporate profits to trump safety—as if somehow, because the cost of this is $20 per container, that is why we are not moving forward mandating it today.

I want to step back. The way I became aware of the Hong Kong project was because of the private sector that said: Senator, you have to see this. We are willing to pay it. The cost is not an issue. The private sector is willing to pay $20 a container to ensure security. God forbid there is a nuclear device that goes off, we shut down the entire import of goods into this country, and we devastate our economy. So this is not a money issue from the private side. This is maybe the old ex-mayor in me saying: This is kind of the practicality of making sure we have something that works.

The Washington Post, in an editorial in June, said it very clearly:

“[I]nspect 100 percent of containers” is a slogan, not a solution, and we hope lawmakers resist the temptation to use it in the election season to come.

The election season is upon us. It is getting very close. This body, yesterday, moved forth with an amendment to put in place a pragmatic, realistic action-oriented way in which we can move to 100 percent screening. We put in place a pilot project to make sure what we are doing works and it makes sense.

We will spend, by the way, billions on this, not in the cost of the cargo but in setting these scanning systems up in the, what, over 700 ports throughout the world. And 147 are major ports. We are going to be spending a lot of money on this, but the issue is not money, it is doing it right. Let us step away from the sloganeering.

I am going to say this as to the idea of something being half-baked. If you put something in the oven and it is going to be really tasty when it is done, it is going to be really delicious, that is something fully baked. And you make sure it is baked in a way so when you eat it, you do not get sick. Half-baked is when you get something in the end that is the right thing—we believe, in the end, each and every container will be screened.

Right now, we have in place the screening of high risk. It is in this bill. Right now, we have the Department saying, before our Homeland Security Committee, by the end of next year, each and every container will be screened for a radiologic or nuclear weapon—by next year. But it will be done in our country. The goal is to have it pushed out, to have that screening done before it gets here. We do not need a half-baked way, a sloganeering way, and to simply say we are going to mandate something in the future, without any path to get there. We have the path. We have done it right. I hope my colleagues reject the Schumer amendment and stick with what we did yesterday because it really makes sense.

With that, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Minnesota for his leadership on this issue and for his excellent comments. This issue was debated at length yesterday, so I am going to make my comments very brief.

I do oppose Senator SCHUMER's amendment. I do not think it is practical at this point to require 100 percent scanning of 11 million containers coming into this country. And it ignores the very real improvements that are included in the underlying bill.

I am disappointed to hear the Senator from New York describe our bill as yet another study or yet another pilot project. It is way more than that. It has a layered security system that greatly strengthens the Container Security Initiative, the C-TPAT Program, the automated targeting system. And it includes the provisions we added yesterday at the behest of the Senator from Minnesota that will help us move toward 100 percent scanning when it is feasible and practical, when the technology is there and able to be in an integrated system.

It also ignores the fact that our bill includes a mandate—a mandate, I would say to the Senator from New York—that the Department of Homeland Security has to install radiological monitors in the 22 busiest ports by the end of next year, which will result in 98 percent of all cargo being screened for radiation, and addresses the issue the Senator has raised about a nuclear bomb or the makings of a dirty bomb.

So this bill does a great deal. I must say, it disappoints me to hear the Senator imply that it does not, even though we disagree on this one particular issue. This has been a bipartisan bill. Senator MURRAY has worked very hard on it, as well as many of the rest of us.

But let me sum up the problems by reading from a recent letter from the World Shipping Council because I think it really says it best. I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WORLD SHIPPING COUNCIL,
September 7, 2006.

Hon. SUSAN M. COLLINS,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Homeland Security & Government Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MADAM CHAIRMAN: We understand that the Senate is expected to consider shortly legislation to enhance cargo and port security. We write to communicate the World Shipping Council's support for legislation that will enhance the security of both American ports and the international supply chain. Previously, the House of Representatives passed the SAFE Port Act (H.R. 4954). We hope that the Senate legislation will reflect in part this House bill, will further strengthen cargo and port security, and will enable this enhanced security legislation to become law this year.

During debate on this port security legislation, we understand that there may be an amendment which would propose to require 100% container inspection. Earlier this year, the House voted down a similar measure in its debate over the SAFE Port Act. Like the House, we urge you to vote No on any such amendment for the following reasons.

One-hundred percent container inspection proposals purport to be a cheap and effective way to ensure security. They are neither. It also fails to address fundamentally important security questions, it would disrupt American commerce, and it would cause foreign retaliation against American exports.

American commerce would be ground to a halt because there is no practical way to analyze or inspect the scanning images before vessel loading because it is too labor intensive and no technology currently exists to do the analysis, the proposal faces a dilemma that it clearly fails to address. Assuming the proponents intend that every container's scanning images must be inspected and approved before vessel loading, the costs of compliance and costs of grid-locked commerce would be enormous. It changes who the government trusts to perform container screening without a hearing, a pilot program, or a rational deliberative process.

The proposal would effectively end Customs' Trade Partnership Against Terrorism

(C-TPAT), without so much as a hearing on the issue. This amendment rejects the strategic concept that there is low risk cargo that does not require inspection, and in doing so, it rejects many U.S. and international governmental efforts to create programs that reward supply chain participants for enhancing the security of their supply chains by inspecting their cargo less frequently. The proposal also undermines the Container Security Initiative (CSI), as CSI is an international cooperative program pursuant to which other governments have agreed to work with the U.S. government to review and inspect containers that are determined to present a security risk, not to inspect every container.

Lastly, the proposal will harm American exporters. The U.S. applies virtually no radiation screening and no inspection to its exports. The amendment proposes that the rest of the world must subject their exports to processes and procedures that the U.S. does not apply to its own commerce. Congress should expect the United States' trading partners to consider imposing reciprocal requirements on U.S. cargo should these proposals be enacted.

The SAFE Port Act established a rational and deliberative process to study and evaluate the deployment of such container inspection technology abroad and all the relevant implementation issues associated with such systems. Senate legislation that mirrors this approach is the correct way to address this important issue.

In conclusion, we look forward to working with you on the important issues of cargo and port security. And, we request that you oppose any 100% container inspection amendment.

Sincerely yours,

CHRISTOPHER L. KOCH,
President & CEO.

Ms. COLLINS. The letter reads, in part, as follows:

One-hundred percent container inspection proposals purport to be a cheap and effective way to ensure security. They are neither. It also fails to address fundamentally important security questions, it would disrupt American commerce, and it would cause foreign retaliation against American exports.

The proposal would effectively end Customs' Trade Partnership Against Terrorism (C-TPAT), without so much as a hearing on the issue. This amendment rejects the strategic concept that there is low risk cargo that does not require inspection, and in doing so, it rejects many U.S. and international governmental efforts to create programs that reward supply chain participants for enhancing the security of their supply chains by inspecting their cargo less frequently.

It also undermines the Container Security Initiative. That is the international cooperative program where we station our inspectors in foreign ports and work with the governments that host those ports.

There are so many arguments against this amendment, Mr. President. The Washington Post said it very well in an editorial earlier this week as well. Most of all, let us remember what the implications are.

I have visited the port in Seattle and have seen the VACIS machines that do the x rays. It took approximately 4 minutes to do that x ray of the container and then another 15 minutes to analyze the image. If you do that with even the completely low-risk cargo, and you think of the fact that we have 11 million containers coming into this country, you are diverting resources away from inspections of high-risk cargo. It would create a massive backlog of cargo at our ports.

Now, as I have indicated, the technology is improving. I am glad the Senator from Minnesota set the record straight on what is and what isn't being done in Hong Kong at this time, where only two lanes are being scanned and the images are not being read and integrated into a security system. But we are going to keep improving the technology. We have a requirement that the Secretary report on this issue to us every 6 months after the pilot project in three foreign ports—after we have the results.

So we are moving in that direction, but let's do so in a practical, effective, efficient way. That is what the underlying bill does, particularly as strengthened by the Coleman-Collins-Stevens amendment.

Mr. President, we have tried very hard in this bill to make sure that we strike the right balance and put into place a security regime that is going to make our ports and our people safer. But we have done it without hampering the vital trade that manufacturers, retailers, and farmers in this Nation depend upon. I think we struck the right balance, and I am going to move to table the Schumer amendment, with the time of the vote to be determined at a mutually agreed upon time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VIT-TER). The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I want to briefly answer my colleagues. Of course, I have tremendous respect for what they have done and are trying to do. It is certainly true that my colleague from Minnesota was the first to talk about the system in Hong Kong.

I will make two points. First, it is true that we will put mandates here in the United States. We have them in New York in one of our ports. One, it is not close to being as sophisticated, effective, or as speedy as what is done in Hong Kong. It is not as good a system. Second, we don't have to debate the technicality of the system. We all know, as my friend from Minnesota said, that we have to push this outward, because if a nuclear weapon is on a container or a ship in New York Harbor that hasn't docked or been unloaded onto a truck and it explodes, the same terrible consequences exist for the people of New York, Los Angeles, Seattle, or anywhere else that has a major port.

I will make one other point. My colleagues argue for patience. My colleagues argue we have to do this in a certain way. If this were 1 year after 9/11, or 2 years after 9/11, I would agree.

In fact, I did. I wanted to offer amendments like this 2, 3, and 4 years ago. But I believe this. I believe nothing will get homeland security and the shipping industry and the world community to act and get something done better than a mandate. As long as they know they can delay, as long as they can go to DHS and present 10 reasons why this should not be done, DHS, which has shown absolutely no enthusiasm for doing this, will get nothing done.

If this were danger No. 37 on the list, maybe, again, we should not have the tough measure—I would say it is tough—of imposing this. I assure my colleagues—we all know how the world works—a deadline will get DHS, the shipping industry, and all of the other players to act and get this done better than any other method.

So, again, I salute what my colleagues have done, and I remind my colleague from Maine that I have said this is a good bill. In fact, I voted for cloture, despite the urging of some of my colleagues, because I think it is a good bill. On the issue of nuclear security, of inspection of containers for radiological material, no one can say that we have done a good job—not this Senate, not the House and, most of all, not this administration and the Department of Homeland Security.

The time is now to force everybody to act. The danger is too great. I have offered this amendment after years—not months, not days, but years—of trying all of the other ways to get homeland security and, frankly, our two bodies to act. So I am grateful to my three colleagues, all of whom have done yeomen's work in this area. But we can do more. I suggest to all of my colleagues here that this amendment will get us to do a lot more than any other amendment proposed thus far.

I yield the floor.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. President, I reiterate the great respect I have for my colleague from New York. He is concerned about this area and he is passionate about safety.

I want to make it clear that we are not counseling patience. We are not asking for delay. It is just the opposite. What we are doing and what we have done and what we did yesterday was action. What we are objecting to is an amendment that offers no real increase in security. We are objecting to an amendment that doesn't do anything, doesn't move the ball forward. It gives an opportunity to talk about 100 percent scanning, and it may end up in some commercial somewhere. I hope that is not what this is about.

The amendment doesn't do anything. It doesn't push the ball forward. This is not about patience. I am not very patient when it comes to making sure we are doing everything possible to protect against the possibility of a nuclear weapon being smuggled into this country, and that is what this bill does.

The amendment is to put in place a pilot project, move quickly; that is what it does. The amendment is to require 100 percent screening of all high-risk containers. That is what it does. We heard in committee the other day from the Secretary of Homeland Security, saying we can have 100 percent screening of all cargo containers for radiological devices by next year.

We are not counseling patience. We are supporting action and objecting to an amendment that offers no increase in safety. It doesn't move the ball forward at all.

I yield the floor.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I will move to table the Schumer amendment, with the understanding that the time for a vote will be at a mutually agreed-upon time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALEXANDER). The minority leader is recognized.

Mr. REID. What is the matter before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment before the Senate is the Schumer amendment.

The Democratic leader is recognized.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, last Friday the Senate Committee on Intelligence released a bipartisan report that discussed Iraq's links to terrorism and the use of information provided by the Iraqi National Congress. These reports provided the American people with important insights into these critical issues.

Unfortunately, the administration chose to redact—that is a word used around here meaning to black out—important portions of these reports that a bipartisan majority of the Intelligence Committee believes could have and should have been released to the American people.

Last night, I handed a letter to the distinguished majority leader informing him of my intent to offer an amendment to declassify one of these sections.

I will, at an appropriate time, ask unanimous consent that I have the pending amendment set aside to offer my amendment. I am not going to do that right now.

I do ask unanimous consent that a copy of my letter to Senator FRIST be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,

Washington, DC, September 13, 2006.

Hon. WILLIAM H. FRIST,
Majority Leader, U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR LEADER FRIST: Late last week the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence on a bipartisan basis released reports that discussed Iraq's weapons of mass destruction program and its links to terrorism and the intelligence community's use of information provided by the Iraqi National Congress. These reports provided the American people with important insights into these critical issues.

Unfortunately, the Administration chose to classify certain important portions of these reports that should have been released to the public. A bipartisan majority of the Intelligence Committee disagreed with the Administration's decision to classify certain portions of the report's findings and conclusions and said that classifying this information is "without justification."

In my view, the Administration's decision to classify one particular portion of the report—a section discussing a CIA document about the alleged meeting in Prague between 9/11 hijacker Mohammed Atta and an Iraqi intelligence officer—is especially troubling and lacking in justification. As you may know, as recently as this Sunday on national television, Vice President Cheney left open the possibility that such a meeting may have occurred. However, a bipartisan majority of the Intelligence Committee, after thoroughly reviewing relevant intelligence reports and assessments, concluded "no such meeting occurred." The continued classification of sections referencing this meeting only serves to prevent the American public from knowing the full facts about this matter.

The classified version of the Intelligence Committee's report, including the sections dealing with the alleged Atta meeting, are available for all Senators to review in the Committee's offices in room SH-211. I urge you to join with me to encourage all members to review his text so they understand its importance and why that text can and should be made available to the American people.

In light of the importance of this issue, I also think it is important that the Senate act to declassify those portions of the text on pages 96, 97, and 98 of the Intelligence Committee's report that are currently redacted but do not involve sources and methods.

I plan to offer an amendment on that subject to the legislation currently pending in the Senate. Notwithstanding the procedural situation on the floor, I hope you will join with me to offer this important amendment, permit the Senate to act on it, and support its swift adoption.

While I understand that S. Res. 400 spells out a process for the Senate to declassify information, that process is a lengthy one that is likely to take us well beyond your announced adjournment date for the U.S. Senate. Therefore, in light of the importance of this issue, I think it is appropriate that the Senate act expeditiously to declassify this material.

Sincerely,

HARRY REID,
U.S. Senate.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, again, before I get to the need for this amendment, let me be clear. This is about good government. It has nothing to do with politics. I notified the distinguished majority leader of my intentions to speak this afternoon, well in advance—not today; I advised him yesterday—so the majority leader—indeed, every Member of the Senate—knows this is not a partisan effort but, rather, a serious effort to ensure the Senate fulfills its responsibilities to the American people.

I sincerely hope that the majority leader has had time to think about this important amendment and will join with me today to get it agreed to.

The fact is, the White House was wrong to classify portions of the phase II report, as both Republicans and Democrats on the Intelligence Committee have said.

This chart states as follows:

The committee disagrees, however, with the Intelligence Community's decision to classify certain portions of the report's findings and conclusions . . . the Committee concludes that the Intelligence Community's decision to classify this information is without justification.

This was made public last Friday from the report.

For the record, this is not my conclusion. This is not a Democratic conclusion. This is a bipartisan conclusion of the Republican-led Senate Intelligence Committee.

Again, here is what they said:

The Committee disagrees, however, with the Intelligence Community's decision to classify certain portions of the report's findings and conclusions . . . the committee concludes that the Intelligence Community's decision to classify this information is without justification.

A majority of the Republicans and Democrats in the Intelligence Committee came together and concluded that the administration's decision to keep information from the American people was without justification.

We talk about redaction. It is a word we use more often than I would think we should, but we are using it here today. I will show everyone in this chart what a redaction looks like. Here is the information I had in a letter to the majority leader where I said everyone should go upstairs and look at what these redacted sentences say.

This is not just any redaction. Although, obviously, I cannot discuss the specific content of this, the Intelligence Committee's report does contain some publicly available information that I can discuss.

According to unclassified sections of the committee's report, this section contains information from a CIA document about the alleged meeting in Prague between September 11 hijacker Mohammed Atta and an Iraqi intelligence officer. That is from page 135 of the report on terrorism, page 174 of the Democratic additional views.

As we all know, the alleged meeting referenced here was an important part of this administration's case for going to war. To this day, the meeting continues to be used by the administration officials to justify why we are still engaged in a war in Iraq. Obviously, this is an important piece of information as we assess how we got where we are today in Iraq and what we need to do to go forward in Iraq.

For all my colleagues, though, I want you to know, as important as it is, I would not be here today pressing the declassification of this information if I thought disclosing it to the American people would compromise our intelligence sources and methods. It doesn't.

A number of members of the Intelligence Committee who know exactly what this blacked-out section says, and have heard the administration's case for classifying it, have told me that significant portions of this passage can be declassified immediately with no harm to our national security, no revealing of sources and methods. Nor would I be here today if I thought the process of declassifying information spelled out in S. Res. 400 would work in this case.

S. Res. 400 talks about how we declassify information. As anyone who has taken a look at S. Res. 400 will quickly see, the process is a very lengthy process—so long, in fact, that it is impossible that the Senate would be permitted to express its views on an issue prior to the majority leader's announced adjournment date.

This amendment, the Reid-Rockefeller-Levin amendment, would provide the American people with information they have a right to know now. This amendment would not harm our national security. To the contrary, it will help ensure that we have a better informed Senate debate and a better informed American public, a critical underpinning of any effective national security policy.

I express my appreciation because he has just come to the Senate, to the ranking member of the Intelligence Committee. I want the RECORD to be spread with the fact of how much I appreciate, the Democratic Senators appreciate, the Nation appreciates, the Senator's dedicated work.

It has been tough sledding. The Senator has been dignified in his approach. I so appreciate the tireless efforts of the Senator. Most Senators are in the public eye. That is our job. The Senator's job is not to be in the public eye. The Senator spends days of his legislative life in a room in the Hart Building, in secret proceedings. Nothing can be said that goes on in that room. That is where the Senator spends his time. I so appreciate the Senator's dedicated service to our country.

Before I offer this unanimous consent request to set aside the pending amendment and have my amendment heard, I ask the distinguished Senator from West Virginia if he has some remarks he would like to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, first of all, I totally appreciate and totally do not deserve the kind comments of our leader from the State of Nevada, but I heard them and I won't forget them and I didn't mind them at all.

Before the Senate Intelligence Committee was able to release last week two sections of phase II that we have been working on in prewar intelligence in Iraq, we submitted the report to the intelligence community for declassification review.

Overall, the declassification process on the phase II report produced a final product that was a substantial improvement, I have to say, over past efforts, including the committee's heavily redacted July 2004 phase I report. Yet there were notable instances of overclassification in the final phase II report released September 8.

The committee, in its report, disagreed with the intelligence community's decision to classify certain portions of the report's findings and conclusions. In its decision to keep this information from the public, which is what this is about, the intelligence community was unable to demonstrate to the committee that disclosing the redacted—that is, what is blacked-out—the redacted information in question would compromise sensitive sources and methods or otherwise harm the national security.

The committee, therefore, on a bipartisan basis, concluded in its report, which was reported out unanimously, that the intelligence community's decision to classify this information that we are talking about is without justification. Those are the words in the report, "without justification."

The Reid-Rockefeller-Levin amendment addresses the most egregious instance in the committee's Iraq report where the cloak of classification is being used improperly to keep critical information from the American people. Specifically, the amendment seeks to overturn the intelligence community's unjustified decision to classify it—that is what this amendment is trying to do—and not only overturn, but the unjustified decision to classify in its totality the section of the Iraq report referring to a CIA document about the alleged meeting in Prague between 9/11 hijacker Mohamed Atta and an Iraqi intelligence officer.

As the unclassified text of the committee report states, the CIA document referenced in these redacted paragraphs expresses concerns about the alleged Prague meeting in the context of a public speech by President Bush planned for March 14, 2003.

For the information of Senators, the committee concluded in its September 8 Iraq report that the intelligence community was correct when it assessed prior to the war that there was no credible information—I repeat, no credible information—that Iraq was complicit in or had foreknowledge of the September 11 attacks on the United States or any other al-Qaida strike. The committee also concluded in its report, after exhaustive review of relevant intelligence reporting, that the alleged Atta meeting in Prague did not occur.

Significant portions of the redacted passage of the report concerning the alleged Atta meeting, if not the entire three paragraphs, can be declassified without revealing sources and methods—that is, without compromising in any way intelligence—or otherwise harming national security. The decision to keep from the public—the public of the Senate, the public of the United States of America—this revealing information about the use of intelligence information prior to the Iraq war represents an improper use of classification authority by the intelligence community, the effect of which is to shield the White House.

I urge my colleagues to go to the Intelligence Committee offices and read the classified portions of the Iraq report—Senators can do that; all Senators can do that, do it in those particular rooms, and they can do it freely—including the sections dealing with the alleged Atta meeting. Senators should read the report and draw their own conclusions about whether information known prior to the war is being kept from the American people for reasons unrelated to protecting national security.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I am happy to.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I would like the Senator from West Virginia to clarify one point, if he might. We have two bodies of information. One is part of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence report—unclassified, public knowledge. We have another body of information which is classified. I would like to ask the Senator from West Virginia strictly about the first.

The Senate Select Committee on Intelligence report that was issued last week—unclassified and public knowledge, which the Senator has referred to, and particularly as it relates to the alleged meeting in Prague, the Czech Republic, involving Mr. Atta, who was one of the terrorists involved in the 9/11 attacks—if I heard the Senator from West Virginia correctly, the report of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, an unclassified and public report, stated no such meeting occurred; is that correct?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. That is correct.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I might ask the Senator from West Virginia the following: So when Mr. Tim Russert of "Meet The Press" asked Vice President DICK CHENEY, on September 10, this last Sunday, "And the meeting with Atta did not occur?" and the Vice President replied, "We don't know," does that contradict the published, unclassified report of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence that, in fact, we do know the meeting did not occur?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I would say to the Senator from Illinois that he is correct, it does contradict that, and moreover this contradiction has been carried on by a number of high officials in this Government for a very long period of time in spite of intelligence which they knew which said this meeting never took place.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding for the question.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. In closing, I urge my colleagues to not only read the information blacked out, redacted—those are pages 96, 97, and 98—read those of the report, but also to consider it in the context of the unclassified, publicly released section on the alleged Atta meeting in Prague that precedes these pages. It sounds complicated, but it is not. Just go read it and you will understand.

I think Senators will find the information classified by the administration on these three pages does not involve intelligence sources and methods as much as it does provide insight into the warning bells that were going off all over about the alleged Atta meeting in the context of a Presidential speech a week before the Iraq war commenced. This is information on the use of prewar intelligence which the White House does not want the American public to have because it would be embarrassing.

The Senate cannot allow this misuse of classification authority to stand. I urge my colleagues to support the Reid-Rockefeller-Levin amendment.

Mr. President, I once again thank the minority leader and yield the floor.

(At the request of Mr. ROCKEFELLER, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.)

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, this past Friday, the Senate Intelligence Committee released a report that, among other issues, looks at what we have learned after the attack on Iraq about the accuracy of prewar intelligence regarding links between Saddam Hussein and al-Qaida. The report is a devastating indictment of the Bush-Cheney administration's unrelenting and misleading effort to convince the American people that Saddam Hussein was linked with al-Qaida, the perpetrators of the 9/11 attack.

Before the war, President Bush said: "[Y]ou can't distinguish between al-Qa'ida and Saddam when you talk about the war on terror," and: "This is a man [Saddam] that we know has had connection with al-Qa'ida. This is a man who, in my judgment, would like to use al-Qa'ida as a forward army."

But the report released by the Intelligence Committee on Friday tells a different story. The report quotes the CIA's June 2002 assessment that "our assessment of al-Qa'ida's ties to Iraq rests on a body of fragmented, conflicting reporting from sources of varying reliability." That same CIA report said that "the ties between Saddam and bin Ladin appear much like those between rival intelligence services."

The Intelligence Committee's report quotes a January 2003 prewar CIA assessment that "Saddam Husayn and Usama bin Ladin are far from being natural partners;" that Saddam has "viewed Islamic extremists operating inside Iraq as a threat;" and that "the relationship between Saddam and bin Ladin appears to more closely resemble that of two independent actors trying to exploit each other."

Those accurate prewar assessments didn't stop the administration from making many false and misleading statements trying to link Saddam Hussein and al-Qaida before the war. What is doubly shocking is that the false statements continue to this day.

Just last weekend, the Vice President said on "Meet the Press" that "The evidence we also had at the time was that he [Saddam] had a relationship with al-Qaeda."

And the Secretary of State told Fox News earlier this week that "There were ties between Iraq and Al Qaida."

Just read the Senate Intelligence Committee's bipartisan report. Those statements are simply not supported by the intelligence, prewar or postwar.

Three weeks ago, the President said in a press conference that Saddam Hussein "had relations with Zarqawi" the recently killed terrorist.

The Intelligence Committee's report demonstrates that statement to be flat out false. The committee report discloses, for the first time, the CIA's previously classified October 2005 assessment that Saddam's regime "did not have a relationship, harbor, or turn a blind eye toward Zarqawi and his associates."

But neither the CIA's assessment nor the committee's report has stopped the false statements. Just last Sunday, the Vice President said on "Meet the Press" that "We know that Zarqawi . . . fled and went to Baghdad and set up operations in Baghdad in the spring of '02 and was there from then, basically, until basically the time we launched into Iraq."

Just last weekend, the Secretary of State told CNN "We know that Zarqawi ran a poisons network in Iraq. . . . So was Iraq involved with terror? Absolutely, Iraq was involved with terror."

And just this week, Tony Snow, the White House spokesman said "there was a relationship" between Saddam and Zarqawi.

Don't they read the CIA's assessments? If they do and disagree, they should say so. Again, the CIA's October 2005 assessment said, flat out, Saddam's regime "did not have a relationship, harbor, or turn a blind eye toward Zarqawi and his associates."

There are many more misleading statements. In the fall of 2001, the Czech intelligence service provided the CIA with reporting based on a single source who stated that the lead 9/11 hijacker Mohammed Atta met with an Iraqi intelligence officer in Prague in April 2001.

On December 9, 2001, Vice President CHENEY was asked about the report on "Meet the Press." The Vice President said, said that ". . . it's been pretty well confirmed that the [9/11 hijacker Mohammed Atta] did go to Prague and he did meet with a senior official of the Iraqi intelligence service in Czechoslovakia last April, several months before the attack."

On March 24, 2002, the Vice President told "Meet the Press" that "We discovered, and it's since been public, the allegation that one of the lead hijackers, Mohammed Atta, had, in fact, met with Iraqi intelligence in Prague . . ."

But the Intelligence Committee's report declassifies, for the first time, a July 2002, a Defense Intelligence Agency paper that said "Muhammad Atta reportedly was identified by an asset (not an officer) of the Czech [ ] service only after Atta's picture was widely circulated in the media after the attacks, approximately five months after the alleged meeting occurred" and that "there is no photographic, immigration or other documentary evidence indicating Atta was in the Czech Republic during the time frame of the meeting."

Two months later, in September 2002, CIA published its assessment that "evidence casts doubt" on the possibility that the meeting had occurred and that "The CIA and FBI have reviewed the reporting available so far and are unable to confirm that Atta met al-Ani in Prague."

None of those assessments stopped the Vice President from continuing to suggest that the report of the meeting was evidence that Saddam's regime was linked to the 9/11 attackers. On September 8, 2002, in a "Meet the Press" interview the Vice President said that the CIA considered the report of the meeting "credible," although, again, that same month the CIA said that there was evidence that "cast doubt" on it having occurred.

In January 2003, still before the war, the CIA published an assessment stating that, "A CIA and FBI review of intelligence and open-source reporting leads us to question the information provided by the Czech service source who claimed that Atta met al-Ani." The January 2003 paper stated that CIA was "increasingly skeptical that Atta traveled to Prague in 2001 or met with IIS officer al-Ani" and that "the most reliable reporting to date casts doubt on this possibility."

But the Vice President continued to be undeterred by the CIA's skepticism. In September of 2003, 8 months after the CIA said that the most reliable reporting cast doubt on the possibility of a meeting between Atta and the Iraqi intelligence officer, Vice President CHENEY was still citing it as having possibly occurred.

On January 19, 2004, a full year after the CIA expressed serious doubts about the meeting and the fact that not a shred of evidence had been found to support the claim of a meeting, the Vice President told the Rocky Mountain News that the Atta meeting was "the one that possibly tied the two [Saddam and the 9-11 attackers] together to 9/11."

Six months later, on June 17, 2004, the Vice President was asked whether Iraq was involved in 9/11. The Vice President said "We don't know. . . . We had one report, this was the famous report on the Czech intelligence service, and we've never been able to confirm it or to knock it down. We just don't know." The Vice President may not have "known" but the intelligence community sure as heck didn't believe—for a long time before the Vice President's statement—that the meeting took place.

Now the Senate Intelligence Committee's report says that "Postwar findings . . . confirm that no such meeting occurred."

But just last Sunday, before a nationally televised audience, the Vice President was asked whether the meeting occurred. The Vice President replied "We don't know."

The Intelligence Community does know. The Senate Intelligence Committee knows. The bipartisan report we released last week says "Postwar findings . . . confirm that no such meeting occurred."

The intelligence assessments contained in the Intelligence Committee's unclassified report are an indictment of the administration's continuing misleading attempts to link Saddam Hussein to al-Qaida. Portions of the report which have been kept from public view provide some of the clearest evidence of this administration's false statements and distortions.

Among what remains classified, and therefore covered up, includes deeply disturbing information. Much of the information redacted from pages 96, 97, and 98 of the public report does not jeopardize any intelligence sources or methods. The continued classification of that entire portion of the report reeks of a coverup by the administration. The Senate should not go along. The public is entitled to the full picture. Unless this report is further declassified, they won't.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, Senator LEVIN would be here, but he is, to say the least, tied up in the Armed Services Committee. He has been working with others to get a bipartisan measure to the floor so we can deal with the detainee problem that was brought to a head by the Supreme Court in the Hamdan decision.

I do wish to say that Senator LEVIN, during Senator ROCKEFELLER's incapacity, was a real stalwart working with us. He kept Senator ROCKEFELLER informed at his home on a daily basis as to what was going on in that committee. We very much appreciate Senator LEVIN's efforts. He is really overworked. He had his responsibilities for Armed Services, but he filled in very well for the distinguished Senator from West Virginia. We are glad Senator ROCKEFELLER is back and in better shape than when he left. He is stronger than ever, and we are very fortunate to be able to work on this side of the aisle with these two wonderful Senators.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, notwithstanding rule XXII, that amendment No. 5005, to declassify certain text of the Report of the Select Committee on Intelligence on Post-War Findings about Iraq's weapons of mass destruction program, still be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BOND. Reserving the right to object, first, let me clarify, this is not classification—

Mr. REID. Mr. President, is there an objection or not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri object?

Mr. ROBERTS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The Democratic leader.

Mr. REID. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I regret the decision of the majority. I really do. There will be ample time for my friend from Missouri to speak. I wish to speak for a few more minutes. No matter the issue or the costs to the American people, I am sorry to say, partisanship is the order of the day in this Republican Senate. On such an important matter as this, I had hoped we could set aside our partisan differences and work together. This is not the case.

Our amendment will not be adopted, but it is not we who will pay the price. The real consequences will be paid by this institution and the American people.

The Senate has lost and the American people have lost once again because the Republicans have chosen to rubberstamp a bad decision by the Bush White House. They have put the administration's political standing ahead of this body's constitutional obligation and their own political interests ahead of the Nation's interests.

Again, the American people have lost because, again, they have been denied an opportunity to fully understand the facts behind President Bush's rush to war in Iraq. The decision to keep this revealing information from the public represents an abuse of classification authority by the Intelligence Committee. They have shielded the White House at the expense of America's security.

More than 3 years into the war in Iraq—longer than it took in World War II in the European theater—the principal underpinnings of the administration's case for war have been undermined, if not obliterated, by events on the ground and Friday's Intelligence Committee report.

We learned long ago that Saddam did not possess weapons of mass destruction, that he did not have stockpiles of chemical weapons, that he did not have stockpiles of biological weapons, and that he did not have nuclear capabilities.

Further, we know definitely from the Intelligence Committee report on Friday that another administration claim—that Saddam Hussein had ties with al-Qaida—is totally and completely unfounded. Of course, that does not stop this administration from repeating this charge. This next chart shows exactly what I am talking about. Look at what has been said in recent weeks. And the colloquy between the distinguished whip and the ranking member of the Intelligence Committee certainly showed this and will show it again.

Here is what was said:

[Saddam Hussein] had relations with Zarqawi.

President Bush said this in August of this year, late August of this year.

The Senate Intelligence Committee report:

[The Regime did not have a relationship with, harbor, or turn a blind eye toward Zarqawi.]

This did not stop the President from saying "[Saddam Hussein] had relations with Zarqawi." This is not a truthful statement.

On September 10, just last Sunday, the Vice President said, on "Meet The Press," at 10:30 in the morning—he was asked the question by Tim Russert, "And the meeting with Atta did not occur?"—keep in mind, this is after the report was made public Friday, 2 days before this—and the Vice President said, "We don't know."

The Senate Intelligence Committee report says no such meeting occurred. It is against this backdrop that I offered the Reid-Rockefeller-Levin amendment. We have an administration that continues to misstate the record and prevent the public from getting additional information that will shed further light on their misstatements. And "misstatements" is an understatement. We have a Republican-controlled Congress that actively aids and abets the administration in these pursuits.

Mr. President, we need a new direction. For too long, this Republican Congress has put its own security ahead of the security of the American people. Today is a good example of that, and it is too bad for the American people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I rise in very strong opposition to Senator REID's amendment. The amendment simply directs the release of three pages in the classified version of the committee's phase II report on the accuracy of prewar intelligence assessments. I just think this amendment is an irresponsible, very dangerous way to seek the release of classified information and would set a very dangerous precedent.

To my knowledge, this action is unprecedented—the full Senate considering a bill that has nothing to do with the subject matter that is now being discussed and for the Senate not to declassify the information but to simply release classified information. I can probably conjure up a lot of other different attempts to do this and put the full Senate in the position of trying to release classified information.

While we are at war, what the Democratic leader is proposing is that the Congress unilaterally release information that our intelligence professionals—not the administration—that our intelligence professionals have determined to be protected from disclosure. Again, to my knowledge, the Senate has never taken such a drastic step.

Now, the Democratic leader's amendment is not about port security. In fact, the amendment will do nothing to enhance our security. The Senate should not adopt a precedent that allows one Senator to release classified information for whatever purpose that he or she would deem fit or for their own purposes.

Before I proceed any further, however, I must take issue with the manner in which the committee action on the matter of declassification has been characterized. Senator REID claims that a bipartisan majority of the Intelligence Committee voted to include in the report a statement that the committee disagreed with the administration's decision—I will repeat, the administration's decision—to classify certain portions of the report's findings and conclusions and said that classifying of this information is without justification.

In actuality it was the intelligence community, not the administration, that made the decision to protect the sensitive information contained in those three pages. That decision was based on the community's judgment—their judgment—I know Senators ROCKEFELLER, REID, and others may disagree with the community—concerning sources and methods.

More important, the committee actually classified the declassification this way, and I am quoting from our report:

The committee recognizes that classification decisions are often difficult, requiring a careful balancing of our responsibility to protect the national security sources and methods with the need for the appropriate transparency of the intelligence activities.

That says it, and it is a very difficult task that one faces when you are approaching that kind of a challenge.

Overall, the declassification process on this report—and I am quoting again—“was a substantial improvement over past efforts.”

That is what the committee said. I know that doesn't include the three pages that the Democratic leader, Senator ROCKEFELLER, and others would like to have released. It would still be classified, but it would be released in a bill that has nothing to do with intelligence matters. It is important to understand that this was a broad, bipartisan statement relating to a number of issues. Several Senators, many Senators, this Senator, had things they would have liked to have seen declassified. I worked overtime with the intelligence community in regard to the section on the Iraqi National Congress, to make sure that all of that report was in, all of the nuances and history would be declassified. Did I get everything I wanted? No, but I got a large portion of it.

The committee, however, made no specific reference to the issue that Senator REID brought to the floor today. There was that generic statement that I just said earlier. I am very familiar with the material that the Senator seeks to publicly release. I agree with the Intelligence Community that this material does contain sensitive information that would damage our intelligence sources and methods. I believe it is properly classified. I supported the report's statement that there are certain portions of the report that I believe should have been declassified. This is not one of them.

The information the Democratic leader wants to release is very sensitive. Mr. President, it is CIA operational traffic between an undercover overseas field station and CIA headquarters. This type of correspondence exists to permit the rapid informal flow of information and operational guidance needed to execute the mission of the CIA. It is not formal intelligence reporting. It is not a finished intelligence assessment drafted and coordinated to support policymakers, as has been indicated, and it is not routinely available or needed by anyone outside of the CIA. It must be handled with care.

Now, the next question, obviously, is why? Because the release of unevaluated information and CIA operational traffic would potentially damage the relationships with foreign country security services that work closely with the CIA. These foreign services do so with the expectation that their words and their actions will remain confidential. Additionally, declassification and public release of such correspondence would certainly impinge upon the speed and frankness that marks this correspondence. CIA's effectiveness is reduced when this happens.

For these reasons, and others that cannot be discussed publicly, this information should not be released. In short, this amendment would damage our sensitive sources and methods by recklessly disclosing properly classified information—again, not by the administration but by the intelligence community.

There is another way to do this. It is the proper way. A number of Members on both sides of the aisle, including this Senator, have issues concerning the declassification of these reports. They have agreed to work with the National Archives Public Interest Declassification Board, which is the proper way to do it, to review and, hopefully, further declassify some of the remaining redacted portions. This review process will look at all of the information that remains classified, not just the information singled out in Senator REID's amendment. I think this is a much more responsible approach.

I hope my colleagues will proceed in that manner. That is how we intend to proceed in the Intelligence Committee in regard to classification and declassification. I oppose this amendment, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ROBERTS. I have yielded the floor, but I will answer the Senator's question.

Mr. DURBIN. I ask the Senator because I am not on the committee, the Senate Intelligence Committee released a report last week, and he stands by the findings—at least the majority section. I asked the question of my Democratic colleague, Senator ROCKEFELLER, which I would ask of you. In that Senate Intelligence Committee report relative to the alleged meeting in Prague involving Mohammad Atta, the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence report says that no such meeting occurred. I would like to ask the Senator from Kansas this: When the Vice President was asked on Sunday on “Meet the Press” by Mr. Russert the following question: “And the meeting with Atta did not occur?” he replied, “We don't know,” is that statement by the Vice President consistent with the report that you signed and issued to the public on the previous Friday?

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, responding to the Senator from Illinois, that is a hypothetical. I did not watch “Meet the Press.” I have not studied the Vice President's comments other than what the Senator has said. My name is not Tony Snow.

I yield the floor.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Will the chairman yield for another question?

Mr. ROBERTS. Yes, I certainly yield to my friend and colleague.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Thank you very much. I am sure that the Senator is aware, having talked about the importance of the operational cables, the foreign service, and all these kinds of things that there are in our report—or in the report there are at least 30 specific references to operational cables. I am looking at page 31 of the prewar assessment part. CIA operational table, December 2002, the INC part. And there are two on page 68—two CIA cable references that are declassified. Is the Senator aware of that, that we have done this 30 times at least in our report?

Mr. ROBERTS. It is my understanding that the operational cables and the INC reports are two separate reports.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. That is correct. But there are 30 in various parts of this that are operational cables specifically referred to, which are—

Mr. ROBERTS. Basically, the decision is made by General Hayden in a letter I would be delighted to read on the floor of the Senate, except that it is classified. He goes down specifically, exactly the comments I have made in a very generic way as to why he didn't declassify them. One report is INC and one is on the accuracy of the prewar assessments regarding weapons of mass destruction. I don't understand the point.

By the way, the general indicated that he will provide us a letter that is not classified outlining why the CIA Director feels very strongly that this should not be released.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. What the CIA Director reportedly is saying, and the chairman of the full committee indicates, is that operational cables cannot be identified publicly. I am saying that they are identified 30 times in our two reports.

I direct my colleagues' attention to these 30 specific examples from the committee's two reports found on page 31 of the report on Post War Findings and pages 41, 43, 67, 68, 69, 70, 72, 76, 77, 78, 80, 82, 86, 87, 104, and 107 of the INC report.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, let me say to my friend from West Virginia, however, if I might, and my friend from Illinois, I don't speak for the Vice President. I ask the Senator to address that question to the Vice President. It is the information in the cable which is classified, not the format. I think the distinguished vice chairman is talking about the format in another report as opposed to the report that Senator REID quoted from, and it is that information—the cable which is classified, again, by the intelligence community. The Senator knows how hard we have both worked to get both reports declassified, to the extent that the American people could at least know what is going on and let the chips fall where they may. That does not include, however, a decision when the DNI and the Director of Central Intelligence insist that basically the information in the cable is classified.

I suppose that in future debates on any bill—and it could be port security or the farm bill or any bill that really doesn't pertain to intelligence—somebody can say, you know, I think there is a portion of some intelligence report, or any intelligence, that ought to be released even though it is classified. If we start doing this, if we go down the slippery slope with regard to having this body in executive session or otherwise decide to release classified information, we may as well replace "E pluribus unum" up there with the New York Times. It is a dangerous precedent.

There is a way to do that. We have a committee set up to go to the review board to see if we can get the most declassification possible. I agree with the Senator that too much is classified. That is a given. In this particular case, I think you have to rely on—or you should rely on the CIA Director and the Director of National Intelligence who say we are going to lose allied support.

The Senator knows that every week we get a courtesy call from various people who come in and who are our counterparts representing other countries. The bottom line is: Why can't you Americans keep quiet? So, consequently, I think that has an aspect of this. That has entered into, I think, part of the DNI's involvement here and decisionmaking, as well as the CIA Director's involvement. It is a canard of the first order to say it was the administration. It is not. It is the people who work with this every day.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I say to the chairman of the full committee, is the Senator aware that on page 31, the pre-war assessment part of the report, there is a reference at the bottom, as I indicated, to the CIA operational cable of December 20, 2002. The Senator indicated the substance is not included, but I will read from the report:

In addition, the Committee is examining the facts surrounding a December 20, 2002, cable from the relevant CIA station [this is all available to the American public today] which transmitted comments from a letter to the DCI and a discussion with the Chief of Station from the head of the foreign intelligence service that handled CURVE BALL. The cable noted that the head of the foreign intelligence service intelligence said experts from a number of foreign intelligence services had analyzed the CURVE BALL information and believed "the information was plausible"—et cetera, et cetera.

In other words, the content is right here.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I would just simply say to my distinguished friend and colleague, and to let everybody know who is listening to this debate, it is an interesting debate; it is a unique debate. It sets a precedent that I don't agree with. But simply because we are having this discussion doesn't mean we are not friends and colleagues and trying our very best to do a job under very difficult circumstances. But we do defer—or at least I think we should defer—to the intelligence professionals here who work with this material. If they make a mistake, we are all over them.

So we are at war. Let's let the Public Interest Declassification Board take a look at these reports. That was the suggestion by Senator WYDEN, picked up by Senator BOND, endorsed by myself and I think by the Senator from West Virginia. That is the proper way to go about it, not in this format, when we don't even have a bill that pertains to this and where we are setting a precedent where all of a sudden somebody can say: Oh, I think we should release even though it is classified.

Once we start down that road, I would say to my dear friend, we will never hear the end of it. We will have everything else declassified. We could conceivably, with all the furor in regards to the ABC documentary over the handling of 9/11, get into reports and get into Presidential findings and everything else. I just don't think that is appropriate. So there is a way to do it. Let's do it the proper way.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I want to join in support of the chairman of the committee. It is important to realize this was not classified after the fact. This was classified information.

Now, we cannot say on the floor why this must remain classified. There are good and sufficient reasons for this, unlike some of the other cables which have been cited by the distinguished vice chairman of the committee, why this one should not be released.

We are witnessing something here that is very, very disturbing. The minority leader said that partisanship is the order of the day because we have objected to this unwarranted effort to misuse and abuse the intelligence process to score political points. This approach, regrettably, is something that has been used going back to 2003 when the Democratic staff in the Intelligence Committee laid out a partisan political game plan to use intelligence to try to beat President Bush and Vice President CHENEY in 2004. They laid out a game plan and they stayed on it. They stayed on it through phase I. Phase I took 2 full years during which we exhaustively examined all of the documents, interviewed anybody that might have information on whether there was an intentional misleading or misrepresentation or pressure to change the estimates of the intelligence analysts and thwart the process.

We reviewed that process exhaustively. At the end of it, our bipartisan conclusion was there was no evidence of any pressure to change findings of the Intelligence Committee; there was no effort to mislead or misuse the information of the intelligence analysts or the intelligence estimates.

Regrettably, our Democratic colleagues were not satisfied with that. They wanted to continue the battle. So we initiated a second backward look into history that I think was a tremendous waste of time—phase II—to go back and say: Well, maybe we missed something. We are going to go back and look at the intelligence prior to the commencement of Operation Iraqi Freedom and see if we can't find some misstatement, some misstep by the administration.

Well, President Bush is not running again. I don't know whether they want to try to impeach him or whether they just want to try to score points in the 2006 election campaign. But whichever thing they are doing, it is a blatant partisan effort to take what should be the bipartisan, even nonpartisan, Intelligence Committee and drag it through the political mire of name-calling and rock-throwing.

I think it is time for us to hit the baloney button on this and say: We have wasted now 2 more years in the Intelligence Committee going back and trying to defeat or impeach President Bush, and we have not been successful.

Let me mention something about this. All of this hype is about things that were added—much of it is about things that were added as comments to one of the two reports that we reported out of the Intelligence Committee. The Democrats chose to make extraneous allegations now that will be considered in a later report that is yet to be finalized by the committee, to look into statements made by administration officials and Members of Congress, to see whether they were inaccurate or if there was a misuse of the intelligence estimates that were available at the time. I have looked at them and I have seen some significant overstepping in statements that were made. Regrettably, those statements primarily came from Members of Congress, some on the other side of the aisle, who went too far. They went beyond what the intelligence estimates said.

Now, we have focused in this process on what the final intelligence estimates were. There are thousands—perhaps hundreds of thousands—at least tens of thousands of operational cables. They bring in different points of view. There are 16 different intelligence agencies that may have points of view. Do those all come to the policymakers? Of course not. The intelligence community is responsible for coming up with a National Intelligence Estimate, a community assessment that goes to the policymakers, whether that is the President, the Vice President, or this body. We get the final product.

Now, any time you want to, you can go back and look at all kinds of operational cables. You can find cables at any one time saying it is daytime and others say it is night, a third one saying it is dusk, and a fourth one saying it is dawn. But that is not what is given to the policymakers.

We ask the Intelligence Committee to use their best judgment. And as far as this cable, which has been properly classified—and we will not go into why it is properly classified—this cable was one communication to the headquarters, and it was not the only one. There were many, many more.

Looking back on it, we have a much better idea of what went on. But the whole purpose of this, the whole purpose of our Democratic colleagues in phase II, was to find grounds to defeat President Bush in 2004 or perhaps impeach him in 2006 or maybe in 2007. Well, we have been looking in the rear-view mirror far too long. We have been looking backwards. We spent 2 full years, the staff of the Intelligence Committee spent hundreds of hours, reviewed tens of thousands of documents, over 1,000 interviews, and they found that there was no misuse, no abuse of the intelligence process, no pressure on the analysts.

So we have a lot of things that we ought to be doing. We have a lot of work in the Intelligence Committee because we have to implement the recommendations of the 9/11 Commission. One of the key recommendations concerning intelligence in the 9/11 Commission report was to set up a national security post in the Department of Justice to coordinate between the FBI and the CIA. Regrettably, our colleagues on the other side of the aisle are holding up the appointment of the man who is supposed to fill that position to ensure that there is good information and good exchanges of information between the FBI as a law enforcement body and the intelligence agencies. And we have a lot of other things to do because there are still problems that we have to work out in the new structure of the Director of National Intelligence.

I have been asking plaintively why we cannot look at the continuing threats, do oversight and deal with some of the questions and problems we have. The answer is we have to complete phase II, and phase II has had, again, hundreds and hundreds of hours of work by our staff, work that could have been used on other points. Regrettably, what we are hearing on the floor and what we are seeing in some of the reports coming out of the Intelligence Committee is an effort to politicize intelligence. I deeply regret the fact that so much of this has been misquoted in the report issued, the largely Democratic report issued from the intelligence community. There was a tremendous amount of cherry-picking of selected pieces of information that did not come from the National Intelligence Estimates, to say that statements by some administration officials were not based on sound evidence.

We have learned a lot. We have learned a lot since we went into Iraq. We learned that our intelligence wasn't good, state-craft and trade-craft were not properly executed. Where there were dissenting views, those dissenting views were not conveyed up the line to the policymakers. That was us and that was the administration. And we are trying to change that. We are trying to make sure that dissenting views are explored, that policymakers know if there is a division.

Now, looking back with hindsight, we could say that many of the statements made here on the floor and made by the administration were not accurate. The question is, Were they based on the best National Intelligence Estimates at the time? We found out in phase I that they were.

The effort to do more declassification is very important. The chairman of the committee, Senator ROBERTS, Senator WYDEN and I and the vice chairman have asked the Public Interest Declassification Board and the National Archives to look at and investigate what has been classified to see if more of it could be declassified. Because I, as most of my colleagues, want to have as much that is not sensitive or revealing sources and methods to be disclosed, so we can evaluate where we stand. But for this one, I understand full well the reason it is classified, and I am not going to say why. But when we disclose intelligence, we risk sources. Unfortunately, when we prosecuted the 1993 World Trade Center bombers, the prosecution had to turn over a list of 260 names of potential suspects. They turned it over in that court proceeding and, subsequently, several years later in a raid in an African nation they found in the al-Qaida playbook the names of all these people. When we disclose who we are talking to, their names get disclosed. And regrettably, some of them have been murdered. But it is not just the individual source who is at risk.

We have repeatedly chipped away at the confidence of our allies to work with us in the war on terror by disclosing sources and methods over the years. Friendly services are saying—and CIA leaders have told me directly—that our allies in the field are rethinking if and to what extent they can work with us because the Americans cannot keep a secret. This effort to declassify operational traffic involving overseas entities could devastate the confidence of our allies in cooperating with American intelligence and obliterate the confidence of American intelligence officials in the United States Congress, who will be taking their discrete communications among themselves and broadcasting it to the entire world.

I can't think right now of a single more devastating action that will reverse what we have been trying to fix in the U.S. intelligence community than this, to say that if you share anything within the intelligence community or even with the Intelligence Committee, it is going to get out. People don't want to share the most sensitive intelligence when it could get out and not only disclose the information, but put at risk the sources and methods by which it is being obtained.

For that reason, I regret that the minority leader has attempted to make a partisan battle out of something that did not have to do with the National Intelligence Estimate. It was not a final product of the Intelligence Committee. Therefore, it had no place in the effort to determine what kind of information got to the top policymakers in the administration.

There were lots of conflicting pieces of information going through the chain. What we properly looked at was how those were handled and what they gave to policymakers. There is no evidence, no evidence, none, zero, zip, none—that this evidence was ever shared with the top policymakers.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I had the honor to serve on the Senate intelligence subcommittee for 4 years. It is an awesome assignment. That committee can suck up more time from a Senator's schedule than any other assignment I can think of. I easily spent half of my time in committee in the Senate Intelligence Committee room, and I am almost certain that I didn't attend half of their meetings. There were so many meetings. The information is voluminous. It is cloaked in initials and references which take the longest time to understand. I will honestly tell you by the end of my 4 years I had come to understand more and more about the intelligence community and come to understand more and more about what to look for and listen for. So my hat is off to all of my colleagues in the Senate, Democrat and Republican, who serve on this committee. It is a massive assignment, and they have a massive responsibility—to measure the efficacy of our intelligence operations as well as their reports.

I can't think of another committee in Congress—I might say the Armed Services Committee is close—that has such an awesome responsibility. I want to preface my remarks by saluting all of the members of the Intelligence Committee for giving their time to this effort.

But I will tell you, there is no more frustrating assignment in Congress either because you will sit there for hour after weary hour, day after weary day, week after week, and month after month listening to all of this information, being sworn not to repeat a word of it—imagine. The only questions you can ask are in the room. The only statements you can make are in the room. It is classified information. We wouldn't want to risk the life of a single American or ally or someone helping our cause, so we are extra careful.

I lived through this as we made the momentous and historic decision 4 years ago to go to war in Iraq. After sitting there for months, listening to the experts within the Bush administration talk about what they knew about Iraq, I drew my own conclusions from what they said. And I would walk outside that committee room stunned to hear the public statements that were being made in direct contradiction.

Elected officials and appointed officials in this administration were saying things about Iraq and its threat to the United States which were inconsistent with the information being given to us in the Senate Intelligence Committee. Yet, being sworn to secrecy, I could not say a word. It was a frustrating situation.

I reached the conclusion that the information within the room was more compelling than the headlines outside the room. I joined 22 of my colleagues in the Senate in voting against the authorization to go to war. And our subsequent investigation found that those inside the room knew a lot more than the politicians outside the room because we found no weapons of mass destruction, we found no nuclear weapons, we found no connection between al-Qaida the terrorist group responsible for 9/11—and Saddam Hussein. We found no evidence to support the notion that somehow nuclear materials were coming in from Africa to Iraq.

Despite statements made by the President in the State of the Union Address, none of that was found. So we knew, after our invasion, after careful investigation, that the statements made to the American people were wrong. The American people were misled. The American people were deceived. So the Senate Intelligence Committee set out to try to get to the bottom of it.

The first phase of its investigation was to find out what happened at the intelligence agencies. If they had conflicting information, how did this occur? I happened to be on the committee when this report was made. It was an important disclosure that, in fact, our intelligence agencies had let us down. Their information was not reliable, was not sound, and many times misled a lot of people. That is a fact.

But phase II of this investigation by the Senate Intelligence Committee was going to really talk about whether these public disclosures were made and whether they, in fact, misled the American people. It took almost 2½ years for that to be prepared, 2½ years, despite repeated promises by the chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee that it would be a priority item and be taken care of. It is unfortunate that it took so long. It is unfortunate that the Democratic leader, Senator REID of Nevada, had to threaten a closed session of the Senate to force this issue, to finally come up with the phase II report.

But it is a good thing he did because the phase II report, which was publicized last week for all of America, in unclassified form, in public form, made it clear. The report concluded the administration relied on known fabricators and liars, including the infamous Ahmed Chalabi and his Iraqi National Congress to justify the war. Chalabi and others fed the administration consistently false information about Iraqi weapons of mass destruction and nuclear weapons.

Members of the intelligence community had warned that this Ahmed Chalabi, the darling of many people in this administration, was, in fact, a fraud. Despite this, despite this fact, this man was invited to sit in an honored place at the President's State of the Union Address.

He was unreliable. His organization was not only not trustworthy, it was penetrated by the Iranians, who sadly do not share many, if any, of our values.

But the administration still eagerly embraced this source, this unreliable, untrustworthy source. Some of the information that he gave found its way into one of the most important documents our Government issues, the National Intelligence Estimate on Iraq. That is a compilation of all the gathered intelligence from all the different reliable sources of our Government and other places, to try to have an accurate picture of the situation before a military invasion, before we risk the first American life. And the lies and fabrications and distortions of this man were part of that National Intelligence Estimate.

In fact, some of his testimony found its way into statements made by our former Secretary of State Colin Powell before the United Nations to try to justify to the world our invasion. That presentation marked a low point in what I consider an otherwise highly distinguished career of service by General Powell.

The committee report which we saw last week spells out the misinformation from Chalabi and others that was used to justify the war. It shows clearly there was no connection, none, between Saddam Hussein and al-Qaida. That is now a bipartisan conclusion. It is published. It has been verified from intelligence sources. The debate over that question should now officially end.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, could I ask the distinguished Senator from Illinois a question? On what page is there a bipartisan statement that there was no connection between al-Qaida and Iraq?

Mr. DURBIN. I will get the page reference and give it to you in a moment.

Mr. BOND. Because we also found in there a reference that there was a meeting and two contacts.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, if I might? I do control the time?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator controls the time.

Mr. DURBIN. I will get the page reference for the Senator. I would like to continue my remarks, if I may.

The bipartisan Senate Intelligence Committee reached these conclusions but this report, especially the public version, doesn't go as far as it might. As the vice chairman, the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, and other colleagues wrote in their additional views:

The committee's phase II investigation has been significantly limited by the majority's refusal to examine issues and documents relevant to our inquiry when the issues and documents came close to the White House.

The point that is being made today, and has been debated back and forth, is how much of this document that has not been released to the public, should be released.

As you can see, several pages, many pages, are blacked out. Information is blacked out. The official word is "redacted." So this debate has gone back and forth about how much should have been redacted, how much should have been released. I will not get into the specifics because I wouldn't want to disclose anything that I should not. But I will say the Senator from Nevada asked by his motion, his amendment, that we consider opening at least one or two pages of this report that reflect directly on statements made by the Bush administration.

The other side, Senator BOND and others, have suggested that we should not ask these questions, that we are looking in the rearview mirror about things that happened a long time ago.

I view this quite a bit differently than my colleague from Missouri. What we are talking about are statements and justifications made by this administration to justify the invasion of a country, to justify a war. I believe the greatest breach of trust in a democracy is when the leaders mislead the people, and the worst of these is when the people are misled into a war. I can think of nothing worse.

To ask specific questions about the nature of how we were misled into this war is certainly not ancient history, unworthy of comment or review. It goes to the heart of who we are and what we are as a democracy.

So many of us listened, startled by statements made by Vice President CHENEY on "Meet The Press" last Sunday. Scarcely 2 days after the report of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, Vice President CHENEY and other members of the administration made statements directly contradicted by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence report that had just been released. Let me be specific.

First, if I could, the chart with the "Meet the Press" show, Mr. Russert asked the Vice President, ". . . and the meeting with Atta did not occur?"

Vice President CHENEY said, "We don't know."

This was an important meeting. It was a meeting that was suggested had occurred by the Vice President and others involving Mohamed Atta, the leader of the 19 who were responsible for the attack on September 11, a meeting which supposedly occurred in Prague. Mr. Russert is asking: Did it or did it not occur?

Vice President CHENEY says, "We don't know." He said that as of last Sunday.

The Senate Select Committee on Intelligence report says, "No such meeting occurred."

That is not the only reference. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, "CNN Late Edition," same day, said:

We know that Zarqawi . . . ran a poisonous network in Iraq.

The Senate Intelligence Committee report says the following, "the regime"—in Iraq—"did not have a relationship with, harbor, or turn a blind eye towards Zarqawi."

Then, just yesterday or the day before, September 12, Tony Snow the President's Press Secretary, said "there was a relationship between Saddam and Zarqawi," directly contradicting this report.

This, sadly, is a pattern which is unacceptable. For the leaders in this administration—the Vice President, the Secretary of State, and the President's Press Secretary—to continue to mislead the American people about facts they now know are not true is unacceptable. If we are going to move forward in this country effectively, on a bipartisan basis, it has to be based on truth and honesty. As members of this administration continue to misrepresent the justification for the war on Iraq and the circumstances in Iraq, is it any wonder that a majority of the American people are now raising serious questions about their competence and judgment when it comes to these important foreign policy decisions? That is the reason for this moment on the floor today, this time that we have taken from the business of the Senate, because it really goes to the heart of the issue here. It goes to the heart of the issue which the American people are consumed with as they realize that 2,679 of our brave soldiers have now died in Iraq and 19,000 are seriously injured.

This morning, Senator OBAMA and I had a town meeting. We do each Thursday morning here. And one of those soldiers, blinded and severely injured in Iraq, came to visit with us. He was there with his wonderful and brave wife who stood by his side, and other soldiers, doing his best to get back on his feet and put his life back together.

That is what this debate is about. This isn't a waste of time over politics. It is a question about the foreign policy of this Nation, the protection of this Nation, and most importantly whether it is time to move in a new direction.

The Vice President of the United States said in the course of his appearance on "Meet the Press" when he was asked about the invasion of Iraq:

It was the right thing to do, and if we had to do it over again we would do exactly the same thing.

Clearly, no lessons have been learned by this administration because we sent too few troops into a situation which was not clearly planned nor clearly explained to the American people. We sent them without the necessary equipment they needed to protect themselves. We shortchanged them in terms of the number of forces, equipment, and training they needed—and lives were lost.

We now know, as well, that the justification for the war did not turn out to be true. There were no weapons of mass destruction, and we are there with 145,000 of our soldiers and marines risking their lives for America, even as we stand in the safety of this country today.

I might say to the Senator from Missouri that I have just been handed by my staff a reference which he might want to consider: page 63 of the report which he signed. Page 63 said Saddam has "viewed Islamic extremists operating inside of Iraq as a threat."

That statement is inconsistent with the conspiracy theory heard through some media channels that somehow Saddam Hussein and al-Qaida were in concert working toward the devastation which occurred on 9/11.

I would suggest that there is more which I could go into and don't have the time at this moment. But the report makes it clear—and most everyone who has taken an objective view of this makes it clear—that to continue to suggest this relationship with al-Qaida is just plain wrong.

I am going to conclude because I think this is an important debate and one which should continue. It is one that continues in households across America, not just in the homes of families of soldiers, those anxious parents and loved ones praying for the safety of our men and women in uniform, but also in every other home across America that truly wants to be safe and wants to make sure that our men and women in uniform are protected, that we do everything in our power to make this a safe nation.

We have offered amendments on the Senate floor to put the 9/11 recommendations into law so we will be safe at home. Sadly, they were rejected on partisan rollcall. But I can only hope that soon we will return to the bipartisan spirit of 5 years ago when we worked together. It would be in the best interests of our country.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Illinois for calling my attention to page 63. I don't see the information there. It does, on page 65, talk about George Tenet saying the intelligence indicates that the two sides at various points discussed safe haven, training, and reciprocal nonaggression. And in the report there are three instances of contact cited between al-Qaida and the Iraqi Government.

I also would just follow up on my statement that some of us in this body were misled by the inaccurate intelligence estimates presented to us by the community. For example, I see this classic statement:

When you look at what Saddam Hussein has had at his disposal in terms of chemical, biological and perhaps even nuclear weapons, we cannot ignore the threat that he poses to the region and the fact that he has fomented terrorism throughout his reign.

That was from Senator DICK DURBIN on "CNN Larry King Live," on December 21, 2001.

But I think we want to get back to the port security bill. I have been asked by Leader FRIST to pass along from a letter just received from CIA Director GEN Michael Hayden.

General Hayden said:

The amendment offered by Senator REID, seeks to declassify and make public CIA internal communications that include personal commentary and judgment. We hold these kinds of cables to the highest standard of secrecy within our organization, and would only share them outside of CIA under certain specific conditions.

I provided this information over the objection of many of my officers, after receiving assurances from the Chairman that it would be treated as highly sensitive material. That is why I am so disappointed that this amendment is being considered at this time. In addition, I am deeply disappointed that some have already characterized the cable's contents in the media.

He also talks about the information coming in from Chiefs of Station.

He said:

No COS has ever written one of these cables expecting it to be made public, and no COS will use his channel again without fearing it will become public, if Congress demands declassification.

He also said:

Further . . . it contains pre-decisional executive branch information.

Finally, he said:

Lastly, a critical way in which our Nation gathers intelligence is with the support of our liaison partners. If these partners fear that their support for CIA activities will be made public, it will make them reluctant to cooperate with my agency. This will, I assure you, curtail the intelligence made available to the CIA and could create gaps in the final intelligence made available to policy-makers. I ask your help in defeating this effort in the Senate, and for your help in protecting both CIA's sources and methods as well as our ability to work cooperatively with the Oversight Committees.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I rise to discuss the Port Security Act of 2006, the underlying bill we are discussing in the Senate here this afternoon.

I want to start by commending the steadfast dedication of my colleague, Senator MURRAY, from the State of Washington, and Senator COLLINS for their hard work in moving this legislation through the Senate, and certainly Senator STEVENS and INOUE for their leadership on this issue.

I want to say that Senator MURRAY has done great work both here in Washington, DC, and at home in the State of Washington to close security gaps. And I have enjoyed working with her to make sure that our ports in Washington State are more secure.

Port security ought not to be an afterthought or an extra security measure when we are talking about securing our borders or securing our communities. It should be one of our key priorities. Washington State knows how critical these ports are to our economy and to our way of life. There are ports all along our shore lines from Seattle to Vancouver, Bellingham, and other cities. They create jobs. They drive economic growth for the entire northwest. And in the Seattle-Tacoma area, the ports are the third-busiest in the Nation, with over 11,000 containers passing through Seattle and Tacoma daily.

That's more than 4 million containers a year. That is more than 100,000 workers in the Puget Sound area including longshoremen and freight forwarders and others who depend on the ports of Seattle and Tacoma for their jobs. And certainly they want to see them safe and secure. Last year the ports of Seattle and Tacoma combined to move more than $45 billion in revenue from imports and $12 billion in U.S. exports. But these are not just the homes—these ports—to international trade.

Puget Sound is also the home to America's largest ferry transportation system, with more than 26 million passengers and 11 million vehicles traveling throughout Puget Sound and to and from British Columbia. Despite these numbers of trade and economic development and of passenger movement and cargo container movement, there are still clear vulnerabilities.

For too long, too little has been done, I believe, to protect our ports and to improve the protections on our ferries. This bill will take a step forward on both of those issues. Right now we are inspecting the contents of less than 3 percent of the more than 6 million containers entering our country each year. Most of this inspection occurs after the container is off loaded and sitting on the docks of a U.S. port. The reality is that by then it is too late. And so working on point-of-origin issues is very important as my colleagues, Senators MURRAY and COLLINS understand.

The Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, which Senators COLEMAN and LEVIN lead, issued a report in March that stated we are only inspecting 0.34 percent of all containers destined for the United States overseas and of those that were considered high-risk containers, we are only inspecting about 17.5 percent.

Given this low inspection rate, it is really no surprise that each year we find illegal immigrants stowed away on cargo containers destined for the United States. This spring, 22 Chinese stowaways were apprehended at the Port of Seattle. So if illegal immigrants know that they have a good shot at entering the United States in cargo containers because of our failure to inspect the contents, it ought to be no great leap of imagination to expect that terrorist organizations might also have the same idea. In fact, the C.I.A. has reported that a weapon of mass destruction is most likely to be delivered in the United States by a cargo container entering a seaport. But the problems extend beyond our failure to inspect cargo.

We have no standards for container locks and seals. We have inadequate funding for critical research and development of screening technology. We have no international security standard for conducting terror and background checks on port workers. That is why, again, the point-of-origin issue and working internationally is so important.

The accuracy of cargo manifest information submitted to customs is also a major problem, especially when we're using this information as part of a system—the Automated Targeting System or ATS—to identify high-risk cargo. We recently, at the Port of Seattle had this made clear to us. That is when in August, Customs identified two suspicious containers and set them aside for inspection. They thought that there were things contained in there that bomb-sniffing dogs detected were explosives. Thankfully for us in the Puget Sound area, it was a false alarm.

But it made all too clear the potential for disasters at our ports with today's standards. With the high risk of terrorists placing weapons of mass destruction in containers during transit, we need to begin securing container doors with tamper-proof locks and seals, instead of what we are doing today, which sometimes can often be just a 10-cent zip lock or the equivalent.

Many containers are filled with cargo from more than one source, which also makes this transfer and tracking challenging. In fact, during a hearing before the Senate Finance Committee, the CEO of the Port of Seattle, Mic Dinsmore, put it this way—quote—“as ships make its way to the U.S., it might well stop at several other ports. Throughout this process, at least seven different handlers may have access to the containers before it even arrives in the United States. Every stage in the supply chain creates additional hurdles for monitoring this cargo.”

That's why we need to make improvements as this legislation does, to improve the systems that hold the shippers accountable for accurate information like is required under the Customs-Trade Partnership Against Terrorism. C-TPAT is a good start. But as has been reported, there is more to be done, particularly validating the participants of this program. Senator MURRAY has been a leader in this area in working with Operation Safe Commerce, a program to identify ways to better secure the supply chain, including cargo containers. But these threats are real, and we can't wait any longer.

This legislation makes important critical improvements to the current regime. It authorizes $400 million for port security grants and it makes improvements to the Container Security Initiative, a program that is important right now for inspecting cargo, as I said, at the point of origin; and with the Customs-Trade Partnership Against Terrorism program, the public-private initiative that secures that supply chain.

This legislation directs the department to establish minimum standards for container security, and it authorizes the Department of Homeland Security to accelerate the deployment of radiation detection equipment. It also authorizes the testing of systems to improve scanning of containers overseas. To make this possible, I was proud to cosponsor this legislation earlier this summer in directing the Department of Homeland Security to conduct a pilot program where we have seen at the Port of Hong Kong good result from this technology that I think will help us move closer to our goal for 100 percent container inspection.

Now, this pilot program is just initiated at three foreign ports, and we will need to work hard at expanding it. This underlying bill also includes language to us in improving the screening for our ferry systems in Washington state, particularly those coming into the United States from Canada. Right now some ferry runs from Canada aren't being screened for explosives before departing for the United States. In an F.B.I. Report in 2004, the National Threat Assessment named vehicle-borne explosives as the type of weapon that al-Qaida would most likely use for a maritime attack. The lack of explosives screening not just impacts the passengers on board the ferries, but those communities and coastal regions where this ferry transportation exists. That's why this inclusion in the underlying bill is so important for us in the northwest.

To build on many of the other critical provisions in this bill, there are two amendments that I offered that were included. The first would improve inspection of foreign ports, the point of origin for cargo entering the United States. The U.S. has an obligation to ensure that our international strict security standards and a way to enforce them.

We're only going to be as safe as the inspection process that our foreign partners implement. The Coast Guard is authorized under the Maritime Transportation Security Act to conduct inspections of foreign countries and their ports to validate their compliance with the International Ship and Port Facility Security code, ISPS.

Currently the Coast Guard only has 34 inspectors as part of the agency's international port security program to review the more than 140 countries that are shipping cargo to the United States. To date the Coast Guard has only been able to inspect ports in about 59 out of those 140 countries. We need to reinforce this relationship. We need to maintain a standard with these foreign governments, these ports, these private sector entities to ensure that we have adequate intelligence and security measures and that they are in place before these ships heave and are destined for the United States. That is why I am proud to sponsor an amendment with Senator SNOWE, the chairwoman of the Coast Guard Subcommittee that would authorize the Coast Guard to add additional personnel to complete the inspection of foreign ports by the end of 2008 and maintain a 2-year cycle for reinspection. Currently the Coast Guard maintains a reinspection cycle about every 4 to 5 years, so this basic step, I believe, is critical to gathering adequate information—gathering adequate information about cargo entering the United States before it reaches our ports. It also helps us identify countries who are not compliant with International standards and helps us identify those high-risk vessels and cargoes. But we have to also improve at home our ability to scan for those containers that are going to be loaded onto rail cars.

So the second amendment, that I am glad that the managers of this underlying package have accepted, directs the Department of Homeland Security to establish an Intermodal Rail Radiation Detection Test Center and test technology that can scan containers on rail for radiation. Now, currently, the U.S. Customs officials do not scan containers that are loaded directly on to rail. For us in the Pacific Northwest, this is an important issue since so much of our cargo comes through our Ports and onto rail systems and is then moved throughout the United States. Though scanning containers transported on rail cars does present a formidable challenge, we must step up to that challenge.

The 2006 Government Accountability Office report on combatting nuclear smuggling stated "to speed seaport development and to help ensure that future rail deployments proceed on time, we recommend that the Secretary of Homeland Security in cooperation with the Commissioner of C.B.P. develop procedures for effectively screening rail containers and implementing new technologies to facilitate this."

Just a few weeks ago, I had a chance to tour the Pacific Northwest National Laboratory in Richland, WA, where they are teeming with customs and—teaming with customs and border protection to develop and test this technology to scan rail transport containers for radiation. Many container ports and transport—container ports and transport companies are moving to on-dock rail systems to reduce the costs and improve efficiency and lessen the Environmental impact of using trucks. So more and more of the container business is moving towards rail. For example, the Port at Tacoma helped lead the way in this transition as the first port in the U.S. to develop an on-dock intermodal rail yard. So today, approximately 72 percent of the cargo arriving at the Port of Tacoma is transported by rail directly from the terminal. So we want to make sure that there is a screening process available that will help us make sure that the United States in cargo rail-transported shipments are more secure. This underlying language in the bill will help us get the right technology test done and the right deployment of the technology.

Since 9/11 we have taken many steps to enhance security infrastructure of our seaports, but further improvements can and must be made. We know the challenges that are facing us, and we know what would happen if a terrorist struck our ports. Millions in my State live, work, and commute around Puget Sound. Many are mere yards from the port, making it a very devastating impact on the populace of Puget Sound. If such an environmental disaster would happen. And the economic impact, I should say, would also be disastrous. We saw in 2002, when the west coast had a closure of a few of our ports, it cost our national economy $1 billion a day. So the Ports of Seattle, Tacoma, Vancouver, Everett and our other major ports are gateways to supplies and products coming to the entire Nation through the State of Washington. Without them, everything from jobs, productivity and economic growth slows down or stops. By making a real commitment to improving security at our ports and the cargoes that move throughout our country, we will have a more secure Nation. We will create jobs and a faster economic growth for the entire country. So I want to commend the managers of this legislation for their commitment in moving this legislation at this time and continuing to push on this difficult task. But I also want to remind my colleagues, as one port security expert said, Stephen Flynn of the Council on Foreign Relations—quote—"We are living on borrowed time."—So I believe the measures in this Port Security legislation are long overdue, and I hope my colleagues work to see it passed this afternoon.

USCG–2006–24189 (Federal Register, Vol. 71, No. 82, Friday, April 28, 2006).

AMENDMENT NO. 4952, AS MODIFIED

On page 14, line 22, after the period, insert the following: “The regulations shall include a background check process to enable newly hired workers to begin working unless the Secretary makes an initial determination that the worker poses a security risk. AMENDMENT NO. 4995

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 4995 and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California [Mrs. BOXER] proposes an amendment numbered 4995.

(Purpose:) To require the placement of blast-resistant cargo container on all commercial passenger aircraft)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. —. BLAST-RESISTANT CONTAINERS.

Section 41704 of title 49, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following: “Each aircraft used to provide air transportation for individuals and their baggage or other cargo shall be equipped with not less than 1 hardened, blast-resistant cargo container. The Department of Homeland Security will provide each airline with sufficient blast-resistant cargo containers 90 days after the Department of Homeland Security’s pilot program is completed”.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry: Is this amendment germane?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not germane.

Mr. STEVENS. I make a point of order that it is not germane.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained.

The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I am very disappointed. We have looked through this bill and we have seen an amendment that we believe gives Senators the opening to offer this. It was coming from the other side. It was the Burns amendment that dealt with an issue close to this. I will not argue that.

What I say to my colleagues today is this: We are very fortunate we have a homeland defense bill before the Senate. We are very fortunate Senators COLLINS and MURRAY work in a bipartisan way on a homeland security bill that deals with port security. We are further blessed that Senators have the guts to step up and offer amendments dealing with rail security and transit security. They were agreed to, thereby broadening the scope of this bill.

However, it is amazing to me that after we have observed and marked the fifth anniversary of September 11 we would turn away from a simple amendment that I am offering, which costs as much money as it takes for the war in Iraq in 5 hours—5 hours of the war in Iraq. We could take that amount of funding and make sure that on every passenger plane in this country that carries cargo there would be at least one blast-resistant cargo container.

Everyone lauded the 9/11 Commission. Let’s see what they said about this.

The TSA should require that every passenger aircraft carrying cargo must deploy at least one hardened container to carry any suspect cargo.

That is the 9/11 Commission Report. That is dated July 22, 2004.

The other side is objecting on some thin parliamentary threat and hiding behind it. It is outrageous. I cannot wait to tell the people of this country that for 5 hours of the cost of the war in Iraq, every airplane that has cargo would have at least one blast-resistant container so that if there is a bomb on that plane it will be contained. because only the suspect cargo would go into that particular container.

I do not understand what we are doing here. We have a good bill. We can make this bill better. The first thing I heard from my colleagues on the other side of the aisle is, oh, they did not want the airlines to have to pay the $15,000 per container—$15,000. It is a $150 million aircraft, but they did not want the airlines to pay $15,000. Fine. I said we will make sure the Transportation Security Agency gets those containers to the airlines. That is fine. That is fair.

The Homeland Security Department now has a test program. We know these things work. So let all of America hear it today. For all the talk about the 9/11 Commission Report and how great it was and how fair it was and how bipartisan it was, how good it was, how clear it was, this very simple recommendation that every passenger aircraft carrying cargo must deploy at least one hardened container to carry any suspect cargo, this Republican Senate would not allow a vote.

So you are going to hear all kinds of words about why it is not germane, and we are doing something else somewhere else. Do you know what? This is simple. This would do the trick. This is not costly. It would not even rate an asterisk in the Federal Government.

So I am very sad to see that we cannot vote on this amendment. But I will be back another day with it. You can be sure of that.

I thank you very much, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote on the motion to table the SCHUMER amendment No. 4930 occur at 4 p.m., with no second degrees in order prior to that vote. I further ask consent that following that vote, the bill be read a third time, and the Senate proceed to a vote on passage of the bill, with no intervening action or debate.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

The Senator from Washington.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, if I could just ask that Senator SCHUMER be given 2 minutes to speak prior to the vote.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

The Senator from Washington.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I modify my request to ask that there be 4 minutes equally divided.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to there being 4 minutes equally divided between both sides before the vote?

Ms. COLLINS. No objection, and I so modify my request.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, before that time commences, I want to answer the Senator from California. Canine teams are the most effective way to screen cargo transporter and passenger planes. Dogs can screen large quantities of cargo more quickly than any other available methods. One dog team can screen all the cargo on a 777 in 13 minutes.

Now, there is just no reason for these containers that the Senator from California wants to use, no reason to permit high-risk cargo aboard an aircraft. The hardened containers would only be able to contain a blast of limited quality of explosive material and would only be available for wide-body aircraft.

That amendment is not pertinent to this bill. This is not an airplane bill. This is not an aircraft bill. It is not an airline bill. It is a port and railroad security bill. That is why I objected. And I thank the Chair for ruling it was not germane.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, if I may respond, this is not my idea, I say to my good friend from Alaska, with whom I have had many good debates. This is a recommendation of the 9/11 Commission. We all know there are sniffing dogs going through the airports. I voted to make sure that happened. But we also know we are talking about a layered defense.

I want to know what the Senator from Alaska would say if this cargo blew up on a plane. I do not think he would be down here saying: Well, I supported making sure we had canine teams. I will tell you right now, either we are going to do homeland defense or we are not.

The Senator is right, this is a port security bill. But we have broadened it. I know he was not thrilled about that, and neither was the other manager. They wanted to keep it to port security. Why? Why not keep our people safe, not only when you are dealing with port security but with air security and rail security and transit security?

So this idea I have laid out here is not my idea. It is directly from the 9/11 Commission Report. And let the RECORD show that all kinds of talk about, oh, how safe we are because we have the canine teams, that is just part of a layered defense. The 9/11 Commission knows this, understands this.

It would have been very simple to have a vote on this amendment and add this very simple, inexpensive addition to this bill. But I guess it goes back to what Mr. Chertoff said the other day. I guess it just is not a priority. He said: Oh, we are going to go bankrupt protecting the people. I am basically paraphrasing what he said. Bin Laden wants us to go broke, he said. No. Bin Laden wants to kill us. Yes, he wants to kill us.

So why are we walking away from a 9/11 Commission recommendation that costs as much as 5 hours of the war in Iraq? The RECORD will show what happened here today.

Mr. President, I thank you and yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey.

AMENDMENT NO. 4942

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I just want to say a few words about an amendment, No. 4942, that was accepted in the managers' package.

On April 28 of this year, the administration announced a plan to check "all individuals seeking access to port facilities. . . ." They wanted to check all individuals seeking access to port facilities. The plan was to check these individuals' names against the terrorist watch list and to check for citizenship status. But a major loophole was created when it intentionally left out port truck drivers from this process.

Now, we are reminded that when the first attack on the World Trade Center, in 1993, took place, the explosives were hidden in a van. When the Murrah Building in Oklahoma City was blown up, the explosives were hidden in a van. And not to recognize that these trucks entering a port area could be carrying anything—whether it is taking cargo containers out of the port that had been brought to our shores from foreign ports or whether it is taking an empty cargo container back into the port—my gosh, you could almost hide a tank in one of those.

So to me it really did not make sense when the Department of Homeland Security's excuse was that it was simply too hard to do, to vet all of these truck drivers who come in, and get them an ID card to show they have been checked for any security concerns. Certainly, I do not think that is a valid excuse when it comes to protecting us from a terrorist attack. "Too hard" is never an acceptable reason. Just look at our brave troops in Iraq and in other places, places of great danger. No one is saying it is too hard. They are doing their duty to protect all of us and our interests.

One of the largest truck driver labor organizations in the world fully supports my amendment. They know they have nothing to hide, and they want to know that their workplaces are secure from terrorism.

The amendment simply requires that the IDs of truck drivers who have access to secure areas of ports be checked against terrorist watch lists and to confirm their American citizenship.

Earlier this year, DHS Customs Enforcement agents did an investigation of port truck drivers. Of about 10,000 port truck drivers working in the Port of New York and New Jersey, almost half had criminal histories. Some had been charged with the possession of millions of dollars of stolen pharmaceutical goods, or trying to smuggle cocaine and Iranian carpets into the United States.

This failure to check port truck drivers along with all other port workers is a dangerous shortcut. It is unacceptable. When it comes to protecting our security, we do not seek shortcuts. We do not want to. We want full measures taken to keep us, our families, our constituents, and the people in the area safe.

I want to thank the manager, the Senator from Maine, and Senator STEVENS from Alaska for accepting this amendment. It will help make sure our attempts for security are better fulfilled. I thank them, and I thank the chairman for working with me on this important issue. I understand there may be concerns with some technical aspects of my amendment, but I think it is clear that everyone here recognizes the problem of not checking port truck driver names against the terror watch list and for citizenship status.

Mr. STEVENS. I agree and I commit to working with the Senator to see that we do our best to make this law.

AMENDMENT NO. 4930, AS MODIFIED

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there are 4 minutes equally divided between the proponents and opponents of the Schumer amendment.

Who yields time?

The Senator from Maine.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I will yield myself 1 minute, and then I will reserve a minute for after Senator SCHUMER speaks.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in voting to table the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, which would require 100-percent scanning of all 11 million cargo containers entering the United States, regardless of whether they are incredibly low-risk containers or high-risk containers.

Now, the amendment that was adopted yesterday, the Coleman amendment, provides for 100-percent scanning of high-risk containers. The bill before us has a pilot program in three foreign ports to find out: Is it feasible and practical? Is the technology available? Can we, in fact, do 100-percent scanning without significantly slowing the flow of commerce? Right now it appears that we cannot do that. The technology is not there. But eventually we will be able to get to that goal. The approach in the Schumer amendment ignores the technological limitations we now have.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator reserves the remainder of her time.

Who yields time?

The Senator from Washington.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from New York is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. SCHUMER. Thank you, Mr. President.

Let me say this amendment is a very simple one. It says within 4 years we must have all of our cargo inspected for nuclear weapons. We have been trying to do this for 5 years—close to 5 years—and what we have gotten is a lot of studies, pilot projects.

And now I have seen it with my own eyes. Others have here, too. It can be done. It is done in Hong Kong on two lines. It costs about $8—once it is fully going, per container, nothing because it costs $2,000 to send a container over.

This does not cost the taxpayers any money. And this is the greatest—greatest—terrorist act that could befall us: a nuclear weapon smuggled into this country and exploded, God forbid. Can any one of us say we have done everything we can to stop it? No.

The fact that this amendment has drawn such controversy and has focused attention on the issue has shown that when you put in a deadline, you get things done.

When you do pilot projects and studies—especially because Department of Homeland Security has not done a very good job in this, the most important of areas—you will get delay. If you want to wait another 5 years, vote against this amendment. But if you care about protecting the security of America and preventing the greatest act of terror that could befall us, you will vote for this amendment to impose deadlines—because we know it can be done—and make our country more secure once and for all. We cannot afford to wait any longer, Mr. President.

I urge a “yea” vote.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine is recognized for 1 minute.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, once again, I will explain the provisions of the bill. It has a layered system of security for our cargo and, by the end of next year, it requires that the 22 busiest ports in the United States, which handle 98 percent of all cargo containers, will have installed the equipment to screen for radiation, for radiological devices, including a nuclear device. So it is not just studies and plans, as the Senator from New York repeatedly says; it has specific mandates.

The Coleman amendment, adopted yesterday, requires 100 percent screening and scanning of all high-risk containers. But the fact is that we do not yet have feasible, efficient, practical technology in place to allow us to do 100 percent scanning of all containers without significantly slowing container movement, producing a backlog, and harming our economy.

I move to table the Schumer amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MCCONNELL. The following Senator was necessarily absent: The Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. CHAFEE).

Mr. DURBIN. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. AKAKA) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHAMBLISS). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

LAND PORTS SECURITY

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, securing our seaports against terrorist threats is a critical issue, and I commend Chairman COLLINS and Senator LIEBERMAN for their hard work on the bill we are debating today, the Port Security Improvement Act of 2006. Senators COLLINS and LIEBERMAN have negotiated this bill not only with members of the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee but also with members of the Commerce and Finance Committees; they deserve our thanks for their tireless efforts.

While seaports are the focus of this bill, I would like to point out that land ports are equally important ports of entry into this country; they also suffer security gaps, and they also receive attention in this bill. Right now, about 11 million containers enter this country by ship through our seaports; another 11 million containers enter this country by truck through our land ports. According to the Department of Homeland Security, DHS, for example, the northern border has 6 of the top 10 truck border crossings in the country, including the No. 1 crossing point in the Nation, the Ambassador Bridge in Detroit. In fact, the Ambassador Bridge is currently the largest trade link that the United States has with another country, connecting Detroit, MI, and Windsor, Ontario with nearly 10,000 trucks crossing daily transporting goods worth nearly $110 billion per year. Over 60 percent of all trucks crossing the northern border take place in southeast Michigan.

Over the past 5 years, we have increased border staffing and security along our land borders and made progress in installing radiation detection equipment at land ports of entry. Today, for example, 100 percent of all trucks entering Michigan are screened by radiation detection equipment. But there is more to be done; we need better equipment to detect currently hard-to-detect nuclear materials and to analyze currently unreadable cargo images, such as images of trash containers on trucks entering the United States from Canada. Among other provisions, this bill directs the Secretary of DHS to enhance cargo security research, which I support.

The bill also takes a number of other steps to improve container security at land ports of entry, even though land ports are not the primary focus of this bill. Chairman COLLINS, am I correct that a few provisions in the bill would strengthen container security at both the land ports of entry as well as the seaports?

Ms. COLLINS. You are correct, Senator LEVIN. The bill contains provisions which would strengthen security measures for containers transiting either land or sea ports of entry.

Mr. LEVIN. It is my understanding that the following provisions in the bill, for example, would apply to all containers, whether they moved by truck or by ship: section 201, which would call on the DHS Secretary to establish a strategic plan to enhance the security of the international supply chain; section 211, which would codify the Customs Trade Partnership Against Terrorism Program; section 301, which would establish the Office of Cargo Security Policy; and section 303, which would increase research into ways to strengthen cargo security.

Is it your understanding that these provisions would apply to containers traveling through both the seaports and land ports?

Ms. COLLINS. Yes, it is the intent of the bill that those provisions apply to all containers, whether transiting U.S. seaports or land ports of entry.

Mr. LEVIN. I thank you for your time and for helping me to underscore an important point, that this bill would strengthen security measures for all types of shipping containers, at both sea ports and land ports of entry.

TWICS

Mr. DEMINT. Mr. President, I thank my colleagues for working with me on this important amendment. The amendment that I offered and which is included in the managers' package codifies the current proposed regulations governing the issuance of transportation worker identification credentials—often known as TWIC cards. My amendment would codify in statute a number of offenses which would bar individuals from receiving TWIC cards if they have been convicted, or found not guilty by reason of insanity, of a number of particularly heinous offenses. The amendment would also bar individuals from holding TWIC cards if they have been convicted of or found not guilty by reason of insanity within the last 7 years or have been incarcerated in the preceding 5 years for certain other offenses. This amendment will provide the Nation with assurances that the hard-working men and women at our ports are trustworthy.

It is my understanding that this language will be the Senate position in conference and that my colleagues will fight to protect this language and to ensure that the conference report contains the DeMint amendment.

I am particularly pleased to hear that Cochairman INOUE has agreed to fight for this amendment in conference. Is that understanding correct?

Mr. INOUE. The Senator is correct that his amendment will be the position of the Senate. I can assure the Senator I will work to protect the Senate position in conference.

Mr. DEMINT I thank my colleagues for working with me on this amendment and look forward to the port security bill's passage.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, yesterday, the Senate adopted amendment No. 4951, which I offered to the Port Security Improvement Act of 2006, to require all recipients of grants from the Department of Homeland Security—DHS—to report to the Department on the expenditures made from these Federal funds.

I offered this amendment in response to recent testimony by the U.S. Government Accountability Office—GAO—which found it difficult to track expenditures made from the $11 billion in Federal grants awarded to States and localities to improve emergency preparedness, response, and recovery capabilities. Specifically, William O. Jenkins, Jr., Director of the GAO's Center for Homeland Security and Justice, stated that, "What is remarkable about the whole area of emergency preparedness and homeland security is how little we know about how states and localities (1) finance their efforts in this area, (2) have used their federal funds, and (3) are assessing the effectiveness in which they spend those funds."

Currently, the Department requires States and localities applying for grants to submit an "Investment Justification" outlining implementation plans and detailing how the Federal funds are expected to be used to meet homeland security goals, objectives, and capabilities. Additionally, the Department requires States and localities that receive funds to file a Categorical Assistance Progress Report twice a year on how the Federal assistance allocations were used to meet homeland security goals and objectives. However, grant recipients are not required to disclose specific homeland security expenditures.

Early in the formation of DHS, grant recipients were required to report expenditures for homeland security equipment, plans, training, or exercises. This amendment will simply reinstate the requirement. With such a process in place, I hope DHS and the GAO will be able to report to Congress, and the American taxpayers, on the effectiveness of the grant programs and the use of Federal funds.

I am pleased my colleagues joined me in supporting this amendment to promote greater accountability and transparency in the use of taxpayers' money.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I rise to support passage of H.R. 4954, the Port Security Act. This bill will improve security at our ports and it is a step in the right direction. It will invest more money and coordinate programs to improve cargo screening, hire more personnel to increase physical security at ports, require background checks for port workers, and expedite deployment of radiation detection equipment to prevent the smuggling of nuclear material into our ports. All of these measures represent a better and smarter approach towards port security and homeland security generally. But we need to do much more.

It has been 5 years since the 9/11 attacks and sadly we still have much more to do to prevent a repeat of that catastrophe. We are troubled that this Congress has failed to implement many of the changes suggested by the 9/11 Commission more than 2 years after their final report. For example, the Commission urged us to improve border security through a more efficient entry-exit screening system. Despite the national outcry to beef up border security as we have seen during the ongoing immigration debate, we have yet to adequately address this problem.

The 9/11 Commission also recommended that we develop smarter plans to secure not only our air transportation system but also our rail and main transit systems. As the terrorist attacks in Madrid in 2004 and London in 2005 taught us, terrorists are more than willing and able to attack our trains, buses, and subway systems.

And even though we have spent billions to better protect air passengers, we must better screen for explosives in checked baggage and air cargo. The plot to use liquid explosives uncovered by British intelligence services in August revealed that we are unable to properly scan for all explosives. We can and must do more to protect these vulnerabilities against attack.

Unfortunately, what needs to be done to improve homeland security is not limited to the transportation sector. For example, we must also do more to improve security at our nuclear powerplants and chemical factories. Study after study has shown that a tragic attack on one of these facilities could kill thousands of Americans.

Such a bleak assessment of what still needs to be done—a full 5 years after 9/11—should gravely concern us. It is no wonder that a majority of Americans do not feel safer. According to an ABC News poll taken last week, 74 percent of Americans said they were concerned about the possibility of more major terrorist attacks in the United States. That same poll also found that 60 percent said more should be done to stop terrorists from striking again. Clearly, public sentiment demands that we improve homeland security. Passage of the port security bill will demonstrate that we can work together to make America safer. While this marks progress, it is just one piece of a much larger homeland security puzzle that we need to tackle. This must be our No. 1 priority and I urge my colleagues to continue working together towards this goal.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate is about to pass the Port Security Improvement Act of 2006.

This week our Nation observed the tragic anniversary of September 11, 2001. Five years after that horrific attack on our country, we honor those who lost their lives, and pay tribute to the heroism of the first responders who selflessly risked, and even gave, their lives in the rescue and recovery missions. Since that day, Congress has taken some actions to improve domestic preparedness and readiness, but there is much more we must do to help protect Americans from the threat of terrorism on our own soil. We must finish the job of implementing the bipartisan September 11 Commission's recommendations, including strengthening the security of our ports. Let us not get sidetracked from what should be our No. 1 priority, the fight against terrorism, and this port security bill is a key component in that fight.

Ports are a critical part of our Nation's infrastructure and an attack on our ports would have devastating consequences for the U.S. and the global economy. It is therefore of the utmost importance that our ports have adequate security measures put in place. That is why I supported a number of good provisions in this port security bill, such as the establishment of minimum security standards for all cargo entering the U.S., the requirement of radiation screening at the 22 busiest U.S. ports, and increased funding for the important port security grant program.

I was especially gratified to support the Murray amendment that extends certain Customs and Border Protection fees. While this might not appear to be much on first glance, this amendment was the difference between just authorizing these improved protections and providing the funding to put them in place. And it provides this funding in a responsible manner without adding to the deficit.

I was disappointed that the Senate rejected an amendment offered by Senator SCHUMER, which I cosponsored, that would prohibit foreign cargo from entering the U.S. unless the container has passed through an integrated scanning system and be tested for nuclear and radiological materials. This amendment would require, within two years, every container entering the U.S. from a foreign port designated under the Container Security Initiative—CSI—to be scanned before being loaded. This would cover the vast majority of transatlantic and transpacific cargo and be scaled up to scan all cargo within 4 years.

I was also disappointed that the Senate rejected the amendment offered by Senator MENENDEZ that would have required the Department of Homeland Security to develop a plan to incrementally increase the amount of cargo scanned for all threats until 100 percent of cargo was examined. Congress needs to finish the job of implementing the bipartisan 9/11 Commission's recommendations to improve our national security, including heightened screening of cargo that passes through our Nation's ports.

I also supported the amendment of Senator REID, which contained a number of important provisions addressing national security needs that are not addressed in the underlying bill. It is unfortunate that the Senate was unwilling to expand the scope of the bill to consider other matters relevant to fighting terrorism and protecting Americans. While I did not support every provision in the Reid amendment—it did not do enough to put this administration's flawed Iraq policy on the right course, for example—the Senate missed an important opportunity when it rejected that amendment.

Mr. President, I will vote for this bill because it provides funding for many important port security needs. However, our Nation's vulnerabilities demand more and I will continue to work to ensure that our vital homeland security needs are met.

Mr. SALAZAR. Mr. President, as this Congress comes to a close, it is important to ask: Have the Congress and the White House done everything possible to make the American people safe?

Unfortunately, I am afraid the answer is "No."

Just over a year ago, we all witnessed in horror the tragically inept response to Hurricane Katrina. Despite claims that DHS and FEMA had put their house in order after the Hurricane, just last week a GAO report raised concerns that adequate safeguards are still not in place to properly respond to a catastrophe.

Despite the fact that the 9/11 Commission gave 5 Fs and 12 Ds in its final report, an appalling number of the Commission's recommendations have still not been implemented—including recommendations regarding emergency preparedness and response, transportation security, border security, and intelligence reform.

Too many of our first responders still lack adequate equipment, resources, communications interoperability, and—just as important—training. Making matters worse, as local law enforcement agencies are forced to take on more homeland security responsibilities, the administration keeps proposing cuts to law enforcement funding.

Our borders are broken and lawless, allowing millions of people to cross the border without the government knowing who they are or why they are here. Meanwhile, border security programs remain under-funded and the National Guard has been strained to the limit.

Funding for air cargo security has declined by about 25 percent over the past 3 years, while a comprehensive baggage screening system is not expected to be in place until 2024.

Incredibly, there are still no minimum standards regulating security at our chemical facilities which remain vulnerable to attack. For reasons which I cannot understand, the Republican leadership has either refused or been unable to schedule floor time for a strong, bipartisan chemical security bill which has already been reported out of committee.

The American people deserve better. They deserve a Congress that will put partisan politics to the side and put homeland security first. So while I am proud to stand here and support this important, bipartisan port security bill, I do so with the understanding that it is only a first step on the long road toward adequately protecting our homeland.

Almost 5 years to the day after the September 11 attacks, more than 2 years after the 9/11 Commission warned us about the need to address port security, and more than half a year after the Dubai Ports World controversy brought port security to the front pages, the Senate is finally addressing this important issue.

The wait is unfortunate, because the issues at stake are serious. Over 11 million shipping containers enter the United States via our ports each year. Those containers carry roughly 2.4 billion tons of goods worth more than $1 trillion—and some expect those numbers to double over the next 20 years. It goes without saying that an attack on our ports would cause economic catastrophe.

The average shipping container originating overseas will pass through, on average, over a dozen intermediate points before it arrives in the U.S.—each providing an opportunity for terrorist infiltration. Weapons smuggled into the country through one of our ports could cause unspeakable loss of life.

Only about 6 percent of containers arriving at U.S. ports are currently inspected before they enter the country and that we do not have a comprehensive plan to restart the economy in the event of a terrorist attack on our ports.

So I am happy that we have finally taken up this important, bipartisan piece of legislation—and I commend Senators COLLINS, LIEBERMAN, MURRAY, INOUE, and STEVENS for their leadership on the issue. And while the legislation isn't perfect, it would take important steps toward securing our ports and protecting our economy.

First, I am pleased that the bill establishes a pilot project in 3 foreign seaports to screen every container entering the United States from those ports. This is a long-overdue first step.

I am also pleased that the bill requires the screening for radiological material of each container entering the United States.

The bill also includes important provisions requiring DHS to develop enhanced protocols governing the resumption of trade in the event of an attack on our ports and a comprehensive strategic plan regarding maritime cargo security.

I am also pleased that the bill improves and expands key port security programs such as the Container Security Initiative and the Customs-Trade Partnership Against Terrorism; and that it authorizes important risk-based port security grant programs.

Improving our port security isn't impossible. Just look at Hong Kong. While we inspect only about 6 percent of incoming containers, the port of Hong Kong has implemented new screening procedures that achieve 100 percent inspection. While this bill won't get us to 100 percent inspection overnight, it is an important—and long overdue—first step.

Furthermore, I would like to thank my colleagues for supporting my amendment to create a Rural Policing Institute—RPI—at the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center, FLETC. FLETC does a fantastic job training Federal, State, and local law enforcement officials. But FLETC does not have sufficient resources dedicated specifically toward training rural law enforcement officials. So the Rural Policing Institute would evaluate the needs of rural and tribal law enforcement agencies; develop training programs designed to address the needs of rural and tribal law enforcement agencies, with a focus on combating meth, domestic violence, and school violence; export those training programs to rural and tribal law enforcement agencies; and conduct outreach to ensure that the training programs reach rural and tribal law enforcement agencies.

As Attorney General, I learned that a small investment in law enforcement training can pay great dividends. By ensuring that our rural and small town law enforcement officers have the training they need to protect their communities, the RPI will help law enforcement agencies better protect the safety and security of their communities.

Finally, I am proud to cosponsor an amendment that would make the Transportation Technology Center, Inc.—TTCI—in Pueblo, CO, a part of the National Domestic Preparedness Consortium—which is the principal organization through which the Department of Homeland Security identifies, develops, tests, and delivers training to state and local emergency responders.

The TTCI does an outstanding job training first responders from the rail and mass transit sectors, the chemical industry, government agencies, and emergency responders from around the world. Each year, roughly 1,700 first responders go to Pueblo to participate in TTCI's outstanding training programs. TTCI's inclusion in the National Domestic Preparedness Consortium will allow it to improve its already outstanding services.

Our first responders are the finest in the world, and they deserve the best possible training and facilities. This bill is an important step in that direction.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, the Senate is about to pass the Port Security Improvement Act of 2006. This important legislation is the result of months of hard work between the Committee on Finance, which I chair, the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, and the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs. I thank again Chairman STEVENS and Chairman COLLINS, as well as Senator COLEMAN, Senator INOUE and Senator LIEBERMAN, and of course Senator BAUCUS, the ranking member on the Finance Committee, for coming together with me to produce a significant and balanced piece of legislation that advances both the trade and economic security interests of our Nation.

As I have noted previously, those who intend harm to our Nation seek to inflict economic as well as physical injury. We must be mindful of both concerns as we defend the homeland. I am pleased to say that we in the Senate have done our part. The committees of jurisdiction came together, worked together, and produced a bill that will empower the Department of Homeland Security, and in particular the U.S. Customs and Border Protection, to better meet the dual responsibilities of securing the homeland and protecting the economic security of our Nation. Our legislation has been on the floor for a week, during which the Senate has worked its will. I look forward to working out our differences with the House so that we can get this legislation to the President's desk as soon as possible.

I want to take a moment to thank the many staff who have worked so hard and so long to make this legislation a reality. On the Finance Committee, that begins with my chief counsel and staff director, Kolan Davis, whose skilled leadership is key to the advancement of my agenda on the committee. My international trade counsel, Stephen Schaefer, deserves special mention. Stephen is a very smart trade counsel, a creative problem solver, and a dedicated public servant. Tiffany McCullen Atwell, my international trade policy adviser, also deserves special mention. Tiffany was tireless in her efforts and a very strong and effective advocate for the Finance Committee. Together, their hard work and advocacy contributed significantly to the development of this legislation. I also want to recognize the other members of my trade staff, David Johanson, who serves me as international trade counsel, and Claudia Bridgeford, my international trade policy assistant. Their support is critical to my success.

Senator BAUCUS's trade staff also deserves recognition. The Democratic staff director on the Finance Committee, Russ Sullivan, and the deputy staff director, Bill Dauster, worked well with my staff throughout the process. I also appreciate the efforts of Brian Pomper, Senator BAUCUS's chief international trade counsel, and in particular Senator BAUCUS's international trade adviser, Anya Landau, who worked so closely and so well with my staff in this effort. And I want to acknowledge the other members of Senator BAUCUS's trade staff, Demetrios Marantis, Chelsea Thomas, Janis Lazda, and Mary Lisa Madell.

Finally, I would like to thank Polly Craighill, senior counsel in the Office of the Senate Legislative Counsel, for the many hours she put into drafting and improving this legislation. Not only is Polly a perfectionist, but she also drives others to meet her high expectations and for that I am personally grateful. The bill before the Senate is much improved by virtue of her patience, dedication, and expertise.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I want to offer a comment on an aspect of the port security bill, included in the managers' package. The IP-enabled voice communications and public safety provisions will encourage the use of E-911 by Voice over Internet Protocol providers. I want to thank Senator STEVENS for removing language from the initial amendment that would have delayed implementation of this public safety program. The provisions that were removed would have needlessly endangered lives. Accordingly, the modification was essential. As Americans increasingly use IP-enabled voice communications, there is an increasing necessity to ensure these callers have access to their local 911 public safety answering points in case of emergency.

The language of the initial amendment would have provided gaping loopholes for VoIP providers to avoid 911 obligations. It would have delayed the Federal Communications Commission's rules regarding implementation of 911 requirements on VoIP providers; grandfathered subscribers who signed up prior to December 31, 2005—meaning those subscribers would not be assured that when they called 911 they would reach their local first responders; and would have authorized other broad "waivers" from the rules.

I want to thank the firefighters—specifically the International Association of Fire Chiefs and the International Association of Fire Fighters—for bringing these important public safety concerns with the initial amendment to our attention. Through their diligence, we have an amendment that will promote the deployment of critical 911 services, rather than delay it. This is crucial to assist America's first responders, including local fire, EMS and police officials, in their efforts to save lives.

As the port security bill moves forward, it is critical that the compromise reflected in this important public safety amendment be maintained. I appreciate the assurances made by the managers to protect this important compromise. All Americans deserve the very best emergency response system. This amendment now helps accomplish that goal.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, today, the Senate accepted an important amendment to this port security bill to protect longshoremen and private sector marine terminal operators from any adverse consequences that could result from government cargo screening activities. The amendment was co-authored by Senator KENNEDY and myself, and I thank the distinguished Senior Senator from Massachusetts for his leadership on this issue. I also thank the floor managers, Senators COLLINS, STEVENS, COLEMAN, LIEBERMAN, INOUE, and MURRAY for their vital assistance.

After September 11, Congress mandated that the administration begin scanning shipping containers upon their arrival at U.S. ports. In response to this congressional mandate, U.S. Customs has begun using so-called "VACIS machines" to screen cargo on U.S. marine terminals. These machines are enormous imaging systems that use gamma ray technology to produce radiographic images of the contents inside the shipping containers. Some of these systems are truck mounted and can be passed over containers and others are operated by actually driving the container through the machine. With these devices, Government officials can determine the possible presence of many types of contraband. Eventually, every port in the country will have the machines on site.

There is no question that these machines are crucial to our port and national security, but they also have the potential to expose maritime workers to low levels of radiation. The National Academy of Science recently concluded that exposure to any additional radiation above background levels poses an incremental risk to the exposed individual.

This incremental risk of exposure to radiation, regardless of how small, is enough to trigger significant liability for employers under the Longshore and Harbor Worker's Compensation Act.

The amendment that I offer today addresses the issue of this low level radiation exposure in two ways: First, it requires the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security to develop and implement new protocols to protect the safety of port workers. If indeed it is possible that radiation exposure can be further reduced, hopefully to zero, we should do so. The tens of thousands of dedicated maritime workers in this Nation's ports deserve nothing less than to know that the Federal Government has done everything possible to prevent any exposure to additional radiation caused by these cargo screening machines.

The second part of the amendment allows the operators of marine terminals nationwide to receive financial reimbursement if their port-based employees become ill due to the low levels of radiation emitted by these machines.

Unfortunately, if we do not include this amendment today, maritime employers will be on the hook for thousands of radiation exposure claims because the Federal Government exposed their workers. Congress has placed the operators of marine terminals in a no-win situation. On one hand, we are asking the industry to support Government port security efforts, while on the other hand leaving them vulnerable to a possible litany of radiation exposure claims from their workforce if they do cooperate.

If a port worker believes that he or she was harmed because the Federal Government exposed the worker to radiation, the worker's complaint is with the Federal Government, not his or her employer.

Accordingly, I only ask for fairness for the businesses that operate marine terminals in Savannah, Boston, Seattle, and other American seaports. These businesses are in no way responsible for any radiation hazard brought about by congressional mandate. All these businesses have done is cooperate with the Federal Government. Therefore, this amendment also stipulates that the Federal Government should reimburse employers for any employee claims of injuries caused by exposure to radiation.

In closing, I thank Senator KENNEDY and his staff and the floor managers and their staff for their assistance with this important matter.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support, urging passage of the Port Security Improvement Act. As an original sponsor of this measure, I am hopeful we will have a full and vigorous debate, but ultimately pass this important legislation for Virginia and America.

The Port of Virginia is a vital part of Virginia's economy, and its security is key to continued economic prosperity of Virginia. Recently, I visited the Norfolk International Terminals to see and receive briefings on what has been implemented to secure our port against terrorism and other illicit activities. Fortunately, the Virginia Port Authority has been proactive in assessing its security needs and implementing plans and infrastructure to meet those requirements. The Port of Virginia is on the leading edge of port security, which will help ensure the flow of commerce, but more importantly will ensure the safety of the American people. The Port of Virginia is an outstanding example for other ports around the country and the Port Security Improvement Act will help move other port facilities in that direction.

Following the September 11 terrorist attacks, our Government logically focused first on protecting the Nation's airports and commercial airlines. In the years since, we have received disturbing predictions and reports on the vulnerability of our Nation's ports. Claims that a nuclear weapon could be smuggled into the U.S. in a container or that a biological or chemical weapon could be disbursed through our port system are grim reminders that must remain vigilant against this threat.

Since 9/11, the Congress and the administration have taken a number of steps to strengthen security at America's ports. We have required advance manifests, so we know what is supposed to be in containers reaching U.S.

shores. Our Government has also negotiated agreements with dozens of countries to allow Customs and Border Protection, CBP, personnel to inspect loaded ships destined for the United States. And we have employed scanning devices at ports around the country to detect radiation emanating from cargo. And while there is often talk that cargo entering the U.S. is not being scanned, the fact is that 70 percent of cargo arriving at U.S. ports is scanned by CBP for radiological material.

These and a number of other initiatives have vastly improved the security at our ports. However given the gravity of the threat from al-Qaida and other terrorist groups, we must continue to take steps to maximize our ability to detect and prevent potential future attacks.

To do so, the Senate Commerce, Homeland Security and Finance Committees have collaborated to craft the Port Security Improvement Act. This legislation outlines the next steps the federal government, port authorities and cargo shippers need to take to protect our country.

The bill provides that the Department of Homeland Security, DHS, develop and implement a plan to deploy radiation detection capabilities to the Nation's 22 busiest ports by 2007. In addition, the measure outlines future requirements to make sure cargo entering the U.S. by various modes of transportation is properly scanned and random physical searches are carried out where appropriate.

In the years since September 11, much has been made about how we guarantee the people entering our ports or working at our ports are not a security threat. Also, many questioned how we make sure credentials to enter ports cannot be duplicated. Our legislation, this bill, the Port Security Improvement Act would implement the Transportation Worker Identification Credential, TWIC, that DHS has been working on for the last few years. TWICs would be required at the 10 busiest ports by 2007 and the next 40 strategic ports by 2008.

Global trade has become the engine of the U.S. and global economy and our ports are the gateways that keep our economy vibrant. We all agree that security of our ports is paramount, but we must also address how new requirements impact the flow of commerce. The Port Security Improvement Act allows DHS to establish a Customs-Trade Partnership Against Terrorism—C-TPAT—program that will allow importers to cooperate with the government to secure their own supply chain. Depending on the level of cooperation and security, importers would receive a lower risk assessment as part of the algorithm DHS uses to determine what cargo requires further inspection. This provides a reasonable choice for importers—if you are as forthcoming as possible and your risk for delay will dramatically decrease, if not, your cargo could be held up to ensure its contents are safe.

We cannot ask State and local officials to fund these security improvements without assistance. However as stewards of the taxpayers, we have an obligation to use their hard-earned money as effectively as possible. Our bill would amend existing law so that future grants are allocated on a risk basis. This is an important change that will ensure we are addressing the areas most likely to come under attack.

We have made real progress in securing our ports in the last few years. And yet we all understand we still must do more to protect the American people. Passing the Port Security Improvement Act is the way to do that. I urge my colleagues to support its passage.

In closing, I would like to thank Chairwoman COLLINS for her steady leadership on this issue. It has been a pleasure working with Senator COLLINS. She has worked diligently to build consensus among all interested parties and has produced a bill that strikes the right balance on security requirements and incentives. Senator COLLINS deserves all our admiration and gratitude for her considerate, outstanding steering of this significant measure that will protect America.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Port Security Improvement Act because our country's ports are vital to our national security, military capability, and economy. Our economy depends on moving goods via our ports and rail. Our security depends on ports that are safe and protected from attacks. We must pass this bill to keep our ports and America safe.

Since 9/11, we have a new world order. We are fighting a global war on terror. Ports are now a high-threat target for terrorism. We need to keep our ports safe from those with predatory intent. Approximately 11 million containers come into the United States each year and 19,000 containers daily. Shippers declare what is inside, but who really knows what is in there. It could be weapons or explosives.

We need to improve our port infrastructure. This means providing personnel training and installing better gates and security cameras. We must also upgrade our technology. We need tamper-proof latches on containers to prevent terrorists from slipping bombs or weapons into a container. Yet Federal aid for port security is Spartan and skimpy. The President provided no funding for port security grants in his budget.

The Port of Baltimore just celebrated its 300th anniversary. The port is a part of me. My great-grandmother came to America through the port of Baltimore. Growing up, the port was part of my life. The longshoremen, truck-drivers and Merchant Marines who worked at the port were my neighbors. They were hard working, patriotic Americans. They shopped at my father's grocery store. I knew the history of the port because it was the history of my community.

The Port of Baltimore is an economic engine for Maryland and America. It creates jobs, including 42,000 maritime-related jobs in Maryland and almost 20,000 direct jobs. The port generates nearly $6 billion a year in salaries and revenues.

I have been fighting to upgrade and protect our Port of Baltimore for more than 20 years. In the beginning, it was fixing the twists and turns in our channels that were a safety risk. Today, it is threats that were unthinkable years ago. Keeping our port and our people safe from terrorism is one of my top priorities. I have fought for more port security funding in Baltimore to upgrade entry gates and perimeter fencing, install new surveillance equipment, and purchase new patrol boats. The Coast Guard estimates that $8 billion is needed to address port security nationwide. Congress needs to listen to the Coast Guard and provide the needed funding to protect our ports.

This bill is good for the Port of Baltimore and America. It would provide $400 million in port security grants when President Bush provided no funds for these grants. Last year, the Port of Baltimore received $1 million in port security grants, but they need $7 million. It needs these funds for surveillance and explosive detection equipment, perimeter security, and computer equipment to collect cargo information. This bill would also install radiation detection equipment at the 22 largest ports in the United States, including Baltimore. It is the 14th largest port for foreign cargo. This equipment is vital to detect dirty bombs and to protect the people of Maryland and the country.

We need to make sure the Port of Baltimore and all ports across America are safe, secure, and growing. The Port of Baltimore is vital to Maryland's future because an investment in the port is an investment in the State's economy. I am proud that this is the 300th anniversary of the port, but we need to make sure that the next generation celebrates the 400th anniversary. Mr. President, it is time to make port security a priority in the Federal law books and the Federal checkbook. I urge passage of this critical and long overdue legislation.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the attached letter from the Supply Chain Security Coalition be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SCS,
September 7, 2006.

Hon. SUSAN COLLINS,
Chairman, Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR COLLINS: We understand that the Senate will take up port security legislation in the very near future. We are writing to express the Supply Chain Security Coalition's support for strong legislation that will improve the security of our ports and the global supply chain, while also ensuring the continued strength and vitality of the U.S. economy. Toward this end, we worked to help pass H.R. 4954, the SAFE Ports Act, which the House of Representatives approved on May 6, 2006 on a vote of 421-2. It is our hope that the Senate legislation will closely mirror those aspects of the House bill that build upon the multi-layered, risk assessment model currently used by the Department of Homeland Security and which have worked to keep our ports safe for the last several years.

However, while we strongly support improving the security of our nation's ports, we will oppose any proposal or amendment that would require all U.S. bound cargo containers to be scanned for radiation and density, so called "100% scanning" amendments. Such amendments would require every container to be scanned in a foreign port before the container is loaded on a vessel destined for the U.S. Such a mandate is unrealistic and could potentially decrease security by forcing containers to sit for extended periods of time, which would then put them at greater risk of tampering. A 100 percent scanning mandate would also divert resources away from the current successful risk assessment approach, which utilizes sophisticated risk-analysis tools to determine which containers may pose a risk and ensures that those containers are handled appropriately. Finally, such a mandate has the potential to significantly impede the flow of commerce. According to the World Shipping Council, when the U.S. Customs and Board Protection Agency (CBP) currently scans questionable cargo, it takes 1-3 days to release that container back into the stream of commerce. With 11 to 12 million containers entering the U.S. every year, it is obvious that a mandate of 100% scanning has the potential to do significant damage to the flow of goods and to the U.S. economy.

Rather than mandating 100% scanning, we believe port security legislation should authorize additional testing and evaluation of scanning technology. Both the "GreenLane Maritime Cargo Security Act" passed by the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee and the House-approved SAFE Ports Act address this issue by calling for pilot projects to test the effectiveness and operational ability to conduct 100 percent container scanning. In addition, the House bill requires the Secretary of Homeland Security to conduct an evaluation of scanning systems, taking into consideration false alarm rates and other operational issues, the impact on trade, the need for international cooperation, and the ability to integrate and deploy these systems overseas. These provisions represent the best approach to addressing this issue and will help to answer important operational and economic questions that will be critical to understanding how to effectively implement improved container scanning.

We also urge the Senate to remember that current security procedures do a great deal to ensure that U.S. bound cargo is safe. The Customs and Border Protection Agency conducts sophisticated analyses of shipment data for all U.S. bound cargo before it is loaded on vessels. This is known as the "24-Hour Rule," and with this information, CBP conducts a risk assessment through its Automated Targeting System to determine which containers pose the highest risk. One hundred percent of containers that are deemed to be "high-risk" are then inspected. In addition, CBP is in the process of deploying Radiation Portal Monitors (RPMs) at all U.S. ports and plans to have close to 100 percent implementation by the end of 2007.

We urge the Senate to pass legislation that builds on this and the other effective procedures that make up the well-established multi-layered risk assessment model used by the Department of Homeland Security (DHS), the Coast Guard, CBP and other government agencies. Congress should outline policies and goals and let DHS find the best and most effective way to meet those goals. Before any technology is mandated, the government should ensure the technology's functionality and application. In addition, government must continue to work with the private sector users of the system to determine the best methods to deploy new technologies in order to achieve maximum results.

We look forward to working with you on improving the public-private partnership to enhance supply chain security. And again, we urge you to oppose any amendment mandating 100% container scanning.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Port Security Improvement Act of 2006.

Imagine this scenario: Shortly after 9 a.m. on a beautiful autumn day, an improvised nuclear device explodes on the National Mall in Washington, DC. Within seconds, the U.S. Capitol and the White House are flattened and a plume of radiation spreads to the surrounding suburbs. Intelligence sources quickly determine that this weapon was smuggled through a United States port in a maritime container. Unfortunately, this horrific scenario is not just a plot for the television show "24"—it is the paramount security challenge facing our Nation and should be our foremost concern.

Many experts believe that a maritime container is the ideal platform to transport nuclear or radiological material or a nuclear device into the United States. As the 9/11 Commission put it so succinctly, "opportunities to do harm are as great, or greater, in maritime or surface transportation." Since 90 percent of global trade moves in maritime containers, we can not allow these containers to be utilized to transport weapons of mass destruction. The consequences of such an event would be devastating to our way of life and our economy.

For instance, the Congressional Budget Office at my request studied the economic consequences of an attack upon the Ports of Los Angeles and Long Beach. CBO found our Nation's gross domestic product would decline by about $150 million per day for each day these two ports are closed, and that the annual cost of closing these ports would escalate to nearly $70 billion. While CBO did not analyze the cost to human life and property of such a terrorist attack, the economic impact of closing the ports could be comparable to both the attacks of 9/11 and Hurricane Katrina. We cannot afford that type of devastation.

Instead, we must secure our supply chain before we pay the high price of an attack and seek the appropriate balance between two often competing priorities: security and speed. Former Customs and Border Protection Commissioner Bonner had the vision to address this grave threat and balance those two priorities after the September 11 attacks. This balancing act resulted in the creation of two prominent homeland security programs—the Container Security Initiative, or CSI, and the Customs-Trade Partnership Against Terrorism, or C-TPAT. CSI effectively pushed our borders out by placing CBP offices in foreign ports to inspect containers before they reach our shores. C-TPAT exemplified a true public-private partnership, in which the private sector took a leading role in securing its supply chain. These programs alone are laudable—but due to the sheer magnitude of the challenge of securing the global supply chain—we must continue to improve upon these promising initiatives.

With that in mind, as chairman of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, I have directed the subcommittee's 3-year effort to bolster America's port security and supply chain security. We have identified numerous weaknesses in our programs that secure the global supply chain. A brief overview of these problems illustrates the challenges confronting these efforts:

In CSI, the subcommittee found that only a de minimus number of such high-risk containers are actually inspected. In fact, the vast majority of high-risk containers are simply not inspected overseas. To make matters worse, the U.S. Government has not established minimum standards for these inspections.

The subcommittee initially found that an overwhelming proportion of C-TPAT companies enjoy the benefits before DHS conducts a thorough on-site inspection, called a validation. As of July 2006 this proportion has improved considerably to where 49 percent of the participating companies have been subjected to a validation. But this still leaves 51 percent of companies that have not been subjected to any legitimate, on-site review to ensure that their security practices pass muster.

The subcommittee found that DHS uses a flawed system to identify high-risk shipping containers entering U.S. ports. According to CBP officials, this system is largely dependent on "one of the least reliable or useful types of information for targeting purposes," including cargo manifest data and bills of lading. Moreover, the subcommittee found that this targeting system has never been tested or validated, and may not discern actual, realistic risks.

Currently, only 70 percent of cargo containers entering U.S. ports are screened for nuclear or radiological materials. One part of the problem is that the deployment of radiation detection equipment is woefully behind schedule. As of August 29, 2006, the Department of Homeland Security has deployed only 43 percent of the necessary radiation monitors at priority seaports.

These are just a handful of the significant problems the Subcommittee discovered. In short, America's supply chain security remains vulnerable to proverbial Trojan Horse—America's enemies could compromise the global supply chain to smuggle a weapon of mass destruction, WMD, or even terrorists, into this country.

This legislation tackles these concerns—and many other weaknesses—head-on.

Here are some highlights of this important legislation:

This bill addresses the problem of inadequate nuclear and radiological screening, by requiring the Secretary of DHS to develop a strategy for deployment of radiation detection capabilities and mandating that, by December 2007, all containers entering the U.S. through the busiest 22 seaports shall be examined for radiation.

The bill will require DHS to develop, implement, and update a strategic plan improve the security of the international cargo supply chain. In particular the plan will identify and address gaps, provide improvements and goals, and establish protocols for the resumption of trade after a critical incident.

Instead of the unreliable data that CBP currently demands to target high-risk containers, DHS would be required to identify and request essential information about containers moving through the international supply chain.

Under this bill, DHS would be required promulgate a rule to establish minimum standards and to procedures for securing containers in transit to the U.S.

The bill provides congressional authorization for the CSI program, empowering CBP to identify, examine or search maritime containers before U.S.-bound cargo is loaded in a foreign port. DHS would establish standards for the use of screening and radiation detection equipment at CSI ports.

Congress also authorizes C-TPAT, the voluntary program that strengthens international supply chain and border security and facilitates the movement of secure cargo. The bill establishes certain minimum security and other requirements that applicants must meet to be eligible for C-TPAT.

As you can see from this brief recap, this bill is wide-ranging and addresses many of the critical problems facing the security of our ports. It is therefore crucial that we pass this important legislation.

Even if we pass this bill, however, our job is not yet done. We still need to look to the future and develop even more effective and advanced programs and technology. Last December, I traveled to Hong Kong to examine the world's largest port. In addition to meeting the impressive CSI team and observing the close relationship between Hong Kong Customs and CBP, I examined a promising screening concept piloted by the association that operates Hong Kong's container terminal. There, containers are screened with both x-ray and radiation detection equipment.

Effectively screening containers with both an x-ray a radiation scan is the only definitive answer to the perplexing and most important question of "what's in the box?" However, in Fiscal Year 2005, only 0.38 percent of containers were screened with a nonintrusive imaging device and only 2.8 percent of containers were screened for radiation prior to entering the United States. DHS' efforts have improved somewhat from last year's paltry numbers, but we have more work to do. To date, DHS still uses a risk-based approach that targets only high-risk containers. While this approach is fundamentally sound, the system used to target high-risk containers has yet to be validated or proven to accurately identify high-risk containers. Moreover, the validity of the intelligence used to enhance this system's targeting ability is increasingly in question. Thus, we need to both enhance our targeting capability and use technology to enhance our ability to increase inspections—without impeding the flow of commerce. I believe the Hong Kong concept holds great promise to achieve this goal of enhancing inspections without impeding commerce.

While the United States currently inspects approximately 5 percent of all maritime containers, the pilot project in the Port of Hong Kong demonstrates the potential to scan 100 percent of all shipping containers. Each container in the Hong Kong port flows through an integrated system featuring an imaging machine, a radiation scan, and a system to identify the container. Coupling these technologies together allows for the most complete scan of a container currently available. The Hong Kong concept or similar technology, which is described in detail in this report, holds great promise and could lead to a dramatic improvement in the efficacy of our supply chain security. These improvements would help ensure that the threat of Trojan horse infiltration by terrorists never becomes a reality.

I am pleased to say that this legislation develops a pilot program in three foreign seaports, each with unique features and varying levels of trade volume to test integrated scanning systems using non-intrusive inspection and radiation detection equipment. It requires full-scale pilot implementation within 1 year after enactment and an evaluation report would be required to be submitted to Congress 120 days after full implementation of the pilot. If the pilot programs prove successful, then full scale implementation would expeditiously follow.

The bottom line is this: we are safer now than we were yesterday, but we are not safe enough. The question then becomes: how do we get there? In the words of the hockey legend Wayne Gretzky, "A good hockey player plays where the puck is. A great hockey player plays where the puck is going to be." In other words, we cannot safeguard a post-9/11 America by using pre-9/11 methods. If we think that the terrorists are not plotting their next move, we are mistaken. We must find where the gaps are in our Nation's homeland security and close them before an attack happens. That is the only way to guarantee our security.

The Port Security Improvement Act of 2006 closes gaps in our homeland security and makes us safer. In closing, I want to say that it has been an honor to work with such a distinguished and bipartisan group of Senators such as Senators STEVENS, COLLINS, GRASSLEY, INOUE, BAUCUS and LIEBERMAN. This legislation is cogent and will be effective because of the knowledge and experience of this group of Senators. I am proud to be an original sponsor of this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a Washington Post editorial dated June 1, 2006, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, June 1, 2006]

THE RIGHT KIND OF SECURITY

It was the Dubai port uproar that didn't roar: When a House committee voted this spring against an amendment that would have required all cargo containers bound for this country to be individually inspected in their ports of origin, Congress temporarily put to rest what could have been yet another hyped-up wave of politically motivated anxiety about American port security. Although the House later passed a bill that provides extra funding for nuclear screening and other measures, Democrats vowed to bring up the inspection issue again—and ran advertisements around the country attacking Republicans who oppose it. Before the “inspect every container” mantra becomes a national war cry, it's important to point out that this is a terrible idea.

Someday, perhaps, advanced X-ray technology may be developed to the point where it's possible to beam a scanner at each one of the 11 million U.S.-bound containers at every port in the world and obtain an instant assessment of what's inside. But while some promising technologies are available, none is perfect, and all of them require a human being to analyze the scans. This not only takes time but also presumes the existence of thousands of trained scan readers around the world. In the absence of such workers, U.S. port and customs authorities examine information about each container—where it's coming from, which shipping company is carrying it—and determine whether it is risky enough to merit inspection, either here or abroad. In practice, this results in inspections of about 5 percent of all containers. Even now, U.S. customs officers must rely on the cooperation of foreign authorities to carry out this many inspections.

Homeland security officials could do more. Only about half of incoming containers are subjected to a radiation scan, a number that should rapidly be brought up to 100 percent, as the new House bill requires. Ports are also vulnerable because drivers and dockworkers are not thoroughly screened. Raising the number of U.S. inspectors in foreign ports could also make the inspection system safer. But “inspect 100 percent of containers” is a slogan, not a solution, and we hope lawmakers resist the temptation to use it in the election season to come.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the port security bill being considered before the Senate. This legislation is of particular importance to my home State of California, and I am deeply grateful to Senators COLLINS and MURRAY and all the others who have worked so diligently to craft this comprehensive and bipartisan effort to better protect our Nation's ports.

It is no secret that I have long considered security at our Nation's ports to be a significant hole in homeland security. The global maritime supply chain system is a vast network consisting of hundreds of ports worldwide moving millions of containers each year, and frankly I don't believe this Nation has done nearly enough since 9/11 to improve the security of our ports.

As has been repeated many times on this floor, only 5 percent of containers entering the country are inspected, meaning that millions of tons of cargo move through our ports without serious scrutiny.

With its long coastline, California is vulnerable. My home State receives containers from more than 750 different ports worldwide and is home to the Ports of Los Angeles and Long Beach, which is the busiest container port complex in the entire United States, processing 7.2 million containers in 2005.

To highlight the risk we face, I cite a Rand Corporation report released last month. If a 10-kiloton nuclear bomb, hidden in a shipping container, were to explode at the Port of Long Beach, it could kill 60,000 people instantly, expose another 150,000 to hazardous levels of radiation, and cause $1 trillion in economic losses.

Needless to say, this is an issue of great importance to my constituents and the economic welfare of the State. I believe strongly that the need for action to better protect our ports is essential and it must happen now.

I am glad to say that this port security measure takes a number of critical steps toward filling the gaps in security at our Nation's ports.

This legislation directs the Department of Homeland Security to work with State and local governments to create a strategic plan to secure our ports and prepare for a swift resumption of trade in the event of an attack. We learned by devastating experience during Hurricane Katrina what happens when Federal, State, and local governments do not have an integrated plan for responding to and recovering from a catastrophic event.

The bill authorizes $400 million in competitive grants to help ports address security vulnerabilities, $1.2 billion for rail security improvements, and $3.4 billion for mass transit security.

In addition, 1,000 more Customs and Border Protection agents will be patrolling our Nation's ports of entry thanks to this legislation.

But despite the advances of this legislation, there still remains much work to do.

We cannot stop until all containers are fully scanned for radiation and by other means including full x-rays of all containers. It was a disappointment that amendments to initiate a plan for 100 percent scanning were rejected this week.

In fact, this bill does nothing substantive to increase the number of containers inspected before reaching our shores. It is clear to me that only inspecting 5 percent of containers is unacceptable.

Moving forward, a clear test of this Congress will come when the time arrives to appropriate funds for many of the programs authorized in this bill, including grants for port security. To tell the truth, much of what is accomplished will be for naught if we don't provide the funds necessary to get the job done.

As a member of the Appropriations Committee, I plan to do whatever I can to make these funds available. They are simply too important to my State and too important to this Nation.

Again, I thank my colleagues for their efforts on this bill and express my hope that we can continue to work towards filling the gaps in security at our ports.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, passage of this vital port security legislation is a tremendous achievement, and I wish to extend thanks to my hard-working staff members, Jason Yanussi and Josh Levy—as well as the staff of all the involved committees—for all their effort to bring this legislation to fruition.

VISIT TO THE SENATE BY A MEMBER OF THE LEBANESE PARLIAMENT

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I want to announce to the Senate that we have a visiting Member of Lebanon's Parliament, Mr. Misbah Ahdab, if any Senators would like to come by and say hello.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, we are on the verge of passing major port security legislation that will provide the structures and resources needed to better protect the American people from attack through seaports that are both vulnerable points of entry and vital centers of economic activity.

I wish to thank all those who have been involved in this effort: the ranking member of the Homeland Security Committee, Senator LIEBERMAN; the Commerce Committee chairman and ranking member; Senator GRASSLEY and Senator BAUCUS on the Finance Committee. Most of all, I thank Senator PATTY MURRAY, who has been my partner in the port security legislation from conception to this day. It has been a great honor and pleasure to work with her.

I have a list of the hard-working staff, my staff on the Homeland Security Committee, who have worked on this issue. I ask unanimous consent that a list of their names be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PORT SECURITY TEAM

Rob Strayer, Mark Winter, Jon Nass, Allison Boyd, Amy Hall, Melvin Albritton, Mark

LeDuc, Jane Alonso, Ann Fisher, John Grant, Asha Mathews, Kurt Schmautz, Jay Maroney, Amanda Wood, Jennifer Hemingway, Sarah Taylor, Brooke Hayes, Kate Alford, Amanda Hill, Priscilla Hanley, Monica Wickey, and Tom Bishop.

Detailees: Steve Midas, Coast Guard; Jennifer Boone, FBI; and Mike Moncibaiz, CBP.

Ms. COLLINS. I see our colleagues are eager to vote, so I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks time? The Senator from Hawaii?

Mr. INOUE. Mr. President, this is a bipartisan measure. I am proud to support this bill. I believe all that has to be said has been said. But I would like to thank those on our side who have been helpful: Dabney Hegg and her baby, Sam Whitehorn, Lila Helms, Gael Sullivan, Stephen Gardner, James Assey, and Margaret Cummsky. Without their help, we would still be here.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I add my voice to all Senators who in a bipartisan way have helped move this bill forward.

They say that "success has a thousand authors"—and that is certainly true in the 5 years I have been working on port security.

First, I thank my partner, Senator COLLINS. Last May, I sought out Senator COLLINS because I knew she cared about port security. She had worked on it at the Homeland Security Committee and she had the knowledge and leadership to help us reach this milestone. She has been a steadfast partner every day of the past 16 months that we have worked together, and I commend her and thank her.

Senators LIEBERMAN and COLEMAN were right there with us shaping this bill in the early days and helping us move it forward.

I thank Senator STEVENS and Senator INOUE at the Commerce Committee for their hard work, leadership, and passion.

I thank Senators GRASSLEY and BAUCUS for working with us on this bill.

I thank both of our leaders—for setting aside time so we could debate the bill.

I thank all the leaders from the maritime community who have shared their ideas and expertise with me—Mic Dinsmore, Henry Yates, and Rod Hilden at the Port of Seattle; Tim Farrell, Mike Zachary, and Julie Collins at the Port of Tacoma; and also leaders at the ports of New York/New Jersey, Los Angeles, Long Beach, Charleston, Miami, and MassPort in Boston.

I want to thank security experts, especially Admiral James Loy and Dr. Stephen Flynn, for their thoughtful input on our bill.

Finally, there are a number of staff members who helped shape this bill.

Brian White—who now runs Cargo Security Policy at DHS, and Michel Bobb—who is at OMB—provided critical help.

I thank the outstanding floor staff on each side and staff from various committees who spent long hours all week working to make this bill better.

Thank you especially to: Dabney Hegg, Sam Whitehorn, Ray Shepherd, Jason Yanussi, and Ken Nahigian.

Finally, from my own staff, Jason Park and Lesley Turner have been at my side here on the floor along with Mike Spahn.

And I additionally thank Rick Desimone, Alex Glass, Pete Weissman and Matt McAlvanah from my staff.

I say to my colleagues, we are making a significant step forward in a bipartisan way this evening to finally make a difference on security in this country. I want to tell the country we still have a ways to go in getting it to conference, which I know will occur shortly, and to the President's desk, hopefully in a short amount of time as well. But I will tell you this: America can sleep better because this Congress worked together, and I thank all my colleagues.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader.

Mr. REID. I wish to express my appreciation to all the managers and particularly Senator MURRAY, who has worked so hard, working with these amendments through the last few days. We always say nice things about Senator INOUE, so that is nothing new. Senator MURRAY is a wonderful legislator who does such a great job.

We look forward to going to conference. We are going to do our very best to get a conference as soon as we can. It is not easy. We have multiple committees of jurisdiction. I talked with Senator SARBANES earlier today. Even Banking is now interested in being on the conference. We are going to do our best to work something out in the near future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, securing our ports is vital to our economy. More than 11 million cargo containers enter our country every day, and waterborne cargo contributes more than $742 billion to the U.S. gross domestic product. But our ports are not isolated commercial operations. Our waterways and ports are linked to 152,000 miles of railway, 460,000 miles of underground pipelines, and 40,000 miles of interstate highways. The bill the Senate will pass today not only strengthens security at our land and seaports, it addresses trucking, railroad, and pipeline security. I believe this is the most comprehensive approach to border security we have taken to date. The provisions of this bill will help ensure the safety of our Nation, our cities, and our system of commerce.

Mr. President, the passage of this port security legislation by the Senate today will mark the end of a long Senate bipartisan, 3-committee process of which we all may be proud. The Commerce, Homeland, and Finance Committees have tremendous knowledge about our ports and the programs which protect and secure the international supply chain. It is a credit to this Senate that each committee agreed to pool their resources, put aside jurisdictional issues, and develop a strong and comprehensive piece of legislation.

I thank Senator COLLINS for her steadfast dedication to this bill, as well as Senators MURRAY, LIEBERMAN, GRASSLEY, BAUCUS, and COLEMAN. And I particularly thank my great friend and Commerce Committee cochairman, Senator INOUE, for his lasting commitment to securing our Nation's ports.

As I said, securing our ports is vital to our economy. More than 11 million cargo containers enter our country every day, and waterborne cargo contributes more than $742 billion to the U.S. gross domestic product.

But our ports are not isolated commercial operations. Our waterways and ports link to 152,000 miles of railways, 460,000 miles of underground pipelines, and 45,000 miles of interstate highways. The bill the Senate will pass today not only strengthens security at our land and seaports; it addresses trucking, railroad, and pipeline security. I believe this is the most comprehensive approach to border security we have taken to date. The provisions in this bill will help ensure the safety of our Nation, our citizens, and our system of commerce.

This bill enhances current programs designed to gather and analyze information about cargo destined for U.S. ports, and significantly expands on the current program for randomly scanning containers. This bill moves us toward 100 percent scanning of all cargo containers entering our country once the process becomes feasible.

This bill is essential to the security of our Nation. It is my hope that the House and Senate will make this a priority and get it to the President soon.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a list of the dedicated staff who worked so hard with all of us, and I yield the remainder of our time.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SAFE PORT ACT

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I congratulate my colleague from Maine on an excellent accomplishment, a huge vote on an important piece of legislation. It is critical. A number of colleagues, the Senator from Wyoming and others on both sides of the aisle, did so much good work on this legislation.

DARFUR

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I will not take my colleagues' time for long, but I draw attention to a situation that has further developed—or devolved and deteriorated—and that is the situation in Darfur. It is a situation this Senate has spoken to often. We have spoken on resolutions, on amendments; we have added funds.

What we have feared is now upon us. We are now seeing in the IDP camps, the individuals that are displaced internally, diseases such as asthma, malaria, cholera and dysentery. We have had 12 humanitarian workers killed in the last 2 months. That is driving a number of the humanitarian groups out of the region. The NGO, the non-government organizations, currently now serve only 60 percent of the people they were serving. The Government of Sudan has reportedly resumed aerial bombings taking place in the northern and southern parts of Darfur.

The situation is growing worse. We don't know how many people have died already, but it is set to escalate rapidly. NGOs are fleeing because people are getting killed. The people are concentrated in the camps. They are now not getting food and clean water.

Now we have cholera, more misery, malaria and the numbers of people getting killed escalating dramatically. It is going to escalate further and more dramatically if we do not act.

We have the government in Khartoum saying they want the African Union troops out.

We do not have a big enough force there now. They are scheduled to leave the end of September. We have a United Nations group that is forming to go in, and the government in Khartoum, Sudan, is saying, We are not going to let them in.

We have African Union troops preparing to leave. We have the U.N. troops not yet prepared to come in or being allowed in. And we have chaos. There are a lot of people dying in this region. It is escalating. It is time we step up and push again.

This Senate has been excellent on this issue. The administration has been very good. I cite particularly Assistant Secretary Zoellick who spent a lot of time working on this issue, trying to bring people together, getting a peace agreement signed a couple of months ago. It was an important peace agreement.

The problem that has taken place now, after the peace agreement was signed, the African Union troops were starting to organize to pull out, the government of President al-Bashir in the Sudan decided: This is our time to take over because the rest of the world is looking at Lebanon, they are dealing with Hezbollah, the United States is focused on its election cycle. This is the time for us to move.

This is a very difficult, dire situation for people on the ground. I met with a number of the aid organizations today. Their people are getting killed, so they are pulling back, as I cited.

When this situation first started developing about 3 years ago, the very situation we are most concerned about is a lot of people getting into the displaced camps, not having access to clean water, disease spreading in the camps, spreading because of the concentration of individuals and the lack of sanitation and clean water, and we really get a mess. That is now where we are.

Mrs. BOXER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWNBACK. Yes.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank Senator BROWNBACK for raising this issue. We are in a do-or-die moment. We have been there before. I am reading that certain experts are saying in 2 weeks there could be another Rwanda.

I am very glad the Senator is speaking out. I was very glad this Senate did act, as we know, on a measure last week, actually voting to send $20 million to the African nations to carry on, as my friend points out. If they do not do it, there is a void. What will fill the void will be disease, rapes, killings and, I hate to say it, continued genocide.

I am glad the Senator raised this. The hours are running short. We did vote. It is important we use our bully pulpit in whatever way we can. I personally will be going to the United Nations on Monday literally to knock on doors. I am setting up some appointments. We have to do everything we can to prevent this worsening situation from getting to the point where it is unsalvageable.

I thank the Senator for his efforts.

Mr. BROWNBACK. I thank my colleague for her interest. I wish her Godspeed in New York with the U.N.

My colleague in Connecticut will address this same topic. It is very important to speak. We need to pass the Darfur Accountability Act. It has passed here and in the House. We need to resolve the issues.

It is important that the President, in his meetings at the U.N. for General Assembly meetings, raise this issue. It is important to press the Sudanese Government to stop the aerial bombings—they can do that first and foremost—and that the African Union forces stay until a U.N. force is put in place, we pressure the Sudanese Government to accept a U.N. force, or, if not, put in targeted sanctions toward Sudanese officials preventing traveling, dealing with their own personal accounts.

There are a series of recommendations of a number of Senators addressed in a letter to the President. It is a bipartisan effort. It is a genocide already. It is one that is set to become a far worse situation.

We really need to act.

I yield to the floor to the set of speakers listed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I join my colleague from California in thanking Senator BROWNBACK for bringing this issue forward. He has been a tremendous supporter of taking action. He brings to light, tonight, the fact we have to act and we have to act expeditiously.

As the situation deteriorates, unfortunately, it moves closer toward a situation that we can do nothing about. I appreciate all of the Senator's efforts in what he is doing for the people of Darfur.

RURAL AMERICA MONTH

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I was so pleased this week as the daughter of a seventh generation Arkansas farm family from rural eastern Arkansas, and it is with a tremendous amount of pride I come to the Senate today to applaud the passage of Senate Resolution 561 which designates September of 2006 as Rural America Month. I was pleased to introduce this resolution last week with Senator REID, Senator FRIST, and many of my colleagues.

Rural America means a tremendous amount to this Nation. It is the place where our values oftentimes begin and grow. We send people from rural America not just to the big cities of America, but all across the globe to exhibit those American values that grow and begin in rural America.

My values and my world view are directly tied to how I was raised in a small town in Helena, AR, on the Mississippi River. My upbringing gave me a deep and abiding love for the rural way of life. In rural America, you learn that in order to have good neighbors, you have to be a good neighbor. Importantly, you learn by the example set for members of the community.

Growing up, I lived within walking distance from both sets of my grandparents. I learned what it meant to be a caregiver. At the age of 14 I learned from my grandparents. I learned values, I learned stories of World War I and the experiences they had during the Depression and so many other things that I captured from a real perspective—not from a textbook.

My mother would prepare dinner for our family every night, but very often she and my aunt would go back and forth and prepare a little bit extra every other night. It was my duty and my cousin's duty to take that dinner up to my grandparents and spend time with them, valuable time, where we would make them feel better, to share part of our day and they could share a story with us. I didn't realize at that age what caregiving was all about. I do now.

Being a good neighbor is something that comes easily for rural Americans. It is taught early in life. I am proud to have had the opportunity to learn that lesson by example. I see it as a model that can be applied outside the family, outside the neighborhood and to so many relationships that we, as people of a global community, have around the world, when we listen to the comments of Senator BROWNBACK and Senator BOXER talking about our neighbors across the globe and what that means to us, what our responsibility is as a global neighbor to those people in such need of protection, of sustenance of life, of education, and the ability to build for themselves a life of independence.

My love for the rural way of life I grew up in, the values it taught me, is what drives me to want to strengthen and support rural communities all over our country. With the passage of this resolution this week, the Senate has formally acknowledged the invaluable contribution that rural America makes to our country.

The experiences in my life have shown me firsthand that the more than 55 million people residing in rural America are the embodiment of the values that make our country great: community, service, hard work, family, responsibility.

Rural America provides significant contributions to our Nation, such as the safest, most abundant and affordable food supply in the world, as well as the renewable sources of energy with the potential to significantly reduce our country's dangerous dependency on foreign oil, not to mention what we could do for our environment.

Americans residing in rural areas have also made a considerable contribution to our country's freedom. Rural Americans comprise a sizable percentage of our reserve, military force abroad and the highest concentration of military veterans live in rural communities.

Additionally, police officers, volunteer firefighters, EMTs or National Guardsmen, and members of our rural communities come together in times of national emergencies to keep our country safe. I am certainly reminded of the proud, strong, courageous firefighters, Guardsmen, ambulance drivers, and so many more that responded from Arkansas to New York during September 11 and to Louisiana during Katrina and the entire gulf coast.

I am proud of my heritage in rural America. I am pleased the Senate has acknowledged we owe rural America a considerable debt of gratitude. Rural America is critical to this Nation.

I look forward to working with my colleagues to address the challenges and the obstacles that rural America faces so all in rural America can enjoy every blessing and opportunity that our Nation has to offer.

I commend my colleagues for joining me in this special effort. I want to especially commend our leader, minority leader HARRY REID, who grew up in Searchlight, NV, who knows and understands the mentality, the values, and really has a tremendous passion for those people in rural America. I am proud to have joined he and Senator FRIST and others in bringing this resolution forward.

TRIBUTE TO ANN RICHARDS

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I also come to the floor today to pay tribute to one of the most important and unique individuals in the history of American politics, Governor Ann Richards.

As a female politician from the South, Ann Richards was a person who I considered to be a role model. She was a great American patriot who had overcome tremendous obstacles to become a valued public servant while blazing a trail for aspiring female politicians, with wit, style, and grace like no one else could produce.

I consider it my good fortune to have come to know her over the years as a friend. While I am deeply saddened by her passing, it is so difficult not to smile whenever I think of Ann. She was remarkably gifted at using her keen sense of humor to say exactly what was on her mind and to get her point across in an effective and quotable way, proving she was truly one of a kind.

Ann Richards became the first woman elected to statewide office in Texas in more than 50 years—winning a seat as treasurer in 1982. In 1990, she became the first female to be elected Governor of the State of Texas.

As Governor, she took pride in the fact that she appointed more women and minorities to State positions than any of her predecessors. During her tenure, the Texas economy enjoyed growth, despite the trend of the slumping U.S. economy.

Additionally, her audits of the State bureaucracy saved Texans $6 billion, and her reform of the State prison system resulted in fewer violent offenders being released.

Perhaps her most remarkable achievement was maintaining the respect and admiration of Texans in the midst of not being reelected to office. The poll numbers of her popularity remained above 60 percent at that time.

Ann has been noted as saying that she did not want her tombstone to read, "She kept a really clean house," but, instead, preferred to be remembered by it reading, "She opened government to everyone."

Ann Richards will certainly be remembered as doing much more than keeping a clean house. She opened a door for me as a female politician in the South, and I know I speak for so many when I say that she continues to have my respect and my admiration.

She will certainly be dearly missed by this Senator and so many, many more across this Nation.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I yield to my colleague from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, first of all, let me thank our colleague from Arkansas for her eloquent comments both about rural America as well as on our wonderful friend, Ann Richards. I want to add my voice of condolence to her family and friends, not only in Texas but across this great country of ours, because she had friends that reached all across this land of ours—in fact, beyond the shores of the United States in her work after she left public life, working in the private sector as a great representative of a number of interests, including some that were offshore.

She was a remarkable person, and Senator BLANCHE LINCOLN has captured her very, very well. There are so many things I remember about her. She was a strong-willed woman. She had definite and clear views, and she was not shy about expressing them to you. But she probably had one of the best senses of humor of anyone I ever met in American politics. She could make you laugh. She could take a situation and bring up an anecdote or a story to make her point that would bring the house down.

Regardless of your point of view, Ann Richards had a gift to communicate with the American public like few other people I have ever met in public life. And it was a gift because she did so many good things with her talents.

Both as the State Treasurer of Texas and as Governor of that State, I got to know her very well, when I was the general chairman of the Democratic National Committee. She was a tremendous source of help to me in those years of 1995 and 1996 when I was campaigning and supporting Democrats across the country.

But her politics transcended partisan politics. She was beloved and admired and cared for by people of all political stripes and colors in this country. She will be sorely missed. But as Senator LINCOLN said, the memories of her are going to linger on for an awful long time. Every time you mention her name, a smile comes to your face because she brought many smiles many times on the countless occasions I heard her address audiences across the country.

I thank Senator LINCOLN and others who have spoken about her. I do not have prepared remarks, but I just wanted to express my feelings about this wonderful person.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, today we mourn the loss of a great Texan and certainly a trailblazer in our State. Former Governor Ann Richards passed away last night after a long battle with cancer. Today, I want to pay tribute to her because she really made a mark on our State and our Nation.

Ann Richards was the second woman to hold office in Texas as Governor and the first to be elected in her own right. When she was Governor of Texas, I was State treasurer, and we certainly had a very strong and positive working relationship. She embodied the Texas spirit as well as anyone I have ever known, and her enthusiasm for life was evident in everything she did.

I didn't agree with her on issues—sometimes I did and sometimes I didn't—but you could always respect her because she spoke straight. She told you what she could do and she told you what she couldn't do. She gave some pretty good advice along the way.

She could have chosen another career—that of entertainer—and been quite successful. She was one of the best. But instead, she chose politics—and she chose to try to make a difference in government, in our State and Nation. She was successful at that as well.

Ann Richards was born on September 1, 1933 in Lakeview, TX, very near Waco. She did grow up in Waco.

She graduated from Baylor University in 1954. She attended on a debate scholarship.

She was the mother to four children and the grandmother to eight.

One of the things she will always be remembered for is how she tried to bring women into public office—and certainly to the table—to make sure that women were represented well.

I was so struck with her after she lost the Governor's race. She, of course, lost the Governor's race the second time she ran against Governor George Bush, who became President George Bush. But I think it was the way she handled the loss that showed the real spirit that she had. She just turned the page and kept right on going.

She had a career in New York and never gave up her home in Texas. But she took New York by storm too. She was a commentator on television, always with the witty saying that people would remember.

I remember after she left the Governor's office, I was in Istanbul, Turkey. I walked into one of the markets there, and who did I see looking at rugs but Ann Richards. She was having the best time. Whatever she was doing at the time was her total absorption. She was finding out everything about those rugs.

I saw her sometimes up here in Washington when we would be working on something that would be for Texas where we would agree. She would take her side and I would take my side, working for the same cause but trying to make sure that we covered all of our respective bases.

I knew, of course, that she had cancer. I wrote her a note after the diagnosis became public.

She wrote me a note back. It was vintage Ann Richards. It was: This is just one thing you get through in life, and I'm going to get through it. She was very upbeat, very positive, just the way she would always be, tackling the task of the moment and doing it with gusto.

I did not know she was so near the end. I was sorry that it came so quickly. She will be someone whom no Texan who has ever known her or who has lived in Texas during her service will ever forget. I want to make sure the tributes to her are worthy of the contribution she made.

I yield the floor.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I join with my distinguished colleague from Texas in expressing condolences to the bereaved family, the State of Nevada, the Democrats in the Senate and America, for the loss of Ann Richards.

She was my friend. She came to Nevada whenever I asked her to. Why did I ask her to come? Because she was entertainment plus. She was always good for a stunning speech, a stirring speech.

For those who had the good fortune this morning to listen to Public Radio, what a wonderful piece they had on Ann Richards, the many funny things she did in Texas to change the ways of Texas. She modernized Texas.

We will all miss her. It is a loss for all Americans. We are comforted to know that Ann departed this world in high spirits and humor, just as she would expect us to continue our lives.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to the life and legacy of a truly remarkable woman—Governor Ann Richards. She will long be remembered and loved for her tireless activism, her charisma and compassion, and her excellence in governance. I will also remember her as a friend and a trailblazer. Ann Richards showed women that anything and everything was possible.

Ann Richards was an original. Yet her life was the American dream. She was born in Lacy-Lakeview, TX, to her loving parents Robert Cecil Willis and Mildred Iona Warren. As a young woman, she took an early interest in politics and participated in Girls State, a youth leadership and citizenship program for high school students. She later studied at Baylor University on a debate scholarship. After earning her teaching certificate at the University of Texas, she began her remarkable career of public service as a junior high school teacher.

Governor Richards became known as an effective advocate and an accomplished political leader. In 1976, Governor Richards successfully ran for commissioner of Travis County, the same year I won my seat in the House of Representatives. She held this post until 1982, when she was elected State Treasurer—the first woman elected to a statewide office in Texas in over 50 years. In 1991, when I was the only female Democratic Senator, Ann Richards became one of the few female Governors in the country. We showed that—together—women can make change.

As Governor of Texas, Ann Richards spearheaded an economic revitalization program that expanded Texas' economy during a nationwide recession, and also led an effort to expand State funding of public schools. In 1988, she charmed the Nation with her witty, passionate remarks as the keynote speaker at the Democratic National Convention.

People have called Ann quick-witted and feisty. Well, I happen to like feisty people. She stood up for what she believed in. She fought for what she felt was right. And she made a difference. She served her Nation and she served her State.

Governor Richards' death is a tragedy but her life was a triumph. I offer my heartfelt condolences to Governor Richards' children, who were at her bedside when she passed, to her friends, and to all those whose lives she touched. She and her family are in my thoughts and prayers at this very sad time.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I was saddened to learn that my friend Ann Richards passed away last night after a courageous battle with cancer. She was a wonderful person and an outstanding public servant, and she will be missed.

Ann brought delight, excitement, ability, and compassion to public life, and she was an American original. To her public service was a calling, and she dedicated herself wholeheartedly to the goal of building a better future for all Americans, regardless of income, race, or gender.

She was a trailblazer in many ways, and she was also one of the last great American characters in politics, someone who projected joy and optimism even in the face of adversity. None of us who were there will ever forget her brilliant keynote address to the Democratic National Convention in 1988. She was truly one of a kind.

As Governor of Texas, she fought hard for equal opportunity, appointing more African Americans, Hispanics, and women to State office than the previous two Governors combined.

She used her skill and wit to help pass vital legislation in Congress too. I will never forget her hard work on the Civil Rights Act of 1991, the Family and Medical Leave Act, the Violence Against Women Act, and the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act.

There will never be another Ann Richards, and we will never forget her.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President yesterday, we lost a great political great woman with an incredibly energy who helped to change the attitude of Texas politics.

Ann Richards was born in Lakeview, TX, in 1933. She died yesterday, September 13, in Austin, TX, at the age of 73.

She battled cancer in the last months of her life, being diagnosed with esophageal cancer in March and undergoing chemotherapy treatments.

I would like to extend my deepest sympathy to her four children—Cecile, Daniel, Clark and Ellen—who were with her when she passed away.

Ann Richards was a homemaker and teacher before beginning her political career as a county commissioner in Travis county, TX, in 1976. Six years later, in 1982, she ran for State treasurer and won. She was reelected in 1986. Winning the office of Texas State treasurer made her the first woman elected statewide in nearly 50 years.

Like so many female politicians of our time, running for office in a male-dominated political environment took courage and determination. But Ann didn't take on these challenges only to prove that she was a worthy candidate. She wanted to show Texas, and the Nation, that all women could succeed in the same way that men had for many years. She blazed a trail for women, in politics and in life.

Two years later, in 1990, Ann Richards narrowly won the election to Governor, winning by a margin of 49 to 47 percent. Again, she fought a tough campaign battle against a male opponent. But with her fierce determination, she came out on top.

During her 4 years in the Governor's office, Ann Richards made a strong effect, championing what she referred to as the "New Texas."

As Governor, Ann Richards promoted women and minorities who historically were ignored in Texas politics; reformed the Texas prison system; backed proposals to reduce the sale of semiautomatic firearms and "cop-killer" bullets in the State; instituted the Texas State lottery to provide funding for education; revitalized the State's economy; and worked to protect the environment, particularly with a veto of legislation that would have allowed for the destruction of the Edwards Aquifer in south central Texas.

She was defeated in her 1994 reelection campaign by George W. Bush.

Near the end of her term as Governor, Ann Richards said: "I think I'd like them to remember me by saying, 'She opened government to everyone.'"

She was a popular figure in Texas politics, known for her white head of hair and her great sense of humor.

And she was daring, on the political stage and off. At the age of 60, she learned to ride a motorcycle.

Ann Richards will be missed. For her charisma, for her integrity, and for her honesty.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I rise today with a heavy heart, to pay tribute to a remarkable woman and patriot, Ann Richards.

There are so many words that I could use to describe Ann. She was vibrant, fiery, quick-witted, fearless, but for me the word that I think captures her best is genuine.

With Ann, what you saw was what you got. She had an authenticity that is rare in life, and even rarer in politics.

Even with all of her charisma and charm bubbling over, Ann would be the first to tell you that her life was not perfect and that she had made many mistakes over the years. But it was her embrace of those imperfections, and the wisdom to see that she could learn from her mistakes, that made her such a successful leader. People could relate to her.

When she won the Governor's office in 1990, Ann decided she really wanted to shake things up in Texas. So she made it her mission to appoint more minorities to State boards and commissions than any Governor before her.

According to the Houston Chronicle, about 44 percent of her appointees were female; 20 percent Hispanic; and 14 percent Black. That is in comparison to her two predecessors, who had given more than 77 percent of their appointments to White men.

So not only did Ann blaze a trail by being the first woman elected Governor of Texas in her own right, but she opened the doors of the State house to those who otherwise would have been in the back of the line.

Why? Because she understood that you can't just talk the talk, you've got to walk the walk. She knew that change was a good thing, even if it made people squirm in their boots.

There are a lot of people talking today about what a tremendous loss this is for Texas. I heard our President, George W. Bush say that, "Ann loved Texas. And Texans loved her." But I have to take that one step further and say, Ann loved America, and Americans loved Ann. She barreled her way into our hearts, and for that we have been made all the richer.

I would like to offer my sincere condolences to Ann's children: Cecile, Daniel, Clark and Ellen, her eight grandchildren, and all those who knew and loved her. She will be sorely missed, but I am sure, always remembered.

DARFUR

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I want to spend a couple minutes talking about Darfur as well. I know my colleague from Kansas addressed this issue. I know my colleague, Senator DURBIN, as well, has been working on this issue for a long time. Many of us have been watching this situation. Senator BARACK OBAMA, I know, cares about this issue. And many members of the Foreign Relations Committee have talked about it. We heard Senator BOXER, a moment ago, talk about her deep concern.

There is a tremendous amount of interest about what is happening and great concern. It is the moral responsibility of nations around the globe to help end the genocide in Darfur.

Even as we speak here this afternoon, in the closing days of this week's work, we are moving backwards in Sudan. Earlier this week, U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan sounded the warning that Darfur is about to enter a new phase of needless bloodshed and suffering on a catastrophic scale. I do not think we ought to let this happen. It is not just our responsibility but certainly the United States should and can take a leadership role here in marshaling the forces to stop the events as they unfold to these poor, poor people who are caught in this dreadful situation.

The blame lies squarely, of course, first and foremost, with the Sudanese Government's intransigence and murderous Darfur policy. Since February of 2003, when rebel groups attacked government outposts, the Sudanese Government has used the janjaweed militia to systematically decimate tribal groups of African descent in Darfur.

The warfare has exacted a tragic toll. Men, women, and children have been slaughtered in front of their families. Women and girls are regularly raped.

Entire villages are routinely destroyed and property looted by marauding militias.

Estimates suggest that the conflict in Darfur has killed as many as 300,000 people and driven 2.5 million people out of their homes. The United States has rightly labeled the Sudanese Government's actions "genocide."

I remember, with great clarity, former Secretary of State Colin Powell appearing before a Senate committee on which I served calling the actions in Darfur genocide, loudly and clearly. And I commend him for it. He was one of the earliest voices to do so. We know what the word "genocide" means and its full ramifications.

Yet there was a glimmer of hope for the violence to end in May of this year with the conclusion of a peace agreement brokered in large part by the United States. The agreement called for a cessation of hostilities between the Sudanese Government and one of three major rebel groups in Darfur.

But it is time to face the facts in Darfur. The peace is over. In fact, it never really had a chance. Hostilities between the government and the other two rebel groups never ended and are heating up again fast in that part of the world. Thousands of Sudanese troops are massing for a fresh offensive against rebel groups. The International Rescue Committee has noted an upswing in sexual violence around refugee camps.

Meanwhile, from the very beginning, the Sudanese Government has thrown up obstacle after obstacle after obstacle in the path of the African Union peacekeeping mission in Darfur.

A New York Times report earlier this week describes these obstacles and the mission's lack of funding and authority in Darfur. A telling example is that every evening, the African Union soldiers have to turn over control of the main military airstrip in Darfur to government troops. These troops steal jet fuel from the mission and use the strip to launch attack helicopters while the African Union troops stand by helplessly. Sudanese officials have also managed to reduce the mission's already limited patrols and humanitarian efforts in Darfur.

The mission's courageous yet failing efforts to maintain the peace led the United Nations to issue Security Council Resolution 1706 on August 31 of this year. This resolution calls for the deployment of a more robust, 20,000-strong U.N. peacekeeping force.

Yet precisely because such a U.N. force would have teeth, Sudan's President has rejected it on the grounds of sovereignty. This is a flimsy excuse. There are nearly 10,000 U.N. troops stationed in southern Sudan to maintain a separate peace agreement. And now the Sudanese Government has asked African Union troops to leave by September 30—a few short days from today—when the mission's mandate expires, unless they are able to raise additional funds.

It is all too clear that the Sudanese Government is not interested in peace in Darfur. And why should it be? Sudan has friends like Russia and China who place a far greater premium in their commercial interests in the Sudan rather than on their responsibility to stop this genocide. In 2005, China purchased more than half of Sudan's oil exports, and is one of its largest suppliers of arms. Both countries, Russia and China, abstained in the most recent vote on deploying U.N. troops. They continued to give political cover to the Sudanese Government.

Yet it is also clear that the United States and the international community have a responsibility to protect and prevent genocide in Darfur. The world's heads of state affirmed this precise commitment last September as part of the Outcome Document of the High-level Plenary Meeting of the United Nations General Assembly. The document calls on the international community to protect people from "genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing, and crimes against humanity" on a case-by-case basis should their own governments fail to do so.

What could be more clear? What could be more precise? What could be more important for us to respond to?

The case for Darfur is painfully clear. And yet a year after making this commitment, we and the rest of the international community are already on the verge of reneging on it. Our ability to act remains hostage to a government that continues to perpetrate terrible crimes on its own people.

Yet instead of tightening the screws on this government, our administration, the administration here in the United States, unfortunately, is not doing what it ought to be doing. We are dangling the incentives of talks with President Bush before the Sudanese President in exchange for his accepting a U.N. force. It is almost unbelievable.

The administration refuses to talk directly to Iran and North Korea about their nuclear programs. And yet here it is bandying Presidential talks with the head of a regime that our own Government has declared guilty of genocide.

This is typical, unfortunately, of the administration's bumbling approach to diplomacy. It simply does not know when to talk and when to brandish the stick. Clearly, the stick is necessary here. Days and hours stand between us and an incredible mass of genocide.

The fact is, we need to take a harder approach on Sudan. So what can we do from here on? How do we ratchet up the pressure on the Sudanese Government and get it to stop?

First, I think the United States needs to expedite the appointment of a special envoy to Darfur.

Let me add, by the way, Senator BROWBACK mentioned Bob Zoellick.

He did a fantastic job, by the way, but he is out of government now. He is in the private sector. Unfortunately, we do not have a Bob Zoellick within the administration right now who understands it and cared about this issue to the extent he did. But I believe there are people who could be asked to perform this appointment of a special envoy from the United States. That might be enough in the short term, to begin to put the brakes on.

I recently joined colleagues in sending a letter to President Bush calling for his immediate attention. With the departure of Deputy Secretary of State Bob Zoellick, who played a very important role in negotiating the May peace agreement, a vacuum has emerged that needs to be immediately filled to ensure a coordinated, focused, and effective policy.

Our Assistant Secretary of State for African affairs was made to wait 3 days—3 days—before meeting with Sudan's President, only to hear him reject the U.N. force. This special envoy must be someone of greater stature and seniority who can command an audience and forcefully convey a message. Moreover, the envoy and President Bush himself must, in concert with our allies, publicly reject Sudan's demand that African Union troops leave and insist on the deployment of U.N. forces.

Secondly, the United States needs to convince states like China and Russia and the Arab League to apply pressure on the Sudanese Government to accept a U.N. peacekeeping force. Unless Sudan feels the heat from its business partners and friends, my fear is they will not budge.

Thirdly, the United States needs to ensure that the United Nations moves forward with deploying a peacekeeping force. Should Sudan continue to put up a wall, then I think we must implement a tight sanctions regime against the Sudanese Government, rebel forces, and others responsible for the atrocities that are being committed there.

We must also consider deploying troops regardless of Sudanese consent. For many this may raise a red flag, but, again, it is an international commitment and a moral obligation agreed to under U.N. auspices.

Should the U.N. fail to rapidly muster the requisite troops, I believe we ought to deploy an interim NATO force with U.S. participation to Darfur. At a minimum, NATO forces, which already provide logistical support to the African Union mission, should enforce a no-fly zone in Darfur pursuant to U.N. Security Council Resolution 1591 to prevent military flights over Darfur.

U.S. participation, even in a limited capacity, is critical to showing the world that the U.S. is not just about fighting terrorism when it serves our interests but also about fighting injustice, terrorism and mass murder when it affects others far away from us; that the U.S. will fight for the principles of respect for human dignity and life, and not just lecture others about them.

Fourth, despite this administration's absurd rejection of International Criminal Court, the ICC can and must play a critical role in bringing to justice those responsible for committing genocide in Sudan. Last March, Darfur became the first-ever case to be referred by the U.N. Security Council to the International Criminal Court for investigation.

The U.S. unconscionably abstained on this vote. My country abstained. When it comes to conducting an investigation of the Sudanese Government for what our own Secretary of State has called genocide, we abstained.

And we wonder why public opinion of the United States around the world is dipping. One reason is because the administration talks the talk but does not walk the walk when it comes to upholding our Nation's principles. From military tribunals that don't allow due process of law to warrantless surveillance, the administration simply thinks it is above domestic and international law. Its doublespeak continues to squander our country's political and moral authority. The U.S. needs to lend its full support to the ICC's efforts to bring to justice those found guilty of genocide in Sudan.

Mr. President, 12 years after Rwanda—and I am glad my colleague from California raised Rwanda, and Senator BROWNBACK has as well, along with others in this body—we remain haunted by the massacre which occurred. Former President Bill Clinton publicly expressed his deepest regret at the U.S. and the international community's collective inaction to stop the killings in Rwanda. Twelve years from now, none of us in this body or the administration want to be forcing the same regrets about Darfur.

Yet, if we fail that—and it is not a matter of weeks or months, it is a matter of hours—then the very kinds of genocidal mass murder that occurred in Rwanda will continue to occur in Darfur and grow worse.

Sudan has been wracked by four decades of violence and instability. The scars of that war cut deep throughout their country. Currently, it is experiencing what the U.N. has described as the world's greatest humanitarian crisis. We stood by during Rwanda. We cannot stand by this time. We must not let history repeat itself. We must act. The international community has a responsibility to protect and the U.S. must lead by example. Let us not fail this time.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan is recognized.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Connecticut for that extremely eloquent, passionate, and urgent message to the administration about what needs to be done in Darfur. I could not agree more. I have come to the floor on other occasions to speak on the same issue. We know that thousands—in fact, 2 million people—find themselves in camps with no place to call home, in a situation that is absolutely outrageous.

So I thank my colleague for coming to the floor and speaking on this important subject. I am very hopeful that my colleagues on both sides of the aisle who have spoken to this will find that their words are heeded by the administration and they will act urgently to save lives and stop the genocide.

REMEMBERING ANN RICHARDS

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I rise today to remember a very good friend and a wonderful woman whom Senator LINCOLN spoke about—and I know others today have—very eloquently on the floor, and that is our good, good friend Ann Richards, the former Texas Governor and treasurer, a woman who had extraordinary abilities. Her intelligence, her tenacity, and her hard work, are well known. But we all know of her sense of humor, her wit, her ability to make us smile. Even when we were trying to struggle through a difficult issue or were upset, she was able to put this in a particular frame that would allow people to in fact smile and laugh while they were trying to work through things together.

I was very pleased to have Ann Richards come to Michigan on more than one occasion to be able to help me in my effort at running for office. It was always a wonderful time. People were so excited when I would say that Governor Ann Richards was coming to Michigan. There would be excitement from women young and old, as well as from men. We always drew a great crowd. She always lived up to every expectation, in terms of the way she spoke about life, about what people are concerned about, and a combination of both outrage at those unfair things and things that ought to be changed, coupled with that sense of humor about what we go through in our daily lives, speaking about things that we could all relate to so well, with that wonderful sense of humor.

She once told me when I was working hard and had too many things to do in a day: Debbie, you should stop right now and just focus on what is next and the rest of it will take care of itself. Do your best and focus on the next hour, the next challenge, and that is how you get through effectively in life.

Those words of encouragement and advice have stuck with me to this day. Whenever I get overwhelmed, I think of Ann Richards' voice in my ear saying: Stop and take a breath and focus on what is right in front of you and do your best, and everything else will work out just fine.

We all know she was a trailblazer in Texas politics and an inspiration to all of us who have run for office and been elected to office around the country. I will never forget when she was elected. I had the opportunity to attend her inaugural ball—I should say series of balls, where everybody was all dressed up and wearing cowboy boots, and how I watched Ann, with such relish, go from ball to ball, event to event, and watched her go down the streets in the parades in Austin that day. There was such excitement, and you could tell she was thrilled. She loved Texas and she relished the opportunity to serve Texas as its Governor. It was such a wonderful weekend of events. I will always remember that.

There are so many different quotes from her that we all remember and quote ourselves. One of my favorites is the often-repeated line about Fred Astaire. She said:

Sure, he was great; but don't forget that Ginger Rogers did everything he did backwards and in high heels.

That was Ann Richards, speaking in a way that made a point, but made everyone smile at the same time.

In many ways, we kind of came up through politics together. We were both in county commissions in the mid-1970s. We both ended up in State-wide elected office, and we both loved and love our States with a great, great passion.

Despite all of the fame—and she was famous, a well-known person, revered around the country—she was somebody who could walk into any city in the country and have people recognize her and have great respect for her. But what I admired most was how down to earth she was. Even though this is a person who was very well known, she was somebody who was always there with a smile and would say “How are you doing?” She would talk to the wait staff in a restaurant, as well as the people in her party, or would speak to whomever was around her.

She began her career as a teacher. She once said that teaching was the hardest work she had ever done and, according to her, it remained the hardest work she had done to date. She was a great teacher, but not only in the classroom. Ann Richards was a teacher to me—a teacher as it relates to women having courage, stepping out, being willing to take the slings and arrows that come with the rough and tumble world of politics, standing up for what she believed in, always being accessible and available to reach out and help those of us who asked for her help, and always relishing life to the fullest.

Ann Richards will be remembered. We are so grateful for her life, for her service, and for who she was. My thoughts and prayers go out to her children and her grandchildren.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I join my colleagues and many others across America to express our sadness over the loss of one great person: former Texas Governor Ann Richards. There she was, with her Dairy Queen hairdo, her thick Texas twang, and her lightning fast wit. She was beloved and recognized by everybody. When she would show up on Capitol Hill, people couldn't wait to come up and shake hands and see that beautiful smile. Several times she came by my office, and our visit always started with a laugh and ended with a laugh. She was just a great person to be around.

She was born Dorothy Ann Willis in 1933, in Lakeview, a farming community near Waco. She was the only child of Iona and Cecil Willis. They came from the tiny towns of Bugtussle and Hogjaw.

At Waco High School, she dropped her first name and became just Ann. She also became the Texas state debate champion.

During her senior year, she visited Washington as a delegate to Girls Nation and, on a trip to the White House, shook hands with President Truman, one of her all time heroes.

Despite her natural political talents, it never occurred to Ann Richards to run for political office herself until later in life.

In her 20s, she taught social studies in an Austin middle school for less than 2 years before she was required to resign because she was pregnant with her first child. She later described teaching as “the hardest work I had ever done.”

In 1975, her husband, civil rights attorney David Richards, was approached about running for Travis County commissioner. He turned it down and said he wasn't interested, but Ann Richards was.

She won that race and went on to serve two terms as a Travis County commissioner, 8 years as Texas state treasurer, and 4 years as her State's governor.

Her 1990 election as Governor—a come-from-behind victory—made her the first woman elected governor in Texas in nearly 60 years, and the first woman to win that office without following her husband in.

As Governor, Ann Richards pursued a progressive agenda and appointed an unprecedented number of women and minorities to posts they never would have dreamed of in Texas Government.

Her family said that, as Governor, she was most proud of two actions that probably cost her re-election. She vetoed legislation that would have allowed people to carry concealed handguns. She also vetoed a bill that would have destroyed an aquifer that supplies water for much of south central Texas. She paid the political price.

Years later, when a reporter asked her what she might have done differently had she known she was going to serve only one term as Governor, Ann Richards grinned and replied: “Oh, I would probably have raised more hell.”

She was not just a political hero. In speaking openly about her struggle with alcoholism, her decision, in 1980, to get sober, and the joy she discovered in sobriety, Ann Richards was also a source of inspiration as well to countless others who struggle with addiction.

Ann Richards rose to national prominence when she gave the keynote address at the 1988 Democratic National Convention. People remember a lot of things she said in that address.

That address includes some immortal lines, including her famous description of gender inequality: “Ginger Rogers did everything that Fred Astaire did. She just did it backwards and in high heels.”

In other lines from that speech that are not as well remembered, Ann Richards talked about why she believed in government.

She said:

I was born during the Depression in a little community just outside Waco, and I grew up listening to Franklin Roosevelt on the radio. It was back then that I came to understand the small truths and the hardships that bind neighbors together. Those were real people with real problems, and they had real dreams about getting out of the Depression.

She said she could still hear the voices of those “people who were living their lives as best they could.”

She said: “They talked about war and Washington and what this country needed. They talked straight talk.”

In politics and in her life after politics, Ann Richards used her power to try to solve the real problems of real people and enable them to live and raise their families with dignity and hope.

I'll close with one more story from Wayne Slater. He recalls that, during a public appearance several years after leaving office, Ann Richards was asked about her legacy.

She replied:

In looking back on my life, I could of course say the predictable thing: that the greatest thing I've ever done is bear my children and have grandchildren, and all that kind of stuff. But the reality is that the greatest part of my life was the opportunity to be in public service—to make a difference for the community I live in, for the State that I love, to be able to try to make things better, whether they turned out in the fashion I expected them to or not.

Then she added:

Sometimes it's serendipitous. Good things happen accidentally. But they're not going to happen unless well-meaning people give of their time and their lives to do that.

Ann Richards earned that legacy and more. She made a difference not only for her community and her beloved State, but to our entire Nation. She touched so many lives and changed so many lives in her life. She will be greatly missed.

Our thoughts and prayers go out to her children: Cecile, Daniel, Clark and Ellen; their spouses; and Governor Richards' eight grandchildren.

There is good news in the Richards family. Cecile received an award last night from USA Action. Of course, she couldn't be there, she was at her mother's deathbed—and that is certainly understood. But a tribute was paid to her for her active work on behalf of women across America as a leader in Planned Parenthood. She is carrying on her mother's legacy, her commitment, her family's commitment to public service. I can't think of anything that would have made Ann Richards more proud.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RURAL AMERICA MONTH

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I rise this evening to speak about an important resolution that passed the Senate last week. I introduced S. Res. 561, which designates September as Rural America Month.

I first thank the majority leader and my colleague, Senator BLANCHE LINCOLN from Arkansas, for their help in passing this resolution. For me, home means Nevada. Growing up as the son of a hard rock miner in a rural community called Searchlight, far from the bright lights of Las Vegas, has shaped my love for rural America. So when I became leader, I decided I wanted to do something to show how serious Democrats are about standing up for rural America. I couldn't think of a better person to lead this effort than BLANCHE LINCOLN from Arkansas.

I appointed her the chairman of my Rural Outreach Program, and she has done a wonderful job. She is so articulate, has that wonderful smile, and she has done things we never realized would be so effective. I publicly extend my appreciation to her for her leadership in this area. The people of Arkansas are so fortunate to have this good woman serving in the Senate.

It is our love for rural America that brings us to the Chamber today. Senator LINCOLN has been here. I appreciate her remarks very much. But it is what motivates us to support 55 million people who, like us, call rural America home. These small towns and rural communities are rich in heritage and tradition, and we need to do everything we can to protect and sustain the rural way of life.

Today, as we honor rural America, I would like to talk about some steps I believe the Senate should take to enrich rural economies, bring new and better services to small towns, enhance these pieces of fabric of America we call rural America.

During the last century, our rural communities have undergone an amazing transformation. With more than 2,000 rural counties accounting for almost 85 percent of the American landscape, the definition of what is rural often depends upon arbitrary lines of distinction. As rural economies become increasingly diversified, communities strive to adapt to the demands of a constantly evolving global community and economy. Take, for example, Elko, NV. Once, Elko was a small Basque enclave. It has grown dramatically during the past decade, and for so many years it has been growing in a way we never envisioned.

Today, Elko and the immediate vicinity produces 63 percent of the world's gold. It has recognized the challenge of relying upon the highly volatile industry, but it still carries on and does so well. The people of Elko worked together to identify local resources to foster not only growth but smart growth. As it turns out, one of Elko's most valuable assets is an unused railroad spur. Today, this is being developed and will become one of the busiest transportation hubs in the West because of the mining industry and ranching industry.

That is not all. Elko is also doing something else to capitalize on the uniqueness of their setting in the American West.

One of the reasons I am so proud of this legislation is because it honors America's farmers, ranchers, and, yes, cowboys. Farming and ranching are the foundation of rural culture in America and continue to drive the rural economy. Today, with 95 million head of cattle, beef production in the United States is an $80 billion-a-year industry. This year, Americans will consume 25 billion pounds of beef. With the livestock they raise and the responsible stewardship of public lands, American farmers and ranchers help feed families across the country and around the world. Although less than 10 percent of the world's cattle are raised in America, we produce nearly 25 percent of the world's beef supply.

For 23 years, the Western Folklife Center has hosted the National Cowboy Poetry Festival in Elko. Each year, poets, storytellers, musicians, filmmakers, dancers, and other performers descend upon the town to celebrate these American icons. The theme for this year's gathering is "The Ranch."

If you talk to ranchers and farmers this year, one of the first topics you hear is the rising cost of energy. The high cost of gasoline and diesel affects all Americans, but it hits rural America very hard. These are men and women who make a living driving tractors and other large pieces of equipment, hauling their grain and moving their livestock from place to place. This is one area in particular where we can help rural America, and I believe we should.

Instead of making farmers pay for dependence on foreign oil, it is time they were paid to make America energy independent. It is within our grasp. We are at a real turning point for alternative energy. Alternative energy technologies are finally becoming cost competitive with conventional energy sources such as oil and gas. In 2005, the three largest technology IPOs were, believe it or not, solar companies. By 2009, it is likely alternative energy technology will capture 10 percent of all capital venture investments. All of this is possible if we work together to take us in a new direction.

Another hardship faced by rural Americans is the loss of jobs. In the wake of outsourcing, rural communities have been left with the daunting task of retraining workers whose only training had been for jobs that no longer exist. For example, the manufacturing industry, which is so vital to so many small towns, has been hit the hardest, with as much as 30 percent of that sent abroad. It is not unusual for someone to work their ranch or farm but also have another job, and that has been very hurtful, with these jobs being shipped overseas. It has been particularly devastating for low-skill workers who make up more than 40 percent of all rural workers.

The problem is made worse when young unskilled workers leave the workforce in search of opportunities only available beyond the county line. While it is clear rural communities need to be more aggressive in attracting new industries, the task is easier said than done.

Prospective employers need to be assured they have a pool of talented workers. With the exodus of skilled workers and an untrained workforce, few companies are willing to roll the dice. That is too bad.

Living in rural America is something that you do not see on a balance sheet. It is only a live experience. More people should experience the joy of living in rural America.

Just as good jobs are hard to find, so is good health care and good emergency response. In many parts of the country, such as Ely, NV, when there is an emergency—whether it is a small brush fire or national catastrophe—we look to our neighbors to keep our families safe. We rely on volunteer firefighters and police officers. This fact was made painfully clear after Hurricane Katrina.

That is why I feel so strongly that the Senate must do everything it can to make sure our first responders have the tools they need to get the job done right. Volunteer fire departments depend on programs such as Fire and Citizen Corps grants. Every day, rural law enforcement officials rely on the funding that the Byrne and COPS Programs provide.

Often, when we talk about veterans issues, we are talking about rural issues. Rural America is home to many U.S. veterans. In fact, according to the Census Bureau, rural and nonmetropolitan counties account for the largest concentration of veterans.

This is true for my home State of Nevada. With more than 250,000 veterans, Nevada has the third largest population of veterans, and it continues to grow. During the last decade, Nevada saw its veterans population increase by more than 30 percent—the highest increase in the country.

That is why for so many years now, I have been pushing Congress to revisit the injustice in compensation for our nation's veterans—the ban on concurrent receipt.

As too many are well aware, disabled veterans face the obstacle of forfeiting retirement pay dollar-for-dollar if they receive disability compensation. This policy is unacceptable, and I am committed to securing fair policy to provide our veterans with the entirety of their earned compensation.

I have been fighting for five years to allow for full concurrent receipt, and despite veto threats from the administration, we have made many great strides towards fair compensation for our veterans. In 2003, Congress passed my legislation allowing disabled retired veterans with at least a fifty percent disability rating to become eligible for full concurrent receipt over a ten-year period. This measure passed despite veto threats from the Bush administration.

Most recently, I have introduced legislation—S. 558—which would provide concurrent receipt to military retirees, with 20 or more years of service, who are rated less than 50 percent. It would also eliminate the 10-year phase-in period for veterans who draw their disability and retirement pay; it will also change my 2003 bill to give full concurrent receipt to all veterans with service connected disabilities. There are currently 29 cosponsors to this legislation.

Additionally, the CARES commission on veterans' health care recognized the need for a Community Based Outpatient Clinic—CBOC—in Fallon and an expansion of services at the Reno

VA Medical Center. I am committed to providing Nevada's veterans with more access to quality health care options, including a new CBOC in Elko.

And finally, no discussion of helping rural America would be complete without a discussion of Broadband.

For rural America, competition and active participation in the local and global marketplaces not only means having a computer, but also access to high-speed internet services.

Rural areas are consistently left behind urban areas when it comes to federal investment in the infrastructure systems that are essential for any economy to thrive—including telecommunications systems.

Although the Internet has touched the lives of billions of people around the globe, most of rural America has been left behind even the least developed countries.

Less than a decade ago, the Internet meant email and chat rooms. Today, access to broadband Internet is so much more. With high speed internet, incredible amounts of information can change fingers at the speed of light.

However, even in rural areas where broadband access has been introduced, problems such as affordability and adoption rates remain huge obstacles to progress/leaving dial-up the only realistic option. Affordability and adoption rates are the biggest obstacles we have.

Broadband Internet has proven itself to be a potent catalyst in job creation, economic development, and a critical component of education and public safety. In fact, the deployment of broadband service to our rural areas may be as important to economic development as rural electrification was during the Great Depression.

And so, my colleagues and I are committed to investing in innovative broadband technologies so that rural communities can begin to form new kinds of partnerships, and reach new levels of connectivity.

For example, Senator Clinton has worked to link local businesses in St. Lawrence County to global markets using eBay. Many parts of St. Lawrence County are remote, and businesses have a hard time finding customers. But not on eBay. eBay also offered training to small business owners and their employees.

Senator Clinton has also previously secured Senate passage of tax incentives for telecommunications companies to deploy broadband to rural areas. This technology will allow small businesses around New York to compete for customers around the globe.

We have seen how one small business has worked with several communities to bring free wireless internet service to nine cities in Eastern Oregon. The service is now being used to track cargo shipments on the Columbia River, monitor a munitions depot, and has improved the efficiency of the police department.

I have spent the last few moments talking about the joys and challenges felt by rural America.

As I've cited in examples today from Elko and Ely, Nevada, rural communities are coming together to create new opportunity themselves. But we here in Washington need to do everything we can to help them succeed.

We need solutions that make sense for the whole country—not just for Washington, D.C., but for places like Winnemucca, and Aurora, NE.

We can do it. And we'll be a better, stronger nation as a result.

BOXING

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I rise today to honor a momentous occasion in the history of Nevada and one of my favorite pastimes: boxing.

This September 16, 2006, marks the 100th anniversary of the longest boxing match in history fought under Queensbury rules. For more than 3 hours, two of the greatest boxers in the country squared off for 42 rounds in the booming mining community of Goldfield, NV. This fight's tremendous length might be important to the "Guinness Book of World Records," but for Nevada, it was also an important moment in race relations during a tumultuous period in our country's history.

Boxing promoters throughout the country billed the fight as one of epic proportions. Oscar Battling Nelson was one of the toughest fighters in the land. He was nicknamed "The Durable Dane" for his resilient and hard-hitting style. Rather than defeat his opponents with skill, Nelson preferred to absorb the blows of his opponents and outlast them in the ring. One biographer even went so far as to say that Nelson "gave new meaning to the word tough."

With such fabled abilities, Nelson was the early favorite to defeat his opponent, a 32-year-old African American named Joe Gans. The Baltimore native was the reigning lightweight champion and the first American-born Black man to win a boxing title. His style was a sharp contrast to The Durable Dane: Gans was quick and fast on his feet and known as "The Old Master." Rather than relying on brute strength, Gans tried to beat his opponents with skill.

Such a marquee match-up was a boxing promoter's dream and was expected to promote gold stock in the area. With a record $30,000 purse prize, the fight brought national attention to Goldfield, the largest city in Nevada at the time. But a sharp issue hung over the bout like an ominous cloud. That was the issue of race.

Before the fight began, rumors floated that Gans had thrown fights as a youth in Baltimore. So persistent were the rumors that Gans' promoter, a local saloon owner named Larry Sullivan, feared for his safety should his fighter lose. Others worried that a win by Gans could start a riot in the town.

The hostility of the town quickly evaporated once the citizens of Goldfield had an opportunity to meet Joe Gans. It was his unassuming manner—and some say a love of the craps tables—that endeared Gans to the town. Prefight negotiations only served to steer more public support to Gans' corner. Gans gave into every one of Nelson's demands, including lowering his own share of the $30,000 purse to $11,000 win or lose. He also agreed to drop his weight to 133 pounds—well below his normal fighting weight of 142 pounds.

The change in support was clearly evident to referee George Siler. He wrote: "The men who wield the pick think that Gans has been imposed upon by Nelson's manager, and they want to see him win." The Goldfield News reported the shift in support saying "... the camp finds itself in the unique position of wishing to see a Negro defeat a white man." By the start of the fight, the odds were 2-1 in favor of Gans.

The fight started in the afternoon under the hot Nevada sun. Some estimates place the ringside temperatures at more than 100 degrees. Nevertheless, more than 8,000 people—and an unprecedented 1,500 women—paid the pricey sum of $5 to watch the fight.

Surely, none of the spectators knew that they would witness one of the greatest fights in history. As usual, Nelson tried to outlast his opponents' barrage of uppercuts, hooks, and jabs. By the end of the seventh round, Nelson was bleeding from both ears and Gans knocked him to the mat. But the Durable Dane would not give up. He tried to pin Gans against the ropes, and again Gans knocked him to the mat in the 15th round. Nelson bounced back, winning the next three rounds. After almost 20 rounds, the sun began to set over the Columbia Mountain and it was clear that the fighters were tired.

But neither man would yield. Gans broke his hand in the 27th round but refused to go down. He continued to fight back against Nelson, showing little sign of the injury. At the end of the 30th round, Nelson hit Gans after the bell, causing uproar in the crowd. The referee, who had warned Nelson about fouls throughout the fight, gave him yet another warning. Finally, the Durable Dane began to lose his famed endurance, while Gans continued to pummel him. In the 42nd round, Nelson landed an intentional low blow on Gans. The referee called the fight in Gans' favor.

The telegraph wires carried the result of the fight across the country. And the town's support for Gans held strong. That night, the residents of Goldfield did not see Black or White: They saw a winner. Joe Gans, with his modest manner and stylish boxing, had won the town over. Siler wrote: "Goldfield is a vast camp of hero worshippers tonight, and its hero is Joe Gans . . ."

This Saturday, the boxing clubs from the University of Nevada, Reno, and the University of Nevada, Las Vegas, will fight 42 rounds in honor of the Nelson-Gans match. The sounds of the closing bell for each of those 42 rounds will be from the original 1906 bell from the fight. And later that evening in nearby Tonopah, the audience will be able to watch video footage of the historic bout.

Mr. President, the accomplishments of Joe Gans and the citizens of Goldfield are worthy for recognition before the Senate. I am pleased have the opportunity to honor this important anniversary today.

CHANGING THE TIDE

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, as Detroit residents cope with a rise in homicides and shootings this year, city police are joining with other law enforcement agencies in an effort to stem gun-related violence through a new program. Operation Tactical Intelligence Driven Enforcement, or TIDE, was established to help determine crime patterns, identify the city's most violent offenders and ultimately prevent crime in the city of Detroit.

Operation TIDE, which began on May 5, 2006, in the Detroit Northwestern police district, involves the coordination of 10 Federal, State and local agencies. It is designed to use the expertise of each agency to better track and share intelligence on dangerous criminals. The U.S. Attorney's Office, Wayne County Prosecutor's Office, Wayne County Sheriff's Office, U.S. Marshals Service, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Michigan State Police and U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration are all involved in the project. To date, 115 people tied to gun crimes and gang violence have been arrested. The program is funded by a $600,000 grant through the Federal Project Safe Neighborhoods campaign against guns and gang violence and is currently being expanded into the other three police districts.

Operation TIDE expands upon the current Project Safe Neighborhoods initiative strategy of suppression, deterrence, prevention/intervention, investigation, prosecution and public awareness. Project Safe Neighborhoods is a long-term campaign that has assisted in taking many violent offenders off the streets of Detroit. Since its inception in 2001, Project Safe Neighborhoods has played an important role in a 34 percent reduction in violent crime and a 73 percent increase in firearm prosecutions nationally. In the Detroit area, it has resulted in more than 800 Federal gun prosecutions. Project Safe Neighborhoods public awareness campaign has resulted in hundreds of tips leading to prosecution.

Ella Bully-Cummings, chief of the Detroit Police Department, described Operation TIDE by saying:

Our strategy is to supercharge our crime prevention and enforcement efforts to reduce violent crimes using the intelligence and resources of all law enforcement agencies. Our police officers work every day at addressing active and potential crime in our city limits. By collecting and disseminating the acquired intelligence among partnering agencies, crime patterns will be swiftly identified.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all the Federal, State, and local law enforcement officials for their outstanding service and their vital contributions to the safety of our communities. Their commonsense approach plays a significant role in decreasing gun violence. I am hopeful that the 109th Congress will do more to support their efforts by taking up and passing sensible gun safety legislation.

NSA-RELATED BILLS AND PROPOSED CHANGES TO WAR CRIMES ACT

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, earlier today the President visited Capitol Hill for a closed-door meeting with House Republicans. It is not often the President takes time out of his busy schedule to come to Congress. But to meet only with Republicans is wrong and divisive.

After his closed door meeting, the President talked about working together, in a bipartisan way. His walk does not match his talk. I wish he would act as a uniter and work with all of us on behalf of all Americans. Regrettably, it appears that, once again, this President has chosen to act in a partisan way in his role as Republican-in-Chief. That is wrong.

I hope that all Senators will recognize their responsibility to all Americans and exercise their best independent judgment, rather than taking orders from the head of their political party.

In the Judiciary Committee yesterday, Senators did exercise that kind of independent judgment when we joined together in a bipartisan way to report a bipartisan bill that would amend the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act and reign in the Administration's warrantless domestic wiretapping program. That bill, S. 3001, the bill cosponsored by Senator SPECTER and Senator FEINSTEIN, was the only proposal that drew bipartisan support. I urge the Majority Leader to recognize the merits of that bill and our bipartisan efforts by moving to proceed to that bill when the Senate turns its attention to these matters.

This bipartisan bill was authored by Senator FEINSTEIN, one of the few Senators being briefed on the Presidents program of domestic surveillance without warrants. It is intended to ensure our intelligence community can protect our nation with the necessary court oversight. It will bring the President's program within the law.

It stands in stark contrast to the White House-endorsed bill that grants sweeping authority to the Executive Branch for a program about which we know very little. The Bush-Cheney Administration has refused Congress's requests for information. Since when did Congress become an arm of the Executive Branch? Since when was the Senate reduced to a rubberstamp? Oversight means accountability. Oversight makes Government work better. It prevents abuses and corruption. We need Government to be as competent and accountable as it can be in fighting terrorism.

I have been attempting to clarify the facts and the law relating to the Administration's warrantless wiretapping program since it was first disclosed in December 2005. During the ensuing eight months, we have made numerous efforts to get straight answers from the Administration regarding the nature, scope and purported legal basis of this program. Our efforts were rebuffed by the most flagrant and disrespectful stonewalling of any Administration that I have seen in my 32 years in Congress.

While refusing to answer even our most basic questions about its secret spying program, the Administration claimed that Congress approved the program when it authorized the use of military force in Afghanistan—although Attorney General Gonzales had to admit that this was an “evolving” rationale not present at the time Congress considered its action. The Administration claimed that even if they violated the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, the President's powers and their view of the “unitary executive” must trump the law and the authority of Congress. Not since the rationalization of Richard Nixon for actions during the White House horrors and Watergate scandal have we heard such a claim. And, of course, the Administration claimed it had all the authority it needed and no new legislation was needed.

The bill the Chairman negotiated with the White House, in my view, contains several fundamental flaws:

The bill makes compliance with FISA entirely optional, and explicitly validates the President's claim that he has unfettered authority to wiretap Americans in the name of national security. In other words, it suggests that FISA is unconstitutional—a claim for which there is no judicial precedent and very little academic support—and invites the President to ignore it.

The bill abandons the traditional, case-by-case review contemplated by FISA and introduces the concept of “program warrants.” If that novel concept is constitutional—which I doubt—a single FISA court judge could approve whole programs of electronic surveillance that go far beyond the President's program.

The bill immunizes from prosecution anyone who breaks into a home or office in the United States to search for foreign intelligence information, if he is acting at the behest of the President. I would have thought that electronic surveillance is a large enough area to address in one bill. But apparently, the Administration was unwilling to address electronic surveillance without also reaching for new powers to break into Americans' homes.

We should not grant that kind of blank check to the Executive for a secret program we know little about. Instead, we should consider the bipartisan alternative the Judiciary Committee has endorsed. The Specter-Feinstein bill is an approach that seeks accountability while ensuring tools to mount a strong fight against terrorism.

The Majority Leader has an opportunity to unite the Senate and Americans around this smarter, stronger proposal that will help protect Americans as well as the values that we hold dear as a Nation. I hope that he seizes that opportunity.

On a related note, I was a little surprised to hear the Chairman say earlier today that the Judiciary Committee was forwarding proposed language changes to the War Crimes Act to the Armed Services Committee. I agree with the Chairman that amending the War Crimes Act is a matter in the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee, but I am very concerned about the way in which this important issue has come up.

The Chairman announced yesterday in the middle of a special business meeting that the Committee would be discussing a proposal. That was news to me and the other Democratic members of the Committee, who had not seen nor heard of the proposal. The Chairman said that a bill had been distributed Tuesday afternoon, but Democrats were not included in any such distribution.

This is a very serious issue. It certainly requires meaningful review and input from Senators of both parties. It is a subject about which I care a great deal about.

This issue is being considered by the Armed Services Committee. Senator WARNER is working with Senator LEVIN, and all members of that Committee. I understand that they are also consulting with the top military lawyer, who have been ignored by this Administration. I have seen the letters from GEN Powell and GEN Vessey on the importance of upholding our treaty obligation and acting in the best interests of protecting Americans throughout the world.

GEN Powell wrote: The world is beginning to doubt the moral basis of our fight against terrorism. To refine Common Article 3 would add to those doubts. Furthermore, it would put our own troops at risk. He speaks from the perspective of a former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and a former Secretary of State.

GEN Vessey signaled what relaxing our adherence to Common Article 3 of the Geneva Convention would do: “First, it would undermine the moral basis which has generally guided our conduct in war throughout our history. Second, it could give opponents a legal argument for the mistreatment of Americans being held prisoners in time of war.”

I worked hard, along with many others of both parties, to pass the current version of the War Crimes Act. I think the current law is a good law, and the concerns that have been raised about it could best be addressed with minor adjustments, rather than with the sweeping changes suggested here.

In 1996, working with the Department of Defense, Congress passed the War Crimes Act to provide criminal penalties for certain war crimes committed by and against Americans. The next year, again with the Pentagon's support, Congress extended the War Crimes Act to violations of the baseline humanitarian protections afforded by Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions. Both measures were supported by a broad bipartisan consensus, and I was proud to sponsor the 1997 amendments.

The legislation was uncontroversial for a good reason. The purpose and effect of the War Crimes Act as amended was to provide for the implementation of America's commitment to the basic international standards we subscribed to when we ratified the Geneva Conventions in 1955. Those standards are truly universal: They condemn war criminals whoever and wherever they are.

That is a critically important aspect of the Geneva Conventions and our own War Crimes Act. When we are dealing with fundamental norms that define the commitments of the civilized world, we cannot have one rule for us and one for them, however we define “us” and “them.”

I am disturbed by the draft legislation, which seems to narrow the scope of the War Crimes Act to exclude certain violations of the Geneva Conventions and which could have the effect of retroactively immunizing past violations that may have been committed by U.S. personnel.

The narrowing of these definitions have the potential effect of immunizing past war crimes. It also could well prevent us from prosecuting rogues who we all agree were out of line like the soldiers who mistreated prisoners at Abu Ghraib.

Many of the despicable tactics used in Abu Ghraib—the use of dogs, forced nudity, humiliation of various kinds—do not appear to be covered by the narrow definitions this draft would incorporate into the War Crimes Act. If this were the law, and the Abu Ghraib abuses had come to light after the perpetrators left the military, they might not have been brought to justice. The President and the Republican leader have conceded that the conduct at Abu Ghraib was abhorrent, and the perpetrators did need to be brought to justice. I hope the President and Congressional Republicans will not now pass legislation that prevents us from bringing people who commit these same despicable acts to justice.

I recognize the concerns about American servicemen and women or government employees being subjected to prosecutions for conduct that could be seen as ambiguous. I believe the War Crimes Act, as is, would not support prosecutions for conduct that was less than abhorrent. Indeed, to date, the Bush Administration has not brought a single charge pursuant to the War Crimes Act.

I would support amending the War Crimes Act so that only "serious" violations of Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions were prosecutable under the War Crimes Act. This fix would address any legitimate fears without creating a list of covered conduct that excludes much of the conduct that is most troubling.

Let me be clear. There is no problem facing us about overzealous use of the War Crimes Act by prosecutors. In fact, as far as I can tell, the Ashcroft Justice Department and the Gonzales Justice Department have yet to file a single charge against anyone for violation of the War Crimes Act. Not only have they never charged American personnel under the Act, they have never used it to charge terrorists either.

The President and the Congress should not be in the business of immunizing people who have broken the law, made us less safe, turning world opinion against us, and undercutting our treaty obligations in ways that encourage others to ignore the protections those treaties provide to Americans. We should be very careful about any changes we make.

I yield the floor.

CRANIOFACIAL ACCEPTANCE MONTH

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I rise today to call attention to the fact that September has been designated as Craniofacial Acceptance Month. Craniofacial abnormalities are abnormalities that affect the skull and face. According to the National Institute of Dental and Craniofacial Research, "craniofacial defects are among the most common of all birth defects. These disorders are often devastating to parents and children alike. Surgery, dental care, psychological counseling, and rehabilitation may help ameliorate the problems, but often at a great cost and over many years." Victims of craniofacial anomalies usually have to endure many expensive procedures throughout their lifetimes, the costs of which can add up to cost millions of dollars.

Facial deformities give their victims a variety of aesthetic and developmental problems that differ in severity and occurrence. The common condition, cleft lip, an abnormality where the lip does not completely connect, can vary from a simple disconnect to a gaping opening that goes from the lip to the nose. It is easy to understand the developmental and respiratory problems this could present. Fortunately, this condition can usually be corrected through one or two simple reconstructive surgeries. But what about other anomalies that are not as easily corrected like craniosynostosis, a condition where the soft spots of an infant's skull close too early, hindering normal brain and skull growth? Or Goldenhar syndrome, where one side of the face is underdeveloped affecting the mouth, ear and jaw? Unfortunately these do not represent the most severe or rarest craniofacial defects.

At only 10 months old, Wendelyn Osborne, who grew up in the small town of Ashdown, AR, was diagnosed with Craniometaphyseal Dysplasia, or simply CMD. CMD is a rare affliction which affects only 200 people worldwide and was depicted in the 1985 movie "Mask" starring Cher. CMD involves an overgrowth of bone which never deteriorates. This caused, in her case, an abnormal appearance, bilateral facial paralysis and deafness. Other cases can include those characteristics as well as blindness and joint pain. Yet despite the challenges she has faced, Wendelyn's life has truly been blessed. Her life expectancy was only 14 years at birth, but after 17 reconstructive surgeries and two hearing aids, Wendelyn is still alive today at the age of 40. It was not until 2003 that Wendelyn was able to meet and interact with other people with craniofacial conditions. She attended the Annual Cher's Family retreat and was introduced to CCA, the Children's Craniofacial Association. Wendelyn saw the impact of support and encouragement through the programs and the families associated with CCA, and has been active with the organization ever since.

CCA has designated September as National Craniofacial Acceptance Month in hopes of raising awareness of individuals with facial differences. It is not a secret that appearance plays a key part in how individuals are accepted in our society. People with facial differences, in addition to medical problems, have a much harder time adjusting in society and developing successful relationships. Such individuals have to deal with a series of consequences that arise from uncontrollable circumstances of their birth. Marking September as National Craniofacial Acceptance Month brings attention to an issue that can no longer be ignored.

Hopefully, by raising awareness of craniofacial defects, our larger society will begin to show understanding and acceptance of those who live with these physical, medical, and emotional challenges. Understanding and increased public awareness of craniofacial disorders and abnormalities would let people like Wendelyn Osborne and hundreds of thousands of innocent individuals know that they are not unwanted and not alone in their battle with craniofacial conditions. I would like to commend CCA on taking an important step to raise awareness about this issue. I join the Children's Craniofacial Association in looking forward to the day when our Nation will "look beyond the face, to the heart within." I salute the Children's Craniofacial Association, Wendelyn Osborne, and all of the children and adults who live with these challenges and the families and persons who support them.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TRIBUTE TO ARTHUR A. KROETCH

● Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, today I recognize Arthur A. Kroetch of Philip, SD, and his company Scotchman Industries, Inc. Scotchman Industries has enjoyed a long and rich history in my home State.

In October of 1956, Art Kroetch, with the help of his wife Eleanor, started a small scrap metal business in Philip. Since its start, Art's business has steadily progressed from a scrap metal business into an agricultural tool manufacturer, to a national machine tool manufacturer, and finally into what it is today, an industry leading, multinational machine tool manufacturer. Small businesses are the backbone of the great State of South Dakota and I commend Art not only for his success with Scotchman Industries, but also for his contributions to his community and State.

It gives me great pleasure to rise with the town of Philip in congratulating Scotchman Industries and Art Kroetch on 50 years of successful operation.●

TRIBUTE IN HONOR OF JUNE COLLIER FLETCHER

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, today I honor June Collier Fletcher, one of Alabama's most influential women, who died on September 9, 2006. She rose from a meager upbringing to become the president and CEO of National Industries, Inc. Once the largest private employer in Montgomery, June built National Industries from the ground up to become a major automotive supplier employing 5,000 Alabamians.

June's drive and ambition allowed her to become a leader in an industry dominated by men. Under her guidance and leadership, National Industries became a flourishing $130 million-a-year electrical connection business.

Over the years, June was recognized for her hard work, dedication, and expertise and received numerous awards and accolades. She served as a member of the Commerce Department's prestigious Industrial Policy Advisory Committee, testified before Congress on automotive issues, and was a sought-after speaker on the subject of international trade. June received the Industry Week Excellence in Management Award and was selected to the Committee of 200, an organization of the top 200 women business leaders in America.

In addition to her work in the automotive industry, she was also active in petroleum exploration and production, farming, and garment manufacturing. In the 1980s, June's company was awarded a government contract to produce chemical warfare protective clothing which was used during the first gulf war.

June was an inspiration to many and I am truly grateful for the endless contributions she made to Alabama and our Nation. She will be missed by her husband Tim Fletcher; her five children, Kara Davis, Ondi Cain, Roessler Collier, Arin Burroughs, Kohler Collier; her stepchildren, Tom Fletcher, Jr., Carrie Fletcher; her 12 grandchildren and 2 great-grandchildren. She will also be missed by her many friends and the numerous people she worked with whose lives she touched throughout her magnificent journey.●

TRIBUTE TO TAMMY MAHAN

● Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, one of the great joys of my job as Senator is working closely with talented, dedicated Iowans from all walks of life. I would like to take a moment to salute one of those exceptional people, Tammy Mahan, an outstanding social worker, and a passionate advocate for adoption and foster care.

Tammy has dedicated her life to children, and has made a profound difference in the lives of countless foster and adopted youngsters in Iowa and across the United States. In her "day job," Tammy works at Children and Families of Iowa, where she is responsible for assisting foster parents through the licensing process.

A year ago, Tammy went beyond the call of duty by starting up a new organization in Des Moines called Elevate. Elevate is a growing team of young people who are active in a variety of important ways. They recruit families to foster or adopt teenagers. They educate legislators and the public about foster care and adoption. And they work to empower and increase the self-esteem of other teenagers who join the team as advocates. Elevate is doing wonderful things nationwide to encourage foster care and adoption. And the young people who are active in Elevate are just fantastic; they are passionate about their work, and they are setting a wonderful example for their peers.

I am deeply grateful to Tammy Mahan for all that she is doing in the community. By the way, Tammy and her husband Mitchell, are adoptive parents of two children. While it is easy for some professionals to talk the talk of youth empowerment and improving the system, Tammy and her family are walking the walk. Ghandi said that "You must be the change you want to see in the world." And that is exactly what Tammy and the young people of Elevate are doing.

This week, Tammy Mahan is in Washington to be honored for her outstanding public service. She is receiving a 2006 "Angel in Adoption" award from the Congressional Coalition on Adoption. This is an honor richly deserved. I congratulate Tammy, and I salute not only her work but also the good work being done by all the young activists in Elevate.●

HONORING DR. EDGAR WAYBURN

● Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I join with friends and associates across the country to honor the 100th birthday on September 17 of Dr. Edgar Wayburn of San Francisco. From the time that his appreciation of the American landscape began in Macon, GA, to his role today as honorary president of the Sierra Club, Dr. Wayburn has built a lifetime of conservation activism that has immeasurably benefited our country and the world.

Across our Nation, 100,000,000 acres of some of the most beautiful landscape in the world are protected for future generations thanks in large part to the dedicated efforts of Dr. Wayburn. Never a full-time conservationist, Dr. Wayburn has dedicated weekends and hours away from his medical practice to protecting our wild lands and wildlife.

From the Mount Tamalpais State Park in California to Admiralty Island in southeastern Alaska, Dr. Wayburn's accomplishments read as an honor roll of conservation achievements. He has been a true visionary in promotion of conservation and has inspired countless other Americans.

One example in particular uniquely epitomizes Dr. Wayburn's legacy. Driving out of San Francisco International Airport, you face west toward the hills of San Mateo County. Beyond those hills, along the coast for more than 10 miles to the south and for 75 miles to the north stands one of our country's most majestic national parks—the Golden Gate National Recreation Area. The park encompasses 80,000 acres in 3 counties and lies adjacent to Point Reyes National Seashore; thus more than 150,000 acres are preserved for habitat and wildlife and are enjoyed by more than 20 million people every year. Dr. Wayburn played an instrumental part in the founding of both of these national parks.

For over 100 years, the U.S. military fortified the region now home to the Golden Gate National Recreation Area. But in the 1960s the military became aware that its bunkers and missiles had little value for our Nation's defense and made plans to sell parts of the area's installations and fortifications.

Bay Area residents were determined that this magnificent landscape not be lost to ordinary development. Here was the chance for people to see the natural world in an urban context, to look upon the wilderness from the city, and Dr. Wayburn helped lead the way. When he learned of a farsighted Interior Department proposal to preserve underused military land across the Nation for public use and enjoyment, he became the leader of the citizens' group organized to save the land at his doorstep. He also insisted upon enlargement of the original 8,000-acre proposal.

Thanks to widespread support and the indefatigable efforts of Dr. Wayburn, the campaign to protect this invaluable natural treasure was a resounding success. Congress authorized the Golden Gate National Recreation Area in 1972, which now stands as a monument to the committed efforts of so many like Dr. Wayburn.

The story of the Golden Gate National Recreation Area stands as just one of many achievements that mark Dr. Wayburn's inimitable career.

In 1999, President Bill Clinton recognized Dr. Wayburn's lifetime of service by awarding him our Nation's highest civilian honor—the Presidential Medal of Freedom. In honoring his achievements, President Clinton counted Dr. Wayburn as the person who had saved "more of our wilderness than any other person alive." I can think of no more fitting praise to offer Dr. Wayburn.

Dr. Wayburn has created a legacy that will live on for generations to come, and he has made our Nation and our world a better place. I commend him on his efforts and offer my heartfelt gratitude for his service.●

S. 3892. A bill to reduce the number of deaths along the border between the United States and Mexico by improving the placement of rescue beacons, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, one cold May morning earlier this year, a Border Patrol agent found the body of a 3-year-old boy in a blue windbreaker, his arms crossed. He had died trying to cross our southern border, the youngest victim our borders have claimed this year.

The boy's mother's name is Edith Rodriguez. She is 25 years old. She attempted to cross the border illegally, in hopes that she might escape the desperate poverty of her home state of Veracruz, Mexico. Edith hired a human smuggler—a coyote.

The coyote gave his charges an illegal drug, ephedrine, to help them keep awake and moving. But Edith and her son still could not keep up with the group. So the coyote, in a cruel and heartless act, abandoned them in the desert. Alone. With no food and little water, with a dangerous drug coursing through his system, exposed to the elements—Edith Rodriguez's little boy died.

Edith Rodriguez violated the laws of the United States when she crossed the border illegally. She was wrong to violate our border. But all should agree that her son did not deserve to die.

Here are the facts: Every 18½ hours, someone dies trying to cross the border between the United States and Mexico. About a year ago, I asked the Government Accountability Office to study the deaths that take place along America's borders.

Today, my office released that study. The results are sobering, shocking, and, I strongly believe, a cause for action. Since 1995, deaths along our borders have doubled. Despite the heroic rescue efforts of the men and women of Customs and Border Protection, things have gotten worse. In 1995, 266 people died trying to cross our borders. Last year, 427 perished.

The increases, it appears, stem largely from an increase in deaths from exposure to the elements in the Sonoran Desert in Arizona. Illegal entries, however, have not increased. Quite frankly, it is getting more dangerous to cross our border.

Until recently, CBP did not even keep a systematic count of those who died crossing our borders. We still do not have a unified national strategy for reducing the deaths. We still do not know how well our safety efforts work—if they are saving lives or not. We need to do more.

The founding document of our Nation, the Declaration of Independence, lists "life" first on the list of Government's responsibilities. The overwhelming majority of the people who cross our border do so in search of a better life. They take enormous risks and make enormous investments in hopes of helping their families.

Illegal immigration needs to stop. We must defend our borders. We must construct physical barriers, add detention beds, hire personnel, and equip them with better technology. But we have a higher moral obligation to protect the life of every person—every man, woman, and child—who sets foot on American soil. We must do everything in our power to preserve life.

That is why I propose the Border Death Reduction Act. I urge my colleagues to support it.

The law will implement the GAO's recommendations. It will require CBP to create a strategy for reducing border deaths. It will mandate a full count of deaths along the border. It will impose tough, new penalties on coyotes who abandon their charges, and it will expand the network of rescue beacons that people in trouble can use to call for help.

These beacons, I believe, are an absolutely vital link in our border security system. Let me explain. Rescue beacons are devices at prominent locations that individuals can activate when they need help. They are tall polls with lights at the top and radio transmitters inside. People in trouble can activate a beacon to let CBP know that they need help. We know that beacons work: CBP has already saved dozens of people based entirely on beacon alerts.

But individuals who activate beacons do not get a free pass. They will, of course, receive necessary medical treatment. But rescued individuals will still be detained and deported like anyone else who violates our borders.

Deploying more beacons in the desert will save lives in the desert and simultaneously improve the security of our frontiers.

We cannot delay. We should not rest. We must protect the lives of all those who set foot upon our soil. I urge my colleagues to support the Border Death Reduction Act.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Ms. STABENOW (for herself and Mr. LEVIN):

S. 3896. A bill to provide for the return of the Fresnel Lens to the lantern room atop Presque Isle Light Station Lighthouse, Michigan, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I rise today to offer the Lester Nichols Presque Isle Light Station Act with my colleague, Senator LEVIN. Congressman STUPAK is introducing the companion legislation in the House of Representatives today. Our bill will restore the historic Fresnel lens to the Presque Isle lighthouse in Presque Isle Township, MI.

Michigan has the most lighthouses of any State in the Nation with a total of over 120. At one time we had over 100 manned lighthouses, more than any other State. This is not surprising considering that Michigan has 3,288 miles of shoreline along the Great Lakes. We are proud of our lighthouses and we are proud of the history and the maritime heritage that they represent. Our lighthouses are part of our identity as a State. In addition to performing as navigation aids, they remain a symbol of the importance that the Great Lakes played and continue to play in Michigan's history.

Most importantly, they are an important part of the economies of our coastal towns. Our lakeshore towns host visitors from across the country who travel to view the magnificence of our coastal areas and the lighthouses that illuminate them. These small communities are more dependent than ever on tourism dollars, and we must help them by coordinating our efforts to protect Michigan's lighthouses and promote Great Lakes' maritime culture.

In 2002 the U.S. Coast Guard, the Michigan State Historic Preservation Officer, and the township signed a memorandum of agreement stating that upon removal from the tower, the Fresnel lens would be restored by the township in a museum type setting with assistance from the Coast Guard. In 2005, the township completed their restoration work on the lens. Unfortunately, we soon learned that the Coast Guard has another policy that prevents a Fresnel lens from being replaced once it is removed from the tower.

The result is that this lighthouse has been historically compromised. Replacing the lens in its original home for the enjoyment of all who visit our historic lighthouse will not only ensure the integrity of the lighthouse, but it will enhance the function the lighthouse provides as an active navigational aid.

Very simply, our bill requires the Coast Guard to replace the restored Fresnel lens in the Presque Isle Light-house.

Our bill is named after Les Nichols, who through years of hard work and perseverance has led the successful effort in the restoration of the historic 3rd Order Fresnel Lens. The Fresnel lens is an integral part of the historic value of the New Presque Isle Light-house and will continue to attract tourists to this region of the State. Under Lester's leadership, this historic artifact will now be able to be viewed by future generations. I also want to acknowledge the work of Peter Pettalia, the Presque Isle Township Supervisor.

I hope that all of my colleagues will support this legislation and that we can move it quickly in the remaining time we have in the Senate.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3896

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Lester Nichols Presque Isle Light Station Act of 2006".

SEC. 2. RETURN OF FRESNEL LENS TO PRESQUE ISLE LIGHT STATION LIGHTHOUSE, MICHIGAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subsection (b), the Commandant of the Coast Guard shall modify the 2004 Agreement for Outgoing Loans (AOL) with Presque Isle Township, Michigan, in order to provide for the return of the Historic Fresnel Lens to the lantern room atop the Presque Isle Light Station Lighthouse, Michigan.

(b) CONDITIONS.—

(1) COMPLIANCE WITH APPLICABLE LAW.—Any modification under subsection (a) of the Agreement for Outgoing Loans described in that subsection shall comply with applicable provisions of section 5506 of the Omnibus Consolidated Appropriations Act, 1997 (Public Law 104-208; 110 Stat. 3009-518), relating to the conveyance of the Presque Isle Light Station.

(2) RETENTION OF OWNERSHIP OF LENS.—Notwithstanding the return of the Historic Fresnel Lens pursuant to subsection (a), the United States shall retain ownership of the lens.

(3) CONTINUING OPERATION OF AID TO NAVIGATION.—Notwithstanding the return of the Historic Fresnel Lens pursuant to subsection (a), the active aid to navigation, together with associated electronic and lighthouse equipment, at Presque Isle Light Station Lighthouse shall continue to be operated and maintained by the United States within the Historic Third Order Fresnel Lens at the Presque Isle Light Station Lighthouse.

By Mr. GRASSLEY (for himself and Mr. BAUCUS):

S. 3897. A bill to amend titles XI and XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for the sharing of certain data collected by the Centers for Medicare &

Medicaid Services with certain agencies, research centers and organizations, and congressional support agencies; from the Committee on Finance; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague from Montana, Senator BAUCUS, in introducing the Medicare Data Access and Research Act. Senator BAUCUS and I have long enjoyed a good working relationship in our roles as chairman and ranking member of the Finance Committee. Our work on this bill once again demonstrates our commitment to working in a bipartisan manner.

The Medicare Data Access and Research Act establishes a process through which Federal agencies and other researchers can access Medicare data for the purpose of health services research. This might seem like a pretty mundane issue to some people, but I can assure you that it is far from it. Medicare processes 500 million claims for benefits each year; millions of prescriptions have been filled under the new Medicare prescription drug benefit.

Linking data on hospital and physician services provided to Medicare beneficiaries to prescription drug data will offer a tremendous resource for researchers in our Federal agencies, as well as those based at universities and other research centers. What of research can these data support? They can support studies and analyses related to postmarketing surveillance of prescription drugs and research on drug safety. More concretely, analyzing the Medicare claims data can help agencies, such as the Food and Drug Administration FDA, identify situations like the one involving Vioxx more quickly, and provide a new valuable tool to enable the FDA to take swifter action to protect the public's health and well-being.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality, and the National Institutes of Health all have missions that require the conduct of meticulous health services research. The Medicare database and access to it established under the bill we are introducing today will help these agencies fulfill their missions to study immunization rates; to develop and monitor the use of preventive screenings; conduct research on the clinical comparative effectiveness of prescription drugs; and to help prevent, diagnose, and treat disease.

To ensure access to the data, the bill requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to enter data release agreements on an annual basis with these agencies. In entering the data release agreements, the Secretary must take appropriate steps to protect the confidentiality of the information, while maintaining the ability of researchers at Federal agencies to conduct meaningful analyses.

The bill also permits the Secretary to enter into data use agreements to permit researchers at universities and other organizations to have access to the data. As will be the case for the Federal agencies, these researchers may only use the data for purposes of advancing the public's health. They can conduct studies on the safety, effectiveness, and quality of health services.

Some people might be concerned that these data will be given to just anyone. That is not the case. In applying for data access, researchers at universities and other organizations will have to meet strict criteria. They must have well-documented experience in analyzing the type and volume of data to be provided under the agreement. They must agree to publish and publicly disseminate their research methodology and results. They must obtain approval for their study from a review board. They must comply with all safeguards established by the Secretary to ensure the confidentiality of information. These safeguards cannot permit the disclosure of information to an extent greater than permitted by the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 and the Privacy Act of 1974.

The final section of the bill ensures that congressional support agencies, including the Congressional Research Office, the Congressional Research Service, the Government Accountability Office, and the Medicare Payment Advisory Commission, also have access to data they need to carry out their functions and responsibilities. This body depends on the research and analyses conducted by those agencies to inform our deliberations and decisions on the Medicare Program.

Last year, Senator BAUCUS and I introduced the Medicare Value-Based Purchasing Act to establish a pay for performance system under Medicare. That bill was aimed at promoting quality and ensuring value under the Medicare Program. The bill that we are introducing today complements that objective. How can we promote quality and ensure value in Medicare? By having a better understanding of what services are effective, by knowing how we can help beneficiaries avoid illness and disease, by having insight about potential over-use and under-use of health care services, and by identifying troubling trends and patterns. How can we learn about those topics? By supporting rigorous health services research.

Mr. President, the Medicare Data Access and Research Act creates a sound framework for accomplishing that objective.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3897

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Medicare Data Access and Research Act”.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The new Medicare drug benefit under part D of title XVIII of the Social Security Act is delivered through private prescription drug plans. Private plans submit administrative and beneficiary level data to the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services as a condition of participation and payment in the new Medicare drug program.

(2) Data from the new Medicare drug benefit can be linked with hospital, ambulatory care, and other data to create a new comprehensive resource for the study of drug safety and effectiveness of medical care in older adults and low-income, disabled, and vulnerable populations. With appropriate protections for privacy, this data should be available to the Food and Drug Administration, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality, and the National Institutes of Health, and university-based research centers and other research organizations interested in furthering the public health through research on the safety, effectiveness, and quality of health care services provided under the Medicare program under title XVIII of the Social Security Act.

(3) Timely and ready access to certain data from the new Medicare drug benefit will allow congressional support agencies to inform and advise Congress on the cost, scope, and impact of the new benefit and assess its quality.

“(iii) their relationship to access and quality of care for Medicare beneficiaries.”

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, today, I am pleased to join Chairman GRASSLEY in introducing the Medicare Data Access and Research Act. This bill will take an important step to advance the safety, efficacy, and quality of health care services delivered to people under the Medicare Program and it will help improve the care delivered to all Americans.

This bill requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services, HHS, to make Medicare data accessible to Federal health agencies and the health services research community for the purpose of conducting studies that will serve the public health. As the largest single payer of health care services in the United States—covering over 40 million lives, 70 million hospital days, and processing nearly a billion physician claims per year—Medicare collects and maintains a wealth of information on the health services delivered to a significant portion of the population. This information has been a national resource for research and analysis of health care. And with the addition of the Medicare prescription drug benefit, it will be the most comprehensive resource our Nation has to study the effects of diseases and the treatments we have for them.

The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Service, CMS, currently releases certain Medicare data to the public and more comprehensive data to the research community. This bill would build on current activities by requiring CMS to link hospital claims, physician claims, and other relevant information to data collected under the new Medicare drug benefit.

In addition, the Secretary will provide yearly access to the linked Medicare dataset to all Federal health agencies within the department, such as the Food and Drug Administration, the Centers for Disease Control, the National Institutes of Health, and the Agency for Healthcare Quality and Research. These agencies will enter into data use agreements with CMS to ensure that the type and level of Medicare data shared is appropriate, that the agencies conduct research in accordance with their missions and the purpose of furthering the public health, and that the privacy of the data is protected. The goal is to give Federal health agencies another tool to evaluate the safety, efficacy, and quality of care delivered to Medicare beneficiaries—a large segment of the health system.

This bill also provides public health researchers access to the linked Medicare dataset. Expanding access to Medicare data will open up a new era in our health system. It will enable scientists to more quickly identify both short- and long-term safety concerns with drug regimens and health treatments. It will enable more treatments to be compared. And it will promote more development of guidelines, so providers and patients know more about what works best.

Some may argue that access to linked Medicare data should not be limited to researchers and should be available for commercial purposes. But the full Medicare database should be used exclusively for the public good and not for private or commercial gain. This is the crux of this bill. Hence, the bill limits the use of data to the purpose of providing “generalizable knowledge to inform the public health through scientific publication and other forms of public dissemination.” Strict penalties will be imposed on any unauthorized use of the data including civil money penalties and disqualification from receiving Medicare data for at least 2 years.

CMS will publish criteria used to approve research applications to ensure that those selected are qualified and experienced to conduct analyses and maintain the confidentiality of Medicare information. Researchers will also make public their detailed results and methods within 1 year from completing their studies. They will make available to the public at no charge any tool developed through this program. They must agree not to sell data or create commercial data products using such data and abide by safeguards protecting the confidentiality of the data established by the Secretary.

The final section of the bill ensures that congressional support agencies, including the Congressional Budget Office, the Congressional Research Service, the Government Accountability Office, and the Medicare Payment Advisory Commission, also have access to the full range of data they need to carry out their functions and responsibilities. Congress depends on the research and analyses conducted by these agencies to inform our deliberations and decisions on the Medicare Program.

Last year, I worked with Senator GRASSLEY to introduce the Medicare Value-Based Purchasing Act, which establishes a pay for performance system under Medicare. An important element of that system is the collection and reporting of quality measures to CMS and to the public. The bill we are introducing today complements those activities. We can improve health care by allowing Medicare to become a value-based purchaser of services and by reporting quality measures through the Medicare Program. And we can improve health care for all by allowing rigorous health services research to be conducted using the resource of Medicare data.

Mr. President, the Medicare Data Access and Research Act will allow us to expand our knowledge of health care and improve the quality of care for all Americans.

By Mr. GREGG (for himself, Mr. FRIST, Mr. BURR, Mr. CORNYN, and Mr. BENNETT):

S. 3900. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to improve the quality and efficiency of health care, to provide the public with information on provider and supplier performance, and to enhance the education and awareness of consumers for evaluating health care services through the development and release of reports based on Medicare enrollment, claims, survey, and assessment data; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Medicare Quality Enhancement Act of 2006 to improve quality and reduce the cost of health care.

The Medicare Quality Enhancement Act addresses three important problems in our Nation's health care delivery system: rising costs, broad variations in the quality of care, and a lack of information on health care quality and cost.

Among the most pressing issues that need to be addressed in the area of health care is the issue of rapidly rising health care costs. The United States spends more on health care as a percentage of GDP than any other industrialized country. According to the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS), total health expenditures are estimated to be $2.16 trillion in 2006 and are projected to rise to over $4 trillion in 2015.

The pressures of rising health care costs are being felt by consumers, providers, employers, State and local governments, and the Federal budget alike—with no end in sight. Premiums for employer-based health insurance rose by 9.2 percent in 2005—the fifth consecutive year of increases over 9 percent. Health insurance expenses are the fastest growing expense to employers, consuming more and more of each company's bottom line.

From a Federal budget perspective, over the next 10 years, Medicare will grow on average 8.5 percent to $885 billion and Medicaid will grow similarly at 8 percent to $413 billion. These programs along with Social Security will take up 56 percent of the total budget in 2016. Such rate of growth is unsustainable.

Despite this enormous level of spending, there is wide variation in the quality of the care Americans receive. In addition to the existing crisis of ever increasing costs, we are now learning that there are vast variations in the ratio of spending to outcomes, meaning that more care is not necessarily better care. A recent report by the Dartmouth Atlas Project demonstrated this point and showed no correlation between high utilization of services and high quality of care. This information provides an opportunity to improve care and reduce costs. We simply cannot afford business as usual in health care, especially when we have no way of determining the value of what we are purchasing.

The Agency on Healthcare Research and Quality (AHRQ) also reports wide variation in health care practice. AHRQ claims that millions of Americans fail to receive necessary care resulting in complications and increased costs. Others, they say, receive health care services that are completely unnecessary, which also increases costs.

These problems are compounded by a third issue the lack of information available to consumers and purchasers on quality and cost. Currently, health care consumers do not have the tools necessary to make sound quality and cost decisions about their care. The few tools that are available to them are based on limited amounts of privately held data and their analysis is often not broad enough to provide the most accurate results.

The Medicare Quality Enhancement Act gives consumers, employers, providers and others the tools they need to begin controlling unnecessary spending; improves quality of care in our nation's health care delivery system; and provides the public with reports to make informed health care decisions.

The bill works by sharing taxpayer funded Medicare data with private sector Medicare Quality Reporting Organizations (MQROs), allowing them to develop reports to measure health care quality for the public. Consumer groups, employers, insurance companies, labor unions and others have repeatedly requested access to Medicare claims data to improve the quality of the health care provided to their members, employees, and beneficiaries and to help control the ever-rising costs of health care. The Medicare Quality Enhancement Act ensures that the data collected by Medicare and paid for by the taxpayer can be utilized by qualified organizations to measure quality and control costs while protecting beneficiary privacy.

The measure also empowers consumer groups, providers, employers, insurance plans, labor unions and others by allowing them to request health care quality and efficiency reports from the newly-formed MQROs—information that will assist in better-informed purchasing decisions. Further, the bill provides for the public release of all reports, including detailed information on the methodology, standards and measures of quality used in developing the reports ensuring the information is available for the general public. In addition, MQROs that contract with the Department of Health and Human Services will be authorized to aggregate both private and public data, providing a significantly more robust assessment of both quality and efficiency.

In the development of this bill, my first goal was to protect beneficiary privacy. Specifically, the bill limits the number of MQRO participants and explicitly holds them to the strict standards of both the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA) and the Privacy Act. It also requires MQROs to have operational standards and procedures in place to provide for the security of the database. Lastly, the bill requires a privacy review by the Department of Health and Human Services of each analytical report prior to release.

The Medicare Quality Enhancement Act promotes the development of model quality standards through a newly established Quality Advisory Board within the Department of Health and Human Services and encourages the Administration to continue its extraordinary work with providers, consumers, insurers and others in the health care community toward sound quality measurement for all patients. Collaborative groups such as the Ambulatory Care Quality Alliance (AQA) and the Hospital Quality Alliance (HQA) are working hard to establish standards and the Medicare Quality Enhancement Act encourages their work to continue.

Under the bill, researchers are granted additional access to Medicare data and are allowed to report in a provider- and supplier-identifiable format as long as they meet existing strict criteria for the use of Medicare data within CMS. Some of our best information on quality and efficiency has been borne of fine academic institutions and private study and they, too, should have the opportunities to use this data to improve our health care system.

In closing, the Medicare Quality Enhancement Act is needed in order for America's health care system to improve. The public needs to understand the quality of the care they are purchasing and the time has come for the health care community to compete on quality, value, and cost payment should not simply be for the volume of care provided, but instead for the quality of the care provided.

The Medicare Quality Enhancement Act takes important steps to provide health care consumers with the information they need to make educated decisions about health care; information they already have to make decisions on nearly every other product they purchase in the marketplace. It requires that information paid for by the taxpayer and held by Medicare is fully available to improve our health care system. The public will then finally have the tools necessary to make informed health care decisions for themselves and their families.

This bill has the support of groups that represent consumers, providers, employers and insurers. I hope my colleagues will see the merit of this legislation and that it will be considered before we adjourn this year.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, for decades, healthcare analysts and industry experts have wondered whether healthcare should consume 16 percent of our Nation's economic output, as it currently does.

By virtually any measure, we spend more on healthcare than any other country in the world.

Consider the facts. According to the World Health Organization; we spend twice as much per person on healthcare as Britain and Japan; and we spend nearly 30 percent more than second-ranking Monaco.

In the past 5 years alone, the cost of health insurance to companies has nearly doubled—from $4,200 to $8,100 per family.

But experts also concur that rising healthcare costs does not mean the quality of healthcare is improving. Just this summer, the Institute of Medicine released the most extensive report ever on medication errors.

The results? At least 1.5 million Americans are sickened, injured, or killed each year by errors in prescribing, dispensing, and taking medications.

Errors are widespread—on average, a hospital patient is subjected to 1 error each day he or she occupies a hospital bed—and they are costly, at an estimated expense of $3.5 billion per year.

We have good reason to question the cost and quality of our healthcare services. That is why, in August, President Bush issued an executive order requiring all Federal agencies with a health insurance program to increase price transparency and provide options promoting quality and efficiency of care.

The Executive Order builds on the Federal Government's efforts to release Medicare payment information for individual healthcare providers.

While this is an important step toward transparency, more can be done. We need a way to analyze that data and make the results of the analysis consumer friendly, so that patients have real information they can use to make better informed healthcare decisions.

The bill before us today—of which I am a proud cosponsor—picks up where current Federal efforts leave off. The Medicare Quality Enhancement Act establishes quality transparency in the Medicare Program.

It doesn't require anything extra of providers. In fact, CMS is already collecting the data we need—because any provider that accepts Medicare patients must report quality data to CMS.

Instead, the bill requires CMS to establish public-private partnerships with Medicare quality reporting organizations, or MQROs. CMS will provide MQROs with data CMS already collects—Medicare enrollment, claims, and survey and assessment data. The MQROs will then perform the analysis.

Any entity or provider will be able to make report requests of MQROs, the results of which will be made public. The methodology an MQRO uses to analyze the data will also be made public. And providers can additionally instruct MQROs to use a certain methodology when making a report request.

I know many providers are concerned about CMS's capacity and capability to analyze healthcare quality data.

In part, that is why this bill requires CMS to contract with MQROs. The Secretary must determine that each MQRO has the research capability to conduct and complete reports as a condition for entering into the contract. MQROs must also demonstrate that they have the experience and expertise to analyze quality data.

As an additional contract requirement, each MQRO must comply with Federal privacy regulations to ensure beneficiary confidentiality. Additionally, MQROs must disclose financial interests as a condition to contract.

As a transplant surgeon, I understand the concerns and fears providers have. Many providers are worried that we aren't far enough along in terms of quality data collection to be able to analyze it.

But we must push the envelope in this area. It is my hope that provider groups will take the lead and request reports using a methodology and standards of quality that represent the best care in each of their fields.

Quality transparency is absolutely essential to improving healthcare. Without it, beneficiaries cannot make informed decisions about their healthcare.

Consumers already enjoy transparency in other industries. When we buy a new car, we can open an Internet browser and in a matter of moments can make objective side-by-side comparisons of different models—and then we can take them for a test drive.

When we need groceries, we pull out the Sunday supermarket ads to see what is on sale and where.

And when we furnish our homes, we shop around—comparing style, price, color, quality, warranty, and service.

But right now, we can't do that in healthcare. Whether it is a routine checkup or a heart transplant, we have no way of assessing how much bang we are getting for a buck.

Only when we institute quality transparency do we empower beneficiaries to make informed decisions about their healthcare.

This bill is a great step toward the goal of complete quality transparency. It is a formidable goal; that is why we are starting with something we know—Medicare.

Senator GREGG has worked long hours to bring this bill to fruition, and I thank him for his efforts. I hope our colleagues will join us in supporting this important measure.

By Mr. BAUCUS:

S. 3902. A bill to provide for education competitiveness; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, in August of 1802, from his desk in Monticello, President Thomas Jefferson glimpsed the future of the young American economy. He was shaken by what he saw.

Jefferson had just finished reading a book published a year earlier in London. The slim volume was the travel account of Alexander MacKenzie, a young Scotsman working in Great Britain's Canadian colonies.

In June of 1793, MacKenzie had crossed the Continental Divide at a place where it was just 3,000 feet high and easily portaged. Two weeks later, he reached the Pacific Ocean. Using a makeshift paint of vermilion and grease, Mackenzie inscribed his name on a rock to memorialize his discovery, and to claim it for Great Britain.

The economic implications of MacKenzie's discovery were enormous. In his book, MacKenzie urged the British to build on his discovery and develop a passage to the Pacific. Such a passage would give Great Britain control over much of North America's lucrative fur trade and access to the world's markets. Worse, MacKenzie's discovery threatened to stunt America's economic growth in its infancy.

MacKenzie's book lit a fire under Jefferson. That summer, he talked of little else. He enlisted the most qualified man he knew. And with him, Jefferson devised a plan for action. It was a plan to counter the economic threat from the north. It was a plan to safeguard America's economic future.

That December, President Jefferson presented his plan to Congress. It was America's first economic competitiveness plan. It called for one officer, a dozen soldiers, and $2,500.

Thomas Jefferson's economic competitiveness plan of 1802 has become better known as the Lewis and Clark Expedition. Today, we see that expedition as one of our Nation's great displays of ambition and courage. And today, we see that it laid the foundation of the United States as we know it.

Today, America faces a new competitive challenge. Our challenge is not over control of the fur trade. It comes not from an imperial power or its colony. It is not a race for territory in unexplored lands. Our challenge is far more complex. And the need to act is even more urgent.

America today faces a world more integrated, more interdependent, and more intensely competitive than ever in our history. In this world, it is our challenge to succeed. It is our challenge to leave our children and grandchildren an economy that is better than the one that we inherited.

We seek an economy that is not laden with debt, but bursting with opportunity. We seek an economy that plants the seeds of innovation and education today, knowing that generations far in the future will harvest their bounty. We seek an economy whose workers are increasingly productive, and whose skills are continuously sharpened.

Our challenge is to create an economy in which investment in our workers is our greatest asset, not our heaviest burden. Our challenge is to create an economy known for what it will be, rather than for what it was.

To realize this competitive economy, we must—like Jefferson—rise to the challenge. We must—like Jefferson—look to unknown horizons and march out to meet them. We must call upon our greatest minds and set them to creating a plan. And we must dedicate the resources necessary to implement that plan.

I have spent much of the past year planning a comprehensive competitiveness agenda. In February, I introduced the Trade Competitiveness Act, a bill to open markets and keep a level playing field for America's ranchers, farmers, and businesses.

In March, I introduced the Energy Competitiveness Act, to fund cutting edge research in energy while making alternative energies more affordable.

In April, I introduced the Savings Competitiveness Act, to create savings today, so that we may invest and innovate tomorrow.

In May, I introduced the Research Competitiveness Act, to give start-ups and universities better access to capital for research and development, and to improve and make permanent the R&D tax credit.

Today, I am introducing the fifth in this series of bills: the Education Competitiveness Act of 2006. Just as education is the foundation of a competitive economy, this legislation is the foundation of my competitiveness agenda.

Thomas Jefferson knew that it was not enough to send Lewis and Clark to the Pacific Ocean without the means to return. Lewis and Clark knew that the discoveries and contacts that they made had to be lasting to make a difference for our economy.

The Education Competitiveness Act is also designed to have a lasting effect. This legislation embraces education in its earliest stages, following through to continuing education and worker training. Each provision is designed with maximum flexibility to meet our States' unique needs. It is a bill that recognizes excellence, welcomes innovation, and rewards ambition.

The Education Competitiveness Act has seven important components.

First, it recognizes that our Nation needs to continue to bring quality teachers into the classroom. The bill funds 100,000 scholarships for future teachers of languages, early education, and science. It creates incentives for teachers to serve in rural and underserved areas. And it rapidly expands funding to advanced placement and international baccalaureate programs.

Second, the bill recognizes that early education is widely considered to be one of the best education investments that money can buy. The bill creates a flexible program of matching grants to build a national system of universal, voluntary prekindergarten. The bill sets out benchmarks for quality and provides help for States to make sure that their teachers are the best that they can be.

Third, the bill helps students to go the extra mile in their studies, by offering States the means to expand afterschool programs in everything from college test preparation to drug prevention. Summer programs get students out of the classroom for hands-on experience in science, technology, mathematics, and engineering.

Fourth, the bill looks to the needs of tomorrow's workforce. That workforce will increasingly demand technical skills based in math, science, and engineering. The bill provides a free college education to any student wishing to study science, technology, math, or engineering. In return, the student must work 4 years in that field of study. The bill offers States matching grants to establish and expand specialty math, science, and technology schools. And the bill makes young promising scientists eligible for cash grants to continue their research.

Fifth, the bill addresses the chronic neglect of our Nation's Indian education. The bill fully funds Indian colleges and makes a real commitment to the Johnson O'Malley program. The bill also increases the Pell grant to $6,000. Eighty percent of Montana's students rely on financial aid, including Pell grants.

Sixth, the Education Competitiveness Act allows American workers to continue learning. The bill funds programs to link businesses and schools, to give workers the skills that they need. Where universities and community colleges are too far away, distance learning grants will help bridge that gap.

Finally, the bill's tax provisions grant greater access to education. The bill starts by simplifying confusing tax credits and combining them into a single refundable higher education credit of up to $2,000 per student. The bill eases the burden of loan repayment by permitting graduates to deduct more of the interest paid on their student loans. And the bill increases the deductions for charitable contributions to schools as well as teachers' expenses in classrooms.

Taken together, these seven components form a bill that is both comprehensive and responsible. It is a bill that would help to secure a more competitive American economy.

I look forward to returning to the floor to describe each title in greater detail. I also look forward to discussing these proposals with my colleagues.

The Education Competitiveness Act sets out a bold agenda, to be sure. Some of its rewards may only be reaped decades from now. Some of its benefits may only be realized by our grandchildren. But I firmly believe that this is an agenda that we must begin to implement today.

Like the journey of Lewis and Clark 200 years ago, this is an agenda that portends discovery and rewards for America. It is an agenda that promises a passage to a new nation. I urge my colleagues to join me as we advance to this future, and join me in sponsoring the Education Competitiveness Act.

Whereas from September 15, 2006, through October 15, 2006, the United States celebrates Hispanic Heritage Month;

Whereas the presence of Hispanics in North America predates the founding of the United States, and, as among the first to settle in the New World, Hispanics and their descendants have had a profound and lasting influence on the history, values, and culture of the United States;

Whereas, since the arrival of the earliest Spanish settlers more than 400 years ago, millions of Hispanic men and women have come to the United States from Mexico, Puerto Rico, Cuba, and other Caribbean regions, Central America, South America, and Spain, in search of freedom, peace, and opportunity;

S. CON. RES. 115

Whereas over 205,000,000 Americans use the Internet in the United States, including over 84,000,000 home-users through broadband connections, to communicate with family and friends, manage their finances, pay their bills, improve their education, shop at home, and read about current events;

Whereas the approximately 26,000,000 small businesses in the United States, who represent 99.7 percent of all United States employers and employ 50 percent of the private work force, increasingly rely on the Internet to manage their businesses, expand their customer reach, and enhance their connection with their supply chain;

Whereas, according to the Department of Education, nearly 100 percent of public schools in the United States have Internet access, with approximately 93 percent of instructional classrooms connected to the Internet;

Whereas having access to the Internet in the classroom enhances the education of our children by providing access to educational online content and encouraging responsible self-initiative to discover research resources;

Whereas, according to the Pew Institute, almost 9 in 10 teenagers between the ages of 12 and 17, or 87 percent of all youth (approximately 21,000,000 people) use the Internet, and 78 percent (or about 16,000,000 students) say they use the Internet at school;

Whereas teen use of the Internet at school has grown 45 percent since 2000, and educating children of all ages about safe, secure, and ethical practices will not only protect their computer systems, but will also protect the physical safety of our children, and help them become good cyber citizens;

Whereas the growth and popularity of social networking websites have attracted millions of teenagers, providing them with a range of valuable services;

Whereas teens should be taught how to avoid potential threats like cyber bullies, online predators, and identity thieves that they may encounter while using cyber services;

Whereas the critical infrastructure of our Nation relies on the secure and reliable operation of information networks to support our Nation’s financial services, energy, telecommunications, transportation, health care, and emergency response systems;

Whereas cyber security is a critical part of the overall homeland security of our Nation, in particular the control systems that control and monitor our drinking water, dams, and other water management systems, our electricity grids, oil and gas supplies, and pipeline distribution networks, our transportation systems, and other critical manufacturing processes;

Whereas terrorists and others with malicious motives have demonstrated an interest in utilizing cyber means to attack our Nation;

Whereas the mission of the Department of Homeland Security includes securing the homeland against cyber terrorism and other attacks;

Whereas Internet users and our information infrastructure face an increasing threat of malicious attacks through viruses, worms, Trojans, and unwanted programs such as spyware, adware, hacking tools, and password stealers, that are frequent and fast in propagation, are costly to repair, and disable entire computer systems;

Whereas, according to Privacy Rights Clearinghouse, since February 2005, over 90,000,000 records containing personally-identifiable information have been breached, and the overall increase in serious data breaches in both the private and public sectors are threatening the security and well-being of the citizens of the United States;

Whereas consumers face significant financial and personal privacy losses due to identity theft and fraud, as reported in over 686,000 consumer complaints in 2005 received by the Consumer Sentinel database operated by the Federal Trade Commission;

Whereas Internet-related complaints in 2005 accounted for 46 percent of all reported fraud complaints received by the Federal Trade Commission;

Whereas the total amount of monetary losses for such Internet-related complaints exceeded $680,000,000, with a median loss of $350 per complaint;

Whereas the youth of our Nation face increasing threats online such as inappropriate content or child predators;

Whereas, according to the National Center For Missing and Exploited Children, 34 percent of teens are exposed to unwanted sexually explicit material on the Internet, and 1 in 7 children report having been approached by an online child predator;

Whereas national organizations, policy-makers, government agencies, private sector companies, nonprofit institutions, schools, academic organizations, consumers, and the media recognize the need to increase awareness of computer security and enhance the level of computer and national security in the United States;

Whereas the mission of National Cyber Security Alliance is to increase awareness of cyber security practices and technologies to home-users, students, teachers, and small businesses through educational activities, online resources and checklists, and public service announcements; and

Whereas the National Cyber Security Alliance has designated October as National Cyber Security Awareness Month, which will provide an opportunity to educate the people of the United States about computer security: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Congress—

(1) supports the goals and ideals of National Cyber Security Awareness Month; and
(2) will work with Federal agencies, national organizations, businesses, and educational institutions to encourage the development and implementation of existing and future computer security voluntary consensus standards, practices, and technologies in order to enhance the state of computer security in the United States.

He has now earned his second Golden Gavel Award in this, his first Congress in the Senate. If he keeps this up, we may need to establish a special Platinum Gavel Award in his honor.

We all owe Senator BURR a special thank-you for his unprecedented service to the Senate as an institution.

I am sure he has heard many interesting and stimulating speeches in the Senate during those 200 hours.

HISPANIC HERITAGE MONTH

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate now proceed to the consideration of S. Res. 571, which was submitted earlier today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 571) recognizing Hispanic Heritage Month and celebrating the vast contributions of Hispanic Americans to the strength and culture of the United States.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize the month-long celebration beginning today honoring the heritage of Hispanic Americans.

Every year, we set aside a month to pay special regard to the contributions of Hispanic Americans.

The tradition began nearly 40 years ago, when Congress authorized President Lyndon Johnson to proclaim National Hispanic Heritage Week. Two decades later, President Ronald Reagan expanded the celebration to 4 weeks—today's National Hispanic Heritage Month.

While the celebration has begun only recently, Hispanics have always defined America.

The history of Europeans in what is now the United States, in fact, begins with the voyage of a Spanish explorer named Ponce de Leon who landed on Florida's west coast in 1521.

Since then, Hispanic Americans have influenced every aspect of our history and culture. Let me discuss just a few:

David Glasgow Farragut, a proud Tennessean of Spanish descent, proved the North's most able naval commander during the Civil War. He became the first admiral of the U.S. Navy.

Severo Ochoa, a Nobel Prize recipient, revolutionized modern medical science when he discovered RNA, ribonucleic acid, one of the chemical building blocks of life.

Celia Cruz, a singer, introduced salsa music to the United States through her recordings and performances.

Louis and Walter Alvarez, both research scientists, originated the once-controversial theory that asteroid impacts can explain the periodic mass extinctions that have shaped the history of life on Earth.

Roberto Goizueta, Oscar Hijuelos, Benjamín Cardozo, Alberto Gonzalez, Rita Hayworth, Roberto Clemente—entrepreneurs, artists, public servants, athletes, scientists, scholars—these names stand out, but many others move America forward every day. We cannot name all of the countless heroes who have fought in wars, treated the sick, taught our children, and devoted themselves to public service.

Through continuing migration to our shores, Hispanic Americans continue to strengthen American culture. Foods, music, and artistic forms considered unalterably "foreign" just a few short years ago have now become firm parts of the American identity.

Today, as we begin a month-long celebration of Hispanic heritage, I join with all Americans in recognizing the invaluable role of Hispanic Americans in shaping and enriching these United States.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, today I wish to voice my support for the Senate resolution designating September 16, 2006, through October 16, 2006, as Hispanic Heritage Month. Hispanic Americans are our largest ethnic minority, and I am a cosponsor of this resolution because I believe it is an appropriate way to recognize the contributions made by our Hispanic American community.

Hispanics have migrated to the United States from all over the world. They have added to our national security by serving valiantly in the U.S. Armed Forces; many have paid the ultimate price and sacrificed their lives for freedom.

In my home State of Texas, Hispanic women and men shaped our Republic in its early years, and to this day, subsequent generation of Texans continue to enjoy the liberty for which our Texan and American ancestors fought so courageously.

Americans of Hispanic origin have contributed to the economy with their notable work ethic and have served honorably at all levels of government. Three of my Senate colleagues find their roots in Hispanic origins.

It is because of these contributions and their love of equality, justice, and independence that I am proud to support the distinguished majority leader, Senator FRIST, and my other Senate colleagues in designating September 16, 2006, through October 16, 2006, as Hispanic Heritage Month.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the resolution be agreed to, the preamble be agreed to, and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 571) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, is as follows:

S. RES. 571

Whereas from September 15, 2006, through October 15, 2006, the United States celebrates Hispanic Heritage Month;

Whereas the presence of Hispanics in North America predates the founding of the United States, and, as among the first to settle in the New World, Hispanics and their descendants have had a profound and lasting influence on the history, values, and culture of the United States;

Whereas, since the arrival of the earliest Spanish settlers more than 400 years ago, millions of Hispanic men and women have come to the United States from Mexico, Puerto Rico, Cuba, and other Caribbean regions, Central America, South America, and Spain, in search of freedom, peace, and opportunity;

Whereas Hispanic Americans have contributed throughout the ages to the prosperity and culture of the United States;

Whereas the Bureau of the Census now lists Hispanic Americans as the largest ethnic minority within the United States;

Whereas Hispanic Americans serve in all branches of the Armed Forces and have fought valiantly in every war in the history of the United States;

Whereas the Medal of Honor is the highest United States military distinction, awarded since the Civil War for "conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of life above and beyond the call of duty";

Whereas 41 men of Hispanic origin have earned this distinction, including 21 such men who sacrificed their lives;

Whereas many Hispanic Americans who served in the Armed Forces have continued their service to the United States;

Whereas many Hispanic Americans are dedicated public servants, holding posts at the highest levels of government, including 3 current seats in the United States Senate; and

Whereas Hispanic Americans have a deep commitment to faith, family, and community, an enduring work ethic, and a perseverance to succeed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) recognizes September 15, 2006, through October 15, 2006, as Hispanic Heritage Month;

(2) celebrates the vast contributions of Hispanic Americans to the strength and culture of the United States; and

(3) encourages the people of the United States to observe Hispanic Heritage Month with appropriate programs and activities.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, September 14, 2006

The House met at 9 a.m.

Rabbi Amy Rader, B'nai Torah Congregation, Boca Raton, Florida, offered the following prayer:

When the theologian of my tradition, Dr. Abraham Joshua Heschel, marched in Selma, Alabama, with Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Rabbi Heschel said: "My feet were praying."

Esteemed men and women in this Chamber, I ask for God's help to move our prayers from our lips to our feet. Our world is in desperate need of action, change, and presence. As the leaders of this sacred democracy, your feet in any one place can make the difference between life and death.

May it be God's will that your feet lead our country on the path of compassion and justice. May your feet walk steadily to draw the estranged closer and the vulnerable into protection. May your feet stand firmly and united as the agents of freedom, equality, progress, and hope.

Master of the universe, inspire our deeds to be their own prayers. May our work join with God's spirit to bring about a better day for all creation. Amen.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased and I am most honored today to welcome Rabbi Amy Rader and her family here to Washington, DC.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. REHBERG) at 10 a.m.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain ten 1-minutes per side.

THE FACE OF THE ENEMY

(Mr. POE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. POE. Mr. Speaker, in a few days Americans will see the face of the enemy. He will set foot on American soil and speak before the United Nations.

President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad of Iran, the person who denies the Holocaust ever happened and wants Israel decimated and destroyed, insists he is not making nuclear bombs but just nuclear power. No one believes him, and why should we?

This is the same man who is accused of holding U.S. soldiers hostage after taking the U.S. embassy in Tehran. And some people say this picture proves it; here he is with an American hostage that he is holding.

But the Iranian attack on our embassy in 1979 is overshadowed by IEDs in Iraq, supplied by Iran, to kill American soldiers every day. In a recent interview, he did not deny having suicide bombers ready to strike America.

We would never have invited Lenin, Stalin, Hitler or Mussolini to the U.S. Now we are welcoming this terrorist on American soil. Instead of receiving keys to the city, shouldn't he receive keys to the jailhouse?

And that's just the way it is.

CONGRATULATING THE DETROIT SHOCK ON WINNING THE 2006 WOMEN'S NATIONAL BASKETBALL ASSOCIATION CHAMPIONSHIP

(Ms. KILPATRICK of Michigan asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. KILPATRICK of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I stand to congratulate the Detroit Shock, the Women's National Basketball Association's champions for 2006, the second time they have won the title in 3 years; 12 outstanding women, who have come forth and persevered and won the championship one more time. Six of those women were on the world championship team of 2003.

Congratulations to Coach Bill Laimbeer, Assistant Coach Rick Mahorn, as well as Cheryl Reeve. Most valuable player Deanna Nolan, congratulations for those jump shots and tenacity.

You stand in history in the Women's National Basketball Association, as well as the National Basketball Association, as winners. Let women all over the world know that you can persevere in whatever you choose to be.

Congratulations, Detroit Shock, 2006 Women's National Basketball Association winners. We love you.

HONORING XAVIER UNIVERSITY, DILLARD UNIVERSITY AND SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY AT NEW ORLEANS

(Mr. JEFFERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. JEFFERSON. Mr. Speaker, as we honor Historically Black Colleges and

□ This symbol represents the time of day during the House proceedings, e.g., □ 1407 is 2:07 p.m.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

Universities this week, I rise to applaud the commitment and tradition of HBCUs in my district. I am proud to say that in my district I am able to represent three of the most well-known HBCUs in the country: Xavier University, Dillard University and Southern University at New Orleans.

Xavier University ranks among the top in sending African Americans to medical school and accounts for a large share of African American pharmacists nationwide.

Dillard, highly regarded by U.S. News and World Report, has become widely known for its nursing program.

After starting with only two buildings SUNO has produced leading African Americans in the disparate fields of social work and computer science.

Collectively, these schools have served as profiles in courage and leadership as they rebuild in the face of Hurricane Katrina, which still threatens the future of all of them.

They have done a great deal with sometimes lean resources; however, that is the signature of HBCUs across the Nation. As a proud graduate of Southern University in Baton Rouge, I have been one of the many beneficiaries of the positive, nurturing and high-quality education provided by these nationally significant institutions.

I urge my colleagues to work towards ensuring that generations of African American students are able to benefit from the very special contribution that HBCUs provide to higher education.

MOURNING THE LOSS OF FORMER TEXAS GOVERNOR ANN RICHARDS

(Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to report to the House of Representatives the loss of an American original, and that is our former governor, the great Ann Richards. Governor Richards died yesterday after a long battle with throat cancer. She was 73.

I can tell you for sure that Ann Richards made us proud to be Texans. Dorothy Ann Willis Richards began her career in politics in the early 1970s after having raised four children. A Democrat, she served as County Commissioner in Travis County, Texas, from 1977 to 1982. Ann Richards was elected to the first of two terms as Texas State Treasurer in 1982.

She was born in Lakeview, Texas. She grew up in Waco, Texas, and graduated from Waco High School. And she loved her Texas.

After graduation, she taught social studies and history at Fulmore Junior High School in Austin, Texas, from 1955 to 1956. She had two daughters and two sons in the following years, and she campaigns for Texas liberals and progressives such as Henry B. Gonzalez, Ralph Yarborough, and Sarah Weddington, and she was not ashamed.

In 1976, Richards ran against and defeated a three-term incumbent on the Travis County, Texas, Commissioner Court.

Ann Richards gave that unforgettable keynote address in the 1988 Democratic National Convention, and she turned the Nation around.

In 1990, she sought the Democratic gubernatorial nomination. She won and she won as governor. And I am reminded of the Honorable Barbara Jordan, who campaigned for her; and the two of them were Texas' dynamic duo.

She did a lot as governor. The first thing she said was to cut the shackles off of the governor's house and opened it to the people of Texas. That is the kind of public official Ann Richards was and continued to be, someone who believed in the people's house and the people first.

She helped jump-start the economy in Texas. She helped reform the prison system by providing an abuse program for inmates, and she instituted the Texas lottery so that educational opportunities could be improved for our children.

Texas has lost a wonderful native daughter, someone who loved and cherished democracy, justice, the opportunity for those who could not speak for themselves.

Ann Richards stood for the opportunity for women in the public sector. She said to us, do not turn back, and yes, we can.

None of us who knew and loved Ann Richards will ever forget her or the way she heightened and brightened the lives of all the people she served. She was one in a million and she will be deeply missed. She will never be replaced. She was an American original. She was my friend. We will forever be in her debt and forever miss her.

Thank you, Ann Richards, for being the kind of role model for all the women, all the girls and all of America.

FEAR IS ALL THE REPUBLICANS HAVE TO OFFER

(Mr. McDERMOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, the Republicans gave us their November 7 resolution last night. Five years ago, the Nation stood as one, but the Republicans have divided us ever since. They believe dividing America is the best hope for clinging to power in the November election.

They can pass self-congratulatory resolutions that have more to do with November 7 than September 11, but patting themselves on the back is no substitute for protecting the American people by adopting the recommendations of the bipartisan 9/11 Commission.

Republicans have not done that. Instead, Republicans have been ordered by the President to continue his fiction that Iraq and al Qaeda were connected. The evidence proves otherwise, so Republican leaders are trying to hide the evidence beneath their rhetoric.

Just remember this: Republicans have propped up this President by spending more on the Iraq war than on domestic security. Republicans have given us fear and fiction around the fifth anniversary of 9/11. Just imagine what they have in store for us in the next weeks.

Fear has never made America safer, but that is all the Republicans have to offer, and that is simply not enough to protect and defend America in the 21st century.

WE NEED A NEW DIRECTION ON SECURITY IN AMERICA

(Ms. SOLIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, today I rise because America needs a new direction for homeland security. Our Republican colleagues are ignoring our Nation's real security needs.

The 9/11 Commission made 41 recommendations on ways to make our Nation safer, but just this December America received a flunked Homeland Security 101, receiving 10 Cs, 12 Ds and 4 Fs.

Only 6 percent of containers at our ports are being screened, most air cargo is not being screened, and 5 years after 9/11, the Nation still lacks a unified terrorist watch list for airline passengers.

We need a new direction for America's security. We must guard against future attacks by implementing all the 9/11 Commission recommendations; and we must screen 100 percent of our containers and cargo bound to the United States in ships and planes; and we must ensure our first responders have the training, equipment and technology they need.

PRESIDENT'S ATTEMPTS TO CONNECT IRAQ WITH THE OVERALL WAR ON TERROR

(Ms. LEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, President Bush continues to say that one of the most difficult parts of his job is trying to connect the war in Iraq with the overall war on terror, but I tell you it is a difficult job because it is clear there is no connection between the war in Iraq and the overall global war on terror.

Just this past week, a bipartisan Senate Intelligence Committee report concluded that there was no link between Saddam Hussein and al Qaeda. In fact, the Senators wrote that Saddam, "only expressed negative sentiments about Osama bin Laden."

And yet, President Bush continues to contend that our Nation's safety depends on what happens on the streets of Baghdad. With all due respect, this is just not the case.

The President is trying to convince the American people that al Qaeda is responsible for all of the violence in Iraq. In reality, the overall majority of the violence today comes from the growing sectarian divisions between the Sunnis and the Shias, a civil war which some of us believe has begun.

From day one, the Iraq war diverted the Bush administration's attention from those who attacked us on 9/11. Today, Osama bin Laden is still at large, and the Taliban is alive and well in Afghanistan.

It is time for the President to focus his attention on those responsible for the horrific 9/11 attacks 5 years ago.

AMERICA IS NOT SAFER ACCORDING TO BIPARTISAN PANEL OF FOREIGN POLICY EXPERTS

(Mr. CARNAHAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CARNAHAN. Mr. Speaker, the President says America is safer today than it was before 9/11, but according to a new report recently released from Foreign Policy magazine at foreignpolicy.com, an overwhelming majority of America's foreign policy experts across the political spectrum believe we are less safe today.

Eighty-four percent of those interviewed for the survey said we are losing the war on terror, and 86 percent said the world is becoming more dangerous for the U.S. and for the American people. Again, this is a study of the top 100 national security experts in our Nation, weighted for balance between conservatives and liberals.

Leslie Gelb, the president emeritus of the Council on Foreign Relations, stated, "Foreign-policy experts have never been in so much agreement about an administration's performance abroad. The reason is that it's clear to nearly all that President Bush and his team have had a totally unrealistic view of what they can accomplish with military force and threats of force."

In other words, our Nation not only needs a military strategy, but it also needs a diplomatic strategy. It is time for a new approach, a new direction that includes both.

U.S. MUST USE INFLUENCE IN A POSITIVE WAY IN THE MIDDLE EAST

(Mr. KUCINICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, the United States must begin to use its influence in a positive way in the Middle East to help secure Israel by first bringing all parties together in the region, without preconditions, for peace talks. The U.S. made a mistake by standing aside during the 34-day war. We now must help to create the circumstances which stabilize the Government of Lebanon by assisting with the recovery and by helping with the restoration of housing, businesses and infrastructure.

Secondly, the situation in Gaza is desperate. Unemployment is approaching 50 percent. The government workforce, 40 percent of all workers have been paid only about a dime on a dollar due in wages since the beginning of the year. Childhood malnutrition cannot even be resolved by the massive U.N. aid now, which characterizes 70 percent of the population as refugees.

With no jobs, little or no electricity, limited access to water, conditions are dire. The U.S. cannot stand by and permit this humanitarian disaster to continue. We must do everything we can to help Israel secure itself.

We also have to remember that we must use our influence to bring about peace by recognizing the conditions which exist.

IN MEMORY OF JOHN WATTERS WRIGHT, CORPORAL, WORLD WAR II

(Mr. LARSEN of Washington asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor the life of John Watters Wright. I had the privilege of meeting John 3 short years ago when I was able to present a commendation and his Bronze Star he had earned in World War II.

In 1944, as a soldier in World War II, actually as a marine in World War II, John was badly wounded during a sniper attack. Despite serious injuries, he kept fighting. He destroyed the enemy sniper's nest, saving himself and the lives of others in his division. His CO recognized John's heroism and promised to cite him for a deserved medal to commemorate his actions.

In 2003, I had the privilege of presenting John with the awards that he had earned 59 years earlier. So nearly 60 years after his self-sacrificing actions, the United States finally acknowledged the heroism he displayed in World War II with a Bronze Star, but it was an acknowledgment delayed far too long.

Corporal Wright died last month, and as we honor the life of Corporal Wright, we are challenged by his patriotism. He challenged us not only to recognize our veterans, but he challenged us to care for our veterans when they come home from deployments. He challenged us to defend the Constitution and the Bill of Rights without question, but do that through debate and sometimes dissents.

So I stand today to honor the life of Corporal John Watters Wright, who is truly an American hero.

SECRETARY OF DEFENSE DONALD RUMSFELD

(Ms. SCHWARTZ of Pennsylvania asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SCHWARTZ of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, more than 3 years after President Bush declared "mission accomplished," U.S. troops, their families, and all Americans continue to pay a high price for the Bush administration's "stay the course" policy in Iraq.

We cannot afford to stay the course in Iraq. We need a new direction, which must begin with new leadership at the Department of Defense. Secretary Rumsfeld must be held accountable for his misconduct of this war. He has executed it with no plan beyond the initial invasion, rejecting sound advice and guidance from experienced generals, Middle East experts, troops on the ground, and elected officials from both sides of the aisle.

From his failure to prepare the military for extended deployments, to his decision to disband the Iraqi military, to his unwillingness to acknowledge miscalculations and false information, he has demonstrated that he does not grasp the challenges facing the Iraqi people or the challenges facing our Nation and the military.

His failed management of the war has not made us safer, and his recent attacks against Americans who question our strategy undermine the very freedoms he has sworn to protect.

To fulfill our national security mission, it is time for a new Secretary of Defense and time for a new direction in Iraq.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Ms. Curtis, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 1442. An act to complete the codification of title 46, United States Code, "Shipping", as positive law.

The message also announced that the Senate has passed bills of the following titles in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1902. An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to authorize funding for the establishment of a program on children and the media within the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to study the role and impact of electronic media in the development of children.

S. 2464. An act to revise a provision relating to a repayment obligation of the Fort McDowell Yavapai Nation under the Fort McDowell Indian Community Water Rights Settlement Act of 1990, and for other purposes.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 6061, SECURE FENCE ACT OF 2006

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, by the direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 1002 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order without intervention of any point of order to consider in the House the bill (H.R. 6061) to establish operational control over the international land and maritime borders of the United States. The amendment printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution shall be considered as adopted. The bill, as amended, shall be considered as read. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill, as amended, to final passage without intervening motion except: (1) one hour of debate equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Homeland Security; and (2) one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman, my friend, from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time is yielded for purposes of debate only.

This rule provides for 1 hour debate in the House, equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Homeland Security. It waives all points of order against consideration of the bill and provides that the amendment printed in the Rules Committee report accompanying the resolution shall be considered as adopted. Finally, the rule provides the minority with one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of this rule and the underlying bill, H.R. 6061, the Secure Fence Act of 2006. This legislation, much of which has already been passed by the House as part of H.R. 4437, the Border Protection, Anti-terrorism, and Illegal Control Act of 2005, is a positive step in regaining operational control of our borders and achieving broad reform of the immigration process.

This legislation is the product of five formal hearings in standing committees during this Congress alone. It also draws on a number of hearings in past Congresses and a wealth of information learned through field hearings conducted over the August recess by Members of this Republican majority.

Last month, many Members of this body, who were greatly concerned with addressing the problem of our porous borders, traveled across the country to determine what steps could be taken to harden our borders and ensure that those who would wish to harm us cannot exploit this well-documented weakness.

Like many other Members, over August I traveled to our border. I traveled with Congressmen CHARLIE DENT, HENRY CUELLAR, JOHN DOOLITTLE, and JO BONNER to meet with Border Patrol agents from Laredo, Texas, and to see firsthand the needs of our country as it relates to border protection.

We discussed with these dedicated men and women on the front line of our border how best to address the rampant drug and human smuggling that occurs in an area along our southern border. We learned firsthand of the challenges faced by our brave Border Patrol agents in combating the flood of criminal activity that occurs along our southern border on a daily basis. The information we learned on this trip, and the information learned from dozens of other field hearings just like this from this past August, all have been incorporated in the legislation that we will hope to take up today.

The Secure Fence Act of 2006 advances the rule of law and protects our Nation by providing our Border Patrol with the tools they need to achieve operational control of the border. The language closely mirrors sections 101, 1002, and 1003 of the border bill already passed by the House, and authorizes more than 700 miles of two-layered reinforced fencing along the southwest border with prioritized placement at critical, highly populated areas. It also requires an evaluation of infrastructure needs along the northern border of America.

The Secure Fence Act also mandates that the Department of Homeland Security achieve and maintain operational control over the entire border through a "virtual fence" utilizing leading edge technology and through established best practices to create optimum results at the most efficient cost. This includes the deployment of cameras, ground sensors, unmanned aerial vehicles, and integrated surveillance technology.

This legislation further requires the Department of Homeland Security to provide all necessary authority to border personnel to disable fleeing vehicles, similar to the authority already held by United States Coast Guard for maritime vessels.

Finally, this legislation requires DHS to assess our Nation's vulnerability on our northern border and to address how they can be effectively and efficiently resolved.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation represents a commonsense step that this Congress can take to deal with problems of alien smuggling, illicit drug running, and illegal immigration. The House has already passed a more comprehensive bill that enjoyed the support of 239 bipartisan Members. But because a broader package of reforms may not be enacted into law this year, our Republican leadership has decided to take the least controversial portions of this broader reform effort and to pass them in pieces that the other body can then take up and pass.

I would like to commend Speaker HASTERT and Majority Leader BOEHNER for their vision and leadership in bringing this commonsense bill to the floor today. I would also like to thank my dear friend, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and Chairman PETE KING, who is chairman of Homeland Security, and all the members of the Judiciary and Homeland Security Committees for their hard work in doing the research and hearings that were necessary to bring this bill to the floor.

I encourage all my colleagues to support this rule and the underlying legislation to provide operational control of our borders.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas, my friend, Mr. SESSIONS, for the time, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong opposition to this closed rule and the underlying legislation, which is nothing more than political gamesmanship in the run-up to the mid-term election. Sounds good, does nothing.

To paraphrase the Vice President, it seems to me that the majority is in the last throes of keeping control of the House and is throwing vacuous public policy at us in a vain attempt to fool the American public. Well, Mr. Speaker, I believe the American people are much smarter than that. They can see through these charades to see that this country needs a new direction.

This bill is a case in point. If you were to believe my colleague, my friend from Texas, Mr. SESSIONS, and the other proponents of this legislation, this bill would lead to the construction of a fence along some parts of the United States-Mexican border. But guess what? This bill does not authorize a single nickel or dime for construction.

I asked the distinguished chairman of the Homeland Security Committee, our colleague, and my friend, PETER KING of New York, yesterday, point-blank, in the Rules Committee, "Does this bill fund construction of a fence along our border?" The transcript of the Rules Committee hearing will back me up when I say that Chairman KING answered with, "No, but." And Members of the majority party always seem to have an excuse at the ready when they pretend to legislate but simply pontificate.

If Americans want to see results instead of rhetoric, if taxpayers would like solutions instead of sound bites, and hard work instead of horse trading, I suggest you take a short look, and it won't take much longer, at the accomplishments of this Congress.

I don't intend to waste too much of our time on this lazy attempt at legislating. I will let others do that. However, there are a few other things to consider when thinking about this bill.

This so-called border security bill not only doesn't spend a nickel, a penny, or a dime of money to construct a fence, it also does not increase the number of Border Patrol agents, customs, and immigration enforcement authorities.

□ 1030

It doesn't help law enforcement. It doesn't provide accountability, and it won't stop illegal immigration into this country.

I said in last night's meeting, there ain't no mountain high enough and there ain't no river valley wide enough to stop the tide of what is happening on our border unless we do it comprehensively.

Get real, folks. If the Congress had any real intent in making this country safer and more secure, they would have allowed the ranking Democratic member of the Homeland Security Committee to offer a substitute bill.

If our colleague and my very good friend, Mr. BENNIE THOMPSON of Mississippi, had an opportunity to offer his legislation, then we could have had a serious debate. But, of course, the majority has no interest in allowing the House to work its will; thus, closed this rule. That only happens in a democracy. But had Mr. THOMPSON been allowed to offer his substitute, we would have seen what a real homeland security bill looks like.

The Thompson legislation would have provided the technology, personnel and equipment needed to monitor and secure every mile of the border 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. And there is no one in this body or in America that is concerned about this issue that does not understand the need to secure our borders. Everybody knows that.

The Thompson legislation authorized 3,000 additional Border Patrol agents. It would have allowed for the creation of 2,000 more immigration officials and hundreds more detention officials. It would have enlisted 250 more Federal marshals and more than 70 new judgeships to deal strictly with immigration issues.

Yes, all of this could have been considered today on the House floor. It would have been considered if the majority party was truly interested in protecting the American people instead of their own positions as the majority. Sounds good, does nothing.

I invite my colleague, Mr. SESSIONS, to point out in this legislation where any money is spent to put a border along the United States-Mexico border.

I urge a "no" vote on this closed rule and the underlying bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Fullerton, California, chairman of the International Terrorism and Nonproliferation Subcommittee, Chairman ROYCE.

Mr. ROYCE. Mr. Speaker, let me say, in order to spend the money, you first have to authorize the money. In the Senate, as I rise in support of this rule to consider H.R. 6061, let me say that the Senate has attached to the defense authorization bill language, and this is what is anticipated, that will discuss the building of a border fence. But we want to make certain on the House side as we pass the authorization language and go into conference with the Senate that we disabuse our colleagues in the other House from one concept, and that is the language that would preclude the construction of any border fence without consultation with the Government of Mexico. Let me explain why I think that approach would not be in the interest of the United States.

We in California have dealt for some years now with trying to close one breach in our border fence. It is called Smugglers Gulch, a fence that runs from the foothills to the ocean. Through that small 3-mile breach, it has taken 8½ years to get the California Coastal Commission to go along with closing that fence in consultation, 8½ years, and it took an act of Congress that we passed here to do it.

So if the Senate prevails on this issue, it means no border fence. We need this legislation to authorize the border fence before we go into conference with the Senate.

I am a cosponsor of this bill, and I was a cosponsor of the border fence amendment offered by Congressman DUNCAN HUNTER and myself that was added to the House-passed border security bill last September.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on International Terrorism and Nonproliferation, I held field hearings in San Diego on July 5 and Laredo, Texas, on July 7. We heard from the men and women of the Border Patrol whose job it is to secure our border. We heard from the sheriffs whose deputies have been shot in the line of duty. We heard from Federal inspectors who have smuggled across that porous border the materials for a dirty bomb.

And so this hearing that was focused on border vulnerabilities, we heard from these witnesses and we heard them express that the border fence is very effective. The Border Patrol testified as to that effectiveness. Daryl Griffin, who is the chief agent in San Diego, said, "It is a great force multiplier. It expands our enforcement capacity. It allows us the discretion to redeploy agents to areas of vulnerability or risk. It is one component that certainly has been integral to everything we have accomplished here, raising the level of security."

A fair question is, how effective has it been in San Diego? Well, apprehensions along the region with a security fence dropped from 202,000 in 1992 to 9,000 in 1994.

With the establishment of the border fence in San Diego, crime rates have fallen off dramatically. Vehicle drive-throughs have fallen. San Diego is no longer one of the most prolific drug-smuggling corridors.

This amendment puts a fence where it is needed most: in areas that have the highest instances of drug smuggling and illegal border crossings. It allows the Border Patrol to focus its resources and better protect our border. It is past time that we strengthen operational control of all the borders and ports through additional physical barriers and fencing.

In this bill is greater use of state-of-the-art technology and surveillance along the Southwest border. Expanding the border fence is needed and it is needed now. The first step is to get the authorization, and the second step is to get the appropriation with the Senate.

This last year, I can tell you, just over this last 12 months, over 450 OTMs were apprehended illegally entering the United States from special-interest countries, also from countries that are state sponsors of terrorism. So we see people coming over the border illegally from Afghanistan, Angola, Jordan, Qatar, Pakistan, Yemen. I will give you one example. Mohammed Karani is the brother of a commander of Hezbollah in south Lebanon. He came over the border in my State in the trunk of a car. He paid a coyote to get him across the border. He was later arrested in Dearborn, Michigan. He is serving 4½ years. He is a member of Hezbollah. He was in the process of securing funds and resources for Hezbollah in the United States.

Two border Governors have declared states of emergency over illegal immigration. This is something I think we can all agree upon, and it shouldn't be held hostage to immigration policies. The 9/11 Commission studied the problem. Border security is national security. At some point we have to come to grips with the fact that our Border Patrol agents need a border fence on our southern border in order for them to be able to secure an area where we are now facing infiltration by members of terrorist organizations like Hezbollah. We should listen to those agents.

There is one who told me his personal story of stopping a man who had been trained in an Afghan training camp, originally from Uzbekistan. This man injured him, actually bit his arm as he was trying to take him down. He told me one of his concerns was, this was the second time this man tried to get illegally into the United States. Post-9/11, we have to be serious about border security. This bill should pass this House.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROYCE), if the gentleman you described was in the back of a car, in the trunk, then he came through a port of entry. He didn't ride across no mountain, and you could have built every fence on Earth and he still could have been in the back of the car.

Now let me straighten you out on something else. We already, with the Hunter amendment to the border security measure, passed the identical language that is in here. This is nothing but political gamesmanship when all is said and done. And for you to say that we have to do this before we can authorize puts the lie to you being in the majority. You have the power to authorize. You could authorize. Don't tell the American people that we have to wait for some mish-mash language that has no money in it to build a fence, that that is the only way that we can do that.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to Mr. ROYCE to respond.

Mr. ROYCE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

The reason we cannot get the bill through the Senate is because of the opposition of Senator KENNEDY and others, and others, to the concept of the border fence.

Now the reason that it would be helpful to have the fence is, when you are stopping cars coming through and checking the trunks, if your Border Patrol agents are spread out all along the Southwest, it is a force multiplier to have that fence. You can then deploy more agents to the points where the smugglers bring people in in the trunks of cars.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. So you also favor a fence along the Canadian border because terrorists have come through from that area as well?

Mr. ROYCE. Let me just say in this very bill is a study to do just that, and study the northern border as well to look at those areas where people are crossing illegally.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Reclaiming my time, Mr. ROYCE, I am tired of studying and the American people are tired of studying. The Thompson substitute that was not allowed because of this closed rule does, in fact, do what is necessary for secure borders.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I am more than pleased to yield 5 minutes to a colleague that I served with on the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and who, for 26 years, was in charge of border security, the chief of two major regions of border security and who happened to be at the hearings that you were at, Mr. ROYCE, my distinguished colleague, SILVESTRE REYES.

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, as we debate the issue of border security here, as we talk about an issue that is so vitally important to the American people, I am disappointed that we can't seem to work together on this particular issue. I have been in Congress for 10 years. I have been advocating that we hire 1,000 to 1,500 Border Patrol agents a year along with the resources necessary to support them. Yet we get this proposal for a fence.

This is the best we can do? This is the best you can do to assure the American people that we are going to focus on border security? It falls woefully short, and I say that with all due respect because I spent 26½ years on America's border. When I retired, I had been the chief for a little over 12 years in charge of McAllen sector and El Paso sector. I am the one who instituted Operation Hold the Line that shifted border enforcement away from apprehension and towards deterrence. I have, I think, the kind of experience that we ought to be able to count on on both sides of the aisle.

I have tried to work with many Members on the other side of the aisle and have always, as I put forth my ideas on the issue of border security for the last 10 years, have always been told, well, it is not the right time. It's too expensive, it is not the right strategy to pursue at this time.

I really felt after 9/11 we would have a new focus on border security. Today, 5 years later, the American people are focused like a laser on the fact that our borders are vulnerable.

I would say to my distinguished colleague, Chairman ROYCE, I was at the hearing in Laredo with you, as I have been at numerous hearings the last 2 months, hearings where the message has come across loud and clear from members of Customs and Border Protection. What they need: They need manpower, they need technology and they need infrastructure.

In Naco, Arizona, we have 1,200 to 1,300 Border Patrol agents housed out of a station that was designed for 25 people.

□ 1015

That is infrastructure that we need. How can we expect them to be professionals if we don't treat them like professionals, if we don't invest in the infrastructure that is so desperately needed? We were there, looking at their sensor systems, and it was a bipartisan group from the interparliamentary group. We looked at not just the physical layout of the station, but the condition of their vehicles. They need vehicles.

The vehicles, the technology that they were using, the cameras that they were monitoring, were over 15 years old. The sensors were 20 years old. That is why, consistently, the message has been at all these hearings the last couple of months that they need manpower, they need technology, and they need infrastructure support, new technology that is available that will serve as the force multiplier, Chairman, that you were referring to.

We can do much better than this. A fence is ludicrous in the face of the needs of the Customs and Border Patrol people.

When we talk about the issue of fencing, and we compare that with all the other needs, and, believe me, at all the hearings I was at the message was consistent. In fact, when the question was asked of the chiefs, what about fencing, well, fencing has limited use. As a former chief for over 12 years, I can tell you fencing would be down after those three priorities, because across that 2,000-mile border with Mexico that everybody is so concerned with, probably less than 10 percent, much less than 10 percent, in one of the hearings that we were talking about, we were concerned about a range in Yuma, Arizona. It seemed like it was an area that needed hundreds of miles of fencing. You know what? It came out to 37 miles of fencing that was needed.

I say, put up a fence for those 37 miles. I supported the fencing with my friend and colleague, DUNCAN HUNTER, in San Diego, because it makes sense. But it does not make sense to put a 2,000-mile fence along our southern border. It does not make sense, and it is not in the best interests of the taxpayers to foolishly commit to spending at least $7 billion just on the construction of this fencing. We can do much better.

I am extremely disappointed that after all we hear about post-9/11, after all we hear about the concern that terrorists are apt to hit us here in the homeland again, that this is the best we can do. This is the equivalent of a doctor in the emergency room having a patient come in from a severe automobile accident with broken limbs and wounds over most parts of his body, and the physician saying, nurse, give me a Band-Aid. This is a Band-Aid approach that we can do much better with.

Let us do a comprehensive piece of legislation that addresses the three major priorities that the Border Patrol wants, manpower, technology, infrastructure. Let's not forget that there is a whole pipeline. If you hire more Border Patrol agents, you need to hire marshals, you need to hire detention officers. You need to hire judges. You need to hire prosecutors. All of that is essential. Let's do a comprehensive piece of legislation that the American people will finally say, this Congress gets the fact that we are in danger from terrorism. We can do better. This is a ludicrous proposal, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. REYES, by the way, this entire body not only recognizes but appreciates your service to this Nation, not only for the professionalism that you continue to exhibit but that which you did for your 26 years.

I would say to the gentleman two things, if I could politely suggest to him that he knows it is not truthful to say that we are going to have a 2,000-mile fence along the border. That has not been suggested. We have never talked about that, and to insinuate that would simply be untruthful.

We have not suggested that, and this bill very specifically, and I would like to have the gentleman, if he would like to get a copy, relates to adding 10 miles of fencing that extends 10 miles west of the Tecate, California port entry to 10 miles east of the Tecate, California, port of entry; 10 miles west of Calexico, California to 5 miles east of Douglas, Arizona; 5 miles west of the Columbus, New Mexico, port of entry to 10 miles east of El Paso; extending 5 miles northwest of Del Rio to 5 miles southeast of Eagle Pass, Texas; extending 15 miles northwest of the Laredo, Texas, port of entry to the Brownsville, Texas, port of entry. This will be literally 100 miles worth of fencing. It will be 700 miles worth of fencing when you add up the total. What we are trying to do is to take the things that we heard firsthand that the men and women who work on the border said. This is the priority, not 2,000 miles.

Mr. REYES. Will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. SESSIONS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REYES. The reference to 2,000 miles of fencing I heard repeatedly by Members of your party at the hearing.

Mr. SESSIONS. I would like to reclaim my time. We have talked about this since 2001. The fact of the matter is that this bill is very specific. It aims directly at where the problem is. I would like to also note that not one mile of fencing is in the Democrat plan, not even 15 feet worth of fencing. I don't know how you can have a comprehensive plan when you talk directly to Border Patrol agents who are in Laredo, Texas and other points along the border, and they say their number one concern, they are asked is the fencing, first of all, to allow them for their own safety, their own safety. The men and women of law enforcement who are down there have asked for, and, in the Republican bill, will get the fencing that they have asked for.

Mr. REYES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SESSIONS. I will not at this time, but I know that the gentleman has lots of time left to continue the debate.

We need to make sure that we are doing what the men and women of law enforcement are asking for. What else are they asking for? They are also asking for, and I have seen firsthand, the need to better protect those people, the unassuming people, who illegally are entering our country, who do so at great risk and peril. These fences, which are in our bill, not their bill, not 10 feet of fencing that is in their bill, will allow our Border Patrol agents to effectively deal with this huge number of people who are coming here to wall off areas that are dangerous for our men and women, as well as people who are just dumped off on the border late at night and told, go that way.

Mr. Speaker, we have taken time, Republicans and Democrats have taken time to come to our border and see what we need. It is the Republicans that heard from the Border Patrol agents and others. We need to help protect this country, yes, but we need to do it to protect people who many times get in trouble, many times who need desperate help, and it is to help save our agents as well as those people.

I am proud of my bill. For the characterization that this is a do-nothing bill, I would say, I am sorry that you didn't hear what was said at these important hearings and did something about it. That is all this bill is. It is to take what we heard of the most immediate concerns. We know we have a debate with the Senate. We know we have got some problems trying to negotiate that through, but this should not be held hostage.

I would like to go directly, Mr. Speaker, to H.R. 6061, which is what we are discussing here, but bringing in to incorporate the things that we know we have already done under our FY07 Department of Homeland Security appropriations. We are going to provide for $19.6 billion for border protection.

What we are going to do, as I recall it is darn near September, and as soon as this month is over with we want to have new money. We are going to pay for this fencing. To assume or to say that it is not going to happen would really be, I think, less than honest. The administration is working with this body. We are opening up this information to the other party that had been a part of the hearings, and they know that we are going to have money that is available directly for the needs of what this bill is about.

But what this bill specifically does is it says this is the priority at this time. We believe the fencing is there for good and intended purposes.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana

(Mr. SOUDER), the vice chairman of the Criminal Justice and Drug Policy Subcommittee.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, it has been my privilege here in Congress to serve as the Drug Policy chairman, and also as a senior member of the Homeland Security Committee, and thus, during most of my career, I have been on both the north and south border. A number of years ago, prior to the creation of the Homeland Security Committee, we did a major border report, the most comprehensive border report ever done in the history of this Congress.

In that process, we had done roughly, I believe, six hearings on the Mexican border and three on the Canadian border, and I have personally visited nearly every border crossing on both the north and south border with very few exceptions.

In that course of time, it becomes apparent that some of what Mr. REYES has been saying is absolutely true. We do not have enough money for the Border Patrol. We do not have a salary scale with which to keep them in the Border Patrol, and I have worked over multiple years to keep increasing that.

In fact, we have tried to increase the Border Patrol here in Congress, because it is not easy to just stay standing in the sand, in the heat, day after day. We have tried to vary their positions, but when they get other opportunities to be air marshals, when they get other opportunities to take other posts, they tend to leave.

We, in spite of our hiring, have been putting hundreds and thousands through training and can barely gain in the numbers. We need to be more aggressive, and we need to have a realistic pay scale and job opportunities for the people who go into our Border Patrol, but absolutely we need to ramp up at a faster rate the number of Border Patrol people. We need to make sure they have adequate facilities with them, cars, equipment, radios, that when some of the drug terrorists or people who are moving large numbers of people come out with more military weapons and guns than our Border Patrol have, and in greater numbers, we have a human problem at the border, and we need to understand that in many cases those who are trying to invade us are armed, and armed more aggressively.

We may have places where we have one agent or two agents with 100 to 200 people coming at them. It is a very difficult job, and we ought to raise, defend, expand and give the equipment to our Border Patrol. That is what we do in the Homeland Security bill, and we need to ramp it up faster.

But there is another problem here, and my friend Mr. REYES and I have been at joint hearings, we have traveled together, and I very much respect his position. But with the people along the border, it is a much more controversial issue. But as we look at a broader immigration strategy in the United States, and I absolutely agree with that, we have three different problems, the illegal immigration problem, the terrorism problem and the narcotics and contraband problem. Narcotics and contraband would also include chemical, nuclear and biological weapons and parts.

Basically, if you can't protect your border, you are not safe. If you can't protect your border, you don't know who is here. If you can't protect your border, we cannot stop what will be a flood now of meth precursors and meth coming across the border now that we have changed our internal laws.

This is a comprehensive question, and we need a comprehensive solution. But part of that is a fence, and you have to have different types of fencing, physical fencing, fences that keep people out or at least going over the top so the Border Patrol can kind of bend behind them and get them in groups, rather than having to station 20,000 Border Patrol agents who cannot cover 1,000 miles. You have to have fencing to drive them to certain locations to give time for the Border Patrol to sag and work with that. It is not realistic.

That is why the fences work well in San Diego, why the fences worked well in El Paso. In the areas where there are gaps in those fences, and it is difficult in Mr. REYES' home area in El Paso, is where the road comes so close to the line or the railroad comes close, and there isn't fencing, and there is a huge challenge for the Border Patrol.

Now, we have some places, let me give you an illustration, which I have talked to Chairman HUNTER, and I don't believe is in the 700 miles, but we have talked about we need to add it, that is over in west Texas in the sector, I believe it is Marfa, just right at the edge of the Marfa sector just east of El Paso. There we have a place called Neely's crossing.

We recently had a case where a truck was moving what we believe was 10,000 pounds of marijuana, 10,000 pounds, 5 tons. Our Border Patrol came up on the vehicle.

□ 1100

They negotiated with them and they said they got stuck in the sand, because when they saw the Border Patrol coming they tried to back up and they got stuck. They got about 1,700 pounds, they estimate, out; and then they came back with their guns and said basically, we have got a tow vehicle here. You can't take this. Now, if you can smuggle 10,000 pounds of marijuana, you can certainly get nuclear, chemical and biological.

Now, why are they running trucks through that area? The Rio Grande in that area is not a continuous, huge, wide river. It is pockets of water. There are only certain places in the Rio Grande and other places on the border where you can take a truck that handles 10,000 pounds because it sinks.

But there is gravel in that area, and guess what? They have a bulldozer on the other side. Every time they try to put up a border on that side, they bring the bulldozer across from the Mexican side and bulldoze it down. They bulldoze it down. When I was there with the sector chiefs on either side, they started up the bulldozer and they said, "Mr. SOUDER, you need to get out of here. It is not safe anymore." Our agents had to retreat when they came out with their guns.

This is a huge problem at Neely's Crossing. That is one of the areas where there has to be at a minimum a barrier fence that can take a 40-mile-an-hour hit from a large vehicle, because no Border Patrol agent can stop it.

In New Mexico, as I was visiting in New Mexico, we pioneered a fence there because there have been vehicles at high speed and knocking down some of these fences that will now take that kind of hit, as well as they are doing it in Yuma, Arizona. People are coming into the Barry Goldwater Air Range. We have to either stop our training or we are going to drop a bomb on these individuals.

They are going through the Organ Pipe Cactus Park, and some of the most beautiful hiking trails in America are no longer safe. We had a park ranger killed there. It is chaos in Organ Pipe.

In South Padre Island National Park, they have, they said, drug dealers coming up, all sorts of things. It is in times in danger of being overrun. We have fish and wildlife areas where habitat is being absolutely destroyed by the number and the quantity of illegal immigrants moving through.

We need to have more Border Patrol agents, but they need the supplemental fencing to help control that. And it will not reduce the number of Border Patrol agents. It will decrease the demand.

The thing the American people need to understand is, this will be expensive. We can't work out our internal controls and figure out whether we are going to do work visas, what we are going to do for the people here, if we don't have secure IDs and we don't have a fence because, as I just heard in one of the hearings I conducted for Ms. HARRIS, Mrs. MYRICK, Ms. FOXX and Mr. MCHENRY in North Carolina, they had a lady whose daughter and son-in-law were killed in an automobile wreck, one was killed, one is still comatose, and they had been deported three times for drunk driving before. Until we control the Southwest border, until we figure out how to get secure IDs, all this other talk is basically irrelevant.

I favor trying to work this out, but we can't; when you have multiple people calling in with similar names and just picture IDs and no fingerprints, you can't run employer enforcement. And if you are going to deport them, if you don't have a way to stop them at the border, it won't work.

This needs to be incremental, it needs to be comprehensive, but it has got to start with the border, and fencing is a key part of that. The agents will always be the critical part, because they will come around the fences, they will come over the fences, but it is one way to control the size of the vehicles, the size of the weapons, the quantity that is coming at you. And I strongly believe that we need this fence, and I do not understand, I do not understand, the Democratic opposition to a fence.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, before yielding again to Mr. REYES, I would say to Mr. SOUDER, there is nobody here that has opposition. We have already passed a measure that has 370 miles of fencing. Why don't the people over here just fess up? Their argument is against the Senate plan that has a guest worker program in it. It already has fence in it, so that is not even the issue.

What I continue to ask, and I invite Mr. SESSIONS again to answer, is whether or not the measure we are discussing today has one penny, one nickel or one dime in it to build a fence.

Mr. Speaker, I yield an additional minute to Mr. REYES to respond to some of the matters that were brought to our attention earlier.

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, there is a fundamental difference in how we approach this issue. Our plan says, we want to fund infrastructure, let the chief make the decisions.

When the gentleman from Texas talks about there isn't any proposal in our bill for fencing, here is what infrastructure entails. It entails buildings, antivehicle barriers, observation towers, access roads and fencing. The difference is, we don't legislate from here and tell a chief patrol agent, this is how much fence you are going to get. We tell them, this is what is available, you tell us what you need.

When the gentleman talks about what is needed, what the testimony was, heard along the border, I don't know how many hearings he attended, but I can tell you this, at the hearings that I attended, the chief patrol agents wanted three things, and I will reiterate them: manpower, technology and infrastructure. All of those things are included under "infrastructure."

I think the professionals that we charge in protecting the border deserve the courtesy of telling us what it is that they need, what kind of combination.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Michigan (Mrs. MILLER).

Mrs. MILLER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, let me say this as simply as I possibly can: The American people are fed up with our porous borders and illegal immigration. If you had the conversations that I had with constituents over the August recess, then you all know how the American people feel about the problems at our southern border with illegal immigration.

I had an opportunity in July to travel to the southern border with Speaker HASTERT and Chairman KING, and I saw the situation firsthand. I saw some of the fencing being built in Yuma, by the Kentucky National Guard actually, who was there at that time. We need this fence.

I also was proud during the month of August to welcome the House Armed Services Committee to my district, which shares a very long, liquid border with Canada. I live in Michigan, of course. There we had this hearing to investigate the issue of northern border security.

As a result of that hearing, this legislation also requires the Department of Homeland Security to conduct a study that will allow us to field a state-of-the-art barrier system on the northern border. And let me say that it is very much needed. Every day smugglers are bringing drugs and people and other contraband across our northern border, which is met with little or no resistance. Terror cells have been rounded up in Toronto, which is literally only a 3-hour drive from my district.

While it is very important to secure our southern border, I am glad that this House is not losing sight of our northern border as well. I urge my colleagues to support the rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this place never ceases to amaze me. Our friend from Michigan talks about the southern border. I gather that there is no illegal immigration on the northern border which she lives close to.

Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 3 minutes to my distinguished colleague and good friend, the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. THOMPSON), who is the distinguished ranking member of the Homeland Security Committee and author of the substitute that was not allowed under this closed rule, that would handle the problems of comprehensive border control as well as immigration.

Mr. THOMPSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, where I stand, I have to say the majority sure seem like ponies. Last week, we were down here on the floor voting on a horse protection bill. This week, the majority is again on the floor having us vote on a bill that has already passed.

This "one trick pony" approach to legislating is stale. The majority is out of fresh ideas on how to secure the border, and it shows.

Last night, I offered an amendment in Rules that would have provided an all-encompassing approach to border security and ensured that every mile of the border is monitored and secured 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

A fence alone won't protect us from those who want to harm us. Even the Department of Homeland Security has come to realize that we need an integrated approach that combines personnel, equipment, technology and infrastructure.

The timing of this vote, Mr. Speaker, is bizarre. Why are we telling the Department to build a fence before they have come up with a comprehensive solution? Are we really going to tie up billions and billions in border security dollars to build a fence when the Border Patrol and ICE need more agents and investigators? Estimates on what it would cost to just build the fence alone is in the neighborhood of $7 billion. Once you add the maintenance costs, we are looking at possibly doubling that number.

My amendment, that the Rules Committee rejected, would have provided the Border Patrol with 3,000 more agents. We know they need the help. Why else would the National Guard be there now? It also would have added 2,000 new ICE investigators and 250 detention officers. It would have provided the men and women who police the border with equipment they need to get the job done. It would have given them helicopters, all-terrain vehicles, radio communication, GPS devices and night-vision goggles.

There are many more provisions in my bill that I am prepared to discuss today, had my amendment been allowed to be considered. But given that there are many speakers who wish to be recognized, Mr. Speaker, I will close.

The only thing I want to share is that people talk about operational control. The only way you can do it is comprehensively.

This is an unfunded mandate. There are no dollars attached to it. Republicans always talk about unfunded mandates. The priority at this time is not a fence, it is a comprehensive strategy, and because we have no comprehensive strategy for border protection at this time, I am in opposition, Mr. Speaker, to the rule.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. KING), the chairman of the Committee on Homeland Security.

Mr. KING of New York. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas for yielding, and I rise in strong support of H.R. 6061. H.R. 6061, to me, addresses the most direct need of the American people, and that is to show that we can take meaningful action to secure our border.

I have never seen more of a disconnect between the American people and the elite in Washington, between the American people and the American media, because overwhelmingly the American people want us to secure the border. They want us to show that we can fulfill the most basic requirement of a government, and that is to ensure the sanctity and the security of our borders.

Now, we did pass comprehensive legislation last December by a large vote, including almost 40 Democrats, H.R. 4437, and I strongly stand by that. The fact is that right now is not moving as quickly as we would like it to, and, therefore, rather than saying we are going to wait until everything can be done before we do anything, I am saying, let's pick areas where there has been agreement.

The Senate has agreed to have a 370-mile fence along the border. We now have a 700-mile fence. This is something which clearly can be done. It will work. Is it the entire fence? Absolutely not. More has to be done. But, in the meantime, let's show progress. Let's get this done. Let's show the American people that we have listened to what they have said and we are going to do what they want.

Then we can deal in a comprehensive way, we can go issue by issue, we can go item by item, but let's focus on what we know will work. And this will work. You add this fence, in addition to the new Border Patrol agents which are in the FY07 bills which are going to result in a 40 percent increase since 2001, and we hope to double that by 2008.

Also the idea of having a fence, it can also allow better reallocation of Border Patrol agents because the fence will serve a security purpose which can actually allow Border Patrol agents to expand their own focus more.

So, with that, Mr. Speaker, I just strongly urge the adoption of this. The American people are watching. The American people have spoken loudly and clearly. We have responded to that in a responsible, effective way. And for the life of me, I don't know why people on the other side are saying, just because we can't do everything, we should do nothing.

Doing nothing is the worst thing Congress can do, and that is why we are doing something very meaningful. I urge its adoption.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume before yielding to my good friend, the distinguished gentlewoman from Texas, just to say to the chairman of the Homeland Security Committee, last night in the Rules Committee I asked him a simple question. He said he can't for the life of him understand what our opposition is, just because we can't do everything, we do nothing.

□ 1115

This measure that we are discussing today does nothing other than provide midterm yacking before the election. There are no dollars, not a penny, not a nickel, not a dime in this measure to build any fence. We have already passed legislation that has 370 miles of fences in it.

So why are we here? We have got an election coming up. That is why we are here. So you have to do things to put on a bumper sticker.

The American public can see through this charade. There isn't opposition to protecting the border. But we are saying that you cannot come forward with something that does nothing, and that is what this is. Nothing. Talk. We need action.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Houston, Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE), who has attended a lot of these hearings that we are talking about and is a distinguished member of the Judiciary Committee and the Homeland Security Committee.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to play hide and seek with the American people this morning. I think unabashedly, I believe in comprehensive immigration reform, and, frankly, so does most of America.

My disappointment with my good friends is, one, that they are politicizing this very important debate. And, of course, my friend from Indiana wanted to make sure that he cast his hand to our side of the aisle and suggested that the Democrats do not want a fence or the Democrats do not believe in getting the job done.

The question that really should be asked is why the Republican majority passed a legislative initiative dealing with the immigration concerns of America and yet cannot get a compromise between the House and the Senate, both controlled by Republicans, and the presidency controlled by Republicans.

But I am not prepared to play with the lives of the American people. This legislation, 730 miles of fence, does not deal with the lives of our Border Patrol agents and Customs and Border Protection. And the reality is that time and time again we have seen that Republicans have spoken the word but have done nothing about it.

For example, this particular amendment that we had way back in 2001. Each and every time we offered amendments to provide for border security, 2001, after 9/11, Republicans voted "no." In 2003 Republicans voted "no." In 2001

we asked for $78 million for detention beds. The Republicans voted "no." In 2003 again we asked for border security funding, Democrats. Republicans voted "no." We asked for numbers of items for our Border Patrol agents and Customs and Border Protection. We asked for power boats. We asked for night goggles. We asked for laptop computers.

For those who believe that only Republicans have the knowledge of the border, I have walked the border in the day and night, and I have been at hearings all throughout the summer. I would venture to say that there were more questions asked by Border Patrol agents. It was, When are we going to get more Border Patrol agents? And as you can see, the average number of new Border Patrol agents added per year decreased under this Republican administration, 411 in 2005, but in the Democratic, President Clinton's administration we were giving them at least 642 a year. The 9/11 Commission asked us to give 2,000 a year. This administration has yet to commit to 2,000 Border Patrol agents in a year.

So, Mr. Speaker, I believe in comprehensive immigration reform. I also believe that we can compromise in a conference committee. They know that you do not need this freestanding bill that is very limited. You can go to conference and actually agree to the fencing language, if that is a priority, in the Senate's conference bill.

Now, my question to Mr. SESSIONS, who is on the Rules Committee, is, does he have an agreement that the Senate leadership is going to take this bill? Because if he does not, we have literally 2 weeks before we are out of session. And is there a commitment to this bill? If it is, tell us on the floor of the House. We might want to join in a reasonable response if we know that you are going to go to conference with your bill, which will pass because you have the numbers, but with the idea of comprehensive immigration reform.

Let me share a letter that has just come from Governor Rick Perry of Texas, a Republican; Governor Janet Napolitano, Governor of Arizona; the Governor of California, Governor Schwarzenegger; and Governor Bill Richardson of New Mexico. Allow me to read this:

"As governors who are on the front lines of America's immigration crisis, we write to urge you to take real action and pass comprehensive reform legislation that secures the border, protects taxpayers, and restores the rule of law by practically dealing with the estimated 12 million illegal immigrants currently in this country.

"Instead of holding dozens of field hearings that do little but stir the pot of discontent, we urge you to get back to work and pass legislation that puts the interests of taxpayers first and solves this crisis once and for all. We ask that you pass comprehensive reform and address this critical crisis before Congress adjourns for the year."

These are two Republican governors and two Democrats who are on the front lines of immigration issues in America. And I will submit this letter for the RECORD.

I am not going to hide the ball. I want comprehensive immigration reform, but I am not afraid of border security. Read H.R. 4044, 100,000 detention beds. That is by a Democrat.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that we vote down this rule, we do what the Governors have asked us to do, comprehensive immigration reform. Let us not operate in the darkness. Let us not label Democrats weak on border security. We are ready to fight the battle. We know that 9/11 impacted all of America. I am not going to take that rap. You need to do your job.

AUGUST 25, 2006.

Hon. J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

Hon. BILL FRIST,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER AND SENATOR FRIST: As governors who are on the front lines of America's immigration crisis, we write to urge you to take real action and pass comprehensive reform legislation that secures the border, protects taxpayers and restores the rule of law by practically dealing with the estimated 12 million illegal immigrants currently in the country. We believe that a solution modeled on these principles would attain these goals and greatly benefit taxpayers in our states.

In all of our states, we face a crisis not of our making. Over the past 6 years the combination of lax and ineffective enforcement of our borders and the failure to enforce immigration laws has led to an explosion in the illegal immigration population. As a result, our states are flooded with illegal immigrants, our taxpayers are angry, and citizens and noncitizens alike are losing respect for the rule of law.

We are doing our part. At President Bush's request, we have sent our National Guard to the border to do the job the federal government is supposed to do. We have used state and local law enforcement to help enforce the laws the federal government is supposed to enforce. We ask you to do your part.

Instead of holding dozens of field hearings that do little but stir the pot of discontent, we urge you to get back to work and pass legislation that puts the interest of taxpayers first and solves this crisis once and for all. We ask that you pass comprehensive reform and address this critical issue before Congress adjourns for the year.

Respectfully,

RICK PERRY,
Governor of Texas.

JANET NAPOLITANO,
Governor of Arizona.

ARNOLD SCHWARZENEGGER,
Governor of California.

BILL RICHARDSON,
Governor of New Mexico.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased at this time to yield an additional 1 minute to my colleague from Texas, the distinguished gentleman, Mr. SILVESTRE REYES.

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Again, Mr. Speaker, let me reframe the difference between what we want to do on this side of the aisle and what is being proposed on that side of the aisle.

First and foremost, we want to work together to address the issue of border security. We want to give the professionals the support that they have been asking for throughout these last 2 months of hearings. We want to make sure that we provide them the opportunity to tell us what kind of infrastructure, including fencing, they need. The buildings, the anti-vehicle barriers, the observation towers, the access roads, all of the kinds of things that they have told us are a priority in order for them to be able to control the border.

The fundamental difference is we trust them to make those decisions. We do not tell them we need a fence starting from 5 miles east of the port of entry in Del Rio to 6 miles east of the port of entry of Eagle Pass. Let them make those kinds of decisions. They are the professionals. They are charged with that responsibility. Our job is to provide them the support and the resources. That is the fundamental difference.

As I have said, we need to work together on this thing. Regrettably, this rule freezes us out and we are unable to participate in this.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

As I close, Mr. Speaker, I say what I said earlier, and that is the measure that we are discussing today sounds good, is needed, in part, along with comprehensive immigration reform, but does nothing.

Mr. Speaker, last night in the Rules Committee I misquoted the song, but the intent was the same: There ain't no mountain high enough and there ain't no river wide enough to stop people from seeking a better opportunity for themselves.

Some years ago outside Boynton Beach in Florida, I was among the first people to arrive at the scene of Haitian immigrants who were seeking to enter our country illegally. They all had died, and I stepped over the body of a nude pregnant woman. That hurt me an awful lot, that in seeking freedom and opportunity she and her unborn child were in that posture. I have seen many a situation where Cubans have lost their lives seeking to come to this country.

We need to get a grip and understand that we cannot become neoisolationists in a society as diverse as our own and that the most brilliant people that I know serve here in the House of Representatives on both sides of the aisle and those persons are very capable of advancing comprehensive immigration reform that will address all of our needs, including border security.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members of this House to vote "no" on the previous question so I can amend the rule and make in order the substitute offered by Homeland Security Ranking Member THOMPSON and Representative REYES. This amendment was offered in the Rules Committee last night but was rejected.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the amendment and extraneous materials be printed in the RECORD immediately prior to the vote on the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOOZMAN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the Reyes-Thompson substitute provides for a comprehensive approach to our border security, not simply the inadequate piecemeal approach called for in the underlying bill. The substitute requires the Department of Homeland Security to develop a comprehensive border security strategy with increased Border Patrol agent deployment as well as increased surveillance using advanced technology. It provides long-term financial support for significant increases in personnel to help the Border Patrol meet its mission, including Border Patrol agents, Immigration and Customs agents, United States marshals, Coast Guard personnel, port of entry inspectors, canine enforcement teams, and other vital personnel necessary to guard and protect our borders more effectively. It will provide needed equipment such as helicopters, power boats, radio communications, night vision equipment, body armor, and other crucial tools in the war against terror.

The substitute also reestablishes the 9/11 Commission to allow them to fulfill their mission and to provide oversight and accountability.

I urge all Members of this body to vote "no" on the previous question so we can bring up this comprehensive and responsible alternative that will actually do something to help make this Nation less vulnerable to those from outside who would do us harm.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

My colleagues and good friends not only from Texas, Mr. REYES, but also the gentleman from Florida and the gentlewoman from Texas have spoken very eloquently about the needs of this great Nation. I have every reason to believe all three of those individuals joined many other Members of this body in hearing from people about the needs of the Border Patrol, the communities along the borders and the things which they would want and need.

□ 1130

This bill is very specific. It talks about the types of things that would be necessary and needed on an interim basis.

Both you and I, Mr. Speaker, understand that we have passed bills many times before this that are more comprehensive, that are larger, that contain money, that do a lot of things that will enable us to get closer. The bottom line is, we need this interim step to get done now. It comes as a result of the hearings, it comes as a result of feedback from the Border Patrol, it comes as a result of communities who have asked us to please help them. So we are going to do that.

I am going to ask Members to vote "aye." I am going to ask them to support this bill. And it is my prediction, Mr. Speaker, that this will be a bipartisan-passed bill today on the floor of the House of Representatives because it represents the balance and integrity of not only our Speaker, DENNIS HASTERT, but also JOHN BOEHNER and our great chairman of Homeland Security, PETE KING.

The material previously referred to by Mr. HASTINGS of Florida is as follows:

PREVIOUS QUESTION ON H. RES. 1002, RULE FOR H.R. 6061 SECURE FENCE ACT OF 2006

In the resolution strike "and (2)" and insert the following:

At the end of the resolution add the following new section:
