Mr. GARRETT of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the tremendous public service of the New Jersey State Law Enforcement Asian-American Advisory Committee. With Americans of Asian heritage making up an increasingly large proportion of our population, both in New Jersey and across the Nation, it is important that law enforcement have a strong relationship with the Asian-American community.

There are an estimated 14 million U.S. residents with Asian heritage. That's 5 percent of the U.S. population. They are by no means of a monolithic culture—with backgrounds from Korea, Vietnam, Philippines, Taiwan, and elsewhere. Asian-Americans have lent this diversity to our national melting pot, enriching America with their contributions to music, food, design, literature, entertainment, and more.

Asian-Americans are our neighbors, our local business owners, our teachers, our elected officials, and also our police officers and first responders. The New Jersey State Law Enforcement Asian-American Advisory Committee helps to bridge the gap both for Asian-Americans in the law enforcement family and in the larger population. Its members engender a greater understanding of the special needs of the Asian-American community.

I am proud to work with them to make New Jersey's neighborhoods safer and bring New Jersey's communities closer, and I am proud to support their efforts to become a national organization.

TRIBUTE ON THE 40TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MARYLAND, BALTIMORE COUNTY

HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer congratulations to one of Maryland's premier institutions of higher learning—the University of Maryland, Baltimore County (UMBC)—as it celebrates its 40th anniversary.

Located on what was once a cow pasture, the university has risen to astonishing heights in a very short time. When UMBC first opened in 1966, it had only 750 students and three buildings. Today, the university offers first-rate education and research opportunities to more than 11,000 students, while retaining the personal contact typically found at a small liberal arts college.

In recent years, the guidance of President Freeman Hrabowski has led the university to new heights. UMBC's unique combination of undergraduate focus and graduate research reflects the dedication to balance that has led UMBC to become one of the top public universities in the nation.

The nationally recognized Meyerhoff Scholars Program, which Dr. Hrabowski co-founded, is among the most successful undergraduate diversity programs in the nation. UMBC has one of the highest rates of minority students pursuing advanced degrees in medicine and science of any school in the United States. UMBC also has been ranked first nationally in the total number of undergraduate chemistry degrees given to African-Americans.

In 40 years UMBC has become one of the nation's top independent public research universities. The numerous accomplishments of the university are all the more impressive because they have come so rapidly. In fact, UMBC is one of the youngest universities ever to be honored with a chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, and in recent years UMBC has led every university in the nation in undergraduates receiving Merck Undergraduate Science Research Scholarships.

Mr. Speaker, I call upon my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives to join me in honoring the achievements and success of UMBC, one of the bright stars in American higher education.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the students, faculty and administrators of Nevada State College's School of Nursing in Henderson, Nevada, for their tremendous achievements with their accelerated nursing program. Their achievements are a reflection of their commitment to our community. Dr. Connie Carpenter, Dean of the School of Nursing, has been instrumental in Nevada State College's early success as Nevada's newest institution of public higher education. Her leadership, commitment, and vision serve as a testimonial to the success of the college's nursing program.

Nevada State College first welcomed students in August of 2002, it has been charged with the mission to meet the needs of students who are interested in bachelor's degrees in our state's much-needed fields such as nursing and education, as well as in other disciplines in the arts and sciences. Since that time, Nevada State College has committed resources, professors, and vision to ensure that their mission statement becomes a reality. For faculty and students, that dream has been achieved. On Saturday, August 26, 2006, twenty nine students graduated from the college's Accelerated Nursing Program, a success which reflects the college's commitment to providing their students with the necessary resources to achieve their dreams. I would like to commend the following students on their graduation from Nevada State College's Accelerated Nursing Program: Nancy Andruk, Joyce Arce, Royal Bradley, Tatiana Brandon, Katherine Busby, Diandra Castenada, Perla

Cisco, Themis De Guzman, Toby Derby-Talbot, Andi Del Gatto, Catherine Dullano, Crisandra Eastmond, Raul Ellazar, Desiree Espinoza, Diane Graham, Kathryn Havey, Lynda Hubeny, Marianne Jackson, Brigitte Lacombe, Jeanette Long, Eudora Mordi, Eleanor Mox, Milagros Navarro, Bette-Ann Pierce, Sayma Salman, Dawn Scott, Nicole Thomas, Chantal Whittenberg, Bethany Williams, and Samantha Zomar.

Dr. Carpenter brings a wealth of experience in nursing, nursing education, educational administration and in delivering quality online instructional programs to the Nursing program. She has been a leading advocate in expanding the nursing program at Nevada State College; she is a pioneer in developing distance learning programs. She is very dedicated to providing effective and accessible education. I have full faith that with Dr. Carpenter's leadership, Nevada State College will continue to exceed every possible expectation.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to honor Dr. Connie Carpenter, Dean of the School of Nursing, and the students of the Accelerated Nursing Program. Nevada State is making a tremendous difference throughout Southern Nevada, and the Nursing Program is helping to provide skilled workers to the health services across the state. I applaud Nevada State College's efforts and wish them the best in their future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO NATIONAL YOUTH COURT MONTH

HON. GINNY BROWN-WAITE

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize September as National Youth Court Month. During September, more than 1,100 youth courts operating in district-level juvenile justice systems, schools, and community-based organizations in 49 states and the District of Columbia will celebrate the fifth annual National Youth Court Month.

Youth court—also known as teen court, peer court, and student court—is one of the fastest growing crime prevention and early intervention programs in the nation. Youth court volunteers, under the supervision of adult volunteers, act as judges, jurors, clerks, bailiffs, and counsel for youth charged with minor delinquent offenses and problem behavior. The overall goal is to help offending youth find an appropriate, constructive, and restorative disposition.

This year, the theme of National Youth Court Month is "Correcting Crooked Paths: Youth and Communities in Partnership for Justice." The theme addresses two very important aspects within the youth court realm: learning from mistakes and youth empowerment. Uniquely, youth and adults from a variety of entities in the community including justice agencies, nonprofit organizations, schools, and municipalities work side-by-side to address and solve local problems particularly related to juvenile crime and problem behavior.

I visited several teen courts last year and was impressed by the power this innovative program has to change misdirected and challenged teenagers into productive and adjusted adults. I would like to recognize their efforts and those of so many other courts by proclaiming September 2006 as National Youth Court Month. I urge Americans to celebrate the valuable contributions that youth courts and their volunteers, adult and youth, make to keep our nation's communities safe.

IN HONOR OF THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF ST. HELENA CATHOLIC CHURCH

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor and recognition of the parish community of St. Helena Catholic Church, as members and leaders celebrate one hundred years of faith and hope throughout Cleveland's west side neighborhoods.

Throughout the past century, St. Helena Parish has served as a spiritual refuge for Americans of Romanian heritage, and was established as the first Romanian Catholic Church built on American soil.

The ministry of St Helena began in 1906, with a mission focused on supporting the spiritual and cultural needs of Romanian immigrant families who settled in Cleveland. Since that time, a number of pastors and parishioners have served as critical guides in the journey of the faithful at St. Helena Church. Over the years, this close-knit parish community has evolved and grown, and its faithful members have survived numerous struggles and hardships. Generations of Romanian Americans have assimilated into American culture, with the support and guidance of the leaders and members of St. Helena Catholic Church.

Mr. Speaker and Colleagues, please join me in honor and recognition of every past and current member and spiritual leader of St. Helena Catholic Church. In 1906, as today, St. Helena parish continues to provide a haven of faith, guidance, renewal and support for hundreds of families, along Cleveland's near Westside and far beyond.

LABOR DAY

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, as we celebrated Labor Day this past weekend, the Census Bureau made the plight of working-class Americans more clear with its most recent report on income, poverty and health care in 2005. Unfortunately, the statistics confirmed what many Americans across the country have known for some time: the economic policies of the Administration benefit only a lucky few while most working Americans are struggling from paycheck to paycheck. The federal minimum wage has been stagnant since 1996, real household income has dropped more than $1200 in the past five years, and the number of uninsured Americans has jumped by 1.3 million just in the last year, totaling 46.6 million. Meanwhile, the Administration is pushing for a tax cut for the wealthiest 1 percent of Americans. It is no wonder that most people believe that things are going from bad to worse, and want a new direction for America.

These important concerns were raised by my constituent and good friend Shelley Kessler in the San Mateo Daily Journal on September 4, 2006. Shelley Kessler is the executive secretary-treasurer of the San Mateo County Central Labor Council, AFL-CIO. She is a powerful voice for labor rights and her clear vision makes her a trusted ally who always fights for the best interests of America's workers. I wholeheartedly associate myself with her comments and ask unanimous consent that the text of her article be included in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all of my colleagues, on both sides of the aisle, to read this important statement on helping America's workers by Shelley Kessler.

[From the Daily Journal, Sept. 4, 2006]

ARE WE WORKING TO LIVE OR LIVING TO WORK?

(By Shelley Kessler)

Mark Twain once said: "Sometimes I wonder whether the world is being run by smart people who are putting us on or by imbeciles who really mean it."

When you look around this Labor Day, you have to wonder about that quote. America is not working the way it should for working people, let alone those who are struggling to find jobs on which they can support themselves and their families. The disparity between the rich and working poor is growing every day. People are working harder and making less. We're in a health care crisis that's deeper than any of us ever imagined. We all worry about how we'll retire with dignity. A good, middle-class life is increasingly out of reach. Who ever thought that in America, our kids might not be better off than their parents? Today's economic outlook for children and the next generation is pretty grim.

Bill Moyers recently cited these facts: "In 1960, the gap between the top 20 percent and the bottom 20 percent was 30 fold. Now it is 75 fold. Thirty years ago, the average annual compensation of the top 100 chief executives in the country was 30 times the pay of the average worker. Today it is 1,000 times the pay of the average worker. The top 10 percent of earners have captured almost half the total income gains in the past four decades and the top 1 percent have gained the most of all—more in fact, than the entire bottom 50 percent."

And the Bush administration wants to tie an increase of the minimum wage, which has not been raised in 10 years, to a tax break for the top 1 percent, to the wealthiest 8,200 families in the country. As if he or any of his cronies could live on less than $7 per hour.

Mark Twain, is this what you meant?

In the words of one of our former Supreme Court justices Louis Brandeis: "You can have wealth concentrated in the hands of a few, or democracy; but you cannot have both."

That's why it is time to take back our humanity! And that means that the bad actor Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger and others of his supporting cast must be removed from the script. Pretending to care about people while lining the pockets of the rich cannot continue.

Today there is vast public support of broad social goals such as affordable medical coverage for all, decent wages for working people, safe working conditions, a secure retirement and clean air and water. We must bring back a government "of, by, and for the people" to deliver on those aspirations and make sure that America is working for all of us.

George Jean Nathan once said: "Bad officials are elected by good citizens who do not vote." So this November, we are organizing, not just to provide for workers on the job, but to mobilize our communities to action. We will build a grassroots effort to elect people to fight hard for these goals; people who share a vision of common good, who respect the public trust that has been placed in their hands and will earn the right to represent the majority of people who work diligently every day and are the real backbone of this county, this state, and this country.

Here in San Mateo County, the labor community invites other like-minded people to join with us. Let's work together to protect the gains we've made while providing access to a better quality of life for those struggling every day; our food service workers, janitors, home care workers and many others who deserve a decent wage and health care. Let us try to create a place where people have retirement security for which they have worked hard, instead of giving golden pensions to corporate CEOs who have been stripped from the obligations promised to their employees like at United Airlines. Our county is making great strides in the area of health care, sustainable communities and transportation.

The challenges are great, but our efforts are paying off and will continue with dedication and commitment.

We can stop the race to the bottom. We can invest in our future. We can and we will make a difference if we unite together to improve the quality of life and respect for the work we all do. Let's "work to live," we've earned it.

His bravery during the Tet Offensive at the Siege of Saigon was rewarded with a Silver Star, one of our nation's highest military honors for distinguished gallantry. He was further recognized with the Combat Medic's Badge for his medical service alongside infantrymen under combat conditions in the Vietnamese Delta.

After his service in Vietnam, Dr. Daugherty returned to school to complete his residencies at one of our nation's finest medical schools, the University of California at San Francisco. Having finished his residencies, he took a series of positions in the greater Bay Area as a pathologist and medical consultant. He has worked for Napa County for the last 28 years as a Medical Examiner and Forensic pathologist.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to his career with Napa County, Dr. Daugherty has assisted his wife Sheila's innovative treatment center to help teens with substance abuse problems. He has provided the medical services which allow the center to assist teens with the broad scope of issues they must confront in overcoming substance abuse.

Dr. Daugherty is known to his friends and family as a man of strong character and steely determination. A long-time marathon runner, he has also completed the Ironman and other triathlons. Dr. Daugherty and his wife have two children, Dr. Eugene Daugherty and Dr. Matthew Daugherty. They are also blessed with two grandchildren, Cecilia and Frances.

Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate at this time that we extend thanks to Dr. Louis E. Daugherty for his long record of public service to the people of Napa County. His professional and personal integrity have greatly contributed to our community, and I wish him all of the best in the future.

RECOGNIZING LILLIE BEATRICE
KNIGHT IRVING

HON. CHARLES W. "CHIP" PICKERING

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Speaker, today I want to recognize a Mississippian who has given a century of service to her family, friends and community. She and her husband, the Reverend Monroe J. Irving, reared ten children. She now has forty-two grandchildren, eighty-seven great-grandchildren, twenty-eight great-great-grandchildren, and one great-great-great-grandchild. Her family in quality and quantity has blessed southwest Mississippi.

Lillie Beatrice Knight Irving was born on September 11, 1906 in Adams County, Mississippi. She studied at Wickland Elementary School, Brumfield High School, and Alcorn State University. She then gave back to the education community serving as a teacher for forty-six years at the Tate Baptist Church Public School, the Wickland Elementary Public School, Central Elementary School and Liddell Elementary School.

She married Monroe Irving on January 17, 1933 and together they made a life of service to God and man. She served as the church clerk for thirty-three years and deaconess of Greater Mt. Bethel Baptist Church. Her service can be seen in the many awards and honors she has received from her church and community. But the real fruit of her life can be seen in how she cares for her fellow Mississippians through prayer and work and faith.

Mr. Speaker, Lillie is thoughtful and careful to feed her mind, body and soul; keeping active and balancing a strong body and her strong faith. Her commitment to the Word of God and her saving Lord has given her purpose and her life's strength. She has a family with a wonderful reputation and she and they have been a blessing to her community, her friends and everyone she comes in contact with. I hope this Congress joins me in wishing her a very happy one-hundredth birthday and praying she has many years with the Mississippi she so loves and serves.

TRIBUTE TO SHIRLEY S.
ABRAHAMSON

HON. TAMMY BALDWIN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in tribute to a distinguished American, Shirley S. Abrahamson, who is being honored today at the Wisconsin State Capitol for her 50 years of membership in the bar, 30 years as a justice on the Wisconsin Supreme Court, and 10 years as Chief Justice.

But Chief Justice Abrahamson is not being honored solely on the basis of time-served. Her colleagues, students, friends, and family, indeed all citizens of Wisconsin, are the beneficiaries of her work ethic, intellect, compassion, sense of humor, respect for justice and dedication to the law.

An elected fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, this daughter of immigrants grew up across the street from her family's grocery store in New York City. The only woman in her law school class, the first woman on the Wisconsin Supreme Court, the first woman to serve there as Chief Justice, Shirley Abrahamson, among other honors, was elected by her peers as President of the Conference of Chief Justices and Chair of the Board of Directors of the National Center of State Courts because of their "abiding confidence in her leadership and her judicial acumen."

She paved the way for women in the law and set a standard of excellence in the Court, always reminding us, "We need to be careful to appreciate our system of judicial independence and ensure it survives."

Last year, while standing patiently in the line of mourners outside the U.S. Supreme Court to pay respects at the bier of Chief Justice Rehnquist, Chief Justice Abrahamson was recognized and urged to exert her celebrity and move to the front of the line. "That's not the Wisconsin tradition," she replied.

Shirley Abrahamson not only respects Wisconsin's tradition of equal justice and equal opportunity, she enforces both with strength, courage, and grace.

I join the people of Wisconsin in paying tribute to a great jurist and citizen, Chief Justice Shirley Abrahamson.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, on September 12th, the Annual Hispanic Recognition Awards Ceremony will take place in New Bedford, Massachusetts. These awards express the admiration and appreciation of the community for outstanding individuals who have shown leadership in a variety of ways. Unfortunately for me, we will be in session when this awards ceremony takes place, and I will not be able to attend in person, which I would have liked to do so that I could express directly my admiration and gratitude to the winners of these awards for the work they have done.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO TERRY AND LEE KISTNER

HON. JON C. PORTER

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Terry and Lee Kistner of Overton, Nevada for their overwhelming commitment to serving others.

Terry and Lee moved to Overton nearly ten years ago. Shortly thereafter, they opened Valley Boot and Shoe Repair, a small business specializing in leather craftsmanship, including boots, saddles, tack and repairs. Despite the struggles of owning a small business in an economy dominated by large companies and manufacturers, Terry and Lee have managed to keep their doors open and their business running successfully for more than nine years. In order to do so, both Terry and Lee work full-time jobs and stagger their schedules so that each can tend to the needs of their business.

Although their extraordinary work ethic and commitment to their craft is part of what makes the Kistners an asset to the Moapa Valley Community, it is their remarkable compassion for others and their dedication to community service that is truly inspiring. Terry and Lee strive to help others in any way they can. They frequently contribute their expertise in leather craftsmanship to school and community groups. Whether it means donating leather and teaching special education students how to make their own belts, donating labor and craftsmanship to the Nevada High School Rodeo winners or donating custom-made boots to fulfill a young boy's dreams of owning real cowboy boots, the Kistners are happy to give their talents to a variety of worthy endeavors.

Terry and Lee are also committed citizens of the United States of America. They instilled in each of their four children a sense of pride in their country and a commitment to serving others. They currently have a son who is serving in the United States Army in Iraq. In addition to all they do to serve their local community, the Kistners also strive to support their son in his military service. The Kistners have purchased and donated a variety of needed equipment and supplies for their son's 17-member military unit.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to recognize Terry and Lee Kistner on the floor of the House for the extraordinary citizens that they are. I commend their patriotism and their inspiring commitment to serving others. I thank them for the sacrifices they have made to brighten the lives of those around them and I wish them the very best in all their future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO STERLING DOBBS OF HOMOSASSA, FLORIDA

HON. GINNY BROWN-WAITE

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Mr. Sterling Dobbs of Homosassa, Florida.

Joining the Army in June of 1941, Mr. Dobbs spent more than 4 years in service to our Nation. As a pilot, Mr. Dobbs proved his mettle in more than 35 combat missions in the European Theater during World War II.

Awarded his 1st distinguished flying cross on October 20, 1944, Mr. Dobbs had already shown extraordinary achievement as a pilot flying a B-24 aircraft on many bombardment missions.

On April 8, 1945, Mr. Dobbs received an oak leaf cluster for a distinguished flying cross as the lead pilot on a mission over enemy occupied continental Europe. On his 30th mission, Mr. Dobbs was the lead B-24 aircraft for the 2nd Air Division that flew into Kassel, Germany where they bombed a factory. After this mission he flew several more as the command pilot, with a final total of 35 combat missions.

Truly one of America's greatest generation, Mr. Dobbs served in the Nebraska National Guard for 3 years prior to his 5-year active duty commitment. Following his honorable discharge from the Army, Mr. Dobbs then served reserve duty for another 17 years.

Mr. Speaker, true American heroes like Sterling Dobbs should be honored for their service to our Nation and for their commitment and sacrifices in battle. It was young men like Sterling Dobbs who saved the world from the threat of Nazi occupation of Europe. Without their help, America and her allies would not have been victorious in World War II.

COMMEMORATING MT. JULIET'S HEROES THIS PATRIOT DAY

HON. JIM COOPER

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the First Annual Patriot Day Community Candlelight Tribute in Mt. Juliet, TN.

Tonight, citizens from across Wilson County will come together to pay tribute to the men and women in uniform who work hard to protect our communities everyday. With flags flown at half-staff, a moment of silence and heartfelt prayer and a candlelight ceremony this evening, Mt. Juliet will remember all those who were lost on September 11, 2001 and honor the Americans who serve and protect our country today.

At home, our law enforcement officers, sheriff's department personnel, firefighters and emergency rescue workers give their energy and expertise to fight a variety of challenges and threats to make sure we are safe. From natural hazards and fires, to crime prevention, and the ever-growing meth epidemic, these local heroes endanger their lives to make ours safer.

Overseas, we count on the brave men and women of the Armed Forces to defend our freedom and protect democracy. They face countless dangers as they serve under the most difficult of conditions. We remember our family members, friends and neighbors across Wilson County and Tennessee who made the ultimate sacrifice for our freedom. And it is with great pride and admiration that we support the Tennesseans who continue to serve their Nation overseas.

Tonight's Patriot Day Community Candlelight in Mt. Juliet is an opportunity to personally thank our local heroes—both at home and overseas—for their dedication and sacrifice. It is a time to remember those patriots we have lost, and it is a chance for us to renew our own patriotic spirit.

NAVY MASTER DIVER CARL
BRASHEAR REMEMBERED

HON. G. K. BUTTERFIELD

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. BUTTERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to remember a great American warrior and patriot. Master Chief Carl Brashear passed away on July 25, 2006 at the Naval Medical Center in Portsmouth. His legendary accomplishments, however, live on in Navy lore today and for generations to come.

As a 17-year-old, Brashear joined the Navy in 1948, shortly after the service had been officially desegregated. At age 23, he applied for, was accepted to and graduated from the Navy Salvage Diving School. Twelve years later, an accident aboard the salvage ship Hoist nearly cost Brashear his career and his life. Brashear's left leg was amputated below the knee, a crippling debilitation for anyone but worse for a man whose dream was to be a master diver in the finest Navy in the world. He refused to give up.

In 1967, Brashear became the first Navy diver to be restored to full active duty as an amputee, and his focus returned to the sea. By March 1968, he was back to work at the NAS Norfolk where he served as the lead diver.

In June 1970, less than 4 years after the accident, Carl Brashear made history again. He became the first African-American to be certified as a master diver in the United States Navy and the only amputee deep-sea diver to ever achieve that status. Brashear would also go on to become the first black man to ever become Master Diver of the U.S. Navy, a position he held from 1975 to 1977. Brashear retired from the Navy in 1979 after 31 years of devoted service.

"Carl, a man with such humble beginnings, has touched so many people," said retired Master Diver J. Lamont King—the fifth black American in history to earn the title. "He represented African-Americans. He represented people with disabilities. He represented the United States Navy. He represented veterans. He was the best of the best of what was truly American." For many, Carl's courage broke barriers and helped changed attitudes, but his legacy is not that of an amputee or of an African-American but rather of a seaman who overcame disability and racial prejudices to join a long blue line of American heroes.

As the Command Master Chief of NAB Little Creek Hakim Diaz remarked, "We pay tribute to a seaman, a Sailor in whose chest beat the most valiant heart of all." MCBM Brashear's son, Phillip Brashear, an Army chief warrant officer 4, said it best, "He taught people worldwide that your race, your gender, your religion, none of that makes any difference. You can achieve your goals, you can be held accountable to your characteristics as a person, not by the color of your skin."

Countless stories of MCBM Brashear's bravery, determination, courage and friendship show that he was more than a man with a dream; he was a sailor whose skill and dedication make him a hero. Brashear was the recipient of multiple awards and commendations including the Navy Commendation Medal, Navy Achievement Medal, National Defense Service Medal, Navy and Marine Corps Medal, Navy Occupation Service Medal and the Presidential Unit Citation.

Nearly 800 people gathered last week to honor MCBM Brashear as he was memorialized. To their words I can add only that through the actions of Master Chief Carl Brashear, we are a better nation today. Without the resolve of sailors like Carl Brashear, a man whose boundless determination inspired every walk of life, our country and its people could never truly understand dedication and sacrifice.

IN HONOR OF COLONEL RICHARD STEPHEN GEBELEIN

HON. MICHAEL N. CASTLE

OF DELAWARE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to pay tribute to Colonel Richard Stephen Gebelein upon his retirement from the United States Army Judge Advocate General's Corps after 26 years of faithful and distinguished service.

Colonel Gebelein's legal career began upon his graduation from Villanova University School of Law in 1970. After law school, Colonel Gebelein served as a law clerk on the Delaware Chancery Court, deputy attorney general for the State of Delaware, State Solicitor of the Delaware Department of Justice, and as the Chief Deputy Public Defender. In 1979, Colonel Gebelein began his military career when he became a member of the United States Army Judge Advocate General's Corps with the HHC 261st Signal Command of the Delaware Army National Guard.

After serving as Delaware's Attorney General from 1979 to 1983, Colonel Gebelein was appointed to the bench of the Delaware Superior Court. Colonel Gebelein's appointment to the bench required that he become what's known as an M-Day Soldier, or a part-time drilling soldier. However, Colonel Gebelein continued to bolster his already impressive credentials by graduating from the United States Army War College and earning a degree in Islamic Studies at the University of Sarajevo in Bosnia-Herzegovina. Colonel Gebelein has also been integral in improving services provided to soldiers in the Delaware Army National Guard. Colonel Gebelein devised the system used for processing administrative discharge boards and courts martial at the Delaware Army National Guard.

In 2004, Colonel Gebelein was called-up and went to Afghanistan and served as the Rule of Law Officer for the Staff Judge Advocate Combined Forces Command—Afghanistan, in support of Operation Enduring Freedom. Colonel Gebelein served in Afghanistan for 8 months and shortly after his return to the Delaware Superior Court, his expertise as a premier international jurist was recognized; based on the quality of his character and knowledge in international legal matters, Colonel Gebelein was invited to address the United Nations forum on International Humanitarian Law and Peacekeeping Operations. Colonel Gebelein currently serves as an International Judge for War Crimes and Organized Crime and Economic Corruption on the Criminal and Appellate Divisions of the Court of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to express my deep personal thanks to Colonel Gebelein for his service to the United States Army, the Delaware Superior Court, and the citizens of Delaware. Colonel Gebelein's distinguished career is a testament to his impeccable character, intelligence, and integrity. I'm proud to call him a friend, but I'm grateful that he is a Delawarean.

TRIBUTE TO MONTY BROOKS AND THE IMPORTANCE OF BASIC FIRST AID TRAINING

HON. MIKE PENCE

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to highlight the importance of basic life-saving skills such as CPR and the Heimlich Maneuver. One of my constituents, Monty Brooks, recognizes the importance of these skills following a frightening experience in August.

On this warm Indiana evening, Monty Brooks and his 9-year-old daughter, Carrington, were spending time together on their porch. Carrington had prepared some leftovers from dinner and after a lull in the conversation, Monty realized something was terribly wrong with his daughter. Carrington clutched her neck indicating that she was choking.

Mr. Speaker, Monty Brooks knows first-hand the importance of basic life-saving skills. Monty is the director of health and safety for the Hoosier Heartland Chapter of the American Red Cross. His experience with Carrington only serves to highlight his long-time understanding that these skills are important.

Monty Brooks put his basic life-saving knowledge to use on that warm August evening. He performed the Heimlich Maneuver on Carrington, dislodging the food and allowing her to breathe freely once again.

I rejoice with Monty Brooks that Carrington is well after this frightening episode. I also commend Monty for his dedication to educating and training others in basic life-saving skills through the American Red Cross preventing the unnecessary deaths of his fellow Hoosiers. Along with Monty Brooks, I encourage Hoosiers and all Americans to get trained and become familiar with basic life-saving skills.

HONORING THE TOWN OF BUR-LINGTON, CT ON ITS 200TH ANNI-VERSARY

HON. NANCY L. JOHNSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Town of Burlington, Connecticut, on the occasion of its bicentennial.

The Town of Burlington emerged from its incorporation in 1806 as a dynamic community. Although the young town relied heavily on agriculture through its small farms, it was also home to several mills and factories, producing goods ranging from muskets to mantel clocks to cider brandy. Today, as many small businesses continue to grow and prosper in Burlington, I would like to commend the many generations of hard-working people who have helped to set such high standards of entrepreneurship and initiative throughout the town's history.

Many outstanding individuals have hailed from Burlington over the past two centuries. Among them were Samuel Monce, inventor of the glass cutter; Colonel Ralph L. Gezelman, who was responsible for organizing the supply shipments for the D-Day invasion; and Herman Humphrey; whose leadership at Amherst College helped transform that school into the fine institution that it is today.

Mr. Speaker, I commend this fine community for its innumerable accomplishments over the course of its first 200 years. As one of the fastest growing towns in Connecticut, Burlington not only has a rich history behind it, but a promising future as well.

TRIBUTE TO ST. MARY'S LAW SCHOOL

HON. MICHAEL T. MCCAUL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. MCCAUL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in honor of an institution that prides itself on excellence, distinction and integrity—my alma mater St. Mary's Law School.

Located in San Antonio, Texas, St. Mary's Law School is a community of faith and an independent Catholic institution that instills in its students a commitment to public service, and a profound moral and intellectual obligation to the public that its students will someday serve.

I am proud to say that I graduated from St. Mary's Law School in 1987, and the great education of the law and public service that I received there built the foundation for my career as a Member of Congress.

Recently, St. Mary's Law School dedicated their new Center for Terrorism Law. The St. Mary's Center for Terrorism Law is committed to the study of the legal issues associated with both antiterrorism and counterterrorism, with a particular emphasis on cyberterrorism and information assurance technologies.

Through its exceptional curriculum, the Center for Terrorism Law is dedicated to increasing the professional and public understanding of terrorism law, and the balance between ensuring global security and protecting the civil liberties of all Americans.

As a Member of the Homeland Security Committee and a St. Mary's alumnus, I am encouraged by their commitment to these complex and crucial issues that are at the foundation of America's national security. The education they are providing their students, and the work they are doing in the field of terrorism law will make America a safer place.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO SPECIALIST
IGNACIO RAMIREZ

HON. JON C. PORTER

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the life of United States Army Specialist Ignacio Ramirez, who was killed on August 9, 2006, in Ramadi, Iraq while serving in Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Ignacio "Nacho" Ramirez was born in Los Angeles on August 23, 1983. He spent the majority of his youth in Henderson, Nevada. He was involved in athletics throughout his youth, playing youth baseball and high school football. He graduated from Basic High School in 2002, and joined the United States Army shortly after graduation.

Specialist Ramirez was assigned to the 1st Battalion, 37th Armored Regiment, 1st Armored Division of the United States Army based out of Friedberg, Germany. He lost his life when a roadside bomb exploded near his vehicle.

Specialist Ramirez was a hero whose desire to serve his country will forever make an impact on his family, his community and his country. He joined the Army to help the United States fight the Global War on Terror and he will not only be remembered for his sacrifice and willing service, but for the extraordinary person that he was.

Ignacio's warmth and optimism brightened the lives of his family and friends. He is survived by his loving parents, Marina and Robert Vance; and six siblings, Ofelia Espinoza, Sidney Jiminez, Ivan and Jasmine Ramirez, and James and Tia Vance.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to honor the life of United States Army Specialist Ignacio Ramirez. Specialist Ramirez made the ultimate sacrifice for his country while defending democracy and freedom. He was a true patriot who served the United States of America with valor and courage. I am saddened by his loss and I extend my deepest sympathies to his family.

TRIBUTE TO VIETNAM WAR VETERAN WILLIAM REES, JR. OF LEVY COUNTY, FL

HON. GINNY BROWN-WAITE

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor William Rees, Jr. of Williston, Florida, a purple heart Veteran from the Vietnam war.

Mr. Rees was wounded in action in April of 1968 when a mine exploded near his station. As part of the 3rd Squadron, 11th armored cavalry regiment, Mr. Rees and his fellow soldiers faced the enemy in battle many times throughout that fateful month.

During April, his squadron destroyed seven hundred and twenty-five enemy bunkers and recorded forty-nine vietnamese soldiers killed in action. Additionally, Mr., Rees and his fellow troops confiscated significant weapons caches, numerous documents, utensils, food, and medical supplies.

Veterans of the Vietnam war made tremendous sacrifices in the name of freedom. More than 300,000 brave soldiers were wounded during the war, many of them disabled for life.

This level of sacrifice required a great amount of courage, strength, and devotion to the preservation of the American ideals of democracy and freedom for all. It is by remembering their sacrifices that we can celebrate the end of such a difficult conflict.

Mr. Speaker, veterans like William Rees, Jr. should be recognized for their service to our nation and for their commitment and sacrifices in battle. I am honored to have presented Mr. Rees with his long overdue purple heart. He should know that we truly consider him one of America's heroes.

TRIBUTE TO MRS. BONNIE REESE

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, it is with great honor and pleasure that I stand before you today to recognize the many accomplishments of Mrs. Bonnie Reese. I can truly say that Bonnie is a dedicated, distinguished, and honorable citizen. I have known Bonnie for many years, and she is one of the most involved citizens I have ever known, especially when it comes to her service to the community. Bonnie has served her community of Jasper County in some political capacity for 35 years, and her overall service to the community is immeasurable. For many years, Bonnie has been a constant fixture in the Jasper County Democratic Party. For her efforts, she will be honored at an event hosted by the Jasper County Democrats on Friday, September 8, 2006, at the American Legion Post #406 in Wheatfield, Indiana.

Bonnie Reese began her career with the Jasper County Democratic Party in 1971, at which time she served as the Party's Secretary. After serving 4 years in that position with unwavering professionalism and dedication, Bonnie was named to the position of Vice Chair. For over 30 years, Bonnie has maintained this post, and she has done so with complete loyalty to the Democratic Party and to the people of her community. When called upon to address the needs of the community, Bonnie has always been a willing servant. Because of her commitment and care for the citizens of Jasper County, Bonnie was also elected First District Vice Chair in 2004. In addition, she has the distinction of being the first female elected to the Jasper County Council. However, not only was Bonnie the only woman on the Council, but also the sole Democrat. Bonnie's knowledge of the government and her willingness to serve have made her very successful in all of the positions she has held.

Indisputably, Bonnie Reese has been extremely successful throughout her career in public office. However, her efforts to support and contribute to her community have extended beyond her political service. Aside from her public service, Bonnie is also known for her skills as an organist. Many people in the community know her from her service to her church, the Tefft United Methodist Church, where she serves not only as the church's organist, but also as its choir director.

When not engaged within the community, Bonnie spends her spare time with those closest to her, her family. A loving wife, mother, grandmother, and great-grandmother, Bonnie's commitment to her community is surpassed only by her love for her family. Bonnie has been married to her husband, Roy, for 48 years. She and Roy, a retiree of U.S. Steel after 40 years of service, have four sons: Daniel, Michael, Richard, and Douglas. Roy and Bonnie are proud grandparents of 14, and they also have one great-grandchild.

Mr. Speaker, Bonnie Reese has given her time and efforts selflessly to the people of Jasper County throughout her years of service. At this time, I ask that you and all of my distinguished colleagues join me in commending her for her lifetime of service and dedication.

RECOGNIZING THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF MR. FRED A. CURLS

HON. EMANUEL CLEAVER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. CLEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I proudly rise today in recognition of the achievements of Mr. Fred Curls, a pioneer for civil and political rights, and a resident of the Fifth District of Missouri, which I am honored to represent. This week, Mr. Curls is to be inducted into the Missouri Walk of Fame during a reception as part of the Congressional Black Caucus Foundation's Annual Legislative Conference, an event held to honor the achievements of African-Americans who have made significant contributions to Missouri. He is one of the original Founders of Freedom Incorporated, an African-American political organization which at one time could generate nearly 70,000 votes. Freedom Inc. was and has been very influential in delivering votes for a candidate or a cause.

The organization has been at the forefront in serving as a catalyst for change in civil rights, public accommodations, and the election of candidates at all levels of government. Its office has been visited by City Councilpersons, Mayors, Governors, Congresspersons, Senators, and persons with Presidential aspirations. For nearly forty-five years, Mr. Curls has dedicated his life to the Greater Kansas City community, promoting and improving political empowerment and civil rights of people of color. His son, State Senator Phil B. Curls, Sr. was the President of Freedom Inc. when I was Chairman. It was a period when Freedom Inc. was recognized as one of the most potent political organizations in the United States and brought about the election of the first African-American Congressman from the Fifth District of Missouri, U.S. Representative Alan Wheat.

Since the mid-1950s, Mr. Curls has been involved in real estate sales and appraisals, most notably in the African American community of Kansas City. He fought against "restrictive covenants" whereby residential homes could not be sold in certain areas to minorities. He was part of a class action lawsuit which resulted in the United States Supreme Court outlawing such covenants.

In all of his activities, he demonstrates his dedication and commitment to the greater good of others. He is actively involved with his high school graduating class, the "Class of 1937," which has been very close to this day. They have started the Lincoln High Alumni Association which gives scholarships to deserving young adults to go to college. He was recently honored by Jackson County, Missouri as one of its "Legacy Awardees" for its 175th anniversary as a political subdivision.

Throughout his life, he has believed in the saying "make it happen." He has put his principles to practice, and the effects of his efforts have "made it happen" throughout the Kansas City metropolitan area.

For those reasons and more, it is indeed an honor and privilege to recognize Mr. Fred Curls at the Missouri Walk of Fame reception, hosted by myself and fellow Missourian, U.S. Representative William Lacy Clay of St. Louis.

Mr. Speaker, just as this body has honored Dr. Martin Luther King as an outspoken pioneer and one of the historians of the civil rights struggle, and has honored Buck O'Neill as one of the historians for those who toiled in the Negro Leagues rather than the Major Leagues, we should now give honor to Fred Curls as one of the historians of Kansas City's African-American political struggle. He was active in promoting equality, elevating African-Americans from a second class citizenship to a first class citizenship to be recognized by all. Whatever we, as African-Americans, may attain in the political arena, Fred Curls, and those who labored to act on our behalf as political pioneers, have helped to change the course of history. In the year that this 109th Congress has approved the extension of the Voting Rights Act, it is with great pride that we honor one of our active, long-time heroes with this Missouri Walk of Fame. Mr. Speaker, please join me in expressing our appreciation to Mr. Fred Curls and his endless commitment to serving the residents of the State of Missouri. He is a true role model not just to the African-American community in Missouri, but to the entire community at large.

IN HONOR OF THE CAREER OF COACH EDDIE JACKSON

HON. MIKE ROSS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the career of Coach Eddie Jackson. Coach Jackson has been a guiding light to the youth of Arkansas and Texas for more than 35 years. On July 21st he was honored with an induction into the Arkansas High School Coaches Association Hall of Fame.

After graduating from Fairview High School in 1963, Coach Jackson went on to receive a BSE from Southern Arkansas University and an MSE from Henderson State University. Within months of graduating college he joined the Prescott High School football and track staffs, winning district championships in his first year. In 1973, his first year as a head football coach, Coach Jackson won the first of three state championships at Prescott. His last state championship came in 1995, his final year as head coach.

Track and field has always held a special place in Coach Jackson's heart. During his distinguished career, he has amassed numerous titles and honors. While at Prescott, Coach Jackson won 15 district titles, was state runner-up twice and won an impressive three state championships. He has also served as the state track meet director twice and was an official at the Southeastern Conference Outdoor Championships.

After leaving Prescott, Coach Jackson went on to coach one season at Hampton before moving to Texarkana and coaching one year at Texas High and two at Liberty-Eylau. In 2002, Coach Jackson became middle school athletic coordinator in Hooks, Texas while also coaching middle school football and track.

Since Prescott is my hometown, I had the privilege to see first-hand the lives this man touched not, only in sports but in the community as well. On July 21st Coach Jackson joined 10 other outstanding coaches to be inducted into the Arkansas High School Coaches Association Hall of Fame.

I am so pleased to have the opportunity to properly recognize Coach Eddie Jackson before the United States Congress for his outstanding contributions to the communities and youth he has touched in Arkansas and Texas. Please join me in congratulating Coach Jackson on his induction into the Arkansas High School Coaches Association Hall of Fame.

THE SECOND ANNIVERSARY OF THE BESLAN MASSACRE

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my sympathy over the terrible tragedy that took place just over two years ago in the southern Russian city of Beslan. This nightmare began on September 1, 2004, the first day of school when over 1000 students, parents, and teachers were forced by terrorists at gunpoint into a gymnasium rigged with explosives. These young students and others were held hostage for three days without access to food or water while the sick and wounded were denied access to medical treatment. In the end, nearly 400 people lost their lives, including 186 children, and over 700 people were wounded in the savage and senseless acts of violence that occurred in Beslan.

Words alone cannot adequately convey the heartache and sorrow over this barbaric act of terrorism. Having an entire Russian school taken hostage by terrorists was shocking. As the world watched, hoping against hope that this would somehow be resolved peacefully, it was horrible to learn on September 3rd that there had been massive loss of innocent lives in the early afternoon of that day.

Mr. Speaker, we continue to grieve for those children and their families and join with other Americans in solidarity with the Russian people on this somber second anniversary of the Beslan massacre.

As Americans we know what it is like to watch—helplessly and in horror—as merciless acts of terrorism are committed against innocent people. We will never forget the tremendous outpouring of sympathy from the people of Russia following the tragic events of September 11, 2001. This support was much appreciated by our wounded nation and helped us through the dark days in the immediate aftermath of the senseless violence of that fateful day.

As both our nations mourn the losses of September 3rd and September 11th, let us find hope in the countless stories of humanitarian acts that surrounded those horrible events. Colleagues, let us remember the heroism of our first responders, the valor of our troops, and the generosity of our communities in their collective response to these tragedies. May the God of mercy grant His peace to all those who continue to suffer from the violence of those tragic days.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO ANDRE AGASSI

HON. JON C. PORTER

OF NEVADA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Mr. Andre Agassi as he retires from a 20-year professional tennis career.

Andre Agassi was born on April 29, 1970, in Las Vegas, NV, to Elizabeth and Emmanuel "Mike" Agassi. When he was an infant, Andre's father hung tennis balls above his crib in the hopes that he would some day become a tennis champion. From the time he could walk and hold a racquet effectively, Andre practiced his game, hitting up to 5,000 balls a day. By age 5, he was practicing with pros such as Jimmy Connors and Roscoe Tanner. At the age of 14, Andre's father sent him to train at Nick Bollettieri's Tennis Academy in Florida. Two years later, in 1986, he turned professional, winning his first top-level singles title in 1987 at the Sul America Open in Itaparica, Brazil.

Andre has won eight Grand Slam singles titles and has achieved a total of 60 career singles titles with one career doubles title. Andre is one of only five players to win all four Grand Slam events in his career: four Australian Open titles, one French Open, one Wimbledon, and two U.S. Opens. Furthermore, Andre won the men's singles gold medal at the 1996 Olympic Games in Atlanta, and in 1999 was ranked the No. 1 player in the world.

In addition to his achievements on the court, Andre participates in many charity organizations and founded the Andre Agassi Charitable Association (ACA), whose mission statement is to provide educational and recreational institutions and activities for abandoned, abused, and at-risk kids. Every year, the ACA holds a concert benefit entitled Grand Slam for Children, featuring performances by artists such as Celine Dion, Robin Williams, and Sir Elton John. After its 11th year, the event has successfully raised over $50 million for the at-risk children of Las Vegas. In 1995, he won the ATP Arthur Ashe Humanitarian award in recognition of his efforts for helping disadvantaged youth in Las Vegas. In 1997, Andre opened the Boys & Girls Club to assist the youth of Las Vegas, which features a junior tennis team, Team Agassi, as well as a basketball program, the Agassi Stars. In 2001, Andre opened the Andre Agassi College Preparatory Academy in Las Vegas, NV, a K-12 public charter school founded on the principle that nothing can impact on a child's life more than the education they receive. Additionally, through the ACA, he supports Clark County's only residential facility for abused and neglected children called Child Haven, donating funds for a six-room classroom building now named the Agassi Center for Education. His foundation also provided $720,000 to assist in the building of the Andre Agassi Cottage for Medically Fragile Children.

In addition to his professional success and his contributions to the community, Andre is a dedicated family man; he is the loving husband of former tennis champion Steffi Graf, and the devoted father to 4-year-old son Jaden Gil and 2-year-old daughter Jaz Elle.

The consummate sportsman, Andre praised his fans following his match on Sunday, September 3, 2006 at the U.S. Open. This match brought to a close one of the most impressive professional careers in all of sports. After walking off the court, Andre said "The scoreboard said I lost today, but what the scoreboard doesn't say is what I've found. Over the last 21 years, I've found loyalty. You have pulled for me on the court and also in life. I have found inspiration. You have willed me to succeed sometimes in my lowest moments." He will always be No. 1 in the world, not only as an athlete, but also as a great humanitarian. Andre has willed our community and children to succeed at some of our lowest moments.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to recognize Mr. Andre Agassi. I would like to offer Andre my sincerest congratulations on an esteemed career, my warmest thanks for his ongoing contributions to the Las Vegas community, and wish him much luck in his future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO THE NORTHERN LITTLE LEAGUE TEAM OF COLUMBUS, GEORGIA

HON. SANFORD D. BISHOP, JR.

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. BISHOP of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay special tribute and congratulate the 2006 Little League World Champions, the Northern Little League team of Columbus, Georgia.

The victory by our Northern Little Leaguers over the undefeated Kawaguchi City team representing Japan, makes them only the second team from Georgia to win a World Championship. While a team from Marietta won in 1983, our team is only the second team from Georgia to ever qualify for this event in its entire 60 year history.

As the Member of Congress representing Columbus and Muscogee County, Georgia, where most of the young men live, I can not tell you how proud we all are of this fine young team.

The entire city and surrounding community was thrilled by the success of its native sons. The Columbus Northern Little League players are not only world champions; they are hometown heroes and celebrities as well.

These young men represented the city of Columbus, the State of Georgia and indeed, our great nation, in the finest tradition of the Little League, and what it stands for and represents—teamwork, sportsmanship and camaraderie.

The spirit of sportsmanship was no more apparent than this year. After winning the Championship game, the entire Columbus team walked over to their opponents dugout, and invited the Japanese team to help them hoist the championship banner and to join them in taking the victory lap around the field. Then, side by side, the two teams scooped up dirt from the infield to keep as souvenirs.

I also want to pay tribute to the parents of these young men. Any parent of a little league baseball player, or for that matter, football, soccer or other sports knows and appreciates the love and commitment needed to be successful in these activities.

Let me also pay tribute to the dedicated Columbus fans, hundreds of whom took the 900-mile trip to Williamsport from Columbus to support our team, as well as the other Little League teams in the Columbus area, and the many volunteers, sponsors and supporters who have dedicated themselves to Little League sports year after year.

Throughout the World Series, it was clear that our Northern Little Leaguers were well schooled and prepared, which in large part, points to the hard work and dedication of the team's Manager—Randy Morris, and Coach—Richard Carter.

But it was the members of the team themselves who had to put it all together on the field. And I would like to pay special tribute to each one of the team members individually, including: Brady Hamilton #6, Ryan Lang #18, Josh Lester #4, Matthew Hollis #10, Patrick Stallings #25, Mason Meyers #16, Kyle Rovig #8, Matthew Kuhlberg #7, Cody Walker #21, Kyle Carter #19, and J.T. Phillips #22.

Babe Ruth once said, "Baseball was, is and always will be to me the best game in the world."

And indeed, for the millions of Little League fans around the world, the 2006 Little League Championship game will go down as one of the best single games in the history of the event.

TRIBUTE TO STAFF SERGEANT CHRISTOPHER SWANSON

HON. STENY H. HOYER

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, the tragic death of a young soldier from Anne Arundel County, Maryland, who gave the ultimate measure of sacrifice in the global war on terror, saddens all of us. As we continue to fight this war, the loss of each and every service member is a tragedy.

Anne Arundel County, the state of Maryland, and our Nation lost a great hero when Army Staff Sergeant Christopher Swanson of Rose Haven was killed in Anbar on July 22.

More than 50 of Maryland's bravest have now died in the war in Iraq.

Christopher Swanson was completely dedicated to protecting his fellow troops. He wrote on his personal website, "I would do anything for them even if it means giving my life to save theirs."

Swanson was highly regarded in his family and community. As a teenager, he traveled on mission trips with members of the First Baptist Church in Upper Marlboro, providing the hope of a better life to gang members in West Virginia and Ohio.

He was the captain of his soccer team at Southern High School, where faculty remembered a "happy go-lucky kid that was always lending a hand."

In August of 1999, Sergeant Swanson enlisted in the Army, even as others tried to talk him out of it. He served in Kosovo as a member of the 82nd Airborne Division, and was part of the initial assault on Iraq in March of 2003, the first of three tours.

Sergeant Swanson was awarded two purple hearts, one after being injured by an improvised explosive device just weeks before he was killed. He persevered, telling his brother Kenneth that he would not be sidelined.

Christopher Swanson gave his life for all of us. As his representative in Congress, I am grateful for his patriotism and his sacrifice. The Fifth District of Maryland and all Americans join the Swanson family in mourning the loss of this fine young man, a real hero.

IN LASTING MEMORY OF JUDGE JOHN W. GOODSON

HON. MIKE ROSS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the memory of Judge John W.

Goodson, a true treasure to the community of Texarkana, Arkansas, and to the entire state of Arkansas. Judge Goodson passed away August 18, 2006, in Texarkana, Arkansas, at the age of 80.

John W. Goodson began practicing law in 1951 and was known as a "gentle giant" in the courtroom because of his imposing height, booming voice and tender heart. Throughout his distinguished career as a lawyer and Circuit Judge, John Goodson was a mentor and a friend to many. Some of those he mentored moved on to become international lawyers, elected prosecutors, Circuit Judges, Arkansas Supreme Court Judges and a federal Judge.

Judge Goodson served as the presiding Circuit Judge in courts in Miller, Lafayette, Hempstead and Nevada counties in Southwest Arkansas.

Judge Goodson was a World War II Air Force Veteran, a member of the Arkansas Masonic Lodge, and a board member and former Sunday school teacher at the First United Methodist Church in Texarkana, Arkansas.

Nothing meant more in the life of John W. Goodson than the love he had for his family. This love was evident in all he did, from his active involvement in his church to his role as a community leader.

My condolences go out to his wife, Doris; his daughters Jan Murphy and Mary Jane Briggs; his son John Goodson; and his three granddaughters, Jane Anne Murphy, Wesley Hana Goodson and Mary Claire Briggs. Judge Goodson will be sorely missed in Texarkana and throughout the state of Arkansas.

RECOGNIZING THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF DR. GAYLE HOLLIDAY

HON. EMANUEL CLEAVER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. CLEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I proudly rise today in recognition of the achievements of Dr. Gayle Holliday, an important resident of the Fifth District of Missouri, which I am honored to represent. This week, Dr. Holliday is to be inducted into the Missouri Walk of Fame during a reception as part of the Congressional Black Caucus Foundation's Annual Legislative Conference, an event held to honor the achievements of African-Americans who have made significant contributions to Missouri. I had the privilege of nominating Gayle for the Congressional Black Caucus Spouses' Celebration of Leadership Unsung Hero Award. While this award carries no monetary prize, it is no less a testament to her devotion to bettering our area. For more than 35 years, Gayle has dedicated her life to the Greater Kansas City community, promoting and improving socio-economic conditions, political empowerment and civil rights of people of color.

Dr. Holliday holds a Bachelor of Arts in Political Science, a Masters in Public Administration, and a Ph.D. in Management and Applied Technology. She is the President and Owner of G & H Consulting, LLC, which has been in business for more than 10 years, helping clients in the public, private and non-profit sectors with strategic planning and business plan development. She was recently appointed by Jackson County, Missouri to oversee the minority and women hiring by contractors and subcontractors for the Truman Sports Complex renovation, which is home of the Kansas City Chiefs and the Kansas City Royals. Additionally, under President Bill Clinton, Gayle was selected as one of a small group of individuals to represent the transportation industry on the President's transition team.

Civically, Dr. Holliday serves on twelve boards in the Greater Kansas City Area with varied interests such as healthcare, education, economic development, and diversity in such areas as race, sex, and religion. Through these community activities, Gayle amasses more than 70 hours of community service each month. She is also a member of the church I pastor, St. James United Methodist Church, and finds time to serve as chair of the Pastor Parish Staff Relations Committee. In all of her activities, she demonstrates her dedication and commitment to the greater good of others. Her high energy pace translates directly to the results she is able to obtain for the benefit of all in the Greater Kansas City Area. Regardless of whether she is in the trenches or the boardroom, her poise and thoughtfulness is ever present.

Throughout her life, Dr. Gayle Holliday has exercised a tireless belief in the principle of putting "others" before "self." She has put her principles to practice, and the effects of her efforts can be felt throughout the Kansas City Metropolitan Area.

For those reasons and more, it is indeed an honor and privilege to recognize Dr. Holliday at the Missouri Walk of Fame reception, hosted by myself and fellow Missourian, U.S. Representative WILLIAM LACY CLAY of St. Louis.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in expressing our appreciation to Dr. Gayle Holliday and her endless commitment to serving the residents of the State of Missouri. She is a true role model not just to the African-American community in Missouri, but to the entire African-American community at large. May her success serve as a stepping stone for many other African-Americans eager to be just as successful in their endeavors. While it is but a small acknowledgement for all of the work she has done, it is a heartfelt gesture, taking strength from the myriad lives she has touched in our hometown.

HONORING RICHARD GIMBL

HON. TIMOTHY H. BISHOP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. BISHOP of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to rise in honor of an American hero and one of the bravest firemen that Long Island has ever known, Mr. Richard Gimbl, Chief of the Holbrook Fire Department.

It is a tremendous privilege for me to inform the House that Chief Gimbl was recently selected by the great State of New York as its 2006 "Fireman of the Year." This award is the most recent of a long and highly prestigious list of decorations bestowed upon Chief Gimbl throughout a remarkably distinguished career exemplified by valor, sacrifice and selfless dedication to his fellow firemen and on behalf of a grateful community that he served and protected for 36 years.

Mr. Speaker, Chief Gimbl has answered the call time and again. He was dispatched to Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands to help with the relief and recovery from the violent hurricanes of the late 1980s. As part of a FEMA relief unit, he responded to the Oklahoma City bombing in 1995. And he was there at Ground Zero on September 11th when the World Trade Center and so many of our bravest firemen fell.

At a time in our Nation's history when the ever-present threat of terrorism and natural disasters continue to imperil our safety and security here at home, we need and are deeply grateful for heroes like Chief Gimbl, who set the bar for a higher standard of commitment and bravery consistently demonstrated by our first responders, and who comfort us each day by the blanket of security they provide at the expense of tremendous sacrifice.

Mr. Speaker, as Chief Gimbl recovers from injuries sustained in the line of duty last year, we join with his family, fellow firefighters at the Holbrook FD, and the entire Long Island community in expressing our sincere best wishes for a full and speedy recovery and to assure each of them that he will remain in our thoughts and prayers.

15TH ANNIVERSARY OF UKRAINE'S INDEPENDENCEHON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, August 24th marked the fifteenth anniversary of Ukraine's rebirth as an independent state, finally being freed from the shackles of Soviet misrule that included a reign of terror, cultural suppression and a genocidal famine.

The last fifteen years have witnessed peaks and valleys as the Ukrainian people have struggled to overcome the legacy of communism and Moscow's imperialism. While the process of Ukraine's restoration is still a work in progress, great strides have been made to consolidate that nation as an independent, free and democratic state. The December 1, 1991 referendum on independence, the 1996 Constitution and especially the 2004 Orange Revolution stand as highlights, demonstrating Ukrainian resolve for independence, rule of law, democracy and freedom, and the continuing promise of a better life.

In contrast to the first 13 years of independence, Ukraine is now "free", and not merely "partly free." The March 26 parliamentary election was one of the freest and fairest ever held among post-Soviet states. The Ukrainian economy is on the road to recovery and development after the initial post-Soviet decline of the 1990s. Ukraine is a responsible neighbor and has shown its mettle as a partner for peace and security in the world.

Of course, challenges remain despite the real progress that has been made. There have been missed opportunities. Many of the promises of the Orange Revolution are only partially fulfilled. The rule of law, including a truly independent judiciary, remains to be consolidated. Corruption, although not as egregious as before the Orange Revolution, still rears its ugly head. Many Ukrainians believe all too many among the political elites look first toward their personal interests rather than to the good of the people and of the nation they are supposed to serve. As the last months have demonstrated, political stability can be elusive, and it remains to be seen what direction the new government will take. Nevertheless, Ukraine continues to show tremendous potential, and I am firmly convinced that this still relatively young 15-year-old independent state will fulfill its potential.

Mr. Speaker, in looking over the last fifteen years, we must not forget the sacrifices of millions who fought for Ukraine's liberty over the course of the last century, often against great odds and at great personal risk. Whether in the struggle for Ukraine's short-lived independence in 1918-21, or the insurgent armies that fought against both Nazi and Soviet rule during and after World War II, many Ukrainians made the ultimate sacrifice.

More recently, in the final decades of Soviet domination, Ukrainian Helsinki Monitors and other human rights activists challenged the system, calling upon the Kremlin to live up to commitments voluntarily undertaken when Leonid Brezhnev signed the 1975 Helsinki Final Act. One such renowned activist, Ukrainian Helsinki Monitor Nadia Svitlychna, who served three years in a Soviet labor camp for her tireless defense of human rights and freedom, died last month. We honor the memory of Mrs. Svitlychna, recalling that it was courageous and dedicated individuals like her who, as much as anyone, paved the way for an independent, democratic Ukraine.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud of the role that the Helsinki Commission, which I Co-Chair, has played throughout its 30-year existence in firmly supporting human rights and freedom for Ukraine. I am pleased that the Congress has stood firm in support of Ukraine and am confident that the United States will continue to extend the hand of friendship as Ukraine moves toward its rightful place as a fully integrated member of the Euro-Atlantic community of nations.

TRIBUTE TO MARK CHESNUTT

HON. KEVIN BRADY

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Mark Chesnutt on this day September 6, 2006, his 43rd birthday. This outstanding country music star currently has 14 No. 1 hits, 23 top ten singles, four platinum albums, five gold records, and continually maintains a hefty live tour schedule.

Born in Beaumont, TX, Mark got his start playing in honky-tonk bars throughout his hometown area singing alongside his father, Bob Chesnutt. His dad traveled often to Nashville and started taking Mark along at 17 where he was soon discovered by talent agents who recognized the vocal and authentic talents Mark possesses.

Signed at 17 by MCA, Mark soon won the coveted Country Music Association's Horizon Award recognizing the industry's top new talent. At the awards ceremony, he was introduced by legendary country music star George Jones who remarked, "This boy from Beaumont, Texas is the real deal."

Throughout the 90's Mark's singles continued to light up the chart including some of the decade's most memorable up-tempo hits like "Bubba Shot the Jukebox" and "Going Through the Big D." Also accelerating his rise to stardom were hits like the emotional ballads "I'll Think of Something" and "I Don't Want to Miss a Thing."

Mark's excellence continues today combining world-class vocals and awe-inspiring stage performances that leave crowds standing in ovation until they themselves are hoarse! Most remarkable of all, he stays true to his roots keeping the traditional country music style he was raised on in an ever-changing country music landscape.

Mark Chesnutt is a true gift to Country Music and specifically the 8th District of Texas. Not only has he blessed us with musical hit after hit, he also has tirelessly given of his time and talent to assist east and south-east Texas in their recovery from the devastating effects of Hurricane Rita. Mark also has a wonderful marriage to Tracie Chesnutt with three beautiful children: Waylon, Casey, and Cameron.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for helping me honor Mark Chesnutt, this America country music superstar, on his 43rd birthday.

CONGRATULATING RONNIE LÓPEZ
FOR HIS INDUCTIO INTO VALLE
DEL SOL'S HALL OF FAMEHON. ED PASTOR

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. PASTOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise before you today to proudly pay tribute to an Arizonan who has exemplified the meanings of leadership, commitment to community, social justice and integrity. He is a highly-regarded leader not only in Arizona, but nationally, and someone whom I am proud to call my friend—Mr. Ronnie López.

For more than 30 years, Ronnie López has been a leader in various community and political endeavors that have improved the quality of life for Arizona's residents. For his work, he will be entered into the Valle Del Sol Hall of Fame during the 16th Annual Profiles of Success Hispanic Leadership Awards Celebration on September 8, 2006, in Phoenix, Arizona.

Born in Miami, Arizona, Ronnie and his two brothers were raised by a single parent, Mrs. Vera López, after the death of his father. Ronnie married his high school sweetheart, Angie, and together they headed to Phoenix in the late 1960s to pursue higher education and new opportunities. They have two outstanding sons, Paul and Marcos, and Paul and his wife Elizabeth are expecting a daughter in December, another point of pride for Ronnie as a first-time grandfather.

Ronnie served in the administration of Arizona Governor Bruce Babbitt for ten years, ultimately serving as his Chief of Staff. Ronnie had the honor of twice administering the oath of office to Babbitt: when then Attorney General Bruce Babbitt succeeded to the governorship in 1979 and again in 1993 when Babbitt became the Secretary of Interior. He has served and continues to serve on numerous boards and commissions, including Bank of America, Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute, Friends of Sky Harbor Advisory Board, and the Governor's Commission on the September 11th Memorial.

Most recently, Ronnie served as the co-chair of the 2006 City of Phoenix Bond Committee the work of which voters approved in March 2006. Ronnie also is the former presiding Justice of the Peace of the West Phoenix Precinct in Maricopa County. Ronnie also led the establishment of community based organizations like Valle del Sol, Inc., and Chicanos Por La Causa, Inc., two of the Valley's leading non-profit Hispanic advocacy organizations.

He also has served on numerous political campaigns and sits on the National Democratic Business Council. Among his many accolades, in the year 2000, he was listed as one of the "Most Influential Hispanics" by Hispanic Business Magazine.

Mr. Speaker, as you can surmise, Ronnie López, a Miami Vandal, has exhibited a tireless and visionary commitment to making Arizona a better place to live for all people. He is an exemplary leader and a profoundly committed individual who is a true role model for the nation. Therefore, I am pleased to pay tribute to my friend Ronnie López, and I know my colleagues will join me in thanking him and wishing him great success.

TO ACKNOWLEDGE AND ENCOURAGE CONGRESS'S SUPPORT FOR SEPTEMBER 9-10 DESIGNATED AS LUPUS AWARENESS WEEKEND

HON. DAVID SCOTT

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. SCOTT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I rise before you today to emphasize the importance of raising awareness about Lupus, as well as recognizing it as one of America's major diseases. It is important to note more Americans have this disease than cerebral palsy, multiple sclerosis, sickle-cell anemia and cystic fibrosis combined.

In raising awareness about this devastating disease, I joined many of my colleagues in supporting increased funding for public and health professional programs which raise awareness and understanding about lupus. Furthermore, I stand with many of my colleagues in strengthening the Nation's research efforts to identify the causes of and cure for lupus.

I believe one of the more important ways of raising awareness is encouraging education about the disease and recognizing the symptoms. However, as many of the symptoms experienced by those who have lupus mimic other diseases, lupus is very often hard to diagnose. There is no cure for lupus and researchers have yet to learn what causes the disease. It is of interest to note, lupus occurs more frequently in women and is also two to three times more common among African Americans, Hispanics, Asians and Native Americans.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to support September 9 through 10 as Lupus Awareness Weekend. I am hopeful with increased professional awareness and improved techniques for diagnosing patients we can ensure early treatment options as well as early diagnosis. It is of utmost importance we remain vigilant in improving access to information about this disease and ensuring funding levels remain adequate.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor and pay tribute to Lieutenant Jessica Hill, who perished on August 17th in the line of duty for our country.

Lt. Hill was proud to serve in the United States Coast Guard, and she earned the respect and admiration of many. She joined the Coast Guard in October 2001 after earning a Master's Degree, and was stationed at MSO San Francisco where she decided to become a Coast Guard Dive Officer.

After successfully completing dive school, Lt. Hill was assigned to the Cutter Healy, one of the Coast Guard's three polar ice cutters, as a marine science and dive officer. With her positive attitude, easy laugh and constant smile, she also served as Morale Officer for the crew of that vessel.

Lieutenant Jessica Hill's ambition, training and passion served to inspire her entire unit, her shipmates, her family and many outside the Coast Guard. She has been awarded the Meritorious Service Medal and was regarded as a good Coastie, a woman of honor and a patriot.

We should all remember Jessica's life, courage and ultimate sacrifice in service for our Nation.

A native of St. Augustine, Jessica was a loving daughter to Mr. William Hill and Mrs. Dawn Zimmerman, and sister to Mrs. Adrienne Gullet. To all of Jessica's family, we know she will be dearly missed and we extend our deepest sympathy.

Mr. Speaker, because of Lieutenant Jessica Hill's sacrifice for our country, I ask all Members of the U.S. House of Representatives to join me in recognizing her service in our Nation's Coast Guard and remembering both her life and her dedication to the United States of America.

HON. EMANUEL CLEAVER

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. CLEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I proudly rise today in recognition of the achievements of Mr. Peter Yelorda, a person who has spent nearly 35 years as a leader in the corporate and public sector, and a resident of the Fifth District of Missouri, which I am honored to represent. This week, Mr. Yelorda is to be inducted into the Missouri Walk of Fame during a reception as part of the Congressional Black Caucus Foundation's Annual Legislative Conference, an event held to honor the achievements of African-Americans who have made significant contributions to Missouri.

Peter holds a Bachelor of Science in Science from Eastern Michigan University, and a Masters in Education from the University of Michigan specializing in Public Policy, Community and National Planning and Development. He is the Executive Vice President and Chief Executive Officer of Blue Cross Blue Shield of Kansas City and has served in that capacity for nine years. In his role as a senior executive at his company, Peter is one of the highest ranking African-American executives in the Greater Kansas City Area. Prior to joining Blue Cross Blue Shield, he was Assistant City Manager of the City of Kansas City, Missouri while I was Mayor.

Civically, Peter serves on nine boards in the Greater Kansas City Area, including the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the University of Missouri-Kansas City Board of Trustees, Urban League, and others. He serves as the Chairperson for the Full Employment Council, Chairman of the TIF Commission and Co-Chair of the Downtown Economic Stimulus Authority. In addition, he serves as the Chair of the Jazz District Re-development Corporation, the not-for-profit entity organized to revitalize the Historic 18th and Vine Jazz District. Under Peter's leadership, senior housing, a restaurant, and young adult housing were born. Mr. Yelorda is respected by business and community activists alike. Through these activities, Peter spends a considerable amount of time in service to the community each month. In all of his activities, he demonstrates his dedication and commitment to the greater good of others. Regardless of his leadership role, he always conducts himself with dedication, poise, and thoughtfulness, being mindful of all concerns.

For those reasons and more, it is indeed an honor and privilege to recognize Mr. Peter Yelorda at the Missouri Walk of Fame reception, hosted by myself and fellow Missourian, U.S. Representative Wm. LACY CLAY of St. Louis.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in expressing our appreciation to Peter and his endless commitment to serving the residents of the State of Missouri. He is a true role model not just to the African-American community in Missouri, but to the entire community at large. May his success serve as a stepping stone for many other African-Americans eager to be just as successful in their endeavors. While it is but a small acknowledgement for all of the work he has done, it is a heartfelt gesture, taking strength from the myriad lives he has touched in our hometown.

TRIBUTE TO UNION BENEFICA MEXICANA

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, it is with great honor and pleasure that I stand before you today to recognize the Union Benefica Mexicana (U.B.M.) on its many accomplishments throughout its 50 years of service to the people of Northwest Indiana and Mexico. This exceptional milestone will be highlighted at the annual Mexican Day Parade to be held on Sunday, September 10, 2006, in East Chicago, Indiana.

The U.B.M., officially founded in November 1956, was the result of a merger between three established organizations: the Cuatemoc Association, the Benito Juárez Association, and the Union of Latin Steel Workers. Since its inception, the U.B.M. has always taken pride in being a pillar of the Mexican Community. They have always made it a priority to remember and celebrate Mexico's independence, through the organization of parades and festivities. At the same time, they have focused on improving the lives of the youth, speaking out against discrimination, and assisting those in need, both here in Northwest Indiana and throughout Mexico.

Throughout its history, the U.B.M. has been instrumental in improving the quality of life in the Mexican community. The efforts of the U.B.M. have been felt by every generation, but nowhere has the selfless commitment of its members been demonstrated more than to the youth of Northwest Indiana and Mexico. Locally, the U.B.M. has a strong tradition of sponsoring youth activities, such as Little League baseball teams, soccer teams, boxing teams, and folkloric dance groups, as well as organizing special events, such as Christmas and Halloween parties and the annual Fiesta De Los Niños celebration.

In addition, the U.B.M.'s commitment to improving educational opportunities for the youth of the community is evidenced by their sponsorship of storytelling sessions by renowned authors, their participation in public library reading programs, and training seminars focused on public speaking and artistic performance. The U.B.M.'s dedication to the youth, specifically towards young women in the community, is further demonstrated by an annual program which, with the support of local elected officials, awards scholarships to three deserving young women each year.

Outside of the United States, the U.B.M.'s commitment to the people of Mexico is a shining example of the dedication, generosity, and compassion found in the people of Northwest Indiana. The U.B.M.'s efforts in Mexico, throughout the years, have included relief for victims of natural disasters in Mexico City, Acapulco, Oaxaca, and Jalisco, to name a few. The U.B.M. has also conducted fundraising efforts that have led to the building of churches in El Llano, Michoacan, and Aguas Caliente, as well as the purchase of an ambulance in Nuevo Leon. In addition, to assist Mexican families during the most difficult of times, the U.B.M. has demonstrated its benevolence by providing financial assistance to families in order to assist with the transporting of deceased relatives back to Mexico.

Mr. Speaker, at this time, I ask that you and my other distinguished colleagues join me in honoring and congratulating the Union Benefica Mexicana, its members, and its President, Mr. Tony Barrera, on the organization's 50th anniversary. Their many accomplishments, their tireless efforts to improve the community, and their service to the people of Northwest Indiana and Mexico will forever be remembered.

IN RECOGNITION OF STEPHEN K.
HALL

HON. DENNIS A. CARDOZA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. CARDOZA. Mr. Speaker, it is with the greatest pleasure that I rise today on behalf of my colleagues Rep. JIM COSTA, Rep. DEVIN NUNES, Rep. RICHARD POMBO and Rep. GEORGE RADANOVICH to honor Stephen K. Hall, the Executive Director of the Association of California Water Agencies (ACWA) for his outstanding contributions to California agriculture and the California water community.

The recognition that my colleagues and I are offering today is well deserved and long overdue. Throughout his career, Steve has remained a champion for California agriculture and for the protection and delivery of safe and clean water. Soon after graduating from California State University, Fresno in the early 1970's, Steve began his career as General Manager of the Tulare Lake Drainage District. In the years following, Steve founded the Land Preservation Association, an organization created to help develop and implement irrigation and drainage policy in California, and the California Farm Water Coalition, a pioneer collaboration of agricultural water users and water agencies. In 1992 Steve became the Executive Director of ACWA, and in the years since has helped shape the laws and policies that affect California's cities, farms and businesses. Under Steve's guidance and leadership, the ACWA has been a leader in California water issues. Devoted to promoting the development, management and reasonable beneficial use of water in an environmentally balanced manner, Steve has been involved in many major statewide water issues affecting California's local water agencies. He was a lead negotiator in the three-way negotiations between agricultural, urban and environmental water representatives that led to the creation of the CALFED Bay-Delta Program and the passage of Propositions 204 and 13.

Steve Hall's expertise in California's water issues and water policy has been recognized and utilized by many as he has served in numerous appointed and advisory capacities to Governors Deukmejian, Wilson and Davis. Currently, Steve serves on the Boards of Directors for the California Water Institute and the California Infrastructure Coalition, as a member of the UC Davis Land Air and Water Advisory Committee and the California Bay-Delta Public Advisory Committee, and is the co-chair of the Water Supply Sub-Committee for the California Bay-Delta Water Authority.

Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of Steve Hall's 55th birthday, it is with the utmost respect and appreciation that my colleague's and I acknowledge his enormous and lasting contributions to the future of California and America in his continued commitment to sustaining our most precious resource, water.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO BRIGADIER GENERAL ROBERT TAYLOR

HON. MIKE ROGERS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor the accomplishments of Brigadier General Robert Taylor as he retires after nearly 40 years of service with the United States Army and the Michigan Army National Guard. I thank General Taylor on behalf of those individuals who have benefitted from his time, contributions, and leadership abilities.

Robert Taylor began his career in the Michigan Army National Guard in 1964, where he served 3 years as a Military Police enlisted soldier. Soon after, he was commissioned a Second Lieutenant, Military Police Corps in June of 1969. He has held command and staff assignments in the 146th Military Police Battalion, 1st Battalion 119th Field Artillery 38th Infantry Division, 72nd Rear Area Operations Center, and Commander, Recruiting Command, Michigan Army National Guard. During his over 40 years of service, he has been promoted to several, senior staff assignments. Some of these prestigious assignments included positions as Deputy Chief of Staff Operations, Chief of Staff, Michigan National Guard, and in October of 1993, he was promoted to General Officer as the Assistant Adjutant General, Army. General Taylor held the position of Commanding General, 46th Military Police Command for the Michigan National Guard from June 1, 2004 until June 29, 2006, at which time he reverted to sole duty as the Assistant Adjutant General for the Army. In this assignment, Taylor was responsible for the wartime readiness of over 8,300 soldiers of the Michigan Army National Guard. Brigadier General Taylor's dedication to upholding the principles of the United States Army, and his continued work on behalf of the people in his community, is a testament to his strength of character.

General Taylor's years of service in the Army and his dedicated work on behalf of his country are honorable. His decorated medals include the Federal Legion of Merit, the Federal Meritorious Service Medal, the Army Commendation Medal, the State of Michigan Distinguished Service Medal, and the State of Michigan Legion of Merit Medal. In addition, Taylor has been awarded the Department of the Army Staff Identification Badge and currently serves as the Chairman of the Board, National Guard Association of the United States. General Taylor's academic background includes a Bachelor's Degree in Management from Spring Arbor University. His military education includes the Military Police Office Basic Course, the Field Artillery Officer Basic and Career Course, the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College, and the Senior Reserve Component course at the Army War College.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask our colleagues to join me in honoring General Robert Taylor's exceptional service to America. May he know that his Nation is greatly appreciative for his tireless work.

TRIBUTE TO JEANNE OATES
ANGULO

HON. MICHAEL G. OXLEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor today to pay tribute to Jeanne Oates Angulo, President of the Capital Chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society. After twelve years of outstanding service to this organization, Jeanne will be retiring at the end of the year.

Jeanne was tapped to serve as president in 1994 after a successful career in television and radio, including a stint as General Manager of WPGC AM/FM in Washington, D.C.

During this time, she was honored with the Advertising Club of Washington's Silver Medal Award, and was recognized as a Woman of the Year by Washington Woman magazine.

Her tenure at the MS Society has been equally distinguished. Jeanne has presided over an explosion in contributions to the Capital Chapter from $2 million to more than $5 million annually. She has overseen such fundraising staples as the MS Walk, the MS Bike Tour, and the Women Against MS Annual Luncheon.

It has been my pleasure to work with Jeanne on the annual MS Ambassadors Ball, a salute to members of the diplomatic corps for their many contributions to humanitarian efforts. My wife, Pat, has co-chaired this event on two occasions, and joins me in praising Jeanne for her determination in soliciting in-kind donations to the Ball to keep overhead expenses low. Jeanne's enthusiasm and drive in this area has ensured that more funds are spent on the Society's mission: ending the devastating effects of MS, supporting MS research, and providing for MS advocacy efforts.

Jeanne has also dedicated her time to service on the boards of many community organizations, including the March of Dimes, the Metropolitan Police Boys and Girls Club, the USO, the Wolf Trap Farm Park for the Performing Arts, and the Women of Washington. Her tireless devotion to volunteerism is an outstanding model for others, and has been a tremendous asset to her as she works to get more people involved in charitable efforts.

Mr. Speaker, I know that the entire Board of Directors of the National MS Society, everyone at the Capital Chapter, and all whose lives she has touched join me in thanking Jeanne for her continued efforts to help find a cure for MS. We wish Jeanne and her husband, Al, the very best as they move on to a new chapter in their lives.

IN HONOR OF SUE BIERMAN

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, with great sorrow I rise to pay tribute to a beloved San Francisco political and civic leader, Sue Bierman, who died on August 7, 2006. I join my constituents in honoring five decades of tireless service to the people of San Francisco. Sue Bierman leaves a great legacy of compassion, courage and conviction. For those of us involved in San Francisco politics, her passing is a personal as well as a civic loss to our city.

Sue Bierman was a leader who challenged the conscience of our community every day. As a relentless advocate for poor people, for social and economic justice, and for protecting our neighborhoods and our environment, the affectionate name 'Susie' instilled fear and love at the same time. She brought wisdom and compassion to all the causes she undertook.

As a private citizen in the 1950's and 1960's, she became a neighborhood leader who fought to stop the central freeway from destroying her neighborhood—Haight Ashbury, the Pan Handle and Golden Gate Park. For the next forty years she continued to defend the rights, the character and the beauty of San Francisco's neighborhoods.

In 1980 Mayor George Moscone appointed her to the Planning Commission, where she was the sole voice opposing unrestricted downtown development and demanded that developers provide affordable housing, day care and parks.

In 1992 she was elected to the San Francisco Board of Supervisors where she served two terms. She earned the respect and affection of her colleagues. She became a leading advocate for San Francisco's tenants and continued to champion our neighborhoods. After being forced out of office by term limits, she became active in Senior Action Network and continued her participation in Democratic politics.

She took great pride in her family and great interest in the well being of all San Francisco families. Everyone who cares about our children's future is deeply in her debt.

I hope it is a comfort to her beautiful family, whom she loved so dearly, that so many people are mourning her passing and will hold her in their hearts forever.

TRIBUTE TO PHOEBE STROBEL

HON. PHIL ENGLISH

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. ENGLISH of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Phoebe Strobel as an example of excellence for community service and to congratulate her on her retirement. Having contributed great services to her community in both Millcreek and Warren County, it is my hope that she will continue to share her talents and prosper in the years to come.

Strobel is a graduate of Lock Haven University and Edinboro University, where she earned a masters degree in elementary education. She has taught at both Asbury Elementary School in Millcreek and Pittsfield Elementary School in Warren. She has just retired in June 2006 after teaching third grade for thirty-six years at Asbury School, for which she received a citation from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania House of Representatives sponsored by Representative Matthew Good and John Evans in congratulations. Her talents have distinguished her from among other teachers. This enabled her to receive the Pennsylvania Parent-Teacher Association Lifetime Achievement Award in 2000.

Throughout her career as a teacher, Strobel represented education's finest by serving in various associations and committees. She is dedicated to the Northwestern Region Pennsylvania Education Association (PSEA). Serving on the PACE team for 10 years, she has been the PACE Director for Northwestern Pennsylvania since 2002, the PSEA Legislative Committee Co-chair from 1998 to 2002, and a state delegate to the PSEA House of Delegates thirty-six times and eight times as a national delegate to the National Education Association Representative Assembly. Beside her state and national participation, she was also active within community boards, serving the Millcreek Education Association as Secretary and Executive Board member from 1996 to 2002 and as Asbury's Building Representative from 1986 to 2002. She was also a member of the Warren County Education Association Executive Board from 1980 to 1986.

Strobel represents the devotion of an individual to her community and to education. Her example demonstrates the importance of education and involvement that affects the lives of parents and students. For her accomplishments, she deserves congratulations.

Mr. Speaker, I hope my colleagues will join me at this time in recognizing the service of Phoebe Strobel and in congratulating her on her retirement with wishes of continued success in all her endeavors.

IN MEMORY OF ARMY STAFF
SERGEANT KENNETH JENKINS

HON. MIKE ROSS

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Army Staff Sergeant Kenneth Jenkins of Fouke, Arkansas, who died on August 12, 2006, fighting for his country in Baghdad, Iraq, supporting Operation Iraqi Freedom. Kenneth Jenkins, just 25 years old, was killed during combat while conducting a checkpoint operation. Kenneth Jenkins was assigned to the Army's 3rd Battalion, 67th Armor Regiment, 4th Brigade Combat Team, 4th Infantry Division in Fort Hood, Texas.

Kenneth Jenkins enlisted in the Army in July of 1999, was on his second tour of duty in Iraq and was scheduled to return home in less than 90 days from his death. Kenneth Jenkins was a decorated soldier with a Bronze Star and a Purple Heart. He had previously completed tours to Bosnia, Kosovo, Macedonia and Cuba. While not serving our country, Kenneth Jenkins enjoyed working on his car and physical fitness, but his family and friends always came first.

I am deeply saddened by the tragic loss of soldiers from Arkansas, who have died while supporting Operation Iraqi Freedom. These brave Americans lost their lives while making the ultimate sacrifice to serve our country, and I will be forever grateful to them for their courageous spirit.

Kenneth Jenkins gave his life to serve our country and will forever be remembered as a hero, a son, and a husband. My deepest condolences go out to his wife Brandy; his mother Theresa; his sister Stephani Richard, and his brother, Mack. I know Army Staff Sergeant Jenkins was proud of his service to the U.S. Army and to our country. He will be missed by his family, fellow soldiers, and all those who knew him and counted him as a friend. I will continue to keep Kenneth Jenkins and his family in my thoughts and prayers.

RECOGNIZING THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF REV. DR. NELSON "FUZZY" THOMPSON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 6, 2006

Mr. CLEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I proudly rise today in recognition of the achievements of Reverend Doctor Nelson "Fuzzy" Thompson, a minister, humanitarian, community activist, and a resident of the Fifth District of Missouri, which I am honored to represent. This week, Rev. Thompson is to be inducted into the Missouri Walk of Fame during a reception as part of the Congressional Black Caucus Foundation's Annual Legislative Conference, an event held to honor the achievements of African-Americans who have made significant contributions to Missouri.

Rev. Thompson graduated from Lincoln University in Jefferson City, Missouri with a Bachelor of Science in Education, and received a Master of Divinity and Doctor of Ministry at St. Paul School of Theology.

Rev. Thompson's reputation as a community leader extends beyond the local or national level, but is inclusive of the international community. He was one of 22 U.S. ministers that traveled to South Africa on a fact finding educational exchange, at the request of Bishop Desmond Tutu, President Nelson Mandela, and the South African Council of Churches. "Fuzzy," as he is affectionately known, was one of three U.S. ministers to conduct Easter services for U.S. hostages held in Tehran, Iran in 1980. He was also one of 17 U.S. ministers and activists who served as official observers for the first election ever held in South Africa that allowed the right to vote to all races. He said it was a humbling experience seeing people lining up the night before and standing for blocks in order to exercise their right to vote for the first time.

"Fuzzy" is currently President of the Kansas City Chapter of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. He has served on multiple boards, including as Chairman of the Nominating Committee for Freedom Incorporated and as a member for the Black Adoption Program and Services, and Human Rights Commission of Kansas City, Missouri.

For those reasons and more, it is indeed an honor and privilege to recognize "Rev. Fuzzy" at the Missouri Walk of Fame reception, hosted by myself and fellow Missourian, U.S. Representative WM. LACY CLAY of St. Louis.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in expressing our appreciation to Reverend Dr. Nelson Thompson and his endless commitment to serving the residents of the State of Missouri. He is a true role model not just to the African-American community in Missouri, but to the entire community at large. May his success serve as a stepping stone for many other African-Americans eager to be just as successful in their endeavors. While it is but a small acknowledgement for all of the work he has done, it is a heartfelt gesture, taking strength from the many lives he has touched in our hometown.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, September 7, 2006

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Reverend William A. Watson, Jr., Pastor, St. John's Baptist Church, Westbury, New York, offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is Thy name in all the Earth. I thank You for this privilege to pray. Thank You for this occasion that brought us together. Thank You for all of Your loving kindness and tender mercy toward us. I ask Your favor in all our decisions.

Please, Lord, be with us as we make decisions for our future. Grant us clear minds as we serve Your people to the best of our abilities.

Thank You for all these favors, and we will be mindful that all glory and honor belong to You. This is Your servant's prayer. In the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mrs. MCCARTHY led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

WELCOMING REVEREND WILLIAM A. WATSON, JR.

(Mrs. MCCARTHY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MCCARTHY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to thank my friend, the Reverend William A. Watson of St. John's Baptist Church in Westbury, New York, for offering the opening prayer before the House this morning.

He is someone who is truly worthy of this honor. Reverend Watson is also the head of the Eastern Baptist Association. He is not only a leader in his congregation but an asset to all of Long Island and the entire New York region.

Whether it is keeping young people from joining gangs, helping people gain job skills or improving access to health care, Reverend Watson is a tireless advocate for those in need. Mr. Speaker, I salute Reverend Watson for his great work.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain five 1-minute speeches on each side.

“HEIGH-HO SILVER”—AND THE BORDER

(Mr. POE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. POE. Mr. Speaker, Congress is back in session, and our first major piece of legislation, to protect horses. You see, three or four places in America buy old horses and sell the meat to the French, for goodness sake, so we are going to protect American horses.

So we are going to protect American horses, the likes of Silver, Trigger and Buttercup, from the carnivorous French. This horse security bill will even provide a sanctuary or rest home for those old horses. Well, this Congress needs to be as concerned about border security as we are about horse security.

We need a border security bill with no add-ons that even the Senate will approve. Deal with border security before we talk about the contentious issues of immigration and illegals in this country. Why are we putting horse security at the forefront and not border security?

The American public expects and deserves better. Protecting America's borders should be our first priority. That needs to be our first duty. Stop the invasion at the border, then we can worry about the Europeans eating our horses, otherwise our country will ride off like the Lone Ranger and a “Heigh-Ho Silver” into the sunset of history.

And that's just the way it is.

FIVE YEARS LATE

(Mr. BLUMENAUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, after 5 years the President who ignored the memo that bin Laden wanted to attack the United States is belatedly taking steps to bring to trial suspected terrorists. Why the sudden change of heart? Well, the public is fed up with the bungling, the secret prisons and torture. The Supreme Court has ruled that the administration's approach was unconstitutional. All of this has created a political tide that has forced the President's hand.

But now is the time for the Congress, which has been asleep at the switch allowing the administration's despicable excesses, to do its job. Instead of rubber stamping the administration's flawed and belated proposal, Congress should do what it should have done in the first place: Ensure that justice is done, the enemies of the United States are punished, and America's tarnished image of justice is restored.

A LETTER FROM IRAQ

(Mr. SHIMKUS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SHIMKUS. Mr. Speaker, from a second lieutenant platoon leader in Iraq: “If you watch the news, you know that the greater Baghdad area is in turmoil. We are on the outskirts of the city, controlling the rural area between Baghdad, Ramadi and Fallujah. We believe the area became hostile when terrorist cells fled here during the coalition invasion of the urban areas.

“Now our task is to control this area and give the enemy no safe haven. We are spread thin, but we are getting the job done. The television highlights every explosion and loss of life. But you miss what we do. You miss my soldiers giving water and food to local nationals. You miss my soldiers giving the little kids high-fives and soccer balls. You miss my soldiers replacing sewer systems and rebuilding roads. You miss my medic treating the locals for injuries.

“The news shows death, murder and violence, but daily I see smiles, hard work and hope. Is the area in turmoil? Yes. Is it lost? No, and every day American soldiers bring hope to these people. You won't see it in the morning paper or the evening news, but I am telling you it is here. I know it. I am seeing it, and I am doing it.

“I miss everyone and look forward to coming home. Know that your Army is making you proud to be an American. God bless America.”

However, we spend our new found time planning and running missions into unoccupied territory, looking to bring the fight to an enemy who likes to stay hidden. I like the new tempo, because its aggressive and suits the guy's personality much more than a defensive campaign. I am positive that my guys would choose to air assault onto a hostile objective before they would want to defend a quiet base. They are good at their jobs, and love being challenged under pressure.

STUDENT ASSISTANCE

(Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GENE GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to follow my Texas colleague, in fact my neighbor in the Houston area, and say the House is spending more time today on this horse bill than we are on homeland security, and we need to deal with that. We need to protect our borders, ports and airports.

If you don't like the bill, I am a co-sponsor of it, you can just vote "nay."

Mr. Speaker, the reason I am here today is because I recently learned that the U.S. Department of Education failed to award the LULAC National Education Service Centers a grant under the Talent Search Program.

The LULAC Talent Search program has been one of the largest talent search grantees since it was first awarded in 1979. This program serves over 12,000 students in some of the country's most disadvantaged areas. These cuts will severely impact the Hispanic community that I represent.

In my Houston area, the local LULAC Council 402 has been an integral part of serving students in our area for years. Just last year, LULAC Council 402 served students in our area and they raised $32,000 separately to match the Federal funds. This program nationwide serves thousands and serves our Nation, and now the Department of Education has decided to turn out the lights on these centers. I hope someone in the Department of Education is listening.

SECRETARY RUMSFELD SERVES NATION WITH DIGNITY AND HONOR

(Ms. FOXX asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. FOXX. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong objection to the blatant partisan move of the Senate Democrats and their partisan agenda to force a vote of no confidence in Donald Rumsfeld. It is transparent that the Democrats are making this a political issue and hope to polarize the American people and their views on the war on terror. They are attempting to overshadow and downplay our successes in Iraq and the Republican agenda for winning the war on terror.

A difference of opinion should not equal a vote of no confidence. In our democracy, there will always be room for debate and disagreement, but political posturing and defamation of character have no place in a civilized debate.

Secretary Rumsfeld has worked tirelessly with Iraqi government officials and its military to bring freedom and democracy to a formerly tyrannical regime while fighting against terrorists and insurgents who threaten Iraqis and Americans stationed there.

Mr. Speaker, I stand firm in my resolve to ensure victory not only in Iraq but also in the global war on terror. Secretary Rumsfeld is serving our Nation with dignity and honor and should be treated as such whether you agree with his actions or not.

STRUGGLING FAMILIES

(Ms. SOLIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to highlight the struggle of American working families. The Census Bureau reported that American families are living paycheck to paycheck, struggling to make ends meet and going deeper into debt, even as they are working harder and are more productive.

Housing costs and interest rates are skyrocketing. The income of American families continues to stagnate even as health care, energy and college costs keep going up. The number of Americans without health insurance has risen by 16 percent to 46 million people, equal to the population of 24 States and the District of Columbia.

This includes more than one-third of my constituents in east Los Angeles and the San Gabriel Valley, not to mention the 5 million more Americans living in poverty under this administration.

We need a new direction to help America's working families achieve the American dream, not more tax breaks for the wealthy oil corporations. I urge my colleagues to please reject the failed economic policies of the Republican Congress and instead honor hard work, fair wages and economic growth.

WINNING THE WAR ON TERRORISM

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, while traveling by bus through the 10 counties of South Carolina's Second Congressional District last month, I spoke with constituents about the resolve of America for victory in the global war on terrorism. I repeatedly heard that we must maintain our resolve for winning this war to protect American families.

As several recent successes prove, we are winning the war on terrorism. Nine men suspected of plotting a terrorist attack in Denmark have been arrested. British police detained 14 people suspected of operating terrorist training camps. Iraqi authorities arrested the number two al Qaeda murderer in Iraq. U.S. and British authorities stopped a plot to target U.S.-bound airplanes. Germany and India foiled terrorist attacks in their homelands.

Countries that were reluctant to join with us in the war on terrorism are learning they cannot escape its effects. This is not just a war against America; this is a war against all freedom-loving nations.

With four sons in the military, I am grateful for the dedication of American servicemembers symbolized by the heroism of CPL David Weimortz of Irmo.

In conclusion, God bless our troops, and we will never forget September 11.

PROBLEMS IN AMERICA

(Mr. McDERMOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, the Republicans went home for a month and listened to people and watched the decimation of Lebanon. They watched the continuing mess in Iraq. The President cancelled the return of 13,000 people, or Mr. Rumsfeld did, and they are keeping them in Baghdad because the place is in a shambles.

But what do we do when we come back, the first week we are back? Do we discuss those issues, or do we discuss the slaughter of human beings?

No, we are here to deal with horse slaughter. When I was in my district, I don't remember in the 18 years that I have been in my district that I have heard anybody come and say, why don't you stop the slaughter of horses?

What is the matter with the Republican Party? Have you nothing to do? Can't you pass anything on port security? Can't you pass anything on immigration? Can't you pass anything about helping the President get out of Iraq? Or about the economy? Gasoline is $3 a gallon. You cut the Pell Grants, and you come out worrying about the slaughter of horses. I vote "nay."

BORDER PROTECTION AND SECURITY NOW

(Mrs. CAPITO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. CAPITO. Mr. Speaker, during the August recess, my constituents saw very clearly the need to increase enforcement along our borders. In early August, an illegal immigrant wanted for murder in Texas was found working in a lumberyard near Elkins, West Virginia.

Last week, another illegal immigrant struck and killed 4-year-old Tyler Evans in a car accident in Boone County, West Virginia. The police report alleges that speed and alcohol were factors in the fatal crash. Both illegal immigrants had falsified immigration papers.

I held a roundtable with law enforcement officers and elected leaders and talked with many constituents throughout August to discuss the House border security bill and the Reid-Kennedy amnesty bill. The response was unanimous: No amnesty and increased enforcement along our borders.

We shouldn't stop there. It is critical that we provide employers the ability to check immigration status of employees and hold them accountable for their workers. Clearly, most people who enter illegally are not security threats, but it is critical to our homeland security that we are able to account for the people who enter this country. We need to pass tough immigration reform now. It is too late for Tyler Evans, but we need to act before it is too late for other Americans.

PEOPLE PROTECTION

(Mr. PALLONE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, nothing could illustrate more that this Republican Congress is a do-nothing Congress than the fact that, on the first full day back, the only thing we are dealing with is the Horse Protection Act. The previous speaker on the Republican side talked about immigration reform. When I was back in my district, people wanted to know when this Congress was going to address immigration reform, when we were going to address port security and the rising number of people that have no health insurance. But we not dealing with those issues today, we are dealing with the Horse Protection Act. What about people protection?

Osama bin Laden is still at large. The 9/11 Commission recommendations have not been implemented by this Congress. What about a people or American protection act?

The previous speaker talked about immigration reform. This Republican Congress is not even addressing immigration reform. They have decided they are not going to deal with the issue between now and the end of this congressional session. It is a disgrace. This Republican Congress is doing nothing. It is the biggest do-nothing Congress that we have ever seen. We come here to talk about horse protection. We have been out for 6 weeks. The American people want more.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 503, AMERICAN HORSE SLAUGHTER PREVENTION ACT

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 981 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 981

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 503) to amend the Horse Protection Act to prohibit the shipping, transporting, moving, delivering, receiving, possessing, purchasing, selling, or donation of horses and other equines to be slaughtered for human consumption, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against consideration of the bill are waived. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour and twenty minutes equally divided and controlled by the Majority Leader and the Minority Leader or their designees. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. The bill shall be considered as read. Notwithstanding clause 11 of rule XVIII, no amendment shall be in order except those printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution. Each such amendment may be offered only in the order printed in the report, may be offered only by a Member designated in the report, shall be considered as read, shall be debatable for the time specified in the report equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole. All points of order against such amendments are waived. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ADERHOLT). The gentleman from Florida (Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MATSUI), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, the rule provides 1 hour and 20 minutes of general debate, equally divided and controlled by the majority leader and the minority leader. The rule also provides one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Horse meat is generally not consumed by people in the United States, but more than approximately 90,000 were slaughtered for human consumption in 2005. Virtually all of those horses were slaughtered for export and sent to the largest markets for that product, to countries such as France and Belgium, where it is commonly served to humans. Another 30,000 were transported from the United States to Canada and Mexico for slaughter. A number of States currently have laws that prohibit slaughter or facilitating the slaughter of horses for human consumption, but there is not a nationwide ban.

Last year during consideration of the fiscal 2006 agriculture appropriations bill, my good friends, distinguished Members Mr. SWEENEY and Mr. WHITFIELD, offered an amendment to that bill that would have prohibited the expenditure of taxpayer dollars for slaughter plant and horse meat inspections, effectively ending the practice. The amendment passed the House with bipartisan support by a strong 269-158 vote. A similar amendment also passed the Senate. However, horse slaughter plants petitioned the USDA to allow fee-for-service inspections whereby the plants pay for the inspections. The USDA granted the request. To get around the limitation amendment, horse slaughter plants made that petition to the USDA to allow for inspections.

The American Horse Slaughter Prevention Act would prohibit an individual from slaughtering a horse for human consumption in the United States and would also prevent the transportation of horses from the United States to Canada or Mexico for the purpose of slaughter for human food.

This legislation, H.R. 503, was introduced by Mr. SWEENEY and Mr. WHITFIELD. I commend both of them for their hard work on this issue, an issue that obviously is very important to them and their constituents.

I urge my colleagues to support both the rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend, the gentleman from Florida, for yielding me this time, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the rule before the House would make in order H.R. 503, the American Horse Slaughter Prevention Act. This bill has the support of 203 bipartisan co-sponsors, myself included. Passing this bill will end the cruel and barbaric practice of horse slaughter. It will ensure that horses are treated humanely up until their deaths, which is a goal that both supporters and opponents of the legislation can support. It will also improve conditions for living horses.

In my home State of California, for example, we have experienced no increase in cases of horse abuse or neglect since we banned their slaughter in 1998. Horse theft cases in California have declined by 35 percent since then as well.

Simply put, horses are an integral part of our country's culture and history. They do not deserve to be slaughtered in the brutal conditions which they must currently endure before death. American horses deserve better treatment.

But the American people deserve better treatment as well. Unfortunately, the Republican majority in Congress appears focused exclusively on issues which do little to improve the lives of Americans.

A few days ago, we celebrated Labor Day. Yet it is clear that people who work for a living have very little to celebrate. The minimum wage remains unchanged. Our constituents face ever-rising energy prices. Seniors continue to be burdened with high costs for prescription drugs. College graduates are saddled with debt. Other young people cannot afford to attend college at all. And nearly 5 years to the day after September 11, our Nation is still not secure.

These are some of the pressing and critical problems the American people deal with on a daily basis. Congress could easily devote an entire week to each issue, and yet we find ourselves procrastinating. Instead of addressing these challenges that confront our constituents, real issues that impact real people, the majority has chosen to authorize commemorative coins. This Congress cannot bring itself to allow a clean vote to help hardworking Americans by raising the minimum wage, though not for lack of Democratic proposals to do so. My colleague, Congressman GEORGE MILLER, has introduced a bill that will raise the minimum wage for the first time in nearly a decade, and Congressman HOYER's amendment to the Labor-HHS appropriations bill will do the same.

Unfortunately, these sensible proposals to give working families a boost have either been stalled by the Republican leadership or loaded with poison pills to ensure that Americans go yet another year without a minimum wage increase. We owe it to the hardworking voters who send us to Washington to increase the minimum wage before we adjourn. Instead, the leadership has turned our attention to horses.

The majority also refuses to take action to combat skyrocketing energy costs. Democrats have advocated for an innovative and strategic national energy policy, one which rolls back tax breaks for oil companies and invests the savings in alternative fuel sources. Not only will such action lower energy costs over the long term, but it will also help our Nation break our dependence on foreign oil.

The American people deserve an energy policy that is responsible, innovative, and independent. Dozens of promising proposals for such a policy have been introduced, proposals which could be brought to the floor today. However, the leadership has decided instead to use one of our few remaining legislative days to debate horses.

Even before this energy crisis, the steady rise in health costs threatened to drive many middle-class families out of our health care system altogether. Most of the 3 million people who have lost health coverage since 2002 make over $50,000 per year, and some make over $75,000 per year. This figure is frightening, for it indicates that high insurance costs are affecting more and more Americans. Additionally, seniors have already begun to hit the "doughnut hole" in the Medicare prescription drug program, which has forced them to bear thousands of dollars in unexpected costs.

The Democratic plan for the future gives the Federal Government the freedom to negotiate for lower prescription drug prices. It also provides millions of American families with urgently needed health insurance. We owe it to our constituents to reform the health care system to make it more affordable before we adjourn.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that this Congress has done little to help American seniors. Sadly, younger Americans have not fared much better. The Republican leadership has left our Nation's students saddled with ever-growing amounts of student loan debt.

Democrats have offered a new direction for higher education, centered on expanding Pell grants and restoring the $12 billion in cuts to student aid which Republicans passed earlier this year. This will ease the debt burden for recent graduates and put the dream of a college education within reach for more young Americans. We owe it to our students and to the families who support them to increase tuition assistance before we adjourn. However, the leadership has ignored this opportunity to make higher education accessible and affordable. Instead, the majority has decided to take another long weekend, with no votes scheduled on Monday or Friday.

As we can see, the list of misplaced priorities in the 109th Congress is long. However, perhaps none is as disappointing or as dangerous as Congress's refusal to secure our homeland. The majority has refused to fully implement all the recommendations of the September 11 commission. In doing so, it has left unnecessary holes in national security and has failed to fulfill its primary responsibility to ensure America's safety.

Before we adjourn for the year, Congress must secure our borders, and we must do more to protect our ports and airports. Democrats have offered legislation to do so, legislation which will also provide our first responders with the resources they need to respond to a terrorist attack or other national emergency.

These proposals to protect American lives and families are on the table, and Democrats stand ready to pass them with the help of our Republican colleagues. And yet as we return from a month-long break, we have been presented with a paper-thin legislative agenda. This week's schedule illustrates how out of touch this Chamber's leadership is from American families and the problems they face every day.

As a result, on the floor of the House of Representatives this week, we will focus on improving the welfare of America's horses. What we should be doing is improving the welfare of America's people.

My Democratic colleagues and I have offered a new direction, a plan to raise the minimum wage, ease our reliance on foreign energy sources, lower prescription drug prices, make college more affordable, and strengthen our Nation's security to combat terrorists.

We will continue to fight to pass this package of urgent national legislation, and we await the cooperation of Republican colleagues to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY), a prime author of this legislation.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the rule and its underlying bill. But I do want to respond to my friends on the other side and their comments about the appropriateness of this particular piece of legislation, which I believe they support being on the floor here.

Since 1979, there have been efforts and attempts and a struggle to bring this piece of legislation to the floor for open public debate so that we can flush out the fact from the fiction.

And while I know and I believe over the next month we will be debating a number of important issues, like border security, like protecting this Nation, and our war on terror, this is a piece of legislation that is long overdue and needs to be discussed and needs to be disposed of in an appropriate fashion.

As author of the legislation, I have worked tirelessly to bring it to the floor. What the bill does is it prohibits the shipping, transporting, moving, delivering, receiving, possessing, purchasing, selling or donation of horses or other equines for the slaughter for human consumption.

It makes it impossible to do so in the United States but also prohibits the transport to Canada and Mexico. And some might ask, why is that important? Well, it is important for a number of reasons. The first and foremost is that it is one of the most inhumane, brutal, shady practices going on today in this Nation.

It is important because more than 70 percent of the American people, at least every survey I have ever seen, support the notion that we ought to ban the slaughter of horses for human consumption. It is important because a substantial number of States have outlawed this practice, yet because of a Federal court case, an injunction has been obtained in which the court has essentially said, unless Congress acts, this practice can go on despite the will of the people and the States involved.

For years I had hoped for a fair and honest debate on this issue. We have been thwarted in that effort until now. Each year, 90,000 horses in the country are slaughtered and shipped overseas to Europe and Asia where they are served in restaurants as a delicacy, not as a necessity. I want this process stopped, and some of my colleagues in this chamber do not.

This rule gives us the opportunity for that fair and open debate. I want to thank the Rules Committee and its chairman, Mr. DREIER, for that opportunity. However, I must stress that I have real concerns over the seven amendments that are possibly going to be introduced in the course of today's debate.

I have concerns about it, because they are being introduced by people who have for a long time tried to stop this debate from happening in the first instance, and, therefore, then I would suggest that every one of these amendments are poison pills. Every one of these amendments are intended for one thing, that is to continue this practice, a practice that I do not want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, is subsidized by this Federal Government.

Now, last year, my good friend from Florida pointed out, last year we passed with 269 votes an amendment in the ag appropriation bill that said taxpayer dollars should not be used for something the American people do not support in the first instance; should not be used to subsidize and continue this process.

Despite passing that piece of legislation, the USDA and others thwarted our efforts to have the right thing happen.

I would suggest to my colleagues that today we send a strong message: We end this practice. And, yes, let's get on with the other business of this House. But after many, many years, three decades of attempts, it is about time we passed this legislation and ended this practice.

Ms. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to my good friend, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LOFGREN).

Ms. ZOE LOFGREN of California. Mr. Speaker, with energy costs at an all-time high in the United States, climate change threatening the future prosperity of our country and our planet, the Taliban regaining control in Afghanistan, Iraq in meltdown, the U.S. saddled with the largest debt in the history of the world, the real wages of average Americans in decline, 42 million Americans without health care insurance, and most of the 9/11 Commission recommendations to make America safe still not implemented by this Congress, it is unbelievable to me that we are spending this day on the horse meat bill.

Now I commute 3,000 miles from California to Washington to serve the people, as we all do, to serve the people. And I am for the horsies, too. I will vote for it. We could have done it by consent. We could have done it on voice vote.

I cannot believe that we are here today using the very limited time left to this Congress to deal with horse meat. Now, I hope that we can come to our senses, that the Republican leadership in this House will get a grip about what the American public needs us to do to serve their interests, to make sure that they are secure, both from an economic point of view, from international terrorism and to deal with the terrible disaster that has become Iraq and the disaster that is growing in Afghanistan.

As I say, I am happy to vote for the horsie bill, but I am ashamed that that is all we are doing here today.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Agriculture Committee, Mr. GOODLATTE.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 503 has not received the support of any House committee and was, in fact, ordered to be reported unfavorably to the floor with the recommendation that it not pass by an overwhelming bipartisan majority of 37-3 of the Agriculture Committee. So, naturally, the Members of that committee are very sympathetic with those who do not want to hear this legislation today.

The committee rejected this legislation because it has real concerns that eliminating the option of humane euthanasia at horse-processing facilities will do undeniable harm to the welfare of the 90,000 unwanted horses per year that normally go this route. This rule makes in order several amendments that seek to correct some of the problems created by this bill.

Since H.R. 503 leaves so many questions unanswered, the amendments are the only means to provide solutions to the problems. What happens to those 90,000 horses? H.R. 503 provides no answer to that question. Will they be guaranteed a safe, healthy future by the passage of H.R. 503? Sadly, the answer is, no.

H.R. 503 provides no provisions for the welfare of these unwanted horses.

Proponents suggest that these 90,000 horses will not all necessarily be absorbed by the rescue facilities but will instead be sold to new owners or kept longer by their current owners. Many of the horses received by these processing plants are traditionally unserviceable, vivacious or behaviorally unacceptable in today's equine community.

Holding on to a dangerous horse presents a potentially dangerous situation for the owner and his or her family. And selling the dangerous horse to an unwitting buyer is irresponsible. Obviously, the idea of sending a horse to a processing facility is not something any of us would like to think about. But for certain horses, these facilities, which are federally regulated with on-site U.S. Department of Agriculture veterinarians and humane euthanasia and processing conditions that are acceptable to the both the American Veterinary Medical Association and the American Association of Equine Practitioners provide a humane alternative to additional suffering or possibly dangerous situations.

In order to ensure the welfare of these animals while they are alive, it is imperative that all humane disposal options be available. A responsible horse owner has the right to choose, and although we may not agree, we need to respect that right.

H.R. 503 is a deceptive piece of legislation. Much of the misinformation that surrounds this bill has led many to believe it will accomplish things that it is not capable of achieving. Make no mistake about it: H.R. 503 will not prevent horses from dying. Proponents note that an alternative to sending the horses to processing facilities is to put the horse down on the farm. Apparently, the alternative to death is, well, death.

The euthanasia practices employed at the three U.S. processing facilities meet the humane euthanasia guidelines of the American Veterinary Medical Association, and the regulations established by the U.S. Department of Agriculture for humane euthanasia.

The proponents of H.R. 503 are not arguing to keep horses alive or maintain a standard of care to ensure the horse's welfare; they are arguing about what happens to the meat once the animal has been euthanized. Furthermore, the humane treatment of these horses is regulated from the moment the decision is made to send the horse to the processing facility.

The Commercial Transportation of Equine for Slaughter Act regulates the transportation of the horses to the facility, preventing the transport or euthanasia of injured horses. This bill raises many questions about the welfare of horses but provides no solutions. If you care about animal welfare, vote against H.R. 503. If you care about horses, vote against this bill.

Ms. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. RAHALL).

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, the rule governing the debate on H.R. 503 makes in order seven amendments, all but one of which were filed late, beyond the deadline for amendment submission with the Rules Committee.

What does this suggest? Normally, as we know, the Rules Committee is not enthused with late-filed amendments. As I recall, the majority on the Rules Committee has even used this as an excuse to not make certain amendments in order.

So I think those of us on both sides of the aisle are being sent a signal here. And that message is that there is a concerted effort among some in power in this body to torpedo the pending legislation, H.R. 503, by gaining the adoption of nefarious and ill-conceived amendments that would simply gut the legislation. This is the hand that we are being dealt. And it is apparently the one that we must play.

With that said, I rise in support of the rule. I urge my colleagues, especially on my side of the aisle, to vote for it, so at the very least, we can have an open debate on the issue of horse slaughter in the United States, so that we can strive to keep hope alive.

Americans do not eat horse flesh. The concept is repugnant to most Americans. Yet the merchants of slaughter will have us believe that it is fine and dandy to slaughter our horses for the sole purpose, the sole purpose, of sending their flesh overseas to support some warped demand among foreign diners for horse meat on their menus.

Hear me and hear me now: America, the land of the brave and true, we are sending over 90,000 horses a year to slaughter. Stunned in the head if lucky, throats slit. Explain this to your children. Try to defend this to your constituents.

I hope my colleague will vote for the rule, demonstrate that we will stand up to the likes of those who slaughter our horses for profit and slaughter our horses for power.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. WHITFIELD), who has done so much to bring this legislation to the floor.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I certainly want to thank the Rules Committee for bringing this rule to the floor on this important issue. I might say that the first legislation introduced in the U.S. Congress to try to curtail the slaughter of American horses for human consumption was back in the mid-1970s. And year after year after year after year, the Ag Committee refused to take any action. They never had a hearing. They did everything that they could do to defeat this bill and to make sure that it never saw the light of day.

Well, today we have the opportunity to vote on this bill to have a free and open discussion about the importance of this bill and to make the American people recognize and realize that there are only three slaughter plants in the U.S. operating where the horses are being slaughtered for human consumption. Every one of them is owned by foreign interests, by the Belgians, by the Dutch and by the French.

All of the meat is exported to Europe. Now, the Fort Worth newspaper today had an editorial opposed to this bill and what they said reflects the inaccuracy about this bill. They talked about how pet food is made from horse meat. The truth of the matter is, the pet food association has not used horse meat for 12 years.

That is just one of the inaccuracies. Horse slaughter is about a process. There are groups of killer buyers around America who will obtain horses by any means possible, by theft, by misrepresentation.

Skye Dutcher, a young girl from New York, came to Washington just yesterday to tell us the story about on her 12th birthday her horse was stolen from her family's farm. A fellow took it to a killer buyer, and he received $150. The killer buyer took it to the auction, and the horse was taken to slaughter.

Judy Taylor, in my State of Kentucky, had two Appaloosas, and she had cancer. She gave them to a friend who said, I will take care of them. That friend sold them to a killer buyer. The killer buyer took them to Beltex in Fort Worth, Texas, where they were slaughtered.

So the nasty part of this business is that so many horses are being obtained illegally, and I know of very few industries in America today where the products that they are using are obtained illegally.

We hear a lot about these unwanted horses and what are we going to do with 90,000 horses that have not been slaughtered. I would say to you that 12 years ago 300,000 horses were slaughtered each year. Today, that number is down to 87,000 because the demand is going down. With that kind of a drastic reduction, you would think there are a lot of unwanted horses running around the country. Yet there is not one study anywhere that indicates that there is an abundance of horses. In fact, as I said, most of the horses that are being slaughtered are wanted. The owners would love to have them back, but because of this process, this is what is happening.

The State of Texas had a law on its books that made it illegal to use horse meat for human consumption, to buy it or sell it or transport it. They tried to shut down the slaughterhouses in Texas. The prosecutors were getting ready to go to court, and the foreign owners filed a lawsuit in Federal court. They won that lawsuit because the Federal judge said this is about interstate commerce and the State of Texas will be impeding interstate commerce by trying to shut these slaughterhouses down.

So the only thing that we can do is if it is going to be changed, Congress has to do it. That is what this bill is about today. H.R. 503 is on the floor because Congress wants to take action.

Every poll that has been taken on this issue, the American people support the prohibition of slaughtering horses. Horses have never been a part of the food chain. They are not like cattle. They are not like pigs. They are not like goats. Those animals are raised for slaughter; and when you take it to auction, you know where it is going to end up. That is not the case with horses.

I think that this is going to be quite an interesting debate, a worthwhile debate; and I want to thank the Rules Committee for giving us this opportunity today.

Ms. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge all Members to support the rule and the underlying bill. Congress should do the right thing for America's horses by ending the cruel practice of horse slaughter.

But, Mr. Speaker, there are a larger set of priorities which must be addressed. The American worker deserves an increase in the minimum wage, and our Nation's seniors deserve lower prescription drug prices. Almost 5 years after September 11, failing to secure America's ports and airports is unconscionable.

Democrats are committed to staying here until these priorities are accomplished. I would urge all my colleagues to join us in this effort.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LINCOLN DIAZ-BALART of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I also yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 351, nays 40, not voting 41, as follows:

PERMISSION TO REDUCE TIME FOR ELECTRONIC VOTING DURING FURTHER PROCEEDINGS IN THE HOUSE AND IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, during further proceedings today in the House and in the Committee of the Whole, the Chair be authorized to reduce to 2 minutes the minimum time for electronic voting on any question that otherwise could be subjected to 5-minute voting under clause 8 or 9 of rule XX or under clause 6 of rule XVIII.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOLEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?
There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 5122, G.V. "SONNY" MONTGOMERY NATIONAL DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 2007

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 5122), to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2007 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense activities of the Department of Energy, to prescribe military personnel strengths for such fiscal year, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?
There was no objection.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT OFFERED BY MR. EDWARDS

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to instruct conferees.
The Clerk read as follows:
Mr. Edwards moves that the managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendment to the bill H.R. 5122 be instructed to agree to the provisions contained in section 721 of the Senate amendment (relating to treatment of TRICARE retail pharmacy network under Federal procurement of pharmaceuticals).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 7 of rule XXII, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. EDWARDS) and the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY) each will control 30 minutes.
The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the fiscal year 2007 defense authorization bill passed the House on May 11 and the Senate on June 22. It is deeply disappointing that during a time of war it has taken the House and Senate Republican leadership over 2½ months to appoint conferees to write the final defense bill, which includes programs vital to our

Messrs. PETERSON of Minnesota, POMEROY, and KENNEDY of Rhode Island changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. MEEHAN changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the resolution was agreed to.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:
Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, due to circumstances beyond my control on Thursday, September 7, 2006, I regrettably missed the vote on H. Res. 981, a bill providing for consideration of H.R. 503, the Horse Protection Act.

H. Res. 981 presents a reasonable rule that made several amendments in order, and allowed adequate time to have a full and fair debate on the underlying bill.

In turn, I would have voted "yea" on H. Res. 981, so that we could begin to consider the underlying provisions of H.R. 503.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, earlier today, I was unavoidably detained and missed one rollcall vote. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" on rollcall vote No. 430.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 430, had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

troops and to our Nation's defense. The fact that Speaker HASTERT could take time to campaign in over 40 House districts during the August recess, but could not find time to appoint final defense conferees, represents the kind of misplaced priorities that have Americans demanding that Congress change its way of business. Our troops in Afghanistan and Iraq should not have had to wait 2½ months to see Congress moving ahead on a bill that is vital to them, their mission and their families.

Now that conferees have finally been appointed, the House has a serious responsibility to support a bill that puts our troops and military retirees first. That is what this motion to instruct is all about.

Specifically, this motion would instruct House conferees on the defense bill to accept Senate language that would reduce the cost of prescription drugs for military retirees, including Iraqi war veterans, by hundreds of millions of dollars each year. It would do so by saying that pharmaceutical manufacturers should give the same drug discount at retail pharmacies that is already being given to military retirees who buy their drugs via mail order.

The Veterans Administration saves hundreds of millions of dollars every year by requiring drug manufacturers to offer veterans drug discounts, and applying the same commonsense principle to military retirees will result in huge savings. In fact, this motion, if accepted, would save taxpayers $251 million in fiscal year 2007 and help, even more importantly, up to 1.9 million military retirees by making it unnecessary to pass the unfair House provision, another provision, that would force a 100 percent increase in generic drug copays at local pharmacist for military retirees and a 77 percent increase in brand-name drug copays for military retirees.

The bottom line, Mr. Speaker, is that this motion is good for American taxpayers and good for our military retirees, who are men and women who have served their Nation for 20 or 30 or more years in uniform.

There is just one problem: the pharmaceutical manufacturers do not want military retirees on the TRICARE health plan to be able to buy discounted drugs at local pharmacies. Why? Because it would cut into their already rather substantial profits.

The choice is clear. The motion is a choice between helping our military retirees, including Iraqi war veterans, or helping the pharmaceutical companies make even higher profits. I am confident that the vast majority of Americans would say that the pocketbooks of those who have served our Nation for decades in uniform should take priority over higher profits for pharmaceutical manufacturers.

The real question is whether this House in voting on this motion will reflect the values of our constituents and our military retirees, or will we reflect the special interests of the pharmaceutical manufacturers and their lobbyists.

The choice should be an easy one. But it appears that the House leadership didn't want this provision included in this motion to help our military retirees, and they did not support this language, which the Senate adopted and put in the House bill. That is why we are here today facing this motion. I salute the other body for having put the discounted drug price language in their defense bill, which passed the Senate on an overwhelming bipartisan basis.

I urge support, Mr. Speaker, for this motion. I hope we will receive bipartisan support. Going along with the pharmaceutical manufacturers should not trump saving taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars, keeping drug costs affordable for our military retirees, up to 1.9 million of them, and allowing our military retirees to have access to their local pharmacist.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT), a senior member of the House Armed Services Committee and a great supporter of our servicemen and -women and our veterans and military retirees.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, let's make something clear: the Veterans Health Care Act of 1992 directs drug companies to grant discounts on all drugs that are supplied to the Department of Defense, the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Public Health Service, and the Coast Guard. These are significant discounts. On average they lower the cost to the government for pharmaceuticals provided to beneficiaries by 30 to 40 percent. The Department of Defense is able to take advantage of these discounts in its mail order program and in dispensing drugs in its military treatment facilities, hospitals and clinics.

But the pharmaceutical companies have been balking, refusing to grant these discounts to TRICARE beneficiaries. Those are the families of active duty members and families of reservists deployed. TRICARE beneficiaries, wanting to shop, understandably, with their local pharmacy, their local corner drugstore, they have not been able to obtain the advantages of these discounted drug prices.

The Senate has recognized the problem here and has acted to resolve it by simply providing that in the future, after this bill becomes law, the discounted drug provision will apply not just to military treatment facilities, not just to the mail order program, but to TRICARE beneficiaries going to private drugstores. And it should. Can anybody tell me a reason it should not? Can anybody tell me a reason that TRICARE beneficiaries, our military members, shouldn't be able to shop, when necessary, at their local pharmacy?

That is all we are doing here. The Senate approved this 92-0, and we are simply saying here, let us recede to the Senate provision, let us take a law adopted in 1992 and apply it to all aspects of military health care.

This has a couple of collateral benefits in addition to saving money. One is that the House provision, which raises copays for drugs purchased otherwise at military facilities, will not be necessary because we will save enough money here to make it unnecessary. Another is that the Senate provision, harsh I think, which requires mandatory mail order as opposed to local pharmacies, that provision too can be dispensed with because we will save enough money to do so.

This is a win-win-win proposition. There is no reason the House should not take up the logic and policy of the Senate bill and adopt this same provision. Every Member here should vote to instruct our conferees to recede to the Senate on this critical provision. It will save money and make life better for our TRICARE beneficiaries. There is no reason not to do it. There is every reason to do it. I urge its support.

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the absence of speakers on the other side of the aisle is a reflection that there will be bipartisan support for this motion to instruct the House conferees on the defense bill. If so, then I think that is very good news for our military retirees.

I certainly want to express my respect to my friend and colleague, Mr. HEFLEY, who is a great champion for our military, both those on active duty and our retirees.

What is a little bit disconcerting, Mr. Speaker, is how we can have what at least at this moment might appear to be unanimous support for this provision to save hundreds of millions of dollars for taxpayers and military retirees by reducing the cost of military retiree prescription drugs at pharmacies and have the Senate adopt this provision as well, and yet mysteriously it didn't show up in the markup in the House Armed Services Committee.

I don't know what happened. I have heard some rumors suggesting that the House leadership opposed putting this provision, helping our military retirees and saving taxpayers money, into the bill. Perhaps someone could explain to the House and our colleagues and those listening, Mr. Speaker, why this provision wasn't put in the markup of the bill in the first place. But I am not sure anybody has an explanation that could withstand the light of day.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BOYD), a distinguished veteran himself.

Mr. BOYD. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Texas. I won't take 3 minutes. But I will say this, Mr. Speaker, that any time you have a provision, a legislative proposal that saves in performing our legislative duties and our executive duties, saves the taxpayers money and also enables us to better serve those that we are serving in our communities, that is a plus. That is a win-win, as some have said.

That is exactly what this provision we are discussing that is in the Senate bill does. In this case, obviously, it will save Federal taxpayer money. And we all know the issues that exist today in our budgeting process. We have red ink throughout our future budgeting process as far as the eye can see. There is a structural deficit built into the budgeting process, which has been extended by this administration and this Congress.

So, in this case, we are helping those that are our military retirees, those who we have asked to put on the uniform and go into battle, and many of them come back wounded, injured, and then the taxpayer has responsibility for seeing that those folks are cared for the balance of their lives. This is not a new debate about military retirees and how we provide them medical services.

So if we can do a better job of that back home, and the Senate has a better idea in this case, then we should go to it. I think that is what we are asking the folks to do. We are saving money, and we are providing a better service, better quality services to the folks that we have asked to wear the uniform.

I thank the gentleman for bringing the motion to instruct.

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying in the gentleman from Texas' home State, when you have struck oil, stop drilling.

And you have struck oil here, and we are not objecting. Trying to take care of our veterans in the best way we possibly can is not a Democrat or a Republican thing. It is not a partisan thing. It is a thing that I think both sides of the aisle feel very, very strongly about.

With that, I don't think I have any further speakers. I reserve the balance of my time, unless you are ready to wind this up.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I have one more speaker, Mr. BERRY of Arkansas, whom I would like to recognize. I would like to say that Mr. BERRY led the charge to send a letter to the chairman and the ranking member of the Armed Services Committee urging the adoption of this language, and I salute him for his leadership on that effort.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BERRY).

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas, and I thank him for his leadership in all matters pertaining to the military and certainly to our veterans in their care, and they are entitled to the best that this country has to offer. I appreciate him, and I also appreciate the gentleman from Colorado.

He is absolutely right. This is not a partisan issue. We should do everything within our power to see that the taxpayers get a good deal, but we have an obligation to our veterans and our retired military that should not be usurped by anyone, any time, any place. They should get the best that we have.

I am amazed that we have even got to deal with this on the House floor. This should have been taken care of a long time ago, and many of us felt like it was taken care of in the Veterans Health Care Act of 1992.

But the amazing thing to me is that we would even consider giving mail order, large corporation pharmacies a huge advantage over the local retail pharmacies, especially in rural America and in the neighborhoods. This is what is going to happen if we don't put this in this final defense authorization bill.

Our veterans should be able to go to any local pharmacy that is the front line health care provider for every community. They should be able to go to those local pharmacies and take advantage of generally free services by well-trained and accomplished professionals that know them and know their health needs and know what medicine they are taking, and those retail establishments should be able to get their pharmaceuticals at the same price that DOD gets them and the same price that the mail order companies get them and be able to provide this service to our veterans.

So I am delighted to hear the gentleman from Colorado say that they have no objections. I think that is a very wise thing.

Again, I thank my colleagues on both sides of the aisle for doing good work, and let us move this forward, and let us see that our veterans get the care that they deserve, and our retired military and their families get the care that they deserve, and let us move on to the other problems that we can solve in this same way, working together for the common good.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, could I ask the gentleman from Colorado if he has any speakers on this?

Mr. HEFLEY. I may have one speaker who has just arrived.

Mr. EDWARDS. Okay. Since we have used more of our time, and since we may not have to use the entire time allotted, could I yield back, not my time, but to the gentleman from Colorado for the purposes of his speaker being recognized.

Mr. HEFLEY. I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BUYER).

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, I am just now reading this. Mr. EDWARDS, this is a very bad idea. If you support increasing the cost of medications to veterans, then support this motion to instruct.

If you support increasing the cost to veterans to obtain access to their drugs, support this motion to instruct.

Over the years, those of us have guarded, guarded the Federal Supply Schedule. Now, why did Congress pass the Federal Supply Schedule? Because we said, you know, we have said to veterans out there, whom are disabled, we recognize that they are a precious part of our society, so we create the Federal Supply Schedule, which is really the government mandating a particular price, and then we jealously guard that. We jealously guard that. Why? Because everybody wants to gain access to the FSS, the Federal Supply Schedule.

I have to come to the floor, as chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, appalled, appalled. I am just dumbfounded that we are, what, going to vote on a motion to instruct that we should accept what the Senate does?

It seems that some people in this body are possessed in their fight against drug companies. Oh, my gosh, these drug companies are trying to seek all kinds of profits. I like to beat up on drug companies, until you get sick yourself, and then you want to gain access to all these types of drugs whether it is for Medicare pricing or Medicaid pricing, DOD.

I created the retail TRICARE pharmacy program. It took me 3 years to do that. If I ever intended for FSS pricing to be included, I would have included it in the bill. It is a retail program. As a matter of fact, I created the out-of-network retail pharmacy network to give these veterans a choice, the military retirees, so that they can gain access to some new blockbuster drug and pay a little bit more money for it.

But, please, my colleagues, do not, just before an election, open up the Federal Supply Schedule. Do not do this. We do this to protect very important members of our society who have been injured, and the disabled.

Now, what has been challenging to us is that Congress then, subsequent to having passed this, the Federal Supply Schedule, to gain access to lower cost medications for these disabled veterans, we opened up access to the VA. You have individuals who have gained greater access into the VA.

That begins an erosion. I understand that. Now we say, oh, my gosh, if these veterans are gaining access to the Federal Supply Schedule, then what about members to DOD. Oh, by the way, let's do it for Medicare and let's do it for Medicaid.

As you increase the pool of people, you are increasing the price of the medications to the very same people that you originally sought to protect. This is one of those moments where you have to scratch your head and say, what are we doing?

I make an appeal. I come to the floor and appeal to your good conscience and to your senses: Do not support this motion to instruct.

Now, I warned the Department of Defense. I knew that if they didn't have authority to do what they wanted to do, they wanted to gain access to rebates, I understand what they sought to do. You see, I put it in the bill that asked them to go after best business practices.

Well, the best business practices, they then interpret that is that they get the same types of rebates that they get in the private sector. So they created something called a warehousing, a virtual warehouse. They had to create the virtual warehouse because we in Congress gave them no authority, no authority to warehouse to gain access to the rebates under the Federal Supply Schedule. It just blows my mind.

I warned DOD about this. I had my conversations with Dr. Winkenwerder. But, you know what, he felt like he was on solid ground. I believe he built a house of cards. It has all fallen around him. He bet on the budget. He is short. He turns to Congress. He asks all of you to try to help him out of the jam he has got himself in.

I knew a lawsuit was coming. I knew that a lawsuit was going to come because the DOD was doing this without any express authority of Congress.

So let me just include an appeal, once again, to the good senses of my colleagues: Do not extend FSS pricing to other departments or agencies of government. Protect the veterans; protect those who are disabled. I just appeal to you. Don't do this.

Actually, Mr. EDWARDS, I would ask you to withdraw the motion to instruct.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

I have great respect for my colleague, the Chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee. He and I have worked together for many years on veterans' programs. I have never questioned his motivations; I just question his judgment in this particular case.

But he asked a fair question: What are we doing? Let me answer that question. What this motion to instruct would do is allow military retirees, up to 1.9 million of them, to get the same discounted drug prices at a retail pharmacist that the law already ensures they receive if they buy those drugs via mail order or if they go into a dispensary at a DOD hospital somewhere.

What are we doing? We are saving, according to estimates, $251 million this year for taxpayers, lowering the cost of prescription drugs for these vast numbers of military retirees.

What are we doing? We are perhaps saving enough money so that the Defense conferees don't have to actually force a 100 percent increase in the copay for generic drugs to military retirees and a 77 percent increase in the copay for military retirees to buy name-brand drugs. That is what we are doing.

What we are doing is taking a law that was passed in 1992 that the Veterans Administration in 2002 said provides the authority to provide this discount to retail pharmacies and just clarifying that law.

Apparently, it wasn't the Department of Defense or Veterans' Administration that opposed the kind of language I am supporting; it was the drug companies who filed lawsuits in this matter, to prevent military retirees from getting cheaper prices. I don't find the pharmaceutical manufacturers filing lawsuits so that they could make less money.

Mr. BUYER. Would the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. I would be happy to yield to you.

Mr. BUYER. The rebates go to the government, they do not go to the military retiree. Therefore, the price is not affected by the military.

Mr. EDWARDS. I appreciate the gentleman pointing that out. That is why I say this $251 million in savings in fiscal year 2007, that is projected to be over $300 million in savings in fiscal year 2009, can be used by the House-Senate conferees to reduce the copay that was put in the House bill that some may have felt was necessary for financial reasons.

But if we can find savings to the taxpayers in the Department of Defense, let's pass on those savings to our military retirees. I don't think Members of Congress are being asked during a time of war to pay 100 percent more copay for our prescription drugs. I don't think military retirees ought to be asked to pay 100 percent increase in their copays.

Mr. BUYER. Would the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. I would be glad to yield.

Mr. BUYER. That is a valued argument from your position, given how you have drafted the motion to instruct. That is a valued argument.

I would just ask of the gentleman that when we extend price controls to a greater population, as we contend, whether it is military retirees as you are talking about or whether we go to Medicaid or Medicare, what happens is we begin, at some point, we begin to dull our efforts on research and development and going after whatever the new blockbuster drug is that presses the bounds of science that our society gets to enjoy, improves the quality of our lives.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I would say, at some point, if the drug companies are not making a reasonable profit, it could significantly impact the money they invest in research. But I don't think many in this country today would doubt that the drug companies are making very healthy profits. And I do salute them on the research that they put into coming up with new miracle drugs, but at the same time, I think it is a fact that they spend more on advertising on television on the drugs than they spend on research and development for their drugs.

So out of the multibillion-dollar profits that all of our drug companies make on their drugs, I have a hard time thinking that allowing us to save $251 million this coming year on the cost of retail drugs for military retirees is going to put a significant crimp in the ability of drug companies to invest in future drugs.

I agree with the gentleman, the drug companies ought to be able to make a reasonable profit. I think they are making a reasonable profit. Many Americans think that they are making more than a reasonable profit.

I don't consider what the Senate adopted and what I am recommending and what I hope will pass on maybe not a unanimous basis but on a bipartisan basis today, I don't see this as price controls. I see this as the Federal Government having a right to make a contract with drug companies, just like the VA does that every day, as the gentleman knows. It says to the drug companies, if you want to sell us drugs at the Veterans' Administration, we would like to buy them, but we are going to require a 30 to 40 percent discount on those drugs.

One might make the argument that doing that hurts the profits of the drug companies, and therefore, they cannot invest in new drugs. I don't think the present policy of the Veterans' Administration saving hundreds of millions of dollars by negotiating, not price controls, negotiating reasonably discounted prices for drugs when you are representing millions of consumers, in this case veterans, I don't think that has hurt the drug companies. In fact, it looks to me as if they welcome the opportunity to sell millions of dollars of drugs every year to the Veterans' Administration.

I am saying, we should apply that principle not to some other unrelated agency but rather to the Department of Defense. It is the Veterans Secretary, the VA Secretary, that has said in the past, in his judgment, the 1992 law, in the VA's opinion, allowed discounted drugs at pharmacies, but it is the pharmaceutical manufacturers who have filed the lawsuits to stop this from happening.

I respect the gentleman greatly. I don't challenge, not for a second, his motivations. We ought to be concerned about the formulary prices staying low for veterans. I just don't see helping military retirees who have served our country for 20 to 30 years, some of them for more than 30 years, letting them go to local pharmacists and get a discounted drug price rather than paying full retail value is really going to hurt veterans.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BUYER. I follow the logic of your argument until you say it is going to help the military retirees because the military retirees don't get a specific benefit.

I concur with you when you say, Steve, let DOD gain access to FSS pricing, let them get their rebates. I get DOD savings, and with those savings, I can buy equipment and other things. That's your argument.

To say it is going to help the military retirees gain access through the formulary to lower drug prices is not true.

Mr. EDWARDS. Let me address why I respectfully disagree with the gentleman and why I think it is true.

I am the ranking member, as the gentleman knows, of the Military Quality of Life and Veterans' Affairs Appropriations Subcommittee in the House. Because of the budget limitations and the cost of Department of Defense and TRICARE programs this year, the House passed a bill that cuts about $730 million out of the President's request for DOD and TRICARE health care programs. We have to make up that hole somehow. By saving $250 million this year through this motion, if the House and Senate conferees agree to it, we help plug a large part of that huge hole. If we don't plug that hole, we are going to have to cut health care services for military retirees and possibly, I hope we would not, but possibly even active duty service men and women.

So this does help the military retirees. It helps us maintain the present level of health care services under TRICARE and gives them access to their local pharmacist, which many military retirees prefer. They trust their local pharmacist. They would prefer to go to that person and get advice and buy the discounted drugs under TRICARE.

It helps us have a chance to get rid of the 100 percent increase in copays for military retirees. I think this motion, if adopted into the bill, would help military retirees very significantly.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to Mr. BUYER.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank Mr. EDWARDS for yielding to me and having this conversation. This is important.

Members are going to be walking in here, Mr. EDWARDS, and they are not going to know completely what happened with this debate. It would not be right for Members to walk in here and think I will vote for Mr. EDWARDS' motion to instruct because I will help a military retiree lower his drug cost when he goes to the retail pharmacy. That is just not true. So I want the offices that are listening to this debate to understand that.

My greatest concern is opening up the Federal Supply Schedule. So I do not want to open up the Federal Supply Schedule to other departments or agencies of government, whether it is DOD, whether it is the Medicare or Medicaid program, and we can debate each of those. We might disagree on things. That is the only point I wanted to make.

The plausible arguments in defense of your motion, I disagree with what you are trying to do here today, and I just wanted to make sure that I made that point.

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Let me just point out something here today. I think we have seen something we rarely see on this floor with Mr. EDWARDS and Mr. BUYER; we have seen an actual discussion of the issue where we actually debate the issue, and on both sides, you have intelligent comments being made rather than people getting up and reading a statement and talking past each other. I just want to commend both of these gentlemen for the quality of debate that we have just heard on the floor of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

I thank the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY) for the comment about the debate. I think these are the kinds of issues we ought to debate. I welcome this kind of debate and honest differences of opinion. That is part of my criticism of the congressional process these days. It seems like so many times decisions get made behind closed doors, and the public does not know how those decisions are made. I think this is a healthy debate.

Despite my great respect for Mr. BUYER, I think this motion, if adopted into the final Defense bill for fiscal year 2007, would benefit hundreds and hundreds of thousands of our military retirees by letting them have access to low-priced prescription drugs at their local pharmacy by perhaps allowing us not to follow through with what I think is an unfair proposal from the House to double, to increase by 100 percent the copays that our military retirees pay for their drugs. We are not asking Members of Congress to double our copays for our prescription drugs this year during a time of war. I don't think we should ask our military retirees, many who have served 20 or 30 years in the military, to have an increase in copay for their drugs. We are not willing to ask ourselves to do that.

I think this is a beneficial motion. I believe it will be accepted with, not unanimous support, but with bipartisan support.

The only caution I want to urge, the good advice of my Texas colleague, mentioned by my friend from Colorado, when you have hit oil, you can stop drilling. I think the real test of whether we have hit oil or whether we have hit a dry hole is whether the language adopted already by the Senate, the language we will hopefully support on a bipartisan basis today on my motion, actually gets put in the final defense authorization bill.

I would issue a warning that oftentimes we pass motions to instruct conferees on an overwhelming basis if not unanimous basis in this House, and somehow, behind closed doors, the interest of those we care about, in this case the interest of military retirees, seems to somehow not be considered as carefully as the interest of other special interests.

I think this is a good motion. I know the pharmaceutical companies have filed lawsuits to stop the discount pricing of drugs at retail pharmacies. They have a right to do that. Congress has the right and the responsibility today to say that, in 1992, we made a decision saying that our retirees ought to have access to discounted drugs at pharmacists as well as via mail order.

I urge bipartisan support of this motion to instruct. Unless the gentleman from Indiana wants to continue an honest debate, I would yield back.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDWARDS. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, I only wanted to respond to Mr. EDWARDS' comments that he understands there is a lawsuit because the drug companies do not want to give discounts on their drugs to the retail pharmacies, paraphrasing what I believe you said. That is not what the lawsuit is. That is not what the lawsuit is about.

What the lawsuit is about, as I understand this, is that DOD created a virtual depot, and they created this virtual depot or warehouse because they had no authority under the statutes to do this. They needed to create a warehouse so they could obtain access to rebates that are being done out in the private sector. So it was clever. It was smart and clever, but they had no authority to do this.

I warned DOD, and I spoke to Dr. Winkenwerder. I said, please don't do this. If you do this, there are going to be lawsuits because you have no authority to do this at all. He felt that he did. That is what the lawsuit is about.

Mr. EDWARDS. I appreciate the gentleman's comments. Just to summarize, the Military Officers Association of America urges support for this change in the law. If the drug manufacturers would like to join with military retirees and the largest organization in America representing those retirees, I would welcome that support.

I urge bipartisan support for this motion to instruct conferees on the Defense authorization bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

I want to commend Mr. BUYER and Mr. EDWARDS on their sincere concern for the welfare of our veterans. They see things differently on this particular issue, but that doesn't take away from the concern that both have. They are good friends, and I know where their heart is on this, and it is in the right place.

As I said earlier, we have had the kind of debate I wish we could have more often here in the House of Representatives.

Ms. MCCOLLUM of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Motion to Instruct Conferees on H.R. 5122, the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2007.

The motion to instruct offered by my colleague, Representative CHET EDWARDS, would instruct House conferees to insist on Senate-passed language regarding the TRICARE retail pharmacy program. That language would allow TRICARE beneficiaries to purchase prescriptions from their local pharmacies at the same cost as through mail-order services, ensuring that our veterans and military retirees are not forced to pay more merely to visit their neighborhood drug store.

The Veterans Health Care Act of 1992 requires drug manufacturers to grant a Federal pricing discount on all drugs provided to the Department of Defense, Veterans' Administration, the Public Health Service and the Coast Guard. Unfortunately, not all drug manufacturers grant this discount on drugs provided to retail pharmacy stores, instead only applying the discount to mail-order prescriptions.

It is understandable that the Department of Defense would want to contain growing prescription drug costs. However, forcing TRICARE beneficiaries to obtain prescriptions by mail-order is not the solution—rather, we need to clarify that drug manufacturers must provide Federal pricing for all medications dispensed through the TRICARE retail pharmacy network. Section 721 of the Senate version of the Defense Authorization bill would do just this.

Representatives of the Department of Defense have acknowledged that Federal pricing for pharmaceuticals dispensed through the TRICARE retail pharmacy network would "significantly" contain growing prescription drug costs. It has been estimated that if the Senate provision is enacted, it could save taxpayers up to $251 million in fiscal year 2007, and more than $300 million annually by fiscal year 2009, by requiring Federal pricing discounts to be applied to these TRICARE retail pharmacies.

I have heard serious concerns expressed by veterans and military retirees in my district about this issue many times this summer. There are times when it is not possible to wait for a mail order to come before a person might need to begin taking their prescriptions. In those cases, for example, the men and women who have bravely served our country should not be punished for buying their prescriptions down the block. Our veterans, military retirees and their families deserve to have the option to use a pharmacy, and the services of a pharmacist, when they have questions regarding their prescriptions and their health. Passing this motion to instruct allows them that option.

We must ensure that our veterans and military retirees receive the benefits they have so courageously earned, and this motion to instruct will help guarantee they are not penalized for doing so. I support this motion to instruct, and strongly urge my colleagues to do as well.

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOLEY). Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to instruct.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. EDWARDS).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Ms. Curtis, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 2066. An act to amend title 40, United States Code, to establish a Federal Acquisition Service, to replace the General Supply Fund and the Information Technology Fund with an Acquisition Services Fund, and for other purposes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill, H.R. 503, and to insert extraneous material on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

AMERICAN HORSE SLAUGHTER PREVENTION ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 981 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 503.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 503) to amend the Horse Protection Act to prohibit the shipping, transporting, moving, delivering, receiving, possessing, purchasing, selling, or donation of horses and other equines to be slaughtered for human consumption, and for other purposes, with Mr. PUTNAM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered read the first time.

As designees of the majority leader, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON), the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. WHITFIELD), the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE), and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWENEY) each will control 10 minutes.

As designees of the minority leader, the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. PETERSON) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I know that H.R. 503 is an emotional issue for many people. It is my hope that this debate will give us a chance to look beyond the emotion and actually explore the facts of the issue in this particular bill. It is important that this discussion be fair, that it be open; and to that end the committee that I chair, the Energy and Commerce Committee, held a hearing a month ago that included witnesses from both sides and was fair and balanced. We put together a completely balanced hearing; and at the end of that hearing, it was clear to me that the majority of the experts have spoken, and they have spoken that H.R. 503 is bad policy and that it is bad for horses.

It is not a secret that I am opposed to the bill in its current form. Despite what may have been said, it is not because I do not like horses. It is not because I had some bad experience when I was young. In fact, I had and continue to have very positive experiences with horses. My opposition to this bill stems from the simple fact that it comes with negative consequences that I believe are being overlooked.

Ever since the bill has been introduced, I have been bombarded by calls, letters, and meeting requests from people both in my district and all over the country on both sides of the issue. I have heard from ranchers and horse owners as well as the American Quarter Horse Association, the American Veterinary Medical Association, the American Association of Equine Practitioners, American Farm Bureau, National Cattlemen's Beef Association, the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association. The list goes on and on. I have also been approached by proponents of the bill that are very supportive and very emotionally and strongly attached to this particular bill. Unfortunately for those folks, I must say that I am opposed to the bill because the majority of the evidence is that it is a bad bill. In fact, over 200 national organizations oppose the bill. Yesterday, even the United States Department of Agriculture came out in opposition to the bill. These are groups that, frankly, I consider to be representative of rural America, and they have all said the same thing: H.R. 503 will lead to a miserable existence for thousands of horses and is an outright attack at animal agriculture.

The care and the overall health of the animals, and notably the rights of their owners, should always be the primary concern when taking up legislation of this nature. Processing unmanageable and unwanted horses provides a humane alternative to continuing a life of discomfort, inadequate care, or possibly even abandonment for thousands of horses.

Mandatory United States Department of Agriculture inspection, which abides by strict laws monitoring the welfare of animals in the processing facility, assures that horses that are going to slaughter are treated humanely. It is also important to note that since last year's agriculture appropriations bill was enacted, the three American processing plants pay for those inspectors out of their own pockets. No expense to the taxpayer.

I might say on this note that the proponents of the bill have said repeatedly that the Cattlemen's Association gets $3 for every horse that is taken to slaughter. That is a true statement. But the reason that $3 is paid is because it is the Cattlemen's Association, at least in Texas, that is actually paying for the inspectors to inspect the horses that are brought to the slaughterhouse in Texas. So that is why you have the $3-per-horse fee. It is because in last year's agriculture appropriations bill, we said that those inspectors could not be paid for with Federal funds; therefore, an arrangement has been made between the slaughterhouses in Texas and the Cattlemen's Association that the inspectors will be paid for by providing this fee to the Cattlemen's Association that pays the inspectors.

H.R. 503 provides no alternative for thousands of horse owners for whom continued care of an animal is no longer economical or in some cases humane.

The other concern the bill raises for me is one of private property rights. While a majority of my constituents live in the Arlington/Fort Worth area down in Texas, the geography of the district that I represent is almost entirely rural. Animal agriculture is a large part of the economy for much of my district, and agriculture is already one of the most extensively regulated industries in the United States of America.

In the name of animal welfare, the United States Department of Agriculture right now tells owners how they can and cannot transport their animals. In the name of consumer safety, the United States Department of Agriculture right now tells them what they can and cannot feed their animals. This bill would tell producers to whom they can and cannot sell their horses. As a long-time proponent of limited government, I take issue with this last statement.

The horse owners in question have fed, housed, and cared for their animals, in some cases for decades, at great personal expense. When an animal reaches the point when he or she is no longer productive for the owner, who are we then to deny an owner the opportunity to recover some small portion of their costs that they have incurred in caring for the animal so far in its life? Why should they not be allowed to sell their animal to a legal, humane, and closely regulated processing facility?

Now, I understand that there are many groups that strongly support this particular bill and some of the thoroughbred associations are strongly in support of H.R. 503. If they have the money to pay for their horses, if they have the money to take care of their horses, that is fine. They do not have to take them to a slaughterhouse. That is freedom of choice. But for many ordinary Americans who do not have the resources that some of the more well-heeled thoroughbred associations and horse farms have, I think having a slaughterhouse option is a humane option.

Again, I understand that this is an emotional issue for many people. But I do not think Congress should vote purely on emotion. I think there should be common sense brought into the equation. And when you really look at the bill in that light, the obvious vote, at least for me, is a "no" vote.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER) and ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to control that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho will control the remainder of the time at the designation of the majority leader.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in strong support of H.R. 503, the American Horse Slaughter Prevention Act, which would put an end to the deplorable practice of slaughtering American horses for consumption.

As a strong supporter of animal rights, a horse lover, a former horse owner, I have joined with 202 of my colleagues from both sides of the aisle as a cosponsor of H.R. 503. 550 national and State organizations also support H.R. 503, and I have received over 900 communications from constituents in support of the bill.

Congress has already expressed its desire to put an end to horse slaughter by voting to amend the fiscal year 2006 agriculture appropriations bill to ban the practice. That amendment passed by an overwhelming vote of 269-158 in the House, 69-28 in the Senate. However, the language that passed in both the House and Senate stating that no Federal dollars could be used to fund the inspection of horse slaughter plants, thus ending the practice, was stripped out. The Republican leadership, in an act of hubris, changed the language in conference to allow for flexibility in interpretation of that ban and allowed the plants to continue to operate. This is going against congressional intent and has been taken to the courts.

Congress voted to put an end to horse slaughter in this country because horses are some of the most beautiful and beloved domesticated animals on Earth. Earlier this year the story of Barbaro, the Kentucky Derby winner that shattered his leg at the start of the Preakness, transfixed millions of Americans. Since his injury, the thoroughbred has received an incredible outpouring of letters, flowers, apples, and carrots from Americans across the country. Fans have even made pilgrimages to Barbaro's care facility in Pennsylvania to wish him well in his long recovery. Americans are rooting for Barbaro because they have been inspired by his strength, his beauty, and his strong personality.

Americans have long appreciated horses for transport, on ranches, as police mounts, and as cherished companions. The American Horse Council reports that 1.9 million Americans currently own horses. Another 7.1 million Americans are involved in the industry as horse owners, service providers, employees, and volunteers, while tens of millions participate in horse events as spectators. These millions of Americans know that horses should be treated with dignity and respect in life and death. They are disgusted, as I am, that in 2005 over 90,000 horses were slaughtered at three American-based foreign-owned plants, and I stress foreign-owned plants, so that meat could be shipped to Europe and Asia for consumption as a delicacy.

Horses bound for slaughter must endure inhumane conditions on the way to and during slaughter. Horses are shipped frequently for long distances in terrible conditions. They are crammed together in trucks built for cattle and pigs. Because of the cramped transport, they are often trampled and some horses arrive at the slaughterhouse seriously injured or dead. Once at the slaughterhouse, horses are often not rendered unconscious before they are killed, as mandated by Federal law.

Most people assume that all or most of the horses bought for slaughter are old or injured. In fact, according to the USDA guidelines for handling and transporting equines for slaughter, 92.3 percent of horses that arrive at slaughter plants are in "good" condition, meaning they are not injured, lame, overweight, or underweight. Healthy animals, pets, and former race horses are all sent to slaughter.

We may hear today that it is likened to being humane to animals in order to oppose this legislation. It could not be further from the truth. The humane vote is to vote in favor of this legislation to ban the inhumane slaughter of horses.

Earlier I mentioned Barbaro, the Kentucky Derby winner. Ferdinand, the winner of the 1986 Derby, faced a very different fate. After his momentous Derby victory, Ferdinand was killed for food in a Japanese slaughterhouse in 2002. Just imagine if Barbaro faced the same end.

Not surprisingly, a recent poll conducted by public opinion strategists found that 65 percent of Americans do not support horse slaughter, and 64 percent of Americans believe that horses are companions like dogs and cats and killing a horse to eat is not different than killing a cat or dog to eat.

I am sure that other Members of this body have received hundreds of letters too from constituents who oppose horse slaughter and support H.R. 503. I think it is time to listen to the American public and finally end the barbaric practice of horse slaughter by passing H.R. 503. Let us not sign off on Barbaro burgers.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 503.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OTTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I submit for the RECORD an editorial from the Dallas Morning News and also an editorial from the Star-Telegram.

A HUMANE END: SLAUGHTER PREVENTS WIDER SUFFERING

[From the Dallas Morning News, Sept. 7, 2006]

Few issues roll the emotions more than those involving the dependent and helpless. Hence, the turbulent debate over a proposal in Congress to end the legal slaughter of horses that feed overseas meat markets.

It's not right to dismiss or belittle the strongly held beliefs of animal advocates on the matter. They argue that the horse is a loyal service and companion animal that should not end up on someone's dinner table. Indeed, most Americans' sensibilities align with that view.

But the grisly alternative to humane slaughter is a slow, painful end for tens of thousands of castoff animals every year.

In a poignant irony, major veterinary groups are lined up against a slaughter ban. They argue persuasively that enough buyers or adoptive homes couldn't be found for all horses deemed too old, unfit or expensive by their owners.

Maintaining a horse for its natural life can exceed $25,000, even short of veterinary care.

The federal government, despite help from rescue organizations, already fails to find homes for thousands of wild horses culled each year from herds roaming national grasslands. Think of boosting the number of unwanted animals by the 60,000 to 100,000 horses that now go to slaughter annually. That would recklessly invite widespread abandonment and starvation.

Two of the nation's three horse slaughterhouses are in North Texas, the foreign-owned Dallas Crown in Kaufman and Beltex in Fort Worth. It's a closely regulated business aimed at humane treatment, from transport to euthanasia.

Some slaughter opponents say a better end for unwanted horses would be veterinarian-administered euthanasia. That position ignores the pivotal issue of added cost for rendering, incineration or burial.

Exported horse meat heads primarily to Europe and Asia, where no cultural taboo is attached to consumption. Top consumers are mostly developing nations with a need for added protein in the diet. Thus, the slaughtered horse makes a final contribution to the cycle of life.

In this country, at least, the law seeks to guarantee a humane end, in keeping with the horse's honored place in national lore. Congress should devote its energies toward keeping things that way, thus avoiding the unwanted consequence of needless suffering.

SIRING PROBLEMS

The federal bill grabbing the attention of horse lovers and animal rights activists bans the "shipping, transporting, moving, delivering, receiving, possessing, purchasing, selling, or donation of horses and other equines to be slaughtered for human consumption, and for other purposes."

The "other purposes" aren't outlined in HR 503, which is scheduled for a House vote on Thursday, but the result of this bill's passage would be to shut down an industry that provides a practical public service: disposal of the remains of dead horses.

It must be acknowledged up front that lots of Americans will never be convinced that allowing the slaughter of horses for sale as meat—for carnivores in zoos, canines at home or connoisseurs in Cannes—is a public service.

To some people, horses are more than "mere property," as Wayne Pacelle, president and CEO of the American Humane Society, wrote in an Aug. 23 guest column. But as horse breeder Jay Novacek rightly pointed out in the Aug. 21 column that triggered Pacelle's response, not all horses are pets, and not every horse owner has the financial resources to keep a horse until it dies of natural causes and then pay to bury or burn the carcass.

Maintaining a horse until its natural death averages $25,740 per animal, not including veterinary care for sickness or injury, according to a June report (commissioned by the Animal Welfare Council) about the consequences of a horse slaughter ban. The average lifespan of a horse is 20 to 25 years.

Pacelle is correct in that before Americans had trucks and cars to deliver the mail and packages, horses were the common mode of transportation. They were work animals. But romanticizing those relationships as something other than people appreciating the tools they needed to do their jobs is an attempt to play every emotional note possible.

Harkening back to a time when "almost everyone knew how to ride a horse" reveals a nostalgia for a day when people had few alternative forms of transportation other than their own two feet. Pardon us for saying that we aren't anxious to return to that chapter in history.

One can respect and be grateful for the horse's role in U.S. history without ignoring the pragmatic problems of what to do with a dead or unwanted one.

Shuttering the Beltex processing plant in Fort Worth won't put an end to "grim news" for the estimated 70,000 to 100,000 American horses that are slaughtered annually unless there's some way to cheat death for four-legged animals, or a pipeline to 70,000 to 100,000 people financially capable of caring for these animals.

No matter how much their owners appreciate them, horses get old and sick, and they die. Something has to be done with the carcass. And the affordable "something" for tens of thousands of people is the slaughterhouse. Incineration can cost as much as $2,000, and lots of areas have ordinances that make it illegal to bury Flicka in the back 40.

If public health, humane treatment or nuisance issues are discovered relating to the three horse processing plants operating in the United States (two of them in Texas), it's totally appropriate for government to address them. But U.S. history books are rife with examples of bad laws resulting from emotional appeals.

If passed, HR 503 will not save one horse's life, nor will it do anything to guarantee humane treatment for the animals.

Mr. OTTER. Mr. Chairman, the House of Representatives is voting today on an amendment to the Horse Protection Act that actually would irresponsibly endanger the welfare of the very animal that it purports to help. I oppose H.R. 503, which is driven by raw emotion and misinformation rather than by the facts. By eliminating the option of humane slaughter of the horses, the bill provides no directive as to what will happen to the 90,000 unwanted horses annually processed in our slaughter facilities. It increases the probability of unwanted horses becoming the victims of neglect, starvation, or abandonment. It criminalizes a legitimate and legal U.S. industry. It eliminates hundreds of U.S. jobs. It mandates costs estimated at $3 billion to $4 billion on private citizens. And it creates far more problems than it actually solves.

It limits horse owners' choices for disposing of their animals, and it infringes on the owners' private property rights. Private property rights have long been held dear by the families and the land owners in the west, and for good reason. Their farms and ranches have been their livelihood and part of their national heritage since the frontier was closed and the west was settled.

Not many months ago, many of my colleagues, most of those who are on the opposition side of this bill, on a bipartisan basis, rose in indignation at the Kelo v. New London, Connecticut, the City of New London, Connecticut decision, because it was taking private property rights.

I have stood many times with many of those folks who are now proponents of this bill to protect intellectual private property rights. I see no difference. And like it or not, a horse is private property. They are not humans. They must be treated humanely and cared for appropriately. However, when a horse is no longer wanted or cannot be cared for, Congress should not be in the business of deciding how the animals can or cannot be disposed of.

We fight for the protection of personal property rights and intellectual property rights, everything from dirt to ideas, Mr. Chairman. This is no different. I strongly encourage Members to oppose this misguided effort and continue preserving a strong tradition of private personal property rights in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE).

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to this bill that is before us. When we all look at all of the important issues waiting for Congress to act on, I cannot understand why we are here wasting so much of our time on an issue that really has nothing to do with the pressing problems that are facing people in this country.

But here we are today considering a bill that would effectively shut down three horse-processing facilities and eliminate a reasonable option for horse owners who can no longer afford to care for their animals that are no longer productive.

I understand that this issue is an emotional one for many people. But what other options are there for people who own aging horses that are no longer productive? It costs anywhere from, people tell me, $1,200 to $1,800 a year, some people say $2,300 a year. That is a lot of money for most people to care for an animal that has outlived its productive years.

Some of these aging horses are sent to horse rescue facilities. While those facilities can provide a good home for aging horses, there are no Federal guarantees or standards of care that must be met. There is no guarantee that the horses at these facilities will be treated humanely. And this bill does not provide any money to help rescue facilities cover the additional costs that they will incur, and there is no way that we can accommodate all of the horses that will be abandoned if we pass this bill.

While H.R. 503 outlaws slaughter for human consumption, the bill does not prohibit horses from being killed. Some supporters of this bill support euthanasia as an alternative to processing. However, euthanizing a horse is not cheap; it can cost anywhere from $300 to $2,000 an animal depending on the local rules for carcass disposal.

Processing provides a cost effective and a humane alternative to neglect and abandonment when horse owners are unable to find another buyer. Caring for a horse properly is expensive, and it is time consuming. The real question of animal welfare lies in what will happen if the slaughter ban is imposed. These unwanted horses are often sick, unfit or problem animals. Many of them are already living in pain or discomfort, and tens of thousands more could be neglected, starved or abandoned if their owners no longer have processing available as an end-of-life option.

If we pass this bill, we will ignore the fate of these animals who find their lives extended but without the necessary standards of care that they need and deserve. So at the end of the day, this bill is not about protecting horses from an untimely death; all it will do is limit the option of horse owners and burden them with additional costs of care and disposal.

The House Agriculture Committee recognized the many weaknesses in this bill and voted to recommend that the House not pass this bill by a vote of 37-3.

The Members of our committee represent agricultural areas around the country, areas where people own and use horses every day. We passed several amendments to this bill during our committee mark-up, but they are not included in the bill that we are considering here today.

This shows a complete lack of respect for the expertise and the effort that the Agriculture Committee has contributed to this subject. At the end of the day, this debate is about defining what is humane when we are dealing with unwanted horses. Are we going to pass legislation that truly addresses the health and well being of animals, or are we going to pursue bills that amount to little more than window dressing in the name of animal welfare?

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to set aside this emotionally charged issue and oppose this legislation that will tie the hands of horse owners around this country.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Chairman, parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Chairman, some of us were late coming to the floor. I would like an explanation of the division of the time on this debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 981, as designees of the majority leader, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON), the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. WHITFIELD), the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY) each were allocated 10 minutes.

As designees of the minority leader, the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. PETERSON) each will control 20 minutes.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Chairman, what is the time remaining on this side of the aisle at this point?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. WHITFIELD) has 10 minutes remaining. The gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY) has 10 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) has 10½ minutes remaining.

Mr. WHITFIELD. He has 10½ minutes because time was yielded to him.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct. The majority leader reallocated time.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, today we are going to have a serious discussion that in my estimation is long overdue. Since 1979, Members of Congress, with the vast and substantial support of the American people, have tried to have this issue resolved.

What I speak of is H.R. 503, the American Horse Slaughter Prevention Act. Mr. PETERSON, my good friend, made what I think is one point I will agree with him on. This is a debate about what is humane. And despite the words and the rhetoric of the opponents of this legislation, the focus should be on the issue of what is humane and what the will of the people are, because what we are exposing today is a brutal, shadowy, shameful, predatory practice that borders on the perverse.

Public opinion, as I said, is substantially in support. Every poll that I have seen, 70 percent of the American people want this practice banned and stopped, the practice of horse slaughter for human consumption, something culturally the United States has never accepted nor have any of the Indian territories within the United States.

Editorials were recited a bit earlier, but I will give you some editorials. Today the Washington Post, with a diametrically different view of the world than the Washington Times, both editorialized saying that this practice should end. It reflects on our culture. It reflects on our priorities inappropriately and improperly.

In California, a referendum was passed with 60 percent of the vote saying that that practice should be banned in California. And there is Texas law, and many other States have laws that ban the practice. What H.R. 503 does is it prohibits the shipping, the transporting, the moving, the delivering, the receiving, the purchasing, selling or donation of horses and other equines for slaughter for human consumption.

What I really want to emphasize though is what this practice is. The opponents have said this is a humane process. The opponents have said that this is going to limit individuals' rights and individuals' property rights, none of that being true.

What this is going to do is stop a practice that, first of all, is in violation of many State laws and, secondly, is not adhered to or supported by substantial populations, and it is brutal.

This picture here, this is a horse's head. This is a horse's head that was discovered in transport to one of the slaughter houses. What we have here are three slaughter house factories, two in Texas, one in Illinois, both operating with substantial local opposition and presenting substantial environmental and economic problems to those communities.

What we have are horses from all over the country, thousands of miles away, transported in cramped cattle or pig trailers or trucks. Not designed or built for horses, not designed to transport horses. They are often purchased in a predatory fashion by killer-buyers who do not disclose what the purpose of their purchase is going to be, who, as I said, operate in a shadowy way.

They bring these beautiful animals those thousands of miles in these cramped conditions with all different types of horses cramped in, despite USDA regulations that say you cannot transport them that way. The irony, Mr. Chairman, is on the day the Agriculture Committee marked up its bill, a bill which the amendments will be to the floor in a little while, all meant to continue that practice, to kill H.R. 503; on the very day they were marking up that bill, an arrest was made in Mississippi of one of those predatory killer-buyers who had 20-25 horses in his care. He stopped because he got a flat tire. And the owner of the service station he stopped at saw the condition, the condition of these animals, and called the police, thus allowing us to finally enforce the law.

Mr. Chairman, we need to pass this bill because USDA has not done their job. In fact, they have been on the other side of the issue consistently. They surreptitiously overturned Congressional action last year. Ms. SCHAKOWSKY pointed that out earlier. We need to bring an end to this practice because it says too much about us.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask how much time I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman has 15 minutes remaining.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT).

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Chairman, I am an original cosponsor of this bill, along with Mr. WHITFIELD and Mr. SWEENEY. This bill is to prevent the violent practice of slaughtering horses for human consumption. Why are we offering it?

If you have grown up with horses, you know why we are offering it. They are as close to human as any animal you can get. Why are we offering it? Because there are three foreign-owned slaughter houses, just three, in the United States where these horses are slaughtered, various means, jacking them up by their hind legs, slitting their throats.

Why does this practice continue? So that these slaughter houses can keep a steady flow of horse meat to the dinner tables and meat markets, not in the United States, but of Asia and Europe where horse meat is still eaten. Americans do not even eat horse meat.

The Horse Slaughter Prevention Act before us today, if passed into law, will simply end this practice once and for all across the entire United States.

The opponents of this bill have come up with a number of objections, reasons they think it is a bad idea. First of all, they would have us believe that this is a first step down a slippery slope. That next will come cows and then hogs and then chickens and then other animals consumed by Americans.

But the Horse Slaughter Prevention Act does nothing of the kind, and it will not lead in that direction, because horses are unique and distinct. We all know that.

Second, the opponents claim that banning horse slaughter will result in an overpopulation of horses in this country. Once again, this is not true. There are currently three slaughter houses in the United States in two States. In five States, including California, a law banning horse slaughter has been in effect for 7 years. What has been the effect? There have been no effects. There have not been animals that are left derelict. There haven't been animals that are not buried. There have not been too few euthanasias.

Practically speaking, in all five States where this law is already the law of the land, there has been no effect whatsoever.

Each year, about 90,000 horses are slaughtered. So there is no real impact in a country as large as the United States in the disposing of those 90,000 horses by means other than horse meat slaughtering.

Third and finally, our opponents have touted letters from cattlemen and chicken farmers and all sorts of livestock raisers who say they oppose the bill.

We have and we will gladly display to anyone who wants to see it a seven-page memorandum, single spaced, of supporters all over the country who know horses, who love horses; they are horse raisers, horse racers, horse lovers, you name it. Everybody has signed on to this saying it is time we do something like this.

Last year, when it appeared that the Horse Slaughter Prevention Act would never get its day on the House floor, Mr. SWEENEY and Mr. WHITFIELD and I offered an amendment to the House appropriations bill to ban Federal funding to facilitate horse slaughter for 1 year. That amendment drew 269 votes in support; 269 Members passed it by a substantial majority. I hope that today my colleagues will remember the vote they cast last year and will see fit to end the brutal practice of killing horses and will vote not only for the bill but against all amendments because they would only debilitate and defeat the bill.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to my good friend from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS).

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman and thank him for taking on this battle with others.

I rise in strong support of H.R. 503, the American Horse Slaughter Prevention Act. I oppose the cruel and senseless slaughter of American horses for human consumption in the United States or for foreign markets. I just think we should not be allowing this.

Last year, more than 90,000 American horses were either slaughtered in one of three foreign-owned slaughterhouses in the U.S. or shipped to Canada or Mexico for slaughter.

Horses have never been raised for human consumption in America. This slaughter is done for export.

Legislation is necessary because the Department of Agriculture is blatantly circumventing clear congressional intent on horse slaughter in last year's fiscal year 2006 Agriculture Appropriations Act.

This legislation would prohibit the transportation, possession and sale of horses to be slaughtered for human consumption in the U.S. It does not remove the rights of owners to do what they want with their horses.

Under H.R. 503, owners can humanely euthanize sick, dangerous, or old horses. Horses can continue to be kept by their owners, can be sold to a new home, or placed in one of the many horse sanctuaries located across the country.

The way a society treats its animals, particularly horses, speaks to the core values and priorities of its citizens. Horses are not just companions and recreational animals. They are a vital part of our Nation's culture and history.

I urge my colleagues to support this important piece of legislation and oppose all amendments aimed to weaken it.

I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SALAZAR), a real rancher, horse owner and outstanding member of the House Agriculture Committee.

Mr. SALAZAR. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota.

I have been a farmer and rancher all of my life, still live on the original family farmstead that my great great grandfather settled back in 1860. Horses have been a real part of the way we do business on the Salazar ranch. As a matter of fact, we still use horses to round up cattle and move them from pasture to pasture.

I know that H.R. 503 is a well-intended act, but if it becomes law, it will have very poor results.

The act will seriously, in my opinion, compromise horse welfare. Under this bill, care must be potentially provided for the additional 90,000 horses that are going to be out there annually.

It will eliminate a humane end-of-life option for horse owners and force them to send their horses out to already overcrowded rescue centers or sentence them to live out their final years in suffering.

Processing provides a cost-effective alternative to neglect and abandonment when horse owners are unable to find another buyer. It is not such a problem out in rural areas, but it is a major problem in urban areas.

In 2005 alone, it saved owners and rescue facilities an estimated $220 million in total costs of caring for unwanted horses.

The Animal Welfare Council estimated that cumulative annual maintenance costs of otherwise processed horses since the year 2000 would have exceeded more than $513 million in 2005. It would cost $1,900 per year to house each unwanted and abandoned horse, not including veterinary or farrier services. It will cost $127 million in the first year to properly care for these animals if this legislation is enacted.

Who will pay for this cost? You will pay for the cost in the end. These facilities do not receive public money at the moment; but I can assure you that if these horses become a nuisance, you, the taxpayer, will end up paying for their care.

H.R. 503 does not specify who will bear the costs of the ban if this ban is implemented. What will happen to the management tools the Bureau of Land Management has to manage the wild-life of wild horse bans out in the western United States? If this bill is enacted, none of these horses who are unwanted, and although BLM does try to auction them off or to give them to pet owners, what will happen to those horses? What will happen when I am out riding, rounding up my cattle and my horse falls into a prairie dog hole and breaks his leg? Will I then not be able to send him to some rendering facility? What will happen or what is the next step? Will people take away our right to be able to go out and hunt elk? Is that the next step?

I know that H.R. 503 is a well-intended act, but it will have very serious consequences on our agricultural community. I would urge my colleagues to oppose the ban of horse slaughter and to vote "no" on H.R. 503.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the words of my colleague and his sentiments, and I need to make a couple of points because there is a substantial skewing of the record here.

First of all, in 1989, 350-some-odd thousand horses were slaughtered. We have that number down to below 90,000. That is 1 percent of the horse population that is put down every year.

Secondly, the gentleman says that this will preclude an option for putting down his horse if his horse becomes lame. I would make two points. One is that 90-plus percent of the horses that are sent to slaughter facilities are rated by the USDA as being healthy and strong and fit animals.

So this is not about putting down animals, and if you have that problem, there still are humane procedures. You can go to a local vet and have your local vet for $50 to $250 oversee the process of putting your animal down.

Frankly, this bill does not stop an owner from putting a horse down themselves by any means.

This bill prohibits the public transportation of that. This bill prohibits the slaughter for human consumption at these three facilities.

Mr. SALAZAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SALAZAR. Mr. Chairman, I have been around horses all of my entire life. Do you consider the slaughtering of animals such as beef inhumane?

Mr. SWEENEY. This is not about that. This is about horses which are in a special place. This is about a practice that is profusely out of whack with the standards of America.

Reclaiming my time, I want to talk about the slaughter facilities themselves. These houses do not contribute to this economy. In his written testimony during the committee hearings on H.R. 503, Dick Koehler, vice president of Beltex Corp., a slaughter plant in Fort Worth, Texas, described the horse slaughter industry as a tax-paying legitimate business. Yet witnesses at that same hearing revealed tax returns showing that Dallas Crown, Inc., based in Kaufman, Texas, made $12 million in revenue 1 year and paid only $5 in U.S. taxes.

The U.S. exports 18,000 tons of horse meat, netting $65 million in 2005; and the profits went back to the countries of the owners of those plants. Two of them are from Belgium. One of them is from France.

There are costs to the local economies. It is a practice that is abhorrent and that is not supported.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve my time.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY).

Mrs. MALONEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 503; and like many of my colleagues, I have been around horses all my life. I am a former horse owner and my father had a farm. The humane vote is to vote "yes" on H.R. 503.

I thank my colleagues, Mr. SWEENEY and Mr. SPRATT and Ms. SCHAKOWSKY, for their really outstanding leadership and for clarifying the points that have been so made in this debate.

Over 90,000 horses were brutally slaughtered last year at three foreign-owned slaughterhouses in the United States, and their meat was then shipped to countries in Europe and Asia for human consumption. Americans do not eat horse meat. They love horses. They are cherished companions. They are sporting animals. They are not food.

If you look at the history of America, horses have played such an important part in our Nation's development, and I would say they are probably the most beloved animals native to the United States.

The American people strongly support banning horse slaughter. They recognize that it is a deplorable practice that needs to end.

Over 70 percent have expressed this opinion in opposition to slaughtering horses for human consumption. Again, no American would eat horse meat. This is to be shipped to a foreign country, and they are slaughtered in a gruesome manner, as my colleague pointed out on the floor.

While it is technically required that horses be unconscious prior to slaughter, the method used to render them unconscious is not effective due to a horse's instinctive flight response to stress. As a result, the horses are sometimes conscious while being slaughtered. This is unconscionable.

I call upon my colleagues for a humane vote and to vote "yes" on this bill.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, we are going to hear in a little while that there is substantial support in the ag community and other places, and I will grant that there is substantial opposition to this bill, as well as substantial support, within 500 horse organizations.

But what I find most sad and in a way ironic is that an organization like the American Veterinary Medical Association opposes this legislation when employees of a slaughter plant blatantly do not follow the AVMA procedure for slaughtering a horse.

Again, an important notion to understand is that slaughter is not the same as humane euthanasia by a qualified veterinarian. Euthanasia, according to AVMA, is an act of inducing humane death that is respectful and is painless and as distress free as possible.

Yet we saw in that picture, that was transport, that was not even slaughter. That was a horse in transport. Horses suffer horribly on the way to and during slaughter, where they often endure repeated blows to the head and upper body before being hoisted up for slaughter, sometimes still conscious. That is not euthanasia.

Slaughter is markedly different than acceptable forms of euthanasia. The AVMA requires that a captive bolt method must be administered by trained, skilled and monitored personnel and that the horse must be adequately restrained. These requirements are typically not met in equine slaughter plants, thus raising significant welfare concerns.

Let me say something about the plants, too. One of the issues raised is that you are going to shut these plants down and people are going to lose their jobs. We are talking about something in the range of 150 employees. To my friends on my side of the aisle who talk all the time about how we have got to be tough on immigration, I suggest to you that a substantial number of those workers are not in this country under legal means. They are low-level laborers. It is the only people they could find to do this.

I would also inform my colleagues that all three of these facilities, all three of these facilities operate and slaughter for other means, other livestock, and that they could simply go to that business. This is a practice that is not adhered to or supported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

I would point out that the two largest horse associations in the United States, the American Quarter Horse Association and the American Paint Horse Association, are opposed to this bill, and they represent the biggest number of horse owners in the country. So people need to understand that.

I wondered if Mr. SWEENEY would yield on the points he was making. I wanted to ask him a question.

You know, you keep talking about the way they are treated as they are hauled to slaughter. As I understand it, in this bill, there are no requirements put on so that, if you are hauling these animals to a rescue facility, there is no regulation or any kind of requirements put on anybody to haul them to those rescue facilities. So what have you accomplished?

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SWEENEY. Well, there are requirements for the transport under USDA. The problem is USDA does not enforce those requirements.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 more minute.

But, you know, nothing will change under this bill.

Mr. SWEENEY. I would suggest, Mr. PETERSON, that people who are rescuing horses have a different mindset and intent than those who are slaughtering for human consumption.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. I am not sure that is the case, because you are going to have 90,000 horses, and you are going to have people rescuing them basically under duress because they are not going to know what to do with them.

In my part of the world, we already have people letting horses out, out in the country, just like dogs and cats, because we don't have a processing facility close enough to us. It is a huge problem.

Mr. SWEENEY. And 20 percent of the horse population, in reporting data out of California and everywhere else, suggests absolutely the opposite.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Well, they are hauling them to Texas because there is a processing facility.

The only point I am trying to make, Mr. Chairman, is that some of these issues they are claiming they are going to solve with this bill are not going to be solved. They are actually going to create more problems.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Chairman, at this time, I am pleased to yield 2¼ minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. HAYES), the chairman of the Livestock Subcommittee of the Agriculture Committee.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to H.R. 503. This is a bill that has tremendous shortcomings, will cause major negative disruptions throughout the horse industry and lacks any strategy of how to deal with the problems that it will undoubtedly create.

The bill is based on emotion. If you stop to think about what will happen to these 60,000 to 90,000 horses being diverted from processing each year, you will realize the bill does not provide a single answer to truly the problem.

I find it deeply troubling that the sponsors of H.R. 503 care more about what happens to the animal after it is euthanized than what happens when it is alive. If these animals are no longer able to be processed at federally regulated plants, where will these horses go? Yes, these animals will be alive, but if it is a life of negative abuse, abandonment and starvation, what good have we served? We want to make sure all these animals are cared for humanely throughout their life.

Owning a horse is a privilege that should be taken seriously. Horses are high maintenance animals that require feed, water, veterinary care and safekeeping. The care of horses is expensive. The Animal Welfare Council estimates it costs $2,340 per year per horse. Public animal rescue facilities and horse sanctuaries across the country are currently saturated with unwanted horses and in desperate need of funds. Even the proponents of this bill have acknowledged this fact. How does adding thousands more horses help this already dismal situation?

H.R. 503 does not provide a single answer to ensure the proper care of these animals. Where will these animals go? How will we fund their care? How do we ensure they are not starved and abandoned? Why should we burden our local communities with problems created by this bill?

More than 200 reputable horse organizations, animal health organizations and agricultural organizations oppose this legislation, and they represent some of the most respected and knowledgeable people who own and care for horses in the United States. In my home State, the North Carolina Horse Council, Quarter Horse Association, the North Carolina Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, the North Carolina Farm Bureau, the North Carolina Pork Council and the North Carolina Cattlemen's Association all oppose this legislation and the precedent it would set for other livestock.

If you look at the facts and not the emotional hype, I believe the choice here is really quite simple. My stand against H.R. 503 is a stand for the humane treatment of these animals. I urge my colleagues to do the right things for horses and horse owners. Vote "no" on H.R. 503.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. I would like to yield 3 minutes to our distinguished whip, Mr. HOYER.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentlewoman. This is about politics not policy. The policy, I am going to support. This is about politics. It is about the election of one Member in a very hotly contested race in New York.

I hope the American public are tuned in. With all the pressing critical issues that confront our Nation, what is the one issue in the one-fifteenth of the session that we have left that we are according our time to? The Horse Slaughter Prevention Act. This is an important issue that should be considered. I do not mean to make light of the legislation. But is this the issue that the American people expect their elected representatives to be considering at this moment?

On Monday, we commemorate the fifth anniversary of the worst terrorist attack in our Nation's history. 9/11 is a day of remembrance and resolve, and it is also a time to recognize that we are not as safe as we should be. Apparently, horses aren't either. But people aren't as safe as they should be.

Just today, a former Republican Speaker of the House, Newt Gingrich, wrote, and I quote, "Five years have passed since the horrific attack on our homeland, and still there is one serious undeniable fact we have yet to confront. We are today," said the former Speaker, Newt Gingrich, "not where we wanted to be and nowhere near where we need to be."

Yet one-fifteenth of the time we have left before the election is spent on horses. Osama bin Laden is still on the loose. This Congress has failed to enact the 9/11 Commission's recommendations. The nuclear threat from North Korea and Iran has increased. Afghanistan is backsliding, and Iraq simmers in a low-grade civil war, yet we are focused on this act.

Last week, I joined more than 20 of my Democratic colleagues in visiting New Orleans and the gulf coast, areas devastated by Hurricane Katrina 1 year ago. We observed incredible courage and optimism on the part of the citizens there, but we all saw an area that is still a shell of its former self.

In New Orleans, nearly 60 percent of homes and businesses do not have electricity. Much of New Orleans lacks a dependable supply of potable water, and only $44 billion of the $110 billion appropriated for rebuilding assistance to victims has been spent. Yet what are we doing today? Focusing on horses.

This bill was defeated 37-3 in committee. The Patient's Bill of Rights, cosponsored by Mr. DINGELL, was supported by the majority of this House and the majority of the Senate, and it died in conference, for political reasons. This bill here is for political reasons.

While this body considers this legislation today, the Republican leadership refuses to allow an up-or-down vote on providing a long overdue increase for the minimum wage.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. I thank my friend, the chairman of the committee, soon to be, maybe. Who knows. Mr. GOODLATTE, I apologize for that.

The Republican leadership refuses to allow an up-or-down vote on the minimum wage. And that is not about horses; it is about 6.6 million Americans working every day and living in poverty. I have concern about these horses, but I have much, much more concern about 6.6 million Americans who are living in poverty while working 40-hour weeks.

We have still not passed legislation that moves our Nation towards energy independence, yet we focus on horses.

Reforms are broken in the immigration system, yet we focus on horses.

We have not addressed the fact that 46 million Americans do not have health insurance, yet we focus on horses.

We need fixes to the Republicans' flawed prescription drug program and reforms to our convoluted tax system, yet we focus on horses. I am concerned about horses, but I am much, much more concerned about the American people. That is what we ought to be focused on. That's where we ought to be paying attention.

That is why I call this the "do less than 'do-nothing Congress of 1948.'"

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I would say on behalf of this Congress that we did pass an energy bill. We did pass a prescription drug bill. We did pass a bill to expedite refinery building in this country. We did pass an outer continental shelf exploration bill. And we would have had this bill on the floor 2, 3, 4 years ago if the Ag Committee had been willing to cooperate with us.

But to talk about this business of horse slaughter, I think the American people have every right to know what this business is really all about. It is a secretive, illicit and grossly inhumane business. Now, you listen to the members of the Ag Committee and the Department of Agriculture, and they talk about the transportation of these animals as regulated and that there is no ill will coming to these animals.

I have a picture here of a horse that was transported from Mississippi to Texas to Beltex on August 10, 2006. Now, if you look, I will show you that picture, and then I want to show you this picture. Now, the reason this happened is because a killer buyer by the name of Robbie Solomon from Belmont, Mississippi, put 17 stallions in one trailer.

Now, Mr. SALAZAR was here talking about his knowledge of horses, and I am sure he is quite knowledgeable, but anyone knows that you do not put stallions together. And the only way they were able to keep them from fighting was to beat these animals. This is going on all across the country because the USDA is not enforcing the transportation regulations.

And so when we talk about slaughter, we are not talking about the actual slaughter of the horse per se; we are talking about the horse theft involved. We are talking about the killer buyers getting animals any way they can get them. We are talking about them putting them in trailers like this and transporting horses.

I find it so interesting that the American Association of Equine Practitioners, the leadership, and the leadership of the American Quarter Horse Association talk about their concern for these horses. They are looking out for their welfare, yet they see nothing wrong with the method of transport, the double-deck trailers being used, where horses full grown cannot even stand up straight on the upper deck.

Just think, stallions put together. You never do that. And that is precisely what Mr. Robbie Solomon of Belmont, Mississippi, did. So I did want to point out exactly what is going on in this transportation of these animals to slaughter, and this is not something that is uncommon.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE).

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman. In Nebraska, we have a great many horses that are used for roping, cutting horses, riding horses and quarter horses. Not many racehorses. These horses are primarily for a function, and when a horse can no longer fulfill that function, something has to happen to the horse. Now, you can retire the horse and pay $2,000, $3,000 a year to house it, to feed it and to take care of it, but some people that own 15, 20, 30, 40, 50 horses simply cannot afford to do that.

So I have been hearing from a great many horse owners, and these are people who care about horses, who love horses and who are concerned about horses, who have working ranches, and they say this is a bill that they cannot live with because of the cost. So I think we have to look at that.

I certainly don't tolerate and don't condone any shipment that is, as has been mentioned, injurious. We don't want to see that. But we have to have some way, because this will decrease the value of the average horse about $300 simply because of the burial fees and the extra costs of taking care of horses.

So this is not a solution to the problem. The people in my area oppose it, and I would strongly urge we defeat the bill.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the Dean of the House, the ranking member of the Energy and Commerce Committee, my good friend, JOHN DINGELL.

Mr. DINGELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

I love the people who are pushing this bill, but it is a bad bill. It is triumph of emotion over common sense. We have before us a solution, a poor one, to a nonexistent problem.

We have many things that need to be addressed in this Congress, but here we are putting on the floor a piece of legislation poorly thought out, without having had proper hearings or proceedings, over the opposition of a committee, when we have many other things that need doing: health care for Americans, minimum wage, a budget deficit of terrifying proportions, and the appropriations bills and the budget have not yet been completed. While the Nation is at war, working families struggle to make ends meet, and government runs record deficits the leadership has put this curious piece of legislation on the floor.

The bill would eliminate humane slaughter of horses. If there is a complaint about how the horses are being slaughtered or transported, there is a way for this body to address that, and I am sure in good will this body would in the exercise of its oversight powers do exactly that.

The bill does not count for the high cost of caring for these unwanted animals, nor does it consider the impact that this legislation is going to have on the environment.

You know, we have a curious situation where we are going to have to wind up cremating every horse that dies in the country, or we are going to have to incinerate them. I have no idea how we are going to dispose of a huge number of 1,500 to 2,000 pounds of horse each time one of these events happens.

Now, basic care costs $1,800. There is no requirement here that a person sell or slaughter his horse. The owner of the horse can do what he wants with it. That makes eminent good sense to me.

But I don't think anyone has thought out the consequences of this legislation, what is going to happen with regard to the massive number of horses that are going to have to be incinerated or cremated and the consequences of that with regard to the environment.

This is a bad piece of legislation. It should be rejected.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GONZALEZ).

Mr. GONZALEZ. Madam Chairman, I thank my colleague from Illinois for allowing me the 3 minutes on this particular issue.

I think much has been said, but I think if we look at it as legislators, our profession, our duties and our service to our constituents, what is it that we do? We pass laws that reflect the standards, the norms and the mores of American society.

It is already acknowledged, and I think even the opponents of this piece of legislation that I support here today would acknowledge we have already established a norm and a standard, and that is in this country we will not destroy a horse for human consumption. That is a done deal, that is recognized, and it is based on the historical significance of the horse in our society, which is very unique.

Now, this is the question that I pose: How can you prohibit the human consumption of a product, that is the law, that is the norm, that is the standard, that is the American value, without prohibiting the production of the product? And that is what this piece of legislation accomplishes. It is not a difficult legislative equation.

And there will be consequences, but consequences that can be dealt with responsibly by the horse owner. And I truly believe that. I am from the State of Texas, and we have a few horses in Texas. My brother owns horses. Now, does he agree with me on this particular piece of legislation, because it may prove to be inconvenient and pose some economic cost to him? I am not really sure. But this is in keeping with what we have already established, and that is how we treat horses in our society.

Now, we have individuals that will say this is about property rights. Members of Congress, please. We pass laws every day that regulate the manner that we conduct ourselves with pieces of property, personal and real. We have zoning laws. We have ordinances. And this is just another aspect of that, in keeping, though, with what has already been established as societal norms, and that is what we do here today.

People will simply say, but it is not about consumption of horse meat in the United States, that we are just simply going to cater to the culinary needs of the French. That is not the point. The point is that you still have everything that entails the entire process of how you prepare, how you slaughter the horse for human consumption. Whether it is domestic or internationally, it is not in keeping with the established norms and values as reflected in our laws, State and Federal, when it comes to the treatment of horses.

The bottom line is we have to sometimes tweak existing laws to make sure that they reflect those mores and that value, and that is what we are doing here today.

We cannot condone the slaughter of horses for human consumption.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Madam Chairman, I would like to address one issue that the distinguished gentleman from Michigan raised, and we all have great admiration and respect for the gentleman from Michigan. He raised the question about how are we going to take care of all these horses that are not slaughtered when they die and the impact of those animals on the environment.

I would remind the body that there are 133 million cows in America today. Every year many of them die out in the fields. Some of them are picked up by renderers and processed, but many of them are drug to the back 40 where they are decomposed, eaten by scavengers and whatever. The same thing would happen to horses that die out in the fields.

In my State of Kentucky, only about 40 percent of the animals that die in the fields are picked up by renderers. This bill would not affect what happens to natural death to animals in the field in any way whatsoever.

I would remind the body that only 1 percent of the entire horse population in America, which is about 9 million, is being slaughtered. Less than that. I also would like to reiterate, once again, we have heard so much about unwanted horses. I would say to you, many of these horses being slaughtered are not unwanted, there is not anything wrong with them. Many of them are stolen and obtained by misrepresentation. So to leave the impression that every horse slaughtered is old, decrepit, unwanted, is certainly not what the facts show.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 15 seconds to say that that is 1 percent of the horses per year, 90,000 or 1 percent of the 9 million per year. The average life expectancy of a horse is over 25 years. So about 25 percent of the horses go through this process in this country, and we will have a huge problem if we don't resolve that, if we pass this bill.

Madam Chairman, I am pleased to yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. KING).

Mr. KING of Iowa. Madam Chairman, I thank the chairman for yielding and for leading this cause.

I rise in opposition to H.R. 503. H.R. 503, the Horse Protection Act, would ban the processing of horses for human consumption. There is no evidence that suggests that products derived from horses pose any food safety or public health risk. Because processing facilities process meat intended for interstate shipment, they must be inspected by USDA for compliance with the Horse Slaughter Act, the Federal Meat Inspection Act, and other Federal animal health and food safety regulations.

The people who want this bill passed claim that horses are not raised for meat. However, there are at least three breeds that are raised for meat: the Yili, the Altai and the Bashkir, among others, that are raised for dual purposes.

Every year, 80,000 to 100,000 of these horses are abandoned in the U.S., and this number is expected to double in just a few years. But there are no provisions to address disposal or care of the unwanted 100,000 horses.

When horses are euthanized on private lands, it is normally done with a heavy dose of barbiturates. Once that horse succumbs to the barbiturates, the carcass becomes an environmental concern. And if the horse is disposed of on private land, we have to be concerned about the issues that lead to contamination, human exposure to zoonotic disease and related problems.

The individuals who support H.R. 503 and argue unwanted horses can be moved to adoption facilities or resold are selling us short on the resources. The total take capacity for all these facilities is 6,000 head; 6,000 head. These facilities are already at overcapacity. Where would the additional 100,000 horses go? I would add that is a cumulative total of perhaps a 10-year rolling total of 100,000 a year. It may be 1 million horses. But these horses are eating our cellulose and costing us ethanol.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, I want to address this unwanted horse issue again. Everyone keeps talking about slaughter as the answer to unwanted horses. Has anyone ever thought about the responsibility of the breeders that are breeding these horses?

The one horse industry association that most advocates horse slaughter is the American Quarter Horse Association. That is because they are the most prolific breeders in the country. They are registering 144,000 foals a year, compared to 32,000 thoroughbreds, 12,000 standardbreds.

Has anyone ever asked the question, what is the responsibility of the breeder? And for them to have the audacity to come to the Congress and say you have to pay us if you pass this bill to take care of all these horses that we are breeding every year.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Madam Chairman, I just wanted to say, unless I don't know something here, I don't believe it is illegal to consume horse meat in the United States. If you want to shoot your horse and butcher it and eat it, you can do it. So people need to understand that, number one.

Number two, I am in receipt of a letter here from Ron DeHaven, who is the administrator of APHIS, and I would just like to make folks aware of this, that contrary to what has been said, they have enforcement going on in terms of the transport of horses.

There are 187 cases that have been opened since 2002. They have issued 69 warnings. Eighty-one cases remain open. Three of those are being investigated. Seventy-eight are on final review. Twenty-one cases included stipulations. There have been fines anywhere from several hundred dollars to $60,000 for violation of humane transport requirements. One case is currently being adjudicated by an administrative law judge requesting that the violator submit $85,000 in penalties.

APHIS says that they take very seriously their responsibility to ensure safe and humane transport of horses to slaughter. So they have been trying to enforce this law; and if there is problems going on, you ought to get a hold of APHIS and do what they should do.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Just to respond to the gentleman from Kentucky, who asks a very good question about the responsibility of horse owners and horse breeders, I guess my question to the gentleman is, why doesn't his bill contain any provisions to prevent the creation of unwanted horses? That is one of the principal objections that these respected national organizations have to this legislation, is that he does not address that in his bill.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. WALTER JONES.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Kentucky.

Madam Chairman, I decided I wanted to come to the floor today and not share my thoughts on this issue, but the thoughts of an American citizen. This lady lives in Carlinville, Illinois. She wrote me a letter on Saturday, and I was so impressed with the letter that I called this lady yesterday, Mrs. Betty Scheldt. I asked permission that I might read two paragraphs from her letter that I think speaks to this issue.

First: "Horses are an integral part of the American culture and I am extremely distressed over the fact that our horses, icons of our culture, are being slaughtered in foreign-owned slaughterhouses to please the palates of wealthy gourmets in Belgium and France. Horse slaughter and human consumption of horse meat is not and never will be acceptable in American culture. Americans overwhelmingly agree that horse slaughter should be banned. Several national voter surveys reveal that 77 percent to 90 percent of Americans feel that horses in the United States are not bred, raised or produced as food stock, and as such should be afforded the same protection from commercial slaughter as are all other non-food producing animals.

The last paragraph: "Horses are our companions and partners. They carry our children in competition at the county 4-H fair, make our country proud in the Olympic games, win Kentucky Derbys and Triple Crowns, carried our soldiers into battle and helped our forefathers to settle this country.

They deserve better than ending up served on the plates of fancy restaurants from Belgium and Paris."

Madam Chairman, I join my colleagues today who support H.R. 503, and I hope and pray that this Congress will pass this legislation because horses are part of the history of this Nation and the West would never have been settled if it had not been for the horses working with the American citizens to build America.

SEPTEMBER 1, 2006.

Subject: Please vote for H.R. 503 as originally introduced.

Hon. WALTER JONES, Jr.
U.S. Representative,
Greenville, NC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE JONES: I am writing to urge you to vote for H.R. 503, the American Horse Slaughter Prevention Act, as originally introduced by Representatives John Sweeney (R-NY), John Spratt (D-SC) and Ed Whitfield (R-KY). This bill would prohibit permanently the slaughter of horses for human consumption overseas, as well as the exportation of horseflesh and live horses intended for slaughter, making sure that no American horse is slaughtered abroad.

Over the past 20 years, due to ever increasing public awareness of the trade of horses for human consumption, the vast majority of plants that slaughter horses are no longer in operation. However, 3 foreign owned and operated horse slaughter plants still operate in our country today despite overwhelming objection by the majority of Americans. The meat produced in these plants is sent to certain European and Asian countries where it is considered a delicacy.

Horses are an integral part of the American culture and I am extremely distressed over the fact that our horses, icons of our culture, are being slaughtered in foreign-owned slaughterhouses to please the palates of wealthy gourmets in Belgium and France. Horse slaughter and human consumption of horse meat is not, and never will be, acceptable in American culture. Americans overwhelmingly agree that horse slaughter should be banned. Several national voter surveys reveal that 77%-94% of Americans feel that horses in the United States are not bred, raised or produced as food-stock, and as such should be afforded the same protection from commercial slaughter as are all other non-food producing animals.

The slaughter process is inhumane: Horses endure repeated blows to the head with stunning equipment that does not render the animals unconscious and many horses are still conscious during the remaining stages of the process. The transportation of these horses to the slaughter plants is also cruel and inhumane since they are hauled several thousand miles without water, food or rest in double-deck trailers, forcing them to travel in a bent position which can result in prolonged suffering and death.

Arguments from the AVMA and AAEP defending the "humanity" of horse slaughter are simply ludicrous. To suggest that a process in which horses endure repeated blows and are often slaughtered while conscious is somehow humane is not only absurd but also shows a total disregard towards the welfare of the animals these two organizations claim to protect.

I strongly disagree with the claims of the horse slaughter industry that it provides a way to dispose of old and ailing horses. This is simply not true: According to official data from the Department of Agriculture, 92.3% of the horses slaughtered are in good or excellent condition. Pictures of the slaughterhouses' pens showing healthy, young horses further corroborate this data.

It is also false that the horse slaughter industry is rooted on a presumed "unwanted horse" problem as the horse slaughter industry maintains, simply because these plants are importing thousands of Canadian horses each year in order to cover the increasing foreign demand of horse meat. If there are so many unwanted horses in the U.S. as they claim why do they have to import them from Canada? The truth is that the "unwanted horse" theory is a bald-faced lie.

Horse slaughter promotes theft and abuse. After California banned it in 1998 horse theft dropped by 34% while there were no reported increase on abuse as the foreign-owned industry maintains. In addition, there was no documented rise in Illinois following closure of the state's only horse slaughter plant in 2002.

Horses are our companions and partners, they carry our children in competition at the county 4-H fair, make our country proud in the Olympic games, win Kentucky Derbies and Triple Crowns, carried our soldiers into battle and helped our forefathers to settle this country. They deserve better than ending up served on the plates of fancy restaurants from Brussels and Paris.

Again, I urge you to vote for H.R. 503 as originally introduced by Reps. Sweeney, Spratt and Whitfield. I also please request a response from you stating your position on this issue. Thank you for your time and consideration of this letter.

Sincerely,

BETTY SCHELDT,
Carlinville, IL 62626.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the ranking member of the Committee on Resources, the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. RAHALL).

□ 1315

Mr. RAHALL. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman from Illinois for yielding me the time.

Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of the American Horse Slaughter Prevention Act. The House has gone on the record three times now in strong opposition to horse slaughter.

I hope my colleagues will maintain that record, maintain their consistency and give overwhelming support of this bill. It is a sad state of affairs when we have to fight to prevent the slaughter of more than 90,000 American horses a year.

Horses are an integral part of the tapestry of this country, an American icon. The horse is a symbol, a promise of possibility. Most of all, the horse is a companion, as we just heard in the letter of Mr. JONES's constituent in North Carolina. The horse is tied to the spirit of the American frontier, the homesteaders in covered horse-drawn wagons, a cowboy and the wild mustangs. All symbols of America.

The horse is a promise of possibility. How often Americans have sat in anticipation, watching the pageantry of thoroughbreds racing for the roses in the annual Kentucky Derby, while fully hoping for the triumph of some deserving underdog, perchance to see a rare Triple Crown winner, a truly American story.

But most importantly, the horse is a companion for many Americans in a treasured childhood memory. Little boys and girls for generations have ridden a carousel pony dreaming that some day they will have a real horse to ride, a companion.

Horses are a part of our identity and our heritage, and in America they are not for human consumption. But, unfortunately, that is the fate of many of these animals.

Today, three foreign-owned slaughter houses operate in the U.S., serving an overseas market in horse meat. Thousands more horses are shipped annually out of the U.S., destined for other foreign slaughter houses. Horse slaughter is an export-driven market. Americans do not want it, and we should not be facilitating it.

The horse slaughter industry and its allies are going to extreme lengths to prevent this ghastly, but lucrative, practice.

I hope that the House will once again pass this much-needed legislation and not see the Department of Agriculture circumvent the intent of Congress.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. CONAWAY), a member of the House Agriculture Committee.

Mr. CONAWAY. I want to thank Mr. PETERSON for allowing me to speak today.

To set the record straight, I love horses. I own a horse. In fact, my horse, Skychief Poco, and I won the 1997 SandHills Rodeo and quarter horse show team penning championship. I have got the wherewithal to let him live out his days in the pasture behind my house. But if you notice, I have used the possessive pronoun "my" each time I describe my horse.

At its core, this isn't about people who love horses. This isn't about the American icon. This isn't about the kid who rides a carousel and wants to own a pony. This is about personal property rights. I have personal property that is a horse. He is not a pet necessarily. He is never going to be eaten, but that is not the issue here.

The title of the bill on the other side makes constant reference to the Slaughter Prevention Act or Slaughter Protection Act. Nothing in the bill has anything to do with the actual slaughter of the horses, the euthanasia of the horse, not the methods. Because if we are talking about methods that need to do it better, let's do that.

But this is an attack on the personal property rights of all horse owners out there in America. At its core, this is also about what happens to the carcass of a dead horse, whether it is an affront to the icon of America to process that horse carcass into food or whether to chop that horse up and put it in a landfill, or chop that horse up and bury it in your back yard. However you treat the carcass of that horse, that is really what this is about.

This strips out the personal value, the personal property value of every horse owner that chooses to dispose of their horses in various ways and that we all should take great interest in how that is done. That is not what this bill does. This strips simply strips out my right, my personal property rights, to own that horse and dispose of him at the point when I want to.

I urge my colleagues to vote against this bill. It is an attack on personal property rights without due process and is unfortunate.

One other piece of this bill is that, which is added toward the end of it, is that if you have a horse that is sore, and you are at a competition or at an event, the Secretary of Agriculture is allowed to come take that horse from you. So I would urge my colleagues to vote against this bill. It is ill conceived and should not pass.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Madam Chairman, at this time I am pleased to yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. THORNBERRY).

Mr. THORNBERRY. Madam Chairman, I have been around and worked with horses all my life. I think I have as much appreciation and admiration for these creatures as anyone in this body; but I am very much opposed to this bill, first, because, contrary to, I am sure, the intentions of this authors, this bill will result in more abuse, more neglect and more inhumane treatment of horses.

I would just say that those who are so certain that horses are better off to die peacefully out in the field have never come across an old horse out in a field or a pasture who cannot get up and stand on its legs and continues to beat its head against the ground in an effort to get leverage to stand back up. Such people have never come across an older horse down in the pasture or field and begins to be eaten by predators and can do nothing about it because he can't get back on his feet.

The idea that it is more humane to let all horses die peacefully in a field, rather than dealt with in a regulated, inspected manner, is just wrong. So the bottom line is, this bill results in more neglect and more abuse, more mistreatment of horses, as owners cannot afford to take care of them, or they are left to, quote, die peacefully in a field.

Secondly, it is a tremendous blow to private property rights. If anyone thinks there is any reason for the Congress to stop with a regulation of how we govern horses and not go right ahead and say what owners ought to do to their pigs and their cattle or their dogs and their cats or their fish in the aquarium, then you haven't realized the consequences of this bill. It is a bad idea. It should be rejected.

Madam Chairman, I have been around and worked with horses all of my life, and I think that I have as much appreciation and respect for these magnificent creations of God as anyone in this body. And I am strongly opposed to this bill.

The motives behind this proposal are, I am sure, honorable. But the consequences of it in the real world will be so detrimental to what the authors say they hope to achieve, that I wonder if some are intentionally turning a blind eye to them.

If old horses cannot be dealt with humanely, many of them will be left to suffer. Those who are so certain that all horses are better off being allowed to die of old age have never seen a horse that has been unable to get up and continues to beat its head against the ground for leverage to try to stand. How is that better for the animal?

If older horses cannot be sold here, they will be sold in Mexico, without our standards and inspections. How is that better for the animal?

The bottom line is that more horses will starve, more horses will be abused or neglected, more horses will suffer unnecessarily if this bill were to become law.

In addition, the precedent this bill would set would be deeply disturbing to the basic American principle of private property rights. If the Federal Government can dictate what individuals may and may not do with personal property—to whom it may or may not be sold—the fundamental right to own property will suffer a terrible blow.

Of course, there is no reason for the Federal legislation to stop with horses. Federal law could regulate treatment of cattle and pigs, dogs and cats, or fish in the aquarium.

Criminal abuse of animals is a crime prosecuted by State and local authorities. A Federal law restricting the ability to sell private property based on some people's misguided idea of how that property should be treated is a dangerous thing, and this bill should be rejected.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. WHITFIELD. A parliamentary inquiry. Could you explain the remaining time that is available.

The Acting CHAIRMAN (Mrs. CAPITO). Yes. The gentleman from Kentucky has 2½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Virginia has 4 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Minnesota has 4 minutes remaining, and the gentlewoman from Illinois has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Who has the right to close?

The Acting CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the majority leader's designee, Mr. GOODLATTE, for the closing speech.

Mr. WHITFIELD. At this time I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Madam Chairman, at this time I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the Chairman of the Energy and Commerce subcommittee that dealt with this issue, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS).

Mr. STEARNS. I thank my distinguished colleague. As the gentleman from Virginia pointed out, we had a hearing on July 25, 2006, on this same issue. My colleagues, I think it was a balanced hearing. I think Mr. WHITFIELD and Mr. SWEENEY were both there. Mr. SWEENEY testified, also Chairman GOODLATTE testified. I think it brought out the pros and cons of this.

Whatever is proposed, however, must have a full understanding of the ultimate effects on the American horse population and their caregivers, because arguments presented on both sides seem to paint a pretty bleak, bleak picture for a large number of horses. But I am concerned that H.R. 503 does not solve the problem of unwanted horses.

Unfortunately, it provides no solution to the unfortunate reality of the life of these horses. Horses are a beloved part of our American heritage and deserve more humane approaches at the end of their lives. I think we all agree.

But this bill, H.R. 503, does not solve the problem. In fact, as many point out, it is a property rights issue; and we should be concerned ultimately where these horses will finally graze and who will pay for it.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. FARR).

Mr. FARR. Madam Chairman and Members, I rise in support of this bill. I have been listening to this debate all day. I don't think most people have read it. The bill deals with the slaughter for humane consumption. Now, I represent California, the most populous State in the Union, which has the most horses.

Guess what, this has been the law in California for many years, and all of these naysayers and predictors of bad happening just doesn't happen in California. Change this debate; change this debate.

What if we were up here talking about slaughtering cats and dogs for profit for human consumption? You wouldn't have people up here saying, well, the cats and dogs population will ruin everything; it will stop the world. We take care. The slaughterers don't buy sick horses, injured horses. They buy fresh horses, and they buy them for human consumption. This bill says you can't do that.

Now this is the day and age in America when we ought to be not allowing people to for profit buy horses merely to slaughter them for human consumption. That is wrong. This bill is right.

I urge a rejection of the amendment and a passage of the bill.

Mr. WHITFIELD. I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Florida (Mr. FOLEY).

Mr. FOLEY. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of the bill as well, H.R. 503, the Horse Slaughter Prevention Act. As a cosponsor of this bill, I believe this legislation is necessary to prevent the inhumane disposal of beautiful animals.

Horses hold a special place in this country. They were vital during our settlement, allowing us to travel great distances quickly and providing the necessary strength for farming. Today, we are able to appreciate their grace and speed in a variety of different venues from racing to recreational horses. They are all part of America.

The fact, though, is important to underscore. We don't allow horse meat to be eaten in this country. To allow the shipment of meat overseas is a bit hypocritical. While some may have expressed concern about the cost of disposing of sick horses, the fact is, according to the USDA, 90 percent of horses arriving in slaughter are in good condition.

There are many alternatives other than horse slaughtering, and among those options are horse welfare associations and equine sanctuaries. The bill responds to a strong American concern about the treatment of horses, in addition to prohibiting the trade and transfer of live horses intended for human consumption.

H.R. 503 lessens the USDA's workload by reducing the number of animals requiring inspection.

I urge my colleagues to vote in support of this bill.

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

As has been said very ably by the Dean of the House, Mr. DINGELL, this is a solution to a problem that doesn't exist. There have been a lot of assertions made out here that I think are a little bit suspect.

But one of the things that I want to point out, the previous speaker, Mr. FARR, my good friend from California, claims that they have done this, and there are no problems, well, there was a peer-reviewed article in the Journal of Agribusiness which highlights the lack of enforcement in California of their law, anecdotal evidence of increased horse abandonment, malnutrition, greater numbers of thin and crippled horses at auction in California. So this is a peer-reviewed article that refutes that assertion that was made by Mr. FARR.

This is a bill that on the merits is a bad bill. It was defeated in the Agriculture Committee by a vote of 37-3 because those of us on the Agriculture Committee represent rural America, represent the areas that have horses and use horses every day. The American Quarter Horse Association, the American Paint Horse Association, the biggest horse associations in the country oppose this bill.

There are a lot of good reasons; but the main reason, in my opinion, is that this is just absolutely the wrong way to do business in the House of Representatives. As has been pointed out by Mr. HOYER and by others, we have many more priorities that we ought to be working on in this Congress other than this bill. That is, you know, obvious.

But, you know, it really offends me to take the work of the committee, and this can be any issue, and overturn it and put a bill on the floor that is completely opposed to what the committee decided. I think it is absolutely the wrong way to run this institution and probably is the best reason for us not to pass this legislation.

I just have to say one other thing. I just was up in Hallock, Minnesota, the other day, and one of the main things that we ought to be doing in this Congress, that we haven't done, that we have been trying to do since last December, is get disaster legislation passed to help those people that got wiped out in 2005 and to help the people that have been wiped out here in 2006. That would be a much better use of the Agriculture Committee's time on the floor of the House of Representatives than dealing with this bill.

I urge my colleagues to vote "no" and send this bill where it belongs, that is, back to the committee.

Madam Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the chairman of the committee.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Madam Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

I want to point out there is a book called, "Alternatives to Auction and Slaughter: A Guide for Equine Owners (A Better Way)," that lists all kinds of places that welcome animals that are at the end of their lives and are unwanted.

Quite frankly, I find really disingenuous those on the other side who oppose this legislation who say those of us who support ending horse slaughter are actually going to be hurting horses more, that we somehow don't get it. I think that is very disrespectful to the well over 500 organizations that support this bill, including the American Horse Defense Fund, the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, the Animal Protection Institute, the Humane Society of the United States. Clearly, I could go on and on. These are organizations that are in business for the sole purpose of making sure that animals are treated humanely. They are not mistaken in supporting this legislation.

Those of us who truly care about the welfare of horses should support this legislation.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Madam Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

In closing, I would say this: The State of Texas tried to close these slaughter houses down for many years. Officials there did. A lawsuit was filed by the slaughter houses. Remember, they are foreign-owned, Belgian, Dutch and French. In that lawsuit, the slaughter houses owned by the foreign companies won that lawsuit because the Federal judge said that this is an interstate commerce issue; and there is Federal preemption involved; and if you are going to shut down slaughter houses in operation in interstate commerce, then the U.S. Congress has to act.

Now this bill came before the Energy and Commerce Committee because of the lack of action on the Ag Committee for many years. They never wanted it to see the light of day.

I would urge Members to vote for H.R. 503. As I have said before, the unwanted horse argument is not a real argument because horses being slaughtered are not unwanted. To think that we would have the responsibility of reimbursing owners who are overbreeding, who have the responsibility to take care of their own horses, they make it appear that the government has that responsibility. Owners have their own responsibility.

Private property rights, this bill protects private property rights. Because of the number of horses being stolen, we are protecting those private property rights.

This bill allows an owner, a rancher or farmer who owns a horse to do whatever he wants to with the horse. He can shoot it or slaughter it and eat it himself. We simply are shutting down an illicit, secretive business, and that is what this bill is all about.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Madam Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

There is no doubt in anyone's mind that this is an emotionally charged issue. But passion when left unchecked can have negative consequences. That is exactly the situation we find ourselves in today.

I have asked my colleagues to consider the consequences of this legislation, as did I and the 36 bipartisan members of the House Committee on Agriculture. And the gentleman wonders why they have never dealt with it; the committee voted 37-3 to report this bill unfavorably with the recommendation that it not pass the House. And I thank the gentleman from Minnesota for his leadership on his side of the aisle and for yielding me some of his time.

Also, more than 200 reputable national and State organizations, including the American Veterinary Medical Association, the American Association of Equine Practitioners, the horse doctors who polled their members, 80 percent were opposed to this legislation. Also opposed are the American Farm Bureau Federation, the American Quarter Horse Association, the National Association of Counties, and every State horse council in the country that has taken a stand on this issue, including New York, Florida, Texas, Ohio, Illinois, Virginia, North Carolina, have all opposed this legislation.

The consequences of this legislation are far-reaching and stand to jeopardize the welfare of America's horse population and will potentially place a significant financial burden on horse owners across the Nation.

Instead of solving problems, H.R. 503 creates problems. It provides no directive as to what will happen to the 90,000 unwanted horses annually processed in slaughter facilities, and it increases the probability of unwanted horses becoming victims of neglect, starvation and abandonment. That is not just my opinion; that is the opinion of the American Veterinary Medical Association and the American Association of Equine Practitioners.

H.R. 503 provides no funding for alternatives and no instructions for the regulation of rescue or shelter facilities to ensure the welfare of these unwanted and unusable horses. The influx of unwanted horses would flood the already inadequate, overburdened, unregulated rescue-and-adoption facilities. There are roughly 6,000 slots in America's horse shelters and rescue facilities, 6,000. The majority of these shelters are operated by individuals who are able to take one, maybe two, horses at a time. These shelters and rescue facilities cannot possibly accommodate many, many times, 20, 30 times that number of horses that would be created by this bill.

It limits horse owners' availability of choice of how to dispose of their animals and infringes on owners' private property rights.

Horse owners have a variety of options when seeking to get rid of an unusable or unwanted horse, including rescue or retirement facilities, private sale, donation, euthanasia and processing facilities. Depending on the individual needs of the owner and the horse, some options may be more feasible than others. By eliminating this option, we are dictating what horse owners can and cannot do with their own private property. We must respect the right of responsible owners to choose the option best suited for their unique circumstances.

It mandates costs on private citizens. If the bill were enacted as written and the processing of horses for human consumption was no longer a legal option for owners to dispose of unwanted horses, estimates place the additional number of unwanted horses at 272,000 within the first 6 years.

Today we take care of 20,000 wild horses in corrals out west that cost us $50 million a year. Imagine having 10, 15, 20 times as many horses to take care of who are in that same situation. The cost to private horse owners of maintaining these horses has been conservatively estimated to be between $3 and $4 billion. By eliminating the option of horse processing facilities, thereby limiting the option of owners to dispose of their property, Congress would be forcing a $3 to $4 billion burden on private citizens and maybe perhaps to State and local governments, one of the reasons why the National Association of Counties is concerned about protecting private property rights.

The bottom line, H.R. 503 does not solve problems; it creates problems. I urge my colleagues to vote "no."

Mrs. CUBIN. Madam Chairman, I would like to make this very clear: if you believe in the humane treatment of animals, this bill takes us a step backwards. If you believe in preserving a balanced and natural ecosystem, this bill moves us in the wrong direction. If you believe in personal property rights, this bill represents an outright assault on that uniquely American ideal.

There are many who will come before the House today and will say that Americans are thoughtlessly slaughtering young, strong horses—symbols of the American West—and that there can be no good reason for this slaughter. I am here today to tell you that this is not the case.

In my home State of Wyoming, we proudly display a bucking bronco as a symbol of our Western heritage. In fact, one of the first memories of my life is sitting on the back of a horse. I love horses as much as anyone here, and just like the proponents of this bill, I do not want to see these animals suffer. But I rise today to say that if enacted, this legislation would create more suffering for both horse and human.

By opposing this bill, we are not striking out at symbols of the American West. In fact, we are making a responsible herd management decision that protects horses, humans, and the ecosystem. Many of these horses are old, ill, starving due to overpopulation, or they have otherwise ceased in their proper function.

But you don't need to take my word for it. As many have already stated, over 200 reputable horse organizations, animal health organizations, and agricultural organizations have voiced their strong opposition to this bill.

Most importantly, I have heard loud and clearly from folks who know and love horses more than anyone in this chamber—Wyoming's ranchers. These hard working ranching families breed their own horses, they help deliver them at birth, they train them, they feed and raise them, and they care for them when they are sick. Every day of their lives they are interacting with the horses that they love. Wyoming's ranchers depend on horses for their livelihood. They know all there is to know about caring for a horse, because in the harsh seasons on the high plains and in the Rocky Mountains, they have to know in order to survive.

These folks know their animals like they know themselves. And yet, today, we are considering a bill that will tie their hands, preventing them from making a humane choice for their horses. Today we are considering a bill that will sentence innumerable horses to a life of starvation and suffering. Today, we are considering passing a bill that will have untold disastrous effects on the ecosystem.

I sincerely admire the motivation of those in favor of this bill today. If only their love for these regal creatures was enough to care for the needs of the 90,000 unwanted horses this bill will create each year, then there would be no need for this debate. If only their zeal to defend these animals could somehow control the overpopulated wild horse herds roaming the plains of Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Utah and Colorado, then we would have no need for humane population control. But the honest truth, Madam Chairman, is that this bill offers no solutions. We cannot absorb 90,000 horses a year. If we pass this bill, we will be putting rhetoric above the realities of ranch life; and we will be elevating a mistaken idea about Western symbols above the livelihood of Wyoming's ranchers. I cannot support such a measure.

I urge my colleagues to put their emotions aside, look past the surface, and into the real policy problems this bill will create. Vote "no" on H.R. 503.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Madam Chairman, I strongly oppose the slaughter of horses for human consumption.

For this reason I am a cosponsor of H.R. 503. This bill prohibits the shipping, transporting, moving, delivering, receiving, possessing, purchasing, selling, or donation of horses and other equines to be slaughtered for human consumption.

An overwhelming majority of my constituents from the Dallas, Texas, area are opposed to horse slaughter, and my vote reflects their will.

My office phone has been ringing off the hook with constituents opposed to horse slaughter. I have received more than 500 letters in the past few days. All are opposed to horse slaughter.

Horses are a symbol of American freedoms. They are a part of our history, our culture, and they deserve better.

Three slaughterhouses remain in the United States, and unfortunately two of them are in Texas. These meat factories kill about 100,000 American horses per year, sending the meat to countries overseas for fine dining.

Madam Chairman, I vigorously oppose this gruesome practice. And I don't agree with the argument that shutting down these slaughterhouses will hurt the local economies or be inhumane for horses.

In my opinion, this bill protects American horses from being raised—and slaughtered—for human consumption.

I support H.R. 503 and urge my colleagues to support it as well.

Mr. CONYERS. Madam Chairman, this week the census bureau released a report showing that for the first time since 1998, the number of uninsured children increased. Of the 8.3 million children without health insurance, minority children constitute a disproportionate share. The latest census figures also show that a record 46.6 Americans lack health insurance. With crucial issues facing the country such as the health care crisis, a broken immigration system, shortfalls in homeland security, and a stagnant minimum wage, I am baffled that the Republican leadership would spend precious time on horse slaughter legislation.

I do not want to minimize the importance of banning inhumane slaughter of horses for purposes of human consumption overseas. In fact, I am a cosponsor of H.R. 503, the American Horse Slaughter Prevention Act and support clean passage of that legislation. However, it is distressing that with only approximately 15 legislative days before the election, Republicans are ignoring the priorities of the American people.

I am troubled that the 109th Congress will be remembered in history as a "do-nothing" Congress. According to the Library of Congress, the House of Representatives in 2006 is on track to be in session for the fewest number of days since 1948. When the Congress has been in session, Republicans have pushed divisive and unproductive legislation such as constitutional amendments banning gay marriage and flag burning.

The time is long overdue to address the people's business. Several months ago, both the House and Senate passed immigration and border security bills. Instead of working out an agreement on illegal immigration, Republicans scheduled new field hearings in swing districts. With more talk and less action, the Republican led Congress and White House have failed to gain control over the border. They have failed to conduct workplace enforcement of immigration laws and have thus failed to protect American workers from declining low wages.

Republican inaction on homeland security is even more disconcerting. The bipartisan 9/11 Commission has given this Administration and the rubberstamp Republican congressional leaders poor grades for failing to implement the Commission's recommendations. We must take immediate steps to secure our borders, strengthen security around sensitive infrastructure, and give our first responders the necessary resources to protect the country.

Republican leadership has failed to improve the American people's economic security. As CEO compensation has soared, real family income is down since 2001. Since 1997, Republicans have repeatedly rejected a minimum wage increase for 6.6 million of the hardest working Americans. We must provide a livable wage so families can afford to make ends meet.

With the American people paying our salaries, we in the Congress have a duty to solve their problems. It is about time the Republican-led Congress earned its paycheck.

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Madam Chairman, I cannot support this bill in its present form.

I understand and appreciate the views of its proponents, many of them in Colorado, who are distressed about the fact that three slaughterhouses in this country are in the business of preparing horse flesh for human consumption—primarily in other countries.

The bill's supporters do not think this is appropriate, and that Congress should exercise its authority over interstate commerce in order to put an end to this business. That is what this bill is intended to do.

I can understand the discomfort many Americans have about consumption of horse flesh, although of course it has been and remains an accepted practice in some places.

But emotional concerns cannot be the only guiding force in legislation regarding the way livestock is managed, and prohibiting slaughter of horses for human consumption—the main market for horse flesh at this time—would have unintended consequences this legislation fails to address.

The hearings held by the Agriculture Committee made it clear that there the current horse sanctuaries do not have the capacity to care for the additional unwanted horses—which otherwise would be handled by slaughterhouses that would result from the bill's enactment. That was one reason the committee, on a bipartisan basis reported the legislation unfavorably.

I voted for an amendment that would have delayed implementation of the bill until the Agriculture Department determined that adequate sanctuaries were ready. Unfortunately, that amendment was not adopted. Similarly, state and local governments—including the Colorado Department of Agriculture and the Commissioners of Adams County—are concerned that shutting off the slaughterhouse outlet will lead to an increased number of unwanted horses being abandoned and left to be dealt with by local authorities. I am attaching letters from the Colorado Commissioner on Agriculture and Adams County Commissioners who oppose this legislation. I voted for an amendment to provide federal reimbursement to local governments faced with such a problem. However, that amendment also was rejected.

Because of these problems, I cannot vote for the bill as it stands. Finally, I must note that with the nation at war in Iraq and Afghanistan, everyday Americans struggling with a mediocre economy and high energy costs, there are more pressing issues Congress needs to address than this one.

Mr. KUCINICH. Madam Chairman, I rise today in honor of our country's beloved horses. It is my hope that Congress will pass H.R. 503 unamended, the American Horse Slaughter Prevention Act. This bill will end horse slaughter for human consumption in the United States and the cruel practices associated with this inhumane industry.

When horses are sold to slaughter they are often transported in overcrowded trucks, deprived of food and water, exposed to the elements and made to stand in their own waste. The slaughter bound horse can be sick or injured but forced to suffer a lack of appropriate veterinary care. The stress that horses are subjected to, both during transportation and at the slaughterhouse, triggers horses' natural flight response. At the slaughterhouse a horse can be ineffectively stunned before dismemberment, meaning that a horse may remain conscious while being bound and then elevated by one leg prior to having its throat slit.

H.R. 503 encourages responsible horse ownership. For horse owners, who are no longer able or willing to care for a horse, H.R. 503 finds appropriate alternatives to slaughter that may range from finding a new home for the horse to humane euthanasia preformed by a licensed veterinarian.

Documentation from the three remaining equine slaughterhouses in the United States show that America's wild horses have been among their victims. Additional victims include stolen, as well as healthy horses. This legislation will stop the sale of wild, stolen or healthy horses to slaughter houses for human consumption at a profit.

The word humane is defined as being marked by compassion, sympathy and consideration for animals. The question we must ask ourselves is if subjecting horses to this kind of circumstance is indeed humane? Is horse slaughter marked by compassion, sympathy and consideration for the animal? The only realistic conclusion is no.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 503 and to oppose all amendments designed to weaken this important bill.

Mr. STARK. Madam Chairman, I am proud to have joined 202 of my colleagues in co-sponsoring the American Horse Slaughter Prevention Act and I rise today in support of its passage. It is time to put a stop to a business that has been allowed to go on for far too long.

Many Americans have made their stance on this issue clear: a recent poll shows that almost 7 percent of Americans are in favor of banning horse slaughter. The slaughtering process is one that is shockingly inhumane—when transported to slaughtering houses, horses are crammed into trucks and may go unfed for as many as 28 hours. Animals that survive this ordeal often die by the captive bolt, an instrument meant to cause immediate trauma to the brain but is often used improperly, resulting in slow and painful deaths.

Those who oppose this law believe H.R. 503 will result in an overpopulation of horses. Yet the Department of Agriculture has found that 5,000 horses have been imported to slaughter plants since August 2004. As the Humane Society of the United States rightly observes, there would be no reason to import horses if we have an overpopulation.

Opponents of this bill have also warned that horses who would otherwise be slaughtered would not receive adequate care once they are transferred to alternate homes or rescue facilities. But horse rescue groups are required to abide by state and local animal welfare laws. California banned horse slaughter in 1998 and there has been no documented rise in cruelty and neglect cases. Similarly, there was no increase in brutality toward horses following the closing of Illinois' only slaughter plant in 2002.

There is no reason why the inhumane treatment of these animals should continue, particularly when our horses are being slaughtered solely for the purpose of pleasing foreign diners. I urge all my colleagues to join me in support of this bill.

Mr. KIRK. Madam Chairman, I rise today in strong support in H.R. 503, which would prohibit the slaughtering of horses for human consumption. Last year more than 90,000 American horses were slaughtered in this country by three foreign-owned plants. Horse meat is not eaten in the United States, but it has been exported to overseas markets, such as France, Belgium, Japan and Italy. Animals deserve to be treated humanely, and I do not support this industry.

This Congress made its opposition to horse slaughter clear in the Agriculture Appropriations Bill for fiscal year 2006. I supported an amendment introduced by Representative SWEENEY and Representative WHITFIELD that would have essentially tied the hands of the horse slaughter industry. Unfortunately the language approved by both the House and Senate, which had the clear intention of ending this industry, was altered in conference and allowed the slaughtering of horses to continue.

H.R. 503 would permanently shut down this inhumane practice. This legislation has wide bipartisan support in the House as well as extensive backing from the animal welfare community. I want to specifically thank Representative SWEENEY and Representative WHITFIELD for their hard work and leadership on this important issue.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 503, the American Horse Slaughter Prevention Act.

Mr. Chairman, horses have served humans throughout history, carrying us on their backs to safety, tilling our fields, drawing wagons and carriages across the great plains and grand prairies, enriching our lives as friends and companions. But they have never served the people of the United States as a source of food. Yet today, American horses are being killed so their meat can satisfy the palates of overseas diners in Europe and Asia. Show horses, racehorses, wild horses, and family horses can all be destined for the slaughterhouse and exported as foodstuff to foreign lands.

This trade in horsemeat is hidden from most Americans and the industry wants to keep it that way. To quote the operations manager of a horse slaughterhouse located in Canada:

Talking about horses is kind of a scary thing, especially in the West, where people think it's more of a pet than protein. When anybody starts writing about horses, everybody gets up in arms. Every time we say anything about horse in the paper, there's always an uproar, so I don't want to talk about it.

Madam Chairman, it has been reported that most of the horses that end up being slaughtered are brought in by jobbers who serve as middlemen for the slaughterhouses. These jobbers readily purchase as many horses as possible at livestock auctions around the country and haul them to the plants to be butchered. Many horses are sold at auction by irresponsible owners seeking an easy means to dispose of animals they no longer want. Others, however, are consigned by caring owners who simply have no idea of the fate awaiting the animals.

Additionally, hundreds—perhaps thousands—of horses are stolen each year. Horse thieves make fast money by unloading their stolen bounty to jobbers or slaughterhouses, which typically kill and process the animals within 24 hours, making it virtually impossible to trace and recover the stolen animals in time.

Currently, there are foreign-owned slaughterhouses operating in the United States that slaughter horses for human consumption. They are Beltex Corporation in Ft. Worth, Texas; Dallas Crown in Kaufman, Texas and Cavel International in DeKalb, Illinois. According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, 65,976 horses were slaughtered in 2004, up from 50,564 the previous year. In addition, thousands more horses are transported under deplorable conditions across our borders to Canada and Mexico to face a similar fate.

Conditions of transport can be brutal. It is not unusual for horses to be hauled for more than 24 hours without rest, water or food in trailers that provide little protection from the elements. Many horses—sick, lame, pregnant or blind—are in distress even before being loaded.

Once at the slaughterhouse, the suffering gets worse. Horses are left for long periods in tightly packed trailers, subjected to further extremes of heat and cold. In hot weather, thirst is acute. Downed animals are unable to rise. All the horses are moved off forcibly when it's time to unload and hurried through the facility into the kill box. In the face of these deplorable conditions, including overcrowding, deafening noise, and the smell of blood, the horses typically become desperate, exhibiting fear typical of "flight" behavior—pacing in prance-like movements with their ears pinned back against their heads and eyes wide open.

Despite the Federal mandate that horses be rendered unconscious before being put to death, many horses are killed alive by repeated blows to the head with captive bolt pistols. While writhing in pain, the coupe de grace is administered by a slit of the throat. The dead animal is then processed for shipment overseas and destined for a foreign dining table.

Madam Chairman, I support this legislation because I do not wish to sanction the abuse of another noble creature of the American West. The magnificent buffaloes that at one time roamed the Great Plains were killed by too many settlers and pioneers for sport when they should have been used the way they were by Native Americans—for food and clothing and fuel. How ironic it is that horses—magnificent, powerful, graceful, and athletic—are being used for food instead of sport and husbandry.

Madam Chairman, I support H.R. 503 because it bans the shipping, transporting, moving, delivering, receiving, possessing, purchasing, selling, or donation of horses and other equines to be slaughtered for human consumption. This is not a fitting end to the animal that has played such an important role in defining American character and culture. I urge my colleagues to join me in protecting an enduring symbol of the West and the favorite animal of Americans everywhere. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 503.

Mr. HENSARLING. Madam Chairman, sometimes in the House of Representatives, we debate and vote on emotional issues. H.R. 503 is certainly one of those issues, and I understand that those who support it hold strong opinions. Having grown up working on a farm and both owning and riding a horse, I do not relish the idea of them being processed for meat. It is something I personally do not care to do.

But this bill is not about whether we are a Nation of horse lovers. It is a bill about whether we are a Nation of freedom lovers. We are presented with a simple question of freedom, namely: will we grant the Federal Government the power to tell livestock owners and family farmers what they can do with their livestock?

Freedom in America often means having to tolerate actions to which we are personally opposed. To protect our freedoms we must first respect our neighbor's freedoms. For instance, I personally abhor smoking and wish every tobacco company in the country would find something else to do or cease to exist. But I will not support legislation outlawing the production and marketing of tobacco products, and I will not support legislation outlawing the use of tobacco products as long as such use does not infringe on my rights or those of my fellow citizens. I would vigorously fight efforts on this floor to regulate them out of business or prohibit them from operating in the United States. I believe there is an extremely high standard that must be met before we restrict the historic freedoms of our fellow citizens. This bill does not even come close to meeting that test.

Those in favor of this bill make a number of arguments as to why we must ban the processing of horses. Though on the surface some of these arguments may be compelling, noticeably absent from any of them is a scientific, health, or safety argument. In fact, the primary reason that proponents of H.R. 503 offer is that we should not process horses simply because, well, they are horses. Clearly, this argument is anything but scientific, and I suspect the cattle in America may be upset with the prejudice.

Some supporters of this bill argue that we must give special protection to the horse because of its prominent place in the heritage of the American West. Well, do not cattle have an even greater place in the heritage of the American West? Yet we use that animal to protect our feet with shoes and nourish us with beef. How is the horse different? Also, I note that those who we celebrate in the history of the West were known as cowboys, not horseboys. Again, how is the horse different? I further note the lobster has a prominent place in the heritage and history of Maine, but I doubt that people of that state would argue that we should stop harvesting it commercially because of its legacy.

Proponents of H.R. 503 will try to convince us that owners who sell their horses in auctions unknowingly sell them to representatives of the processing facilities, with no knowledge that the horse would be processed. Common sense tells me that if these sellers don't want their horses sold for processing, they would not sell them at high bidder auctions. But, if this is indeed a serious problem, Congress could simply pass legislation requiring that horse auctions make all sellers aware that their animals could potentially be bought for processing. Simple disclosure laws will render that argument moot.

Some will claim that horse processing needs to be banned because the horses suffer during transport and the slaughter process and others will claim that horse processing encourages horse thievery. The former is not based in fact. With respect to the latter, just because cattle rustling has been around since the birth of the Republic does not mean we should outlaw the processing of cattle. The same is true of horses. Current federal laws require that horses must be transported and processed humanely, just like cattle. Both of these arguments raise the issue of enforcement. Thus, the solution is to enforce current federal law, not pass a new, draconian one.

While proponents of H.R. 503 have many arguments about why this process needs to be banned, they remain silent about the unintended consequences of this bill. I believe chief among those unintended consequences is that horse owners will not have a humane option to dispose of a horse that is either unwanted or unable to be cared for. In 2005, around 90,000 horses were processed in the U.S. If there was another viable option for these horses, clearly they would not have been sent to the processing facility. This is particularly true for a number of struggling family farmers. If this bill were to become law, it would mean that when a working horse is at the end of its useful life, it will turn into a liability instead of an asset for the family farmer. No one should come to this floor bemoaning the plight of the family farmer and vote for this bill.

Another unintended consequence is the precedent that we set by prohibiting the processing of livestock for any compelling reason other than we don't think it should be processed. This is a slippery slope issue. As a Congressman who represents a district where—in some counties—the cattle overwhelmingly outnumber the people and more importantly provide a living for many of my constituents, I am particularly fearful that one day a similar movement will make the argument that cattle are no longer appropriate for processing for human consumption. While it may seem far fetched, with passage of H.R. 503, we will have set a precedent that it is permissible for Congress to ban the processing of livestock for non-scientific and non-health reasons, providing those who wish to ban the processing of cattle a legal leg to stand on with either Congress or the Courts.

However, my opposition to H.R. 503 does not mean that I am not mindful of the concerns of those who live near a horse processing plant. In fact, I am extremely mindful of these people because some of them are my constituents, as I have the privilege and honor of representing the people of the City of Kaufman in Congress, which is home to one of the three horse processing plants. I believe that most of my constituents in Kaufman who are in favor of H.R. 503 are in favor, not so much because they believe Congress should criminalize horse processing, but because it means a plant in their backyard that they do not like will be closed. Many believe it is a public nuisance and a strain on the city's infrastructure. I certainly understand those reasons for supporting H.R. 503 more than those offered by Members who do not have one of these plants in their district. However, those reasons fall under the purview of local government, not the federal government.

That is why I am respectful of the decision made by the City of Kaufman and its zoning commission to order the plant closed due to it being a public health hazard. However, I do not believe that Congress should be exercising its authority and infringing upon freedom by passing H.R. 503, simply because of the City of Kaufman's bad experience with the horse processing plant. There might be a community out there that would welcome a horse processing plant and the jobs it could bring, even with the potential negative aspects associated with such a facility. Passing H.R. 503 would take the decision as to whether or not to allow a horse processing facility away from local, elected officials, and keep a local community from welcoming a plant and its jobs.

There is no doubt that a horse is a wonderful animal. For those who do not wish to process a horse, no one is forcing them to do so. In the end, I believe that it is more important to protect the freedom of livestock owners to humanely decide the fate of their livestock than it is to surrender to emotion and ban the processing of horses. This is America. We should love horses but we should love freedom even more.

The Acting CHAIRMAN. All time for general debate has expired.

Each amendment may be offered only in the order printed in the report, by a Member designated in the report, shall be considered read, shall be debatable for the time specified in the report, equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for division of the question.

The Chair has been notified that amendments No. 1 and 2 will not be offered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3 OFFERED BY MR. GOODLATTE

The Acting CHAIRMAN. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 3 printed in House Report 109-642.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Acting CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 3 offered by Mr. GOODLATTE:

In the paragraph (8) of section 5 of the Horse Protection Act, which is being added by subsection (c)(2) of section 1 of the bill, strike “consumption.” and insert the following: “consumption, except that this prohibition shall not take effect until 30 days after the date on which the Secretary of Agriculture certifies to Congress that sufficient sanctuaries exist in the United States to care for any horses that may be unwanted as a result of this prohibition.”.

The Acting CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 981, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) and the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. WHITFIELD) each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

We have discussed many problems that the Sweeney-Whitfield bill will create with not a single solution in sight. While it is not possible to address all of those problems, we must address the fate of the horses affected by this bill.

I am joined by my ranking member, Mr. PETERSON, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. PUTNAM), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. CONAWAY), the gentleman from South Dakota (Ms. HERSETH), and the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Ms. FOXX) in offering an amendment to address this concern.

The amendment would very simply say that until the Secretary of Agriculture can certify that sufficient sanctuary space is available to accommodate the unwanted horses created by this bill, the drastic step of a Federal mandate will be delayed.

Everyone debating this issue today is dedicated to the best care possible for horses. We profoundly disagree on how to achieve that laudable goal. The co-sponsors of this amendment believe it would be a tragedy to take the dramatic step of closing off a humane method of disposal of animals that the owners can no longer care for only to see them abandoned or killed wholesale at greater cost to their owners.

If we are to take this drastic step, we should at least ensure that the horses for whom it is being done continue to live out their lives in humane circumstances.

Nothing in this amendment would prevent the operation of H.R. 503 as long as there was assurance that a humane living alternative to the current system exists. It is impossible for me to believe that the supporters of H.R. 503 intend to replace the death of horses that they decry with abandonment or wholesale death at the hands of their owners.

The proponents of this bill have assured us there will be no flood of unwanted horses with no place to go as a result of this bill. If this is true, and reputable organizations like the American Veterinary Medical Association and the American Association of Equine Practitioners strongly dispute that, but if it is true, our amendment will be an easy procedural step to meet.

If, however, the Association of Equine Practitioners and major horse-owning groups who oppose H.R. 503 are correct that hundreds of thousands of unwanted horses with no place to go would be created in just a few years, this amendment can prevent a catastrophe for horses in this country.

I ask my colleagues to join us in passing this amendment that provides a solution for at least one of the problems created by this bill.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY) to respond.

Mr. SWEENEY. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong opposition. Let's be very clear, all of these amendments have one intended purpose, and that is to destroy the bill. So if you are in favor of the ban of horse slaughter for human consumption, you need to vote against all of the amendments.

This number, this establishment of an arbitrary number, is false. It will not be obtained because there are so many other options for horse owners other than horse sanctuary, but let's understand the facts.

The current horse population is estimated at 9 million. As has been said, each year, roughly 900,000 horses die. About 90,000, or 1 percent, are actually slaughtered. Furthermore, in 1989, the U.S. slaughtered over 342 horses. In 2005, they slaughtered 90,000. Since then, the United States slaughtered approximately 200,000 fewer horses. So 90,000 horses can be easily absorbed into the population. And not all of these horses will need to be absorbed into rescue and sanctuary populations. Horses will die or become sick or dangerous to their owners. These horses will need to be replaced. These horses will become pets or workhorses or show horses.

Both the Bureau of Land Management and hundreds of private organizations and agencies provide adoption programs for people to replace these horses by adopting new ones. Additionally, thousands of these horses are humanely euthanized each year.

Madam Chairman, this amendment, this proposal, is simply meant to ensure that this bill is never enacted. We should vote it down, and we should vote it down very strongly.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. PETERSON).

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Madam Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I rise in support of this amendment. This bill displaces 90,000 horses a year, 90,000. In spite of what my good friend Mr. SWEENEY says, that is a lot of horses. Currently the horse facilities are already full. They can only take approximately 6,000 horses a year.

What do we do, Mr. SWEENEY, with those other 84,000 horses? This bill should not pass until the Secretary of Agriculture can certify to this Congress that there is enough space in these rescue facilities to accommodate all of these unwanted horses that have no place to go, no funds to care for them and no humane end-of-life option left for them.

So I support this amendment, and I encourage my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Talking about an amendment to create a problem that is not there, this is a perfect example of that. We have all of these organizations around the country who are voluntarily spending their time and money to provide a safe haven for horses, and this amendment basically is a killer amendment to defeat H.R. 503.

I would point out once again that each year the number of horses that have been slaughtered has been going down. We have gone from 300,000 down to 90,000. There is no evidence that society has had any problem in absorbing these horses. And I would also remind the gentleman many of these horses are stolen; so they are not unwanted horses. There is a need for them. So we know for a fact that the only purpose of any of these amendments is to make this bill ineffective, to kill this bill.

I am delighted that we are on the floor and have an opportunity to debate this, and I would urge every Member to oppose this amendment.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Madam Chairman, may I ask how much time is remaining on each side and who has the right to close.

The Acting CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has 1½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Kentucky has 2½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Kentucky has the right to close.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Madam Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

I will respond to the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from New York, who called this a poison pill.

This is no such thing whatsoever. They say there is no problem with unwanted horses. Then there will be no problem getting a certification that there is sufficient horse sanctuary facilities around the country to take care of them. I strongly dispute that.

I think the gentleman from New York and I, while we may disagree on numbers, can agree that 90,000 is 10 percent of 900,000, not 1 percent. But whatever that is, that is a substantial number of unwanted horses.

And, remember, the average life expectancy of a horse is 25 years. Many of these horses have many years of life expectancy left in them; so they are going to accumulate over a period of years. In fact, the American Veterinary Medical Association says over 6 years they will grow to 272,000 in number. That is far, far more than the capacity of all the horse sanctuaries around the country that exist today. And there is no sign of their growing rapidly to meet this need because they cannot even meet the current need to take care of the unwanted horses that exist in this country right now as we speak.

So I would urge my colleagues to support this very good amendment that will cure a very serious flaw in this legislation, and then we will have the opportunity to see who is correct about how many unwanted horses we are going to have in this country. Are the experts, the American Veterinary Medical Association, the horse doctors, the Horse Owners Associations around the country, who strongly support this amendment, correct, or are they correct?

I think this is a fair amendment, and I would urge my colleagues to adopt it.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Madam Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

I must say I am shocked that the gentleman would want to get the government involved in this kind of an issue. These are private property rights people who are out there voluntarily providing their property, their money to take care of these unwanted horses.

And one of the reasons we opposed this amendment, you talk about sufficient horse sanctuaries. We know who would be defining "sufficient." The Department of Agriculture, who must work with your committee to get anything that they want on the farm bill or anything else; so you would be dictating what is sufficient, and we know that there would never be enough sanctuaries sufficient to meet your demands.

So I would say once again we do not have to speculate about unwanted horses in the future. We know for a fact that unwanted horses is not a problem, as we have gone from 300,000 to 90,000 a year. No one has complained about it. No study has shown it. UC Davis in their study in California indicated that there have not been any additional increases of unwanted horses.

So I would urge every Member to oppose this amendment, which is designed to defeat this bill.

Madam Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The Acting CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE).

The question was taken; and the Acting Chairman announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Madam Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The Acting CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia will be postponed.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Madam Chairman, the additional amendments that have been made in order under my name or my designee we do not intend to bring up.

AMENDMENT NO. 4 OFFERED BY MR. KING OF IOWA

The Acting CHAIRMAN. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 4 printed in House Report 109-642.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Madam Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Acting CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 4 offered by Mr. KING of Iowa

In the paragraph (8) of section 5 of the Horse Protection Act, which is being added by subsection (c)(2) of section 1 of the bill, strike "consumption." and insert the following: "consumption, unless the horse or other equine will be slaughtered for human consumption by Native Americans or persons of cultures who have traditionally consumed the meat of horses or other equines, as determined by the Secretary."

The Acting CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 981, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. KING) and the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. WHITFIELD) each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Madam Chairman, I am offering this amendment today that would allow a cultural exemption for Native Americans and people from cultures that consume equine meat.

Specifically, my amendment would permit equine to be shipped, transported, moved, delivered, received, possessed, purchased, sold, all of the list that is in the bill, Madam Chairman, by Native Americans or people from cultures who eat equine meat.

Horses have played, and continue to play, an important role in Native American culture. It is particularly true for the tribes of the Great Northern Plains, including the Great Sioux Nation. Many tribal members raise and sell horses. In addition, the Apache people and the Pueblo people from the Southwest have consumed horse meat. They were very skilled on horseback, but they valued and cherished the horse as food as well.

The Native American cultures are not the only people to eat or raise horses for meat. The people from the cultures of Japan, Belgium, France, Austria, Quebec, Chile, Germany, Iceland, Kazakhstan, including also the Netherlands, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, and Italy, all eat horse meat today and all have recipes today.

People in support of this bill have a romantic view of the horse because it helped build America, and in their mind it is not in our culture to eat the horse for that reason. But they fail to understand that the oxen, bovine, was also a great assistance to us and maybe even a greater assistance in building America; but we do not have an aversion to beef, Madam Chairman.

So for these reasons, I would ask support for this cultural exemption amendment.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY) in opposition.

Mr. SWEENEY. Madam Chairman, there are two giant loopholes created here, and I will submit for the RECORD statements by a number of Indian tribes, the Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association, the Inter-Tribal Council of Nevada, and the National Congress of American Indians, in opposition to this amendment.

INTER-TRIBAL COUNCIL OF NEVADA, INC.
Reno, NV, September 6, 2006.

RESOLUTION No. 05-ITCN-02

Whereas, the Inter-Tribal Council of Nevada, Inc., is organized and operates in accordance with its Constitution and By-Laws, amended in November 1974; and

Whereas, the purposes of Inter-Tribal Council of Nevada, Inc. (ITCN), are stated in its Constitution, Preamble; and

Whereas, the Inter-Tribal Council of Nevada has a continuing interest in the health, education and well-being of their Indian people; and

Resolved, That the Inter-Tribal Council of Nevada opposes the slaughter of wild horses and supports adoption of wild horses with the federal government waiving the adoption fee and providing funds for transportation in order to prevent their slaughter; and Be it further

Resolved, That the Inter-Tribal Council of Nevada supports and encourages the reintroduction and reinstitution of protective legislation in the 109th United States Congress to prevent wild horses and burros from being slaughtered and utilized for food consumption and maintain a viable number of animals on the public lands; Now be it finally

Resolved, That the Inter-Tribal Council of Nevada call upon other Tribes and Indian Nations to join with us in all efforts to find solutions for the preservation of wild horses.

Madam Chairman, the two loopholes are simply this: first, it would encourage the slaughter facilities to simply relocate to reservations and simply export the meat from there. This would allow the practice of slaughter to continue.

Secondly, the amendment gives "persons of cultures who have traditionally consumed the meat of horses" an exemption. It is not defined in the bill, Madam Chairman. These persons of cultures are not specified. The amendment offered, I understand, has given us some definition, saying essentially this bill would say the French, the Belgians, whomever else may continue this practice simply because it is part of their culture. It is not defined. And, therefore, I think it is inappropriate to have it in the bill. It is a poison pill for this bill, and I strongly oppose it.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Madam Chairman, in response to the gentleman from New York, I would point out that I have a letter here from the United Sioux Tribes of South Dakota that I will introduce into the RECORD. And in this letter it says: "Horses have played, and continue to play, an important role in the Indian culture. That is particularly true for Tribes of the Great Northern Plains."

And it says: "Many tribal members raise and sell horses." This is currently, today. "Some of these horses are used for food and exported. It is inconceivable to think the Congress might extinguish our property rights and lessen our income even more."

And I would point out to the gentleman from New York that we have in this amendment language that says it would be determined by the Secretary as to which cultural exemptions. So it is not simply a blanket exemption. I did not list the Irish in that, and maybe I am remiss in that. But I do not intend to build a record here of all of the cultures that have traditionally eaten horse meat, but there are many of them that do. They do so today. They have recipes today. And this is something that infringes upon people's property rights and their cultural rights. And if we are going to say this to the Native American people that we are going to pull these assets out from underneath you and you can't do with a horse what you have done for hundreds of years, I think that is a message that we are not going to want to send across America.

UNITED SIOUX TRIBES
Pierre, SD, August 22, 2006.

Hon. STEPHANIE HERSETH,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

Attention: Ryan Stroschein & Phil Assmus
DEAR STEPHANIE: We greatly appreciate your opposition to H.R. 503. This bill would, in short, prohibit the marketing of our horses to slaughter.

Horses have played, and continue to play, an important role in the Indian culture. That is particularly true for Tribes of the Northern Great Plains, including the Great Sioux Nation. The United States has taken our land and if this bill passes you will be taking our property without compensation.

Many tribal members raise and sell horses. Some of these horses are used for food and exported. It is inconceivable to think the Congress might extinguish our property rights and lessen our income even more. We urge you to ask your colleagues to follow your lead and oppose H.R. 503. Thank you.

Sincerely,

CLARENCE W. SKYE,
Executive Director.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Madam Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment.

I would also submit for the RECORD a letter that we have from Chief Arvol of the Lakota Nation, and he wrote a very long letter in opposition to this amendment. He says: "I am writing to ask for your support in co-sponsoring the American Horse Slaughter Prevention Act and for our tribe."

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: My name is Chief Arvol Looking Horse of the Lakota, Dakota, Nakota Nation. I am also known as "Sung Wakan" (Horse Man). My position with my People is the 19th Generation Keeper of the Sacred White Buffalo Calf Bundle. I am the spiritual leader for our Nation.

It has been recorded in ancient petroglyphs and in our oral stories that the horse nation was around our people long before the Spaniards brought the other relative of the horse nation to this land. These ancient horses were much smaller in size and not so much in numbers, to a point of extinction.

With this ancient Bundle, almost 2,000 years old, existed a horse ceremony acknowledging the horse nation in respect to their wise and gentle spirit, as they offered a gift of healing for our own human spirit. My work has involved many efforts in bringing awareness to the importance to all life upon Mother Earth, including Mother Earth herself so that all life may live in Peace. I was raised with the understanding that all forms of life have their own meaning of importance and should not be taken for granted. To ignore and not to try to learn this precious truth of all living beings to live in Peace with us as humans of power and decisions, will affect the lives of our own children in their health of body mind and spirit. We need to teach all children to look at all life as sacred.

The Horse Nation is an important spirit being. The Nation deserves the protection and awareness of what we humans can offer. They have saved, assisted, and given of themselves for all humans throughout history. Whether it was being ridden in battles, or in traveling, and most recently discovered by therapists through friendship, they can give healing to our troubled spirits. The Native Nations always understood these gifts and that was why we had our horse dance ceremony.

This awareness of the horse's gifts to humans has transformed into a strong respect. This awareness has been gathering People across the country to protect this fine spirit from a very negative attack on their health and existence, by unconscious disrespectful humans in the name of greed. A horse can feel impending trauma in their environment. Yet, horses trust humans and so are being led to slaughter.

This is not a way of respecting life that children need to learn, as we adults having positions as role models and leaders in our communities. This energy, as we understand these actions to be, will indeed backfire, if people do not educate themselves about the importance of the different spiritual roles of all life forms. Some animal nations, indeed, give themselves for food. They actually know their purpose in the human's food chain, as long as humans understand this with respect. We should understand the Horse Nation has earned the right to live in Peace for what they have contributed to all our lives throughout history.

I am writing to ask for your support in co-sponsoring the American Horse Slaughter Prevention Act. The AHSPA (H.R. 857) has been introduced in the U.S. House of Representatives by Representative John Sweeney (R-NY) who is chair of the Congressional Horse Caucus and Congressman John Spratt (D-SC). A similar bill will soon be before the U.S. Senate.

Despite the passage of the Wild-Free Roaming Wild Horses and Burros Act of 1971 which was enacted to protect the wild horse from slaughter, hundreds, perhaps thousands, continue to be slaughtered each year. The Bureau of Land Management removed too many wild horses from their ranges resulting in ongoing sales to the slaughterhouses. If you wish to learn more about these activities, please contact Chris Heyde of the Society for Animal Protective Legislation.

In a Sacred Hoop of life, where there is no ending and no beginning!

Thank you for your attention to this effort.

Mitakuye Oyasin (All my relations),
Chief ARVOL LOOKING HORSE, 19th Generation Keeper of the Sacred White Buffalo Calf Pipe.

Madam Chairman, the purpose of H.R. 503 has never been to dictate to other cultures what they can and cannot eat. The purpose of H.R. 503 is simply to prohibit the French, the Belgians, the Dutch from offering slaughterhouses in America, taking our horses, many of which are stolen, obtained by misrepresentation, and shipping the meat to France, Belgium, and Japan.

So this amendment would do one thing. It would make the bill ineffective. It would defeat the bill in its entirety. And so I would urge the Members to oppose this amendment.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Madam Chairman, in this position that we are in today, to be objective in our perspective about how we deal with this issue, I don't know that there is a precedent in America that we have told an entire country no matter what your culture, no matter what your beliefs, no matter what your traditions, we do not want them here in this country. There are many other elements of other cultures that this civilization would be more healthy without, and yet there is not a single piece of legislation before this body that would define those components of another culture and rip them out and say, in our best judgment we think you ought to quit doing these things.

We accept all beliefs in America. That is part of who we are. Freedom of speech, religion, press, all of our cultural composition comes with all immigrants into this country and with the Native Americans too. And this amendment says to the Native Americans specifically and other cultures inclusively, if certified by the Secretary, we are going to accept your beliefs. We are going to accept your traditions. It is part of who we are as America to blend all those cultures and those civilizations together and come out with this robust nature of our great American culture, and that is what this amendment is about. It is about protecting our traditional values.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Madam Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN).

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Madam Chairman, I very much thank the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky for yielding.

I oppose this amendment because it is not about Native Americans. It is about creating one more loophole. And I oppose the other amendments because they would undermine the intent of this bill.

We cannot be a Nation or a society that reduces everything to dollars and cents, that commoditizes everything. When you see an eagle take wing and soar above the clouds, that is not a commodity. It is a source of inspiration. When you see a horse galloping gracefully across the plains, that is not a commodity. That is a source of inspiration.

Horses have been part of the strength of this country for 400 years. We depended upon the horse. We explored this continent. Our commerce was heavily dependent upon the horse. So many major battles where we prevailed were on horses.

Look at our monuments. Look at the monument in front of the Capitol. It is a horse. And when the horse has one leg up, it means that that person was wounded in battle. But there has been an intrinsic relationship.

Everything cannot be reduced to economics. We need to be inspired by some things, and these amendments would gut a bill that says there is no reason to be slaughtering horses. Three major slaughterhouses owned by foreign nations. Americans don't want to consume meat. Listen to the mayor of the city in Texas. It has ruined her economy. It is a stench. No one wants it. This is not about economics. This is about doing the right thing. And we have been tied to the horse, the eagle. These symbols of American strength, of American greatness, are sources of inspiration.

My very good friend Mr. WHITFIELD understands what this is really about. This is about preserving a symbol. We cannot allow the kind of slaughtering that takes place. More than 100,000 horses. Imagine. And the fact is they are slaughtering the healthy, fatter horses that have been well taken care of. They do not want the infirm, the old, the lame horses. That is not who they want to slaughter. So many of these arguments have been false arguments.

This amendment is doing the right thing. The Department of Agriculture circumvented the right thing that we have already passed. I support Mr. WHITFIELD. Let's pass this amendment.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. WHITFIELD. Madam Chairman, does he have the right to close or do I have the right to close?

The Acting CHAIRMAN (Mrs. CAPRO). The gentleman from Kentucky has the right to close.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Madam Chair, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Madam Chair, I would reiterate that this amendment is about the cultural exemption to horse slaughter and consumption for human purposes. And this is something that has gone on in this country for hundreds of years.

Since the Spaniards brought the horses here, there have been horses consumed for human consumption. It has been part of the plan, part of the breeding, part of the raising, part of the feeding and part of the strategy.

In fact, as I stand here today, this date here in September is almost very close to the date that, 200 years ago, Lewis and Clark returned, back down the Missouri River. It was in September of 1806. They bought horses from the Native Americans out west for the purposes of taking those horses as pack horses up into the mountains. They knew they would not need those horses when they got to the end of the line. And they bought those horses. Part of their strategy when they left St. Louis was, buy horses in that region and when you are finished working them, eat them. Louis and Clark ate horses. All of these ethnicities and countries that I have named all eat horses.

I do not think there is an ethnicity that has been exempt from having horses in their diet, but particularly Native Americans who, the Great Plains Native Americans, the Sioux Nation, and I represent Sioux County, and I represent two reservations in my district that I have had for over 10 years now, or almost 10 years now; all of those cultures are rooted in this. We need to provide a cultural exemption, Madam Chairman. If we send this message off to Native Americans, in particular, that we would not even let the Secretary of Agriculture designate an exemption for Native Americans no matter how long their tradition is, that will be an insult to Native Americans, an insult to multiculturalism in America. I urge the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. WHITFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Chairman, I would just say that this bill certainly does not prevent individual owners from slaughtering a horse and eating the horse if they want to. I think that this amendment is unnecessary. It would defeat the purpose of the bill. All the correspondence we have had with Indian tribes indicates that they do not eat horse meat.

Horses have not been a part of the food chain in America. I would urge the defeat of the amendment and passage of H.R. 503.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment in my capacity as the Ranking Member of the Resources Committee which has legislative jurisdiction over Indian Affairs.

This amendment is an insult to Indian Country. It suggests that Native Americans consume horse flesh. And in doing so, it is derivative of their culture and their society.

The fact of the matter is that Indians do not eat horse flesh, and the three horse slaughter operations in this country do not sell horse flesh to Indians.

The meat of slaughtered horses is all exported by these slaughterhouses to foreign markets.

Indeed, I have before me resolution after resolution from Indian Country opposing the slaughter of horses, including from the National Congress of American Indians.

But to be clear, there is another purpose behind this amendment, because it seeks to also allow horses to be slaughtered for the consumption of people from cultures that eat equine meat. As a general matter.

The fact of the matter is that all of the meat from American slaughtered horses is consumed in European or Asian countries by people who traditionally eat horse flesh.

Adoption of this amendment would gut the pending legislation. It would render it null and void.

My colleagues, do not be fooled, do not be lulled into complacency by the attempt of this amendment to garner sympathy for Native Americans, when no such sympathy is required.

A vote for this amendment is the same as a vote against final passage of H.R. 503.

I urge the defeat of the pending amendment.

The Acting CHAIRMAN (Mr. SIMPSON). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. KING).

The question was taken; and the Acting Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. KING of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The Acting CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa will be postponed.

MOMENT OF SILENCE IN MEMORY OF FORMER MEMBER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, BOB MATHIAS

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of Mr. COSTA, Mr. NUNES and myself, I would like to advise the House that this past week an individual passed away, a former Member of the House of Representatives.

Some of you didn’t have the privilege of knowing him in person, but all of you knew of him. Bob Mathias as a 17-year-old high school student went to London and came home with a gold medal in the decathlon. Four years later, he went to Helsinki and came home with a gold medal in the decathlon. Bob Mathias was a member of this House from 1966 to 1974.

Bob Mathias thought of himself as an ordinary person. Could we please, in recognition of an extraordinary human being, offer a moment of silence?

The Acting CHAIRMAN. Members will rise and observe a moment of silence.

The Acting CHAIRMAN. There being no other amendments, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. REBERG) having assumed the chair, Mr. SIMPSON, Acting Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 503) to amend the Horse Protection Act to prohibit the shipping, transporting, moving, delivering, receiving, possessing, purchasing, selling, or donation of horses and other equines to be slaughtered for human consumption, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 981, he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. HOYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of inquiring of the majority leader the schedule for the week to come, and I yield to my friend, Mr. BOEHNER, the majority leader.

Mr. BOEHNER. I want to thank my colleague from Maryland for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, next week the House will convene on Tuesday at 12:30 for morning hour and 2 p.m. for legislative business.

We will consider a number of measures under the suspension of the rules next Tuesday. We expect to have a final list of those measures to Members' offices by tomorrow afternoon.

For the balance of the week, the House will consider on Wednesday the 5-year anniversary of 9/11, and we will have a resolution on the floor, and we will also begin consideration of H.R. 2965, the Federal Prison Industries Competition in Contracting Act.

On Thursday and Friday, we will complete consideration of the Federal Prison Industries bill, and we will consider a House resolution amending the House rules on earmark reform. I would also note that conference reports may be brought up at any time, and hope to see H.R. 5122, the Sonny Montgomery National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 2007 conference report and I hope to see it passed next week. At this point, Members should anticipate that we will have votes on Friday.

I also have an announcement in terms of the schedule. Members have a schedule through September. It is expected that the House will not be back in session until the week of November 13. I do want Members to know that the House will be in session that week. I expect we will have votes on Monday the 13th and through that week. Anything further on the schedule beyond that time, I wish I could tell Members, but I don't know.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for bringing us up to date.

Am I to take it that when the gentleman indicated that the 29th would be the last day prior to the election, Members can still rely on that representation?

Mr. BOEHNER. That is correct.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for that comment because there has been some discussion there may be another week, and we are glad to advise Members.

Mr. BOEHNER. Somebody else was having those discussions with themselves, not with me.

Mr. HOYER. That happens, I have noticed.

With respect to the schedule that you have just announced, would it be fair to conclude that if we do not have additional conference reports, and you indicate that you will take conference reports if they are available, which I understand, but if there were not additional conference reports beyond those which you have referenced in your announcement, that the probability of Friday is not as great as it otherwise would be? What I am saying, before you respond, is essentially it would appear to me that based upon what has been noticed, that that work would probably be accomplished within the Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday period.

Mr. BOEHNER. If the gentleman will yield, it is possible that the House could complete its work by Thursday night. It is possible. But I don't want to mislead Members. At this point, I believe that Members should expect votes on Friday. If it becomes clear during the week that we will be able to complete our work, I will give Members as much notice as possible. But I don't want to promise something that we can't deliver.

Mr. HOYER. I understand.

On the following Friday, the 22nd, as the gentleman knows, Rosh Hashanah begins at sundown on that day. That is the first day of Rosh Hashanah. One of the problems, as you know, that we have is Members getting back to the West Coast in time to observe Rosh Hashanah appropriately. Friday the 22nd is currently on the schedule. Can you comment on that?

Mr. BOEHNER. I will work with you to accommodate our Members who want to observe this religious holiday. I do understand the problem for Members on the West Coast. We will work with you to come to some resolution. We don't want to put any Members in a difficult travel position when it comes to observance of their religious holidays.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for that, and we look forward to discussing that with you.

You note in the announcement of the 9/11 resolution, and I was asked by the press, were we going to do something on issues that appear to be partisan, and I said no. On September 11th, we will not be here; we will be in our home districts, and it should be a day of remembrance and resolve; remembrance of the heroism of that day and remembrance of the loss of life on that day, and resolve to defeat terrorism and to defeat those who would put our country at risk and put our people in harm's way and at risk. I believe we are united on that.

I just saw the resolution, and I have not had a chance to read the resolution, nor as I understand it have we worked with your side on the resolution.

Mr. Leader, I would hope perhaps we could come together before the resolution is finally introduced. We passed last year's resolution with over 400 votes, very few "no" votes. I ask if we could work on this together to ensure that we have that kind of unanimity which I think is appropriate and would help to bring us together.

Mr. BOEHNER. I have not had a chance to read the resolution either, and you have not read the resolution. All I do know is that both Democrats and Republicans have worked closely together to develop the resolution. Again, I will be happy to take a look at it. And I would suggest to the gentleman, if you have any suggestions or concerns, let me know.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the leader for that. And I did not know whether our Democrats had worked with people on your side of the aisle. If that is the case, then when I read the resolution, I am sure I will be pleased. But if there are questions, I will bring them to the attention of the leader.

Mr. Leader, of course we have next week's schedule. Next week's schedule does not include the only appropriation bill that we have not yet passed. As you know, we have passed 10 out of the 11 appropriations bills. The Labor-Health bill was passed through the House Appropriations Committee and ready to report in June. So it has now been pending for approximately 60, 75 days.

Do you have any expectation that the Labor-Health bill will be brought to the floor within the foreseeable future?

I yield to my friend.

Mr. BOEHNER. The issue is under discussion. As the gentleman knows, there are a number of issues in that bill that have caused concern amongst Members. And while one of those appears to have been resolved, there are a number of other issues remaining there. There have been several discussions this week and I think there will be several more discussions next week about how to deal with that particular bill.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for that observation. He refers to one or two of the issues in the bill. Obviously, one of the issues is the so-called Hoyer amendment, the Miller bill, which raises the minimum wage. We would hope that that would be brought to the floor. As you well know, we considered it with another bill. A number of items included in it. It went to the Senate. It didn't pass. We believe that the 6.6 million people on the minimum wage are hopeful that we will act before we leave here for the election.

I am very hopeful and I know our side is very hopeful that we could bring that bill to the floor with that amendment protected, voted up or down. If the Members think that we ought not to do it, fine. If the Members think we ought to do it, fine. And pass that bill to the Senate so we can complete the appropriations process.

Mr. BOEHNER. I think the gentleman is well aware that in July before the House went on its August district work period, the House voted to raise the minimum wage, and this bill is pending in the Senate and I am hopeful that the Senate will see fit to deal with it.

Mr. HOYER. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Leader, of course I appreciate your reiterating what we did and we all understand what we did. There are different perspectives on what we did. But I would reiterate this side's strong desire and hope that we would consider the issue of minimum wage on its own merits, as was done in the committee. As you know, it was passed in a bipartisan fashion in committee with one-fourth, I think, or maybe one-fifth of the Republicans in the committee voting for it.

Mr. BOEHNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOYER. I would be glad to yield to my friend.

Mr. BOEHNER. We have rules in the House about legislating on an appropriations bill, and it is clear that the intent of the author was to legislate on an appropriations bill. I think the majority did the right thing by moving the authorizing language for the minimum wage through the Rules Committee and brought it to the House floor.

So, again, the House has dealt with this. I am hopeful that the Senate will deal with it soon.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for his comment. I understand what the rules are, and both sides have relatively regularly waived those rules when it wanted to do something. And if we want to raise the minimum wage for our workers, we can do it. That is our perspective. But I certainly appreciate the gentleman's further education on what the rules require.

Let me ask you this. It is not on the schedule for next week. Do you anticipate any additional legislation prior to the 29th of September which would further implement the recommendations of the 9/11 Commission? As you know, there are some 19 recommendations which Governor Kean and Congressman Hamilton have observed we have not acted on. Can you tell us whether there is any anticipation of scheduling action on those issues?

I yield to my friend.

Mr. BOEHNER. Over a year ago, the House worked to implement the recommendations of the bipartisan 9/11 Commission. And I believe that Members on both sides of the Capitol, on both sides of the aisle, decided to accept those recommendations that we thought would be helpful. Not all of the recommendations of the 9/11 Commission have, in fact, been adopted because, as I understand it, Members on both sides of the aisle and on both sides of the Capitol have rejected some of the ideas that they put forth.

As we all know, some of these independent commissions get established. They can make recommendations, but the real decisions about what we should enact into law should be left to the Members, and I think the Members have made their decisions very clear.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman for his observations, while I think we disagree on the substance of the reports and the merits of the recommendations that have not yet been passed. I know on our side, Mr. THOMPSON, who is our ranking member on the Homeland Security Committee, and others are very hopeful that we can move forward on those. But I understand what the gentleman has said.

I will not ask the gentleman further questions. But, Mr. Speaker, under my reservation I would say that we on this side of the aisle are very hopeful that we can consider legislation before we break on the 29th of September which would give the Secretary of Health and Human Services the authority to negotiate lower prescription drug prices for our seniors. We would hope that we would see legislation which would restore the deep cuts in college tuition assistance that were included in the deficit reduction bill that we passed some months ago and that we would reconsider the tax cuts that we gave, deep tax cuts, that we gave to oil companies apparently to spur further investment in exploration for new sources of oil. A worthy objective. But I think, happily or unhappily, depending upon your perspective, whether you are an oil company or whether you are a driver of automobiles and have to pay the gasoline prices, the companies are making great profits and could have great incentive because of those great profits to develop further sources of energy.

I would conclude by saying that we would hope the majority would seriously consider bringing to the floor all of those issues prior to the 29th.

Mr. BOEHNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOYER. I yield to my friend, the majority leader.

Mr. BOEHNER. Just so the gentleman understands, and I appreciate his yielding, I am happy to come here and have this colloquy with you about what is going to be on the floor and give you as much information as I can.

Now, I see that my friend from Maryland today has decided to employ a new tactic in bringing campaign themes to the floor during the colloquy. Now, I would be happy to engage in those, but it is not what the colloquy is for. And so I would be happy to engage the gentleman.

The Medicare drug bill has produced premiums for seniors far below, far below, any number that anyone ever expected. And what got us those low drug premium prices was the competition that was created in the creation of the program.

Secondly, when it comes to the college loan program that the gentleman referred to that there were cuts, if the gentleman would look at the bill, he will realize that we widened the ability of more students to get to college under this program than we have ever had. The fact is there are higher numbers for grant programs, higher numbers for what you can borrow from the program, and it could not be working any better. And as a result, the Deficit Reduction Act that we passed last year did, in fact, save $12.5 billion that came out of the hides of the lenders who were involved in the program.

So, again, I would be happy to engage you in this conversation, but we could probably do it under a Special Order rather than during the colloquy.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman for his observations, and perhaps I will take him up on that offer. That might be instructive for both of us and perhaps for the American people as well. I understand the gentleman's perspective. We differ. That is not surprising, I am sure, to the viewers.

But I will say this, Mr. Leader, if I can, that this is about discussing the schedule. We have a very short time frame. We have 14 days left that are scheduled in this session before the election, and we are coming back for a lame duck session. I understand that. But I was simply inquiring of you whether or not those matters which we believe are important might be on the schedule. I am not debating their merits or demerits at this point in time. I can do that and, as a matter of fact, look forward to discussing that in a Special Order with you. But we do believe it was in the realm of a discussion about what might be scheduled.

And I yield to my friend.

Mr. BOEHNER. I thank my colleague. And while we may differ on whether the glass is half full or half empty, I do have great respect for my colleague from Maryland.

Mr. HOYER. I thank the gentleman

HONORING THE AHWATUKEE ALL-STARS

(Mr. HAYWORTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, it is a ritual of the school year where millions of American students return to class and offer an essay entitled, "What I Did on My Summer Vacation."

Mr. Speaker, for a special group of 11-, 12- and 13-year-olds from the Fifth Congressional District of Arizona, it is quite a daunting challenge, because, Mr. Speaker, that select group of young men, nicknamed The Dawgs, the all-stars of Ahwatukee's Little League advanced all the way to the Little League World Series in Williamsport, Pennsylvania.

This special team went out as winners. They won their final game but due to a rule for a tie-breaker had the unfortunate experience of not advancing. In fact, of the nine teams that won two games at Williamsport, sadly only the team from Ahwatukee did not advance. But they are more than exceptions, Mr. Speaker; they are true champions, not only the best in the west but a team that went out winners in Williamsport.

Mr. Speaker, I include in the RECORD the roster of this team and their championship season and would remark as I close, Mr. Speaker, with the observation that they have now entered the history of this House as well as the history of the Little League World Series.

ROSTER FOR AHWATUKEE DAWGS

#18 Michael Anderson, #16 Eric Camarillo, #3 Shaun Chase, #5 Max Harden, #9 Justin Hyden, #44 David Hulls, #11 Connor Kelly, #25 Sam Kingery, #17 Scott Kingery, #14 Chase Knox, #7 Ryan Modi, and #10 Hunter Rodriguez.

Overall Record: 4 Tournaments, 22-2.

Record in Williamsport: 2-1. Dawgs vs. Lemont, Illinois 1-0 (Win); Dawgs vs. Columbus, Georgia 4-1 (Loss); and Dawgs vs. Staten Island, New York 4-1 (Win).

TRUTH SQUAD ON WASTE, FRAUD AND ABUSE

(Mr. CARDOZA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CARDOZA. Mr. Speaker, the Truth Squad on Waste, Fraud and Abuse is charged with holding the Bush administration accountable for its mishandling of taxpayer dollars.

That is something that this Republican Congress has failed to do. On issue after issue, from Katrina to Iraq to border security, to health care, we have seen outrageous waste of American tax dollars. And this Congress has repeatedly failed to hold the administration accountable for it.

Today, the Truth Squad is unveiling the Golden Drain Award, which you see next to me in this picture. The Golden Drain is an award that will be displayed in my office, and it will be given each week to a recipient who has been most derelict in their duty as stewards of American taxpayer dollars. We will award this award next week for the first time.

All told, the Truth Squad has identified over $150 billion of American tax dollars that have gone down the drain of waste, fraud and abuse. Enough is enough, Mr. Speaker. It is time for accountability. It is time for a new direction. It is time to audit America's books.

NO AMNESTY FOR ILLEGAL ALIENS

(Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. GINNY BROWN-WAITE of Florida. Mr. Speaker, Americans are frustrated. Back in May, the Senate passed the "No Illegal Alien Left Behind" bill which hands rights and benefits to lawbreakers on a silver platter. Clearly we have a large hurdle to overcome in compromising with this very atrocious bill.

However, with each day that we fail to pass meaningful border security reform, Americans become anxious that we will do nothing or even worse that we may cave in to the Senate. I heard from more than 14,000 constituents over the last month who emphatically told me that they do not want amnesty for law breakers.

Listen up America: We must stand united behind the border security bill passed by the House, H.R. 4437, and to proclaim to Americans that we agree with them and we will never give amnesty to illegal aliens.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 4, 2005, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

U.S. MILITARY'S READINESS PROBLEMS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. SKELTON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, on July 5, 1950, near the city of Osan in South Korea, North Korean forces faced a battalion of American soldiers who had been sent to stop the Korean advance. This battalion of 406 soldiers was undermanned, under-trained and poorly equipped. These soldiers fought a 7-hour battle that ended in retreat, and with 150 American infantrymen killed, wounded or missing.

This battalion was known as Task Force Smith, and its failure was due to a lack of readiness on the part of our military after World War II. Today, Mr. Speaker, I am concerned that the low readiness levels of the Army and the Marine Corps are going to once again endanger our troops.

Mr. Speaker, I have spoken about readiness problems before. And it continues to concern me as this situation worsens. Let me be blunt. Our ground forces and their reserves face a crisis with manpower and equipment shortages and will be challenged to complete their missions should they be called to respond to an emergency.

Mr. Speaker, I have used the word "readiness" many times before. But I feel it necessary to clearly define its meaning. Readiness describes the condition of our military forces. It is a measure of how well they are manned, trained and equipped to complete the full range of missions necessary to defend our Nation.

This is why the falling readiness levels of our Army and our Marine Corps are so disturbing. They indicate that we may not be able to defend our Nation's interests wherever they may face challenges. The most striking example of this problem is with equipment. Over 40 percent of the Army and Marine Corps ground equipment is now deployed to Iraq or Afghanistan. It is wearing out as much as nine times faster than normal. Only 3 years in Iraq has placed as much as 27 years of wear on our equipment, forcing the Department of Defense to cannibalize the equipment of non-deployed units and the National Guard.

This cannibalization of equipment has left the Army without a single combat brigade in the Continental United States ready for all of their war-time missions.

Simply put, the war in Iraq is sapping our strategic base and leaving us with a broken Army. The Armed Services Committee is nearing agreement to add $20 billion to the Defense Authorization Act for next year to try to help fix this grave situation.

This will help, but the Department's readiness problems are too large to be fixed by a one-time investment. Together, the Army and Marine Corps need an astounding $29 billion in 2007 to repair or replace equipment damaged in Iraq and Afghanistan. The amount is only part of the overall bill that represents a snapshot in time of a problem that is large and continues to grow.

The problem has developed over time due to mismanagement and a failure on the part of the administration to adequately plan for Iraq. It cannot be solved overnight. Congress can continue to provide band-aids for readiness shortfalls by funding through supplementals, but the Army and Marine Corps are limping along. They cannot keep pace with falling readiness levels.

The only way to truly solve this problem is for the administration to commit to fully funding the needs of the Department of Defense. This country is at war. Americans have a right to expect the administration to realistically budget for national defense.

The stakes are high. Mr. Speaker, we cannot afford another Task Force Smith.

WAYZATA COMMUNITY CHURCH CELEBRATES 125 YEARS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. RAMSTAD) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RAMSTAD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Wayzata Community Church of Wayzata, MN, on its 125th anniversary of ministry and mission.

Founded in 1881 by a dozen early settlers on Lake Minnetonka, Wayzata Congregational Church grew to 70 members within 2 years. In 1912, a new church was built, but it burned down 4 years later. Remarkably, it was rebuilt by a determined congregation in only 7 months.

Then, in 1948, the church officially became Wayzata Community Church, and ground was broken for a new building at Ferndale Road and Wayzata Boulevard in Wayzata, where this dynamic community of faith is located today.

With nearly 3,000 members, Wayzata Community Church is one of the five largest congregations of the United Church of Christ. My family and I are grateful members of this loving and nurturing congregation. Our church is a place of spiritual growth, compassionate support and committed service.

For 125 years, Wayzata Community Church has been a place of growth and renewal, fellowship, outreach, community service, music ministries, and children and youth ministries.

For 125 years, Wayzata Community Church has been there to help people in need, people suffering the ravages of poverty, homelessness, hunger, addiction, broken homes, disease and despair.

One hundred twenty-five years of providing food, shelter, clothing, transportation, counseling and support groups.

Wayzata Community Church, Mr. Speaker, is a key partner of Interfaith Outreach and Community Partners, a partnership of faith communities, other community organizations and individuals that serve low-income people in eight of our west suburban communities.

Wayzata Community Church's extensive commitment to doing the Lord's work here on Earth also includes programs such as Adopt a Family, Families Moving Forward, Hurricane Relief, Loaves and Fishes, Meals on Wheels, Salvation Army bell ringers, the legendary Women's Fellowship annual rummage sale, and the Sleep Out for the Homeless, to name but a few.

Wayzata Community Church, Mr. Speaker, is truly a church that lives out the biblical command to love God, love others and serve the least amongst us.

The church is also a lively hub of activity in the Lake Minnetonka area for seniors, children and their friends and people of all ages. From music performances, authors, workshops, scouting, support groups, basketball games, nursery schools, you name it, it is all there at Wayzata Community Church.

Wayzata Community Church has also been blessed with truly visionary and dedicated leadership over the past 125 years.

On this historic anniversary, we are especially grateful for our current senior minister, Reverend Dr. John Ross, and the entire pastoral staff, the Reverends Teresa Chamberlain, Kristen Jeide, Dr. James Newby and S. Linda Purdy.

We are also very thankful to all of the clergy who have served Wayzata Community Church during the past 125 years, as well as the other church staff, lay leaders, teachers, musicians, choir members, volunteers and other friends and members of Wayzata Community Church.

Mr. Speaker, on this special anniversary of Wayzata Community Church, let us pay tribute to 125 years of ministry and mission and pray that this wonderful community of faith will provide many more years of spiritual growth, support and service to the people of the Lake Minnetonka community.

RESTORING DEMOCRACY TO AMERICA

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of turn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Washington is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, you can always tell when the Republicans fear an upcoming election because they start apologizing for their past transgressions.

So it should come as no surprise that the President finally acknowledged the presence and use of secret CIA prisons. The American people happen to think that the U.S. Constitution is a document that was never intended to be shredded and discarded like last week's newspaper, but that is exactly what is happening by the President and his rubber-stamp Republican Congress.

We do not have to subvert the freedoms and principles that make us Americans so that the President can fumble his way through finding and fighting terrorists like bin Laden.

We still believe in the rule of law, the first amendment, the Constitution, and the Bill of Rights. We believe in the Geneva Convention, and the President undermines the American credibility, power and leadership around the world by dismissing a document so important that it is incorporated into the manuals of the U.S. Armed Forces.

America is not a democracy at your convenience, Mr. President. Without the protections provided by the first amendment, the American people might never have known about the abuses at Abu Ghraib; and without the first amendment, the American people would have never known about the unauthorized wiretaps of the American people, even when there is a secret court specifically set up to enable America to defend itself without destroying the Constitution and the Bill of Rights in the process.

The American people still believe in the rule of law, and they can see that the President suspended the Constitution, the Geneva Convention, and the Bill of Rights because he finds them inconvenient.

The policies of this administration and the Republican Congress have not made America safer, but America is in danger on a whole new front, Presidential indifference to the principles and ideals that we are fighting for.

The President was given the tools and the resources after 9/11, but he pulled out before the job was done. He diverted our soldiers and resolve from Afghanistan to Iraq. It was a bad decision then, and it has become disastrous now in both places.

But with an automatic rubber-stamp Congress in the House and the Senate, the President could tell them what to think, tell them how to vote and get whatever he wanted. There was no balance in our government to ask the tough questions and hold the President accountable. There still is no balance in our government that can protect the American people and our founding policies from the brute force of the Republican power machine.

The President finally admitted he authorized secret CIA prisons, and in the next breath, demands the Congress authorize him to keep doing whatever he wants. And if the Republicans remain in power, they will do exactly what the President wants. No debate, no balance, nothing short of outright misrepresentation of the American people.

The Republicans misrepresent the American people when they rubber-stamp everything the President wants. That is not how America works, and it is not how democracy works. America is all about balance, debating different points of view, coming together as one Nation, standing on common ground. But that fundamental approach requires accountability, and there has been none under the Republicans.

For goodness sake, the Republicans could not even swear in Big Oil CEOs when they were called to Capitol Hill over skyrocketing prices. Republicans could not require these people to swear to tell the truth. Maybe they did; maybe they did not. We will never know.

And that is what the midterm election is really all about. America is tilted not merely to the right, but off the map entirely. Neocons who no one elected are telling the President and the Vice President what they are expected to do and what the Republican Congress will pass.

The American people may not understand the rules of Congress; but know this, Republicans delay every vote on the floor of this House until they can twist enough arms to get what the neocons behind the curtain want. Debate is gone. Accountability is gone. And that is why the Republican control should be gone.

The Republicans have squandered their chance to govern. Republicans have shortchanged the American people for 12 long years. With free speech and free press, now the American people know it.

November is about restoring democracy to the Nation best able to protect it. November is about restoring balance to a Republican Congress that has forgotten that it works for the people, not for the neocons. No democracy can survive without a Congress that looks at the President's policies and asks questions and sometimes says no.

This President has had a free hand for far too long, and this election is a referendum on President Bush. If you want more, vote for a Republican. If you want to change it, vote for the Democrats

THANK GOD FOR THIS DEMOCRACY AND THOSE PROTECTING IT

Mr. GOHMERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of turn for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Texas is recognized.

There was no objection.

Mr. GOHMERT. Mr. Speaker, we hear people across the aisle talk about, gee, a rubber-stamp Congress. Well, I can point to you, that is the reason there is no immigration or border bill right now is because this is not a rubber-stamp Congress. The President wants some things that we simply cannot provide.

But when we talk about the allegations about Republicans or the President shredding the Constitution, let me tell you, he does not shred the Constitution. He has sworn to protect it, and I am proud that people who want to destroy the way of life that we have in this country, people that believe that freedom and democracy and self-government is a terrible thing, they think that that leads to debauchery and degradation, and therefore, you need some holy ayatollah that tells you everything you can or cannot do, that sends women back to being chattels as they never should have been but still are in some areas of the world, that is what they want to do to this country. They want to destroy people. They want to kill us, and we have a President that understands that.

Now, across the aisle we have some folks who want to be part of the blame America first crowd. They want you to know, gee, we are so bad, we are so terrible, look at Abu Ghraib. I asked my good friend SAM JOHNSON that serves here in the Congress what he thought about if he had been given a choice between the absolute horror that he went through in the North Vietnam prison compared to what happened at Abu Ghraib. It was a no-brainer.

What happened there was abuse. The people have gone to prison. They have been punished. What happened to American prisoners in North Vietnam, North Korea, what happened to American prisoners among those killers, those just blood-sucking, killing democracy, wanting to destroy people, terrorists, jihadists, cutting our people's heads off with dull instruments on camera, and that is who you want to embrace? There are even some people here in Washington that before Saddam went down, he flew over there. Never mind that Saddam was a murdering, blood-sucking thief who killed thousands and thousands. We go over and embrace Saddam and then come back and call our President the one in the wrong? My goodness, the blame America first crowd.

Those who want to blame Bush and Rumsfeld for the terrorist acts have missed the whole point. Since 1979 there has been a war going on. We just did not know it. We had a President then who allowed an act of war under international law, the attack of our embassy in Iran, to go unpunished, and for over a year, all we did was beg them to please release our hostages. It sent a bad message.

We were hit again in 1983 with the barracks. We were hit all through the 1990s with acts of war, including the first attack on our own continent at the World Trade Center in 1993. What did the Democratic administration and Democratic Congress do? Well, they wanted to prosecute them in civil court here in America instead of treating it as an act of war.

This President understands we are in war. Now we have a Supreme Court that has expressed concerns about Guantanamo. I went to Guantanamo, and having been a judge and chief justice, I have toured a lot of prisons. That was the nicest prison I have ever visited where the prisoners are being kept. But you know what we noticed? We were told do not let the prisoners hear you because they will think you are with the Red Cross or somebody. One of the people with us, and they heard somebody there and they started all of sudden going from laughing and being giddy and funny between themselves to, oh, please help me, I am being tortured and all this baloney. Well, they are playing to the crowds. That was obvious.

I would submit if the Supreme Court is all that concerned, we need to put that hurricane fence back around the Supreme Court building that was there during construction recently and move those people from Abu Ghraib so they can watch them directly and they can look out their windows, maybe let them use their restroom facilities so they can supervise more closely what this administration is trying to protect us from.

You cannot blame President Bush and Rumsfeld for the current terrorist attacks unless you are squarely willing to put the blame for 9/11 on the Clinton administration because that is when it was planned, that was when it was prepared and almost completed, and then it carried over and was finished during this administration. This President saw it for what it was, an act of war that had to be addressed.

The price for liberty, as our forefathers said, is eternal vigilance. We cannot keep blaming America first, as our friends across the aisle want to do. We have to recognize, as this President and this Secretary of Defense has, we are in a war against us, and we finally have an administration that recognizes that and is out to protect us and protect the Constitution. Thank God for this democracy and those protecting it.

IRAQ POLICY

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentlewoman from California is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had the honor to visit a group of folks gathered on the Mall as part of Camp Democracy, a nonpartisan camp for peace, for democracy and for the restoration of rule of law.

Those who gathered are relentlessly working to promote peace and justice. They bring great passion to our shared struggle. They have led one of the most important and powerful grassroots movements in recent memory, and because of the pressure they have applied and the eloquence with which they have made the case, the immorality of the Bush Iraq policy has been exposed.

Mr. Speaker, in a few months, our troops will have been in Iraq for as long as their grandfathers fought in World War II. But unlike the struggle against Nazism, this has been an unmitigated disaster, a national tragedy and a moral outrage. More than 2,650 soldiers of our own are dead, nearly 20,000 wounded by the Pentagon's own count and countless more psychologically traumatized. And for what? So we could make the world a more dangerous place and increase the terrorist threat? So we could create more jihadists and inspire more hatred for Americans among Muslim extremists? So we could foment a bloody civil war and rip a nation apart at its seams, killing tens of thousands of innocent civilians for the cause of their so-called liberation?

Like the people at Camp Democracy, I have been speaking out against this war and this occupation even before they began. I have held forums, forced votes on resolutions and joined demonstrators at rallies across the country. Most recently, I introduced a bill that would rescind the President's authority to use force in Iraq, authority that was granted in 2002 under what we now know are false pretenses. I will not give up this fight until every last American soldier has been returned home to his or her family.

But even after that, we will have plenty of work to do, because Iraq is only a part of the problem. The real problem is a foreign policy that uses too much brawn and not enough brains. The real problem is an approach to national security that says might is always right; that says, when it doubt, shoot first and ask questions later. What we need is to completely overhaul the way we handle global conflict and prevent wars from starting in the very first place.

Working with the Friends Committee, working with WAND and working with Physicians for Social Responsibility, I created the SMART Security plan, which was introduced in the House in 2005. SMART would do just what I was talking about. SMART stands for Sensible Multilateral American Response to Terrorism. It emphasizes peacekeeping and diplomacy instead of invasion and occupancy. It rejects war in all but the most extreme circumstances. It fights terrorism with stronger global partnerships and with sound diplomacy, with better intelligence, with tough weapons inspections but without violating our civil liberties and fundamental freedoms.

SMART would put more resources into securing loose nuclear material and ensuring the United States lives up to the commitments we have made in our Nation on nuclear nonproliferation. SMART would wean us off Middle Eastern oil. It would invest in renewable energy technologies instead of Cold War weapon systems that have outlived their usefulness. SMART would dramatically increase development aid and debt relief for the poorest countries in the world to combat the deprivation and despair that often gives rise to terrorism in the first place. It protects not by wreaking violent havoc around the world but by staying faithful to the most honorable American values.

Armed conflict around the world is destroying our bodies and our souls. I am particularly troubled by the devastating impact this war is having on our children. Our children are the war's most tragic victims. Children represent a disproportionate number of civilian deaths in conflicts worldwide. And for many who survive, their education is disrupted, their communities destroyed and their families separated.

STATUS REPORT ON CURRENT SPENDING LEVELS OF ON-BUDGET SPENDING AND REVENUES FOR FY 2007 AND THE 5-YEAR PERIOD FY 2007 THROUGH FY 2011

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I am transmitting a status report on the current levels of on-budget spending and revenues for fiscal year 2007 and for the 5-year period of fiscal years 2007 through 2011. This report is necessary to facilitate the application of sections 302 and 311 of the Congressional Budget Act and sections 401 and 501 of H. Con. Res. 376, which is currently in effect as a concurrent resolution on the budget in the House under H. Res. 818. This status report is current through September 1, 2006.

The term "current level" refers to the amounts of spending and revenues estimated for each fiscal year based on laws enacted or awaiting the President's signature.

The first table in the report compares the current levels of total budget authority, outlays, and revenues with the aggregate levels set by H. Con. Res. 376. This comparison is needed to enforce section 311(a) of the Budget Act, which creates a point of order against measures that would breach the budget resolution's aggregate levels. The table does not show budget authority and outlays for years after fiscal year 2007 because appropriations for those years have not yet been considered.

The second table compares the current levels of budget authority and outlays for discretionary action by each authorizing committee with the "section 302(a)" allocations made under H. Con. Res. 376 for fiscal year 2007 and fiscal years 2007 through 2011. "Discretionary action" refers to legislation enacted after the adoption of the budget resolution. This comparison is needed to enforce section 302(f) of the Budget Act, which creates a point of order against measures that would breach the section 302(a) discretionary action allocation of new budget authority for the committee that reported the measure. It is also needed to implement section 311(b), which exempts committees that comply with their allocations from the point of order under section 311(a).

The third table compares the current levels of discretionary appropriations for fiscal year 2007 with the "section 302(b)" suballocations of discretionary budget authority and outlays among Appropriations subcommittees. The comparison is also needed to enforce section 302(f) of the Budget Act because the point of order under that section equally applies to measures that would breach the applicable section 302(b) suballocation.

The fourth table gives the current level for 2008 of accounts identified for advance appropriations under section 401 of H. Con. Res. 376. This list is needed to enforce section 401 of the budget resolution, which creates a point of order against appropriation bills that contain advance appropriations that are: (i) not identified in the statement of managers or (ii) would cause the aggregate amount of such appropriations to exceed the level specified in the resolution.

The fifth table provides the current level of the nondefense reserve fund for emergencies established by section 501 of H. Con. Res. 376. The table is required by section 505 of the budget resolution, and is needed to determine whether an increase in the reserve fund, allocations and aggregates will be necessary for any pending legislation that contains emergency-designated discretionary budget authority.

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, September 7, 2006.

Hon. JIM NUSSLE,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The enclosed report shows the effects of Congressional action on the fiscal year 2007 budget and is current through September 1, 2006. This report is submitted under section 308(b) and in aid of section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended.

The estimates of budget authority, outlays, and revenues are consistent with the technical and economic assumptions of H. Con. Res. 376, the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 2007, as approved by the House of Representatives. Although the House and the Senate have not reached agreement on a concurrent budget resolution for 2007, H. Con. Res. 376 has the force and effect in the House for all purposes of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 as though adopted by the Congress pursuant to House Resolution 818.

Pursuant to section 402 of H. Con. Res. 95, the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 2006, provisions designated as emergency requirements are exempt from enforcement of the budget resolution. As a result, the enclosed current level report excludes the exempt amounts that affect 2007 spending (see footnote 2 of the report).

Since my last letter, dated June 28, the Congress has cleared and the President has signed the following acts that affect budget authority, outlays, or revenues for fiscal year 2007:

The Coast Guard and Maritime Transportation Act of 2006 (Public Law 109-241);
The Returned Americans Protection Act of 2006 (Public Law 109-250);

An act approving the renewal of import restrictions contained in the Burmese Freedom Democracy Act of 2003 (Public Law 109-251);

An act to provide funding authority to facilitate the evacuation of persons from Lebanon (Public Law 109-268); and

The Pension Protection Act of 2006 (Public Law 109-280).

In addition, corrections have been made to the final scoring for both the Native American Technical Corrections Act of 2006 (Public Law 109-221) and the Mine Improvement and New Emergency Response Act of 2006 (Public Law 109-236). These corrections resulted in an $11 million increase and a $4 million increase in revenues, respectively.

Sincerely,

DONALD B. MARRON,
Acting Director.

IRAQ WATCH

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 4, 2005, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. LARSON) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening as we come to the floor again as part of what we have come to call our Iraq Watch, and I am grateful that we are joined by several colleagues this evening, Mr. BISHOP from New York, Mr. McDERMOTT from Washington State, and others that will be joining us throughout this early part of the evening.

Now, let me start, as we always have, by recognizing the valiant service of the men and women who wear the uniform. And as our leader Ms. PELOSI often says, our men and women who wear the uniform deserve a leadership that is worthy of the sacrifice that they make on a daily basis. I am proud of this Congress, inasmuch as it has been able to distinguish the warriors from the war, and so we continue to honor those brave men and women who wear the uniform of this country and who sacrifice daily on our behalf.

And yet, as events unfold around the globe, but specifically in the Middle East as it relates to Iraq, what we find is even amongst those who initially favored the war, such as pundits like Thomas Friedman, who now have come to say that we have got to come to the realization that we are no longer midwifing democracy in Iraq but, in essence, babysitting an insurgent civil war. So this evening we come here to discuss Iraq from the context of the mistakes that have been made and the need for accountability, starting with the resignation of the Secretary of Defense.

At some point, somewhere along the line, there has got to be accountability for the actions that have transpired in Iraq. We were wrong about the information that led up to going into the war. In fact, the strongest critics against us going into the war were people such as Scowcroft, Eagleburger, Kissinger and Baker, hardly left-leaning liberals, but people who understood international policy and the severe consequences that would result if we ended up going into Iraq without the full support of the world. And so Americans everywhere kind of have to scratch their heads and say, how is it that we had the entire world with us when we invaded Afghanistan and end up virtually with no support in Iraq.

It is clear from discussions with policymakers and former generals that a series of mistakes have been made, not the least of which was going against our own national policy, the Weinberger Doctrine, which stated very clearly the United States should never go to war against another country unless its vital interests are threatened; and the Powell corollary to that, if we do go in, we should go in with overwhelming force.

In both cases, that doctrine and corollary were rejected in favor of the doctrine of preemption and unilateralism, which has left our allies looking at us as we twist slowly in the winds of Iraq, as Friedman says, babysitting an insurrection and civil war while our most precious of resources, our men and women who serve this country, are in harm's way.

We need a new direction. We ought to send a very clear signal to the world, to the people in this country that it is time for accountability; that it is time to say that mistakes were made and then move on. And we can start with Defense Secretary Rumsfeld stepping down, as he should.

The head of the 9/11 Commission has indicated to both Republicans and Democrats alike that we need to continue to adopt those resolutions and recommendations that they have found in their studies, 20 of which still aren't implemented, which is over half. And so in order to prosecute the war on terror, we have got to be able to accomplish those goals. But without a Congress that wants to hold the President accountable, that is not going to happen.

A gentleman that has been doing just that and speaking out in his district has been TIM BISHOP of New York, and at this time, I would like to yield to him.

Mr. BISHOP of New York. I thank my friend from Connecticut for yielding, and I also thank him for his ongoing leadership on this and so many other issues of importance here in our Congress.

Let me just pick up on a few comments that were made with respect to oversight and accountability. And I find it particularly ironic, when one studies the tragic history of our involvement in Iraq, and whether it begins with the misuse of prewar intelligence or whether it begins in effect with the reasons that we were given for going to war, none of which turned out to be accurate, all of which turned out really to be more about marketing a war than about a real threat that imperiled our safety and security, that we are now being told by these very same people that have led us so far astray, that have so weakened our Nation and so exposed us to a war on terror that we must fight much more vigilantly than we have thus far; we are now being told that these are the people that we must continue to keep in leadership positions in order to keep us free and safe. And, in fact, it is their very leadership, and I am speaking specifically about the Secretary of Defense and other civilian leaders in the Pentagon, that have led us so far astray.

When you chronicle the mistakes that were made in Iraq, we best-cased the result of our involvement in Iraq and we worst-cased the threat that was there. We invaded with too few troops. We have certainly sufficient troops to overthrow a regime that spent a fraction on defense relative to what we spend on defense, but we invaded with too few troops to secure the peace. We failed to secure the borders. We failed to secure ammo dumps. We failed to see to it that our troops were properly equipped and outfitted, and that was because the leadership of the Pentagon refused to accept the warnings that had been given by so many different experts in this area, that we weren't going to be welcomed with open arms, that we weren't going to be treated as conquering heroes and liberators, but in fact we were going to be viewed as occupiers and invaders.

But our troops arrived with insufficient body armor, with insufficiently armored vehicles because this insurgency was not recognized or anticipated. And yet we have these very same people telling us that they are the ones that are going to keep us safe.

I will just say one other thing, and then yield back. I think this is an administration that specializes in giving us false choices. We are now being presented with the latest false choice, and that is that those of us who do not support the "stay the course" in Iraq can be accused of wanting to abandon the war on terror.

Nothing could be further from the truth. There is not a soul on our side of the aisle that would advocate abandoning the war on terror. Everyone on our side of the aisle would advocate continuing to wage that war, but to wage it with the full resources of this Nation and to wage it much more intelligently than we have thus far.

The sad truth about our involvement in Iraq is that it has stripped us of the resources that we need to wage the war on terror. It is why Osama bin Laden remains at large 5 years after September 11, and it is why al Qaeda remains as powerful as it is.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. If the gentleman will let me ask a question, knowing you are from New York and knowing specifically you are from Long Island, and, of course, with a solemn date approaching us of September 11, do most citizens in New York understand, in your estimation, the difference between the war on global terrorism and the war in Iraq and see them as different subject matters, or, as IKE SKELTON on the Armed Services Committee has been so nobly trying to demonstrate, the difference between the insurrection and civil war in Iraq and the war on terror? Or has the administration's attempts to blur the lines confused people? What is the sense of New Yorkers?

Mr. BISHOP of New York. My sense is that New Yorkers have not been fooled. My sense is that New Yorkers, and there is hardly a New Yorker who did not lose a loved one or did not lose a friend in the Twin Towers, most New Yorkers recognize that we are fighting two separate and distinct wars, despite, as you say, the administration's efforts to blur the distinction and to cojoin them in an effort to justify something that the vast majority of Americans now recognize was a tragic mistake.

When I go around my district, one of the questions I ask people is do they feel safer today, in August of 2006, than they did on September 12, 2001, and the answer overwhelmingly is no. The answer overwhelmingly is no.

I think most people recognize in my district, and I am grateful for this, that the war in Iraq, which was purportedly to make us safe, make us more safe, has in fact imperiled us beyond where we were the day we invaded.

I think that that is an important recognition and an important distinction for those of us who recognize the distinction needs to continue to be made.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. We have been joined by the gentleman from Massachusetts. I think for a number of our listeners, really the whole idea for coming to this floor came from BILL DELAHUNT. The idea really wasn't hatched here on the floor of the House of Representatives. It was an idea that was hatched in town hall meetings in Nantucket and on the Cape that BILL DELAHUNT held. He encouraged other Members, including myself, who had them in West Hartford and Manchester, Connecticut, and from there, because our voices were muffled. Or if you spoke out against the war, you were deemed unpatriotic. But it was because of his efforts in organizing an Iraq Watch that this has persisted and the truth has been able to continue to come out with regard to our involvement.

At this time I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, the founder of this great movement.

Mr. DELAHUNT. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I think, tragically, and I mean this sincerely, tragically those of us who spoke out early against the invasion in Iraq, because we believed that there was not significant evidence which established that Iraq was a clear and present danger to the United States and our allies, we have been proven to be correct.

TIM BISHOP, our colleague from New York, used the term "abandoned." Accusations have been made that some who have criticized the competence and the rationale of this administration regarding Iraq have "abandoned" the war on terror. That is patently false. That is untrue. There is no relationship between the war against terrorism and the war in Iraq.

Now, let me put forth a hypothesis: this administration abandoned the war against terror in a very real way when we were distracted by the neoconservative vision of invading Iraq, because the consequence of the invasion of Iraq was in a large degree the diversion of those assets and initiatives that were necessary to secure Afghanistan, where al Qaeda had been harbored, where al Qaeda thrived, and where there was an opportunity to apprehend Osama bin Laden.

But, no, we were more interested in Saddam Hussein, who was an arch-enemy of Osama bin Laden. Osama bin Laden considered Saddam Hussein an apostate, an infidel, an enemy of his version, his perverted version, of Islam. In fact, in 1994, it was Osama bin Laden who approached the Saudi royal family and suggested they combine forces and depose Saddam Hussein because he was an apostate; he was a defiler of Islam.

So what do we have today? We have a situation in Afghanistan where the headlines now read: "A Resurgence of the Taliban." That government that harbored and gave support to Osama bin Laden and al Qaeda, they are coming back. Another headline in the past 2 days, the British general who heads the NATO deployment in Afghanistan made this plea: "I need more troops or we will lose Afghanistan."

So who abandoned the war on terror? Who abandoned the war on terror? Do not confuse the war in Iraq and the war on terror. We all have an obligation to educate ourselves about the differences, the nuances, the realities on the ground. This is too important. This is about our future, and this is about the future of American generations far into the next decades.

I know my colleague from Maryland who has joined us, CHRIS VAN HOLLEN, has a specific interest in Afghanistan. What is happening today in Afghanistan is a disgraceful example of the incompetence and the legacy of this administration's policy by going into Iraq.

And what have we achieved? We have achieved a resurgence of the Taliban and other terrorist elements in Afghanistan. By the way, what else we have achieved is we have created a new superpower in the region, Iran. Because while we are standing here discussing among ourselves this region in the world, let it be very clear to the American people that there is an emerging warm relationship between Iran and the new government in Iraq. Do your homework, and you will discover that there is a bilateral military cooperation agreement that exists today between Iraq and Iran.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. I would like to ask the gentleman a question: What you are telling me and you are telling our viewing audience this evening, you voted, and I believe the vote was near unanimous in the House of Representatives and the Senate, to invade Afghanistan in Operation Enduring Freedom; is that correct?

Mr. DELAHUNT. I voted, and, again, with one exception out of 435 Members, there was a unanimous vote here in this Chamber, bipartisan, Republicans and Democrats and Independent, to go to Afghanistan and destroy al Qaeda and find Osama bin Laden and apprehend him.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Was not the rest of the world united in that effort with the United States?

Mr. DELAHUNT. I have this vivid memory of the day after 9/11, a headline that appeared in the paper of record in France that said: "We Are All Americans Today." We had support in every corner of the world for what we were doing. We would have succeeded in the war on terror by now. But, no. But, no. We invaded Iraq, and clearly that has created implications for our national security.

If I may just for one moment, and I am not alone when I say this, it is interesting, today in the Wall Street Journal a former Republican Speaker of the House of Representatives, Newt Gingrich of Georgia, who succeeded in securing a majority for the Republican Party in this House in 1994, was quoted. Remember, this is a Republican, a leader. The speculation is that he is considering running for the Presidency in 2008.

This is what Newt Gingrich had to say. Just consider the following: "Osama bin Laden is still at large." I agree. "Afghanistan is still insecure." I would suggest that it is unraveling. "Iraq is still violent." 3,000 deaths a month. "North Korea and Iran are still building nuclear weapons and missiles. Terrorist recruiting is still occurring in the United States, Canada, Great Britain and across the planet."

Those are Newt Gingrich's words, today, in the Wall Street Journal.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. So how is it then, given all that you have said, that with the world behind us in support of Operation Enduring Freedom, that we would, if you will excuse the phrase, why did we "cut and run" in Afghanistan and then focus on Iraq?

As the gentleman from New York pointed out, people are able to distinguish between the enemy who actually knocked down the Twin Towers in New York, struck the Pentagon, and, as Tim Roemer pointed out yesterday, were it not for those brave souls on Flight 93, would have hit this Capitol. How did we go from the whole world being behind us, abandoning what has become, as Mr. VAN HOLLEN often points out, the forgotten front in Afghanistan, take our eye off the prize and expend the amount of money, and, most importantly, our most precious resource, our men and women who serve this country in Iraq?

Mr. DELAHUNT. Well, if one reviews the memoir of Paul O'Neill, former Republican Secretary of the Treasury, who served in this Bush administration for 2 years, and in that capacity was a member of the National Security Council, you will discover that he was as surprised as anyone when 10 days after this President was inaugurated at a National Security Council meeting, there was a discussion about Iraq and the need to remove Saddam Hussein who, about 6 weeks later on February 22 of 2001, months before 9/11, there was a meeting when Secretary Rumsfeld had a map of the oil fields in Iraq spread out on a table.

The discussion, it was prepared by the Defense Intelligence Agency, and there was a discussion about how those oil fields would be divvied up between nations and various big oil companies.

Mr. VAN HOLLEN. Thank you, Mr. DELAHUNT, and thank you, Mr. LARSON, and others who are gathered here to talk about these very important national security questions. As you pointed out, Mr. DELAHUNT and Mr. LARSON, we have taken our eye off the ball here. As we approach the terrible fifth anniversary of the tragic attacks of 2001, September 11, it is important to remember that the attacks upon our homeland were launched by al Qaeda from Afghanistan and had nothing to do with Iraq, nothing to do with Iraq.

Yet here, as we gather 5 years later, we have not finished the job in Afghanistan. We have not finished the job against al Qaeda. Indeed, the situation is now getting worse today than it was a year ago and even a year before that.

Now, the President has said in the last 10 days that he wants to have a national conversation about Iraq and national security, and he has delivered a number of speeches. But when you listen to what he has had to say, it is clear that unfortunately once again he is not interested in the national conversation. Conversation implies a give and take, a dialogue, an exchange of views.

But when you listen to the President, on the one hand he lays out his idea of what he wants to go forward and then engages in finger-pointing and name calling of anybody who disagrees with him. Secretary Rumsfeld and Vice President CHENEY have gone around this country engaging in name calling and finger-pointing against anyone who disagrees with them.

They got all the answers, they tell us. You know what? For years and years they have gotten away with that by the majority in this Congress. The Republican majority in this Congress has essentially said, yes, you two have all the answers, and we are going to write you a blank check, and we are not going to ask you the hard questions.

Well, I am glad the President wants to have a big national conversation. Let's make this a real conversation on national security. I say, let's have it, because I think when the American people look at the facts on the ground, and the fact that this administration has made our world and our country a much more dangerous place than it otherwise had to be, that people will ask questions about whose judgment is best in these matters.

Let us just think back to May 2003 aboard the aircraft carrier USS Lincoln. The President gave a speech with a big banner behind him, "mission accomplished," mission accomplished. That was May 2003, more than 3 years ago. We haven't finished the mission in Afghanistan, and we have got a mess on our hands in Iraq.

Let us just think back to more than a year ago. Vice President CHENEY said that the insurgency in Iraq was in its, quote, final throes, the last gasp.

Well, we just had a Pentagon report come out a few days ago. Here is what they had to say about that. In addition to a budding civil war or a civil war, they say the Sunni-based insurgency remains, quote, potent and viable.

For years now Secretary Rumsfeld has been giving us these sorts of rosy scenarios about what would happen in Iraq, and he has been proven wrong again and again and again.

So when the President and his people say to the American people, we have got all the answers, I think the American people get it now that they don't have all the answers. We need to have this debate and this discussion.

Let me just quickly go back to the issue of Afghanistan, because the world was with us. We were united as a Nation, we were united as a NATO alliance, and we were united as an international community. The United Nations unanimously passed a resolution saying they were with the United States in its war on terror and its war on al Qaeda.

Yet, today, al Qaeda is still active, they are still plotting, they are still trying to do harm to Americans and others around the world. Yet, if you look at what is happening in Afghanistan right now, we have got to be concerned. The United States is not doing all that it should in Afghanistan. The major resurgence has occurred in the southern part of Afghanistan. That has been the stronghold for the Taliban. Yet we have reduced, reduced, the number of U.S. forces in southern Afghanistan.

Second, we, the Bush administration, disbanded the only unit within the CIA whose specific mission was to go after al Qaeda. They said, we don't need it anymore. That's what they said about a month ago. That was before the President again quoted Osama bin Laden a few days ago in one of his speeches for why we still need to be concerned. Well, we should be concerned. That is why what we are doing in Afghanistan has not made sense.

Third, we just learned the other day that the opium production in Afghanistan is at an all-time record, all-time record. We know that the funds from those sales of those drugs are being used to fuel al Qaeda and the Taliban.

Finally, finally, we just learned yesterday of this agreement now between the Government of Pakistan, General Musharraf, has entered into this agreement with the pro-Taliban militia, and the agreement says we, the Pakistan military, will now take a hands-off posture along the northwest frontier, that was the Waziristan part of Pakistan where the Taliban have regrouped and where al Qaeda has regrouped and what they have used to launch attacks into Afghanistan.

Now Musharraf is saying, no, that is not what he meant. But it is very clear he has essentially said Pakistan military isn't coming after you anymore, you Taliban who are in that part of Pakistan. We have a hands-off policy. That is simply a signal to them that they can now more freely operate to try to step up their attacks in Afghanistan, that they can continue to collaborate with al Qaeda.

So here we are, here we are coming up on the fifth anniversary of those tragic attacks launched from Afghanistan by al Qaeda because they were given safe haven by the Taliban, and we haven't finished the job, and we have reduced the amount of resources that we are committing to completing the mission. Mission accomplished, nowhere near it

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would remind all Members to refrain from engaging in personalities toward the President and Vice President.

The gentleman from Connecticut may resume.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The President has asked to engage, and the gentleman made several good points and one of them was about a new dialogue, long overdue, and I think welcomed by the American people. But as the gentleman from Maryland points out, a one-way street.

Certainly no one knows better than the gentleman from Washington State. No one was vilified more, both on this floor and in public, because of love of country and speaking out, than JIM McDERMOTT.

I recognize the gentleman from Washington State.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Thank you very much. As I sit here and I listen to this today, I think about the Katrina event. You saw the President go down and throw his arm around the guy who was fixing Katrina. He said, Good job, Brownie. I mean, that has become a laughingstock.

Well, this President has done the same thing with Rumsfeld. Beginning in 2004, when Abu Ghraib came out, the President showed up and said the Secretary is doing a great job, right? This will not change as long as the President keeps Rumsfeld in that job, because Rumsfeld is the controlling power behind it all.

As long as the President puts him out there and let's him run, you are going to continue to have this stuff. Rumsfeld went to Iraq in July while we were on vacation, right at the end, and they found the bodies of 20 kidnapped and murdered bus drivers the day he arrived. A bomber blew himself up and killed seven people. The Secretary of Defense made what I consider to be an interesting statement in response to that. He said, each time I come to Iraq, I see progress.

Now, no one who has any kind of realistic view of this could say that kind of thing. You could not be watching what is going on, when it is to our troops who are dying, or the wounded who are coming home, or the thousands of Iraqis who are being killed and say, I see progress. There is simply, you have got your military people talking about the fact that it is coming apart, you had Rumsfeld this week say to some National Guardsmen from California, no, you can't go home, I know your enlistment is up, but you have got to stay here for another 120 days.

We are going to send you into Baghdad to calm things down. It is a mess, and it has been a mess from the start because Rumsfeld would never listen. Like the President, he wouldn't listen. General Shinseki came in and said, you are going to need 300,000 troops. Rumsfeld said, you don't know what you are saying, you are out of here. Here is your retirement. Get out of here.

That is the response to anybody who comes into this administration and talks. Unless the President will dump Rumsfeld, you are not going to get any change in the policy. What is the alternative to the people of this country? The only alternative they have is on election day to take the gavel away from the Republican majority so that we can have hearings run by Democrats where some questions will be asked, where there will be some accountability so that things will begin to come up into the public view.

We have never found out what Halliburton's contracts are all about. We haven't found out who is responsible for Abu Ghraib. No, there isn't a soldier or a sailor or a marine or anyone near the military.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Is the gentleman suggesting that the more than $9 billion that is unaccounted for, that this Congress actually ought to go and find out what happened with those no-bid contracts, $9 billion?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Only if you care about taxpayer money. I mean, the examples are so bald and so bad that it is almost laughable if it wasn't what was going on today and it was taking us down the wrong trail.

What has been said here today is, I was reading the Middle Eastern papers today, everybody says that half of Afghanistan is now under control of the Taliban. That is universal in the press.

The British general there is saying we are losing this thing; he is worried. We will not get a change unless we get some hard questions asked. We are never going to get them from the Republicans because they are going to rubber-stamp what Mr. Bush and Mr. Rumsfeld and all the rest of that bunch put together. I personally think this election is the most important election we have had in my lifetime.

You say to yourself maybe I am getting old or something, but I went through Vietnam, and I went through a whole bunch of things. But this one, if we have 2 more years of "stay the course," God knows where we are going to be economically and militarily and politically and diplomatically in the world. We have got to get some change, and Rumsfeld would be a start. There are some other people that should go, but if the President can't see that Rumsfeld cannot handle it; he threw out Paul O'Neill as the Secretary of the Treasury, and he threw out some other people, Colin Powell and some others went down the road, but he keeps the guy who got us in the mess because it means he would have to admit that he made a huge mistake, and he can't do it. He can't do it, and that is the biggest problem he has.

As politicians, sometimes you have to say, "I was wrong. I made a mistake."

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. The gentleman from Maine who has been to the floor several times to talk about this very subject recently traveled to New Orleans also where he traveled with the Army Corps of Engineers where he saw firsthand what was going on there. As the gentleman from Washington states, one of the many salient points he made is the lack of accountability and the corollary between what has happened here domestically with Hurricane Katrina and Iraq.

I yield to the gentleman from Maine (Mr. ALLEN).

Mr. ALLEN. I thank you all for the opportunity to be here and discuss some of these important issues that we don't get to do during any debate on resolutions or legislation. These are among the most important issues we deal with.

I was down in New Orleans and in the gulf coast of Mississippi where the incompetence of this administration was on display for everyone to see. The same incompetence is on display with respect to the problems we have created in Iraq. And I say "created" because I do believe that in many ways this administration has created more problems in the Middle East than they have solved.

I agree with the gentleman from Washington that a good part of this has to do with the inadequate leadership at the Department of Defense, but we should never forget that this policy is driven by the President and the Vice President and there is a unanimity of thinking in this administration about the Middle East, the conviction that we could simply force our will on several hundred million people and bend them to become something that we want them to become, regardless of their own intentions.

But I wanted to speak for a minute tonight about how Congress, this Republican Congress, has aided and abetted the administration by giving up its constitutional role of exercising oversight over the executive branch. It is absolutely stunning to me how both the House and the Senate have done everything that they could to rubber stamp administration policies in Iraq and cover up for them.

A few examples, going back to when Democrats controlled the Congress in the 1980s, there was an Oversight Subcommittee on Armed Services, and that oversight subcommittee discovered those $500 hammers and $6,000 toilet seats and put an end to much of that kind of overcharging. But when Republicans took over, they eliminated the Oversight Subcommittee on Armed Services and billions of questionable Halliburton contracts have gone unexamined, unexamined by either Armed Services or by the Intelligence Committee or the Committee on Government Reform.

The minority staff on the Committee on Government Reform has identified over 200 specific misleading statements made by the administration in the run-up to the Iraq war. Over on the Senate side, remember they had Phase II, the Senate Intelligence Committee was going to do a Phase II investigation.

What they meant by that was instead of beating up on the intelligence agencies like the CIA themselves, they were going to look at the misuse of intelligence by the administration. That was Phase II of their study.

It hasn't happened. Years have gone by, and the chairman of the committee has said several times, "We are going to get to that later." But they are clearly not going to do it before any election.

In 2005, House Republicans voted down a resolution demanding an investigation of Iraq intelligence. When you look at the House and you look at the Senate, there is no question what this Republican Congress has been doing. Rather than gather information, evidence, that could clarify what has happened in the past and guide us to a better policy in the future, it is all politics all the time and that means protecting the President from being exposed, protecting the Vice President from being exposed, protecting Donald Rumsfeld from being exposed for having not spoken the truth.

So this entire Congress is complicit.

The Senate held a few hearings after Abu Ghraib, but no Senate committee has conducted a comprehensive public probe of the alleged abuses at Guantanamo Bay, Abu Ghraib, Bagram or the secret CIA facilities that the President just acknowledged yesterday.

In the House, the majorities on three House committees voted down resolutions seeking documents about detainee abuse. Democrats have been saying we need the information in order to do a better job in the future, and Republicans have circled the wagons around the administration and refused to basically allow oversight.

On Iraq reconstruction, you go back to 2003, Donald Rumsfeld's Pentagon awarded a $7 billion sole-source contract to Halliburton for reconstruction. And 3 years later, auditors identified more than $1 billion in questionable and unsupported costs under that contract. A billion dollars in Washington is still real money. If Congress was simply doing its constitutionally mandated function, we would be holding hearings on that. But no, the Republicans are not prepared to investigate Halliburton. Vice President CHENEY was once the CEO of Halliburton, and this is ground we dare not go into, apparently, and yet we have to, to fulfill our constitutional responsibility.

That is what we are basically saying here. This Republican Congress has failed the country. The administration has failed the country. And when Democrats control this chamber again, whether you have a Republican President or a Democratic President, we are going to make sure that this Congress acts like the Congress contemplated in the Constitution and do our jobs.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. The gentleman from New York started and began this conversation by talking about what has transpired, and the gentleman from Maryland talked about the President and his calling over the last several days, both he and the Secretary of Defense and the Vice President have been out there, along with the Secretary of State, talking about this new agenda, and I believe the gentleman from New York has some thoughts on that.

Mr. BISHOP of New York. It seems like we are being treated to a late summer/early fall offensive, I would say smoke screen on the part of this administration to convince the American people that we need to stay the course in order to be safe.

Basically what they are doing is they are engaged in defending the indefensible. The only way they can defend a war that the American people have clearly turned against is to present it in a context that makes it appear to be reasonable or defensible, but in fact quite the opposite is the case.

I think all of us as elected officials, we have no more solemn responsibility than to provide for the safety and security of those who have elected us to represent them. But I think a fair-minded person has to look at the record of where this administration has taken this Nation and where this Congress, complicit in the strategies and objectives of this administration, have taken this country.

Every single place you look, it reeks with failure. The 9/11 Commission presented to us 41 carefully crafted bipartisan recommendations. This Congress has only acted on 20 or 21 of them. The 9/11 Commission, again a bipartisan group, has given this administration and this Congress 14 Ds, 5 Fs and 2 incompletes on those recommendations.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. What is the Congress's report card again?

Mr. BISHOP of New York. Fourteen Ds, five Fs and two incompletes; and this is a leadership that is going to keep us safe and secure?

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. And we are approaching the fifth anniversary.

Mr. BISHOP of New York. We are approaching the fifth anniversary, and we have outstanding work on the part of this commission, bipartisan work which is what we ought to be striving for. We ought to be approaching the safety and security of this Nation in a bipartisan way.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Are any of those issues going to be brought to the floor? Those recommendations, those outstanding recommendations, will any of them be brought to the floor before we adjourn for elections?

Mr. BISHOP of Utah. I am not aware of anything on the calendar.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. DELAHUNT).

Mr. DELAHUNT. If I can just go back to a point made by Tom Allen. The lack of accountability, the abrogation, if you will, of this body's constitutional responsibility to conduct oversight.

We serve on different committees. It happens to be the senior Democrat, the ranking member, on a subcommittee of International Relations that is entitled Oversight and Investigations. We have not held one serious hearing relative to Iraq in the past 2 years. And I know that, prior to that, for the past 5 years, Iraq has been off the chart in terms of the committee's considerations. You don't talk about it unless there is good news.

What I wanted to do was to bring before the committee, not Secretary Rumsfeld because we have heard enough from him. He is an F. He flunked. But I wanted to bring before the committee the men that lead our military and have served in the course of their service to this country in roles implicating Iraq, in some cases very directly in Iraq.

Not one of these men have ever been invited to any committee in the Congress so that we would have an opportunity to hear what they had to say.

So one by one, they felt compelled to speak out themselves and educate us and the American people as to the truth and the reality of Iraq and the incompetence of this administration and most specifically Donald Rumsfeld.

Let me just review a few.

Lieutenant General Greg Newbold, he is the top operations officer for the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He was involved in the planning. He is Commanding General, First Marine Division, with Legion of Merit, Navy and Marine Corps Commendation Medals. He is a highly decorated, well-respected general. He did not seek a promotion because he felt compelled to leave. Here is what he had to say.

"What we are living with now are the consequences of successive policy failures." He said that this year.

Major General Paul Eaton, who was given the responsibility but not the resources to train Iraqi security forces, and we know what a joke that has been, here is what he had to say, "Two and a half more years of that leadership," he was referring to Donald Rumsfeld and the civilian leadership, "two and a half more years of that leadership was too long for my Nation, for my Army, and for my family." What an indictment. What an indictment.

Lieutenant General John Riggs, "They only need the military advice when it satisfies their agenda." When it satisfies their agenda, that is when they would call in a general and say, This is our agenda, what do you think, General?

And then General Wesley Clark, "They pressed for open warfare before the diplomacy was finished. It was a tragic mistake. It was a strategic blunder."

Mr. McDERMOTT. We could go on with this for a long time, but we have got Major General John Batiste. He was the commander of the 1st Division in Iraq, and he said: "Rumsfeld and his team have turned what should have been a deliberate victory in Iraq into a prolonged challenge." I mean, that is a guy who was on the ground, who was there when the war was going on.

General Zinni, who was the central command of the whole forces, he served in every level of command, and he said: "We are paying the price for a lack of credible planning, or the lack of a plan." Ten years' worth of planning was thrown away. That is why we are in the mess we are. Because Rumsfeld said we don't need these guys like Zinni, who is my number one guy in the U.S. Central Command. That means he headed everything in the whole area of the Middle East.

Major General Swannack said: "I do not believe Secretary Rumsfeld is the right person to fight that war based on his absolute failures in managing the war against Saddam in Iraq." Now, he was commander of the 82nd Airborne. We all know about the Airborne. We know these are real soldiers. These are people who follow the leader. They do not speak out until they cannot stand it any longer.

And, finally, Lieutenant General Paul Ripper said: "If I was President, I would have relieved him 3 years ago." And he said that in 2006.

Now, this man was wounded in action in Vietnam. He won the Silver Star medal with a gold star, the Legion of Merit, the Bronze Star. This man has been wounded, has stood up in the worst kind of war. And, remember, Rumsfeld never served. Bush never served. Cheney never served. Wolfowitz never served. You cannot find anybody who has ever been in a war. And the guys who know, who have done it, who sent people out to die and been right out there with them say things like, If I was President, I would have relieved him 3 years ago. That is 2003. That is when it started, when they started ill prepared without the battle armor, without the vehicle armor, without sufficient supplies. We are going to just run in and do it, and we are going to be out in 6 months. Remember when they told that lie? And all of us stood around and said, 6 months? Really? This is going to be a cakewalk.

They didn't tell the truth to the American people or to their own troops. And that is why guys like this say get them out of there if we are going to have any change.

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlemen from Maine, New York, Maryland, Massachusetts, and Washington State for coming down here this evening.

We come down here out of love of country and the desire to fulfill our constitutional responsibility. There is no doubt in my mind that our colleagues on the other side of the aisle love their country as much as we do.

I cannot understand why an administration continues to attack those who, out of love of country, speak out and dare to speak truth to power, that are willing to ask the unimagined questions and perhaps give unwelcomed answers to the administration. But that is the work that is required of elected Members of the United States Congress under our Constitution. That is our sworn obligation to the people of this great country of ours and will continue to be our obligation.

It is our sincere hope that we can move this Nation in a new direction. And with a Democratic-controlled Congress, we believe that is the best hope for our colleagues on the other side to join with us in creating what is in the best interest of our troops, our families, and the very security of this Nation.

Thank you, gentlemen, each of you, for joining us this evening.

NATIONAL SECURITY AND ELECTROMAGNETIC PULSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 4, 2005, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BARTLETT) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, among many priorities that the country and the Congress face, our national security is probably pre-eminent today in the minds of many people and in the Congress and in our administration. And today I would like to talk about one aspect of national security that will probably be unknown to a great many Americans, and to those few who know about and have studied it, this will remind them of the potential for this threat to our country, indeed, to our whole society.

Our first glimpse of the possibility of this threat occurred in 1961. It was in the Pacific and we were then doing a series of nuclear tests, and this was our first and last high altitude test. It was over Johnston Island, and the weapon was detonated above the atmosphere the first time that we had done that. No one knew what was going to happen as a result of that test, and the consequences were unexpected and really quite striking.

Hawaii was about 800 miles away. If you think back to 1961, we did not have all of the electronics that we have today. We were more in an electrical infrastructure than than we were in an electronic infrastructure, and the electrical infrastructures are very much more robust than an electronic infrastructure because you are dealing with big structures and heavy wires and so forth. Even so, the effects of this detonation above the atmosphere resulted in the shutdown of electrical circuits. There were many disruptions in electrical and certainly in electronic equipment such as existed those days in Hawaii 800 miles away. The Soviets were also doing testing simultaneously with ours and they had more experience with this phenomenon. We now have a name for this phenomenon. We call it electromagnetic pulse, or EMP.

And here I have a chart which shows very schematically what is happening. We detonate the weapon above the atmosphere, and there is an immediate distribution of gamma rays that travel at the speed of light that will strike every object within line of sight. And when these gamma rays reach our atmosphere, they produce what is called Compton electrons, all of this essentially at the speed of light, and these Compton electrons then become a force which is very much like a nuclear storm magnified many, many times. And if you think, Mr. Speaker, of the disruptions that a robust solar storm can produce to our communications here, you can get some idea as to the potential impact of an EMP. It is sometimes called high altitude or HEMP.

We since have learned a great deal more about that than we knew then, but the feature that we learned then was that wide areas are affected. You can have very high field strengths, and here it says 50 kilovolts per meter. We have since learned, as reported by the Russian generals, and I will come to that report in a few moments, that the Soviets purportedly designed and built electromagnetic weapons that would produce 200 kilovolts per meter; so that is four times larger than the number which is given here in this chart. This was May of 1986. That was 20-some years after the explosion, but a long time before these Russian generals were interviewed. There is a very broad frequency band running from very, very short wavelengths to very long wavelengths. The pulse lasts more than 2 minutes, but it comes on with such abruptness that our surge protectors for your computer and other devices are useless because the pulse is through the surge protector before it sees it. So there is now nothing out there the equivalent of EMP.

The next chart shows on the right that just about everything is affected by EMP. It has a missile which is taking off there. We are not even sure that we can launch through a robust EMP laydown. What I am told is that we tested our missiles and we found some deficiencies and we corrected that and we have done that several times, and the last time we corrected the deficiencies, we intentionally did not test again, hoping that we had fixed all the deficiencies. But knowing that if we tested and found deficiencies that that intelligence would probably get out to our enemies and they would know that we were vulnerable, and rather than run that risk, we believe that we had corrected all the deficiencies; so we have not tested, and, hopefully, a potential enemy will also believe that we have corrected all the deficiencies. But that is not a certainty. We do not yet know for certain that we could launch our ballistic missiles through an EMP laydown. It shows effects on automobiles.

By the way, if you have a car or truck that has a coil and a distributor, you are probably immune to EMP. But all modern cars, as you know when you take your car for service, has a lot of computers. Indeed, a computer is required for servicing your car. So all of the new vehicles are vulnerable to EMP. Airplanes, only a few of our military airplanes are EMP hardened. All of the other planes are vulnerable to EMP effects.

Here on the left it shows the coverage with the height of blast 60 miles and how large an area. That is line of sight, with the simple geometry of the Earth and the height. If you are 200 miles up, you cover a bigger area. And if you are 300 miles high up with the center of that in Iowa, Nebraska, about in that area, it covers our whole country; or the margins of our country in south Florida, northwest Washington State, and Maine, all are covered with a blast of about 300 miles high above Nebraska or Iowa.

The next chart is a little more detailed presentation of the blast area. And it shows that it is not simple concentric rings because of the dynamics of the detonation of a nuclear weapon. You have a distribution of intensities; but generally speaking, out at the margins of the country with 480 kilometers, about 300 miles, with a detonation of that blast, you see from the purple here that you have got about 50 percent of maximum at the margins of our country.

The level to which we tested is classified, but if the Russian generals are correct that they developed weapons at 200 kilovolts per meter, that would mean 100 kilovolts per meter at the margins of our country. And there is concern that even when we test and harden that we may not have hardened it to an adequate level.

The next chart answers an important question that I am sure a lot of people ask at about this point, and that is if there is such enormous vulnerability to EMP, why would you be talking about that and giving our potential adversaries a heads up that we are vulnerable? To help understand that, most Americans may not know about it, but every one of our potential enemies knows about it. I have here just one little chart which, as you can see, is not in English. It is in Russian, as a matter of fact. And although I cannot read Russian, I certainly can look at the sketches here. And what we see is EMP.

Here is a weapon detonated above the atmosphere. And here you see the effect of that. This is the EMP pulse here lasting a long time. By the way, the fact that the wavelengths in that pulse go from extremely short to extremely long mean that they can couple with almost everything.

I am told that the smallest electronic parts on the warehouse shelf will couple with some of the shortest waves. And long, long lines like railroad tracks will couple with the longest waves. As a matter of fact, they will even couple with wires that are buried several feet underground.

Without technical knowledge, what we are talking about almost seems like Buck Rogers and science fiction. A blast of a single weapon up to 300 miles in the sky, and by the way, if it were in the daytime and you were looking away from it, you would not even know it happened. If you were looking at it, obviously, you would see it because it was very bright, and it was line of sight.

You are not hurt by it. It has no effect on our bodies. But if you have an electronic watch, that will stop. If you get in your car, that probably will not run. The phones will not work. There will be no power grid. There are literally tens of thousands of what are called SCADA, which are little control devices in our power grid. And they all contain chips, micro-electronics. And many of them were manufactured by organizations that do not even exist now because they have been in the field for a long time.

And all of those are gone. Signals traveling through fiber will get there. But if you have anything other than optical switching, if you have electronic switching, the switches will be gone. And so even if you are using fiber, you still cannot transmit your data if you are using other-than-optical switching.

So this chart demonstrates very clearly that our enemies know about EMP, because this is from a Russian publication, and it shows the effects of EMP. This is the power grid. They show the transformers going out.

By the way, if our big transformers go out, there are no replacements on the shelf. The biggest ones are not even manufactured in this country. We will need to go to Europe or Scandinavia, and you place your order, and in a year to 18 months, they will have the transformer for you.

I was concerned about EMP, and I called a friend of mine, Tom Clancy, who I knew had an EMP scenario in one of his books. And he lives on the Eastern Shore of Maryland. I knew him. So I called Tom and asked him for some information on EMP.

He said, if you have read my book, you know as much about EMP as I know, but let me refer you to, in his opinion, the smartest man hired by the U.S. Government. And he gave me the name of a Dr. Lowell Wood who worked for Lawrence Livermore Lab, one of our big nuclear labs out in California.

Well, this was back, oh, probably 12, 13 years ago, a while ago. And cell phones were not all that popular. You may remember that we were using pagers. If you wanted to communicate with someone, why you paged them. And that went up to a satellite and back down to their pager. And they got the little message, please call so and so. I did that with Lowell Wood. I thought he was in California. And he happened to be in Washington. And of course the same satellite that would have brought the signal down to California brought it down to Washington. Within an hour, he was sitting with me in my office.

Dr. Lowell Wood was indeed a font of knowledge on electromagnetic pulse. I was concerned that, because of cost considerations, that our military was waiving EMP hardening on essentially all of its new weapons systems and that that made us vulnerable to an EMP attack.

And so I got in legislation the establishment of an EMP commission. And the EMP commission was set up and functioned for 2 years. Normally our commissions work for a year. But because of the details of this legislation, they were able to work for 2 years. They brought forth a big report. This is the executive summary of that report. And this was issued in 2004.

This is the Executive Summary of the Report of the Commission to Assess the Threat to the United States from Electromagnetic Pulse EMP Attack.

And here are a number of PowerPoint presentations that they prepared, because they were going around the country briefing a large number of organizations, Federal and State and private, on the results of their study.

The next chart shows the commissioners. Here you will see Dr. Johnnie Foster is the developer of almost all of our new atomic weapons. Dr. Bill Graham, who was the chair of this, was Rumsfeld's co-chair when they did that very important study on the emerging ballistic missile threat that came out a few years ago.

It is interesting. I spent a couple of days in Moscow with Bill Graham and Rumsfeld when we were briefing members of the Russian Duma so that they would understand that our withdrawal from this treaty that prohibited us from protecting ourselves against intercontinental ballistic missiles had nothing to do with Russia because we cannot imagine that we could produce a robust enough protection system to protect us against the literally thousands of intercontinental ballistic missiles that Russia has. But there are some new players on the scene out there, like China and North Korea and Iran and who knows who may get in line.

And we could, we felt, with the development of a system, the successful test just a few days ago, be able to take out a few weapons from a country like this.

Another very important member of this commission was Dr. Joan Woodward, who is the deputy director of the Sandia Labs out in Albuquerque, New Mexico. I was out visiting my son there who works at the labs. And he brought me home some material from the lab that led me to believe that they might have some knowledge that would be helpful in this EMP study.

So I asked for a briefing. I had not looked at the list and remembered specifically who was on this list of commissioners. And I came in for a 5-hour classified briefing on the commission's work. And Dr. Joan Woodward had at her disposal all of the resources of the Sandia Labs. So they did a really magnificent job of studying the threat, not just to our military but to our national infrastructure.

The next chart shows something which alarmed them. This is from their commission report. We have redacted here the names of the Russian generals. But they interviewed two Russian generals who told them that Russia had designed and built a super EMP nuclear weapon capable of generating 200 kilovolts per meter. That is an enormously high pulse.

Russian, Chinese and Pakistani scientists are working in North Korea. Now, I am not saying this. I am taking this from the report of the EMP commission. Russian, Chinese and Pakistani scientists are working in North Korea and could enable that country to develop an EMP weapon in the near future. Now, this is the assessment of the EMP commission.

The next chart just builds on the point that I made that most of our citizens may not know anything about EMP, because it is really a Buck Rogers Star Wars kind of a phenomena. It almost seems like science fiction.

The fact is that, although few of our people know about EMP, all of our potential enemies know about EMP.

And I just wanted to make that very clear, because I do not want anybody to have the notion that we are somehow informing a potential enemy of something that he does not know about.

This first quote here is a very interesting one. This is not exactly the quote as I remember, but it is a pretty good paraphrase, because I was there. It was May 2nd of 1999. And I was sitting in a hotel in Vienna, Austria, with ten other Members of our Congress and three members of the Russian Duma.

I can tell you exactly when we were there. We were there when the three prisoners, hostages, whatever you want to call them were released by Yugoslavia. You may remember that event. They were released to Jesse Jackson as you may remember.

For 2 days we sat in that hotel room hammering out a framework for an agreement. Five days later, that was voted by the G-8. Russia joined the G-7, because the only country that the Bosnians had enough respect for to be controlled by them was Russia. And when the G-7 joined with Russia, they used the framework agreement that we had developed. And that ended the hostilities there as you may remember.

Well, one of the three Russians there was Vladimir Lukin. He was the ambassador here at the end of Bush 1, the beginning of the Clinton administration. At the time we were there, he was the chair of their equivalent of our International Relations Committee in the Russian Duma.

He is a fairly short fellow with even shorter arms. And he was extremely angry. And he sat there for 2 days with his arms folded across his chest looking at the ceiling. And then he made this statement, and what he said was, as I remember it, "if we really wanted to hurt you with no threat of retaliation, we would launch an SLBM and we would detonate a nuclear weapon high above your country and shut down your power grid and your communications for 6 months or so."

That was Vladimir Lukin. Another Russian who was there, who was I think the third ranking Communist, and yes, there is still a big Communist Party in Russia, who was the third ranking Communist, Alexander Shurbanov. And he smiled and he said, "if one weapon would not do it, we have some spares, like I think at least 7,000 spares."

You see, the reason for no fear of retaliation was that if it was launched from the ocean, we would never know where it came from. Well, that was his comment.

Now, all of this is from the EMP commission. None of those are my statements. Chinese military writings describe EMP as the key to victory and describe scenarios where EMP is used against U.S. aircraft carriers in a conflict over Taiwan.

Again, a survey of worldwide military and scientific literature sponsored by the commission found widespread knowledge about EMP and its potential military utility, including in Taiwan, Israel, Egypt, India, Pakistan, Iran and North Korea.

This next bullet is kind of repeated in the next chart, so I will skip to this one. Iran has tested launching a Scud missile from a surface vessel, a launch mode that could support a national or transnational terrorist EMP attack against the United States.

It should be noted that you do not have to be very technically adroit or very competent to launch an EMP weapon, because if you miss by 100 miles that is just about as good as a direct hit because there is a large area that this covers.

A Scud missile can launch about 180 miles high. That will not blanket the whole United States, but a Scud missile launched from a ship off our coast could shut down all of New England and much of the mid-Atlantic area with an EMP blast. Now, if you thought recovery from Katrina was difficult, imagine an area many times that large with no remaining infrastructure in terms of communications or power. That is the problem we would have. If it blankets our Nation, of course, we have an essentially irresolvable problem.

The next chart continues with what our potential adversaries know about EMP, and again, all of this is from the EMP commission report. If the world's industrial countries fail to devise effective ways, and this is an interesting one from Iranian Journal in 1998, even before the present wild man who is there, if the world's industrial countries fail to devise effective ways to defend themselves against dangerous electronic assaults, then they will disintegrate within a few years. 150,000 computers belong to the U.S. Army. It is probably more than that now, and if the enemy forces succeeded in infiltrating the information network, which an EMP would do if it shuts us down, then the whole organization would collapse, the American soldiers could not function, nor would they be able to fire a single shot. Now, I am not sure that is totally true, because I think our guns are pretty much immune to the EMP, but it is largely true.

We have now about 35,000 people in South Korea. We believe that with the technology we have that we are a match for the million-man North Korean Army, but if the North Koreans were to launch an EMP weapon, just fire straight up, if you will, and detonate a weapon above the atmosphere, our soldiers would, in effect, be no taller in terms of combat capability than the North Korean soldiers who probably are pretty EMP immune because they do not have very sophisticated equipment.

Terrorist information warfare includes using the technology of directed energy weapons or electromagnetic pulse. This is the Iranian Journal. Terrorists have attempted to acquire non-nuclear radio frequency weapons. This is a statement from the EMP Commission.

So you see that essentially all of our presently believed potential enemies are writing about EMP. It is not that they do not know about it, and my concern is that most Americans do not know about it, which is why we are talking about it.

Why would they be interested in EMP? Again, this is from the commission. States or terrorists may well calculate that using a nuclear weapon for EMP test offers the greatest utility. We talk about asymmetric warfare. An EMP weapon is the ultimate asymmetric weapon. One little country with a Scud launcher and a crude nuclear weapon and a transsteamer from which they could launch it, and by the way, we cannot see with our satellites through the thinnest canvas. If the Scud launcher is on the deck and covered by a canvas, we could not distinguish it from baled hay or crates of bananas.

In fact, there is one interesting story on an EMP attack in our country, and this may be kind of a look at the future. It has our country attacked from the sea, and after the weapon is launched, the ship is sunk. So now even if you find the ships there are no fingerprints. The ship is gone.

Well, these are the reasons they may use it. EMP offers a bigger bang for the buck against U.S. military forces in a regional conflict or a means of damaging the U.S. homeland. There is no way that a nuclear weapon could be used to produce so much damage to our country as with an electromagnetic pulse detection by detonating it at high altitude.

If it took out all of Los Angeles or New York City, you would not have done anywhere near as much damage to our country as simply detonating it above the atmosphere and for using an EMP pulse which would shut down all of our communications and all of our power grids.

Mr. Speaker, think about a world, and it would not be quite this but nearly this, a world in which the only person you can talk to is the person next to you unless you happen to be a ham operator with a vacuum tube set, and then you could talk to another operator who had a vacuum tube set. By the way, the vacuum tubes are a million times less susceptible to EMPs than the microelectronics that we use now. And in this world, the only way pretty much you can go anywhere is to walk unless you happen to have a friend who has a car that has a coil and distributor, and that car probably will work.

The second bullet here is a very interesting one, for two reasons. The country that does this believes they are relatively immune to a massive retaliation with our nuclear weapons. Even if we knew who did it, are we justified in incinerating their grandmothers and their babies because they took out our computers? That is in effect, Mr. Speaker, all they would have done is take out our microelectronics. The consequences of that, of course, are devastating, but the second reason is that we probably would not know who did it.

I cannot imagine, except for Russia, any country that would launch a nuclear weapon from their soil. Our satellites are really good. We would certainly detect it. We would know where it came from, and we would retaliate. If they attack us, it is going to be from the sea. They cover three-fourths of the Earth's surface. They are very difficult to monitor. The north Atlantic shipping lanes are crowded with ships. It is essentially impossible to keep track of specific ships in that shipping lane.

EMP could, compared to a nuclear attack on the cities, kill many more Americans in the long run from indirect effects of collapsed infrastructure, power, communications, transportation, food and water.

I was given a prepublication copy of a novel which I hope comes out because I think Americans need to know what the potential is, and it was the story of a community in the hills of North Carolina after an EMP attack. It goes through the first year; and to give some emphasis to this statement, it could kill many more Americans. This is a novel, but they did a lot of research. They had reason to believe, I think, it was probably pretty close to the truth.

If you go to a country that has no communications and no power and will not have any communications or power and essentially no transportation because all of our transportation now except for these old cars and trucks are dependent on microelectronics, the story they told was that at the end of the first year 80 percent of the people in this North Carolina community were dead, most of them from lack of food.

The average city has 3 days' supply of food. If the trucks do not keep coming in over the superhighway, and by the way the serving of food on your plate tonight, the average serving traveled 1,500 miles to get there, to give you some idea of how vulnerable we are to transportation losses.

They were lucky, because the authors concluded in their book that probably 90 percent of our population would be dead by the end of the year, and in New York City with its millions of people, the novel at the end of the year had them with 25,000 people still alive.

These are unimaginable consequences. The effects could be just overwhelmingly devastating, and a little later I will give you some quotes from some very prominent Americans who understand, and you may be surprised of the source of these quotes when you see them.

Strategically and politically, an EMP attack can threaten entire regional or national infrastructures that are vital to U.S. military strengths and societal survival, challenge the integrity of allied regional coalitions, and pose an asymmetrical threat more dangerous to the high-tech West than to rogue states. Most of these rogue states have little microelectronics. If we retaliate with EMP laydown, they would be a little discomfited compared to the effect on us.

The next chart is an interesting one and far too complex to go through in the few moments we have to look at it here. But they spent a lot of time looking at our national infrastructure and the interdependency of the various aspects of our infrastructure.

Their study and conclusions reminded me of the counsel of a very prominent American. This was a number of years ago, Harrison Scott Brown, from CalTech, a geophysicist who I think held a number of seminars called "The Next Hundred Years," and in those seminars, he looked at where the world might be and the various scenarios for the next hundred years.

One of the scenarios way back in the 1960s and 1950s that had been looked at was a nuclear war. He cautioned that recovery from a nuclear war would be very difficult, and what he said then is true in spades today. He noted that our very complex infrastructure was developed through an evolutionary process, through the exploitation of high-quality, readily-available raw materials, iron ore in the Midwest, which was so good that you could almost literally have a backyard smelter. There is still one of those little smelters, by the way, not working of course, just a tourist site now up near Thurmont, Maryland, not very many miles from here.

He cautioned that since our infrastructure was built with these high-quality, readily-available materials like coal that was exposed by erosion of the soil from the coal, oil that was very shallow and very abundant in Pennsylvania, that if our infrastructure collapsed, that we probably could not reestablish it without heavy industry, and heavy industry would have collapsed.

I thought just in the last day or two how appropriate his concerns were when I thought of this recent big, and it is big but it is not going to save the day, oil find in the Gulf of Mexico. How could you ever drill through 7,000 feet of water and I think about 30,000 feet of soil without the products of heavy industry? You could not, of course, and what this chart shows is that all of our infrastructure, like a house of cards, is interrelated. Any one is pulled out and the rest collapse. Of course, the one essential to everything is power. When that is gone, all is gone. Nothing works.

They spent a great deal of time, and you can get a copy of this report, and you can read the concerns that they have.

One of the few high altitude nuclear detonations, to confuse the EMP, one 300 miles will cover the whole country. Unprecedented cascading failure of our electronics-dependent infrastructure could result. I think, Mr. Speaker, we probably ought to change that verb. It would result.

Power energy transport, telecom and financial systems are particularly vulnerable and interdependent. EMP disruption of these sectors could cause large scale infrastructure failures for all aspects of the national life. Both civilian and military capabilities depend on these infrastructures without adequate protection, and today, we have essentially none, Mr. Speaker. Without adequate protection, recovery could be prolonged months to years.

Mr. Speaker, you cannot hold your breath for months or years. Now, all of this is from the EMP Commission set up by Public Law 106-398, title XIV. These are not my words. These are the words of the people from the EMP Commission.

The next chart, again directly from the commission, says that EMP is one of a small number of threats that may, and, boy, are they capable of understatement. These are scientists primarily, and scientists are not preachers or politicians. They are given to understatement. EMP is one of a small number of threats that may hold at risk the continued existence of today's U.S. civil society. That is the way of saying, Mr. Speaker, that EMP could end our civil society. When they say "hold at risk the continued existence," that means discontinue the society, disrupt our military forces and disrupt our ability to project military power.

Far too many of our weapons systems are not hardened. At a series of hearings over the last several years, I have frequently asked, after a robust EMP laydown, how much of our war fighting capability remains? And the short answer is, usually not much.

Now, that is about to change, because I now understand that a memo is circulating in the Pentagon asking all of our departments there to make an assessment of their EMP vulnerabilities. Hopefully, that will result in a program to correct this deficiency.

The number of U.S. adversaries capable of EMP attack is greater than in the Cold War. Then there was one. Today, who knows how many there are. Any country that has a crude nuclear weapon that they might make or buy, a Scud launcher and a transsteamer they can put it on is capable; not of blanketing our whole country, but taking out the whole northeast and Mid-Atlantic area would be devastating. This would be orders of magnitude greater than Katrina, and we still really haven't recovered from that one.

Potential adversaries are aware of the EMP strategic attack option. I read earlier a number of quotes from the commission, from journals in these foreign countries noting that they really know about it, the threat not adequately addressed in U.S. national and homeland security programs. I said, Mr. Speaker, they were capable of gross understatement. We are paying essentially no attention to it.

You know, my house is probably not going to burn down, but I wouldn't sleep well tonight, I wouldn't sleep tonight if I knew that I didn't have fire insurance on my home. I would want to call the agent and get a binder. Now, what are the odds that my house is going to burn tonight? Very small. I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that in the reality of today's world, there is a bigger probability that there will be an EMP laydown than that any one house or building will burn. Now, if you are uncomfortable being unprotected by fire insurance, you really ought to be uncomfortable being unprotected from EMP.

The next chart shows the conclusions of the EMP Commission. The EMP threat is one of a few potentially catastrophic threats to the United States. As a matter of fact, there is almost no other single event that you can name, except the impact of a large meteor from space perhaps, that you could note that would have the devastating effects of an EMP laydown. By taking action, the EMP threat can be reduced to manageable levels. And they have a large number of pages and a lot of recommendations.

We just recently extended the life of the EMP Commission for 18 months after their first meeting, and their first meeting was just a few weeks ago. So the EMP Commission, unlike most commissions doing this kind of work, they produce a paper, and then the report just collects dusts, and they go away. But this one is not going away, and I hope we can keep it in existence for a long time.

The EMP Commission needs to be there watching our response to make sure that we are doing the right thing. They now have an extension of life of about 18 months. They are a few weeks into that, so they are going around educating people, sectors of government, private sector and so forth.

By taking action, this EMP threat could be reduced. It could be reduced to manageable levels. If you are building a device, and EMP hardened, it may increase the cost of the device only 5 or 10 percent, maybe even less. If you wait until after the device is built, it may cost you as much to harden the device as it did to build it. If you are building in the hardening, it is not all that expensive or not all that difficult.

The strategy to address the EMP threat should balance prevention, and that is telling other people you do this, you are going to pay for it; preparation, protection and recovery. We need to be looking at all of these.

A fascinating study is, what would you do if this happened? What resources do you have available? How would you mobilize those resources? What would you do to provide the most good for the most people with the resources you have available? These are fascinating studies, and essentially nobody is looking at them.

Critical military capabilities must be survivable; and they are not today, I hope we are moving to address that; and endurable to underwrite U.S. strategy.

The next chart shows a continuation of their conclusions, and this reflects that, in the 2006 Defense Authorization, we extended it for 18 months.

Terrorists are looking for vulnerabilities to attack, and our civilian infrastructure is particularly susceptible to this kind of an attack.

Vulnerability invites attack. I really am a pacifist. I don't like war. That is why I am a big, big supporter of our military, because I really subscribe to the philosophy that the most certain path to peace is to prepare for war. If you are really prepared for war, you are probably not going to have a war. We are not prepared for this kind of an eventuality, and our very unpreparedness invites this kind of an asymmetric attack.

The Department of Homeland Security needs to identify critical infrastructure. And what do we do to protect it? And what do we do to recover? And it notes here that the power grid is a particularly vulnerable and essential one. Without power, you have essentially nothing. Everything goes down without power.

The Department of Homeland Security also needs to develop a plan to help citizens deal with such an attack should it occur. What do you do as a family to prepare? What do you do as a community to prepare? What do you do when it happens? Citizens need to become as self-sufficient as possible.

I am not telling you this; I am reading this from the report. If you are not as self-sufficient as possible, then you become a liability. You are no longer an asset to your country. You become a liability. So it should be the goal of every American to be as self-sufficient as possible, because then you become an asset and not a liability.

The next quote is a really interesting one, and I mentioned some really prominent Americans are concerned about this, and so this is from the Washington Post, "One Way We Could Lose the War on Terror" by U.S. Senator JON KYL from Arizona. "Last week, the Senate Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on Terrorism, Technology and Homeland Security, which I chair," he says, "held a hearing on a major threat to the United States not only from terrorists but from rogue nations like North Korea. An electromagnetic pulse, an EMP attack, is one of only a few ways America could be essentially defeated by our enemies, terrorists or otherwise. Few, if any, people would die right away, but the long-term loss of electricity would essentially bring our society to a halt. Few could conceive of a possibility that terrorists could bring American society to its knees by knocking out our power supply from several miles in the atmosphere, but this time, we've been warned, and we better be prepared to respond."

Thank you, Senator KYL. Thank you for your recognition that this is a problem. Thank you for your counsel that we ought to be doing something about it. But, you know, I still don't see us doing much about it.

Another article that appeared in the public, "The Impact of EMP is Asymmetric." This is by Major Franz Gayl. "The impact of EMP is asymmetric in relation to our adversaries. The less developed societies of North Korea, Iran and other potential EMP attack perpetrators are less electromagnetically dependent and less specialized and are more capable of continued functionality in the absence of modern conveniences."

If you don't have modern conveniences, you are not going to miss modern conveniences.

"Conversely, the United States would be subject to widespread paralysis and doubtful recovery," he says. That reality is true, doubtful recovery, "following a surprise EMP attack. Therefore, terrorists and their coincidentally allied state sponsors may determine that, given just a few nuclear weapons and delivery vehicles, the subjection of the United States to a potentially non-attributable," from the sea, from above, "nonattributable EMP attack is more desirable than the destruction of selected cities." I would think so.

"Delayed mass lethality is assured over time through the cascade of EMPs indirect effects that would bring our highly specialized and urbanized society to a disorderly halt." That is a very euphemistic way, Mr. Speaker, of saying that most of us would die.

The next chart shows the capability, which we exercised and have now mothballed, where we could put a whole airplane and zap the airplane. Now, this is not quite a realistic simulation of an EMP attack, but it is the best we could do, because there are no long line effects here. You just can't simulate miles of wire and railroad tracks. But we used to have these facilities, and we have now mothballed them. We used to test our airplanes. And some of our most important airplanes are hardened. Indeed, those which are hardened are, obviously, classified. But it is not that we would not have an ability to respond. We would. But to whom? Who did it? And what would be our response?

Mr. Speaker, we have spent several minutes now talking about a threat which I suspect few listeners had any idea existed. I hope that quoting this report and high profile people like JON KYL has convinced the listener that this is not just science fiction, that this is a real possibility indeed.

If there is going to be a conflict, Mr. Speaker, with these powers, I think it is more than a possibility, I think it is a probability that any of these small adversaries that have a nuclear weapon could devastate us more with an EMP laydown than with any other use of that weapon. And the reason I am here in this time that we are talking about national security, Mr. Speaker, is because I believe that, although there are more urgent concerns about national security, like an open border through which 11, 12, 20, who knows how many million illegal immigrants could come, there could just as well have been that many terrorists. By the way, there is an old adage that talks about the tyranny of the urgent.

Iraq and what we are doing there is really urgent. Every day it is on the President's plate. The border and the outrage of American citizens that we haven't been able to close that border is really urgent. And it is just a truism for families, for businesses, for countries, the tyranny of the urgent. The urgent always sweeps the important off the table. And one of the really important things that we need to be about is preparing for the eventuality of an EMP laydown.

My last chart is a kind of a colorful one. This is a satellite photograph of the Ural Mountains, and it is labeled the Yamantau region in Russia. And this facility is ordinarily spoken of as Yamantau Mountain because it is in a mountain, and you can see from the figure down in the lower right there, it is about 600 miles almost due east of Moscow in the Ural Mountains.

Beginning with Brezhnev, in about 1980, the Soviets, and now the Russians, have a closed city there. In our liaison with the Russian Duma, we have become fairly friendly with a number of those Duma members, our counterparts there, and we asked them about closed cities. And they say, oh, yes, we have closed cities. When you draw a map of the region, the city is not even on the map. It is closed. People don't go there unless they are needed to work there, and they do not leave there unless they are no longer needed there.

Mezhgorye is the closed city. It happens to be in two little pockets in the mountains, because one valley wasn't big enough to house it, but there were at one time 60,000 people that we could estimate from our satellite living there. That would be about 20,000 workers that were working on Yamantau Mountain.

Yamantau Mountain is the largest nuclear secure facility in the world. We have had two defectors from that Yamantau Mountain. They each have told us what they know.

What we know from what they told us is that it is enormously large, as large as inside our beltway; it has train tracks running in two directions, so they intend to move a lot of material; and it has enormous rooms carved out of soft rock beneath hard rock. It is an ideal geologic formation for producing this kind of a facility.

The number of people at Mezhgorye, since they are finished digging, has now shrunk to about 15,000, as our satellites indicate, which means there are about 5,000 working at Yamantau Mountain.

What are they doing there? By the way, this is so secret in Russia that the cost of this, which has to be enormous, does not show in the financial lines of any of the ministries. It is the equivalent of our black programs, for those of you who are familiar with black programs.

To give you some idea how important this is to the Russians, continuing work on Yamantau Mountain is more important than paying their military officers, because they have continued work there when they couldn't pay their military officers. It is more important to them than the $200 million for the service module on the International Space Station. That was embarrassing to them when they couldn't fund that and we had to fund the service module, which was their responsibility, on the International Space Station.

Now, there is no conceivable use of Yamantau Mountain except during or after a nuclear war. This kind of gives you a little opportunity to get into the heads of the Russian leaders. From their writings and from their actions, it is quite justified to draw the conclusion that they believe that nuclear war is inevitable and winnable.

Now, I have no idea, and I have had a number of classified briefings, I have no idea what they plan to do in Yamantau Mountain. But one thing is certain, it has no use except during or after a nuclear war.

I wanted to end with this, Mr. Speaker, to bring the message that nuclear war is not unthinkable and therefore it will not happen, because apparently the Russians do not believe that it is unthinkable.

By the way, they span 11 time zones. Their enormous country goes almost halfway around the world. They have less than half the people that we have and a geography that size, I think only six cities of more than 1 million people. And if wealth is determined by natural resources and raw materials, Russia is the wealthiest country on the globe. They have everything their heart could desire, except a rational government, their heart could desire for a robust economic system. They could close the door and with their resources live happily ever after.

Almost nobody else can do that. We cannot do that. We import about two-thirds of our oil, we have no diamonds, nickel, chromium, tungsten. You would not have these lights in the ceiling without importing things.

So I just wanted to end, Mr. Speaker, with this chart which shows that our potential enemies believe that there could be a nuclear war and they are preparing for it by spending money on Yamantau Mountain, scarce money.

They were doing this, by the way, when money was scarce. It is not scarce now. They are awash in cash because oil is $65, $70, $75 a barrel. But they were spending money on this before they were flush with money.

So my hope is, and I believe we should have time, that the American people in our society and in our military can plan, adapt, design, build, so that we will be immune.

We are much more likely to have this attack if we are vulnerable to the attack, and at the moment we are explicitly vulnerable. We don't need to be that way. The creativity and ingenuity of the American people can make us essentially immune to this, Mr. Speaker, and we need to be about it.

BIG-GOVERNMENT SOLUTIONS DON'T WORK

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 4, 2005, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PAUL) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, politicians throughout history have tried to solve every problem conceivable to man, always failing to recognize that many of the problems we face result from previous so-called political solutions.

Government cannot be the answer to every human ill. Continuing to view more government as the solution to problems will only make matters worse.

Not long ago, I spoke on this floor about why I believe Americans are so angry in spite of rosy government economic reports. The majority of Americans are angry, disgusted, and frustrated that so little is being done in Congress to solve their problems. The fact is, a majority of American citizens expect the Federal Government to provide for every need without considering whether government causes many economic problems in the first place. This certainly is an incentive for politicians to embrace the role of omnipotent problem-solvers, since nobody asked first whether they, the politicians themselves, are at fault.

At home, I am frequently asked about my frustration with Congress since so many reform proposals go unheeded. I jokingly reply, No, I am never frustrated because I have such low expectations. But the American people have higher expectations, and without forthcoming solutions are beyond frustrated with their government.

If solutions to American problems won't be found in the frequent clamor for more government, it still is up to Congress to explain how our problems developed and how solutions can be found in an atmosphere of liberty, private property, and a free market order.

It is up to us to demand radical change from our failed policy of foreign military interventionism. Robotic responses to cliches of Big Government intervention in our lives are unbecoming to Members who are elected to offer ideas and solutions. We must challenge the status quo of our economic and political system.

Many things have contributed to the mess we are in. Bureaucratic management can never compete with the free market in solving problems.

Central economic planning doesn't work. Just look at the failed systems of the 20th century. Welfareism is an example of central economic planning. Paper money, money created out of thin air to accommodate welfareism and government deficits, is not only silly; it is unconstitutional. No matter how hard the big spenders try to convince us otherwise, deficits do matter. But lowering the deficit through higher taxes won't solve anything.

Nothing will change in Washington until it is recognized that the ultimate driving force behind most politicians is obtaining and holding power, and money from special interests drives the political process.

Money and power are important only because the government wields power not granted by the Constitution. A limited constitutional government would not tempt special interests to buy the politicians who wield power. The whole process feeds on itself. Everyone is rewarded by ignoring constitutional restraints while expanding and complicating the entire bureaucratic state.

Even when it is recognized that we are traveling down the wrong path, the lack of political courage and the desire for reelection results in ongoing support for the pork-barrel system that serves special interests.

A safe middle ground, a don't-rock-the-boat attitude, too often is rewarded in Washington, while meaningful solutions tend to offend those who are in charge of the gigantic PAC lobbyist empire that calls the shots in Washington.

Most Members are rewarded by reelection for accommodating and knowing how to work the system. Though there is little difference between the two parties, the partisan fights are real. Instead of debates about philosophy, though, the partisan battles are about who will wield the gavels. True political debates are rare. Power struggles are real and ruthless, and yet we all know that power corrupts.

Both parties agree on monetary, fiscal, foreign and entitlement policies. Unfortunately, neither party has much concern for civil liberties. Both parties are split over trade, with mixed debates between outright protections and those who endorse government-managed trade agreements that masquerade as free trade.

It is virtually impossible to find anyone who supports hands-off free trade defended by the moral right of all citizens to spend their money as they see fit without being subject to any special interest.

The Big Government nanny state is based on the assumption that free markets cannot provide the maximum good for the largest number of people. It assumes people are not smart or responsible enough to take care of themselves, and thus their needs must be filled through the government's forcible redistribution of wealth.

Our system of intervention assumes that politicians and bureaucrats have superior knowledge and are endowed with certain talents that produce efficiency. These assumptions don't seem to hold much water, of course, when we look at agencies like FEMA. Still, we expect the government to manage monetary and economic policy, the medical system and the educational system, and then wonder why we have problems with the cost and efficiency of all these programs.

On top of this, the daily operation of Congress reflects the power of special interests, not the will of the people, regardless of which party is in power. Critically important legislation comes up for votes late in the evening without much warning, leaving Members little chance to read or study the bills. Key changes are buried in conference reports, often containing new legislation not even mentioned in either the House or the Senate versions.

Conferences were meant to compromise two different positions in the House and Senate, not to slip in new material that had not been mentioned in either bill.

Congress spends hundreds of billions of dollars in emergency supplemental bills to avoid the budgetary rules meant to hold down the deficit. Wartime spending money is appropriated and attached to emergency relief funds, making it difficult for politicians to resist. The principle of the pork barrel is alive and well, and it shows how huge appropriations are passed easily with supporters of the system getting their share for their district.

Huge omnibus spending bills introduced at the end of legislative years are passed without scrutiny. No one individual knows exactly what is in the bill. In the process, legitimate needs and constitutional responsibilities are frequently ignored. Respect for private property rights is ignored. Confidence in the free market is lost or misunderstood. Our tradition of self-reliance is mocked as archaic.

Lack of real choice in economic and personal decisions is commonplace. It seems that too often the only choice we are given is between prohibitions and subsidies. Never is it said, let the people decide on things like stem cell research or alternative medical treatments.

Nearly everyone endorses exorbitant taxation. The only debate is about who should pay. Either tax the producers and the rich, or tax the workers and the poor through inflation and outsourcing jobs.

Both politicians and the media place blame on everything except bad policy authored by the Congress. Scapegoats are needed since there is so much blame to go around and so little understanding as to why we are in such a mess.

In the 1920s and the 1930s, Europe's financial system collapsed and inflation raged. It was commonplace to blame the Jews. Today, in America the blame is spread out: illegal immigrants, Muslims, big business, whether they got special deals from the government or not, price gouging oil companies, regardless of the circumstances, and labor unions. Ignorance of economics and denial of the political power system that prevails in the District of Columbia makes it possible for Congress to shift the blame.

Since we are not on the verge of mending our ways, the problems will worsen and the blame game will get much more vicious. Shortchanging a large segment of our society surely will breed conflict that could get out of control.

This is a good reason for us to cast aside politics as usual and start finding some reliable answers to our problems. Politics as usual is aided by the complicity of the media. Economic ignorance, bleeding heart emotionalism, and populist passion pervade our major networks and cable channels.

This is especially noticeable when the establishment seeks to unify the people behind an illegal, unwise war. The propaganda is well coordinated by the media, government and military-industrial complex. This collusion is worse than when state-owned media do the same thing.

In countries where everyone knows the media produces government propaganda, people remain wary of what they hear.

In the United States, the media are considered free and independent. Thus, the propaganda is accepted with less questioning.

One of the major reasons we have drifted from the Founders' vision of liberty in the Constitution was the division of the concept of freedom into two parts. Instead of freedom being applied equally to social and economic transactions, it has come to be thought of as two different concepts. Some in Congress now protect economic liberty and market choices but ignore personal liberty and private choices. Others defend personal liberty but concede the realm of property and economic transaction to government control.

There should be no distinction between commercial speech and political speech with no consistent moral defense of true liberty. The continued erosion of personal property rights is inevitable.

This careless disregard for liberty, our traditions and the Constitution, have brought us disaster with a foreign policy of military interventionism supported by the leadership of both parties. Hopefully, some day, this will be radically changed.

Everyone is aware of the law of unintended consequences. Most Members of Congress understand that government actions can have unintended consequences. Yet few quit voting for government solutions, always hoping there won't be any particular unintended consequences the next time.

They keep hoping there will be less harmful complications from the solution that they are currently supporting. Free market economics teaches us that for every government action to solve an economic problem, two new ones are created. The same unwanted results occur with foreign policy meddling. The law of opposites is just a variation of the law of unintended consequences. When we attempt to achieve a certain goal, like, say, make the world safe for democracy, a grandiose scheme of World War I, one can be sure the world will become less safe and less democratic regardless of the motivation. The First World War was sold to the American people as the war to end all wars.

Instead, history shows it was the war that caused the 20th Century to be the most war-torn century in all of history. Our entry into World War I helped lead us into World War II, the Cold War, the Korean War and the Vietnam War. Even our current crisis in the Middle East can be traced to the great wars of the 20th Century.

Though tens of millions of deaths are associated with these wars, it seems we haven't learned a thing. We went into Korea by direction of the United Nations, not a Congressional declaration of war, to unify Korea. Yet that war ensured that Korea remained divided to this day. Our troops are still there. South Korea today is much more willing to reconcile differences with North Korea, and yet we obstruct such efforts. It doesn't make much sense.

We went into Vietnam and involved ourselves unnecessarily in the civil war to bring peace and harmony to that country. We lost 60,000 troops and spent hundreds of billions of dollars, yet failed to achieve victory. Ironically, since losing in Vietnam, we now have a better relationship with them than ever. We now trade, invest, travel and communicate with a unified Western-leaning country that is catching on quickly to capitalist ways. This policy, not military confrontation, is exactly what the Constitution permits and the Founders encouraged in our relationship with others.

This policy should apply to both friends and perceived enemies. Diplomacy and trade can accomplish goals that military intervention cannot, and they certainly are a lot less costly.

In both instances, Korea and Vietnam, neither country attacked us, and neither country posed a threat to our national security.

In neither case did we declare war. All of the fighting and killing was based on lies, miscalculations and the failure to abide by constitutional restraint with regard to war.

When goals are couched in terms of humanitarianism, sincere or not, the results are inevitably bad. Foreign interventionism requires the use of force. First, the funds needed to pursue a particular policy required that taxes be forcibly imposed on the American people either directly or indirectly through inflation. Picking sides in foreign countries only increases the chances of antagonism toward us.

Too often, foreign economic and military support means impoverishing the poor in America and enhancing the rich ruling classes in poor countries. When sanctions are used against one undesirable regime, it squelches the resistance to the very regimes we are trying to undermine.

Forty years of sanctions against Castro have left him in power and fomented continued hatred and blame from the Cuban people directed at us. Trade with Cuba likely would have accomplished the opposite, as it has in Vietnam, China and even the Eastern Bloc nations of the old Soviet empire.

We spend billions of dollars in Afghanistan and Colombia to curtail drug production. No evidence exists that it helps. In fact, drug production and corruption have increased in both countries. We close our eyes to it because the reasons we are in Colombia and Afghanistan are denied.

Obviously, we are not putting forth the full effort required to capture Osama bin Laden. Instead, our occupation of Afghanistan further inflames the Muslim radicals that came of age with their fierce resistance to the Soviet occupation of a Muslim country. Our occupation merely serves as a recruiting device for al Qaeda, which has promised retaliation for our presence in their country.

We learn nothing, after first allying ourselves with Osama bin Laden when he applied the same logic towards the Soviets. The net result of our invasion and occupation in Afghanistan has been to miss capturing Osama bin Laden, assist al Qaeda's recruitment, stimulate more drug production and lose hundreds of American lives and allow spending of billions of American taxpayers dollars with no end in sight.

Bankruptcy seems to be the only way we will reconsider the foolishness of this type of occupation. It is time for us to wake up.

Our policy toward Iran for the past 50 years is every bit as disconcerting. It makes no sense, however, unless one concedes that our government is manipulated by those who seek physical control over the vast riches of the Middle East and egged on by Israel's desires. We have attacked the sovereignty of Iran on two occasions and are in the process of threatening her for the third time.

In 1953, the U.S. and British overthrew the democratically elected Mohammed Mossadegh and installed the Shah. His brutal regime lasted for over 25 years and ended with the Ayatollah taking power in 1979. Our support for the Shah incited the radicalization of the Shiite clerics in Iran, resulting in the hostage takeover.

In the 1980s, we provided weapons, including poisonous gas, to Saddam Hussein, as we supported his invasion of Iran. These events are not forgotten by the Iranians, who, once again, see us looking for another confrontation with them.

We insist that the U.N. ignore the guarantees under the Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty that grants countries like Iran the right to enrich uranium. The pressure on the U.N. and the threats we cast toward Iran are quite harmful to the cause of peace. They are entirely unnecessary and serve no useful purpose. Our policy toward Iran is much more likely to result in her getting a nuclear weapon than preventing it.

Our own effort at democratizing Iran has resulted, instead, in radicalizing a population whose instincts are to like Americans and our economic system. Our meddling these past 50 years has only served to alienate and unify the entire country against us. Though our officials only see Iran as an enemy, as does Israel, our policies in the Middle East these past 5 years have done wonders to strengthen Iran's political and military position in the region. We have totally ignored serious overtures by the Iranians to negotiate with us before hostilities broke out in Iraq in 2003.

Both immediately after 9/11 and especially at the time of our invasion in Iraq in 2003, Iran particularly, partially out of fear and realism, honestly sought reconciliation and offered to help the U.S. in its battle against al Qaeda. They were rebuked outright.

Now, Iran is negotiating from a much stronger position, principally as a result of our overall Middle East policy.

We accommodated Iran by severely weakening the Taliban in Afghanistan on Iran's eastern borders. On Iran's western borders, we helped Iranians by eliminating their arch enemy, Saddam Hussein. Our invasion in Iraq and the resulting chaos have inadvertently delivered up a large portion of Iraq to the Iranians, as the majority Shiites in Iraq ally themselves with the Iranians.

The U.S.-Israel plan to hit Hezbollah in Lebanon before taking on Iran's military has totally backfired. Now Hezbollah, an ally of Iran, has been made stronger than ever with the military failure to route Hezbollah from southern Lebanon.

Before the U.S.-Israeli invasion of Lebanon, Hezbollah was supported by 20 percent of the population. Now its revered by 80 percent. A democratic election in Lebanon cannot now serve the interests of the U.S. or Israel; it would only support the cause of radical clerics in Iran.

Demanding an election in Palestinian Gaza resulted in enhancing the power of Hamas. The U.S. and Israel promptly rejected the results. So much for our support for democratically elected government. Our support for dictatorial Arab leaders remains a thorn in the side of the large Muslim population in the Middle East and one of the main reasons Osama bin Laden declared war against us.

We talk of democracy and self-determination, but the masses of people in the Middle East see through our hypocrisy when we support the Sunni secular dictators in Saudi Arabia, Egypt and Jordan and, at one time, Saddam Hussein.

In the late 1970s and the late 1980s, the CIA spent over $4 billion on a program called Operation Cyclone. This was our contribution to setting up training schools in Pakistan and elsewhere, including the U.S. itself, to teach sabotage skills. The purpose was to use these individuals in fighting our enemies in the Middle East, including the Soviets. But as one could predict, this effort has come back to haunt us as our radical ally, Osama bin Laden, turned his fury against us after routing the Soviets.

It is estimated that over 12,000 fighters were trained in the camps we set up in Afghanistan. They were taught how to make bombs, carry out sabotage and use guerrilla war tactics, and now we are on the receiving end of this U.S.-financed program, hardly a good investment. It is difficult to understand why our policymakers aren't more cautious in their effort to police the world once they realize how unsuccessful we have been. It seems they always hope that the next time our efforts won't come flying back in our face.

Our failed efforts in Iraq continue to drain our resources, costing us dearly both in lives lost and dollars spent, and there is no end in sight. No consideration is given for rejecting our obsession with a worldwide military presence which rarely, if ever, directly enhances our security.

A much stronger case can be made that our policy of protecting our worldwide interest actually does the opposite by making us weaker, alienating our allies, inciting more hatred and provoking our enemies. The more we have interfered in the Middle East the past 50 years, the greater the danger has become for an attack on us.

The notion that Arab Muslim radicals are motivated to attack us because of our freedoms and prosperity and not our unwelcome presence in their country is dangerous and silly.

We were told we needed to go into Iraq because our old ally, Saddam Hussein, had weapons of mass destruction. Yet no weapons of mass destruction were found. We were told we needed to occupy Iraq to remove al Qaeda, yet al Qaeda was nowhere to be found. And now it is admitted it had nothing to do with 9/11.

Yet, today, Iraq is infested with al Qaeda, achieving exactly the opposite of what we sought to do. We were told that we needed to secure our oil to protect our economy and to pay for our invasion and occupation. Instead, the opposite has resulted. Oil production is down. Oil prices are up, and no oil profits have been used to pay the bills. We were told that a regime change in Iraq would help us in our long-time fight with Iran, yet everything we have done in Iraq has served the interests of Iran.

We are being told in a threatening and intimidating fashion that if America were to pull out before Iraq could defend itself, the consequences would be absolutely predictable and absolutely disastrous. I am convinced, though, that the law of opposites could well apply here. Going into Iraq we know produced exactly the opposite results of what was predicted. Leaving also likely will have results opposite of those we are being frightened with. Certainly leaving Vietnam at the height of the Cold War did not result in the disaster predicted by the advocates of the domino theory: an inevitable Communist takeover of the entire Far East.

We are constantly being told that we cannot abandon Iraq, and we are obligated to stay forever if necessary. This admonition is similar to a rallying cry from a determined religious missionary bent on proselytizing to the world with a particular religious message. Conceding that leaving may not be a panacea for Iraqi tranquility, this assumption ignores two things: One, our preemptive war ignited the Iraqi civil war; and, two, abandoning the Iraqi people is not the question. The real question is whether or not we should abandon the American people by forcing them to pay for an undeclared war with huge economic and human costs while placing our national security in greater jeopardy by ignoring our borders and serious problems here at home.

In our attempt to make Iraq a better place, we did great harm to the Iraqi Christians. Before our invasion in 2003, there were approximately 1.2 million Christians living in Iraq. Since then, over half have been forced to leave due to persecution and violence. Many escaped to Syria. With the neocons wanting to attack Syria, how long will they be safe there? The answer to the question, aren't we better off without Saddam Hussein, is not an automatic "yes" for Iraqi Christians.

We have been told for decades that our policy of militarism and preemption in the Middle East is designed to provide security for Israel. Yet a strong case can be made that Israel is more vulnerable now than ever with moderate Muslims being challenged by a growing majority of Islamic radicals. As the invincibility of the American and Israeli military becomes common knowledge, Israel's security is diminished, and world opinion turns against her, especially after the failed efforts to remove Hezbollah from southern Lebanon.

We were told that attacking and eliminating Hezbollah was required to diminish the Iranian threat against Israel. The results again were the opposite. This failed effort has only emboldened Iran. The lack of success of conventional warfare, the U.S. in Vietnam, the Soviets in Afghanistan, the U.S. in Iraq and Afghanistan, Israel in Lebanon, should awaken our policymakers to our failure in war and diplomacy. Yet all we propose are bigger bombs and more military force for occupation rather than working to understand an entirely new generation of modern warfare.

Many reasons are given for our preemptive wars and military approach for spreading the American message of freedom and prosperity, which is an obvious impossibility. Our vital interests are always cited for justification, and it is inferred that those who do not support our militancy are unpatriotic. Yet the opposite is actually the case: Wise resistance to one's own government doing bad things requires a love of country, devotion to idealism and respect for the rule of law.

In attempting to build an artificial and unwelcome Iraqi military, the harder we try, the more money we spend and the more lives we lose, the stronger the real armies of Iraq become: The Sunni insurgency, the Badr Brigade, the Sadr Mahdi Army and the Kurdish Militia.

The Kurds have already taken a bold step in this direction by hoisting a Kurdish flag and removing the Iraqi flag, a virtual declaration of independence. Natural local forces are winning out over outside political forces.

We are looking in all of the wrong places for an Iraqi army to bring stability to that country. The people have spoken, and these troops that represent large segments of the population need no training. It is not a lack of training, weapons or money that hinders our efforts to create a new superior Iraqi military. It is the lack of inspiration and support for such an endeavor that is missing. Developing borders and separating the various factions, which our policy explicitly prohibits, is the basic flaw in our plan for a forced, unified Western-style democracy for Iraq. Allowing self-determination for different regions is the only way to erase the artificial nature of Iraq, an Iraq designed by Western outsiders nearly 80 years ago. It is our obsession with control of the oil in the region and imposing our will on the Middle East and accommodating the demands of Israel that is the problem. And the American people are finally getting sick and tired of all of their sacrifices. It is time to stop the bleeding.

Instead we continue to hear the constant agitation for us to confront the Iranians with military action. Reasons to attack Iran make no more sense than our foolish preemptive war against Iraq. Fictitious charges and imaginary dangers are used to frighten the American people into accepting an attack on Iran. First it may only be sanctions, but later it will be bombs and possible ground troops if the neocons have their way. Many of the chicken-hawk neoconservative advisors to the administration are highly critical of our current policy because it is not aggressive enough. They want more troops in Iraq. They want to attack Syria and Iran and escalate the conflict in Lebanon.

We have a troop shortage. Morale is low, and our military equipment is in bad shape, yet the neocons would not hesitate to spend, borrow, inflate and reinstate the draft to continue their grandiose schemes in remaking the entire Middle East. Obviously, a victory of this sort is not available no matter what effort is made or how much money is spent.

Logic would tell us there is no way we will contemplate taking on Iran at this time, but logic did not prevail with our Iraq policy and look at the mess we have there. Besides, both sides, the neoconservative extremists and the radical Islamists, are driven by religious fervor. Both are convinced that God is on their side, a strange assumption since theologically it is the same God.

Both sides of the war in the Middle East are driven by religious beliefs of omnipotence. Both sides endorse an eschatological theory regarding the forthcoming end of time. Both anticipate the return of God personified and as promised to each. Both sides are driven by a conviction of perfect knowledge regarding the Creator, and though we supposedly worship the same God, each sees the other side as completely wrong and blasphemous.

The religiously driven Middle East war condemns tolerance of the other's view. Advocates of restraint and the use of diplomacy are ridiculed as appeasers and equivalent to supporting Nazism and considered un-American and un-Christian.

I find it amazing that we in this country seem determined to completely separate religious expression and the state, even to the detriment of the first amendment, yet we can say little about how Christian and Jewish religious beliefs greatly influence our policies in the Middle East? It should be the other way around. Religious expression, according to the First Amendment, cannot be regulated anywhere by Congress or the Federal courts. But deeply held theological beliefs should never dictate our foreign policy. Being falsely accused of anti-Semitism and being a supporter of radical fascism is not an enviable position for any politician. Most realize it is best to be quiet and support our Middle East involvement.

Believing one can have perfect knowledge of God's will and believing government can manage our lives and world affairs have caused a great deal of problems for man over the ages. When these two elements are combined, they become especially dangerous. Liberty, by contrast, removes power from government and allows total freedom of choice in pursuing one's religious beliefs. The only solution to controlling political violence is to prohibit the use of force to pursue religious goals and reject government authority to mold the behavior of individuals.

Both sides in the Middle East are enamored with the so-called benefit that chaos offers to those promoting revolutionary changes. Both sides in situations like this always underestimate the determination of the opposition and ignore the law of unintended consequences. They never consider that these policies might backfire.

Declaring war against Islamic fascism or terrorism is vague and meaningless. The enemy that we are fighting at the expense of our own liberties is purposely indefinable. Therefore the government will exercise wartime powers indefinitely. We have been fully warned to expect a long, long war.

The Islamic fascists are almost impossible to identify and cannot be targeted by our conventional weapons. Those who threaten us essentially are unarmed and stateless. Comparing them to Nazi Germany, a huge military power, is ridiculous. Labeling them as a unified force is a mistake. It is critical that we figure out why a growing number of Muslims are radicalized to the point of committing suicide terrorism against us. Our presence in their countries represents a failed policy that makes us less safe, not more.

These guerilla warriors do not threaten us with tanks, gunboats, missiles or nuclear weapons, nor do they have a history of aggression against the United States. Our enemies' credibility depends instead on the popular goal of ending our occupation of their country.

We must not forget that the 9/11 terrorists came principally from Saudi Arabia, not Iraq, Iran, Lebanon or Syria. Iran has never in modern times invaded her neighbors, yet we worry obsessively that she may develop a nuclear weapon some day. Never mind that a radicalized Pakistan has nuclear weapons and our so-called friend Musharraf won't lift a finger against bin Laden who most likely is hiding in Pakistan. Our only defense against this emerging nuclear threat has been to use and threaten to use weapons that do not meet the needs of this new and different enemy.

Since resistance against the Iraq war is building here at home, hopefully it will not be too long before we abandon our grandiose scheme to rule the entire Middle East through intimidation and military confrontation.

But economic law eventually will prevail. Runaway military and entitlement spending cannot be sustained. We can tax the private economy only so much, and borrowing from foreigners is limited by the total foreign debt and our current account deficit. It will be difficult to continue this spending spree without significantly higher interest rates and further devaluation of the dollar. This all spells more trouble for our economy and certainly higher inflation. Our industry base is shattered, and our borders remain open to those who exploit our reeling entitlement system.

Economic realities will prevail regardless of the enthusiasm by most Members of Congress for a continued expansion of the welfare state and support for our dangerously aggressive foreign policy. The welfare/warfare state will come to an end when the dollar fails and the wealth simply runs out.

The overriding goal should then be to rescue our constitutional liberties which have been steadily eroded by those who claim that sacrificing liberties is required and legitimate in times of war, even the undeclared and vague war that we are currently fighting.

A real solution to our problems will require a better understanding of and a greater dedication to free markets and private property rights. It can't be done without restoring a sound asset-backed currency. If we hope to restore any measure of constitutional government, we must abandon the policy of policing the world and keeping troops in the four corners of the earth. Our liberties and our prosperity depend on it.

SENATE—Thursday, September 7, 2006

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable JOHN E. SUNUNU, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire.

PRAYER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Today's prayer will be offered by Father Costa Christo of the Holy Trinity Greek Orthodox Church, Wilmington, DE.

The guest Chaplain offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Be mindful, O Lord, of our civil authorities, of our Armed Forces by land, sea and air and of these God-crowned United States of America. Grant us peaceful times that we may lead a calm and tranquil life in all godliness and sanctity. Teach us to put away all bitterness and misunderstanding, all hatred and prejudice, that we may draw together as one family in Your caring embrace.

Bless and grant perfect health of mind and body to our esteemed Senators. Oversee them and protect them from every evil, adverse encounter, and distress. Direct their thoughts, Lord, in the way of truth, that they may enact, order, and enforce those things that are true, those things that are pure, those things that are just, tending toward all excellence and virtue. Grant unto them Your divine grace for their enlightenment to govern and lead the people of this Nation in the ways of righteousness.

Indeed, let them be Your instruments to bless our Nation and the entire world. For to You belong the kingdom, the power, and the glory, forever more. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable JOHN E. SUNUNU led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, this morning the first 30 minutes of session will be devoted to a morning business period for Senators to make statements. Shortly after 10 a.m., we will resume our work on the Defense appropriations bill. We worked into the evening last night and voted on a couple of the pending amendments. Therefore, we will finish the bill during today's session. The two managers can update us when we return to the bill, but it is my hope we can finish the bill early today and move on to other business. I know I can speak for the chairman and say it is imperative we do not delay this defense funding bill any longer and we move toward passage quickly.

Several committees have been meeting on the issue of port security. We should be ready to begin that important Homeland Security bill next. We will have further updates during today's session as to the timing of finishing the Defense bill as well as the next order of business.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there is now a period of 30 minutes for the transaction of morning business, with the first half of the time under the control of the minority leader or his designee and the second half of the time under the control of the majority leader or his designee.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I rise this morning as a point of personal privilege to welcome a friend and leader in our community in Wilmington, DE. Father Christo opened the Senate in prayer this morning. It may be the only time the entire Greek community in Wilmington, DE, was tuned in to C-SPAN as we opened up the morning session. I want this Senate to know and I hope my colleagues will get a chance to meet Father Christo.

Many who were raised with a parochial education got an opportunity to meet religious teachers. The kind of guy one always looked for was Father. Father is a guy whom everyone knew was much smarter than you. You knew he was probably a better athlete than you were. You knew he had thought through whatever you were thinking of before you thought it. And you also knew you could go to him whenever you needed help.

That is the role he continues to play with an adult parish in one of the most active communities in my State. The Greek-American community is small in our State, but it is extremely vibrant. Similar to many communities, the heart and soul of it is the church. The heart and soul of it is not only the spiritual center of the community, it is the political center of the community. I mean that in a nonpartisan way. It is the social center of the community. It is the embodiment of community.

We have very important business this morning, and I will yield to my distinguished colleague, Senator CARPER.

I can say to Father, it is an honor to have him here this morning. I hope he has an even greater impression than I know he possessed when he came, of the majesty of this place. This is the people's Chamber. They talk about the people's House, this building, this Senate, all of the Capitol. Every time people come to visit, I remind them that this belongs to them. This is theirs. We are only here as hired hands for a while. I hope Father takes back to his parish the notion that there is an awful lot of good that can be done here.

I am delighted he took the time this morning to remind us of the relationship between temple, Government, and the spiritual leadership that comes directly and immediately from God. I thank him for that. I thank him for his generosity and leadership back home in our community beyond Holy Trinity. Thank you very much.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, I add a couple of comments to the words of our colleague, Senator BIDEN, in welcoming Father Christo to the Senate Chamber today.

We are proud of our Constitution. Delaware was the first State to ratify the Constitution of our country. The Constitution calls for separation of church and state. Some people may find, given that as our heritage, it is unusual we begin each of our sessions in the Senate with an opening prayer.

Today, we are honored for all in Delaware, for everybody in the Greek community in our State, and everyone in the country, to be able to welcome one of our own to open the Senate in prayer.

I am struck by the number of times I talk to people in my State and around the country who say: We pray for you—not just me as an individual but for us as a collective body, as we meet. I always say: We welcome your prayers; keep praying. We certainly need those prayers.

I asked my staff to give me a little bit of background on Father, to say a few words. I have 10 pages of accomplishments. What a remarkable tale of accomplishment—and still a young pup.

I am honored you are here. Thank you for coming and starting our day on the right foot.

I would say to those people from other States, in talking to the Presiding Officer before the session began, he was asking where the Greek Church is in our State. If you come through Delaware on I-95, and a lot of people do, in the early part of June, you get off on Pennsylvania Avenue and head north a couple of blocks, make a left turn on Broom Street, you will find the Greek Church. They hold a great festival there. It is not only a church where people go for their souls, but three nights in the early part of June you can go there and enjoy great Greek food, dance, and drink. It is a wonderful time of fellowship with people who are Greek their whole lives and people who are Greek for a night or two.

We are honored by your presence, Father, and thank you for embracing us and thank you for your warm and wonderful prayer.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 15 minutes to speak in morning business.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HONORING OUR ARMED FORCES

CPL PHILLIP BAUCUS

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, west of Baghdad in Iraq's Al Anbar Province, the 3rd Light Armored Reconnaissance Battalion of the 1st Marine Division rested for the night. On Saturday, June 29, a suicide bomber crashed his vehicle into a barrack. The structure collapsed. Four marines died. Among them was a 28-year-old corporal named Phillip Baucus. He is my nephew.

When I first took my wife Wanda to the family ranch many years ago, about 23, young Phillip, 5 or 6 years old, received Wanda. He walked up to Wanda and said: Wanda, welcome to the ranch. He had a wildflower in his hand and he gave it to Wanda. That is how he was.

Wanda and I had the sad duty at Dover Air Force Base to receive Phillip's casket. When we asked, they said, no, we could not touch his casket, but they reconsidered—the colonel did—and said, yes, it was all right for Wanda and let Wanda touch Phillip's casket. Beneath the flag that draped the casket, Wanda slipped a wildflower. That is how she is. North of Helena, in Montana's Lewis and Clark County, Phillip came to his final rest. On the afternoon of Sunday, August 6, more than 500 Montanans gathered under the willow trees of the family ranch to remember Phillip.

A Chinook helicopter flew overhead, a massive American flag draped below it. White doves were released into the sky. A bagpipe played "Amazing Grace," and the "Marine Corps Hymn." Bugles played "Taps." The funeral ended with a family tradition, a tradition that Phillip loved. We packed 2 pounds of black gunpowder, fired an anvil weighing about 60 pounds several hundred feet into the air. It fell to the ground with a heavy thud.

Marines folded the flag that had covered Phillip's casket into a triangle and handed it to his widow Katherine. Phillip and Katherine had been married at that very same place less than a year before. Phillip's Marine colleague, Sergeant Raymond Rios, spoke to Phillip saying: "Baucus, you will always be here with every shadow, the sun shining and the trees blowing."

My brother John and I planted two trees there a few weeks ago on the ranch in memory of Phillip. They will blow in the winds and grow in the sun there in his memory. It was at that ranch where he was laid to rest on the same mountain where my father lies.

In the days since, I have been moved by the hundreds of handwritten notes I have received from Montanans, friends, and colleagues. I have been moved by these many tributes. In the Native American culture there is no greater honor than dying for your community, being a warrior. American Indians have answered this country's call to service in numbers far greater than their fair share of the population. When injured or killed in war, Native American service men and women are honored as fallen warriors. Their praises are sung before every powwow and special occasion.

I visited several Indian tribes last August. Time after time, I was honored when the tribal leaders honored Phillip as a fallen warrior. Following one tribal council meeting, an elderly grandmother asked if she could honor Phillip. She told me she had two grandsons in Iraq. She wanted to express her condolences to my family. She had made a quilt with the American flags interspersed throughout the quilt for the fallen warrior. She asked me to turn around. And reaching on her tiptoes, she draped the quilt around my shoulders. Then she embraced me.

(The remarks of Mr. BAUCUS pertaining to the introduction of S. 3865 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The minority leader.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, coincidentally, coming to the floor this morning, I signed two letters of condolences to families, one in northern Nevada—Silver Springs, NV—and one in Las Vegas, NV, to parents who lost young men in Iraq during the last week or so. I have signed lots of these letters for Nevadans, but signing one of these letters in the future will never be the same after listening to my friend from Montana.

When I first learned of Phillip's death, I said on the Senate floor: MAX BAUCUS has a son. I know him, a wonderful young man. But this nephew of Senator BAUCUS was like his second son. So in the future, when I sign these letters, I will think of MAX BAUCUS because it is easy, it is human nature, to feel sorrow when we sign these letters and see these names—approaching 2,700—but when you have actually experienced the loss, I know, having witnessed the distress my friend has gone through, I repeat, signing that letter to one of these families will never be the same.

So I say to Senator BAUCUS, who is part of the Senate family, one of the senior Members of the Senate, the thoughts of every Senator go out to you, MAX. And you did today what your heart said you should do. I wish we could convey to everyone in America, through you, what is going on in our country and what sacrifices families are making. We have to make their sacrifices stand for something.

Again, it is wonderful to have MAX BAUCUS as our friend. And more especially to me, on a personal note, it is important he is my friend.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I thank my very good friend from Nevada. I thank you very much. And I thank all my colleagues very much. We are one big family here in the Senate and in the country, and we are a great country. We will see our way through all this.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, we have just heard a very powerful and moving statement from the senior Senator from Montana, and we all understand he has suffered a deep and personal loss. I heard about the very close relationship Senator BAUCUS had with the nephew he lost, and he should know that his friends and his colleagues share that loss, that we grieve with him and we grieve with the family, that we especially appreciate the very moving statement he made.

It is our obligation—it is our obligation—to make certain these losses mean something and that, in the end, our country is successful against this threat.

I think every Member of this Chamber recognizes there is a real threat to our Nation and that we owe a deep debt of gratitude to those who answer the country's call, who come forward and serve when they are asked. This Nation owes much to those who have sacrificed, and we should never forget it.

Senator BAUCUS, you should know that your friends and your colleagues—this is a family—mourn with you and grieve with you and your family.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the time for morning business allotted to the minority has expired. The majority controls 15 minutes.

Who seeks time?

The Senator from Kentucky.

NATIONAL SECURITY

Mr. BUNNING. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss the issue of national security. Safety and security of the American people must be our Government's top priority, and we must not lose sight of the threat that faces our Nation. As we approach the anniversary of the attacks of September 11, 2001, I wish to remind all Americans that these were acts of war against the United States.

Since then, the United States and our coalition partners have fought back.

Despite what some might say, we have seen many successes. We have dismantled al-Qaida's terrorist network in Afghanistan and helped democracy rise in its place.

We are working with our allies to secure a united, stable, and democratic Iraq.

We have led an international campaign against terrorist financing, freezing over $1.5 billion in terrorist assets in the United States alone.

Since September 11, there have been no terrorist attacks or acts on American soil. Our intelligence system has prevented 15 major terrorist plots that we know of and likely many others that are undisclosed. We have convicted over 261 defendants in terrorism-related cases and charged more than 180 others.

While we are continually working to make America safer, we still face serious threats from our enemies both at home and abroad.

To win the war against the Islamic fascists, we need an effective intelligence system that is lawful but also provides us with the necessary information to prevent attacks before they occur.

Only last month we were once again reminded that there are people out there who want to kill us and what we stand for. Fortunately, with the help of our British allies, we were able to prevent the terrorists from killing innocent civilians. These threats are real, this war is real, and the outcome will be determined by the action of our Congress and our people, and it will determine the future of our Nation.

This war is unlike any other war we have ever fought. It is both a battle of arms and a battle of ideas. This war of ideology is not an easy one and requires an advancement of freedom.

I know it is often difficult to turn on the news and hear reports from Iraq and Afghanistan and question what type of effective democracy we have in place. Have we so quickly forgotten the image 9 months ago of Iraqis waving their blue fingers in the air after they had voted in the first free elections in their nation's history? Have we forgotten the images of women and children sitting in classrooms in Afghanistan, free to learn without the fear of persecution or execution?

These are images I will never forget. They are images of democracy at work.

Just this morning we saw democracy at work when coalition forces in Iraq handed over control of the Iraqi armed forces to the Iraqi Government.

Effective democracies do take time and hard work. They cannot be created overnight, but in the end they combat the ideology of Islamic fascists.

These terrorists recognize this and because of it are willing to kill innocent people to stop the spread of freedom.

I urge my colleagues not to let them succeed in their efforts and to join me in maintaining a united front against these terrorist nations and the terrorists across the world as we press ahead with important national security legislation in the coming weeks.

While we may disagree about different policies in our war against these terrorists, we must not lose sight of what is at stake for our country. We owe it to future generations—my 35 grandkids, 4 great-grandkids, 9 children, and their spouses—we owe it to all Americans because the cost of failure is too great.

I, for one, will not back down from the challenges and look forward to working with my colleagues on this matter.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. MURKOWSKI). The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Madam President, I am pleased to join my colleague from Kentucky in commenting this morning during morning business on our efforts to protect against the continuing threats to our Nation, specifically protecting ourselves against the continuing threat from terrorists.

I am pleased to see President Bush in recent days presenting to the American people and the world what the facts are, what we have achieved in our efforts to defend our country against the terrorist acts and to protect against those who would harm American citizens around the world.

I am pleased to see that we have the strong leadership of the President on this issue and those who are working with him in the administration to carry out his policies and the policies we have identified here to support through votes in the Senate and the House.

Secretary Rumsfeld has come under a lot of criticism recently. Many people have been making speeches, calling for his resignation. I think he has done a good job. I think he has been a solid performer to carry out the mission that we have to perform to succeed in the war on terror.

The Congress has approved appropriations bills, authorizations for the work that is being done in this very difficult and challenging area. We now have before us in the Senate another appropriations bill providing funds for the Department of Defense. We have a bill that has been approved by our Appropriations Committee funding the Department of Homeland Security. In both of these measures, we have outlined an aggressive effort that should be carried out by our Government to protect our country, and the efforts that we have made and the administration has made are working. They are doing a great job.

Recent events in England have shown us how difficult the challenge is for other countries and how sometimes preemptive and decisive action is needed in order to protect the citizens of England and our country as well. We applaud the close working relationship we have with them. We benefit from their efforts, and we are grateful to them for the courage and the skill they have shown in this war on terror.

The Congress should continue to support the administration, not take advantage of opportunities for political bickering, partisan nitpicking—whatever one might want to call it. I think we need to take a higher ground in this debate and discussion of what our options are for protecting our country and our people. We don't need the constant drumbeat of partisan criticism against the President and the Secretary of Defense.

I think we should consider instead the impressive success of our soldiers, their courage, and the courage of their leaders and the skill of their leaders in mobilizing the resources of our country to guarantee success in the war on terror.

Just consider what is going on in Iraq right now. Madam President, under the leadership of President Bush and Secretary of Defense Rumsfeld and GEN George Casey, our outstanding commander who is responsible for the multinational force that is in Iraq today, we are successfully helping Iraq organize, equip, and train their forces so they can take care of their own security interests.

Iraqi security forces are now in the lead and responsible for almost 75 percent of the military obligations and challenges that are faced today in Iraq.

There are currently 5 Iraqi divisions, 26 brigades, and 88 battalions that are in the lead in their areas of responsibility in Iraq.

More and more of the land area in Iraq is now under the control of Iraqi's own security forces, supported, of course, by coalition government troops who are there as well.

The other day, at a news conference in Baghdad, General Casey explained that he can see U.S. troop reductions in Iraq over the next 12 to 18 months because Iraqi security forces are progressing to a point where they can take on the security responsibilities of the country.

We have seen a significant step being taken when the Iraqi Ministry of Defense announced it is assuming direct operational control over the country's Armed Forces. That announcement was made today. The Iraqi joint headquarters, under the direction of the Ministry of Defense, will be fully responsible now for the Iraqi Air Force, the Iraqi naval force, and the Iraqi ground forces command.

These are facts, Madam President, which we ought to consider and applaud, and our Government and our Department of Defense and our soldiers deserve credit for the successes they have achieved and the strong leadership that has been provided to them.

The United States and coalition forces have gradually turned over other security operations in Afghanistan, for example, to NATO forces. This has been a very impressive feat of leadership to bring together the forces of NATO originally responsible for European defense and now enlarged to include areas of concern to other NATO countries in what had been previously considered out-of-area interests.

NATO forces have taken control of the International Security Assistance Force in the north, west, most recently in the south, and now are making progress in the east to achieve control and success in defending the security of the people of Afghanistan.

There are 37 nation states involved in this effort. We ought to applaud the President, and we ought to applaud the Secretary of Defense for the successes they have achieved in moving us to this point in our dealings with Afghanistan. We have liberated Afghanistan. The Russians had experiences there. We recall their failures and the dangers that continued under the Taliban—the deprivation of rights, particularly of women and children. No schools were available. Now we have moved into a new area of freedom and hope because of the work that these 37 nations have achieved under U.S. leadership and with the U.S. military very actively involved.

So today I am pleased to say to the administration and the Secretary of Defense and the President specifically: We are proud of the work you are doing. We are going to continue to support you by providing the funding you need to carry out your missions and protect our country against terrorists and the other threats that we have looming on the horizon.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Madam President, how much time is remaining in morning business on our side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is only 15 seconds remaining.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for up to 5 minutes as in morning business. I want to speak about the Iranian President who is going to be in Washington speaking today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONRAD. There is no objection on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

IRAN

Mr. BROWNBACK. Madam President, I thank my colleagues for this opportunity to speak.

Later today, President Khatami of Iran will be speaking at the National Cathedral. I hope he is asked and he answers a number of questions about what happened during his reign of terror in Iran.

President Khatami was the President of Iran, the lead sponsor of terrorism around the world.

President Khatami was President of Iran, a country that seeks to have the United States bow down in front of Iran and to Iran.

President Khatami worsened the human rights record in Iran to its own people. As we speak right now, a press conference is going on at the National Press Club of Iranians who have somehow gotten out of that country who were tortured under President Khatami and President Ahmadi-Nejad, the current President of Iran.

I hope that as we deliberate the Department of Defense appropriations bill, we recognize this threat. This is a country, Iran, that seeks to destroy

Israel, seeks to attack and destroy the West, seeks to have us bow down. I will read the quote from President Ahmadi-Nejad that he said in July. He called on America and the West to bow before Iran saying:

If you would like to have good relations with the Iranian nation in the future, bow down before the greatness of the Iranian nation and surrender. If you don't accept to do this, the Iranian nation will force you to surrender and bow down.

Those are his words. We will not bow down. We are in a war on terrorism. We are in a war against Islamic fascism, which this is a statement of. I hope we recognize that. In the war on terrorism, terrorism is their tactic, and they use it through Hezbollah and Hamas, which Iran is supporting and operating. They direct it at us. We have to confront this and we have to confront this Islamic fascism. What they seek to establish is a militant dictatorship, an Islamic fascist dictatorship. This group has an object. They don't just wander around. Step 1 is to remove the United States from the Middle East. Step 2 is to establish an Islamic caliphate. This is an Islamic dictator over an entire region—a Shia crescent over an entire region of the world. These are his words. This is what they seek. They seek a nuclear weapon to be able to threaten the region, to be able to use in this region. Ayatollah Khamenei, the lead sponsor and organizer of the current Islamic Republic, in 1979, removing the Shah, came in and said if we destroy Israel, Allah will reward us. This is a governing theological philosophy that has not been walked away from by the current leadership in Iran. Let's listen to the words they say themselves.

Former President Khatami is going to be speaking in Washington, DC, tonight. He said in October 2000:

If we abide by the Koran, all of us should mobilize to kill.

This is October 2000. He should be asked, does he still believe that statement or support that statement.

Today, I will be introducing the Iran Human Rights Act, legislation designed to focus our attention on the human rights abuses taking place in Iran today and support the efforts of the Iranian people to enact peaceful, democratic reforms.

While we have been focusing on the nuclear weapon development by the Iranians and on their support for terrorism, we should not forget about the plight of the Iranian people and their difficulties under this regime. The bill creates a special envoy to focus on human rights abuses in Iraq and to work with groups who support human rights and democracy in Iran.

The bill provides financial supports to these groups supporting human rights and that are working toward democracy in Iran. Finally, it ensures that the United States broadcast into Iran emphasize U.S. support for the rights and well-being of the Iranian people. We need to focus on the nuclear weapons, and we also need to focus on the rights of the Iranian people being abused by this regime. It is also my hope that we will grant visas to this country to professors being kicked out of universities in Iran because they don't tow the line of the ruling clerics in that country. Currently, the universities are being purged in Iran of the dissident voices of these professors.

We stand with the Iranian people. We stand against this Iranian tyrannical regime. I hope we can move this legislation forward to show our support for the suffering people. I ask the people who go to the meetings where President Khatami is speaking to ask these questions:

Why did he support terrorism? Why did the human rights record get worse under his 8 years of leadership in Iran? Why do they persecute religious minorities and women? Why do they persecute those who have peaceful protests inside Iran? Why does Iran need to enrich uranium when they have plentiful oil and gas supplies? These are serious questions in serious times.

I hope that as we consider this Department of Defense bill, we will consider what the words of those who have vowed to destroy us are and that we take appropriate action against them.

I yield the floor.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Con Res. 376 (109th Congress), as made applicable to the House of Representatives by H. Res. 818 (109th Congress) and is designated as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 402 of S. Con. Res. 83 (109th Congress), the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2007, as made applicable in the Senate by section 7035 of Public Law 109-234."

Mr. CONRAD. The amendment is on behalf of myself and Senators DORGAN, SALAZAR, and MENENDEZ.

Five years ago, our Nation was viciously attacked by al-Qaida. We all remember the horrific images from that fateful day. I remember so well arriving at the Capitol building for early morning meetings and, as we entered, security personnel ordered an evacuation. Those of us who were evacuated from this building went back to our offices and were again evacuated there, as there was a belief that there was a potential threat to the Capitol complex. Later on, we saw the results of the attack. We saw people jumping from the World Trade Center. We saw the attack on the Pentagon. We did not know, in the early hours, who was responsible, but we knew the world had changed.

I remember very well that night, as Members of Congress stood on the steps of the Capitol showing that we were shoulder to shoulder in defense of America. That night, there were no Republicans, there were no Democrats; there were just proud Americans on the steps of this Capitol, men and women elected to represent our individual States here in this Capitol. In the 20 years I have been in this Chamber, I never saw such unity, such a sense of purpose that we would not let these acts stand and that those who were responsible would be held to account.

We need to renew that spirit. We need Democrats and Republicans standing together to bring to justice those who were responsible for these horrific acts. In this photo is the man who planned, financed, and organized those operations, Osama bin Laden, the head of al-Qaida. It has now been over 1,800 days since those attacks, and this man is still on the loose. This man has still not been brought to justice. I believe it is one of our Nation's highest priorities that he and the other top leadership of al-Qaida be brought to justice. I include Mr. al-Zawahiri. I think we also know that Mullah Omar, the leader of the Taliban in Afghanistan, has not been apprehended and brought to justice either.

To me, this is centrally important to the war on terrorism. We have to get the terrorist leaders who designed the attack on our country. I say to my colleagues that I graduated from high school from an American military base in Tripoli, Libya, North Africa, Willis Air Force Base. I had relatives who were in the intelligence service of the United States who served in that part of the world as well. One thing I learned when I was in that part of the world is that if a fight started, you better get the leaders and you better get them quick; otherwise, it mushroomed and escalated. My experience was very minor. It was on the basketball court, where we would have shepherds periodically come and start throwing stones. We found out early that you better get a stone and you better nail a couple of their guys or the thing got worse. I think all of us who have studied the Arab world know that in that culture, if somebody attacks and is not held to account, that person grows in stature in that culture.

We have to hold to account Osama bin Laden, al-Zawahiri, and all of the rest of the al-Qaida leadership. I think that is absolutely critical for success in the war on terror. Osama bin Laden continues to call for attacks on us. We are now seeing a Taliban resurgence in Afghanistan. Last month, we saw a plot that may have been orchestrated by al-Qaida to blow up airliners flying between Britain and the United States. Unfortunately, the latest intelligence—and this is not classified, so I am not disclosing any state secrets here—according to the National Institute for the Prevention of Terrorism, the number of al-Qaida operatives worldwide has grown from 20,000 in 2001 to 50,000 today.

Some of our colleagues have likened this to World War II. I don't believe that. This is not like World War II. This is fundamentally and profoundly different. In World War II, we had Hitler Germany attempting to achieve world dominance. In World War II, we had a state, the nation of Germany, attacking its neighbors, seeking hegemony throughout Europe and beyond. We had Germany attacking its neighbors. We had Germany on the move against Great Britain. We had Germany with its allies attacking the Soviet Union. That was profoundly different than a network of terrorists spread in over 70 countries around the world seeking to weaken our country. That is a profoundly different circumstance than we faced in World War II. In World War II, we faced the sneak attack by Japan on the United States, and Japan being allied with Germany in a move to achieve world dominance. That is a profoundly different circumstance than the one we face today. And if we don't adapt our methods and tactics and strategy, we will be less successful.

It is critical that we have this debate, and it should not be a partisan debate. To me, this is not a matter of Republicans and Democrats; this is a question of how does our country succeed in this battle against terrorism? How do we best succeed? My own conviction is, it starts with this man. It doesn't end there, but it starts here. Osama bin Laden has got to be brought to justice. Mr. Zawahiri has got to be brought to justice. Mullah Omar has got to be brought to justice. And I don't question—I don't question the intention of this administration to attempt to do that, but I do note that it has now been 5 years, and there has been a failure to get those who organized the attack on our country. That is a fact. And we need to deal with that fact and we need to adopt new methods, new strategies in order to achieve success. That is my conviction.

These are things that disturb me greatly. In March of 2004, USA Today reported:

In 2002, troops from the fifth special forces group who specialize in the Middle East were pulled out of the hunt for Osama bin Laden to prepare for their next assignment: Iraq.

Their replacements were troops with expertise in Spanish cultures.

Let's think about that a minute. After Osama bin Laden, who led the attacks, we put in special forces to find him who were experts in Arab culture and in Arab languages. But when we diverted our attention and moved to Iraq, we pulled those forces out of Afghanistan in the search for Osama bin Laden and replaced them, according to these news reports, with troops with expertise in Spanish culture. There aren't many Spanish speakers or much Spanish culture in Afghanistan. I think this was a profound mistake.

The article goes on to say:

The CIA meanwhile was stretched badly in its capacity to collect, translate, and analyze information coming from Afghanistan.

When some say the center of the war on terrorism is Iraq, I think they have it wrong. The center is in Afghanistan where Osama bin Laden and Zawahiri have been located. I am not saying I know that they are located there now. We know they were located there; perhaps they are somewhere else at this point. But at the time we shifted our focus, I believe it was a mistake. I believe we ought to have focused like a laser on the leadership of al-Qaida. Al-Qaida attacked us; not Iraq. There wasn't a single Iraqi on those airplanes that crashed into the World Trade Center. There wasn't a single Iraqi on the plane that hit the Pentagon. There wasn't a single Iraqi on the plane that went down in Pennsylvania. They were al-Qaida operatives led by Osama bin Laden, not Iraqis led by Saddam Hussein.

I might add that once we took our eye off the ball in getting the terrorists and instead went to Iraq, we have now unfortunately freed up Iran for all kinds of troublemaking in the Middle East. Iran is behind the operations of Hezbollah in Lebanon. Is there any doubt that they are the financial muscle behind that operation? This is a battle. It is a battle that is critically important to our Nation's security, and we have to fight it in a smart and disciplined and focused way if we are to succeed. That is my belief.

Now we learn that the CIA has closed the unit that is focused on the capture of Osama bin Laden. This report from July of this year says:

The Central Intelligence Agency has closed the unit that for a decade had the mission of hunting Osama bin Laden and his top lieutenants. The unit, known as Alec Station, was disbanded late last year and its analysts reassigned within the CIA Counter-Terrorist Center.

The article goes on to say:

In recent years, the war in Iraq has stretched the resources of the intelligence agencies and the Pentagon, generating new priorities for American officials.

I believe the priority remains getting those who attacked us. It wasn't Iraq that attacked us; it was al-Qaida that attacked us, and it is critically important we hold them to account.

On August 21, the President said this:

The terrorists attacked us and killed 3,000 of our citizens before we started the freedom agenda in the Middle East.

He was then interrupted by a reporter who asked:

What did Iraq have to do with that?

The President:

What did Iraq have to do with what?

The reporter:

The attacks upon the World Trade Center.

The President:

Nothing.

That is correct, nothing. We know from the 9/11 Commission Iraq was not involved in the attacks of 9/11. It was al-Qaida—al-Qaida led by Osama bin Laden. That is where we have to focus. And this, to me, is not a political debate. This is a question of the strategic policy of the United States. How do we best defend America against those who have already attacked us and intend to attack us again? I would submit the first thing we have to do is get the leadership of the organization that is worldwide in scope, that seeks to take us down. Make no mistake, this is a battle with real consequences, and we have got to fight it in the smartest, most effective way.

It has now been 1,823 days since Osama bin Laden attacked us. Madam President, 1,823 days; that is a long time. That is nearly 5 years. The President just issued a new intelligence estimate and analysis. There is only one mention of Osama bin Laden in that document, and it is a reference in passing.

I don't think it should be a matter that is mentioned in passing. I deeply believe we have to refocus and we have to go after, in a disciplined and dedicated way, the leadership of al-Qaida, starting with Osama bin Laden, going to Zawahiri, and right down the list. I applaud those successes that we have had in getting Zarqawi and others. Thank God for that. But we have got to get those at the top.

This amendment adds $200 million to the intelligence budget for a unit explicitly dedicated to bringing Osama bin Laden and other top al-Qaida leadership to justice. The second part of this amendment requires a classified report every 90 days on activities of our Government related to bringing Osama bin Laden to justice. A classified report because, obviously, we don't want to signal the game plan.

This is the amendment that I offer, and I thank my colleagues who have cosponsored it with me: Senator DORGAN, my colleague from North Dakota; Senator SALAZAR from Colorado; Senator MENENDEZ from New Jersey; and now I am informed that additional Senators have asked to join, including Senator LINCOLN of Arkansas, Senator KERRY of Massachusetts, and Senator OBAMA of Illinois.

I ask unanimous consent to add them as original cosponsors of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DORGAN. Madam President, Senator CONRAD and I have, over the last 2 days, talked about the need for an amendment of this type to be offered to the Defense appropriations bill. We have talked about several different ways of offering this amendment and the circumstances that require us to come here and draft an amendment and offer it to our colleagues. This amendment represents some discussions, as well, with colleagues. I want to say that almost all of that which persuaded us to do this has now been described by my colleague, Senator CONRAD.

He talked about 9/11 2001. I recall going to Ground Zero in New York as the fire was still burning, smoke coming out of the wreckage of the World Trade Center from the bombing of the trade center by the terrorists and the murder of 3,000 innocent Americans. And as we toured just several days after those terrorists had hit the World Trade Center in New York, and the smoke was still billowing out of that twisted steel wreckage, one of the grizzled firefighters who had not shaved for several days, obviously had not slept, had bloodshot eyes, came up to me as we were touring—a group of Senators—and he said to me: “Get ‘em. Ya’ll have to get ‘em. If you don’t get ‘em, they are going to do it to us again.”

Having worked in this wreckage of the World Trade Center and having seen the carnage and the bodies, what he meant was that if we don’t get those who did this, they will repeat it. That firefighter was speaking with a real passion, a passion that I think is shared by the American people. That passion was shared on that day and it is now, today.

That attack on 9/11—my colleague showed a picture of it—was with commercial airplanes loaded with fuel used as weapons. The New York Times ran a piece on August 11, 2004, by Nicholas Christoff, about a book by Harvard professor Graham Allison called “Nuclear Terrorism.” Allison told a story in this book that exactly 1 month after 9/11, on October 11 in 2001, aides told President Bush that a CIA source named Dragon Fire had reported that al-Qaida had obtained a 10-kiloton nuclear weapon, apparently stolen from Russian stockpiles, and had smuggled it into New York City, and al-Qaida terrorists were now prepared to detonate it. This is described in some detail in the book.

The CIA apparently found this report plausible. They knew that apparently Russia had small 10-kiloton nuclear weapons. Russia was reported to have lost some nuclear materials. Al-Qaida had made a determined effort to acquire them. The CIA had apparently picked up al-Qaida chatter about an “American Hiroshima.” This issue was taken very seriously in October of 2001. Later it was determined the lead by the agent named Dragon Fire was a false lead. But in retrospect of this issue, all of those who evaluated it determined it could well have been true.

It is not implausible that a nuclear weapon could be stolen. After all, there are some 30,000 nuclear weapons on this Earth. It is not implausible that having a nuclear weapon stolen by a terrorist group, it could be detonated. And it is certainly likely they would attempt to detonate a nuclear weapon in the center of a major city, especially a city in the United States.

I describe that only to say these issues are critically important. Yes, 9/11 breaks our heart—all of the innocent Americans killed by acts of terrorism. But that will be an event that will be small by comparison if, in fact, a nuclear weapon is acquired by a terrorist group like al-Qaida and detonated in an American city in the future.

There are responsible people who have said they believe there is a very substantial likelihood such an event could or will happen in the next 10 years, unless this country provides the leadership to stop the spread of nuclear weapons, stops the proliferation of nuclear weapons and does everything necessary to keep nuclear weapons out of the hands of terrorists.

The evil of terrorism requires and demands a unified American resolve. As my colleague has previously said, when it comes to fighting terrorism, there are no D’s or R’s, there are no Republicans or Democrats, conservatives or liberals, there are only Americans resolved to confront this evil.

We are determined to confront and defeat those who are intent on murdering innocent people in the name of terrorism. We fight terrorism to preserve freedom, but we betray rather than serve our freedom if we turn a blind eye to the actions which will diminish the very freedoms we cherish, even as we confront the actions of terrorists. As we wage this fight against terrorism, we do not serve the interests of our country by labeling others who may disagree with strategies as appeasers, of the type who appeased Nazism. That does not serve America’s interests either.

I have heard colleagues today come to the floor to lament that there have been some criticisms of Administration strategies. Let’s all understand no one is perfect. Big mistakes have been made. Mistakes, and big mistakes, have been made, both with respect to Iraq and also with respect to the war against terrorism.

In Iraq, we discovered later there were no weapons of mass destruction.

There was no yellow cake from Niger. The aluminum tubes were not for the purpose of building a nuclear capability. There were no mobile chemical weapons labs. Would we be treated as liberators as was suggested? No. It turns out that was not the case.

Were mistakes made? Two days ago, a young fellow who left law school after 9/11 to enlist in the Army to go to Iraq told me that when he got to Iraq his mother, an elementary school-teacher, had to go on the Internet to buy body armor to send it to him. Were mistakes made? You darned right mistakes were made. Mistakes were made. Let’s understand that. Recognizing and understanding that and admitting it allows us to decide not to make those mistakes again.

All of us are here to support our soldiers in their fight against terrorism, in their mission in Iraq. Let me say, as an aside as well, that the violence and terrorism in Iraq does have an al-Qaida component; it does. But by far the bulk and the majority of the violence and terrorism in Iraq is Iraqi upon Iraqi, Sunni upon Shia, Shia upon Sunni. There was not an Iraq connection with al-Qaida prior to the war in Iraq.

Having said all of that, with respect to the broader war on terror, when we open the newspaper this morning and we see the front page of the Washington Post—and I suspect every other daily paper in this country—and we see the pictures of terrorists who will now be transferred to Guantanamo and be brought to justice, all of us say to the President it is the right thing to do. We support that. Yes, this is progress. We understand that progress and we salute it.

My colleague and I believe there is more to do, however. When we talk about the war against terrorism and we talk about al-Qaida and those who have orchestrated the vicious terrorist attacks that have murdered so many innocent people in this country and around the world, the point is there is one person who is the head of that organization, who has admitted ordering the attacks against this country. That is Osama bin Laden. It is 5 long years since 9/11, 2001, and Osama bin Laden is still here.

The President, day before yesterday, mentioned Osama bin Laden 17 times in his speech of 45 minutes. That is appropriate to do, although I might observe Osama bin Laden has not been mentioned at all with respect to the war on terror by anyone in the Administration for some long while until a couple of days ago. But I want to describe why I think there is an urgency here and why my colleague, Senator CONRAD, and I put together an amendment and are offering it to this bill.

I have a record here going back to December 13, 2001—it is about eight pages of Osama bin Laden talking to us, in America, talking to people in the rest of the world, and talking to al-Qaida, his organization. It is December 13, 2001; November 2, 2002; February 11, 2003; February 13, 2003; April 7, 2003; September 10, 2003. I shall not go through the rest of it. But I want to talk about this year. Just this year we have heard from Osama bin Laden on 5 occasions. This chart shows January 19 this year. This is from the news report that evening, Osama bin Laden speaking to the people of the United States and the people of the world. That is the first message this year.

Here is the second message, Osama bin Laden speaks again, the head of al-Qaida, 5 years after 9/11. On April 23, he issues his second tape of the year.

May 23, this year, once again the news reports:

Bin Laden boasts of masterminding the 9/11 attacks.

I was responsible for entrusting the 19 brothers. Those 19 who attacked this country.

June 29 of this year, another news report, the fourth tape of the year by Osama bin Laden.

July 1, this year, the fifth tape of the year by Osama bin Laden.

We are talking a lot about the war on terrorism. We are talking a lot about al-Qaida. This is the head of al-Qaida. This is the leader of that terrorist group. This is the person who says he masterminded the attack against this country, and 5 years after that attack he is still sending us messages—five of them in this year alone. My colleague and I do not question anyone's commitment to doing the right thing. That is not the purpose of our amendment. My colleague, Senator CONRAD, and I believe, however, that it is important as we put together a piece of legislation providing funding for the Department of Defense, for the war against terrorism, that we decide on focus and priority with respect to one issue and that is bringing to justice the head of an organization that attacked this country and is determined to attack this country again.

The amendment we have offered is not a particularly complex amendment. It simply does two things. It asks that the unit in the CIA, our intelligence community, that used to exist but was closed be reconstituted. Let me describe that unit. I will describe it by a New York Times, July 4, story. The lead of the story is:

The Central Intelligence Agency has closed the unit that for a decade had the mission of hunting Osama bin Laden and his top lieutenants, intelligence officials confirmed on Monday. Agency officials said that tracking Mr. bin Laden and his deputies remained a high priority and that the decision to disband the unit was not a sign that the effort had slackened. Instead, the official said, it reflected a belief the agency could better deal with high level threats by focusing on regional trends rather than on specific organizations or individuals.

Let me quote the former senior CIA official who is quoted by name, Mr. Michael Scheuer, a former senior CIA official, who was the first head of this unit at the CIA. He said the move "reflected a view within the agency that Mr. Bin Laden was no longer the threat he once was." Mr. Scheuer says, "That view is mistaken."

Madam President, our amendment would provide the funds to reconstitute that unit, to provide focus, clarity and a specific set of goals. And, second, to require a quarterly classified report to the Congress that would describe, from the standpoint of those in the intelligence community and the defense community who are involved, what they have done with respect to apprehending and bringing to justice those who head the organization called al-Qaida.

My hope and expectation would be that upon passage of this amendment my colleague and I will have provided some more clarity and some more focus and even perhaps some more determination that a significant goal of ours is the apprehension of the head of the organization that attacked our country. I do not think that apprehension will occur by accident. I think it will occur if it is in fact a significant goal and one that we pursue with the resources and the vigor that is necessary.

I understand that there will be some who say that we have other priorities; this remains a priority but there are many other things to do. Let me go back to the position that I started with and that is this. We live in a very dangerous world, a very uncertain world. The President is dead right when he talks about the war on terrorism being a war in which we must prevail. He is absolutely right that we have to work together and have to be as one as we confront this evil that exists around the world.

But I also want to point out that we live in a world, now, where, as I indicated before, there are almost 30,000 strategic and tactical nuclear weapons that exist in this world. Going back to October 11 of 2001, the threatened loss of one of those nuclear weapons, because of a rumor that it had been stolen from the Russian stockpile, caused an apoplectic seizure in parts of the government because everyone, at that point, in the intelligence community, who had heard of this rumor, knew it was plausible and that the detonation of a nuclear weapon in a major American city by al-Qaida would be devastating. The consequences of that are impossible to describe. The next terrorist act may render the attack of 9/11/2001, a much less significant attack in terms of casualties. Let's hope that is not the case.

That is why it is so urgent for us to determine that we are going to apprehend and bring to justice those who head the al-Qaida organization and who masterminded the attack against this country on 9/11/2001. That is what our amendment seeks to do, to provide the resources and the assistance to make that possible.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator PRYOR be added as an original cosponsor as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he seeks time on this amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Madam President, we have time on the floor. I seek recognition.

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, I have not relinquished my right to the floor. I simply asked a question.

Mr. STEVENS. He is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ENSIGN). The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, this amendment is an urgent matter. I hope very much our colleagues would support this amendment on a bipartisan basis so that we send the clear message that this country intends to hold to account those who organized the attack on America. I think that is absolutely essential.

I also say to my colleague, if the Senator from Alaska seeks recognition, I will be happy to yield the floor so he can do that.

I ask him at this point if he would have an interest in a time agreement on the amendment? We were approached earlier with a request on that matter. I would be happy to explore that, if the Senator from Alaska has any interest.

Mr. STEVENS. If that is an inquiry to me, I am interested in a time agreement, without any question. I am happy to set a time to vote, at noon or at any time.

Mr. CONRAD. We would be happy to agree to a time. Would noon be an acceptable time?

Mr. STEVENS. We are checking.

Mr. CONRAD. Perhaps later on in this discussion we can reach an agreement. We would certainly be willing to agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I would welcome the opportunity to make some brief comments on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has been recognized.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I commend my colleagues from North Dakota and Colorado and others who are supporting this amendment. In many respects, this gives real focus to what I think is part of the dilemma that we are facing in our battles with al-Qaida and the issues of security. A number of us opposed the resolution to go to war in Iraq. I did. I said it was the best vote that I cast in the U.S. Senate. And I did it primarily as a result of listening to military commanders in the Armed Services Committee.

We had testimony—although he didn't testify personally—from General Zinni. We listened to General Hoar of the U.S. Marine Corps, actually from my own State of Massachusetts. We listened to General Wesley Clark and General Nash—a number who have been combat commanders. If you look back in terms of the history and the testimony of those military commanders, virtually all of them were saying to the Armed Services Committee that we ought to keep our focus on what was really the challenge: Osama bin Laden, al-Qaida, and Afghanistan. That was the testimony before the Armed Services Committee.

I will not take the time now to repeat the series of statements and comments that were made by the President and the Secretary of Defense. I remember the testimony of the Secretary of Defense before the Armed Services Committee when he talked about weapons of mass destruction. He was asked at that time by the ranking minority member, Senator LEVIN. His response was they were north, south, east, and west of Baghdad. That was where the weapons of mass destruction were. That is the testimony of the Secretary of Defense.

We remember all of those comments. We saw the Nation move and shift thinking that there were weapons of mass destruction, and al-Qaida was the primary force in bringing about 9/11. Of course, there wasn't adequate intelligence to justify that. Even the President admitted that there were no weapons of mass destruction. Even the bipartisan 9/11 Commission's thorough examination shows very clearly that those were the representations made by the Vice President of the United States.

During that period of time, the combat commanders who testified understood where we were going—the real challenge was finding Osama bin Laden. We saw the extraordinary efforts that were made by the military, all of which had this Nation focused on trying to get al-Qaida. The world was supporting the United States. The world understood that the United States had been assaulted and attacked. The world intelligence community was coming together and saying we are going to help the United States of America find the person who perpetrated the 9/11 attack in the United States. All of that was happening all over the world.

Then what happened? The judgment and the decision was made in the White House: Well, we have the role of going over there to Afghanistan, so we are going into Iraq. The rest is history.

In spite of the fact that Osama bin Laden was on the run, despite the fact that the intelligence reports showed that he was just within hours of almost getting captured, the diversion of both troops and diversion of focus, the diversion of intelligence went to Iraq.

Now we have an amendment to try to get us back in focus on the primary individual who was the organizer of 9/11.

I share the concerns that have been stated by both Senators and the frustration when the judgment and decision was made by the Pentagon that they no longer had the priority of going after bin Laden.

We all understand the complexities of trying to find him in the mountainous areas around Afghanistan's border and into Pakistan. We all understand those complexities and those difficulties and the political problems and all the rest. But, nonetheless, we had the world combined to find him and bring him to account. We have failed to do so.

I think this amendment brings the Senate, in hopefully a bipartisan way, to say we want to give focus and attention to finding and bringing to justice Osama bin Laden.

Listening to Senators, I am mindful that at the end of this year we will have been fighting the war in Iraq longer than we fought in World War II. Understand that we took on the Germans in western Europe, north Africa, the Japanese in the Far East, mobilizing 12 million to 14 million people over this period of time. And we will have by the end of the year—we are now in September—we have been fighting in Iraq longer than we fought in World War II—28 million people. We virtually occupied with air supremacy over the whole country—the top third of it and the lower third of it was a heavy embargo, violations of embargoes. But the amount was $14 billion a year in terms of the military, and we now have servicemen still weighted down over there.

I agree with those who said the service men and women have done their job. The politicians haven't done theirs with regard to Iraq.

That doesn't get away from the point that our focus has been diverted to Iraq.

We have seen the number of al-Qaida grow. According to the National Security Project, in 2001 it was 20,000. In 2006, it is 50,000. The number of al-Qaida terrorist attacks 5 years before 1991 was 3. But now the number 5 years since 9/11 is 30. We have the growth happening all over the world and no accounting for Osama bin Laden.

This is what has happened with al-Qaida. The number of significant global terrorist attacks reported by the U.S. State Department in 2003 was 175. The number exceeded 3,000 in 2004, and 11,000 in 2005.

Look at the growth. We are weighted down in Iraq, and Osama bin Laden is out there someplace.

This amendment makes a great deal of sense. I thank both my colleagues for doing something. This is a small amount of resources which are asked for. Look at what we are spending, more than $200 million a day in Iraq. I believe this is $20 million—$200 million a day we are spending in Iraq.

Do we realize that if we weren't spending $200 million a day—and over $350 billion has been expended—what we could have done with regard to homeland security? How could we have protected Americans with those resources more effectively? How could we have gone after al-Qaida more effectively? How could we have enhanced the security of the American people more effectively?

This has been a catastrophic miscalculation on the part of the administration, and the amendment of the Senators is trying to give focus and attention and priority to where we ought to give focus and attention and priority.

I commend them for doing something.

I hope this amendment will be accepted and embraced and passed overwhelmingly.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, it has been cleared on this side by Senator INOUE and myself.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to a vote in relation to the pending Conrad amendment at 12 noon, with no second-degree amendments in order prior to the vote, and with the time equally divided between the two managers or their designees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONRAD. There is no objection on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I am, as are the Senators from North Dakota, quite worried about this amendment. It is my intention to ask the Senate to vote. It is my understanding that they want a vote on this amendment. It is my intention to ask every Senator to vote for the amendment.

It is a political season. I understand that. I consider this amendment to be a slam at the intelligence community.

I can tell the Senate that there is more money than this available. If I tried to discuss the amount of money which is available, I would be violating my oath as far as confidential and classified material. For reasons of national security, I cannot elaborate on that.

I arranged for the two Senators from North Dakota to be briefed about the programs which Senator INOUE and I know about. We urged them not to offer this amendment. There are many funds dedicated in our bill for the global war on terrorism. There are funds in our bill to continue the search for Osama bin Laden. That has never lapsed. It does not need this amendment.

The classified annex accompanying this bill provides details of classified programs in this bill, and they are available to every Senator in room 405 if they want to question my view. Those were offered to the Senators from North Dakota. I do not know whether they took advantage of that or not.

We cannot discuss those programs here. We would jeopardize the lives of many people if we did so.

I know of no way to handle this amendment except, as I said, I ask all Senators to join and vote for this amendment and to trust Senator INOUE and myself to find a way to deal with it in conference. Maybe the Senate will listen to us when we come back.

I remember once, years ago when I offered an amendment to provide funds to deal with Osama bin Laden, offering a reward of dead or alive. That was objected to by a Member on the other side of the aisle.

I note that this amendment says to bring Osama bin Laden to justice. To bring him to justice—does that mean dead or alive? Must we keep him alive if we find him?

There are a lot of things we could discuss on the floor of the Senate about this issue.

I am going to sit down in a minute and I am not going to answer any questions. I am not going to discuss it any more because I consider it to be an irresponsible amendment that should never have been brought before the Senate.

With all of these pictures, it is a campaign period. But to imply to the American public that we have not been looking for Osama bin Laden for years—I can tell you, I am not going to press my friend from Hawaii, but we have spent hours and hours and hours with the intelligence community seeing how we can better devise methods to find this man.

I can assure the Senate that without any question the search for Osama bin Laden has not been hampered by a lack of funds. It has not been hampered by a lack of funds in this bill. If I tried to tell you where the funds are, I would violate my oath.

It is time for us to come to some understanding about what led to this amendment. It was the President's statement the other day. I was there. The conversation on this floor misses the point. It was not Hitler during World War II he was talking about; it was Hitler before World War II. Let me quote what he said on September 5. I listened to it. He said:

In the 1920's, a failed Austrian painter published a book in which he explained his intention to build an Aryan super-state in Germany and take revenge in Europe and eradicate the Jews. The world ignored Hitler's words, and paid a terrible price. His Nazi regime killed millions in gas chambers, and set the world aflame in war, before it was finally defeated at a terrible cost in lives.

Bin Laden and his terrorist allies have made their intention as clear as Lenin and Hitler before them. The question is: Will we listen? Will we pay attention to what these evil men say?

The world can tell I am close to losing my famous temper. I do have one. As I said, I arranged for these Members to be briefed on information that is in this classified annex. I don't understand this amendment.

I intend to let the Senators have their half of the time. The balance of the time will be spent in a quorum.

I yield to my friend from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUE. Mr. President, the record should show that there are significant amounts of money allocated in this bill to several agencies. But to go beyond that and discuss in greater detail would be, as the chairman indicated, a violation of the rules of classification. I will cease at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I say to my colleague that it is a curious conclusion to suggest that adding more resources to the intelligence community for the purpose of bringing to justice Osama bin Laden is a slap in the face to the intelligence community. It is no slap in the face to the intelligence community. If anything, it is a vote of confidence in the intelligence community.

We owe the country this debate and this discussion. I believed when we went to Iraq we were making a mistake. I said on the floor of the Senate right before that vote that I thought we were diverting our attention from those who attacked us. It was al-Qaida, led by Osama bin Laden, not Iraq, led by Saddam Hussein. The simple fact is we have not brought them to justice.

The Senator wonders, what does it mean to bring to justice? We all know what it means to bring someone to justice. Osama bin Laden deserves to be brought to justice. There is no one in this Chamber who doesn't know what that means.

The Senator says this amendment is irresponsible. I think it would be irresponsible not to have this amendment.

The Senator indicated that he asked us to be further briefed yesterday. We did that. There is not one thing I heard in that room that doesn't tell me that what we are seeking to do here is not the right thing, the responsible thing. We cannot talk about those briefings, and we will not talk about them.

Finally, I say to my colleague, this is not political with me. I don't need a political amendment. Anyone who has analyzed my race knows that what I am saying is true. I don't need a political amendment. I have a responsibility to my constituents and to the future of our country. I believe deeply we have not done the job of protecting America when we have failed for 5 years to get the man and the leadership cadre of al-Qaida that organized the attack on this country. I don't choose to make this political.

I made very clear in my statement that I don't question for one moment the commitment of this administration to protect America. I don't question for one moment the intention of every Member on both sides of this aisle to protect our country. I don't question that. I did not make this a political matter; I make this a matter of policy—what is the right thing to do for our country.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, there are areas of classified information that are not discussed in the Senate. Senator CONRAD has just described that we both have had access to that information. It is the information to which my colleagues allude. There is nothing—I repeat, nothing—that we are doing here that does anything to injure anything else that was being done anywhere, at any time. There is nothing here that does injury to anything I know about.

Frankly, it is far too easy to jump up from a chair in the Senate and allege that the amendment you do not like is somehow borne of politics. Yes, there is a barrel full of politics around these days, a barrel full of politics in this Chamber and downtown. We know it when we see it. But I think it ill serves this discussion to talk about irresponsibility, to talk about politics on the issue of what the role of this country is, the determination and the resolve of this country, to decide to provide more focus, more clarity, and more energy to apprehending the head of al-Qaida, Osama bin Laden, the person who masterminded the attack against this country. Again, there is never a circumstance where anyone would find myself or my colleague, Senator CONRAD, coming to the Senate to do injury to anything else we are doing in this country together.

I indicated when I started that I don't think the fight against terrorism is about Democrats or Republicans. It is certainly not about politics, or shouldn't be. However, it is almost unbelievable to me that this amendment is described as "political season" campaign period-motivated and, even more, a slam at our national security. Nothing could be further from the truth than that. This is not slamming anyone. This is trying to provide additional resources, additional focus, additional energy toward a goal that I hope every single American shares. In fact, I bet we would be hard pressed to find an American citizen who says this is not a worthy goal for our country.

My colleague has said that there has been a continuing, unwavering effort to apprehend the top of the terrorist groups, including the leaders of al-

Qaida. Let me read, from 2002, the President's response when asked about Osama bin Laden:

I don't know where he is. I know I just don't spend much time on him, to be honest. I am not truly that concerned about him. I know he's on the run.

The fact is, there have been times when we have been diverted to other areas. Does anyone here believe Iraq has not detracted substantially from what is happening in Afghanistan? Does anyone here believe that? Most of us have been over those mountains. I have flown over those mountains and looked down at the mountains between Afghanistan and Pakistan. That is where most believe Osama bin Laden is hiding, among supporters. I understand how difficult it is to apprehend someone hiding in that region. I don't diminish the difficulty and the complexity of accomplishing that mission.

My colleague and I offered an amendment which is relatively simple which tries to provide more focus and more clarity on the goal, which tries to provide resources. These resources are not dramatic or substantial resources relative to the amount of money we have been spending, for example, in Iraq.

A Member brings an amendment to the floor and someone says: This is political, this is campaign season. That is too easy. I don't think that treats serious issues seriously enough. This is an issue which is serious. It is an issue that deserves attention by this Congress, deserves a statement by this Congress, which I expect we will make unanimously, I hope we will make unanimously. It is a statement that almost every American, I believe, would say they agree with, a statement that says to the American people: Here is a priority, a very substantial priority for which we will dedicate the resources and rededicate ourselves to address these issues.

My understanding is the Senator from Alaska will seek a quorum call, which is just fine.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DORGAN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. I listened with great interest to both of my friends and colleagues in their comments.

As I understand, the amount included in the Senator's amendment is $200 million to be expended over a 2-year period?

Mr. DORGAN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KENNEDY. And the Senator mentioned a figure, and it is my understanding we are spending $200 million a day, virtually, in Iraq at the present time. I think that gives some proportion as to requested resources—$200 million a day in Iraq and $200 million over a 2-year period for this effort.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. DORGAN. I think the Senator puts in perspective the amount of money that is being described.

Let me finally say that I noticed yesterday—I was not in the Senate, but I had the television on—noticed the same issue developing yesterday on an amendment my colleague offered. There was a suggestion that this is all political, all politics, every time someone offers an amendment that someone disagrees with. That is total nonsense. This issue deserves much more serious treatment and much more serious debate than that.

I am pleased that apparently there will be a unanimous vote.

I yield the floor, and I reserve the remainder of time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I will discuss a bit more fully what led me to this amendment. It is not the President's comments of several days ago. That was not the genesis of this amendment. I have believed since we went to war in Iraq—anyone can look at the record and what I said in this Senate the night of the vote—I said then that I believed going to Iraq was a distraction. I believe it diverted our attention and resources from going after the al-Qaida leadership that organized the attack on America. I said that then. I believed it then. I believe it now.

I have a bit of a different background from many of my colleagues. I went to high school at an American military base in Tripoli, Libya, North Africa. I lived in the Arab culture. One of the ironies was the Senator from Alaska suggested this is a slap in the face at the intelligence community. My family served in the intelligence services of our country in that part of the world. I am precluded from going further than that because of classification issues. I have great respect for those who serve in the clandestine and the intelligence services of our country. I have consulted many of them in writing this amendment.

I believe deeply this is the right approach to operationalize, to more fully fund the efforts, not only to get Osama bin Laden—although I believe he is at the top of the list—I also believe it is critically important to get Zawahiri, I believe it is critically important to get Mullah Omar. I regret deeply that resources were transferred from Afghanistan to Iraq, that we had forces that were experts in Arab culture and Arab language and we shifted them to Iraq.

The hard reality is, while there have been successes, which I acknowledged in my opening remarks—I would say to the Senator from Alaska, there have been very excellent successes. Getting Zarqawi, thank God, we got him. Thank goodness for each of those who have been captured and taken out of operational involvement in planning additional attacks on the country.

But the job is not done. We know that. I believe very strongly that we made a strategic error in going to Iraq. I said it then, I say it now. I believe the focus and the energy and the attention ought to have gone—the priority ought to have been al-Qaida, its leadership, and its worldwide network.

I believe this is fundamentally different than World War II. I believe this is a long and difficult struggle. I believe this is a dangerous world. I believe there are people who are plotting right now to again attack our country. And I want to be part of an effort to do everything we can to stop them. That is why I offer this amendment, and for no other reason.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator DAYTON be added as an original cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, how much time remains on our side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 8 minutes 49 seconds remaining.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, let me read one additional piece I did not describe in my earlier presentation. Let me read from the State Department's latest report on terrorism because I think it is important for all of us to understand.

This is, again, from the U.S. State Department's latest report on terrorism:

Al-Qaida's top leaders continue to plot and direct terror attacks worldwide. . . . Over the past four years, al-Qaida, its affiliates and those inspired by the group were also involved in many anti-U.S. or anti-coalition attacks in Africa, Europe, the Middle East, Afghanistan, Pakistan, and Iraq, including suicide bombings and vehicle-borne improvised explosive devices.

Again, the first sentence:

Al-Qaida's top leaders continue to plot and direct terror attacks worldwide. . . .

“Direct terror attacks worldwide”—it is why I think there is no more important goal for this country than to add additional resources, provide additional focus to this question of bringing to justice the head of the organization that has attacked this country and that now organizes and expands and continues to attack around the rest of the world.

I previously described that just in this year alone we have been the recipients of five messages from Osama bin Laden—five just this year. It has been dozens since 2001. I think all of us share a goal and the view that we need to apprehend and bring to justice those who head the organization that attacked this country.

Fighting terrorism is difficult and dangerous and complex. We understand all that. All of us salute our troops. All of us want to work together. As I have indicated, this is not about Republicans and Democrats. It is about Americans sharing and aspiring to achieve a goal. And that goal is to defeat terrorism.

I think the most effective and important way to defeat terrorism, however, is to try to dismantle the organization, and especially dismantle the organization by apprehending the head of that organization and bringing the head and top officials of that organization to justice.

That has not been done, and we are not blaming anybody. I join my colleague, Senator CONRAD, in saluting those in our intelligence service and our military who risk their lives every day. But I believe it is very important for us, as we put together a piece of legislation with substantial resources, to provide greater clarity and focus on this goal. That is why Senator CONRAD and I have written this amendment and offer it today.

I understand there are some who do not want it offered, do not want to have this discussion. I respectfully believe they are wrong. I do not allege that they have political motives. I just believe they are wrong. My hope is, when the Senate speaks to this, it will have accomplished something that is productive and substantial in its comments on this issue.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, there are other Members who are on their way who wish to speak on this matter. I do not know if they will make it.

Senator MENENDEZ has arrived.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ENSIGN). Who yields time?

Mr. CONRAD. I say to Senator MENENDEZ, we could give you 2 minutes.

Mr. MENENDEZ. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. President, I rise to strongly support Senator CONRAD's and Senator DORGAN's amendment and to join with them in it.

It seems to me, as someone who on the anniversary of September 11 is re-mindful of the 700 New Jersey lives that were lost on that fateful day, as well as all of those other Americans who lost their lives on that fateful day, that the central figure, the individual who was the mastermind of their deaths, who struck on that fateful day, is Osama bin Laden. It is very clear to me that we must either catch or kill Osama bin Laden, the mastermind of those attacks.

I know many Americans were as shocked as I was when they heard the news reports that the administration had allegedly closed down or realigned the Osama bin Laden unit at the CIA. And while there is a very difficult process to publicly confirm these reports, I believe the Senate must make it very clear that the United States can in no way reduce or dilute our efforts to kill or capture Osama bin Laden.

With this amendment, we ensure that not only is that unit not disbanded and not merged and not diluted, but, in fact, we ensure that we increase our efforts.

To anyone who would like to argue that we do not need to focus on al-Qaida or bin Laden, I would remind them that just because there has not been another terrorist attack on U.S. soil that does not mean al-Qaida has been eliminated or that bin Laden has been rendered ineffective.

So I am in incredibly strong support of Senator CONRAD's amendment. Perhaps the face of Islamic terrorism has evolved, but he still is our central focus.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator from North Dakota has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from North Dakota. And I thank both of my colleagues from North Dakota for offering this outstanding amendment.

If there were ever a metaphor for what is wrong with the war on terror, it is the fact that Osama bin Laden is alive. He continues to taunt us on al Jazeera broadcasts that we have not found him.

Now, if we said we were doing everything we could to find him, that would be one thing. But the unit to get him was disbanded. Many report that the number of troops in Afghanistan is not adequate. They have just asked for more today. And he is our No. 1 danger.

So I hope my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will support this amendment. The fact that 5 years after 9/11 we have not yet found bin Laden shows we can do a whole lot better in the war on terror than we are doing.

This amendment will help bring us there. I urge full bipartisan support of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I announce to the Senate that the next vote will be Senator DOMENICI's 13,000th vote.

I also announce to the Senate that my younger brother, from Hawaii, Senator INOUE, has a birthday today.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I hope every Senator will vote for the amendment. I don't know any Senator who will vote against providing money to continue the search for Osama bin Laden. If I could disclose to you how much money is in this bill otherwise for a classified program, you would understand why this is a superfluous amendment.

Understanding that nobody would want to vote against something like this, if this amendment becomes law, the freedom of information provisions would mean all of the activities would be available to anybody. This is not a classified $200 million to search for bin Laden. Again, it is irresponsible, but I would not vote against the amendment. I don't want to be known for voting against additional money to search for Osama bin Laden.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the Senator's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAMM). Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 4907 offered by the Senator from North Dakota. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MCCONNELL. The following Senators were necessarily absent: the Senator from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS), the Senator from Georgia (Mr. ISAKSON), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SANTORUM).

Mr. DURBIN. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. LIEBERMAN) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

CONGRATULATING SENATOR PETE DOMENICI ON HIS 13,000TH VOTE

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, on this last rollcall vote, No. 235, the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, the current chairman of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, and the former long-serving chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator PETE DOMENICI, cast his 13,000th vote in this Chamber—13,000 votes. Senator DOMENICI now joins a very historic and select club of Senators who can claim this distinction. Senators now cast more votes than ever in each Congress, so while historical records are not perfect, the Senate Librarian says that we are safe to conclude that among all Senators who have served since the beginning of the Republic, Senator DOMENICI is in a class of only eight. Since the beginning of the Republic, only seven other Senators have similarly cast more than 13,000 votes in their careers in the Senate, and four of them are serving today. The club of seven now becomes the club of eight with Senator DOMENICI's last vote here today.

Those other seven Senators are Senator Clayburn Pell, the current President pro tempore, Senator TED STEVENS, Senator TED KENNEDY, Senator DANIEL INOUE, Senator Ernest Hollings, the late Senator Strom Thurmond, and with over 17,733 votes, the all-time record, Senator ROBERT C. BYRD.

Senator DOMENICI, I know I speak for all of your fellow Senators when I say congratulations on this achievement. But more importantly, thank you for your tremendous service over the years to New Mexico, to your country, and importantly to the U.S. Senate.

(Applause, Senators rising.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, why would I, the Democratic leader of the Senate, stand to offer effusive praise for my Republican colleague, the Senator from New Mexico, PETE DOMENICI? The reason is, I know him. He is my friend. PETE DOMENICI and I have worked on a subcommittee that is so important to this country, Energy and Water. My entire tenure in the Senate has been with him. The last many years Senator DOMENICI and I have worked as ranking member and chair. Whoever controls the Senate, Democrat or Republican, the person whose party is controlling becomes the chairman, the member of the other party becomes the ranking member of that committee. It doesn't matter to PETE DOMENICI or HARRY REID, as it relates to that subcommittee, which is the party in power because we have worked as partners on that subcommittee. We have done some tremendously important things for this country, not only in funding important projects but changing policy.

I like PETE DOMENICI for a number of reasons. I admire PETE DOMENICI for a number of reasons. As a boy, I wanted more than anything else to be a baseball player. I wanted to be a good baseball player. In my child's mind, I figured I could be. But as I got older, I didn't run very fast. I wasn't as strong as I thought I was, so my baseball career was not much to write home about. PETE DOMENICI's is. PETE DOMENICI was a pitcher. PETE DOMENICI pitched for a farm club of one of my favorite baseball teams, the Dodgers, where my good, close friend, Hall of Famer Greg Maddux, now pitches.

PETE DOMENICI will not make the Hall of Fame for baseball, but he will for U.S. Senator. He is a wonderful man.

One reason he is as good as he is because of the woman he married in 1958 by the name of Nancy Burke. They are a wonderful team. I admire and respect them both very much. They have a wonderful family, a large family—two sons and six daughters.

I congratulate PETE DOMENICI, a U.S. Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I want to add my congratulations to Senator DOMENICI on this great achievement, achieving this milestone of becoming one of eight Senators in the history of our country to have cast this many votes.

I have had the good fortune in the 24 years I have been here in the Senate to serve with Senator DOMENICI, and also, of course more recently, to serve with him on the Energy Committee as the ranking member. I have seen the leadership he has provided to deal with our energy issues.

He is the longest serving Senator to have served from the State of New Mexico. Of course, he has cast more votes on behalf of the people of the State of New Mexico than anyone in the history of this country. For that he deserves great recognition.

The people of the State I represent recognize his great contribution and appreciate it greatly. I congratulate him today on reaching this milestone.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, first of all, let me say thank you to each Senator who commented on my many years of voting, which has yielded 13,000 today. I thank you very much and, in particular, I thank the majority leader for doing what he has done, by setting aside these few moments. I greatly appreciate it.

I guess it is pretty easy to get to 13,000. You just stick around long enough and come and vote and you will get there. I don't know how many more I will get but certainly a lot more because there are a lot of years left to come. I don't know how many we will be celebrating, but this is a very special one because of the special people who are here, indicating to me in their own gracious way their appreciation for what I do or don't do in the Senate. I thank all of them for that.

Frankly, I don't feel as if I have cast 13,000 votes, so I don't know what that means. Maybe it means I have a lot more to come. I hope so. Maybe it means we are voting a lot more in the Senate than we used to.

In any event, it is a proud day because you all have made it one. Thank you very much.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. President, before I speak to an amendment, let me join in the commendations to our colleague, Senator DOMENICI. I am privileged to serve on the Energy Committee which Senator DOMENICI chairs. I appreciate his leadership, as well as his commitment to our country. I am pleased to join the many voices that have spoken about his service.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the pending amendment be set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4909

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MENENDEZ] proposes an amendment numbered 4909.

Mr. MENENDEZ. I ask unanimous consent the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To prohibit the use of funds for a public relations program designed to monitor news media in the United States and the Middle East and create a database of news stories to promote positive coverage of the war in Iraq)

At the end of title VIII, add the following:
SEC. 8019. (a) PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS FOR CERTAIN PUBLIC RELATIONS ACTIVITIES.—None of the amounts appropriated or otherwise made available by this Act may be obligated or expended for a public relations program designed to monitor news media in the United States and the Middle East and create a database of news stories to promote positive coverage of the war in Iraq.

(b) SCOPE.—The prohibition in subsection (a) shall not apply to programs and activities of the Department of Defense directed at collecting or analyzing information in the news media.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. President, I rise today to offer an amendment that would limit funds for any future public relations campaign being commissioned by the Pentagon to promote positive coverage of the war in Iraq. We first learned about this $20 million PR campaign to improve the image of President Bush's Iraq policy in the Washington Post last week. In my mind, this proposal is not just irresponsible, it is an insult to the thousands of Iraqi citizens and coalition forces who have died in this war. At a time when this violent insurgency continues to expand and American troops are putting their lives on the line day in and day out, what is the administration's focus? A better public relations campaign? The Bush administration doesn't need a new PR campaign in Iraq. They need a new policy in Iraq.

We must change the course in Iraq, not waste time or money for public relations efforts. We must work to reduce the insurgency, not suppress news reports of its existence. We must strive to improve the situation on the ground in Iraq, not focus on changing the spin. That is why I am offering this amendment that would prohibit funds being used for this type of public relations campaign.

Let me be clear. This amendment prohibits the use of funds for a public relations campaign and a database of news stories that is designed to promote positive coverage of the war. But the amendment specifically does not prohibit the normal work of the Department of Defense for collecting or analyzing information in the news media. The fact is, we do not need more propaganda. We need a new policy. I can certainly understand why the Bush administration would want to sugarcoat the news coming out of Iraq. The facts and the figures about the reality on the ground tell a somber story.

When more than 250 Iraqis were killed last week alone, and the killings continue today; when kidnapping by those wearing Iraqi security force uniforms becomes commonplace, and average Iraqis now flee from Iraq in uniform; when the U.S. Special Inspector General for Iraq Reconstruction comes out with a report that paints a picture of incompetence, fraud, and failure, and USAID, the agency in charge of over $1.4 billion in reconstruction, has been hiding millions of dollars in construction overruns and failing to report the true costs and problems to the Congress; when some Iraqis are now too afraid to go to the morgue to retrieve the bodies of their loved ones for fear of being killed or kidnapped themselves; and when instead of reducing troops, thousands of troops have been ordered to go to Baghdad, and an Army brigade had its tours extended, it is time to change the course in Iraq.

It is certainly easy to see why the Bush administration is afraid of the truth, and it is no surprise that a CNN poll released on Monday showed that 61 percent of Americans said they oppose the war as it is in Iraq, the highest opposition shown in any CNN poll since the war began.

For those in the Bush administration who complain that the media only reports bad news coming out of Iraq, I invite them to look at the facts and figures offered by the Pentagon itself last week. In its latest report to Congress, the Pentagon found that Iraqi casualties are up by more than 50 percent in recent months. Violence in Iraq continues to rise, and innocent Iraqi civilians are paying the price. The casualty rate is now almost 120 a day, compared to 30 a day 2 years ago.

The President continues to speak of progress, but the numbers tell a different story. From the time the new Iraqi Government was established on May 20, until August 11, the number of attacks were almost 800 per week. That is a huge increase from the beginning of the year and almost double from the beginning of 2004. So it is clear that the Bush policy in Iraq simply is not working, and it is time for a new direction.

The President needs to realize that we do not need a new propaganda campaign, we need a new policy. Frankly, I personally never believed the administration's false arguments about why we should go to war in Iraq, and I believe this administration never had a strategy for success in Iraq, and that is why I voted against the war in Iraq even when that vote was unpopular. That is why I am standing up for a new direction in Iraq today.

The President led us into this war based on false premises and false promises. President Bush went into the war without a plan to win the peace.

Unfortunately, this administration still doesn't have a real plan for success in Iraq. Our soldiers have performed bravely under the most difficult of circumstances. But as Iraq moves closer and closer to an all-out civil war, as even the commander, General Abizaid, admitted was possible, it is time to change policy.

The fact is that the war in Iraq has hurt us along the way in terms of our national security. By changing course in Iraq, we can make our own country more secure.

I look back at Hurricane Katrina just a year ago. I see the terrible price the people of the gulf paid when their National Guard troops were away in Iraq and unable to protect their neighbors here at home. Our homeland is simply less secure when our National Guard and Reserves are being kept in permanent rotation in Iraq.

This war has also distracted us from the great international security threats to the United States. While the administration is focused on the war in Iraq, North Korea has only become more defiant because they know we are bogged down in Iraq and have lost credibility with the international community.

Under this administration, North Korea has conducted launched missile tests and has likely increased the size of its nuclear arsenal. They have withdrawn from the Non-proliferation Treaty. The Congressional Research Service has estimated that the number of simple, fission-type weapons produced by the North Koreans prior to 2001 was between zero and two. Now this defiant regime has an estimated three to nine nuclear weapons.

While the administration has been distracted in Iraq, Iran has also become more defiant and has started enriching uranium, flaunting an international package designed to help end their nuclear weapons program, and is supporting Hezbollah's attacks against Israel.

It is in Afghanistan that we have paid one of the heaviest security costs for the war in Iraq. The bottom line is the administration never finished the job in Afghanistan. Afghanistan—not Iraq—was the right place to pursue the national security of the United States. It was in Afghanistan—not Iraq—that the murderers of September 11 were located. Our lack of attention and resources in Afghanistan has allowed the country to once again become a land of increased turmoil.

Many of us have been horrified as we have watched the resurgence of Taliban and strong anti-American sentiment in Afghanistan. In the past 3 years, there have been 284 attacks by the Taliban, and the number of suicide attacks continues to rise sharply. We have also seen poppy cultivation more than double since 1999. That ultimately is what emanates the opium on the streets of our cities and across the world.

I believe it is long past time for the United States to focus attention on Afghanistan and on the current threats from Iran and North Korea.

Let me simply say that the war in Iraq has not helped quell terrorism. In fact, it has fueled the proliferation of terrorist organizations and has increased instability in Iraq at the expense of our Nation's economy and the lives of our service men and women. The Iraq war has drained our Treasury of $320 billion. Well over 2,600 of our bravest men and women have lost their lives, and nearly 20,000 have been injured. That is the most fundamental issue facing our country today.

Three and a half years into the war and the administration's overhyped spin has become unwound. Predictions that we would be greeted as liberators have proven false, and the President's partisan attacks on anyone who dares criticize his failed policy have led to the hollow truth behind both the original decision to go to war and the propaganda he and his supporters still spew forth every day. The facts are as clear as the day, and a majority of Americans know the decision to invade Iraq was the wrong one.

In light of this knowledge, it is time to tell the President that we don't need a new propaganda campaign; we need a new policy. It is time to make clear that the Defense bill should be about flak jackets for our troops, not PR flak for the Bush administration. That is why I have offered this amendment which tells the administration to forget about the spin and concentrate on the mission at hand.

I urge my colleagues to support this important amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. STEVENS. I object. What is this? I thought we would dispose of the Menendez amendment first. Are there further speakers on the amendment? I would like to see the amendment. Will the Senator agree to a time agreement for a vote on the Menendez amendment? Will Senator MENENDEZ agree to vote at a time certain on his amendment?

Mr. MENENDEZ. Sure. I would consider such an agreement.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, will my colleague from Alaska yield?

Mr. STEVENS. I would be happy to yield.

Mr. SCHUMER. I don't believe my amendment will take much time. It might be good to dispose of both of them together.

Mr. STEVENS. Very well. I hope we can get a time agreement for a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the pending amendment is set aside.

AMENDMENT NO. 4897

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] proposes an amendment numbered 4897.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 4897) is as follows:

(Purpose: To make available up to an additional $700,000,000 for Drug Interdiction and Counter-Drug Activities to combat the growth of poppies in Afghanistan, to eliminate the production and trade of opium and heroin, and to prevent terrorists from using the proceeds for terrorist activities in Afghanistan, Iraq, and elsewhere, and to designate the additional amount as emergency spending)

At the end of title VIII, add the following:

SEC. 8109. (a) ADDITIONAL AMOUNT FOR DRUG INTERDICTION AND COUNTER-DRUG ACTIVITIES.—The amount appropriated by title VI under the heading "DRUG INTERDICTION AND COUNTER-DRUG ACTIVITIES" is hereby increased by $700,000,000, with the amount of the increase designated as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 402 of S. Con. Res. 83 (109th Congress), the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2007, as made applicable in the Senate by section 7035 of Public Law 109-234.

(b) AVAILABILITY.—Of the amount appropriated or otherwise made available by title VI under the heading "DRUG INTERDICTION AND COUNTER-DRUG ACTIVITIES", as increased by subsection (a), up to an additional $700,000,000 may be available to combat the growth of poppies in Afghanistan, to eliminate the production and trade of opium and heroin, and to prevent terrorists from using the proceeds for terrorist activities in Afghanistan, Iraq, and elsewhere.

(c) SUPPLEMENT NOT SUPPLANT.—The amount available under subsection (b) for the purpose set forth in that subsection is in addition to any other amounts available in this Act for that purpose.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I will be brief.

I rise to offer an amendment to the DOD appropriations bill to address what is literally a growing problem in the fight on the war on terror. We are not really doing enough to counteract an ever-increasing production of opium in Afghanistan, a problem that is threatening the ever fragile Government. Not only does opium production fuel its heroin trade around the globe, but the heroin funds terrorists who aim to attack America and our allies around the world.

We all note the deterioration of the situation in Afghanistan. One of the main reasons that situation is deteriorating is the opium production is increasing dramatically. It will increase by a huge 50 percent over last year. A large portion of the opium trade is controlled by the Taliban, the very people who provide the "warm" reception.

I say that with sarcasm. It is due to bin Laden and al-Qaida. And yet the Taliban is increasing their reach, their strength, their hold on the country, and their wealth through opium.

As I mentioned, there has been a surge by over 50 percent over the last year's harvest, a surge in production largely in the southern part of the country where the Taliban has reasserted control. It is in part because we have abandoned Afghanistan and the country is steadily descending into chaos as we have less and less to say over it. We have abandoned large parts, and opium rules.

I hope my colleagues will listen to the fact. Afghanistan now supplies more than 90 percent of the world's opium. In this year alone, there were over 400,000 acres of poppies planted, compared to 250,000 acres in 2005—a 50-percent increase. Why is this happening? It is happening in Afghanistan because the administration failed to finish the job when we changed our focus to Iraq, and now the country is swarming with corrupt warlords and the Taliban is once again taking control over a large portion of the country. Our soldiers fought long and hard to rid Afghanistan of terrorists and the Taliban; however, if the drug trade continues to surge and consume the nation, their heroic efforts may be undone.

The Taliban draws its strength from the drug trade, and in order to prevent them from reclaiming the country, we need to crack down on the drugs that fuel its regime. The Taliban generates an amazing 70 percent of its income through the production and sale of opium. Those poppies generate a whole lot of money. This year's opium harvest is worth roughly $4 billion.

In addition, the Taliban is fueling the production of opium from behind the scenes and using the profits to fund its brutal and oppressive regime. Every night, the Taliban drops off "night letters" encouraging poor Afghan farmers to grow poppies in exchange for "protection." Unfortunately, just like in "The Godfather," that is an offer they cannot refuse.

Now Afghanistan's narcotrade is spreading outside its borders and funding insurgents and foreign terrorists in Iraq. Money from the sale of Afghan-produced heroin is being used by terrorists to buy weapons and equipment, to create improvised explosive devices, and to pay ordinary Iraqi citizens to attack U.S. soldiers in Iraq. If foreign terrorists are using Afghanistan's opium production to fund their deadly activities in Iraq, what is to stop them from using the same funds to attack the United States? On 9/11, it is estimated that the horrible acts by al-Qaida cost only $500,000 to carry out. Can you imagine how many more attacks they could carry out given how huge the profits are from Afghanistan's opium?

Given the magnitude of this problem, a total of $350 million to the Departments of State and Defense to fight opium in this part of the world is not enough. Those funds weren't enough—it is proven fact—when the production has doubled in a year's time. I am not saying the funds are not being used effectively. They may well be. They are clearly not enough. Fighting Afghanistan's drug production and trade is elemental to our success in fighting global terrorism. It is essential to protect our troops in Iraq, keep Afghanistan from descending into chaos, and save American lives here at home.

My amendment will increase counternarcotics funding in Afghanistan by $700 million. With additional funds, the Department of Defense can work to ensure that the Taliban and other foreign terrorists don't use Afghanistan's opium crop against the United States.

Last year, the U.S. Government spent less than $350 million fighting the drug trade. Afghanistan produced its largest poppy crop in recorded history and raised billions of dollars to fund terrorism.

For people who say this significant amount of money is not useful, it sure is. On a cost-effective basis, it is. It costs a lot more to fight terrorists who use the money from the poppy trade than to fight the poppy trade itself.

Some may suggest the money is not useful to DOD, but I would argue that DOD clearly doesn't have enough resources just on the basis ipso facto that the crop doubled last year. We have to make sure the Department of Defense and the State Department have all the available resources to combat this threat.

Others may say this issue is not a priority to DOD and we should let other agencies take the lead on this issue. The problem clearly is not a priority to DOD, but it absolutely should be, and this amendment will make clear that is our intent.

The growing insecurity in Afghanistan clearly requires that DOD take a more active role in combating the rise in the Taliban and corresponding rise in production of opium. To show that we are serious about combating cultivation of poppies and the production and trade of opium and heroin, we must put additional resources into the fight. If we don't, Afghanistan's drug trade will come back to haunt us.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment when we have a vote on it later today. I thank the President and my colleagues from Alaska and Hawaii.

I ask unanimous consent that Senator FEINSTEIN be added as an original cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4909

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President I ask unanimous consent that the Menendez amendment be put before the Senate again. I ask unanimous consent that it be the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I want to be as courteous as possible. It is not a very good word to use, but it seems to me the Menendez amendment places a gag order on the Department of Defense. It says that the gains made by our military people and by the Iraqi forces cannot be reported to our people or to the Iraqi people.

It is a strange amendment, if you want to look at it, because it just says no funds may be expended for a public relations program to monitor news media in the United States and Middle East and create a database of news stories to promote a positive image of the war in Iraq.

The Department's press office normally reports day-to-day activities and is doing just that—getting the stories around and making sure we at home and the people in Iraq and our people in uniform know the positive side of this engagement.

I can tell you that at home we see the negative side all the time. It seems to me that answering questions with positive stories would be considered a PR effort. I do think it would have unintended consequences potentially impacting intelligence activities. I don't want to go into that too much, but the world knows about this information and the activities that have been going on for years. They have been going on for years.

We should not allow the Senate to take the position that prevents the Department of Defense to report on favorable news and to create a program to do that. To me, it constitutes a gag order.

I move to table the Senator's amendment.

AMENDMENT NO. 4897

It is my intention now to ask the Senate to make the Schumer amendment the pending business. I ask unanimous consent that is the pending business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VITTER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, funding in this current year for activities in Afghanistan is $116.5 million.

That money is being used to build border crossing points and police headquarters and to train and equip Afghan national police and other security forces in drug detection and eradication.

A significant portion of those funds is still being programmed to be spent. There was a delay in getting that bill ready for expenditures for 2006 so there will be some carryover into 2007. We don't know how much that will be.

The President asked for an additional $18.5 million for this year in this bill, and the committee supported that request.

In addition to the funding in the Department of Defense appropriations bill before the Senate, the fiscal year 2007

Foreign Operations bill as reported to the Senate has $297 million for counterdrug activities in Afghanistan. The Commerce Science Justice bill includes $30.5 million for counterdrug activities in Afghanistan. This means in the current bills pending for approval, there is already $346 million for counterdrug activities in Afghanistan for 2007, notwithstanding the carryover money that is available. This means there is approximately $400 million that will be available in 2007 already and the Senator wants to add $700 million to that. That is an enormous amount of money.

The British Government actually takes the lead in counterdrug operations in Afghanistan. As we all know, NATO is in there now. The United States should not offer to take the entire financial burden of this operation. It is a multinational effort.

The Senator is right in his premise that poppy production sales are a funding mechanism for terrorist activities in Afghanistan. We do support poppy eradication efforts. However, we do not need to throw money at that problem. Four-tenths of a billion dollars ought to be enough for one year.

We have reviewed the counterdrug budgets for DOD and other agencies, and we believe they are sufficiently budgeted not only for this current year but for the 2007 year. If the Department needs additional funds for 2007, we will have a supplemental in the spring. I would be the first to support it if the Department came in and said they needed more money. However, in view of the fact that we are working with NATO and working with the British Government, which has the lead on this program, I do not think doubling the amount available for this program is prudent.

As a matter of fact, obviously from the experience in the current year, it would not be spent.

That should not be voted upon by the Senate. I move to table Senator SCHUMER's amendment.

I ask unanimous consent at 2 p.m. today the Senate proceed to a vote in relation to the pending Menendez amendment, to be followed by a vote in relation to the Schumer amendment—I have always made the motions to table—that no second-degree amendments be in order prior to the vote, and there be 2 minutes equally divided prior to the vote on each amendment. I believe this has been cleared.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I don't wish to seem preemptory about this. I thank the Senators for their courtesy in bringing the amendments to the Senate.

Can we make the second vote 10 minutes? I ask unanimous consent the vote on the Menendez amendment be a 15-minute vote and the Schumer amendment be a 10-minute vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask unanimous consent it be in order for me to ask for the yeas and nays on both amendments at the same time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4911

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to lay aside the pending amendment and send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. REED], for himself and Mr. BAYH, proposes an amendment numbered 4911.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To make available an additional $65,400,000 for additional appropriations for Aircraft Procurement, Air Force, for the procurement of Predators for Special Operations forces, and to designate the amount as an emergency requirement)

At the end of title IX, add the following:

SEC. 9012. (a) ADDITIONAL AMOUNT FOR AIRCRAFT PROCUREMENT, AIR FORCE.—The amount appropriated by chapter 3 of this title under the heading "AIRCRAFT PROCUREMENT, AIR FORCE" is hereby increased by $65,400,000, with the amount of the increase designated as appropriations for contingency operations directly related to the Global War on Terrorism, and other unanticipated defense-related operations, pursuant to section 402 of H. Con. Res. 376 (109th Congress), as made applicable to the House of Representatives by H. Con. Res. 818 (109th Congress) and designated as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 402 of S. Con. Res. 83 (109th Congress), the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2007, as made applicable in the Senate by Section 7035 of Public Law 109-234.

(b) AVAILABILITY FOR PROCUREMENT OF PREDATORS.—Of the amount appropriated by chapter 3 of this title under the heading "AIRCRAFT PROCUREMENT, AIR FORCE", as increased by subsection (a), up to $65,400,000 may be available for procurement of Predators for Special Operations forces.

(c) SUPPLEMENT NOT SUPPLANT.—The amount available under subsection (b) for the purpose specified in that subsection is in addition to any other amounts available in this Act for that purpose.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise to offer an amendment along with my colleague from Indiana, Senator EVAN BAYH, which would provide an additional $65.4 million for the procurement of Predators for our special operations forces. The Predator is an unmanned aerial vehicle—or UAV, for short—used for armed reconnaissance, airborne surveillance, and target acquisition. It has become a critical asset in the war on terror. It is a small, remotely piloted aircraft that brings the battlefield to the military.

Through the use of cameras and other sensors, the Predator monitors, in real time, buildings or people. Because it is unmanned, it is ideal for use in areas that are inaccessible to the U.S. military such as areas where the airspace is insecure, the terrain is unpassable, or the environment is contaminated by chemical or biological weapons. The Predator system's hardware consists of a small monoplane with sensors, a ground control station, and data communications system.

The special operations forces—the front line in our war on terror—rely on Predator surveillance as part of their work to capture and kill the terrorists targeting our troops and the Governments of Iraq and Afghanistan.

There has been a lot of discussion recently about the war on terror. This is actually one of the systems which has been most decisive in killing the terrorists. That is why I think we have to support additional funding for this antiterrorist system.

Right now, special operations forces depend upon Air Force assets, which are already in high demand, for Predator support. With more Predators, we can be more effective in going after and taking out the terrorists. According to the Defense News article entitled "Inside the Zarqawi Takedown: Persistent Surveillance Helps End 3-Year Manhunt," the capture of the terrorist Abu Mus'Ab al-Zarqawi—the leader of al-Qaida in Iraq, notorious for his despicable conduct—was facilitated decisively by Predator surveillance provided to special operations forces.

The Quadrennial Defense Review recognized that special operators need dedicated UAV support and called for the establishment of a UAV squadron organic to special operations forces.

The QDR reads:

To achieve the future force characteristics for SOF—special operations forces—and to build on progress to date, the Department will: . . . establish a SOF unmanned aerial vehicle squadron to provide organic capabilities to locate and target enemy capabilities in denied or contested areas.

This special operations squadron would eventually provide coverage 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, to assist the forces working to capture and kill terrorists in Iraq and Afghanistan. The objective, according to GEN Doug Brown, Commander of the Special Operations Command, SOCOM, is to establish an "unblinking eye," which would help special operators targeting terrorists.

The President's budget request for fiscal year 2007 included funding sufficient to begin to build the squadron, including the purchase of eight UAVs.

On April 6, VADM Eric Olson, Deputy Commander of SOCOM, testified to the Armed Services Committee that the command did not have sufficient surveillance platforms. On April 27, Senator BAYH sent a letter to the Armed Services Committee expressing his intent to address this issue via legislation. Subsequently, the Appropriations Committee took action in the fiscal year 2006 supplemental and accelerated funding for this purpose. This funding would have allowed the initial operating capability to be achieved in 2007, rather than 2008, and for the squadron to be fully operational with 24 UAVs in 2010 instead of 2011.

I believe this acceleration would have been significantly contributing to the capability of our Special Operations Command. However, the acceleration was reversed by the Appropriations Committee just a few months later when it cut the funding for the UAV procurement for SOCOM—a cut to the Air Force aircraft procurement line.

According to the Special Operations Command, this cut "would negate the effect of the FY2006 Supplemental, . . . causing Full Operation Capability to revert back to the original timeline. This delay will adversely affect AFSOC's urgent ongoing requirement to conduct persistent intelligence, surveillance, reconnaissance, and targeting missions."

The amendment Senator BAYH and I are offering would put the acceleration back on track by adding $65.4 million for six UAVs and associated equipment.

Just 2 weeks ago, during a trip to Afghanistan and Iraq, the Armed Services Committee staff was told by the special operations forces in both countries, who are working hard to track the terrorists targeting our troops and the Governments of Iraq and Afghanistan, that their No. 1 need is for Predator coverage. They need dedicated UAV support.

We have not captured Osama bin Laden yet, and unfortunately there are many more targets for the special operators to conduct reconnaissance, surveillance, and, we hope, preemption. There is no rationale for not accelerating the establishment of the UAV squadron.

SOCOM wants this, and they have stated such. They can execute this in the timeframe they have given the Congress. We need to increase the pressure on al-Qaida operatives in Iraq and Afghanistan as well as other terrorists attacking U.S. and coalition troops. These terrorists are threatening, each day, the success of our operations in Iraq and Afghanistan and the safety of our personnel.

If we really want to carry the fight to the terrorists, if we really want to individually and collectively go after and take out these terrorists, the Predator, according to our special operations forces, is a key ingredient in this effort. Rather than rhetoric about fighting the war on terrorism, let's give these special operators the tools to effectively fight and destroy terrorists wherever they may be.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I rise to speak on behalf of my amendment to the fiscal year 2007 Defense appropriations bill, S.A. 4911 to H.R., 5631, with Senator REED to restore full funding for Predator unmanned aerial vehicles, UAVs, for the U.S. Special Operations Command, SOCOM. This amendment will allow SOCOM to receive its full complement of Predators by 2010 by adding $64.4 million to the fiscal year 2007 Defense appropriations bill.

Our brave troops and intelligence collectors must have the tools they need to find, fix and eliminate terrorists intended to do our Nation harm. The Predator, which comes in armed and unarmed modes and has advanced sensors and cameras, is one of the most important systems we have to monitor terrorist activity in hostile environments. The Predator also is a critical intelligence gathering platform in fighting insurgents in Iraq and the Taliban in Afghanistan. According to Defense News, the Predator was central to the detection and killing of Abu Musab al-Zarqawi in Iraq this past June.

I have been pleased to fight for putting more Predators in the hands of our Special Operations Command ever since U.S. Special Operations Command Deputy Commander Eric Olson responded to my question about whether he had all the tools he needs to win the war on terror in an April 6, 2006, hearing of the Senate Armed Services Committee's Emerging Threats and Capabilities Subcommittee. Admiral Olson said his command did not have enough Predators, and was not slated to have adequate numbers of Predators for several years. This is unacceptable, and I expressed my concern to Chairman WARNER and Ranking Member LEVIN in an April 27, 2006, letter urging committee action on this shortcoming.

I was equally pleased that the Senate Armed Services Committee adopted my amendment calling for full funding of the Predators for the Special Operations Command during mark-up of the fiscal year 2007 Defense authorization bill.

Unfortunately, defense appropriators cut back funding for Predators in its mark-up of the fiscal year 2007 Defense appropriations bill. My amendment restores full funding for a second squad of Predators for our Special Operations Forces' war-fighters and intelligence collectors by 2010. Giving our military and our intelligence personnel the best tools, as quickly as possible, to win the war on terror is something we must do.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I was off the floor, but I was informed of the amendment offered by Senators REED and BAYH. It is my understanding—the Senator from Hawaii concurs—we would be willing to accept this amendment.

Does the Senator want a vote on it? We would be happy to take it by voice vote if he is ready to let us accept it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I say to the Senator, my preference would be for a recorded vote, if possible. I think this is an important point about providing adequate resources to our special operators. Also, I would like to at least confer with Senator BAYH.

Mr. STEVENS. Very well. I have no objection. This money, if nothing else, would be available to replace some of the Predators that have been lost. So we are willing to accept it, but if the Senator wishes a vote, I would ask that—Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time for voting on this amendment be delayed until we can confer with the leadership.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COLEMAN). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4909

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise to talk about the amendment offered by my friend and colleague from New Jersey, Senator MENENDEZ. As has been his tradition, as has been his experience, he brings forth an issue that I think is of special importance at this moment because while we discussed in these last few days the honesty with which we get information and data, we have recognized that there is often an attempt to obscure the truth from the American people about the war we are in at the moment.

We see it in different ways. We see it in the fact that, for instance, flag-draped coffins are not permitted to be photographed when the remains of our most courageous people fighting the battle in Iraq are returned home. They come to a base in the State of Delaware, and it is prohibited to take pictures of those flag-draped coffins. That testimonial the country gives to these fallen soldiers is denied public view, as is the fact that there is another American, or more, lost in this quest to bring democracy to a country in which there is considerable doubt about whether they want our form of democracy. This amendment would make certain that no Department of Defense funds are used for propaganda.

Last week, we learned that the Defense Department wants to pay a company $20 million to monitor and analyze American and Middle East media to help improve the image of the U.S. Government and the military. I fully agree with him on the importance of limiting these funds for a propaganda campaign. I will not support the use of these funds in that manner.

The contractor being hired is expected to put together a database of news stories and assess their tone to come up with ways to get more glowing news coverage for the administration to try to convince the American people that things are going pretty much to plan and it just needs more time.

We don't talk about the fact that it needs, very often, more troops to do this assignment, without regard to whether we ought to be there at this time or whether they deserve the protections and equipment that is often missing. But we are not just talking about the Middle East press. This is Department of Defense money provided by U.S. taxpayers to comb American newspapers to track and evaluate their stories.

I can't say I am surprised by this development. After all, this administration has mastered the art of propaganda, and after I asked for investigations of the administration's propaganda activity, the Government Accountability Office, GAO, ruled that the administration violated law in several cases. Propaganda efforts by the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of Education were ruled illegal by GAO.

So what did the administration do? Did it agree to abide by the law? Of course not. That is not their customary action, not this administration. The administration announced that it would ignore the GAO rulings. The administration sees the rule of law as kind of a speed bump, not a roadblock. That is why Congress has to cut off these funds for these propaganda efforts.

This isn't the Soviet Union. We promote a free press in this country. It is essential to our democratic functioning. Learn the truth, pleasant or unpleasant, and deal with it as we should—honestly. We should not be manipulating the news media in our country.

I want the news about Iraq to be better, too. We all have great respect and affection for those who are on the front line who are doing their duty in spite of questions about what the purpose is or when the return to their homes begins. But maybe if we made some changes in our leadership and in our strategy we wouldn't need a PR campaign to improve our image here or abroad. Instead of trying to make the current situation look better, we ought to focus on actually making it better.

If we have any money to spare, let's spend it on our troops making sure that everybody has body armor, the latest there is, to protect them, or that the humvees and other vehicles are appropriately armored to see if we can defend ourselves better against these roadside bombs and these attacks on our troops, or on developing better strategies to fight terrorism and to defend our country.

We are on the eve of the commemoration of 9/11. It was one of the events in American history that still shocks our psyche. The fact that in a single day almost 3,000 Americans were killed on our soil by foreign intervention still astounds even the grimaced imagination. The fact that these two tall towers fell—I had an office in one of those towers when I was a commissioner of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey before I came to the Senate. They stood like cities, with 50,000 people going in and out, moving to their jobs, to their assignments, to their responsibilities, to their families, not only to their companies, not only to the services they provided. And we are still in search of the perpetrators.

We all want to see victory come out of this war. The problem is I am not sure we can define victory. It is too late for us to resume our lives as we used to live them without constantly having to show an ID, without constantly having to be in lines waiting, interfered with in our normal routine. The last thing we need is to cover up reality. That is what is taking place. This is an attempt to further cover up the reality, cover up the losses we are enduring, cover up the expense it is costing us. The financial costs are secondary to the loss of life, but, nevertheless, that is reality.

I commend my colleague from New Jersey, Senator MENENDEZ. He has brought thoughtful discourse to this body, and we welcome his attempt to clear the air, to make sure we are not spending money to color the issues, to give it a rosy tone, but to tell the truth and to not spend $20 million of taxpayer money on glossing over what is a very painful reality.

I hope our colleagues will fully support this amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is now 2 minutes of debate equally divided on the Menendez amendment. Who yields time? The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to vote no on the motion to table the amendment. With all due respect, this isn't about any gag order. It is not about promoting whatever gains are made. We are happy to see whatever gains are made in the Defense Department, in the White House, and all of the Republican administration. They can roll out all of the good news they have. But what we don't need and what I hope the Senate will not vote for is $20 million of taxpayer funds for the purpose of having a public relations firm ultimately generate "good press out of Iraq." That is not what we need. We need a change in policy, not a $20 million public relations contract.

Our amendment specifically allows the Department of Defense to continue to collect or analyze information in the news media, as they do now, but we do not need a $20 million public relations program. If my colleagues vote for the motion to table, they are voting to have that $20 million public relations program that the taxpayers will fund.

We can generate whatever good news may exist, but what we need is a change in policy. We don't need a PR program. This bill should be about flack jackets for our soldiers, not for the administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the Senator's amendment will prohibit spending monies for a program to create a database for news stories that are positive. I do think there is an exception to that which says it does not apply to collecting and analyzing information in the news media. So they can spend money to analyze all the negative aspects of our news media, but they cannot spend money to collect the data that is necessary to provide the positive side of what our people are doing and what the Iraqi people are doing in Iraq in this terrible situation over there. I really think it is a gag order. I don't see why they should be able to collect all the news stories, but they can't collect the information that is positive and make it available.

So I move to table this, and I believe we will have a vote here fairly soon. The 2 minutes equally divided will be after this amendment; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. Yes.

Mr. STEVENS. The yeas and nays have been ordered?

AMENDMENT NO. 4897

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 2 minutes evenly divided prior to the vote on the motion to table the Schumer amendment. The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, this amendment is very simple. The Taliban is gaining huge parts of Afghanistan, southern Afghanistan. The Taliban is all over the place. How do they fund themselves? How do they spread their hegemony? It is through opium. Opium production has doubled in a year. While we are making some efforts to fight it, we are not doing close to enough. If we want to stop the Taliban from going back to where they were before 9/11, we must stop the way they prosper, survive, and fund themselves. It is opium production. They make 90 percent of the world's heroin.

This amendment, very simply, adds money to the DOD budget so we can fight the scourge of opium and the scourge of terrorism to which it is interlinked in Afghanistan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska is recognized.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, NATO is in charge, now, of Afghanistan. The British Government is the lead agency in counterdrug operations. Notwithstanding that, in this budget we have $346 million for counterdrug efforts in Afghanistan. In addition to that, there is a carryover available from 2007. It will be almost $400 million already, and the Senator wishes to add another $700 million. It is not our function. The lead agency is NATO, now, in Afghanistan.

I have made a motion to table. I urge the Senators to vote to table this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion. The yeas and nays were ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment remains pending. If there is no further debate on the amendment, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 4897) was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DODD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COLEMAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4857

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I had filed an amendment on behalf of myself and the Senator from Utah, Mr. HATCH, amendment No. 4857, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the pending amendments are set aside.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], for himself and Mr. HATCH, proposes an amendment numbered 4857.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide that none of the funds appropriated by this Act may be available for the conversion to contractor performance of certain activities or functions of the Department of Defense in cases where the contractor receives a competitive advantage by offering inferior retirement benefits to workers who are going to be employed in the performance of such activities or functions than those offered by the Department to comparable civilian employees)

On page 160, line 7, strike “; or” and insert a semicolon.

On page 160, line 14, strike the period at the end and insert the following: “; or

(C) offering to such workers a retirement benefit that in any year costs less than the annual retirement cost factor applicable to Department of Defense civilian employees under chapter 84 of title 5, United States Code.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we know that vast numbers of Americans are increasingly concerned about their economic future. More than half of all workers describe themselves as “worried” or “stressed” about the state of the economy, and growing numbers of workers fear they will not be able to meet, much less surpass, the standard of living of their parents.

One of the primary factors contributing to these fears is the worsening crisis in the Nation's retirement system. The cornerstones of retirement security—private pensions, private savings, and Social Security—are increasingly at risk. Far too many working Americans will face retirement with little in their pocket—and with nothing to show for their long years of loyal service and hard work.

The pension reform legislation enacted this year will help companies keep the pension promises they have already made to workers, but we need to do much more to encourage employers to provide adequate retirement benefits to their hardworking employees. Today, less than half of all private-sector employees have any retirement plan at all at work, and the number of workers with a secure defined-benefit pension plan has been cut in half since 1980.

Employer-provided retirement plans are essential for retirement security for working families. Workers are far more likely to save money for retirement through an employer-offered pension than if they are left to save on their own.

Unfortunately, instead of encouraging more companies to provide good retirement benefits to their employees, current Federal contracting rules actually discourage many private companies from helping their employees save for retirement. The competitive bidding process for contracts favors private employers who shortchange their workers on retirement benefits. Firms that provide no retirement benefits or only meager benefits often win bid to perform Government work even when the cost savings from their bid are attributable solely to the lack of retirement benefits they provide.

This unfair policy creates a dangerous race to the bottom in which private sector companies compete against each other to see who can provide the fewest benefits to their workers. As a result, the bidding process is actually increasing the number of Americans whose retirement security is in jeopardy. That is both illogical and unconscionable.

In addition, this skewed privatization policy is fundamentally unfair to Federal workers who lose contracts simply because they receive decent benefits. Valued Federal employees are losing their jobs because they cannot compete on an unfair playing field with employers who are shortchanging their workers.

Defense workers are particularly at risk. Now, this year alone, the Department of Defense is putting more than 10,000 civilian employees at risk of unfair termination—more than any other Federal agency—and it has announced plans to increase this number in the future.

Thirty-five percent—35 percent—of civilian Defense employees are veterans. Hundreds more are active reservists currently serving in the Iraq war. The least we can do for these dedicated and patriotic Americans is to let them compete on a level playing field to save the jobs they come home to after their service to their country.

The amendment Senator HATCH and I are offering will protect these workers by preventing contractors from winning bids for Government work solely because they provide inadequate retirement benefits to their employees or no retirement benefits at all. Our goal is obvious: to protect hard-working Federal employees from unfair competition. They should not lose their jobs because they cannot compete with private contractors on an unlevel playing field.

The amendment does not dictate the retirement benefits that employers must provide or require contractors to change their existing benefits. It simply levels the playing field for Federal employees and contract employees by excluding costs related to retirement from a privatization review. All the amendment does is prevent contractors from winning bids solely because they offer inferior retirement benefits.

The underlying bill already includes provisions to level the playing field for health care benefits. We need to do the same for retirement benefits.

Our bipartisan amendment is an issue of basic fairness. It is fair to private sector workers who will otherwise lose their retirement benefits in a "race to the bottom." And it is fair to Federal employees who will otherwise lose their jobs to unfair competition.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support our amendment.

Mr. President, just a few additional comments. The question that is raised is, is this going to add complicated accounting procedures? The answer is, quite clearly, no. We have seen, for example, that when we eliminated the current health issues out of the contracting, that worked out very easily and worked out in a way to ensure a greater fairness. As I mentioned, a great percentage of these workers are both men and women who have been in the military; a great percentage of them are both in the Reserve and the Guard. It is an unusually high percentage of them because we know that preference is given, and legitimately so, when there is an opening in the contracting for veterans.

So there is a particularly and disproportionately high number of these workers who have served their country in the service, in the Reserves, and in the National Guard.

This is really what we are doing. I have the good opportunity to be with my chairman, Senator ENZI, chairman of our conference on pensions. We worked very closely with the members of the Finance Committee, Senators GRASSLEY and BAUCUS, in an often tedious conference. We spent a great deal of the time on retirement benefits and on what is happening to those benefits for workers. We have seen the results. Savings are way down. We are going to have to give focus and attention to the issues on Social Security. Pensions are the third part of that stool, which is absolutely essential in terms of a secure retirement.

In so many instances, those pension rights, as we read in the newspapers every day, are increasingly threatened, and increasingly at risk, and increasingly lost. I agree with Senator HATCH and others that it would be poor policy for us to have as a matter of Federal preference competitions. These Federal employees have certain kinds of retirement benefits, and that is being held against them in a competition in which they otherwise would be successful. That will obviously result in companies that want to do business with the Federal Government getting rid of their pension plans, and it will disadvantage those who are working in the Federal employment system.

Mr. President, I commended our colleagues previously for taking into consideration the current health issues and comparisons. We are talking about retirement benefits. I think the case is strong and, hopefully, we can take this to conference and have the opportunity to explore it. I have talked to both the chairman and the ranking minority member over the last few days. I believe the staffs are familiar with the issue. Hopefully, we can accept this and take it to conference. Senator HATCH and I would be glad to respond to additional questions.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURR). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4913, AS MODIFIED

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 4913 and ask unanimous consent to send a modification of the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California [Mrs. BOXER] proposes an amendment numbered 4913, as modified.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

(Purpose: To require a report on procedures and guidelines in the event of further sectarian violence)

At the end of title IX, add the following:

SEC. 9012. (a) Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a report setting forth procedures and guidelines of the Department of Defense to protect United States military and civilian personnel (should sectarian violence further increase in Iraq.)

(b) FORM.—The report required by subsection (a) may be submitted in classified form.

(c) APPROPRIATE COMMITTEES OF CONGRESS DEFINED. In this section, the term "appropriate committees of Congress" means—

(1) the Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Select Committee on Intelligence, and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate; and

(2) the Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on International Relations, the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, my amendment simply requires the Secretary of Defense to submit a report on the procedures and guidelines necessary to protect U.S. military and civilian personnel in the event of a further increase in sectarian violence in Iraq.

Right off the top, I thank Senator STEVENS and his staff and Senator INOUE and his staff. They really helped me in getting this amendment accepted. It means a lot to me because I worry deeply about this situation.

The reason I worry is, as we look at this war, we just have not seen plans. We have not seen that we have been ready for the contingencies we face. We never seem to plan for the worst-case scenario. Frankly, I think we need to do that in this case because we have not been right in predicting what would happen. We have seen, over time, that we have not had enough body armor, we have not had enough up-armored HMMWVs or countermeasures against roadside bombs.

Frankly, the American people are losing confidence that we are prepared to protect our troops in the case of a full-scale sectarian conflict.

There was a quote in the paper recently from the commander of day-to-day operations in Iraq. This is the quote:

Quite frankly, in 33 years in the United States Army, I never trained to stop a sectarian fight.

Let me repeat that. This is from the commander on the ground in Iraq:

Quite frankly, in 33 years in the United States Army, I never trained to stop a sectarian fight.

Now, for 6 months I have been asking Secretary Rumsfeld for a plan for our troops in the event there is a full-blown civil war in Iraq. And I have not received any kind of answer on it. After I sent my first letter to the Secretary asking for such a plan, I got a letter back from Under Secretary of Defense Eric Edelman. And he said:

Recent acts of violence intended to spark civil war have failed.

That is the answer to my letter. When I asked: What is your plan in case civil war breaks out, he said: Well, there isn't a civil war. Obviously, that is not good enough.

My second letter to Secretary Rumsfeld was answered by Deputy Secretary Gordon England. He told me:

Iraq's enemies are intent on provoking widespread intercommunal conflict but they are not succeeding.

So, again, a lot of reassurances but no plan.

So, once again, I did not receive any type of answer that gave me any solace that there is some planning to protect our troops and our civilian personnel if things get worse over there.

Now, we know the number of monthly incidents of sectarian violence increased from 5 per month in 2003 to 250 per month in 2006. Let me say that again. Monthly incidents of sectarian violence increased from 5 per month in 2003 to 250 per month in 2006.

Well, why do we need a plan now? I think the facts speak for themselves. The Pentagon's latest report that we received on conditions in Iraq, which was dated August 2006, said:

Concern about civil war within the Iraqi civilian population and among some defense analysts has increased in recent months.

And this is what they said:

Conditions that could lead to civil war exist in Iraq.

So if the Pentagon is telling us conditions that could lead to civil war exist in Iraq, the least we can expect from our Pentagon leadership is for them to provide some kind of contingency plan to protect our troops and civilian workers we have over there.

July saw the highest level of weekly attacks since military operations in Iraq began. Since last spring, the number of daily casualties, both military and civilian, reached nearly 120 per day, up from approximately 80 per day.

According to the United Nations—and I believe this is also quoted in this report, so this is the Pentagon quoting the United Nations—an estimated 22,977 families—or 137,862 individuals—have been displaced in Iraq due to sectarian strife since the February 22, 2006, Samarra Mosque bombing.

So for those people who put their head in the sand and say, this sectarian strife, it is going to go away, the people really do not want it, the facts belie that. I would say to my colleagues, think of one of your towns.

And 137,862 would be one of your very large towns. If everyone in that town left that town, that is how many people have been displaced in Iraq due to sectarian strife.

General Peter Pace, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, acknowledged to one of our committees there is a possibility of the situation in Iraq evolving into civil war. And he did not anticipate such a situation a year ago.

So when I heard about that, I sent a third letter—a third letter—to Secretary Rumsfeld asking: What is the plan in case of civil war? That letter remains unanswered.

Now, there is no reason the Secretary of Defense cannot provide the relevant committees in the House and the Senate a plan in case of civil war. My amendment will allow for this plan to be submitted in a classified form. I think that is very important because we certainly do not want that published. But we want to know that it exists and that there is a plan to protect our troops and civilians. Congress has the responsibility to provide oversight of the executive branch. Congress failed to ensure that the administration had a plan to win the peace in Iraq. We all know that. I saw Senator BIDEN just briefly on the Senate floor, and he was one of those voices, along with Senator LUGAR—bipartisan—way early asking: Where is the plan? Where is the plan? Where is the plan? We never had it.

Now the President says: We will be in Iraq. As long as I am President, we will stay in Iraq.

That is not a plan. That is an admission of no plan, no exit strategy. So at least let us have a plan, a contingency plan, that if the sectarian violence escalates, we know that our people will be protected.

I again thank Senator INOUE, Senator STEVENS, and their staffs because I have to say without their help—this was a bit contentious, but we worked on it until we got it so that it could be accepted on both sides. I am very grateful.

At this time, I yield the floor and ask, at the appropriate time, we have a voice vote on this amendment.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask for the adoption of the Boxer amendment at this time with a voice vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 4193, as modified.

The amendment (No. 4193), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to reconsider the vote, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Kennedy amendment No. 4857 be agreed to, with the motion to reconsider laid upon the table. I further ask unanimous consent that the Rockefeller amendment No. 4906 be withdrawn, and further, that the managers' amendment, which has been cleared by both managers, which is at the desk, be considered and agreed to and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table. I ask unanimous consent that following this action, the Senate proceed to vote in relation to the Reed amendment No. 4911, with no second-degree amendment in order to the amendment prior to the vote and that there be 4 minutes for debate equally divided prior to that vote. I ask unanimous consent that following disposition of that amendment, the only other amendment in order to the bill be the Bingaman-Domenici-Burns-Dorgan amendment relating to firefighters, and that following disposition of that amendment, the bill be read a third time and the Senate proceed to vote on final passage of the bill, the Senate then insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House, and the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 4857) was agreed to.

The amendment (No. 4906) was withdrawn.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

For an additional amount for "WILDLAND FIRE MANAGEMENT" under the heading "DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR" of title I of the Department of the Interior, Environment, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2006 (Public Law 109-54), $100,000,000 for the conduct of emergency wildfire suppression activities of the Secretary of the Interior, Provided, That the amount provided under this heading is designated as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 402 of S. Con. Res. 83 (109th Congress), the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2007, as made applicable in the Senate by section 7035 of Public Law 109-234.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

For an additional amount for "WILDLAND FIRE MANAGEMENT" under the heading "DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE" of title III of the Department of the Interior, Environment, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 2006 (Public Law 109-54), $175,000,000 for the conduct of emergency wildfire suppression activities of the Secretary of Agriculture, acting through the Chief of the Forest Service, Provided, That the amount provided under this heading is designated as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 402 of S. Con. Res. 83 (109th Congress), the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2007, as made applicable in the Senate by section 7035 of Public Law 109-234.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, this amendment is the one that the floor manager, the chairman, indicated was to be considered now. It relates to wildfire management and is one that has strong support on both sides of the aisle. I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

I know Senator BURNS wishes to speak as well.

I yield the floor.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, it is my understanding this is a modified amendment, modified from the original form. I ask the Senator from New Mexico if that is the case.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, that is correct. This is in modified form from what was earlier filed as an amendment. I believe the concerns earlier raised have been resolved.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator and ask for adoption of the amendment.

Does Senator BURNS wish to comment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Alaska. I thank Senator BINGAMAN for his work on this amendment. We heartily approve the amendment. It has strong support on this side of the aisle.

Ms. CANTWELL. Thank you, Mr. President. Before I make my statement, I want to take a moment to thank Chairman STEVENS and Senator INOUE for their leadership in getting this vitally important defense appropriations bill to the Senate floor. I know that that the chairman and ranking member believe, as I do, that ensuring sufficient funding for our brave fighting men and women during this incredibly challenging Iraq war is an urgent national priority. I appreciate their hard work and look forward to making sure we complete work on this legislation before the end of the fiscal year.

Today, I am here to speak on another issue critical to Washington State, and many States throughout the Nation: the threat of wildfires. To date, we are in the midst of the most active fire year of the decade. That may surprise many of my colleagues who remember the devastating fires a few years ago. But as of today, more than 8.4 million acres have burned as a result of 84,000 fires across the Nation this year. To put this year into perspective—compared to the 10-year national average, this year 73 percent more acres have already burned. Already, this is the third worst fire year since 1960.

As we speak, our brave wildland firefighters across the Nation are fighting 62 wildfires that have burned more than 1 million acres and continue to burn in 11 States. Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, and Wyoming all have active fires that have burned at least 25,000 acres.

In my State, Washington, an area nearly half the size of Rhode Island is ablaze. More than 309,000 acres have burned in Washington State as a result of 13 active fires. The largest fire in Washington, the Tripod Complex Fire, has burned 163,000 thousand acres. In Southeastern Washington, residents and farmers alike have been dealing with and fighting the Columbia Complex Fire. That fire has burned more than 90,000 acres—including some homes and valuable wheat crops—forcing the evacuation of hundreds of Columbia County residents in and around the city of Dayton during the last month.

Fighting these fires has truly been a national priority and I want to thank all of the firefighters, soldiers, local and State officials, and many others who have worked so hard to protect our citizens and property. Last week, when my office called the Incident Command Center for the Columbia Complex Fire in Waitsburg, Washington, a firefighter from Louisiana picked up the phone. Louisiana joined firefighting personnel from the State of Washington, Oregon, Arizona and New Mexico, the Confederated Tribes of the Umatilla Indian Reservation, Australia, Canada, and New Zealand.

This year the Department of Defense has been involved for the first time since 2003. “Task Force Blaze,” a 550-soldier battalion was mobilized from Fort Lewis to assist with firefighting activities on the Tripod Fire last month. Air National Guard Units in Wyoming, Colorado, Oregon, and California have been mobilized as part of the firefighting effort.

This situation is all too familiar to this part of the Pacific Northwest. Citizens in Columbia County were forced to deal with the School Fire last year that raged for 13 days, burning 52,000 acres and destroying 215 homes and other structures. Unfortunately, we are facing another all too familiar situation, running out of money to fight these fires.

While Congress is aware of this perennial problem, and has wisely boosted wildland fire fighting money the last few years, this season’s unusually high fire activity in Washington State and across the Nation has strained us further still. In Washington State for example, more than 3,300 firefighting personnel are bravely fighting these stubborn blazes. That is why I am a co-sponsor of Mr. BINGAMAN’s critical amendment.

Any day now, the Federal Government will have spent all of its available funding for wildland firefighting for this fiscal year. This will leave our primary firefighting agencies—the Forest Service and the Department of Interior—stuck with the choice of either cutting back firefighting efforts from the more than 1 million acres burning today, or cutting back from other necessary activities. Without these emergency funds, national forests throughout the country would likely have to cut back on vital maintenance or services to the public. And if we are forced to tap into the land and water conservation fund, we might have to forgo preserving pristine or unique lands.

In these extraordinary circumstances with thousands of people affected by wildfires from Montana to Washington to Wyoming—I believe that providing Federal wildland firefighting agencies with the adequate resources should be a top priority. That’s why I support the Bingaman amendment to provide an additional $275 million in emergency funding for wildfire suppression activities. Specifically, based on the resource projections provided to us by the administration, $175 million would be made available for the Forest Service and $100 million to the Department of Interior. These funds will help assure the thousands of our citizens in communities across the Nation that the Federal Government will have the adequate resources to continue fire suppression activities without borrowing from other important programs.

When we run out of funding, we will have depleted available appropriations for fire suppression and a nearly $500 million reserve fund to deal with these emergencies. I recognize that we will probably need to do a lot more for firefighting and I look forward to supporting those efforts. However, based on available projections from the Federal Government providing $275 million now will help provide some immediate relief.

While this is an extraordinary fire year, this is not a new issue for Congress to deal with. Over the last few years, Congress has added emergency appropriations and reserve accounts in response to wildfire suppression activities and other fire-related activities. As recently as 2004, we added $500 million in emergency funding to the fiscal year 2005 Defense appropriations bill for wildfire suppression activities.

With a million acres burning across the Nation in 11 States—American citizens deserve to know that the Federal Government is doing everything it can to protect them, their property, and their communities. I think it is critical to provide these additional funds and I urge adoption of the Bingaman amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment No. 4915.

The amendment (No. 4915) was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to reconsider the vote, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, are there any other pending amendments not taken care of by the unanimous consent agreement? It is my understanding from the unanimous consent agreement that the only other amendment to be considered on this bill was the Bingaman amendment, and we now have a vote on the Reed amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The Reed amendment is the only remaining amendment under the unanimous consent agreement.

Mr. STEVENS. There is 4 minutes equally divided. I suggest the absence of a quorum, awaiting the arrival of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 4911

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I understand the pending business is the Reed amendment with 4 minutes equally divided; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator CONRAD be added as a cosponsor of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this amendment that is offered by myself and Senator BAYH would add $64.7 million to continue an accelerated acquisition of Predator. These are unmanned aerial vehicles that are critical to our war on terror. They were instrumental in the detection and the ultimate destruction of Zarqawi and other terrorists. They are the chief tool of our special operations forces in terms of going after, seeking, finding, and destroying terrorists and terrorist networks.

There was a plan to accelerate the deployment of these UAVs. That plan was disrupted, if you will, because of decisions previously made. But I think today we can send a uniform and unanimous message that we need to acquire these six additional UAVs to create ultimately a squadron of UAVs for our special operations command. With these weapons systems, we can continue to deal effective and decisive blows against terrorists. I urge unanimous passage of this legislation adding $64.5 million. I commend Senator BAYH because he really was a leader in this effort in terms of drawing the attention of the committee to this shortfall in funding and requesting that it be added with this amendment.

I reserve the balance of any time remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, we were willing to accept this amendment when the Senator first brought the Predator to the attention of this Congress. I am delighted to see more Predators being bought. This is sort of a premature type of advance. These monies would have been requested anyway for 2007, but we checked with the Department and they are willing to proceed with it now.

I urge the adoption of the amendment, and I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There appears to be a sufficient second. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 4911.

The clerk will call the roll.
The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MCCONNELL. The following Senators were necessarily absent: the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. CHAFEE).

Mr. DURBIN. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. LIEBERMAN) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 98, nays 0, as follows:

FUNDING TRAUMATIC BRAIN INJURY

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, as the Senate prepares for final passage of H.R. 5631, the fiscal year 2007 Defense appropriations bill, I would like to thank my colleagues for accepting an amendment that I cosponsored which addresses the growing concern of a number of veterans returning from combat operations overseas that may have traumatic brain injury, TBI.

According to reports, preliminary research by the center shows that about 10 percent of all service personnel, and up to 20 percent of frontline personnel, suffer concussions during combat tours. Like any medical condition, early diagnosis is the key to successful intervention and treatment.

Unfortunately, many are not being properly screened for this serious and debilitating condition. TBI clinically presents many of the same signs and symptoms of post traumatic stress disorder, PTSD. These two serious but very different medical conditions require separate and distinct treatment programs.

Because it is so important that our veteran care facilities have the proper training to distinguish between these two illnesses, I included language in the fiscal year 2007 Military Construction and Veterans Affairs appropriations bill requesting the Department of Veterans Affairs to establish a separate education program to better diagnose TBI.

With final passage of this bill, we have another opportunity to further strengthen our efforts to better understand and treat TBI. I am proud to cosponsor this amendment which will add an additional $12 million in funding for the Defense and Veterans Brain Injury Center, DVBIC. The DVBIC is a collaboration between the Defense Department and the VA to deliver care to patients with TBI.

During testimony earlier this year, leaders of the DVBIC testified that the center needed $19 million in funding for fiscal year 2007. This amendment brings the total funding from the $7 million requested to a total of $19 million. This funding level is important because it will ensure our combat veterans receive the quality care they deserve.

Mr. ALLEN. I thank my good friend from Texas for her support by cosponsoring my amendment. I have enjoyed a wonderful working relationship with Senator HUTCHISON on a number of issues, especially veterans issues. We have worked together to increase veterans health care funding as well as veterans research funding. We just recently worked together on an amendment to provide credit monitoring services to Veterans and active duty servicemembers at no cost in response to the theft of a Veterans Administration laptop computer.

Senator HUTCHISON and I, as well as other Senators from both sides of the aisle, are here today in an effort to give our veterans the health care they so rightfully deserve. Those returning servicemembers who suffered a traumatic brain injury need the best quality care available and this amendment is a long step in that direction. I thank the Senior Senator from Texas for her support and her leadership as chairman of the Veterans Affairs Appropriations Committee on this issue.

OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I rise today to ask the chairman and ranking member of the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee for clarification of language that appears in title IX, on page

238 of the committee's report. Under the heading "Operation and Maintenance" there is a writeup entitled "Pre-Deployment and Post-Deployment Training." The committee states in part "The Committee believes that costs accrued at home station for the aforementioned activities are allowable costs for the use of title IX funding. To the extent that such training, maintenance and reset activities displace normal peacetime training events, the amounts provided to the Department in title IX operation and maintenance accounts should be used to ensure full support of pre-deployment and post-deployment operations, as well as for continuing combat and security operations in support of the global war on terror."

Senator INOUE and Senator STEVENS, is it the committee's intent that funds provided in this title for national and field level reset repair be available for the reset of equipment used for pre-deployment and post training but not otherwise deployed?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes, that is the committee's intent.

Mr. INOUE. I concur with the Senator from Alaska in regards to the committee's intended purpose of funds provided for Army reset programs.

Mr. KOHL. Given this interpretation, I urge the committee to work with the Army to ensure that funds provided in this title and elsewhere in this bill should be used for upgrading equipment to current production type, model, and series, where determined by the Army Acquisition Executive to be required and cost effective, to include equipment used for predeployment training but not otherwise deployed.

Mr. STEVENS. The committee will encourage the Army to do so and thanks the Gentleman from Wisconsin for raising this important issue.

Mr. INOUE. Yes, thank you.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, next week we will be commemorating an event that none of us can forget and none of us wants to relive.

We mark September 11, 2001, as a day of national tragedy. But out of the ashes rose a determination to bring the sponsors of this terrorism to justice and to reform the intelligence system that that we depend on to prevent such predatory attacks in the future.

In those first weeks and months after the attacks, we were united as a nation and enjoyed the sympathy and support of the world. We went after Osama bin Ladin and the government that hosted him, with some of America's best and bravest. We assembled some of our wisest and most experienced leaders to investigate the events leading up to the attack and to recommend a path of reform.

Since 2001 when I joined the Senate Intelligence Committee, I have worked to bring about intelligence reform. The Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act of 2004 was an important milestone on this journey. Important structural changes were made to our intelligence community and barriers removed to information sharing between agencies.

But where are we now?

The operational failure of 9/11 was followed by an analytical failure in Iraq. The hidden agenda of the White House and the President's lack of interest in objective analysis compounded the consequences of flawed intelligence. The President did not level with the public before the war. He did not keep his eye on hunting down al-Qaida. Instead, he led us into an unnecessary and disastrous war in Iraq.

Instead of providing oversight of the executive branch, congressional leadership has provided a rubberstamp. Instead of providing an independent voice, it has offered an echo chamber. Instead of helping the Senate Intelligence Committee investigate the Iraq intelligence failure, it has helped the White House push roadblocks in our path. And instead of taking care to safeguard liberty as we enhance security, it has closed its eyes on violations of the law and betrayal of our values.

In spite of some strong disagreements on specific issues, the Senate Intelligence Committee has come together on a bipartisan basis to implement the reforms already adopted and advance additional reform measures.

But last year, the leadership in the Senate did not allow the committee's authorization bill to be debated and voted on by the full Senate. For the first time in 28 years, the committee was blocked from carrying out its most basic function—the authorization of U.S. intelligence programs.

This month, we have learned that the majority leader does not intend to bring the fiscal year 2007 intelligence authorization bill to the floor before the Senate's fall recess. Again we face the prospect of the leadership preventing the Intelligence Committee from doing its job.

This is irresponsible and unacceptable. The authorizing committee should be the congressional vehicle for intelligence reform. The members of the committee spend the time needed to understand the issues. And we operate under special rules to keep our Nation's most sensitive secrets.

As a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, I will do my best to make sure the intelligence community is adequately and appropriately funded. But providing direction and guidance for intelligence activities is the job of the Intelligence Committee.

Senator ROCKEFELLER, the distinguished vice chairman of the Intelligence Committee, elaborated from the floor this week about what is at stake. The fiscal year 2007 intelligence authorization bill, passed unanimously by the committee, included provisions:

to enhance or clarify the authority of the Director of National Intelligence; to encourage information sharing and access; to establish a statutory inspector general of the intelligence community; to elevate the heads of the technical intelligence agencies by requiring them to be appointed by the President with Senate advice and consent; to improve the timeliness and completeness of information provided to the committee, and; to streamline the security clearance process for National Geospatial-Intelligence Agency employees and contractors.

These measures are not trivial. If enacted, they will save lives and they will save money. They will help restore congressional oversight where it is lacking. They will help prevent abuses in intelligence operations, which bring dishonor to our nation.

In short, these measures are critical to our national security. They should not be casually discarded.

Senator ROCKEFELLER has repeatedly raised his concerns with the lack of congressional oversight of the warrantless surveillance program conducted by the National Security Agency. I join him in expressing those concerns from the perspective of a member whose state proudly hosts the headquarters of that invaluable agency.

After a long struggle against White House foot-dragging, members of congressional intelligence committees are finally being briefed on this 5-year-old program.

But as Senator ROCKEFELLER points out, we have still not received the information necessary to adequately understand and evaluate the program. Nor have we been allowed to use the Intelligence Committee's specialized staff—such as the minority counsel and the NSA monitor—who are best qualified to help us with this task.

Under these conditions, the Senate cannot evaluate the need for the warrantless surveillance program and cannot propose legislative remedies for the alleged deficiencies of the current law. These circumstances must change.

Mr. President, intelligence is at the forefront in our fight against terrorism, just as it was in our long Cold War struggle against communism. Congress has a duty under the Constitution to be a critical and coequal partner in this fight. I join Senator ROCKEFELLER in urging the leadership of the Senate to let us get on with it.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I want to discuss the Defense Appropriations Act for fiscal year 2007, which is one of the most important of the appropriations measures that we consider annually. This legislation will provide critical funding for the men and women in our armed forces who, at this very moment, are in harm's way. We must support them, and, for that reason, I will vote in favor of its passage. But I have serious concerns over the earmarks contained in the committee report accompanying this bill.

The bill reported out of committee appropriates over $453 billion. This is more than $9 billion below the President's request and I am discouraged that it required a $13 billion amendment designated as emergency funding to get back to the President's requested funding level. Also, as is the case with so many of the appropriations bills that come to the floor, the report accompanying it contains hundreds of earmarks that were neither requested nor authorized—to the tune of over $4 billion. During a time of war we should be making every effort to support the President's budget request instead of slashing it and then adding earmarks for favored projects.

Every day we ask the brave men and women who fight for freedom on behalf of our great nation to make sacrifices. They sacrifice in Iraq and Afghanistan as well as several other places around the globe. Our soldiers have sacrificed and their families have sacrificed. And so, we in the Congress should exercise some degree of self-restraint and sacrifice as well.

Let me mention a few of the add-ons that were included in the bill's accompanying report that were not requested in the President's budget and were not on any of the armed services unfunded priority lists—some of which have next to nothing to do with the Department of Defense or its mission:

- $2 million for automotive research;
- $2 million for Precision Polishing of Large Objects;
- $3 million for improved shelf-life for Vegetables;
- $2 million for Brown Tree Snakes;
- $117 million for an Oceanographic Survey Ship;
- $75 million for the Allegany Ballistics Lab in West Virginia;
- $18.5 million for a Air Force C-17 Maintenance Training System in Hawaii;
- $8 million for the Allen Army Airfield in Alaska;
- $1.5 million for Fort Detrick in Maryland;
- $4 million for disposable dental masks; and
- $3.5 million for Hibernation Genomics.

Once again, there are also many earmarks that may be for worthy causes, such as ovarian cancer research, but there is no compelling national defense reason for these items to be funded through this legislation. These earmarks include:

- $115 million for Breast Cancer Research;
- $80 million for Prostate Cancer Research;
- $6 million for Integrated Translational Prostate Disease Research;
- $34 million for the Hawaii Federal Health Care Network; and
- $15 million for Ovarian Cancer Research.

Mr. President, as we are engaged fully in the global war on terror, it is imperative that we get the most of each and every defense dollar. The money that is being diverted to projects like the ones I have mentioned could instead be used for body armor or other critical needs to protect our troops and help win the war on terror. The earmarks I have mentioned are just a small sampling of the many, unrequested earmarks that fill the accompanying report. These earmarks are draining our precious resources and are not vital to our long term national security. I strongly encourage the Federal agencies affected to use their judgement to ensure they are not allocating resources to projects that are not legislatively mandated or authorized, but rather, are merely the wish lists of the committee.

Beyond the earmarks contained in the Senate report, this bill contains numerous authorizing provisions, some of which are outside of the scope of defense policy. Some of these provisions include:

Authorizing medical services at Army medical facilities located in Hawaii for civilian patients;

Authorizing the use of up to $50 million for operational ranges managed by the Air Force in Alaska; and

A provision that protects jobs in Hawaii and Alaska.

Mr. President, I have no doubt that some of these provisions may be important while others are questionable at best. What is important is that we follow the authorization process and restrain ourselves from using appropriations bills to authorize projects on this bill that have not been requested by the Department of Defense, nor approved by the authorizing committee.

I would also like to discuss the Buy America restrictions that cost the Department of Defense and the American taxpayers. Like in previous appropriations bills, this year's bill imposes a number of Buy America restrictions.

For example, the bill would prevent the purchase of ball bearings unless domestically produced. It requires that welded shipboard anchor and mooring chain be manufactured in the United States. Another section prohibits the Department of Defense from purchasing supercomputers from a foreign source.

I continue to be very concerned about the potential impact on readiness of our restrictive trade policies with our allies. From a philosophical point of view, I oppose these types of protectionist policies. I believe free trade is an important element in improving relations among all nations and essential to economic growth. From a practical standpoint, "Buy America" restrictions could seriously impair our ability to compete freely in international markets and also could result in the loss of existing business from long-standing trade partners.

Some legislative enactments over the past several years have had the effect of establishing a monopoly for a domestic supplier in certain product lines. This not only adds to the pressure for our allies to "Buy European" but it also raises the costs of procurement for DOD and cuts off access to potential state-of-the-art technologies. DOD should have the ability to make purchases from a second source in an allied country covered by a defense cooperation memorandum of understanding when only one domestic source exists. This would ensure both price and product competition.

Defense exports improve interoperability with friendly forces with which we are increasingly likely to operate in coalition warfare or peacekeeping missions. They increase our influence over recipient country actions, and in a worse case scenario, allow the U.S. to terminate support for equipment. Exports lower the unit costs of systems to the U.S. military. In recent years they have kept mature lines open while the U.S. has developed new systems that will go into production around the turn of the century. Finally, these exports provide the same economic benefits to the U.S. as all other exports—well paying jobs, improved balance of trade, and increased tax revenue. These are really issues of acquisition policy, not appropriations matters.

Mr. President, I would prefer not to criticize this legislation. It is very important to the ultimate success of our ongoing war on terror. Yet I believe it is important to point out to the American taxpayer where some of their money is going. And some of it is not going to projects that have anything to do with our defense.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, as the Senate prepares to vote on the Department of Defense appropriations bill for fiscal year 2007, I want to thank all of our brave soldiers, sailors, airmen, and marines for their hard work in the ongoing fight against terrorism, in Iraq, in response to natural disasters here at home, and in the many other missions to which they have been assigned around the world. These dedicated men and women, along with their families, are making great sacrifices in service to our country. We owe a tremendous debt of gratitude to the members of the United States Armed Forces for their selfless service.

I am pleased that the Senate is about to pass the Defense Department appropriations bill. While I continue to have grave concerns about the misguided strategy this administration is pursuing in Iraq, the Senate bill includes funds for many important programs and priorities for our servicemen and women. In particular, the bill includes a well-deserved, although modest, 2.2 percent across-the-board pay raise for our military personnel. It also increases funding for vital equipment for those in uniform facing daily dangers in Iraq and Afghanistan. I am also pleased to support a number of good provisions in this bill that seek to ensure that our troops have the equipment they need to perform their duties on the ground, including increased funding for body armor and personal protection equipment, as well as additional funding for up-armored humvees.

I am also pleased to support increased funds for the National Guard and Reserve, including an additional $340 million for force protection equipment. This bill includes critical funding that will help the National Guard repair its equipment and reinstate a superior readiness level so that it is capable of defending our country and responding to natural disasters within the continental United States.

While I strongly support increased funding for the National Guard, and for border security, I opposed Senator SESSIONS' amendment to appropriate nearly $2 billion to the Army National Guard solely to build hundreds of miles of fencing along the southern border. I did so because it is difficult to justify pouring massive Federal dollars into efforts that have not been shown to be effective. We must improve border security but we simply do not have the data to show that border fences are an effective deterrent to illegal immigration. For that reason, I opposed the authorization of this fencing when it was proposed as an amendment to S. 2611, the Comprehensive Immigration Reform Act of 2006, and I opposed appropriating the funds for it in this appropriations bill.

The better approach would be to first implement another provision of S. 2611 that directs the Attorney General, in cooperation with other executive branch officials, to conduct a study on this question. The study would analyze the construction of a system of physical barriers along the southern international land and maritime border, including the necessity, feasibility, and impact of such barriers on the surrounding area. It is estimated that construction costs for these border fences is more than $1 million per mile. And that doesn't include the cost of maintaining these structures. Furthermore, there are very serious concerns about the environmental impact this type of massive construction project would have. Before we commit to pouring precious Federal dollars into a massive fencing system, at the very least we should do a thorough analysis of the most effective and fiscally responsible means of securing our borders against illegal transit.

While I support much of the funding for intelligence activities contained in the bill, I am deeply concerned at the failure of this Congress to pass an intelligence authorization bill. Congressional oversight of intelligence has never been more important. Strengthening our Nation's intelligence capabilities after the attacks of September 11 requires the involvement of Congress, which is why the 9/11 Commission described strengthened oversight as one of its most important recommendations. The disastrous failures of intelligence related to Iraq, both by the intelligence community and by the administration, further highlight the importance of thorough congressional scrutiny. Recently revealed programs such as the NSA's illegal warrantless wiretapping and secret CIA detention facilities, are among the intelligence activities that the congressional intelligence committees must examine. Thirty years after the Senate Intelligence Committee was created in the aftermath of well-documented abuses, we need to ensure that Congress does not abdicate its important oversight responsibilities.

While I do support many of the provisions in this bill, I am deeply disappointed that the bill fails to put our Iraq policy on a better footing. My vote for this bill in no way signals support for that policy, which is hurting our national security. The war in Iraq is having a negative—and dramatic—effect on our military's capability and readiness levels. Because of the heavy usage of military equipment in Iraq, the Army National Guard's 34 brigades are not combat-ready, and it will be no easy task getting our physical capacity back up to full strength. The costs we are incurring in Iraq are devastating and they are not advancing our national interests particularly when they are undermining our military's capacity to defeat the terrorist networks that attacked us on 9/11. I will continue to call for the redeployment of our forces from Iraq so that our military remains strong and so that our country can refocus on fighting the terrorist networks that attacked us on 9/11.

Unfortunately this spending bill contains many unnecessary items. The administration continues to request large amounts for Iraq and Afghanistan through "additional" or "emergency supplemental" appropriations not subject to limits on total discretionary Federal spending and not subject to the full congressional authorization and appropriations review process. I continue to be deeply concerned about this administration's priorities and about the process by which we consider the Department of Defense authorization and appropriations bills, a concern I voice every year at this time. However, on balance, this legislation contains many good provisions for our men and women in uniform who serve our country selflessly around the world. That is why I support it.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, in the course of attending a funeral today, I missed two votes. On the Conrad amendment No. 4907, I ask that the record reflect that, had I been here, I would have voted "aye." And on the motion to table the Menendez amendment No. 4909 I ask that the record reflect that I would have voted "aye."

Mr. President, I rise today to offer my support for Department of Defense funding for the National Drug Intelligence Center in Johnstown, PA.

The National Drug Intelligence Center, NDIC, established in 1993, is a component of the U.S. Department of Justice and a member of the intelligence community. The General Counterdrug Intelligence Plan, implemented in February 2000, designated NDIC as the Nation's principal center for strategic domestic counterdrug intelligence. NDIC's mission is to provide strategic drug-related intelligence and assistance to the drug control, public health, and national security authorities of the United States in order to reduce the adverse impact of drug trafficking, drug abuse, and related harms in this country.

Since September 11, 2001, we have become gravely aware of the importance of intelligence to all aspects of our national defense. This lesson is certainly applicable when assessing the resources generated by drug trafficking among terrorist groups and their sympathizers. I have been told that, since January 2005, NDIC has provided support to the Department of Treasury's Office of Terrorism and Financial Intelligence to produce the Nation's first National Money Laundering Threat Assessment. For this effort, NDIC received a letter of commendation from the Treasury Department for its "extraordinary contribution" to this effort. This is but one example of the fine work that is provided by those who serve this country at NDIC. The center is also actively contributing to the Department of Homeland Security's Office of Counter Narcotics Enforcement on an ongoing drug/terror nexus project. Further, NDIC personnel support the Drug Enforcement Administration's Special Operations Division which targets the convergence of terrorism and traditional drug trafficking networks. These contributions go along with the center's Document Exploitation Division which, I am told, is second to none in extracting useful information from lawfully-seized evidence.

NDIC is providing a valuable service to this country. It is the only agency with the independence to provide the National Drug Threat Assessment while still maintaining the versatility to assist in the ongoing operations and assessments conducted by the organizations that I have mentioned. The people of Johnstown who staff this facility are of the highest professional capabilities. It is important that we maintain these capabilities as we fight the war on Islamic fascism on many different fronts.

The House Defense appropriations bill provides $39 million for the center.

I look forward to working with the chairman and ranking member to ensure that this funding is included in the final conference report with the House. I firmly believe that the National Drug Intelligence Center is an important instrument in providing for our Nation's security. I believe that the administration should include it in its budget in future fiscal years. I will be writing President Bush in the coming days to make this case. At a time when the nexus between drug traffic and terrorist groups is becoming more acute, we need to make funding for our intelligence capabilities one of our highest priorities.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, the next vote will be on passage of the Defense appropriations bill. I congratulate the managers. It has been a job well done.

We are going to be on the port security bill tomorrow and on Monday. The managers are here, and they are ready to debate and take up amendments. We will not be voting tomorrow.

I remind my colleagues that we have scheduled an event on Monday at 6 o'clock to commemorate the fifth anniversary of the 9/11 attacks. We invite all Members to participate.

There will be no more votes tonight. We will not be voting tomorrow. We want to have all opening statements tonight and tomorrow on the port security bill.

We will have announcements tomorrow morning as to whether we will be voting on Monday. The Democratic leader and I will make that announcement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The bill having been read for the third time, the question is, Shall the bill pass? On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MCCONNELL. The following Senator was necessarily absent: the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. CHAFEE).

Mr. DURBIN. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. LIEBERMAN) is necessarily absent.

The bill (H.R. 5631), as amended, was passed.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate insists on its amendments, requests a conference with the House, and the Chair appoints the following conferees: Mr. STEVENS, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. BOND, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. GREGG, Mrs. HUTCHISON, Mr. BURNS, Mr. INOUE, Mr. BYRD, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. REID, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, and Ms. MIKULSKI.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to thank my staff for all their hard work on this bill, especially my clerk, Sid Ashworth. As always, she has done the work on this bill and a multitude of amendments, along with the staff. And Charlie Houy, on Senator INOUE's staff, has given good advice and leadership.

I also thank my colleague and partner, Senator INOUE. It is a nice birthday present to pass a bill of this size, I say to the Senator.

As I said, Charlie Houy, Betsy Schmid, Nicole Di Resta, and Kate Fitzpatrick for their support on this bill.

There is a large staff that works on this bill. We do not often name them all, but I will do it this time. This was a tough bill. I give credit to Kate Kaufer, Brian Wilson, Brian Potts, Alycia Farrell, Mark Haaland, Ellen Maldonado, Michael Pollock, Alison Garfield, Bridget Zarate, Jennifer Chartrand, and Janelle Treon. Miss Treon is not with us. She recently left the committee, but she was a vital partner in the creation of the bill. We wish her good luck in her new life in North Carolina. She can learn to dodge the hurricanes.

Thank you very much.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, just for the purpose of our colleagues' schedules, we will not be voting Monday evening. Monday is September 11. As we said, there will be an event here at 6 o'clock, and I encourage all our colleagues to participate. But a number of our colleagues did ask whether we will be voting Monday evening, and we will not. So there will be no rollcall votes on Monday.

We are going to turn to the port security bill, a bill that has been the subject of a whole lot of work by a number of our colleagues by both sides of the aisle. We have three committees that have parts of jurisdiction here. It is a very important bill. As we work to secure this country and secure the safety of the American people, we absolutely must address the issue of port security. So I am very pleased we are bringing that bill to the floor. We will address it tonight and tomorrow and Monday, and hopefully we can finish it shortly thereafter. I talked to the Democratic leader, and the managers on both sides of the aisle will be working to gather the amendments. We will be discussing and talking about those at the appropriate time.

SECURITY AND ACCOUNTABILITY FOR EVERY PORT ACT

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to Calendar No. 432, H.R. 4954, the port security bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4954) to improve maritime and cargo security through enhanced layered defenses, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT NO. 4919

(Purpose: To provide a complete substitute)

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute amendment at the desk be considered and agreed to and further that it be considered as original text for the purpose of additional amendments and for debate only this evening.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 4919) was agreed to.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of Amendments.")

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I rise to present the Port Security Improvement Act of 2006. This bill will help to close dangerous gaps in our ability to protect our shipping lanes and seaports from attack.

A number of our colleagues have worked very hard on this bill. This bill reflects not only bipartisan consultation and support but coordination among the Senate Homeland Security Committee, the Commerce Committee, and the Finance Committee. I thank our leader, Senator FRIST, for encouraging and facilitating those discussions.

I particularly wish to thank my colleague, Senator MURRAY, who joined me in sponsoring the GreenLane cargo security bill in November of 2005, which has served as the basis for the legislation we debate tonight. Senator MURRAY has been steadfast in her commitment to enhancing port security. She has been working on it since the attacks on our country 5 years ago. She has been a terrific partner.

Senator STEVENS, Senator INOUE, Senator GRASSLEY, Senator LIEBERMAN, Senator BAUCUS, Senator COLEMAN, and Senator ALLEN have also played critical roles on this important legislation. Their support and involvement have been invaluable in crafting a measure that I believe is going to make a real difference and that will improve our protection against terrorist threats without crippling the operations of our ports. This is very important. We need to strengthen security at our ports, but we need to do so in a way that does not cripple our system of trade, that does not place barriers in the way of moving legitimate goods.

This legislation will provide the structure and the resources needed to better protect the American people from attack through seaports that are both vulnerable points of entry and vital centers of economic activity.

Our legislation, our joint legislation, which is the product of so many weeks, months, and years of study and compromise, is a comprehensive approach that addresses all major aspects of maritime cargo security. It would require the Department of Homeland Security to develop a comprehensive strategic plan for all transportation modes by which cargo moves into, within, and out of American ports. It creates an Office of Cargo Security Policy to coordinate departmental activities and to be a central contact point for interagency, private sector, and international partners in cargo security. It requires the Department of Homeland Security to develop protocols for the resumption of trade at seaports after an incident. That is necessary to minimize economic losses. It authorizes risk-based grants, training, and exercises for port security. It improves and expands several security programs, such as the Container Security Initiative, known as CSI, and the Customs-Trade Partnership Against Terrorism, or C-TPAT, and establishes deadlines for DHS action on these programs. And it provides incentives for shippers and importers who meet the highest levels of cargo security standards.

Before commenting further on these provisions, let me offer a few facts that illustrate the importance of strengthening the security of our seaports.

America's 361 seaports are vital elements of our Nation's transportation network. Our seaports move more than 95 percent of overseas trade. In 2005 alone, U.S. ports logged 53,000 calls by foreign-flagged vessels, including 16,000 container ship calls that brought 11 million shipping containers to our shores.

The largest 22 ports, ranging from Los Angeles to Boston, handle 98 percent of the container traffic. Nearly half of all container ship calls are made in just three States—California, New York, and Virginia—but traffic arrives at many ports, from Maine to Hawaii, including a port in my State, Portland, the largest port by tonnage in new England. Coming from a State with three international cargo ports, I am keenly aware of the importance of seaports to our national economy and to the communities in which they are located.

In addition to our ports' economic significance, the link between maritime security and our national security is obvious and the vulnerabilities of our ports worrisome. Shipping containers are a special source of concern. When we look at shipping containers, we know, in most cases, they contain useful consumer goods. But shipping containers could also be used to convey a squad of terrorists or a dirty bomb. In some sense, containers could be the 21st century "Trojan horse."

The vulnerabilities of containers are evident when one considers a recent incident that occurred in Seattle. In May, several Chinese nationalists illegally smuggled themselves within a shipping container that made its way to Seattle. Now, they were discovered, fortunately, but think if that container had, instead of including illegal Chinese immigrants seeking a better way of life, included individuals, terrorists, who were dedicated to destroying our way of life.

The container has also been called "the poor man's missile" because a low-budget terrorist could ship one across the Atlantic or the Pacific to a U.S. port for just a few thousands dollars. And the contents of a container do not have to be as complex as a nuclear or chemical or biological weapon. As former Customs and Border Protection Commissioner Robert Bonner told the New York Times last year, a single container packed with readily available ammonium sulfate fertilizer and a detonation system could produce 10 times the blast that destroyed the Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City.

Whatever the type of weapon, an attack on an American port could cause great loss of life, damage our energy supplies and infrastructure, cripple retailers and manufacturers dependent on just-in-time inventory, prevent farmers from exporting their crops, and hamper our ability to move and supply American military forces.

Earlier this year, I visited the ports in L.A. and Long Beach and Seattle. At the invitation of Senator MURRAY, I examined the Seattle port. When one looks at the busy harbor in Seattle, one sees ferries bringing thousands of passengers—a large urban population—in sight of the port and two stadiums nearby. You realize immediately the depth and destruction that a ship carrying a container with a weapon of mass destruction could inflict at a single port.

Moreover, a successful port attack would likely trigger a security lockdown of all of our ports, just as the attacks 5 years ago grounded all commercial aircraft. So the economic damage would swiftly spread across the entire country. The Pacific Coast has already given us a glimpse of the economic damage that an attack on a port would cause. The west coast dock strike of 2002 was peaceful and anticipated, unlike any terror attack would be, but it cost an estimated $1 billion a day in economic losses for each of the 10 days it lasted.

Of course, a port could also be a conduit for an attack as well as being a target itself. A container with dangerous cargo could be loaded on a truck or a railcar or have its contents unpacked at a port and distributed to support an attack elsewhere—perhaps in the heartland of this country.

For these reasons, and many others, including the risks of container tampering or false documentation, the 9/11 Commission concluded that "Opportunities to do harm are as great, or greater, in maritime and surface transportation" as in commercial aviation.

Some actions have been taken to improve security at our seaports. The 9/11 terror attacks prompted some useful moves toward better security for vessel shipping lanes and the ports themselves. But, unfortunately, many of these initiatives have not proceeded under a comprehensive, strategic security plan. Some of them have lagged, and some of them have not been effectively implemented.

The Senate Homeland Security Committee has conducted five hearings on port security and the failures of DHS's cargo security programs. The first hearing we held back in March of 2003 when the committee heard testimony from several experts that cargo containers could well be the next target of terrorists. Three of these hearings have been conducted by the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, chaired by Senator COLEMAN, and I thank him and Senator LEVIN for their efforts in this area. Indeed, several provisions in our bill address concerns that were identified through that joint investigative work.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Maine yield for just a brief comment or question or two?

Ms. COLLINS. I am happy to.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, let me just take a moment to thank Senator COLLINS for her leadership and the work of her committee in this area. I say to the Senator, I have been listening to her remarks. I think it is very important we outline the risks that are involved here and the importance of our ports to the economy of America.

Like the Senator from Maine, I myself recently went around looking at large and small ports, from the gulf all the way to Seattle and Tacoma. I must say, I was somewhat pleased with the amount of effort that has been put in place in those ports.

But it also dramatizes how much more we need to do. We do need the macro legislation to deal with this. One of the great concerns is, as the Senator outlined, what would happen if we did have an event in one of those West Coast ports? It would lock them all down. What would be the process to restart them? I am also very much impressed with the appearance of those ports and the volume of the training activities. It is a critical area.

While a lot of work has been done and money has gone to our ports, big and small, we need this legislation. There is a lot more to it than just the restart protocols. It hasn't been easy because we have three committees with interest and jurisdiction, including Commerce and Finance. The Senator worked with the leadership of our Commerce Committee and of the Finance Committee, and I thank the Senator for that.

I urge my colleagues in the Senate that we move expeditiously on this legislation and that we not play games with it in any way because this is serious business. I feel for the person who would oppose this kind of legislation, or delay it, if some incident occurs. We need to move on it. This is the time to do it. It has been a real yeoman's task to bring it to this point. I wanted to be on record early commending the Senator from Maine, and I hope I will have an opportunity to talk later about some of the substantive parts of this legislation, which is critical for our country. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I thank the junior Senator from Mississippi for his kind comments. He has been so helpful as a member of the Commerce Committee and the Finance Committee in helping us weave our way through a very difficult maze. Without his advice and support, I doubt that we would be here tonight. I express my personal appreciation to Senator LOTT for his guidance and his assistance and for keeping us all focused on the goal. We could never let turf battles or jurisdictional disputes block us from accomplishing such a needed and important task. He helped us keep our eye on the ball. I thank the Senator very much for his comments.

Mr. President, I was talking about the hearings we were having. Our most recent hearing was in April on the GreenLane Maritime Cargo Security Act, which I mentioned Senator MURRAY and I had introduced. We heard also from the House leaders on port security, including Representative DAN LUNGREN and Representative JANE HARMAN, as well as other experts on our Nation's ports. The following month, that bill was reported out of the Homeland Security Committee.

The Port Security Improvement Act will clarify the roles, responsibilities, and authorities of Government agencies at all levels and of private sector stakeholders. It will establish clear and measurable goals for better security of commercial operations from the point of origin to the destination. It will also establish mandatory baseline security standards and provide incentives for additional voluntary measures.

Perhaps most importantly, the Secretary of Homeland Security would be required to develop protocols for the resumption of trade in the wake of an attack. Five years after the 9/11 attacks, the Federal Government still has not established adequate protocols for resuming port operations and setting cargo release priorities after an attack. I will tell you, when I talk to port authority directors, every single one of them brings this up as a major issue. If we don't have a plan for restarting our ports and for releasing cargo, then our ports will be closed far longer than they would need to be and economic losses would multiply.

This legislation would also establish priorities for critical DHS programs necessary to improve maritime cargo security and would set clear timelines to ensure steady progress on their development and expansion. Let me give another example of where DHS has languished in some areas. They have made progress in others but languished in some.

For example, the Department has been working on a minimum standard for mechanical seals on containers for more than 2 years but has yet to issue it. Under our bill, the Department would have 6 months to establish minimum standards for securing containers in transit to the United States. All containers bound for U.S. ports of entry would have to meet those standards no later than 2 years after they are established.

The bill also provides guidance and deadlines for essential improvements in the Automated Targeting System, the Radiation Portal Monitor Program, the CSI and C-TPAT.

The Automated Targeting System, ATS, is a screening mechanism that the Federal Government uses to help it determine which of the 11 million containers entering this country should receive further scrutiny. The GAO has criticized ATS for utilizing inadequate information to accurately assess the risk of cargo, and our legislation will ensure that the DHS improves that program.

Another notable provision of the bill is the requirement that radiation scanning be applied to 100 percent of the containers entering the 22 largest U.S. ports by December 31, 2007. Now, the result of that is that 98 percent of all cargo containers coming into U.S. ports will be screened for radiation. That is in addition to the radiation scanning that is done at foreign ports through the CSI and the Megaports Programs.

The legislation also expands and enhances the C-TPAT program to ensure the security of cargo from point of origin to destination. It creates a GreenLane, a third tier of C-TPAT, offering additional benefits to participants that voluntarily meet the highest level of security standards. The cooperation of private industry is vital to securing supply chains, and C-TPAT is a necessary tool for securing their active cooperation in supply chain security efforts.

Another security measure that has languished for years is the vital Transportation Workers Identification Card, or the TWIC Program. Again, we would require DHS to publish a final rule on the implementation of this program by the end of this year.

Finally, this comprehensive legislation would authorize the competitive, risk-based Port Security Grants Program. It would have stable, consistent funding set at $400 million each year for the next 5 years. This is a significant commitment of resources, and it will allow our ports to plan and to undertake multiyear projects that require a sustained investment.

The Port Security Improvement Act of 2006 will help us construct an effective, layered, coordinated system that extends from the point of origin to the point of destination. It will cover the people, the vessels, the cargo, and the facilities involved in our maritime commerce. And it addresses a major vulnerability identified time and again by terrorism experts.

Mr. President, I do hope that we can proceed with all due haste to enact this important legislation.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Hawaii is recognized.

Mr. INOUE. Mr. President, I rise to speak in support of the Port Security Improvement Act of 2006. It reflects a bipartisan compromise between the three committees that have jurisdiction over the security of our Nation's ports, international intermodal supply chain and the administration of the Department of Homeland Security.

This bill strikes the right balance between security and facilitating the trade that is so important to our economy.

Our national economy depends on port security, yet amazingly, the administration has not made it the priority that it needs to be. It has consistently submitted inadequate funding requests and has routinely missed critical security deadlines that were required by law. It was not until the Dubai Ports World controversy hit the front pages of local newspapers that many members of the Congress began to take port security seriously.

I hope that Members of this body will give this important piece of legislation the consideration it deserves. Lastly, we all know that you cannot have a successful security policy without adequate funding. Today is a good first step, but the administration and this Congress must take the next step after we pass this legislation and fund these initiatives as proposed here.

There are more than 360 ports in our Nation that serve as a gatekeeper for our Nation's trade and commerce, bringing into the country most of the merchandise and raw materials our businesses rely upon. If an incident forced the shutdown of ports across the Nation, the impact on our national economy would be devastating and have long-term consequences.

The Coast Guard, through the National Maritime Transportation Act, has taken important steps to create a plan to guarantee trade resumes quickly after an attack. However, more needs to be done to enhance the Coast Guard's plan and ensure effective implementation. Our economic health depends on it.

Given the role our ports play in the economy, we cannot underestimate the importance of ensuring that the containerized cargo that comes into our country is safe and that the ships entering our borders do not carry enemies of our Nation. Yet less than 6 percent of the cargo coming into this country is inspected, a level that is unacceptable if we are to take security seriously.

Making the current situation worse is the fact that current State inspection and radiation scanning technologies are woefully inadequate.

The measure before us today addresses the shortfalls of the past 5 years. First, it enhances the examination of cargo domestically and before it reaches our shores. Second, the bill improves interagency cooperation. Third, it improves the sharing of intelligence information with the creation of interagency port security command centers. Fourth, it provides an additional director within to improve communication and cooperation between the public and private sectors to quickly resume trade should an incident occur. And fifth, the bill offers assistance and technical training to our partners in the war on terror. These are all simple fixes but fixes that have significant consequence in our efforts to protect our ports.

As we consider this piece of legislation, we must not forget the security needs of our other transportation systems. Amendments will be offered to this bill that relate to securing other modes of transportation and it is my intent to support those amendments as well so that we have a comprehensive approach to securing our infrastructure.

I am hopeful that the Senate will pass this bill as soon as possible. Our approach has broad bipartisan support. The Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee has focused on the issues of transportation security long before the events of September 11, 2001.

We have dedicated substantial time and resources to oversee and investigate the security and safety of our Nation's systems of transportation and this bill will mark the fourth landmark transportation security related bill that has been brought before the Senate. The time is right to pass these needed security improvements, and I am hopeful that we can make it happen.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, it has been 5 years since September 11, and our country is still dangerously vulnerable. We have huge loopholes at our ports and in our cargo container system, and none of us should sleep well at night until we close those security holes and protect our country.

That is why I am on the Senate floor once again pushing for us to pass the bipartisan GreenLane bill. I am excited that after working for a number of years, we are now on the verge of making our country more secure.

The full House of Representatives passed our bill. The Senate Homeland Security Committee passed our bill. We have worked with the Commerce and Finance Committees to address the issues in the bill they have raised. Now it is up to us, the full Senate, to finally pass this bill.

Today I wish to explain why our ports are so vulnerable, how an attack would affect our people and our economy, and finally, how this bill will make us more secure and keep trade flowing.

To understand why our ports are so vulnerable, one just has to look at something that happened in my home State of Washington 3 weeks ago.

On August 16, there was a big scare at the Port of Seattle. Two containers that originated in Pakistan were offloaded at terminal 18. They were targeted for inspection. They were first scanned by a gamma-imaging machine, which is essentially a giant x-ray machine for cargo containers. The initial images suggested what was supposed to be in the container was different than what that x-ray scan showed. Next, the port officials brought in two security dogs, and both dogs detected what they thought were explosives in that cargo container at terminal 18.

To understand why that is such a scary incident in Seattle, one just has to look at the Port of Seattle and what surrounds it.

This photograph shows the Port of Seattle. We can see the port very clearly in the foreground. That is Seattle in the background. My colleague, Senator COLLINS, was out there and remarked, tonight and while she was out there, about the incredible closeness to where our containers are brought into the Port of Seattle, to where our downtown area is, where there are two sports stadiums that can have thousands and thousands of people at one time sitting in them, and I-5 is over here. That is the main highway that goes through the State of Washington, right through downtown Seattle. As one can see, these cargo containers sitting on these docks are within feet and yards of mass people, infrastructure, our community, our railroads, our transportation system, sports stadiums, and where people live and work.

During the scare I just mentioned, officials had to close the terminal and establish a 500-yard safety zone surrounding the terminal, and they had to create a 300-yard safety zone around the entire Seattle waterfront. Fortunately, that day, after having the port closed down for some time, further testing showed that what was in that container was just a false alarm.

I wish to take a second to commend everyone on the ground for doing an excellent job of immediately responding to a possibly very dangerous incident.

Here is the problem: We did not know what was in that container. We did not know. It could have posed a problem, and it was sitting right on the dock, right within our sports stadiums, within all of downtown Seattle, within our transportation systems, and where people live and work.

That is why we are presenting this bill tonight. The main idea of this bill is to push our country's borders out, to do the screening and testing for these cargo containers overseas so that the container never gets close to our shores if we think it is dangerous. But today, too often we wait until that container is sitting on American soil, dangerously close to our cities, before we find out whether it could pose a danger.

Fortunately, that Seattle incident ended well, but that very same week, we got a very stark warning about how it could have ended differently.

In August around the same time, the RAND Center for Terrorism and Risk Management Policy issued a very troubling report that showed what could happen if there is a nuclear device in a cargo container.

The RAND Corporation looked at the following scenario: terrorists put a 10-kiloton nuclear bomb inside a cargo container and detonated it at the port of Long Beach, CA. The researchers chose that scenario because, as they put it, "analysts consider it feasible, it is highly likely to have a catastrophic effect, and the target is both a key part of the U.S. economic structure and a critical global shipping center."

Here is what they said would have happened: Up to 60,000 people would be killed instantly from the blast or from radiation poisoning; 150,000 people would be injured by radiation exposure; up to 6 million people would flee Los Angeles; 2 to 3 million people would need to be relocated because their land would be contaminated by radiation. And finally, the economic loss simply would be about $1 trillion. That is 10 times worse than September 11. Those costs would include medical care, insurance claims, workers' compensation, evacuation, construction. Imagine that—the economic damage would be 10 times worse than what happened on September 11.

How many more reports such as that is it going to take? How many port evacuations and scares is it going to take before we get serious about port security? Time is not on our side. Each year, 6 million cargo containers enter our U.S. seaports, and that number is expected to quadruple in the next 20 years. These cargo containers carry the building blocks of our economy, but without adequate security, they can also provide an opportunity for terrorists to deliver a deadly one-two punch to our country. The first punch would create untold number of American casualties. The second punch would bring our economy to a halt. Today we are not doing enough to keep America safe.

Standing in this Chamber, it can feel as if the dangers at our ports are a distant concern, but given that our ports are connected to our Nation's transportation system and are close to our major population centers, the threat is never far away.

I want to share a very disturbing photo that shows us what a terrorist attack could look like. On March 21, a container ship called the Hyundai Fortune was traveling off the coast of Yemen when an explosion occurred in the rear of the ship. This is a photo of what happened. This is a container ship close to Yemen with an explosion at the rear of the ship. Remember the picture I just showed of the port of Seattle and where we are and imagine this happening in the Port of Seattle.

What happened when this ship exploded was that 90 containers were blown off the side of this ship and it created a debris field 5 miles long. Thankfully, amazingly, there were no fatalities and the crew was rescued.

This incident, by the way, did not appear to be terrorist related, but it gives us an idea of what it would look like if a terrorist incident occurred on a container ship in one of our seaports.

I want my colleagues to imagine the same burning ship sitting just a few feet off our shores in New York Harbor or Puget Sound, off the coast of Los Angeles or Charleston, Miami, Portland, Hampton Roads, the Delaware Bay, or the Gulf of Mexico. Now imagine we are not dealing with just a conventional explosion; we are dealing with a dirty bomb. I want to walk through what would happen next.

Of course, there would be the immediate horrible loss of life. Many of our ports, as I said, are located near major cities. If this were a chemical weapon exploding in Seattle, the chemical plume could contaminate the rail system, Interstate 5, SeaTac Airport, not to mention, as I showed my colleagues, the downtown business and residential areas. At the port, there would immediately be tremendous confusion. People would try to contain the fire, but it is unclear today who would be in charge. Then when word spread and chaos ensued, panic would set in and there would be chaos as our first responders tried to react and people who lived nearby would try to flee.

Next, what would happen is our Government would shut down every single port in America to make sure there were no other bombs on any other containers in any other city. That shut-down would be the equivalent of driving our economy into a brick wall and, in fact, it could spark a global recession. Day by day, we would feel the painful economic impact of the attack. American factories in the middle of our country would not be able to get the supplies they need. They would have to shut their doors and lay off workers. Stores around our country would not be able to get the products they need to put on their shelves. Prices would spike, demand would outweigh supply, and consumers would not be able to afford the simple items they rely on every single day.

In 2002, we saw what the closure of just a few ports on the west coast could do. It cost our economy $1 billion a day. Imagine if we shut down all of our ports. One study, in fact, concluded that if U.S. ports were shut down for just 9 days, it would cost our economy $58 billion.

The RAND report I mentioned earlier found the economic damage could easily top more than $1 trillion. Of course, we would soon realize we have no plan for resuming trade after an attack. We have no plan today for how we would resume trade, no protocol for what would be searched. We wouldn't know what would be allowed in or even who was in charge, and there would be a mass scramble to create a new system in a crisis atmosphere. Eventually, we would begin the slow process of manually inspecting all the cargo waiting to enter the United States. One report found it could take as long as 4 months to get all the cargo inspected and moving again.

Finally, we would have to set up a new regime for port security. You can bet that any kind of rushed plan we put together in this kind of scenario would not balance strong security with efficient trade.

This is a realistic portrayal of events that could happen tomorrow. Five years after September 11, we have not closed a major loophole that threatens our lives and our economy. Time is not on our side. We have to act, and we need to act now.

I approach this as someone who really understands the importance of both improving our security and maintaining the flow of commerce. My home State of Washington is the most trade-dependent State in the entire country. We know what is at stake if there is an incident at one of our ports. That is why I wrote and funded Operation Safe Commerce to help us find where we are vulnerable and to evaluate the best security practices. It is why I worked hard to boost funding for the Coast Guard, and I fought to keep the Port Security Grant Program from being eliminated year after year.

Right after September 11, 5 years ago, I started talking with security and trade experts to find out what we needed to be doing to both improve security and keep our commerce going. Last year, I sought out Senator COLLINS as a partner in this effort. I approached Senator COLLINS because I knew she cared about this issue. I knew she had done a lot of work on it already, and I knew she was someone who could get things done. Since that day, she and I have worked hand in hand to develop this bill and to move it forward.

The reason we worked so hard on this bill is because we know how vulnerable we are. Terrorists have a lot of opportunities to introduce deadly cargo into a container. It can be tampered with at any time from when it leaves a foreign factory overseas to when it arrives at a consolidation warehouse and moves to a foreign port. It could even be tampered with while it is en route to the United States. There are several dangers. I outlined what would happen if terrorists exploded a container, but they could just as easily use cargo containers to transport weapons or personnel into the United States to launch an attack anywhere on American soil. In fact, in April, 22 Chinese stowaways were found at the Port of Seattle. They reached the United States inside a cargo container. In that case, they were stowaways, but they could easily have been terrorists sneaking into this country.

The programs we have in place today are totally inadequate. Last year, thanks to the insistence of Senator COLLINS and Senator COLEMAN, the Government Accountability Office found its C-TPAT was not even checking to see if companies were doing what they promised they would in their security plans. Even when U.S. Customs inspectors do find something suspicious today at a foreign port, they can't force a container to be inspected. So we have a clear and deadly threat, and we know that current programs are inadequate. So what are we going to do about it? We could manually inspect every container coming into our ports, but that would cripple our economy.

The real challenge we face is how to make our trade more secure without slowing it to a crawl. That is why the Homeland Security, Commerce, and Finance Committees, through the leadership of Senators COLLINS and LIEBERMAN, Senators STEVENS and INOUE, and Senators GRASSLEY and BAUCUS and I, have worked with stakeholders and experts to strike the right balance. The result is the bill that we are now considering. It provides a comprehensive blueprint for how we improve security while keeping our trade efficient. At its heart, this challenge is about keeping the good things about trade—speed and efficiency—without being vulnerable to the bad things about trade, which is the potential for terrorists to use our engines of commerce.

The GreenLane bill does five things. First of all, it creates tough new standards for all cargo. Today, we don't have any standards for cargo security.

Second, it creates a GreenLane option which provides for an even higher level of security. Companies have the option to follow the higher standards of the GreenLane. Their cargo will be tracked and monitored from the moment it leaves the factory floor overseas until it reaches the United States. We will know everywhere their cargo has been. We will know every person who has touched it, and we will know whether it has been tampered with. The GreenLane pushes our borders out by conducting inspections overseas before cargo is even loaded into a ship bound for the United States, and we will provide incentives for the companies that use this highest standard of GreenLane.

Third, our bill sets up a plan to resume trade quickly and safely, to minimize the impact of a terrorist attack on our economy.

Fourth, our bill will secure our ports here at home by authorizing and funding port security grants. This funding will help our ports and port operators to develop and implement security plans. They could use this funding to strengthen their perimeter security, which would help prevent a number of security lapses that were highlighted in a recent Seattle Times article in which a reporter was able to enter a port and walk around the containers without anybody stopping him.

Finally, our bill will hold DHS accountable for improving cargo security. DHS is long overdue in establishing cargo security standards and transportation worker credentials. We need to hold DHS accountable, and our bill provides the infrastructure to ensure accountability and coordination.

Let me take a few minutes to share a few ways that our bill does make America safer. First of all, we close the loopholes that leave us vulnerable today. Senator COLLINS and I have studied the 9/11 Commission Report and the various GAO reports and we worked very hard to put their recommendations into this bill. The 9/11 Commission examined what went wrong 5 years ago and how we can prevent another terrorist attack. We listened to the 9/11 Commission and we worked very hard to incorporate their recommendations and to close the loopholes that the Commission identified. The 9/11 Commission said we needed a layered security system. Our bill adopts that layered approach.

Here is what we envision as the Secretary of Homeland Security implements this bill. Each step in the GreenLane system will have multiple and redundant security layers. Cargo would be monitored and secured starting at a foreign factory overseas. In addition, containers will be sealed with high-tech container security devices, such as e-seals, to protect against their being tampered with or compromised. Then, before that container is ever loaded onto a ship, its manifest is reviewed and the container is inspected for radiation, seal tampering, and x-rayed. Finally, the cargo will be secured with access controls, ensuring anyone with access to GreenLane cargo has undergone a background check and possesses verifiable identification. Those multiple layers provide the type of layered security that the 9/11 Commission called for.

Now, the 9/11 Commission also said we have to centralize authority and responsibility so that there is finally someone accountable in our Government. Our bill does that. It centralizes authority by establishing the Office of Cargo Security Policy within the Department of Homeland Security to coordinate Federal cargo security programs and to advance security research and development.

The 9/11 Commission also said we need to do a better job sharing information throughout our Government. Our bill promotes coordination by establishing regional interagency operational centers to enhance cooperation between our Federal agencies. So our bill is responsive to the problems and the loopholes that the 9/11 Commission identified.

Our bill gives us new tools so we can approach cargo security in new ways. It gives U.S. officials in foreign ports the authority to inspect suspicious containers before they are loaded for departure into the United States. Our bill makes the haystack of containers smaller. It allows the Government to focus on suspicious cargo that enters our ports, and it ensures that we are inspecting and stopping cargo that poses a threat. And it cuts down on the smuggling of weapons, people, drugs, and other illegal cargo.

This bill will also protect America's economy in the event of a terror attack, and that is because it provides a secure, organized way to quickly resume cargo operations after any emergency shutdown because any shutdown of our ports has the potential to cost the U.S. economy billions of dollars a day. Our bill would minimize the economic impact of a terrorist attack.

So I am very proud of this bill, and I thank all of our partners and all of our supporters. I especially thank Senator COLLINS for her tremendous leadership and work on this very complex issue, and I commend her for the job she has done. I thank Senator COLEMAN for his work as chairman of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. I thank Senator LIEBERMAN and all of our cosponsors, and I thank the Commerce and Finance Committees, especially Senator STEVENS and Senator INOUE, Senator GRASSLEY and Senator BAUCUS.

We have also seen tremendous progress on the House side with the Safe Port Act, and I want to thank Representatives DAN LUNDGREN and JANE HARMAN for their leadership. Finally, I especially tonight thank the numerous Federal, State and local officials and all of the industry representatives for their tremendous assistance in helping us craft this legislation. They truly are at the front lines of securing our Nation's ports, and I have been very proud to work with all of them and to get to know them and see their dedication and commitment to making our country more secure.

Today, we have a choice in how we deal with the cargo security challenges that face us, but if we wait for a disaster, our choices are going to be pretty stark. So I think we have to make the changes now, on our terms, before there is a deadly incident. Let's protect America before an image like this appears on our television screens. Let's not wait until a terrorist incident strikes again to protect our people and to protect our economy.

Earlier this year, the American people woke up, and they spoke out when they heard that a foreign government-owned company could be running our ports. That sparked a very critical debate. Now we need to set up a security regime that will actually make us safer. Until we do so, none of us should sleep well at night. A terrible image like this of a burning container ship with a dirty bomb in one of America's harbors could be on our TV screens tomorrow. So this Congress needs to act today. We only have a few days to get this right, and I hope that all of our colleagues will work with all of us to move this bill quickly and expeditiously and pass a GreenLane bill before it is too late.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I again thank the Senator for her excellent statement, for her leadership, and for getting us to where we are today. It has been a long journey, but with her leadership we were able to craft this bill, work out the many compromises, and come to the floor. I hope we can do this bill relatively quickly. It has been the subject of an awful lot of discussion and review, and it would be terrific if we can show the American people that we can act in a bipartisan way on an issue that really matters to their security.

It is appropriate that the Presiding Officer tonight is the Senator from Virginia, Senator ALLEN. I know that port security has been a major priority of his. Earlier in my statement, I mentioned that California, New York, and Virginia are the three States that receive the greatest number of containers, although actually I would think that Washington State has to be in there, too, given the size of Seattle and Tacoma's ports as well. So I know they should be in there as well. But Virginia is a major player in port security, and I want to commend the Senator from Virginia for his leadership on this issue. I know that this has been of great concern to him. He has talked to me as this bill has been making its way through the process, and I publicly thank him for caring about this issue and making it a priority as well.

Mr. President, I am not aware of further Members who are seeking to speak on my side, and I see no indication of further Members on the other side. I am going to, very briefly, put in a quorum call so that we can check, but I believe we are very close to concluding our business for tonight.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to a period of morning business with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

HONORING OUR ARMED FORCES

ARMY FIRST SERGEANT AARON JAGGER

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to the men and women in uniform serving the United States around the world, and observe a somber milestone in Michigan's contribution to Operation Iraqi Freedom.

In August, the 100th member of the U.S. Armed Forces from Michigan made the ultimate sacrifice while serving in Iraq. U.S. Army ISG Aaron Jagger of Hillsdale died when a roadside bomb detonated near his vehicle in Ramadi, Iraq. Sergeant Jagger was serving his second tour in Iraq. I offer my heartfelt condolences to Sergeant Jagger's family.

As of the first week of September, 104 members of the U.S. Armed forces with ties to Michigan have lost their lives while serving in Iraq. I will ask that a list of their names be printed in the RECORD at the end of my statement.

No words can express our country's gratitude for the dedicated service and ultimate sacrifice of Sergeant Jagger or the other Americans who have lost their lives. I am also thankful for the sacrifice all the men and women in the U.S. military have made for their country while serving in Iraq. They are selfless patriots that give their time and too often their lives to preserve the freedoms we hold so dear.

I know that condolences offered to these brave families and words spoken on the floor of the Senate cannot possibly make up for their loss. But it is important that they know we remember them and that our prayers and thoughts are with those that have lost loved ones, and those that still have family and friends serving in harm's way.

I will remain committed to honoring their memory and ensuring that their families and their comrades who return from battle receive the support and respect they deserve.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the list to which I referred be printed in the RECORD.

FAMILY HUMANITARIAN RELIEF

Mr. BROWBACK. Mr. President, next week marks the fifth anniversary of the attacks of September 11. On this solemn occasion, we reflect upon the lives of those who were lost and the families they left behind. Images of the planes hitting the two massive towers filled with innocent Americans are emblazoned in our minds and stir our conscience. Heroic tales of firefighters, police officers and first responders falling in the line of duty evoke deep pangs of sadness yet fill our hearts with great pride for our country.

It is important that during this time we remember the families of these victims of terror. They have suffered greatly, and we continue to mourn for their loved ones and honor their memories. But there are some families whose grief is also mixed with fear. The victims for whom they grieve were immigrants working in the World Trade Center, and the families that are left behind face potential deportation. Thus, in addition to the already incalculable loss inflicted upon them by the terrorists, these relatives face yet another hardship.

It is in the context of this situation that I wish to recognize the work of Debra Brown Steinberg. For the past 5 years, Ms. Steinberg has tirelessly sought to undo this injustice and allow these relatives to grieve alongside the thousands of other victims' families without fear of arrest and removal. Ms. Steinberg has dedicated her time—pro bono—to this cause and has been recognized time and again for her efforts.

My colleagues and I introduced legislation, known as the September 11 Family Humanitarian Relief and Patriotism Act, which would provide the necessary relief for these families. Now that a year has passed since the bill's introduction, and as we approach the fifth anniversary of 9/11, it is time to bring closure for the sake of the families and for the sake of honoring the memories of those killed.

Our tradition teaches us to have compassion for the widow, the orphan, and the stranger among us. Debra Steinberg's action on behalf of the immigrant victims' families exemplifies such compassion. We have much to learn from her on this day, and I am proud to honor her achievements.

COWBOY ARTILLERY

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I rise today to express our Nation's deepest thanks and gratitude to the men of the 300th Armored Field Artillery Battalion, Wyoming Army National Guard. On Friday, September 9, 2006, the 300th AFA Battalion will gather for a reunion 56 years after the Battle at Soyang during the Korean war.

In 1951, the members of the battalion put down their plowshares and picked up their rifles and arrived in Korea to push back three corps of the Chinese People's Volunteers that launched a major offensive against the 2d Infantry Division, to which the 300th was attached. In his memoir, a Wyoming National Guardsman, William W. Day IV, described his early days in combat:

The guns are hot and ammo can't be uncrated fast enough. The motor pool is using every truck to haul ammo. The cooks, clerks and everyone available are preparing ammo while the gun crews stay at their posts and continue to pour a withering fire on the enemy.

The 300th provided devastating artillery fire support that pounded enemy positions for 7 days inflicting thousands of enemy casualties. During the morning of May 18, 1951, the battalion was given the mission of destroying an enemy roadblock allowing retreating U.N. forces to fall back to more secure positions. The heroic and determined stand of the 2d Division and its attached units allowed the Eighth Army to regroup and outflank the enemy.

Among many others, the battalion has been awarded the Presidential Unit Citation for its valiant efforts in the struggle for the freedom we all enjoy. Today, the Wyoming Army National Guard carries on the courageous traditions of the Cowboy Artillery.

Mr. President, the 300th AFA Battalion epitomized the ethos of the Citizen Soldier. It is because of folks like the members of the 300th that we continue to live safe and free. America's men and women who answer the call of service and wear our Nation's uniform deserve respect and recognition for the enormous burden that they are willingly bare. They put everything on the line every day, and as a result, our Nation remains free and strong.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

COMMENDING HAWAII'S WORLD CHAMPIONS

• Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I wish to congratulate the Hilo All-Stars, the 2006 Cal Ripken Baseball World Champions. This is the second consecutive year that a team from Hawaii captured the 12-and-under title. Last year, a Honolulu squad defeated Mexico, by a score of 1 to nothing, to win the championship game.

On Sunday, August 20, Hilo won the Ripken World Series in Aberdeen, MD against international champions Mexico, by the score of 5 to 2. Ridge Hoopii-Haslam hit a two-run homer, and Kawika Pruett added a two-run single to rally Hilo against Mexico's powerful pitching staff that allowed only three runs in the tournament. Mexico threatened in the third inning, but Kean Wong came in to pitch out of a bases loaded jam, holding Mexico to just one run.

The Hilo All-Star team members are Anson Arruda, Ridge Hoopii-Haslam, Dean Hosaka, Jordan Jinbo, Chayce Kaaua, Kian Kurokawa, Rylan Malakaua, Ekolu Martins, Cody Ray Okabayashi, Kawika Pruett, Kean Wong, and Kiani Wong. Kaha Wong manages the All-Stars and Wardell "Baba" Lancaster and Jason Jinbo are team coaches.

I am proud of Hilo's impressive wins and the humility and sportsmanship they displayed as they won with aloha. Hilo represented the State of Hawaii and the United States very well. Many family members and friends made sacrifices to support the team. I applaud these efforts and wish all the players and their families the best in future endeavors.

I look forward to hearing more about the success of our players as they continue to pursue their education and baseball ambitions in the future, and I extend the same congratulations and best wishes to all players and coaches who participated in this year's Cal Ripken Baseball World Series.●

TRIBUTE TO EAGLE-PICHER TECHNOLOGIES

• Mr. BOND. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure that I rise to celebrate Eagle-Picher Technologies, LLC, on the company's "One Billionth Hour" in space as represented by the superior batteries the firm designs and builds and that power U.S. satellites.

Recognizing the need for custom designed and built batteries, the technologies division at Eagle-Picher works on a variety of batteries for aerospace and military use, which the company calls special use batteries. The company's technology division, based in Joplin, MO., continues a tradition that stretches back to the 1960s when Eagle-Picher provided power systems for the first United States satellites and the manned Mercury program.

Today, EaglePicher nickel-hydrogen cells are powering spacecraft orbiting Earth and beyond. I commend Eagle Picher, its leadership and its dedicated employees in Missouri on their commitment to maintaining the highest standards while breaking new ground for power systems and advanced electrical power system applications. I am pleased to join with the Joplin community and the State of Missouri in congratulating the company and wishing the firm's valued employees with continued growth and success.●

TRIBUTE TO SAN BERNARDINO VALLEY COLLEGE

● Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize San Bernardino Valley College. This academic year, the campus celebrates its 80th anniversary.

San Bernardino Valley College was founded in 1926, when 140 students met at San Bernardino or Colton High Schools for classes. Later that year, construction began in the city of San Bernardino on a campus that would come to educate 700,000 students and play a central role in the growth of Inland southern California.

San Bernardino Valley College has educated generations of the region's future leaders and workforce. Over the years, San Bernardino Valley College has anticipated and planned for the changes that took place in California and our Nation. During World War II, the campus played an instrumental role in assisting with the war effort. In the years following the war, a number of celebrities visited the campus, and in 1947 the campus hosted the Bob Hope show that featured Desi Arnaz, his orchestra, and others. In 1950, the campus played a central role in the race for U.S. Senate, hosting senatorial candidates Richard Nixon and Helen Gahagan Douglas.

San Bernardino Valley College also has worked to meet the ever-changing needs of a diverse population. The civil rights era brought forth increased cultural awareness, and the campus responded by hosting diversity programs. Today the campus has an enrollment of over 12,000 students, three quarters of which are non-White students. The campus is recognized as a Hispanic Serving Institution by the Hispanic Association of Colleges and Universities, HACU, and continues to receive title V funding for its pursuit of ethnic diversity.

In the past 80 years, technology has also impacted education. Faculty and staff have worked to help San Bernardino Valley College grow and adapt to this ever-growing need. College classes and degree programs are now offered not only on campus but at alternative community sites and on television and the Internet. The campus has also responded to today's need for quality science education and important student services.

San Bernardino Valley College has produced influential leaders in California and abroad, with prestigious alumni emerging each year. Dr. Charles Young attended Valley College before and after serving in the Korean war and went on to become the youngest chancellor of a University of California campus at age 36, taking charge of UCLA from 1968 until 1997, completing the longest tenure of any University of California chancellor. Judith Valles, former mayor of the city of San Bernardino, attended Valley College and served as both faculty and staff on campus. Graduating in 1966, Dr. Yolanda Moses went on to serve as the president of the City College of New York and was named the 74th president of the American Anthropological Association. And graduating as a business administration major in 1959, Jack Brown went on to become the president and CEO of Stater Bros. Markets, one of the Nation's largest supermarket chains.

Today San Bernardino Valley College can look back on a proud history of growth and change in the San Bernardino Valley and California. I applaud the service and dedication of the faculty, staff, and students of San Bernardino Valley College as they celebrate 80 years of improving lives and education to the people of the Inland Empire and southern California.

IN MEMORIAM: MARY BOURDETTE

● Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, on Tuesday, September 5, our Nation lost a great American and our Nation's children lost a great friend and advocate in Mary Bourdette.

Mary Bourdette was a woman who dedicated her working life to improving the lives of children and families. As a public interest advocate and public servant, she played critical roles in the enactment of the Act for Better Child Care, the Family and Medical Leave Act, the Adoption and Safe Families Act, the expansions of the earned-income tax credit, and the child care and development block grant. She worked to improve the Head Start Program by increasing funds dedicated to strengthening its quality and maintaining its comprehensive approach to helping our poorest children and families. Most recently, I had the pleasure of partnering with Mary in her capacity as director of government relations for Parents Action for Children to highlight the dangers to children of exposure to violent and explicit video games.

Those of us fortunate enough to have worked closely with Mary Bourdette and to have enjoyed her friendship will dearly miss her keen understanding of policy, her gentle manner and humor. Mary seemed to wake up every day believing that it held an opportunity to make the world better for children.

For her passion, commitment, and service, our country owes Mary

Bourdette a great debt of gratitude. We have lost a caring, creative, and effective ally in our work to protect children and empower their families.

ROLLA NOLTING McCLANAHAN

• Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, today I pay tribute to a wonderful Ohioan who has recently been ill. Rolla Nolting McClanahan never asked for anything special, but she deserves to be recognized today for the years she has spent generously serving others. Throughout her life, Rolla has been a productive, giving member of her community who quietly contributed a great deal both to her hometown of Cincinnati, and to her home county, Hamilton County. Rolla is the kind of American who makes up the backbone of our country. Rolla is the beloved wife of Donald E. McClanahan, mother of Michele L. McClanahan, and sister of John A. Nolting.

As a student, Rolla was very bright. She graduated with honors from both Withrow High School and the University of Cincinnati, where she was active in Mortar Board, Delta Delta Delta, the Cincinnatus Society, and the Union Committee.

After graduation, Rolla became involved in her community as a member of Kindervelt, a volunteer organization that serves as the largest auxiliary of Cincinnati Children's Hospital Medical Center. She was also Chairman of the Board of Directors of Deaconesses of the Mt. Washington Presbyterian Church and Chairman of the Board of Directors of Tri Deltas House Board Corporation.

Since 1973, Rolla has been a Salvation Army volunteer for the Salvation Army Federation of Women's Auxiliaries, where she served in several official positions, including President of the Board and President of the Toy Shop Auxiliary. In 1987, she was a featured speaker at the Salvation Army's National Advisory Organization Conference in Dallas. In May of 1993, she was presented with the William Booth Award, bestowed by the Salvation Army for commitment and dedication.

Mr. President, Rolla Nolting McClanahan is a wonderful person who has spent a great deal of her life working to improve the lives of those less fortunate. Today, I want to thank Rolla for her selflessness and commitment to others, and wish her well.●

TRIBUTE TO JOHN PARRY

• Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, today I congratulate my friend John Parry on his retirement after 16 years as director of athletics at Butler University.

Since joining Butler in 1990, John has overseen a remarkable period of growth and success, adding three varsity athletic teams and winning the Horizon League James J. McCafferty Trophy for all-sports excellence for the first time and on five subsequent occasions. During this time, Butler also witnessed extraordinary success in the classroom, leading the Horizon League in the number of student-athletes named to the academic honor roll 9 out of the last 10 years. In 2003 he was recognized as National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics I-AA/I-AAA Athletic Director of the Year for the Central Region.

John's leadership has extended beyond Butler University. He is a past president of the Pioneer Football League and past chair of the NCAA Division I Men's Lacrosse Committee. Especially important in the Indianapolis community, he served as a cochairman of the Local Organizing Committee for the 1997, 2000, and 2006 NCAA Men's Final Four and the 2005 NCAA Women's Final Four.

Personally, I have enjoyed working closely with John each year as Butler hosts the annual Dick Lugar Run and Walk. John's enthusiasm has ensured the success of this special tradition as so many from all over central Indiana come together to enjoy a day of competition and fitness.

I appreciate this opportunity to congratulate John, and I look forward to many more opportunities to work closely with him as he pursues new challenges and adventures.

ANGELS OF ADOPTION

• Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, later this month, the Congressional Coalition on Adoption will host a gala to honor individuals from across the country that have contributed greatly to programs that strive to keep our most vulnerable children safe and healthy in permanent homes.

I am proud to be a member of the Congressional Coalition and this event marks a true celebration for individuals we call Angels of Adoption. The Angel of Adoption awards recognize individuals who are dedicated to the welfare of children. It should be noted that our "Angels" often forgo lucrative positions in law firms and other private sector work because of their commitment to provide legal protection for thousands of children.

This year I am delighted to honor Mary Ellen Griffith as our West Virginia Angel of Adoption. Mary Ellen Griffith is the founder and past director of ChildLaw Services in Princeton, WV. Ms. Griffith has earnestly provided policy and legal advocacy for West Virginia children during her tenure as a legal service lawyer. Her direct representation of children has been complimented by faculty appointments to university programs where she has lectured on topics such as family law, guardianship, and custody issues. She certainly is well prepared for her recent appointment as a family law judge. Her work on the bench will offer the court the high level knowledge, experience and sensitivity required to safeguard the well-being of children.

I am well aware that the essential efforts of the courts can go unrecognized. But I maintain a very high regard for the courts because they regularly play a vital role in adoption and child protection. That is why I introduced the We Care Kids Act with Senator MIKE DEWINE of Ohio last year, and was proud when it was incorporated into the law earlier this year. This act now gives our local courts the necessary resources and training through Federal grants issued by the Department of Health and Human Services.

Dedicated judges like Mary Ellen Griffith will play a pivotal role in prompting adoptions and working to ensure that our most vulnerable children are safe, healthy and have a permanent home.●

MAYOR BOB O'CONNOR

• Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, today in sadness I acknowledge the passing of a fine man, a great Pennsylvanian, a life-long Pittsburgher, Robert E. O'Connor, Jr, mayor of Pittsburgh.

Bob O'Connor loved Pittsburgh. He was born in Pittsburgh, graduated from the city's Taylor Allderdice High School in 1962, and lived, with his wife Judy, in Squirrel Hill for 41 years. Like so many Pittsburgh sons, Bob began his working life in the steel mills, where he worked for 5 years before moving on, entering the family restaurant business. After 29 years in the private sector, Bob decided to enter the public square, and was elected to Pittsburgh's City Council in 1991.

In a testament to both his effectiveness as a city legislator and the professional manner in which he always conducted himself, Bob became City Council President 7 years after he first joined the Council. For 5 years, he served Pittsburgh as its highest ranking legislative official, resigning only when Pennsylvania Governor Ed Rendell tapped Bob to serve, as the face of his administration in the southwestern Pennsylvania. Two years later, in November of 2005, Bob was elected the 58th mayor of Pittsburgh.

There was much he sought to do as mayor, much he had planned for our proud city. Tragically, he never got the chance. Merely 7 months after he took office, Bob O'Connor was diagnosed with brain cancer. He immediately began to undergo aggressive treatment, working to get healthy enough to return to serving his city. Sadly, his illness progressed, and on September 1, Mayor O'Connor passed away.

Today, September 7, Mayor Bob O'Connor was laid to rest in Pittsburgh, the city he served for 15 years, the city he loved his whole life. I joined his family, his friends, and many others at his funeral service, paying our last respects to a man taken from us far too soon.

Robert E. O'Connor, Jr., survived by his wife, Judy, and three children, will be sorely missed. May God bless the entire O'Connor family during this difficult time.●

CONSTITUTION WEEK

● Mr. VITTER. Mr. President, today I wish to acknowledge the Fort Miro Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Monroe, LA. Beginning September 17 and ending September 23, this great organization will observe its annual Constitution Week. Today, I'd like to spend a few moments highlighting the importance of their efforts.

The Daughters of the American Revolution petitioned Congress in 1955 to set aside a week to celebrate the Constitution. Thanks to their petition, Congress through a joint resolution on August 2, 1956, requested that the president declare September 17 to 23 as Constitution Week.

This week sets out to emphasize citizens' responsibilities for protecting and defending the Constitution, inform people that the Constitution is the basis for America's great heritage, and encourage the study of the historical events surrounding its framing in September 1787.

This year on September 17 at 3:00 pm, this long-time chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution will participate in "Bells Across America" to commemorate the signing of the Constitution and to recognize all citizens of the United States of America.

I applaud the Daughters of the American Revolution for their continued dedication to celebrating the importance of the Constitution through education and activism. Moreover, I commend the Fort Miro Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution in Monroe, LA, for doing this fine work on behalf of the State of Louisiana.●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. FRIST (for himself, Mr. McCONNELL, and Mr. INHOFE):

S. 3861. A bill to facilitate bringing to justice terrorists and other unlawful enemy combatants through full and fair trials by military commissions, and for other purposes; read the first time.

Mr. FRIST. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3861

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Bringing Terrorists to Justice Act of 2006”.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) For more than 10 years, the al Qaeda terrorist organization has waged an unlawful war of violence and terror against the United States and its allies. Al Qaeda was involved in the bombing of the World Trade Center in New York City in 1993, the bombing of the United States Embassies in Kenya and Tanzania in 1998, and the attack on the U.S.S. Cole in Yemen in 2000. On September 11, 2001, al Qaeda launched the most deadly foreign attack on United States soil in history. Nineteen al Qaeda operatives hijacked four commercial aircraft and piloted them into the World Trade Center Towers in New York City and the headquarters of the United States Department of Defense at the Pentagon, and downed United Airlines Flight 93. The attack destroyed the Towers, severely damaged the Pentagon, and resulted in the deaths of approximately 3,000 innocent people.

(2) Following the attacks on the United States on September 11th, Congress recognized the existing hostilities with al Qaeda and affiliated terrorist organizations and, by the Authorization for the Use of Military Force Joint Resolution (Public Law 107-40), recognized that “the President has authority under the Constitution to take action to deter and prevent acts of international terrorism against the United States” and authorized the President “to use all necessary and appropriate force against those nations, organizations, or persons he determines planned, authorized, committed, or aided the terrorist attacks that occurred on September 11, 2001 . . . in order to prevent any future acts of international terrorism against the United States by such nations, organizations or persons.”

(3) The President’s authority to convene military commissions arises from the Constitution’s vesting in the President of the executive power and the power of Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces. As the Supreme Court of the United States recognized in Madsen v. Kinsella, 343 U.S. 341, 346–48 (1952), “[s]ince our nation’s earliest days, such commissions have been constitutionally recognized agencies for meeting many urgent governmental responsibilities related to war. . . . They have taken many forms and borne many names. Neither their procedure nor their jurisdiction has been prescribed by statute. It has been adapted in each instance to the need that called it forth.”

(4) In exercising the authority vested in the President by the Constitution and laws of the United States, including the Authorization for Use of Military Force Joint Resolution, and in accordance with the law of war, the President has detained enemy combatants in the course of this armed conflict and issued the Military Order of November 13, 2001, to govern the “Detention, Treatment, and Trial of Certain Non-Citizens in the War Against Terrorism.” This Order authorized the Secretary of Defense to establish military commissions to try individuals subject to the Order for any offenses triable by military commission that such individuals are alleged to have committed.

(5) The Supreme Court in Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, 126 S. Ct. 2749 (2006), held that the military commissions established by the Department of Defense under the President’s Military Order of November 13, 2001, were not consistent with certain aspects of United States domestic law. The Congress may by law, and does by enactment of this statute, eliminate any deficiency of statutory authority to facilitate bringing terrorists with whom the United States is engaged in armed conflict to justice for violations of the law of war and other offenses triable by military commissions. The prosecution of such individuals by military commissions established and conducted consistent with this Act fully complies with the Constitution, the laws of the United States, treaties to which the United States is a party, and the law of war.

(6) The use of military commissions is particularly important in this context because other alternatives, such as the use of courts-martial, generally are impracticable. The terrorists with whom the United States is engaged in armed conflict have demonstrated a commitment to the destruction of the United States and its people, to the violation of the law of war, and to the abuse of American legal processes. In a time of ongoing armed conflict, it generally is neither practicable nor appropriate for combatants like al Qaeda terrorists to be tried before tribunals that include all of the procedures associated with courts-martial.

(7) Many procedures for courts-martial would not be practicable in trying the unlawful enemy combatants for whom this Act provides for trial by military commission. For instance, court martial proceedings would in certain circumstances—

(A) compel the Government to share classified information with the accused, even though members of al Qaeda cannot be trusted with our Nation’s secrets and it would not be consistent with the national security of the United States to provide them with access to classified information;

(B) exclude the use of hearsay evidence even though such evidence often will be the best and most reliable evidence that the accused has committed a war crime. For example, many witnesses in military commission trials are likely to be foreign nationals who are not amenable to process or may be precluded for national security reasons from entering the United States or Guantanamo Bay to testify. Other witnesses may be unavailable because of military necessity, incarceration, injury, or death. In short, applying the hearsay rules from the Manual for Courts-Martial or from the Federal Rules of Evidence would make it virtually impossible to bring terrorists to justice for their violations of the law of war;

(C) specify speedy trials and technical rules for sworn and authenticated statements when, due to the exigencies of wartime, the United States cannot safely require members of the armed forces to gather evidence on the battlefield, including civilian eyewitness testimony, as though they were police officers. Nor can the United States divert members from the front lines and their duty stations to attend military commission proceedings. Therefore, strict compliance with such rules for evidence gathered on the battlefield would be impracticable, given the preeminent focus on military operations and the chaotic nature of combat.

(8) The exclusive judicial review for which this Act, and the Detainee Treatment Act of 2005, provides is without precedent in the history of armed conflicts involving the United States, exceeds the scope of judicial review historically provided for by military commissions, and is channeled in a manner appropriately tailored to—

(A) the circumstances of the conflicts between the United States and international terrorist organizations; and

(B) the need to ensure fair treatment of those detained as enemy combatants, to minimize the diversion of members of the armed forces from other wartime duties, and to protect the national security of the United States.

(9) In early 2002, as memorialized in a memorandum dated February 7, 2002, the President determined that common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions did not apply with respect to the United States conflict with al Qaeda because al Qaeda was not a party to those treaties and the conflict with al Qaeda was an armed conflict of an international character. That was the interpretation of the United States prior to the Supreme Court’s decision in Hamdan on June 29, 2006. Hamdan’s statement to the contrary makes it appropriate to clarify the standards imposed by common Article 3. This Act makes clear that the prohibitions against cruel, inhuman, and degrading treatment found in the Detainee Treatment Act of 2005 fully satisfy the obligations of the United States with respect to the standards for detention and treatment established by section 1 of common Article 3, except for those obligations arising under paragraphs (b) and (d). In addition, the Act makes clear that the Geneva Conventions are not a source of judicially enforceable individual rights, thereby reaffirming that enforcement of the obligations imposed by the Conventions is a matter between the nations that are parties to them.

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION FOR MILITARY COMMISSIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The President is authorized to establish military commissions for violations of the law of war and other offenses triable by military commissions as provided in section 4 of this Act (chapter 47A of title 10).

(b) CONSTRUCTION.—The authority granted in subsection (a) shall not be construed to limit the authority of the President under the Constitution of the United States or the laws thereof to establish military commissions on the battlefield, in occupied territories, or in other armed conflicts should circumstances so require.

(c) SCOPE OF PUNISHMENT AUTHORITY.—A military commission established pursuant to subsection (a) shall have authority to impose upon any person found guilty after a proceeding under this Act a sentence that is appropriate to the offense or offenses for which there was a finding of guilt, which sentence may include death where authorized by this Act, imprisonment for life or a term of years, payment of a fine or restitution, or such other lawful punishment or condition of punishment as the commission shall determine to be proper.

(d) EXECUTION OF PUNISHMENT.—The Secretary of Defense shall be authorized to carry out a sentence of punishment decreed by a military commission pursuant to subsection (a) in accordance with such procedures as the Secretary may prescribe.

(e) ANNUAL REPORT ON TRIALS BY MILITARY COMMISSION.—

(1) ANNUAL REPORT REQUIRED.—Not later than December 31 each year, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to the Armed Services Committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate an annual report on the conduct of trials by military commissions established pursuant to sub-section (a) during such year.

(2) FORM.—Each such report shall be submitted in unclassified form, with classified annex, if necessary and consistent with national security.

SEC. 4. MILITARY COMMISSIONS

(a) MILITARY COMMISSIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subtitle A of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting after chapter 47 the following new chapter:

be (i) a lawful enemy combatant (including a prisoner of war), or (ii) a protected person whose trial by these military commissions would be inconsistent with Articles 64–76 of the Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of August 12, 1949. For purposes of this section, the term “protected person” refers to the category of persons described in Article 4 of the Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of August 12, 1949.

“(6) GENEVA CONVENTIONS.—The term ‘Geneva Conventions’ means the international conventions signed at Geneva on August 12, 1949, including common Article 3.“§ 948b. Military commissions generally*“(a) PURPOSE.—This chapter codifies and establishes procedures governing the use of military commissions to try unlawful enemy combatants for violations of the law of war and other offenses triable by military commissions. Although military commissions traditionally have been constituted by order of the President, the decision of the Supreme Court in Hamdan v. Rumsfeld makes it both necessary and appropriate to codify procedures for military commissions as set forth herein.“(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—The procedures for military commissions set forth in this chapter are modeled after the procedures established for courts-martial in the Uniform Code of Military Justice. However, it would be neither desirable nor practicable to try unlawful enemy combatants by court-martial procedures. The trial of such persons by military commission presents new challenges that require that interpretations of this Act not be unduly influenced by the rules and procedures developed for courts-martial. Therefore, no construction or application of chapter 47 of this title shall be binding in the construction or application of this chapter.“(c) Alien unlawful enemy combatants may be tried for violations of the law of war and other offenses triable by military commissions committed against the United States or its co-belligerents before, on, or after September 11, 2001.“(d) A military commission established under this chapter is a regularly constituted court, affording all the necessary ‘judicial guarantees which are recognized as indispensable by civilized peoples’ for purposes of common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions.“§ 948c. Military commissions shall not have jurisdiction over lawful enemy combatants. Lawful enemy combatants who violate the law of war are subject to chapter 47 of Title 10, United States Code. Courts-martial established under chapter 47 shall have jurisdiction to try a lawful enemy combatant for any offense made punishable under this chapter.“(b) Military commissions shall not have jurisdiction over any individual determined by the President or the Secretary of Defense (whether on an individualized or collective basis), or by any competent tribunal established under their authority, to be a ‘pro- tected person” whose trial by these military commissions would be inconsistent with Articles 64–76 of the Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War of August 12, 1949. Such persons shall be tried in courts-martial or other tribunals consistent with their status under the Geneva Conventions. For purposes of this section, the term “protected person” refers to the category of persons described in Article 4 of the Geneva Convention Relative to the Protected of Civilian Persons in Time of War of August 12, 1949.

“(B) ensure the physical safety of individuals.

“(e) LIMITED EXCLUSION OF THE ACCUSED FOR THE PROTECTION OF CLASSIFIED INFORMATION.—(1) The military judge may, subject to the provisions of this subsection, permit the admission in a military commission under this chapter of classified information outside the presence of the accused.

“(2) The military judge shall not exclude the accused from any portion of the proceeding except upon a specific finding that extraordinary circumstances exist such that—

“(A) the exclusion of the accused—

“(i) is necessary to protect classified information the disclosure of which to the accused could reasonably be expected to cause identifiable damage to the national security, including intelligence or law enforcement sources, methods, or activities; or “(ii) is necessary to ensure the physical safety of individuals; or “(iii) is necessary to prevent disruption of the proceedings by the accused; and

“(B) the exclusion of the accused—

“(i) is no broader than necessary; and

“(ii) will not deprive the accused of a full and fair trial.

“(3)(A) A finding under paragraph (2) may be based upon a presentation, including an ex parte or in camera presentation, by either trial counsel or defense counsel.

“(B) Before trial counsel may make a presentation described in subparagraph (A) requesting the admission of classified evidence outside the presence of the accused, the head of the executive or military department or governmental agency which has control over the matter (after personal consideration by that officer) shall certify in writing to the military judge that—

“(i) the disclosure of such classified information to the accused could reasonably be expected to prejudice the national security; and

“(ii) such evidence has been declassified to the maximum extent possible, consistent with the requirements of national security.

“(4)(A) No evidence shall be admitted if the accused is not present for its admission or the evidence is not otherwise provided to the accused, unless the evidence is classified information and the military judge makes a specific finding that—

“(i) consideration of the evidence by the commission, without the presence of the accused, is warranted; and

“(ii) admission of an unclassified summary or redacted version of that evidence would not be an adequate substitute and, in the case of testimony, alternative methods to obscure the identity of the witness are not adequate; and

“(iii) admission of the evidence would not deprive the accused of a full and fair trial.

“(B) If the accused is excluded from a portion of the proceeding, the accused shall be provided with a redacted transcript of the proceeding and, to the extent practicable, an unclassified summary of any evidence introduced. Under no circumstances shall such a summary or redacted transcript compromise the interests warranting the exclusion of the accused under this subsection.

“(5)(A) Military defense counsel shall be present and able to participate in all trial proceedings, and shall be given access to all evidence admitted under subparagraph (4).

“(B) Civilian defense counsel shall be permitted to be present and to participate in all trial proceedings, and shall be given access to evidence admitted under subparagraph (4), provided that civilian defense counsel has obtained the necessary security clearances and that such presence and access are consistent with regulations that the Secretary may prescribe to protect classified information.

“(C) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any defense counsel who receives classified information admitted pursuant to subparagraph (4) shall not be obligated to, and may not, disclose that evidence to the accused.

“(f) ADMISSION OF STATEMENTS OF ACCUSED.—(1) Notwithstanding any other provision in this chapter, no statement made by the accused during an interrogation, even if otherwise classified, may be admitted into evidence in a military commission under this chapter unless the accused is present for its admission or the evidence is otherwise provided to the accused.

“(2) For purposes of this subsection, a ‘statement’ is a statement communicated knowingly and directly by the accused in response to questioning by foreign or United States military, intelligence, or criminal investigative personnel. This paragraph shall not be construed to prevent the redaction of intelligence sources or methods, which do not constitute statements of the accused, from any document provided to the accused or admitted into evidence.

“§ 949e. Continuances

“The military judge may, for reasonable cause, grant a continuance to any party for such time, and as often, as may appear to be just.

“§ 949f. Challenges

“(a) CHALLENGES AUTHORIZED.—The military judge and members of the commission may be challenged by the accused or the trial counsel for cause stated to the commission. The military judge shall determine the relevance and validity of the challenges for cause, and may not receive a challenge to more than one person at a time. Challenges by the trial counsel shall ordinarily be presented and decided before those by the accused are offered.

“(b) PEREMPTORY CHALLENGES.—Each accused and the trial counsel is entitled to one peremptory challenge, but the military judge may not be challenged except for cause.

“(c) CHALLENGES AGAINST ADDITIONAL MEMBERS.—Whenever additional members are detailed to the court, and after any challenges for cause against such additional members are presented and decided each accused and the trial counsel are entitled to one peremptory challenge against members not previously subject to peremptory challenge.

“§ 949g. Oaths

“(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Before performing their respective duties, military judges, members of commissions, trial counsel, defense counsel, reporters, and interpreters shall take an oath to perform their duties faithfully.

“(2) The form of the oath required by paragraph (1), the time and place of the taking thereof, the manner of recording the same, and whether the oath shall be taken for all cases in which these duties are to be performed or for a particular case, shall be as prescribed in regulations of the Secretary. These regulations may provide that—

“(A) an oath to perform faithfully duties as a military judge, trial counsel, or defense counsel, may be taken at any time by any judge advocate or other person certified to be qualified or competent for duty; and

“(B) if such an oath is taken it need not again be taken at the time the judge advocate, or other person is detailed to that duty.

“(b) WITNESSES.—Each witness before a military commission under this chapter shall be examined on oath.

“(c) OATH DEFINED.—As used in this section, ‘oath’ includes an affirmation.

“§ 949h. Former jeopardy

“(a) IN GENERAL.—No person may, without his consent, be tried by a commission a second time for the same offense.

“(b) SCOPE OF TRIAL.—No proceeding in which the accused has been found guilty by military commission upon any charge or specification is a trial in the sense of this section until the finding of guilty has become final after review of the case has been fully completed.

“§ 949i. Pleas of the accused

“(a) PLEA OF NOT GUILTY.—If an accused after a plea of guilty sets up matter inconsistent with the plea, or if it appears that he has entered the plea of guilty through lack of understanding of its meaning and effect, or if he fails or refuses to plead, a plea of not guilty shall be entered in the record, and the commission shall proceed as though he had pleaded not guilty.

“(b) FINDING OF GUILT AFTER GUILTY PLEA.—With respect to any charge or specification to which a plea of guilty has been made by the accused and accepted by the military judge, a finding of guilty of the charge or specification may be entered immediately without a vote. This finding shall constitute the finding of the commission unless the plea of guilty is withdrawn prior to announcement of the sentence, in which event the proceedings shall continue as though the accused had pleaded not guilty.

“§ 949j. Opportunity to obtain witnesses and other evidence

“(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Defense counsel in a military commission under this chapter shall have a reasonable opportunity to obtain witnesses and other evidence, including evidence in the possession of the United States, as specified in regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

“(2) Process issued in military commissions to compel witnesses to appear and testify and to compel the production of other evidence—

“(A) shall be similar to that which courts of the United States having criminal jurisdiction may lawfully issue; and “(B) shall run to any place where the United States shall have jurisdiction thereof.

“(b) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN ITEMS.—The military judge in a military commission under this chapter may, upon a sufficient showing, authorize trial counsel in making documents available to the defense through discovery conducted pursuant to such rules as the Secretary shall prescribe—

“(1) to delete specified items of classified information from such documents;

“(2) to substitute an unclassified summary of the information for such classified documents; or

“(3) to substitute an unclassified statement admitting relevant facts that classified information would tend to prove.

“(c) DISCLOSURE OF EXCULPATORY EVIDENCE.—(1) As soon as practicable, trial counsel in a military commission under this chapter shall disclose to the defense the existence of any evidence known to trial counsel that reasonably tends to exculpate the accused.

“(2) Exculpatory evidence that is classified may be provided solely to defense counsel, and not the accused, after in camera review by the military judge.

“(3) Before classified evidence may be withheld from the accused under this subsection, the executive or military department or governmental agency which has control over the matter shall ensure and shall certify in writing to the military judge that the disclosure of such evidence to the accused could reasonably be expected to prejudice the national security and that such evidence has been declassified to the maximum extent possible, consistent with the requirements of national security.

“(4) Any classified exculpatory evidence that is not disclosed to the accused under this subsection—

“(A) shall be provided to military defense counsel; and

“(B) shall be provided to civilian defense counsel, provided that civilian defense counsel has obtained the necessary security clearances and access to such evidence is consistent with regulations that the Secretary may prescribe to protect classified information; and

“(C) shall be provided to the accused in a redacted or summary form, if it is possible to do so without compromising intelligence sources, methods, or activities, or other national security interests.

“(5) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any defense counsel who receives evidence under this subsection shall not be obligated to, and may not, disclose that evidence to the accused.

“§ 949k. Defense of lack of mental responsibility

“(a) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense in a trial by military commission that, at the time of the commission of the acts constituting the offense, the accused, as a result of a severe mental disease or defect, was unable to appreciate the nature and quality or the wrongfulness of the acts. Mental disease or defect does not otherwise constitute a defense.

“(b) BURDEN OF PROOF.—The accused has the burden of proving the defense of lack of mental responsibility by clear and convincing evidence.

“(c) FINDINGS FOLLOWING ASSERTION OF DEFENSE.—Whenever lack of mental responsibility of the accused with respect to an offense is properly at issue, the military judge shall instruct the members of the commission as to the defense of lack of mental responsibility under this section and shall charge them to find the accused—

“(1) guilty;

“(2) not guilty; or

“(3) not guilty only by reason of lack of mental responsibility.

“(d) MAJORITY VOTE REQUIRED FOR FINDING.—The accused shall be found not guilty only by reason of lack of mental responsibility under subsection (c)(3) only if a majority of the members of the commission at the time the vote is taken determines that the defense of lack of mental responsibility has been established.

“§ 949l. Voting and rulings

“(a) VOTE BY SECRET WRITTEN BALLOT.—Voting by members of a military commission on the findings and on the sentence shall be by secret written ballot.

“(b) RULINGS.—(1) The military judge shall rule upon all questions of law, including the admissibility of evidence, and all interlocutory questions arising during the proceedings.

“(2) Any such ruling made by the military judge upon any question of law or any interlocutory question other than the factual issue of mental responsibility of the accused is conclusive and constitutes the ruling of the commission. However, the military judge may change his ruling at any time during the trial.

“(c) INSTRUCTIONS PRIOR TO VOTE.—Before a vote is taken of the findings, the military judge shall, in the presence of the accused and counsel, instruct the members of the commission as to the elements of the offense and charge them—

“(1) that the accused must be presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established by legal and competent evidence beyond reasonable doubt;

“(2) that in the case being considered, if there is a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused, the doubt must be resolved in favor of the accused and he must be acquitted;

“(3) that, if there is reasonable doubt as to the degree of guilt, the finding must be in a lower degree as to which there is no reasonable doubt; and “(4) that the burden of proof to establish the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt is upon the United States.

“§ 949m. Number of votes required

“(a) CONVICTION.—No person may be convicted of any offense, except as provided in section 949i(b) of this title or by concurrence of two-thirds of the members present at the time the vote is taken.

“(b) SENTENCES.—(1) Except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3), sentences shall be determined by a military commission by the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present at the time the vote is taken.

“(2) No person may be sentenced to suffer death, except insofar as—

“(A) death has been expressly authorized under this Act for an offense of which the accused has been found guilty;

“(B) the charges referred to the commission expressly sought the penalty of death;

“(C) the accused was convicted of the offense by the concurrence of all the members of the military commission present at the time the vote is taken; and

“(D) all members of the military commission present at the time the vote was taken concurred in the sentence of death.

“(3) No person may be sentenced to life imprisonment or to confinement for more than 10 years, except by the concurrence of three-fourths of the members at the time the vote is taken.

“(c) NUMBER OF MEMBERS REQUIRED FOR PENALTY OF DEATH.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), in a case in which the penalty of death is sought, the number of members shall be not less than 12.

“(2) In any case described in paragraph (1) in which 12 members are not reasonably available because of physical conditions or military exigencies, the convening authority shall specify a lesser number of members for the military commission (but not fewer than 5 members), and the military commission may be assembled and the trial held with not fewer than the number of members so specified. In such a case, the convening authority shall make a detailed written statement, to be appended to the record, stating why a greater number of members were not reasonably available.

“§ 949n. Military commission to announce action

“A military commission shall announce its findings and sentence to the parties as soon as determined.

“§ 949o. Record of trial

“(a) RECORD; AUTHENTICATION.—Each military commission shall keep a separate, substantially verbatim, record of the proceedings in each case brought before it, and the record shall be authenticated by the signature of the military judge. If the record cannot be authenticated by the military judge by reason of his death, disability, or absence, it shall be authenticated by the signature of the trial counsel or by that of a member of the commission if the trial counsel is unable to authenticate it by reason of his death, disability, or absence. Where appropriate, and as provided by regulation, the record of the military commission may contain a classified annex.

“(b) COMPLETE RECORD REQUIRED.—A complete record of the proceedings and testimony shall be prepared in every military commission established under this chapter.

“(c) PROVISION OF COPY TO ACCUSED.—A copy of the record of the proceedings of each military commission shall be given to the accused as soon as it is authenticated. Where the record contains classified information, or a classified annex, the accused shall receive a redacted version of the record. The appropriate defense counsel shall have access to the unredacted record, as provided by regulation.

“§ 949s. Cruel or unusual punishments prohibited

“Punishment by flogging, or by branding, marking, or tattooing on the body, or any other cruel or unusual punishment, may not be adjudged by a military commission or inflicted upon any person subject to this chapter. The use of irons, single or double, except for the purpose of safe custody, is prohibited.

“§ 949t. Maximum limits

“(2) in any penal or correctional institution under the control of the United States or its allies or which the United States may be allowed to use.

“(b) TREATMENT DURING CONFINEMENT BY OTHER THAN THE ARMED FORCES.—Persons confined under subsection (a)(2) in a penal or correctional institution not under the control of one of the armed forces are subject to the same discipline and treatment as persons confined or committed by the courts of the United States or of the State, Territory, District of Columbia, or place in which the institution is situated.

“Sec.

“950a. Error of law; lesser included offense.

“950b. Review by the convening authority.

“950c. Waiver or withdrawal of appeal.

“950d. Appeal by the United States.

“950e. Rehearings.

“950h. Appellate counsel.

“950i. Execution of sentence; suspension of sentence.

“950j. Finality or proceedings, findings, and sentences.

“950a. Error of law; lesser included offense

“(a) ERROR OF LAW.—A finding or sentence of a military commission may not be held incorrect on the ground of an error of law unless the error materially prejudices the substantial rights of the accused.

“(b) LESSER INCLUDED OFFENSE.—Any reviewing authority with the power to approve or affirm a finding of guilty may approve or affirm, instead, so much of the finding as includes a lesser included offense.

“§ 950b. Review by the convening authority

“(a) NOTICE TO CONVENING AUTHORITY OF FINDINGS AND SENTENCE.—The findings and sentence of a military commission under this chapter shall be reported in writing promptly to the convening authority after the announcement of the sentence.

“(b) SUBMITTAL OF MATTERS BY ACCUSED TO CONVENING AUTHORITY.—The accused may submit to the convening authority matters for consideration by the convening authority with respect to the findings and the sentence of the military commission under this chapter.

“(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), a submittal under paragraph (1) shall be made in writing within 20 days after the accused has been given an authenticated record of trial under section 949o(c) of this title.

“(B) If the accused shows that additional time is required for the accused to make a submittal under paragraph (1), the convening authority, for good cause, may extend the applicable period under subparagraph (A) for not more than an additional 20 days.

“(3) The accused may waive his right to make a submission to the convening authority under paragraph (1). Such a waiver must be made in writing and may not be revoked. For the purposes of subsection (c)(2), the time within which the accused may make a submission under this subsection shall be deemed to have expired upon the submission of such a waiver to the convening authority.

“(c) ACTION BY THE CONVENING AUTHORITY.—(1) The authority under this section to modify the findings and sentence of a military commission under this chapter is a matter of the sole discretion and prerogative of the convening authority.

“(3)(A) Action on the sentence of a military commission shall be taken by the convening authority.

“(B) Subject to regulations of the Secretary, such action may be taken only after consideration of any matters submitted by the accused under subsection (b) or after the time for submitting such matters expires, whichever is earlier.

“(C) In taking action under this paragraph, the convening authority, in his sole discretion, may approve, disapprove, commute, or suspend the sentence in whole or in part. The convening authority may not increase the sentence beyond that which is found by the commission.

“(3) Action on the findings of a military commission by the convening authority is not required. However, the convening authority, in his sole discretion, may—

“(A) dismiss any charge or specification by setting aside a finding of guilty thereto; or

“(B) change a finding of guilty to a charge to a finding of guilty to an offense that is a lesser included offense of the offense stated in the charge.

“(4) The convening authority shall serve on the accused or on defense counsel notice of any action taken by the convening authority under this subsection.

“(d) ORDER OF REVISION OR REHEARING.—(1) Subject to paragraphs (2) and (3), the convening authority, in his sole discretion, may order a proceeding in revision or a rehearing.

“(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), a proceeding in revision may be ordered if—

“(i) there is an apparent error or omission in the record; or

“(ii) the record shows improper or inconsistent action by a military commission with respect to the findings or sentence that can be rectified without material prejudice to the substantial rights of the accused.

“(B) In no case may a proceeding in revision—

“(i) reconsider a finding of not guilty of any specification or a ruling which amounts to a finding of not guilty;

“(ii) reconsider a finding of not guilty of any charge, unless there has been a finding of guilty under a specification laid under that charge, which sufficiently alleges a violation;

“(iii) increase the severity of the sentence unless the sentence prescribed for the offense is mandatory.

“(3) A rehearing may be ordered by the convening authority if he disapproves the findings and sentence and states the reasons for disapproval of the findings. If such a person disapproves the findings and sentence and does not order a rehearing, he shall dismiss the charges. A rehearing as to the findings may not be ordered where there is a lack of sufficient evidence in the record to support the findings. A rehearing as to the sentence may be ordered if the convening authority disapproves the sentence.

“§ 950c. Waiver or withdrawal of appeal

“(a) WAIVER OF RIGHT OF REVIEW.—(1) In each case subject to appellate review under section 950f and 950g of this title, except a case in which the sentence as approved under section 950b of this title includes death, the accused may file with the convening authority a statement expressly waiving the right of the accused to such review.

“(2) A waiver under paragraph (1) shall be signed by both the accused and by a defense counsel.

“(3) A waiver under paragraph (1) must be filed, if at all, within 10 days after notice on the action is served on the accused under section 950b(c)(4) of this title. The convening authority, for good cause, may extend the period for such filing by not more than 30 days.

“(b) WITHDRAWAL OF APPEAL.—Except in a case in which the sentence as approved under section 950b of this title includes death, the accused may withdraw an appeal at any time.

“§ 950d. Appeal by the United States

“(a) INTERLOCUTORY APPEAL.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), in a trial by military commission under this chapter, the United States may take an interlocutory appeal to the Court of Military Commission Review of any order or ruling of the military judge that—

“(A) terminates commission proceedings with respect to a charge or specification;

“(B) excludes evidence that is substantial proof of a fact material in the proceeding; or

“(C) relates to a matter under subsection (d), (e), or (f) of section 949d of this title.

“(2) The United States may not appeal under paragraph (1) an order or ruling that is, or amounts to, a finding of not guilty by the commission with respect to the charge or specification.

“(b) NOTICE OF APPEAL.—The United States shall take an appeal of an order or ruling under subsection (a) by filing a notice of appeal with the military judge within five days after the date of such order or ruling.

“(d) COURT OF APPEALS.—The United States may appeal an adverse ruling under subsection (c) to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit by filing a petition for review in the Court of Appeals within 10 days after the date of such ruling. Review under this subsection shall be at the discretion of the Court of Appeals.

“950e. Rehearings

“(a) COMPOSITION OF MILITARY COMMISSION FOR REHEARING.—Each rehearing under this chapter shall take place before a military commission composed of members not members of the commission which first heard the case.

“(b) SCOPE OF REHEARING.—(1) Upon a rehearing—

“(A) the accused may not be tried for any offense of which he was found not guilty by the first commission; and

“(B) no sentence in excess of or more than the original sentence may be imposed unless—

“(i) the sentence is based upon a finding of guilty of an offense not considered upon the merits in the original proceedings; or

“(ii) unless the sentence prescribed for the offense is mandatory.

“(2) Upon a rehearing, if the sentence approved after the first commission was in accordance with a pretrial agreement and the accused at the rehearing changes his plea with respect to the charges or specifications upon which the pretrial agreement was based, or otherwise does not comply with pretrial agreement, the sentence as to those charges or specifications may include any punishment not in excess of that lawfully adjudged at the first commission.

“§ 950f. Review by Court of Military Commission Review

“(a) COURT ESTABLISHED.—(1) The Secretary shall establish a Court of Military Commission Review which shall be composed of one or more panels, and each such panel shall be composed of not less than three appellate military judges.

“(2) Each appellate military judge shall meet the qualifications for military judges prescribed by section 948j(b) of this Act or shall be a civilian with comparable qualifications.

“(3) No person may be appointed to serve as an appellate military judge in any case in which that person acted as a military judge, counsel, or reviewing official.

“(c) RIGHT OF APPEAL.—The accused may appeal from the final decision of a military commission, and the United States may appeal as provided in section 950d of this title, to the Court of Military Commission Review in accordance with procedures prescribed under regulations of the Secretary.

“(d) SCOPE OF REVIEW.—In ruling on an appeal under this section, the Court of Military Commission Review may act only with respect to matters of law.

“§ 950g. Review by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit and the Supreme Court of the United States

“(a) IN GENERAL.—(1)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the United States

Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of a final judgment rendered by a military commission, pursuant to Section 1005(e)(3) of the Detainee Treatment Act of 2005.

“(B) The Court of Appeals shall not review the final judgment until all other appeals under this chapter have been waived or exhausted.

“(2) A petition for review must be filed by the accused in the Court of Appeals by no longer than 20 days from the earlier of when—

“(A) written notice of the final decision of the Court of Military Commission Review is served on the accused or on defense counsel; or

“(B) the accused submits, in the form prescribed by section 950c of this title, a written notice waiving his right to appeal under section 950f of this title.

“(b) REVIEW BY SUPREME COURT.—The Supreme Court of the United States may review by writ of certiorari the final judgment of the Court of Appeals pursuant to section 1257 of title 28, United States Code.

“§ 950h. Appellate counsel

“(a) APPOINTMENT.—The Secretary shall, by regulation, establish procedures for the appointment of appellate counsel for the United States and for the accused in military commissions under this chapter. Appellate counsel shall meet the qualifications for appearing before military commissions under this chapter.

“(b) REPRESENTATION OF UNITED STATES.—Appellate counsel may represent the United States in any appeal or review proceeding under this chapter. #### “§ 950i. Execution of sentence; suspension of sentence

“(a) EXECUTION OF SENTENCE OF DEATH ONLY UPON APPROVAL BY THE PRESIDENT.—If the sentence of a military commission under this chapter extends to death, that part of the sentence providing for death may not be executed until approved by the President. In such a case, the President may commute, remit, or suspend the sentence, or any part thereof, as he sees fit.

“(b) EXECUTION OF SENTENCE OF DEATH ONLY UPON FINAL JUDGMENT OF LEGALITY OF PROCEEDINGS.—(1) If the sentence of a military commission under this chapter extends to death, the sentence may not be executed until there is a final judgment as to the legality of the proceedings (and with respect to death, approval under subsection (a)).

“(2) A judgment as to legality of the proceedings is final for purposes of paragraph (1) when—

“(A) review is completed by the Court of Military Commission Review and—

“(i) the time for the accused to file a petition for review by the Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit has expired; and

“(ii) the accused has not filed a timely petition for such review; and

“(iii) the case is not otherwise under review by that Court; or

“(B) review is completed in accordance with judgment of the Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit and—

“(i) a petition for a writ of certiorari is not timely filed;

“(ii) such a petition is denied by the Supreme Court; or “(iii) review is otherwise completed in accordance with the judgment of the Supreme Court.

“(c) SUSPENSION OF SENTENCE.—The Secretary, or the convening authority acting on the case (if other than the Secretary), may suspend the execution of any sentence or part thereof in the case, except a sentence of death.

“§ 950j. Finality of proceedings, findings, and sentences

“(a) FINALITY.—The appellate review of records of trial provided by this chapter, the proceedings, findings, and sentences of military commissions as approved, reviewed, or affirmed as required by this chapter, are final and conclusive. Orders publishing the proceedings of military commissions are binding upon all departments, courts, agencies, and officers of the United States, subject only to authority of the President.

“(b) PROVISIONS OF CHAPTER SOLE BASIS FOR REVIEW OF MILITARY COMMISSION PROCEDURES AND ACTIONS.—Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, and notwithstanding any other law (including section 2241 of title 28, United States Code, or any other habeas corpus provision), no court, justice, or judge shall have jurisdiction to hear or consider any claim or cause of action whatsoever, including any action pending on or filed after the date of enactment of this chapter, relating to the prosecution, trial, or judgment of a military commission convened under this section, including challenges to the lawfulness of the procedures of military commissions under this chapter.

“950v. Crimes triable by military commission.

“950w. Perjury and obstruction of justice.

“950x. Contempt.

“§ 950p. Substantive offenses generally

“(a) PURPOSE.—The following provisions codify offenses that have traditionally been triable by military commissions. This Act does not establish new crimes that did not exist before its establishment, but rather codifies those crimes for trial by military commission.

“(b) EFFECT.—Because these provisions are declarative of existing law, they do not preclude trial for crimes that occurred prior to their effective date.

“§ 950q. Principals

“Any person is punishable as a principal under this chapter who—

“(1) commits an offense punishable by this chapter, or aids, abets, counsels, commands, or procures its commission; or

“(2) causes an act to be done which if directly performed by him would be punishable by this chapter; or

“(3) is a superior commander who, with regard to acts punishable under this chapter, knew, had reason to know, or should have known, that a subordinate was about to commit such acts or had done so and the superior failed to take the necessary and reasonable measures to prevent such acts or to punish the perpetrators thereof.

“§ 950r. Accessory after the fact

“Any person subject to this chapter who, knowing that an offense punishable by this chapter has been committed, receives, comforts, or assists the offender in order to hinder or prevent his apprehension, trial, or punishment shall be punished as a military commission may direct.

“§ 950s. Conviction of lesser offenses

“An accused may be found guilty of an offense necessarily included in the offense charged or of an attempt to commit either the offense charged or an offense necessarily included therein.

“§ 950t. Attempts

“(a) IN GENERAL.—Any person subject to this chapter who attempts to commit any offense punishable by this Act shall be punished as a military commission may direct.

“(b) SCOPE OF OFFENSE.—An act, done with specific intent to commit an offense under this chapter, amounting to more than mere preparation and tending, even though failing, to effect its commission, is an attempt to commit that offense.

“(c) EFFECT OF CONSUMMATION.—Any person subject to this chapter may be convicted of an attempt to commit an offense although it appears on the trial that the offense was consummated.

“§ 950u. Solicitation

By Mr. AKAKA (for himself, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Ms. STABENOW, and Mr. OBAMA):

S. 3863. A bill to amend part A of title IV of the Social Security Act to require a State to promote economic and financial education under the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) Program and to allow economic and financial education to count as work activity under that program; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, today, I am introducing the TANF Economic and Financial Education Promotion Act of 2006, with my colleagues Senators LAUTENBERG, STABENOW, and OBAMA. I appreciate the work of our former colleague, Senator Corzine, for initiating this important financial and economic literacy bill, of which I had been an original cosponsor. This bill is a product of revisions suggested by the JumpStart Coalition for Personal Financial Literacy and the American Savings and Education Council, as well as consultation with other community groups such as the National Association of Securities Dealers and National Council on Economic Education.

As noted in the bill's findings, high levels of personal debt and bankruptcy filings combined with a negative personal savings rate in 2005 have put more and more individuals on the edge of financial insolvency. Individuals who are already living with less-than-ideal financial circumstances—such as most Temporary Assistance for Needy Families, TANF, recipients and others who are not financially self-sufficient and live outside the financial mainstream—apply to predatory lenders for short-term loans with comparatively high interest rates or fees, or are able to save little or nothing for emergencies or future events. A lack of basic consumer finance education, including lack of familiarity with how a checking or savings account works, has been cited as a major reason millions of Americans do not set up mainstream accounts and, thus, put themselves into greater financial peril.

Economic and financial education can help individuals and families meet short-term obligations and maximize their well-being in the long-term, particularly in populations traditionally underserved by mainstream financial systems. Such education can provide access to the tools needed to create household budgets, initiate savings plans, and build assets, as well as keep vulnerable individuals from unknowingly entering or being forced into financially devastating credit arrangements. Core goals of economic and financial literacy activities complement TANF's aims to reduce welfare dependency, helping people achieve self-sufficiency.

For families transitioning from welfare into work, challenges continue to abound, including obtaining child care and transportation. Another challenge that is often overlooked, however, is the difficulty of transitioning from a benefits- to a wage-based income. Financial and economic literacy programs that educate families through this transition about taxes and tax benefits that they may be eligible for, such as the Dependent Care Tax Credit and the Earned Income Tax Credit, can help to ensure that they have access to these important work benefits.

The bill we are introducing today would tackle this problem for a targeted group of Americans by making economic and financial education an allowable use of federal TANF funds and a qualified work activity under the law. The bill would also require States, through collaborations with local banks, community-based organizations, business entities, and members of the Federal Financial Literacy and Education Commission, to promote financial education in their state TANF plans. States must ensure that such activities are accessible to the target population by way of appropriately-gear curriculum, provide relevant and practical information to participants, include a direct delivery component, and, to the extent practicable, work with an asset building program conducted in that state. This bill aims to make a big difference for one of our country's most vulnerable populations and provide them access to tools that can allow them to stand on their own feet, for themselves and their families.

I thank my cosponsors for joining me in introducing this bill, and I urge other colleagues to support this meaningful legislation. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3863

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "TANF Economic and Financial Education Promotion Act of 2006".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Most recipients of assistance under the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) Program established under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 601 et seq.) and individuals moving toward self-sufficiency operate outside the financial mainstream, paying high costs to handle their finances and saving little for emergencies or the future.

(2) Personal debt levels and bankruptcy filing rates are high and savings rates are at their lowest levels in 70 years. In 2005, the savings rate was negative. The inability of many households to budget, save, and invest prevents them from laying the foundation for a secure financial future.

(3) Financial planning can help families meet near-term obligations and maximize their longer-term well being, especially valuable for populations that have traditionally been underserved by our financial system.

(4) Economic and financial education can give individuals the necessary financial tools to create household budgets, initiate savings plans, and acquire assets.

(5) Economic and financial education can prevent vulnerable customers from becoming entangled in financially devastating credit arrangements.

(6) Economic and financial education that addresses abusive lending practices targeted at specific neighborhoods or vulnerable segments of the population can prevent unaffordable payments, equity stripping, and foreclosure.

(7) Economic and financial education speaks to the broader purpose of the TANF Program to equip individuals with the tools to succeed and support themselves and their families in self-sufficiency.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are the following:

(1) To promote economic and financial literacy among individuals receiving assistance under Temporary Assistance for Needy Families programs funded under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 601 et seq.) by permitting States to include economic and financial literacy education that is provided directly to individuals as a work activity under such programs.

(2) To provide individuals receiving assistance under Temporary Assistance for Needy Families programs funded under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 601 et seq.) with the skills and knowledge needed to effectively address personal financial matters and to make financial choices that will lead such individuals toward becoming financially self-sufficient.

SEC. 3. REQUIREMENT TO PROMOTE ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL EDUCATION UNDER TANF.

(a) STATE PLAN REQUIREMENT.—Section 402(a)(1)(A) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 602(a)(1)(A)) is amended by adding at the end the following new clause:

“(vii) Establish goals and take action to promote economic and financial education in accordance with a program established under section 404(l) among parents and caretakers receiving assistance under the program through collaboration with community-based organizations, financial institutions, business entities, the Financial Literacy and Education Commission established under section 513 of the Fair and Accurate Credit Transactions Act of 2003 (20 U.S.C. 9702) and departments and agencies that are members of such Commission, including the Department of Agriculture, the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.”.

“(A) shall use the grant or State funds that are qualified State expenditures (as defined in section 409(a)(7)(B)(i)) to establish a program to provide economic and financial education directly for parents and caretakers receiving assistance under the State program funded under this part; and “(B) may count a parent's or caretaker's hours of participation in such program as being engaged in work for purposes of determining monthly participation rates under section 407(b)(1)(B)(i).

“(2) REQUIREMENTS.—A State shall ensure that the economic and financial literacy activities conducted under the program established under this subsection—

“(A) are accessible to the target population through curriculum geared to the general literacy level of the participants;

“(B) provide relevant and practical information to participants;

“(C) include a direct delivery component; and “(D) to the extent practicable, are conducted in conjunction with an asset building program conducted in the State.

“(3) COLLABORATION WITH NONGOVERNMENTAL OR NONPROFIT ORGANIZATIONS ENCOURAGED.—In carrying out economic and financial education activities under a program established under this subsection, a State is encouraged to collaborate with nongovernmental or nonprofit organizations with a proven record of educating the public, especially at-risk populations, regarding economic and financial literacy.

“(4) EVALUATION.—A State shall conduct an evaluation of the economic and financial literacy program established under this subsection not less than once every 3 years for the purpose of—

“(A) monitoring the number of parents and caretakers served under the program;

“(B) improving program administration;

“(C) facilitating replication and expansion of best practices;

“(D) assessing behavioral changes of participants; and “(E) assessing asset accumulation of participants.

“(5) DEFINITION OF ECONOMIC AND FINANCIAL EDUCATION.—In this subsection, the term ‘economic and financial education’ means education that—

“(A) promotes an understanding of consumer, economic, and personal finance concepts, including basic economic concepts such as supply and demand and opportunity cost, as well as basic financial literacy concepts such as budgeting and money management, saving, retirement planning, maintaining good credit, and the avoidance of predatory lending and financial abuse schemes; and

“(B) is based on recognized standards for economic and financial education.”.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph(2), the amendments made by this section take effect on October 1, 2006.

By Mr. MARTINEZ (for himself and Mr. CORNYN):

S. 3864. A bill to amend part A of title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to improve supplemental educational services, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. President, today I rise to discuss a topic that will always have incredible meaning to American families: educating our children. We all want what is best for our children, and we all want to make sure that we provide them with the tools that they need to succeed in tomorrow’s workforce.

While there are many different components to our education system here in America, today I want to concentrate on a particular point of concern, an area where, with some improvement, can be a key tool ensuring that our children are meeting their educational goals.

Today, along with Senator JOHN CORNYN of Texas, I rise to introduce the Raising Achievement through Improving Supplemental Education Act of 2006—or the RAISE Act for short.

The RAISE Act seeks to improve the Supplemental Educational Services, SES, program and clears the way for this program to become well-known, widely available, and easily accessible to eligible students.

It seeks to broaden eligibility requirements and prioritization of the program, and to target all low-performing students regardless of income status.

Let me take a step back and talk about the Supplemental Education Service program, or SES program, for those who might not be familiar with it.

SES was implemented as part of No Child Left Behind and designed to be an innovative tool to help meet the academic needs of low-income students attending continuously failing schools.

The No Child Left Behind Act requires school districts to utilize 20 percent of their Federal funds for after-school tutoring programs at consistently failing schools.

Under this program, low-income parents can choose free private tutoring from the provider of their choice. School districts then use their 20 percent allocation to pay the providers for their tutoring services. Any part of these funds that are not used for tutoring can be transferred into other district programs.

By providing direct tutoring after school, the SES program can help students who are behind catch up with their peers. This in turn also improves the overall school performance.

While the intent of the SES program has been pure, there have been numerous shortfalls nationwide—these shortfalls have much to do with a lack of implementation which the RAISE Act would seek to correct.

For example, in the 2003–2004 school year, only 17 percent of the eligible 1.4 million students participated in SES programs. That means that hundreds of thousands of children are not being provided with tutoring help where funding has already been set aside for that purpose.

Some parents reported that they did not sign up because they lacked the transportation to get their students to the providers, the providers were not tutoring on-site at the schools. Also, there were some conflicts with other, better established after-school programs.

States have reported that many school districts with low turnout have failed to communicate with parents or implement the program in a way that ensures its success. The reports further indicate that some of the districts have openly undermined the program in letters to parents.

In my own State of Florida for instance, one county sent a letter home to parents this past April about the SES services that would be provided for the current school year that sent quite a mixed signal.

The letter stated that although parents might be able to secure SES program assistance for their children, the district believed that the funds could be better spent elsewhere and went as far to, quote unquote, “strongly urge parents” not to utilize their SES and school choice options under No Child Left Behind.

So, what we are seeing is that with all the good intentions behind the SES program, we are having some problems with implementation.

In Florida, we have already implemented SES improvements. As a result, Florida will see a higher SES program success rate, stronger guidelines, and better State oversight.

Many of the provisions of the RAISE Act are modeled after the successes already occurring in my home State.

In our school districts where SES programs are thriving, good communication with both parents and providers has been emphasized, as well as access to on-site tutoring at school facilities.

One prominent Florida-based example is the SES program in Marion County, located in central Florida. Schools there have utilized all their funds to maximize student enrollment, which also increases the program’s chances of greater overall success.

Other good examples of SES program progress include Escambia County, Florida, where the city of Pensacola is located—to best utilize their SES dollars, they hosted a successful summer tutoring program.

School Districts in the Palm Beach and Miami-Dade areas have SES programs that bode well on a national level for the strong parental outreach efforts they have instituted, which enable all eligible students the ability to enroll in SES.

In Hillsborough County, FL—where Tampa is located—their success with SES enrollment brought the U.S. Department of Education to grant the district a special provision, whereby they can provide SES tutoring in addition to the private providers that most of the money is allocated for.

This will allow Hillsborough County to make SES available to more students, and I look forward to seeing what their efforts bring.

The RAISE Act will help make possible nationwide the kind of SES program success we have experienced in Florida. This success will come about because of stricter implementation standards and program overview.

Another important component of the RAISE Act is eligibility for SES. Currently, SES targets low-income, low-performing students.

I think we should be targeting all low-performing students, regardless of income status.

By overlooking many middle-class families who do not have the money to put their children into private tutoring or after-school programs, many of those children are falling through the cracks.

This bill is meant to ensure that all of our low-performing students have an opportunity to succeed academically.

We are going to help out those in need such as Ms. Carla Garcia of Gibsonton, FL—a part of Hillsborough County. She is a single mother struggling to provide her family with the basics.

She does not qualify for the low-income programs at her school, so her son is not currently eligible for SES services even though he is falling behind academically.

Ms. Garcia strongly believes that if her son was able to receive tutoring under SES, he would be better able to excel and perform at grade level.

Under the RAISE Act, Ms. Garcia would be able to receive SES services for her son—as would many other parents for their children—because my bill would make SES tutoring available to all students who are struggling to meet grade level proficiency.

The RAISE Act aims to make sure that every child in the school yard has an equal opportunity at scholastic growth and advancement.

So, to summarize: The RAISE Act will require better parental notification of eligibility and program availability; we streamline the application and registration process; and we level the playing field—making school facilities as available for tutoring as they are for other after-school activities.

The RAISE Act will broaden eligibility requirements and prioritization. Right now SES targets low-income, low-performing students; I think we ought to target all low-performing students, regardless of income status.

In Florida, we have already implemented SES improvements. As a result, Florida's SES program has stronger guidelines and better State oversight. Many of the provisions of the RAISE Act are modeled after the successes already occurring in the state of Florida.

The RAISE Act will provide the guidance and tools states and school districts need to increase participation and produce results. Stronger coordination, communication, and guidance will make SES programs more effective.

The RAISE Act will help raise the success of all students, in turn raising the academic achievement of our schools. The Act was developed in consultation with school administrators, state education officials, and non-profit and research groups. This is a nationwide imperative and I urge my colleagues to support this innovative set of reforms.

Let us continue to make improvements to the success that is No Child Left Behind, by providing the necessary funding, regulation, and implementation of Supplemental Educational Services across this great land.

Together, we can make the RAISE Act a reality and improve the academic lives of countless American schoolchildren.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. BAUCUS:

S. 3865. A bill to provide incentive for employers to hire service-connected disabled veterans and to improve adjustment assistance and job-training transition for injured and disabled veterans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I wish to talk about one tribute we can make to the brave men and women who have put their lives on the line and returned home wounded. We need to ensure that those who have sacrificed for our country receive their due benefits. We need to see that they are taken care of when they return home.

As of July 2006, nearly 20,000 members of our Armed Forces have been wounded in action in Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom. Many of these soldiers are now permanently disabled. Of these brave soldiers who have been wounded, nearly 5,000 are members of the National Guard and Reserves. Our National Guard and Reserves are carrying a huge burden in our current conflicts abroad.

Ninety-five percent of America's National Guard combat battalions and special operations have been mobilized since September 11, 2001.

Many of these wounded soldiers come from rural States such as my home State of Montana. In Montana, we have the highest proportion of veterans per capita of any State. According to the most recent census, veterans account for nearly one out of every six people in Montana. And veterans and families of veterans constitute a significant portion of the population in rural States throughout the country.

When not deployed, many National Guardsmen and reservists in my home State support their families with second and even third jobs. At any time, they can be deployed overseas, to our borders, or even to aid with national disasters such as hurricanes or forest fires. If they are injured or disabled, however, many become unable to perform the jobs they did before deployment. They will need to transition into a new job or career. It is our duty to provide the proper means for soldiers to make that transition. It is our duty to help them to live as independent citizens. It seems that the opposite is true.

Since August 2002, the share of veterans collecting unemployment insurance has nearly doubled. During any given year, half a million veterans across the Nation experience homelessness. We are not providing enough resources for veterans looking for work. We are too often failing our injured and our disabled veterans.

Many seriously injured and disabled veterans simply do not know what they are going to do once they return home. We need to help these young men and women. That is why today I offer a special tribute.

Today I am introducing the Help Our Patriots Employment Act of 2006, and I call it the HOPE Act. The HOPE Act would provide a tax incentive to employers to hire service-connected disabled veterans, and the HOPE Act would increase funding for job training transition services for injured and disabled veterans.

The work opportunity and the welfare-to-work tax credits expired at the end of 2005. We all hope these credits can be extended soon. They have gone without extension for too long now. In addition, I introduced legislation that would permanently extend and improve upon the work opportunity and welfare-to-work tax credits.

My HOPE Act provides employers with a graduated tax credit equal to 25 percent of wages for disabled veterans working between 120 hours and 399 hours, and a 40-percent tax credit on wages for disabled veterans working more than 400 hours, on up to $12,000 in wages per employee. In addition to this tax credit for businesses, my bill would increase funding for the Veterans' Employment and Training Service Program, the VETS Program, under the Department of Labor.

In my home State of Montana, the VETS Program has two staff members to cover the entire State. Montana covers more than 145,000 square miles. It is simply not possible for this essential program to reach every veteran who needs career help—not with two people.

For many injured veterans, it will be a long journey simply to get back on their feet. My legislation will not address all their needs, but it will help. One thing is clear: This problem is not going away. It is getting worse. That is why we need to make sure we are doing everything we can to help injured and disabled veterans.

These heroes have given so much for our country—so much. They have sacrificed so much on the battlefield. They return to a life much different from the one they left. We need to ensure they are given the resources to transition and succeed in life when they return home.

Mr. President, let me close where I began. Let me honor those who have made the ultimate sacrifice for our country. I close by reading the names of those from Montana who have died fighting for our country since September 11:

May their memory be a blessing in the lives of all of our families. May our Nation never forget their sacrifice. And may we always honor those who have fought to defend our freedom.

By Mr. AKAKA (for himself, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Ms. STABENOW, Mr. SARBANES, and Mr. BAUCUS):

S. 3866. A bill to establish a grant program to enhance the economic and financial literacy of midlife and older Americans so as to enhance their retirement security and to reduce financial abuse and fraud among such Americans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, today, I am introducing the Education for Retirement Security Act of 2006, with my colleagues Senators LAUTENBERG, STABENOW, SARBANES and BAUCUS. I thank our former colleague, Senator Corzine, for initiating this important financial and economic literacy bill, of which I had been an original cosponsor. This bill is a product of revisions suggested by the JumpStart Coalition for Personal Financial Literacy and the American Savings and Education Council, as well as consultation with other community groups such as the National Association of Securities Dealers and National Council on Economic Education.

Americans are not saving enough for retirement. Longer life spans, combined with low savings and high consumer debt, are putting many mid-life and older Americans on the path to entering retirement years with a lower quality of life, delaying their retirement to catch up with inadequate savings, or becoming a significant financial burden on their loved ones. In 2005, only 42 percent of workers or their spouses calculated the amount they needed to save for retirement a major decrease from 53 percent in 2000. Only about half of working Americans are covered by a pension plan.

Inadequacy of retirement nest eggs and other preparation for retirement will certainly impact the U.S. economy and government services, as we know that the number of older individuals in the U.S. is projected to more than double over the next 30 years, from 35 million to 75 million people. We will inevitably see serious increases in long-term care and other health costs.

Furthermore, individuals of questionable moral character are determined to erode older Americans' lifetime savings through fraud or aggressive marketing tactics selling unnecessary products or those with exorbitant and hidden fees. The Federal Trade Commission Identity Theft Data Clearinghouse reported that incidents of identity theft targeting individuals age 60 and older increase from 1,821 victims in 2000 to a startling 21,084 victims in 2004. More people in the U.S. should have basic competency in money management to avoid becoming victims of financial fraud and abuse.

The Education for Retirement Security Act is intended to address both the lagging savings rate and increases in fraud and abuse by establishing a grant program to arm midlife and older individuals with critical information and knowledge. It would do this by authorizing a grant program similar in structure to one which has proven successful in the Excellence in Economic Education Act, which awards a grant to a national entity that provides subgrants to community organizations to carry out programs that enhance economic, financial, and retirement literacy, and reduce financial abuse and fraud among the target population. The national entity would evaluate subgrantees on the performance and effectiveness of their programs, identify best practices and programs for replication, and assess any behavioral change, including asset accumulation, made by program participants. The bill would also create a national training and technical assistance grant program toward creating and making available instructional materials and information promoting economic and financial education, and providing training and other related assistance to subgrantees.

Economic and financial education can lead individuals to avoid scams and bad decisions about investments, mortgages, and pension plans, and ensure that they have access to tools they need to make sound financial decisions and prepare adequately for retirement. The limited timeframe that midlife and older Americans have in which to assess the realities of their individual circumstances, recover from bad economic choices, and benefit from more informed financial practices, makes critical the type of education that this bill would support.

I thank my cosponsors for joining me in introducing this bill, and I urge other colleagues to support this legislation. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3866

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Education for Retirement Security Act of 2006".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) Improving economic and financial literacy is a critical and complex task for Americans of all ages.

(2) Low levels of savings and high levels of personal and real estate debt are serious problems for many households nearing retirement.

(3) Historically, Americans are living longer than ever before. However, most Americans are retiring before the age of 65.

(4) Research suggests that many Americans are not prepared to plan for their retirement and may have to work far longer than they expect in order to be financially secure in retirement.

(5) In 2005, only 42 percent of workers or their spouses calculated the amount they needed to save for retirement, down from 53 percent in 2000.

(6) Only 53 percent of working Americans have any form of pension coverage. Three out of 4 women aged 65 or older receive no income from employer-provided pensions.

(7) The limited timeframe that midlife and older individuals and families have to assess the realities of their individual circumstances, to recover from counterproductive choices and decisionmaking processes, and to benefit from more informed financial practices, has immediate impact and near-term consequences for Americans nearing or of retirement age.

(8) Research indicates that there are now 4 basic sources of retirement income security. Those sources are social security benefits, pensions and savings, healthcare insurance coverage, and, for an increasing number of older individuals, necessary earnings from working during one's retirement years.

(9) Over the next 30 years, the number of older individuals in the United States is expected to double, from 35,000,000 to nearly 75,000,000, and long-term care costs are expected to skyrocket.

(10) Financial exploitation is the largest single category of abuse against older individuals and this population comprises more than 1/2 of all telemarketing victims in the United States.

(11) The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) Identity Theft Data Clearinghouse has reported that incidents of identity theft targeting individuals older than the age of 60 increased from 1,821 victims in 2000 to 21,084 victims in 2004, an increase of more than 11 times in number.

By Mr. BOND (for himself and Mr. TALENT):

S. 3867. A bill to designate the Federal courthouse located at 555 Independence Street, Cape Girardeau, Missouri, as the “Rush H. Limbaugh, Sr., Federal Courthouse”; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation designating the new Federal Courthouse in Cape Girardeau, MO, as the Rush H. Limbaugh, Sr., Federal Courthouse.

When people talk about the American Dream, the “Spirit of America” and the people who helped make this country great, all one really has to do is mention the name of the late Rush Hudson Limbaugh, Sr.

Mr. Limbaugh led an extraordinary life in which he practiced law for almost 80 years until his death at age 104 in 1996. At the time of his death, Mr. Limbaugh was the Nation’s oldest practicing lawyer and still came into work about twice a week at the law firm he founded over 50 years before in Cape Girardeau, MO.

Known by his peers as a superb trial lawyer with impeccable character and integrity, he was a beloved icon of the Missouri legal community, especially in southeast Missouri where he lived all his life.

Born in 1891, on a small farm in rural Bollinger County, he was the youngest of eight children and attended school in a one room primary school house. It is said that a passion for the law first developed in Rush as a 10-year-old boy when a Daniel Webster oration that he memorized inspired him to become a lawyer. Fourteen years later, he began a legal career that lasted eight decades. Throughout those 80 years, his interest in the law and his dedication to his clients never wavered.

Rush paid his way through college at the University of Missouri at Columbia by working on the university farm and doing odd jobs such as carpentry, firing up furnaces, caring for animals and waiting tables. While in college, his oratory skills won him awards which he later utilized with great success in the courtroom.

In 1914, he entered law school, and after two years, he skipped the third year and passed the Missouri Bar examination. In 1916, he was admitted into the Missouri Bar and his long distinguished legal career began in Cape Girardeau.

Over his career, Rush argued more than 60 cases in front of the Missouri Supreme Court along with many prominent civil cases. He was a specialist in probate law and helped draft the 1955 Probate Code of Missouri. He also tried cases before the Interstate Commerce Commission, the U.S. Labor Board and the Internal Revenue Appellate Division.

From 1955 through 1956, he was president of the Missouri Bar and later served as president of the State Historical Society of Missouri. In addition to this, Mr. Limbaugh was a leading member of numerous legal and civic organizations including the American Bar Association, the Missouri Bar Foundation, the Missouri Human Rights Commission, the Cape Girardeau Board of Education and the Salvation Army Advisory Board.

However, Rush’s contributions were not just limited to Missouri. In the late 1950s, Rush served as a U.S. State Department special envoy to India where he promoted American jurisprudence and constitutional government among lawyers, judges and university students in that newly formed country. And in the 1960s, he served as chairman of the American Bar Association’s special committee on the Bill of Rights.

Rush was truly an inspiration and mentor to many aspiring lawyers, especially the ones in his own family. His two sons, Rush, Jr., and Steven, both practiced law with him for many years. His son, Steven N. Limbaugh, currently serves as a Senior Federal Judge in St. Louis. Four of his grandsons followed in his footsteps and pursued legal careers including his grandson Steven, Jr., who is now a Missouri Supreme Court Justice.

Perhaps the best measure of Rush Hudson Limbaugh’s legacy as a lawyer and as a human being comes from the praise and admiration of his peers in the legal community. “A top notch allaround lawyer; the epitome of what a lawyer ought to be,” said one colleague. “A legend in his time,” said another.

However, his grandson Steven may have offered the best possible description of this great citizen: “He was an extraordinary man, exemplary in every way, yet very humble. He was a lawyer’s lawyer, a community servant and a gentle and kind man whose family was the very center of his life.”

It is only fitting that the new Federal courthouse in Cape Girardeau, MO, be named after this great hero of American Jurisprudence.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Upon approval of a State implementation plan that covers a covered area, and annually thereafter until the applicable deadline by which the covered area is required to achieve attainment, as specified in section 181(a) and as updated by the final rule, the Administrator shall determine, in accordance with subparagraph (B), whether the covered area is making progress that is sufficient to enable the covered area to achieve attainment by that deadline.

“(B) DETERMINATION OF PROGRESS.—The Administrator shall not determine under subparagraph (A) that a covered area is making sufficient progress toward achieving attainment for any calendar year unless the Administrator determines, at a minimum, that the covered area has achieved a reduction in the aggregate quantity of VOCs or NO<sub>x</sub> emitted in the covered area for the calendar year that is equal to or greater than the product obtained by multiplying—

“(i) the aggregate quantity, in tons, of the VOC or NO<sub>x</sub> emission reductions, respectively, that are required, during the period beginning on the date of the determination by the Administrator and ending on the applicable date referred to in subparagraph (A), to achieve attainment; by

“(ii) for each subsequent calendar year until the deadline referred to in subparagraph (A)—

“(I) reevaluate the progress being made by the covered area toward achieving attainment by the deadline referred to in subparagraph (A); and

“(II) if the Administrator determines that the covered area is not making sufficient progress, impose on each major stationary source located in the covered area a penalty in an amount that is equal to the sum of the penalty imposed on the same class (with respect to location in a Serious, Severe, or Extreme Area) of major stationary source under clause (i) and the product obtained by multiplying—

“(aa) 5 percent of the fee that, based on whether the major stationary source is located in a Serious, Severe, or Extreme Area, would be paid by the major stationary source under paragraph (2)(B) for failure to meet a national primary ambient air quality standard for ozone by the deadline referred to in subparagraph (A); and

By Mrs. CLINTON:

S. 3869. A bill to improve the quality of, and access to, supplemental educational services in effort to increase student achievement; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to help ensure students attending low-performing schools have access to high quality tutoring programs. If enacted, The Improving Quality of and Access to Supplemental Educational Services, the IQ Act, would ensure that supplemental educational services, free tutoring offered through the No Child Left Behind Act, NCLB, are effective in and accountable for increasing student academic achievement.

One of the many ways that NCLB aims to close the achievement gap is through the provision that allows low-income children attending poorly performing school to enroll in supplemental educational services, SES. These programs hold the promise of helping schools to increase student achievement by offering additional academic support for students in underperforming schools. Unfortunately, the scope of the impact of SES remains to be seen due to low student participation rates and lack of evaluation of supplemental educational services.

Improving the quality of and access to these programs should be a shared responsibility between the Department of Education, State and local educational agencies, as well as the SES providers themselves. By working together we can create tutoring programs that truly supplement the instruction that students receive during regular school hours and allow for more time to master the educational standards set by the state.

Unfortunately, few States have assessed SES providers on the basis of improving student achievement. A recent study by the GAO found that not a single State has produced a report that provides a conclusive assessment of providers' effect on student achievement. Without these State evaluations, students, parents and policymakers are blind as to which programs are effective in raising academic achievement and are therefore unable to replicate their success.

I strongly believe that if NCLB holds our teachers and schools accountable for increasing student achievement, then we must also hold SES providers to similar accountability standards. That is why The IQ Act requires States to use their current standardized test to evaluate provider performance. This legislation also provides States with additional funding to improve their data systems to manage these evaluations with no additional cost to the taxpayer.

Maximizing the full potential of SES will not only require consistent evaluation of provider performance to ensure quality, but also increasing the number of students participating in these services. Unfortunately, only 19 percent of eligible students participated in SES in the 2004-2005, an abysmally low turnout for programs that offer free after school tutoring. Many districts find challenges in providing services for students in rural schools and students with limited English proficiency or disabilities.

Although there are many other factors that determine why parents and students are not participating in these services, The IQ Act will provide additional opportunities for more students to participate in these tutoring programs that fit the needs of all children. This legislation requires districts to supply a choice of providers for students with limited English proficiency, students with disabilities, and students in rural districts. If enacted, this bill would help States and school districts build capacity to effectively implement supplemental educational services.

The Improving the Quality of and Access to Supplemental Educational Services Act is a positive step forward in providing more opportunities for students to participate in quality after school tutoring programs. I am hopeful that my Senate colleagues from both sides of the aisle will join me today to move this legislation to the floor without delay.

By Mr. LAUTENBERG (for himself, Mrs. CLINTON, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. MENENDEZ, Mr. REED, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. LEAHY):

S. 3872. A bill to prohibit cigarette manufacturers from making claims regarding tar or nicotine yield levels of cigarettes, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise to introduce and discuss my bill, the "Truth in Cigarette Labeling Act." I wish to thank my colleagues, Senators CLINTON, HARKIN, MENENDEZ, REED, DURBIN, KENNEDY and LEAHY for co-sponsoring this important legislation.

My bill bans the tobacco industry from using deceptive cigarette marketing terms such as "light" and "low tar" to imply health benefits and it prohibits cigarette manufacturers from making any claims based on the cigarette testing method established by the Federal Trade Commission called the "FTC Method," which measures tar and nicotine yields.

My legislation is consistent with the recent court ruling issued by U.S. District Judge Gladys Kessler. Kessler's ruling says cigarette manufacturers must stop labeling cigarettes as "low tar" or "light" or "natural" or with other "deceptive brand descriptors" which implicitly or explicitly convey to the smoker and potential smoker that they are less hazardous to health than full-flavor cigarettes."

The tobacco companies are appealing that ruling, which will likely tie it up in the courts for a while. This makes it necessary for Congress to act now and pass my bill.

Many smokers switch to cigarette brands advertised as "low tar" or "light" out of concern for their health, believing that such cigarettes are less risky or a step toward quitting. These claims are based on the FTC tar ratings, which are now known to be inaccurate in assessing the behavior of actual smokers. Some 85 percent of all smokers today smoke these so-called safer cigarettes.

FTC officials admit the agency's test is flawed. Former FTC Commissioner Timothy Muris testified at a Senate Commerce Committee hearing on June 11, 2003, that the tar rating system is "broken." The FTC has also published a warning to consumers called "Up In Smoke: The Truth About Tar and Nicotine Ratings." This alert concludes that "cigarette tar and nicotine ratings can't predict the amount of tar and nicotine you get from any particular cigarette." It is absurd that the FTC permits a testing method that FTC officials admit is flawed.

According to the National Cancer Institute, cigarette tar and nicotine yields as measured by the FTC Method don't give smokers a meaningful measure with regard to how much tar and nicotine they are likely to inhale from smoking a cigarette, and that marketing cigarettes as delivering lower amounts of tar using the FTC Method is deceptive to consumers.

Not surprisingly, the tobacco companies have known since 1975 that this test doesn't work. The tobacco companies' internal documents show that people actually get more tar and the same amount of nicotine when they smoke light cigarettes than from smoking regular cigarettes. That's because smokers will inhale more deeply and/or frequently to draw out the nicotine they're addicted to.

So, the FTC, the National Cancer Institute and the tobacco companies all agree that the FTC testing method doesn't work.

And all the while, the tobacco companies have been taking advantage of this fact and using it to spike the nicotine yield in cigarettes and make them more addictive.

A recently released report by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health shows that from 1998 through 2004 cigarette manufacturers increased the amount of addictive nicotine delivered to the average smoker by 10 percent. Of 179 cigarette brands tested in 2004, an astonishing 166 brands fell into the State's highest nicotine yield range, including 59 brands that the manufacturers had labeled "light" and 14 described as "ultra-light."

The increase in nicotine levels went unnoticed because the standard government test—the flawed FTC Method—uses a smoking machine that fails to mimic real-life smoking behavior. A manufacturer, for example, can design a cigarette that will score low in nicotine delivery to the machine by placing tiny ventilation holes in the filter to dilute the smoke. But in real life, a smoker will often cover the vents with his or her lips or fingers, thereby inhaling a higher dose of nicotine.

Everyone knows nicotine is a highly addictive drug. For tobacco companies to spike the amount nicotine at a time when States and the Federal Government are creating public health campaigns to curb smoking is absolutely deplorable.

I used to smoke—a lot. Fortunately, my daughter, when she was a young girl, convinced me to quit. She said, "Daddy, they told me at school that if you smoke, they will have to put a black box in your throat. I don't want you to get a black box in your throat."

From that day forward I quit.

Across America, smokers—men, women, and kids—have their own reasons for quitting. I know it's tough to quit. But I want Americans to be healthy.

"Big Tobacco" doesn't. They make their money off an addictive product that kills people. They have known for decades that their product is lethal. They need our kids sick and addicted to make a dime.

When I came to the Senate, I was determined to do everything I could to protect Americans—especially our youth—from the dangers of tobacco. I'm proud to say that my work on tobacco control started long before it became a mainstream issue.

I've been protecting Americans from Big Tobacco's lies since 1987, when I wrote the bill that banned smoking on planes. In 1989, I wrote the requirement that all federally-funded programs for children provide a smoke-free environment.

Those laws changed our culture. Today, we'll try and change it again. I urge my colleagues to support my legislation and stop cigarette manufacturers from lying to the public.

My legislation can help America's smokers kick the habit by putting out more of big tobacco's big lies. Tobacco-related illnesses kill over 400,000 Americans every year. My bill can help save America $89 billion a year in health care costs. Most important, it can save people's lives.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3872

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Truth in Cigarette Labeling Act of 2006".

SEC. 2. PROHIBITION ON CLAIMS REGARDING TAR OR NICOTINE YIELD LEVELS OF CIGARETTES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(1) Cigarette manufacturers (through use of words, graphics, and color) have sold, distributed, and falsely marketed brands of cigarettes to consumers as "light", "low-tar", "ultra light", "mild", "natural", and "low-nicotine" cigarettes, implying that the cigarettes are less harmful than other brands of cigarettes.

(2) The National Cancer Institute has found that many smokers mistakenly believe that cigarettes with the labels described in paragraph (1) cause fewer health problems than other cigarettes, and this belief misleads smokers who may choose these cigarettes as an alternative to not smoking.

(3) The Federal Trade Commission has concluded that "cigarette tar and nicotine ratings cannot predict the amount of tar and nicotine [a person] get[s] from any particular cigarette."

(4) Recent studies have demonstrated that there has been no reduction in risk on a population-wide basis from the cigarettes described in paragraph (1), and such cigarettes may actually increase the risk of tobacco use.

(5) The dangers of marketing one brand of cigarettes as less harmful than another brand of cigarettes when in fact there are no reduced risks, is a compelling reason for the Government to ensure statements, claims, or other representations about cigarettes are truthful and not deceptive.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) HEALTH DESCRIPTOR.—The term "health descriptor" includes the words "light", "low", "low tar", "ultralight", "mild", "natural", or any other word, or any graphic or color, which reasonably could be expected to result in a consumer believing that smoking such brand may result in a lower risk of disease or be less hazardous to health than smoking another brand of cigarette.

(2) BRAND.—The term "brand" means a variety of tobacco product distinguished by the type of tobacco used, tar content, nicotine content, the flavoring used, size, filtration, packaging, logo, registered trademark or brand name, identifiable pattern of colors, or any combination thereof.

(3) CIGARETTE.—The term "cigarette" has the meaning given such term in section 3(1) of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act (15 U.S.C. 1332(1)), but also includes tobacco, in any form, that is functional in the product, which, because of its appearance, the type of tobacco used in the filler, or its packaging and labeling, is likely to be offered to, or purchased by, consumers as a cigarette or as roll-your-own tobacco.

(4) ROLL-YOUR-OWN TOBACCO.—The term "roll-your-own tobacco" means any tobacco which, because of its appearance, type, packaging, or labeling, is suitable for use and likely to be offered to, or purchased by, consumers as tobacco for making cigarettes.

(c) PROHIBITION ON USE OF HEALTH DESCRIPTORS AND FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION TESTING METHOD.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, effective 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, a cigarette manufacturer may not use a health descriptor on the label or the advertising of any brand of cigarette.

(2) PROHIBITION ON USE OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION TESTING METHOD.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, effective 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, a cigarette manufacturer may not make any claims or any other representations based on data derived from the cigarette testing method established by the Federal Trade Commission in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3) ENFORCEMENT.—

(A) UNFAIR OR DECEPTIVE ACT OR PRACTICE.—A violation of the prohibition described in paragraphs (1) or (2) shall be treated as a violation of a rule defining an unfair or deceptive act or practice prescribed under section 18(a)(1)(B) of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 57a(a)(1)(B)).

(B) ACTIONS BY THE COMMISSION.—The Federal Trade Commission shall enforce this section in the same manner, by the same means, and with the same jurisdiction, powers, and duties as though all applicable terms and provisions of the Federal Trade Commission Act (15 U.S.C. 41 et seq.) were incorporated into and made a part of this section.

By Mr. INHOFE:

S. 3873. A bill to protect private property rights; read the first time.

Mr. INHOFE: Mr. President, Alexander Hamilton declared:

The sacred rights of mankind are not to be rummaged for, among old parchments, or musty records. They are written, as with a sun beam in the whole volume of human nature, by the hand of the divinity itself; and can never be erased or obscured by moral power.

I believe, and I speak on behalf of the people of Oklahoma, in the right to own private property, and I believe in the right to enjoy it and not be harassed, especially by the government.

There are three issues that the Private Property Protection Act of 2006 that I am introducing today addresses: it protects the right to own and enjoy private property, one of our Government's core purposes; it directly confronts the Supreme Court's decision in Kelo v. City of New London, Connecticut, which allows local governments to take private property for economic reasons, by forcing the Court to reign in its incessant judicial activism and return to the true intent of the fifth amendment; it limits government intervention into the private market.

However, my bill does not attempt to encroach on a State's right to conduct business and levy taxes; it simply makes clear that the National Government will not fund these blatant abuses of private property. There is no violation of State sovereignty.

The Constitution is not really an allocation of Government-determined rights to the people as much as it is a limitation on the Government from interfering with our inherent rights. The presumption is that people are "endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights" and that the Government's fundamental role is to protect those rights.

Sometimes a person's rights do have to be limited in order to protect the rights of everyone else. But there must be a strong reason to restrict or limit those rights, and even when this is done, the rights are still there, they do not just disappear.

Ask any elementary school child what the main reason for the Revolutionary War was and they will probably respond, "Taxation without Representation!" Consider the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, and then see what is going on with eminent domain today. It does not go together. I can only imagine what the Founding Fathers and colonists would think if they read the Supreme Court's Kelo decision. There is a huge rift in the intention of eminent domain at our Nation's founding and today. Taking away rights, especially property rights, is a serious matter, but what is worse, thanks to Kelo, is that a city can now seize a person's land solely for financial gain.

In Kelo, the Supreme Court gave the legal mandate that the "broad reading" of the takings clause of the fifth amendment includes taking from one private citizen and giving it to another as long as the city claims an economic benefit. Changing the definition of the fifth amendment to mean "more tax dollars for the city," is not only incongruous, it is outrageous.

This philosophy comes out of a socialistic presumption that all property really belongs to the State, that the State is the true landlord, and that people are allowed to use the land until the State gets a better offer. The Supreme Court is opening up the gate of opportunity to these cities essentially saying: "Hey, if you need money, just condemn some property . . . bulldoze the houses and sell the land to a giant retail store or factory that will generate lots of tax dollars."

Once again, the courts have taken the Constitution and twisted it, actively and willfully pursuing their own radical and elitist policy, usurping the will of the people, and their elected representatives. The Supreme Court's Kelo decision is the pinnacle of a mutation of its takings clause jurisprudence, and essentially extends a government’s condemnation power to include taking private property and giving it to another private party who will raise revenue for a city or town.

Justice Thomas, in his dissent, quoted renowned legal scholar William Blackstone whose “Commentaries on the Laws of England” eloquently described the authority of the law at the time the fifth amendment was drafted: “The law of the land . . . postpone[s] even public necessity to the sacred and inviolable rights of private property.” Justice Thomas continued, agreeing with Justice Sandra Day O’Connor’s well-stated warning taken from her dissenting opinion:

If such “economic development” takings are for a “public use,” any taking is, and the Court has erased the Public Use Clause from our Constitution.

Justice O’Connor also explained that historically, the “Government may compel an individual to forfeit her property for the public’s use, but not for the benefit of another private person. This requirement promotes fairness as well as security.”

Professor Bradley Jacob, a constitutional law professor at Regent University School of Law, is gravely concerned by the Court’s decision in Kelo. He observed:

What the Court ruled in Kelo is not consistent with the Constitution, it is not consistent with the Declaration of Independence, and it is not consistent with the principles of liberty that underlie free Republican government. It was valid only in the eyes of those who accept the idea that the Supreme Court is our national super-legislature, imposing its views of wise social policy on an unwilling nation.

The Court calls this kind of taking “economic development.” I call it robbery and wealth redistribution. If the cities are suffering from failed economies because of poor decisionmaking, inefficient zoning, and financial irresponsibility, that is unfortunate; however, unchecked eminent domain power is not the answer.

According to economic greats, such as Adam Smith and John Locke, there are two types of property: private and public. Property is private when others are prevented from using or benefiting from it. It is exclusive to the owner. He or she is entitled to the fruits it bears. Examples of this are homes, farms, and stores. Conversely, public property is property that is opened up and common to the public, from which all have equal access to its fruits, and equal access to use it and benefit from it. Examples of this are roads, power lines, and waterways.

The fifth amendment recognizes the Government’s power to take private property when necessary, and open it up to the public, for true public use. The idea of interpreting the fifth amendment in a “broad” manner to allow, and thus, encourage taking private property from one and giving it to another private owner is foreign and hostile to the principles that make this nation great.

I believe that economic development belongs to the private market. Condemnation power for economic development will have devastating and paralyzing effects on the market. This is extreme artificial interference in the market that will only encourage more irresponsible decisionmaking by cities.

When a private citizen steals a person’s private property, the victim has a cause of action against the culprit to try to right the wrong and the State has an interest in prosecuting that wrong as well, as stealing is against the law. But what is so dangerous here is that it is the State that is facilitating the wrong. My bill will ensure a private cause of action for the citizen whose property is taken away from him or her by the State for economic development.

Recognition and protections of the right to own private property is the driving force of our Nation and the fuel of the free market. The Government should be the staunchest defender of private property, not the thief that steals it. My legislation will prevent States that allow their cities or other municipal bodies to carry out this type of eminent domain, that is, the kind based solely on economic development, from receiving Federal economic development funds. I simply do not think that we should be funding economic development for those States that are willing to steal private property from their citizens.

As Alexis de Tocqueville predicted, the unique private property rights in America would set it apart from and above the nations of the world, mainly by facilitating a thriving, land-owning middle class, the backbone of a successful free market. The Kelo decision is a crippling blow to our middle class, and our Constitutional Republic as a whole, and must be dealt with immediately.

I ask my colleagues in this body to stand with me and protect the private property rights of Americans across this great land. We owe it to the citizens of our States; we owe it to the Constitution and our liberty.

CHAPTER 2—ASSISTANCE FOR FIRST RESPONDERS

SEC. 111. SHORT TITLE.

This chapter may be cited as the “Faster and Smarter Funding for First Responders Act of 2006”.

SEC. 112. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) In order to achieve its objective of preventing, minimizing the damage from, and assisting in the recovery from terrorist attacks, the Department of Homeland Security must play a leading role in assisting communities to reach the level of preparedness they need to prevent and respond to a terrorist attack.

(2) First responder funding is not reaching the men and women of our Nation's first response teams quickly enough, and sometimes not at all.

(3) To reform the current bureaucratic process so that homeland security dollars reach the first responders who need it most, it is necessary to clarify and consolidate the authority and procedures of the Department of Homeland Security that support first responders.

(4) Ensuring adequate resources for the new national mission of homeland security, without degrading the ability to address effectively other types of major disasters and emergencies, requires a discrete and separate grant making process for homeland security funds for first response to terrorist acts, on the one hand, and for first responder programs designed to meet pre-September 11 priorities, on the other.

(5) While a discrete homeland security grant making process is necessary to ensure proper focus on the unique aspects of terrorism preparedness, it is essential that State and local strategies for utilizing such grants be integrated, to the greatest extent practicable, with existing State and local emergency management plans.

(6) Homeland security grants to first responders must be based on the best intelligence concerning the capabilities and intentions of our terrorist enemies, and that intelligence must be used to target resources to the Nation's greatest threats, vulnerabilities, and consequences.

(7) The Nation's first response capabilities will be improved by sharing resources, training, planning, personnel, and equipment among neighboring jurisdictions through mutual aid agreements and regional cooperation. Such regional cooperation should be supported, where appropriate, through direct grants from the Department of Homeland Security.

(8) An essential prerequisite to achieving the Nation's homeland security objectives for first responders is the establishment of well-defined national goals for terrorism preparedness. These goals should delineate the essential capabilities that every jurisdiction in the United States should possess or to which it should have access.

(9) A national determination of essential capabilities is needed to identify levels of State and local government terrorism preparedness, to determine the nature and extent of State and local first responder needs, to identify the human and financial resources required to fulfill them, to direct funding to meet those needs, and to measure preparedness levels on a national scale.

(10) To facilitate progress in achieving, maintaining, and enhancing essential capabilities for State and local first responders, the Department of Homeland Security should seek to allocate homeland security funding for first responders to meet nationwide needs.

(11) Private sector resources and citizen volunteers can perform critical functions in assisting in preventing and responding to terrorist attacks, and should be integrated into State and local planning efforts to ensure that their capabilities and roles are understood, so as to provide enhanced State and local operational capability and surge capacity.

(12) Public-private partnerships, such as the partnerships between the Business Executives for National Security and the States of New Jersey and Georgia, can be useful to identify and coordinate private sector support for State and local first responders. Such models should be expanded to cover all States and territories.

(13) An important aspect of terrorism preparedness is measurability, so that it is possible to determine how prepared a State or local government is now, and what additional steps it needs to take, in order to prevent, prepare for, respond to, mitigate against, and recover from acts of terrorism.

(14) The Department of Homeland Security should establish, publish, and regularly update national voluntary consensus standards for both equipment and training, in cooperation with both public and private sector standard setting organizations, to assist State and local governments in obtaining the equipment and training to attain the essential capabilities for first response to acts of terrorism, and to ensure that first responder funds are spent wisely.

(a) FINDINGS.—Consistent with the report of the 9/11 Commission, Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The primary responsibility for national defense is with the Department of Defense and the secondary responsibility for national defense is with the Department of Homeland Security, and the two departments must have clear delineations of responsibility.

(2) Before September 11, 2001, the North American Aerospace Defense Command, which had responsibility for defending United States airspace on September 11, 2001—

(A) focused on threats coming from outside the borders of the United States; and

(B) had not increased its focus on terrorism within the United States, even though the intelligence community had gathered intelligence on the possibility that terrorists might turn to hijacking and even the use of airplanes as missiles within the United States.

(3) The United States Northern Command has been established to assume responsibility for defense within the United States.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) The Secretary of Defense should regularly assess the adequacy of the plans and strategies of the United States Northern Command with a view to ensuring that the United States Northern Command is prepared to respond effectively to all military and paramilitary threats within the United States; and

SEC. 212. PRIVACY AND CIVIL LIBERTIES OVERSIGHT BOARD.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the “9/11 Commission Civil Liberties Board Act”.

(b) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) On July 22, 2004 the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States issued a report that included 41 specific recommendations to help prevent future terrorist attacks, including details of a global strategy and government reorganization necessary to implement that strategy.

(2) One of the recommendations focused on the protections of civil liberties. Specifically the following recommendation was made: “At this time of increased and consolidated government authority, there should be a board within the executive branch to oversee adherence to the guidelines we recommend and the commitment the government makes to defend our civil liberties.”.

(3) The report also states that “the choice between security and liberty is a false choice, as nothing is more likely to endanger America’s liberties than the success of a terrorist attack at home. Our History has shown that the insecurity threatens liberty at home. Yet if our liberties are curtailed, we lose the values that we are struggling to defend.”.

(4) On December 17, 2004, Public Law 108-458, the National Intelligence Reform Act, was signed into law. This law created a civil liberties board that does not have the authority necessary to protect civil liberties.

(5) The establishment and adequate funding of a Privacy and Civil Liberties Oversight Board was a crucial recommendation made by the 9/11 Commission.

(6) In its Final Report on 9/11 Commission Recommendations, the Commission noted “very little urgency” and “insufficient” funding as it relates to the establishment of the Privacy and Civil Liberties Oversight Board.

(7) While the President’s budget submission for fiscal year 2006 included $750,000 for the Privacy and Civil Liberties Oversight Board, the President’s budget submission for fiscal year 2007 does not contain a funding line for the Board.

(c) MAKING THE PRIVACY AND CIVIL LIBERTIES OVERSIGHT BOARD INDEPENDENT.—Section 1061(b) of the Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act of 2004 is amended by striking “within the Executive Office of the President” and inserting “as an independent agency within the Executive branch”.

(d) REQUIRING ALL MEMBERS OF THE PRIVACY AND CIVIL LIBERTIES OVERSIGHT BOARD BE CONFIRMED BY THE SENATE.—Subsection (e) of section 1061 of the Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act of 2004 is amended to read as follows:

“(3) INCOMPATIBLE OFFICE.—An individual appointed to the Board may not, while serving on the Board, be an elected official, officer, or employee of the Federal Government, other than in the capacity as a member of the Board.

“(A) a member appointed to a term of office after the commencement of such term may serve under such appointment only for the remainder of such term;

“(B) upon the expiration of the term of office of a member, the member shall continue to serve until the member’s successor has been appointed and qualified, except that no member may serve under this subparagraph—

“(i) for more than 60 days when Congress is in session unless a nomination to fill the vacancy shall have been submitted to the Senate; or

“(ii) after the adjournment sine die of the session of the Senate in which such nomination is submitted; and

“(C) the members initially appointed under this subsection shall serve terms of two, three, four, five, and six years, respectively, from the effective date of this Act, with the term of each such member to be designated by the President.

“(5) QUORUM AND MEETINGS.—The Board shall meet upon the call of the chairman or a majority of its members. Three members of the Board shall constitute a quorum.”.

(e) SUBPOENA POWER FOR THE PRIVACY AND CIVIL LIBERTIES OVERSIGHT BOARD.—Section 1061(d) of the Intelligence Reform and Terrorism Prevention Act of 2004 is amended—

(1) so that subparagraph (D) of paragraph (1) reads as follows:

“(D) require, by subpoena issued at the direction of a majority of the members of the Board, persons (other than departments, agencies, and elements of the executive branch) to produce any relevant information, documents, reports, answers, records, accounts, papers, and other documentary or testimonial evidence.”; and

(2) so that paragraph (2) reads as follows:

“(2) ENFORCEMENT OF SUBPOENA.—In the case of contumacy or failure to obey a subpoena issued under paragraph (1)(D), the United States district court for the judicial district in which the subpoenaed person resides, is served, or may be found may issue an order requiring such person to produce the evidence required by such subpoena.”.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than March 1 each year, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to the relevant congressional committees a report that identifies the applicable standards of each country against money laundering and states whether that country is a country of primary money laundering concern under section 5318A of title 31, United States Code. Subtitle C—Nonproliferation*SEC. 321. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the “Omni-bus Nonproliferation and Anti-Nuclear Terrorism Act of 2006”.

SEC. 322. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) LOOSE NUCLEAR WEAPONS AND MATERIALS IN THE FORMER SOVIET UNION.—

(A) There are in the world today enormous stockpiles of nuclear weapons and the materials required to make them. Counting materials both in assembled warheads and in other forms, worldwide totals are estimated to encompass some 1,900 tons of highly enriched uranium (enough for 143,000 nuclear weapons) and 1,855 tons of plutonium (enough for 330,000 nuclear weapons).

(B) The Russian Federation alone is estimated to have over 1,000 tons of highly enriched uranium (enough for over 80,000 nuclear weapons) and 140 tons of plutonium (enough for over 30,000 nuclear weapons).

(C) The United States has been working for over a decade to eliminate stockpiles of loose nuclear weapons and materials in the former Soviet Union, but the Department of Energy acknowledges that there is still a need to properly secure about 460 tons of weapons-usable Russian nuclear material (outside of warheads), enough for more than 35,000 nuclear weapons.

(D) A recent report by the Central Intelligence Agency faulted the security of nuclear arsenal facilities in the Russian Federation and assessed that “undetected smuggling has occurred.”

(E) There are at least 18 documented incidents of “proliferation significant” fissile material trafficking from facilities in the former Soviet Union between 1991 and 2001. In one incident in 1998, an inside conspiracy at a Russian nuclear weapons facility attempted to steal 18.5 kilograms of highly enriched uranium. In another incident, 2 kilograms of highly enriched uranium taken from a research facility in Sukhumi, Georgia, has never been recovered.

(F) In May 1994, German police found a small but worrisome quantity of supergrade plutonium in the garage of Adolf Jackle. Extremely expensive to produce, this rare item was likely stolen from one of Russia’s two premier nuclear weapons laboratories.

(G) Comprehensive security upgrades are not yet completed at 90 percent of Russian nuclear warhead bunkers for Russia’s Strategic Rocket Forces.

(H) Border security in the former Soviet Union is inconsistent at best. Existing infrastructure helps at the outer borders of the former Soviet Union but many borders internal to the former Soviet Union, such as the border between Kazakhstan and the Russian Federation, exist only on a map.

(2) LOOSE NUCLEAR MATERIALS AROUND THE GLOBE.—

(A) Dangerous caches of weapons-usable nuclear materials, much of it poorly secured and vulnerable to theft, exist in a multitude of facilities around the world. For example, there are over 130 research reactors in over 40 countries that house highly enriched uranium, some with enough to manufacture an atomic bomb. In total, about 40 tons of highly enriched uranium, enough for over 1,000 nuclear weapons, is estimated to remain in civilian research reactors.

(B) Over the last 50 years, the United States is known to have exported about 27.5 tons of highly enriched uranium to 43 countries to help develop nuclear power production or bolster scientific initiatives. In 1996, the United States began an effort to recover the more than 17.5 tons of the nuclear material that was still overseas, but has recovered only about 1 ton, according to the Department of Energy and the Government Accountability Office.

(C) It is especially important to keep highly enriched uranium out of terrorists’ hands because, with minimal expertise, they could use it to make the simplest, gun-type nuclear weapon—a device in which a high explosive is used to blow one subcritical piece of highly enriched uranium from one end of a tube into another subcritical piece held at the opposite end of the tube.

(D) To Osama bin Laden, acquiring weapons of mass destruction is a “religious duty”. Al Qaeda and more than two dozen other terrorist groups are pursuing capability to use weapons of mass destruction.

(E) Osama bin Laden’s press spokesman, Sulaiman Abu Ghaith, has announced that the group aspires “to kill 4 million Americans, including 1 million children,” in response to casualties supposedly inflicted on Muslims by the United States and Israel.

(F) Al Qaeda documents recovered in Afghanistan reveal a determined research effort focused on nuclear weapons.

(3) SECURITY STANDARDS FOR ALL NUCLEAR WEAPONS AND MATERIALS.—

(A) There are no international binding standards for the secure handling and storage of nuclear weapons and materials.

(B) Making a nuclear weapon requires only 4 to 5 kilograms of plutonium or 12 to 15 kilograms of highly enriched uranium.

(C) In October 2001, the United States Government became very concerned that Al Qaeda may have smuggled a 10-kiloton Russian nuclear warhead into New York City. If placed in lower Manhattan, such a device would probably kill 100,000 people instantly, seriously injure tens of thousands more, and render the entire area uninhabitable for decades to come.

(4) RUSSIA’S NUCLEAR EXPERTISE.—

(A) Employment at the large nuclear facilities in the Russian Federation's 10 closed nuclear cities is estimated to be in the range of 120,000 to 130,000 people, of whom approximately 75,000 were employed on nuclear weapons-related work.

(B) Poor wages and living conditions in Russian "nuclear cities" have inspired protests and strikes among the employees working in them.

(C) Insiders have been caught attempting to smuggle nuclear materials out of these facilities, presumably to sell on the lucrative black market.

SEC. 323. ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE OF NON-PROLIFERATION PROGRAMS IN THE EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established in the Executive Office of the President an Office of Nonproliferation Programs (in this section referred to as the "Office").

Associate Directors shall perform such functions as the Director may prescribe.

(c) PRIMARY FUNCTIONS OF DIRECTOR.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The primary function of the Director is to coordinate and lead—

(A) efforts by the United States to curb terrorist access to nuclear technology, materials, or expertise; and

(2) SPECIFIC FUNCTIONS.—In addition to such other functions and activities as the President may assign, the Director shall—

(A) advise the President, and others within the Executive Office of the President, on the role and effect of such nonproliferation activities on national security and international relations;

(B) lead the development and implementation of a plan (including appropriate budgets, other resources, goals, and metrics for assessing progress) to ensure that all the highest-priority actions to prevent terrorists from getting and using nuclear weapons are taken in the shortest possible time, including but not limited to a fast-paced global effort to ensure that every nuclear warhead and every kilogram of weapons-usable nuclear material worldwide is secured and accounted for, to standards sufficient to defeat demonstrated terrorist and criminal threats, as rapidly as that objective can be accomplished;

(C) identify obstacles to accelerating and strengthening efforts to prevent terrorists from getting and using nuclear weapons, and raise approaches to overcoming these obstacles for action by the President or other appropriate officials;

(D) lead an effort, to be carried out jointly by the various Federal agencies responsible for carrying out such nonproliferation activities, to establish priorities among those activities and to develop and implement strategies and budgets that reflect those priorities;

(E) build strong partnerships with respect to such nonproliferation activities among Federal, State, and local governments, foreign governments, international organizations, and nongovernmental organizations; and

(F) evaluate the scale, quality, and effectiveness of the Federal effort with respect to such nonproliferation activities and advise on appropriate actions.

(2) detail the actions that are most likely to lead to progress in improving the accounting for and securing or dismantlement of such weapons; and

(3) detail the feasibility of enhancing the national security of the United States by developing increased transparency between the United States and Russia with respect to the numbers, locations, and descriptions of such weapons and of the corresponding weapons of the United States.

SEC. 335. RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT INVOLVING ALTERNATIVE USE OF WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION EXPERTISE.

(a) AUTHORITY TO USE FUNDS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law and subject to subsection (c), any funds available to a department or agency of the Federal Government may be used to conduct non-defense research and development in Russia and the states of the former Soviet Union on technologies specified in subsection (b) utilizing scientists in Russia and the states of the former Soviet Union who have expertise in—

(1) nuclear weapons; or

(2) chemical or biological weapons, but only if such scientists no longer engage, or have never engaged, in activities supporting prohibited chemical or biological capabilities.

(b) TECHNOLOGIES.—The technologies specified in this subsection are technologies on the following:

(1) Environmental restoration and monitoring.

(2) Proliferation detection.

(3) Health and medicine, including research.

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

SEC. 336. STRENGTHENING THE NUCLEAR NON-PROLIFERATION TREATY.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Article IV of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (commonly referred to as the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty or NPT) (21 UST 483) states that countries that are parties to the treaty have the “inalienable right . . . to develop research, production and use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conformity with articles I and II of this treaty.”

(2) The rights outlined under article IV include all fuel cycle activities, despite the fact that uranium enrichment and plutonium production potentially put a country in a position to produce weapons usable material.

(3) David Bergmann, former chairman of the Israeli Atomic Energy Commission, stated: “. . . by developing atomic energy for peaceful uses, you reach the nuclear weapon option. There are not two atomic weapons”.

(4) The wording of article IV has made it possible for countries that are parties to the NPT treaty to use peaceful nuclear programs as a cover for weapons programs. In particular, the misuse by North Korea and Iran of these provisions threatens to undercut the viability of the nuclear nonproliferation regime and the entire system of international nuclear commerce.

(5) If the international community fails to devise effective measures to deal with the “loophole” in article IV, then there is a great likelihood that the ranks of countries possessing nuclear weapons will increase markedly in the next decade.

(b) PRESIDENTIAL REPORT ON CONTROL OF NUCLEAR FUEL CYCLE TECHNOLOGIES AND MATERIAL.—Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall submit to the appropriate congressional committees a report identifying ways to more effectively control nuclear fuel cycle technologies and material, including ways that the United States can mobilize the international community to close the “loophole” of article IV of the NPT, without undermining the treaty itself.

DIVISION B—COMBATting TERRORISM*SEC. 1001. SHORT TITLE.

This division may be cited as the “Targeting Terrorists More Effectively Act of 2006”.

TITLE XI—EFFECTIVELY TARGETING TERRORISTS*SEC. 1101. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON SPECIAL OPERATIONS FORCES AND RELATED MATTERS.

It is the sense of Congress that—

(2) an additional 16 Predator aircraft should be acquired for the Air Force Special Operations Command by the end of fiscal year 2008;

SEC. 1102. FOREIGN LANGUAGE EXPERTISE.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(2) The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States identified the countries in the Middle East, South Asia, Southeast Asia, and West Africa as countries that serve or could serve as terrorist havens.

(5) An audit conducted by the Department of Justice in July 2004, revealed that the Federal Bureau of Investigation has a backlog of hundreds of thousands of untranslated audio recordings from terror and espionage investigations.

(1) the overwhelming majority of Muslims reject terrorism and a small, radical minority has grossly distorted the teachings of one of the world’s great faiths to seek justification for acts of terrorism, such radical Islamic fundamentalism constitutes a primary threat to the national security interests of the United States, and an effective strategy for combating terrorism should include increasing the number of personnel throughout the Federal Government with expertise in languages spoken in predominately Muslim countries and in the culture of such countries;

(2) Muslim-Americans constitute an integral and cherished part of the fabric of American society and possess many talents, including linguistic, historic, and cultural expertise that should be harnessed in the war against radical, fundamentalist terror; and

(3) amounts appropriated for the National Flagship Language Initiative pursuant to the amendments made by subsection (e)(2) should be used to support the establishment, operation, and improvement of programs for the study of Arabic, Persian, and other Middle Eastern, South Asian, Southeast Asian,

S. and international policies, programs, structures, and organizations will be inadequate to assure sustained results commensurate with the ongoing threat posed to the national security of the United States”.

(b) POLICY.—It is the policy of the United States—

(1) to work with the Government of Saudi Arabia to curtail terrorist financing originating from that country using a range of methods, including diplomacy, intelligence, and law enforcement;

(2) to ensure effective coordination and sufficient resources for efforts of the agencies and departments of the United States to disrupt terrorist financing by carrying out, through the Office of Terrorism and Financial Intelligence in the Department of the Treasury, a comprehensive analysis of the budgets and activities of all such agencies and departments that are related to disrupting the financing of terrorist organizations;

(3) to provide each agency or department of the United States with the appropriate number of personnel to carry out the activities of such agency or department related to disrupting the financing of terrorist organizations;

(2) According to the United Nations Development Program Arab Human Development Report for 2002, 10,000,000 children between the ages of 6 through 15 in the Arab world do not attend school, and ⅔ of the 65,000,000 illiterate adults in the Arab world are women.

(3) The report of the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States concluded that ensuring educational opportunity is essential to the efforts of the United States to defeat global terrorism and recommended that the United States Government “should offer to join with other nations in generously supporting [spending funds] . . . directly on building and operating primary and secondary schools in those Muslim states that commit to sensibly investing financial resources in public education”.

(b) POLICY.—It is the policy of the United States—

(1) to work toward the goal of dramatically increasing the availability of basic education in the developing world, which will reduce the influence of radical madrassas and other institutions that promote religious extremism;

(1) Al-Qaeda and affiliated groups have established a terrorist network with linkages throughout the Middle East, Central Asia, South Asia, and Southeast Asia.

Subtitle C—Restoring American Moral Leadership

SEC. 1221. ADVANCING UNITED STATES INTERESTS THROUGH PUBLIC DIPLOMACY.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The United States needs to improve its communication of information and ideas to people in foreign countries, particularly in countries with significant Muslim populations.

(2) Public diplomacy should reaffirm the paramount commitment of the United States to democratic principles, including preserving the civil liberties of all the people of the United States, including Muslim-Americans.

(3) The report of the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States stated that, “Recognizing that Arab and Muslim audiences rely on satellite television and radio, the government has begun some promising initiatives in television and radio broadcasting to the Arab world, Iran, and Afghanistan. These efforts are beginning to reach large audiences. The Broadcasting Board of Governors has asked for much larger resources. It should get them.”

(4) A significant expansion of United States international broadcasting would provide a cost-effective means of improving communication with countries with significant Muslim populations by providing news, information, and analysis, as well as cultural programming, through both radio and television broadcasts.

(b) SPECIAL AUTHORITY FOR SURGE CAPACITY.—The United States International Broadcasting Act of 1994 (22 U.S.C. 6201 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

SEC. 1223. TREATMENT OF DETAINEES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Consistent with the report of the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States, Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Carrying out the global war on terrorism requires the development of policies with respect to the detention and treatment of captured international terrorists that are adhered to by all coalition forces.

(2) Article 3 of the Convention Relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, done at Geneva August 12, 1949 (6 UST 3316), was specifically designed for cases in which the usual rules of war do not apply, and the minimum standards of treatment pursuant to such Article are generally accepted throughout the world as customary international law.

(3) The Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States urged to the United States to engage its friends to develop a common coalition approach toward the detention and humane treatment of captured terrorists. The 9/11 Public Discourse Project went on to give the Administration a ranking of “unfulfilled” in this area, commenting that “[d]issession either at home or abroad on how the United States treats captured terrorists only makes it harder to build the diplomatic, political and military alliance necessary to fight the war on terror effectively”.

(b) POLICY.—The policy of the United States is as follows:

(1) It is the policy of the United States to treat all foreign persons captured, detained, interned, or otherwise held in the custody of the United States (hereinafter “detainees”) humanely and in accordance with the legal obligations under United States law and international law, including the obligations of the Convention Against Torture, the Geneva Conventions, and the Detainee Treatment Act of 2005.

(2) It is the policy of the United States that all officials of the United States are bound both in wartime and in peacetime by the legal prohibitions against torture, cruel, inhumane, or degrading treatment set out in the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States, as reiterated by the Supreme Court in Hamdan v. Rumsfeld (126 S. Ct. 2749 (2006)).

(3) If there is any doubt as to whether a detainee is entitled to the protections afforded by the Geneva Conventions, it is the policy of the United States that such detainee shall enjoy the protections of the Convention Relative to the Treatment of Prisoners of War, done at Geneva August 12, 1949 (6 UST 3316) until such time as the detainee’s status can be determined pursuant to the procedures authorized by Army Regulation 190-8, Section 1-6.

(4) It is the policy of the United States to expeditiously process and, if appropriate, prosecute detainees in the custody of the United States, including detainees in custody at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

(c) REPORTING.—The Secretary shall submit to the appropriate congressional committees the following:

(1) Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, a report setting forth the number of individuals currently held at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, the number of such individuals who are unlikely to face a military commission in the next six months, and each reason for not bringing such individuals before a military commission.

(2) The National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States found that 15 of the 19 hijackers involved in the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks “were potentially vulnerable to interception by border authorities”.

(3) Officials with the Bureau of Customs and Border Protection and with the Bureau of Immigration and Customs Enforcement have stated that there is a shortage of agents in such Bureaus. Due to an inadequate budget, the Bureau of Immigration and Customs Enforcement has effected a hiring freeze since March 2004, and the Bureau has not made public any plans to end this freeze.

SEC. 1312. HIRING AND TRAINING OF BORDER SECURITY PERSONNEL.

(a) INSPECTORS AND AGENTS.—

Subtitle C—First Responders

SEC. 1321. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) In a report entitled “Emergency First Responders: Drastically Underfunded, Dangerously Unprepared”, an independent task force sponsored by the Council on Foreign Relations found that “America’s local emergency responders will always be the first to confront a terrorist incident and will play the central role in managing its immediate consequences. Their efforts in the first minutes and hours following an attack will be critical to saving lives, establishing order, and preventing mass panic. The United States has both a responsibility and a critical need to provide them with the equipment, training, and other resources necessary to do their jobs safely and effectively.”

(2) The task force further concluded that many state and local emergency responders, including police officers and firefighters, lack the equipment and training needed to respond effectively to a terrorist attack involving weapons of mass destruction.

(3) The Federal Government has a responsibility to ensure that the people of the United States are protected to the greatest possible extent against a terrorist attack, especially an attack that utilizes nuclear, chemical, biological, or radiological weapons, and consequently, the Federal Government has a critical responsibility to address the equipment, training, and other needs of State and local first responders.

SEC. 1322. RESTORATION OF JUSTICE ASSISTANCE FUNDING.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) State and local police officers, firefighters, and emergency responders play an essential role in the efforts of the United States to prevent terrorist attacks and, if an attack occurred, to address the effects of the attack.

(2) An independent task force has concluded that hundreds of local police offices and firefighting and emergency response units throughout the United States are unprepared for responding to a terrorist attack involving nuclear, chemical, biological, or radiological weapons.

(3) The Edward Byrne Memorial Justice Assistance Grant Program provides critical Federal support for personnel, equipment, training, and technical assistance for the homeland security responsibilities of local law enforcement offices.

(4) The Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2005 (Public Law 108-447) appropriated funding for the Edward Byrne Memorial Justice Assistance Grant Program, a program that resulted from the combination of the Edward Byrne Memorial Grant Program and the Local Law Enforcement Block Grant Program.

(5) Funding for the Edward Byrne Memorial Justice Assistance Grant Program, as provided in the Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2005, has been reduced by nearly 50 percent since fiscal year 2002.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that the President should request in the annual budget proposal, and Congress should appropriate, the full amount authorized to be appropriated in subsection (c).

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated for the Edward Byrne Memorial Justice Assistance Grant Program—

(1) for fiscal year 2007, $1,250,000,000;

TITLE XV—OTHER MATTERS

SEC. 1501. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON MILITARY COMMISSIONS FOR THE TRIAL OF PERSONS DETAINED IN THE GLOBAL WAR ON TERRORISM.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The Constitution of the United States grants to Congress the power “To define and punish . . . Offenses against the Law of Nations”, as well as the power “To declare War . . . To raise and support Armies . . . [and] To provide and maintain a Navy.”.

(2) On November 13, 2001, the President issued a military order establishing military commissions to try individuals detained in the global war on terrorism.

(3) On June 29, 2006, the Supreme Court held in Hamdan v. Rumsfeld (126 S. Ct. 2749 (2006)) that—

(A) the authority to establish military commissions “can derive only from the powers granted jointly to the President and Congress in time of war”;

(B) the military commission established by the President to try Hamdan “lacks the power to proceed” because the procedures governing the commission departed impermissibly from the procedures governing courts martial and the requirements of Common Article 3 of the Geneva Conventions; and

(C) procedures governing military commissions may depart from the procedures governing courts martial “only if some practical need explains deviations from court-martial practice”.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) aliens detained by the United States who are alleged to have violated the law of war should be tried for their offenses;

(2) it is in the national interest for Congress to exercise its authority under the Constitution to enact legislation authorizing and regulating the use of military commissions to try and punish offenders against the law of war;

(3) procedures established by Congress for the use of military commissions should be consistent with the decision of the Supreme Court in Hamdan v. Rumsfeld;

(4) in drafting legislation for the use of military commissions, the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and the House of Representatives should take into account the views of professional military lawyers who have experience in prosecuting, defending, and judging cases under chapter 47 of title 10, United States Code (the Uniform Code of Military Justice);

(5) the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate is drafting a bipartisan proposal on military commissions that reflects the views of senior military lawyers, and this process must be allowed to move forward; and

(6) as the Judge Advocate General of the Navy explained in testimony before the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate on July 13, 2006, “[w]e need to think in terms of the long view, and to always put our own sailors, soldiers, Marines, and airmen in the place of an accused when we’re drafting these rules to ensure that these rules are acceptable when we have someone in a future war who faces similar rules”.

DIVISION E—A NEW DIRECTION IN IRAQ TITLE XLI—UNITED STATES POLICY ON IRAQ

SEC. 4001. UNITED STATES POLICY ON IRAQ.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the “United States Policy on Iraq Act of 2006”.

(b) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Global terrorist networks, including those that attacked the United States on September 11, 2001, continue to threaten the national security of the United States and are recruiting, planning, and developing capabilities to attack the United States and its allies throughout the world.

(2) Winning the fight against terrorist networks requires an integrated, comprehensive effort that uses all facets of power of the United States and the members of the international community who value democracy, freedom, and the rule of law.

(3) The United States Armed Forces, particularly the Army and Marine Corps, are stretched thin, and many soldiers and Marines have experienced three or more deployments to combat zones.

(4) Sectarian violence has surpassed the insurgency and terrorism as the main security threat in Iraq, increasing the prospects of a broader civil war which could draw in Iraq's neighbors.

(5) United States and coalition forces have trained and equipped more than 129,000 Iraqi soldiers, sailors, and airmen, and more than 165,000 Iraqi police, highway patrol, and other Ministry of Interior forces.

(6) Of the 106 operational Iraqi Army combat battalions, 85 are either in the lead or operating independently, according to the August 2006 report of the Administration to Congress entitled "Measuring Stability and Security in Iraq";

(7) Congress expressed its sense in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2006 (119 Stat. 3466) that "calendar year 2006 should be a period of significant transition to full Iraqi sovereignty, with Iraqi security forces taking the lead for the security of a free and sovereign Iraq, thereby creating the conditions for the phased redeployment of United States forces from Iraq".

(8) Iraq's security forces are heavily infiltrated by sectarian militia, which has greatly increased sectarian tensions and impeded the development of effective security services loyal to the Iraq Government.

(9) With the approval by the Iraqi Council of Representatives of the ministers of defense, national security, and the interior on June 7, 2006, the entire cabinet of Prime Minister Maliki is now in place.

(10) Pursuant to the Iraq Constitution, the Council of Representatives is to appoint a Panel which will have 4 months to recommend changes to the Iraq Constitution.

(11) Despite pledges of more than $8,000,000,000 in assistance for Iraq by foreign governments other than the United States at the Madrid International Donors' Conference in October 2003, only $3,500,000,000 of such assistance has been forthcoming.

(12) The current open-ended commitment of United States forces in Iraq is unsustainable and a deterrent to the Iraqis making the political compromises and personnel and resource commitments that are needed for the stability and security of Iraq.

(c) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that in order to change course from an open-ended commitment and to promote the assumption of security responsibilities by the Iraqis, thus advancing the chances for success in Iraq—

(1) the following actions need to be taken to help achieve the broad-based and sustainable political settlement so essential for defeating the insurgency and preventing all-out civil war—

(A) there must be a fair sharing of political power and economic resources among all the Iraqi groups so as to invest them in the formation of an Iraqi nation by either amendments to the Iraq Constitution or by legislation or other means, within the timeframe provided for in the Iraq Constitution;

(B) the President should convene an international conference so as to more actively involve the international community and Iraq's neighbors, promote a durable political settlement among Iraqis, reduce regional interference in Iraq's internal affairs, encourage more countries to contribute to Iraq's extensive needs, and ensure that pledged funds are forthcoming;

(C) the Iraq Government should promptly and decisively disarm the militias and remove those members of the Iraqi security forces whose loyalty to the Iraq Government is in doubt; and

(D) the President should—

(i) expedite the transition of United States forces in Iraq to a limited presence and mission of training Iraqi security forces, providing logistic support of Iraqi security forces, protecting United States infrastructure and personnel, and participating in targeted counterterrorism activities;

(ii) after consultation with the Government of Iraq, begin the phased redeployment of United States forces from Iraq this year; and

(iii) submit to Congress a plan by the end of 2006 with estimated dates for the continued phased redeployment of United States forces from Iraq, with the understanding that unexpected contingencies may arise;

(2) during and after the phased redeployment of United States forces from Iraq, the United States will need to sustain a non-military effort to actively support reconstruction, governance, and a durable political solution in Iraq; and

(3) the President should carefully assess the impact that ongoing United States military operations in Iraq are having on the capability of the United States Government to conduct an effective counterterrorism campaign to defeat the broader global terrorist networks that threaten the United States.

SEC. 4002. SENSE OF SENATE ON NEED FOR A NEW DIRECTION IN IRAQ POLICY AND IN THE CIVILIAN LEADERSHIP OF THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate makes the following findings:

(1) The Armed Forces of the United States have served honorably and courageously in Iraq, with more than 2,600 brave Americans having made the ultimate sacrifice and more than 20,000 wounded.

(2) The current "stay the course" policy in Iraq has made America less secure, reduced the readiness of our troops, and burdened America's taxpayers with more than $300,000,000,000 in additional debt.

(3) With weekly attacks against American and Iraqi troops at their highest levels since the start of the war, and sectarian violence intensifying, it is clear that staying the course in Iraq is not a strategy for success.

(b) SENSE OF SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) our troops deserve, and the American people expect, the George W. Bush Administration to provide competent civilian leadership and a true strategy for success in Iraq; and

(2) President George W. Bush needs to change course in Iraq to provide a strategy for success, and one indication of such a change of course would be to replace the current Secretary of Defense.

TITLE XLII—SPECIAL COMMITTEE OF SENATE ON WAR AND RECONSTRUCTION CONTRACTING

SEC. 4101. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The wars in Iraq and Afghanistan have exerted very large demands on the Treasury of the United States and required tremendous sacrifice by the members of the Armed Forces of the United States.

(2) Congress has a constitutional responsibility to ensure comprehensive oversight of the expenditure of United States Government funds.

(3) Waste and corporate abuse of United States Government resources are particularly unacceptable and reprehensible during times of war.

(4) The magnitude of the funds involved in the reconstruction of Afghanistan and Iraq and the war on terrorism, together with the speed with which these funds have been committed, presents a challenge to the effective performance of the traditional oversight function of Congress and the auditing functions of the executive branch.

(5) The Senate Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program, popularly known as the Truman Committee, which was established during World War II, offers a constructive precedent for bipartisan oversight of wartime contracting that can also be extended to wartime and postwar reconstruction activities.

(6) The Truman Committee is credited with an extremely successful investigative effort, performance of a significant public education role, and achievement of fiscal savings measured in the billions of dollars.

(7) The public has a right to expect that taxpayer resources will be carefully disbursed and honestly spent.

SEC. 4102. SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON WAR AND RECONSTRUCTION CONTRACTING.

There is established a special committee of the Senate to be known as the Special Committee on War and Reconstruction Contracting (hereafter in this title referred to as the "Special Committee").

(1) bidding, contracting, accounting, and auditing standards for Federal Government contracts;

(7) accountability of contractors and Government officials involved in procurement and contracting;

(9) lessons learned from the contracting process used in Iraq and Afghanistan and in connection with the war on terrorism with respect to the structure, coordination, management policies, and procedures of the Federal Government.

(c) INVESTIGATION OF WASTEFUL AND FRAUDULENT PRACTICES.—The investigation by the Special Committee of allegations of wasteful and fraudulent practices under subsection (b)(6) shall include investigation of allegations regarding any contract or spending entered into, supervised by, or otherwise involving the Coalition Provisional Authority, regardless of whether or not such contract or spending involved appropriated funds of the United States.

(d) EVIDENCE CONSIDERED.—In carrying out its duties, the Special Committee shall ascertain and evaluate the evidence developed by all relevant governmental agencies regarding the facts and circumstances relevant to contracts described in subsection (a) and any contract or spending covered by subsection (c).

SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 559—CALLING ON THE PRESIDENT TO TAKE IMMEDIATE STEPS TO HELP STOP THE VIOLENCE IN DARFUR

Mr. BIDEN. (for himself, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. KERRY, Mrs. CLINTON, Ms. CANTWELL, Mr. DODD, Mr. NELSON of Florida, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mr. DURBIN, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. VOINOVICH, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. SUNUNU, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. BROWNBACK, Mr. COLEMAN, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. SALAZAR, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. LEAHY, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. INOUE, Mr. HAGEL, Mr. FRIST, and Mr. SMITH) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Whereas the Darfur Peace Agreement, signed on May 5, 2006, between the Government of Sudan and rebels in Darfur has not resulted in a cessation of hostilities in Darfur;

Whereas, although the United Nations Security Council approved Security Council Resolution 1706 (2006), which provides for a United Nations peacekeeping presence in Darfur to replace the African Union Mission in Sudan (AMIS), the Government of Sudan has rejected the deployment of United Nations peacekeepers;

Whereas the Government of Sudan is engaged in a major offensive in Darfur, in direct violation of the Darfur Peace Agreement;

Whereas violence in the Darfur region has increased since the signing of the Darfur Peace Agreement;

Whereas Jan Egeland, the United Nations Under-Secretary General for Humanitarian Affairs, has stated that the coming weeks may result in a "man-made catastrophe of an unprecedented scale" in Darfur;

Whereas the African Union has decided to terminate the African Union Mission in Sudan (AMIS) at the end of September 2006;

Whereas it is unlikely that the United Nations will have the logistical means or capability to deploy peacekeepers to Sudan until the end of 2006;

Whereas the people of Darfur cannot wait that long for security to be re-established; and

Whereas the international community must renew its efforts to stop genocide, war crimes, and crimes against humanity in Darfur:

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) strongly condemns—

(A) the current military offensive of the Government of Sudan in Darfur in violation of the terms of the May 5, 2006, Darfur Peace Agreement and the April 8, 2004, N'Djamena cease-fire accord; and

(B) the rejection by the Government of Sudan of United Nations Security Council Resolution 1706 (2006);

(2) commends the African Union Mission in Sudan (AMIS) for its actions to date in monitoring the April 8, 2004, N'Djamena cease-fire agreement in Darfur and encourages the African Union to leave the AMIS force in place until a United Nations peacekeeping mission is deployed to Darfur;

(3) calls upon the Government of Sudan to immediately—

(A) cease its military offensive in Darfur; and

(B) comply with the deployment of United Nations peacekeepers to Darfur called for by the United Nations Security Council;

(4) calls upon the United Nations—

(A) to deploy as quickly as practicable peacekeeping troops as authorized by United Nations Security Council Resolution 1706 (2006) that are well trained and equipped; and

(B) to begin considerations of sanctions as called for by paragraphs 6 and 7 of United Nations Security Council Resolution 1556 (2004) and paragraph 14 of United Nations Security Council Resolution 1564 (2004);

(5) urges the President to take urgent steps to help improve the security situation in Darfur, including by—

(A) pursuing the imposition of a "no-fly zone" in Darfur in cooperation with the United Nations, NATO, or NATO allies;

(B) garnering support for NATO assistance with the handover by the African Union of the AMIS mission to the United Nations;

(C) working through diplomatic channels to obtain the support of China, Russia, and United States allies in the Arab League in securing the compliance of the Government of Sudan with the deployment of United Nations peacekeepers as provided by United Nations Security Council Resolution 1706 (2006);

(D) supporting full funding for the United Nations Peacekeeping Mission in Sudan;

(E) securing the necessary support from United Nations member states to schedule a special session on Sudan in the United Nations Human Rights Council; and

(F) appointing a Special Envoy to Sudan to head the Office of the Presidential Special

Envoy established pursuant to chapter 6 of title I of the Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act for Defense, the Global War on Terror, and Hurricane Recovery, 2006 (Public Law 109-234; 120 Stat. 439); and

(6) urges the international community—

(A) to support the deployment of United Nations peacekeepers to Darfur financially, with logistical and equipment support, or through troop contributions;

(B) to fulfill financial obligations to United Nations and international humanitarian aid agencies for responding to the crisis in Darfur or addressing humanitarian needs throughout Sudan;

(C) to impose targeted sanctions against members of the National Congress Party determined to be responsible for human rights violations, war crimes, and crimes against humanity; and

(D) to impose sanctions consistent with paragraphs 6 and 7 of United Nations Security Council Resolution 1556 (2004) and paragraph 14 of United Nations Security Council Resolution 1564 (2004)

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, today I am introducing a resolution along with my colleague Senator DEWINE urging the President to take immediate action to avert a looming tragedy in Darfur, Sudan. The government of Sudan has launched an all-out military offensive in Darfur that could result in hundreds of thousands of additional deaths. The United States must lead the international community to save those lives. It is urgent that we act.

How did we arrive at such a situation? And what must we do to stop it?

Over the past two years the situation in Sudan has remained dire. As many as 400,000 people may be dead. Two million people have been displaced from their homes, over 200,000 are refugees in Chad, and three million rely on international aid. Those numbers haven't diminished over time, they have gotten worse. And now, they may be on the brink of becoming even more catastrophic.

In May of this year, the government of Sudan and rebels in Darfur—specifically the Minni Minnawi faction of the Sudan Liberation Army, SLA,—signed a peace agreement. Rather than improving the security situation, the Darfur Peace Agreement has made things worse. The agreement never had the support of the entire SLA, or the other major rebel movement in Darfur, the Justice and Equality Movement. Nor did it have the support of people living in displaced camps in Darfur. In the days and weeks after news of the agreement spread, violence in camps increased either because people misunderstood what was in the agreement, or they felt the agreement was flawed. And violence on the ground became worse, as the rebel factions split and fighting erupted between those who had signed the Darfur Peace Agreement and those who had not.

Tens of thousands of people have been displaced in fighting since May—fifty thousand in the last two months alone. Many of them have taken refuge in camps for the internally displaced.

Attacks on humanitarian aid convoys have increased by a factor of more than ten compared to this time last year. Twelve humanitarian workers have been killed in the past four months—more than during the previous year. Two hundred internally displaced women have been raped and another two hundred violently assaulted in over the course of the past five weeks.

The United Nations, after months of delay, finally extended the mandate of the U.N. Mission in Sudan (UNMIS) to Darfur at the end of August. U.N. Security Council Resolution 1706 authorizes the deployment of over 17,000 peacekeepers and 3000 civilian police to Darfur. Regrettably, however, the government of Sudan has rejected the deployment of the U.N. force, instead launching a military offensive in Darfur. African Union officials have stated that they will not extend the mission in Sudan past the end of this month. And even if the aforementioned impediments did not exist, it would be months before a U.N. mission could fully deploy.

Just to make absolutely sure a peacekeeping force is never deployed, the government of Khartoum has gone on the offensive. If it scorches enough earth—and people—there will be no need for the peacekeeping force because there will be no one left to protect and no peace to keep.

We are at a pivotal moment. Hundreds of thousands of Sudanese are in camps, vulnerable to aerial and ground attacks from government forces. We cannot stand by and do nothing.

This resolution is straightforward. It calls on the President to undertake three key actions, some of which the Senate has asked him to do before: First, it once again calls on him to pursue the imposition of a no-fly zone through the U.N., NATO or NATO allies. The Senate asked the President to propose that NATO consider how to implement and enforce such a no-fly zone in March of this year. If anything, the need to enforce a no-fly zone has increased.

Second, it asks that the President secure the necessary support from United Nations member states to schedule a special session on Sudan in the United Nations Human Rights Council. The international community must speak out on the atrocities which continue to unfold in Sudan—and it must act.

Third, it asks the President to appoint a Special Envoy to Sudan to head the office that Senator DEWINE and I established at the State Department through a provision in the supplemental appropriations bill that was signed into law in June. The administration has avoided doing so for years, and our diplomatic efforts have suffered as a result.

I'm under no illusion that these actions alone will stop the Sudanese government. The international community must put a credible force on the ground as soon as possible. NATO should be prepared to help the AMIS hand-off to the United Nations. It is imperative that the President pick up the phone and talk to our NATO allies about how to do that. He should also call the president of the African Union and the U.N. Secretary General about going to Khartoum to talk to President Bashir about his government's rejection of the U.N. Security Council resolution. And the Secretary of State must get involved in diplomatic efforts to convince the Sudanese to cooperate with the implementation of Security Council resolution. I understand that Assistant Secretary of State Frazer was sent to Khartoum over the Labor Day weekend. She met with President Bashir, but according to all reports, the meeting did not result in any change in Khartoum's posture towards the deployment of U.N. troops. I applaud the administration for sending Dr. Frazer. But with all due respect I think we need to be engaged at higher levels.

It has been 12 years since the international community watched nearly a million people get killed in Rwanda, and 11 years since the world stood by as the massacres in Srebrenica occurred. Since then, President Clinton took decisive action to stop ethnic cleansing act in Bosnia, and then in Kosovo. Both missions were controversial—even unpopular. But the cost of inaction was too high. The cost of inaction in Darfur is too high as well.

SENATE RESOLUTION 560—SUPPORTING EFFORTS TO INCREASE CHILDHOOD CANCER AWARENESS, TREATMENT, AND RESEARCH

Mr. COLEMAN (for himself, Mr. ALLEN, Mr. BAYH, Mr. BROWNBACK, Mr. CARPER, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. COCHRAN, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. CORNYN, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. HATCH, Mr. ISAKSON, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. KERRY, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mrs. LINCOLN, Mr. MENENDEZ, Ms. MIKULSKI, Ms. MURKOWSKI, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. REED, Mr. SALAZAR, Mr. SANTORUM, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. SCHUMER, Ms. STABENOW, Mr. TALENT, and Mr. VOINOVICH) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

Whereas peer-reviewed clinical trials are the standard of care for pediatrics and have improved cancer survival rates among children;

Whereas the number of survivors of childhood cancer continues to grow, with about 1 in 640 adults between the ages of 20 and 39 having a history of cancer;

Whereas up to ⅓ of childhood cancer survivors are likely to experience at least one late effect from treatment, many of which may be life-threatening;

Whereas some late effects of cancer treatment are identified early in follow-up and are easily resolved, while others may become chronic problems in adulthood and may have serious consequences; and

Whereas 89 percent of children with cancer experience substantial suffering in the last month of life: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that Congress should support—

(1) public and private sector efforts to promote awareness about the incidence of cancer among children, the signs and symptoms of cancer in children, treatment options, and long-term follow-up;

(2) public and private investment in childhood cancer research to improve prevention, diagnosis, treatment, rehabilitation, post-treatment monitoring, and long-term survival;

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I am proud to be an original cosponsor of the Federal Funding Accountability and Transparency Act, S. 2590, that I have brought before the Senate this evening. This is a simple bill, yet a profound bill, designed to simply shine more sunlight, shine that light that we all know is so necessary, on Federal spending. I am absolutely convinced that this bill will go a long way in ultimately reflecting greater fiscal discipline and greater accountability.

This is a simple bill but profound, profound in the sense of what it requires. One way to think of the bill is that it will create, for the very first time in the Executive Office of the President, the Office of Management and Budget, the equivalent of a Google search engine for all Americans to see how their Federal tax dollars are being expended. That is the simplicity of it all.

I congratulate my colleagues, Senators COBURN and OBAMA—I just talked to Senator COBURN on the phone—who are the original sponsors of this very important, commonsense piece of legislation. I do congratulate the chairman and ranking member of the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee, Senators COLLINS and LIEBERMAN, for their expeditious consideration and reporting of this legislation.

Once this bill is enacted, taxpayers will have the ability to know exactly how their money is being spent and, with that greater transparency, will come greater accountability.

The bill expands upon E-Government management tools that were enacted in 2002 by making all Federal funding awards, grants, contracts and loans, easily searchable on a public Web site. Only transactions under $25,000 would be exempt from this reporting requirement, as well as awards that are classified for national security purposes.

This new tool will be a valuable asset in the continuing effort to spend the taxpayers' dollars wisely, without waste and without misuse.

Again, congratulations to Senators COBURN and OBAMA for their untiring work on this bill. It is my honor to join them as an original cosponsor of this simple, commonsense but important piece of legislation.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am proud to support S. 2590, the Federal Funding Accountability and Transparency Act. This important legislation requires the Office of Management and Budget to create an online searchable Web site to allow Americans to understand who is getting Federal money.

This legislation has broad support from across the political spectrum. Whether we believe we spend too much or we should be doing more to help people in need, we can all agree that we ought to get value from the dollars we spend. Transparency is the first step in that process.

I believe that S. 2590 is only the first step. I am excited that Senators COBURN and OBAMA have endorsed the concept of creating a similar database for targeted tax benefits that go to companies or industries who are adept enough at Washington politics to get them enacted.

Like the spending to be disclosed in S. 2590, many targeted tax breaks are good policy. But the American people deserve to know who is paying less in taxes and causing them to pay more. They have a right to know who is getting benefits from Congress.

I look forward to working with my colleagues to have a bill, hold hearings, bring the bill to the floor, and make information on tax benefits public and easily accessible.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. President, Senator BARACK OBAMA, TOM CARPER, JOHN MCCAIN, and I earlier this year introduced S. 2590, the Federal Funding Accountability and Transparency Act of 2006, to bring increased transparency to the way the Federal Government spends taxpayer money. Transparency means allowing citizens to access accurate information on Federal spending decisions in a timely fashion for the purpose of keeping their elected officials accountable. Outside of protecting national security and individual privacy, there is no reason why the operations of all Federal agencies should not be widely known by as many as would like to know. It is because this belief is widely shared by the American people as well as many in this body that S. 2590 has gained the cosponsorship of dozens of Senators.

I believe, though, that transparency in Government decisionmaking should not be limited simply to spending, but should also be extended to the decisions Congress makes about the Tax Code. The Tax Code is currently tens of thousands of pages in length and far too confusing for even IRS customer service agents to understand, let alone the average citizen with far less expertise. Because I believe that transparency is one of the best tools we have to curb wasteful behavior, I look forward working with Senator FRANK LAUTENBERG to develop bipartisan legislation like S. 2590 that will bring increased transparency to the Tax Code by allowing the American public to understand the real world effects of the Tax Code. Tax Code matters are extremely complex and the American public has a right to know how the Tax Code affects them. American taxpayers also deserve to know if they are paying higher taxes in order to offset the loss of revenue due to special treatment for special interest groups. This is a complex issue that will require careful study. It is my intention to address this issue in a future hearing of the Subcommittee on Federal Financial Management, Government Information, and International Security. I believe that a hearing addressing this issue will help us all to better understand the ultimate effects of targeted tax expenditures. Further study will also help to inform us on how to fully address the issue of greater transparency.

I thank Senator LAUTENBERG for his attention to this issue and I look forward to working with him and Senator OBAMA to promote increased Government transparency. As Thomas Jefferson wrote back in 1802, "We might hope to see the finances of the Union as clear and intelligible as a merchant's books, so that every member of Congress and every man of any mind in the Union should be able to comprehend them, to investigate abuses, and consequently to control them."

Mr. OBAMA. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleagues from New Jersey and Oklahoma. It has been a pleasure to work with them on important legislation to improve Federal financial transparency and accountability. The American people have a right to know how Federal resources are being used. Congress and the President should make it as easy as possible for taxpayers to see how well we are doing our jobs as stewards of Federal revenues and administrators of Federal spending. All of us should have adequate tools to monitor and evaluate how departments and agencies are performing their important functions. The Web site our legislation calls for will be an important tool in reducing wasteful earmarks and unjustified pork barrel spending. Transparency of spending is an important step in improving accountability and performance.

I agree with Senators LAUTENBERG and COBURN that we also need transparency in Federal tax policy. The same way taxpayers should be able to see which companies and organizations receive Federal grants or contracts or other forms of financial assistance, Americans should be able to see which companies and organizations are receiving narrowly targeted tax credits and deductions. A tax break for one taxpayer often means higher taxes for everybody else. It is our duty to make sure that tax breaks that only benefit a few taxpayers at the expense of everybody else are legitimate and appropriate. I have no doubt that greater transparency of targeted tax benefits can help us simplify and improve the fairness of the Federal Tax Code.

I look forward to the opportunity to develop bipartisan legislation to address this issue, and I thank my colleagues for their wonderful leadership.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee-reported amendment be agreed to, the bill, as amended, be read a third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid on the table, and that any statements relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.
