

which was an indication of the fact that oil prices might have moved because, instead of investing in commodities, people have taken money out of those commodities and put them in other places in the stock market. People should be aware that Congress and the FTC are looking into any kind of manipulative practices when it comes to the oil market. Even if the rule isn't in final adoption today, the fact that we are going to be aggressive at protecting consumers and looking into this kind of manipulative practice, I believe, can help give consumers relief at the pump.

So let's get about doing our job. Let's get about protecting consumers in what is not a rational gas market today, and get about helping our economy by doing our job here and having the oversight hearings that it is going to take to make sure this rule gets developed with a strong framework that can be used to root out manipulation in the oil markets.

I thank the President, and I yield the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

WORLD FOOD AID

Mr. CASEY. Mr. President, I know we are ready to wrap up for the week. First, I want to make a couple points about a news item in today's paper.

I was looking at the Washington Post this morning, page A4. There is a story about the President seeking $770 million more in world food aid. At first glance, that sounds like very good news, and it is, to a certain extent. But, unfortunately, it is good news about the future in terms of a commitment for 2009, but it doesn't do nearly enough to meet the crisis that has enveloped large parts of the world with regard to the food insecurity we are seeing all over the world.

Here is the point. I and others have asked the President to increase, for this year, our food aid from the $350 million he has proposed earlier by adding another $200 million to that. In the short run, we wanted to go from $350 million to $550 million. This $770 million is great, but it is in 2009. When you think about when the food would hit the ground, so to speak, the difference is that if the President's policy stays in place for the near term, what you are going to have is food hitting the ground, totaling $350 million, in the next couple of months, when we could be adding a lot more to that. The demand really requires that we add $200 million. Even if we add the number the President put on the table, which is $770 million, that food won't hit the ground, at the earliest, until November 2008, maybe December, or maybe not even until January 2009.

We are at a point now where we have news story after news story about instability across the world—governments that are not just at risk of collapse because of the food insecurity, and we have seen all the reports about rioting—but this becomes not just a humanitarian crisis, not only a government instability problem, but it really becomes fertile ground, unfortunately, for terrorism. So food insecurity is becoming a national and international security problem.

We know from our history—world history especially—that in places such as Afghanistan, where there is instability, terrorism flourished. We know the stories in the last couple of years, since before 2001, about the rise of the Taliban and the rise of terrorist elements all over the world.

So I hope the President, as much as he has heralded his announcement for 2009 of $770 million, I hope he will reconsider for the short term so we can add another $200 million in food aid—not a lot of money in the scheme of the aid the United States generously provides to the rest of the world—add another $200 million in the near term so food can hit the ground in these countries maybe at the end of this month or in June or July instead of waiting until November, December, or even January of next year. Not just the hunger pangs and the trauma that this causes to real people across the world but the security implication here is very grave.

I hope the President will bring the same urgency to this funding as he does to his call for more war funding, frankly. I think we need a sense of urgency because of the humanitarian, moral question here but also because of the security implications.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CASEY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

EPA IN CRISIS

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Mr. President, for much of last year, as many of us will remember, the Senate Judiciary Committee was engaged in a very troubling inquiry. We were trying to determine whether the Bush administration had fired several U.S. attorneys for political reasons; not because they were not good U.S. attorneys but because they were not loyal "Bushies," to use the phrase a Department of Justice official used.

That inquiry continues at the Department of Justice, but over its course, we already know the incompetence and misjudgments that it uncovered have cost numerous Department of Justice officials their jobs, and properly so, including former Attorney General Alberto Gonzales who made clear that he put loyalty to the President before the faithful exercise of that important office.

Unfortunately, it also cost that proud Department the morale of its officials and, to a sad degree, the trust of the American people, many of whom have been left to wonder whether Federal prosecutions in this country arise from the pursuit of justice or whether under the Bush administration they arise from the pursuit of political advantage.

Here we go again, perhaps. This morning, we awoke to the news that the Environmental Protection Agency's regional administrator for the Midwest, Mary Gade, was forced to resign in the midst of a heated debate over dioxin contamination in waters near Michigan.

Dioxin is an extremely dangerous chemical. According to a report by the Chicago Tribune, Ms. Gade invoked emergency powers last year to force Dow Chemical, headquartered in Michigan, to clean up several areas saturated with this toxic chemical, a dangerous carcinogen which was a byproduct, among other things, of Agent Orange, with which we are sadly familiar.

Ms. Gade later broke off negotiations with Dow Chemical on a more comprehensive cleanup, citing concerns that Dow had been reluctant to take steps to protect health and wildlife. That put the company in a tough position.

At that point, the Tribune's report says the company asked EPA officials in Washington to intervene, although Dow said it had nothing to do with Ms. Gade's dismissal. The paper wrote that Ms. Gade said that high-ranking EPA officials "repeatedly questioned her aggressive action against Dow." It quoted Ms. Gade as saying, "There is no question that this is about Dow."

We do not yet know all the details of Ms. Gade's firing or everything that may have gone on between her office and Dow Chemical. But from everything we have heard and seen so far, it looks like deja vu all over again from an administration that values compliance with its political agenda more than it values the trust or the best interests of the American people.

Last year, we learned this is an administration that would not hesitate to fire capable Federal prosecutors when they would not toe an improper
