I. INTRODUCTION

A. PURPOSE AND SUMMARY

House Joint Resolution 58 would disapprove the extension of the waiver authority contained in section 402(c) of the Trade Act of 1974 with respect to Vietnam.

B. BACKGROUND

Vietnam's trade status is subject to the Jackson-Vanik amendment to Title IV of the Trade Act of 1974. This provision of law governs the extension of normal trade relations (NTR), including normal tariff treatment, and access to U.S. Government credits, or credit or investment guarantees, to nonmarket economy countries ineligible for NTR treatment as of the enactment of the Trade Act. A country subject to the provision may gain NTR treatment and coverage by U.S. trade financing programs by complying with the freedom of emigration provisions under the Act. The extension of NTR tariff treatment also requires the conclusion and approval by Congress of a bilateral commercial agreement with the United States providing for reciprocal nondiscriminatory treatment. The Act authorizes the President to waive the freedom of emigration requirement with respect to a particular country if he determines that a waiver will substantially promote the freedom of emigration provisions, and if he has received assurances that the emigration practices of the country will lead substantially to the achievement of those objectives. Waiver of the emigration requirement allows the country to be eligible for U.S. trade financing programs, and, if the country has concluded a bilateral commercial agreement, to receive NTR tariff treatment.

Since the early 1990s, the United States has taken gradual steps to improve relations with Vietnam. In February 1994, President Clinton lifted the trade embargo on Vietnam in recognition of the cooperation received from the Vietnamese in POW/MIA accounting. The United States opened a Liaison Office in Hanoi later that year. On July 11, 1995, President Clinton announced the establishment of diplomatic relations, which was followed by the appointment of former Congressman Douglas "Pete" Peterson as U.S. Ambassador to Vietnam. In 1997, the Office of the United States Trade Representative began negotiations toward the conclusion of a bilateral commercial agreement with Vietnam. An agreement in principle between the United States and Vietnam was reached on July 25, 1999. The agreement is expected to be finalized in the near future.

Because Vietnam has not yet concluded a bilateral commercial agreement with the United States, which Congress would have to approve, it is ineligible to receive NTR tariff treatment. However, if the President determines that a Jackson-Vanik waiver would substantially promote the freedom of emigration objectives under the Trade Act of 1974, U.S. exporters to Vietnam are given access to U.S. Government credits, or credit or investment guarantees, such as those provided by the Overseas Private Investment Corporation (OPIC), the Export-Import Bank (Ex-Im Bank), and the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA), provided that Vietnam meets the relevant program criteria.

On March 9, 1998, the President first determined that a Jackson-Vanik waiver for Vietnam would substantially promote the freedom of emigration objectives under the Trade Act of 1974. On April 7, 1998, the President issued Executive Order 13079, under which the waiver entered into force. The President's initial waiver determination expired on July 2, 1998. The renewal procedure under the Trade Act requires the President to submit to Congress a recommendation for a 12-month extension no later than 30 days prior to the waiver's expiration. On June 3, 1998, the President renewed Vietnam's waiver for the next 12-month period (from July 3, 1998 through July 2, 1999). On June 3, 1999, the President again issued a 12-month waiver (from July 3, 1999 through July 2, 2000). The waiver authority continues in effect unless disapproved by Congress within 60 calendar days after the expiration of the existing waiver. The Committee on Ways and Means is subject to a discharge motion if it does not report a resolution of disapproval within 30 calendar days of its introduction. The resolution, which is highly privileged on the floor, may not be amended except to change country names.

After the President ordered an end to the U.S. trade embargo, two-way trade between the United States and Vietnam increased steadily from $224 million in 1994 to $948 million in 1996. In part, this rapid growth was due to a large number of U.S. plane sales to Vietnam in 1996. The pace of bilateral trade slowed in 1997, partially due to the Asian financial crisis, but two-way trade was still $666 million. In 1998, U.S. exports to Vietnam were valued at $274 million, while U.S. imports from Vietnam totaled $553 million. Top U.S. exports to Vietnam in 1998 included machinery and transportation equipment, chemicals and related products, manufactured goods, and food and live animals. The largest U.S. imports from Vietnam in 1998 included mineral fuels, coffee, footwear, and fish. U.S. investment in Vietnam has grown in tandem with trade. By 1997, U.S. investors had committed $1.2 billion to the growing Vietnamese economy. Another factor affecting U.S.-Vietnamese economic relations is the hundreds of millions of dollars that Vietnamese Americans send to Vietnam each year for family aid and business investment.

C. LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

Committee action

House Joint Resolution 58 was introduced on June 9, 1999, by Mr. Rohrabacher to disapprove the extension of the waiver authority contained in section 402(c) of the Trade Act of 1974 recommended by the President to Congress on June 3, 1999 with respect to Vietnam. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. On July 1, 1999, the Committee on Ways and Means ordered House Joint Resolution 58 reported adversely without amendment to the House of Representatives by a voice vote with a quorum present.

Legislative hearing

On June 17, 1999, the Subcommittee on Trade of the Committee on Ways and Means held a hearing on the issue of U.S.-Vietnam trade relations. At this hearing, Members of Congress, as well as representatives of refugee organizations, POW/MIA families, Vietnamese-American groups, and U.S. businesses expressed their views regarding U.S.-Vietnam trade relations and the President's extension of the Jackson-Vanik waiver for Vietnam. Former Member of Congress and current U.S. Ambassador to Vietnam Douglas "Pete" Peterson presented testimony from the Administration in support of the President's waiver extension.

II. EXPLANATION OF THE RESOLUTION

Present law

Title IV of the Trade Act of 1974, as amended by the Customs and Trade Act of 1990 (Public Law 101-382), sets forth three requirements relating to freedom of emigration, which must be met or waived by the President, in order for a nonmarket economy country to gain access to U.S. government credits, or credit or investment guarantees. Because Vietnam has not yet concluded a bilateral commercial agreement with the United States, which Congress would have to approve, it is ineligible to receive NTR tariff treatment. The President's waiver of the freedom of emigration requirements for Vietnam, however, currently gives that country access to U.S. government credits, or credit or investment guarantees, such as those administered by OPIC, the Ex-Im Bank, and USDA, provided that Vietnam meets the relevant program criteria.

The President's waiver authority under Title IV expires at midnight on July 2 of each year. It may be extended on an annual basis upon a Presidential determination and report to Congress that such extension will substantially promote the freedom of emigration objectives in the Trade Act of 1974. The waiver authority continues in effect unless disapproved by the Congress, either generally or with respect to a specific country, within 60 calendar days after the expiration of the existing authority. Disapproval takes the form of a joint resolution disapproving the extension of Presidential authority to waive the freedom of emigration requirements in the Trade Act of 1974. The resolution is referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, which has 30 days to consider it. The resolution is not amendable except to add or remove country names affected. If the resolution passes both Houses and is vetoed by the President, Congress must consider the veto message before the later of the end of the 60-day period or within 15 legislative days. The disapproval resolution is highly privileged, thus generally guaranteeing a vote in the House if a resolution of disapproval is introduced.

On June 3, 1999, the President issued an extension of the waiver from the Jackson-Vanik freedom of emigration requirements for Vietnam. If both chambers of Congress do not pass a resolution of disapproval within the 60 calendar days following the expiration of the existing waiver authority, the President's waiver is automatically renewed through July 2nd of the next year. If a resolution of disapproval is enacted, it becomes effective 60 days after enactment.

Explanation of resolution

House Joint Resolution 58 states that Congress does not approve the extension of the authority contained in section 402(c) of the Trade Act of 1974 recommended by the President to Congress on June 3, 1999, with respect to Vietnam.

Reasons for Committee action

The Committee on Ways and Means reports House Joint Resolution 58 adversely primarily because the Members support the Administration's policy of engagement and gradual normalization of relations with Vietnam. In particular, the Committee is convinced that this policy is the cornerstone on which the United States will be able to continue cooperation with the Vietnamese government to achieve the fullest possible accounting of POWs and MIAs in Vietnam. In addition, engagement enables the United States to influence the pace and direction of economic and political reform in Vietnam in a manner that will improve respect for fundamental human rights and promote democratic reforms. Furthermore, termination of the President's Jackson-Vanik waiver for Vietnam would undermine the ability of the United States to influence Vietnam's re-emergence into the community of nations. In recent years, Vietnam has joined the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) and the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) group. In addition, Vietnam has applied to become a member of the World Trade Organization (WTO).

While emigration issues remain to be resolved, Vietnam has continued to make progress, and the Members of the Committee support the President's determination that waiving the Jackson-Vanik freedom of emigration criteria will substantially lead to the achievement of those emigration objectives. Finally, the Committee recognizes that disapproving the President's extension of Vietnam's Jackson-Vanik waiver would derail progress toward market-oriented reforms and the process of normalizing U.S. trade relations with Vietnam. In particular, overturning the Jackson-Vanik waiver would jeopardize the bilateral commercial agreement which has been reached in principle with Vietnam, thereby harming U.S. exporters and workers.

While the United States has many serious concerns about human rights abuses and the need for economic and political reforms in Vietnam, the Committee believes that they are best addressed through expanding government and business contacts and the involvement of U.S. citizens in Vietnamese society, making full use of U.S. trade statutes where necessary.

Effective date

The resolution is effective 60 days after enactment.

H.J. Res. 58—Disapproving the extension of the waiver authority contained in section 402(c) of the Trade Act of 1974 with respect to Vietnam

Summary: Under the Trade Act of 1974, nondiscriminatory trade relations may not be conferred on a country with a nonmarket economy if that country maintains restrictive emigration policies.

However, the President may waive this prohibition on an annual basis if he certifies that doing so would promote freedom of emigration in that country. On June 3, 1999, President Clinton transmitted to the Congress his intention to waive the prohibition with respect to Vietnam for a year, beginning July 3, 1999. H.J. Res. 58 would disapprove the President's extension of this waiver. This legislation could affect direct spending if credit-guaranteed sales of farm products to Vietnam are prohibited. However, CBO estimates that such sales are likely to be insignificant. Because the bill could affect direct spending, pay-as-you-go procedures would apply.

H.J. Res. 58 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act (UMRA) and would not affect the budgets of state, local, or tribal governments.

Estimated cost to the Federal Government: CBO estimates that disapproving the extension of the waiver with respect to Vietnam would have no significant impact on direct spending or receipts. Because the waiver contained in section 402(c) of the Trade Act of 1974, as recommended by the President, would not give Vietnam normal trade relations treatment, disapproving it would not affect customs duties. Enacting H.J. Res. 58 would prohibit various U.S. government agencies from extending credit and insurance to Vietnam. CBO estimates that the resolution would have no significant effect on the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, Eximbank programs, or General Sales Manager (GSM) export credit guarantee programs of the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA). While Vietnam is currently eligible to purchase farm and food commodities backed by GSM export credit guarantees if the waiver is not disapproved, CBO estimates the likelihood that these guarantees will be offered is small. If USDA does offer GSM credit guarantees to Vietnam, the value of the sales and the associated costs during the next year are likely to be insignificant.

Pay-as-you-go considerations: The Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act sets up pay-as-you-go procedures for legislation affecting direct spending or receipts. Because H.J. Res. 58 could affect direct spending, pay-as-you-go procedures would apply. However, CBO estimates that disapproving the extension of the waiver to Vietnam would have no significant impact on direct spending.

Intergovernmental and private-sector impact: H.J. Res. 58 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in UMRA and would not affect the budget of state, local, or tribal governments.

Estimate prepared by: Federal Revenues: Hester Grippando. Federal Costs: David Hull.

Estimate approved by: G. Thomas Woodward, Assistant Director for Tax Analysis and Paul N. Van de Water, Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.

V. OTHER MATTERS REQUIRED TO BE DISCUSSED
UNDER THE RULES OF THE HOUSE

A. COMMITTEE OVERSIGHT FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

With respect to clause 3(c)(1) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives (relating to oversight findings), the Committee, based on public hearing information and information from the Administration, believes that terminating Vietnam's Jackson-Vanik waiver by enacting House Joint Resolution 58 would be unwise and counterproductive.

B. SUMMARY OF FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT REFORM

With respect to clause 3(c)(4) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee advises that no oversight findings or recommendations have been submitted by the Committee on Government Reform with respect to the subject matter contained in House Joint Resolution 58.

C. CONSTITUTIONAL AUTHORITY STATEMENT

With respect to clause 3(d)(1) of rule XIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, relating to Constitutional Authority, the Committee states that the Committee's action in reporting the bill is derived from Article I of the Constitution, Section 8 ("The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and to provide for * * * the general Welfare of the United States * * *").
