

The system was originally developed to control the concentration of pesticides used for weed control in canals with fluctuating flow rates. Generally, aquatic pesticides are most effective if injected at constant concentrations over a period of several days. With many of these pesticides, it is not possible to measure concentrations in real time, and in canals it is not possible to measure the flow rate accurately without expensive construction. This novel technology addresses these problems.

Properly filed competing applications received by Reclamation in response to this notice will be considered as objections to the grant of the contemplated license.
