SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION: Both EPA and USDA/FSIS have an established history of conducting human health risk assessments on chemical agents but less experience on microbial agents. EPA conducts microbial risk assessment on agents under a number of different statutes for a variety of purposes. These include both naturally occurring and genetically modified microorganisms with the potential for environmental exposure. USDA/FSIS is charged with ensuring the safety of food from the farm to the consumer.

Microbial risk assessment entails addressing issues that are not considered in chemical risk assessment (e.g., die off and regrowth of bacteria, effects of prior exposure and immune status). EPA, USDA/FSIS and other Federal agencies often conduct risk assessments on similar pathogens albeit in different media and under different scenarios. A common approach to conducting these assessments will foster better interaction among participating agencies leading to a more efficient and consistent process. In order to better harmonize the way that EPA conducts its assessments across programs, EPA initiated and was joined by USDA/FSIS and scientists from other Federal agencies to develop guidelines to promote greater consistency within the government and provide more transparency to stakeholders and other interested parties. This cross-agency activity has generated the draft Guideline.

This document addresses the full range of microbial risk assessment topics: Definition of the roles and responsibilities, planning and scoping, the four components of a risk assessment, and sections discussing risk management and communication. The Guideline identifies differences in issues and processes between chemical and microbial risk assessment such as secondary transmission (person to person), increases and decreases in microbial populations both in the environment and host individuals, and the role of prior exposure on disease manifestation.

Collectively this document reflects the combined experience and expertise of risk assessors and will promote a consistent approach to conducting microbial risk assessments.
