II. Background

FMCSA published The National Registry of Certified Medical Examiners (National Registry) in the Federal Register on April 20, 2012. This rule requires all healthcare practitioners who conduct medical examinations for interstate commercial motor vehicle drivers to undergo training, pass a certification exam, and be listed on the National Registry on the Agency’s Web site. The rule becomes effective on May 21, 2012. At that time, testing providers may apply on-line through the National Registry System to be a test delivery organization for the certification exam.

Test delivery organizations play a key role in the rule’s implementation. In writing this rule, the Agency decided to use the public/private partnership model. The Agency develops and provides the test to test delivery organizations who then deliver the test, charge whatever fee they determine reasonable, and transmit test results to the Agency. The Agency does not pay the test delivery organization. However, to participate, test delivery organizations must apply and be approved before the Agency will provide access to the system and give the test delivery organization the test forms.
