PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 102^d CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE—Thursday, April 9, 1992

(Legislative day of Thursday, March 26, 1992)

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable HERB KOHL, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Eternal God, all wise, all powerful, You know better than we our present condition. What we call anger is probably, more accurately, frustration. The people express anger and blame leadership because they are frustrated in themselves and see their own weaknesses and failures reflected in leadership. Leadership is frustrated because it is experiencing the powerlessness of the powerful.

Gracious God our Father, help us hear clearly the Word of Jesus, " * * * With men it is impossible, but not with God: for with God all things are possible."—Mark 10:27. " * * * The things which are impossible with men are possible with God."—Luke 18:27.

Forgive our inclination to look everywhere except to God for a way out. Help us to see that, out of touch with God, we are like a compass without its magnetic north. We are disoriented, we are lost, we are directionless. Somehow, mighty God for whom "nothing is too hard," give us grace to acknowledge our limitations, our frustration, our powerlessness, and to turn to You and find the direction, the support, the way so desperately needed at this time.

In the name of Jesus who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC., April 9, 1992.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable HERB KOHL, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. KOHL thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the majority leader.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, this morning, the time for the two leaders will extend until 10 a.m., at which time the Senate will resume consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 106, the budget resolution, with the Exon amendment as the pending amendment.

When the Senate disposes of the Exon amendment, Senator BROWN is to be recognized to offer an amendment, and when that is disposed of, Senator BRADLEY will be recognized to offer an amendment. Senators can expect roll-call votes to occur relative to these amendments, as well as others which may be offered during the course of the consideration of the budget resolution.

Mr. President, let me again reiterate the point I made several times this week about the Senate schedule. The Senate will remain in session until action is completed on the budget resolution. We must pass a budget resolution prior to the forthcoming Easter recess. Therefore, we will remain in session as long as it is necessary to pass a budget resolution.

THE UDALL FOUNDATION ACT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, on March 19 the President signed into law, as Public Law No. 102-259, S. 2184, the Morris K. Udall Scholarship and Excellence in National Environmental and Native American Public Policy Act of 1992.

I applaud the President's decision to sign the measure, and congratulate the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI] who took the lead in working with the House of Representatives and the White House to ensure that legislative action would be completed on this bill early this session, following the President's ill-advised attempt to pocket veto a related bill during the last adjournment. I also congratulate the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN] who joined in sponsoring this bipartisan legislation to honor our friend from Arizona, Mo Udall. The Senators from Arizona are to be commended for continuing Congressman Udall's work to protect our environment and also to improve the health of native Americans and Alaska Natives.

Enactment of this law is a fitting and proper tribute to the great legacy of Mo Udall, and now the important work of the foundation created by this law can begin.

However, as we await the President's nominations to trusteeships of this foundation, one disturbing aspect of the President's statement, upon signing S. 2184 into law, requires a response. In his statement, which is printed in volume 28 of the Weekly Compilation of Presidential Documents, at page 507, the President labeled as a "serious deficiency in the bill" the provision of the law prescribing qualifications for trustees of the Udall Foundation who are to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The required qualifications, which are stipulated in section 5(b)(3) of the law, are, first, that 5 of the 11 trustees "have shown leadership and interest" in environmental issues, or in the improvement of native American and Alaska Native health and in the strengthening of tribal self-governance, the subjects that are to be the work of this foundation. The second statutory requirement, intended to promote the nonpartisanship which was important in the Congress' bipartisan support of this measure, is that not more than three of these five trustees be of the same political party.

The President's signing statement asserts that the statutory specification of qualifications for Government officials violates the appointments clause of the U.S. Constitution. The President announced that he views those provisions of the Udall Foundation Act as precatory, meaning that he views himself as free to ignore them if he so chooses.

The President's assertion is wrong and without any basis in history or law. It cannot stand unchallenged. Further, in the event that the President's assertion presages an effort on his part to bring independent administrative agencies under partisan political control, it is important to stop that effort now, and to make clear that his statement has no support in our Nation's jurisprudence and history.

The legal basis for the statutory specification of qualifications for officers of the United States could not be stronger. Toward the end of the first session of the First Congress, President Washington signed into law the Judiciary Act of 1789. That law provided for the appointment of an Attorney General of the United States and specified the qualification for that officer by requiring that the President appoint "a meet person, learned in the law." (Act of Sept. 24, 1789, c. 20, 35, 1 Stat. 73, 93.)

No law now requires that the Attorney General be "learned in the law," but that requirement survives to this day for the United States' principal advocate before the Supreme Court, the Solicitor General, who, by statute, is required to possess that qualification. (28 U.S.C. 505 (1988).)

In 1926, Chief Justice Taft, himself a former President of the United States, authored Myers versus United States, one of the Supreme Court's seminal opinions on the meaning of the appointments clause and its allocation of power between the legislative branch and the President. Chief Justice Taft's opinion for the Court, while denying the Senate the power to participate in the removal of executive officers, stated, in language that cannot be misunderstood today, that the Constitution gives Congress the legislative power of "prescribing * * * reasonable and relevant qualifications and rules of eligibility of appointees." (272 U.S. 52, 129 (1926).)

The Chief Justice observed that Congress' "power to prescribe qualifications for office" had "been often exercised" and stated that there was no conflict between such legislation and the President's constitutional prerogatives regarding appointment and removal, as long as "the qualifications do not so limit selection and so trench upon executive choice as to be in effect legislative designation." (Id. at 128.)

In a separate opinion dissenting from the Court's ruling on the removal question, Justice Louis Brandeis elaborated on the Court's observations on the prescribing of qualifications for Federal office in statute. Justice Brandeis noted that Congress had legislated such qualifications "continuously since the foundation of the Government," that "[e]very President has approved one or more of such acts," and that "[e]very President has consistently observed them." (Id. at 265.)

Justice Brandeis supported these conclusions with an exhaustive enumeration of literally hundreds of laws stipulating qualifications such as citizenship, residency in a particular state or territory, and professional attainment or occupational experience, to name just a few of the scores of examples documented in his opinion. (Id. at 265-69.)

Justice Brandeis also traced legislation on diverse political representation as a qualification for office on multi-member boards and commissions—the specific provision that President Bush has singled out for objection in this statute—back to the 1880's. (Id. at 269-71.) When Congress acted legislatively in 1883 to curtail the spoils system and institute a professional, competitive public service in the Federal Government, it did so by creating the Civil Service Commission and requiring that there be three commissioners, "not more than two of whom shall be adherents of the same party." (Act of Jan. 16, 1883, c. 27, 1, 22 Stat. 403.)

The continuous exercise by Congress of the statutory power to prescribe qualifications for office from the very organization of our Government, which Justice Brandeis noted in 1926, has continued unabated in the years since he wrote down to the present. Today, the United States Code is replete with provisions specifying qualifications required for officers charged to serve in the gamut of Departments, Agencies, Boards, and Commissions of the Federal Government.

To describe a few examples in policy areas similar to the Udall Foundation Act, Federal law requires that the officer appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to serve as Director of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service be "by reason of scientific education and experience, knowledgeable in the principles of fisheries and wildlife management." (16 U.S.C. 742b(b)(1988).) Similarly, three of the four commissioners of the Great Lakes Fishery Commission, who are appointed by the President, are required to be "knowledgeable regarding the fisheries of the Great Lakes." (16 U.S.C. 932(a)(1)(B) (1988).)

ural resource and environmental matters or native American health and self-government issues is not unique. There is nothing in our constitutional history or the logic of our system of separated powers that could be read even to suggest that it is somehow suspect or improper for Congress to specify by law that the President's appointee to a particular office possess a modicum of knowledge about the work to be performed by that office.

As for the particular requirement for the Udall Foundation trustees which was singled out by President Bush, the act provides that five of the President's appointees be fairly evenly balanced politically, specifying that not more than three shall be of the same political party. Identical statutory provisions may be found from near the beginning to near the end of the 50 titles of the United States Code. They govern the President's appointments to the Federal Election Commission, 2 U.S.C. 437c(a)(1) (1988); to the Federal Trade Commission, 15 U.S.C. 41 (1988); to the Securities and Exchange Commission, 15 U.S.C. 78d(a) (1988); to the International Trade Commission, 19 U.S.C. 1330(a) (1988); to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 42 U.S.C. 5841(b)(2) (1988); to the Federal Communications Commission, 47 U.S.C. 154(b)(5) (1988); and to the Interstate Commerce Commission, 49 U.S.C. 10301(b) (1988), to name a number of the boards and commissions with specifications regarding political balance under current law.

Congress power to establish independent, nonpartisan commissions and boards like these was upheld by the Supreme Court more than 50 years ago in another of the great appointments and removal decisions, Humphrey's Executor versus United States. While arguing that the President should be permitted to dismiss commissioners without cause, a position which the Court rejected, the Solicitor General conceded the long history of statutory requirements "that not more than a bare majority of the members of the Commission shall belong to the same political party." (295 U.S. 602, 615 (1935).)

Indeed, as far back as 1903, in Shurtleff versus United States, the Supreme Court reviewed an 1890 law that established Federal offices known as General Appraisers of Merchandise to be filled by Presidential appointees subject to the identical party balance requirement. The Court's unanimous opinion stated that there was "no doubt" of Congress' power to create an office including those statutory specifications. 189 U.S. 311, 313 (1903).

More recently, in 1989, the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the statute providing for the appointment of the members of the U.S. Sentencing Commission. The party challenging the Sentencing Reform Act of 1984 sought to present every challenge that, in good faith, could be raised on separation of powers grounds against the Sentencing Reform Act of 1984. But while the act expressly provides that no more than four of the seven members of the Sentencing Commission be of the same political party, a fact expressly noted in the Court's opinion, Mistretta v. United States, 109 S.Ct. 647, 652 (1989), no one imagined that a credible question could be asserted against the kind of provision to which the President now objects.

I have devoted some time to this historical exposition because history is important in constitutional law. What this history shows is that, for more than 200 years, beginning with the First Congress, Congress has enacted numerous Federal statutes prescribing qualifications required for appointees to Federal offices that Congress has created. The qualifications prescribed in such laws were completely analogous to those included with respect to the Udall Foundation Board.

Over that 200-year period, Presidents have approved and abided by provisions like those found in the Udall Foundation Act, and their constitutional advocates, the Solicitors General, have recognized the validity of such provisions in their presentations to the Supreme Court. Further, the Supreme Court has consistently noted the legitimacy of these provisions.

The Supreme Court has held, in such cases as Myers versus United States which I described earlier in these remarks, that, in interpreting the appointments clause, the decisions of the First Congress are entitled to great weight. That is because that First Congress had the responsibility to launch the Government and had among its members many of the delegates to the Convention that framed the Constitution. When such an early legislative decision, requiring construction of the appointments clause, has been acquiesced in by the political branches over a number of years, the Supreme Court has stated, that construction of the Constitution is fixed in law.

It would be difficult to imagine a stronger instance of an early legislative decision than the decision of the First Congress that the first Attorney General be "learned in the law." It would also be difficult to find a stronger instance of a consistent pattern that has been established and acquiesced in by the political branches than Congress' statutory prescription of qualifications for Federal offices, particularly, in the last century, in relation to nonpartisan boards and commissions.

We do not reinvent our Constitution every 4 years. No President, any more than a Member of Congress, or a judge, is free to discard 200 years of constitutional history and law and seek to create from scratch new principles about the organization of our Government under the Constitution.

With regard to this question, the construction of the Constitution has become fixed over the past 200 years.

As I noted at the beginning of these remarks, the President's statement on the Udall Foundation Act states that he will treat the provisions of the law on qualifications as precatory. There is no legal basis for the President to make that assertion or to act in that manner. Like every other citizen, the President must obey the law. Indeed, the President is charged under the Constitution with the duty faithfully to execute the laws of the United States. We are all entitled to expect, consequently, that in performing his appointment responsibilities under this statute the President will faithfully execute the law not because he chooses to follow its provisions on an advisory basis, but because it is the law, which it is his sworn duty to uphold. Moreover, if the President reflects on the history which I have described in these remarks, I believe he will be reassured that his compliance with the Udall Foundation Act would be firmly rooted in our Nation's constitutional experience.

I look forward to the President's nominations of qualified trustees, in accord with the specifications that are the law of the land, in order that the trustees may commence the important work of the Udall Foundation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished Republican leader be allocated as much time as I used since I believe I went over the time allotted to me.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Chair recognizes the minority leader.

J.C. "CHICK" TILLOTSON

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, throughout its history, Kansas has been fortunate to have citizens willing to dedicate themselves to improving their community and their State. Such a man was J.C. "Chick" Tillotson, of Norton, KS. Chick passed away at the age of 86 last month, leaving behind a rich record of public service.

Chick began his career in 1934, when he was elected Norton County attorney. Subsequently, he would serve four terms as president of the Kansas County Attorney's Association.

And, over the years, the people of Norton would time and again turn to Chick for leadership. 12 years on the Norton Community High School Board, three terms in the Kansas House of Representatives, two terms in the Kansas State Senate, where he served as chairman of the judiciary committee, and spearheaded the modernization of the Kansas court system, State president of the Native Sons of Kansas, vice president of the Kansas State Chamber of Commerce, the list goes on and on.

There is no doubt, Mr. President, that the Jayhawk State is for the better because of the difference that my friend Chick Tillotson made throughout his life.

My sympathies are extended to his wife, Maxine, his son John, his daughter, Carolyn, and the other family members and friends who were privileged to know this true servant of the public.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I reserve the remainder of my time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 106, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 106) setting forth the congressional budget for the United States Government for fiscal years 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, and 1997.

The Senate resumed consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Pending:

Exon amendment No. 1763, to reduce the fiscal year 1993 defense budget authority.

MAINTAIN A STRONG DEFENSE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, first let me make it clear what the issue is when we are talking about the amendment by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON]. Contrary to what has been stated by the proponents, this amendment is not about saving, it is not about budget discipline, and it is not about deficit reduction. This amendment is about spending and politics.

But I think the American people see this for what it really is—an attempt to slash defense this year in order to begin a new spending spree—next year.

And let us be clear, this amendment is not offered because the world is a safe place, but for partisan political gain.

I remind my colleagues that while it is easy to make tough speeches and vote against defense spending, they should be just as willing to accept responsibility for the impact that additional cuts will have on their own State and local economies. If we are going to cut more, we must accept the pain. And according to the Congressional Budget Office, these cuts will be very painful. So, let us face up to it. You can't have it both ways.

I am often amazed by some of the short memories in this body. To some, history must not exist. Not everyone in this Chamber remembers World War II. Some of us do. The last time I looked, it was still in the history books. For America, World War II began at Pearl Harbor.

But by 1945, America stood victorious and towered over the world like a colossus.

In 1945, we possessed the strongest military force ever assembled. Yet, in 5 short years, America was nearly defeated by tiny Korea. And during that conflict thousands of Americans—once again—paid the ultimate price for our unpreparedness.

Following Vietnam, when the political courage to maintain a strong defense waned once again, our military force became a basket case. Our ships couldn't put to sea, our Army was hollow, poorly trained, and underequipped.

But in 1980, Ronald Reagan sounded the wake-up call and the American people responded. They gave President Reagan a mandate to restore our confidence, our forces, our technology, and our security. True, it was expensive. But the simple fact is, it costs far more to rebuild from weakness than it does to maintain strength.

President Reagan proved that strength has its own dividend. Through strength we won the cold war, liberated Grenada and Panama, defeated communism, crushed Saddam Hussein, and now stand poised, just as in 1945, as the most powerful nation on earth.

Just 2 short years ago, we were deliberating similar budget proposals—most of which called for radical cuts in our national defense. At the time, the Berlin Wall had just fallen, the term "peace dividend" surfaced, Saddam Hussein was unknown to most of the world, and the rush was on to slash defense spending. But Saddam Hussein sounded another wake-up call, and this time, America was prepared.

Today, we have come full circle—as if Saddam Hussein had never invaded Kuwait and threatened the entire region—as if over 500,000 American men and women were not called upon to fight a war to protect American interests and defeat the fourth largest army in the world—as if Mikhail Gorbachev were not overthrown by hardliners and no one knew for sure who controlled the nuclear button—as if the world were not a dangerous and uncertain place. There seems to be some pretty short memories around here.

But the question before us is about the future. How certain are we about the course of world events? I will confess that I don't know. I cannot predict what will happen in the world next week, or next month, or 5 years down the road. Some of my colleagues think they can. Certainly the collapse of the Warsaw Pact and the breakup of the Soviet Empire are encouraging signs.

The threat to Europe is greatly diminished. Saddam Hussein's Army has been crushed. Democracy and freedom have won hard fought battles against communism.

Today, as in 1945, America stands as the world's superpower. And we are faced with many of the same choices and many of the same demands on our limited resources. Secretary Cheney and General Powell have correctly noted that each time America has faced this moment in history, we have gone the wrong direction. And every time, we have paid the price in both blood and treasure.

The President, Secretary Cheney, and General Powell have proposed a responsible build-down of our national defense. A build-down that is consistent with both the reduced threat and the great uncertainty that exists in this dangerous world.

I commend Senators Hollings and Domenici for their courage, leadership, and foresight. They have hammered out a solid defense program that makes the tough choices, but in my view, the right choices. This resolution strikes a balance between our pressing domestic needs, and our future security. We have the opportunity to do it right this time.

I support this budget resolution and encourage my colleagues to put partisan politics aside and reject these drastic cuts in our defense.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Twenty-three minutes remains for debate on the resolution.

The Senator from Nebraska controls that time.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I ask what time may be necessary at this time to be yielded off of the resolution itself?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator may yield time off the resolution, if he so chooses.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I just listened, with interest and with sadness, to the minority leader's explanation, or attempted explanation, of the Exon amendment before us. I sat through, yesterday, a whole series of diatribes that have totally falsely interpreted the Exon amendment. I listened yesterday in astonishment and amazement to some of those who this Senator has stood shoulder to shoulder with for the last 13 years to build up our national defense, and while they did not say so in so many words, the total accumulation of the remarks about the Exon amendment yesterday were not about the Exon amendment. It was about the philosophy of the build-down of our national security forces and interests.

You would have thought, Mr. President, that the Exon amendment was some wholesale slash or reduction in the amount of money we are spending on defense. I say it once again: The central feature of the Exon amendment is that it is one that is offered by one who has stood foursquare for a sound defense since he has been here, one that has worked very hard on the Armed Services Committee, Budget Committee, and elsewhere, and by one who on many occasions have found myself marching arm and arm in lockstep with many of the people who came to the floor yesterday to attack the Exon amendment and suggest that it be voted down. That was followed up on this morning by the minority leader.

Let me try and put it back into perspective. What we are going to vote on, hopefully this morning sometime, and I suspect, Mr. President, that in the end the Exon amendment will fail, primarily because either it is not understood, or the U.S. Senate does not want to understand it. All that the Exon amendment does is reduce by 2 percent, approximately, the President's scheduled outlay for fiscal 1993.

We should all understand, Mr. President, that the Exon amendment is not an irresponsible wholesale slashing of the defense budget. It reduces, basically, the President's figure for outlays for defense by about $4 to $5 billion over what the President has recommended. To put it another way, the defense budget is roughly in the range of $288 billion for 1 year. The President of the United States says that we can save about $5 billion. The Senator from Nebraska says we can save about $4 to $5 billion on top of that out of a $288 billion budget.

Those among us, regardless of our experience in life, whether we have been a farmer, businessman, a housewife, if we have ever had a checking account, certainly know that 9 times out of 10, you can save 2 percent for a year, if you have to. But, no, not this time, they say. A well-respected Member of the Senate on this side of the aisle, yesterday, said that, well, he realized that the Senator from Nebraska was trying to do the right thing, and he realized that we had to make some reduction in the national defense numbers. But he just felt that the way the Senator from Nebraska was going about it was the wrong way. In other words, he said, there are different ways to land an airplane.

There sure are. If you will just step outside of this body, you will see what the people back home are saying. You will listen to what the people are saying that are listening to this broadcast on television. If you get the feel of the American people, they are trying to tell us to wake up. They are looking at the U.S. Senate today, and I am very fearful that once again, they are going to be keenly disappointed, if indeed they understand what the Senator from Nebraska is trying to do, and that is only to make a tiny, tiny microscopic reduction, 2 percent below what the President has recommended. Yet, I have been clearly cast, Mr. President, as one of those who simply wants to wreck the defense budget. The minority leader said something this morning about "this is politics," something about the fact that this is just more of the old same spending game.

I reject that. It is simply not true. Why cannot we put it in perspective? Even the little bit of saving that the Senator from Nebraska is proposing in this amendment goes to only one thing and that is reduction of the deficit and, hopefully, the national debt. It is only a small step in the right direction but it is about time we start.

I suspect, Mr. President, we are not going to start. Any time you start dealing with the ramifications of the military-industrial complex which is still alive and well and I guess today we will be taking that thermometer and putting it in the mouth of the U.S. Senate and see whether or not the temperature has risen enough. If the pressure has been brought forth vividly enough on the Members of the U.S. Senate, whether they be Democrats or Republicans, that they might finally wake up to the realities of the situation and at least say that the Senator from Nebraska has not been, other than making a small, small dent of 2 percent below what the President had wanted, and if we want to, we can do that without making wholesale charges and wholesale statements about the fact that we are trying and must be worried about returning to a hollow army.

The Senator from Nebraska does not want that and I will do everything that I can to see that that does not happen. But if it is a choice between the rhetoric that has been exhibited on this floor by Democrats and some Republicans alike, I would simply say that we are not being realistic and it is about time the U.S. Senate be realistic on defense spending.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERRY). Who yields time?

The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the senator from Nebraska, if I could just state one word, is quite right. The Senator from Nebraska has offered for this body's consideration an amendment which represents really an exceedingly modest reduction in military spending. As he said, it is a reduction of about 2 percent below the President's mark in outlays. According to my mathematics I think it is a little less than a 2-percent reduction, slightly over a 1-percent reduction, of the President's outlays in military spending.

All of a sudden, it is just as if someone opened the petcock on a dam. People are coming out of the woodwork. The lobby out here I am told is filled with liaison people from the Defense Department, who are paid by the taxpayers, out there lobbying the representatives of the taxpayers on taxpayers' time not to reduce the military budget.

Is that not ironic?

The Senator from Nebraska is simply trying to make a statement here that we desperately need to reduce the budget deficit and he is simply asking that a little more than 1 percent be taken out of the military budget below what the President asked.

When we look at this military budget for fiscal year 1993 under the President's request, we have budget authority of $182 billion, and under the spending curve of the administration by fiscal year 1997 it will still be in excess of $280 billion if memory serves me correctly.

I think the Senator from Nebraska is to be commended for trying to make some reduction and showing some concern about this deficit. We hear all kinds of speeches here on the floor of this body about the dangers of the Federal deficit. I saw one very eloquent statement that was made here on the floor in opposition to taking down the walls between military and domestic spending. That statement really against the deficit was so eloquent and so persuasive it even appeared on the op-ed of the Washington Post. That Senator felt very strongly about reducing the deficit when he was speaking in terms of letting us keep the wall up between domestic and military spending because if you take down that wall, they are going to want to take some of this military spending and rather than applying it to the deficit reduction, they are going to want to spend it for domestic needs.

Let us see how those Senators feel this morning when we vote. Are they still going to feel that strongly about the deficit? Are they going to still want to take that military saving and put it on the deficit reduction as they said they did when they voted against taking down the walls between military spending and domestic spending? Or are they going to obey the siren call of the military-industrial complex as Senator EXON referred to a moment ago, the same military-industrial complex that a distinguished Republican President warned this country about when he left office in 1958, Gen. Dwight David Eisenhower?

President Dwight David Eisenhower was the first to use the term "military-industrial complex" and he knew what it was about. He knew what it was because his whole career had either been in it or on the periphery of it and he served with great distinction. But we developed a military-industrial complex during the 1950's really following our intervention and our buildup in the Korean war. It is with us today and it is a very powerful thing.

Let us see if our Senators who were so concerned just a week ago, a week and a half ago about making sure that savings in the military budget be allocated to deficit reduction. Let us see if they are concerned today about taking those same savings and allocating the deficit reduction as they were a week-and-a-half ago.

Yes, there is a network of groups, industries, who are interested in keeping the military budget high, and I do not disparage them for that. They make their living out of the manufacture of weapons and weapons systems, and many fine people are employed on the assembly line. We are concerned about what is going to happen to them as these operations shut down.

But for decades we have heard the argument that we have to keep military spending high to protect the national security, to protect us against the threat of that colossus of the Soviet Union that has hundreds of thousands of troops and thousands of tanks cocked, primed, and ready to go in Eastern Europe to overrun our allies there, overrun our troops there. That was the justification.

Now that superpower is dead. It has fallen from its own weight. It collapsed economically and I think economic historians will say primarily as a result of spending itself into bankruptcy on its military.

Now that that has collapsed, we now hear the statement we cannot reduce this military spending because it will cost too many people their jobs. So now the old cold warriors are reduced to saying that the military is a jobs program, a WPA Program, perhaps.

All of the studies indicate that a spending of dollars in the military or for military goods is a very inefficient and ineffective and very non-cost-efficient way of producing jobs.

So are we to go on down the path now and justify the military spending on the basis that it is a jobs bill? I am starting to hear some of that around here. If that is the case, let us get it out.

The Office of Technology Assessment, however, in their study, a very learned study, very exhaustive study entitled "After the Cold War," states:

Military spending is an expensive, unreliable, and unfocused way of providing support to technologies and industries of great commercial importance.

I do not think that military spending is a very effective way of creating jobs from the point of view of giving the taxpayers a real maximum return on their dollar, Mr. President.

We have had a lot of discussion in this country over the period of the last few years, as we have become concerned about our inability to compete as effectively as we would wish to with our trading partners and trading adversaries across the Pacific and across the Atlantic: Japan, Germany, France, et cetera.

There has been a lot of discussion about an industrial policy, a lot of statements and discussion on one side or the other. Some favor it; some do not; some want a modification. But let us face it. We have had an industrial policy in this country since 1951 or 1952, and it has been run by the Pentagon. It is the industrial policy of employing people and manufacturing weapons, weapons of war. That has been the industrial policy of the United States of America.

I think it is time we curbed that industrial policy—I think it is time to start letting it curb down in response to what is going on in the world. If this Government and if some of my colleagues in this body really want to continue an industrial policy, as we have been doing for the past 40, 45 years, let us take that industrial policy out of the hands of the Pentagon and let us put it somewhere else so that we can stop planning and manufacturing the most exotic, sophisticated, and effective—I might say—weapons in the world.

This industrial policy has worked, I say to my friend from New Mexico. Using the Pentagon's industrial policy and their planners, harnessing the engineering and scientific genius of this country, we have manufactured the most effective weapons in the world. The war against Iraq was nothing more than a showcase for American military technology. Nobody comes even close to us. So, the industrial policy of the Pentagon has been effective in producing the finest.

Now, some would argue it has not been very cost-efficient, it has not been very cost-effective, and there have been a lot of cost overruns and a lot of waste in the process. But in the end result, they produced exceedingly fine weapons. Now, the time has come to put that Pentagon or military industrial policy behind us. And the time has come now to pursue a different kind of industrial policy, an industrial policy that will make the United States once again the leader, the leader in manufacturing, the leader in scientific innovation that can be used to produce products, value-added products, to be sold around the world, products that can be used to produce other products.

So let me say to my friend from Nebraska—I see he has left the floor now—I think he is doing the country a great service in coming out here and saying, "My colleagues, let us reduce this military budget another 1, 1½ percent. Let us apply it to the deficit. Let us reduce some of that budget authority so in the outyears some of these funds that would have been going to produce new, highly sophisticated, exotic weaponry that nobody needs or wants, let us use that to reduce our budget deficit and make ourselves economically and fiscally stronger."

Well, Mr. President, I will not go on. The distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. COHEN] has been waiting here for some time to speak, and I now yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute off the resolution just to see if we can do some house-keeping in terms of the amount of time we want to use.

Senator COHEN wants to speak. I gather he wants to speak about 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. COHEN. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I say to the chairman, I have Senator COHEN, Senator STEVENS, Senator GRAMM, and Senator SYMMS who wish to speak. None of them want to speak a long time. I wonder if we might determine an outside amount of time, after which we will vote on this issue. I would accommodate with plugging in my side with a given amount of time.

I am not trying to cut off debate, but there are 20 amendments, and I think they deserve some time.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from New Mexico. We have to get on with this resolution, no question about it. We spent all day yesterday debating this amendment.

Frankly, I know of no one on this side of the aisle that I am aware of that wishes to speak further, other than the distinguished President pro tempore. I know that he wishes to speak this morning. I am not advised as to the length of his address, but I think it will probably be fairly substantial in content—I know it will be very substantial in content—and he may want to speak for some length of time; I do not think an inordinate amount of time.

I cannot tell my friend at this point how long the Senator does wish to speak. He did express to me the interest last evening of not being bound by a time constraint, although he was not going to speak at undue length.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I obviously do not want to try to put anyone under any kind of time burdens that are not reasonable. Frankly, I hope that you might ask your friend and mine, the distinguished leader of the Appropriations Committee, Senator BYRD, approximately how much time he may wish. I think once we have that, we could set an outside time and we could accommodate our Senators within a reasonable amount here.

Mr. SASSER. I think that is an excellent suggestion, I say to my friend from New Mexico, and I will proceed on that basis.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield up to 15 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. COHEN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine is recognized for a period not to exceed 15 minutes.

Mr. COHEN. I thank the Senator for yielding.

The Senator from Tennessee recently made the comment that we have had an industrial policy in this country for many, many years and that is the making of weapons of war. I would respectfully like to dissent from that judgment. We have had a policy of keeping this Nation safe and prosperous and free. There has been an assumption that, because the Berlin Wall is down, because the Soviet Union has disintegrated, somehow the world is a much more stable and safe place for all of us to exist in.

It has been said that the Persian Gulf war was simply a showcase for our weapons. I would like to ask the Senator from Tennessee and anyone else what our fighting men and women might have thought; whether it was simply a showcase for weapons. What would have been the reaction if we had not invested in the Stealth fighter, if we did not have the cruise missile technology that was demonstrated? Without our superior technology, how many men and women would have died in that so-called showcase war? In my judgment, Saddam Hussein would still be standing astride the oil reserves in Saudi Arabia and we would have a crisis of greater dimension than anyone would like to admit at this point.

The Senator from Nebraska, who has a history of standing for a strong national defense—I have worked with him closely for many years and in no way wish to be critical of his approach to this at this time—but he said something which I think requires rebuttal. He said the President's budget is an inherently dishonest snow job and that he sees it as his mission to drag DOD, kicking and screaming, into fiscal responsibility.

I think what is dishonest is the notion that you can cut dollars out of any budget, but this budget in particular, and not touch the major weapons programs, not touch manpower, the Guard, the Reserves, the Active Forces, and not hurt national defense by cutting programs that have not yet reached the stage of high-rate production.

I would like to hear from the Senators from Connecticut and Rhode Island, or Massachusetts, even, what they think about cutting out the Seawolf, in terms of whether that is going to hurt or not hurt our national security, whether that will undermine our industrial production capacity.

So the suggestion that was just floated is that we can have a "2 percent solution"—just take 2 percent out of this bloated budget. There are many ways you can achieve it. For some it is easy. You can simply reduce secondary items. We have had some testimony that there is excessive purchasing on the part of some of the branches of our services. And that is true. But you have to be careful about secondary items.

There was, I assume, an excessive amount of 16-inch shells on hand at the time of the Persian Gulf war for our battleships. I assume there probably was, if you made an analysis, an excessive amount of body bags on hand. I assume we had an excessive amount of cots for our soldiers to sleep on prior to the Persian Gulf war. And I am told that they were used up within a period of about 2 or 3 weeks, even though they may have been stored in some warehouse and been classified by GAO or someone else as being excessive.

We are living in a world of great change, rapid change, unpredictable change. Think back just a couple of years ago when we were celebrating what was taking place in Poland, when the Polish people went to the polls and they overwhelmingly elected members of Solidarity to lead them in the future. A few months ago we saw something quite different. A few months ago we saw that those Poles who even bothered to go to the polls voted in a combination of democrats and demagogues and nationalists and religionists—and a degree of cynicism has begun to seep into their own electoral system.

Boris Yeltsin stirred the pride and imagination of so many people last year when he stood atop a tank and shook his fist at those who would seek to overthrow the revolution that he has been leading. Today he is standing astride a Republic, a country on the verge of total disintegration, of material scarcity. And if he is waving his fist today, he must be wondering what the sound of one fist waving is.

Vaclav Havel came out of prison, walked on a velvet carpet into the Presidency, claimed he was going to halt the sale of weapons internationally and finds, 2 years later, that is not quite an achievable objective on his part. And I want to say something else about Havel. It has been suggested that our policy has simply been to make weapons of war. I recall when Havel came to a joint session of Congress, he stood at that podium and he said, "Thank you, America. Thank you for all that you have borne over the years, the burdens, the taxes, the handicaps that you have had to suffer in helping to preserve freedom, helping to promote freedom. Thank you for measuring up to your responsibility."

I think those who argue that we are not living in a more stable world are the same ones—let me clarify that—some of the same ones who would have allowed Saddam Hussein to go unchallenged militarily for another year or so. They now come to the floor and say how lousy our Patriot missile is. That was yesterday's attack. The Patriot missile did not achieve what the Army or the Pentagon said it achieved in terms of kills. They denigrate the Patriot in order to denigrate the SDI Program. The Patriot was not 100 percent perfect.

But go tell that to the Israelis. Ask them whether they would have been better off with no Patriots at all. Let all the Scuds come in and let them fend for themselves. That is the argument that is being made—the Patriot was not good, it was not perfect, therefore we should remain naked unto our enemies, to their Scuds or to their ICBM's.

A few years ago, there was an effort made to prohibit any testing of cruise missiles in our State; a very controversial measure. A referendum was passed, as a matter of fact, to prohibit the Navy from testing any cruise missiles in our State. People were motivated by the best of intentions. They did not like cruise missiles flying over the State of Maine, even the remote parts of Maine under secure conditions.

But there was another objective. It was not stated, but there was another objective, too: If you could just prevent the testing of the cruise missile, then you would eventually prevent its continued deployment. If you cannot test it, if you cannot determine accurately what needs to be done to make it effective, then obviously you are not going to put it in the hands of our men and women who are out there in the frontlines. And the rationale, of course, is if you do not have the weapons, you will not go to war. And that is the solution on the part of some. If you are ill-prepared or unprepared to fight a war, you will simply not get into wars. That is the way to keep the United States out of entanglements.

I think that is very shortsighted. The best way to try to avoid wars is to try to negotiate diplomatically with other nations, but, in the final analysis, we better be prepared to fight the wars that cannot be prevented.

This amendment offered by my friend from Nebraska has been called a forward-looking amendment. While others like myself, who are charged with having caved in to the lobbies that are said to exist out in the hall out there—that I do not know, no one has contacted me, no one has lobbied me from any defense industry—we are supposed to be looking in the rearview mirror. We are turned around looking at the past, while everyone who is supporting this amendment is forward looking—into the future.

I think you have to turn around and look at the past. I think we have to hold up the lamp of history to find out where we have been to make sure we do not go back there again. We are in the baseball season, and people talk about seventh inning stretches or a stretch from the mound. I would equate this with a Nebraska stretch, because the Exon amendment would simply stretch out a number of those procurement programs, those which are other than each service's big 10. And, as a result of stretching out those programs by preventing any procurement line item from increasing, it means we are going to have low rates of production that are notoriously inefficient. We went through that back in the eighties. But if we listen to the siren calling, "Do not fully fund the program, stretch it out," we will have low rates of production, and, ultimately, it is going to cost the taxpayer more money.

Some of the stretchouts would be for the laser hell fire missile, the medium tactical vehicles, heavy tactical vehicles, the pedestal-mounted Stinger, the JSTARS airborne radar system, and many other programs.

They get no increase in funding; just keep them at current levels. To highlight the folly of this approach, I would like to quote from the 1987 CBO study, "Effects on Weapons Procurement Stretch-Outs on Costs and Schedules":

Buying proven weapons at low rates of production makes poor use of industrial resources; it also adds to weapon costs, discourages potential suppliers and delays the flow of new technology to military forces.

We have been down this road before. We have stretched out systems before. We have increased the cost to the taxpayers of these systems, which we have found to be effective in wartime. So I think at a time when we are seeing the shrinking of budgets, we should do everything in our capability to minimize the cost to the taxpayers in terms of efficiency, and this amendment would do precisely the opposite.

I want to say that the Senator from Nebraska is not the only one who has been in the forefront of trying to have a military defense capability at responsible levels of funding. As a matter of fact, several years ago, I joined with Senator MCCAIN in such an effort. We were very critical of the Pentagon's budget as being unrealistic in the face of dramatic changes in the world. We proposed much deeper cuts in the defense budgets, and we did so by targeting specific programs. In April of 1990, we set forth a proposal to reorient the military to a post-cold-war world, significantly shrink the defense budget, and drastically scale down our weapons-buying plan.

I believe the administration has made a good faith effort to go in exactly that direction with this proposed budget. I think we can probably cut more in future years, but we cannot cut and should not cut any faster.

So this approach that has been taken by the Senator from Nebraska I would call a procrustean approach, a procrustean amendment. It does not matter what size your body is. It has to fit into the bed that is being fashioned by the Budget Committee. If you are shorter than the bed, we will stretch out your limbs to fit the bed. If your body happens to be bigger than the bed, we will just lop off your legs and your arms, and you will conform to the size of that bed.

We are told it takes great courage to cut off those arms and legs. I think the courage is less than what the advocates suggest because you can stand up here, you can beat your chest and say you stood tall against the military industrial complex. The Senator from Nebraska says you can cut around the margins, touch those programs that have not yet reached full rate production levels. The Senator from Michigan says we can cut the secondary items. The Senator from Arkansas says let us cut SDI—he is opposed to that—the Patriot failed, so get rid of SDI.

I simply want to suggest to my colleagues, if we shorten the bed in this 2-percent fashion or 1.1 or 1.5 percent, as the Senator from Tennessee suggests, and we send it off to those of us who are going to be wielding the knives and the axes on the Armed Services Committee and the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, do not be heard to complain when your base is closed. Do not be heard to complain when we terminate a submarine program. And do not be heard to complain when we start to terminate the service of those who are in our Guard and Reserve units. It is easy to stand up here on the floor and say it is only a 2-percent solution, come on, everybody can deal with 2 percent. It is easy until you get down to the details.

We can make specific cuts when it comes before the Armed Services Committee, but we do so based upon professional military judgments presented to the committee. We work weeks, we work months into the year and we are the ones who are charged with the responsibility of making the kinds of tradeoffs that are going to be necessary to preserve a strong national defensive system. Not this way, just take 2 percent off and go deal with it.

I think we can come in below the President's 5-year proposal. I think we will come in below the President's 5-year proposal. But we should not engage in the kind of behavior that says "I stood tall, I am the one who is fighting the military industrial complex" and then the moment the cuts start coming down, rush to the well to complain or get on the phone to the Secretary of Defense, "Save my base, save my submarine, save our Guard and Reserve units." I think that is the kind of action we do not want. I hope this amendment will be defeated. I can pledge to my colleague from Nebraska that I will work with him on the Senate Armed Services Committee to achieve a responsible military budget.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. EXON. I yield myself time from my time remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. SASSER. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. How much time does the Senator from Nebraska have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has just about 23 minutes.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized for such time as he uses.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I listened with keen interest and appreciation to the remarks of my colleague from the State of Maine who I have had the pleasure of working with ever since I came on the Armed Services Committee. In most instances, I think we have agreed more than we have disagreed.

I simply want to correct one part of his remarks from my perspective so that he understands what I was saying. He indicated in his remarks that I said that the President's budget was insincere, dishonest, and so forth and so on. I will simply say that I do not believe that is the right context. I will quote from my remarks as of the RECORD yesterday wherein I say:

I am convinced that the defense budget can be cut further, it can be cut significantly and it can be cut without pink slipping troops by the tens of thousands, as many in the administration would have Congress believe if we dare cut a penny below the President's numbers.

Continuing the quote immediately thereafter:

There is an artful, emotionally charged, yet inherently dishonest snow job going on as the future of our Nation's military is debated. The Bush defense plan is based upon the flawed premise that the administration's proposed 6-year $50 billion cut from defense spending cannot be further reduced without causing harm to the national security.

I therefore submit, Mr. President, that the reference with regard to inherently dishonest has specifically to do with the way that the Pentagon and, yes, the administration, is falsely attacking the Exon amendment with regard to what it would do with regard to reducing troops, to reducing bases, and all of these other things that have been on the floor of the Senate.

Time and time again, as example of what would happen, the dire consequences of the Exon amendment that would cut somewhere between 1 and 2 percent from the President's numbers—all I am trying to emphasize is, argue if you will that we cannot cut 1 or 2 percent. Argue if we will that we should do it later rather than now. Argue if you will that I think we can do it sometime but not now. I ask, why not now? This is the budget resolution. This is where we put in the caps. This, indeed, is the time to do it. When we come to our authorization process and our appropriations process, indeed, we will likely cut more.

Time and time again, that has been hinted but I think it has been said forthrightly and directly by the Senator from Maine just a few moments ago. I guess what they are saying is let the wise men decide how to do it and when to do it later. Exactly. That is what the budget resolution is all about and once again we should understand that all we are doing with all of the numbers that we have been citing and suggesting is that this is just a way that it can be done because anyone who understands the budget process should understand that there is no way that the Budget Committee or individual Members on the floor of the Senate, by any kind of action, can protect for sure, can cut for sure or can say where the money is going to go.

Our fundamental duty here is to set an overall limit on what we can spend on national defense. All that the Exon amendment does is reduce somewhere between 1 and 2 percent from the President's suggested numbers, and by the law, if that takes place, after the appropriations and after the authorizers get through with it, whatever money is left would go to reduce the deficit.

In sum and substance, that is it. If you think we can cut 1 or 2 percent below what the President suggested, if you can cut 1 or 2 percent below a $283-billion annual expenditure—if you do not think we can cut below that, if you do not think the people of the United States want to cut below that, then by all means vote against the Exon amendment. On the other hand, if you believe it is reasonable and proper and if you believe even someone, a fifth grader in arithmetic, could probably figure out of 288, yes, we might be able to save 1 or 2 percent without the whole thing collapsing, then vote for the Exon amendment.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SYMMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SYMMS. I yield myself 10 minutes off the bill.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes off the bill to Senator SYMMS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is recognized for 10 minutes off the bill.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I hope I can complete my remarks in less than 10 minutes, but to somewhat summarize what was pointed out yesterday on the floor, Mr. President, this entire debate is based on a faulty premise. When the distinguished majority leader, the distinguished chairman of the committee, and others say we can fix out problems with the budget by taking money out of the defense budget, it is a faulty premise.

The one part of the Federal budget that is under control is the defense budget. The Senator from Maine just made, I think, an excellent statement on this subject and how further cuts will impact people.

I have the same experience as the Senator from Maine. People recognize as shown in charts that the Senator from Idaho showed yesterday, that the defense budget has been reduced since 1985 by 37 percent while mandatory spending programs have gone up by 33 percent.

Any rational person, it seems to me, who wants to address the problems of the budget would say defense spending is under control. There still is a threat in the world. The military has tried to evaluate the threat assessment and analyze what we need. That is exactly what General Powell and Secretary Cheney and the other chiefs of the services have done. They tried to go from the ground up and figure the mission that respective services will have to carry out during the next 25-year period, then try to build a defense that can fulfill that mission.

Now that the defense budget is under control, we have to get the rest of the budget in order. The domestic budgets have gone up, military has gone down, and mandatory programs are going through the roof.

I just want to give my colleagues some facts to back up that general premise. We are debating an amendment that, in my opinion, is not the most important amendment.

I do not happen to agree with my friend from Nebraska about his amendment. I think the premise of it is wrong. It misses the point of where this debate should be.

This debate ought to be focused on the big part of the budget. As I said yesterday, when Willie Sutton was caught robbing the banks, he was asked: "Why do you rob the banks?" He said: "That is where the money is." If we want to do something for the American people to fix this budget, we need to look at mandatory spending, Mr. President, entitlements and interest on the debt. Sixty-five percent of the budget is consumed by mandatory spending and interest on the debt.

I want to point out some facts. Outlays for the defense budget will be $40 billion less in the next 5 years than the previous 5 years. That is $40 billion in real dollars. Outlays for domestic spending will increase $200 billion in the next 5 years over the previous 5-year period. That is under the current budget that is before us. Entitlement programs will, in the next 5 years, cost $1 trillion over the past 5 years. Interest on the debt will be approximately $300 billion.

Adding all of these categories over the next 5 years, it is $1.5 trillion in U.S. Government spending increases in this budget proposal. It has nothing to do with defense, not a bit to do with defense, Mr. President, nothing. It is nondefense spending that is escalating, skyrocketing.

So when people say: Oh, we are going to cut the defense budget to try to fix this budget, it is pure nonsense Mr. President. That is what it is. It is nonsense. It is unrealistic. It sends a terrible message to the young men and women in the military who are under contract. It is not good for the future to recruit the kind of young men and women who were so successful in Desert Storm and then turn our back on them.

It is a tremendous risk that we put the country in by accepting the premise that is being debated today. In my view, what the Senate should be doing is spending this time debating the 65 percent of the budget that is mandatory spending and interest on the debt. We should be complimenting those people who run the military organizations of the country for the job they have done to shoulder the responsibility to have an organized, methodical build-down of our defense capability. We need to remember we are already talking about losing over 1 million people out of our military organization, civilian and uniformed personnel, and that is already a big chunk to absorb in the coming 4 or 5 years.

If you add all these categories—I want to say again it is $1.5 trillion of Government spending in the next 5 years—it has nothing to do with defense. The budget authority for 1990 offered up $180 billion in defense reductions.

To date, we have realized $165 billion in budget authority savings in defense and we will get the remainder in fiscal year 1993. Other discretionary accounts cannot show these savings and the deficit has increased dramatically, but it is not due to defense spending.

I want to say again there will be a reduction in civilian and military personnel in the neighborhood of 1.2 million people. One million people in the defense-related independent industries are being displaced in these reductions.

Finally, Mr. President, the budget process does not require that domestic accounts choose and prioritize programs. The defense account lives with a ceiling and prioritizes what must be spent. The Senator from Maine made an excellent point. What we are talking about is sawing off the feet of the person so they will fit in the bed. It just does not make any sense. It begs reason.

Mr. President, I want to say again between 1985 and 1997, defense spending will have declined 37 percent in real terms. At that point, Mr. President, defense will only be 3.4 percent of GNP, the lowest of any time since prior to Pearl Harbor and prior to the Korean war.

If we want to cut the defense budget more, I would only remind my colleagues that this is nothing new. It is not new. We have repeated this mistake time and time again in the history of this great Republic. As soon as there is an appearance that maybe we would not have to have a threat to us, everyone wants to dismantle our capability to defend the country. As soon as it happens, some problem arises somewhere and we lose unnecessary casualties due to unpreparedness.

By 1993, the defense budget share will only be 16.3 percent of this budget. Under this plan, and if we vote to adopt the Exon amendment, will make the percentage lower, and, it will be reduced to real terms to an even lower level by 1997.

Mr. President, I think this is a tragic mistake for this Congress, and this Senate to waste all of this time on this amendment that has been debated, and debated. I have heard my colleagues say it takes courage to vote for the Exon amendment.

That is nonsense. What it takes is courage to stand up to the popular appeal that people have to cut the defense budget. The facts are if the story was straight to the American people, they would tell us, "Why don't you look where the money is, Mr. Senator, and Mr. Congressman? Why don't you look where the deficit is really coming from the mandatory entitlement programs? Why don't you reform those programs and get the budget back in balance instead of making some noise that you can cut another $5 billion out of the defense budget which will hurt in real terms in our defense capabilities."

I made the point yesterday. We now have three marine expeditionary forces at sea. They were in two places in Africa, they were in Iraq rescuing Kurds last year, and they were in Bangladesh rescuing people from the floods. Any further reduction in the defense budget could jeopardize the current three MEF's and require that they be cut back.

What is happening here is this is an unnecessary, unneeded, risky cut that should not be made. It will be harmful to the peace and freedom of the world and of our own security.

I urge my colleagues to vote down the Exon amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, might I inquire?

First, let me indicate that I hope everyone in the Senate knows that while this is a very important amendment, it is not the only amendment. I am looking at a list that says there are 20 Senators who want to offer amendments. They deserve an opportunity. Their amendments are important. I do not know how much more we can say about this amendment. But, clearly, if Senators want to add some additional discussion and debate, I would like to know how much time remains first on the amendment, either in favor of it or opposed to it, if any.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the amendment, the Chair would advise the Senator from New Mexico, there are 16 minutes 51 seconds for the proponent.

Mr. DOMENICI. Is there any time on the opposition on the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no time in opposition.

Mr. DOMENICI. How much time is left in toto on the resolution, including remaining time on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is 16½ hours remaining.

Mr. DOMENICI. That is about equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is about equally divided.

Mr. DOMENICI. Senators should know that seems like a lot of time. We would not have much time on each amendment if we do not get on to voting on this.

Having said that, I understand Senator CHAFEE desires to speak. I also add that Senator STEVENS desires to speak and Senator GRAMM desires to speak. We will inform them to try to be brief. I understand in addition on the other side the chairman of the Appropriations Committee wishes to speak.

Mr. SASSER. Yes. We would be pleased to let Senator CHAFEE move ahead and then perhaps move to the distinguished President pro tempore. If those are all the speakers, I think we can go on for a vote.

May I inquire of my friend from New Mexico? Does he have any other speakers other than the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes. I have Senator STEVENS, Senator GRAMM, and Senator HOLLINGS. I talked to Senator STEVENS. He wishes about 10 minutes. Senator GRAMM will clearly do his in 10 minutes. I have not talked to Senator HOLLINGS yet. I would think once Senator CHAFEE is finished, we are talking in the neighborhood of 30 to 45 minutes.

Mr. SASSER. I say to my friend, why do we not proceed with Senator CHAFEE and just move along as fast as we can.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, before I yield, I would like to take 1 minute on the resolution, and then I yield up to 15 minutes to Senator CHAFEE.

Mr. President, I want to repeat an argument that I am not so sure I made as well as I should. There can be a lot of reasons for not wanting to further cut defense, but I would like to just remind the Senate and the American people that history reveals that the United States, this marvelous country that goes to war for ideals and principles—we did it in the First World War, Second World War, the Korean war, the Vietnam war, the immediate past war in the Middle East. We have a propensity that history reveals to think that once we have prevailed in the immediate controversy that we build down America's military might as rapidly as we can only to find that each and every time it was a mistake. We found that within 3 to 5 to 6 years this very complex world has changed again, and America to be a player in the world, involved in order, peace, and democracy, has to build back rapidly.

Frankly, I do not believe there can be an argument based on fiscal policy and deficits—and I think I know as much about where they are really coming from as anyone in this place—there cannot be an argument based on fiscal policy that we should rapidly cut defense more than the Budget Committee recommended.

As a matter of fact, if we do, we will spend more money in the next decade or so when the world gets troublesome, wars break out, and revolutions break out. We will build back certain aspects, and we will spend more than we will ever save in expediting the reduction in a disorderly manner.

Having said that, I yield to Senator CHAFEE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHELBY). The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished floor manager.

Mr. President, I would like to discuss the reasons why I am voting against the Exon amendment which would cut defense spending below the levels recommended by the Budget Committee by $7.6 billion.

Mr. President, last week I spoke for and voted for the provision that all savings from cuts in defense be used to reduce the deficit. I believe this is right. These are the so-called firewalls.

Why not carry this even further? Why not cut defense deeper and thus reduce the deficit by even more?

Mr. President, let us examine the budget before us, and what it proposes to do. We are currently in this year spending $295.6 billion. The budget before us for next year—that is what we are debating—proposes spending $281 billion, a cut from this year's figure of $14.6 billion.

I might also note that is $1 billion below what the President is recommending. Is this a magic figure? Could it possibly be cut some more? Perhaps it could, without causing too much turmoil or without significantly affecting the readiness of our forces.

But could it be cut by the sum that the Senator from Nebraska is suggesting without being extremely harmful? In other words, could it be cut by an additional $7.6 billion? I do not think so. Why?

Mr. President, the only way rapid savings in dollars can be obtained is to cut people. That is the way we save money—cut people, cut our military forces, and cut our civilian employees. Yet today, we have fewer men and women in uniform than at any time since the Korean war.

Plans have been made to cut these forces even more as we head to the date of 1995. By that time, 1 million military and civilian personnel will have lost their jobs since 1990. Over 700 military installations worldwide will have been closed. Our forces in Europe will have been reduced by over 50 percent. The Army has already eliminated four divisions and will eliminate two more within the next 2 years.

By 1995, the Navy will have 450 ships. Remember that magic term, 600 ships? We were once going to build a 600-ship Navy.

So much for the 600-ship Navy. There will be 450 ships. The Air Force will cut 1,000 aircraft from its inventory. That is why we have the ironic situation of trained military pilots manning desks, because there are not enough planes for them to fly. Defense, as previously has been pointed out, will be 3.4 percent of gross national product, which is amazing. I had the privilege of working in the Pentagon in the late 1960's and early 1970's, and defense spending was consistently 8 percent of GNP. Under the Budget Committee plan, defense will consume 3.4 percent of gross national product, the lowest figure since before Pearl Harbor.

Mr. President, the Secretary of Defense, and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, have constantly stressed, warned, if you will, that the draw down of the military forces must be done in an orderly manner. They cannot—they, the ones we have entrusted with our military forces—have combat ready units if we have a pell-mell reduction of our troops.

Mr. President, is this anything to be worried about? Well, we have seen it happen. Let me just review a little history, if I might. The United States ended World War II in the summer of 1945, with the most powerful military machine the world has ever seen. That force was dismantled with no consideration for the future. No one could stem the rush back to civilian life of 11 million men in uniform. That force was just reduced to a shadow of its former self over a period of some 9 months.

The army was so weakened, that 5 years after being the most powerful army the world has ever seen, that army was driven by a third world country, the entire length of the Korean peninsula to a tiny perimeter where they hung on by their fingernails in an area called Pusan. As in those post-World War II years, voices now raise the song that there are no present or future threats to the world, that the former Soviet Union is fractured into a series of chaotic enemies, chiefly marked by poverty.

Mr. SASSER. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CHAFEE. Yes.

Mr. SASSER. I listen very carefully when my friend from Rhode Island talks about Korea, because the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island was in the marine corps, if I am not mistaken, during Korea. I was too young to serve there, but my father was a officer, as was the Senator from Rhode Island, and serve many years in the South Pacific, and was almost activated to Korea along with some of his fellow officers; and some of them lost their lives in Korea.

But is my friend from Rhode Island aware that there is a difference here between the almost total demobilization that occurred after World War II and what we are discussing here today? Under the proposal advanced by the administration, in the 5-year period leading up to 1993, in current dollars, we will spend $1.487 trillion in military. Under the administration's proposal, in the 5-year period from 1993 to 1997, we will also spend approximately $1.430 trillion, which is about $50 billion below, in current dollars, what we spend in the 5-year period leading up to 1993.

I simply say that to make my friend aware, or is my friend aware, that we still are going to maintain a very substantial military, as opposed to the total demobilization that occurred after World War II? My friend is correct, and I remember the dark days of Korea. This, I think, is a little different situation. I wanted to know if my friend was aware of those figures: Approximately $1.480 trillion in the 5 years leading up to 1993, and approximately $1.427 trillion, in the 5 years of 1993 to 1997.

Mr. CHAFEE. Yes. If I might continue the conversation with the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, the figures he is quoting are the figures that the President has proposed. I subscribe to the President's program. I am not suggesting that the program that the President has suggested, nor the program that has come out of the Budget Committee, is going to create this total chaos that we saw at the end of World War II. That is not the point. What we are debating here is a resolution that would further cut, what the Budget Committee has proposed. That is where I worry.

Mr. SASSER. Is my friend aware that even under the Exon amendment, in the 5 years from 1993 to 1997, we would be spending almost $1.400 trillion, falling just under, I would estimate it to be something like $1.380 trillion in the 5-year period, and those are in current dollars for defense. So, still, I want to reassure my friend that even under the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, there would be a very substantial outlay for the military.

Mr. CHAFEE. I appreciate that. I am not suggesting that the Senator from Nebraska is reducing us to mere platoon-size forces, not at all. But I worry about the trend. Is the Budget Committee figure exactly right? Who knows? Can it be reduced somewhat? Probably. I do not think there is anything magic by coming down some, if need be, below that. But it seems to me that what the Senator from Nebraska has proposed is a $7.6 billion reduction. He has suggested that you can lengthen out the procurement schedules and so forth.

But I think we all know that the way you get dollars is to reduce people.

That is the only quick way to get dollars. The proposal of the Senator from Nebraska is to take place within 1 single year, within 12 months, on top of what the military is already proposing to reduce.

So, Mr. President, I think it is important to remember that this is still a dangerous world we live in. Who knows what is going to happen? It seems to me that it behooves our Nation to have a trained ready force that can meet the possible threats that could arise. Some say that the cuts that are already planned are too deep, and some question whether we could mount an operation similar to Desert Storm, as we did a year ago, with the troop levels that are foreseen under the President's budget.

I believe the defense figure that the committee reported is a good one and will permit the orderly reductions that are urged by Secretary Cheney and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, General Powell.

Let me just make a further point. The further cuts proposed, it seems to me, could well endanger the industrial base that is important to this Nation.

There is one area that I am particularly familiar with, namely the submarine construction business. We have a situation there where it is quite possible we are going to lose our industrial base. The submarine construction business is not something that has a private component to it. If you build aircraft you can build fighter aircraft and you can build commercial aircraft. There is a possibility to switch back and forth with jobs. But there is no commercial or private demand for submarines and the only entity in the world that is ordering submarines is the military and, in our country, the U.S. Navy.

It is not solely the skills that are required to build those submarines, it is the skills that are required to build the parts for those submarines, pumps, valves, all the equipment that goes in them.

Mr. President, we are clearly in danger of losing that industrial base because a suggestion is being made that we no longer construct submarines in this country once these currently under order are completed.

That really worries me. Yes, it worries me because submarines are built in my area. But it further worries me because of this industrial base that I believe is so important to maintain. It is in danger of being terminated and clearly will be terminated if deeper reductions are made than already proposed.

Let me close by noting we are dealing with human beings here. We are dealing with human beings, those in uniform and those in civilian jobs. It behooves us to treat those individuals with as much concern as possible, giving them lead time to plan for their future.

Many of these soldiers, sailors, airmen, marines, and civilian employees planned their career in the military or with the military. That no longer will be possible, we recognize that, because of these reductions.

But let us make those reductions in an understanding fashion. Such would not be true I believe, or could possibly not be true, under the proposed amendment. Therefore, I hope it will be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. STEVENS. As the Senator managing the time I would like 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. CHAFEE. I yield up to 15 minutes off the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I do not usually get involved in these arguments on the budget resolution because, having been a member of the Appropriations Committee now for many years. I recognize that the Senator will set a target for us, and we have abided by that target in the Senate Appropriations Committee on Defense. Last year, as a matter of fact, we came in almost a billion dollars under the recommendation of the Senate.

This time, however, we have before us an amendment that I think would seriously harm our present defense posture, and there is no way to handle it without some recognition of the job we do on the Armed Services Committee and on the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee.

The assumptions that are being made here are just assumptions. For instance, we are told that Senator EXON's amendment would not harm force structure, does not plan any cut. It is not a question of whether they plan a cut. There is no plan associated with his. We work many, many months on a plan, together with the Armed Services Committee and Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, to come in, and together with the Department of Defense, present a program that will fund a planned defense strategy. This amendment is not part of a planned defense strategy.

Last evening I had the privilege of attending the dinner at which the Secretary of Defense, Dick Cheney, was awarded the Medal of the American Defense Preparedness Association. It is the association that is concerned with our industrial base. As I sat there I started thinking about the problems we face now compared to the problems the country faced when I came out of the military after World War II. I was a draftee. I was lucky enough to pass the flight physical to become a pilot and officer, but I was drafted. When I came back, as all my friends realized and I realized, we were going to get out of the service. We had not made a career decision to be part of the service.

We do not have any draftees now, Mr. President. We have a volunteer service made up of young men and women who made career decisions to serve their country at a time when we were still in the longest sustained military effort that the world has known, 45 years of a cold war, and we were committed to destroying communism and we have been able to do that.

Now the question is, do we destroy ourselves as we fail to recognize the period we are in, a transition period? As we came out of the World War II there was still a buildup toward maintaining Europe, not only the Marshall plan but the increase in forces over there, first to occupy and bring back those areas that had been so devastated by World War II, but then to meet the challenge of the Soviets as we entered into the period of the cold war.

As we came out of Korea there was still that problem in Europe. As we came out of the Vietnam there was still the problem in Europe. In other words, we had an ongoing need for a military force. Now we are coming to the end of the cold war. We realize we are transitioning into the period we all hoped and dreamed for since World War II, that is, coming into a century of peace. Do we do it in the right way or do we do it in the wrong way?

We had briefings from my good friend, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Colin Powell, in which he outlined for us—and I wish everyone could have heard his comments—the number of tents that surround Moscow, where people who are career military people are living in tents. There is not enough housing for them. They have had to leave people in the former Warsaw Pact countries because they did not have housing, they did not have ability to bring them home. We have even seen them leave people in space for an extra period of time because they did not have the resources to bring them home.

Is that the symbol we want? Do we want a tent city in Washington? We are already, today, bringing out of Europe 500 military families a day. Every day 500 more military families come home. We have a peaceful transition coming home. We have our people cleaning up the bases that they occupied.

I am sure you all watched on television the great sight of the standing down of one division. We did it with honor; we did it with honor to our flag and to our people. Every person was contacted. The schedule was changed where some people had children in school; they had to be left there a little bit longer. But we have an orderly withdrawal and we have an orderly transition to a peacetime military. That takes time.

If we are going to keep our commitments to these people who made career decisions to serve our country in the military, and to the civilians that worked to support them, and to the people in the industrial base that supported both of them, we have to take our time. It is going to cost a little money to have an orderly transition. If we do not have an orderly transition the sons and daughters of those who have their promises broken, that are frustrated with the decisions we make here, are going to tell their grandchildren do not ever enter the military service of the United States. Do not trust your Government.

We are taught all over the country people say you cannot trust his Government. What are we doing now? We are proving it to them if we pass the Exon amendment. Already the President has reduced his own plan that he presented to us by $50 billion. Now, Senator EXON wants to reduce that even further.

I tell you I cannot support an amendment that would leave us in the position that we would break the commitment to the people who made career decisions to enter the service of this Government. Already, the decisions we have supported, will by the end of 1994 affect the lives of 1.8 million people. They will be totally into a new career if there are jobs available for them.

Senator EXON says that he will not have any affect on force structure. That is not true, it is absolutely not true. There is no way to absorb the outlay cut of this magnitude solely through procurement and R&D costs. There is no way.

There is a decision here to enter into a precipitous decline in manpower, breaking the commitments we made to these people. There is not one Member, including my good friend from Nebraska, Senator EXON, that does not come to the Appropriations Committee and say you must support the National Guard. You must support it.

We support the National Guard. We all do. What is this going to do to the National Guard? It is going to eviscerate it. It is going to just absolutely challenge the ability to maintain the peacetime force. We have to do it in a scheduled way and it has to be done in a way that restores confidence in our system, not destroy it.

I do not believe that we ought to forget the fact that this is round 2, this is round 2. We had the firewall question. The question was whether we abrogate the 1990 agreement on firewalls. The Senate and the House have both taken a position on that, against it.

Now the question is, do we now cut further than the Secretary of Defense, Gen. Colin Powell, and the President have recommended? They have recommended that we reduce, as I said, another $50 billion. That is a total of $220 billion that those three have recommended to this Congress, in about a year, in a change from the plans as they were announced last year.

That is a twin line that I think we should support. If we can go further, we will. The peace dividend, Mr. President, is peace. The question is, can we maintain it? We are the last remaining power that has the ability to keep its promises.

I want to ask the Senate, have you looked at the commitments we have made around the world? We still have vast commitments: NATO and all of the Pacific agreements. We have agreements in terms of the United Nations, as I pointed out here at the time we debated the question of the resolution on the Persian Gulf war. That was a resolution to support our commitment to send forces with the United Nations when requested to do so. That is still our commitment.

I do not feel, after having spent well over 20 years in reviewing defense appropriations, that it is possible to support the Exon amendment and at the same time maintain the credibility of our armed services and the commitments we have made.

The compromise that is here, that was presented by Senator HOLLINGS and Senator DOMENICI, is a good faith effort to provide the men and women of the armed services a predictable, steady, defense plan that will give the leaders in the Pentagon the opportunity to downsize the military in a sensible way keeping in mind all of the family values that are associated with a volunteer force.

I remember the time Senator HOLLINGS and I, as young Senators, went to Europe at the request of Senator John Stennis, who was then the chairman of our committee. He wanted us to go look at how our people were getting along over there. I distinctly remember walking up to a third floor, what they called a cold water walk-up flat, that a young couple was occupying with their two little babies. He was a draftee. He had been sent to Europe unaccompanied, and his wife had followed him with the children. They had no allowances; they had no homes on base.

We were part of the group of Senators who recommended a change in that policy, Mr. President. We insisted that if our families go abroad on accompanied tours, that we build places there where the families could have schools, that we build places there so that they could have a family life while they kept our commitment to NATO. The length of the tour was extended at the request of Senator HOLLINGS and me.

Now, when we looked at it, we knew it would cost more money. We never dreamed we would reach the day during our service in the Senate when we would help bring them back. And now we want to have them brought back in a similar way. We want them brought back with the full recognition of the family values of those people who committed their lives to the defense of our country.

Now their careers must change. Their careers must change. The impact of what Senator EXON has suggested, in my opinion, is going to end up with even the heroes of Desert Storm knocking at our door within a year saying what did you do to us? We went over there, 450,000 people, in response to the overwhelming support of the American people, and you have brought us home without any plan at all.

There is a plan right now. It is a very scheduled plan and it is a humane plan. I cannot tell the Senate in strong enough words how I feel about this, because, yesterday, I listened to the people who had opposed the Patriot, tried to stop the appropriations for the Patriot, now telling us the Patriot did not work. Now what is happening in this country? The Patriot did work beyond all expectations. As a matter of fact, it was in this Senate where we accelerated the funding to try to make sure the Patriot did work, and thanks to the ingenuity of the American industry, it was upgraded. It was then a ground-to-air missile in terms of aircraft, and it was made a ground-to-missile missile in a very short period of time, and it succeeded, and the world knows how fast we did that.

Some people say, well, you can cut the B-2 or you can cut SDI or you can cut the Seawolf. I see people that are voting, intending, according to the list I have seen, to vote for this, who want to support the Seawolf money. Now if I ever heard of an inconsistent position, that is it, because Seawolf is a cut in the President's budget. You have to add money back in to get the Seawolf, not take it out. You cannot take it out and get the Seawolf. And if you leave the Seawolf cuts in and you put this cut in too, you are going to find that you are going to be cutting manpower, and by cutting it, destroying the ability of the Department of Defense to provide a scheduled reduction in forces that will still enable us to keep our commitments.

I hope I have not prejudged the outcome of the votes on this, but as I listened yesterday I got a little worried. I got a little worried because we have sat through a whole series of hearings now in the Appropriations Subcommittee on the 1993 request that will be authorized by this budget resolution. We have heard Member after Member after Member question the decision of the President on the Seawolf, on aircraft, on missiles, on artillery, on various other munitions, on weapons systems. Almost every Member that has something involved in his own State has come to us and said, "Well, I am going along with the cuts, but can't you help us put that money back?"

Now there will be no discretion left in the Appropriations Committee if this amendment passes, because it is an outlay reduction we are looking at now, an outlay reduction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CHAFEE. The distinguished Senator would like 5 more minutes off the bill. That would be fine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska is recognized for 5 more minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator.

I have the feeling that the Senate ought to wake up. The resolution that is before us now is a bipartisan solution to a difficult problem of setting defense levels. It is less than the President's request. It is less than the President's reduction of $50 billion, but it does give us the flexibility to deal with the overall requests of the Department of Defense.

The Exon amendment would leave us with both hands tied behind our back. We could not respond to the requests we have had from individual Members. We could not try to adjust the procurement schedule. I know of some instances where we could buy down the line and actually end up with more materials in our storehouse and actually have less costs than just terminating programs.

There is a cost to terminating programs without negotiations. The way you get the ability to negotiate is to have the ability to fund a program and then say, "Look, if we work together we can end this line. We don't need it anymore. Let's make a compromise. You produce x of items and we will both agree the production will close down on a specific date." It will be less than the money they totally have to spend.

We have seen that happen time and time again where they give the Department of Defense flexibility. Where you tell them no, you cannot spend the money, they have to cancel the contracts and pay the damages.

Now that is what happens when people do not understand what they are doing. And as far as outlays, I have to say I do not think that either the people who are supporting the budget resolution on this matter from the Budget Committee or from the Armed Services Committee understand what they are doing in terms of the appropriations process. This is an outlay matter that we are dealing with, it is not a budget matter; it is not an authorization matter; it is a matter of spending dollars, dollars that we have to spend because of past authorizations that have not been repealed.

Incidentally, the President has $7.2 billion in rescissions pending before us, too. If you add the $7.2 billion of the President's rescission request to the reduction he has already made added to the Exon rescission, it really amounts to a reduction in authority to spend money this year. Despite authorization, I think we will end up with absolute chaos.

In other words, I want the Senate to know I do not support all the President's requests for rescissions. I do not think they should be totally rescinded. I do think we can adjust some of them, we can reduce some of them. I do not come from a State that is affected by procurement. I do not come from a State that is affected by the stated intention of the Exon amendment in any way.

But I do say, as one who has spent a great deal of time trying to understand the defense policy of this country, that this is not the right thing to do. What is more, the Budget Act itself is no place to try it. I think it is high time we thought about getting rid of this Budget Act.

Ever since we got the Budget Act we have never balanced the budget. We spent more time arguing about what expenditures would be than we have examining what the expenditures are. This is typical of it. We have been all week on this bill and we will spend 1 day on the appropriations bill that spends the $291 billion.

In my judgment it is wrong. I am hopeful the debate will go on. I am prepared to have the debate and participate in it fully. But next time someone comes to me and says support the National Guard, despite what Secretary Cheney and the President and Colin Powell say, I am going to ask them how they voted on the Exon amendment. Because you cannot vote for the Exon amendment and preserve the National Guard. You cannot do it.

You cannot support the Exon amendment and assure that we will keep 12 active divisions out of the 18 we have now. By the way, the current plan again is already letting go of 1.8 million people to get down from 18 to 12 divisions; to reduce our air wings, to reduce our Navy as suggested by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, approved by the Secretary of Defense and approved by the President.

We cannot maintain our defenses if we start having amendments that come out of the air, have no plan attached to them, no plan at all. I say I hope those who are listening to me who were thinking about the Exon amendment would read it. I hope they would look at some of the analysis we have provided. It does not do what the letter that I received says it would do. It does not maintain force structure, and we cannot maintain force structure under this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield myself such time I may need off the remainder of the time.

I ask at this time how much time does the Senator from Nebraska have left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has 16 minutes and 40 seconds.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I have been in the Senate for 13 years and I have listened to debates that I thought were far, far off mark. But I guess I have never listened to debate like that over the last day and a half on the Exon amendment, where I have seen my colleagues, probably not intentionally, but totally misrepresent the position of the Senator from Nebraska. I can only say, after listening to my friend and colleague from Alaska, that I am glad this debate is going on. Because the longer this debate goes on, the more we hear these statements that I can simply say from my perspective, and from my amendment, are totally untrue, then the better chance that we have to have a better understanding by the Senate as a whole.

I am quite pleased. Yesterday I did not think we had a chance at agreeing to this amendment. I did not think we had a chance this morning. But I am encouraged a little bit right now, Mr. President, because since last night we have advanced our position in places that I was not sure that we could count on. And when we have this vote today I suggest it is going to be much closer than I had originally thought. I think the reason for that is there is beginning to be some understanding by people on both sides of the aisle as to what the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska does and does not do.

It does not do, I assure you, what the Senator from Alaska alleged that it does. We talk about past service. I do not know what that has to do with the issue at hand except maybe to focus the ability and the dedication that we have had in the past.

Let me mention briefly, I was not drafted in World War II. I was a volunteer in World War II. And ever since that time of my service overseas, I have been very much interested in the military. And I would say that even those who have been the main detractors of the Exon amendment by and large would say that JIM EXON has stood probably second to none in either the House or the Senate in the support or the buildup of our military forces.

Contrary to what has been said, this amendment would not guarantee a reduction in the Guard and the Reserve, even the way the President of the United States and the President's Secretary of Defense wanted done. There has been a dramatic, unreasonable reduction in the Guard and Reserve by the President of the United States and the President's Secretary of Defense. At least I am taking a look at what they recommend, but I do not like it.

Then I hear statements on the floor, if you go along with the Exon amendment, boy, you really are going to have some trouble with the Guard and Reserve.

I was the Governor of my State for 8 years and commander of the National Guard. I guess I probably know as much about the National Guard and the Reserve as most of the other people who have continued to be their great defender—which I think is very justifiable. Likewise, any statement that is made that the Seawolf cannot be funded if you go along with the Exon amendment, any statement that you are going to reduce force if you accept the Exon proposal, is wrong. I just am delighted we are going ahead with this kind of debate.

Once again I would like to say—I will have more to say on this later, Mr. President. But all the Exon amendment does is reduce, somewhere between 1 and 2 percent, the total expenditures recommended by the President himself. In other words, the President of the United States in outlays for fiscal year 1993 is suggesting $285.9 billion. The Senator from Nebraska is suggesting that be reduced roughly by $4 billion, down to $281 billion.

And if anyone thinks that all of these dire circumstances would come to pass that have alleged this amendment would do by reducing the total defense from $285 billion for next year down to $281 billion, then I think he or she has not taken an accurate look and is reacting out of fear and not having studied it through, to reach some conclusions that might help in the argument. Even to the talk of the Russians abandoning their man in space; to the fact that in Moscow today they have tent camps around Moscow to take care of their military people. That is a clever way of saying: Do not vote for the Exon amendment or you are likely to have the same thing happen in America.

I hope my distinguished friend from Alabama, the man who now occupies the Chair, who is very knowledgeable about national defense issues, would take a look at this himself as I think many Senators are today, and recognize that the frontal attack on the Exon amendment is nothing more and nothing less—nothing more and nothing less, Mr. President—than the fact that the President of the United States told us in January that he was going to cut national defense but he challenged us, all of us: no lower than that.

Basically that is what we are doing today. Basically what the opponents of the Exon amendment are saying is, even though it is a modest amendment, they are heaping everything that you can imagine on the faults issue, outlandish interpretations that make no sense, to try to defeat it. The longer we go, the stronger we get, and I am delighted that we are continuing the discussion.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Texas 10 minutes off the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the Exon amendment. I would like to begin by reminding my colleagues where we are in defense and what we have already done. I would like to talk about what we are doing in the budget that is before us, and to remind people of the cold reality that defense expenditures do not simply represent abstract numbers; they represent dollars being spent on people in uniform or defense contractors, and they ultimately represent an impact on real people.

Finally, I would like to talk a little bit about our Nation's history, about the mistakes we have made in the past, and, finally, exhort my colleagues to look at our history, and to look at the Exon amendment and made a decision as to whether we want to go down this road again.

Mr. President, let me first remind our colleagues that in the 1991 budget, we initiated a dramatic reform in the American military. We reduced defense spending over a 5-year period by $170 billion, representing roughly a 25-percent reduction in defense spending, a dramatic change in public policy. We have in the budget before us, that is, the number that is in the budget which Senator EXON seeks to reduce dramatically, another $50 billion reduction in defense over a 5-year period. Nobody here knows what $1 billion is, much less than $220 billion, which is the cumulative 5-year running total of defense cuts that we are committed to by past action and by the budget, before us.

But let me just give a number that I think brings it to life. The cuts that are already committed to, plus the cuts in the budget before us, will mean, at a minimum, that 1 million Americans that were either in uniform or working in the defense industry in some job in 1991 will no longer be in uniform or no longer be working in the defense industry of America by the end of 1996. One million jobs is what we are talking about.

The reductions proposed by Senator EXON would impose another $62.5 billion cut on top of that, and we are talking about a dramatic change in policy. It might be a good change, it might be a bad change, and obviously it depends on who you are listening to. But nobody can say that is a modest amendment. That is a dramatic change in public policy.

Mr. President, basically our situation is as follows: The policy of containment, which we followed for 45 years to keep Ivan back from the gate, worked. Americans' strength worked. We deterred aggression. We kept Ivan back from the gate. And, ultimately, the superiority of the American system has started to emerge.

We have responded to that by reducing defense spending by 30 percent. I would argue that that is enough, and it is enough for two important reasons.

First, it is enough as of today because we are talking about real people. We are talking about volunteers who joined the Army, and the Navy, the Air Force, and the Marine Corps, and committed themselves to a career. We have to have some flexibility in helping those people readjust their life to the fact that the world has changed. It is going to be difficult enough to institute a 30-percent change based on actions already taken. If we come in on top of that with another dramatic reduction, we are adding to the burden of putting people out of the service who volunteered.

Mr. SASSER. Just on that point, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GRAMM. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. GRAMM. I would like to yield having the time come off the Senator's time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. I noted, on January 3, 1992, my friend from Texas had a press conference in the Capitol. At that time, he suggested that we reduce defense spending about $74 billion, roughly a 5-percent reduction per year over the next 5 years. He was advocating at that time that the savings be used to offset a permanent increase in the personal income tax exemption and also to contribute some of the savings to deficit reduction. The caps on defense would be lowered, as I understood it, under his suggestion in fiscal years 1993, 1994, and 1995 for that purpose.

When the Senator from Texas was proposing a 53-percent reduction in defense in January of this year in order to finance a tax cut and for deficit reduction, this amounted to roughly a 5-percent reduction per year over the next 5 years. In that proposal, how did he intend to deal with the problem of not reducing the force?

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, reclaiming my time, I would like to remind my colleague—and I am grateful that he remembers the press conference. I wish he had supported the concept. Unfortunately, what has happened in the budget which is before us is we have taken the President's defense savings that he proposed, but we have not funded the peace dividend raising the personal exemption by $500 per person.

The distinguished Senator will have an opportunity to speak when I get through. I would like to go ahead and finish my speech. I will address the point. But let me just respond to the point in two ways. First of all, my press conference and the position I took and the position that I advocate today is that we ought to dedicate any funds saved on defense reductions now and in the future to giving the money back to the long suffering American taxpayer who, after all, let us use the money to win the cold war. If we now simply go out and spend the money and we decide we need it again, the taxpayer is not going to have it to let us use, and we are going to end up having to further raise the tax burden to defend the Nation in the future.

Second, I simply picked a figure out based on what would produce a round number in terms of raising the personal exemption. But a point I made in the press conference, a point that I support today, is that we have to make defense decisions based on the threat, based on the economic practicality. I think the President is most qualified to judge the threat and I support his defense spending level. But the point which I strongly support today is the first claimant on defense savings should not be the Congress of the United States, it should be the long suffering American taxpayer.

The defense savings in the budget before us, which basically reflects the President's numbers, do not have a corresponding tax cut for the American taxpayer, do not give the money back to the taxpayer so that the taxpayer could invest that money in the taxpayer's future and, therefore, in the country's future.

But getting back to the two points I was making, first of all, we have $170 billion of cuts already agreed to. We have another roughly $50 billion built into the budget before us. It is going to be a very difficult process in carrying these cuts out because we are affecting real people in real jobs and I think we have to rely on people who are experts in this area to look at what is feasible, to minimize the costs we are imposing on the people who wore the uniform of the country, who worked in the defense industries, and who won the cold war.

I think the problem with the Exon amendment is that we are already in a difficult adjustment period and this is going to add to it.

The second point I think is equally relevant and, in the long run, far more important. We have a long and undistinguished history in this country of disarming when the threat appears to have disappeared, and we have almost always regretted it when we have done it.

I am very concerned that we are forgetting the lessons of our long history.

I remember, because my father was a career soldier and a sergeant in the Army and participated in the Louisiana maneuvers in 1940, where they had wooden guns; they had stovepipe cannons; they had cardboard tanks. The Japanese sent observers; the Congress sent observers. The Japanese learned from the experience in the Louisiana maneuvers; Congress did not.

I think it is very important for us to remember, as delighted as we are at what the world looks like today, we do not have guarantees about the future. At the end of World War II, the future looked great. We disarmed America, and 5 years later, a third-world country, North Korea, almost pushed us off the Korean peninsula.

My argument is simply this: Before we start slashing defense, I think it is important to remember that we are not at the end of history. As much as we might dream that there might never be another tyrant, there are tyrants today; there will be tyrants in the future. Despite the best efforts of diplomacy, reason will fail. And when reason fails, it is important that we have an Army, a Navy, an Air Force, and a Marine Corps that do not fail.

I do not argue that we cannot or that we should not try to save money on defense. I think we can, we are, and we should be doing that. But I think we have to look very carefully at what we are doing, because even if the biblical admonition that the lion and the lamb are about to lie down in the world—and I pray they are—even if that comes true, it is important that the United States of America be the lion because only if America is the lion can we be certain that the lamb is going to be safe.

So I believe this is an unwise amendment. It is an unwise amendment because we can stand here and say to each of our Members: You can vote for this additional cut on top of a 30-percent cut, and we can still keep all these Army Reserves and all of these National Guard outfits in operation.

The reality, which we all know but which nobody wants to admit politically, is we are keeping too many of them in operation today given the cuts to which we have already agreed. But the Senator from Nebraska can, in all honesty, say there is nothing in these cuts that will make you shut them down. He can say to the people who want to build the Seawolf, knowing in cutting another $62 billion—

Mr. President, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAMM. That there is nothing in these cuts in the Exon amendment that would make us do away with the Seawolf submarine. You can pick any weapon system and say it is still possible to protect it.

Mr. President, all of that is true, but it all misses the point that if we cut another $62 billion on top of the $220 billion we have already cut, clearly you are going to affect procurement at all levels to some extent, and ultimately cutting dollars being spent means cutting spending.

I think it is important that we not deceive ourselves. I am ready to see defense built down on an orderly basis. I do not believe this amendment represents building down on an orderly basis.

Finally, I would be more sympathetic to this proposal if it had a procedure that locked in the savings for the next 4 or 5 years to assure it was not going to be spent. But we all know—we have heard it over and over in the debate that has already occurred—the reason this cut is being considered by so many of our colleagues is that they salivate when they look at the $62.5 billion that starting next year, when there are no firewalls between defense and non-defense, Congress can spend.

If we had a commitment that this savings could be invested in the future by giving it back to the taxpayers, so that taxpayers could invest it in their future and the country's future, I would be more favorably inclined. If we had a commitment that we could lock into law to change the overall deficit reduction targets to assure it would go to deficit reduction, and therefore would reduce borrowing, and therefore would mean over the next 5 years we would be borrowing less and the private sector could borrow to invest in creating new jobs and building new farms, new factories, and generating new economic growth, I think the argument would be stronger.

But I want to urge my colleagues to take a long, hard look at this amendment; to look at the lessons of America in terms of our disarmament after World War I, our disarmament after World War II; at the long and difficult and painful and expensive lessons that we have learned. And let us try in a prudent way to build down defense, knowing that as certain as history repeats itself, there will be times in the future when we will need a strong and vibrant defense.

We hope that if we are called upon to use our defense again, we will have the same superiority we had in the gulf war. If we do not, we will pay for it in terms of treasure in building defense back up, and we will pay for it in terms of American blood. Both of those costs are high.

I think this is not a wise amendment. I hope my colleagues will reject it.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERREY). Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, let me say to my colleagues, we want to move forward as rapidly as we can to try to get to a vote on this particular amendment. To my knowledge there is only one additional speaker on our side of the aisle, and that is the distinguished President pro tempore. He is in his office and, I think, is on call to come here and speak.

The distinguished ranking Member is not on the floor at this moment, but it is my understanding there may be one other speaker on his side. So I am hopeful we can soon dispense with the debate and get to a vote.

Let me say to my colleagues we have about 20 additional amendments that have to be dealt with today and perhaps tomorrow. I think if we would really get moving here, there is a chance we could get this resolution perhaps behind us this evening. I may be overly optimistic, but we could try.

Mr. President, as we await the arrival of other Senators on the floor, let me say that I always listen to the distinguished junior Senator from Texas with great interest. He arrived here on the floor this morning in opposition to the Exon amendment, and he cited a number of reasons for his opposition. One, some concern about whether or not the military establishment—if we followed the advice and counsel of our distinguished friend from Nebraska, whether or not our military capability would be sufficient to meet the threat that was there.

I call attention to a proposal the Senator from Texas made on January 3, 1992, that we reduce defense spending by $74 billion.

That was the proposal of Senator GRAMM, that we reduce defense spending by $74 billion, roughly 5 percent, over the next 5 years. He said that those savings would be used to pay for a permanent tax cut, and he did say it would contribute to the deficit reduction.

Mr. President, I cannot imagine that the threat to this country has increased between January 1992 and April of the same year. And if the $73 billion, 5 percent cut in defense, as proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] was viable in January 1992, why is it not equally as viable here in April 1992?

So, the conclusion is inescapable that it is all right with the Senator from Texas to reduce defense for a tax cut, but it is not all right to reduce defense, as the distinguished Senator from Nebraska proposes, just to reduce the budget deficit.

I disagree very strongly with our friend from Texas on that. I think in poll after poll after poll the American people have said, if they had the choice between taking the so-called peace dividend and giving themselves a tax cut or taking the peace dividend and reducing the budget deficit, by overwhelming margins, when given just those two choices, the American people have said they would prefer to use the peace dividend or defense savings to be used to reduce the budget deficit.

There has been a lot of conversation here as if this minuscule cut that Senator EXON is proposing is simply going to amount to unilateral disarmament, that we are going to go back to the days when they drilled in Louisiana in 1940 with wooden rifles, as the Senator from Texas indicated.

Under the President's proposal, over the 5-year period from 1993 to 1997, we would spend $1.423 trillion on the military in this country—$1.423 trillion would be spent over the next 5 years on the military. Under the Exon proposal—some are advertising this as unilateral disarmament; we will be drilling with wooden rifles again as we did in 1940—under the Exon proposal, over the 5-year period, we would spend $1.364 trillion on the military establishment in this country.

Let me give you another example of what we are talking about. In the period from 1988 to 1992, in current dollars, we spent $1.478 trillion on the military. How has the administration reacted to the collapse of the Soviet Union, the collapse of the Warsaw Pact and the fact we are the only remaining superpower in the world? They want to spend $1.423 trillion over the next 5 years. So $1.423 trillion is what the administration wants to spend on defense over the next 5 years.

I say to my colleagues, I think Senator EXON's $1.324 trillion is too much, but I am going to support him because I think that is the best we can do. I want to take that money and try to reduce this gargantuan budget deficit. I think that is a bigger threat than any external military threat to the United States.

Mr. President, I see my friend from New Mexico on the floor. In his absence, I indicated to the Chair that, to my knowledge, there is only one additional speaker on our side. I am advised there might be one additional speaker on the other side. I want to counsel with the distinguished President pro tempore, find out how much time he wishes, and then perhaps we could enter into a time agreement and get a vote on this because time is simply getting away from us here.

Mr. DOMENICI. I think that is an excellent idea. From what I know, Senator HOLLINGS desires to speak, and, clearly, he was the proponent in the Budget Committee of this number for defense. I want to accommodate him. I will be trying to find out from him how much time he will need while the Senator is trying to find out from Senator BYRD.

Mr. SASSER. If the distinguished Senator will indulge me, I will suggest the absence of a quorum and see if we cannot discuss this with the distinguished President pro tempore and arrive at some agreement but ask the time be charged equally to both sides.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, does the Senator intend to talk with the distinguished Senator BYRD himself.

Mr. SASSER. I am going to try to get him on the phone.

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not think I am needed. I will be glad to accompany you. I am prepared to put a quorum call in in 2 minutes. Let me speak for 2 minutes. I will put the quorum call in.

Mr. President, I would like to share a couple of observations with the Senate with reference to the notion of deficit reduction and who is doing more for deficit reduction because it is very interesting how this is evolving.

Let me take the Senate back to last week when the issue was the cap on defense which we had grown to call the wall. Almost every Senator that is going to vote for the reduced defense number voted to tear down the wall and spend it all. I just coined that—tear down the wall and spend it all. That is what those Senators that wanted to take the wall down were saying that we needed all of this money for these desperately essential domestic programs. There is no question that, if you took that wall down, whatever you saved on defense would have been in one single bushel basket to be used by defense and domestic spending, and I believe it would have all been spent.

So I think it is fair to say that the majority of the Senators that want to reduce defense more were in favor of spending the defense savings. Point No. 1.

How can that be turned, all of a sudden, into the deficit reduction team? Is that credible? Of course not. Second point.

The way the law currently is, Mr. President, the only moneys that are going to the deficit are 1993 savings because the wall is there. What you do not spend on defense goes to the deficit by legal definition. But, Mr. President, in 1994, in 1995, the remnants of the 5-year agreement, and thereafter, under the ordinary budget law, there are no walls. We will decide from the whole package of money how much for defense and how much for all the rest.

It seems to me that it is not quite Hoyle to tout deficit reduction and use the full year's estimates when, as a matter of fact, the present dominant view of those who want to cut more want to spend it all on other programs.

Having said that, I will only make one other point. The military-industrial complex that existed and was alluded to by President Eisenhower has been used so much that it almost is as if we really understand what he had in mind. But, frankly, I believe it is a hoax to talk about the military-industrial complex holding up this defense budget and buttressing Senators so they will vote for the high numbers. I just honestly believe it is Senator to Senator talking about this. It is facts. It is an analysis of where things are going and what is going to happen that is going to judge our votes.

Surely, the President has an interest and the Secretary of Defense has an interest. But I just do not believe that we ought to leave the record with some indication that there are some ghosts around that are really out there controlling us because of programs or expenditures that will help the so-called military-industrial complex.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I might need, not to exceed 2 minutes on my time.

I would like to ask a question of my friend who has just talked. I have heard a great deal, I say to my friend from New Mexico, about insincerity. I have heard a great deal about the Exon amendment, and that people do not want to cut the budget. I have heard reference to the fact that let us go back to last week and see how we voted on the wall matter, because the implication, while not being stated, is that somehow if you voted for taking down the wall last week, you are some kind of a hypocrite if you then vote for the Exon amendment.

I would like to ask, for the record, of my friend from New Mexico, if there is any intention to draw that conclusion from the remarks that he just made, would he be good enough to exclude the Senator from Nebraska, who did not commit that terrible act, evidently, of voting to knock down the wall last week. Would the Senator verify that?

Mr. DOMENICI. Sure. I say that I do not think I ever used the words everyone who voted to tear down the wall. The distinguished Senator from Nebraska did not do that.

Mr. EXON. So I am a good guy?

Mr. DOMENICI. I did not say good, bad, hypocritical, or not. I merely stand for the proposition that I think is right, which is, had we torn down the wall, we would have spent the defense savings on domestic programs. The Senator might not have voted for it.

Mr. EXON. I reserve the remainder of my time.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask how much time Senator HOLLINGS needs.

Mr. HOLLINGS. 5 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield 10 minutes to Senator HOLLINGS.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, the amendment misses the Hollings-Domenici mark, which is a mark I feel very good and strongly about. It has been tested by the military industrial complex. When I turned on the TV during the debate yesterday afternoon, I heard a lot of fanciful talk that somehow there had been a conspiracy to arrive at this figure.

My arrival at the figure begins with current policy, Mr. President. I never had bought that sorry 1990 summit agreement. That crowd of summiters said we were headed in the right direction; that we would reduce the deficit $500 billion in 5 years. The truth is, to the contrary, we are increasing the deficit $500 billion in a single year, this year, and we are headed in the wrong direction. So I do not assign any sanctity to the silly summit and the summiters. I can tell you that right now.

I started with current policy. Under current policy, what we do is take the 1992 defense 050, or defense number, and extrapolate out with respect to the commitments made under contract and inflation. When I got to a figure, I looked and found out that I was pretty well on target with the President's figure. I arrived at this, actually, in the first part of February, over 2 months ago.

I began to talk to my colleague from Nebraska, and others, about formulating a budget, because that is what we really have at hand. In trying to arrive at that budget, I first considered certain fundamentals. We had to show some austerity and discipline at the congressional level here, and what we needed to do was to take a surgical knife right to the bureaucracy itself, which has grown and sprawled. I reasoned, why not do just exactly as we did under President Reagan 10 years ago and cut some 10 percent, or an amount equal to that, over a 3-year period, by attrition. We would not be exacerbating, in any sense, unemployment, which is a big problem out there in the economy. But that 10 percent cut would demonstrate some awareness of what is happening in America's industry everyday.

Thereupon, I once again proposed the budget freeze, and the body has heard me ad nauseam advocating a budget freeze, which is exactly what a mayor of a city or a Governor of a State would readily do. Those of us who have served as Governors know what I am talking about. You do not print dollars back at the State capitol like you do here in Washington. Instead, you just take this year's budget for next year. You do not let go of any essential personnel in law enforcement in schools, or otherwise. You do not cut back any basic services, but likewise you do not expand.

And so we look to the distinguished chairman of our Budget Committee, we look at the chairman's mark, and we see that it takes two very formidable steps with a bureaucracy cut and a freeze in budget authority. And then we got the two points at issue, namely, how we are going to allocate the money saved, and what is going to be the size of the defense cut, how big will the peace dividend be?

I differed with my distinguished chairman in that I thought we still needed the stimulation. But having fought for the cuts in the deficit, I certainly was not going to be bound again when only a minimal amount was involved. I think that minimal amount is a substantial amount when it comes to stimulation, but only minimal when it comes to the deficit itself. In fact, I stated in committee that if we were running deficits of $20 and $30 billion, rather than $400 and $500 billion, then under these circumstances we could well increase our deficit in order to stimulate the economy, which would be good economic sense at this particular point.

But the chairman and the committee have to get out a budget, and I said at the time that if my figure on defense did not prevail, I would go along with the chairman's mark, even though I might disagree with it, because I realize that he is doing yeoman's work in trying to get a budget out and form a consensus.

In that light, we now have coming with current policy under the Hollings-Domenici mark, an actual cut of defense outlays of $15.6 billion. That might not seem a good amount, or a large amount, but I can tell you I have been in the budget process where we struggled over $2 billion in the context of the entire budget. And it comes from defense itself, to mandate on top of rescissions an additional $15.6 billion. And there seems to be a solid consensus, that we will be in the vicinity of cutting some $7.7 billion in rescissions. If that were to occur, then we would be looking at a total defense cut of $23.3 billion in 1 year.

Let us assume it is anywhere between $15 and $20 billion. I think our mark here, which I was glad to join in sponsoring with the distinguished ranking member, the Senator from New Mexico—and to say let us go forward with that one, realizing that, yes, we could all list certain contracts for termination. But we find out, on closer study, that the feasible cuts in contracts do not correspond to the amount you need. And in that light, you find out you are having to delve into personnel cuts in a traumatic fashion. For example, you find yourself going up to a top kick in Europe, who has 16 years in the service, and who is looking for his 4 more additional years in order to get full retirement, and you end up saying, oh, no, look, you won the war in Desert Storm, but now you are the loser.

You are not the winner. You either take the $50,000 in severance and get out by the 1st of June or chances are we are going to kick you out by the 1st of September. That fundamentally is unfair and wrong. I would like to be the lawyer and bring that case before a jury back home. I could win that case.

Everyone in this body would agree that is unfair, but that is what is being required when you add on another couple of billion under the pending amendment. I do not want to do that. I do not want to cut it that drastically. I think we are already cutting deeply now, and what is misleading the colleagues is this cap. They say they want to cut instead of $5.3 billion up to $8.—something billion, and it only looks like a few billion more.

Caps or no caps, I never did agree with the 1990 summit agreement. I voted against it. Instead, I am getting down to the real world of current policy. The current policy is at $15.6 billion, which we have marked and reported out in this concurrent budget resolution. We only put it in for a year, because we learned the hard lesson that these 5-year plans are about like Soviet 5-year plans. They do not last beyond the first year. Namely the summit agreement has not lasted more than a year in the right direction. It has gone in the opposite direction. I do not think we ought to break ranks and try to just identify more with the peace dividend, or against the military, or against the Pentagon, or against defense.

On the contrary, I have a different view. I am differing with respect to the National Guard. I differ with them with respect to Europe. We fought in the defense appropriation subcommittee where the NATO command and the Defense Department said we had to have an air field in Crotona, in southern Italy, at a cost of $800 million. We as politicians prevented that. We find out in Desert Storm that you can fly a plane, even the relatively slow A-10's, all the way in due time to the gulf, or in this case to Turkey, because the former field at Crotona was nothing more than a staging field for planes to be deployed to Turkey.

I want to reaffirm my strong commitment to the Hollings-Domenici mark in this concurrent budget resolution and I want to oppose the Exon amendment on the merit itself. We save that money. I only give that as an example.

I differ with respect to the National Guard. I am differing right now with respect to actions taken in my own backyard for political reasons, moving the mincraft base from Charleston to Texas when the mincraft unit does not want to move and the Navy does not want to move. It is going to cost extra money to move. So I have a long list of differences with the Pentagon leadership and this was not put in other than for the good of the order.

You can get a budget resolution. But if you go that extra couple billion, or looked at in another light, another $4 billion and in that case I am afraid we are not going to get a budget resolution.

The proponents on the floor today may have won a battle but have lost the war, and it is not all that big a difference except that it strikes right to the personnel. If we could hold all the personnel in there right now I would do so. I want to cut back on the R&D. I want to cut some on the material. I want to cut back on the missilery. I want to cut back on stealth. I can give you a long list of things I previously supported, the MX, Midgetmans, B-2's and so on, that I am now willing to cut. But I will not agree to a pandemonium, panic, pell-mell rush down the road saying we have to cut $2 billion more out of personnel, because that is what this amendment amounts to, and I hope it will be defeated.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield myself what time I may use off the bill to answer and enter into debate with my great friend and colleague from South Carolina, whom this Senator has stood on this floor with on more occasions than I think anyone else seeing eye to eye.

Would you please take back the statement that the Senator just made, at least as I understood it that if the Exon measure passes we would reduce personnel. Is that what the Senator said?

Mr. HOLLINGS. That is exactly what I said. I know the Senator is looking at it differently. He has in his own mind his own little cut. I have in my mind my little cuts. The Secretary of Defense has his little cuts. I can tell the Senator having looked at all those from my experience of over 20 years of defense appropriations, I can tell the Senator you are harshly into personnel and there is no question in my mind.

Mr. EXON. You are entitled to your opinion.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Thank you.

Mr. EXON. Even though your opinion, I must say to my friend, is very definitely wrong.

I would also like to ask the Senator what has changed so dramatically in the last 30 days that we find ourselves necessary to not make the cuts that the Senator has agreed to make and I agreed to cosponsor.

If the Senator will look at the record of the U.S. Senate March 10, S. 3099, the Senator from South Carolina came on the floor and introduced a cut in the defense budget, and cosponsors, EXON, HEFLIN, D'AMATO, to stimulate the economy.

Basically when I came up with my cut, I thought I was letting the Senator down. He was proposing a cut of about $10 billion and the cut that Senator EXON proposes in this measure is only $8.8 billion, and now I hear you get up on the floor of the U.S. Senate and say that the Exon measure would cut personnel when I guess the Senator's would not.

It seems to be a lot of changing winds of war going on today with regard to the budget, and I simply say that the Senator from Nebraska might be wrong and there may be others who had a lot more experience in these budgetary matters and they might be right. At least I am convinced that my proposal does not get into personnel cuts.

I would certainly say that if my amendment would get into personnel cuts then the cuts that you suggested months ago in the official RECORD of the U.S. Senate would go far beyond that, and you have the right to change your mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would ask the Senator to direct the comments to the Chair.

Mr. EXON. I reserve the remainder of my time and I yield the floor.

Mr. HOLLINGS. May I have yielded a minute?

Mr. STEVENS. I yield a minute to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HOLLINGS. The change is really in essence not a change at all. What happens in the March 10 figures that we used were against the caps. We did not have the Congressional Budget Office figures. We were trying and trying, and quite a task, to formulate those figures and instead of taking them taking a similar figure and figure that way, I realized, and the distinguished Senator from Nebraska realized, $15.6 billion and the figure is no change or surprise that the distinguished Senator asked of me in this moment.

We debated this last week and he knows there is a plan using our Congressional Budget Office figures, and the amount is the $15.6 billion figure, so there are no dramatic figures in winds of war whatever it is. What we have to change is the nonsense of summit caps and by leading the party you can get a $5 or $8 or $9 billion cut. Members of the Senate, you are dealing with anywhere from $15 to $20 billion. And when you are going on up beyond that you do to the $19 billion and then add another $7 billion, you are way up. It is going to be an impossible task. I am glad I am not the Secretary of Defense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute off my time.

To somewhat maybe reassure the Senator from South Carolina and others I would cite that part of the resolution that says it is the sense of the Congress that the levels in section 6 of this resolution are consistent with the assumption that the defense reductions required shall not result in reducing military personnel below those levels set forth in the President's fiscal 1993 budget. That is the sense of the Senate.

In that same context, Mr. President, the whole budget process is a sense of the Senate because it addresses the problem to the appropriators and the authorizers. No one can guarantee anything, but our intent is not to cut personnel further and I believe that will be the end results, even if the Exon amendment is accepted.

I reserve the remainder of my time and I yield the floor.

Mr. SASSER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I have been discussing the perspective proceedings with the distinguished Senator from New Mexico. I would like to propound a unanimous-consent request at this time.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from West Virginia be recognized next in the ordinary course of business and be allowed to speak on this amendment without time limitation; that the time he consumes be charged against the resolution; that after the Senator from West Virginia concludes, the Senator from New Mexico be recognized for 10 minutes; that after the Senator from New Mexico concludes, the Senator from Nebraska be recognized for such time as he may have remaining on the amendment; and that thereafter the Senate proceed without intervening debate to vote on the Exon amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object.

Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. How much time remains on the amendment for the proponent of the amendment, on the amendment itself?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Five minutes and fifty-four seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. Further parliamentary inquiry. If the unanimous consent is granted and if the distinguished Senator from West Virginia were to speak for 1 hour, is it the interpretation of the Chair that that entire 1 hour would come off of the time allotted Chairman SASSER as a designee of the majority leader to manage the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair's understanding is the consent would be to divide the time equally.

Mr. DOMENICI. That is not the understanding of the Senator from New Mexico. Senator BYRD is going to speak in opposition to the defense number. I would not agree that it was open-ended for the Senator from West Virginia, as much as I respect him, and then agree to take it out of our time not knowing how long he might speak.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, let me amend the unanimous-consent request to say that the time that might be consumed by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia be taken out of the majority leader's time on the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving right to object, I note that Senator BYRD is on the floor. Might I just discuss for a moment a concern I have?

First of all, this entire budget resolution is under a statutory time limitation. I am being asked to agree to the unanimous-consent agreement, which I am leaning very, very strongly in doing, but we are not limiting the distinguished Senator from West Virginia to any amount of time albeit whatever he uses will be charged against Senator SASSER's time as the Democratic designee for the floor management.

I hope Senator BYRD understands that I do that because I truly have confidence that he understands that there is not a lot of time left for many amendments and that he will, in his typical way, be judicious with us and yet make his points. Is that a fair assessment, I ask the chairman?

Mr. BYRD. My typical way might not be too brief.

Mr. DOMENICI. I understand that. But to the extent that it is not, there will be no time left on the Senator's side for the remainder of the proposals. But I will agree to the unanimous-consent agreement, understanding that that is not very typical on my part or of a unanimous-consent agreement. I nonetheless will agree.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. How much time is remaining on the resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifteen hours and three minutes.

Mr. SASSER. And how much time is remaining on our side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eight hours and twenty minutes.

Mr. SASSER. And how much on the other side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The difference.

Mr. SASSER. The Chair has a quicker mind in addition and subtraction than I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Six hours and forty-three minutes.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. BYRD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, Mr. SASSER, for his courtesy and his consideration. I also thank the distinguished ranking member, Mr. DOMENICI, for his equal courtesy and consideration.

Mr. President, this has been a good debate. And as one who came here a good many years ago when we had the Dick Russells, the Spessard Hollands, the Lister Hills, the Harry Byrd, Srs., and the Everett Dirksens, and many others, I have to say those were the days in which we engaged in good debates and in great debates in this Senate.

Of course, back over the history of the Senate, this body has been noted for its being the forum of the States and the forum of American constitutional liberty. And, as I see it, it is still the forum.

I congratulate those on both sides of the aisle and those on both sides of the question who have participated in this debate. I think it has been enlightening and informative. I respect the views of all sides and all Senators. Each has his own opinions. Each has to proceed in his own lights. But I compliment the Senate. This is the Senate at its best when it debates the larger issues at length.

Mr. President, I imagine that this will be one of the most debated of the amendments that will have been taken up during the whole debate on this matter.

Mr. President, the budget resolution, as reported from the committee endorses the President's proposed defense budget, a totally unrealistic allocation of resources in light of the changed world that our Nation faces. The President's budget was constructed, and the forces it supports were designed prior to the collapse of the Soviet Union. The result of that collapse is a consensus that the threat that underpinned those budgets has now evaporated, gone. The President's recommendation suggests that the military-industrial complex has him pinned to the wall.

I was here in the days when President Eisenhower was in the White House, and he spoke of the military-industrial complex. Well, that is what we are talking about here.

The President's recommendation suggests that the military-industrial complex has him pinned to the wall. Even as we cry out for a reduction in the monstrous deficits that are consuming our budgets, the President is prepared to field forces grossly disproportionate to the threat the Nation faces. Indeed, the administration seems to have been busy constructing threat scenarios to justify what it calls a one superpower world. We read about that a few days ago in the press. All of this needs careful reflection, I believe, because the nature of power in the world, the currents of influence, and the pillars of national strength have been transformed. Those currents and pillars are in the economic domain, and the fielding of large military forces simply erodes our national strength.

The President's numbers for defense remain about where they were a year ago. The revision he has recommended for fiscal years 1993 through 1997 saves a little bit on the margin, some $44 billion in budget authority and $27 billion for outlays—something around $50 billion, if we include the proposed rescissions that the President will send up dealing with the 1992 budget. This is just a drop in the bucket of the approximately $1.4 trillion in defense expenditures proposed for that 5-year period. The administration's vision of the future is a vision that appears only in the rearview mirror. The administration seems to be posturing America as the praetorian guard of a future world order, but we cannot afford it and it is not called for as the world is busy competing with us on the economic playing field. We are focusing on irrelevancies in trying to maintain this huge military establishment. It is not anchored to reality. If we cannot adjust to change, much less lead change, we are going to be sitting on the sidelines of the playing field.

Now, Mr. President, we keep hearing the argument that reductions below that proposed by the President for fiscal year 1993 cannot be taken because they will result in throwing people out of the military onto a sterile job market. We keep hearing that a million jobs will be lost in the armed services and another million lost in the defense industry. The administration is promoting a picture of the Congress just throwing people out of work, throwing people out of the military by proposing a modest reduction, such as that contained in the amendment offered by Senator EXON, in the fiscal year 1993 budget. This is an argument without solid substance; it is just not true.

No one disputes the need for an orderly drawdown, both in terms of force structure, strategic and conventional systems, and personnel. Of great concern to all of us is the effect on personnel, including active duty military service men and women, DOD civilian personnel, and the civilian work force employed by the defense industry. But we must remember why the military exists and why it has existed from the very beginning, from the very first Congress, when the Secretary of War, Knox, was appointed by George Washington to serve as the Secretary for the Department of War.

Why did it exist then? Why does it exist now?

Our Defense Department was created to defend the Nation, and to field forces and develop the necessary plans and preparations to deter the enemy and to engage that enemy if absolutely necessary.

The Defense Department, and the War Department and the Navy Department before it, were never—they have never been and they should not now be—viewed as an employment agency. Military spending is generally an inefficient way to allocate resources, and over the past decades we have dedicated those precious resources to the military complex because of a serious threat to our Nation's survival. Now that threat is gone. Now, some of those resources can certainly be more productively spent improving our infrastructure here at home, and strengthening our civilian technological and human base.

Certainly, Mr. President, there is legitimate concern over the effect on the people, industries, and communities which must make the transition to the civilian sector. We must be concerned and we must take action to help the transition, to plan for it, and to use this opportunity to strengthen and improve our economy. Fortunately, we now have an excellent study, the first of two parts, by the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment. The report, entitled "After the Cold War: Living with Lower Defense Spending," should be required reading for every Member of this body.

The key point that I derive from this analysis is that, with careful planning and an understanding of the range of factors that go into the problem of the transition away from massive defense expenditures, we can effectively manage that transition. We need not be afraid of some dire consequences of our defense drawdown and, therefore, shrink from taking advantage of the new world situation to reform the American economy. But we must begin to plan now. The drawdown is manageable, and in terms of sheer numbers, more modest than in previous periods of our experience in this century.

The OTA study concludes that the "current cutbacks in defense spending do not loom very large." From a historical perspective and from the overall size of our economy, the cuts included in the President's revised 5-year defense budget, and even the deeper cuts begin proposed by a variety of analysts, can be managed if we plan aggressively and dedicate the necessary resources and attention to the transitions that will be necessary. The distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee has indicated that the cuts from the President's proposal, will include 1 million jobs in the Defense Department and another million in the defense industrial base by 1996, over the next 4 years.

But, in fact, according to the Department of Defense, the actual drawdown of people in the 5 years, future 5 years, is not 1 million people. It is not even half that. It actually amounts to a total of 281,000 active military and DOD civilians and Reserves.

So, Mr. President, three-quarters of the million-man drawdown has already occurred. Those people are already out in the civilian economy.

The pending amendment, if adopted, would not result in any more cuts in personnel this year. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. EXON. That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BYRD. Nor any more significant cuts to the industrial base in 1993 than would the President's budget?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. Chairman, if I might interrupt just a moment?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. SASSER. The Exon amendment certainly should not be cause for any additional cuts in personnel in fiscal year 1993. As the chairman knows, and as the chairman has outlined, the President's plans are, under his budget, to reduce the force by 90,000 people in fiscal year 1993.

Every year the force loses 200,000 individuals just by attrition. And the President's program calls for reducing the force from 1.8 million, which the chairman has outlined, to 1.6 million over the next 3 or 4 years.

And I might say, his force structure proposals were put in place even before the collapse of the old Soviet Union. There has been virtually no increase in the number of personnel that will be displaced even after the collapse of the Soviet Union.

So the chairman is quite correct in his assumption that the Exon amendment would not result in additional personnel being discharged.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished Senator for his observations, his comments, and his contribution.

So what we have been hearing is an argument without merit for fiscal year 1993. The Exon cut will not result in additional reductions of servicemen or servicewomen.

As for the next 10 years, through the year 2001, the OTA study indicates that overall job loss in the defense establishment, including the whole industrial complex, might drop from the current 6 million in 1991 to as low as 3.5 million. In other words, over the entire decade, while this is a substantial number, it represents only, as has been pointed out, about 250,000 people per year, or two-tenths of 1 percent of the 119 million jobs in the U.S. economy.

We have some time in which to put conversion and transition programs into place, to shift that base to a more relevant, efficient, and productive civilian economy. The current adjustment will not be as steep as we experienced after World War II when, although there were virtually no transition programs, the economy absorbed over 10 million servicemen, another 2 million civilian workers in the military, and about 12.4 defense industry workers over a period of 3 years, and it did it rather easily.

Taking a more recent experience of the Vietnam war into account, again we find that the adjustment we currently face is not as large. And again, according to the OTA report, defense-related employment dropped from 8.1 million in 1968, the peak year of the Vietnam war, to 4.8 million in 1976, dropping 1.8 million in just the 2 years from 1969 to 1971.

Furthermore, we are more prepared than ever before to manage a smooth adjustment because some programs are already in place. As the OTA study says:

A source of optimism is that there exist choices for Government policies that could both ease the adjustment and build a stronger foundation for an expanding economy and rising incomes. There are possibilities for new public investments, in areas ranging from environmental protection to advanced transportation and communication systems, that could spur new technologies, support new businesses, and create new jobs.

So it is important to recognize, Mr. President, that most of the active duty personnel drawdown can be attained through normal attrition. The OTA study finds that by 1995, the U.S. active duty military forces will be 23 percent smaller than in 1990, "shrinking from 2.1 million to 1.6 million" and that "because of the high rate of turnover, especially in the enlisted ranks, most of the manpower reduction is likely to be accomplished through normal attrition combined with reduced levels of accession. * * * Involuntary separations are not expected to exceed 100,000 or about 20 percent of the total reductions."

So 80 percent of the draconian personnel reduction that has been bandied about will occur anyway through normal attrition. Let us not raise false fears unnecessarily on this matter.

From another perspective, we can compare the potential job losses due to the defense reductions to unrelated worker displacement in recent years. Over the 5-year period, 1985 to 1989, some 9.2 million workers lost their jobs because of plant closings and relocations, or other reasons—some 1.8 million workers per year. Thus, the normal displacement rates in the recent period "accounted for considerably more job loss than can be expected from the defense cutbacks that are coming." As for the effect on communities, while the national impact of defense industry closings is not disruptive, the effect on particular communities and some regions must be a cause of concern and we need to put more attention on transition assistance to those communities, and to the conversion of some of those industries to civilian uses.

The OTA study estimates that of the Nation's 3,137 counties, some 138 are "most at risk with * * * high unemployment (over 6 percent * * *) and moderate to high defense dependency * * * these counties were home to 4.9 million workers, or 4 percent of employed people."

The programs of retraining and assistance that are in place, including the economic dislocation and worker adjustment assistance, EDWAA Program, need broadening and will require strengthened funding. Some $527 million was allocated to the EDWAA Program in fiscal year 1991 and some $577 million in fiscal year 1992. We need, Mr. President, to put into place this year a roadmap for transition that will give hope—and the means to plan for the future—to those people and industries which will suffer from the defense reductions. The military industrial complex has attracted some of the best and some of the brightest of our people and our technology, and we cannot afford to allow those important resources to go to waste. They are needed to breathe the new life and vigor into our economy.

Mr. President, I am not among those who, when they look closely at this problem, fear the transition to an economy less dependent on the military industrial complex. The problem appears to be manageable. There is a need to focus on the improvement and expansion of our transition programs. The study released by the Office of Technology Assessment is a major contribution to our thinking on that subject, and I recommend it to my colleagues.

A second OTA volume is due shortly, and I am hopeful that it will add more suggestions and perspectives on how we can best handle this issue.

Mr. President, the 1993 defense reduction proposed by the able senior Senator from Nebraska will go directly toward reducing our deficit. In hearings that I conducted before the Appropriations Committee in February, five prominent economists, including Dr. Herbert Stein and Dr. Charles Schultz, who had served in administrations of both parties, agree on the absolute need to get a handle on spending and to reduce the deficit.

Mr. President, there has been apparently some wonderment why Senators who voted to take down the wall a few days ago, so that defense resources could be placed into domestic discretionary initiatives, there seems to be some puzzlement as to why we now would be seeking to reduce defense and divert the moneys into deficit reduction.

Mr. President, the economists said that we need to build up our economy, reinvest in our country and its infrastructure, both physical and human, and that we also need to reduce the deficit. Therefore, Mr. President, we tried a few days ago to take down the wall. It will come down next year in any event, based on the agreement of 1990. We tried to take down the wall. We failed. We did not fail to get a majority, but we failed to get the 60 votes to cut off cloture.

Having failed then, we come to the second part of the economists' recommendations: Reduce the deficit. That is what we are trying to do here. Here is the 100-percent pure chance, not like Ivory Soap, 99-percent pure; it will float. This is a 100-percent pure chance to do so, since every dollar of the Exon amendment goes to reducing the deficit.

(Mr. DODD assumed the chair.)

Mr. BYRD. So I hope that all those brave souls who went up to the wall and voted not to break it down a few days ago because defense savings would not go for deficit reduction, will join us today and help to reduce the deficit.

So today we take up their battle cry, their then battle cry: "Let us reduce the deficit." Now is their chance.

The Pentagon certainly does not need it. The Pentagon is bloated. Bloated. Let us return these precious dollars to the Treasury. A vote for this amendment is a 100-percent redemption on our promise to the American people to get spending under control and start easing down our deficit.

This is a key part of any strategy to promote economic growth and increase productivity and competitiveness. For those who want to reduce Government spending, here is your chance. Seize it. Embrace it. Clasp it to thy bosom. For those who want to reduce the Federal deficit, here is your chance. Here is your chance.

Mr. President, I said earlier I had listened with a great deal of interest to the debate. It has been good debate. We have heard concerns addressed to the drawdown of our military forces. Reference is made to the World War II drawdown and the Korean and Vietnam drawdowns and the present drawdown.

Mr. President, as one who well remembers World War II, who built Victory ships and Liberty ships as a welder in the shipyards in Baltimore, MD, and Tampa, FL, as one who witnessed the World War II drawdowns, I can remember that we had over 12 million men under arms in World War II. The chart here indicates the rapid buildup, very steep, and an almost equally rapid, or perhaps more so, build down. We have heard talk about a precipitous drop in the build down in military forces that would result from the Exon amendment. On the chart we see a real precipitous drop after World War II.

Mr. President, I can remember the "wanna go home" rallies that occurred in Tokyo, Calcutta, Paris, Frankfurt, Germany. "Bring our boys home," was the hue and cry. The mail came to Capitol Hill in a deluge. "We want our boys brought home." And so we saw that precipitous drop in manpower as shown on the chart to my left.

Mr. President, the drop will not be as precipitous now, and neither will the threat be as real as it was at the end of World War II when that drawdown took place. There were 20 million men in the Red army and its associated forces during the war. Those numbers were pretty much secret, but I think there have been good indications that there was about 20 million in the Soviet military. And when the war was over and our boys were conducting "wanna go home" rallies—and we brought them home—there are still 10 million men in the Red army. Stalin insisted on controlling the Dardanelles. He wanted a slice of Turkey. He also wanted a strip of Caspian territory to protect his oil fields in Baku. He wanted a role in the occupation of Japan. He wanted his army to have a physical presence in the Ruhr Valley. That is what we faced from the Soviets at a time when the mighty U.S. military was changing to civilian status.

What did we have here at home? We had a precipitous drop. What else did we have? We had strikes. Five million workers, all told, struck in 1946. That is the year I ran for the House of Delegates in West Virginia. Five million. The General Motors strike. And then there was wave after wave of strikes in the oil, the lumber, the textile, and the electrical industries. When the GM strike was over, 750,000 steelworkers banked their fires. The northern panhandle of West Virginia is noted as a steelmaking area, like Pittsburgh. And about the time the steelworkers went back—they went back after 80 days—then 400,000 coal miners left the pits in 21 States of this country, including West Virginia. When they came out, the railroad brotherhoods said, we are going to bring our people off the job.

So what we saw was some real chaos. It was not all due to the precipitous military drawdown. There was a black market, there was a wave of strikes, and we did not have the programs that we have today available for a transition.

We have listed military personnel, DOD civilian personnel, defense industry workers, employment manpower, and percent of employment, and so on. The drawdown in World War II, 1945–1947, was 10.6 million military personnel, 1.8 million DOD civilian personnel, and 12.4 million defense industry workers, a total of 24.8 million—not just 2 million, as we are hearing today. And when Senators talk about 2 million, they are really reaching back to include those military personnel who have been cut out over the past 5 years. We listen to all their talk, and it sounds as if we are going to have 2 million drawdown in the next 5 years. But in reality the 2 million manpower figure includes the drawdown that has already occurred over the past 5 years.

What size was our labor force in those days? It was not 119 million, as we have today. The total employment of manpower was 60.8 million.

The World War II drawdown of 24.8 million constituted 40.8 percent of the total manpower of 60.8 million in this country. That was a real problem. Of course, there were pent-up consumer demands, people had saved up a lot of money. I can remember the electric dishwashers and the electric clothesdryers coming on the market at the close of that war.

Now let us go to Korea. In 1953–1956, the drawdown of military personnel was 750,000, DOD civilian personnel 150,000, defense industry workers 1.6 million, a total of 2.5 million, and an employment manpower pool of 63.9 million. In other words, the military and civilian drawdown was 3.9 percent of the total manpower pool.

Vietnam, 1968 to 1974, military personnel in that reduction was 1.4 million, DOD civilian personnel, 250,000, defense industry workers 1.4 million, total manpower reduction, 3,050,000, which constituted 3.7 percent of the total employment pool of 82.8 million.

Let us see what we have here today. The administration's proposed reduction, 1993–1997, is 237,000 drawdown in military personnel, 54,000 DOD civilian personnel, and a range of 500,000 to 1 million in defense industry workers; in other words a total manpower reduction, using the range again, depending on whether we accept the figure of 500,000 or 1 million or somewhere in between, the total manpower reduction, 791,000 to 1,291,000. If it is 500,000, that would be seven-tenths of 1 percent of the 119 million. If it is the upper range of 1 million, it would be 1.1 percent of the 119 million. Contrast that with the percentages that are shown on the chart which occurred in World War II, the Korean war, and the Vietnam war.

Mr. SASSER. Will the distinguished President pro tempore yield for a question at this juncture?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. SASSER. I note on this very highly informative chart that he brings before the Senate today that on the line entitled "Percent of Employment," that the percent of those employed who would be affected by the defense reductions through 1993–1997 amounts to only seven-tenths of 1 percent of the total work force under one scenario, and 1.1 percent of the total work force under another scenario.

Mr. BYRD. That is correct.

Mr. SASSER. When you compare that with the percent of the work force that were affected after World War II, Korea, and Vietnam, it appears to be a relatively insignificant, although highly significant to those who are affected, number with regard to the total employment.

For example, am I right, I say to the distinguished President pro tempore, in saying that even after the war in Vietnam, when that had concluded, and the drawdown began, 3.7 percent of the total work force was affected, and even under the largest drawdown under the scenario following this war, only 1.1 percent would be affected. So over 300 percent more of the work force was affected following Vietnam than it would be under the largest drawdown that might be anticipated here. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRD. It is correct. The contrast is startling and would amount to about 3½ times as much, under the upper range, 1.1 percent.

Mr. SASSER. So this would be characterized then, I assume by the Office of Technology Assessment which made this very excellent study, as the mildest so-called conversion from a military economy to a civilian economy that we have experienced in any of the three military conflicts we had in the latter part of the 20th century.

Mr. BYRD. That is absolutely correct. There is no question about it from the standpoint of the manpower reduction, and the total employment pool.

Mr. EXON. Before the Senator leaves that chart, will the distinguished Senator from West Virginia put that chart back up for just one moment so that I might ask a question?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. EXON. Let us make this doubly clear, so that all understand. The figures on the right there, the administration-proposed reduction, those are the only reductions in personnel of any kind that I have heard about, and those are accurate I believe with regard to what the administration is proposing in their part of the budget that we have been addressing today, and yesterday, with regard to the Exon amendment. So those are the administration's proposals. They are likely to happen. And what the Senator is saying is that even if they happen, and it is going to cause some harm and pain and suffering, but from the standpoint of what we have gone through previously in the country with previous drawdowns they are much less painful.

Then I would also say, to make sure that the Senator from West Virginia in his very excellent presentation agrees with the statement, that even those figures that are quite evidenced here as not as startling as some might think them to be, the Exon amendment though would not affect one way or the other because the Exon amendment does not make that situation even worse, as has been so dramatically outlined by the Senator from West Virginia. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRD. Yes. I think that is correct. These are DOD figures. This is the Office of Technology Assessment. I think the Senator has correctly analyzed what is being shown on the chart as well as the impact of his amendment.

Mr. EXON. I thank my friend.

Mr. SASSER. Before we leave this whole question here of manpower and manpower reductions, if the distinguished President pro tempore would yield for just one observation, some of our bright young economists have been listening very carefully to the distinguished President pro tempore's presentation.

They advised me that there will be a displacement under the drawdown that is being anticipated, even under the Exon amendment, of about 200,000 per year. They further advise me that in the ordinary course of business, as this economy comes out of a recession, it creates 300,000 new jobs per month.

So we are talking about a displacement here of 200,000 per year.

But coming out of a recession, if we really behave as in past recessions, we would be creating 300,000 new jobs per month. I wanted to call that to the distinguished President pro tempore's attention. I think this further reinforces the line of logic that he is following that this reduction here is very minimal from historic standards.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator, and I thank the young economists to whom he has alluded for their timely contribution.

Mr. President, references have been made to the defense and domestic outlay totals of the 5 years, and it has been rightly said by Senators—I believe the chairman of the Armed Services Committee made the point—that there would be a reduction in total defense spending in 1993 through 1997—as compared with the period of 1988 through 1992—of something like $41 billion.

Whereas, as Senator NUNN also correctly stated, there will be an increase in domestic spending in 1993 to 1997 of $238 billion, over the previous 5 years. In other words, in 1988 through 1992, total defense spending, excluding the $50 billion Desert Storm-Desert Shield, was $1.478 trillion. In 1993 through 1997 it will be $41 billion less—$1.437 trillion, to be exact. And domestic in 1988 through 1992 was $922 billion. And in 1993 through 1997 it will be $1.160 trillion; in other words, $238 billion more than in the 1988 through 1992 period.

Mr. President, we can do a lot of things with figures and with charts. Sometimes we have to note that the inclination is to choose the period that is most advantageous to the argument that one is making.

But I thought it best to go back over the larger period of 1973 through 1977, and take all of these 5-year periods.

Let us begin with 1973. In the period of 1973 through 1977, defense outlay totals amounted to $455 billion, and domestic outlay totals amounted to $367 billion, the difference being $88 billion. That is not a large difference in the whole context of the billions that we are talking about. The outlay totals for defense as I say, were $88 billion more than the outlay totals for domestic.

In the period of 1978 through 1982, defense outlays were $700 billion, domestic outlays were $613 billion, the difference being $87 billion. Still, there is not a lot of difference, not a great deal in terms of the overall massive numbers of billions.

But let us go now to 1983 through 1987, take a look at what happened during the Reagan buildup of defense. Defense outlay totals amounted to $1.247 trillion. Domestic discretionary initiatives amounted to $706 billion. In other words, defense over domestic nearly doubled. It was close to doubling it, the difference being $541 billion.

"Now we are getting into real money," as Everett Dirksen said. "A billion here and a billion there, and pretty soon it adds up to a lot of money."

When we get to 1983 through 1987, then we find that defense was $541 billion over domestic.

Then in 1988 through 1992, defense was $1.478 trillion; domestic, $922 billion. Defense, therefore, was $556 billion in excess of domestic discretionary outlays—still big difference, big money.

In 1993 through 1997, defense is going to be reduced from 1988 through 1992 by $41 billion. That is not a lot of money in this context when we are talking about trillions. In domestic, as Senator NUNN and others have pointed out, there will be an increase amounting to $238 billion in 1993-97 over 1988-92. The total amount will be $1.160 trillion for domestic. That is for operating our Government. That is for all of the programs that benefit our infrastructure needs, both human and physical. That is the whole thing: the war on crime, national forests, Park Service, war on drugs, veterans programs, environment cleanup, highways, bridges. That is it: $1.160 trillion.

So they say, "Look, the increase is $238 billion." But keep in mind that defense still would have $1.437 trillion, even in the light of the reduced need for defense spending, still $1.437 trillion.

How long does it take to count a trillion dollars at a rate of $1 per second? Thirty-two thousand years.

I have here in my pocket a few bills. Let me take a $1 bill. How long is that $1 bill? Six inches. It takes two, end to end, to make one foot. How far would we go with a trillion dollars in $1 bills stretched out end to end? Well, the Sun is 93 million miles away. I have not calculated it, but I expect it to be around a trillion $1 bills placed end to end to go from here to the Sun. That is rough calculating. And keeping in mind that our national debt is almost $4 trillion, or will be by the beginning of the new fiscal year in October, how far would that stretch?

I can remember Mr. Reagan when he first came into office—and I am sure my colleagues remember that, too—he pointed to a chart that he presented on national television. He pointed to a chart showing that, on the day he took office, the national debt stood at $932 billion, and he told the Nation that a stack of one thousand dollar bills 4 inches thick would amount to a million dollars.

Mr. SASSER. Will the distinguished Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. Let me finish this thought.

I think it was about a million dollars. Four inches thick. Four inches is one-third of a foot, and if a million dollars in thousand dollar bills is 4 inches thick, $3 million would be 1 foot thick, you could carry on arithmetical computations and you would find that, as President Reagan pointed out, a stack of thousand dollar bills representing a trillion dollars would be 63 miles high. The debt was actually $932 billion—a stack of thousand dollar bills 59 miles high.

On April 2, with a national debt of $3.781 trillion, the stack would be 239 miles high. Remember, it was 59 miles high when Mr. Reagan took office. I said at that time, he would never put that chart on television again, because it was 59 miles high when he became President, after 39 administrations and 39 Presidents—Grover Cleveland having been elected twice—not consecutively. I said then that Mr. Reagan would never show that chart again, because by the time he went out of office the debt was about three times that amount.

So now we are talking about a $4 trillion national debt by October 1. If we take that amount in $1 bills and stretch them out, I figure in my mind that they would extend to the Sun and back—93 million miles away, to the Sun and back—about two times. That is the kind of money we are talking about regarding the national debt. So we are trying to reduce that deficit today, and we may not make much of a dent in it. At least, it is a start.

Now, the Senator from Tennessee wanted me to yield to him.

Mr. SASSER. Yes, Mr. President. I thank the distinguished President pro tempore for yielding. He brings to the Senate today a very valuable and informative chart, and I note, if I read the chart correctly, that during the period from 1993 to 1997, in current dollars, under the proposals that have been brought to us by the administration, we will spend $1.437 trillion on the military. This will be more than the $1.247 trillion that we spent between 1983 and 1987, when we were experiencing the very large buildup that became known as the Reagan buildup.

So I ask my friend from West Virginia, even after the collapse of the Warsaw Pact, even after the implosion of the old Soviet Union, which no longer exists, even after the withdrawal of the nonexistent Red army from Western Europe, even after the Soviet fleets or the fleets of the old Soviet Union are withdrawn from the oceans of the world—tied up, crews demoralized, no fuel—even after the Soviet Union has ceased to exist, we are going to spend over $200 billion more on the military over a 5-year period than we did from 1983 to 1987; is that correct?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. SASSER. The point I make to my distinguished friend is we are going to be spending more on military, more of the taxpayers' hard-earned dollars on the military in the 5 years from 1993 to 1997 than we spent when the Evil Empire was going full blast and Ronald Reagan was in the White House, presiding over the largest defense buildup since the Korean war. We are going to be spending more in the next 5 years than we spent in the 5-year period from 1983 to 1987.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is correct. These figures are current dollars, but the Senator is preeminently correct.

According to the charts, $238 billion more will be spent in the period 1993-1997 on domestic needs than was spent in the period 1988-1992. But look what was taken out of domestic's hide prior to the period 1993-1997. Domestic will not even catch up with the losses it sustained over those years.

Even saying that, look what defense is going to have: $1.437 trillion, with domestic at $1.160 trillion. That is for everything—$1.160 trillion—everything that keeps the people and the Government operating: The departments, the executive branch, the legislative branch, the judicial branch, the whole kit and caboodle; $1.160 trillion.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, if I could inquire of my friend from West Virginia on one additional matter. The distinguished President pro tempore was very careful in bringing this chart and this data to the Senate, and indicated that you can prove a lot by charts and by statistics and by numbers. So we are grateful to him for going back as far as 1973 to make the contrast between defense spending, and domestic spending, and to show us the growth in defense spending. And I note that his source is the Supplement to the Budget of the United States of Fiscal Year 1993.

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. SASSER. So the source is the official document of the U.S. Government.

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. SASSER. But under these figures, I note that from 1973 to 1977, during the years of the Nixon-Ford administration, we spent $455 billion in constant dollars on defense.

Mr. BYRD. In current dollars.

Mr. SASSER. In the years 1993 to 1997, we will be spending $1.437 trillion.

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. SASSER. So in current dollars, we will be spending well over 300 percent more in 1993-1997 than we did in 1973 to 1977 during the administrations of President Nixon and President Ford.

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BYRD. Let me take down the chart. Before I do so, I should point out again the convenience of choosing the period 1988 to 1992 and comparing that with the period 1993-1997. In other words, 1988 was at the height of the Reagan military buildup. And I voted for about everything in that buildup, so I am not casting any reflection. But in starting with the period 1988-1992, at the height of the buildup, the difference for the 1993-1997 period does show a rather small cut of $41 billion for the military.

But if we go back to the beginning of the buildup and prior thereto, starting with fiscal year 1973, we then can see a truer picture of how much more of the people's money has been placed into defense spending than into domestic spending. A clearer picture spreads over a greater amount of time, which lessens the distortion that can appear in picking out selected dates where the buildup was high and now is coming down; whereas before, it was not high, it was low; went up and then came down.

Mr. President, now for a few other observations. We are dealing with "real people," they say, in the military drawdown. And that is true, we are dealing with real people.

Mr. President, those were "real people" when we saw the steel workers bank their fires permanently in the northern panhandle of West Virginia a few years back.

Those were real people who lost their jobs when the mines closed down, when the machinery came to the coal industry, when we lost 100,000 coal miners in West Virginia as a result. Between the last census and the 1990 census, West Virginia's population has been reduced 8 percent, the highest percentage of loss of population of any State in the Union. Those were real people who left the State.

When General Motors lays off thousands and when the IBM or United Technologies lay off thousands, we hear from the administration, "This is normal; just the market adjusting. Let the law of supply and demand take care of them." The administration says, "Well, it is just the market adjusting. Don't worry. Let our supply and demand take care of it. Don't meddle. That is capitalism."

But when the world changes and we do not need to be armed to the teeth anymore, we hear from the administration and Senators that we cannot let this happen, this will be a catastrophe. We are talking about real people—real people. And we are.

How can this country ever adjust? Catastrophe is around the bend, they say. What happened to all that faith in capitalism? What happened to all the faith in the American system? When will we plan to unshackle ourselves from this mindless spending for a force that we no longer need?

We insult our career fighting men and women when we tell them that we cannot think of anything for them to do in a civilian economy. I have more faith in this country and in its resilience and in the men and women in our Armed Forces than that. These are real people. We are dealing with human beings here. But, Mr. President, we were also dealing with human beings when we had to pass an emergency unemployment compensation bill three times—three times—to deal with those whose unemployment compensation had run out. But the administration was hard to convince that they were real people.

I have heard Senators say, we destroyed communism, and now we are getting ready to destroy ourselves.

Mr. President, we did not destroy communism. Soviet communism destroyed itself when it overextended itself. The Soviet Union did not provide the consumer goods or the lines of communication and conveyance and distribution necessary to a strong economy. Instead, it placed too much emphasis on its bloated military. And we have seen it come crashing down. It put its resources into swords; not into pruning hooks. Soviet communism destroyed itself.

Yes, we are destroying ourselves if we continue down the same road. If we continue to put our moneys into swords and not into pruning hooks, then we are going to do the same thing. We will see our own economy collapse.

Now, Senators are saying, look at history. Well, we have talked about history already today, Mr. President, and we can talk some more. The Peloponnesian War ended in 404 B.C.

Sparta was the winner in that war. And no one would have foreseen at that time that a victorious Sparta was headed for the greatest failure in its history—the complete destruction of its military and economic power—which would occur 33 years later. It was easy for Thebes to deliver the knockout punch to Sparta at the battle of Leuctra in 371 B.C.

For almost 200 years Sparta had been the dominant land power in Greece. Then all of a sudden, it was all over. Why? One major reason was that Agesilaus, the Spartan King, would not face up to the rapidly changing internal and external realities.

And that is what we had better do. We had better face up to the rapidly changing internal and external realities that face our own country. If we want to look at history, we can draw a lesson therefrom, the lesson of Sparta, as well as from the recent lesson of the Soviet Union.

Mr. President, in listening to the debate, it sounds as if we are almost sorry that the Soviet Union has collapsed, because we are going to have to bring a lot of people home. We will not be able to spend as much money on the U.S. military as during the cold war. Some of us do not want to spend as much money on the military. We want to cut back, and we think we can cut back a little faster.

Another argument that we hear is that we will be breaking commitments to the people who entered the military; that we are not at the end of history; there will be new challenges, and the drawdown must be slower.

What is the logical conclusion to that argument if it is carried far enough. we cannot cut back any faster because there will be new challenges in the future. When are we ever going to be at the end of history? Jesus said to his disciples, as they asked him for a sign, "Ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars * * * but the end is not yet * * * nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom * * * all these are the beginning of sorrows."

So, the world will continue to have its troubles, but I do not think any of us would argue that the Soviet Union is likely to rise like the sphinx from the ashes again. It will be a long time, if it ever does.

But to carry that argument to its logical conclusion, when are we ever going to cut back if we say there will always be troublemakers?

Mr. SASSER. Could I ask my distinguished friend to yield on that particular point?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. SASSER. The question is when will we ever cut back? And the distinguished President pro tempore, with his very rich knowledge of history, points out what happened to Sparta, to the Soviet Union, after excessive military spending. There are other examples in history. The collapse of the Spanish Empire was caused, many historians say, by overextension and overspending.

Mr. BYRD. And the collapse of the Roman Empire. It overextended its strength and its power.

Mr. SASSER. And the Roman Empire.

But where does it end? It ends, I say to my distinguished friend from West Virginia, with the bankruptcy of the nation state. And then they find that all of these enemies that were out there, all of these threats that were going to take them over, all of a sudden they do not seem to exist anymore. They are not the virulent threat that they thought they were. And the people of the old Soviet Union are now coming to the United States, their old enemy, asking for aid.

So it ends when the nation state spends itself into bankruptcy. Is that the path, I ask my friend from West Virginia, that this country is on? Are we bankrupting ourselves on military spending, or are we on the verge of doing so, I ask, when I look around and I see our cities crumbling, when I see our streets not maintained, when I see our children not getting an adequate education? And I say that because I know that is the passion in the President pro tempore's life, now, educating the next generation, because he knows the value of education.

When I see these things being neglected and the great military spending that is going on, I wonder where our country is headed.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator has put his finger on the central point of what ought to be our goal. This is what we ought to be thinking about, the Bible says:

To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven:
 * * * * *
 A time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted;
 * * * * *
 A time to break down, and a time to build up;
 * * * * *
 A time of war, and a time of peace.

Mr. President, it is time to plant. We have been plucking up that which is planted. It is time now to plant.

It is time to build. We have been tearing down too long. And of necessity, to a considerable degree, because we were faced with a deadly adversary. But it is time now to plant, time to build up, a time of peace, not a time of war. We are not saying that we are going to abolish the Military Establishment. We are just saying we do not need an establishment of this size, as we look, now, to the future.

Mr. EXON. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. EXON. I think it is exactly on the point the Senator is talking about.

I want to congratulate our President pro tempore for a very interesting presentation. I guess I am fearful not enough people have listened to it to get the picture.

This may be a good time to put in some figures that I think are more on point than anything else that substantiates the difficult position that this Nation finds itself in, looking into the future and not out the rearview mirror, as the President pro tempore has said so eloquently.

The President of the United States has a much heralded $50 billion cut in the defense budget that he announced in his State of the Union Address. And the people have been playing with that—is that not wonderful?

The fact of the matter is, as I said on many occasions, 65 percent of the $50 billion over a 5-year period is a cut in two weapons programs, the B-2 and Seawolf, neither of which are systems that are now operative.

But the key figures I think have been overlooked, and I want to put those figures in the RECORD now and then ask the President pro tempore if these accurate figures, with regard to the President's budget, do not simply substantiate the seriousness of the situation that he has so eloquently outlined today with regard to doing something about the budget deficit?

The President has taken a lot of credit for a $50 billion reduction in military expenditures over 5 years. I would simply point out that these are the key figures. In budget authority for this fiscal year 1992, the best, most accurate figure we can obtain is we are going to expend $291 billion for fiscal 1992 for national defense.

The President has recommended that for fiscal 1993, next year, the budget for next year we are principally debating now, that figure will be reduced to $281 billion. But then if you look at the 5-year out programs, the same budget authority for 5 years out in fiscal 1997, these are all from the President's budget figures. Budget authority is $290.6 billion under the President's budget. Or what you basically show here is that under the President's proposal, $291 billion that we are spending this fiscal year, if you follow the President's recommendation, it will be magnificently reduced to $290.6 billion, a saving of about $400 million out of budget figures in the $290 billion area. Those are constant dollars. But those are dollars for dollars for dollars.

I just wonder what the American people are really thinking.

If the American people come to find out, as they will sooner or later, that even with the collapse of everything, mostly, that we have pointed to for this magnificent buildup in the defense which was necessary when the Soviet Union was a major threat, the President of the United States and the majority of the U.S. Senate—unless they vote to accept the Exon amendment—will be saying this is just about right. We are going to go on spending. The majority of the U.S. Senate, if it does not accept the Exon amendment, is going to go on saying: Yes, sir, the President is just about right. We are going to keep on spending the same dollar amount, give or take, each and every year for the next 5 years when, unless something dramatic happens, we are certainly going to be at a significantly less challenge to any significant threat regarding the national security interests of the United States.

Those figures I have just cited, it seems to me, puts the picture that the President pro tempore has addressed so eloquently here today, up against where the rubber meets the road. And that is where the people are concerned about it.

They say why can you not do something about the expenditures of the Federal Government? I say we are trying.

I say we might not win today. We cannot win on a modest amendment that says we are going to do a little bit better than the President by making a little bit more reduction by somewhere between 1 and 2 percent from the President's numbers to get the job done that the American people want and expect us to do.

I simply say that unless the Exon amendment is agreed to, we will be sending a clear signal that not only are we not capable as a U.S. Senate to do something about addressing the problems that the President pro tempore has suggested, not only are we not going to do anything about it, but basically, unfortunately we do not care. That is a pretty strong statement, but I really believe that if we cannot accept a modest amendment like this to begin to address the problems that the President pro tempore has so adequately presented, then I think we are failing the institution, and I think we are failing the people who expect and want us to do something, and are crying out to say why will you not do anything? I hope they are listening and I hope that the vote we are going to take might be tallied as an indication that if it is not adopted then maybe we do not care as an institution.

The figures I have just cited tie directly, do they not, in with the bigger picture of what the problem is that the Senator from West Virginia has so adequately pointed out?

Mr. BYRD. They do. And I congratulate the distinguished Senator for offering the amendment. Yesterday, we discussed his offering the amendment. I said to the Senator from Nebraska: You will probably lose, but do what you think is right. You will recall, I said to him, the days when we Democrats were in the minority. I was the minority leader and many times I would say to my colleagues in the minority: Go out there and offer your amendments. You probably will not win, but offer your amendments. Think not of how it will fare today but of how it will look a year-and-a-half from today. Offer your amendments; stand on your principles.

So I say to the Senator from Nebraska, he may not win but he has done the right thing by offering the amendment, putting this matter to a debate and to a vote.

Mr. President, the final point that I wish to address briefly is the word "commitment." We have heard it said here that we have a commitment to these people in the Armed Forces. We have a commitment to those who are engaged in defense work. Mr. President, we do have a commitment to them. And I have already addressed what we need to do. We need to plan and we need to take some action in terms of providing the funding for programs that will enable those people to take their places in the civilian work force.

Mr. President, the word "commitment" is one we ought to think a little about. Yes, those individuals volunteered, and we are all proud of them. But, Mr. President, we cannot commit ourselves to continue siphoning the resources of this country from the country's vital domestic needs and continuing down the road of noninvestment in our country. We cannot continue to do that. We also have a commitment to the country. We do not have to commit ourselves, I hope, from now on, to people who go into the military just to follow a career, when the need is no longer there.

We have a commitment. I like to use that word, too. We have a commitment to our country. We have a commitment to its people. We have a commitment to the young people of this country who are being deprived of the kind of education that they are capable of. We have a commitment to build up our country's infrastructure, its highways, its waterways; a commitment to provide water and sewage facilities; a commitment to environmental clean-up; a commitment to provide hospital care, health services to our people.

We have a commitment to our children; and that is the last commitment I want to address here. They are not here today to vote. It is a commitment to our children, our grandchildren, and to their children who will have to carry the massive debt burden we are passing on to them.

Much reference has been made to the entitlement and mandatory programs that are going through the hole in the ozone layer. They need to be addressed. That is going to take leadership. That will take leadership from the White House. We are not getting that leadership now. We will talk about that another day.

We have a commitment, Mr. President, to our children. Their voices cannot be heard here today. Only our voices can be heard. Now to whom do we owe the greatest commitment? To our children or to ourselves? Do we want to go on living for today at the expense of tomorrow? That is how we got where we are. That is how we came upon these triple-digit deficits that run into the hundreds of billions of dollars and a national debt that is rapidly approaching $4 trillion.

We heard the feel-good message during the Reagan years: There is a free lunch; there is no pain; you can have your lunch and eat it, too. Living today at the expense of tomorrow. The American people enjoyed those feel-good messages. But we need to tell the people the truth. That is what they are hungering for.

Some people do not want to hear the truth. There is pain in it. They want instant gratification. They are accustomed to the 30-second sound bite. I came up in the old school of politics. We did not have the 30-second sound bite in those days. We did not have television. It just made its real entry along about 1946 or 1947. But nowadays that is what wins for people in politics, the 30-second sound bite; tell us what is wrong in 30 seconds; then tell us how we can solve our problems in 30 seconds.

The feel-good message of the Reagan era has run its course, and it has left us with huge deficits and a mountain of debt. We are stewards of the future. And that is what we are talking about today. We want to make an orderly cutback of the military forces and military spending because we do face a new world, a new map of the world, with the Soviet Union gone.

Jesus told the parable of the talents. He said there was a certain man who went into a far country and called his servants about him and delivered unto them, each according to his ability, his goods. To one he gave 5 talents, to another 2, to another 1.

After a long time, the lord of those servants returned, and there was a reckoning. He called in his servants. The servant to whom he had given 5 talents said, "Lord, you gave me 5 talents. Behold, I have taken them and gained 5 talents more." His Lord said, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant. Thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

The servant to whom he gave 2 talents had likewise doubled the amount.

The Lord called in the third servant, to whom he had given 1 talent, and that servant said, "Lord, I knew that thou art a hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown and gathering where thou hast not straved, and I was afraid. And I went and hid thy talent in the Earth. Here it is. Take that which is thine." And the Lord of the house answered, saying, "Thou wicked and slothful servant. Thou knewest that I was a hard man, reaping where I had not sown, gathering where I had not strawed. Why didst thou not lend my money to the exchangers, so that upon my return I would have received mine own with usury. Take, therefore, the talent from him and give it to him who hath 10 talents, for unto everyone that hath shall be given, but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath."

Now, Mr. President, we ought to take that parable to our hearts. We are stewards for our children. Our commitment is to them. Are they going to rise up and call us blessed?

Lothrop Stoddard, in his book "The Rising Tide of Color," said something which I think is appropriate and worth remembering. He said,

We are links in a vital chain, charged with high duties, both to the dead and the unborn. In very truth, we are at once the sons of sire who sleep in calm assurance that we will not betray the trust they confided to our hands, and sires of sons who in the Beyond wait confident that we shall not cheat them of their birthright.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from New Mexico is recognized to speak for up to 10 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I would like to ask if the Senator from New Mexico yields back his time, would whatever time remains on the other side be yielded back so we could vote?

Mr. SASSER. I say to my friend from New Mexico, the Senator from Nebraska has some time left and the request would have to be addressed to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. I would certainly agree to expedite things. I have 5 or 6 minutes left. If I could have 2 minutes for a brief summary, to try to set straight what the Exon amendment is one last time, if you give me 2 minutes, I will yield back the rest of the time if the other time would be yielded back on a similar proportionate proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Did the Senator suggest that we each use 2 minutes? I am more than willing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and that it be charged to our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, might I say to the distinguished chairman, I have had a request—while I am conferring with Senator DOLE, I have been asked if Senator SIMPSON might speak 2 minutes as if in morning business regarding the death of a former Senator from his State.

Mr. SASSER. No objection, of course. Mr. DOMENICI. I so request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

DEATH OF SENATOR GALE MCGEE

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, a very dear friend of mine and a very remarkable U.S. Senator known to many in this body—and I know particularly to Senator BYRD, who worked with him—Senator Gale McGee died this morning. He served the Senate for 18 years.

He was a professor of mine at the University of Wyoming when my wife Ann and I were students there. My father was on the board of trustees of the university when he was selected to teach there.

He served this Government beautifully. He was Ambassador to the Organization of American States. He then went into private counseling and business in 1981.

He was truly a remarkable man, very loved and deeply respected in the State of Wyoming. He served our State with great distinction.

I want to pay tribute to him and to his wife Loraine, to his fine stalwart sons, David and Robert, his two daughters, Mary Gale and Lori Ann, and to his six grandchildren.

This was one of Wyoming's finest, and it was my great personal privilege, along with that of my wife Ann, to have been under his tutelage and guidance when we were young. When I came here, he was of great assistance to me in a Democratic administration and helped smooth my path in this fascinating area. I want to pay tribute to him and share this sad information with my colleagues.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I wonder if we could now agree that I will take no more than 2 minutes, yield back the remainder of my time, and the Senator from Nebraska will do the same. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. EXON. That is correct.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I want to commend my distinguished colleague from Nebraska, Senator EXON, for this amendment to reduce the level of defense spending in this budget resolution. I intend to support the amendment, which would make a real improvement in the resolution. However, I also want to emphasize that I believe we can achieve even more substantial savings in the defense budget, without in any way sacrificing our national security.

Mr. President, under the Exon amendment, defense spending would be reduced to a level $7.6 billion below that proposed in this resolution. That will still leave defense spending at levels significantly higher than historical peacetime levels—even during the cold war.

Specifically, the Exon amendment would leave defense spending at $273.4 billion. By contrast, the average peacetime defense budget during the cold war was only $236.6 billion, $36.8 billion lower than the amendment.

Mr. President, it is absolutely essential that this Nation change direction. The world is a very different place than it was only a few years ago. The Soviet Union no longer exists. The cold war is over.

At the same time, there are tremendous unmet needs right here in our own country. Americans are struggling economically. Millions are unemployed or underemployed. Millions of others, while working, are having great difficulty making their mortgage or rent payments, saving for their children's education, and making ends meet.

Mr. President, we need to rebuild the American economy. To do that, we are going to have to focus more resources on domestic needs. We need investment in our physical infrastructure. Investment in education. Investment in health care and our children.

None of that will be possible if we continue to squander billions of dollars of our Nation's wealth to subsidize the security of our allies, and to buy non-essential weapons systems.

We simply have to scale back, and in a very substantial way.

Mr. President, I will be speaking on these matters again later in the debate on the resolution. In fact, I am working with Senator BRADLEY and Senator HARKIN on efforts for deeper cuts in defense, and to lay the groundwork for greater domestic investments.

While the amendment offered by Senator EXON, in my view, does not go far enough, it is a step in the right direction.

So I will support the amendment, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

• Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, I rise to express my opposition to the Exon amendment.

As the debate over the budget resolution has unfolded, Senator after Senator has risen to condemn the deficit. With few exceptions, however, my colleagues have failed to acknowledge the central source of this problem or demonstrate the political courage needed to deal with it. So we are faced today with an amendment that calls for substantial cuts in defense. Apparently, the sponsors of this amendment believe that such cuts can make a significant contribution to deficit reduction. There is also an implication that in any event further cuts are worth making since defense spending is still too high. They are wrong on both accounts.

With two-thirds of the Federal budget dedicated to mandatory domestic spending, there is no way that defense cuts can make more than a marginal contribution to reducing the deficit. Even if we completely eliminated the defense budget, we would still be running a deficit of about $100 billion. The Senator from Nebraska has proposed that we cut $8.8 billion in budget authority and $4.2 billion in outlays from the President's fiscal year 1993 defense budget. In the larger context of our budget dilemmas, this is but a drop in the bucket.

This is not to say that we should not seek savings wherever possible. Wasteful and unnecessary Federal spending is never justified. The real question is this: "Does the administration's budget request provide for a level of defense in excess of what is needed to protect American national interests?"

Mr. President, as I argued 2 weeks ago when the Senate considered the firewalls legislation, the United States must maintain a global military presence and can afford to do so. Remaining engaged on a selective basis around the world is not a matter of charity—we do not seek to be the world's policeman as some have suggested. Our global presence is a matter of American national interests. Defending our trading lifelines and preventing the emergence of regional power vacuums directly contributes to U.S. national security.

Some have attempted to argue that preserving our superpower status is inconsistent with greater cooperation with allies and international institutions. But setting up a false dichotomy between collective security and pax Americana is a genuine red herring. In fact, collective security requires a strong American military component if it is to be a genuine deterrent and an instrument of international order.

Mr. President, those who advocate slashing the defense budget act as if the administration has failed to make significant reductions. In fact, the Pentagon has set a course to reduce the military by over 25 percent by 1997. Anyone who has looked at the details of what this entails must realize that this is a massive reduction. We are already putting some 2 million people out of defense related jobs over the next several years. Additional cuts will add to this number at a time when we will have great difficulty implementing cuts already planned. Further defense cuts will merely jeopardize a fragile economic recovery and exacerbate unemployment.

The Senator from Nebraska suggests that the bulk of the cuts he advocates can be taken out of procurement. But under the administration's future years defense plan, procurement is already being drastically reduced. In the last 2 years alone, for example, the Army's procurement budget has been reduced by 50 percent. The administration has canceled program after program, causing as much consternation as joy on Capitol Hill. Ironically, it has been Members of Congress who have sought to keep many of these programs funded despite strenuous objections of the White House and the Pentagon.

Mr. President, if we cut $5.2 billion in procurement funding from the fiscal year 1993 defense budget as called for in the Exon amendment, we will disrupt numerous programs that are now entering production. A random distribution of procurement cuts will only ensure that many programs are unable to proceed at efficient rates and in a sensible manner.

In proposing an arbitrary cut to defense, the proponents of this amendment have not adequately explained what is wrong with the administration's budget request. In this Senator's view, it was unwise and unnecessary to cut an additional $50 billion over 5 years. Our ability to preserve American global military strength is tenuous already. But if Congress cuts even more, we will be irreversibly on the path to military retreat.

Mr. President, the Secretary of Defense and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff have articulated a coherent military strategy and force posture for the post-cold war world. This new plan also represents truly massive cuts in defense spending. For the Congress to now demand additional cuts is irresponsible and shortsighted. We should join the administration in restructuring our military in a measured and coherent manner.

The amendment before us is simply a recipe for incoherence and disruption. It will not accomplish what its proponents argue. It will not help our economic situation; in fact it will exacerbate our problems in this area. This amendment is little more than a convenient excuse for not doing what is actually needed if we are serious about the deficit. •

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I fully support the efforts by the Senator from Nebraska to reduce the defense spending levels in the budget resolution.

The Exon amendment would reduce the 050 defense discretionary spending level by $7.6 billion in budget authority in fiscal year 1993, and by $3.5 billion in outlays in fiscal year 1993. While I would support even deeper cuts, I believe the Exon proposal has a great deal of merit. All savings under this plan would go to deficit reduction.

I was deeply disappointed with the defense spending levels that the Senate Budget Committee adopted during markup of the budget resolution. The levels currently in the budget resolution are almost identical to those in President Bush's budget request. More importantly, these defense levels are not consistent with the realities of the world we live in today.

We can make a reasonable cut in the defense budget without endangering our national security. We must begin the long overdue process of restructuring our military forces. Substantial savings can be realized, but only if Congress acknowledges what the American people acknowledge: That the Soviet Union has collapsed and the threats to our national security are greatly reduced.

Let me give a few examples. First, the United States and the Western nations are now pledging about $24 billion in assistance to the former Soviet Union. Yet, at the same time, roughly half of our defense budget goes to defend Western Europe from a Soviet attack. In addition, prior to the defense buildup under President Reagan, defense spending in the cold war peacetime years averaged $236.6 billion in constant 1993 dollars. Yet our defense budget for fiscal year 1993 under this budget resolution will exceed this figure by $43.8 billion, and at the end of the 5-year plan defense spending will still be $15 billion higher in constant dollars.

These levels of defense spending make even less sense when we consider the Federal budget deficit. We must make every effort to get our Federal budget deficit under control. According to CBS, the deficit will reach $372 billion in fiscal year 1992, setting new records for the deficit for the second year in a row. By 1997, we will still have a deficit of $216 billion. In addition, next year we will spend $316 billion in gross interest on the debt. We are spending more on our past than on our future. We need to do better.

I urge my colleagues to support the Exon amendment.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, the Senate has thoroughly debated the Exon amendment which would mandate additional cuts in the defense budget, over and above those proposed by President Bush and those approved by the Budget Committee.

Although I am not fully persuaded at this time that the President's proposal is necessarily the most appropriate bottom line spending figure, I am convinced that we are already cutting defense spending at a pace that is taxing our ability to draw down the Defense

Establishment in an orderly way. In our desire to cut defense spending we must ensure that we do not damage our force structure.

As such, I rise to oppose the Exon amendment. Let me be clear, however, that my opposition to the Exon amendment does not necessarily imply support for the President's proposal. I am most concerned about the pace and manner of the cuts required by the Senator from Nebraska.

President Bush, Secretary Cheney, General Powell, the military services, and congressional defense experts such as Chairman NUNN are emphatic that the current pace of reductions is already stretching our practical capacity.

In my view we must make the necessary cuts rationally, sensibly, and prudently. The meat cleaver approach does not meet these criteria. Mr. President, let us not forget the lessons of our own history. After each military build up and major historical transition, we have consistently built down too far, too fast, only to have to build up yet again in the future, at considerable costs. Let us not make the same mistake again.

Mr. President, I am also concerned about the manner in which the Senator from Nebraska would make these further cuts. Very briefly, it is my understanding that the premise of the Exon plan is that increases in any procurement line items are subject to freezes or reductions. This is an unusual manner in which to manage line items. It is my understanding that this is not done in any other budgets, such as domestic discretionary.

Further, the Senator from Nebraska bases his plan on freezing or cutting what are called nonmajor procurement programs. That is, cutting a little from a lot of programs.

This may sound reasonable on the surface, but it isn't necessarily the most sensible or serious way to cut the budget. Different programs are at different levels or stages of production. Some are just beginning, with increases planned for out years.

Freezing these arbitrarily would only increase their per-unit costs through decreased production efficiency. Other programs are toward the end of their run and could possibly be reduced or eliminated without major cost increases. The Exon plan would not permit the kind of flexibility that is required for rationally reducing the defense budget.

Mr. President, although the Exon plan might seem appealing on the surface because it identifies what appear to be relatively easy, painless cuts as a way to reduce the budget deficit, it is important to remember just how deep we are already cutting defense.

I would note that the defense budget is essentially the only source of real deficit reduction. No other Federal spending—not domestic discretionary, not foreign assistance, and certainly not entitlements—is contributing to deficit reduction. And the defense budget is already slated to absorb even more substantial cuts.

So, Mr. President, I must oppose the Exon amendment for these reasons. As the Armed Services Committee considers the defense authorization bill during the next several months, the Senate will have ample opportunity to review with intense scrutiny the defense spending plans. The Senate will have the opportunity to study the President's proposals, to identify potential areas of sensible additional cuts. I look forward to participating in this debate. I urge my colleagues to oppose the Exon amendment.

Thank you, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the national defense function recommendation in Senate Concurrent Resolution 106, the fiscal year 1993 budget resolution reported by the Senate Budget Committee. This resolution includes a defense budget recommendation for function 050 which is essentially the President's budget proposal for fiscal year 1993.

While the resolution does assume a small reduction from the President's proposal in fiscal year 1993, I believe we will be able to find $2 billion in reductions during the detailed review in the Armed Services and Appropriations Committees. I urge my colleagues to support the defense number in the committee-reported resolution, but I urge also that we exercise extreme caution in considering amendments to reduce the level further.

Mr. President, I remind my colleagues that the principal reason for maintaining military forces is to ensure the security of our Nation and its citizens. The President has submitted a defense budget request which he believes will accomplish this goal, while producing some additional savings to help reduce the Federal deficit.

Chairman NUNN and I have both advised the Senate Budget Committee that we cannot support further cuts in the fiscal year 1993 defense budget level. We recognize, however, that greater defense cuts may be possible in the future if developments in the former Soviet Union and the rest of the world continue to move toward a more peaceful world. But that is the future, and we cannot predict the future. Therefore, I again urge my colleagues to support the Senate Budget Committee-reported resolution which essentially endorses the President's level of defense funding.

Mr. President, I would like to spend a few moments to remind my colleagues of some important facts about the defense budget which should be considered carefully during our debate today.

THE DEFENSE BUDGET HAS ALREADY BEEN CUT

Mr. President, only 1½ years ago, when Congress agreed to the 1990 budget summit, we agreed to a ceiling on domestic spending and a ceiling on defense spending. The defense spending ceiling has resulted in cuts of over $470 billion from the defense budget plan which was the baseline at that time. The President just this year identified an additional $64 billion in defense budget authority that will no longer be required. This cut in budget authority will result in over $200 billion in reduced spending by 1995, all of which will be used to reduce the Federal deficit.

Under the President's current plan, defense spending will continue to decline at an average of 4 percent per year through 1997. Since its peak in 1985, defense spending has declined by almost 30 percent in real terms.

Defense spending in fiscal year 1993 will consume 19 percent of all Federal spending in this country, compared to nearly 23 percent during the 1970's—the decade of neglect which produced the hollow force. By fiscal year 1997, only 17 percent of all Government spending will be for national defense, less than at any time since the late 1930's.

As a percent of GNP, defense spending under the current plan will fall nearly a whole percentage point in the next 5 years. Currently, defense spending equates to 4.7 percent of GDP, the lowest level since World War II.

The President and Congress have funded defense within the agreed caps. The decisions required to realize these savings have caused the President and Congress to make hard choices—prioritizing among important weapons systems and modernization programs, as well as choosing which personnel to retain in a smaller force and which could be eliminated from the force without degrading essential military capability. These choices have not been made without consequences to Americans.

IMPACT OF DEFENSE BUDGET REDUCTIONS ON PEOPLE AND THE INDUSTRIAL BASE

Mr. President, I would like to reiterate a very important point which I brought to the attention of this body during the debate on the motion to proceed to the so-called firewalls bill. I believe there is a real firewall in the defense budget itself. This firewall is made up of the military and civilian personnel of the Department of Defense, as well as the many citizens of this country who work in defense-related industries. These people are the real heart of our Defense Establishment; without them, our forces are just systems and equipment that cannot function. And there is a point—a firewall—below which defense cannot be cut in any particular fiscal year without irreparably harming the morale, spirit, training, and expertise of the remaining military and civilian personnel of our defense establishment.

Mr. President, the 1990 summit agreement required massive cuts in the defense budget. In order to achieve these reductions and because of the very encouraging changes in the world which began over 2 years ago, DOD initiated a 25-percent reduction in military force structure to be completed by 1995. Today, less than halfway through that process, the United States has fewer people in uniform than at any time since the Korean war. By 1995, nearly 1 million DOD military and civilian personnel will lose their jobs.

Over 500,000 military personnel will be released, voluntarily or involuntarily, from military service. The Army alone will release over 85,000 active duty military personnel in the next 8 months. Over 200,000 civilian employees of the Department of Defense will lose their jobs; 85,000 DOD civilian jobs have already been eliminated.

And as part of this overall reduction in force structure, DOD has proposed reducing the National Guard and Reserve forces by nearly 250,000 personnel. If as some predict, Congress does not allow these cuts to occur, the cost of keeping these Guard and Reserve personnel could be as much as $12 billion over the next 5 years, which means that cuts will have to be made in other vital defense programs just to meet the existing budget targets.

Mr. President, Secretary Cheney announced on March 26 that approximately 140,000 personnel in the reserve components of our Armed Forces will be released from their units by the end of fiscal year 1993. These personnel are assigned to 830 individual National Guard and Reserve units that are being reduced in size or inactivated due to the changes in the threats we face. These proposed reductions have an impact on the citizens in every State in the union.

I should emphasize, however, that these types of cuts are required even if we fully fund the President's overall budget request as submitted. Should Congress reduce defense spending significantly in fiscal year 1993, then more personnel—both active and reserve component—will have to be removed from the Armed Forces. In fact, Secretary Cheney has indicated that, should Congress authorize defense spending at the levels recommended by Congressman ASPIN and House Budget Committee, then DOD will have to force an additional 300,000 personnel out of military service during the next fiscal year.

Mr. President, even at the overall funding level recommended by the President, the reductions in defense spending for fiscal year 1993 will have a serious impact on the defense industrial base. By one estimate, we are looking at a reduction of 1 million in the number of people employed directly in the defense industry by 1997. If the budget is reduced below the current administration plan, we are looking at 15 direct jobs and 35 indirect jobs lost for each $1 million in additional reductions. Using this formula, even the small reduction in the Senate Budget Committee-reported resolution would result in the elimination of 100,000 additional jobs in defense and defense-related industry.

The defense budget project recently released a report which addressed this same topic, entitled "Potential Impact of Defense Spending Reductions on the Defense Industrial Labor Force by State." In this study, the authors estimate that the level of defense reductions in the House budget resolution would result in the loss of nearly 350,000 jobs in defense industry in 1 year, fiscal year 1993.

An article in the February 24, 1992, issue of Business Week reports one estimate that additional defense cuts of $150 billion over 5 years—as some in Congress have proposed—could result in the loss of 3.3 million jobs in defense industry, excluding the DOD military and civilian jobs lost. The same article cites a DRI/McGraw-Hill study which estimates that 25 percent of American jobs lost in the recession since July 1990 were defense-related jobs, held in many cases by highly trained engineers, technicians, and other specialists who will be hard-pressed to find similar jobs at equivalent salaries which would allow them to use and perfect their technical skills.

These statistics are staggering.

Mr. President, we must also consider the impact of the planned reductions on the production and research and development capabilities in the base itself. Norman R. Augustine, chairman and CEO of Martin Marietta, recently provided testimony to the Senate Budget Committee about the serious financial condition of the defense industry generally. Defense industry stock is now discounted at 62 percent of the market average. Debt ratings for most of the industry have been dropped. Companies are now reducing their capital spending on efficient factories, cutting research and development, and laying off engineers and scientists. These trends complicate enormously the ability of these companies to transition from the defense marketplace to more commercial work.

We clearly should not maintain a higher level of defense spending merely to preserve jobs and capabilities in an industry that we may not need. However, if further defense cuts are mandated by Congress, we would accelerate the breakup of our industrial base while denying defense contractors the necessary time to reconfigure their companies to pursue effectively opportunities in the commercial sector. In the short run, unemployment in communities around the country will grow, and in the long run we risk losing vital capabilities through the pressures caused by over hasty reductions.

The Director of the Congressional Budget Office testified to the Senate Armed Services Committee on February 19 of this year, about the studies CBO has done of the possible economic impact of reducing defense spending. Generally, CBO concludes that larger defense spending cuts could impair the sluggish economic recovery which is just now beginning. One CBO study states:

The substantial defense spending reductions being proposed [in Congress] will result in additional unemployment, business failures, and temporarily depressed communities in the areas around shuttered military bases.

Mr. President, I stress again that ensuring our national security must be the principal issue in determining the size of the U.S. defense budget and the structure of our military forces. But it would be irresponsible to ignore the reality of the economic consequences of drastic reductions in defense spending, especially when these reductions could also impair the ability of our military to carry out their primary mission of ensuring the security of this country.

CAN WE CUT DEFENSE FURTHER NOW?

Mr. President, I fear that some of my colleagues have not fully considered the expert advice of our Commander in Chief and his senior military advisors concerning deeper reductions in defense spending. President Bush, Secretary Cheney, General Powell, and other senior military advisors have stated repeatedly that further cuts beyond those proposed by the President could have serious consequences for our military forces and our national security.

President Bush said, in his State of the Union Message, that defense could be cut "This deep and no deeper." He went on to say, "To do less would be insensible to progress, but to do more would be ignorant of history." General Powell said, in testimony to the Senate Armed Services Committee last month, that "we are reducing as fast as we can, we cannot go any faster or we will break the force." In a letter dated March 19, 1992, Secretary Cheney stated:

In light of the current fiscal environment, it would be inappropriate to analyze [additional defense budget reductions]. If available, [additional savings] would be used to ease the painful transition the Department of Defense must make as it executes the most dramatic drawdown since that following World War II.

As I stated earlier, I believe that there is a real firewall of people in the defense budget itself, which effectively establishes the bottom line of the defense budget. Greater cuts in manpower could mean the destruction of the All-Volunteer Force. Military personnel would have to be separated involuntarily from service, breaking faith with the people who have made a commitment to a career of service. It is important to protect the interests and morale of the men and women in uniform, because they are the force who will be called upon to defend our Nation in times of crisis.

But all areas of the defense budget will be affected if greater reductions are made to the President's recommendation. Training operations—flying hours, steaming days, and ground operations—have been reduced already. Greater cuts would jeopardize the fighting edge of our military forces provided by intensive training and well-maintained equipment, which would result in higher casualties in times of war; greater cuts would also jeopardize the excellent safety record of peacetime training. Our forces cannot be permitted to return to the unacceptable level of readiness of the hollow force of the late 1970's.

Investment in weapons procurement is already down by 60 percent since 1985, and DOD has proposed—although the Congress has not always agreed—to terminate over 100 major weapons systems. Further cuts would threaten the viability of our industrial base and eliminate our ability to return to defense production in the event of a crisis.

Greater cuts in research and development funding will mean the loss of the scientific and technical expertise of those currently engaged in defense-related research, much of which may have civilian applications as well.

Over 700 military installations worldwide have been or are scheduled to be closed under the current plan. Greater defense cuts would require a more stringent assessment of the need for existing domestic bases, as well as remaining installations overseas.

These are issues that I hope my colleagues will consider when casting their votes on proposals to cut defense further. Every one of these areas could have a negative impact on the ability of our military forces to respond in a time of crisis.

INVESTMENT IN DEFENSE PAID OFF IN THE PERSIAN GULF CONFLICT

Mr. President, during the early 1980's, this country invested in an overhaul of our military forces, following a decade of neglect in the 1970's. The Persian Gulf conflict proved the value of that investment.

Our forces were equipped with advanced technology weapons systems which provided the advantage and an early, favorable conclusion to both the air and land campaigns and which contributed directly to the low levels of United States and allied casualties throughout the conflict. The training and professionalism of our All-Volunteer Force, and the dedication and ability of the military leadership, were exemplary.

The accomplishments of our forces in the multinational coalition in the gulf would not have been possible without the substantial investment of dollars over the past decade and more which produced the exceptional U.S. military force we saw in the gulf conflict. Reducing defense below the President's level in fiscal year 1993 will risk the quality and capabilities of this superb American military force.

POSSIBILITY OF DEFENSE CUTS IN THE FUTURE

Mr. President, we all realize that the world is an unpredictable place, and we can never know when a crisis might arise which could challenge the security interests of our Nation. The past few years have seen unprecedented change and a lessening of the perceived threats to the United States. But these same changes have resulted in greater uncertainty about potential future threats and the intentions of other nations, including the successor states of the former Soviet Union.

The President's defense budget plan is designed to implement an orderly drawdown of our military forces commensurate with the reduction in threats to the United States. By the end of this decade, our military forces will be very different than they are today. In his testimony before the SASC at the end of March, General Powell described the 1999 force as "more agile, smaller in structure and with fewer platforms * * * capable of dealing with the challenges of an uncertain world."

But this force requires a commitment to adequate funding and the time to implement changes and reductions in the most rational and least disruptive way. The President's long-term budget plan contains the funding and sets out the path toward achieving the force described by General Powell.

General Powell expressed to the Armed Services Committee his concerns about great defense cuts in this way:

It takes a long time to build a force of the quality that we have today, unmatched in our Nation's history—one that we can be proud of and depend on to answer any challenge we throw at it. To develop strong leaders, produce the best equipment, and train the forces to the peak of readiness takes decades, but the force, can be broken overnight. And that is one of my greatest concerns today. If you go too fast, if you stray too far from the carefully crafted plan we have put together to draw down the force, you will break it. And if you break the force we may not be able to fix it in time, the next time it is needed.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to consider carefully the issues I have brought before the Senate. I believe that the committees of jurisdiction over defense matters can recommend to the Senate a defense program which is adequate to ensure our national security under the defense budget level recommended by the Senate Budget Committee. But our task will not be easy to find $2 billion in savings in an already austere budget. Greater cuts in the defense will, in my view, jeopardize the superb military organizations which we have developed over the past decade. I urge my colleagues to vote against any further reductions in the defense budget.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, the Exon amendment represents extremely modest cuts relative to the President's defense budget request. Specifically in fiscal year 1993, the Exon plan is $8.8 billion below the President's plan in budget authority, a 3.1 percent reduction, and $4.2 billion below in outlays, a 1.4 billion reduction. It should be emphasized that the Exon amendment still provides $288 billion in defense spending next fiscal year. Considering the momentous changes in our world over the last year, including the collapse of the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact, I believe the Exon amendment cuts represent a minimum level of adjustment.

Last year, on the heels of the gulf war, the President proposed a 3 percent per year cut in defense spending. This year, having declared the cold war over, he is only willing to cut 1 percent from last year's plan—or 4 percent per year—leaving us $15 billion over the cold war defense spending average when his plan is fully implemented in 1997. Clearly, there is room for additional savings.

It is time for a change in our priorities. I believe we can and should cut defense spending significantly beyond the Exon amendment in the coming year—aiming at a minimum for the cold war average. We must tell our allies that we can no longer afford to pay their bills when we cannot pay our own. We must go beyond burden sharing and move to burden shedding.

We must keep in mind that the budget resolution only establishes limits for subsequent appropriations to specific program areas. Although I support the defense budget reductions included in the Exon amendment, I do not concur with the underlying methodology. I believe that decisions regarding specific programs should be made based on individual merit and circumstances. Exempting the 30 most expensive defense programs from cuts, as suggested by the amendment, does not necessarily represent prudent procurement policy in my view. In addition, cuts in operations and maintenance may not be desirable. As we all know, the Appropriations Committee will distribute the funds as they believe they should be distributed.

Senator EXON is absolutely correct in his application of the savings from defense to deficit reduction. I firmly believe that we must reduce the Federal budget deficit to boost savings and investment. Huge Government debts lower private investment by raising the cost of capital relative to our competitor's costs. To maintain investment in our economy in the long run we must reduce our budget deficits and reorder our spending priorities toward investment. The Exon amendment makes a vital first step in this direction and I am proud to be a cosponsor.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, the Congress, in recognition of the extraordinary changes that have taken place in the world, should reduce defense spending. The collapse of the Soviet Union as a military, political and economic power has reduced enormously the dangers of military actions or threats against the United States, and the existing level of defense expenditures can no longer be justified.

Reductions in defense spending must be accomplished in a way that is most productive, most efficient and least damaging to the economy of the United States. The pending amendment to the budget resolution, in my view, fails this test, and I will vote against it.

For example the pending amendment by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON] assumes elimination of funding for the second and third Seawolf submarines. This halting of previously authorized work on the Seawolf submarine would result in sudden and severe economic disruption of the economy of my own State of Rhode Island as well in our neighboring State of Connecticut. And the reduction would be wasteful because most of the projected savings would be offset through contract and project cancellation costs. In addition, this course of action would threaten the preservation of the industrial base necessary for the future production of any submarines, and rebuilding that base would be very expensive and very time consuming.

There is an additional important reason why I will vote against the Exon amendment. This amendment makes no provision to use any of the defense savings for high-priority nondefense programs. Our Nation remains in the grips of a persistent economic recession. Most economists agree that a major and early increase in Federal Government spending for education and public works would be extremely helpful in putting our economy back on course, reducing the number of jobless Americans, and restoring economic growth.

The pending amendment regrettably does not permit use of defense savings for these purposes.

For the reasons cited I oppose the pending amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have reviewed very closely the implications of the proposed defense reductions in the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska. I have traveled to the former Soviet Union with Senator EXON, he has been my friend for many years, and I have long admired his Armed Services Committee leadership. There is no doubt whatsoever in my mind, and I really don't believe in any other Member's mind, of the sincere, patriotic, and well-meaning intentions in every defense-related measure he has ever associated himself with, including the current amendment.

Let me say in the defense of the Senator from Nebraska that he is looking realistically at a stark future in which high levels of defense spending will not be tolerated by the American people if the threat continues to disappear. Our best information, that provided by CIA Director Robert Gates just last week to the Senate Intelligence Committee, is encouraging. The prospect of a military threat from the former Soviet Union is vastly diminished. The Warsaw Pact is no longer a viable adjunct to aggression; the former Soviet military is demoralized, as we have heard repeated on the floor yesterday and today; strategic and conventional arms production, where it continues, has been carefully circumscribed—Senator GORE and I met independently several weeks ago with a Russian military delegation sent here by President Yeltsin to discuss submarine demilitarization, and I know the National Security Council is taking under serious consideration a proposal to demilitarize Russian nuclear-grade and plutonium warheads—a proposal, I add, made by two distinguished physicists from Brigham Young University. There is much other evidence regarding the former Soviet threat's demise.

There are current and future threats that we need to consider. And I believe the Senator from Nebraska has done that, and satisfied himself that the defense budget that his amendment would leave in place is sufficient, in military terms, to provide an objective force strategy to manage it.

Mr. President, where I differ with my friend from Nebraska is in his analysis. We have heard Senators GRAMM and NUNN develop arguments challenging the capabilities of the residual force structure under the Exon scenario; I agree with their assessments. And we have heard Senator STEVENS express his concerns about the state of the defense industrial base that would come out of the Exon amendment. It is the industrial base issue upon which I want you to expand.

The private defense sector is the source of our military technological genius. Except for our military laboratories, the so-called military technology base is in private hands. Very little science and engineering is done directly by DOD. We redesigned the defense base after World War II with the conscious determination to harness our industrial skills into defense production.

Unplanned defense cuts have, in my judgment, no less a harmful effect in the private as in the public defense sector—on which most of this debate has centered. Once a defense contractor decides to eliminate a military specialty, whether it is airframe production, guidance system development, radiation hardened communications systems, or others, the work force scatters—over 80 percent will enter new professional pursuits, most unrelated to their previous military specialty. Worse, many defense contractors, more than 70 percent according to one source, have not been able to diversify out of defense in any reasonable time. This means that there is no incentive to keep highly skilled workers, like R&D scientists and engineers of which defense industries hire over 18 percent, nor is there any expectation on the part of such workers to hope for recall by the firms laying them off.

The Nebraska Senator's proposal would deepen the defense cut by just under 20 percent over the remainder of the so-called FYDP—or the 5-year defense plan from 1993-97. Let me provide some statistics on what this will mean in the private defense sector alone. And I should mention that I have had some help compiling this data from a recent report, which arrived on my desk only yesterday, from the defense budget project in Washington. I am not normally a reader of this group's material, although I respect its director and funder, Gordon Adams, as a man of unimpeachable reliability and integrity.

The Exon amendment will hasten the loss of scientists and engineers, along with other highly paid defense production workers, weakening still further this already distressed industrial sector, while even reducing revenue bases at the State level. It is the grassroots effect of the Exon amendment that troubles me the most. Take my own State of Utah: under the President's budget, Utah stands to lose 31 percent of its private defense work force by 1997. The Exon proposal would add 601 workers to that number, for total losses of 7,752.

In the State of Nebraska, which has only 9,512 private defense workers, the Exon amendment would add 239 skilled workers, making the projected 1997 losses 2,828—or 30 percent of this important sector.

But, Mr. President, let's take States with very large defense employment:

California's losses are raised by 16,530 workers to 166,530 by 1997.

Massachusetts' losses will rise 4,113 to 45,759—in a State already suffering the most from the defense slowdown.

Connecticut, with the loss of its submarine industry staring it in the face, will experience another 2,850 job reductions under the Exon amendment, placing its level of private defense cutbacks at 37,850 by 1997.

Like every other Senator in this Chamber, I fear for my own State, but I also fear for the national technology base. On these grounds, this is not a sensible move. It tends to add disorder to an already hasty military reduction and heightens the fears of the highly skilled persons affected.

Mr. President, I hope that my good friend from Nebraska will reexamine his measure and, on the basis of this reassessment, withdraw it from consideration.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I do not think I will use mine, because some of our Senators are very pushed. Let me just suggest that when you take all the numbers, really look at 1992 versus 1993, it is very simple to analyze what is happening. I know it is being described as a rather trivial amendment in terms of its impact.

Mr. President, we are going to cut defense, 1993 versus 1992, under the President's proposal, $20 billion. Someone will say that is budget authority, not outlays; that is programs. That is how you measure cuts, $20 billion in cuts in 1 year. The amendment says that is not enough; add $8 billion more. So the issue is, is it enough to cut defense $20 billion in 1 year, as recommended by the President, as recommended by the Armed Services Committee, the chairman of the committee, or should we make it $28 billion?

All the arguments have been made why we should do one or the other. But I submit another $8 billion in program reductions is not what we should do. Frankly, we ought to build it down orderly, in a manner that is consistent with the commitments we have made to the men and women in the military, consistent with our commitments to the economy of the United States, and I believe $20 billion is enough.

I yield the remainder of my time.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a copy of the Dear Colleague letter that I sent to my colleagues on April 7.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, April 7, 1992.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: During debate on Senate Concurrent Resolution 106, the Fiscal Year 1993 Budget Resolution, I will be offering an amendment to reduce defense spending for the upcoming year. On March 31st, after considerable evaluation of the President's defense budget, I gave a detailed statement on the floor of the Senate on how much and where we can make cuts in our defense budget and still maintain a credible national defense posture. I would like to take this opportunity to summarize my amendment and ask for your support as the Senate debates the appropriate level of defense spending in this changing world.

Summary of the Exon Amendment to the 1993 Budget Resolution:

The Exon amendment reduces the Senate Budget Committee defense number by $7.6 billion in FY 1993 Budget Authority and $3.5 billion in FY 1993 Outlays ($8.8 billion in Budget Authority and $4.2 billion in Outlays below the President's proposed defense numbers). Under the existing budget agreement, savings would go toward deficit reduction.

Two-thirds of the President's 1993-97 defense cuts come from the early termination of two weapons systems—the B-2 bomber and the SSN-21 attack submarine—not even part of our present operational forces.

The Exon Plan does not cut any funding from the President's military personnel request. Therefore, no personnel reductions are required below the level recommended by the President.

The Exon Plan does not cut any of each service's top ten most-expensive program requests (30 weapons systems in all).

The Exon Plan does not cut any procurement program below the approved 1992 spending level. Cuts are taken only from large increases over present spending levels.

The Exon Plan does recommend a $5.2 billion reduction in the President's proposed $54.4 billion procurement budget. This reduction can be realized by freezing at 1992 levels spending in hundreds of smaller dollar line items (none of the top 30 weapons systems) where large increases are proposed.

The Exon Plan does recommend a $2.1 billion reduction in the President's proposed $39 billion research and development budget. This reduction can be realized by cutting SDI spending by $1 billion, from $5.3 billion to $4.3 billion, higher still than last year's $4.1 billion level. Another $1 billion in savings can be achieved simply by freezing the Air Force research and development budget, which is proposed to increase by 6.9%, and the Director of Test and Evaluation budget at 1992 levels.

The Exon Plan does recommend a modest 1% reduction from the President's Military Construction, Family Housing and Operations and Maintenance requests.

The Exon Plan does freeze Department of Energy spending at the 1992 spending level.

My plan outlines where modest cuts can be made to the defense budget, not necessarily what cuts will be made. The Budget Resolution is designed to establish spending caps; it is not meant to specifically address funding levels for defense accounts or programs. My plan is an illustrative list of cuts that show one way reasonable reductions can be made in defense without compromising our national security.

Majority Leader Mitchell, Appropriations Committee Chairman Byrd, Budget Committee Chairman Sasser and other senators have joined me as cosponsors of this amendment. Please contact Andy Johnson at 224-5463 if you have any questions or wish to be added as a cosponsor.

Sincerely,

JIM EXON,
U.S. Senator.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the issue here is simply whether or not we are going to make more of a reduction than the President of the United States outlined in his budget.

I simply say again that in budget authority in 1992 we are going to spend $291 billion. If we accept the President's recommendations we are going to reduce that sum down to $281 billion. But if we accept the President's numbers, or those similar to it, 5 years from now, in 1997, we are still going to have a budget authority expenditure of about $290 billion, which means dollar-wise, we are not going to have a significant reduction, and certainly no peace dividend, which the people are expecting.

I simply say that the key factor is that President Bush has $285 billion for outlays for fiscal 1993; the Exon amendment cuts that between 1 and 2 percent only, down to $281 billion, about a $4 billion cut out of a $280-plus billion budget. It is a step in the right direction. It is not enough, but this is what the people of the United States expect us to do.

I yield the remainder of my time. I assume that under that condition we are prepared for the rollcall vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1763) offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON].

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROTH (when his name was called). Mr. President, on this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP]. If the Senator from Wyoming were here, he would vote "no." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea." Therefore, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PELL (when his name was called). Mr. President, on this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH]. If he were present he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "no." Therefore, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FORD. I announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] are necessarily absent.

On this vote, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH]. If present and voting, the Senator from Colorado would vote "aye" and the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "nay."

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] would vote "aye."

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 50, as follows:

So the amendment (No. 1763) was rejected.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SASSER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, last week the Senate Budget Committee reported out Senate Concurrent Resolution 106, the concurrent resolution on the budget. There are two issues related to the budget resolution that are of great concern to me and that deserve further discussion: Funding for the State Legalization Impact Assistance Grant Program and funding for American Indian programs.

SLIAG

The State Legalization Impact Assistance Grant Program [SLIAG] is designed to fulfill the Federal Government's commitment to assist States in serving those residents who gained legal status through the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986. We cannot fulfill our commitment if we consistently reduce or defer adequate funding for the program.

In 1986, Congress authorized and appropriated $1 billion annually for fiscal years 1988-91, to be allocated to States using a formula based on the number of aliens gaining legal status residing in that State. These payments were designed to reimburse State and local governments for the costs of adult and basic education, health care, and public assistance directly attributable to these individuals.

Instead of providing the funds necessary to reimburse State and local governments for these costs, the Federal Government has withheld $1.123 billion, over 25 percent of the SLIAG moneys that were to be provided. Any further deferral of SLIAG moneys in fiscal year 1993 will prove detrimental to the States of California, Florida, Texas, Colorado, Nevada, Massachusetts, New York, Washington, and the District of Columbia. According to the General Accounting Office, these governments will have greater costs serving their communities than moneys allocated through SLIAG.

SLIAG deferral ill serves not only the interests of the communities of legalized aliens who are less able to obtain needed health, education and related services, but also U.S. citizens in these geographical areas who are required to compete unnecessarily for services. Deferral of funding does not come with deferral of the costs. The Federal Government should honor the obligations it assumed when Congress passed and the President signed into law the 1986 immigration law. The Federal Government should restore, and not defer, further SLIAG funding.

AMERICAN INDIAN PROGRAMS

During the past several years, the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs has analyzed Federal spending trends and the relative status of programs for native Americans as compared with programs for other Americans. Without question, the results show that Indians, the population group which suffers the worst conditions of unemployment, poor health, inadequate education, and other social and economic conditions, are the people who, over the past decade, have also suffered the deepest cuts in Federal spending for programs designed for their benefit. This fact is undoubtedly due in large measure to the lack of political power of the disparate 310 tribes and 197 Alaska Native villages. But these same powerless first Americans are the very people to whom this Government owes its first responsibility, based on treaties, statutes, and Federal court rulings.

Yet, given these bleak statistics, and the growing problems in Indian country, the President's total request for Indian spending for fiscal year 1993 falls far short of supporting an expectation that conditions will be improving in the coming year. Indeed, according to the most recent study prepared by the Congressional Research Service, the President's fiscal year 1993 budget request for Indian programs proposes a decrease of $480,100,000 in constant dollars allowing for inflation from the fiscal year 1992 appropriated level—an overall decrease in Indian spending of 14.4 percent.

I ask my colleagues to join me in assuring that Indian people are not required to bear the burden of reductions compelled by the budget deficit. I urge the Appropriations Committee to reject the President's proposed reductions and to restore spending to fiscal year 1992 level of program effort, adjusted for inflation as determined by the Congressional Budget Office. Based on these objectives, I support the recommended levels of funding proposed for Indian programs for fiscal year 1993 as follows: Bureau of Indian Affairs, $2,171,993; Indian Health Service, $1,938,952; and the Department of Education—Indian Education Programs, $810,200.

Finally, in an effort to facilitate the consideration of the recommendations of the select committee, the committee has identified a few fundamental priorities that are based upon Federal policy as articulated by President Bush on June 14, 1991, in his statement of Indian policy. Specifically, the committee's priorities for the Bureau of Indian Affairs account are designed to assure: First, the protection of natural resources, including water rights, hunting and fishing rights, irrigated agriculture, and timber management; second, support for economic development activities on Indian lands; third, assistance to assure the stability of programs administered by tribal governments, including employment programs and tribal government services; and fourth, maintenance of the previous year's level of effort in education programs.

The committee's priorities for the Indian Health Service are based on the implementation of new programs in the following areas: First, mental health and child abuse prevention and treatment efforts; second, self-determination efforts of tribal governments; third, addressing health manpower shortages in IHS hospitals and clinics; fourth, alcoholism and substance abuse program initiatives; and fifth, alternative health care delivery approaches.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, a Republican Senator will now be recognized to offer an amendment.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, could we have order? I cannot hear the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Order in the Senate.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, under the previous order, as I understand it, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BROWN] will propose the next amendment, and thereafter under the previous order, the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. BRADLEY] will be recognized to offer his amendment.

Let me say that I expect we will be able to clear or deal with the Brown amendment, as modified, by a voice vote, if I am not mistaken. The Bradley amendment will probably require a rollcall vote, Mr. President.

Let me say this to my colleagues while many of them are in the Chamber. We now have before us about 20 additional amendments, if memory serves me correctly, 18 to 20 additional amendments. I would ask those who have amendments, let us move on them just as expeditiously as possible. We are going to have to do that, I think, if we are going to conclude this resolution, have any hope of concluding it tomorrow or certainly late this evening.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I might ask the chairman, what is his intention or his pleasure with reference to this evening? Did he want to carry this over until the morning or does he want to try to finish? I do not see how we can finish tonight.

Mr. SASSER. I think that is a matter that should be addressed to the majority leader, and I have not had an opportunity to discuss this matter with him until just this moment.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, if it is at all possible, I hope we can finish this evening. I do not intend that the Senate remain in session all night or anything like that. It will really be up to Senators to decide when they want to complete action.

Might I inquire of the Chair how much time is remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Approximately 13 hours.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is obvious, if Senators choose to use all that time, that we will be back here tomorrow. As I indicated on several prior occasions, up to and including earlier today, we must complete action on this resolution prior to leaving for the Easter recess. I intend to stay here this evening if there is any hope or prospect or possibility of finishing this evening, because I think that is the wish of more Senators than not. But it will depend upon Senators.

I will yield the floor and let the Republican leader gain the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I think we spent about 9 hours on this past amendment. Hopefully, we can do all the others in less time than that. This was a significant amendment. This was a key amendment. Maybe some of the amendments will not be offered on defense matters. Maybe they will fall by the wayside, because this was a key amendment. I know the Senator from New Mexico and others have an important amendment.

I agree with the majority leader, we would like to finish this bill early this evening. We have at least two or three Members here who have other commitments away from the city starting tomorrow. So if people are looking for votes, they may be shy a few if we do not finish tonight.

Mr. REID. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I say to the chairman of the committee, I am wondering if we can have some agreements as to the order of amendments that are going to be offered. I have been here off and on the floor since Tuesday wanting to offer an amendment. I would think it would be to the interest of the Senate if we could have some agreement on the order that the amendments would be offered in the future.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, following the disposition of the Bradley amendment, or even prior to that, I would be pleased to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to try to dispose or to lay the amendments out in an orderly fashion and try to dispose of them, if that seems to make sense at this particular time. I would suggest that we dispose of the Brown amendment, then take up the Bradley amendment, and in the interim see if we cannot work out some orderly way to take up these amendments as rapidly as possible. I am cognizant of the fact that the distinguished Senator from Nevada has been on the floor off and on for 2 days inquiring about when he might be able to offer his amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let me indicate that I will be pleased to sit down with the chairman and then present to the leadership some idea on how to sequence the amendments. I am not sure that I have an amendment listed, but I think I do. I will give that a different name. That will become the Domenici-Nunn amendment and it will be a major amendment. So we are going to save some time to make sure we get to debate that. So we will be ready to go with that shortly. I intend for those who are already sequenced by unanimous consent to proceed and then we will discuss where we might be after that.

Mr. SASSER. May I inquire of my friend from New Mexico? He said the Domenici-Nunn amendment will take some time. May I inquire as to the content of that amendment?

Mr. DOMENICI. I would suggest that it is a substitute for the entire budget resolution, assuming the defense number as it is, and beyond that will have significant differences from the one that is currently pending. And we will, as soon as we can, give you an outline of it, I say to the chairman, and give Senators an outline of it.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIEBERMAN). The Senator from Colorado [Mr. BROWN] is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 1764

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate that, as part of the effort to reduce the Federal budget deficit, subsidies should not be paid to those who are not in need and that a study should be conducted by the Office of Management and Budget to identify such subsidies)

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. BROWN], for himself and Mr. DOMENICI, proposes an amendment numbered 1764.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the resolution, insert the following:

SEC. . SENSE OF THE SENATE THAT CERTAIN GOVERNMENT SUBSIDIES SHOULD NOT GO TO THOSE WHO ARE NOT IN NEED AND THAT A STUDY SHOULD BE CONDUCTED TO IDENTIFY SUCH SUBSIDIES.

(a) FINDING.—The United States Government needs an accurate understanding of the subsidies it pays to those who are not in need.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that, as part of the effort to reduce the Federal budget deficit and to set spending priorities, subsidies should not be paid to those who are not in need and that a study should be conducted, as provided in paragraph (c), to identify such subsidies.

(c) STUDY OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT MANDATORY SPENDING BY INCOME CATEGORIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Director of the Office of Management and Budget, and concurrently Director of the Congressional Budget Office, in consultation with the Bureau of the Census and the Internal Revenue Service (both of which would provide statistical data) and other executive branch departments and agencies, should prepare an estimate by agency and account of the dollar value (as measured by outlays) of assistance payments from United States Government mandatory spending programs under current law and regulations to recipients by income category for the current and five succeeding fiscal years.

(2) METHODOLOGY.—The study described in paragraph (c), to establish appropriate income categories, shall use for individuals the sum of the individual's adjusted gross income plus any United States Government assistance payment not already included in such adjusted gross income and shall use for persons other than individuals the sum of the person's taxable income plus any such payment not already included in such taxable income.

(3) DEFINITIONS.—

(A) The term "assistance payments from United States Government mandatory spending programs" means any payment, including payments-in-kind and loans, made by the United States Government directly, indirectly, or through payment to another on the individual's or person's behalf from the mandatory spending programs. The term does not mean payments of Social Security benefits.

(B) The term "recipients" means the individuals or persons on whose behalf the assistance payments are made.

(4) REPORTING.—The study described in subsection c of paragraph 1 shall be submitted to the Congress, and updated annually, as part of the budget message of the President.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the subject of the amendment is a request that we conduct a study of mandatory spending programs that are provided by this Congress, and that those mandatory spending programs, except for Social Security and interest payments which would not be studied, be analyzed as to who is the recipient of those benefits and assistance payments.

The measure is in the form that has been circulated prior to its introduction here with one exception and that is that the study would be conducted concurrently, including both the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and the Director of the Congressional Budget Office. So it is thought that this study would be conducted concurrently with both of those. That is the only change from the version I think that was available to Members prior to its introduction.

Mr. President, excluding both Social Security and interest, the Congressional Budget Office indicates that mandatory spending programs or entitlement programs will reach $600 billion by 1997. It is an enormous portion of our budget.

This resolution simply asks that we study the people who receive those benefits, evaluate what income categories that those assistance payments are given in. I like it because I believe it will provide us a better basis upon which to judge the validity of those programs and to judge the need for various recipients to receive those benefits.

Mr. President, I believe this has been reviewed and approved by both sides.

I yield to the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. I was distracted momentarily when the distinguished Senator from Colorado was speaking. The amendment, as I understand it, as originally presented directed that the Director of the Office of Management and Budget conduct a study. Has the Senator modified his amendment?

Mr. BROWN. It has been modified. At the Senator's suggestion, we have also added the Director of the Congressional Budget Office. I thought it was an excellent recommendation. I think it is important that the results of this study have the confidence of everyone in this Chamber, and having both of those people involved and their agencies involved I think lends validity and credibility to the study. So I was happy to include that. And that is included in the version that went to the desk.

Mr. SASSER. I thank my friend from Colorado.

Mr. President, let me say I have no problem with the amendment. I have no problem with the study that the Senator wants.

But if I might just ask the Senator a question or two about this particular amendment. The amendment says that it is the sense of the Senate that Government subsidies should not go to those who are not in need. What does the Senator mean by those not in need? Does he mean wealthy individuals and large corporations, as had been expressed I think in an earlier draft?

Mr. BROWN. As the chairman is familiar, my focus on in need did not prove to be a universal definition, recalling the amendment that I offered in the Budget Committee relating to agricultural assistance.

This resolution, or this study, does not include that offending language. It merely asks for a study to indicate the income categories of people who receive the assistance payments.

Mr. SASSER. Could the distinguished Senator enlighten us as to what programs would be studied? The amendment asks that OMB, and now concurrently CBO—of which I very much approve, that addition—to conduct a study to identify the subsidies. But it appears it is a limited group of specific programs, as I understand it. Quoting the amendment, it says, "assistance programs from the Government in mandatory spending programs."

Most of these programs are means tested, and are targeted at the very poor.

Could the Senator give us some idea what programs he intends to have studied through this amendment?

Mr. BROWN. I would be happy to. Virtually every mandatory spending program that the Government has would be included in this study except for interest payments, for obvious reasons, and Social Security payments. I think the Senator has correctly identified the fact that many of these are means tested.

What I was surprised to learn from the Congressional Budget Office was that, for example, in fiscal 1991, CBO claims that individuals with income above $150,000 received $50 million in food stamps, aid to families with dependent children, and supplemental security income.

I, frankly, understanding the means test applied to those programs, find that hard to believe. This study will give us, I think, a clear picture as to whether that analysis is truly correct. If it is correct, my guess is we may want to tighten the eligibility standards, or clear up any ambiguities that might be there. But it is meant to cover virtually everything except Social Security and interest payments.

Mr. SASSER. So the amendment of the Senator from Colorado would cover the whole mandatory spectrum other than those two that has just indicated would not be covered? So it would include things like military retirees, the military retirement fund, which is a mandatory program? Veterans compensation, which I think is also a mandatory program? We get into every one of them?

Mr. BROWN. Indeed, that is correct. I might say, at least speaking for myself, that it is certainly my sense of the thing that military retirees have earned that pay. This should not be interpreted as any effort to curtail those benefits which I view as earned and paid for.

A Civil Service retirement would be another example. There is a wide variety of them. So this study is not meant to suggest an answer as to policy in that area but merely to identify income categories.

Mr. SASSER. But merely to study the programs in the mandatory area and identify the various items that might need to be corrected; is that correct?

Mr. BROWN. That is correct.

Mr. President, I have no further comments, and I yield.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, we yield back what time we might have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1764) was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BROWN. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Chair recognizes the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY].

AMENDMENT NO. 1765

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, Senator SIMON, Senator ADAMS, and Senator LAUTENBERG, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY], for himself, Mr. SIMON, Mr. ADAMS, and Mr. LAUTENBERG, proposes an amendment numbered 1765.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On Page 3, line 16, decrease the amount by $3,500,000,000.

On Page 3, line 17, decrease the amount by $7,200,000,000.

On page 42, line 11, decrease the amount by $1,500,000,000.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, the amendment that I offer on behalf of myself and Senator SIMON, Senator ADAMS, and Senator LAUTENBERG starts the process of reordering the priorities established in the budget summit agreement of 1990.

A year-and-a-half ago, I said that I did not believe that those long-term choices that were embodied in the budget summit were well thought out. I did not believe that they reflected the priorities of America's families, and I did not believe that they gave sufficient flexibility to respond to crises as they emerge.

I still do not believe that the budget agreement reflected those priorities and I see no reason not to pursue our real priorities.

This amendment shifts those priorities. It cuts defense spending by an additional $7 billion next year and $11 billion a year over the following 4 years. It channels half of the savings to high priority domestic spending, such as education, health care and cleanup of the environment. The balance of the savings is used for deficit reduction.

A lot has happened since the budget summit was agreed to in late 1990. Since that agreement, we have fought a war in the Persian Gulf that not only dramatically demonstrated the effectiveness of our military weaponry, but also changed the geopolitical circumstances in the region in a way that will enable us to reduce defense spending.

In addition, we have seen the dissolution and disappearance of the Soviet Union. This budget fails to take full advantage of the material changes in our relationship with the former Soviet Union and its capacity to harm United States interests. Although Russian military power should, and will, remain a long-term concern, it will not generate the threats in the 1990's comparable to those we faced in earlier years.

The President's defense budget continues, in my view, to waste taxpayer dollars on military luxuries and oversized Armed Forces. It squanders resources that could not be justified in the past, instead of revamping programs to meet actual American security needs in the future. We can safely concentrate our defense priorities on the many lesser challenges America faces. We can ensure our security with a much smaller defense budget.

The budget agreement continues to provide insufficient resources to repair the bonds of community in our cities and improve education and clean up our environment. Half of the $50 billion in 5-year defense savings that we obtain from this amendment are used for high priority domestic programs.

This amendment provides the Senate Appropriation Committee with, on average, about $5 billion a year in additional funds for critical domestic needs.

We all know where we need to place more resources. The Women, Infants and Children Feeding Program reaches less than two-thirds of the poor families in need of nutritious food supplements. Head Start only reaches about a quarter of the eligible population. Tens of thousands of pregnant women do not have access to quality prenatal care. Thousands of young children got measles just last year because they were not adequately immunized. Middle income and lower income families are finding it increasingly hard to send their children to college and move up the ladder. Our cities are in desperate shape. Our infrastructure, our roads, and transit systems, need sizable investment. And we need to do more to restore our environment.

Mr. President, will this amendment meet all the needs I have discussed? The answer is clearly no, it will not solve all our problems, but it will provide some additional resources so more of our pressing domestic needs can be met. Just as important, Mr. President, the amendment reduces the cumulative deficit over the 1993-97 period by an additional $25 billion. We all know that big steps are needed in the years ahead to reduce our gaping deficit. We should not wait to take these steps if we can obtain defense savings now.

Mr. President, in summary, I think this is an appropriate amendment. I expect that a point of order will be raised that the amendment violates the 1990 budget summit deal, and to the charge I, in advance, lead guilty.

As I have said before, I believe the budget deal set us on the wrong course with the wrong choices and the wrong priorities. I hope that the Senators who support our efforts to shift priorities will support this amendment and endorse our efforts to change the budget rules that stop us from moving forward effectively to what I believe are America's real priorities.

Mr. President, how much time remains on the side of the proponents of the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 54 minutes and 22 seconds remaining.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I ask, will the Senator yield 15 minutes?

Mr. BRADLEY. I yield 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG].

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleague, Senator BRADLEY, in offering this amendment. I think he stated the case very clearly in that we have to deal with several things, not the least of which is to reduce the level of spending we presently have allocated with defense and deal with the problems of the deficit as well as the sorely needed investments that are required for our domestic programs.

Mr. President, this amendment would reduce the level of defense spending in the Budget Committee's budget resolution by $7 billion. The savings would be allocated to both domestic initiatives and deficit reduction.

We are here today, Mr. President, to say emphatically that we need to change the direction of this country. Reality calls for it and the American people are demanding it. And yet, Mr. President, the budget resolution before us represents little more than the old, fatigued status quo. Its priorities are the priorities of yesterday and the past; its vision of the future is a vision of yesterday.

For decades, Mr. President, the greatest threat to the security of the United States came from the Soviet Union. To respond to that threat, we have built the greatest military force in the history of mankind. The quality of our Armed Forces is unequalled. Also unparalleled, Mr. President, is the size of our defense budget.

How much money are we spending on defense? Let us get some historical perspective. According to the Budget Committee, the average peacetime level of defense spending during the cold war was $236.6 billion in 1993 dollars; $236.6 billion. The budget resolution before us proposes to spend $290.9 billion on defense. In other words, we would now be spending $54 billion over the cold war levels, and everyone knows the cold war is over.

Mr. President, the practical effect of this resolution is that we would continue to spend billions of dollars subsidizing the security of our European allies and billions of dollars for a range of weapons programs that serves no useful purpose.

The American people have been asked to tighten their belts in these tough economic times. There is no reason why the Pentagon cannot do at least as much and still protect our national security. We can save billions by eliminating spending for exotic weapons systems like the B-2. We can save billions more by scaling back SDI and limited nuclear testing. We have seen some questions raised about SDI as a result of the examination of the Patriot antimissile performance of the Persian Gulf war, questions that ought to have us examining how much we are going to spend on SDI.

We can save further billions by eliminating excess purchases for spare parts and supplies by the Pentagon.

Mr. President, perhaps it was mentioned, but it is worth mentioning again. There was an interesting "60 Minutes" show on the Pentagon. Lesley Stahl was the reporter, and she was pictured in the midst of a complex Government warehouse. The film showed virtually thousands of tires piled as high as the eye could see. It also featured inventory untouched for decades, some crates unopened, untouched since 1950.

Ms. Stahl reported:

The world's biggest shopping spree. That is what the Pentagon has been on almost since the day they opened the building; $100 billion of everything, from nuts and bolts to sliced ham and Maalox, all gathering dust in military depots.

The GAO says that $35 billion of that $100 billion is stuff that is of little use to anybody. And then in the next 10 years, to add insult to injury, they will spend another $35 billion just to store it. That is about $10 billion more than the entire budget of the Department of Education.

Mr. President, wasteful defense spending is always an outrage, but given the fiscal condition of our Nation, it is obscene. We are now the largest debtor Nation on the face of the Earth, not a title we are proud of. The budget deficit this year is projected to approach $400 billion, and we are spending $200 billion a year just on interest.

Mr. President, it is one thing to borrow to make investments that yield long-term dividends. But it makes absolutely no sense to borrow in order to maintain a huge military. Buying bombs and ammunition does not improve our national productivity. While the American troops in Europe and Asia pump plenty of money into those countries, they do virtually nothing for our own economy. Our European allies and Japan are beating our pants off in the marketplace while we pay for a far-reaching defense umbrella they can afford to pay for and ought to be required to pay for.

The huge military budgets of recent years are a luxury that we cannot afford. Many of our military allies are our economic competitors, on many occasions unfairly. Let them pay for their own defense. Our needs at home are too great. Our economy is in the longest recession since the Great Depression. Job openings are scarce. Unemployment is over 7 percent, and ordinary middle-class Americans are finding it increasingly hard to pay their bills, send their kids to college, and to keep their heads above water.

Under these circumstances, we cannot afford to go along with the status quo. It is past time to shift directions.

Mr. President, I opposed the priorities that were locked into place by the 1990 budget agreement. That agreement ignored the investments we must make at home and provided for a higher defense budget than we need. The Senate recently voted against this agreement, but efforts to repeal it were stymied by a filibuster.

The minority is blocking action that we desperately need. It is past time to change budget priorities. We need to take some of the billions that we are spending on defense and put them to work building the American economy, providing jobs and a more hopeful future for our citizens.

In fact, we have a lot of catching up to do. While our competitors have invested substantial sums in their infrastructure and in the education and training of their people, we have not, and we will be paying the price of that neglect for decades to come.

Mr. President, to appreciate the extent to which the United States is underinvested, let us take a look at our friends, Japan and Germany. Between 1973 and 1985, Japan invested 5.1 percent of its gross domestic product in public physical infrastructure—5.1 percent. Germany's figure was 2.5 percent of its GDP. The U.S. figure? .3 percent. So Japan was investing some 17 times what we were investing and Germany some 8 times.

Mr. President, investment in physical infrastructure leads directly to productivity, and Japan's willingness to invest led to productivity growth of 3 percent between 1973 and 1985. German productivity growth was 2.4 percent. And here in our country our rate was a mere .6 percent. How in the world are we going to be competitive? We have to make these investments for a better future for our country.

Mr. President, just as we have underinvested in our infrastructure, we have devoted inadequate resources to education and training. For example, we know that $1 invested in Head Start yields several dollars of future savings in public assistance, special education, and crime costs. We also know that smaller classes substantially increase reading and math scores, and yet we continue to underfund Head Start. Our economic competitors continue to invest more than we do in the education of our children.

Mr. President, a well-educated, technologically literate work force is critical if America is to compete economically in the future, and yet we have not done enough to ensure that American workers can get trained and then retrained throughout their careers as the need requires.

While American industry searches for skilled workers in Japan or Germany, we have legions of displaced, unemployed, dispirited workers here at home desperately seeking jobs. It is another consequence of misplaced priorities.

We also need a greater commitment to policies that stoke the fires of advancement, through continued support of our national laboratories and health science institutes. We need to get a better partnership between government and business, because the high costs of R&D often mean that private industry will not be able to bear the costs and the risks alone. As long as we continue deemphasizing civilian research, American industry will be walking into the world's economic boxing ring with one hand tied behind its back.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, many of our best scientists and engineers have been focused not on developing new products but on new weapons. Why? Largely because that is where we put the money. And unless we change those priorities, we will continue to lose more and more market to the Japanese and the Europeans. And as those markets go, so will go the jobs of millions of Americans.

Mr. President, we have also underinvested in another area that gets too little attention in this body, our cities. Funds to States and localities have been slashed dramatically, while businesses and middle-class residents have moved to the suburbs. Cities are left with few resources, and without a solid tax base and facing mounting economic and social problems, many urban areas have descended into virtual chaos.

We can continue to ignore that problem and continue to write off the millions of young Americans who grow up in these war zones, but these are the people who have to carry our Nation into the future, and we ignore them at our own cost and peril.

Another area we have underinvested in is the WIC program, which provides needed food and nutrition counseling to pregnant women, infants and children. The Department of Agriculture says that for every dollar we invest in WIC, we can save more than $4 in Medicaid costs. And yet more than 3.5 million eligible individuals are not being served. It is a penny-wise pound-foolish policy that is a direct result of our skewed budget priorities, and it is costing lives, children's lives.

Mr. President, the litany of needs that require greater domestic investment is long, from health care to day care, from housing to environmental protection, from research and development to drug treatment.

Mr. President, none of these needs can be met if we continue to spend billions of dollars on outdated weapons systems and on the security of our economic competitors, nor is it possible to meet these needs if the outmoded budget agreement remains in place.

It is past time for change. It is past time to focus on America's needs and America's future. The clock is ticking, time is passing, and we simply have to shift resources from defense to domestic programs.

I point out, Mr. President, that this amendment calls not only for shifting of resources to domestic investment, it also would use some of the savings from defense for deficit reduction.

That is important. Reducing our debt, or at least the rate of the increase in debt, would mean less dependence on foreign borrowing, less crowding out of private investment, greater influence in international affairs, and fewer demands on the resources of our children and our grandchildren.

We hear a lot of talk around here about reducing the deficit. If we really care about the deficit, then we ought to stop talking because here is our chance to do something.

In sum, I say to my colleagues, if you want to invest in America's future, if you want to cut the deficit, if you want to change the direction of this country, this amendment deserves your support. It will reduce the budget deficit and shift, more importantly perhaps, budget priorities. It is an investment in our future. I commend my colleague, Senator BRADLEY, for his work on this important issue, and I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SYMMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. SYMMS].

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. President, I will be very brief. I say to my colleagues that we have debated this issue thoroughly yesterday and today up until the previous vote. It is very clear that the Senate has spoken twice now on the firewall and twice now on the defense number that the distinguished Senator from Georgia, the President, the Secretary of Defense, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the Senators from Alaska and Louisiana, who are senior on the Appropriations Military Subcommittee, have all spoken to. We just had a vote of 50 to 41, I believe it was. At any rate, it was defeated.

So, at the appropriate time, when all time is yielded back, I intend to make a point of order because, in effect, this amendment, in addition to having been already voted on by the Senate and turned down, this amendment is in violation of 601(b) of the Budget Act. So at the appropriate place, I will register a point of order against the amendment. I think Senator BRADLEY wishes to speak.

Mr. BRADLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I think, as we consider this amendment, we should think a little bit about what has happened in the last couple of years. Let us start maybe with last April. Last April, I proposed an amendment that was similar to this, which called for a cut of about 2 percent over the budget summit defense number. The amendment was opposed. It was said it would break a solemn agreement of the budget summit, and the amendment failed. Yet the numbers that are in this year's defense budget, the President's defense budget, are exactly the numbers that I offered last year on this budget resolution, except it is 1 year later, once again, behind the events that are breaking around the world.

Last September, I offered an amendment on the defense authorization bill that would have asked the Department of Defense to plan the impact of deeper cuts than were envisioned in last year's budget, and that, of course, was opposed as well. The Defense Department and the supporters of the defense budget number in the agreement of the budget summit did not even want to consider lower defense numbers. They would not even study deeper cuts.

Mr. President, I believe that people fear what is happening in our cities more than they fear Russia, and I believe people are more concerned about the deficit than they are the defense capabilities of the Ukraine. We have to begin to face up to a changed reality. The cold war is over. We are no longer defending ourselves against a hostile Communist nation. Our leadership in the world would depend much more on the example we set, and the example is in the kind of society we build, in the kind of economy we have.

So it is quite appropriate to cut defense spending more, $50 billion more, over 5 years; use half of that money to try to improve the quality of life for people in our cities, and elsewhere in America to clean up our environment, to give everyone a better chance. And it is quite appropriate to use the other half of that deeper defense cut to reduce our budget deficit which is our country's unquestioned biggest problem.

Mr. President, it is a very simple amendment. It reiterates a point, that we have made on this floor on a number of occasions. I hope that we are going to be able to do better than we did last year. I hope someday that the Senate will be ahead of the curve as opposed to constantly behind the curve.

Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, first of all, I just wanted to add to what the Senator BRADLEY from New Jersey had to say. He mentioned cities. I wanted the Senator to know that in Minnesota—I think I can speak for Illinois, I see Senator SIMON here on the floor—these issues that the Senator has described that have so much to do with security in our own country, and the way in which people have started to think about our Nation, what they know we need to do to be a great and strong nation, are also rural.

I have to tell the Senator that when he goes out in his State—and I will use Minnesota as an example, because I am struggling to try to make a connection between what people tell me when I get home, and what they want me to do, and what we do.

What I hear is we do not have the resources to support our schools. Our kids are not making it. Senator, can we please make sure there is more for chapter I. Senator, even before our kids get to school, you know, what is it, a third, a fifth of Head Start kids that could be in Head Start are in Head Start or, Senator, we just do not know what we are going to do about health care, jobs and all the rest.

I want the Senator to know that all too often we think about these bread-and-butter issues as urban and they are every bit as much rural issues. I see the same thing.

I want to ask the Senator this question. I know he has given speeches on the floor, but that is not what really impresses me because anybody can give a speech on the floor. I know that he has attempted to live the words he uttered on the floor. He has spent a lot of time in cities, cares fiercely about what is happening in urban America, and he wants to see us respond to the needs and circumstances of people's lives.

When my colleague meets with teachers or meets with young kids, whether they be African-American, Spanish, we have a large Indian population in Minnesota, or whites, they say to him, we do not have enough books, we do not have enough facilities to work with, and our neighborhoods are rotting away, there is not enough police protection, there is not enough adequate housing, there is too much crime, what does he say to them? When they say where are the resources, what is his response?

Mr. BRADLEY. Senator, I tell them—lamenting, I tell them about the commitments that I have tried to offer on the floor of the Senate. I lament the fact that the Senate seems to be behind the curve, behind what I believe most of the American people want, which is cutting the defense budget more and using some of that money for the deficit, using the other part to try to improve the quality of life of the citizens in this country.

I tell them not to lose hope, that there will come a time when we will be able to adjust the defense budget to a more realistic number, one that is more consistent with what the real threat is out there, one that is not still targeted upon the threat that no longer exists, that we will finally be able to get the Defense Department to spend money in a way that is aimed at a real threat, the target, and not at a threat that was much larger because it is the threat of yesteryear.

I tell them that they are more in tune with the future of America than some defense planners in Washington. I tell them that they understand, because of the quality of their lives, or the absence of that quality, whether children are raised in families that are stable and have enough to eat, have a chance to go to school, and have a stake in the system, is more important to the long-term health of our country than one additional MX missile or one additional B-2 bomber.

I tell them that unfortunately the Senate has not yet reached that point, but that every time this amendment is offered on the floor of the Senate we get a few more votes and we get a little closer to the time when we will be addressing the real problems of America.

I tell them that the future of America in the 21st century depends upon rejuvenation of America at home in the 1990's. And the fundamental part of that is reducing this budget deficit, and having some additional funds for programs that will improve their lives and give all Americans a better chance.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Let me ask my colleague this, if I could. I want to ask a more difficult question because I have proposed amendments like this as well on the floor. I know we are running out of time. I want to make this point because I am here on the floor right now. It is important for me to say this.

I have proposed similar kinds of amendments. I proposed an amendment with Senator WIRTH, a sense-of-the-Senate resolution, about the need to waive the budget agreement. This was just on education. We would commit some of that to Head Start, we would commit some of it to WIC, which I think is an important education program, and some to chapter 1. Then I think we also talked about the students who do not go on to college or vo-tech for transfer, some money that would enable them to make some transition to the job market.

Here is the question: When students say that to the Senator—because about every 2 weeks I am in a school in Minnesota—and then the Senator tells them what he just told me, what do they then say?

I mean, when the Senator says, listen, I think you are ahead of the curve, I think you are right, I think we are going to make a commitment to education to young people in our country, I think you are the future, I think we will do well economically when we have a trained, skilled, literate work force, I think we will be stronger as a Nation when we are stronger within, I think we can do so much more to bring people together and not have people so divided, I think the national security of our country is the security of local communities, I believe all of that.

But then when the students say to him, well, if you believe all of that, Senator BRADLEY, you keep proposing these amendments, why are they not agreed to, then what do you say?

Mr. BRADLEY. I then talk about the inertia of an institution that is slow to change. I talk about the caution, the excessive caution that characterizes many people's perception of our world. I talk about the lethargy that has descended upon institutions in other times and in other places, and how the failure of institutions to adjust to changing times in the long run endangers the institutions themselves.

Finally, I tell them that they can make a difference, and that they need to get out there and participate in the democratic process in order to show that things can change.

I then begin to talk about the number of people in America who are not registered to vote. I talk about the one-third of the American population who, if they wanted to vote on election day, would not be allowed to vote because they are not registered. I talk about the obstacles in the path of that registration and I tell them to come out and make a difference—participate, register, and then change the priorities of the country.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I am going to add one other point and then I will be finished, although I would like to go on with this conversation. Believe me. I would.

I thank my colleague, Senator BRADLEY, for bringing this amendment back to the floor. There is going to be a point of order raised against it, and it is not going to pass. As I have told him, I will have another amendment that goes along the same lines. This is why I would like to thank him.

I want to say this especially with the Senator from Illinois on the floor here because he is someone that I have always looked up to. I look up to my friend, Senator BRADLEY, too, for two reasons, one having to do with respect and one having to do with height.

I met with some people the other day from around the country, small business people who are interested in renewable energy policy. They believe that part of the future for our country, in terms of concern about environment, is that we will produce and consume energy differently and that we will really get serious about conservation and renewal.

So I said to them—this was really an interesting lesson to me—How has it been going? They said fine. I said what was the high point and what was the low point?

They said the high point was when we talked to some people in the Senate and they did not have that much interest in energy policy when we started talking to them, but we thought they were really listening to us.

I said what was the low point? They said the low point was when we went in and we met with Senators and Representatives who agree with us, are our friends, they are our friends and they told us there is nothing they can do, nothing is going to happen here. They had the sort of sense of powerlessness that they actually projected to people who came here.

What I want to say to the Senator is, if he does not win this amendment, fine, he is absolutely right in what he is doing. And there is going to come a point in time, and the sooner the better, where the vast majority of the people in this country who really are, really are at this moment, saying, look, we want to keep the strong national defense.

I mean, my dad was from the Soviet Union. Nobody needs to tell me about the importance of what we did over the years because of Communists. But now it is post-cold war. It is not a cold war now. It is a new era. Can we not invest in our own communities? People want to see that happen. Those people you meet within your State—and I see students here, young people—if you do not keep proposing these amendments and essentially say what you honestly and truthfully believe we need to do as a nation to be stronger, then we will not have that voice here.

We have to keep doing it and keep doing it, and my prediction is that the Senator's amendment will be adopted, and the sooner the better, even if not today. We will reorder our priorities, and when we do, we will be better for it as a nation.

Mr. BRADLEY. I thank the Senator from Minnesota for his questions and for his comments.

I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, we have all talked informally among ourselves, if not on the floor, about the cynicism that is out there today in the public about Congress, about government. A certain amount of skepticism is healthy.

Cynicism is not healthy, and it has reached the point of cynicism. Why are people cynical about government? Well, bounced checks in the House may be part of it, but let me tell you, that is the icing on the cake. The real problem is that the American people sense—and sense accurately—that we are not responding to the world of today. We ought to be responding to a world that has changed dramatically in the last 2 years, and we are not doing it.

I am pleased to be a cosponsor of the Bradley amendment. But let me tell you, there is a major defect in the Bradley amendment, with all due respect to the chief sponsor; and the major defect is that the amendment does not go nearly far enough. Where are we today? Oh, we hear big speeches from the administration on how the President is going to cut $50 billion in defense, and then you look at the numbers, the budget authority numbers 5 years out, and we are going to be spending more dollars than we are spending right now. That is called a $50 billion cut in defense.

We are spending, this year, $292 billion on defense. What was the defense expenditure in 1992 dollars at the height of the cold war? If you exclude Vietnam and Korea, pre-1980, at the height of the cold war when we faced a threat from the Soviet Union, we spent an average of $235 billion. Now the Soviet Union has collapsed, and we are spending $292 billion. Depending on whose figures you believe, we are spending somewhere between $120 billion and $160 billion this year to protect Western Europe from a Soviet Union attack. There is only one problem: There is not a Soviet Union.

We have to face reality. What is the long-term threat to this country? Is it a military threat? That is not the threat. Our long-term threat is that we are not facing our economic problems, the deficit. Our long-term threat is that we are not making our people productive. Economists do not agree on very much, but they agree on this: You are either going to compete with the rest of the world with high skills or low wages. And we are following the low-wage route.

In fiscal year 1949, we spent 9 percent of our Federal budget on education. Do you know what we are spending this year? Three percent. Does that recognize the world that we are in today? If the Senator from New Jersey will forgive me when I say I think he is old enough to remember the GI bill along with me. If you take that old GI bill after World War II and you put an inflation factor on it, do you know what that is worth today? The other Senator from New Jersey certainly is old enough to remember along with me the GI bill. But if you put the inflation factor on, you know what that amounts to in the GI bill? It would be a grant of $8,100 a year. What are you getting as a grant today if you go to college? At the most, if you are impoverished, if you happen to be the small minority that is qualified, you can get $2,400.

We have to give people more. The senior Senator from New Jersey has been talking on this floor about the issue of race, and there is a new book out by Studs Terkel of interviews with people on this issue. It is a cutting issue in this Nation. But let me tell you, my friends, the great division in our country is not between black and white, not between Hispanic and Anglo, not even between rich and poor; the great division is between people who have hope and people who do not have hope.

We are not giving people hope. Two things can give people hope, and that is a job, where they feel like they are productive in doing something to contribute, or education. We have to give people hope. The Bradley amendment is a small step in the right direction. I know it is not going to be adopted, but at least I am going to join those who are going on record and saying: Let us live in the real world; let us look at tomorrow, not just today. Let us go beyond the immediate pressures that are around here to spend money for this defense, and interest in that defense, and let us do something for our country that really meets our long-term needs.

This is what this amendment does. I am pleased and proud to be a cosponsor and to vote with the minority on this.

I yield whatever time I may have left.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am pleased to support the amendment offered by my friend Senator BRADLEY. The Senate's inability to invoke cloture on the firewall legislation last month and the failure of Senator EXON's amendment earlier today make me pessimistic about the chances for this amendment. But I am convinced of the correctness of this approach.

I outlined my concerns with this budget resolution and with our structural deficit yesterday. Today I would simply like to reiterate my concern for our citizens. That is the upshot of the Bradley amendment. Enabling us to help our children, our students, our elderly, and our workers, by investing in education, infrastructure, healthcare, and training. Fiscal year 1993 is the tightest year under the budget agreement caps. Unfortunately, given the prolonged recession and years of underinvestment by this and the previous administration, it is also a year in which our domestic programs are most in need of an infusion of funds.

I said it yesterday and I will say it again today. It is unconscionable to me that we are unable to agree on breaking the budget firewall 1 year early. Just 1 year early. To hear the debate on the floor yesterday, one would think that the firewall was the only thing preventing Congress from embarking on a frenzied deficit spending spree. A spree that would gut our defense budget. A spree that would imperil our national security.

I strongly disagree with that assessment. Breaking the firewall in no way affects the budget caps. And our national security depends on far more than massive weapons expenditures. Our security depends on the health of our economy and the well-being of our citizens.

Our economy needs it. Our cities need it. And our people need it. Mr. President, I urge the adoption of the Bradley amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. SYMMS. I yield the remainder of our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, the adoption of the pending amendment would cause the budget resolution to exceed the domestic discretionary spending limit for fiscal year 1993. Pursuant to 601(b) of the Budget Act, I raise a point of order against the pending amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904(c) of the Budget Act of 1974, I move to waive section 601 of that act for the pending amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the Budget Act, there is 1 hour of debate, equally divided, on the motion to waive.

Who yields time?

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield the remainder of my time.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on the motion to waive section 601(b) of the Budget Act.

The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. FORD. I announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] is necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] is necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] would vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. MIKULSKI). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 36, nays 62, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 70 Leg.]

NOT VOTING—2

Wallop
Wirth

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 36, the nays are 62. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected.

Mr. SASSER. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will now rule on the point of order. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey would cause the allocation of budget authority to domestic discretionary categories set forth in section 601(b) of the Budget Act to be exceeded in violation of that section. Therefore, the point of order is sustained, and the amendment falls.

Mr. SASSER. Madam President, I would like to yield to the Senator from North Carolina for a very brief unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

COMMENDING THE BLUE DEVILS OF DUKE UNIVERSITY

Mr. SANFORD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent I be allowed to send forward a resolution with the request that it be held at the desk for immediate consideration and agreed to. The title of the resolution is to commend the Blue Devils of Duke University for winning the 1992 National Collegiate Athletic Association Men's Basketball Championship.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of this resolution?

Mr. NICKLES. Reserving the right to object, and I am straining to object, but is the Senator absolutely sure that his alma mater, the Duke Blue Devils—

Is he absolutely sure that they are the best team in the country?

Mr. SANFORD. I waited until Indiana and Kentucky were off the floor.

Certainly I would say it is marginally better than the Oklahoma team.

Mr. NICKLES. I have serious reservations about the Senator's resolution, but I shall not object.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the Senator yield? I will be glad to break the tie and make it two to one for the Blue Devils. An impartial State can attest to the fact that they won it fair and square. They are the best.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 284) to commend the Blue Devils of Duke University for winning the 1992 National Collegiate Athletic Association Men's Basketball Championship.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, it is, as they say in North Carolina, a pure delight to cosponsor this resolution commending Duke University on its winning, for the second year in a row, the NCAA men's basketball championship.

Coach K—as he is known to North Carolinians—his great team, Christian Laettner, Bobby Hurley, Grant Hill, Antonio Lang, Thomas Hill, Brian Davis, and others, and the coaching staff all have demonstrated that they are indeed champions.

The Blue Devils occasionally bring their fans perilously close to cardiac arrest, but they hang in there. Not only are they great athletes—their academic achievements set an example for students across the Nation.

The Duke Blue Devils began the season at the top of the polls. They were the first team in more than 15 years to remain No. 1 throughout an entire season.

Duke won the Atlantic Coast Conference title in regular season games, then won the ACC championship title in the playoffs, and then won the NCAA tournament championship for the second straight year.

It is interesting that no team from outside of North Carolina defeated Duke. The Blue Devils' two losses came at the hands of Wake Forest University—my alma mater—and UNC Chapel Hill—which is Dot Helms' alma mater. But both Dot and I were cheering the Blue Devils on to victory.

We congratulate the Blue Devils for being the first team to win two consecutive NCAA championship titles since UCLA's great record that ended in 1973. I am proud that the State of North Carolina is home to Duke University.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate?

If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 284) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 284

Whereas the Duke University Blue Devils' men's basketball team has had another outstanding season;

Whereas the Duke Blue Devils maintained the Nation's Number One ranking from the beginning of the season to the end;

Whereas the Duke Blue Devils, in compiling a 34-2 record, won the 1992 Atlantic Coast Conference Regular Season Championship;

Whereas the Duke Blue Devils also won the 1992 Atlantic Coast Conference Tournament Championship;

Whereas the Duke Blue Devils reached the NCAA final four for the fifth consecutive year;

Whereas Duke Coach Mike Krzyzewski now holds the highest NCAA tournament winning percentage among all coaches with 15 or more wins in the tournament with a 33-7 record;

Whereas Duke Coach Mike Krzyzewski received the 1992 Naismith Award as men's college basketball coach of the year;

Whereas the Duke University Blue Devils won the 1992 NCAA men's basketball championship; and

Whereas the Duke Blue Devils are the first team in 19 years to win consecutive NCAA men's basketball championships: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate commends the Blue Devils of Duke University for winning the 1992 National Collegiate Athletic Association Men's Basketball Championship.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. Will the Senator yield a minute to me off the bill?

Mr. SASSER. Madam President, I am pleased to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withhold? It is difficult to hear the Senator.

Mr. SASSER. Madam President, I am pleased to yield my friend from Arkansas 1 minute. The amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma is ready, and he is next to go, under a previous agreement.

I yield 1 minute to my friend from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMBERS. Madam President, I thank the Senator from Tennessee for yielding. I simply want to say that on the last vote, I would have happily voted for half of that amendment. The other half caused me serious reservations.

I thought it was perfectly appropriate to say we ought to cut defense below the committee-reported level for defense spending. I objected to the part that said 50 percent of the savings would go for deficit reduction and 50 percent would go for nondefense domestic discretionary spending.

It is not that I would not vote for additional domestic discretionary spending, but I would want to evaluate that on a case-by-case basis. For the time being, what, in my opinion, this body should have done is simply adopt the spending cuts of the Bradley amendment. We have the next 5 years to decide what, if anything, to do with the savings other than deficit reduction. I can just simply say, Madam President, my obsession with the deficit is total and we ought to be dealing with that first. We can deal with the rest of it later on. It would be very comforting to the people of this country to know we had cut $50 billion over the next 5 years and had not immediately decided to turn right around and spend half of it.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Madam President, before yielding to the Senator from Oklahoma to take up his amendment, I am hopeful to get a unanimous-consent agreement here very shortly with our colleague from New Mexico, stating the order of precedence in which various outstanding amendments can be taken up. I think that would streamline our operation and expedite bringing this matter to a conclusion.

I see my friend from New Mexico on the floor now. And I think that he may have a copy of the various amendments that are presently outstanding: So I will now propound the unanimous-consent request.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following Senators be recognized in order to offer first-degree amendments in the following order: An amendment by Senator NICKLES; an amendment by Senator HARKIN; an amendment by Senator ROTH; an amendment by Senator FOWLER; an amendment by Senator

D'AMATO; an amendment by Senator WELLSTONE; an amendment by Senator SEYMOUR; an amendment by Senator DECONCINI; an amendment by Senator DOMENICI; an amendment by Senator REID.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SASSER. And also an amendment by Senator GLENN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I have to have more information as to how long they will take before I can agree. So if we do not get some time, we will just have to flip a coin as they come up. I am not going to agree that the last three amendments have 5 minutes each. Maybe that will be the fate of the amendments.

Mr. SASSER. Let me say to my friend from New Mexico, it may very well be. We are not in a posture at this time to—

Mr. DOMENICI. I would have no objection to Senator NICKLES and Senator HARKIN. They are the next ones. Senator NICKLES was next in any event and Senator HARKIN was on everybody's list as the next one; is that correct?

Mr. SASSER. He is on my list as the next one.

Mr. DOMENICI. I will agree to those two at this point and then we can talk a little more.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator state what has been agreed to by the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SASSER. Let me amend my unanimous-consent request, Madam President, in this fashion. I ask unanimous consent that the following Senators be recognized to offer first-degree amendments in the following order: Senator NICKLES and Senator HARKIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. FORD. Reserving the right to object, but I will not object, does that exclude second-degree amendments?

Mr. SASSER. It does not exclude second-degree amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WELLSTONE. Reserving the right to object. Will those second degrees have to be relevant and germane?

Mr. DOMENICI. I did not hear the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Minnesota state his question again?

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, I wanted to know, first of all, whether second-degree amendments will be in order. The Senator from Kentucky asked that question. If so, I want to know whether they have to be relevant and germane.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to advise that the Budget

Act requires these amendments to be germane.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further objection? Then the Senator's unanimous-consent request is agreed to. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Madam President, I wish to thank the Senators from Tennessee and New Mexico for their courtesy.

AMENDMENT NO. 1766

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate that the Senate should adopt on or before June 5, 1992, a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to a Federal balanced budget)

Mr. NICKLES. Madam President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES], for himself, Mr. DOLE, Mr. BOND, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. SIMON, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. BURNS, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. LOTT, Mr. BOREN, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. GARN, Mr. HELMS, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. BROWN, and Mr. CRAIG, proposes an amendment numbered 1766.

Mr. NICKLES. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the resolution add the following new section:

SEC. . SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT.

(1) It is the sense of the Senate that the Senate should adopt a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to a Federal balanced budget, and that the adoption of such joint resolution should occur on or before June 5, 1992.

Mr. NICKLES. Madam President, on behalf of myself and Senator BOND, also Senator KASTEN, Senator SIMON, Senator SYMMS, Senator BURNS, Senator SHELBY, Senator MURKOWSKI, Senator DECONCINI, Senator LOTT, Senator BOREN, Senator PRESSLER, Senator HEFLIN, Senator GARN, Senator HELMS, Senator MCCAIN, Senator BROWN, and Senator CRAIG, I have sent an amendment to the desk which is very simple, but it is very important.

This amendment reads as follows:

It is the sense of the Senate that the Senate should adopt a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to a Federal balanced budget, and that the adoption of such joint resolution should occur on or before June 6, 1992.

Madam President, I offer this amendment because I think we can no longer afford the continuing hemorrhage of enormous deficit spending. I do not know that people really care who is at fault, but I know they do not like the results. They do not like the fact that we are looking at enormous Federal deficits, deficits that are climbing and escalating totally and completely out of control.

It is interesting to note that several of our colleagues who have announced their retirements have announced their frustrations and almost always in their statements they have announced their frustration over the inability to be able to control these enormous Federal debts.

Madam President, I look at the balanced budget amendment which many of us have proposed and I look back to when the Senate passed on August 4, 1982, a joint resolution calling for a constitutional amendment to balance the budget. We passed it with 69 votes. As all my colleagues know, it takes two-thirds in both Houses. Unfortunately, later that year, on October 1, 1982, it failed in the House. They had a majority vote. They had 236 votes in the House in 1982, but it required 290 votes.

On March 25, 1986, we had another attempt to pass a constitutional amendment in the Senate, and we failed by one vote. That vote on the amendment was 66 to 34. We needed 67 votes.

On July 17, 1990, an effort was made in the House to pass a constitutional amendment to balance the budget. It failed as well but it came very close. It had 279 votes; 279 to 150. It only needed 290. I would venture to say to my colleagues and to the American people that if we have this vote today, I hope that we will get the two-thirds vote. I hope that we will be saying, yes, we want to vote, we want to pass, we want to adopt a constitutional amendment to make us balance the budget. And my guess is if we can get two-thirds vote in the Senate, our colleagues in the House can get two-thirds of a vote in the House.

Right now we have a balanced budget amendment that is proposed by Senator SIMON and others which is sitting on the calendar. As a matter of fact, his joint resolution was reported on July 9, 1991, but it is yet to be considered by the full Senate. I think we need to vote on it, and other people may have other ideas. There are a lot of different ideas proposed for a constitutional amendment, different language. I am amenable to any. I think we need to have it on the floor of the Senate, and if colleagues want to try and improve it, that is the legislative process. I think that is important.

I look back at the votes that we had in 1982 when we passed it in the Senate. We had a gross public debt of a little over $1 trillion. When we voted in 1986, we had a public debt of a little over $2 trillion, and it saddens me to say that today we are looking at by the end of 1992 that we will have a total Federal debt right at $4 trillion.

Madam President, if you just look at this chart, it is quite obvious that the Federal debt is ballooning, it is increasing, it is increasing out of control.

And, again, we hear a lot of people say, that is the President's fault or it is Congress' fault.

You might see the rate of growth back in the seventies, the rate of growth in the early eighties and now we see the rate of growth in the last several years and it has been ballooning. We talk about trillions of dollars and figures so large most people cannot comprehend them, but I will tell you, Madam President, when we are talking about gross Federal debt, we are looking at a per capita basis in excess of $16,000 for every man, woman, and child in the United States today; $16,000. That compares back to 1980 of a level of a little less than $4,000. It has quadrupled in those last 12 years. So we need to get our Federal debt under control.

I see my colleague from Kentucky may be grinning. He thinks it is funny. I do not think it is funny.

Mr. FORD. Madam President, my name was used. He said it was not funny. I would like for him to understand why I am smiling.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. NICKLES. I have the floor, Madam President. I will be happy to answer a question if the Senator has a question.

Mr. FORD. Who has been in charge of the Federal budget for the last 11 years?

Mr. NICKLES. I will be happy to answer that question.

Mr. FORD. I am sitting here with a smile on my face and you do not know what I am thinking, so you do not need to use my name because I am smiling. I may be happy about something.

Mr. NICKLES. I hope the Senator from Kentucky is happy. I appreciate his concern. I did not mean to—

Mr. FORD. Madam President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NICKLES. I will be happy to answer a question.

Mr. FORD. Does the Senator set out how he wants the balanced budget to be carried out once it is passed by the legislatures in various States, or does he just have a balanced budget amendment with no instructions?

Mr. NICKLES. I will go into that in just a moment because we have several different options, Madam President, all of which are preferable to the situation in which we find ourselves today.

My point is that we have a budget ballooning out of control and we need to get it under control.

I will say there is a lot of frustration on both sides. I have been very frustrated in serving in this body at our inability to get control over Federal budgets. I serve now on the Budget Committee, and I am totally dissatisfied with the budget resolution we have before us today. I was totally dissatisfied with the budget summit that came out of Andrews Air Force Base. I think it left a lot to be desired, and I will get into that in just a moment.

Madam President, if we look at the record, some people say we need to raise taxes and other people say we need to cut spending. I think it is quite obvious, if you look over the last 20 years, outlays are racing upward. They are racing and compounding at unbelievable rates of growth. Receipts have continued to rise but they have not been able to keep up with the outlays.

And so you see the deficit widening, out of control.

We need to get it under control. Most people would say this is what we are doing with the Federal budget. That is the purpose of the Budget Committee, that is the purpose of these Senate budget resolutions. Frankly, we have not been successful. The budget we have before us today, we called for a freeze on domestic discretionary spending, we called for cuts in defense spending, but we had no reductions, to speak of, on mandatory spending, no real reductions on entitlements.

If my colleagues will look at this chart, it shows that interest has risen and risen rather significantly. It shows domestic outlays have risen and now are somewhat flat although we have increased a little bit in the last year or so. It shows defense spending having some significant increases during the early 1980's and now flattening out and actually decreasing in the nineties, and it shows a rapid increase in mandatory spending or entitlement spending. Frankly, we have not controlled those. We have not touched them. We have not even looked at them as far as this Senator is concerned and that is over half of our Federal budget.

I understand that the Senator from New Mexico and maybe the Senator from Tennessee are going to talk about in a minute some type of a cap or some proposal to limit the growth of entitlements. I am excited about that concept. I think we need to pursue it. I hope that we would. I hope that we would in a bipartisan fashion try to manage every dollar in the budget and not say we are not going to touch this half of the budget. That is over $700 billion in 1992. It is half of the budget that, frankly, we just excluded, ignored, and it has been compounding at unbelievable rates of growth in spending.

Mr. SASSER. Will the Senator yield for a question on his chart?

Mr. NICKLES. Yes.

Mr. SASSER. I note in the Senator's chart that we see increases beginning really in the middle of the 1970's and continuing up into 1992 for defense spending. We see the domestic outlays relatively flat but now starting to course up somewhat. The interest outlays are starting to go up in an alarming fashion.

With regard to the mandatory outlays, I wonder if my friend from Oklahoma—and he is correct. I think we do need to look at some means of trying to control those mandatory outlays over a period of time. But I wonder if my friend from Oklahoma is aware of the fact that the so-called mandatory programs produced 40 percent of the revenues that flow into the Federal Treasury while they account for 50 percent of the outlays that the Treasury outlays. Conversely, the defense budget produces no revenues, and to my knowledge domestic discretionary spending produces no revenues either, nor does, obviously, interest outlays.

So when we look at that mandatory outlay line, sometimes it is deceiving because that includes, of course, Social Security, as my friend knows. And this year that will produce almost a $70 billion surplus.

Mr. NICKLES. I appreciate my colleague's comment.

To go into the enormous or rapid rate of growth of programs, I want to include several charts for the information of my colleagues. I have charts that are done by the Congressional Budget Office and also the Office of Management and Budget, and sometimes these figures are a little different. But we have had an explosion in cost of these mandatory outlays. I will just touch on a few of them. The earned income tax credit this year is going to increase 46.9 percent. These are CBO figures. Medicaid this year will increase 30.3 percent. Last year it increased 27.7 percent. I might mention, too, a lot of States are figuring our schemes, including my State, I might add, to my friend from Kentucky—and I do not know if all the States are doing it, but a lot of States are figuring out schemes. Medicaid has always been in the past kind of a State/Federal share program, but more and more States are figuring out ways they can dump more and more and more of it on the Federal Government. We have a proposal in my State that says, wait a minute, for every $10 million that we raise, we are going to get another $30 or $40 million back from Uncle Sam. It is a great deal for our State. State after State is doing it, as if, if it comes from Uncle Sam, if it comes from the Federal Government, it does not cost anything. Madam President, that does not make sense.

Mr. FORD. Madam President, will the Senator yield for a minute.

Mr. NICKLES. The Federal Government cannot give anybody a dime, a thin dime that it first does not take from somebody else. And this idea that, well, if it is from the Federal Government it is free is wrong. As a matter of fact, that is responsible for this enormous hemorrhage of Federal spending and enormous hemorrhage of Federal debt that is not done in any one State.

I want to touch on a few of the other rapid growing entitlement programs.

Unemployment compensation, in 1991, grew at 43 percent; in 1992, it grew at 55 percent. Food stamps, in 1991, grew at 24.7 percent; in 1992, they are estimated to grow at an additional 18.7 percent. And I could go on and on. Medicare last year did not grow very much, 6.3 percent. This year it is projected to grow at 12.3 percent. Family support, AFDC, last year grew at 10.7 percent, 1992 it is estimated to grow 11.9 percent. And I could go on and on and on. The point is, Madam President, we have had an explosion, an explosion in mandatory spending.

OMB figures state that in 1992, total mandatory spending will increase by 23.9 percent. Domestic spending will increase by 10.6 percent. International and foreign aid will increase by 2 percent, and defense will decline by 2.1 percent.

So when we are talking about the Federal budget, I think when we look at our real problems we see that we have not been successful in capping or controlling or containing the growth of these mandatory or entitlement programs. I think we need to change that. I think probably the way we are really going to have to change it, to answer my friend and colleague from Kentucky, is to have us under the constraint of a constitutional amendment that makes us balance the budget, where we do not have an option.

My State of Oklahoma has a constitutional amendment to make them balance the budget, and they have to make tough decisions every year. We have not had to do that at the Federal level. We can continue to pile on debt and pile on debt and, yes, you are more popular giving to people than taking it a way and so we spend more than we tax. I think the inequity does not mean we are undertaxed. I think the problem is we have overspent. But we need to wrestle those problems out in this body and in the House as well. We need to get the White House involved and we need to get these figures together. We need to get the outlays down. We need to constrain the growth of Federal Government. For every dollar that we spend, we are either taking it away from individuals in the form of taxation today or we are borrowing from them, which takes away some of their future and obligates future generations as well.

Madam President, I will conclude by two comments from Thomas Jefferson. Thomas Jefferson said:

I wish it were possible to obtain a single amendment to our Constitution. I would be willing to depend on that alone for the reduction of administration of our government to the genuine principles of its Constitution—I mean an additional article taking from the Federal Government the power of borrowing.

And one final quotation from Thomas Jefferson, one of my favorites.

The question whether one generation has the right to bind another by the deficit it imposes is a question of such consequence as to place it among the fundamental principles of government. We should consider ourselves unauthorized to saddle prosperity with our debts and morally bound to pay them ourselves.

Madam President, I think Thomas Jefferson said it very well. I hope that my colleagues will join in this resolution. I hope they will vote for it which basically will be permitting us to adopt, not just vote for, a constitutional amendment to make us balance the budget no later than June 7, 1992.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator BRYAN be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NICKLES. Madam President, I have several charts that I wish to be included at this point in the RECORD, including one that has gross Federal debt, and also per capita Federal debt, as well as other charts showing the growth of entitlement programs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NICKLES. I yield the floor.

Mr. SASSER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. SASSER. Madam President, I listened very carefully to my friend from Oklahoma as he has made his presentation here today. He makes a convincing presentation. We are all concerned, of course, about the rise in the Federal deficit. I certainly know I am. I spend a lot of time as chairman of the Budget Committee trying to arrest the increase in the Federal deficit.

We thought we made some substantial progress on it 2 years ago, and we did, really, with regard to policy changes that are affected by what we do here in this body. Unfortunately, our efforts were washed away by the economic recession that occurred and has gone on now for long enough to be the longest economic recession we have had since the Second World War.

I read the Senator's amendment with interest, including the cosponsors of the amendment. And this amendment, as I read it, has 16 or 17 cosponsors. Unfortunately, 14 of these cosponsors, who are so concerned about the deficit that they want to institute amending the Constitution and put a balanced budget amendment on the Constitution, 14 of these Senators that are so concerned they want to tamper with this document that served us well for over 200 years, voted on the floor of the U.S. Senate not over an hour ago to raise the deficit by some $60 billion over 5 years.

They failed to support a very modest amendment by the Senator from Nebraska to reduce defense spending down from $1.457 trillion over the next 5 years, lower it to the modest amount of, I think, $1.375 trillion.

With that vote, they voted to impose on future generations an additional $60 billion in debt. If they had not done that, Madam President, I would be a little more impressed with this effort now to come in and balance the budget with a balanced budget amendment.

It reminds me very much of those Senators who rushed out and wanted to pass this Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law—you will recall that. That was the law that was going to balance the budget and to reduce Federal spending. Many of the same Senators were out here voting against various and sundry cuts.

Yes, there has been a substantial growth in the so-called mandatory or entitlements. There is no question about that.

But when you peel all of that back and you see where that growth is, I say to my colleagues, 85 percent of the projected growth in entitlements or mandatories, for the next 5 years will be in Medicare and Medicaid.

What is causing the explosion in entitlement spending is health care costs. There is no question about it. Just as health care costs are exploding for private industry, in the private sector of the economy, it is happening in the public sector. That is what is driving up the so-called mandatories or entitlements.

I did indicate to my friend from Oklahoma a moment ago that all is not lost with the so-called mandatories or entitlements because, let us give the devil its due: They do produce a revenue.

I am looking here at a Congressional Budget Office analysis which indicates that in fiscal year 1993, the so-called social insurance portion of the entitlements will produce $448 billion. Of course, that includes a whole list of things, down the line, and that does not include the Medicare payments that come in under Medicare part A, as I recall. That is the hospital portion.

So, yes. There has been a growth in entitlements. But they produce 40 percent of the revenue of the U.S. Government. They account for about 50 percent of the outlays. The difference there between what they produce and what they outlay is just slightly less or maybe slightly more than the defense budget.

The defense budget produces nothing. It produces no revenues at all. That is what we were trying to cut on the floor of the Senate earlier today. That is what we were trying to reduce, $60 billion off of this defense budget that produces no revenues for the Federal Treasury.

So if my colleagues had been more supportive of that, those who are cosponsoring the Nickles amendment here, I would be more persuaded that this effort to try to do something about the Federal deficit is meritorious and is something that we could consider seriously.

But I must say to my colleagues, as one who looks at these numbers day in and day out, you have to make some difficult choices sometimes. At some point you have to forget about the Rotary Club rhetoric, about the deficits, and actually cast a vote occasionally, you know, to try to reduce the deficit, to actually cast a vote to reduce some spending on something.

We just had that opportunity, I say to my friend from Kentucky, not over an hour and a half ago. I am pleased to say that my friend from Kentucky stood with those Senators who were concerned about the deficit, and voted down here to reduce this deficit by some $60 billion over the last 5 years.

We did not prevail. We failed by a small margin, but we will be back again and again and again, those of us who are seriously concerned about this deficit.

In the interim, we can introduce balance-the-budget amendments. We can reintroduce Gramm-Rudman-Hollings 3, or whatever we want to call it. We can come up with all these mechanistic approaches to try to do something about the deficit; but, my colleagues, nothing is going to work until we develop the will to do something about it. Until that will is developed, in concert with the administration, the deficits are not going to be reduced.

The national debt now stands in the neighborhood of about 50 percent of gross national product. I suppose if you knock off, as some economists do, the payments for the insurance fund—that is, the S&L bailout and the bank fund—it reduces it down to somewhere in the neighborhood of about 42 percent of gross national product. That is very high.

Italy has a debt-to-GNP ratio of 110 percent. Of the developed, industrialized countries in Western Europe, including Japan, some have a little higher debt-to-GNP ratio than we have, and some have a little lower. But I worry about the debt that all of these countries carry that trade with each other, because I fear, as these debt-to-GNP ratios go up and up and up, I would not be surprised if one of these days we wake up and find that we have a worldwide recession, or worldwide depression, because all of the industrialized countries have simply overextended themselves.

I know my friend from Oklahoma is well-meaning, and I may end up supporting him. But what I am saying here today is that fine speeches and fine mechanistic approaches are simply not going to substitute for us making the really difficult votes to try to reduce the deficits, and trying to make those reductions in a fair and in an equitable way with regard to the people of the United States.

I am concerned about entitlements, but I do not believe that I can go back to the people of my State, the older citizens there who rely on Medicare, and say to them: Your Medicare is too high, and we are going to have to reduce it; because they are all telling me that the doctors are telling them now they will not treat them on just Medicare. The hospitals are telling me that they lose money on Medicare patients, and they do not want to take them.

I do not want to go back and face my Governor and my State legislators—I see the distinguished Senator from Missouri on the floor, and he was a very able Governor of his State; he achieved nationwide recognition in that role as Governor of the State of Missouri—but I do not want to go back to my Governor and State legislators and say that we are going to reduce the Medicaid payments and, “By the way, Governor and you fellows in the legislature have to pick up the difference,” because they are all the time saying to us, “You fellows in the Federal Government are sending us these mandates, and it is absolutely bankrupting us. You Federal people are not doing your share.”

So these are things that I think we have to consider as we consider the amendment of my friend from Oklahoma. There is more to it, really, than just passing a bill that says we are going to balance the budget, that says we are going to reduce the deficit. I have been down that road many times.

I remember when our old friend, Harry Byrd of Virginia, was here. Maybe Senator NICKLES remembers Senator Byrd. In fact, I saw Senator

Byrd just the other day. He is fit as a fiddle, and his first question to me was, “What are you going to do about the deficit?” I remember Senator Harry Byrd standing right back here and offering amendment after amendment, and we passed one piece of legislation after another trying to deal with the deficit.

Unfortunately, Harry Byrd's efforts went unrewarded. So these are things to be considered.

I thank my friend from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. I yield to the Senator from Missouri such time as he may consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LAUTENBERG). The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BOND. Madam President, I thank my colleague from Oklahoma. I am proud to join with him in cosponsoring this resolution, because I believe the time has come for us to take some serious steps to develop an approach that will get us a balanced budget.

I commend the chairman of the Budget Committee for having been engaged in establishing what I would have to call a mechanistic approach in the summit agreement. All of us have differences with that agreement. I do not exactly agree with all of the things in it. Certainly, there have been some of the taxes that have been proven in retrospect not to work well. But the fact that we have had to work under caps has given this body, this Congress, some discipline it has not had before.

It has been kindly pointed out that I did have the pleasure of serving as chief executive of my State, and I found that the inability of my State to borrow without getting a vote of the people put our backs to the wall when it came to spending. We had to make sure that our spending matched up with our income.

As I travel around my State now, I sense a growing feeling of frustration. People are beginning to say: Why is it that you cannot get this increasing Federal deficit under control?

I talk about the things we have tried to do and the things we have started on, and we have tried to make some progress. Then they say: Why do you not impose the same discipline on the Federal Government that our State constitution imposes on our State? Maybe, just maybe, we have come to the time when we ought to be seriously debating that approach.

There are a number of ways we can go, and a number of different approaches to dealing with special problems that the Federal Government can have. But I think, given the sense of concern in this country about how Congress manages its business and manages the budget, and given the growing recognition in this country that we are losing jobs because we cannot keep our deficits under control; that we are in danger of ruining the economy for the future; that we are passing down to our children a tremendous credit-card bill that they are going to have to pay, I believe the time has come to develop some real discipline.

I found in this body, as we deal with appropriated items where there is a cap, and I have found in State government where we have a constitutional prohibition on deficit spending, if your back is against the wall, you can have a stiff spine.

There are some things that I think are good in this budget resolution, and I commend both sides for working on a budget that cuts travel, reduces the Federal work force, and cuts discretionary funds. The budget resolution before us calls for a first-year cut of 5 percent for the legislative branch, the executive office of the President, and the offices of all the Cabinet Secretaries, and reduces rehire rates, replacing only four or five departures, as well as reduces agency travel. I think in times of annual deficits approaching $400 billion, these steps are reasonable.

But we need an aggressive 5-year approach. I think this budget's approach over 5 years makes some sense. It calls for a 5-year freeze in domestic spending; a 5-year freeze in international spending; and defense cuts of about $20 billion more than the President recommends. As one who already outlined additional defense cuts above the President's outyear numbers, I believe that is a fair approach.

But there is one item I think we ought to call attention to. This is the fiscal year 1996-97 plug put into function 920: Allowances.

This plug puts $50 billion in cuts from other areas, particularly cuts in the defense budget and makes them available to be spent. I believe they should be put toward reducing the deficit. Doing that could reduce the deficit to under $200 billion a year. This resolution, unfortunately, includes in it allowances, and thus assumes it will be spent.

That is sort of like quitting the doctor's ordered diet after losing the first 10 pounds, leaving the last 30 pounds for some other year and hoping the heart attack risk is taken care of. I think we should simply stick to the 5-year freeze for all three accounts, and I hope we can. However, as good as the freeze is, it only brings the deficit down to $200 billion in fiscal 1997, and the trend line is going back up, not down.

So, what is the solution?

Some may argue, and in fact have argued, that deficit spending is not so bad because it stimulates the economy in the short term and can be financed over the long term by a now growing economy.

Unfortunately, this sort of thinking never seems to recognize there comes a time to start paying off the debt accrued, rather than just adding to it.

As I understand the original Keynesian economics, it was you can use the accelerator in times of downturn so long as you use the brake in times of good economic activity. But the braking has never happened.

As a result, the Federal debt is now almost $4 trillion, over $14,000 for every man, woman, and child in the country. If we were like an American family, we would have to start looking for ways to cut costs, cancel vacation plans, get a second job, in order to start paying off the principal, not simply the interest.

Everyone with a credit card, I trust, has experienced a time or two when their credit card bills came and they could only afford to pay the minimum while at the same time watching with great dismay as the interest charges were adding up faster than the minimum payment was paying them down. That is where the Federal Government is right now, paying only the minimum, piling up the debt, and not really thinking twice about it.

That is why we now spend more on interest on the debt than every other Federal program or Federal responsibility except for two: defense and Social Security.

We spend more on interest than on children's health, more on interest than on veterans' programs, more on interest than on highways, bridges, and mass transit, more than on education, more than on agriculture, space, science, or cancer research.

In fact, we spend more on interest payments than we do on all these programs combined.

The interest payment on the debt alone in the current fiscal year will be $201 billion. This is only slightly less than the $215 billion that the Government spends on all domestic discretionary programs combined. These are very important programs. They include everything from education and child care to highways, mass transit, to health research and soil conservation. What is now occurring is that interest payments on the debt are rapidly becoming not only the fastest growing but the largest Federal expenditure.

That money is not buying us anything. We are not providing any services; we are not providing research; we are not constructing anything with that money. It is simply lost paying for the borrowings of the past. Congress is doing what millions of American households are trying to avoid doing, and that is paying only the minimum on our credit card while we watch our unpaid balances getting larger and larger.

The big difference, of course, is that Uncle Sam has no credit card limit. So when Congress and the administration spend and spend, the debt just keeps piling more on interest than domestic discretionary spending as soon as next year, if not 1994. That means that for every dollar spent on education, or highways, or child care, $1 will be going to pay for spending decisions of the past, that is interest. In short, when we should be looking to the future, we will be spending our precious resources paying for the past.

Mr. President, allowing the interest payment portion of our budget to become larger and larger, means we have fewer and fewer funds to spend on our priorities and to spend on fulfilling our Nation's unmet needs. That is why I have come to the conclusion that we cannot wait any longer to attack the deficit.

That is why I feel so strongly that Congress must get serious about a balanced budget amendment. That is the best way to curb this body's destructive habit of using our children's credit card to spend on items we want today.

Now, I believe the budget before us may be the best we can do right now, but it is not enough. And it has taken a lot of work to get here, and I commend my colleagues who worked on it.

Unfortunately, it continues to borrow more money to pay the interest on the money we already borrowed. No wonder CBO projects a possible trillion dollar annual deficit by the year 2010.

Mr. President, what is the solution, you may ask? There are two paths. We can cut spending and address in particular mandatory spending, or we can raise taxes. But there is no other way.

I think the balanced budget requirement is the best way to assure that we get it done.

But simply reducing the deficit is not the answer. Reducing the debt as well must be the answer. And to do that we have to reach a surplus. That is tough to get to at any time much less an election year, some will say. We cannot do anything that might alienate voters in an election year. We should wait until next year, or maybe 1994 or 1995 or 1996 or 1997 or 1998 or after we are all gone, maybe.

Two of our very distinguished colleagues, Senator WARREN RUDMAN and Senator KENT CONRAD, who have been consistently concerned about the deficit have chosen to retire. We are going to miss them and we are going to miss their concern and their commitment. Both of them cited their frustration with the deficit when they made their announcements.

The deficit is the biggest frustration, too, for some of us who hope to stay around as well. It is frustrating, not because it limits the kind of good things we can pass or because it limits our creativity in developing new ideas or new programs. No, it is frustrating because our children's future is being sold out and most of us know it. We simply lack the will or lack the discipline to take the personal and political risks to end it.

A good many of my colleagues rightfully have stood on this floor and praised Senators RUDMAN and CONRAD for their courage and single mindedness of purpose. It is kind of difficult, though, to find a majority or a supermajority to stand with them. I understand my friend, the Senator from New Mexico, is going to make a real effort and I commend him.

Mr. President, I cannot tell you how many letters I have already gotten before his proposal has even come out, before the Senator from New Mexico has made his proposal, saying, "Oppose the Domenici cap proposal." It has already gotten known and has generated opposition before he has formally introduced it. None of the opponents is quite sure what the Domenici cap proposal is or how it would work or whether it is good for the country or not. They are just writing because somebody told them it is going to be a bad idea and they better get on it. You can see some groups around Washington thinking, "I thought we had that worry about the deficit licked. I thought it was OK to call for big increases again. Now the Senator from New Mexico comes along and we better get on the stick." They are thinking it means we have to stop this Domenici cap thing right now before people get serious and actually review how tax dollars are being spent.

Thus, special interest groups from all across Washington are earning their fees cranking these letters out. We are delighted to hear from them. We get lots of letters and calls. They are telling their members back home, "Write your Congressmen and tell them: Don't review my program; we were already cut once; we need increases—not a freeze or a slower rate of growth."

Now, nearly all letters include the paragraph about how they, too, are concerned about the deficit. They all say, "We are concerned about the deficit," but it is not their particular program that is to blame. It is someone else's or it is the defense buildup or tax cut of eighties or the dog ate their homework. It is always somebody else who has the responsibility.

But it is safe to say no one has written in to my office yet saying it is a good idea; while you are at it take a look at this program—it worked in 1958, but it is a bit out of step today. Nor has anyone told me, "Yes, for the good of the country we can handle some sacrifices and we can reform our programs and cut back on spending."

Thus, we are struck with status quo thinking, paralyzed by special interest groups pressuring us on pet programs, waiting for the grand moment when it is time to end the budget deficit.

I have only been here 5 years, but in that time I have seen budgets come and go, budget summits come and go, Presidents come and go while the budget deficit gets larger every year.

Mr. President, I believe it is time to act. I am proud to have been a cosponsor of the alternative budget resolution developed by my friend from New Mexico which basically says it is time to get serious. No more waiting until next year. Let us freeze domestic and international spending. Let's cut defense. And let us look to slow the growth of mandatory spending. This is a serious proposal.

Everyone knows the costs of entitlements and mandatory spending is rising too fast for our economy to sustain. We are borrowing from our Nation's pension funds. We are borrowing from the Germans, the Japanese, and the British.

We are borrowing from the Social Security trust fund, the highway trust fund, and the airport trust fund—and if we do not control the growth rate of entitlements, we will not be able to pay these trust funds back, our pension funds or anyone else for that matter.

Mr. President, I believe the time has come to get serious about the deficit and in particular about the rapid growth of mandatory spending.

To do less is to cheat all the other programs which compete for the Federal dollar not once, but twice. First by squeezing programs such as education, childcare, or immunizations because of ever-increasing interest payments; then squeezing them again by diverting more and more resources to runaway entitlements.

This means that every year the portion of the dollar available for children gets smaller and smaller, and the bill left for them to pay when they become taxpayers becomes larger and larger. This cannot be allowed to continue.

I believe we must take the first painful steps to reversing this course—and like any addict, the first thing Congress should do is admit there is a problem.

And I suggest that is precisely what we should do if we are willing to belly up and say, yes, we need a balanced budget amendment.

Yes, we are going to have to look at health care costs. Everywhere I go people are concerned about the high cost of health care. Whether it is a family budget, a small business, local or State government, or the Federal Government, the problem facing them all is the same. Drastically rising premiums, out-of-pocket expenses, or reimbursements to providers.

Congress must act to reform health care, bringing these costs under control and easing the squeeze being placed on everyone's budget, while continuing to provide quality care.

Health care now consumes 15 percent of the average family's income. States see the Medicaid Program squeezing and eating up funds so rapidly they have no flexibility to meet any other problem.

We face that in my State. In the early 1980's Medicaid was one of the things that was driving our State's budget out of control and it forced us to cut programs in mental health and other vital services. In Missouri now, the Governor has been facing the question of funding education or funding Medicaid, and most States have faced similar questions.

We cannot just turn the tab over for more Medicaid spending to the States because that squeezes badly needed State programs as well.

At the Federal level we see that both Medicare and Medicaid are projected to double in cost by 1997, and not surprisingly overall health expenditures are also projected to double from 1990 to 1997.

As health care costs continue to skyrocket, growing twice the rate or more than the economy itself, it is obvious that left unchecked these costs will bankrupt the economy as well as the budget.

These health cost increases are simply not sustainable, and Congress must face up to these facts. Otherwise we will be left with a situation where as a society we are paying more, receiving less, and continuing to ignore other unmet needs as health care costs continue to consume larger and larger proportion of our economy and our tax dollars.

I believe we have many good ideas available right now. We could fairly quickly adopt legislation to enact malpractice reform to stop useless and expensive defensive medicine and stop waste on litigation costs. Most believe that this could save as much as $15 billion per year.

Second, eliminate wasteful administrative costs and the blizzard of paperwork; according to the New England Journal of Medicine study anywhere from $75-$110 billion are wasted each year, and of course this is part of the appeal of a single payor system, but I believe it can be done otherwise.

Third, we need to crack down on fraudulent claims, excessive procedures which some claim are as high as $50 billion per year in Medicare.

Fourth, we must make smarter use of our health care dollar: more funds for immunizations and prenatal care; and finally make better use of managed care plans.

Mr. President, we need a mechanism to force us to make these tough but necessary decisions.

I have been told this is political poison—well, maybe so. But we just cannot continue like this year after year, pretending there is no problem, waiting for that grand moment when we are ready to act, all the while silently sacrificing this country's future.

Just listen to the siren call of the interest groups "not me, not me, don't touch my program. Not this year, wait until next year." It is at a low wail already. Soon it will be time for Congress to give in again, and pull out that no-limit credit card again.

What I am saying and what my colleague from Oklahoma is saying is we need to impose a discipline on this body that will put a limit on that credit card saying, "You can't continue to run it up, you can't continue to raid the credit card of our children, you can't just gun the charges and not pay the costs."

For the sake of our country and our children, I hope we can get started.

Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Oklahoma, I yield the floor.

Mr. SASSER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, how much time do the opponents of the amendment have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has 47 minutes.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, how much time do we have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has 22 minutes remaining.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland has 10 minutes.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I listened very carefully to my able colleague from Missouri. He is obviously touching on a very important issue.

I think it is very important to be careful about our analysis, because if we do not really understand where the problem has come from, we are not going to be able to figure out what the appropriate solution ought to be. There are a lot of assertions being made that I think need to be examined very carefully.

On the spending side, the Federal Government has two kinds of outlays: those that are considered discretionary in that they reflect annual appropriations, and those considered mandatory because they reflect contractual obligations or because they provide a defined level of benefits according to a legislative formula. Examples of contractual obligations are deposit insurance and debt service. Examples of mandatory spending based on a legislative formula are Social Security, Medicare, and unemployment insurance.

The principal changes in spending that have occurred over the last decade indicate that the aggregate of domestic and defense discretionary spending has been on a downward path as a share of GNP. However, during most of the 1980's, discretionary spending for defense and international affairs rose significantly as a share of GDP, while domestic discretionary spending fell substantially.

I want to repeat that. During most of the 1980's, discretionary spending for defense and international affairs rose significantly as a share of GDP, while domestic discretionary spending fell substantially.

If military spending in the 1980's had followed the same downward path, as domestic discretionary spending, the huge annual deficit to the 1980's would have largely disappeared. In fact, the sum of the rising share of military expenditures and the interest payment on the debt used to finance this rise together account for the entire deficit of the 1980's.

This chart shows the growth in defense spending versus the growth in the deficit for the years 1981 through 1990.

The first column in each year is defense spending, and the second is the increase in the deficit. What you can see is that in some years the deficit grew more than defense spending, and in other years defense spending grew more than the deficit. In fact, the years in which the deficit tended to outgrow defense spending were the recessionary years. This occurs because, if you get a downturn in the economy the deficit goes up. The total for this 10-year period is an increase in defense spending of $1.142 trillion; and in increase in the deficit of $1.167 trillion.

So, all of the increase in the deficit is matched by an increase in defense spending except for $25 billion. This is from the 1980 levels, growth-in-defense/growth-in-deficit in billions of dollars.

We have a serious deficit problem. But if you are going to try to address it you have to know where it comes from.

Mr. SASSER. Will the Senator just yield on that point?

Mr. SARBANES. Certainly. Certainly.

Mr. SASSER. The Senator from Maryland brings to us today a very valuable study. I am confident that this is the result of the distinguished Senator's service as chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, because that committee does have substantial responsibility for studying the overall Federal fiscal activities.

But as I look at this chart here, in 4 of the years that the Senator has outlined there—in fact in more than 4 of the years—in 5 of the 10 years the growth in defense spending was larger than the growth in the deficit. Is that correct?

Mr. SARBANES. That is correct.

Mr. SASSER. This follows on precisely, I say to my friend from Maryland, with something I was saying on the floor just before his arrival.

We had a vote here 1½ hours ago that would have reduced defense spending by $60 billion over a 5-year period. Yet it did not carry. It did not carry. And 14 of the 17 cosponsors of the Nickles amendment voted against that. They voted against reducing the deficit by $60 billion over 5 years because they did not want to reduce the defense budget.

The Senator brings to us, I think, here, a very simple explanation as to how there is no free lunch and defense spending does increase the deficit. And there is a correlation between the increase in the deficit and the increase in defense spending.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. SARBANES. I would say to the Senator that this is just comparing the defense increase. If you then attribute to defense spending the interest charges on the debt that were incurred in order to run these high defense figures, the total cost of that almost equals the deficit.

I also want to address the entitlements issue. It is an important question. We have to understand what the facts are.

It is constantly asserted that the programs which provide defined benefits to individuals—Social Security is the biggest and most important by far—have been a major source of the increasing deficit. On the contrary, most of these programs, often called entitlements, are funded with dedicated tax receipts which have generally kept pace with outlays.

I want to repeat that. These entitlement programs, generally speaking, have been funded with dedicated tax receipts which have generally kept pace with outlays. By far the largest entitlement programs are Social Security, Medicare, and unemployment insurance, which together account for two-thirds of entitlements spending.

Yet these programs are all funded by dedicated taxes. There is a tax associated with each of those programs. Those taxes have been more than adequate to meet the needs of the programs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair reminds the Senator he has gone beyond the 10 minutes, and the Chair asks who yields time?

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield me an additional 3 minutes?

Mr. SASSER. I am pleased to yield an additional 3 to 5 minutes to my friend from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland has an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. SARBANES. I thank the chairman.

Mr. President, what happened over the course of the 1980's is that the growth in outlays for entitlements leveled off, and on balance the funded entitlements had an excess of revenue over expenditures. Instead of contributing to the deficit they acted to reduce it. All other entitlements which include Civil Service and veterans' retirement, Medicaid, and food stamps have declined from 4.2 percent of GNP in 1979 to 3.5 percent in 1989.

As you look ahead, one of the problems you can see coming is the question of health care costs. That is a broader problem than this entitlement question. As we look ahead, we can see rising health care costs in both the private and the public sector, which only underscores the necessity of doing something broadly on the health care issue. That is another matter that is before this body. That is an issue where we need to address a problem of health costs, both in the public and the private sector.

People get out and they fulminate about entitlements. They say there has been growth in entitlements, and then they show charts that show a rise in entitlements spending.

What they do not show is that for the major entitlement programs, there has been a corresponding rise in the payments into the trust funds to support that entitlement spending. For example, there has been an increase in terms of expenditures for the Social Security System, but what you need to show is that there is also an increase for the revenues into the system on the basis of the dedicated taxes. In the instance of the Social Security System, it has produced a significant surplus each year.

The payments have risen but there has been no contribution to the deficit out of the Social Security System. In fact, the administration has been using the large surplus which the Social Security trust fund has been running as an offset, as an accounting device, to the size of the deficits.

Mr. SASSER. Will the Senator yield just on that point?

Mr. SARBANES. Certainly.

Mr. SASSER. I think the Senator from Maryland makes a very excellent point. I do not know if the Senator was on the floor a moment ago when I made the point that revenues flowing into the Federal Treasury from the so-called entitlements, or mandatories, amounted to 40 percent of all Federal revenues. I do not know if the distinguished Senator was aware of that or not.

As a matter of fact, just out of the so-called social insurance portion of the mandatory or entitlement programs, over $448 billion last year, actually predicted for fiscal year 1993, will flow into the Federal Treasury. So the entitlements account for 40 percent of all Federal revenues falling in the Treasury. Conversely, they account for 50 percent of the outlays. But you see they are very, very close there.

Interestingly enough, you look down through some of these so-called mandatories and you find railroad retirement, for example, contributes $3.5 billion. Civil service retirement contributes almost $5 billion. Of course, the old-age survivor and insurance trust fund, the real big one, $296 billion, and this does not include the funds coming in from Medicare, et cetera.

So this is a very substantial amount of money. I think the Senator makes a very excellent point.

When we are concerned about the rise in entitlement payments, as we all are, there is concurrently a rise in revenues coming in from these mandatories. Granted, the military retirement system pays nothing in. That is paid for out of the Treasury, military retirements are, and that is one of the mandatories. That is just something we reach down in the hip pocket of the taxpayer and we lay that out. There is nothing coming in, and there are some others like that.

Food stamps is another one. But as my friend outlined, food stamps are declining as a percentage of the mandatories and, as a matter of fact, food stamps are remaining rather stable in the outlay provision, as you see the predicted outlays over the next 5 years.

I just wanted to make the point. I was not sure my friend was aware that the so-called mandatories or entitlements account for 40 percent of the dollars coming into the Federal Treasury.

Mr. SARBANES. My colleague is making a very important point. Any analysis is faulty if you talk about a program which has a funding source connected to it and do not link the program funding and the program expenditures.

The fact of the matter is that the American people are willing to carry what most economists describe as a regressive tax burden under the Social Security System in order to fund the program. In fact, we made adjustments in both the revenue and expenditure side not too many years ago when the trust fund balance was insufficient. Consequently the Social Security trust fund has been running a larger and larger balance.

So you can show a rise in the spending for Social Security. But if you want to talk about the deficit problem, you have to talk also about what has happened to the rise in the funding that is associated with the Social Security System.

That is not true of all mandatory programs. So you have to separate them. As my colleague just pointed out, military retirement does not carry a funding device with it. It does not have a tax associated with it the way Social Security does and the way unemployment insurance does.

Where were the taxes connected to the growth in military expenditures over the 10-year period? People are complaining about the explosion of entitlements. Seventy percent of the entitlements—unemployment insurance, Medicare, and Social Security—have a funding source connected to them and over the eighties have produced surpluses, not deficits.

So where did the deficit come from? The domestic discretionary spending went down during the 1980's. If the military spending had gone down the way the domestic discretionary spending went down during the 1980's, we would not have had a deficit problem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used the 5 minutes.

Mr. SARBANES. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Maryland. He brings to the Senate today I think a very important message, and this is a very illuminating analysis. I am sure our colleagues are grateful to him for the work he has done on the Joint Economic Committee to develop these particular statistics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Idaho 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Oklahoma for yielding time to debate Senate Concurrent Resolution 106. I am extremely pleased that he has had the foresight to bring it to the floor as an amendment, to be discussed today and of course to be voted on, a resolution that speaks to a specific date in which this body will hopefully bring forth a balanced budget amendment resolution, debate it and make that decision so that all the American people can understand what we really mean.

I have been here a few years. I am in my 12th year of service to the State of Idaho in the U.S. Congress.

Mr. President, it did not take me very long, once I got here, to recognize that there was a phenomenal game being played. I do not mean it in the sense that it was insincere. No, I think all of my colleagues who stand on the floor today to debate the budget and talk about discretionary spending, mandatory, domestic outlays, all of those kinds of things, they are most sincere in what they do. I have never questioned their sincerity.

But I think at this time when we see those long red lines on the chart that my colleague from Maryland has just displayed, the red in those lines is every bit as reflective as the red on the face of very angry taxpaying Americans who have said: We no longer buy the game that is being played in Washington, the shuffle between mandatory, the shuffle between discretionary. Did defense get too much or not enough? What we know is that we are unemployed and what we know about our unemployment is it was caused by an economy that could no longer produce. And what we know about the economy that could no longer produce is that it was strangled by a group of politicians in Washington who simply could not say no to spending and deficits got out of control and debt got so large that the overhang of Federal debt today over the economy of this country has produced an economy that struggles along at no greater than 1 to 1.5 percent growth of GDP annually.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CRAIG. No, I will not yield at this time. I will be happy to at the end of my statement. I appreciate my colleague but I also recognize there is a limit on time so we can move out of here this evening.

We are not going to solve this problem tonight. But I think it is very important for those who might be listening or might even stumble into reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to understand that there are two very clear schools of thought on this and at some point in the future we are going to have to choose which one of those schools of thought will lead this country as relates to economic policy.

But the American people are red faced with anger today, whether they are unemployed or underemployed because the economy is not producing at the level it ought to. Some economists say with current debt structure it will not be able to produce beyond 1.2 percent growth GDP. We cannot hit the 2, 2.5, 3, 3.5, to 4 that it will really take for us to get back to a level of productivity, where young men and women, married or not, can enjoy buying a home, having the strength of a job in the economy, buying a new car, saving money for their children's education or doing exactly what they want to do without the fear that their job may be jerked out from under them because the economy struggles because the Government has simply gone beyond its ability to support the programs that it wishes to have for the citizens of this country.

The charts that were also seen a minute ago, let me tell you, marvelous things can be done with charts; marvelous things can be done with figures. I look at the figures for 1989 and 1990 from the Congressional Budget Office. Defense was a minus 1.3 percent; subtracted from a 43.6-percent increase, the deficit increased 42.3 percent.

Where did the growth come from? It did not come from defense spending. In 1990 and 1991, the deficit grew at 21.9 percent; defense grew at 5.6 percent. Simple subtraction; a 16.3-percent growth in deficit. It did not come from defense.

In 1991-92, a minus 1.3 percent growth in defense again, over the year before; a 37-percent growth in deficit. Simple subtraction; a 35.7-percent growth in deficit. It did not seem to come from defense.

The point I am trying to make is quite simple. I do not care what game you play with the figures or the charts. The bottom line is this Congress, this Senate, has lost the political will to be fiscally responsible. And it has demonstrated that lack of will for the last decade very, very clearly, as debt has grown and the deficit has grown, to today where we are talking about a responsible budget resolution that has over a $300 billion deficit built into it.

Now, I cannot go home to the citizens of Idaho and suggest to them that we are being fiscally responsible, that that is a beginning to an end, when in 1990, all wise men and women came together in this Congress with the great budget resolution of 1990 and convinced the American people that taxes ought to go up and that spending was going to come down and we were going to have diminishing deficits, and this last year's deficit was the highest on record.

They do not believe us anymore, Mr. President. They do not care about the charts. They do not care about the hypothesis, the projection of who is on first and who is on second, and whether it is an entitlement or whether it is an entitled or dedicated tax.

One thing they do know is that whether the tax comes from their salary or their payroll, whether their employer pays for it or whether they pay for it, whether it comes from a form that they fill out or whether it is taken from their check at their workplace, it is coming from their labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used his 5 minutes that was allotted to him.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I yield the Senator 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CRAIG. I thank my colleague. If it is coming from their labor, they know they are less productive today to spend for themselves and their children.

That is why I am standing tonight strongly supporting a resolution that simply moves us to a point of trying to consider a balanced budget resolution that would go to the American people for their consideration.

The House is ready. I served 10 years in the House. Tonight in the other body, there are enough cosponsors on a balanced budget resolution to equal two-thirds of that body, and I believe in their current circumstance they are ready to 'fess up to their sins of over-expenditure and put forth for the Americans to consider a balanced budget resolution.

Frankly, I think we ought to do the same. I am through playing the games. I am extremely tired of the charts, because I know what the citizens of this country are saying, young and old alike, employed or unemployed: Give us a job; allow us to earn at our capacity, to have what we would like to have.

The only way we can do that is once again gain a political will to be fiscally responsible. The only way we can gain that will here is to have a "no pass go," to have a resolution and then a constitutional amendment which forces us to make the tough political decisions that bring about the fiscal responsibility for which our citizens cry out.

I applaud my colleague from Oklahoma for his wisdom. I hope this body can pass this amendment, and on June 5, we can in fact muster the strength and the political will necessary to pass a balanced budget constitutional amendment resolution by a two-thirds vote of this Senate.

Mr. NICKLES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I wish to compliment my colleague from Idaho. I think he made an outstanding statement. I hope that my colleagues hear it.

Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Montana 3 minutes. The Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. How much time is remaining to the opponents and proponents?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has 13½ minutes remaining; the Senator from Tennessee has 26 minutes remaining.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS. I thank my friend from Oklahoma.

Mr. President, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of this sense-of-the-Senate amendment calling for action on the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution this Congress.

I want to commend Senators NICKLES and BOND for taking the lead on this important issue.

The Senate Judiciary Committee reported a joint resolution proposing a balanced budget amendment on July 9, 1991. The reported version does not include tax limitation—a necessary component on my mind—but that is an issue to be debated when we consider the joint resolution.

Today we have the opportunity to go on record in support of having that debate this Congress, and I hope we will actually pass a balanced budget amendment this Congress. With a balanced budget amendment in place, Congress will be forced to make the budget process work, or to come up with a process that does work.

It is crucial that we get our yearly budget operations into balance as soon as possible so that we can start to tackle the deficit and the debt.

Under this budget resolution, the fiscal year 1993 deficit will be $328 billion. The gross Federal debt is projected to exceed $4 trillion this year and we are paying $214 billion to serve that debt. These are some big numbers, and they are indicative of the magnitude of our budget problems.

Senate adoption of this resolution will be the first step toward a real commitment to deal with this issue. I hope it passes this body unanimously.

Mr. President, what is wrong with a balanced budget? I guess I cut my teeth in county government, and it was there that I learned firsthand that government closest to the people is the best government of all.

Not only did we have to balance a budget at the county level, but we also had to maintain reserves and the integrity of those reserves, because taxes only came in twice a year and you had expenditures to make. So we maintained reserves, but we also maintained those reserves for some of the hard times.

In Montana, our property values went down in the 1980's. We had an initiative out there that we could not levy more taxes to operate county government. The impact of Federal mandates and this type of thing put our budget under quite a lot of constraint.

So I say this to the Members of the Senate: I think it sends a message not only to this body but through this Government that yes, we have to operate with a balanced budget; and yes, it would not hurt us to maintain some reserves for tough times.

I appreciate the work that the Senator from Oklahoma has done on this, and my colleagues who have worked on this balanced budget amendment, because I am almost like the fellow who recommends oatmeal: It is the right thing to do.

I think this country is expecting us to work within our means of balancing this budget and letting this country grow again economically, because there are two kinds of freedoms, Mr. President. There are political freedoms, and there are also economic freedoms. One impacts the other severely.

I thank the Senator from Oklahoma. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Illinois 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has 3 minutes. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I join in supporting this sense-of-the-Senate resolution, though I add to my colleagues that I have discussed this.

At one point, I was about to offer the constitutional amendment. In the Judiciary Committee, it came out 11 to 3. I was about to offer it on the bill. And the leader of the Senate, our distinguished leader, Senator MITCHELL, said that he was going to make a good-faith effort to have this up by June 1. So that I think between this sense-of-the-Senate resolution and the commitment of my colleague, who said he would make a good-faith effort to bring it to the floor, we are going to get a vote.

I would add one other thing. If we do not splinter off into too many different directions, we do have, I believe, for the first time in the history of the Senate, the votes to pass this. I have been going around contacting people who have not been certain on this, explaining why this is important. Let me just underline why this is important.

When we list interest now, one of the things is that even the interest we list is a little bit phony because it is not interest. The real interest is gross interest. Net interest, we subtract the interest earned by the Social Security trust funds and the other trust funds before we list interest. The real interest is gross interest.

In fiscal year 1980, we spent $4 billion on interest. This coming fiscal year, the OMB estimate is that we will spend $316 billion on interest.

This next fiscal year, for the first time in the Nation's history, the No. 1 expenditure of the Federal Government will be interest, and that is eroding the industrial base of this country. I asked CBO and CRS what the budget deficit's impact is on the trade deficit. They came back with studies showing that 37 to 55 percent of the trade deficit is caused by the budget deficit.

That means that the budget deficit is causing the loss of millions of jobs in this country.

Let me add also, I understand that someone has said that part of a balanced budget amendment would be an entitlement cap. Frankly, the balanced budget amendment does not deal directly with that. There is no question that, as we look to balancing the budget, we will have to look at entitlements. I do not favor an entitlement cap without looking at this whole question very, very carefully.

But there is no question we are going to have to take a stand on this. We will have to vote on this. We ought to do it before too long.

I am grateful to the majority leader of the U.S. Senate, who I have to say in fairness is one of the opponents of this balanced budget amendment. But he has said he would make a good-faith effort to bring this up by June 1, to schedule it, and I assume we are going to have it scheduled by June 1.

This sense-of-the-Senate resolution, simply underscores the need to move ahead. So I will vote for this.

And I thank the chief sponsor, Senator NICKLES. I thank the Presiding Officer, who is about to tell me my time is up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARKIN). The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I wish to thank my friend and colleague, Senator SIMON, for his leadership on this issue, for cosponsoring this resolution, and also for the tireless work he has done in the Judiciary Committee.

I am well aware of the fact that it is his resolution that passed the Judiciary Committee by an 11-to-3 vote, I believe, almost a year ago.

So I am really hopeful that we will be able to vote on that resolution or a substitute resolution to address this in the very near future.

Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 6 minutes, 35 seconds.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee has 25 minutes, 50 seconds.

Mr. SASSER addressed the Chair.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield so I may ask a question of the main sponsor?

Mr. SASSER. I am pleased to yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. I would like to address this to the Senator from Oklahoma, who, I take it, is the principal sponsor of the amendment.

I take it his amendment is not that we should vote on this issue, but vote and adopt it. Is that correct?

Mr. NICKLES. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SARBANES. How is it one does that?

Mr. NICKLES. It is a sense-of-the-Senate resolution that the Senate will adopt a constitutional amendment to balance the budget by no later than June 5.

Mr. SARBANES. I can understand a resolution that says that it is the sense of the Senate that we ought to vote on this issue before June 5. But how does one predetermine the outcome of a vote on the issue, which is what the Senator is trying to schedule for some time between now and June 5?

Mr. NICKLES. I wanted this vote to mean something, not just have a vote on a balanced budget amendment. I want us to adopt the balanced budget amendment.

Mr. SARBANES. I understand that. That is not what the amendment does. The amendment does not adopt it. The amendment talks about some vote in the future, does it not? The Senator is not talking about a vote here now that adopts it, is he?

Mr. NICKLES. My amendment is very plain. It says, "The Senate should adopt a joint resolution proposing a balanced budget amendment to the U.S. Constitution." "Should" adopt. If a person is against adopting a balanced budget amendment, they should vote no; if they are in favor of a President doing a balanced budget amendment, there are several different proposals.

Mr. SARBANES. Which balanced budget amendment is the Senator talking about?

Mr. NICKLES. Again, I think I explained this. There are several different proposals. Senator SIMON has one on the calendar. I might mention Senator KASTEN has another one. Senator KASTEN's is very close but a little bit different than the balanced budget amendment that we passed in 1982. We voted on a balanced budget amendment that was slightly different than that in 1986.

Frankly, I would vote for probably any of the three. I think all of them would be a giant step in the right direction. So I did not try to define which one. I just said I think we should adopt a balanced budget amendment.

I am very frustrated with our inability to do more toward getting our Federal debt under control, toward balancing the budget. So I wanted to put some pressure on us to really take this issue up on the floor of the Senate in the next couple of months, and, hopefully, we will adopt it.

Mr. SARBANES. I tried to distinguish between the question of taking the issue up and having predetermined the outcome. I do not know what it is that the Senator wants to adopt. I take it he does not know himself at this point. There are a number of different proposals out there that are floating around. Does the Senator have a preference amongst the proposals?

Mr. NICKLES. I tell my colleagues and friend, I do. I think Senator KASTEN has an outstanding balanced budget amendment.

Mr. SARBANES. That is not what this calls for.

Mr. NICKLES. That is right. If the Senator is in favor of Senator KASTEN's approach, Senator SIMON's approach, or Senator THURMOND's approach—there may be additional approaches—if the Senator favors any one of those, I think he would want to favor this.

Mr. SARBANES. Suppose I favor one and not another?

Mr. NICKLES. If the Senator would like to see one become law, a constitutional amendment adopted, then he should vote in favor of this resolution.

Mr. SARBANES. That does not follow the way this is worded because what this does, the Senator's position, I understand, his position is he is for any of them, whatever. He is for any one of them no matter what it is. He is not exercising the substantive judgment amongst the proposals, as I hear him. Is that correct?

Mr. NICKLES. If the Senator will yield, we have had a joint resolution for a balanced budget constitutional amendment on the calendar for almost a year. We have not voted on it yet.

We have not voted on one since 1986. Some of us have been trying to get a vote on it every year. So it is about high time we vote again, and maybe we will be instructing people that now is the time. Let us get serious. This is not a gain. This is not a vote for election purposes. This is a time to say let us get serious.

I mentioned in my opening statement—the Senator probably did not hear it—that, in 1990, the House voted on one, and they came within a few votes of passing it.

So I would like very much for the Senate to pass one. We have not had a vote in the Senate in the last 6 to 7 years. So it is high time that we vote again.

I am trying to put some pressure on this body to bring this issue to the forefront and vote on it so we can actually have a balanced budget amendment. That amendment may say it will not be balanced in the year 1997, or 3 years after it is ratified by three-fourths of the States, or whatever. But at least we will have it on the table, we will have it on our agenda, and maybe we can reverse this disastrous trend of $350 billion deficits.

Mr. SARBANES. I simply say to my colleague he says, "Let us get serious." I think it is a serious issue, but I do not think he is being serious about it if he does not focus on a particular substantive proposal. This is, in effect, a sense of the Senate for anything, so to speak, upon which you can put the label "balanced budget amendment," whether in fact it is a good one or a bad one.

Mr. NICKLES addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. SARBANES. Who has the floor? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor. The Senator from Maryland yields the floor. Who yields time? The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, while my colleague, the Senator from Maryland, is on the floor, he made several statements that showed when defense spending was going up, deficit spending was going up; therefore, defense spending was responsible for the deficit.

Mr. President, I want to just throw out some facts; nothing but facts. In 1987, we spent a little over $1 trillion. We spent $1.4 trillion. Defense spending was $283 billion. The budget resolution that we have today, 1993, 6 years later: Defense spending is $291 billion in outlays. I might mention that the total outlays are $1.51 billion.

So we have a 50-percent increase in outlays of $506 billion, and defense spending has gone up by $8 billion.

So over the last 5 years defense spending is increasing by $8 billion.

Total Federal spending has increased by almost $500 billion. Defense spending in the last 6 years is not responsible for our deficit. I mention that, in the last 6 years, the deficit has increased from $150 to $336 billion under this resolution. So defense spending has hardly increased any the last 6 years, but total defense spending increased by 50 percent. That is a fact.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SASSER. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I welcome these comments by the Senator from Oklahoma, because I think we ought to discuss this issue and try to identify the problem. What happened is that the large runup in defense costs in the 1980's, particularly in the first 5 or 6 years, without any revenues to pay for it, ran the deficit up, and added to the debt; which has grown from $1 to $4 trillion over the 1980's. Interest charge on the debt has become a larger and larger component of the Federal budget, and that is a debt that has resulted, in large part, from this runup in defense costs that was not paid for.

That is the fact that has to be recognized. The entitlements grew, but most of them were being paid for by the revenue source. That is clearly the case with the Social Security System. Defense costs went up but they were not being paid for. Therefore, the deficit resulted; the debt grew, and now the interest charge on the debt has become a major component of the budget. And interest, therefore, is a major contributor to the deficit we confront each year. Does the Senator disagree with that analysis?

Mr. NICKLES. Yes; I do. Mr. SARBANES. What is the Senator's view about it?

Mr. NICKLES. The essence of the Senator's statement was that—I am assuming I am on the time of the Senator from Maryland or of the Senator from Tennessee—the essence was, well, defense spending increased in the early 1980's. I guess the Senator would agree that defense spending has been relatively flat since 1987. But I will just say—and the Senator might notice I have another chart—the defense spending, as a share of Federal outlays, peaked at 27 percent in 1987, and in 1993 will be down to 18 percent, and in 1997 it is going to be down to 16 percent.

Mr. SARBANES. What does the Senator's chart show about the interest on the debt as a component of the budget and its contribution to the deficit?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair reminds the Senator from Maryland that he has used up his 3 minutes of allotted time.

Mr. SARBANES. If the Senator will yield 30 seconds, I will yield then.

Mr. SASSER. I yield 30 more seconds to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. What the Senator's chart would show is that the growth in the debt, which resulted from defense spending in the first part of the 1980's resulted in a growth in interest charges on the debt, which is now a big component of the budget and a major contributor to the deficit.

You have to understand where the deficit came from in order to know how to bring it down.

One assertion is that it came from the entitlements. What I have contended today is that a substantial part of the entitlements are funded with a committed revenue source, and they have more than paid their way. In fact, they have run a surplus, so they have not contributed to the deficit. Domestic discretionary spending was on a downward trend; defense spending went up.

Another contributor besides defense spending was a slack economy. Every time you go into a recession, the deficit increases automatically and, therefore, you encounter a deficit problem.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield 1 minute to the Senator from New Mexico for a question that I have for the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. NICKLES. Yes; I yield 1 minute to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I wonder if the Senator from Maryland has run a 10-year-from-now number out and put defense down as low as he would like it, wherever he wants to put it, and see if we come close to a balanced budget, without doing something about the entitlements or dramatically raising revenues. Can we cut the deficit enough to get the deficit under control?

Mr. SARBANES. Out into the future?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. SARBANES. It depends on whether we can get the economy out of a recession.

Mr. DOMENICI. Assume that we do.

Mr. SARBANES. The recession is contributing $100 billion to the deficit.

Mr. DOMENICI. We are out of time, but we are going to grow at 3 percent a year, on average—2½ percent growth for the next 5 years, and 2 percent for the next 5 after that. Does the Senator know whether we could have a balanced budget out of defense alone, leaving entitlements alone like they are?

Mr. SARBANES. It depends on how you pay for entitlements, and it depends whether you have had a revenue source to go with them.

Mr. DOMENICI. Leave them like they are, is what I am saying. Current policy. What would the Senator assume?

Mr. SARBANES. I would have to take them one at a time and analyze the entitlements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, how much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2 minutes 45 seconds remaining.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me suggest that the deficits will be over $450 billion.

Mr. SARBANES. On what assumption?

Mr. DOMENICI. What I just gave the Senator. About 2½ percent growth; get defense as low as you want, and see where you are in terms of the deficit.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. SARBANES. What did the Senator do with the savings and loans?

Mr. DOMENICI. It is over within 10 years.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Maryland an additional minute, if he requires it.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I think that this is a helpful exchange, because it underscores the importance of analyzing and figuring out exactly what we are doing.

My understanding of the current deficit—and if the ranking member of the budget committee disagrees, I would like to hear it—is that one component is the recession, contributing $100 billion, and another component is the payment on the S&L's and the banks, another $100 billion, and that leaves us with approximately $190 billion.

Mr. DOMENICI. I assume.

Mr. SARBANES. Is that correct?

Mr. DOMENICI. I think that is the arithmetic, if that is the case. I was not doing the arithmetic; maybe the Senator was.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I point out to the body that one of the problems is that we have a big payment of interest on the debt as a big item in the Federal budget and that essentially resulted from heavy defense spending in the 1980's without taxes to pay for it.

And as a consequence we ran these large deficits. We built up the debt. We now have to service that debt and those interest charges have become a big item in the budget and a big contributor to the deficit. Once you recognize that then you start looking at how to close this deficit problem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

If no one yields time, time will be deducted equally.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my 2 minutes remain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SASSER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask the distinguished chairman. I saw conflicting signals. I thought he was saying he was going to accommodate for a yea-and-nay vote. Then I did not see his hand go up.

Is the Senator literally planning not to grant the Senator from Oklahoma a vote?

Mr. SASSER. No; the Senator from Oklahoma is certainly entitled to a vote. I would certainly be pleased to see him get that.

We have a Senator on his way here who wishes to speak, and that is our problem.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I would like to reserve at least 2 minutes of my time.

Mr. SASSER. We will not agree to that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no one yields time, time will be deducted equally from both sides.

The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I will yield the Senator 2 minutes off the bill.

I do not know about the bill. Maybe they want to amend that and do not want to have the yeas and nays before the Senator amends it. Maybe the Senator should send an amendment up there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I am going to submit a chart. It has facts. Does not have all the rhetoric behind it but it has facts.

The facts are that defense spending for the last 5 or 6 years has been relatively flat: In 1987, $283 billion; in 1993, $291 billion. Defense spending has not gone up in the 7 years. It is relatively flat. But total Federal spending has increased by 50 percent and the deficits during those years have ballooned from $150 billion to, in 1992, $368 billion, and projected in 1993, $336 billion.

Those deficits did not increase because of the defense spending. They increased because of other things.

I heard my colleagues say domestic discretion has not increased. It was increasing from $137 to $225 billion.

I will mention all the other things. Entitlements have increased. Social Security has increased from $205 billion to $301 billion, Medicaid from $27 billion to $80 billion. And that is not just helping people. That is a lot of States dumping on the Federal Government their liability. Medicare increased from $73 billion to $143 billion, almost doubled in those 6 years.

Unemployment compensation—that is interesting—goes from $14 billion to $39 billion in 1992, and an estimated $26 billion in 1993. Other entitlement programs increased from $149 billion to $202 billion.

So we have a dramatic increase in outlays under the so-called mandatory and entitlement programs.

Mr. President, we need a balanced-budget amendment because we have not shown the courage or conviction to do so on our own.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time. And, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NICKLES. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator from Oklahoma that Senator DOMENICI yielded him 2 minutes off the bill, so there are 2 minutes and 11 seconds remaining to the Senator from Oklahoma. The Senator from Tennessee has 13 minutes and 28 seconds.

Who yields time?

Mr. KASTEN. Mr. President, I support a balanced budget/tax limitation amendment to the U.S. Constitution. I am pleased that the Senate is likely to consider and vote on proposed balanced budget amendments later this spring.

This year the budget deficit will approach $400 billion and the national debt will approach $4 trillion. This is outrageous. The American people have had enough. They are sick and tired of high taxes, out of control congressional spending and massive budget deficits and debt that will be passed on to their children. Tinkering with the Budget Act has proven to be a failure in restraining Congress' appetite to spend taxpayers' dollars. The time for action on fundamental congressional budget reform is now.

Last July, I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 182, a balanced budget/tax limitation amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Presently, Senators BROWN, LOTT, COATS, SYMMS, BURNS, SMITH, HELMS, D'AMATO, SPECTER, MACK, GARN, MURKOWSKI, MCCAIN, PRESSLER, ROTH, and SEYMOUR are cosponsoring this constitutional amendment. The amendment requires a three-fifths supermajority vote of both the House and Senate in order to deficit spend. However, to prevent Congress from balancing the budget on the backs of taxpayers, it also requires a three-fifths vote of both Houses of Congress in order to increase taxes above the rate of economic growth.

A strong provision is needed to limit tax increases, otherwise a balanced budget amendment could give Congress an excuse to continually raise taxes rather than reduce the growth rate of Government spending. History shows that each $1 in higher taxes generates $1.59 in congressional spending. Today, the Federal Government will spend nearly 25 percent of the Nation's annual wealth, the highest level since the Second World War. Higher levels of Government taxes and spending as a percentage of GNP would lead to an unbalanced economy with higher unemployment, lower productivity, and reduced private sector activity.

The balanced budget/tax limitation amendment has the support of a broad-based coalition of small business, farm, and taxpayer organizations including Citizens for a Sound Economy, National Tax Limitation Committee, U.S. Chamber of Commerce, U.S. Business and Industrial Council, American Legislative Exchange Council, National Federation of Independent Business, American Farm Bureau Federation, National Cattleman's Association, Council for Citizens Against Government Waste, and Americans for a Balanced Budget. I urge the Senate to support a balanced budget amendment with a strong tax limitation provision when the Senate considers the issue later in the spring.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Nickles amendment and am a cosponsor of Senate joint Resolution 18, which will amend the Constitution to require a balanced Federal budget.

It has been over 20 years since the Federal Government ran a surplus. Over the past decade, the national debt has grown to an unprecedented level—$4 trillion. This is four times the size of the debt at the start of the Reagan administration. Nevertheless the Bush administration continues the tradition of submitting deficit-spending budgets to the Congress, and the Congress lacks the political determination to make the necessary spending reductions to balance the budget.

Mr. President, our burgeoning Federal deficit is the greatest problem facing our Nation today. The interest payments consume dollars that could otherwise go for urgent needs such as infrastructure. It is necessary to force Congress and the President to set priorities and determine what is a critical need and what would be nice to fund. Forty-eight State Governors face constitutional provision limiting deficit spending and make those tough decisions every time they submit a budget to the legislature. For 6 years, as Governor of Nevada, I submitted balanced budgets to the State legislature.

Mr. President, a balanced budget amendment is not a panacea, it will not solve all of our fiscal difficulties. A balanced budget amendment will, however, compel both the President and Congress to evaluate those difficult choices necessary to bring Federal spending under control.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, proclaiming one's opposition to a sense of the Senate resolution calling for adoption of the balanced budget constitutional amendment is a risky pastime for elected officials. The amendment has taken on a symbolic significance that far surpasses any possible economic significance.

To be against a constitutional prohibition on deficit spending is to be perceived as being for big government, for big budgets, and for big deficits. Those are not perceptions around which successful reelection campaigns are designed.

For at least the last 20 years, public opinion polls have consistently indicated that a huge majority of all voters support the idea of a balanced budget amendment. Until recently, a popular support for the general proposition has been overwhelming.

That being the case, it would be logical to assume that politicians, in their eagerness to champion the most popular economic issue of the 1990's, would be falling all over each other in a rush to cut Federal spending. In case anyone hasn't noticed—that hasn't happened. It isn't going to happen, and a constitutional amendment isn't going to change that fact. I make those statements categorically and without qualification. Let me tell you why.

Although public support for a balanced budget is overwhelming, public support for the large cutbacks in specific programs that would be required to balance the budget is almost nonexistent.

Americans oppose significant cutbacks in Social Security and other retirement programs—that's one-fourth of the budget. A majority of Americans oppose major reductions in spending for national defense—that's almost one-fifth of the budget. Americans are against significant reductions in spending for health and Medicare—that's 15 percent of all spending. By majorities of 3 to 1 up to 9 to 1, the public opposes reductions of any size in student aid, farm programs, unemployment benefits, roads, highways, aid to small business, spending on child benefits, and public transportation. Interest payment on the debt, which equal almost one-seventh of the budget, can't be arbitrarily reduced. Together these programs represent approximately 90 percent of all Federal spending.

Those programs that the public believes should be cut—food stamps, foreign aid, and welfare in general—could be completely eliminated with negligible long-term effect on the deficit. The general public perception, however, is that the elimination of unjustified give-away programs, combined with the elimination of waste, fraud, and abuse, would easily balance the budget.

In short, the public has demonstrated an extremely strong and remarkably consistent political preference for two mutually exclusive policy objectives—increased Federal spending for over 90 percent of all Federal programs and a balanced Federal budget. To make the picture complete, it should be noted parenthetically that over the past 10 years a majority of all voters have also believed that their taxes were too high.

The political implications of this fiscal policy dilemma are not difficult to understand. Elected Federal officials are facing growing hostility from an electorate that is demanding more in Government services and more in public benefits at a time when public willingness to pay for those services is decreasing dramatically. Americans want a strong defense, guaranteed security in old age, protection against rising medical costs, drug abuse enforcement, safe skies, clean air, and free public education. They do not want lax enforcement of antitrust laws, uninsured bank failures, deteriorating interstate highways, unsafe pharmaceuticals, or rampant financial fraud and business abuse of the consuming public. Americans also want lower taxes.

The honest solution to this problem of public demands and public perceptions requires a healthy dose of political courage. Elected public representatives have a duty and an obligation to help shape, as well as react to, public opinion. Education goes hand-in-hand with representation. Unfortunately, on the subject of deficits, political courage has taken a back seat to political expediency—the result is the balanced budget constitutional amendment.

The political appeal of the constitutional approach to deficit reduction is obvious. It permits strong public advocacy of a balanced Federal budget without necessitating public advocacy of extremely unpopular steps necessary to accomplish the goal. The balanced budget constitutional amendment is a politician's delight—it's popular, it's safe, and so far it's fooled most of the people most of the time.

If and when the Federal budget is ever again balanced, it won't be because of constitutional prohibitions against deficits. As long as huge majorities of Americans continue to demand security in old age, government-provided medical care, a strong national defense, and the myriad of other services that have proven immensely popular, elected representatives will ensure that those services continue. Circumvention of the balanced budget amendment will not only be possible, it will be routine.

Proponents of the balanced budget amendment would have the American public believe that Congress—given a constitutional mandate—would cut spending by $400 billion in a single year. If defense, Social Security and other pensions, and Medicare are held harmless against reductions in spending, along with net interest payments on the debt which can't be arbitrarily reduced, then Congress would have to eliminate all other Federal spending to balance the budget. Clearly that is not going to happen.

Even with sizable cutbacks in education, highways, drug enforcement, and all other Federal activities, the bulk of a $400 billion deficit reduction would have to come in large part from national defense and old-age pensions. The savings required would necessitate actual dollar reductions in benefit checks to those receiving old-age benefits, elimination of all cost-of-living adjustments, massive cutbacks in military procurement and readiness, and most likely complete elimination of all Federal grants to State and local governments. That, also, is not going to happen.

The priorities of the American public are seldom a mystery to politicians. Those priorities will provide a strong—more likely irresistible—motive to circumvent any constitutional prohibition against deficits. And, circumvention will not be difficult.

The experience of State and local governments having self-imposed legal or constitutional prohibitions against deficits is instructive. Such governments are frequently cited as models, demonstrating the workability of a Federal prohibition on deficit spending. A close examination of State and local budgeting provides a prescription for circumvention.

Virtually every State government has adopted a system of budgeting that separates operating expenses for capital expenditures. While State operating budgets are generally in balance, State and local borrowing for capital expenditures has—over the past 25 years—been increasing at a rate faster than Federal borrowing. State borrowing for capital expenditures is usually accomplished through the issuance of long-term bonds—as is a good portion of Federal borrowing.

This dramatic increase in State and local borrowing has resulted in a series of legislative and statutory caps designed to limit total debt accumulation. State governments facing such limitations on long-term indebtedness have turned to the use of "special authorities," such as turnpike authorities and housing authorities, which are empowered to finance construction and operations through special bond issues. The use of special authorities not only circumvents legal prohibitions against deficit financing, it also results in the exclusion of Government expenditures from public view.

I also believe that with a balanced budget amendment Congress would also be highly likely to revise its system of expenditure accounting. The definition of budget outlays is not as cut-and-dried as is commonly supposed. For instance, the Federal Government receives payments and user-fee receipts from a variety of activities such as airline passenger ticket taxes, leasing of Federal lands, and the sale of Federal property. These receipts are presently treated as negative budget outlays—a practice which serves to reduce the total level of Federal outlays. The expanded use of this accounting practice could greatly reduce the reported level of Federal outlays.

Tax expenditures, Tax Code provisions granting special tax treatment and thereby subsidizing certain activities, could also be expected to proliferate in reaction to limitations on direct subsidies. In addition to circumventing spending limitations, increasing tax expenditures would add further inequity to the Tax Code.

Perhaps the most detrimental of all approaches to evading limitations on Federal spending would be the increased use of Federal regulation to force private industry or State and local governments to further Federal objectives. Possible regulatory approaches to achieving Federal goals could include requirements that employers finance a portion of Medicare payments through employee retirements plans, or that all federally mandated antipollution efforts be accomplished through more stringent, and costly, efforts by private industry.

The temptation to believe that this long list of objections and indictments on the constitutional amendment issue is overblown, or apologetic, may be great, but they must be taken seriously. If the American public was truly ready to sacrifice existing Federal services in exchange for elimination of the deficit, that exchange would have in fact already occurred. If Congress possessed the courage to cut Federal services or raise taxes to a level sufficient to eliminate deficits—public opposition to such actions notwithstanding—that, too, would have already happened.

It hasn't happened. A constitutional prohibition against deficits isn't going to reduce the public demand for services, nor is it going to give Congress the courage to act against the mandate of the electorate. If Congress had the courage to balance the budget, a constitutional amendment wouldn't be needed. In the absence of such courage, an amendment will simply prove an embarrassment to the Nation.

If we are to rationalize our fiscal policy and get our spending house in order, the first step is to cease looking for easy solutions. We must, instead, begin making some hard choices. We must decide if we—as a nation—want our Government to continue providing medical and retirement benefits at current levels with complete protection against inflation. We must decide if we want to continue providing for national defense at currently planned levels. We must decide if we want adequately maintained roads and bridges, if we want flood protection, drug interdiction, banking regulation, and free education. If we decide the answer to those, and similar, questions is "yes," then we must decide if we are willing to pay for those services through increased taxes.

As a nation we have not, as yet, answered these questions. The result is our national annual budget deficit. Our ultimate success depends upon a clear understanding of the problems we face and our ability to find consensus solutions. A constitutional amendment to balance the budget will not assist us in this difficult undertaking—procedural panaceas seldom do.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I commend Senators NICKLE and BOND for offering this very important amendment.

In North Carolina, like all other States, both State and local governments are experiencing tremendous budgetary problems and are being forced to find ways to cut spending. It is a painful process, but eventually they must adopt balanced budgets to comply with constitutional provisions requiring their respective governing bodies to operate within a balanced budget. By doing so, they do not waste billions of dollars in debt service like the Federal Government does every year. Forty-eight States have constitutional requirements for balanced budgets.

Many economic analysts contend that the United States has reached a point in accumulated public debt as to be in actual, if not undeclared, bankruptcy. I agree with them. Federal bankruptcy laws exist to protect businesses and individuals who are too deeply in debt to meet their obligations. No such law exists to protect the U.S. Government from financial collapse. If only we will admit it, our salvation from such ultimate collapse can now come only from new constitutional restrictions that force an end to Congresses reckless record of spending that routinely stretches many billions beyond supporting revenues.

Mr. President, despite the 1990 budget agreement, this year's record breaking deficit by reaching over $4 billion—that's a 4 followed by 9 zeros. The annual per capita interest payment for every man, woman and child in America is expected to rise to almost $1,200 in 1992.

Mr. President, this is a national disgrace—a symbol of profligacy and cowardice, or political ambition run amuck. The activities of Congress, the timidity of Congress, the recklessness of Congress, the inclination to play politics with the public purse—all of this has brought us to a Federal debt, as of close of business on Tuesday, April 7, stood at $3,891,976,495.534.38. I simply cannot understand how anyone can seriously suggest that there is not a crying need for a constitutional limitation on Federal spending. We should have had it long ago.

Mr. President, too often we forget that the Federal Government has no funds except money taken from the American people. The Government either takes the earnings of the consumers of this country, or it takes funds through the far more insidious and destructive route Congress has taken—by deficit financing, by borrowing money, by mortgaging the future of our children and grandchildren.

I certainly do not suggest that the ratification of this constitutional amendment requiring a balanced Federal budget will solve all the economic problems facing our Nation, but it will bring a degree of honesty and discipline that has been long needed in Congress. The discipline will be there, the discipline which the U.S. Constitution will impose on the Congress and the President. This discipline is imperative, cost of not balancing the Federal budget is too high.

All of us can contrive excuses for what we do or what we fail to do. But if we are unwilling at this crucial time to accept a discipline that will be difficult—some will even say impossible—then Congress will be saying there is no remedy. I say there is.

It will be tough, and there will be some screaming. But it is really a matter of doing what we were elected to do. Question: Were we elected to play a shell game, to deceive the American people, to try to buy popularity with the taxpayers' own money, to push our own priorities forth, pretending that it does not matter how much they cost? No indeed we were not.

Since I first set foot in the U.S. Senate, I have been dedicated to reducing Federal spending. Congress has proven beyond any doubt that a constitutional amendment is the only way this body will even maintain a balanced Federal budget once it is attained.

Mr. President, the time has come for Senators to put up or shut up. I doubt there is a Senator who has not traveled his or her State preaching the virtues of balancing the Federal budget. Yet year after year, this body votes to increase spending into the stratosphere, and has resisted all efforts to impose even the most modest restraint on spending. I call upon Senators and Members of the House of Representatives to acknowledge publicly the real danger which our debt-hobbled Nation now confronts. I call upon Senators to forswear political and partisan interests, and support this resolution endorsing a balanced budget constitutional amendment.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am just as distressed about the huge budget deficits that we have been running up year after year as are the sponsors of this amendment. I am just as sickened as I know they are by the prediction of the Congressional Budget Office that deficits of those magnitudes cripple economic growth by reducing national saving and capital formation. And, I am just as saddened as we all are by our failure to heed the advice of the "Book of Proverbs" that a good person "leaveth an inheritance to his children's children." Instead of an inheritance, we are leaving them with a national credit card bill.

Only a few weeks ago, I offered an amendment to strike the middle-income tax cut from the Finance Committee's tax bill and use that money to reduce the budget deficit. I am continuing to work to fashion a bipartisan approach to comprehensive deficit reduction.

However, I do not support the Nickles amendment that expresses the sense-of-the-Senate that we should adopt a constitutional amendment to balance the budget by June 6. I voted for the Byrd amendment that required a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget to include a provision calling for the President to submit a balanced budget. It is only appropriate that if the Congress is required to pass a balanced budget, then the President should be required to submit a balanced budget.

But, I don't believe that the Senate should set a deadline to pass an amendment to the Constitution without knowing the text of that amendment. We recently celebrated the 200th anniversary of the Constitution. It deserves more than being put under a 60-day clock. The Founding Fathers made the amendment process difficult in order to encourage thoughtful consideration. Deadlines such as the one in the Nickles amendment are inconsistent with their intent. For that reason, I will vote against waiving the Budget Act to permit the passage of the Nickles amendment.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time back on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator yields back the remainder of his time.

The Senator from Tennessee has 13 minutes and 28 seconds.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Does the Senator yield time?

Mr. SASSER. I yield back the remainder of my time and the Senator from West Virginia was seeking recognition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All has been yielded back.

The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 1767 TO AMENDMENT NO. 1766

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD] proposes an amendment numbered 1767 to amendment No. 1766.

In the pending amendment, strike all after the word "SEC." and insert the following:

SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT.

(1) It is the sense of the Senate that the Senate should adopt a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to the Federal balanced budget, and requiring the President of the United States to annually submit a balanced budget, and that the adoption of such joint resolution should occur on or before June 5, 1992.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I believe under the law I would control 30 minutes. Am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. There would be 1 hour equally divided.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the chair.

Mr. President, my amendment would require the President to annually submit a balanced budget. We are all aware of the tremendous increase in the annual deficits over the past 12 years, accompanied by the increased national debt and the interest on that debt.

As I stated earlier today, shortly after taking office President Reagan addressed the Congress and he pointed out that the national debt on January 20, 1981, stood at nearly $1 trillion. He said that it would take a stack of $1,000 bills 63 miles high in order to add up to $1 trillion. On April 2, 1992, after 8 years under President Reagan's administration and over 3 years under the Bush administration, the national debt stood at $3,781,000,000,000.

Mr. President, if we want to know how much money that is, it is $3,781 for every minute since Jesus Christ was born. The President is fond of blaming Congress for this massive increase in the national debt, and some of our colleagues enjoy it as well.

It is interesting to note that neither President Reagan nor President Bush has ever submitted to Congress a balanced budget. In fact, the last balanced budget that was submitted to Congress was President Carter's fiscal year 1981 budget. President Carter's January submission of that budget showed a deficit of $15,773,000,000.

There was a sharp negative reaction both in Congress and in the financial markets. This caused President Carter to send forth amendments to his original budget in March 1980, mainly in the form of revenue increases. These amendments not only brought his fiscal year 1981 budget into balance, they also resulted in a $16,489,000,000 surplus.

In President Bush's supplement to the budget to the U.S. Government for fiscal year 1993, one will find that not only did President Bush not propose a balanced budget for fiscal year 1993, he has in fact proposed huge deficits for the next 5 years, as well as a 56.5-percent increase in the national debt by 1997. On the chart here, beside me, we see 2 bars, one representing the bar which President Reagan pointed to when he made his nationally televised address, at which time he pointed at the bar and said if these were $1,000 bills, in a stack 4 inches high, you would have a million dollars. But to illustrate just where we are with respect to the national debt today, he said, if that stack of $1,000 bills were extended into the stratosphere, it would reach 63 miles into the stratosphere. It was $932 billion. Mr. President, that represented the paying off of the Revolutionary War debts, the War of 1812, the Mexican War, 1846-1848, the Civil War, the Spanish American war in 1898, World War I, World War II, the Korean war, the Vietnam war, the panic of 1873, the panic of 1893, and the Great Depression—of which I am a child—in the early thirties. I do not have to read about it. I do not have to have my mom and pop, or my great uncle, or my grandmother or grandfather, or somebody else tell me about it. I was there and wore tennis shoes in the snow. I know the Great Depression.

But, to go ahead with the story, that represented 39 administrations, under 38 Presidents, Grover Cleveland having been elected twice but not consecutively.

So there were 39 administrations, starting with Washington, John Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, John Quincy Adams, Andrew Jackson, Van Buren, William Henry Harrison, Tyler, Polk, Taylor, Fillmore, Pierce, Buchanan, Lincoln, Andrew Johnson, Grant, Hayes, Garfield, Arthur, Cleveland, Benjamin Harrison, Cleveland again McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft, Wilson, Harding, Coolidge, Hoover, Roosevelt, Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Nixon, Ford, and Carter, all of those administrations, all of them, $932 billion, less than $1 trillion, 192 years.

But came Mr. Reagan riding into town, the great balanced-budget man. And he pointed out to the Nation's viewers the monstrous bar that reached 63 miles in the stratosphere and said that it where we are. That is how much debt we owe.

Well, lo and behold, I said after that, "Well, you will never see Mr. Reagan on television again using that chart."

Well, to make a long story short, on April 2 of this year, the debt was $3.781 trillion and that represents a stack of thousand dollar bills that would reach into the stratosphere 239 miles—239 miles into the stratosphere.

So that will indicate to observers the size of our national debt and how it has grown since January 20, 1981, the date on which Mr. Reagan took office.

The President is required to present annual budgets to the Congress, but Presidents have not shown much leadership in making the difficult proposals that would be necessary in order to achieve a balanced budget.

Instead, again this year, the President proposed modest increased revenues totaling $701 million in fiscal year 1993, $2.702 billion for fiscal year 1994, $414 million for fiscal year 1995, $283 million for fiscal year 1996 and minus $1.936 billion for fiscal year 1997.

For entitlement programs, President Reagan proposes total reductions over the fiscal year 1993-1997 period of approximately $34 billion.

There were other changes proposed which would shift certain programs such as Deposit Insurance and Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation to an accrual basis, but those were book-keeping transactions and not real savings.

Now, Mr. President, I have in my hand the Supplement to the Budget of the United States Government for fiscal year 1993, submitted in February 1992. On the chart to my left, we can see that in the President's budget—this is his budget, it is not my budget, this is President Bush's budget. What does he propose?

On page part one-3, the President lays out his budget and we can see that his 1992 budget estimate shows a deficit of $449.1 billion.

It is easy to think in terms of a billion dollars. If we think of the time that has transpired from the birth of Jesus Christ to the present day, which is nearly 2,000 years, it amounts to 1 billion minutes.

So we are talking about $449.1—$449.1 billion for fiscal year 1992. That is the deficit.

Fiscal year 1993, $411.7 billion. Getting a little better, $411.7 billion.

Fiscal year 1994, $286.8 billion. It is coming down a little bit.

Fiscal year 1995, the President proposes in his 5-year budget, a $279.5 billion deficit.

For 1996, the chart shows that the deficit in the administration's proposal is $283.1 billion.

And, in 1997, $303.6 billion.

So we can see that for the next 6 years, including the year 1992, the deficits—you can add that up—about $2.014 trillion, just roughly counting.

Now let us take the next chart.

Now here is the national debt, as proposed in the President's budget proposal.

Mr. CRAIG. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. BYRD. Would the Senator mind waiting until I finish? I would then be happy to yield.

Now here is the national debt. As I said a little earlier today, we anticipate that the national debt will reach $4 trillion by the beginning of the new fiscal year on October 1.

Here is the chart that shows the national debt as laid out in the President's budget supplement over the period 1992-1997. And this we find in the Budget of the United States Government Supplement, February 1992, signed on page 3 by George Bush and written on White House stationery.

Now here is the national debt that we can anticipate: $4,050,300,000,000 in 1992; $4,513,200,000,000 in fiscal year 1993; fiscal year 1994, projected to be $4,856,900,000,000; 1995, projected to be $5,201,500,000,000; 1996 is projected to be $5,549,900,000,000; and fiscal year 1997, $5,917,700,000,000.

Read it and weep.

What does it mean when we have that kind of debt? Well, we have to pay interest on it. And the interest on the national debt, when Mr. Reagan came to Washington on his steed, came in like a white knight, the interest on the national debt at that time was $69 billion; a lot of money. A lot of money.

This year, it is going to be $212 billion; $212 billion this year. That is more than all of the domestic discretionary funding that we will have. It does not buy a single pencil, not a pencil, not an eraser to go on a pencil for our school kids. And we owe a lot of that interest to investors from overseas.

Here is the net interest on the U.S. debt that the administration proposes for the period 1992-1997. That is also here in the President's budget supplement. Here is the interest on the national debt.

In 1992, $198.8 billion; 1993, I said a moment ago $212 billion plus, but it is $213.7 billion; fiscal year 1994, $230.9 billion; fiscal year 1995, $242.2 billion; fiscal year 1996, $253 billion; and fiscal year 1997, $263.5 billion.

As one can easily see, the interest on the national debt alone is going to amount to over a trillion dollars in these next 6 years, including the fiscal year we are now in. Over $1 trillion—nothing but interest on the national debt.

Mr. SASSER. Will the distinguished President pro tempore yield for just one observation?

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator will allow me, I promised to yield to this Senator first, and then I will be happy to yield. Will the Senator mind?

Mr. SASSER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BYRD. Let me finish my statement, briefly.

So what we have, Mr. President, is a need for leadership from the White House. Congress cannot provide leadership. We have 535 Members of Congress. We cannot provide it. We all have a bully pulpit, but it is not like the bully pulpit in the Oval Office, in the East Room, in the White House. I have been down there. I have seen that pulpit. That is a bully pulpit.

So what we need is leadership from the Oval Office in the White House. Because unless we have that leadership, I do not think we are going to come up with the tough decisions, and make them stick, that are needed. We need the President to make the tough decisions and face up to the fact that these deficits and the national debt that are bankrupting this country will never be brought under control without leadership from the White House.

I listen to these candidates, these candidates out on the hustings. My, all the programs that they are promulgating. They are going to do this and they are going to do that; they are going to do this and going to do that. I wonder where is all this money coming from?

The President is having a lot of fun bashing the Congress. That is his program, bashing the Congress. He needs to provide leadership here with this terrible debt and the interest thereon. If he will provide that leadership, I think a lot of people would be surprised at the followership that he could get here. There would be some of us, I am sure, who would follow him if he would provide the leadership and—get this—consult with us, bring us in on the takeoff as well as on the crash landing, and we might be able to work out something to deal with these budget deficits.

So my amendment is a simple amendment. It would simply require that kind of leadership. It would require the President to send up a balanced budget. I urge the Senate to adopt my amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table showing 5-year defense and domestic outlay totals be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

5-YEAR DEFENSE AND DOMESTIC OUTLAY TOTALS
(In billions of current dollars)

Fiscal years	Defense	Domestic	Difference	Percent defense higher than domestic
1973-77	455	367	88	24
1978-82	700	613	87	14
1983-87	1,247	706	541	77
1988-92	1,478	922	556	60
1993-97	1,437	1,160	277	24

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the distinguished Senator who first asked me to yield.

Mr. CRAIG. I thank the Chairman for yielding. Let me join, I am sure, with others, in support of the Senator's amendment to the resolution of our colleague from Oklahoma.

I spent 10 years over in the other body. At least 8 of those 10 years, I worked with my colleague from Texas, CHARLIE STENHOLM, in building a bipartisan coalition to propose a resolution of the kind that the Senator is talking about. It was without question, in our minds, that you had to include the executive branch of government in this process.

I understand what our Constitution says now. It does not include the executive branch in the budgeting process. I think it was not until the mid-1970's—and I will have to bow to my colleague on his knowledge of history here—that we did finally say that the executive branch of government would submit a budget and become a part of the process.

Mr. BYRD. It was long before that, Senator.

Mr. CRAIG. Was it not by statute?

Mr. BYRD. It was long before that.

Mr. CRAIG. Executives were submitting budgets. We will not debate the requirement by law.

One of the things that I think is significant to recognize with the Senator's substitute is that we are talking about debating a resolution that would significantly change the Constitution. And I think it ought to change. And I think it ought to incorporate the executive branch of government, which it now does not, because it is true that it is not just the Congress of the United States that exerts fiscal responsibility and budgetary leadership. It clearly is the executive branch that has to work with us in a cooperative manner.

The points the Senator makes are valid. The charts he demonstrates are vivid, without doubt. And those are charts that are proposed by an executive branch, based on what the legislative branch does, and in cooperation.

So I commend the Senator on his substitute. I think it is appropriate we bring the executive branch into it. The amendment in the other body today, that has over two-thirds cosponsorship, speaks to the responsibility of the executive branch of government.

And if we were to pass a similar document here and the House could concur, I think we could send to the American people a major reform in this Constitution that is so important to us, that would bring these bodies together on a most important issue.

I commend the chairman, the President pro tempore of the Senate, for his leadership in this area.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished friend, Senator CRAIG, for his observations, and for his comments. I have been very impressed with this Senator. We have stood together on several proposals and amendments since he has come to the Senate. I know that he will make a fine contribution as we go forward in the months and years to come.

I believe the Senator from Tennessee asked me to yield next, and then I will be happy to yield to my colleague.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the distinguished Senator from West Virginia.

The Senator from West Virginia referred to the deficit when the Reagan administration came in office in 1981. I have some figures here that my friend from West Virginia might find interesting. And I am not sure he was aware of this, although his knowledge of the budget and fiscal policy is so very substantial and he probably does know.

Mr. BYRD. I would like to have them. I think the Senator from Tennessee is the preeminent authority on the budget here.

Mr. SASSER. I will say to my friend from West Virginia that these figures were compiled in 1989 by the Office of Management and Budget of then President Ronald Reagan. According to these figures, the so-called Economic Recovery Act of 1991, which President Reagan, as you know, campaigned vigorously on and was one of his first polls in the Congress. We knew it as the Kemp-Roth tax cut.

The Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, according to President Reagan's own Office of Management and Budget, between 1982 and 1989, deprived the Federal Treasury of $1.441 trillion in revenues; $1.441 trillion in revenues were lost through this one legislative act.

According to President Reagan's own Office of Management and Budget, had that tax cut, the Kemp-Roth tax cut not been enacted into law as it was at President Reagan's insistence, but if it had not been enacted into law, the budget surplus in 1989 would have amounted to about only $220 billion and we would have begun running a balanced budget in 1987, culminating in a surplus of $120 billion in 1989.

I thought my friend from West Virginia, in reviewing the history of the 1980's, would be interested in that particular item. Of course, there has been a lot of controversy this afternoon about charts and who produces them, et cetera. But these figures that I have just shared with my friend from West Virginia were compiled, as I say, by the Office of Management and Budget under the Reagan administration.

Mr. BYRD. Now what period did those figures cover?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will just remind the Senator he has 2 minutes left.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair for his courtesy.

Mr. SASSER. Perhaps I can yield some time off the resolution and yield myself such time as I may consume off the resolution.

But these figures began in fiscal year 1982 and they conclude in fiscal year 1989.

Mr. BYRD. If they were carried on up to the present time, as they should be, because we are talking about deficits that begin on the chart in 1992, they would be over $2 trillion, and add to that the massive military spending from 1981 through 1991 of $2.799 trillion, about $2.8 trillion. And I voted for most of it—the MX mobile missile, SDI. I am not sure I will vote for the SDI this year, but I voted for most of them. But when you look at the massive buildup plus the 1981 tax cut for which I also voted—and I have been sorry for it ever since, but I voted for it—then you can see what is really contributing to the deficit. And on top of that now, we have the massive savings and loan bailout and, in addition to that, a recession. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SASSER. I thank the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES].

Mr. NICKLES. I just want to comment on the Senator's amendment. I have no objection to his amendment. I am happy on this side to accept your amendment. I do not know what the procedure is, if the Senator wants to vote on it, accept it and then vote on the underlying amendment. I will be happy to work with my colleague, but I think he has offered a good addition to the underlying amendment.

Mr. BYRD. I thank my friend, and he is my friend. He is the ranking member on the Appropriations Subcommittee on the Interior. He works with me there. He is a fine Senator, and I get wonderful cooperation out of him.

Mr. NICKLES. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BYRD. For me, we can have a rollcall vote or have a voice vote. May I ask the distinguished chairman of the committee, Mr. SASSER, what his thoughts are? Should we have a rollcall vote on this or should we have a voice vote? The Senator from Oklahoma is willing to accept it.

Mr. SASSER. I say to my friend from West Virginia, and the Senator from Oklahoma, there is going to be a roll-call vote, as I understand it, on his amendment. So I suggest we might as well have a rollcall vote on the Byrd amendment.

Mr. BYRD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GLENN. I wonder if the distinguished floor manager of the bill will yield me some time before we go to a vote on it.

Mr. SASSER. If I can yield the Senator just a couple of minutes, there is not enough time on our side. I might want to discuss this in a moment.

Mr. GLENN. I might want to make a longer speech than that. I waited all day. We had a separate amendment which was going to be put in. I will just put the statement in the RECORD. It is in support of this proposal and some others that I had, a proposal that I was going to put in to accomplish basically the same thing.

Mr. SASSER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLENN. I will bring it up later in the year.

Mr. SASSER. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I think we are ready to return to the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no opposition, then time of the opposition is yielded back?

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, how much time do I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has 30 minutes.

Mr. NICKLES. If the Senator from Tennessee will yield, what is his intention, a vote on the Byrd second-degree amendment to my underlying amendment?

Mr. SASSER. It is our intention to vote on the Byrd second-degree amendment and then I assume we would go directly to a vote on the underlying amendment.

Mr. NICKLES. I might mention to the chairman of the committee, I do not think that will be necessary. I am willing to vote on the Byrd amendment, assuming that it is agreed to and then I will ask that the vote on my underlying amendment be vitiated because I think his amendment complements the underlying amendment.

Mr. President, I have no objection to the Byrd second-degree amendment to my amendment. Let me read it for my colleagues so they will know what in essence it says:

It is the sense of the Senate that the Senate should adopt a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to a Federal balanced budget and requiring the President of the United States to annually submit a balanced budget and that the adoption of such joint resolution should occur on or before June 5, 1992.

Mr. President, I think that says it all. I hope my colleagues will adopt it, and I hope that we will seriously engage in trying to make a constitutional amendment pass the Senate and the House and be ratified by three-fourths of the States. I personally think we desperately, desperately need to do it.

Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 1767 offered by the Senator from West Virginia to amendment No. 1766. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. FORD. I announced that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] are necessarily absent. I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 84, nays 11, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 71 Leg.]

NOT VOTING—5

Dixon	Jeffords	Wirth
Gramm	Wallop

So the amendment (No. 1767) was agreed to.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SASSER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). The Senator from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I raise a point of order that the pending Nickles amendment violates section 305(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904 of the Budget Act, I move to waive the section 305(b) point of order pertaining to germaneness against the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the act there is now time for 1 hour for debate, under the motion offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, this amendment has been fairly extensively debated, and I would be willing to yield back my time or enter into a time limitation if that is agreeable with the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I had already stated I really do not see the need for another vote. I said I would vitiate the yeas and nays.

The Senator from Tennessee, I guess, had a request or someone would make a point of order that it is in violation of the Budget Act and not germane.

I think calling for a balanced budget amendment is germane, and I would hope that my colleagues would agree. I accepted and the Senate has voted overwhelmingly for the Byrd modification to my amendment. I think that is a good modification. We voted overwhelmingly. I do not know why we are going to have another vote. I am happy to do so.

I do move to waive section 305 of the Budget Act and if the Senator requests, I guess, we will ask for the yeas and nays. If he wants to do it on voice vote, I would be happy to do it on voice vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inform the Senator that it requires a 60-vote prevailing majority in order to accomplish that.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, let me inquire once again of my friend: Is he willing to yield back all time on this amendment or does he want to debate it?

Mr. NICKLES. I am happy to yield back. We already had the debate and we passed the Nickles-Byrd amendment and I hope we will pass it again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back all time and move to an immediate vote.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, we had, I believe, 84 votes before. That is more than the 60-vote requirement.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am not going to yield back the time if we are going to get into a debate. The Senator from Oklahoma has been arguing and debating the merits of this issue. If he wants to debate the merits of the issue, I will debate it with him. If he wants to yield back the time and let our colleagues vote and get on with their business, I am willing to do that. I leave the option with the Senator from Oklahoma.

Does the Senator from Oklahoma wish to yield back all of his time?

Mr. NICKLES. My good friend from Tennessee took the words out of my mouth. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on the motion to waive the Budget Act.

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. FORD. I announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 63, nays 32, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 72 Leg.]

YEAS—63

Biden	Exon	Murkowski
Bond	Ford	Nickles

NOT VOTING—5

Dixon	Jeffords	Wirth
Gramm	Wallop

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this question the yeas are 63, the nays are 32. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to and the point of order is rendered moot.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SASSER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to amendment No. 1766 offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES] as amended, by the adoption of amendment No. 1767. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to vitiate the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is withdrawn. The Senator from Oklahoma has requested that the yeas and nays be vitiated. Hearing no objection, the request is agreed to.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as amended.

The amendment (No. 1766), as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I want to express my appreciation to the distinguished Senator from New York for withdrawing his objection and that will allow us to move forward and expedite business.

Mr. President, under a previous unanimous-consent agreement, the next amendment to be taken up, I believe, will be the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. Under the previous order, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN] is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 1768

(Purpose: To reduce amounts allocated to defense and, if legislation is enacted to eliminate the separate budget categories, to increase spending on urgent domestic needs.)

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WELLSTONE). The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN], for himself, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. WELLSTONE, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. SIMON, and Mr. CRANSTON, proposes an amendment numbered 1768.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 3, line 16, decrease the amount by $8,100,000,000.

On page 3, line 17, decrease the amount by $8,500,000,000.

Mr. BYRD. Will the distinguished Senator from Iowa yield to me for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HARKIN. Yes, I will yield.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 1 minute as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. BYRD pertaining to the introduction of S. 2570 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, this amendment is offered on behalf of Senator LAUTENBERG, Senator WELLSTONE, Senator SIMON, Senator ADAMS, Senator DASCHLE, and Senator CRANSTON.

The purpose of this amendment is to put our spending priorities in line with the new realities of the post-cold-war world. There are two parts to this amendment.

First, this amendment would reduce the Budget Committee's defense number by $6 billion to $275 billion for fiscal year 1993. My amendment would reduce defense spending by $1.6 billion less than Senator EXON's amendment which we considered earlier today.

Second, this amendment provides that if the budget firewalls are eliminated, the $6 billion defense savings would be invested in programs for children, public infrastructure, and economic development in our cities and rural areas.

Specifically, my amendment would transfer $3 billion to various children's programs, including Chapter 1, Head Start, Impact Aid, immunizations, Maternal and Child Health and Child Care Block Program, and the WIC [the Women, Infants and Children Program]. Another $2.25 billion will be invested in transportation and construction projects for Federal highways, mass transit airports and $750 million will go to the community development block grant and rural development projects.

Last, my amendment would also reduce the deficit by $1.6 billion in 1993 if the firewalls go down. If they do not come down, the $6 billion defense savings will all go toward deficit reduction.

Over the past 2 months, Member after distinguished Member have taken to the floor to ask one simple question: Why is America falling behind the rest of the world? Why was United States productivity growth from 1973 to 1985 worse than six of our economic rivals, including Japan, West Germany, France, Canada, and Italy?

Why, according to the Organization of Economic Cooperative Development, do we rank 17th out of 18 industrial countries in gross capital infrastructure investment? Why do we rank 19th behind Cuba, Libya, and Lebanon in the number of school age children to teach? Why do we rank 19th in mortality rates of infants and children under 5; 17th in the percentage of children immunized against polio; 29th in the percentage of low birth weight babies?

Mr. President, here is a simple chart that shows where we are ranked in the world, how we compare to other countries. In gross national product, we are No. 1. We are the richest country in the world. But in infant mortality, we are 19; childhood deaths under age 5, we are 19; low birth weight babies, 29; polio immunization, 17; in number of school age children to teacher, 19. This raises the question: If we are so rich, how come we are so poor? The answer lies in the fact that we are not investing our money and our wealth in the right places.

Because, Mr. President, while we invested in our military, our economic competitors invested in long-term economic growth. While we created missiles that could hit a postage stamp from 1,000 miles away, Japan was developing the VCR, which we invented, and was pushing the United States out of the worldwide market. While we built an army that beat the world's fourth largest army in 43 days, using one-third of our ground forces and 15 percent of our total forces, our competitors were making their infrastructure more efficient, their people healthier, and their work forces smarter.

For the past 10 years, we disinvested in programs the world spent the last 10 years investing in, and today we are seeing the results. Chairman BYRD compared our nondefense public investment and productivity increase versus the productivity of other major industrialized nations from 1973 to 1985. Over this 12-year period, Japan invested 5.1 percent of GDP in domestic programs and increased its productivity by 3 percent. The Federal Republic of Germany invested 2.5 percent and increased its productivity 2.4 percent. France increased their productivity 2.3 percent; the United Kingdom increased its 1.8 percent; and the United States invested a paltry three-tenths of 1 percent, and we had a growth of six-tenths of 1 percent.

This declining rate of productivity did not happen by accident. It was a direct result of a policy to disinvest in America while investing in the cold war. Now there are those who say we had to, we had to beat the Soviet Union, we were at war, the cold war and it paid off. We won. Yes, we did win and the American people should be proud of that figure.

Mr. President, after we won World War II, did we continue to build a bigger military or did we invest in education, housing, and economic development to win the peace afterward? We invested to win the peace, but today we are making no such plans to win the peace. We will move full steam ahead with cold war spending despite the fact that there is no Soviet Union anymore. We will continue to spend $160 billion a year defending Europe from Russia. And Russia is now asking us for food and other aid.

So, Mr. President, this makes no sense at all. This is nonsense. We know that the battles of the foreseeable future will be economic and not military. If we do not start investing in America today, in our infrastructure, in our work force and businesses, America will enter the 21st century as a second- or third-class economic power. But we do have a window of opportunity today to make the changes we need to make. We know what we have to do to fix it. The American people know we know, and they are angry and frustrated because we are not taking those steps to put America back on the right track.

Last week, 100 of America's leading economists called for increased public investments in infrastructure and education as "an essential key to the future productivity and competitiveness of Americans."

The bipartisan Competitiveness Council, appointed by the President and Congress, agrees, and calls for investments in education, infrastructure and improvements in technology and industrial policy as essential for preparing America for the economic challenge of Germany and Japan. Business Week magazine recently wrote:

We need to inject billions of new investment in the economy * * * and both private and public investment need help.

I further quote:

Higher productivity growth requires two kinds of public investment. The first is physical investment in revamping the Nation's crumbling infrastructure * * * the second is investment in human capital. We know that some kinds of education expenditures, ranging from the Head Start program for preschool children to apprenticeship programs for high school graduates, are effective. We should not be afraid to fund them generously.

This is a quote right out of Business Week.

Again, that was not some sociology journal. That was Business Week magazine.

So why does Congress seem to be the only institution in the United States that does not see what we need to do?

The fact is America is ready to go. We have infrastructure projects on the shelf ready to go. Our children are ready to go. We need to invest the resources necessary to get them and our economy back on the path. We do not need to spend one dime more. We just need to change our priorities.

For instance, we know we can make the private sector more efficient and more productive and create over 280,000 jobs in our cities and rural communities if we invest just $8 billion in rebuilding the Nation's infrastructure.

But we cannot. Why can we not? Because the administration needs $8 billion to spend on the B-2 and star wars, two outdated cold war weapons that will do nothing for our long-term growth and security.

We know we can begin the process of economic conversion, putting our best and brightest in the cold war to work building commercial ships, the next generation of aircraft, high speed rails, clean, renewable energy systems, new technologies that will make us more competitive and productive. Again, we cannot.

Why? Because the administration wants to continue to research and develop weapons for the cold war.

The same is happening to our work force. Last year Motorola announced that it would site its plant to build the important 64 million byte semiconductor in Kuchu, Japan—not in Silicon Valley, not anywhere in America but in Kuchu, Japan. Why? Not because they work for lower wages. That is not the case here. But because their production workers in Japan have higher mathematics skills and are easier to train.

The Motorola lesson is exactly the one economic principle emerging from the new global economy of the nineties. In a world where machines and capital can move around the world with the touch of a button, work will go and stay where the best workers are, period.

In the coming years, Mr. President, we are going to have to rely even more on the lower fifth of our population, the lower fifth in income of our population for tomorrow's work force because our labor pool is shrinking and the number of women entering the work force is leveling off.

So what are we going to do to help create this work force for tomorrow? If my Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services of the Appropriations Committee is any indication, we are cutting our own throats.

Under the current budget resolution, if the labor HHS Subcommittee receives the same share of discretionary funding it did in 1992, we would be forced to cut actual levels, budget authority levels, by 3.6 percent, about $2.2 billion, to stay within the fiscal year 1993 budget allocation.

Instead of teaching the bottom fifth of our population, the bottom fifth in income, we would be forced to eliminate 766,000 children from chapter 1 funding, 22,000 from Head Start. Instead of increasing college availability, we will have to cut 138,000 students from Pell grants. Despite layoffs and increased competition, 49,000 participants will be cut from job training programs.

At the time when health care is vital to a productive work force, our efforts to prevent disease and disability will be affected. Five million fewer doses of polio vaccine will be available to vaccinate children and health centers will serve 147,000 fewer people, all because we cannot afford $2.2 billion to improve our work force, and yet this year we are spending $17 billion to defend Germany from Russia. Germany is growing three times faster than we are. They have a wage rate that averages 144 percent of ours. They have national health insurance, parental leave, child care, a month's paid vacation every year. That's Germany. And we are spending 17 billion of our taxpayers' dollars to defend them from Russia, and Russia is begging us for food and assistance.

So again, Mr. President, it makes no sense.

These are really investment choices we have that I have outlined on this chart. We will either spend a dollar on childhood immunizations or $10 on later medical costs. We will either spend a dollar on maternal child health care or $3.38 in later health care costs. We will spend a dollar for preschool education such as Head Start or $4.75 for special education, welfare, and crime costs later on. We will spend a dollar in supplemental food or the WIC Program or we will spend $3.13 in Medicaid costs due to low birth weight babies.

Again, Mr. President, lest anyone think these are figures pulled out of a hat, these are all programs which have been in effect for many, many years. These studies are from the Children's Defense Fund. The money over here on this side, the $10 for medical costs later on, all of these higher levels of spending we are incurring today. We are paying out that money, and we will continue to pay out that money.

When you do not have comprehensive maternity care for pregnant women, they get sick, something happens, they go to the hospital, we are going to pay the money. Make no mistake about it. It is going to come out of Medicaid.

That is the lesson to be learned here. By spending less up front through preventive health care programs, outreach programs, we save a lot more money later on and we have a better educated work force, healthier kids, healthier adults.

So again, Mr. President, it makes no sense the way we are spending our money.

We have a window of opportunity right now to shift priorities and make the changes necessary. No military power on Earth threatens the survivability of the United States as has happened over the last almost 50 years when the Soviet Union existed.

So why do we continue to spend our precious resources, our wealth, on a cold war that no longer exists?

I do not know, Mr. President, what military threats may confront the United States 10, 15, 20 years from now. No one here knows that. But we do know that if we do not invest in our human resources and in our infrastructure increase the rate of productivity growth, make our people healthier, smarter, better workers, then no matter what challenge a rival military power may confront us in the future, we will not be able to meet it.

So that is why we have this window of opportunity right now, to quit spending so much money on a cold war that is over and start investing it again in our people and our infrastructure.

We are not talking about spending more. We are just talking about spending it differently and smarter. I know the first attempt to take down the budget firewalls failed, but we cannot let that stop us.

The 1990's requires leadership with the ability and long-term vision, as Abraham Lincoln once put it, to "think and act anew," leadership with the ability to forge a new set of priorities and the will to achieve it.

Mr. President, we know what we have to do. We just need the political courage to do it. This amendment provides us once again an opportunity to make the hard choices that I believe the American people want us to make. Mr. President, from having been all over this country in the last few months—people all over this country are asking why, why do we continue to build B-2 bombers and star wars? Why do we continue to spend so much money on the cold war?

Why are we not investing in our kids? Why are we not investing in programs that make our children healthier, happier, smarter? It's because we are not making tough choices around here. This amendment provides us the opportunity to make that tough choice, to say no to the outdated cold war, and yes to the new war on poverty and illiteracy as well as the new economic challenges, here in our own country, and provide for a healthier and smarter world.

Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 42 minutes 56 seconds.

Mr. HARKIN. I yield whatever time the Senator from New Jersey requires.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I thank the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, if the Senator will withhold and yield for a question to our friend from Iowa, may I ask the distinguished Senator from Iowa, does he anticipate consuming all of the time?

Mr. HARKIN. Absolutely not. I have finished my remarks. I think the Senator from New Jersey wants to speak. I do not know who may respond on the other side.

Mr. SASSER. I am not trying to rush the Senator.

Mr. HARKIN. No; I answered the Senator. I have completed my remarks.

I am going to ask for the yeas and nays, but I have no further remarks to make.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, might I indicate I think I control the time in opposition to the amendment. I guess I have an hour under the rule; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. I have not yet decided how much of the hour I desire to use.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Iowa for yielding me the time. I join with him as a prime cosponsor in offering this amendment. It is a very important amendment, Mr. President.

What we have seen is a series of, to some of us, relatively disappointing outcomes, because we look at defense and it seems to be the Holy Grail. We have heard all kinds of speeches about how we have to get the deficit under control. Yet when we had an opportunity to start toward that path, we could not carry the votes.

Everybody who was in opposition as we discussed the balanced budget amendment and various other things—those were the folks who were talking about getting this deficit down. But every time we had a chance to do it, there was always a reason that defense could not come down, the only account that has kind of held its level of funding regardless of need.

This amendment would reduce defense spending by $6 billion in fiscal year 1993. Since the Budget Enforcement Act, which I voted against, prevents shifts from defense to domestic programs, all of these funds would at first be applied to deficit reduction, essentially—if I can use the terminology—parking it until we are able to get to an even greater purpose than, serving in times like these, the reduction of the deficit.

The amendment provides that if the budget law can be amended to allow transfers, the money saved would be invested in education, health care, transportation, and economic development.

Mr. President, I opposed that budget amendment in 1990, and looking back, that decision only looks better to me each and every day. It was a wrong-headed decision; it was the wrong outcome.

I do not want in any way to denigrate the efforts of my distinguished colleagues from the other side of the aisle who worked hard to fashion something. But it just has not worked, as we see the burgeoning deficit and by the inability to apply funding to areas that we think can make a difference by providing jobs and promoting competitiveness. By blocking funding shifts between defense and domestic programs, the agreement has frozen into place the misplaced priorities of an earlier era. These misplaced priorities are reflected in the budget resolution before us today.

Mr. President, the world is a different place. In 1990, while dramatic change was already underway in the Soviet Union, many in the United States still feared the U.S.S.R., and we were still thinking in terms of the cold war. Today, of course, the Soviet Union does not even exist, and the cold war is in our past.

Yet, Mr. President, while the world around us has changed so dramatically, the budget priorities remain in a time warp. We are still spending close to $300 billion a year on defense. We are still spending billions defending our European allies from a threat that most believe no longer exists. And we are still committed to a range of weapons systems that are not necessary.

Meanwhile, our needs here at home grow greater than ever. Unemployment is 7.3 percent. The health-care system has broken down. Cities and towns are suffering from the wave of violent crime and drug abuse. And ordinary, middle-class Americans are finding it increasingly difficult to pay their bills, to be able to send their kids to college, or to make ends meet; in many cases, to keep the roof that they purchased some time ago, amply provided for, over their heads.

Mr. President, for the past decade, we have been ignoring these types of needs, largely because we are shifting so many resources into the Pentagon. Between 1981 and 1991, we increased the defense budget by $624 billion over baseline levels. At the same time, domestic discretionary spending has been cut by $395 billion.

The goal of this amendment is to reverse this trend and allow for funding in several vitally important areas. First, education. The future of our economy, the future of our being, frankly, as the Nation that we are, will depend on the quality of education available to our children. This amendment would help by providing almost $2 billion for Head Start, chapter 1, special education, child abuse prevention, and impact aid.

Second, Mr. President, an area that I have worked on very diligently is transportation. I said it over and over again on this floor: We must invest more in our transportation infrastructure. Our roads and bridges are crumbling; our mass transit systems are in desperate need of repair; almost 60 percent of our highways are in desperate need of rehabilitation; 39 percent of our bridges are functionally obsolete. We cannot ignore these problems anymore.

And if one noticed, in the last week or so, we saw a statement by 100 economists, very prominent people, for the most part—six Nobel laureates—who said yes, deficit reduction is important; but it is not anywhere near as important in a recessionary period as investment in infrastructure. Maybe that would jump start the economy, create jobs, improve our competitiveness, improve the air quality, reduce the dependency on foreign oil—all of those things.

We have a chance to swap old ideas, commitments, that are way past their need in defense, and talk about investing in our society in a way that encourages people to believe that there is some hope for them.

The amendment targets assistance to a variety of important transportation programs, including mass transit, Amtrak, highways, and FAA. Obviously, the amounts actually provided for these programs will depend upon the amount of money available to the Appropriations Committee and the subcommittee which I chair, the Transportation Subcommittee.

Third, economic development. Mr. President, over the past decade, the Federal Government has abandoned our cities and towns. As a result, municipalities throughout our country are strapped for funds, forced to raise taxes, increasing the flight from the cities, as it is taking place and has been for some time—increasing that pace—unable to meet the needs of their people, unable to protect their citizens adequately.

This amendment addresses that lack by directing funding to the Community Development Block Grant Program. CDBG is an essential tool for promoting community development initiatives. And yet the program has suffered substantial cuts, real cuts, over the past decade.

Fourth, health, Mr. President. It should be obvious to anybody who talks with the American people that they desperately need and want health care to be a priority for us, especially the health care provided to our children. This amendment would help by directing funding to the maternal child health block grant, school health, immunization, and tobacco and alcohol prevention programs. In addition, there is funding for WIC and child care.

Mr. President, these programs are important social needs that, for the most part, have been badly neglected for too long. Why? To a large extent, it is because we have been giving even higher priority to defending our allies abroad, spending in the multiple hundreds of billions of dollars and buying every exotic weapon system imaginable. It is past time for a change. It is past time to shift priorities.

It is made so obvious to us in so many ways. We are all stunned and depressed to hear that Arthur Ashe has AIDS. Arthur Ashe got his exposure in a blood transfusion. All of us know people who have been exposed to AIDS in one way or another. The one thing we can do, despite the debate that goes on here so often where some people try to accuse the victims of AIDS that they are at fault, is to help our fellow human beings, in the way we all value and cherish life, and to make the kind of investments that are necessary to stop this horrible disease. We ought to be spending everything available to solve that problem before we are overwhelmed by the problem.

We spend a lot more on tobacco, a lot more on the health costs resulting from tobacco, which costs upward of $50 billion a year in lost productivity and medical costs. Despite these facts, tobacco gets a deduction for advertising their poison. AIDS, we do not have enough money to adequately fight it; let us take it out of Defense; that is where we ought to take it from and give it to the people who need assistance.

When the President was inaugurated, he said he was going to start a war on drugs, and the scourge of drugs would soon be off of the American landscape. You know what people say about that. I do not want to use that kind of language. The fact is that we do have drugs still plaguing our society with one in seven, perhaps, being able to be treated. If you want to declare war, then get the weapons systems; I do not mean B-2, star wars, or faulty Patriot missiles. I am talking about providing the personnel, the will, and providing the advertising necessary to acquaint our schoolchildren with the problems.

I go out in New Jersey on a program called DARE, a cooperative program between the education system and law enforcement personnel, where police personnel teach kids how difficult their life becomes if they use drugs. I am talking about 10- and 11-year-olds, who have been approached to use drugs; that is where our priorities ought to be.

Get jobs for America. Give hope to so many families that their children can do better than they have, because they are educated and because their education depends on only one thing; their ability to learn, and not on whether or not they can afford to buy it.

So, Mr. President, it is time for a change. It is time to shift the priorities. It is time to put the focus on America's real needs and America's future. We have to take it from defense and put it where it is going to build strength that will be long term, and it will provide the leadership and competitiveness that our country needs. We are not going to get it in the Defense Department.

Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will support this amendment, and I commend the Senator from Iowa for his leadership and thoughtfulness on these basic fundamental issues.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Jersey for his comments and his statement and for his leadership as chairman of the Transportation Appropriations Subcommittee. I bring to his attention the latest issue of Business Week magazine, which includes an entire section there on the industrial policy in America. Just apropos of what the Senator was saying, and clearly in his jurisdiction on his Subcommittee on Transportation, this one article states:

Take a drive around New York or Los Angeles, and it will not come as a surprise that the U.S. has neglected its infrastructure. Public infrastructure spending is down from 2.3 percent of gross domestic product two decades ago to 1.3 percent in the 1980's. The cost isn't just in lost tempers and missed appointments. It affects the bottom line. According to estimates by David Aschauer, an economist at Bates College in Maine, approximately 50 percent of the falloff in productivity growth, from an average of 2.8 percent a year from 1953 to 1969 down to 1.4 percent a year now, can be blamed on the lower rate of public investments. Clearly, the Government needs to refurbish decaying roads, harbors and bridges.

I came across a figure the other day that 80 percent of U.S. commerce flows on our highways and our streets. How can we get people to understand the bottom line investing in the infrastructure helps our private sector become more competitive and more productive in the world market. Yet, we are not doing this. People think if we build roads and bridges, fine; it puts a few people back to work. When the job is over with, these people go home, and that is the end of it. As the Senator knows, if you improve the roads and the flow of traffic, the private sector becomes more efficient and productive. How do we get people to understand that?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. If the Senator will yield, they are sure not going to understand this, if we listen to the tales that we hear on this floor and frankly, some of the theatrics of people who scream about deficit reduction. I asked for a group of volunteers. I said, "Why don't you turn in your State transportation projects to my subcommittee, because I can use them in places that have more urgent needs." Not one volunteer Senator has come by. I hope one will come by, and maybe we can start the ball rolling so that everybody will volunteer to give their State projects back, and whether they are bridges, sewage treatment plants, or any of the infrastructure that we need, maybe then we can balance this budget.

But let me tell the Senator something. Not only will it improve productivity very significantly—we have heard eloquent testimony from experts, from economists, from industrialists—but it will also give us that job effect immediately. There are projects sitting on the shelf already designed. If you have to repair a highway, repair a bridge, you do not have to wait for the engineering to get going. All you have to do is call on that large unemployed work force of skilled people out in the construction industry. They get to work immediately, and we start to meet what looks like an impossible task in many places, which is the Clean Air Act. We have to do that. If we do not, under the law, we are going to stop commerce altogether in many places. So we have a chance to do that.

Finally, we also have a chance to say to those countries that we defended so valiantly in the Persian Gulf, "Listen, keep some more of your oil. We do not need it or want it." We put our kids' lives on the line, but we would like to be free of the obligation that we have there. So we ought to be able to get the message across. And there is one way to do it. That is on the vote tonight. When people stand up there and cast their vote, I think the public ought to be aware of those who are saying, "No, let us stay with the status quo and build more SDI systems. Let us continue to enlarge, for instance, upon the success of the Patriot missile." It, unfortunately, missed its mark significantly. To continue to invest in systems like that that do not have a need, I think, is what is wasting America's future. Here is a chance to be reported as we should be and stand up and see whether we are voting for an America of the future or for those things of the past that cost us so much of our resources.

Mr. HARKIN. I appreciate the Senator's contribution and his fine leadership on the Transportation Committee. Again, I point out that the U.S. Conference of Mayors estimated that they had plans on the shelf ready to go. They could put people to work right now in 300 cities, creating 280,000 jobs, for $8 billion—280,000 jobs right now.

Also, further, I am advised that Japan has recently committed itself in the 1990's to invest $3 trillion in their infrastructure—$3 trillion. What are we doing?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. They know they have to stay ahead of the curve. They know that unless they provide the infrastructure—we are talking about the physical infrastructure at this moment, and let us call it the human infrastructure—to train people, nourish people, people who are fed, because youngsters cannot learn, you cannot learn on an empty stomach. That has been proven time and time again.

And the cost for crime later on far exceed the cost for education. The costs of society go up as we provide less of an opportunity to obtain skills and to become effectively employed. But the Japanese understand that. They have stolen our bacon, to use the expression, and we ought to get back on track. They are continuously investing. They spend 15 times per year that which we spend proportionally on infrastructure in Japan, and it has paid off for them.

I have a bill, I think the Senator knows, that I have introduced in our committee which is called start up. It is 7 billion dollars' worth of immediate funding for transportation projects. It has to wait upon the House to come over with a vehicle for us and out of the Appropriations Committee.

The mayors, the communities, and the Governors have pleaded for it. They have said that is the way to get this economy of ours rolling again and we want to do it.

The Senator has a package right here which I shared and cosponsoring that I think could make a world of difference, and I hope it is adopted.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's comments and his support of the amendment and his leadership in this area.

I shall close my comments by saying we have been talking a lot about physical infrastructure. The Senator also mentioned the human infrastructure. It will be my responsibility at a later time this year, probably in September, to bring out to the Senate floor the Labor, Health Human Services, and Education appropriations bill.

If we use the allocation in this budget, we will have to cut my bill by 3.6 percent across the board.

Last year, if I am not mistaken, I believe that I received somewhere in the neighborhood of 400 requests from Senators to increase spending for their particular programs.

I suppose I will get a lot of request again this year. I just want Senators to know when I bring that bill out in September I will be referring to this evening. I will refer to this vote. And when Senators want me to put more money into their special programs we will refer back to tonight and just check the record and see how people voted tonight. We will have to live with our votes around here as we always do.

I hope this amendment is adopted so that we can use this money for investments in physical infrastructure and human resources under the subcommittee of the distinguished Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG] and the Subcommittee on Labor, Health, and Human Services, which I have the privilege to chair.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, could I inquire from the Parliamentarian, how much time remains on the amendment and how much time remains on the budget resolution on each side, please?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has a little under an hour on the amendment, the proponent has a little bit under 19 minutes on the amendment, and the Chair wishes to notify the Senator from New Mexico that all together there are a little over 9 hours remaining on the resolution.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the distinguished senior Senator from Hawaii desires to speak on this amendment and I want to yield 15 minutes off my time in opposition to the amendment to the Senator from Hawaii.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii is recognized.

Mr. INOUE. Mr. President, I rise to speak against the amendment and, Mr. President, I do so with much anguish and pain, because I find myself in opposition to some of my dearest friends in this body.

But as chairman of the Subcommittee on Defense of the Appropriations Committee, I am certain that many of my colleagues would expect me to rise to share with them my thoughts on this matter.

Mr. President, what is happening in our Nation today is in keeping with the history of this Nation. It just happens that after every major war the people of this Nation gather to say that peace is upon us, so therefore let us reduce our military.

In fact, in our earliest days of the Republic, in 1794, after the great victory of Gen. George Washington, when the Congress convened they decided the time had come for dismantling of the military. I think it is well for us to recall that at the height of the Revolutionary War, General Washington had in his command about 30,000 troops. Soon after the victory he maintained a force of about 800 and he felt that this force was necessary to maintain the security of this new and budding Nation. But when the Congress concluded its debate and voted upon the measure, the Continental Army of the United States consisted of 80 men, 55 assigned to West Point and 25 to the headquarters in Pittsburgh.

And as all of us know and as schoolchildren know, it was not too long after that that the British returned to the new United States and did much damage to our Capitol.

We entered World War I with great reluctance, but when we did this Nation responded and built a formidable force that joined our allies in Europe to bring about democracy once again.

We were victorious, but soon after that victory once again the cry for the dismantling of our military was heard throughout the land, because peace was upon us and peace was secure and democracy was secure.

And, so, Mr. President, it may be of interest to my colleagues to know that 2 years before December 7 the Armed Forces of the United States, the Army, Navy, Air Corps, Marines and Coast Guard numbered less than 400,000. And on the eve of December 7, just about a year before December 7, by a vote of 1 the Selective Service law was passed.

It should interest some of my colleagues to know that in 1940 when Gen. George Patton, and I think most of us have seen that movie, was assigned to Fort Benning, to take over the American Armored Corps, he was greeted by 325 tanks and most of these tanks could not move.

He called upon the War Department for funds to repair these broken down tanks, and this was the heart and the gut of our Armored Corps. The War Department responded, "We have no funds."

But, fortunately, General Patton was a very wealthy person. He was from a very distinguished Virginia family. And so he took out his checkbook, and he took his staff—and I am not trying to be facetious, Mr. President—to Sears Roebuck and there he bought parts and was able to rehabilitate these tanks. And that was the beginning of our armored corps, 2 years before December 7.

At about the same time, a general who was destined to become the commander of the largest force in our Nation's history was called upon to assume command at Fort Leavenworth. And there he was greeted by 200 men—cooks, clerks, drivers; over half of them had no sidearms or rifles. And those of us who are old enough to recall remember these pictures of men training with wooden rifles. That general was George Marshall.

In 1945, he was in command of 12½ million men and women in uniform. But on December 7, the troops in Hawaii on the island of Oahu constituted about 25 percent of the combat trained troops of the United States. I think it would be sad but true to suggest that we were not prepared. And the cost of not being prepared all of us know was very high.

Well, as Admiral Yamamoto suggested, the sleeping dragon suddenly woke up. And our factories began moving, our men put on uniforms, and we had 12½ million men and women in the greatest victory in the history of mankind became part of our history.

But then soon after the signing of the surrender in Yokohama Bay, once again the cry was heard throughout this land—peace is upon us and democracy is secure. And once again the Congress acted.

By 1949, the troop level had come down to a million, from 12½ million. Most of these men and women were not fighting soldiers or sailors, they were part of the occupation forces. We had large numbers of troops to maintain administrative law and order in Europe and in Japan.

On June 25, 1950, the North Koreans crossed the border and we found ourselves once again in a horrible war. And we found ourselves sending to Korea men who were not trained and men who were not properly equipped.

And now we are told by analysts that of the first 10,000 casualties, about 50 percent could have been avoided if we had sent men who were trained and properly equipped. But, we did not have the time and the resources to do that.

Now, Mr. President, we find ourselves victorious. Yes, although we do not fight a shooting war, it was a major war against communism. It was a war that took 40 years. And so, as history tells us, Americans will too, once again Congress is being told that peace is upon us and democracy is secure.

But, Mr. President, as chairman of the subcommittee on defense, I feel compelled to look upon this matter with grave seriousness. For one thing, I do not wish to chair a committee that will bring about June 25, 1950, or December 7, 1941.

Yes, the wall has crumbled. The Warsaw Pact is no more. That is a matter of history. In fact, the Soviet Union is ancient history.

But, Mr. President, even if the intent to commit war has diminished, the capability of war is still here—30,000 nuclear warheads. President Yeltsin most magnanimously announced to the world that he would take out 500 ICBM's from ready alert—500. But, Mr. President, there are 1,400 missiles, ICBM's in Russia. Five-hundred are no longer on alert but 900 are still on alert. And I ask the question: why? And while this Congress is debating not whether we will help the Soviets or the Russians but how much, I think it should be well that we know that at this moment the Soviets are spending money to modernize their intercontinental ballistic system.

I do not wish to discuss these matters but I think as chairman of the committee I should make these known.

Mr. President, it is true that the foe we knew as Communists are no longer around, but we have a mightier foe—uncertainty, instability. We seem to be content that we know everything.

It is with some reluctance that I remind my colleagues, because it was only yesterday, January of 1990—that is not too long ago—that the Pentagon was in the process of retiring General Schwarzkopf. The Pentagon was in the process of dismantling the Central Command.

And for those who have forgotten, General Schwarzkopf was the man who led Desert Storm. Central Command was the command in charge of Desert Storm. As chairman of the committee, I called the general. He came to my office. I asked him, "Is it true you are now being processed for retirement?" He said, "Yes sir." Why? Because our policymakers felt that everything was fine in the Middle East. In fact, it must have been so fine that at the same time the Department of Commerce was in the process of setting up a trade fair in Baghdad to sell the Iraqis aerospace technology and computer technology. That is how certain we were.

And, Mr. President, I am certain some of my colleagues recall some of the trips that Members of this body took to Baghdad to visit Saddam Hussein. Came back with glowing accounts.

And so, in June of 1990, when I submitted a bill to impose economic sanctions upon Saddam Hussein, I was told by the administration and by my colleagues, "Don't do this. We can work with him." And Mr. President, up until August 2, Saddam Hussein was a beneficiary of a $4 billion agriculture aid program and a line of credit of $200 million from the Export-Import Bank.

That is what I mean by uncertainty. We were all certain that here was our friend.

We were all certain that peace was upon the Middle East.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield 5 additional minutes to the Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUE. Mr. President, in all the years as I have served here—I have had the privilege of serving as chairman of the Intelligence Committee, now as chairman of the Defense Subcommittee—yet I have not found the secret to predicting the future.

If someone should ask me, what is the future of Russia? Notwithstanding what the CIA tells me, I am not able to tell you.

If you should ask me, what will Saddam Hussein do tomorrow? I have no idea.

What is the future of Yeltsin? I wish him the best. Will Kim Il-song of North Korea order an attack on South Korea? I do not know. I hope not.

What is the future in Cambodia? I have no idea, Mr. President.

So, during this period of uncertainty, we are hoping we can work with the Pentagon—yes, to draw down the military. In 5 years, 25 percent of our force will be cut out. Beyond that, it may be cut further.

There is another aspect of cutting that I do not suppose too many of us have discussed. On one side of the ledger, we will say we made heroic cuts. But on whose ledger will we note unemployment compensation? Welfare payments? Food stamp payments? And the cost of crime? All of us know there is a correlation between crime and unemployment. Whose ledger will show that? It will not show on DOD.

Yes, we can take pride and tell our constituents we cut defense. The Senator from California will tell you that this painful drawdown will result in about 300,000 men and women in California finding themselves on the street as unemployed people.

We have gone through base closure exercises. I have yet to see a Member of this body concur with base closure decisions if they reflect on his or her State. I have yet to see one such Senator come forward and say "I concur with the Base Closure Committee." None of us want to see unemployment.

The chairman of the Armed Services Committee has to make heroic decisions. But let us deliberate and not charge in and precipitously make decisions that we may regret in years to come.

Mr. President, I can assure you the Subcommittee on Defense working together with the Armed Services Committee will come forth with a lean, mean, military organization. We will trim the fat as much as possible. We are already taking decisions to cut out massive weapons systems.

I want to see more money for education. I would like to see money for aid, for health, for the homeless. But it is my responsibility as chairman of the Defense Subcommittee to make certain that the citizens of this Nation can go to bed tonight secure in the feeling that they are safe. I pledged to do my job in that capacity.

Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will vote this down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, might I ask the proponent of the amendment, Senator HARKIN, I surely do not want to hurry the matter along if the Senator desires to use additional time, but I am prepared to yield back our time if the Senator is prepared to yield back his. I would just like 1 minute to put some numbers before the Senate and then I will yield back my time.

The Senator has 19 minutes remaining; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. And I have about 45, and I will yield back all but 1 minute of mine if the Senator is prepared to also do so.

Mr. HARKIN. I have maybe 3 to 5 minutes more.

Mr. DOMENICI. Does the Senator want to go ahead? I only have a minute at some point but I would rather—

Mr. HARKIN. I will finish.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I want to tell the Senate that essentially, in terms of reductions in defense, we have essentially voted on this amendment. And it was voted down. This amendment, in fact, cuts a little bit more out of defense than the Exon amendment.

If my numbers are right, the Harkin amendment cuts $8 billion in budget authority in the first year. That makes it $28 billion with the $20 billion the President has, a $28 billion reduction.

Mr. HARKIN. Will the Senator just yield on that point? My amendment reduces military spending by $6 billion—$1.6 billion less than Senator EXON's amendment.

I did modify my amendment this afternoon. It is a $6 billion reduction.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I will have the staff look at the number. I believe we got our number from the amendment that is pending at the desk. So I assume that is the amendment of the Senator.

Did the Senator amend it after he sent it to the desk?

Mr. HARKIN. No; it is $6 billion.

Mr. DOMENICI. We are just reviewing that amendment, but it seems to us it is not 6. But we will check into it.

We are told it is $8 billion—$8.1 billion in budget authority reduction. When you add the President's $20 billion, it is $28 billion. But, nonetheless, essentially we have voted in terms of the defense reduction. We have voted this amendment down.

But that is not all. This amendment then says we are going to spend the money, and that makes it very different than the previous amendment.

With that, I am prepared, after hearing the Senator give his remarks, I am prepared to yield back our time.

I will not yield it back now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEVIN). Who yields time?

The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I want to get this matter cleared up. I do not want to have a mistake on how much money is involved here. I changed the amendment to read a $6 billion cut in BA.

I want to ask the Parliamentarian if that is correct or not. This is a factual matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed the Chair has no authority to assess the legislative impact of an amendment.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, this is a factual matter. It should not be open to debate. The numbers are written on the amendment. It was a $6 billion cut in budget authority. There should not be any question about that. We may argue about what the impact is but we can't on the amount.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, there is a handwritten statement at the end of the amendment that says what the Senator has indicated. The original text did not have it. There is written handwriting. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the Senator.

As I said earlier, I changed the amendment to reflect a $6 billion cut in BA. I just wanted to get that cleared up.

Mr. President, I listened to the speech by the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee on Defense, the distinguished Senator from Hawaii, an individual for whom I have the greatest respect and admiration. I know it comes from deep within his heart when he talks both about the need to protect our country and his responsibilities as the chairman of that subcommittee.

I also know it comes deep from his heart that he also wants to make sure that our children are the best fed and best educated, that our people are the healthiest, that our work force is the best trained. I know that. Because I have known him for a long time and I know that he does not want to short-change those with the lowest fifth of our incomes who need these programs so they can become healthy, productive workers.

I listened to his speech with mixed emotions, because the Senator has such a distinguished record here in the Senate, and such a distinguished military record himself, in service to this country.

I will respond, Mr. President, by saying that in no way is this Senator's amendment dismantling the military, nor is this a precipitous cut. This amendment would cut $6 billion, or 2.1 percent of the DOD budget. Mr. President, I might just point out this is much less than previous cuts during the cold war era. After the Korean war in 1953, there was a 14.6 percent cut in DOD; in 1954, a 29 percent cut; and in 1955, a 15.7 percent cut. After Vietnam, in 1970, there was a 10.1 percent cut; and in 1971, a 9.2 percent cut.

What I am proposing in this amendment is a 2.1 percent cut. And these cuts made after the Korean war and Vietnam were at the height of the cold war, when the very survival of our Nation was at stake because of the threat of the Soviet Union.

My cut is less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the GNP. Compare it with past cuts. In 1953, it was a 1.7-percent cut of GNP; 1954, a 3.2-percent cut; in 1970, a seven-tenths of 1-percent cut. My cut of $6 billion would be less than one-tenth of 1 percent of our GNP. In other words, Mr. President, my $6 billion cut is 17 times smaller a percent of GNP than the 1953 cut; 32 times smaller than the 1954 cut; and seven times smaller than the 1970 reduction, again all made at the height of the cold war.

I would compare it also in constant dollars, in 1993 dollars. During the height of the cold war, we reduced military spending, in 1993 dollars, in 1948 to $100 billion in 1955, to $236 billion; and in 1975, to $228 billion. Again, this was while the cold war still raged. The President has asked for $280 billion in those constant dollars for next year, or $40 billion to $50 billion more than at the height of the cold war.

As I traveled around the country, people have seen that the world has changed, and changed dramatically. Here are the former Republics of the Soviet Union, who still have strategic nuclear warheads now asking us for food, loans, and other assistance. The cold war is over.

Let us take a look at the comparison of our military budget with our potential enemies'. And yes, we do have potential enemies out there. Let me just list a few of them: Iraq, Iran, Libya, North Korea, Cuba, and China; all potential enemies of the United States. If you add up all of the military budgets of those potential enemies, it comes to less than $70 billion.

In other words, Mr. President, we are being asked to provide over 4 times the sum of the military budgets of all our potential adversaries for next year. So in no way can this amendment be seen as dismantling the military, or as making any kind of a precipitous cut at all. It is reasonable in light of the dramatic changes in the world today, and it will better prepare us to deal with today's and tomorrow's economic threats.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD two tables from DOD. One was given in testimony before the Armed Services Committee on February 4, 1991; the other one on January 29, 1992. The first one was offered before the disintegration of the Soviet Union; the other one after the fall.

The DOD's force structure for fiscal year 1995 that it proposed over a year ago—before the Soviet Union was dismantled—similar to force structure they are proposing for 1995, after the dismantling of the Soviet Union, but except for one less bomber. In other words, we are going to save the cost of just one strategic bomber because of the disintegration of the Soviet Union.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FORCE STRUCTURE

	Fiscal year—
	1990	1995
Before disintegration of the Soviet Union:
Army divisions	28 (18 active)	18 (12 active).
Aircraft carriers	13	12.
Carrier air wings	15 (13 active)	13 (11 active).
Battle force ships	545	451.
Tactical fighter wings	36 (24 active)	26 (15 active).
Strategic bombers	268	181.
After disintegration of the Soviet Union:
Army divisions	28 (18 active)	18 (12 active).
Aircraft carriers	15 plus 1 training	12 plus 1 training.
Carrier air wings	15 (13 active)	13 (11 active).
Battle force ships	546	451.
Tactical fighter wings	36 (24 active)	26 (15 active).
Strategic bombers	268	180.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, again let me explain the difference between this amendment and the ones offered earlier: The Exon amendment included $1.6 billion more of a cut than mine. It cut defense by $7.6 billion; mine reduces defense by $6 billion. Senator EXON's amendment would have gone all toward deficit reduction. My amendment shifts these military savings to investment in our children, physical infrastructure, and economic development—but only if the firewalls come down.

So this amendment would really only take a 51-vote margin to pass, rather than the 60-vote margin that applied to Senator BRADLEY's amendment offered earlier today.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I share my Iowa colleague's deep concerns about the welfare and education of our children, as well as the need to help our struggling unemployed by investing in our infrastructure to boost our economy.

And I agree that major defense cuts should be made. That is why I voted to cut an additional $24.5 billion out of the President's defense budget last week during committee consideration. And that is why I voted earlier today for an additional cut of $38 billion in defense spending, once I was assured it could be done without increasing the unemployment of our Nation's service men and women—including the 20,000 or more sons and daughters of our home State of Iowa.

Mr. President, my colleague from Iowa has proposed an amendment, however, which raises a difficult dilemma.

That amendment poses a hypothetical situation—a very big "if" that will not occur. It has already become obvious it will not occur because of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990 which set up these firewalls, and because of opposition to eliminating these firewalls as evidenced by votes of this body on two occasions in as many weeks.

Nonetheless, my colleague from Iowa asks us to cast a vote based on the assumption that the so-called firewalls which restrict the transfer of funds between defense, international, and domestic discretionary spending categories were somehow removed prior to the onset of fiscal year 1993.

The Senator further complicates the situation by suggesting that, under these fictitious circumstances, we cut some $6 billion from the defense budget and reallocate those funds to a variety of domestic programs—programs which, I might add, I have been supportive of in the past and continue to support.

So I am supportive of more funding for these programs, but let's look at the programs which the Senator suggests says he intends to fund via his amendment.

In the President's budget proposal for fiscal year 1993, he suggests spending $2.8 billion on the Head Start Program in the next year. That's a $600 million increase over the current year—the largest single year funding increase in the history of the program. On a percentage basis, that represents a 27-percent increase.

For immunizations, the President's budget proposal calls for the expenditure of $349 million in the upcoming year—a $52 million increase over the current year. This 18-percent increase will provide 6.7 million polio vaccinations, 4.1 million measles-mumps-rubella vaccinations and 2.6 million hepatitis B vaccinations, just to name a few.

Furthermore, the President's budget calls for spending an additional quarter of a billion dollars next year for the Women, Infants, and Children Nutrition Assistance Program. The truth is that this level of support represents a 47-percent increase over the last 2 years alone and pushes funding for the program to $2.84 billion.

And we can say the same sorts of things about maternal and child health and child care block grants. Both have been targeted to receive increases of about $25 million in the upcoming fiscal year.

Mr. President, the point is this. I am supportive of providing increases to these worthy programs and to many others for that matter; however, as we can plainly see, each of these programs is already projected to receive significant increases over last year's budget levels.

Now, I'm on record as supporting greater cuts in the military budget. In fact I voted earlier today to cut the defense budget even deeper than my colleague from Iowa proposes. I cast that vote with the knowledge that we do have a Budget Enforcement Act which requires these savings to be devoted to deficit reduction in fiscal year 1993.

The deficit is out of control. We have to remember that it is all too easy for Congress to spend more. That is why every time we increase taxes by a dollar, we find ways of spending another dollar and a half.

Consequently, this is not a vote against Head Start, immunizations, WIC or any of the other worthy programs raised in the Senator's amendment.

This is a vote against further burdening our children with increased Federal debt.

My colleague from Iowa will be pleased to know, however, there exist some outrageous defense spending programs under the domestic program category. I am speaking of cargo preference, which by OMB's estimate, costs us over $500 million per year. It comes out to around $250,000 per seafarer job or billet. In sharp contrast, we only spend an average of $32,000 for regular active duty service positions.

Talk about gold-plated defense spending. I hope my colleague from Iowa will join me in diverting these cargo preference funds and other unacceptable maritime spending into child welfare and education programs.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, does the Senator yield back the remainder of his time? I want to yield mine back.

Mr. HARKIN. We yield back the remainder of time; yes.

Mr. INOUE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii.

Mr. INOUE. Mr. President, I move to table.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question in on agreeing to the motion. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. FORD. I announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr.

Lott], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 40, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table, the amendment (No. 1768) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. SASSER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SEYMOUR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 1769

(Purpose: To reduce function 800 (General Government) by 25 percent over FY 1993 and FY 1994 for Legislative Branch expenditures)

Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California [Mr. SEYMOUR], for himself, Mr. BROWN, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. BOND, and Mr. NICKLES, proposes an amendment numbered 1769.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, before I begin on this amendment, I ask the chairman if we might reach a time agreement. All I would need would be 15 minutes. If we could have an understanding 15 minutes on my side—

Mr. SASSER. I would be willing to take 15 minutes equally divided.

Mr. REID. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No unanimous-consent agreement has yet been propounded.

The Senator from California has the floor.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, I offer this amendment on behalf of myself Senator BROWN, Senator SYMMS, Senator BOND, Senator NICKLES, and Senator HELMS. I am offering this amendment today, and I think it is very straightforward. What it does is very simply reduce the budget of the Congress by 25 percent below fiscal year 1992 over the next 2 years.

In essence, Mr. President, this amendment makes real reductions that bring our own spending in Congress under control. We all know that our country's current fiscal condition is nothing less than staggering. We have come to the point that our Federal deficit is growing at a rate of $1 billion a day. Think about that: $1 billion every day.

Why, in 2 months, this Government runs a deficit the size of the entire annual California State budget. In 4 months we overspend by an amount equal to the total annual sales of General Motors, our Nation's largest company. For me, this is mind boggling, Mr. President. Quite simply, it is frightening. I fear for the well-being of my six children, their generation, and the generations beyond. I worry for their future standard of living, because it is our children and our grandchildren who will be forced to pay for the fiscal irresponsibility of Congress.

My story is not unique to this body. I do not doubt in the slightest that everyone is concerned about the size of our deficit. We have had plenty of debate on that today. It is an issue that is continuously debated in these halls. Everyone recognizes that our deficit is out of control, and everyone recognizes that the root cause of our free-for-all spending is the excess. Everyone recognizes that what must be done is to control and eliminate excessive government spending.

Of course, Mr. President, cutting is not very pretty. It requires hard choices, I know. I have had to make those choices as both a mayor of a city in California, the city of Anaheim, as well as a State Senator in the California State legislature. I know of those hard choices at the State level of government and the local level of government, because by law, at those two levels of government, you are required to balance your budget. So tough choices have to be made.

They are made every day, not just in local government, but in every business and family struggling to make ends meet. In fact, this is the only place, Mr. President, that I know where we do not have to make those hard choices. In these economic times, those hard choices can be extremely difficult. But, nevertheless, those decisions have to be made.

We are seeing tough decisions being made with respect to defense spending, and we have been debating that today. Those are extremely tough for me, because those particular decisions involve thousands of hardworking Californians, who through their efforts contributed to the defeat of Communist tyranny and to victory in the deserts of Iraq. These kinds of choices will hopefully go far toward bringing our fiscal house in order.

Taking action to reduce defense spending does not replace or lessen our commitment to control spending in other areas. Therefore, we must begin our renewed commitment by setting an example right here on Capitol Hill, right here in the U.S. Senate; an example quite different than the one we have been setting over the past 10 years, because the evidence strongly suggests that when it comes to controlling our own spending, Congress is part of the problem, not the solution.

Mr. President, this chart behind me plots the growth of spending for all the functions within the legislative branch during the fiscal years 1981 to 1993. As you can see, spending moved in one direction: up, straight up. Even if you ignore the estimate for fiscal year 1993, the total spending in that period more than doubled, from $1.2 billion in fiscal year 1981 to $2.6 billion in fiscal year 1992.

But let me focus for a moment on the spending of our own operations here, Mr. President, right here in the U.S. Senate. The first chart does not reflect it very well but this next chart does.

What this chart shows is that the cost of operating the U.S. Senate also rose dramatically. In fiscal year 1981, the cost of operating the U.S. Senate to the American taxpayer was roughly $160 million. This year, it will cost the American taxpayers $488 million.

In short, the nominal cost to the taxpayer for operating the U.S. Senate has tripled. In fact, the total percentage growth in the Senate exceeded that of many vital Federal programs, surpassing Head Start, Federal job training, and emergency homeless assistance services.

Indeed, to truly understand why we need to control our own spending, I would divert my colleague's attention to the next chart which compares the average growth rates in legislative operations with other crucial programs or sets of programs.

As you can see, the rate of spending growth in the operation of the U.S. Senate exceeds the growth of Medicare, Medicaid and agriculture are the only programs listed here that exceed the annual spending growth of the U.S. Senate.

So, Mr. President, as you can see, the U.S. Senate spending exceeds many vital programs, programs that assist the elderly, families in poverty, the unemployed, Federal retirees, and at-risk youth. Most have increased in the past decade but taken all together they did not increase at an average rate greater than the spending of the Senate.

The operations of Congress taken together grew faster from 1981 to 1992 than the growth of all of our mandatory spending programs combined. These programs include Medicare, the earned income tax credit, veterans benefits, housing assistance and food and nutrition assistance for our children. And, of course, the cost growth of congressional operations exceeded growth in defense programs during the same period.

This is in a time when the cost of the Federal budget, Mr. President, to the American taxpayers of this and future generations must be controlled. It is time that the Congress no longer serve as an example of what is wrong with our spending policies.

In a time of billion dollar a day deficits and limited Government resources, Congress must prove itself capable of controlling its own spending. In a time when the defense industry is in the midst of a build-down, it is time that the Congress engage in a build-down of its own.

In a time when more and more State and local governments are containing cost growth and making some tough decisions, it is time we make some tough decisions to contain our own costs.

That is what this amendment will do, Mr. President. Very simply, it reduces the budget of the Congress by a total of 25 percent below the level in fiscal year 1992 over a 2-year period.

But let us get to the bottom line. This amendment, if enacted, would save the American taxpayer nearly $2 billion over 5 years.

Is a 25 percent cut too draconian? Mr. President, as many know, before I came here a year ago, I was a State senator in the California State Legislature. While there, I supported an initiative that was overwhelmingly passed by the people of California that not only set term limitations for members of the legislature, but also cut the legislature's budget by 40 percent. Was that draconian? Some would say yes.

But, Mr. President, the California legislature survived that 40 percent cut and it is still in session today.

I understand that the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee has included in the budget resolution a 4½ percent cut in outlays in the legislative branch for fiscal year 1993. I commend him for his leadership in trying to put the brakes on excessive growth in spending by and for the Congress.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, it is a 5 percent cut as opposed to 4½ percent.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I certainly accept the chairman's statement that it is 5 percent instead of 4½ percent, Mr. President, and I do commend him for that. But with all due respect, if we are really going to control spending, we have to correct wrongful and excessive spending in past years and we have to do it at greater than even 5 percent. We need to make tough choices on programs that have just grown out of control. Spending for Congress, as indicated, is moving nowhere but up.

In short, the chairman's recommendations are commendable, but they are just not enough. A 5-percent reduction just does not cut it.

In closing, I just want to reiterate the words spoken 8 years ago by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, Senator EXON, who at the time was speaking for the repeal of a pay raise, and I quote him. "We are going to have to do some belt-tightening of our own here as Members of the Senate to set an example for the belt-tightening we must do" in the Federal budget.

Those words ring true today. Tough but necessary decisions are being made with respect to defense programs and tough but necessary decisions must be made with controlling the growth of the budget and the budget deficit.

But we must make tough but necessary decisions, Mr. President, with the spending being made in this very body as well as the House and the entities under the legislative branch. Yes, they are tough but they must be made and they must be made now.

Let us set the example. Let us show some leadership. Let us demonstrate that we have the will to change.

I thank my friends and colleagues from Idaho, Missouri, Oklahoma, Colorado, and North Carolina for joining with me today to bring this amendment to the floor.

I thank you, Mr. President.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. AKAKA). Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Nevada, and then we will see where we are at the end of 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I would have to submit that offering of this amendment will not be placed in the book "Profiles in Courage." The reason I suggest that is that it is easy with the legislative branch receiving all the notoriety it has of late to step in here tonight and try to kick it around a little more.

I ask each Senator to recognize that he or she has a stake in the outcome of this proposal. I have had a large number of Senators over the past year come to me and say: Is there anything that we can do to get more caseworkers, or is there something we can do to get more help with the computers? They are not fulfilling the requirements that I have.

Every Senator should realize that if this amendment is adopted, there are caseworkers they have back in the State—people who work on Social Security cases, immigration cases, IRS cases, and all the other cases involving the Federal Government. These men and women work on these cases for long hours. Senators, the Senate simply will not be able to keep up with this caseload if we cut the legislative budget 25 percent. I would suggest that those Senators who take pride in their staff being able to answer their phones promptly would find it hard to maintain that standard.

I think that the alternative to defend this institution is to yield to the hot wind of political demagoguery and accept this amendment. Perhaps that is the easiest course in today's toxic political atmosphere. But the Senate should decide whether that is the right course. I am not going to be the sole defender of the legislative branch of Government. It is up to the other Members of the Senate to step forward and defend this institution. They have to decide whether they want to cut 25 percent of their personnel. It is up to the Senate to decide that for the legislative branch of Government which, in fact, is so small in the overall scheme of things.

Mr. President, the total of the budgets in the legislative branch constitutes only 0.59 percent of the deficit of the United States. It represents 0.66 percent of the interest on the national debt.

The sponsor of the amendment points out that the legislative branch of Government, according to his charts, has gone up significantly. But what we have to understand is that the legislative branch of Government started from a very small amount to begin with. And if you add 10 employees and you have a base of 100 or 200, it jumps up significantly. You talk about the Agriculture Department, with thousands of employees. The Senator from California indicates that there are 38,000 employees in the legislative branch of Government. That compares to 2.2 million employees that are in the executive branch of Government. And the 38,000 employees, Mr. President, are not those that are of the Senate and the House. It is made up of employees in a number of other agencies such as the Library of Congress.

For example, the proposed budget for the Federal Government for fiscal year 1993 is $1.5 trillion, approximately. The national debt in fiscal year 1982 stood at $919 billion. It is now over $3 trillion, an increase of 235 percent. The deficit for fiscal year 1992 is now estimated to be about $400 billion, an increase of 212 percent over the shortfall for fiscal 1982.

So what we are saying here is we all want to save money. We have acknowledged—and we have already prepared figures to meet the ceilings that have been set by the Budget Committee—that we will cut 5 percent. That will not be easy, Mr. President, but we have agreed to do that.

But let us talk about some of the things that are necessary. As the majority leader, Howard Baker, indicated when the Economic Recovery Tax Act passed, also known as the Gramm-Latt tax bill, the majority leader then said, "We are embarked on a riverboat gamble." And he certainly was prophetic in that announcement. Mr. Stockman later wrote a book indicating that he had pulled the wool over the eyes of Congress.

We are not only talking about the Senate and the House; what we are also talking about are the institutions like the Library of Congress. The Library of Congress, Mr. President, is something that we should all be very proud of. It is the finest library in the world, bar none. It has collections that are absolutely incredible.

The total amount appropriated at the Library of Congress in fiscal year 1992 is $304 million. That represents about 13 percent of the total appropriated in the legislative branch bill. It is two-hundredths of 1 percent of the total budget of the United States for this fiscal year. It is eight-hundredths of 1 percent of the estimated $400 billion deficit for this fiscal year.

We are talking about slashing the Library of Congress 25 percent. Let us get real, Mr. President. Let us talk about doing something that is meaningful to the American public, like providing health care, being concerned about jobs where people are unemployed, underemployed; people who have been out of work for a long, long period of time.

But what we are talking about doing tonight is whacking the Library of Congress, among other things, 25 percent. It is a national treasure. It is the foremost vessel of intellectual and cultural heritage in the world. It reaches out to every State in the Nation.

We have here, Mr. President, a couple of exhibits from the Library of Congress. During this era, these are the only two pictures of President Lincoln and his wife. But for the Library of Congress, there would be none in existence.

We have here also an art collection of one Nikolaus Thomas Host. The problem is people have come in the library and stolen all but one picture out of this book. We have been trying to preserve, during these past few years, these invaluable things that are collected in the Library of Congress. We have done that, and I think we have done a very good job.

The Library of Congress includes things other than books: Musical, photographic, broadcasting, recording manuscripts; and we are trying to save those. Two years ago, we provided the Library of Congress with 170 positions—that sounds like a lot—and really jumped up the chart that my friend from California has; 170 positions in this relatively small organization really kicked up that chart.

But why did we do it? Because there are 36 million items in the Library of Congress that are laying there being destroyed. Mildewed; rotting. Should we just get a truck in there and haul them to the dump? That is what we are going to have to do; 36 million items. With these 170 positions, we have been able to correct some of these deficiencies.

Unless we maintain the support for the Library, it will strangle on its acquisitions. Perhaps the author of this amendment believes we should simply stop acquiring materials and allow the Library to slide into second, third, and fourth or below rank of national libraries—Third World countries, rather than being the premier library in the world.

Mr. President, there are many other things in this Library that is right across the street. What should we do? Should we furlough the Library of Congress employees? Should we keep the Library open on Mondays and Tuesdays and close it the rest of the time?

We have guides that take around the millions of visitors that come to this Capitol every year; we have people that have guided tours around the Capitol. Maybe we should get rid of all those people.

I think the time has come for this body to stand up for its own. Do we want to do away with the Library of Congress and make it a second-rate operation?

The Congressional Reference Service is a very important service. When a constituent writes and wants to know about something CRS responds. The Congressional Reference Service is something that has been there for many, many years, and it helps us. Maybe our constituents should have to wait for 6 months, 8 months, and not have that.

The Copyright Office processes over 600,000 claims to copyright each year. We make money from that. If this amendment is adopted, we will lose about $7 million a year because we will not be able to keep up with the copyrights. We will drop behind significantly. It will cripple this very valuable service.

Going back briefly to the Library again, Mr. President, we have services there for the blind and physically handicapped. Should we eliminate those; eliminate 25 percent of that?

Cataloging efforts would be knocked out. We would have a 500-percent increase in the backlog of claims for the copyright service. The backlog would go up to 450,000. I said it would be a loss of $7 million. It would be a loss of $7.5 million in copyright receipts.

We have not spoken of the Secretary of the Senate. Most of the obligations of the Secretary of the Senate are—

I would ask unanimous consent that the chairman yield me an additional 7 minutes.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am pleased to yield to the distinguished Senator an additional 7 minutes.

Mr. REID. Mr. President we have not discussed the Secretary of the Senate.

The Office of Secretary of the Senate is responsible for functions set forth in statutes and in the rules of this Senate. They have things that they must fulfill, not for individual Senators, but for the people that we serve, the people that come to this Capitol on business, people that come to see the Capitol for the first time.

The Sergeant at Arms, provides the security for this facility. The Office of Technology Assessment, one of the finest small agencies that we have developed, is also an agency of the legislative branch of government. We could probably do away with that. But would that be the right thing to do?

The Congressional Budget Office. Should we whack that 25 percent? The Congressional Budget Office has given us an independent analysis and evaluation of the budget that the executive branch pours on us. Remember, we have a total of 38,000 employees; the whole legislative branch; the executive branch, 2.2 million employees. The Congressional Budget Office gives us the ability to respond intelligently to the massive programs and activities of the executive branch of government.

Mr. President, one of the pleasant things that I have had during my tenure as chairman of the Legislative Branch Committee is working with individuals who have been fair and non-partisan. I cannot say enough about the ranking member of the Legislative Branch Appropriations Committee. That is the junior Senator from the State of Washington. He has been fair. He has been impartial. I yield to my friend from the State of Washington.

Mr. GORTON. I am delighted at the offer, but I would just as soon let someone speak on the other side.

Mr. REID. I reserve the remainder of my time, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. How much time is remaining to the opponents of this amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The opponents control 47 minutes.

Mr. SASSER. And the proponents have how much time left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six minutes and twenty-four seconds.

Mr. SASSER. I am hopeful, Mr. President, we can shorten this debate because we have another couple of amendments and that others can follow the example of the Senator from Washington and let us move on as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. SASSER. I yield the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I rise in support of this amendment as a cospon-sor. I believe that if we are going to talk about budget cuts and fiscal restraint we ought to start right here at home.

This amendment reduces the legislative branch portion of the budget by a total of 25 percent over the next 2 years below the 1992 level. This cut is above and beyond the proposed 5-percent cut in the budget resolution.

The legislative branch budget has increased 102 percent from 1982 to 1992. Outlays for the legislative branch increased from $1.367 billion in fiscal year 1982, to $2.760 billion in fiscal year 1992.

The legislative branch staff now totals more than 38,000. This is the largest staff of any deliberative body in the world—10 times larger than that of Great Britain, Germany, Canada, and Japan.

Expenditures for Congress are out of sight. Expenditures for the Congress in fiscal year 1993 are estimated to be $5.05 million per Senator and $1.97 million per Representative.

Taxpayers cannot afford such a fiscally irresponsible Congress. In this time of $400 billion deficits and limited resources, Congress should be an example of fiscal responsibility, but has proven itself incapable of controlling its own spending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Minnesota seeks recognition.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is yielded 5 minutes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. President, I actually have not had all the graphs and charts before me, and I have not had an opportunity to go through all of the numbers of the Senator from California. But I would like to echo the remarks of the Senator from Nevada.

This is a very easy thing to do, to come out here with an amendment and say out the budget of the Congress by a third, or whatever. I heard the Senator from California point to the graph and say that the increase in the Senate budget had gone up by a higher percentage than the increase in Head Start and Chapter 1 and other such programs. It will be very interesting for the voters to look at how we voted, to find just who on this floor has been a strong advocate for those programs and who has not.

What I want to say, and the reason I rise to speak tonight with some anger, is that I do not feel this is necessarily an attack on myself, but I think it is an attack on a lot of people who work with us. Some of them are here tonight.

I go to my office every single night, 10, 11 at night, and I am absolutely amazed at the number of women and men who are working there, who care about public policy, who care about serving people. I am not ashamed to say on the floor of the Senate that I would not be able to do a good job representing people in my State if I did not have people who were working with me to provide me with information that I need, to help me go over policy so that I can make intelligent decisions.

There may be Senators who do not agree with me on the other side of the aisle. But I cannot believe there are not Senators on both sides of the aisle who know full well that there are many, many people—Mr. President, could I have order on the floor, please?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I cannot believe there are not Senators on both sides of the aisle who know full well we would not be able to do a good job of serving people—and we care about that—without the kind of support we have in our offices. I believe this is an attack on that.

Let me go on, Mr. President, and make one other point because I will not take all night. I do not remember when it was, it was not that long ago, I went back home and in 1 hour I was to meet with people who had called the office. I would like to compare notes with other Senators on this—3,000 people showed up to meet with me. Do you know why? These were people who had concrete problems. They called our office because people in this big, impersonal world expect us to come through for them at a personal level. I am not ashamed to say, on the floor of the Senate, I cannot return all of their phone calls and I cannot do all that case work and I cannot come through for people. I depend upon people in my office back in Minnesota to help me out.

I think this whole argument that we need to cut down on these people and these budgets and public service is tiresome. I think it is tiring. I think it is beside the point. I think it is irrelevant. And I think it simply is an attempt to do well politically. But it sure does not have much to do with why we are here, which is to serve people.

Mr. President, I will not take any more of my time except just to say to Senators on both sides of the aisle I really hope you will vote against this amendment because I think this amendment is really a challenge to, presumably, what we stand for and what we are trying to do as Senators, which is to do for people; which is to do well for people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota made a very emotional plea. I certainly commend him for feeling so strongly about his staff, wanting to do just as good a job as he is capable of doing for his constituents. I believe that every one of us on the floor wants the same. That is not what this is all about. You should not mistake this as an attack.

What this is really all about is leadership—leadership that is willing to make the cuts up front, the willingness and leadership to demonstrate that we have the courage to cut our own budget.

We have been debating cuts in our defense budget. That is easy, debating cuts in other areas of the budget. Now we are talking about us. And, oh how difficult it is when it gets in our own pocket.

I can tell you my people, the people I represent in California, are fed up. They are fed up with this. They are fed up with this kind of budget growth, especially when the Senate's budget is growing faster than the budgets of Medicare, than people who are unemployed, than all the mandatory programs, than food stamps, than Social Security, than defense programs; for welfare, for Federal retirement disability, for domestic programs, for veterans benefits. They are fed up. They want change. And I intend, as long as I am in this body, to be an agent of that change.

I do not mean to insult the Senator or any Member here, certainly not the staffs. His staff works hard, my staff works hard, they all work hard. But it is time we stand up and say no to unnecessary spending increases.

It has been suggested by Senator REID that all these cuts have to come out of the Library of Congress, that all the cuts have to come out of the staff here, 20,000 of them between the House of Representatives and what we have in the Senate—20,000. That is not so.

The Appropriations Committee can determine where to make, not a 25-percent cut in 1 year, but a 25-percent cut over 2 years. That is 12.5 percent a year. We so casually debate cutting the Department of Defense's budget—now well over 30 percent is what I am hearing debated when you take into consideration the 1990 budget agreement. It is OK to talk about cutting that over 30 percent. But do not talk about touching ours. That is sacrosanct.

So the Appropriations Committee is the committee that can determine where these cuts will be made over the 2-year period. They could come out of the Congressional Budget Office, the General Accounting Office, Architect of the Capitol, the Library of Congress, yes, Congressional Research Service, the Government Printing Office, the Botanical Gardens, the Copyright Office or, yes, the U.S. Senate or the House of Representatives. This is not so draconian, believe me, as one might think.

Let me also add, I showed the dramatic growth that has taken place since 1981. Let me also put it in perspective for you from a little different view.

The staff that works in the legislative branch is the largest staff of any deliberative body in the world. It is 10 times larger than that of Great Britain. It is 10 times larger than that of Germany and Canada and Japan. So it is not a question of being a demagog; it is not a question of being uncaring; it is not a question of not wanting to serve our constituents. I have 30 million of them. In fact, I run interns, volunteer interns, up to 35 of them at one time, to handle 15,000 pieces of mail a week I get. Thank God for those interns. So it is not about wanting to lash out or bash Congress. It is about leadership. It is about stepping up and saying I will tighten my belt first.

And so I suggest to my colleagues that this is not Congress bashing. Rather, I think it is responsible leadership.

I reserve the remainder of my time, Mr. President.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, who is seeking recognition?

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I would like 5 minutes.

Mr. SASSER. How much time does the Senator from Washington request?

Mr. GORTON. Ten minutes.

Mr. SASSER. How much time do I have left, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 42 minutes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I would like 5 minutes.

Mr. SASSER. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Washington—10 minutes? How much time is he requesting?

Mr. GORTON. Ten minutes.

Mr. SASSER. Ten minutes to the Senator from Washington; 10 minutes to the Senator from Nevada; and 5 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota. How much time would I have remaining, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixteen minutes.

Mr. SASSER. I hope that we can conclude this debate at the expiration of the time that will be consumed by these three Senators.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has 40 minutes remaining.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, tonight, in the view of this Senator, is fantasy time. Tomorrow morning, we will get a reality check. Tomorrow morning for the first time in several years in this body, we will deal with the true nature of the budget deficit. Tomorrow morning the distinguished Senator from New Mexico and our colleague from Georgia will give Members of this body the first opportunity they will have had in years to deal with the reality of budget deficits as against the illusion.

It is the view of this Senator that through most of the debate on this budget resolution so far we have dealt with the illusion and not with the reality, and that the amendment proposed by my good friend from California simply continues that illusion.

It is not the view of this Senator that continue self-flagellation by Members of this body of themselves and of their colleagues is likely either to reduce the budget deficit, which so horribly burdens the people of this country, nor will it lessen public criticism of the Congress and of its operations. Firing 25 percent of each Member's staff, discharging the competent young man assisting the Senator from California this evening, lessening his or her ability to deal with casework from home States or reducing his or her knowledge of the questions and issues debated on the floor of this Senate is not likely, in the view of this Senator at least, to improve either the performance or the perception of the Congress of the United States.

My friend and colleague from Nevada, who is the chairman of the Legislative Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, has pointed out that one of the largest single elements of the appropriations into the legislative branch goes to the Library of Congress. Neither we nor most of our constituents think of that library as being peculiarly the possession of the Congress of the United States, but it falls within the ambit of this amendment. It is the single most preeminent collection of knowledge and of history ever to have existed in the world.

I do not really believe that the Senator from California wants to inhibit the collections of the Library of Congress, to lessen its hours, to lessen its ability to acquire new materials, to lessen its ability to preserve those which it has at the present time and, indeed, he said in response to the Senator from Nevada, oh, no, we do not have to take the money there. Presumably, instead of taking money from there, we can take 33 percent from our staffs and make up for that.

I suppose he probably does not think that we should close down the Botanical Gardens, gardens which I confess I have not visited for several years but which I know have been visited by literally thousands of my constituents and the constituents of others.

I do not know whether or not he regards the way in which this Capitol Building itself is maintained as being overly luxurious, as being something which the people of the United States are offended by because of the art work it includes or the guides which lead them about it, or even the nature and the lighting and the facilities in this Chamber itself.

But he can avoid those questions by simply stating that he is not making any real decisions, he is just going to require an overall 25-percent cut.

We debate issues like that all too frequently, Mr. President, issues brought up by Members who are unwilling to say precisely what it is they want to do and, therefore, come up with mere percentages.

I am not here to defend every element of the appropriations for the legislative branch. I was critical last year and I remain critical this year of the operations of the General Accounting Office. I suspect if this amendment had been aimed at it and a few other elements within the legislative branch, that I might well have supported the Senator from California. But he does not give us that choice. He just says let us beat ourselves about the head and body once again in some highly generalized statement and we will all feel better.

Moreover, he knows that Members can vote for this amendment, look like they are doing something, with the full confidence that it will never actually become law or actually become a part of the policy of the United States because it will disappear somewhere along in the process.

Across the board percentage cuts, Mr. President, are an attempt to escape from reality both in Congress and in the Government as a whole.

When we see thoughtful criticisms of the way in which the Congress operates, pleased to deal with budget deficits, pleased with fiscal response from scholars and economists from the most liberal and most conservative, they do not ask us for 25-percent cuts in the legislative branch because they know it will not have any effect on the budget deficit at all. They ask us to be responsible in the fashion we will ask to be responsible by the Senators from New Mexico and Georgia tomorrow. To lessen our ability and deal with the executive branch, to lessen our ability to deal with the jobs we have here, to lessen the glory which is the Capitol of the United States, the Library of Congress and many other institutions which are under our jurisdiction, is not the way to make the United States of America a brighter and a better and a more responsible place.

Mr. REID addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. REID. No doubt, Mr. President, this amendment is intended as a symbolic gesture. And so it is. But I believe it symbolizes something more than what the author intends. It is in its way almost the perfect emblem for the kind of silly political posturing that contributes to policy deadlock and feeds public cynicism about our democratic political system.

It is no wonder that the American public doubts the seriousness and purpose of its elected leadership when the Senate of the United States is required to spend time debating this kind of meaningless proposal. While millions of people in this country are without health insurance, we debate 25-percent cuts to the legislative branch. Today we had a presentation that now it has arrived at 40 million people with no health insurance. That does not count those who are underinsured. Millions are unemployed, millions are underemployed, and millions have dropped entirely out of the labor force because they are too discouraged even to look for work.

At the same time, a series of sea changes have swept the international political and economic landscape. Mr. President, we no longer have anyone to go to war with. And then is it any wonder that we are talking about cutting the defense budget?

Yet, we as a Nation have no plan for confronting the challenges to our national security. And remember, Mr. President, our national security includes educated children, healthy children, healthy women who can have babies that are healthy, and economic welfare that meets the demands of this burgeoning population.

But, of course, we have time to spend discussing unrealistic and potentially destructive amendments like this. No wonder, Mr. President, so many of our colleagues have decided to hang it up. This is not a profile in courage. This is not leadership. This is political campaigning.

We talk about this being the largest legislative branch in the world, and it is. But you cannot compare it to parliamentary systems of government. They are two totally different systems. In a parliamentary system, the chief executive is a committee of the legislators, with all the resources of the civil service at its disposal.

We have an independent legislature. We have 38,000 people who make up the entire legislative branch of Government. A part of those, about half of them, consist of employees of this body and the other body. These people that my friend from the State of Minnesota talked about as an example, my friend from the State of Washington talked about, are people who have to be prepared on a minute's notice to respond to the 2.2 million people who make up the executive branch of Government. It is a different system. Of course, it is a large legislative body, but it is independent. Any time the Senator from California wants to cut his budget 25 percent, he can do that. He does not have to spend the money. There are people in this body who return money every year, some more than others.

The legislative branch of Government these past years has been very responsible. One of the public outcries, and rightfully so, was with franking. We have not solved all those problems, but we have done a lot toward making franking something that is reasonable. We have public disclosure. Anyone at any time now in this body or in the other body can find out how much mail someone sends out under the frank. Those were reforms that we have developed the last few years. We have cut franking costs by millions and millions of dollars. We, of course, can perhaps do better, but we are working on that. We have had hearings in relation to that.

I have people talk to me. I know my friend, the senior Senator from Kentucky, chairman of the Rules Committee, has people talking to him, and Senator STEVENS, the ranking member on Rules, about security. People are being killed, staff people are being killed within walking distance of the Capitol, the office buildings. Personnel of this legislative branch are being raped, and mugged, and robbed and we need to supply security. That is what part of this money is, Mr. President. Do we want to cut security? Do we want to have fewer police officers when everybody is demanding more?

I respectfully submit to the junior Senator from California that this amendment is ill-advised, that we should be debating the weighty measures which have come before us this day and yesterday and will come tomorrow dealing with how we should divide up the savings we are going to get because we no longer are at war with the former Soviet Union. That is what these debates should be about.

If there are ways we can cut this legislative branch budget more than 5 percent, we will do it. But to have this draconian suggestion, 25 percent cuts, so that somebody can get their name in the newspaper tomorrow is irresponsible. If this amendment is adopted, I repeat, people who have caseworkers at home will no longer have those caseworkers at home. People who want to use the finest library in the world will have to use it under restricted conditions. People who depend on the Congressional Budget Office to give us figures in relation to the 2.2 million people who work for the executive branch of Government will not be able to get that information, and on and on and on. This amendment is an amendment that is not well taken and it should be defeated.

Mr. SEYMOUR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, I would yield the Senator from Alaska 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska is recognized.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, my name was used in the debate, and I was going to stay out of this, but I want to state that contrary to what has been raised here on the floor, when Senator Baker became the leader in 1981, we did reduce these expenses by 15 percent. We then reduced them the next year also. If you look at the chart, it will show that in 1982 and 1983 it was practically level. There were some increases.

We did not touch the Library of Congress and we did not touch these other agencies that people are mentioning, but we did reduce our own salaries. We did reduce our staff salaries on the committees. Despite the fact that we were in the majority, we took two-thirds of the reduction on the majority side.

I intend to support the Senator's amendment. I think it would be difficult for the Appropriations Committee to handle it, but it does have a precedent and it is time that we considered this action. It is necessary, whether we like it or not.

I am sad to say I disagree with my friend from Nevada. It is time we recognize the tremendous feeling in this country against this body. People believe we have too many people to help us; that we are spending too much of their money.

I do not think it is right to attack the amendment as being inflexible because it will be flexible. None of the budget resolution is specific. There is nothing here that is specifically saying, take it out of the Library of Congress, or take it out of GAO, or something else. It is strictly a cut and says to those of us on the Appropriations Committee cut this function, Function 800 by 12½ percent this year and 12½ percent next year.

I tell you, my memory is we did that well at least by order of the newly elected leader in 1981 and 1982. So I intend to support the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SEYMOUR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, I guess I just have not been back here long enough. When I started out in public service as a councilman and mayor, I dealt in millions of dollars in our budget. When I became a State Senator in the California State Legislature, we dealt with billion-dollar budgets, and back here we deal with trillions of dollars.

It has been suggested this amendment really is an illusion; it will do nothing. I remind my colleagues that what this amendment would do over a period of 5 years is save $2 billion. Now, which one of us would not want to have $2 billion to help out veterans, or maybe $2 billion to help out battered women?

We talk about the Library of Congress. That is included in the legislative branch. However, Congress' budget has not been growing significantly; in programs and agencies outside of the operations of Congress. It is in our budget, the U.S. Senate, and it is in the House budget that has been driving the total cost of the legislative branch upward.

So let me suggest that this is not an illusion. This is real money. It is $2 billion of real money.

To my colleague, for whom I have the greatest respect for, from Washington, he says this will not become law. Maybe it will not. Maybe it will not, but I am not going to stop trying.

If this should be defeated tonight, I will be back on the appropriations bill. Maybe then I will succeed.

It was suggested that these percentages in the underlying resolution are not a good idea. It also has been said that Senator DOMENICI tomorrow is going to make us think a great deal because he is going to talk about the bigger problem. He is going to talk in percentages.

I think talking percentages gives the Appropriations Committee the flexibility to be sensitive to the cuts, whether or not they be in the U.S. Senate, in our staff, the House of Representatives, or combine, or whether it is in the Copyright Office, or the CBO, or the GAO. And my amendment also provides the flexibility to the Appropriations Committee to do what they think is best.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SEYMOUR. Certainly, if I may finish.

The budget in the U.S. Senate is $488 million. If my math is correct, I divide that by 100, that is $4.88 million per Member. That is substantial.

Mr. FORD. Will the Senator yield, Mr. President?

Mr. SEYMOUR. I think Senator REID wanted me to yield to him, and then I will be happy to yield.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, he left the impression that every Senator in here has $4.8 million in his office. That is not true. The Senator is charging us the same as with the Library of Congress, Botanical Gardens, and with everything else. And that is not true, and the inference is wrong.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, what I said was the budget of the U.S. Senate, not the Library of Congress, not the Government Printing Office, not the Botanical Gardens, not CBO, not the House of Representatives. The U.S. Senate is $488 million.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SEYMOUR. Yes.

Mr. REID. Will the Senator from California tell us how much money he returned last year of this Senate budget, which is one of the largest of the Senate?

Mr. SEYMOUR. I know I represent 30 million people in the State of California, much larger than any State in the country. I cannot answer the Senator from Nevada's question, but I will be happy to match the budget of the Senator for 30 million people to many Members' budgets here.

Mr. REID. The question was, how much money did the Senator return last year?

Mr. SEYMOUR. I cannot answer the question, Mr. President.

Mr. REID addresses the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has the floor.

Mr. REID. I thought he yielded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from California yielding the floor?

Mr. SEYMOUR. Yes; I yield the floor. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. REID addressed the Chair.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I want the record to reflect that the legislative branch Appropriations Committee during the tenure of Senator REID, Senator NICKLES, who was ranking member for a period of time—we have a good relationship. And then Senator GORTON has been one—where we have been very frugal.

The point of the matter, as I indicated in the initial statement, there were increases that we made. For example, we talked about the 170 employees for the Library of Congress. Those are important.

I think that we have established during these past few years that it has been necessary to cut down what comes out of this body.

I repeat what I said when I made my opening statement. I am chairman of the legislative branch Subcommittee on Appropriations. It is up to the individual Senators of this body to determine whether they have 25 percent too much staff, and whether the Library of Congress should be cut, the Botanical Gardens, Secretary of the Senate, Sergeant at Arms. That is a decision they have to make. If they make that decision, I as chairman of the legislative branch Appropriations Committee will do my very best to be fair in the distribution of the 25-percent less money that is garnered in this appropriations season.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I agree with the message of this amendment. The distinguished Senator from California is right—Congress is not doing as good a job as it should. The people are angry with Congress, and they have every right to be. We still are stuck hopelessly in the status quo, unwilling to respond to changes in the world and to the pressing needs of our country.

The votes earlier today in opposition to a modest reduction in the defense budget prove that better than anything.

However, Mr. President, while the message is right, the amendment does not accomplish what it intends to do.

The amendment aims at Congress, but it misses its mark. Instead, I will tell you where it is going to hit.

First, it is going to hit the Library of Congress.

Mr. President, the Library of Congress is one of the great institutions of this Nation. The Library's collection is available not only to Congress itself, but to every American. To scientists seeking to find a cure for deadly diseases. To historians exploring the origins of our great country. To scholars seeking answers to society's greatest problems.

Mr. President, we ought to be proud of the Library of Congress. We ought to support it. If the Library's budget contains some things that can be cut, by all means let us cut it. But a blind, 25-percent cut adopts a foolish, meat-ax approach that will bloody a truly great American institution.

Mr. President, this amendment will also devastate another institution within the legislative branch that is absolutely essential to effective oversight of the Government bureaucracy—the General Accounting Office.

Mr. President, a lot of Americans may not have heard of the General Accounting Office. But each and every American has benefited by the Office's work. GAO investigators have rooted out fraud and inefficiencies throughout Government. They have saved taxpayers countless billions of dollars.

Mr. President, to cut the GAO is penny-wise and pound-foolish in the extreme. It would mean that Government bureaucrats would be much more free to waste taxpayer money. More free to ignore statutory directives. More free to abuse the rights of the Americans they are supposed to serve.

That makes no sense, Mr. President, and I will not support it.

Mr. President, there are other important agencies that would be cut severely under this amendment, such as the Congressional Budget Office, which provides a crucial function in overseeing the fiscal condition of the Government. In addition, the Botanical Gardens would be slashed.

In sum, Mr. President, the amendment will hit not so much the Members of Congress, who may well deserve a cut, but other important agencies. If adopted, the ultimate losers will be the American people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SEYMOUR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, let me ask, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has 32 minutes remaining.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time if the chairman is willing to do the same.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I am prepared to, in the event that the Senator from California yields back his time, yield back my time.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Are we prepared to go to a vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time yielded back?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time, but I send to the desk a second-degree amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

Mr. STEVENS. Wait just a minute. The understanding was we yield back the time and go to a vote.

Mr. SASSER. That is not the understanding of the chairman, the manager of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The second-degree amendment cannot be offered until all time is yielded back.

Mr. SASSER. Has all time been yielded back?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

AMENDMENT NO. 1770 TO AMENDMENT NO. 1769

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER] proposes an amendment numbered 1770.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 1, line 1 of the amendment, increase the amount by $137,000,000.

On page 1, line 2 of the amendment, increase the amount by $147,000,000.

On page 1, line 3 of the amendment, increase the amount by $146,000,000.

On page 1, line 4 of the amendment, increase the amount by $145,000,000.

On page 1, line 5 of the amendment, increase the amount by $145,000,000.

On page 1, line 6 of the amendment, increase the amount by $110,000,000.

On page 1, line 7 of the amendment, increase the amount by $145,000,000.

On page 1, line 8 of the amendment, increase the amount by $146,000,000.

On page 1, line 9 of the amendment, increase the amount by $145,000,000.

On page 1, line 10 of the amendment, increase the amount by $145,000,000.

On page 1, line 11 of the amendment, increase the amount by $110,000,000.

On page 1, line 12 of the amendment, increase the amount by $145,000,000.

On page 1, line 13 of the amendment, increase the amount by $146,000,000.

On page 1, line 14 of the amendment, increase the amount by $145,000,000.

On page 1, line 15 of the amendment, increase the amount by $145,000,000.

On page 1, line 16 of the amendment, increase the amount by $110,000,000.

On page 1, line 17 of the amendment, increase the amount by $145,000,000.

On page 1, line 18 of the amendment, increase the amount by $146,000,000.

On page 1, line 19 of the amendment, increase the amount by $145,000,000.

On page 1, line 20 of the amendment, increase the amount by $145,000,000.

On page 2, line 1 of the amendment, increase the amount by $137,000,000.

On page 2, line 2 of the amendment, increase the amount by $110,000,000.

On page 2, line 3 of the amendment, increase the amount by $147,000,000.

On page 2, line 4 of the amendment, increase the amount by $145,000,000.

On page 2, line 5 of the amendment, increase the amount by $146,000,000.

On page 2, line 6 of the amendment, increase the amount by $146,000,000.

On page 2, line 7 of the amendment, increase the amount by $145,000,000.

On page 2, line 8 of the amendment, increase the amount by $145,000,000.

On page 2, line 9 of the amendment, increase the amount by $145,000,000.

On page 2, line 10 of the amendment, increase the amount by $145,000,000.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, what I am offering, I say to my colleagues, is simply a simple 25-percent cut of the Executive Office of the President, and each of the agency management offices. If it is a good idea to cut the legislative branch—and maybe it is—then it strikes me as an appropriate signal to send to the American people that we also reduce the executive branch.

The Executive Office of the President has certainly engaged in their fair share of waste in Government. Just the day before yesterday, two reports came out detailing how travel expenses of senior White House staff have been, to say the least, somewhat lavish.

Yesterday, the Office of Government Ethics released a report concluding that senior White House staff were using military aircraft for personal travel, including vacations. And this keeps coming out day after day.

If the goal is to control the size of Government—and I sympathize with that, we have a 5-percent reduction in the legislative branch in our resolution—let us look and see where the growth is. The number of full-time employees of the executive branch has grown, in terms of numbers of employees by 8 percent from 1981 to 1991, while the size of legislative branch has declined by 5 percent during the same 10-year period.

The executive branch is over 5 times bigger than the legislative branch. I do not see why we should take a big hunk out of a small pie and just nibble at the edges of the executive branch.

So would the Senator from California be willing to accept this second-degree amendment?

Mr. SEYMOUR. Yes; I certainly would. And further, if it were to be accepted on a voice vote, I would like to have a rollcall on mine.

Mr. SASSER. We would be willing to accept the amendment of the Senator from California without a rollcall.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I would like to have a rollcall.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I yield back all time on my amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back our time in opposition to the second-degree amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the Sasser amendment.

The amendment (No. 1770) was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. Is the Senator from California insisting on a rollcall to his amendment? We will be able to accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered. All time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have already been ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. FORD. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIXON], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] are necessarily absent.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WALLOP] would vote "yea".

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DASCHLE). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 42, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 74 Leg.]

NOT VOTING—6

Bradley	Gramm	Wallop
Dixon	Pryor	Wirth

So the amendment (No. 1769), as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

The Senator from Tennessee.

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until 9:30 a.m.; that following the prayer, the Journal of the proceedings be deemed as approved to date; the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day; and that the Senate resume consideration of the pending business, the concurrent resolution on the budget, with Senator DOMENICI to be recognized to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the budget resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, reserving the right to object. Mr. President, I wonder if I could inquire of the chairman: This means that we would be on the budget at 9:30 in the morning?

Mr. SASSER. It is my understanding, following the prayer, that we would move directly to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. DANFORTH. And that there is 2 hours on an amendment, and that amendment presumably will take the 2 hours.

I am wondering if it would be possible to move the schedule up, either by having some of the debate tonight, or perhaps yielding back some of the time, or perhaps starting the debate earlier in the morning.

For those who have plane reservations or who have changed plane reservations, I can see us having quite a long day. I do not know how much time we have left, 7 hours, or something, I guess. When you factor in the votes, which are not counted, it could be late afternoon, I suppose, tomorrow before we finish this up.

I wonder if we could do either some of the debating tonight or run some of the time tonight or start earlier in the morning.

Mr. SASSER. No, I do not think so, I say to my friend from Missouri. We were surprised a little earlier today with the first notification we had of a substitute for the resolution that would be offered. There was a press conference that was held by the distinguished ranking members and others in this body. As result of that, I think you are going to find that the entire time remaining will be consumed. And when the Domenici substitute is laid down tomorrow, and as we proceed through that, I think Members ought to be aware that we will exhaust, in my judgment, all the time remaining on the resolution. And we could be in session until late tomorrow afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I regret to tell my friend that I do not see how we can accommodate him. I am not sure how the morning will evolve once the amendment is laid down. But I do not see how we can agree to debate it this evening. The purpose of the debate tomorrow literally, as I see it, is for three or four Senators who have an idea to thoroughly discuss it. I do not think we can do that tonight and I do not think we can do it in 10 minutes.

But we will not abuse the time. We have been waiting for a long time. We had many other amendments. I am not critical, but we took over 9 hours on one amendment on a defense cut. I think it was 9 hours.

We may not need an hour, but I think we ought to count on it for the morning. And I apologize. I know the Senator has a schedule that makes this difficult, but I cannot do it any other way.

Mr. DANFORTH. Further reserving the right to object, I wonder if the managers have an idea as to how many more amendments there will be.

Mr. SASSER. I am afraid we do, I say to my friend from Missouri. There are 12 amendments. I think eight of these amendments perhaps we can dispose of after we dispose of this unanimous-consent request. I think eight of them can perhaps be disposed of very quickly this evening.

Mr. DANFORTH. This evening?

Mr. SASSER. Yes. We are going to attempt to do that.

Mr. DANFORTH. Just one further question, if I might. Nine thirty is what might be called bankers' hours. I wonder if perhaps the debate might start at perhaps 8 o'clock so that the first vote could be at 10 o'clock.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I would like to accommodate my friend from Missouri but some of us have been standing on this floor, now, for 3 days. And almost 20-hour days. I think in my judgment we ought to stick with the 9:30 hour of coming in tomorrow.

It is hardly banker's hours to be adjourning here at 11:30 in the evening. As my friend from Missouri knows, we start late. I suppose our motto is here: We work late. We may doze but we never close, here in the U.S. Senate. So we will be here, I suspect, fairly late tomorrow.

Mr. DECONCINI. Will the distinguished chairman yield?

Mr. SASSER. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. DECONCINI. I appreciate the agony the distinguished chairman and ranking member are going through here trying to get us out. I have a simple amendment. I know the committee is even willing to accept it, but I do want a vote on it. Can I get some assurance from the distinguished chairman I will get a chance for a vote, the body will get a chance to vote on this amendment sometime within an hour or 2 hours after the Domenici amendment is disposed of?

I have to leave town. I would like to get out of here. I understand that is not the chairman's problem; that is my problem. But I have been waiting since yesterday morning to offer this amendment. It is no fault of the Chairman.

Mr. SASSER. Let me say to my friend from Arizona, I am unable to give an iron-clad assurance. But I tell him, we will do everything humanly possible tomorrow to make sure that the Senator gets a vote early in the day on his amendment.

Mr. DECONCINI. I thank the chairman.

Mr. DOMENICI. We will take it tonight, and we will stipulate you have 100 votes if you would like that.

Mr. DECONCINI. I understand the Senator wants to make a point of that. I will be glad to argue with him about his amendment being offered in the wee hours of the evening, for the press conference here, and keeping us here all that time.

Mr. DOMENICI. I am sorry, Senator, I did not mean that. I just looked at the amendment. I think everybody accepts it. That is all I meant.

Mr. DECONCINI. If the Senator from New Mexico will give me the same assurance as did the Senator from Tennessee, I will be glad to sit down.

Mr. DOMENICI. I will be glad to. Indeed I will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the unanimous-consent request is agreed to.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following amendments be the only first-degree amendments in order to the resolution:

A Fowler-Exon amendment on veterans affairs;

A Roth amendment stating the sense of the Congress on a Government Reform Commission;

A Wellstone amendment stating the sense of the Congress on defense conversion;

A Seymour amendment stating the sense of the Congress on defense dislocated workers;

A DeConcini-Johnston-Chafee amendment stating the sense of the Congress on levels for the WIC Program;

A D'Amato amendment on the importing of vans;

A Reid amendment stating the sense of the Congress on authorizing committee analysis of programs;

A D'Amato amendment on welfare shopping;

A Glenn-Sanford amendment stating the sense of the Congress regarding the President's submission of a balanced budget;

A Grassley sense-of-the-Congress amendment on deficit reduction from defense cuts;

A Riegle sense-of-the-Congress amendment regarding investment and competitiveness; and

A Domenici-Nunn-Rudman-Robb substitute, and germane first-degree amendments thereto;

And that debate on the Glenn and DeConcini amendments be limited to 20 minutes each equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object, and I do not believe I will object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEATH OF FORMER SENATOR GALE W. MCGEE

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I note with sadness the death of Gale W. McGee today, and extend my sympathies to his wife Loraine and their four children, including Gale's son Bob who I enjoy working with here in Washington. He served for 18 years as a distinguished U.S. Senator from Wyoming, and was an effective and respected colleague of mine on the Committee on Foreign Relations. He served on the Committee on Foreign Relations from 1966 to 1967 and again from 1969 to 1977. He was chairman of the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs, and continued his distinguished contributions to our Nation's foreign policy after leaving the Senate as the U.S.

Ambassador to the Organization of American States.

During his distinguished career in the Senate, Gale McGee was a strong and effective advocate of a strong U.S. leadership role in international organizations, particularly the United Nations. He took this courageous and far-sighted position in the face of much opposition and criticism of the United Nations and the U.S. role in it at that time.

With the new challenges facing the international community in the aftermath of the cold war, the United Nations is the institution upon which the global community is relying increasingly to deal with local and regional crises from Cambodia, to Angola, to Yugoslavia, to El Salvador. The United Nations proved indispensable to the success of the United States-led coalition's efforts to reverse Saddam Hussein's aggression against Kuwait during the Persian Gulf war of a year ago.

Gale McGee's belief in, and commitment to, a viable United Nations has been more than vindicated as that institution shoulders the primary responsibility for not only international peacekeeping, but peacemaking as well.

While the nature of U.S. leadership in the international community will have to accommodate a rapidly changing world, there is a fundamental reality which remains—a reality that Gale McGee was particularly effective in compelling us to confront as a Nation. And that reality is the simple fact that in order to deal effectively with the new challenges to global stability a continued, active, U.S. leadership role in the world is required.

If there is one lesson of history that Gale McGee taught us so well and which we should heed, particularly during these times, it is that if the United States forgoes its international leadership role in helping to manage change, then the change will manage us. Gale McGee's is the leadership role we should strive to emulate. After all, the end to the cold war is a triumph of the leadership of democracy and democratic values. This triumph would not have been achieved if the world's pre-eminent democracy had not carried out its responsibilities as a world power.

Gale McGee made a distinguished contribution to this triumph of democracy and democratic values, a contribution we remember with pride on this sad day for his family and his colleagues in the Senate.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a pending unanimous-consent request propounded by the Senator from Tennessee. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. I have no objection. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Hearing no objection, it is so ordered.

The text of the agreement is as follows:

Ordered, That during the further consideration of S. Con. Res. 106, a concurrent resolution setting forth the congressional budget for the United States Government for fiscal years 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, and 1997, the following amendments be the only first degree amendments in order to the resolution:

D'Amato: An amendment regarding the importing of vans;

D'Amato: An amendment on welfare shopping;

DeConcini/Johnston/Chafee: An amendment stating the sense of the Congress on levels for the WIC program, on which there shall be 20 minutes debate, equally divided;

Domenici/Nunn/Rudman/Robb: A substitute amendment and germane first-degree amendments thereto;

Glenn/Sanford: An amendment stating the sense of the Congress regarding the President's submission of a Balanced Budget, on which there shall be 20 minutes, equally divided;

Grassley: An amendment stating the sense of the Congress on deficit reduction from Defense cuts;

Roth: An amendment stating the sense of the Congress on a Government Reform Commission;

Seymour: An amendment stating the sense of the Congress on Defense dislocated workers; and Wellstone: An amendment stating the sense of the Congress on Defense conversion.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I assume we are going to try to dispose of some of the amendments yet this evening?

Mr. SASSER. Yes. That is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. Before we do that, might I just ask consent to proceed for 3 minutes as in morning business, 2 minutes for myself and 1 minute for Senator SPECTER?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. DOMENICI and Mr. SPECTER pertaining to the introduction of S. 2612 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada has an amendment which I think he wishes to call up that will be acceptable on both sides, as I understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

AMENDMENT NO. 1771

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of myself and Senator DASCHLE and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID], for himself and Mr. DASCHLE, proposes an amendment numbered 1771.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the resolution add the following new section:

"SEC. . PROGRAM BUDGET EVALUATION.

"(A) Findings—

"(1) The current national debt stands at $3.1 trillion;

"(2) The federal deficit for fiscal year 1993 is projected to add another $350 billion to that debt; and

"(3) It is crucial to the well being of future generations of Americans that federal deficits be eliminated and the national debt reduced;

"(B) Sense of the Senate—

"It is the Sense of the Senate that prior to the commencement of the 104th Congress, each authorizing committee of the Senate should conduct a comprehensive reexamination and evaluation of existing programs under its jurisdiction which result in the expenditure of federal dollars, and report its findings to the Senate.

"Such committee reports should consider the following matters:

"(1) an identification of the objectives intended for the program and the problem it was intended to address.

"(2) an identification of any trends, developments, and emerging conditions which are likely to affect the future nature and extent of the problems or needs which the program is intended to address.

"(3) an identification of any other program having potentially conflicting or duplicative objectives.

"(4) a statement of the number and types of beneficiaries or persons served by the program.

"(5) an assessment of the effectiveness of the program and the degrees to which the original objectives of the program or group of programs have been achieved.

"(6) an assessment of the cost effectiveness of the program.

"(7) an assessment of the relative merits of alternative methods which could be considered to achieve the purpose of the program."

Mr. REID. Mr. President, my amendment states that it is the intent of the Senate to take the first step to get to the job of real deficit reduction. There will be many amendments offered to this budget resolution to reduce spending. I will support some of them because they will have merit. However, one important ingredient will be missing from the deliberation of all these proposals. We will be deciding these proposals in a vacuum. There will be no way to measure their worth against the relative worth of other spending programs.

Mr. President, we need to know more about what we are doing when we make decisions on Federal programs. For example, there are more than a dozen executive branch agencies that have responsibility for providing assistance to the homeless. I am sure that most of my colleagues did not know this, and I imagine even fewer know what these agencies actually do. How much do these programs cost? How much money is wasted due to bureaucratic infighting? How much more efficiently and economically could these programs be managed if they were consolidated?

These are issues that are not being considered by the Senate because there is no comprehensive and organized body of information available to answer these questions.

I do not mean to single out programs for the homeless as being particularly inefficient. In fact, I am a strong supporter of providing aid for these unfortunate Americans. I merely wish to point out that with the homeless programs, as with many other Federal programs, Congress' left hand does not know what its right hand is doing. Congress is, in many cases, wasting the time of executive branch agencies and the money of taxpayers because we do not spend the time necessary to occasionally make a comprehensive examination of existing programs. In an era when every penny must be stretched to the limit, this state of affairs cannot be allowed to continue.

What the Senate needs to make intelligent decisions on its spending priorities is a comprehensive and organized evaluation of the various spending programs under our jurisdiction. My amendment will get us moving in that direction.

Mr. President, my amendment is only one section of a comprehensive budget reform package that I will be introducing in the near future. With the exception of Social Security, Medicare, Federal pensions, and certain other programs, this legislation will force Congress to evaluate and reauthorize nearly every Federal spending program at least once every 10 years if these programs are to continue.

The first step in this direction is to require our committees to review and evaluate the programs under their jurisdiction. I cannot imagine anyone questioning the need for such review and evaluation. However, Congress, and in particular the Senate, has become a firehouse. Instead of proactive work we are performing reactive work. As things stand now, Congress has come to rely on gimmicks to consolidate and streamline programs. We have the infamous budget deal of 1990 which has tied Congress' hands and made it nearly impossible to adjust funding to meet the Nation's needs in the changed world of 1992. And we have the mindless rush to surrender accountability to the private sector in the name of an economic theory: privatization. What concerns me more than these legislative fads, however, is a phenomenon that has driven several Senators to quit this body in frustration. This body has become a legislative crisis management team. The Congress no longer seems to be able to put forward thoughtful, ordered, and comprehensive solutions to our national needs. Instead, we rush down here on the Senate floor day in and day out and vote on emergency, Band-aid proposals to our serious national problems.

I firmly believe that many of these crises can be prevented by a systematic reauthorization of our major national policies. The bill I intend to introduce, by requiring a periodic comprehensive review of Federal spending programs, will enable Congress to become more proactive and a lot less reactive. It will allow us to return to enacting long-term policies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment (No. 1771) was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1772

(Purpose: To increase funding for veterans' programs)

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators FOWLER, EXON, and CRANSTON, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER], for Mr. FOWLER (for himself, Mr. EXON, and Mr. CRANSTON), proposes an amendment numbered 1772.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 34, line 17, increase the figure by $1,800,000,000.

On page 34, line 18, increase the figure by $1,100,000,000.

On page 42, line 15, decrease the figure by $1,800,000,000.

On page 42, line 16, decrease the figure by $1,100,000,000.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, this is an amendment offered by Senators FOWLER, EXON, and CRANSTON dealing with the question of veterans affairs. This amendment, as I understand it, is acceptable on both sides.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I rise today to offer an amendment which I believe is in keeping with the long-standing commitment made to our Nation's veterans. The amendment is co-sponsored by my distinguished colleagues Senator CRANSTON, chairman of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee and Senator EXON, who authored an amendment practically identical to this one last year during the budget resolution debate.

I know I do not have to point out the very difficult choices the Congress has to make in this budget process. We are being so reminded everyday as we go back to our states, to our constituents and hear the real-life stories of hardships and despair. Some of the loudest cries we are hearing are from our veterans and while I know this amendment will not alleviate all their suffering, I offer it today to demonstrate to our veterans that they are not forgotten; to show that we will not turn our backs on them; to show that when the parade is over the Congress will marshal all the resources we can to improve the medical care they receive and to help speed up delivery of services and processing of claims to veterans and their loved ones. We owe them no less.

Last month I visited the veteran's hospital in Dublin, GA, and I spent time talking to the men and women at the facility. I went there because the administration had threatened to reduce the level of care offered through the center's surgical unit. The facility served 67,000 veterans in 1991 and has one of the finest staff and administrators in this country. Yet they continue to struggle to provide decent, quality health care to the men and women they serve. They do so out of their own sense of public service and commitment. It is in that same spirit that I invite all my colleagues to join with me today in supporting this effort.

We have all heard from veterans in our State about dramatic cuts in services at veterans' hospitals and those of us who visit these facilities at home know of the effects of these cuts first hand. Many of our veterans are literally being turned away from these hospitals because of budget cutbacks. This, I say to you, cannot be allowed to continue. It cannot stand. The Congress must act and we must act now. And I propose we act under the guidance of the authorizing committee, Veterans' Affairs, and leadership by a member whose dedication to our veterans is unmatched—Senator ALAN CRANSTON.

Specifically, my amendment follows the recommendation the Veterans' Affairs Committee made to the Budget Committee with regard to discretionary spending for veterans' programs by adding $1.8 billion in budget authority and $1.1 billion in outlays to Function 700, Veterans' Benefits and Services. This increase represents an increase over the President's budget by $982 million in budget authority and $673 million in outlays. Now the funding level for veteran's programs in the budget resolution before us today is even less than that proposed by the President. The $1.8 billion in BA and $1.1 billion in outlays in this amendment represents the difference between the Veterans' Affairs Committee's recommendation and the pending budget resolution. The recommendation of the authorizing committee was a bipartisan one—enjoying the support of the distinguished Senator and ranking minority member from Pennsylvania, Mr. SPECTER. In sum, the amendment would raise the budget for domestic discretionary spending for veterans' programs to $17.5 billion in budget authority and $16.8 in outlays.

The increase contained in this amendment will enable the VA to take steps to reduce the $864 million backlog of wornout and outdated equipment that exists in its medical facilities. These additional resources will help provide more hospital-based home care, traumatic brain-injury care, blind rehabilitation services, and veterans homeless services.

I have to stop here for a moment because it does trouble me a great deal to know that any American is homeless but to use the phrase I just used—homeless veterans—gives me a chill. Some experts estimate that about one-third of the homeless are veterans—mostly Vietnam-era servicepeople. To know that we can house a serviceman or woman while in the Persian Gulf—thousands of miles away in a foreign culture and land—and to come home and have no home at all—nowhere to live—should give every Member of Congress and the President, our Commander-in-Chief, cause to consider just what our commitment to our veterans means.

Many veterans in my State have called me to complain that VA pharmacies no longer carry medication they need and they cannot get a prescription filled through the VA for certain drugs. Mr. President, we all recall that the Senate just recently chose not to adopt an amendment offered by Senator PRYOR to the tax bill which I supported and which I believe would have resulted in the substantial lowering of the cost of prescription drugs. I am not here to continue that debate today. But this action by the VA is the direct result of the skyrocketing cost of certain drugs and we in the Congress now find ourselves in the position of having to pay—one way or another—for these excesses. My amendment will allow increased funding for pharmaceuticals.

In addition to these discretionary medical-care related areas, we have got to make provision for areas not adequately accounted for in the President's budget such as services for veterans with posttraumatic stress disorder [PTSD], mental illness research, hospice services and rural health-care clinics and counseling for Persian Gulf war veterans.

The additional resources provided in this amendment will also allow the VA to improve the timeliness and quality of its services in answering and processing veterans' compensation, pension, and education claims. Right now, more than 25 percent of callers seeking assistance from a veterans benefits counselor cannot get through on the telephone lines. The VA estimates that it will conduct 8.3 million telephone interviews in fiscal year 1993. This number represents over 80 percent of the VA's public contacts. The ability to deliver these services simply must be improved.

I know that I must offer an offset to pay for this increase in funding and I am prepared to do so. My amendment would take $1.8 billion in budget authority and $1.1 billion in outlays from function 920, the allowances function.

This proposal puts forth the real question today: Are we in the Congress willing to make the sacrifices we have asked our veterans to make? This amendment will require the appropriators, of which I am one, to make up these savings. We will have to make the Government more efficient in order to provide better quality health care for our veterans; we will have to recognize our priorities to give our veterans their just due.

I pledge myself to this task and Members supporting this amendment signal their willingness to make the same sacrifices.

Should any of us feel any hesitation or pause in supporting increased funding for veterans' programs, I would remind you that our service men and women have risked their all so that even those who doubt the extent of the debt we owe our veterans can stand here as a free American and say whatever you care to about it. This, we take for granted but we must never forget that freedom cost and veterans have paid the ultimate price. I argue not that you have no right to express your views. You are quite free to do that. I simply remind you that it 'twas a veteran—who may or may not be here today—who has kept your treasured freedom secure.

In putting forth this amendment, I proudly continue the precedent followed by Senator EXON last year when he successfully added a similar amendment to the fiscal year 1992 budget resolution. This body has long recognized the needs of our veterans and we have singled them out in this process in years prior and with good reason. This year is no different—their needs are just as great; their fears just as real; and, sadly, their cries ever as loud.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues, as they prepare to return home next month in observance of Memorial Day, I urge them to reaffirm their support for our Nation's veterans by supporting this amendment.

Mr. EXON. I am pleased to join with my good friend from Georgia in offering an amendment to increase funding for veterans programs. This amendment is very similar to an amendment I offered to last year's budget resolution to help meet our legitimate commitment to our Nation's veterans. I was happy to work closely with Senator FOWLER to craft this amendment.

Now that the parades of Desert Storm are a memory, and the victories of the gulf war logged in the history books, there continues to be a tragic neglect of the commitments this Nation made to the thousands of men and women who over the decades served under arms.

The persistent squeeze on veterans programs has forced the U.S. Government to break faith on a daily basis with countless American veterans, many in their twilight years. Medical care is increasingly restricted, education, training and rehabilitation opportunities for veterans are being trimmed and facilities are financially strapped across the Nation. Men and women who justifiably relied on the promises of their Government in exchange for dangerous service are finding their expectations dashed.

Our Nation must never forget the men and women who have risked their lives to protect our freedoms. Our veterans are unsung heroes. They are indeed largely responsible for the good life we all enjoy.

As an election draws near, many candidates will rekindle the glory of the Persian Gulf victory and boast how they supported the decision to send American men and women into harm's way as the benchmarks of patriotism. I suggest that another true test of patriotism is how willing we are to undertake the unglamorous tasks of mending the wounds of war, of giving a job to those who served, and of caring for old soldiers.

Mr. President, while the Budget Enforcement Act places certain limits on what can be done, the Fowler-Exon amendment sends the American people, the brave men and women who served their country and perhaps, most importantly, the Appropriations Committee that the U.S. Senate considers funding of veterans programs one of the Nation's top priorities.

This amendment is fiscally responsible. It is paid for with a reduction in the offset function. I encourage my colleagues to join with us in showing support and solidarity with America's veterans.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I am pleased to join with the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. FOWLER] in proposing this amendment to the fiscal year 1993 budget resolution to provide badly needed discretionary funding for veterans' programs. Before addressing the specifics of the amendment, I would like to congratulate Senator FOWLER for his leadership. As a member of the VA-HUD Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, he often plays an important role in obtaining adequate funding for veterans programs, in spite of the inadequate budget requests from the current and previous administrations. The amendment he offers today demonstrates once again that he is an important advocate of our Nation's veterans.

Mr. President, on March 4, our committee recommended to the Budget Committee funding for the veterans' programs in function 700 that was $1.9 billion in budget authority and $1.6 billion in outlays more than the President's budget request. Almost $1 billion of each of those amounts was solely to reject various administration proposals to achieve deficit reductions by cutting veterans' benefits and increasing fees charged to veterans. Real improvements in veterans' services—primarily veterans' health care—accounted for only about half of our committee's recommended increase.

The discretionary-spending part of the increase over the President's budget was $982 million in budget authority and $673 million in outlays. Since the funding for veterans' discretionary programs under the reported budget resolution is even less than the President's budget, the difference between our committee's recommendation and the pending budget resolution is $1.8 billion in budget authority and $1.1 billion in outlays. These are the figures represented in the Fowler amendment. Our committee's 55-page report to the Budget Committee provides detailed justification for this level of funding.

Mr. President, our committee's recommendations had the support of a bipartisan majority of our committee, including the ranking Republican member, Senator SPECTER; every Democrat; and one other Republican, Senator JEFFORDS.

Mr. President, Senator FOWLER's amendment would increase the fiscal year 1993 budget for veterans' programs in function 700 to $36.5 billion in budget authority and $35.8 billion in outlays. These are the figures necessary to provide for adequate levels of discretionary spending for VA health-care programs and the operation of VA benefits offices.

There is no doubt that the resolution as reported must be modified in order to provide for fair treatment for America's veterans. Its spending levels for veterans are $800 million in budget authority and $600 million in outlays below the President's request, which itself is inadequate.

For example, under the President's budget, VA's deplorable backlog of broken-down, worn-out, and outdated medical equipment that must be replaced would increase to over $860 million. Waiting periods of several months for outpatient care in several locations would grow even longer. Programs to help the shamefully large number of homeless veterans would receive no real increase over last year's inadequate funding. The terribly long waiting lists for treatment for veterans suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder would grow still longer. In addition, the already-too-slow processing and adjudication of veterans' claims for benefits would worsen and keep veterans and their survivors waiting longer for the benefits they deserve.

Mr. President, adoption of our amendment is essential to ensure that the numbers in the resolution reflect the policy expressed by Congress when it adopted last year's budget resolution. Section 13(1) of that resolution stated:

It is the sense of the Congress that * * * veterans' programs are a top national priority and that there are critical needs, particularly in the area of veterans medical care[,] which must be addressed; the Congress urges the Committees on Appropriations, while acting within the limits of the discretionary caps, to give maximum consideration to veterans' benefit programs. * * *

Section 13 was adopted last year in the Budget Committee by a unanimous vote of 21 to 0. It did two things: It recognized the top national priority attached to veterans programs, and it urged the Appropriations Committees to embody that priority in the actual funding decisions those committees make. These principles are just as important today as they were last year.

Our amendment is consistent with these objectives, and our amendment goes beyond simply giving moral support to veterans' programs. It would raise the budget for domestic discretionary spending on veterans' programs to $17.5 billion in budget authority and $16.8 in outlays, the levels recommended in our committee's bipartisan report to the Budget Committee.

As I indicated earlier, this would mean a much-needed $982 million increase over the President's appropriations request. However, if this amendment is rejected, the Senate's budget for veterans—as I have stated—would be more than $800 million below the President's request for VA discretionary spending—primarily VA medical care—and nearly $1 billion less than what's needed just to keep pace with inflation. That kind of a budget clearly would not treat veterans' programs as a top national priority.

Mr. President, our amendment complies with the domestic discretionary spending cap by requiring offsetting reductions. Consistent with the Budget Act and the sense of the Senate provision in last year's budget resolution, however, our amendment would give the Appropriations Committees maximum flexibility to determine appropriate offsets.

Mr. President, I would add that this amendment makes the resolution more realistic. It is totally unrealistic to leave the budget for veterans' programs at a level that is $800 million below the President's request, which itself is far too low. Congress certainly will not cut veterans programs in that fashion. Thus, our amendment corrects a major defect in the resolution.

Again, I congratulate and thank Senator FOWLER for offering this amendment and I strongly urge all of my colleagues to support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1772) was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. I moved to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded;

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1773

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate with respect to increased productivity and regarding the competitive edge the United States economy enjoyed in the past)

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I send to the desk on amendment on behalf of the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. RIEGLE] and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows: The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SASSER] for Mr. RIEGLE, proposes an amendment numbered 1773.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the resolution add the following new section:

SEC. . SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING INCREASING PRODUCTIVITY.

(a) FINDING.—The Senate finds that—
(1) failure to meet the challenge of international economic competitiveness would seriously jeopardize our national security, standard of living, and quality of life in the coming decades; and
(2) increased productivity is the key to meeting the challenge and regaining the competitive edge the United States economy enjoyed in the past.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that funds should be allocated to allow this Nation to commit to an increase in productivity and international competitiveness through a program of long-term strategic investment in—

- (1) the development of its human resources;
- (2) the physical infrastructure that supports economic activity;
- (3) the development and commercialization of technology; and
- (4) productive plants and equipment.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, this is an amendment offered on behalf of Senator RIEGLE expressing a sense of the Congress regarding investment and competitiveness. This amendment has been cleared on both sides of the aisle and is acceptable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 1773) was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. I moved to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I might proceed for 3 minutes as in morning business.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CONGRESSMAN VIN WEBER

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, many Minnesotans were surprised and saddened by the announcement by Second District Congressman VIN WEBER that he would not seek reelection to the House of Representatives this year, and I rise to share a few thoughts on his decision.

VIN WEBER has made a choice that is very personal and very simple. It says a lot about who he is.

He weighed the benefit he could bring to the people of his district against the cost to his family's future. Even as one of the most able and effective Members in the whole Congress, he decided that his family deserves the higher value.

It is ironic, but his reason for leaving makes me want him to stay all the more. Washington is a mess because there are no priorities here. By leaving VIN WEBER affirms that his family comes first.

VIN WEBER was born in Slayton, MN, in 1952 and was educated in the public schools of his hometown. He attended the University of Minnesota and began his political career with an internship in the State Republican Party headquarters.

He then did four jobs in 6 years that brought him from poli sci major to Congressman in 1980. He was press secretary to Representative Tom Hagdorn; copublisher of the Murray County Herald; director of the campaign of Senator Rudy Boschwitz; and Senator Boschwitz' chief of staff.

VIN WEBER is greatly respected on both sides of the political aisle, in both wings of the Capitol and at both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue. Few Members of Congress have such an acute sense of politics and he used that sense to help his district and his country through very difficult times.

I have appreciated his advice and insight, even though I have not always seen issues the same way. And particularly in recent years I have valued his personal support and friendship.

Mr. President, VIN WEBER is a Minnesota success story: A person nurtured in a small town, who is bright, knows what he wants, and then applies himself to go out and get it.

He will be greatly missed as a leader in southwestern Minnesota and here in Washington as well. I wish him and his family well.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. FORD. Will the Senator withhold his request?

Mr. DURENBERGER. Yes.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent there now be a period for morning business, with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REGISTRATION OF MASS MAILINGS

The filing date for 1992 first quarter mass mailings is April 27, 1992. If your office did no mass mailings during this period, please submit a letter to that effect.

Mass mailing registrations, or negative reports, should be submitted to the Senate Office of Public Records, 232 Hart Building, Washington, DC 20510-7716.

The Public Records Office will be open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. on the filing date to accept these filings. For further information, please contact the Public Records Office on 202-224-0322.

THE 75TH ANNIVERSARY OF ALTRUSA INTERNATIONAL

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, Americans have a tradition of organizing to help meet the needs of their communities. Service organizations have played a significant role in addressing problems in our society. One such organization, Altrusa International, will celebrate its 75th anniversary on April 11. This is a fitting time to acknowledge and thank Altrusa for its humanitarian work.

During its 75-year history, tens of thousands of business and community leaders have joined Altrusa International to help resolve social problems. The results are immeasurable. Altrusa International has been active worldwide in promoting literacy and vocational education. It has also provided financial assistance to women in graduate programs in lesser developed nations who otherwise would have been unable to continue their studies. Our Nation and the world are improved for their efforts.

Altrusa International currently has over 17,000 members. Their concern for others and their determination to improve societal conditions is an invaluable resource. I have no doubt that as Altrusa International continues to build on this tradition of service and compassion that its next 75 years will be as successful and helpful as its first 75 years. I commend the members of Altrusa for their accomplishments as they celebrate the 75th anniversary of this fine service organization and wish Altrusa International well in all of its future endeavors.

RETIREMENT OF CONGRESSMAN CLAUDE HARRIS

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, a good friend and colleague in the other Chamber, Congressman CLAUDE HARRIS of Alabama's Seventh District, announced his retirement from the House on April 2. First elected in 1986, Congressman HARRIS has proven to be a dedicated and principled leader for the people of his district.

They say that the Deep South doesn't get much deeper than central Alabama, including the expanse of land from the steel mills of Birmingham, across the university town of Tuscaloosa, to the Black Belt and Selma, all of which comprise the State's Seventh Congressional District. This is a highly diverse region, one that could arguably be called a microcosm of the entire South. Representing the various interests of this district is a challenge for any legislator, but, since 1987, CLAUDE HARRIS has not only met that challenge, he has set a standard for whoever follows him, redistricting notwithstanding.

CLAUDE HARRIS, JR., was born in Bessemer, AL, attended the University of Alabama, and became assistant district attorney for Tuscaloosa at the tender age of 25. He later served as circuit judge, serving as presiding judge of Alabama's Sixth Circuit from 1980-83. He was a practicing attorney from 1985 through 1987, when he began his first term in Congress. He is also a lieutenant colonel in the Alabama Army National Guard, of which he has been an active member since 1967.

CLAUDE's tenure in Congress has been highlighted by his work on the Energy and Commerce and Veterans' Affairs Committees. Alabama's military veterans know Congressman HARRIS to be a true friend. As a member of the House veterans panel and third ranking Democrat on its Hospitals and Health Care Subcommittee, he has been instrumental in preserving funding for and enhancing the quality of veterans' health care facilities.

The Alabama congressional delegation is losing an important voice and experienced leader in CLAUDE HARRIS, and we will miss him. I am confident, however, that we have not heard the last of him. Anyone with his energy, drive, and sincere desire to serve will most likely continue to channel that unique experience and leadership ability into valuable and much needed public service.

I congratulate and commend CLAUDE HARRIS for his hard work on behalf of his constituents, as well as for his service to the Nation over the last 6 years. I wish CLAUDE and his family all the best for a bright and healthy future.

GREG BUTRUS AS PRESIDENT OF NOTRE DAME UNIVERSITY STUDENT BODY

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I wish to congratulate an outstanding young man from my State, Gregory P. Butrus, upon his election as student body president at Notre Dame University. A graduate of Mountain Brook High School, near Birmingham, Greg's academic and leadership skills have been impeccable over the years. When one looks back at his school years, it is not surprising at all that his fellow students at Notre Dame would place such a high degree of trust in Greg's capabilities.

While in high school, Greg Butrus was involved in a wide range of student activities and held numerous positions of leadership that carried tremendous responsibilities. He served as president of the Key Club, earning its praise as the Most Outstanding Key Club president in the State of Alabama in 1989. Captain of the debate team, Greg was a delegate to the National Forensic League Tournaments during 1989 and 1990. He was also president of the Builders Club and a participant in the Birmingham Youth Leadership Forum in 1988.

When Greg Butrus won Mountain Brook High School's Leadership Award in 1989, it came with the inscription, "The quintessential leader  perhaps the best we've ever had  one who takes charge, asserts himself, guides and directs others and brings out the best in what others have to offer." This description is perhaps what best summarizes the reasons for Greg's extraordinary success, and these same traits are what have propelled him to the pinnacle of student leadership at Notre Dame as well. I wish him all the best for what I know will be a successful and productive term as the school's student body president.

IRRESPONSIBLE CONGRESS? HERE IS TODAY'S BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, the Federal debt run up by the U.S. Congress stood at $3,891,976,495,534.38, as of the close of business on Tuesday, April 7, 1992.

As anybody familiar with the U.S. Constitution knows, no President can spend a dime that has not first been authorized and appropriated by the Congress of the United States.

During the past fiscal year, it cost the American taxpayers $286,022,000,000 just to pay the interest on spending approved by Congress—over and above what the Federal Government collected in taxes and other income. Averaged out, this amounts to $5.5 billion every week, or $785 million every day.

What would America be like today if there had been a Congress that had the courage and the integrity to operate on a balanced budget?

JOHN HEINZ—A YEAR LATER

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, this past week was the anniversary of the sudden and tragic death of our colleague, John Heinz.

I have read in the RECORD the moving statements of Senators DURENBERGER and DOLE, given here last Thursday; the gracious remarks of John's successor, Senator WOFFORD; and especially those poignant observations of my good friend, Senator STEVENS, who knows this kind of catastrophe firsthand.

I am proud to be an original cosponsor of the fitting tribute Senator STEVENS has introduced, the Heinz Excellence in Competitiveness Award, and pledge here today that as a senior member of the Banking Committee I will do everything I can to ensure its rapid enactment. I make that promise to Teresa Heinz, and to my friend from Alaska.

Mr. President, it doesn't seem like a year. I admit that I still sometimes turn a corner or walk into the Banking Committee half expecting to see that famous grin, or hear that focused intellect, or feel that notoriously impatient energy. But they're not there. And we are poorer for it even than we expected to be.

Why do I say that? Over the weekend, Mr. President, I had some time to reflect on my conversations with John over the years. It's ironic to note the issues that are now the focus of our legislative and, in this election year, political attention, the issues we now recognize as absolutely critical. They include: health care for all Americans; the problem of aging; efficient and effective reform of our financial institutions; and our competitiveness in fair trade around the world.

It's ironic, because these are the very issues which John Heinz made his own; his attention to which earned him the respect and overwhelming loyalty of his constituents in Pennsylvania; and on which we could sorely use his expertise and foresight. He was ahead of us, Mr. President, and he was—in this Senator's view—right on these issues.

He was right especially in his view that partisanship was irrelevant and obstructive to their solution. He knew, and told us when we listened, that if we failed to address them boldly and in time, if instead we played party line politics, they would bring down on us fiscal disaster and the wrath of the American people. Does anyone here doubt that now?

Last year, after John's death, I and others stood in this Chamber and spoke of John's intelligence, his commitment, his integrity. And what has the intervening year brought to this Congress? Disrepute, disarray, and the dissatisfaction of those who sent us here. The polls, the pundits, the papers all say that the American people have never thought less of us. Incumbent is a dirty word.

It wasn't when it applied to John Heinz. His personal probity and relentless commitment to the welfare of Pennsylvanians kept incumbency honorable—honorable because it was honest, and constantly earned.

That's his legacy, and our lesson. I hope we can live up to the one, and learn the other. Then, perhaps, some good may come of how much we all, certainly this Senator, miss him.

Thank you, Mr. President.

NATIONAL INSTITUTES OF HEALTH REAUTHORIZATION

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, last week the Senate passed legislation which when enacted will have monumental effect on the nation's biomedical research community. I rise today to discuss my support for the National Institutes of Health Reauthorization, H.R. 2507, which was passed by the House of Representatives last July and by the Senate last week.

For over 100 years, the National Institutes of Health have been on the cusp of innovative breakthroughs for cures to diseases and human health. These breakthroughs include advances in development of immunizations which have helped eradicate worldwide epidemics, advancements in diagnostic and treatments of diseases, and many other areas of research. I doubt that there is any way we could quantify how many hundreds of millions of lives throughout the world that have been improved and saved over the years because of the work done at NIH.

While I support many aspects of the legislation, I would like to take this opportunity to highlight some of the provisions in the bill that I found especially important. I am particularly pleased with the sections of the bill regarding women's health. It is clear that NIH scientists have made a great many advances which have, as I mentioned helped millions, however, both biomedical and behavioral research performed under NIH have been deficient in taking women into account in their research. In particular, there has been a dearth in the research of conditions and diseases that are most likely to strike women such as breast cancer and ovarian cancer, and how diseases affect women as opposed to men such as heart disease.

Several years ago, recommendations from a task force were made in an attempt to address the inherent gender bias in research caused by the standard practice of only using white males in clinical studies. Women just were not part of the basic research. In attempting to reduce variables in research, traditionally a standard male model to study from was considered appropriate, and yet I am told that important information on the subtle and even dramatic differences a treatment for a disease has on a woman versus a man is lacking. Although some steps were made at NIH to expand the inclusion of women of all ages as well as minorities, the provisions in this bill will further redress current research anomalies.

It has been pointed out by the scientific community that the failure to include women as subjects of research at NIH for diseases such as heart disease, in fact, has had some negative consequences. Heart disease is the cause of more deaths among women than any other disease. Yet, as I mentioned earlier, all research performed at NIH on heart disease up until now has been based on information on causes and prevention derived from the male based clinical models. I found the following information included in the Senate Labor Committee report very telling regarding these practices:

A 1988 study of 22,000 physicians funded by the Heart, Lung and Blood Institute found that aspirin could prevent heart attacks in men. Doctors subsequently recommended that older men at increased risk for heart disease take an aspirin every other day. They specifically stated, however, that they could not offer women the same advice.

This kind of scientific testimony has made it clear that it is time that federally sponsored research needs to change its current practices and protocols in clinical research—and I am pleased to have added my support towards these advancements.

Scientific testimony has also borne out that there is an increased need for research in diseases that are prevalent among women such as breast cancer, ovarian cancer, osteoporosis, Paget's disease, and others. And this bill responds to the need to examine these problems as they relate to women.

Last October, I was profoundly moved when a large group of Delaware women came to meet with me to discuss breast cancer. I have since learned that one of the women who was 27 at the time she met with me died from breast cancer 3 weeks after her visit to Washington. I believe that the provision in this bill that relates to increased research strategies will help us better address the current trend of increased cases of breast cancer, and perhaps even get us a step closer toward eradicating this disease. The bill includes over $365 million in an earmarked increase in the funds authorized to be spent on breast cancer. Including funding in the National Institute on Cancer, total authorized funding for breast cancer in fiscal year 1993 under this bill is $465 million.

The other section of this bill that I would like to take a moment to discuss is the provision lifting the current administrative ban on human fetal tissue transplantation. I support this provision because as it is drafted, it does include strict guidelines to establish important safeguard in research in both public and private sector research. It is important to note that currently, there are no Federal guidelines regulating private sector sponsored research—this legislation will provide the needed safeguards to the private sector.

Prior to passage of the legislation, I heard from many Delawareans both for and against the lifting of the current ban on fetal transplantation. I heard from many individuals suffering from or who had loved ones suffering from diabetes, Parkinson's disease, Alzheimer's disease, Huntington's disease, and many other conditions. Of these people who called my office and wrote to me, some had children who were suffering from genetic disorders, and they appealed to me to support this legislation to allow the research.

Many medical advances have already been made based on fetal tissue research. In fact, human tissue cells provided the basis for research which lead to the development of the polio vaccine. Today, this research continues to hold great promise for what have been seen as incurable diseases and conditions such as Alzheimer's disease, Parkinson's, diabetes, epilepsy, leukemia, spinal cord injuries, and others.

In 1988, federally funded human fetal tissue transplantation research was halted until a panel of experts appointed by the Reagan administration including theologians, physicians, scientists, and lawyers reviewed the ethical, legal and scientific implications of the research. This bioethics panel, known as the Adams' panel recommended by a majority of 18 to 3 that as long as "the research in question is intended to achieve significant medical goals, research using human fetal tissue transplant is acceptable public policy." The legislation recently approved by the Senate included the recommendations of the Adams' panel, and went a step further by extending the strict restrictions to the private sector.

I believe that this bill is truly in the best interest of the public health and will continue to promote sound science. In addition, the research on women's health will help improve women's health and well-being and, in particular, help to get us a step closer in finding a cure to breast cancer. With the help of this bill, research performed at the National Institutes of Health will continue to develop and seek out the improvement of health status in our nation and throughout the world.

HAPPY 65TH BIRTHDAY, HARVEY HARDISON

Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of the 65th birthday of my friend and constituent, Harvey Hardison.

Harvey was born on April 7, 1927, and attended San Jacinto High School in Houston, TX. He attended college at the New Mexico Institute of Mining and Technology and the Colorado School of Mines.

Harvey Hardison, a U.S. Marine Corps sergeant, served his country in World War II and the Korean war. He has been a diligent community servant throughout his life, including 39 years as a volunteer in service to the Boy Scouts of America.

Harvey met Reita Maricle on a blind date in 1951, and they were married in 1952. They reside today in Costa Mesa, CA. Harvey plans to retire this year after a long and successful career in electromechanical engineering, including service to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

It's said that while we can choose our friends, we can't choose our relatives. The Seymour and Hardison families became relatives when our son Jack married Harvey and Reita's daughter Kathy, and Judy and I can say without hesitation, we could not have chosen better friends.

Please join me in extending our congratulations and best wishes to an outstanding American, Harvey Hardison.

COSPONSORSHIP OF S. 2550—UMWA RETIREE BENEFITS

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues as a cosponsor of legislation which responds to the highly complex and emotional circumstances surrounding the United Mine Workers of America [UMWA] retiree health benefits trust funds.

As many of my colleagues are aware, the UMWA retiree health benefit trust funds are suffering a large deficit and significant cash-flow problems, primarily because of reduced coal company contributions to those funds. During the 1988 national bituminous coal wage agreement negotiations, the bituminous coal operators association [BOCA] won a 58 percent reduction in its contribution rates to the UMWA health benefit funds. Though the UMWA initially balked at the reduced rate, it settled for a clause in the contract which guaranteed that BOCA would adjust its contributions over the life of the contract to whatever levels the fund trustees deemed necessary to assure actuarial soundness. BOCA recently tried to wriggle out from under that agreement, but a Federal District Court has enforced the contractual obligation and ordered the BOCA to replenish trust fund assets by the end of this calendar year.

Despite the court's decision, some current and future UMWA retirees are deeply concerned that their retirement health benefits may be in jeopardy. They point to the declining number of companies which now contribute to the UMWA/BCOA health benefit trust funds and the corresponding increase in those companies' required contribution rates. They worry that these remaining BOCA signatory companies will simply stop paying for retiree health benefits because of the cost. Indeed, in an effort to drum up support for a Federal bailout effort, the BOCA companies have threatened to do precisely that.

I do not believe that any Federal court in America would allow the BOCA to unilaterally renege on the promises it made during the collective bargaining process. That would just be absurd. Collective bargaining is the most venerated cornerstone of American labor policy—for Congress or the courts to intercede willy-nilly in fully ratified collectively bargained agreements would be to subvert the most fundamental principle of privately negotiated contracts in one single stroke. That just will not happen.

All of us here agree on one thing: The retiree health benefits promised to the UMWA miners by the BOCA companies are a contractually established entitlement. The UMWA miners were promised lifetime retiree health benefits in exchange for lower wages than they might otherwise have commanded over their working lives. Further, every UMWA/BCOA wage agreement since 1978 has reaffirmed that promise—even to miners whose employing companies have since gone out of business or ceased participation in the BOCA. The remaining BOCA companies have always agreed to contribute enough money to the trust funds to pick up the slack. That, too, is right there in the contract. In fact, the 1988 NBCWA established for the first time a withdrawal liability against companies which cease participation in the UMWA/BCOA agreement while they still have retirees in the fund, and the courts have upheld this contractual provision as well.

The legislation we are introducing today should allay the fears of the UMWA miners. It is designed to secure the long-term financial stability of the UMWA benefit plans by simply incorporating into statute the terms of the UMWA/BCOA contract.

Let me repeat: This legislation does nothing more than enforce the terms already agreed to by the UMWA and the BOCA in collective bargaining. It imposes a statutory, pro rata withdrawal liability against companies that cease to contribute to the health benefit plans while they still have retirees enrolled, and it enforces the contractual guarantee of fully funded benefits. This legislation in no way interferes with the rights and obligations of the UMWA and BCOA to bargain in the future about the specific terms or benefits of the health plans. It simply requires the BCOA to continue to fund whatever benefits are agreed to.

The legislation does one more thing: It authorizes the transfer of $180 million in excess pension plan assets from the overfunded UMWA pension plan to the UMWA health benefit plans. Authority for this transfer—which would otherwise be prohibited under other Federal statutes—has been requested by both the UMWA and the BCOA. We are assured by both parties, as well as by the funds' trustees and the labor department, that these pension fund assets are in fact surplus and will not be needed to pay pension benefits at any time in the future.

This transfer of assets into the health benefit fund as originally sought to eliminate the fund's $120 million current deficit. However, that short-term problem has been resolved by a Federal court ruling which ordered the BCOA to increase its contributions to levels sufficient to amortize the deficit by year's end. It is now our hope and expectation that these excess funds will be viewed by the BCOA as a partial offset against future health benefit obligations, thus reducing the cost to BCOA members of maintaining these important benefits when the new NBCWA is negotiated in January.

Mr. President, this legislation has been carefully drafted to protect the financial integrity of the BCOA/UMWA health benefit trust funds without interfering in current or future collective bargaining agreements. I commend my colleague, Senator BOREN, for his skillful and precise approach to this complex issue, and I urge my colleagues to support the bill. Thank you, Mr. President.

REALITY VERSUS THE EARTH SUMMIT

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, before anyone in the Senate urges President Bush to go to Rio de Janeiro in June to attend the so-called Earth summit, I believe that we should inject some reality into all the curious rhetoric surrounding this event.

This summit is not about protecting the environment. That's just a smoke screen. The real issue is the transfer of the American taxpayers' money from the United States to countries which have been ruined by Government-controlled economies. In other words, the wealth created by Americans, working in a freer market, would be given to countries that persist in socialism. This is wrong. And, covering the whole business with a pretense of helping the environment is dishonest.

Ben Wattenberg has written an excellent article describing just how this fraud is being perpetrated. His answer to the serious problem of environmental pollution should be heeded: "Liberty works. Free markets and free politics yield prosperity. Only free countries are rich; only rich countries can pay the price of environmental cleanliness." So, we should tell the United Nations and the socialized countries of the world that their request for alms will not work this time. As Mr. Wattenberg says, "Green beggar socialism is not the wave of the future."

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article, from the April 8, edition of the Washington Times be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There be no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Times, Apr. 8, 1992]

HIDDEN FUNGUS AMONG US

(By Ben Wattenberg)

In Michigan, scientists have discovered a 10,000-year-old fungus, weighing as much as a whale, 30 acres large, hidden under the ground, with only pretty, little mushrooms poking above the surface.

In New York at the United Nations, another huge, old and hidden fungus has been vegetating, but the mushrooms are threatening to sprout bigger and uglier. Preparations have been going on for two years for "The Earth Summit," a spectacular U.N. conference scheduled for Rio de Janeiro in June.

A domestic political fight about it is already under way. Environmentalists want President Bush to attend the ES gala and announce that it's a grand idea.

But it isn't. It's an old hidden, U.N. fungus, painted green. In earlier times, the U.N. mushrooms were called, among other things, "The New International Economic Order," "The Law of the Sea" and "The Brundtland Report." But the theme is always the same: The United Nations gets power, the Third World gets money.

The generic argument has gone this way: Poor nations are poor because rich nations are rich. Rich nations should pay poor nations reparations. The transfer should proceed under a cloak of crisis ("the sea," "the environment"). The terms of transfer should be centrally regulated by U.N. bureaucrats.

The more definite ES idea, still mostly hidden beneath mountains of platitudinous and weasel-worded documents, goes this way: We need general environmental cleanup and, particularly, emissions control to deal with "global warming." Poor nations are too poor to do it. Rich nations must pay them to do it. Rich nations will raise the money by taxing their citizens for energy use.

Two years of negotiations toward these goals ended in fuzzy stalemate on April 4. An intense green propaganda campaign can now be expected to gain favorable resolution during the Rio meeting. So far, the United States has been recalcitrant.

Why? The ultimate costs are about $70 billion per year in new foreign aid. And the biggest donors would be nations where energy is used for such ignoble pollutions as single-family houses, two cars per household and air-conditioning. Like—surprise!—America.

It is sad to see the United Nations go down the rip-off road again, using environmentalism as the mushroom of choice. The environment is one realm where some global regulation makes some theoretical sense. If, for example, "global warming" should ever evolve from environmental theology to serious science, it could only be dealt with worldwide.

What to do? Rethink from scratch. The intellectual basis for the Earth Summit runs counter to what the human species has learned recently. This: Centrally directed economies don't work, and dependency harms the people it is supposed to help. Thus, the communist centralized economies yielded poverty and pollution. Government-to-government foreign aid mostly helped scruffy tyrants. Yet the ES agenda tends to sanctify both ideas.

There is a better way. For we have learned something positive as well: Liberty works. Free markets and free politics yield prosperity. Only free countries are rich; only rich countries can pay the price of environmental cleanliness.

So Mr. Bush should not go to Rio just to give the poor nations and the environmentalists a condescending pat on the head for a bad idea. Ideas have consequences. Legitimizing this discredited philosophy would yield a world both poor and polluted.

There is one other strategy. The president could go to Rio and tell the truth. Which would go something like this:

"Friends, there is no free lunch. There is no payoff in panhandling. Green beggar socialism is not the wave of the future. There are no magic mushrooms, only the magic of the market, which works because it comes from liberty, both political and economic. It can cure both poverty and pollution. If you're interested, we in America will try to help. If the U.N. is interested, let's all plan a new summit, for a new world order."

F/A-18E/F DEVELOPMENT

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, in the fiscal year 1991 Department of Defense request, $8 million fed the musings of a handful of engineers charged with improving the performance of the F/A-18C/D. Overnight, those musings took on the nightmare aspects of a feverish dream. Born of the panic caused by the spectacular demise of the A-12, the F/A-18E/F became, in the fiscal year 1992 request, a colossus commanding $351 million in what was then projected to be a $4 billion development program. This year, the Pentagon is requesting over $1 billion for the F/A-18E/F. The meteoric rise of this aircraft is unrivaled in the annals of naval aviation.

Unhappily for the Navy, and American taxpayers, frantic actions, even if only a major modification of an existing system, often spell disaster. Like a child caught in a funhouse, the faster F/A-18E/F supporters race for initial operational capability, the faster that goal diminishes into the distance. Since the authorization and appropriations conferences completed their bills last November:

First, F/A-18E/F development costs jumped from $3.3 billion to $3.9 billion to $4.9 billion;

Second, 18 F/A-18C/D's to be procured between fiscal years 1994-96 were de-authorized to save the appetite of the F/A-18E/F for additional dollars—this is a double whammy in that it will also increase the unit cost of the F/A-18C/D's that avoided the maw of the "E/F";

Third, preliminary design review, critical design review, and first flight all slipped 1 year to the right, a "time is money" violation that will drive up costs;

Fourth, the total buy of F/A-18E/F's has been reduced from 1,000 to 600-800, increasing the unit cost of each aircraft;

Fifth, initial delivery of F/A-18E/F's has slipped to 1,998 or beyond, and low-rate initial production has been stretched out to 4 years or more, two more changes guaranteed to increase total program cost; and,

Sixth, the Defense Acquisition Board [DAB] review of the F/A-18E/F, the critical acquisition hurdle, has slipped from last December, to last March, to the last week of April.

The DAB delay appears grounded in growing Pentagon concerns that the F/A-18E/F will not perform as advertised. In that vein, I ask unanimous consent that a memorandum, currently featured in the trade press, and reputed to be out of Secretary Cheney's program analysis and evaluation shop, be inserted into the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Thrust-to-weight @ T/O (IRP)			.50 .54

KEY CONCERNS

Risky program because OSD can not answer two questions:

1. Can a 0.014 (4.9%) increase in Fuel Fraction be converted into a 28% increase in combat radius (OR is 410 NM or 243)?

COMPARISON:

- a. Cruise TFSC interior to F-18C (smaller is better).
- b. Thrust-to-Weight is less than F-18C.
- c. Wing Loading is about same as F-18C.
- d. F-18E has small increase in fuel fraction.

CAVEATS

a. Navy claims F-18E has about 7% better Lift-to-Drag (L/D) ratio (wind tunnel data).

b. Navy claims digital fuel control will offset some of F-18E's engine disadvantages, particularly in non-cruise portion of flight—spurious comparison because F-18C might be modified to have equivalent digital fuel control.

PROBLEM

Range is function of TFSC, L/D, Mach #, fraction of fuel available for cruise. Only unknown is L/D.

Implication of known quantities: If all internal fuel were available for cruise, and assuming a 7% improvement in F-18E's L/D, then Breguet range eq. predicts that F-18E range > F-18C by only 7.3%. This implies the F-18E's 28% in  in combat radius (OR = 24%) depends critically on superior fuel consumption rates in non-cruise portion of mission (i.e., takeoff, climb, descent, combat, and landing) to free up fuel for cruise.

The DAB has no insight into how this can be done, and OSD has not done an independent performance analysis to verify Navy/McAir ***.

RECOMMENDATION

Doley CMD decision for several months pending independent performance review by panel of disinterested experts.

NATIONAL

High cost and diminution of threat make 2-3 month delay managerially prudent in a time of limited resources, with no addition to military risk.

2. Does the F-18E have sufficient margins over F-18C to account for normal development uncertainties as well as PBI?

PROBLEM

Margins in fuel fraction and wing loading are minimal for F-18E, and margins in thrust-to-weight and TFSC are already worse for F-18E than those of F-18C. Therefore, a deterioration in the margins during EMD could have consequences to range, payload, and maneuverability that result in a design that is worse than F-18C.

a. Potential for excessive weight growth is high for at least 3 reasons:

(1) Allowance for weight growth is below average—F-18E design has only 1050 lbs (3.6%) of weight reserve, while contractor normally budgets 4-1.5% and

(2) Structural design is essentially that of a new a/c with major changes in material composition.

(3) McAir has history of range/weight problems: F-18 programs has track record of weight growth, and McAir did not meet range specifications for either F-18 or initial version of F-15 (which required 2000 lbs of additional fuel).

b. Engine risk is significant:

- (1) Engine may have a weight problem.
- (2) Engine has not been tested in full-up configuration.

c. Impact of planned weight growth (PSI an additional 1810 lbs) on requirement for larger engine and wing has not been analyzed.

(1) Assuming same engine and wing, addition of 1810 lbs of PSI weight would reduce thrust-to-weight from .50 to .486, increase wing loading from 96 to 99 lbs/sq ft, and reduce fuel fraction from .302 to .291.

d. OSD has not compared F-18E to advance tech, F-18C:

(1) Could increase fuel efficiency of F-18C with upgraded digital control.

(2) Could spend R&D $ to develop lighter avionics and secondary structures, and thereby permit improvements in T/W, wing loading, and fuel fraction.

(3) Could reallocate all or part of F-18E's R&D budget to procure additional F-18Cs.

CONCLUSION

Absence of margins makes the F-18E very risky from a performance and growth perspective, even if "paper design" met range specs.

RECOMMENDATION

Independent panel of disinterested experts should perform an in-depth risk analysis, to include:

Independent verification of crucial design assumptions.

Apples versus apples force comparisons with lighter weight adv, tech, F-18C.

Tradeoffs between alternative force mixes to include impact of increased spotting factor of F-18E on deployable force structure versus that of upgraded F-18C force.

Mr. D'AMATO. This document reaches a number of devastating conclusions:

First, F/A-18E design improvements may result in only a small increase in combat radius over the short-legged F/A-18C; and,

Second, F/A-18E design margins, already worse than the F/A-18C or only marginally better, if compromised during full-scale development, could result in an F/A-18E with range, payload, and maneuverability that is worse than the F/A-18C.

If correct, the taxpayer is being asked to fund a make-work project costing billions of dollars that will do little more than subsidize a handful of corporations over the lean times ahead while providing the Navy with no more capability than it had the day the F/A-18E/F development program started. In fact, the Navy will come up with less than zero, because the F/A-18E/F will certainly consume funding that might have gone to the AX or to ever-more desperately needed support aircraft.

Mr. President, all this being said, I have every confidence that eventually the Navy juggernaut will roll right over everyone who stands in the way of the F/A-18E/F. Attempts by the Senate Defense Appropriations Subcommittee to apply a brake to the program last year were brushed aside with alarming ease. If I've learned anything in 12 years in the Senate, it is that the Navy will not be denied.

While I may not be able to stop the F/A-18E/F, I can limit the damage to the taxpayer. Taking a page from the B-1B experience, let me put the Navy on notice today: I will offer an amendment capping the total cost of F/A-18E/F development to the first available piece of legislation the Senate considers. A cost cap will, at the very least, prevent the kind of misallocation of funds we saw with the A-12 program. Overruns simply will not be tolerated.

ARTHUR ASHE

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I think all of us were stunned yesterday with the announcement by Arthur Ashe that he has AIDS. I do not think that anyone could possibly look at that picture on the front page of the Washington Post this morning and not see a man of great pride and principle who was forced to disclose that he has a life-threatening disease. Few people could look at that picture or witness his press conference and not share the pain of his forced disclosure.

There was a poignant piece in the Post sports section, as well, that was written by Mike Wilbon. He wrote about the important part that Arthur Ashe has played in his life as a role model, not only for him, but for other blacks as well. He described how Arthur Ashe's triumph on the tennis court allowed him to leave the baseball field and the basketball court to try his hand at a game that had, up to that point, been reserved for whites only.

Arthur Ashe remains a hero, not only to the blacks of this country, but to millions of whites as well, not only because he was gifted at hitting tennis balls over a net, but because he was and continues to be good at being a human being. He has never sacrificed his honor for fame, whether on the court or off, and he has remained true to a higher principle of promoting civil rights for everyone, black and white, in this country and abroad.

What struck me this morning was that equal importance to the fact that he had contracted this disease was given to the way in which he contracted it—apparently from a blood transfusion. But we have to ask, what does it matter? A great man has been brushed by the wing of death and our reaction should not be shaded or slanted or poisoned by moral pieties. AIDS strikes the anointed and the anonymous with equal deadliness.

So, while we share his pain and we can send him our prayers, the most important thing we can do is find a cure and stop hurling moral judgments at those who are afflicted.

ESTELLE HOSKINS LISTON—A GRACIOUS LADY MARKING 100 YEARS

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I am pleased to offer these remarks which celebrate the life and accomplishments of an exceptional individual who has devoted her entire life to others. She is a most distinguished native North Carolinian.

Estelle English Hoskins, the youngest child of Sally and Daniel Hoskins, was born on April 26, 1892, in Camden, SC. At the age of 4, she moved with her family to Charlotte, NC, where she would later be educated in some of our State's leading black institutions, including Myers Street School and Scotia Seminary—now Barber-Scotia College. She would later establish a long and distinguish career as a teacher in both public and church-related schools.

On June 28, 1916, she was married in Charlotte to Hardy Liston of Fairfield County, SC. The 40 years of their marriage were spent as a union of two educators devoted to the pursuit of excellence in higher education for African-Americans as they served together at Slater State Normal School—later Winston-Salem State Teachers College, Knoxville College in Knoxville, TN, and Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte. To their marriage were born six children. Their family also included the nurturing of a niece and nephew and countless college students who were all the beneficiaries of the moral, emotional, and economic support of these two very special people. This far-flung family now includes daughters and sons-in-law, 14 grandchildren, 20 great-grandchildren, 3 great-great-grandchildren, and a host of other relatives and friends.

Upon answering the call to return to Charlotte in 1943 as her husband assumed the role of vice president and then president of Johnson C. Smith University, Estelle Hoskins Liston continued a life of service to the campus and local community, enveloping the faculty and staff and their families with her elegance and grace—always with an attentive eye for an opportunity to teach, nurture, and challenge those she touched to strive for excellence. She was an active participant on the boards of the Bethlehem Center, the Girl Scouts, Parent Teacher Associations, and the Young Women's Christian Association. Her participation in the Presbyterian Church has extended through local, Presbyterial, Synod, and national levels. An individual of boundless faith and religious conviction, her association with Seventh Street Presbyterian Church, now First United Presbyterian, dates from 1896 to this day.

A variety of alumni associations, societies, literary, and social organizations have also enriched her life and she theirs. She has continued to live in Charlotte since being widowed in 1956 and to the extent that progressive blindness and advancing age have allowed, she has continued a life filled with interest in the issues of the day and concern for people everywhere. I am pleased to join hundreds in the State of North Carolina and others around the Nation in celebrating the centennial birthday of my constituent Estelle English Hoskins Liston.

DEATH OF CARMEN TURNER

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, today I was notified of the death of one of this Nation's most respected and beloved public servants, Carmen Turner, Under Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution and former general manager of the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority.

Carmen Turner spent most of her adult life in public service, and her career and her life are examples that others will be emulating for many years to come. Extraordinarily effective in every public position she ever held, Carmen had the ability to achieve her goals with wit, charm, graciousness, as well as a keen and incisive intelligence. I remember our efforts to reauthorize the completion of Washington's Metrorail system in the last Congress. At each difficult juncture, we would call on Carmen and she would calmly and serenely help us overcome any obstacle. We simply could not have passed that legislation absent the superb reputation of the Metrorail system and her wise counsel.

Carmen was a long-time resident of Washington, DC. She attended Dunbar High School, received her undergraduate degree from Howard University, and her master's degree from the American University. Among her many responsible positions before joining Metro were Deputy Director of Civil Rights for the Urban Mass Transportation Administration and Acting Director of Civil Rights for the U.S. Department of Transportation.

In 1977, she came to WMATA as the first assistant general manager for administration, and in 1983 she became the general manager of the system. She concentrated her energies on securing a firm commitment to completing the full 103-mile Metrorail system, controlling costs, operating the bus and rail systems efficiently, and making public transportation available to all. Under her stewardship, WMATA was recognized in the transit industry as the No. 1 transit system in the country, and she was named No. 1 transit manager by the American Public Transit Association.

The death of Carmen Turner saddens all those who were fortunate to work with her, to know her and her family, and to be exposed to her gracious manner. She contributed enormously to the public welfare in our Nation, and I wanted to share with my colleagues my great sense of loss on hearing today that she had died.

SAM WALTON

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, America lost one of her giants with the recent passing of Sam Walton. A self-made billionaire, Sam Walton proved that hard work and using your noodle can still pay off.

An unassuming man, Sam Walton shunned publicity and any show of his substantial wealth. He remained the same down-to-earth businessman who knew the value of friendships and trust.

We in Arkansas were proud to call Sam our own, one of the foremost American treasures that our State has ever produced.

I was fortunate to be a part of the last public appearance that Sam made when the President bestowed the Medal of Freedom on him in Bentonville, AR, on March 17. Though Sam may have been in physical pain, it certainly did not dampen or lessen his spirit or enthusiasm that day. He was then and his memory now remains an inspiration to all of us.

Mr. President, America has lost a giant. His example brings home to all of us that the American dream is indeed alive.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD several tributes that were made to Sam Walton.

The articles follow:

BILLIONAIRE SAM WALTON, 74, DIES

(By Andrea Harter)

Sam Walton, who piloted Wal-Mart Stores Inc. to heights never before reached in the world of retailing, died Sunday from complications related to cancer.

Walton, 74, who had been at University Hospital in Little Rock since March 26, died at 8 a.m. Sunday.

The family has requested a private funeral service. Walton will be buried Tuesday in Bentonville.

No public memorial service has been announced.

Wal-Mart President and Chief Executive Officer David D. Glass notified the 380,000 employees of Walton's death over the Wal-Mart radio network, which links more than 2,000 Wal-Mart related stores and subsidiaries by satellite.

Flags at the general offices in Bentonville and Wal-Mart stores across the nation were lowered to half-staff.

"I speak for Wal-Mart associates across the nation when I say we have lost more than our chairman and founder . . . we have lost a friend. For many of us, a mentor," Glass said in a prepared statement.

"Only his family meant more to Sam Walton than his beloved associates. Literally, his second home was a Wal-Mart store somewhere in America," Glass said.

"Sam said many times he was always comfortable there, surrounded by associates and customers," he added.

"We miss him deeply," Glass said.

"But what he taught us, instilled in us—to respect the value of each individual, that the customer is always right, and the love for God and country—will live on forever."

The family asked that memorials be made to the Arkansas Cancer Research Center or the First Presbyterian Church Endowment Fund for Missions. Accounts have been established at the Bank of Bentonville.

Walton's son, S. Robson Walton, issued a statement saying the family would not sell any of its stock. The Waltons own an estimated 38 percent of the outstanding shares, valued at between $20 billion and $23 billion.

The company said no management changes are planned.

In 1982, Sam Walton was diagnosed with hairy-cell leukemia, but interferon treatments helped him send the disease into remission.

In 1989, Walton was diagnosed with multiple myeloma, or bone marrow cancer. In his second bout with cancer, he underwent extensive chemotherapy, radiation treatments and took experimental medicine.

Walton's last public appearance was in front of his employees, or "associates" as he called them, when the retailer accepted the Presidential Medal of Freedom from President Bush on March 17 at corporate headquarters in Bentonville.

Using a wheelchair and struggling for strength to speak, Walton called Bush's visit the "highlight of our career, my career and of our entire company. It is a memorable day for Bentonville, and we will always remember it."

Walton had been hospitalized several times in Houston and Arkansas since January.

He is survived by his wife, Helen; a brother, J.L. "Bud" Walton of Bentonville; three sons, S. Robson Walton and James Walton of Bentonville, and John Walton of National City, Calif.; a daughter, Alice Walton of Lowell, and 10 grandchildren.

At news of his death, many employees at central Arkansas Wal-Mart stores on Sunday donned black ribbons on their work clothes and displayed photographs of Walton at their stores.

Samuel Moore Walton was known as "Mr. Sam" to employees and customers alike. He defied conventional retailing wisdom in the 1960s when he put discount stores in small towns, which other retailers had ignored while looking for larger markets.

What resulted is a retailing empire stretching across 43 states in 1,735 Wal-Mart stores and 212 Sam's Club wholesale warehouse stores. Wal-Mart has more than 400,000 employees.

At Walton's death, Wal-Mart had more than $43.8 billion in annual sales and was the nation's largest retail chain, surpassing Kmart and Sears Roebuck & Co.

His success made him one of the wealthiest people in America. In recent years, he spread his wealth among family members.

From Wal-Mart's headquarters in Bentonville, Walton built his retailing empire with a blend of sharp business sense, boundless energy and a common touch that set him apart as a business leader.

"He was a man who never wanted the store lights to go out," Gary Reinboth, a retired Wal-Mart Stores Inc. regional vice president, said. Reinboth was handpicked by Walton in 1964 to nurture the then-infant concept of nationwide discount stores.

IN THE BEGINNING

Sam and Bud Walton operated a chain of 15 Ben Franklin Stores when, in 1962, they opened the first Wal-Mart Discount City store in Rogers.

Working with their Ben Franklin stores, Walton and his brother learned that they could operate large stores in small towns.

In a 1987 interview for the 25th anniversary of Wal-Mart World, a company publication, Walton said they were doing an inordinate amount of business in a 15,000-square foot store. The volume was out of character for a town of 2,000 people, he said.

The Waltons approached Ben Franklin executives with an idea of putting large stores in rural centers that would sell a high volume of goods at very low margins. Company officials, who scoffed at them, couldn't see any value in it, Sam Walton recalled.

DISAPPOINTMENT

Disappointed with the lack of enthusiasm at Ben Franklin, the Waltons decided to go out on their own. Their 16,000-square-foot Rogers store was stocked with anything Sam Walton could buy at discounted wholesale prices. It did $975,000 in sales the first year.

In a 1979 interview, Sam Walton said he did not decide he was going to have a string of discount department stores in small towns. He added that early on he did not set a sales goal.

Rather, he said, he started out with one store, and it did well. It was then a challenge to see if he could do well with a few more. When he did well with them, he opened a few more, he said.

It was two years before the second Wal-Mart was opened in Harrison, but the pace picked up as the chain opened store after store.

The company targeted rural towns, creating epicenters of commerce that reshaped Main Street America in the South.

With Walton's increasing buying power and knowledge of exactly what was needed for a healthy profit margin, Wal-Mart was able to undercut most Main Street merchants' prices. Many of those merchants became bitter critics of the Wal-Mart phenomenon.

MOVING UP

In calendar 1970, the company had 38 stores and $44 million in sales. Moving rapidly, the company in 1980 climbed to 246 stores and $1.248 billion in sales. By fiscal 1985, it had 745 stores and $6.4 billion in sales, and in fiscal 1990, 1,402 stores and $25.8 billion in sales.

At the company's 1991 annual meeting in Fayetteville, Walton said the company would likely have $100 billion in sales by the end of the decade. The company has a goal of $54 billion in sales for the current fiscal year.

Underwritten by Stephens Inc. of Little Rock and White, Weld & Co., New York, Wal-Mart had its first stock offering in 1970.

In recent years, Walton set up a management team that is expected to keep the company strong and on the path he cleared long before he died.

Walton's first-born, Rob Walton, is vice chairman of the company. Bud Walton, Sam Walton's younger brother, is a senior vice president and director.

A charismatic man—known to wear moderately priced suits, casual shoes and an ever-present Wal-Mart baseball cap—Sam Walton said there was no genius involved in his success. It was more a matter of circumstance and luck, he said.

But many observers noted that he combined luck with great retaining talent and a solid corporate culture that transformed small-town America and mass merchandising.

Discounting was a tolerated stepchild to mainstream retailing when Sam Walton started his chain. By the 1980s, however, he and his Wal-Mart team had put together stores that drew customers in furs and high heels, as well as those in sneakers and sweat shirts.

"Wal-Mart has certainly written the most significant chapter in retailing history, and they've done it in an extremely quick fashion," said Don Spindel, an analyst with A.G. Edwards & Sons in St. Louis. "Their meteoric rise to the top has not been paralleled."

Despite its success, Wal-Mart has had its share of difficulties.

For example, Wal-Mart was underfinanced to the point of panic at times during the early years. One of its saviors was James H. Jones, a former New Orleans banker who is now on the Wal-Mart board of directors, according to author Vance Trimble in his unauthorized biography of Sam Walton. To see how Walton built his company requires a look at his origins.

Sam Walton was born in Kingfisher, Okla., the son of Nancy and Thomas Walton. His mother died in 1950 of cancer at age 52. His father died at age 92.

OVERACHIEVING NATURE

Sam Walton showed signs of being an overachiever at an early age.

Thomas Walton was quoted by Trimble as saying that his main goal as a father was "teaching the boys to work, work and work."

The Waltons moved from Oklahoma to Columbia, Mo., while Sam Walton was still young.

He was voted "Most Versatile Boy" by his Missouri high school classmates.

His leadership ability was seen as early as 1936 when, in spite of the nickname, "Stumbling Sam," he quarterbacked his high school football team to an unbeaten, untied season.

After high school, he stayed in Columbia, where he attended the University of Missouri and earned a degree in economics in 1940.

He was labeled a "tough scrapper" and "Hustler Walton" by his University of Missouri fraternity brothers.

His plan had been to go into insurance, but during college he became interested in retail. Upon graduation, he joined J.C. Penny Co. Inc. as a trainee.

Walton's career at Penney's ended when he joined the Army, where he served as a captain in the Army Intelligence Corps. He married Helen Robson on Feb. 14, 1943, in Claremore, Okla.

Walton took up retailing again when he left the service in 1945, buying the Ben Franklin franchise in Newport, Ark. By 1947, he had opened a second store in Newport called the Eagle store.

"When Sam came to Newport, he wanted to learn from everybody," said Tom Jefferson, district manager of a Sterling Variety Store across the street from the Walton-franchised Ben Franklin store.

"He believed in people and those who worked for him. Well, he wanted them to have everything he had—drive and success," Jefferson said.

Jefferson joined Wal-Mart in 1972 and worked for the company for 15 years, most of the time as a Walton confidant and executive vice president of store operations.

TURNING POINT

Sam Walton reached a turning point in 1950 when he lost the lease on the Ben Franklin store in Newport. Details of the event are told by Trimble in his book.

Walton achieved success in Newport from 1945-50 with a $25,000 initial investment from his father-in-law. The growth of his business eventually caused its demise.

Walton was in competition with P.K. Holmes, a businessman who owned a department store and the building for Walton's Ben Franklin store. When Walton's lease was up for renewal, Holmes refused to negotiate an additional term.

Before leaving Newport in 1950, Walton rented a building next to the Sterling store, another of his competitors, to block its expansion. He then turned to Siloam Springs.

A Siloam Springs shopowner wanted $5,000 more for his shop than Walton was willing to pay, so Walton headed north to Bentonville, where he found an aging merchandiser looking to sell his town-square business.

Walton bought a Bentonville store for $15,000 and opened a Walton's five-and-ten-cent store.

The building still stands today, and in May 1990 was reopened by Wal-Mart as a visitors center with displays and information on the history of the company.

Walton moved his wife and four children into a rented house and nailed an orange crate to the wall at the Bentonville store for use as a bookshelf. With two sawhorses and a sheet of plywood, he fashioned a desk.

It was in Bentonville that the idea for a national chain of discount stores began to take shape, corporate historians say.

'BIG ACCOMPLISHMENT'

On May 11, 1950, the Benton County Democrat (later purchased by Walton and renamed the Benton County Daily Record), hailed the arrival of the new retailer, saying, "It is a big accomplishment to have people such as the Waltons come here to live. This is a fine family, and their progressive plans mean much to the business life of this city."

With a twist of fate and timely financial backing, Walton could have made Little Rock his home, and mall developing his life's focus.

Early in his career, he tried to develop Arkansas' first shopping mall in Little Rock, where Park Plaza now stands. He failed for lack of capital.

W.R. "Witt" Stephens, founder of Little Rock's Stephens Inc. and another Arkansas business legend, bought out Walton and developed the project.

Walton has received numerous prestigious retailing and business awards since 1978.

In 1984, he received the Horatio Alger Award from the Horatio Alger Association of Distinguished Americans, based in Alexandria, Va.

The annual award is presented to individuals whose initiative and efforts led to significant career success.

A compulsive worker, Walton carried his work with him on quail-hunting fields and onto the tennis courts, his two main non-Wal-Mart hobbies, said Ron Loveless, a retired Wal-Mart executive who has known Walton for most of his life.

"He was 100 percent business 100 percent of the time," Loveless said.

Loveless' mother was the Walton housekeeper, and Ron Loveless was privy to an inside glimpse of the man who is credited with rewriting the standards for retail sales and customer service, now known as the "Wal-Mart way."

"It wasn't hard to know his routine. In the early days he was at work about 4 a.m., checked the mail and paperwork until about 7 a.m., then he hit the stores," Loveless said.

When the Sam's Club wholesale concept emerged in 1983, "It was an exciting time for the company," Loveless said.

"People often asked, 'Was he just ambitious, or was he power hungry?' . . . I say no. He just wanted to be the best at everything," Loveless said. "I've seen entire company policy change in one day over one constructive comment submitted by a stockman."

IMMENSE IMPACT

Walton had an immense impact on Arkansas, especially the northwestern corner of the state.

"Every man, woman and child who understands how the economy works should thank Sam Walton for our prosperity in Northwest Arkansas," said George Westmoreland, a first vice president for Merrill, Lynch, Pierce Fenner & Smith.

Walton served on the Bentonville City Council and was president of the Bentonville Chamber of Commerce.

Loveless, who declined a college education promised by Walton, decided to enter the Wal-Mart chain as a pet department worker.

"It got into your blood. You just wanted to be like him," Loveless said. Loveless retired five years ago as head of the Sam's Club division.

While Wal-Mart was making money in the late 1970s and early 1980s, organizers unsuccessfully tried to unionize company employees.

UNION TALK

In response to union talk, Walton devised a profit-sharing plan that has made several Northwest Arkansas residents millionaires, or at the very least, handsomely wealthy.

Still, the retail company has drawn criticism over the years for employing many part-time workers not privy to health-care insurance benefits.

More recently, manufacturers' sales representatives have begun a national campaign to try to change Wal-Mart's relatively new policy of dealing only with most vendors' top officials, bypassing the sales representatives.

Walton entered banking in 1961 when he bought, with a loan co-signed with his wife, Helen, the Bank of Bentonville for $350,000.

The Bank of Bentonville is now the flagship bank for the Walton bank holding company, Arvest Bank Group, which has 10 banks stretching from Fayetteville to Bella Vista.

Arvest also has a half interest in a Norman, Okla., bank and in August 1991 bought State Bank N.A. in Tulsa in an attempt to gain a large business stake in the oil town's economy.

ARVEST BANK GROUP

Arvest Bank Group has assets in excess of $1 billion, with the Bank of Bentonville holding about $300 million in assets.

In February, Walton announced that he had signed a deal with Doubleday, a New York publishing house, to write his autobiography with the help of John Huey, senior editor of Fortune magazine.

Walton reported received an advance of $4 million for the rights to his story, which company officials said would be donated to charity.

In a 1982 company publication about his life-threatening illness, Walton told his employees:

"If I'm to have a health problem, I'm really fortunate to have this type of disorder," he wrote.

"I am completely confident, too, that with the right treatment, I'll be able to continue doing things I enjoy most for at least another 20 or 25 years."

"The last thing I need or want would be undue sympathy or undue conversation concerning my health."

SAM WALTON, FOLKSY FOUNDER OF WAL-MART STORES, DIES

(By Richard Pearson)

Sam Walton, 74, the folksy but hard-driving business pioneer who built Wal-Mart from a single general store to the largest retail chain in the nation, died yesterday at a hospital in Little Rock, Ark. He had bone cancer and leukemia.

The growth and success of Wal-Mart are the stuff of business legend. What started as a single general store in 1962 grew to an operation that now includes more than 1,700 Wal-Mart stores in 40 states. Wal-Mart sales have increased from $6.4 billion in 1984 to $43.9 billion last year, when it replaced Sears as the nation's largest retailer.

Wal-Mart recently opened its first stores in the Washington area, including one in Manassas. It plans to open an additional 160 stores across the country this year.

As he built his retail empire, Samuel Moore Walton became one of the nation's richest individuals. In October 1991, Forbes magazine placed him and his four children as Nos. 3 to 7 on its list of the wealthiest Americans, with a net worth of $4.4 billion each. Fortune magazine once said that the Walton family was worth $21.1 billion.

But the wealth seemed to make little impression on Walton. He maintained that the wealth was largely "paper," consisting of stock in his company. In the mid-1980's his salary was about $300,000 a year.

Walton, with an enviable reputation as a shrewd businessman and innovator, made no secret of his formula for success. He created a modern version of the old smalltown general store with the neighborly proprietor. His Wal-Marts, although largely in out-of-the-way parts of the country, often were huge. But they were staffed by friendly, helpful salesclerks who sold brand name products at discount prices.

In March, President Bush traveled to Bentonville, Ark., the home of Walton and Wal-Mart, to present the retailer with the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the nation's highest civilian honor. Addressing a crowd of about 900 at the company's headquarters, the president hailed him as "an American original" who "embodies the entrepreneurial spirit and epitomizes the American dream."

Walton was born in Kingfisher, Okla. As a boy, he milked cows and delivered papers. After graduating from the University of Missouri in 1940 with an economics degree, he became a management trainee with the JC Penny Co. in Des Moines at $85 a month.

After serving in the Army during World War II, he and his brother, J.L. Walton, went into business together.

They opened a Walton's 5&10 and became franchisees for 15 Ben Franklin variety stores in Arkansas.

Ben Franklin's corporate officials in Chicago turned down Sam Walton's ideas for a discount chain keyed to small towns in the South and Midwest: Walton opened his first Wal-Mart Discount City store in Rogers, Ark., in 1962. Seven years later, he had 18 stores. By 1989, he had 1,367 Wal-Marts. A year later, he had 1,537, and as of March 31, 1992, the number had grown to 1,735.

As he once observed, "There was a lot more business in those towns than people ever thought."

Wal-Marts undersold competitors by combining such technology as bar-code scanners—to track inventory and run cash registers—with a fanatical dedication to customer service. The company also maintained tight control on expenses and started a state-of-the-art distribution system.

Wal-Mart workers, or "associates," as Walton called them, were encouraged to make suggestions and were rewarded with what are by all accounts generous stock options, wages, bonuses and other benefits.

"Our philosophy is that management's role is simply to get the right people in the right places to do a job and then to encourage them to use their own inventiveness to accomplish the task at hand," he said in a 1983 interview.

The company went public in 1970, and Walton encouraged his workers and neighbors to buy it. The Washington Post reported that $1,500 invested in 1972 was worth $300,000 by 1985.

Walton made surprise visits to stores across the country, flying in his own plane and displaying a legendary knack for remembering names. He was known to lead employees and customers in a cheer of "Give me a W, give me an A. . . ."

He often visited the store in Bentonville, where he lived. Attired in a baseball cap with the Wal-Mart logo, he was often seen chatting with customers while waiting in line to purchase shotgun shells.

Walton retired as Wal-Mart's chief executive officer in 1988 but continued to be active in the company.

He had always avoided the trappings of the rich and famous. He and his wife of 49 years, the former Helen Robson, lived off an old country road and got their mail from a rural box labeled simply "Sam and Helen Walton." He raised his four children in Bentonville, a town with a population of about 9,900, 45 miles from the nearest interstate highway in the Ozarks of northwest Arkansas.

He drove an old Ford pickup truck and a battered Chevy sedan, which one reporter noted had teeth marks on the steering wheel made by Walton's hunting dog. He often drove to the Bentonville town square, where he had breakfast at a coffee shop, shopped for groceries with his wife, got his haircuts and traded gossip with townfolk.

He summed up his career in a 1984 interview, saying: "Anyone willing to work hard, study the business and apply the best principles can do well. I worked at it. I walked into competitors' stores. And I wandered into more stores than anyone else. I was fortunate in getting some smart people to work for me, and we avoided mistakes that the others made. We learned from everyone else's book and added a few pages of our own."

Another measure of his career was a story he told about driving through town one day and passing his store. He became so engrossed counting the cars in the store lot that he crashed into the back of a Wal-Mart truck. The unamused truck driver leapt from his truck. The driver was wearing a company safe-driving pin on his lapel that celebrated 10 years of driving without an accident. Walton apologized.

Then, on Oct. 8, 1983, Bentonville staged a "Sam and Helen Walton Appreciation Day." Among the people lining the parade route were Arkansas' two U.S. Senators; the University of Arkansas' legendary football coach, Lou Holtz; a 190-member marching band; and 22 floats. One of the floats was a crashed car welded to the back of a Wal-Mart truck.

SAM WALTON IS DEAD AT 74, HAVING BUILT TOP RETAILER IN UNITED STATES

(By Thomas C. Hayes)

Sam Walton, the founder of Wal-Mart Stores Inc. and the most successful merchant of his time, died yesterday at the University of Arkansas Medical Science Hospital in Little Rock. He was 74 years old.

A spokeswoman at the hospital, where Mr. Walton was admitted a week ago, said that the cause of death was being withheld at the request of the family. Mr. Walton had long struggled against two types of cancer, hairy-cell leukemia, which weakens the immune system by attacking white blood cells, and a bone-marrow cancer called multiple myeloma.

Mr. Walton opened the first Wal-Mart Discount City in 1962 in Rogers, Ark., a small city in the Ozarks. By 1991 the chain passed Sears, Roebuck & Company to become the nation's largest retailer. On April 1, it had 1,735 stores in 42 states, as well as 2 in Mexico. Mr. Walton assembled a management team that will carry on, and the company said yesterday that it foresaw no changes in corporate policy or control.

Mr. Walton created Wal-Mart with the idea, once mocked by retailers, that large discount stores could thrive in small towns and rural areas. A gifted, homespun orator, he entranced legions of low-paid loyal workers with a simple refrain—help customers, cut costs and share profits. Wal-Mart's headquarters, in contrast to the 110-story Sears Tower on the edge of Chicago's Loop remain a box-like warehouse and general office in Bentonville, Ark.

Wal-Mart began to sell its stock to the public in 1970. As Wall Street discovered the company's unbroken pattern of high profits and fast growth, the price of Wal-Mart's stock began to soar in the late 1970's, and the Walton Family's wealth with it.

The family fortune includes $23 billion in Wal-Mart stock alone, which provides more than $90 million in annual dividends. The Waltons also own seven banks in Arkansas and Oklahoma and five newspapers in Arkansas. While the Walton name is hardly as well known as Rockefeller or Getty, the family is believed to be the nation's wealthiest.

Investors in Wal-Mart stock also enjoyed a bounty. From 1981 to 1991, the company's shares produced an astounding average yearly return of 46.8 percent, including dividends and increases in the share price. A $3,000 investment in Wal-Mart stock in January 1981 was worth $105,600 in January 1991, the company calculated. By last week, it would have been worth $179,000.

HIGH VOLUME, LOW PRICES

Wal-Mart's rapid growth, built on high sales volume and low prices, brought financial ruin to hundreds of small-town merchants on Main Streets across the South and Midwest. And as Wal-Mart's reputation grew, Mr. Walton often faced bitter resistance in communities where he planned to open stores. Yet, his promises to attract shoppers, assist charities and provide jobs almost always prevailed.

Mr. Walton always worked hard at shaping his work force, using cheers, rap songs and payment policies to urge employees to be frugal in their jobs and friendly toward customers. Bonuses were paid to all employees in stores where stealing and other inventory losses were kept below 2 percent of sales. Scholarships were established at colleges in names of employees who crafted better ways to handle merchandise.

Mr. Walton set the tone, often beginning his mornings at 4:30 and working long days from a cramped, spartan office in Bentonville, in northwestern Arkansas.

This is a man who was at work at 4:30 in the morning, had warmth and charm throughout the day, an interest in his customers, and who treated his associates well as persons, not just as clerks and salespeople," said Walter F. Loeb, a retailing consultant who first met Mr. Walton in 1976. Mr. Walton always referred to Wal-Mart employees as his associates.

BORN IN OKLAHOMA, RAISED IN MISSOURI

Samuel Moore Walton was born in Kingfisher, Okla., on March 29, 1918, the first child of a rural banker, Thomas Walton, and Nancy Lee Walton. An Eagle Scout, quarterback of the state champion football team and student council president, Mr. Walton was voted "most versatile boy" by his graduating classmates at Hickman High School in Columbia, Mo., in 1936.

Working his way through the University of Missouri at Columbia, he delivered newspapers, waited on tables and clerked at a five-and-dime store while taking classes in the Army's Reserve Officer Training Corps and serving as president of the senior class and the honor society. After graduating in 1940 with a degree in economics, he worked briefly as a management trainee in Des Moines with the J.C. Penney Company, then a small-town retailer with 1,500 stores.

During World War II, Mr. Walton served as an Army captain, working in intelligence. In 1945, he acquired his first store, a Ben Franklin franchise in Newport, Ark., with a $25,000 loan from his father-in-law, Leland Stanford Robson, a small-town Oklahoma banker. By the early 1960's, Mr. Walton and his brother, James L. (Bud) Walton, owned 15 Ben Franklin franchises.

STRIKING OUT ON HIS OWN

In 1962, when Ben Franklin executives in Chicago turned down his plan to open bigger stores in rural areas, with discount prices and smaller profit margins, he began to form what eventually became Wal-Mart Stores.

In a 1989 interview with Financial World magazine, Mr. Walton said of his disagreement with Ben Franklin, "They didn't want to give on their end to the degree that it took for the prices to be as low as I felt they should be." Operating costs at Ben Franklin were as much as 25 percent of sales, but Mr. Walton thought they could be much lower.

He said: "If they had been able to sell to me on a 12 percent range, I probably would not have put together the organization that we did. Aren't I glad they didn't accept the idea, because I was forced to build our own team and program?"

ONE TEMPORARY RETIREMENT

Mr. Walton remained the chairman of Wal-Mart until his death. He relinquished the titles of president and chief executive in 1988.

He retired briefly from the chief executive's post in 1974 but reclaimed it two years later.

Last month, he was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom, the nation's highest civilian honor, and hailed as "an American original" who "embodies the entrepreneurial spirit and epitomizes the American dream."

Rejecting occasional advice to sell part of his family's shares and spread his investments, Mr. Walton kept 39 percent of Wal-Mart's common stock under family control in five trusts he established in 1954. Since it became a public company, Wal-Mart has issued more than 1.1 billion shares of common stock.

The five Walton trusts hold Wal-Mart stock collectively valued at $23 billion, about $4.6 billion apiece, at current market value. Annual dividends on the family stock amount to $93.5 million.

HATED DISTINCTION AS WEALTHIEST

In 1985, Forbes magazine declared Mr. Walton the wealthiest person in America, a distinction Mr. Walton often said he hated. "All that hullabaloo about somebody's net worth is just stupid, and it's made my life a lot more complex and difficult," he told Fortune magazine. Although he disliked doing it, he autographed dollar bills for customers and employees and smiled for their cameras.

Mr. Walton displayed scant interest in the social whirl of the fashionably rich. And on business trips that often included visits to six Wal-Mart stores in day, he rented subcompact cars and spent nights at budget motels, or in the homes of store managers. He was notoriously absent-minded. Driving once, he was distracted by counting cars in a competing store's parking lot and rammed into the rear of a Wal-Mart tractor trailer. No one was hurt.

And Mr. Walton had his business failures. Wal-Mart's ventures into selling discount drugs, do-it-yourself building supplies and arts-and-craft supplies were all abandoned after mixed results. His huge Hypermart stores, which have sold groceries along with Wal-Mart's traditional fare since 1988 under a roof that could cover five football fields, have apparently proved too large to manage. The company is trying a similar formula in scaled-down stores called Supercenters.

AVOIDED LABOR UNIONS

On occasion, Mr. Walton sparred with labor unions that tried unsuccessfully to organize clerks in his stores or drivers in his vast trucking fleet. But he mostly avoided labor clashes by placing stores and distribution centers away from cities where unions were powerful.

He also installed profit-sharing plans that enabled hundreds of workers with low wages to retire with comfortable and occasionally lucrative, pensions because of the rising price of Wal-Mart stock. A cashier who retired in 1989 with $262,000 in retirement benefits, Shirley Cox, earned $7.10 an hour on her last day of work after 24 years with the company, said Vance H. Trimble, author of an unauthorized biography of Mr. Walton published by Dutton in 1990.

Mr. Walton was an avid hunter, particularly of quail, and a frequent patron of local restaurants in Bentonville. He was an active worshiper at the First Presbyterian Church, where he once taught Sunday school. In recent years he drove a red 1985 Ford pickup. Bentonville, which now has a population of 10,825, named the local junior high school after him in 1983 and the local day-care center for his wife, Helen Robson Walton.

Mrs. Walton, 72, controls the trust she shared with Mr. Walton. The other four trusts are controlled by the Waltons' four children: S. Robson, 47, one of three Wal-Mart vice chairmen; John T., 45, owner of a boat-making business in San Diego; James C., 43, president of Walton Enterprises, which includes family-controlled newspapers, banks and other businesses and charitable activities, and Alice, 42, who heads a private investment firm, the Llama Company, in Fayetteville, Ark.

Mr. Walton's brother, James, 70, owns more than 20 million shares and is a senior vice president and director of Wal-Mart. Mr. Walton is also survived by 10 grandchildren.

IDEAS THAT BUILT THE NO. 1 RETAILER

One of Wal-Mart's biggest strengths was the streamlined, sophisticated logistics it created for replenishing products as its universe of stores expanded, management advisers at the Boston Consulting Group said.

In the early years, Mr. Walton insisted on building stores no more than a day's drive from distribution centers. Now, Wal-Mart fills merchandise orders within two days, compared with an average of two weeks among its rivals.

The company has 19 cavernous distribution centers, with an average of six miles of rack space in each; nearly 2,000 trucks; a satellite video system for relaying sales trends to executives, buyers, store managers and clerks, and a fleet of aircraft—purchased second-hand—to ferry managers across the Wal-Mart system.

Eighty-five percent of the merchandise Wal-Mart sells is shipped from its distribution centers, compared with 50 percent at its biggest competitor in discounting, Kmart, which relies on suppliers to ship the rest of its merchandise.

UPSETTING CONVENTIONAL WISDOM

In the March-April 1992 issue of The Harvard Business Review, three officers at Boston Consulting—George Stalk, Philip Evans and Lawrence E. Shulman—said Mr. Walton had turned on its ear the conventional retailing approach of having senior executives make purchasing and stocking decisions.

"Instead of the retailer pushing products into the system, customers 'pull' products when and where they need them," they wrote. "The job of senior management at Wal-Mart, then, is not to tell individual store managers what to do but to create an environment where they can learn from the market—and from each other."

Some executives at the company and consultants said Mr. Walton was a fair-minded leader, but hard-driving and demanding. "He was a man who extracted and expected a great deal from others because he himself always gave 100 percent," said Kurt Barnard, an industry consultant.

UNAUTHORIZED BIOGRAPHY

Mr. Trimble wrote that Rod Loveless, former head of the company's wholesale-club division, retired in 1986 at age 42 partly because of job stress.

"If you don't produce, you'll be gone," Mr. Loveless, who did not talk to Mr. Trimble, told The Arkansas Gazette in 1986. David D. Glass, who succeeded Mr. Walton as chief executive in 1988, suffered a heart attack a year after being promoted to president in 1984.

With the economy in recession during 1991, Wal-Mart continued to flex its muscle. Although Mr. Walton was slowed by cancer treatments, he continued piloting himself, often alone, in a twin-engine Cessna to visit dozens of stores each week as he pursued plans to push Wal-Mart's yearly sales beyond $100 billion by the turn of the century.

The company opened more than 150 new and mostly bigger stores, expanded into Northeastern states and accelerated openings of its wholesale subsidiary, known as Sam's Clubs, which in 1991 increased sales by 43 percent, to more than $9 billion. Over all, Wal-Mart's sales rose 35 percent last year, to $43.9 billion, and profits jumped by 24.8 percent, to $1.6 billion.

DELIGHTED CROWDS AS A SHOWMAN

Mr. Walton's enthusiasm knew few bounds. In 1983, after Wal-Mart's profits exceeded expectations, he kept a promise to employees and donned a grass skirt to dance a hula on Wall Street.

At the Wal-Mart annual stockholders' meeting each spring, the charismatic Mr. Walton played barker, preacher, cheerleader and company visionary to ever-larger crowds. On June 7, 1991, more than 10,000 people filled the basketball arena at the University of Arkansas, 30 miles south of Bentonville, for what was Mr. Walton's last performance in a role that began that day at 7 A.M. and continued until noon.

"A lot of believers are here today," he shouted to an approving roar from the crowd of stockholders, executives of Wal-Mart suppliers, and more than 2,000 employees who has traveled to Fayetteville at company expense from stores across the country. Later that day, Sam and Helen Walton held their annual barbecue for the employees on the lawn of the 5,500-square-foot house they built in Bentonville and lived in since 1959.

THE SPIRIT OF PROSPERITY

Mr. Walton orchestrated the annual meeting to underscore his managerial doctrine that the close links among suppliers, shareholders and employees determined Wal-Mart's prosperity.

During the meeting, Mr. Walton urged each of these three constituent groups to stand separately as applause filled the arena. Then he called on employees who served in the military during the Persian Gulf conflict to stand. "Good God, let's get the lights on them," he commanded. Among Wal-Mart's 380,000 employees at the time, 582 reservists and members of the National Guard were activated for the fighting.

A Wal-Mart executive announced that 80,000 jobs had been created in the United States by Wal-Mart merchandise orders since Mr. Walton's "Buy America" campaign began in 1985. The reigning Miss U.S.A., Kelli McCarty, the daughter of a Wal-Mart manager, smiled, posed and exchanged a "high five" with Mr. Walton. Paul Harvey, the radio commentator whose sponsors included Wal-Mart, proclaimed on stage that the Wal-Mart way was "something better than capitalism: enlightened consumerism." Then the entertainer Lee Greenwood, sang "God Bless the U.S.A."

"HIGH EXPECTATIONS ARE THE KEY"

"There is nothing like it in the annals of retailing," Mr. Walton shouted as the spectacle unfolded. "High expectations are the key to everything." When Mr. Glass announced that the value of all Wal-Mart shares had increased to $45 billion from $150 million in 1976, Mr. Walton interrupted him. "And it's only just begun," he declared. "Do you believe it? Let me hear you say it!" And a chant immediately filled the hot auditorium: "And it's only just begun."

Industry analysts say Mr. Walton gained the edge in sales over other retailers by taking risks, adopting approaches that worked for competitors and getting the most from his employees. In 1988, for instance, Wal-Mart averaged $103,000 in sales for each employee, while Kmart averaged $82,000.

In the 1989 interview with Financial World, which named him chief executive of the decade, Mr. Walton said: "I probably have traveled and walked into more variety stores than anybody in America. I am just trying to get ideas, any kind of ideas that will help our company. Most of us don't invent ideas. We take the best ideas from someone else."

The family has planned a private funeral in Bentonville.

WALTON, FOUNDER OF WAL-MART DIES; TOP U.S. RETAILER

(By Myrna Oliver)

Sam Walton, a self-made multi-billionaire who parlayed and Arkansas five-and-dime into the mega-merchandising empire of discount stores he called Wal-Mart, died Sunday. He was 74.

Walton had been treated in the early 1980s for leukemia and was found to have bone cancer in 1990. A Wal-Mart spokesman said Walton died at the University of Arkansas Medical Sciences Hospital in Little Rock, where he had been for more than a week.

Perennially at the top of Forbes magazine's annual list of America's richest people, last October Walton was No. 3, followed by his four children, each with a net worth of $4.4 billion. Last year, ringing up $43.89 billion in sales, Wal-Mart unseated Sears, Roebuck & Co. as the country's largest retailer.

Walton was a paradox who shunned publicity, yet once honored a promise to employees to dance the hula on Wall Street when they turned a higher profit than he had predicted.

Tapping an eager small-town market for discount merchandise, Walton kept his empire centered in tiny Bentonville, Ark., where he drove an old pickup truck and regularly stopped by the local coffee shop for breakfast with townfolk.

"Y'all are real good. We couldn't have done it without your support and without your buying a little merchandise from that old five-and-dime," he told the Ozark citizenry on Oct. 8, 1983, when Bentonville staged a "Sam and Helen Walton Appreciation Day."

"I had no vision of the scope of what I would start," Walton once said of his Southern and Midwestern chain that numbers 1,735 stores. "But I always had confidence that as long as we did our work well and were good to our customers, there would be no limit to us."

"Mr. Sam," as his neighbors called him, was criticized by some labor groups for buying foreign products after announcing a "buy-America" policy, for failing to promote women into management ranks, and for putting some of Main Street's smaller shops out of business.

But Walton, whose autobiography is due for publication in June, was generally revered by his neighbors and employees, whom he always referred to as "associates."

When Walton received the Medal of Freedom last month, President Bush called him "an American original" who "embodies the entrepreneurial spirit and epitomizes the American dream."

Gov. Bill Clinton's office in Little Rock issued a statement: "Hillary and I treasured Sam Walton's friendship and we will miss him very much. He was a remarkable human being, a wonderful family man and one of the greatest citizens in the history of the state of Arkansas."

Walton maintained a generous profit-sharing plan for his employees and spent two or three days each week talking to them in their stores, eager to hear their problems and suggestions. He knew the names of his hundreds of stores managers, and the names of 90% of their wives.

"We like to let folks know we're interested in them and that they're vital to us. Cause they are," he said.

Sam Moore Walton was born in Kingfisher, Okla., March 29, 1918, the elder of two sons of farm mortgage broker Thomas Walton. During the depression, the family moved to Columbia, Mo., where Sam worked his way through the University of Missouri with a paper route.

His down-home folksiness masked a clear talent for business administration and economics, his major. That skill and insight led him to develop Wal-Mart into one of the most state-of-the-art computerized companies in the world.

After his graduation in 1940, Walton spent more than two years as a J.C. Penney trainee in Des Moines, Iowa. He was drafted into the Army in 1942, and spent the remainder of World War II in the United States with the military police.

On Valentine's Day, 1943, Walton married his equally unassuming wife, Helen, the mother of his three sons, S. Robson, Jim C. and John T., and daughter, Alice L.

Using all his savings and a small loan, Walton bought his first store—a franchise Ben Franklin five-and-dime in Newport, Ark.—when he was 27.

He moved his growing family to Bentonville in 1950 after losing the Newport franchise, and opened Walton's five-and-dime. With his brother, James L. (Bud) Walton, he built that store into a franchised chain of 17 Ben Franklin variety stores.

But Walton saw the friendly small town as more than a pleasant place to live and sell small quantities of mundane goods. He viewed it insightfully as an untapped market for discounted name-brand merchandise.

In 1962, unable to persuade owners of the Ben Franklin chain to join him, he founded Wal-Mart with his brother and became chairman. Their first store was Wal-Mart Discount City in Rogers, Ark.

By 1970 he had 30 stores. He took the company public and built it over the next couple of decades to more than 1,700 stores ranging in size from 30,000 to 60,000 square feet.

Many of his Bentonville neighbors bought stock when it cost $2, learning to appreciate the new method of large-scale merchandising when that stock split six times in its first dozen years. The stock closed Friday at $51.62 per share on the New York Stock Exchange.

By 1991, Forbes said Walton would have been the richest man in the world had he not divided about $18 billion equally among his four children. And he continued to build stores, further reducing his capital.

It seemed indeed that, as he had once predicted, "there would be no end to us."

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, earlier today the Senator from New York introduced into the RECORD a copy of a paper questioning the performance of the F/A-18E/F.

This document, which is purported to be an internal Pentagon memorandum, apparently was leaked to the media—perhaps by the same opponents who have continued to try to sink it with rumors and misstatements.

It is important to note from the start that the document does not set forth the official position of the Secretary of Defense or the Navy. Frankly, I am confident it will never be accepted as an official document because it is based on flawed calculations which lead to its inaccurate outcome.

The report purports to show that the range of F/A-18E is significantly overstated. It goes on to suggest that the program is thus too risky and ought to be delayed.

The calculations in the report are flawed because the equation used to calculate the aircraft's range, the Breguet equation, is not applicable to the F/A-18E mission.

The Breguet equation is used to estimate the range of an aircraft while flying at cruise conditions. The equation is completely applicable only when its calculations are limited to the fuel used under cruise conditions. This makes the equation a useful tool for estimating ranges for airliners which use most of their fuel for cruising. However, the equation is less-than-accurate when used to estimate ranges for tactical aircraft. For example, the typical Navy fighter escort mission includes takeoff, landing, climbs, descents, cruise, an allowance for air combat, and a fuel reserve. For the F/A-18, this means that less than half of the aircraft's fuel is used during the cruise segment of a mission. Therefore, in using the equation, it is inappropriate to assume—as the report's author has done—that all internal fuel would be used during cruise.

While the Breguet equation is not an appropriate tool for accurately estimating the overall range of an F/A-18 combat mission, it can be applied to the cruise segment of the mission to verify the Navy's calculated cruise improvements.

With fuel amounts for other mission segments removed, the amount of fuel available for the cruise segment of a fighter escort mission is 3,756 pounds for the F/A-18C and 6,180 pounds for the F/A-18E. Applying these numbers to the Breguet equation provides an estimated fighter escort range improvement of 194 nautical miles. When divided by two we end up with a mission radius of 97 nautical miles which is better than the Navy's calculated mission radius improvement of 92 NM for the F/A-18E over the F/A-18C—423 NM versus 331 NM. So, when applied properly the Breguet equation actually verifies the Navy's estimated range improvement in the F/A-18E.

The improper use of the Breguet equation in calculating the aircraft's range results in the false implication that there may be problems with the F/A-18E's payload and maneuverability as well. Several studies have verified the projected increases in maneuverability and payload, and a current independent review now underway is likely to confirm it yet again.

It is unfortunate that the leak of this factually incorrect document by those who wish to kill the F/A-18E in favor of the F-14—a plane which has been rejected by the Pentagon and by Congress, is forcing DOD to spend scarce dollars to conduct yet another study to verify the plane's performance.

As always, the Senator's comments on this issue provide a lot of entertaining reading, but not much in the way of useful information. Contrary to the charges put forward, the Navy has put forth a solid cost estimate of $4.88 billion which they say is a number they can stand behind. The F/A-18E/F program has not been delayed due to any technical or performance issues. The development program is planned to last 42 months, and first flight is still scheduled for 1995 with production deliveries in 1998.

The F/A-18E/F is exactly the kind of low-risk, low-cost program that the services ought to be pursuing in this time of declining defense budgets. The Navy is taking a proven, battle-tested weapon system that has performed in an outstanding manner; and is upgrading it to meet changing requirements. Without this program, the Navy will not be able to afford enough aircraft to fill the decks of its aircraft carriers. Only an air wing based around the multirole Hornet with its relatively low procurement cost and its low life-cycle costs can meet the Navy's long-term power projection and force structure requirements.

Contrary to the never-ending complaints of F/A-18 opponents, this is neither a new program nor a knee-jerk reaction to the cancellation of the A-12. Navy and contractor development studies on an upgraded Hornet began more than 5 years ago at the request of then-Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, who foresaw the need for affordable, multirole aircraft to fill carrier decks and complement the expensive stealth attack aircraft planned at the time.

The F/A-18 system has been—and continues to be—an outstanding investment for this country. It was the only Navy aircraft to shoot down enemy fighters during the Gulf war, and it is the only aircraft in history to have done so laden with more than 8,000 pounds of ordnance. In fact, in just one Desert Storm mission, two F/A-18's downed more enemy aircraft and dropped more bombs than the entire F-14 fleet did for the duration of the war. When I shared with President Bush—himself a former Naval aviator—the story of how these two fliers from the U.S.S. Saratoga had downed two Migs without jettisoning their bombs, he was truly impressed.

The E/F version of the F/A-18 will capitalize on the Navy's long-standing investment in the Hornet by retaining more than 90 percent of the avionics and weapons systems of the F/A-18C/D. Its larger wing and fuselage and more powerful engines will give it increased range and payload capabilities, improve its growth potential, and enhance overall combat performance. It will be capable, in fact, that it will allow the Navy to reduce the number of aircraft types aboard its aircraft carriers, thus saving billions of dollars in operation and support costs.

Last year, Secretary Cheney wrote to me to set forth some of the reasons for his support for the F/A-18E/F. He wrote:

In the final analysis, the F/A-18E/F was the clear choice over the F-14. It is three times more reliable, twice as easy to maintain, has a safety record which is 50 percent better, requires about 25 percent fewer maintenance personnel, and costs about 25 percent less to operate per flight hour. When combined, these factors clearly show that the F/A-18E/F is the most cost effective aircraft.

Later in his letter the Secretary added:

This decision was not an easy one to make. It is, however, the only one which is supportable within the current fiscal constraints. Should we be forced to deviate from the course described above by having to purchase additional F-14's, the result may well be an inability to achieve our overall goal of a modernization and a fully equipped carrier force to meet our Nation's projection of power needs.

It is clear that the F/A-18E/F program is not—as the Senator has charged—a “frantic” effort to slip a new system past Congress and the taxpayers.

Mr. President, this program has been reviewed, scrubbed and scrutinized. Every one of the cost and technical risk evaluations performed to date have reached the same conclusion—that this is a low-to-moderate risk program. The more than 1,000 F/A-18's in the fleet have given the Navy and industry a substantial technical data base for understanding the aerodynamic characteristics of this aircraft. In addition, as part of predevelopment risk reduction activities, more than 3,000 hours of wind tunnel test data have been collected on the F/A-18E/F. Based on these extensive data bases, sufficient margins for any unknown development factors have been included in all key technical areas, further increasing confidence that the program will be a success.

The F/A-18E/F is a worthwhile, cost-effective program based on a proven system. It is clearly the best system for filling the Navy's multirole aircraft requirements. That is why the Navy supports it, that is why Secretary Cheney supports it, and that is why this Congress has supported it.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to executive session to consider the nomination of George J. Terwilliger III, to be Deputy Attorney General reported today by the Committee on the Judiciary.

I further ask unanimous consent that the nominee be confirmed; that any statements be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as if read; that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; that the President be notified of the Senate's action; and that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nomination considered and confirmed is as follows:

George J. Terwilliger III, of Vermont, to be Deputy Attorney General.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

RECOMMITTAL OF PROMOTIONS

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed into executive session; that Calendar 561, certain promotions of the U.S. Army, be recommitted to the Committee on Armed Services; and that the Senate return to legislative session.

Mr. DURENBERGER. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will return to legislative session.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. McCathran, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations and a withdrawal which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations and withdrawal received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

ANNUAL REPORT ON FEDERAL ADVISORY COMMITTEES—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 200

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the requirements of section 6(c) of the Federal Advisory Committee Act, as amended (Public Law 92-463; 5 U.S.C. App. 2, sec. 6(c)), I hereby transmit the Twentieth Annual Report on Federal Advisory Committees for fiscal year 1991.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 9, 1992.

ACCOUNTABILITY IN GOVERNMENT ACT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 201

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying papers; which was referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am pleased to transmit today for your immediate consideration and enactment the "Accountability in Government Act of 1992."

The legislation would extend to the Congress and the White House the relevant portions of five laws that apply to the private sector. The laws in question are the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (minimum wage law), the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967, the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, and the damages remedy created by the Civil Rights Act of 1991. The proposal also makes available the remedies currently available to other employees for violations of these laws, rather than special remedial schemes based entirely or in large part on internal congressional grievance mechanisms.

The legislation would also extend to the analogous portions of Congress five laws that presently apply to various portions of the executive branch. The laws in question are Title VI of the Ethics in Government Act, conflicts of interest laws, the Hatch Act, the Freedom of Information Act, and the Privacy Act. The scope of this proposal has been carefully tailored to take into account the unique characteristics of the Congress and its Members. Moreover, none of the provisions of this legislation except those implicating criminal penalties calls for executive branch enforcement. Rather, all are to be enforced either by private suit, entities within the General Accounting Office (an instrumentality of the legislative branch), or both. This legislation therefore does not present the constitutional separation-of-powers questions that might be presented by general executive branch administration of laws applied to the legislative branch.

I urge the Congress to give this legislation prompt and favorable consideration.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 9, 1992.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. GORE (by request):

S. 2558. A bill to authorize appropriations to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for research and development, space flight, control and data communications, construction of facilities, and research and program management, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

NATIONAL AERONAUTICS AND SPACE ADMINISTRATION AUTHORIZATION ACT

• Mr. GORE. Mr. President, today I am introducing, by request, the President's proposed legislation for authorizing funds for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for fiscal year 1993.

The bill requests a total of $14.993 billion, an increase of some $640 million in budget authority over the current fiscal year. This represents an increase of 4.5 percent.

I am pleased to note that important NASA programs such as the Earth observing system and the space station Freedom are continued in the President's proposed funding bill. However, I remain dismayed by the decision to terminate funding for the vitally important advanced solid rocket motor, which is needed to provide additional capacity and safety to future space shuttle launches.

In addition, the bill proposes language that would provide authority to protect, such as by withholding from public disclosure, certain information resulting from research and development activities conducted under a cooperative agreement entered into by NASA. This authority is similar to that provided in the National Competitiveness Technology Transfer Act of 1989, Public Law 101-189, for the protection of information that results from cooperative research and development agreements and other Federal laboratories.

It is my hope that when the Senate reconvenes after the Easter recess, we will be ready to take a NASA authorization bill to the full Commerce Committee for its consideration. As Chairman of the Subcommittee on Science, Technology, and Space, I will do my best to preserve funding for the essential parts of the civil space and aeronautics program, establishing priorities that reflect congressional interest in these programs within the realities of our constrained fiscal situation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President's bill, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2558

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—FISCAL YEAR 1993 NATIONAL AERONAUTICS AND SPACE ADMINISTRATION AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 101. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to become available October 1, 1992:

(a) For "Research and development," for the following programs:

- (1) Space Station Freedom, $2,250,000,000;
- (2) Space transportation capability development, $863,700,000;
- (3) Physics and astronomy, $1,113,500,000;
- (4) Life sciences, $177,200,000;
- (5) Planetary exploration, $487,200,000;
- (6) Space applications, $1,207,100,000;
- (7) Technology utilization, $31,700,000;
- (8) Commercial use of space, $139,900,000;
- (9) Aeronautical research and technology, $890,200,000;
- (10) Transatmospheric research and technology, $80,000,000;
- (11) Space research and technology, $332,000,000;
- (12) Space exploration, $31,800,000;
- (13) Safety, reliability and quality assurance, $32,500,000;
- (14) Tracking and data advanced systems, $23,200,000;
- (15) Academic Programs, $71,400,000;

(b) For "Space flight, control and data communications," for the following programs:

- (1) Space Shuttle production and operational capability, $1,012,800,000;
- (2) Space Shuttle operations, $3,115,200,000;
- (3) Expendable launch vehicles, $217,500,000;
- (4) Space and ground network, communications and data systems, $921,000,000;
- (c) For "Construction of facilities," including land acquisition, as follows:

- (1) Construction of Space Station Processing Facility, Kennedy Space Center, $24,000,000;
- (2) Modifications for Payload Operations Integration Center, Marshall Space Flight Center, $1,800,000;
- (3) Replace Aircraft Operations Support Facilities, Johnson Space Center, $1,600,000;
- (4) Modify Electrical and Mechanical System, Utility Annex, Kennedy Space Center, $4,400,000;

(5) Rehabilitate Explosive Safe Area-60 High Bays Support System, Kennedy Space Center, $2,000,000;

(6) Rehabilitate LC-39 Area Fire Alarm Reporting System, Kennedy Space Center, $4,300,000;

(7) Replace Boiler House Components, Michoud Assembly Facility, $2,300,000;

(8) Restoration of High Pressure Gas Facility, Stennis Space Center, $6,800,000;

(9) Rehabilitation of Crawlerway, Kennedy Space Center, $2,000,000;

(10) Restoration of Information and Electronic Systems Laboratory, Marshall Space Flight Center, $5,000,000;

(11) Rehabilitation and Expansion of Communications Duct Banks, Kennedy Space Center, $1,500,000;

(12) Replace Central Plant Chilled Water Equipment, Johnson Space Center, $4,000,000;

(13) Restoration of Underground Communication Distribution System, Stennis Space Center $2,200,000;

(14) Restoration/Modernization of Electrical Distribution System, Goddard Space Flight Center, $4,500,000.

(15) Construction of Earth Observing System Data Information System Facility, Goddard Space Flight Center, $22,300,000;

(16) Modernization of Unitary Plan Wind Tunnel Complex, Ames Research Center, $8,000,000;

(17) Modifications to 14 by 22-Foot Subsonic Wind Tunnel, Langley Research Center, $2,200,000;

(18) Repair and Modernization of the 12-Foot Pressure Wind Tunnel, Ames Research Center, $21,400,000;

(19) Rehabilitation of Icing Research Tunnel, Lewis Research Center, $2,700,000;

(20) Modernization of 16-Foot Transonic Tunnel, Langley Research Center, $3,600,000;

(21) Rehabilitation of Central Air System, Lewis Research Center, $12,200,000;

(22) Construction of 34-Meter Multifrequency Antenna, Canberra, Australia, Jet Propulsion Laboratory, $15,600,000;

(23) Construction of 34-Meter Multifrequency Antenna, Madrid, Spain, Jet Propulsion Laboratory, $16,200,000;

(24) Restoration and Modernization of Infrared Telescope Facility, Mauna Kea, HI, $2,000,000;

(25) Repair of Facilities at Various Locations, Not in Excess of $1,000,000 Per Project, $31,900,000;

(26) Rehabilitation and Modification of Facilities at Various Locations Not in Excess of $1,000,000 Per Project, $34,000,000;

(27) Minor Construction of New Facilities and Additions to Existing Facilities at Various Locations, Not in Excess of $750,000 Per Project, $14,000,000;

(28) Environmental Compliance and Restoration Program, $40,000,000;

(29) Facility Planning and Design, $26,700,000.

(d) For "Research and program management," $1,660,027,000;

(e) For "Inspector General," $15,900,000.

(f) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection 101(i), appropriations hereby authorized for "Research and development" and "Space flight, control and data communications" may be used (1) for any items of a capital nature (other than acquisition of land) which may be required at locations other than installations of the Administration for the performance of research and development contracts, and (2) for grants to nonprofit institutions of higher education, or to nonprofit organizations whose primary purpose is the conduct of scientific research, for purchase or construction of additional research facilities; and title to such facilities shall be vested in the United States unless the Administrator determines that the national program of aeronautical and space activities will best be served by vesting title in any such grantee institution or organization. Each such grant shall be made under such conditions as the Administrator shall determine to be required to ensure that the United States will receive therefrom benefit adequate to justify the making of that grant. None of the funds appropriated for "Research and development" and "Space flight, control and data communications" pursuant to this Act may be used in accordance with this subsection for the construction of any major facility, the estimated cost of which, including collateral equipment, exceeds $750,000, unless the Administrator or the Administrator's designee has notified the Committee on Science, Space and Technology of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation of the Senate, of the nature, location, and estimated cost of such facility.

(g) When so specified and to the extent provided in an appropriation Act, (1) any amount appropriated for "Research and development," for "Space flight, control and data communications" or for "Construction of facilities" may remain available without fiscal year limitation, and (2) contracts may be entered into under "Inspector General" and "Research and program management" for training, investigations, and costs associated with personnel relocation and for other services to be provided, during the next fiscal year.

(h) Appropriations made pursuant to subsection 101(a) may be used, but not to exceed $35,000, for official reception and representation expenses.

(i)(1) Funds appropriated pursuant to subsections 101 (a) and (b) may be used for the construction of new facilities and additions to existing facilities, and for repair, rehabilitation, or modification of facilities, provided the cost of each such project, including collateral equipment, does not exceed $200,000.

(2) Funds appropriated pursuant to subsections 101 (a) and (b) may be used for unforeseen programmatic facility project needs, provided the cost of each such project, including collateral equipment, does not exceed $750,000.

(3) Funds appropriated pursuant to subsections 101 (a) and (b) may be used for repair, rehabilitation or modification of facilities controlled by the General Services Administration, provided the cost of each project, including collateral equipment, does not exceed $500,000.

ADMINISTRATOR'S REPROGRAMMING AUTHORITY

SEC. 102. Authorization is hereby granted whereby any of the amounts prescribed in paragraphs (1) through (29), inclusive, of subsection 101(c)—

(a) at the discretion of the Administrator or the Administrator's designee, may be varied upward 10 percent, or

(b) following a report by the Administrator or the Administrator's designee to the Committee on Science, Space and Technology of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation of the Senate, on the circumstances of such action, may be varied upward 25 percent, to meet unusual cost variations. The total cost of all work authorized under paragraphs (a) and (b) shall not exceed the total of the amounts specified in Section 101(c).

SPECIAL REPROGRAMMING AUTHORITY FOR CONSTRUCTION OF FACILITIES

SEC. 103. Where the Administrator determines that new developments or scientific or engineering changes in the national program of aeronautical and space activities have occurred; and that such changes require the use of additional funds for the purposes of construction, expansion, or modification of facilities at any location; and that deferral of such action until the enactment of the next authorization Act would be inconsistent with the interest of the Nation in aeronautical and space activities; the Administrator may transfer not to exceed ½ of 1 percent of the funds appropriated pursuant to Section 101(a) and 101(b) to the "Construction of facilities" appropriation for such purposes. The Administrator may also use up to $10,000,000 of the amounts authorized under Section 101(c) for such purposes. The funds so made available pursuant to this section may be expended to acquire, construct, convert, rehabilitate, or install permanent or temporary public works, including land acquisition, site preparation, appurtenances, utilities, and equipment. No such funds may be obligated until a period of 30 days has passed after the Administrator or the Administrator's designee has transmitted to the Committee on Science, Space and Technology of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation of the Senate a written report describing the nature of the construction, its cost and the reasons therefore.

LIMITATIONS ON AUTHORITY

SEC. 104. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act—

(a) no amount appropriated pursuant to this Act may be used for any program deleted by the Congress from requests as originally made to either the House Committee on Science, Space and Technology or the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation,

(b) no amount appropriated pursuant to this Act may be used for any program in excess of the amount actually authorized for that particular program by subsections 101(a), 101(b) and 101(d),

(c) no amount appropriated pursuant to this Act may be used for any program which has not been presented to either such committee, unless a period of 30 days has passed after the receipt by each such committee, of notice given by the Administrator or the Administrator's designee containing a full and complete statement of the action proposed to be taken and the facts and circumstances relied upon in support of such proposed action.

TITLE

SEC. 105. This Act may be cited as the "National Aeronautics and Space Administration Authorization Act, 1993."

TITLE II—AMENDMENT TO THE SPACE ACT ON PROTECTION OF INFORMATION DEVELOPED UNDER SPACE ACT AGREEMENTS

SEC. 201. Section 303 of the National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958, as amended, is amended by adding "(a)" after "303", by removing "and" before "B.", and by adding after "national security" the following: ", and (C) information described in subsection (b), below." At the end of subsection 303(a), add the following new section:

(b) The Administrator, for a period of up to five years after the development of information that results from activities conducted under an agreement entered into under the authority of section 203(c)(5) and section 203(c)(6) of this Act, and that would be a trade secret or commercial or financial information that is privileged or confidential under the meaning of section 552(b)(4) of Title 5, United States Code, if the information had been obtained from a non-Federal party participating in such an agreement, may provide appropriate protection against the dissemination of such information, including exemption from subchapter II of Chapter 5 of Title 5, United States Code.

By Mr. SIMPSON (for Mr. WALLOP, for himself and Mr. SIMPSON):

S. 2559. A bill to require the sale of Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 3 (Teapot Dome); to the Committee on Armed Services.

SALE OF PETROLEUM RESERVE NO. 3

• Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, with Senator SIMPSON as a cosponsor, I am today introducing the Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 3 Sale Act.

Mr. President, the first two naval petroleum reserves were created back in 1909 by President Taft to assure a supply of oil for the U.S. Navy, which was beginning the conversion of its warships from coal to oil. Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 3, more commonly referred to as Teapot Dome, was created by President Wilson in 1915 for the same reason. Teapot Dome is located in Wyoming.

Once upon a time it made sense for the U.S. Government to own reserves of crude oil for national security purposes. At the turn of the century we did not have a well-established oil production, refining and delivery system. Nor was there much foreign oil production available at the time.

But times have changed. Today, Teapot Dome produces 2,000 barrels of oil per day. That is only three one-hundredths of 1 percent of U.S. crude oil production, and four one-thousandths of 1 percent of worldwide oil production. Moreover, we now have in place a strategic petroleum reserve, which presently contains 569 millions of barrels of oil. That is 700 times the annual amount of oil produced from Teapot Dome.

Mr. President, if there were good national security reasons for the Federal Government to hold onto Teapot Dome, I would be the first to resist its sale to the private sector. But there are not. The sale of Teapot Dome will not stop oil from being produced from it, and, in fact, the opposite is more likely the case. In private sector hands there is no question that the oil contained in Teapot Dome will be extracted more economically and efficiently, and production output will be maximized. Moreover, if sold we will no longer need to pay Federal bureaucrats to oversee Teapot Dome's operation.

Out of concern for this Nation's national security, however, section * of the bill gives the President the authority to waive the sale requirement if he finds that continued Government ownership of Teapot Dome is in the national interest. I have no doubt that this authority will not be exercised, but out of caution I am including it in my legislation.

Mr. President, its for these reasons that I am today introducing this legislation. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2559

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 3 Sale Act".

SEC. 2. SALE REQUIRED.

The Secretary of Energy shall sell all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 3.

SEC. 3. PRESIDENTIAL WAIVER.

The President may waive the requirement of section 1 upon a finding that the control and use of Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 3 by the United States is necessary in the national security interests of the United States.

SEC. 4. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

(a) PROCEEDS OF SALE.—The Secretary of Energy is authorized, subject to appropriations, to use the proceeds of the sale to satisfy any contractual obligations directly related to the sale, and to pay any liability of the Department of Energy arising under any relevant Federal statute concerning the environment with respect to the interests sold. The funds received from the sale shall be covered into the United States Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

(b) FAIR MARKET VALUE REQUIRED.—Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 3 may not be sold for less than the fair market value, as determined by the Secretary of Energy.

(c) CONTRACTING AUTHORITY.—In order to arrange and conduct the sale of Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 3, the Secretary of Energy may enter into contracts, including contracts for investment banking and other professional services, and may waive the applicability to any such contract of any law that provides procedures to be followed in the formation or performance of, or the terms or conditions to be included in, contracts entered into by the Federal Government: Provided, That the Secretary of Energy shall transmit to Congress, in advance, a written notification of any waiver of any such law under this subsection.

(d) PURCHASER TO BE HELD HARMLESS.—No purchaser of any right, title, or interest of the United States in Naval Petroleum Reserve No. 3 shall be liable for any claim of liability arising exclusively from or during the ownership of the interest by the United States. Such a claim or liability may be asserted only against the United States to the extent and in the manner provided by law.

(e) CONGRESSIONAL CONSULTATION.—The congressional consultation provisions of sections 7431 (a) and (b) of title 10, United States Code, shall not apply to the sale required by this Act. •

By Mr. DURENBERGER:

S. 2561. A bill to amend the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States to exempt certain railway locomotives and railway freight cars from entry and release requirements established in section 448 and 484 of the Tariff Act of 1930; to the Committee on Finance.

ELIMINATION OF CERTAIN TARIFF BARRIERS

• Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, the United States and Canada has eliminated the tariffs on railroad locomotives and most freight cars as part of the implementation of the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. The intent was to permit railroads to make more efficient use of equipment by being able to operate Canadian equipment in domestic service within the United States on the same basis as U.S. equipment is able to be used in Canada. Unfortunately, certain non-tariff barriers remain which make such use impractical, if not impossible. The Treasury Department supports efforts to correct the problem, but has taken the position that a legislative solution is required.

The legislation I am introducing today is designed to resolve this problem. It provides for the elimination of entry and release requirements on railroad locomotives and freight cars on which the tariff has already been removed. Under current law, railroad equipment which is subject to the entry and release requirements is also liable for a Merchandise Processing Fee. Under this bill, eliminating the entry and release requirement automatically eliminates the liability for the Merchandise Processing Fee.

Currently, there is no Merchandise Processing Fee imposed on trains which transport goods to a destination in the United States. A train carrying cargo from Canada, which drops cars on its way to Chicago, would pay no fee. If, however, that same train picks up some cars in the United States which are bound for Chicago, the train is then subject to the ad valorem Merchandise Processing Fee. Mr. President, this is not an efficient use of resources.

The Fee for 1992 is .068 percent of the value of the railroad equipment. When applied to a $2,000,000 diesel locomotive crossing the border for use in U.S. domestic service once each week, the annual fee would be $72,800. When applied to a large number of locomotives and freight cars, the fee quickly becomes prohibitive.

The revenue impact of any legislation is obviously a major concern to all Members of Congress. Because of the financial burden of the Merchandise Processing Fee, Canadian locomotives and freight cars are rarely used in United States domestic service and, therefore, only a negligible fee is being paid. •

By Mr. SANFORD:

S. 2562. A bill to improve rural housing programs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

RURAL HOUSING IMPROVEMENT ACT

• Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Rural Housing

Improvement Act of 1992. I believe this legislation is very important and will go a long way toward addressing the tremendous housing needs of rural America.

For years now, media and public attention has focused on the serious housing crisis which plagues our urban areas. However, the shortage of affordable housing stock, lack of mortgage credit and a large amount of substandard housing have left the housing problems of our rural communities equally troublesome. According to the National Housing Task Force, 4.3 million rural households are facing housing problems of some type, and 2 million rural households are substandard dwellings which lack basic necessities.

In 1989, I introduced the Rural Housing Revitalization Act, and many of the proposals from this legislation were included in the National Affordable Housing Act of 1990. The increased funding and new programs included in this legislation represented a great step by Congress to begin to address our country's desperate rural housing needs.

However, now more action is needed. Huge backlogs in applications for the popular Farmers Home Administration [FmHA] housing programs persist. At the beginning of 1990, FmHA had close to four times the fiscal year 1990 appropriation for section 515 rural rental housing funds, and less than one-third of eligible applicants for section 502 direct loans received assistance in 1991.

Meanwhile, our rural residents continue to live in overcrowded and substandard dwellings with leaky roofs, inadequate plumbing, and faulty heating systems.

The U.S. Congress must continue the work it began 2 years ago by increasing funding for current FmHA rural housing programs and by creating new, innovative ways to address the specific housing needs of rural communities. I believe the Rural Housing Improvement Act of 1992 will accomplish these goals.

First, this legislation increases authorization levels for the highly effective Farmers Home Administration housing programs. The bill calls for a $300 million increase in the section 502 authorization level and a $250 million in the section 515 authorization level. In addition, this legislation includes funding increases for farmworker housing, self help housing and housing preservation grant programs in order to improve the ability of these innovative programs to meet the needs of our country's rural residents.

This legislation also makes positive changes in rural housing programs to increase the ability of the Farmers Home Administration, private developers, and nonprofit providers to address rural housing needs.

First, this bill modifies the Section 533 Housing Preservation Grant Program to include replacement housing. In many cases, the dilapidated rural housing owned by low-income individuals who qualify for the Section 533 Program is simply beyond rehabilitation, and replacement is the only viable option. Thus, this change will give the Housing Preservation Grant Program the flexibility to better address the needs of these individuals by allowing grants to be used to replace housing when rehabilitation becomes economically infeasible.

The Rural Housing Improvement Act of 1992 creates a self-help housing inventory program through which FmHA and nonprofit organizations will be able to help low-income rural residents achieve homeownership by purchasing property currently held in FmHA's single family inventory and rehabilitating it using the self-help method.

Also, this legislation creates a new FmHA program to provide grants to nonprofit housing agencies to establish revolving loan funds to cover the acquisition and preparation of building sites for low-income housing. These funds will provide tremendous resources to nonprofit providers during the early phases of housing development when few Federal resources are available.

In addition, this bill reauthorizes several provisions of the National Affordable Housing Act in order that the Section 502 Deferred Mortgage Program, the Underserved Areas Program, and the nonprofit set-aside of section 515 funds can continue to serve rural communities.

This bill permanently authorizes the section 515 and section 523 FmHA programs. These are the only two FmHA programs which lack permanent authorization, and the efficiency of the programs have been compromised by repeated disruptions in funding availability. Permanent authorization will give the section 515 and 523 programs uniformity with other FmHA housing programs and allow them to operate most effectively.

Finally, this legislation makes needed changes in the HOME Investment Program created by the National Affordable Housing Act. While the HOME Program provides great opportunities for public/private/nonprofit partnerships to create more affordable housing, rural areas have had difficulty utilizing the program because of inadequate funds and burdensome restrictions which disregard the specific needs of rural areas. Thus, this bill ensures rural areas will receive their fair share of HOME funds by requiring that States allocate funds to regions in proportion to the needs of each region and also amends the HOME Program to allow rural areas to be eligible to use funds received through the HOME Program for new construction.

Mr. President, the rural housing crisis in America remains acute, and we in Congress must continue our fight to improve housing conditions in rural communities. Thus, I urge my colleagues to support the Rural Housing Improvement Act of 1992. •

By Mr. BRADLEY (for himself and Mr. LAUTENBERG):

S. 2563. A bill to provide for the rehabilitation of historic structures within the Sandy Hook Unit of Gateway National Recreation Area in the State of New Jersey, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

SANDY HOOK COMMUNITY PARTNERSHIP ACT

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise to introduce the Sandy Hook Community Partnership Act. I'm very pleased that Senator LAUTENBERG is joining me as a sponsor of this simple but critical legislation.

Mr. President, for more than a decade New Jersey's Monmouth County and the Sandy Hook Unit of Gateway National Recreation Area have cultivated a mutually beneficial relationship. The park has allowed the county's school district to use several of its buildings to administer its Marine Academy of Science and Technology, and in return, the school has renovated many of the park's historic, but dilapidated and worn buildings. To date, Monmouth County has completed more than 2 million dollars' worth of renovation. If not for this money, the decline of these structures would have continued with a sad steadiness. Clearly, this has been a rewarding arrangement for both sides.

Recently, the school and the park have discovered that legislation is required in order for them to maintain their relationship. My bill will allow the Secretary of the Interior to enter into an agreement with the school thereby permitting the school to use certain park facilities for the purpose of development and operations, without cost to the National Park Service.

Mr. President, I am in full support of this effort for two basic reasons. First, over the past 10 years, the Marine Academy has grown from a part-time institution into a demanding 4-year program for boys and girls in grades 9-12. The academy is truly unique. By emphasizing marine science technology and marine trades, the school has successfully prepared hundreds of its students for work or study in the important field of marine environmental science. Second, the renovation that has been made to park buildings is substantial and positive. For years, scores of historical buildings at Sandy Hook have been decaying as a result of neglect caused by budgetary limitations. Monmouth County has remedied this problem by instilling life into many buildings that were on the verge of condemnation.

Mr. President, the Sandy Hook-Monmouth County partnership has benefitted many people: the students who attend the Marine Academy, the tourists who visit the park and of course the State and Federal governments responsible for the maintenance and operation of the facility. We must ensure that this relationship will continue to prosper. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent to have the text of my legislation printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2563

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. MARINE ACADEMY AGREEMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In order to further the revitalization, rehabilitation, and utilization of Fort Hancock within the Sandy Hook Unit of Gateway National Recreation Area, the Secretary of the Interior may enter into an agreement with the Monmouth County Vocational School District or a successor (referred to in this Act as the "District"), to permit the use by the District of properties situated along Gunnison Road and Magruder Road for the purpose of developing and operating, without cost to the National Park Service, a secondary school program to be known as the Marine Academy of Science and Technology.

(b) DESIGN OF FACILITIES.—The design of new facilities and landscape improvements, and the rehabilitation of existing facilities for school and administrative use, shall be subject to the approval of the Director of the National Park Service. In determining whether to approve the design and rehabilitation, the Director shall use standards for rehabilitation and National Park Service guidelines and policies that are approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 2. REVERSION.

If the properties, facilities, and improvements referred to in section 1 are not used by the District for a secondary school program, the agreement authorized by section 1 shall be terminated and all use of the properties, facilities, and improvements shall revert, without consideration, to the National Park Service.

SEC. 3. REIMBURSEMENT.

(a) REHABILITATION.—As a condition of entering into the agreement authorized by section 1, the Secretary of the Interior may—

(1) accept reimbursement expenses, of not more than $500,000, to cover the cost of rehabilitating other property within the Sandy Hook Unit of Gateway National Recreation Area for park uses that are displaced from facilities used by the District under the agreement authorized by section 1; or

(2) require the District to rehabilitate other property for the park uses—

(A) under the direction of the National Park Service; and

(B) at a cost of not more than $500,000.

(b) FEES FOR SERVICES.—The Director of the National Park Service may collect and retain reasonable fees for services provided to the District by the National Park Service, including alarm monitoring, permit compliance, fire and police protection, and snow removal.

By Mr. BREAUX:

S. 2564. A bill to change the date of Federal elections to the first Saturday after the first Monday in November in even-numbered years; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

HOLDING FEDERAL ELECTIONS ON SATURDAY

• Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a simple piece of legislation that would have a major impact on voter turnout in this country. My bill would move the Federal election day from the first Tuesday in November to the first Saturday in November.

Article 1, Section 4 of the Constitution states that "the Time, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing [sic] Senators." Article 2, Section 4, in reference to Presidential elections, states: "The Congress may determine the Time of chusing [sic] the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes, which Day shall be the same throughout the United States."

Based on these two provisions, an Act of Congress in 1845 designated the Tuesday following the first Monday in November as the Federal Presidential election day. A similar measure was passed in 1875 for congressional elections.

Back in 1845 there was a logical reason for holding elections on the first Tuesday of the month. Customarily, the first Monday of the month was the day on which courts were in session in county seats. The holding of elections on the next day, Tuesday, kept activities in town from getting too hectic on court day and gave citizens from outlying towns an extra full day in which to travel after the Sunday Sabbath.

This logic obviously does not apply in the 1990's. Travel to the polls is a matter of minutes, rather than days. Most importantly, Tuesday is a work day for the vast majority of the American people. Based on a May 1985 Current Population Survey by the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics, we know that only 25 percent of full-time employees working in their primary job regularly go to work on Saturday. For the other 75 percent, Saturday is essentially a free day. Moving elections from Tuesday to Saturday would get rid of one of the most obvious hurdles that can make voting difficult for working people.

Mr. President, voter turnout for Federal elections has declined continuously for 30 years. The 1990 congressional elections saw a national voter turnout of only 36.4 percent of the eligible voting age population. The 1988 Presidential election saw a turnout of only 50 percent. I will now ask unanimous consent to insert at the end of my statement a table describing voter turnout in both Presidential and Non-Presidential Federal election years.

The information it contains comes primarily from a CRS Report written in 1989. The figures on 1990 election turnout are derived from other sources.

The United States is the greatest democracy in the world. There is no doubt about that. Nevertheless, in a survey conducted in 1987 by the Congressional Research Service of 28 of the developed democratic nations throughout the world, the United States has the lowest voter turnout. It should be noted that differences in the way that voter participation statistics are measured and in the nature of offices to be filled make exact comparisons between U.S. elections and those in other countries somewhat tenuous. It is interesting to note, however, that Canada, Great Britain, Denmark, Ireland, Israel, the Netherlands and, on occasion, Portugal, are the only nations in this survey which hold elections during the work week. Again, I would like to illustrate my point with a table based on work done by CRS, entitled "A sampling of voter turnouts in recent elections from around the world." I ask unanimous consent that this table be inserted in the RECORD at the end of my statement.

Congress has attempted to address this issue in the past with proposals to move Federal elections from Tuesday to Saturday or Sunday, or to create a Federal holiday on election day. The costs associated with this latter proposal are very high and completely unnecessary. Louisiana has held gubernatorial elections on Saturdays for many years and turnout levels have tracked those of the rest of the country for Presidential elections. Indeed, it is my feeling that turnout will improve if elections are moved to Saturday and the inconvenience to employers and employees alike will be reduced—all without adding the costs to the Federal Treasury and to private business that would be associated with the creation of an additional Federal holiday.

Mr. President, I ask the support of my colleagues for this very simple measure. It is purely a matter of common sense. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. BREAUX (for himself, Mr. PACKWOOD, and Mr. BOREN):

S. 2565. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide a reduction in the capital gains tax rate, to provide a mechanism to pay for such reduction if it results in a decrease in Federal revenues, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

CAPITAL FORMATION TAX ACT

• Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President. I rise with my colleagues Senators PACKWOOD and BOREN to reintroduce legislation to reduce the capital gains tax rate and to provide a safety net in the event such a capital gains tax cut loses revenue.

Now that the President has vetoed the recently passed Economic Growth and Tax Fairness Act, the Congress and the administration need to put their political differences aside and set about doing the business of this country. I believe a capital gains tax reduction is a key component to stimulating long-term economic growth and believe we need to enact such a reduction as soon as possible.

This bill is a clear compromise. It is similar to a bill that Senator BOREN and I introduced last October, S. 1857. Since that time, we have been working to revise the bill to reflect many of the comments and concerns we have heard regarding its specifics.

This bill adopts the President's original capital gains proposal of providing a 30-percent exclusion for assets held 3 or more years, yielding a maximum effective capital gains tax rate of 19.6 percent; a 20-percent exclusion for assets held 2 to 3 years, yielding a maximum effective capital gains tax rate of 22.4 percent; and a 10-percent exclusion for assets held 1 to 2 years, yielding a maximum effective capital gains tax rate of 25.2 percent. For taxpayers in the 15-percent tax bracket the corresponding maximum capital gains tax rate would be 10.5 percent, 12 percent, and 13.5 percent.

The joint committee has estimated this proposal to lose $11.4 billion over 5 years and the Treasury Department has estimated this proposal to gain $12.5 billion over 5 years. This question of whether the capital gains proposal raises or loses revenue has blocked enactment of a meaningful capital gains tax cut.

Moreover, there are those that say a capital gains tax cut only helps the wealthy. This argument is made despite the fact that 60 percent of all taxpayers that declare capital gains report other income of $50,000 or less. For example, middle-income taxpayers that benefit include those that sell property, that are under the age of 55 and sell their home to move to a cheaper home, and retirees that sell stock.

Together these arguments have blocked enactment of a meaningful capital gains tax cut. The bill we are introducing today says enough is enough. Let's not rely on what may happen in terms of revenue gains or losses, instead let's try something novel, let's look at what actually happens in terms of revenue gains or losses. This bill attempts to break the deadlock and do so in a way that does not force choosing sides between two very capable revenue estimating teams and that ensures that if there is a revenue loss from capital gains, the middle income taxpayer will not foot the bill.

This bill, as the earlier bill did, provides a safety net. This means that if there is an actual revenue loss from a capital gains tax reduction, a new top rate would be imposed to pay for the lost revenue. The mechanics of this trigger mechanism are what have been revised from the earlier bill.

To determine whether there is a revenue loss or gain, the bill contains a "baseline"—what capital gains would be realized over the coming 5 years under the current capital gains tax rate. This baseline would be fixed into law and constitutes projected gains. The baseline is not CBO's nor is it OMB's, it is intended to be neutral. It is created by multiplying actual capital gains realized in 1990, as determined by the Treasury Department's annual statistics of income, by the percentage increase in nominal GNP each year. This figure is then multiplied by the 28 percent current maximum capital gains tax rate.

In 1994, 3 years after the capital gains tax cut goes into effect, a determination will be made whether the proposal gained or lost revenue. Using routine data collected by the Treasury Department, the Secretary of the Treasury will multiply the highest capital gains tax rate of 28 percent by the total amount of actual capital gains realizations in 1994 minus the total amount of capital gains deductions or exclusions claimed in 1994. This process is called actual gains. Since the Secretary of the Treasury is required to use actual data and must apply a formula set in the law, there will be no dispute over who gets to decide whether there is a revenue gain or loss—the numbers will speak for themselves.

The Secretary will then compare actual gains realized to projected gains and if there is a revenue loss, a new rate would be triggered, if there is no revenue loss, no new rate would be triggered.

Under the first bill, S. 1857, if after making the comparison between actual gains and projected gains, there is any revenue loss a new top rate of 36 percent would be imposed on joint filers earning $500,000 and single filers earning $250,000. This was true regardless of the actual amount of revenue lost. The bill we are introducing today would tailor the rate increase to the actual amount of revenue lost. The new tax rate would be applicable to married filers earning $500,000 or more and individuals earning $300,000 or more. The bill contains a chart which matches ranges of revenue loss with the applicable rate increase.

This bill also responds to the concern raised about S. 1857 that if there is an unusual year in the economy, for example a slow stock market, then a new fourth rate could be triggered permanently. Under this new bill, there will be three test years, 1994, 1995, and 1996. At the end of the third test year, the Secretary will determine the final revenue shortfall. The "Final Revenue Shortfall" would mean comparing the 3-year average of actual gains realized under the new capital gains rates with the 3-year average of projected gains realized under current capital gains rates. The Secretary will then adjust the new top marginal tax rate so that it properly reflects actual gains or losses and the behavior of the economy.

Included in this bill is a provision that has always been in the President's capital gains proposal, the recapture of depreciation on real estate property. I believe this provision unfairly penalizes real estate investment and represents a stark departure from 30-year-old depreciation rules. I am hopeful that as the Senate considers this bill we can work to strike the depreciation recapture rules. I know that my colleagues Senators BOREN and PACKWOOD also share my concern about the depreciation recapture provision.

Mr. President, I believe this to be a fair compromise on capital gains. Moreover, I believe that the top rate will never be triggered. Overall, this bill will be good for the economy, revenue neutral, and would benefit all taxpayers while not burdening the middle income taxpayer if there is a revenue shortfall. I hope the Congress will enact this provision this year.●

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my distinguished colleague from Louisiana, Senator JOHN BREAU, in introducing a bill that takes a novel approach to capital gains.

Mr. President, the bill we are introducing today includes the capital gains proposal advocated by President Bush for the last several years, which is designed to reward long-term investment. It lowers the capital gains tax rate on assets owned for 1, 2, and 3 or more years to 25.2 percent, 22.4 percent, and 19.6 percent respectively. Assets owned at least 3 years would be taxed at roughly the same rate as before 1987.

This proposal will unlock investment, provide capital for businesses, and lead to economic growth—which in turn will result in more jobs for Americans, more profits for businesses, and more revenue for the Treasury. I have heard about the benefits of lower capital gains rates from Oregonians from all walks of life—retirees who invested their life savings in property they now want to sell, tree farmers who spend years and years nurturing timber for harvest, entrepreneurs who have started high-technology firms, and small business owners.

I am especially concerned about Oregonians who have worked hard all their life to build a nest egg, only to be faced with a high tax upon retirement. For example, take the individual who makes his living by starting a newsstand and eventually expanding to a full service bookstore. His income tax on his annual earnings average 20 percent. But when he sells his bookstore at retirement, he must pay a 28-percent tax on the gain—a higher tax than he ever had to pay during his working years. That isn't right. Someone should not be thrown in a higher tax bracket when they make a once-in-a-lifetime sale like this. Under our bill, this one-time gain would be taxed at 19.6 percent, preserving a larger nest egg for retirement.

The unique feature of this bill is that it resolves one of the major disagreements over a lower capital gains tax—the long-term revenue consequences. For several years now, the Department of Treasury and Joint Committee on Taxation have been at loggerheads over this. The Treasury firmly believes a lower capital gains rate will raise revenue, while the Joint Committee on Taxation estimates it will lose revenue.

Our bill settles this issue by putting in place a "trigger." If the lower capital gains rates in fact results in a revenue loss, then a new tax rate for wealthy individuals will automatically go into effect to make up the revenue loss. In other words, if this approach to capital gains loses revenue, that shortfall will be made up by those who benefited the most by the lower capital gains rates. The bottom line is that the Treasury will not lose revenue from a capital gains deduction.

I do have one concern about the capital gains proposal in this bill. It includes a provision requiring all depreciation of real estate to be recaptured as ordinary income. This is a stark departure from longstanding tax law. I would like to see this aspect of the President's capital gains proposal dropped.

The bill we are introducing today lays the foundation for a bipartisan approach to capital gains. American businesses need help now to get the capital they need to grow their businesses and create jobs. I hope we act swiftly to enact this as part of the economic growth measure now pending before Congress.

Mr. President, I urge our colleagues to join us in cosponsoring this bill.●

● Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join today with my colleagues Senators BREAU and PACKWOOD in reintroducing our capital gains legislation. This legislation is similar to a provision contained in my comprehensive tax bill, the Tax Fairness and Competitiveness Act of 1992. A capital gains proposal like this one, with its unique trigger mechanism, represents the best opportunity to enact a meaningful capital gains tax reduction in the tax package that we will pass in the next few weeks.

As we discuss the proper way to increase economic growth in both the short- and long-term, bipartisan agreement is growing that a reduction in the capital gains tax is an essential element of that stimulus. Such a proposal must be properly structured with graduated rates and holding periods so that it rewards long-term investment, rather than speculation and opportunistic behavior. The Breaux-Packwood-Boren bill accomplishes this goal.

A capital gains tax reduction promises to increase investment and employment substantially. For example, American entrepreneurs hoping to embark on productive small- and medium-sized ventures would benefit greatly from a reduction in the capital gains tax. Because these tend to be riskier investments, they rely on equity, rather than debt, financing. Their importance to our economy is apparent; during the 1980's new business enterprises created 17 million jobs. Yet since the 1986 act eliminated the capital gains differential, institutional venture capital investments in new, developing companies have fallen from $4.3 billion in 1987 to $1.9 billion in 1990 and an estimated $1 billion in 1991.

Mr. President, I believe that this proposal represents the best opportunity to enact capital gains tax cuts as soon as possible because it includes a fallback provision. This provision is designed to address the argument that a capital gains tax reduction will decrease revenues, thereby surmounting the logjam that has been blocking enactment of such legislation in the past. I remain convinced that a capital gains cut will stimulate the economy to such an extent that the proposal will actually result in increased revenue for the Treasury. But we all know that others are persuaded by contrary estimates that a tax cut will cause a net loss in revenue.

The way to move forward with capital gains tax reform in the face of this uncertainty is to establish a fallback position. If this proposal results in a loss of money to the Treasury—a result I do not anticipate—a fourth tax rate of 36 percent will be triggered that will raise sufficient revenue to offset any loss. Hopefully, this innovation, refined in this version of the bill, will allow us to overcome the stalemate of opposing revenue estimates and to proceed with this important legislation.●

By Mr. JOHNSTON (for himself, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. FORD, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. SEYMOUR, and Mr. SHELBY):

S. 2566. A bill to establish partnerships involving Department of Energy laboratories and educational institutions, industry, and other Federal agencies, for purposes of development and application of technologies critical to national security and scientific and technological competitiveness; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY LABORATORY
TECHNOLOGY PARTNERSHIP ACT

● Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill entitled the "Department of Energy Laboratory Technology Partnership Act of 1992". The bill is a result of the efforts of the members of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, which I chair, particularly of Senators BINGMAN and DOMENICI, who have really led the committee in this area. For many years, Senators BINGMAN and DOMENICI have labored to push the Department of Energy laboratories to join together with industry to develop technologies critical to this country. They have introduced bills, held hearings and tirelessly worked to educate the rest of us as to the importance of the department's laboratories.

Almost 2 years ago Secretary of Energy James Watkins and many of the Department of Energy laboratory directors appeared before the committee. All of them testified what tremendous national assets the department's laboratories constitute. Secretary Watkins referred to them as the crown jewels of the Nation's research establishment. These labs, however, have kept to themselves. For most of their existence, the laboratories have been prohibited from joining with industry and universities to develop new technologies important to this country.

Early in the 102d Congress, Senators BINGAMAN and DOMENICI introduced bills calling for increased collaboration by the laboratories with industry and universities. Senator BINGAMAN introduced S. 979, the "Department of Energy Critical Technologies of 1991". Senator DOMENICI introduced S. 1351, the "Department of Energy Science and Technology Partnership Act". The committee held hearings on the bills. Witnesses from industry, the educational community, the Department of Energy, and the laboratories came forward to provide support for the bills as well as to offer ways to improve them. Based on the hearings, and continued input from all of these people, we worked to merge the two bills together. The bill I am introducing today is the result of this process.

The bill would direct the Secretary of Energy to ensure that the department's laboratories enter into partnerships with industry, the educational community and other Federal agencies. These partnerships would seek to develop technologies that are critical to the Nation's economic and national security.

With the cold war coming to an end, we are at a crossroads. As funding for nuclear weapons declines, Department of Energy National Laboratories such as Los Alamos must be either scaled back or redirected to help American industry and universities. Some may think that we should simply let these laboratories fade away as they are no longer needed. The fact is, however, that the department's laboratories already do more civilian research than weapons research. For decades, Department of Energy laboratories have built up a research establishment unequalled anywhere in the world. The laboratories have preeminent expertise in virtually every facet of science and technology. Industry has long sought to have access to these laboratories. It has only been recently that the laboratories have had the legal authority to pursue relationships with industry to do joint research.

This bill would broaden the existing legal authority and encourage the laboratories to collaborate with industry and universities to develop technologies that are critical to the U.S. economic and national security. The idea is to push the laboratories further into areas of technology such as high-performance computing, advanced materials, advanced manufacturing, transportation, and the environment.

This bill creates a close working relationship among the laboratories, industry, the educational community and other Federal agencies. Industrial partnerships are required to have jointly set objectives; to provide greater accessibility to industry to the laboratories; to be cost-shared and develop commercially valuable technologies. University partnerships are to expand the opportunities for access to the laboratories to the educational community. Partnerships with other Federal agencies are to address areas where missions are shared. A close working relationship between the laboratories, industry, universities, and other Federal agencies will ensure that technologies important to this country's long-term survival will be developed.

As this country faces a shortage of scientists and engineers in many areas of science and technology, the bill directs the Secretary to provide for the education and training of personnel needed for future research and development of technologies important to this country.

The operation of these partnerships is to be guided by input from industry, educational institutions, Federal laboratories and professional and technical societies.

The bill establishes a Career Path Program. Right now, any employee of a federal laboratory can transfer freely within the agency operating the laboratory, or even to other agencies, except for employees of Department of Energy laboratories. Because of the unique structure surrounding the Department's laboratories, a Department of Energy laboratory employee would violate criminal post federal employment restrictions by working for the Department and returning to a Department of Energy laboratory. The department desperately needs the uniquely qualified personnel found in the laboratories to help operate its programs. The Career Path Program will allow the Department to employ a person from one of its laboratories without fear of violating a criminal statute.

These laboratories could not be constructed from scratch in today's budget climate. We have these laboratories as a legacy from the time when the Nation invested heavily in the infrastructure of science for defense. We now have the opportunity to use these laboratories to solve the problems of today. This bill would redirect the resources of the laboratories to do just that. We expect to report this legislation very soon to the full Senate.

I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section analysis and the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2566

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION. 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Department of Energy Laboratory Technology Partnership Act of 1992".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS, PURPOSES, AND DEFINITIONS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the United States Department of Energy has developed excellent scientific and technical capabilities at its laboratories and has assisted in the development of such capabilities at educational institutions with which it has been associated;

(2) the Department's laboratories have contributed significantly to the national security for almost fifty years through nuclear weapons research, development and testing;

(3) the Department's laboratories have contributed significantly to the nation's preeminence in basic research with innovative fundamental and interdisciplinary research programs and national user research facilities;

(4) the Department's laboratories have contributed significantly to the development of energy technologies and other important commercial technologies.

(5) recent domestic and international developments make it imperative that the capabilities of the laboratories be strengthened and the interaction of the laboratories with industry and educational institutions be expanded;

(6) the United States must maintain a leadership role in the development and application of technologies that are critical to national security and must exercise a leadership role in the development and application of technologies that are critical to economic prosperity; and

(7) there are formidable challenges facing the United States that the Department's laboratories can address, including—

(A) development of technologies to provide adequate supplies of clean, dependable, and affordable energy;

(B) understanding changes to the environment, especially those associated with energy supply, distribution, and use;

(C) development of improved processes to minimize and manage waste;

(D) promotion of international competitiveness and improvement of the exchange of technology among industry, the academic community, and government; and

(E) the need to facilitate greater application of dual-use military and commercial technologies.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to utilize more effectively the research and development capabilities of departmental laboratories by fostering new partnerships between such laboratories and—

(A) industry, to provide market orientation to the Department's programs and to ensure the timely commercialization of technology;

(B) educational institutions, to provide for mutual benefit from scientific and technological advances and to optimize the use of the facilities of the departmental laboratories; and

(C) other Federal agencies, to address shared missions;

(2) to maximize the effectiveness of the resources of each participant in these partnerships, to reduce the risk inherent in long-term investments in technology development, and to provide continued support for the core competencies developed by the departmental laboratories; and

(3) to improve the coordination of the research, development, and demonstration activities of departmental laboratories in support of basic research and critical national objectives, in support of economic competitiveness, and to address the formidable challenges facing the United States.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this Act, the term—

(1) "core competency" means an area in which the Secretary determines a laboratory has developed expertise and demonstrated capabilities;

(2) "critical technology" means a technology identified in the National Critical Technologies Report;

(3) "Department" means the United States Department of Energy;

(4) "departmental laboratory" means a facility operated by or on behalf of the Department that would be considered a laboratory as that term is defined in section 12 of the Stevenson-Wylder Technology Innovation Act of 1980 (15 U.S.C. § 3710a(d)(2)).

(5) "disadvantaged" means a socially or economically disadvantaged individual that would be considered disadvantaged as that term is defined in section 8(a) (5) and (6) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(a) (5) and (6)).

(6) "educational institution" means a college, university, or elementary or secondary school. The term also includes any not-for-profit organization, which is dedicated to education, that would be exempt under section 501(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986;

(7) "minority college or university" means a historically black college or university that would be considered a "part B institution" by section 322(2) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1061(2)) or any other institution of higher education where enrollment includes a substantial percentage of students who are disadvantaged;

(8) "National Critical Technologies Report" means the biennial report on national critical technologies submitted to Congress by the President pursuant to section 603(d) of the National Science and Technology Policy, Organization, and Priorities Act of 1976 (42 U.S.C. 6683(d));

(9) "partnership" means an arrangement under which one or more departmental laboratories undertakes research, development, or demonstration activities for the mutual benefit of the partners in cooperation with one or more participants from among the following: an educational institution, private sector entity, State governmental entity, or other Federal agency; and

(10) "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Department of Energy;

SEC. 3. THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY PARTNERSHIP PROGRAM.

(a) LABORATORY-DIRECTED PARTNERSHIPS.—The departmental laboratories are authorized to enter into partnerships under any existing legal authority. The Secretary shall ensure, to the maximum extent practicable and desirable, that departmental laboratories enter into such partnerships. Each partnership shall establish goals and objectives for the partnership that are consistent with the purposes of this Act and establish a plan to achieve such goals and objectives.

(1) INDUSTRIAL PARTNERSHIPS.—In general, partnerships between departmental laboratories and industry shall be established for the purpose of developing the technologies in any of the areas identified in subsection (e) and shall be developed based on jointly set objectives that take advantage of the scientific and technical capabilities of the departmental laboratories. Such partnerships shall also provide protection for existing or jointly developed information and existing intellectual property rights while also ensuring the partners appropriate access to government-financed research results. In addition, such partnerships shall, to the maximum extent practicable,—

(A) be cost-shared in accordance with guidelines developed by the Secretary;

(B) seek to provide greater accessibility to industry to the personnel, facilities, and capabilities of the departmental laboratories;

(C) seek to encourage the commercial application of technologies developed primarily for defense applications;

(D) seek to encourage the maintenance and continued development of the core competencies of the departmental laboratories; and

(E) seek to develop technologies that offer potential commercial value.

(2) EDUCATIONAL PARTNERSHIPS.—Partnerships between departmental laboratories and educational institutions shall be established for the purpose of developing the technologies in any of the areas identified in subsection (e). The Secretary shall provide the opportunity for graduate students to participate in partnerships and shall expand the opportunities for access to equipment and user facilities at departmental laboratories.

(3) AGENCY PARTNERSHIPS.—The Secretary shall, where appropriate, enter into memoranda of understanding with other Federal agencies for research, development, or demonstration at departmental laboratories in areas identified in subsection (e) that are related to the mission responsibilities of such agencies, including protection of the environment; development of technologies for high-performance computing, medical applications, transportation, manufacturing, and space applications; and development of other critical technologies.

(b) SECRETARY OF ENERGY PARTNERSHIPS.—In addition to the partnerships described in subsection (a), the Secretary is authorized and encouraged to establish Secretary of Energy Partnerships as he deems necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this Act. Such partnerships shall be established for the purpose of developing technologies in any of the areas identified in subsection (e) and shall be established in accordance with the following requirements—

(1) SUBMISSION OF PROPOSALS.—Each proposal for the establishment of a Secretary of Energy Partnership shall be submitted to the Secretary.

(2) PARTICIPANTS.—Each Secretary of Energy Partnership shall be composed of one or more departmental laboratories and two or more participants from industry. Participants may also include educational institutions, other Federal agencies, State entities, or any other entities the Secretary considers appropriate.

(3) SELECTION CRITERIA.—The Secretary shall establish partnerships from among the proposals submitted pursuant to subsection (b)(1). In establishing any such partnership, the Secretary shall take into account the following criteria—

(A) the extent to which the partnership demonstrates promise of achieving one or more of the purposes of this Act;

(B) the extent to which the partnerships activities would be relevant to the Department's missions and to the missions of other Federal Government participants;

(C) the technical merit of the partnership's proposed program;

(D) the qualifications of the personnel who are to participate in the partnership;

(E) the potential for private sector investment in activities where such investment is otherwise lacking;

(F) the level of participation and financial commitment of the industry participants;

(G) the potential for commercial benefits from development of technologies in the areas listed in subsection (e);

(H) the potential for effective transfer of technology among the participants; and

(I) such other criteria as the Secretary may prescribe.

(c) PARTNERSHIP PREFERENCE.—A partnership that would be given preference under section 12 of the Stevenson-Wylder Technology Innovation Act of 1980 (15 U.S.C. § 3710a(c)(4)(B)) were it a cooperative research and development agreement shall be given similar preference for the purposes of this Act.

(d) MINORITY PARTNERSHIPS.—The Secretary shall encourage partnerships that involve minority colleges or universities and private sector entities owned or controlled by disadvantaged individuals.

(e) AREAS OF RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, AND DEMONSTRATION.—The partnerships entered into under the provisions of this Act may address research, development, and demonstration activities in those areas listed in the biennial National Critical Technologies Report or in any of the following areas—

(1) energy efficiency, including efficiency in power generation, transmission, and utilization; process technologies; and transportation;

(2) energy supply, including alternative fuels; advanced forms of renewable energy; advanced clean coal technologies; coal liquefaction and synthetic fossil fuels; advanced oil and gas recovery; advanced nuclear reactor technologies; fusion technologies; biofuel technologies; electricity transmission, distribution, and storage; and energy forecasting;

(3) high-performance computing, including programs to develop and use new computer architectures such as large scale parallel computers, real-time visualization, powerful scientific workstations, high-speed networking, new computer software and algorithms; programs to develop advanced materials for the communication and computing industry such as new memories, optical switches or optical storage disks; programs to address complex scientific challenges such as understanding global climate change, hydrologic modeling, and fundamental combustion processes; and programs with other agencies and the private sector for the development and use of high-performance computer research networks;

(4) the environment, including global climate change; protection of ecological systems; environmental restoration and waste management; and development of technologies for biogeochemical dynamics, toxicology, remote sensing, biotechnology, risk analysis, and environmental assessment;

(5) human health, including radio-pharmaceutical and laser applications; mapping of the human genome; structural biology; development of technologies for nuclear and diagnostic medicine and radiation biology; and development of sensors, electronics and information systems to lower health care costs;

(6) advanced manufacturing technologies, including laser technologies, robotics and intelligent machines; semiconductors, superconductors, microelectronics, photonics, optoelectronics, and advanced displays; x-ray lithography; sensor and process controls; and those technologies that may affect energy production, energy efficiency, environmental protection or waste minimization;

(7) advanced materials, including materials that may increase efficiency in energy generation, conversion, transmission and use; synthesis and processing for improved and new materials; materials to promote waste minimization and environmental protection; and new and improved methods, techniques, and instruments to characterize and analyze properties of materials;

(8) transportation technologies, including those that will improve the efficiency of and reduce the energy consumption and environmental impact associated with conventional transportation technologies;

(9) space technologies, including space-based sensors for environmental monitoring, climate modeling, and radio-biological studies;

(10) quality technologies, including reliability engineering, failure analysis, statistical process control, nondestructive testing and inspection techniques, concurrent engineering and design practices for reliability and testability used to ensure product and process quality specifications are met;

(11) technologies listed in the annual defense critical technologies plan submitted to Congress by the Secretary of Defense pursuant to section 2522 of title 10, United States Code; and

(12) any other generic, precompetitive technology or other critical technology identified by the Secretary.

(f) EXCHANGES.—The Secretary shall encourage the exchange of scientists and engineers among departmental laboratories, educational institutions, industry, and other Federal agencies to facilitate the transfer of ideas and technology. In carrying out the requirements of this subsection, the Secretary shall provide for fellowships for personnel from departmental laboratories, industry, educational institutions and other Federal agencies.

(g) EDUCATION AND TRAINING.—The Secretary shall provide support for education and training to develop the personnel resources needed for future research, development, or demonstration in areas addressed by partnerships, and strengthen and expand upon existing partnerships, to educate and train students and faculty in the areas identified in subsection (e), including environmental technologies and waste management.

(h) EVALUATION.—The Secretary shall develop mechanisms for evaluation of the accomplishments of the partnership program. The Secretary shall evaluate annually the performance and responsiveness of the departmental laboratories and program managers within the Department in carrying out the purposes of this Act.

(i) MANAGEMENT PLAN.—Within 180 days of the date of enactment of this Act, and after consultation with the Laboratory Partnership Advisory Board established by section 4, the Secretary shall prepare and publish a management plan describing the Secretary's implementation of this Act. The plan shall be regularly updated and published not less than once every five years. Partnerships and other activities required by this Act may be pursued during preparation and publication of the management plan. The management plan shall—

(1) establish goals and priorities for the partnership program;

(2) establish mechanisms for coordination of partnerships with other research, development, and demonstration activities at departmental laboratories;

(3) establish mechanisms for the directors of the departmental laboratories to have input into the formulation and operation of the partnership program;

(4) establish mechanisms for coordination of partnerships pursued under this Act;

(5) establish policies to encourage industry and educational institutions to participate in the partnership program;

(6) establish procedures to facilitate collaboration between the departmental laboratories and other Federal agencies in areas of common interest or expertise;

(7) establish procedures to facilitate international cooperative activities involving scientists from government, industry, and the academic community;

(8) specify the extent to which the Department provides support for the research, development, or demonstration of technologies in the areas identified in subsection (e), specify the goals and objectives of the programs and activities that support these technologies, and provide a summary of the budgets for such programs and activities for the time period covered by the plan; and

(9) establish policies that encourage directors of departmental laboratories to include among their laboratory-directed research and development activities projects that will contribute to maintaining and extending the vitality of each laboratory's core competencies.

(j) REPORT.—The Secretary shall report to Congress two years after the date of enactment of this Act and biennially thereafter on the implementation of this Act. Such report shall evaluate—

(1) the progress in achieving the goals and purposes of the partnership program;

(2) the effect of the partnership program on the development and commercialization of technologies in the areas identified in subsection (e); and

(3) the progress in encouraging personnel exchanges as described in subsection (f).

SEC. 4. DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY LABORATORY ADVISORY BOARD.

(a) LABORATORY PARTNERSHIP ADVISORY BOARD.—The Secretary shall establish within the Department an advisory board to be known as the "Laboratory Partnership Advisory Board," which shall provide the Secretary with guidance on the implementation of this Act.

(b) COMPOSITION.—The membership of the Laboratory Partnership Advisory Board shall consist of prominent representatives from industry, educational institutions, Federal laboratories, and professional and technical societies in the United States who are qualified to provide the Secretary with advice and information on the partnership program.

(c) INPUT FROM DEPARTMENTAL LABORATORIES.—The Laboratory Partnership Advisory Board shall request comment and suggestions from departmental laboratories on the implementation of this Act.

(d) DUTIES.—The Laboratory Partnership Advisory Board shall provide the Secretary with advice and information on the Department's partnership program, including a periodic assessment of—

(1) the management plan required by section 3(i);

(2) the progress made in implementing the plan;

(3) any need to revise the plan; and

(4) any other issue related to the goals and purposes of this Act.

(e) USE OF EXISTING ADVISORY BOARDS.—Nothing in this section is intended to preclude the Secretary from utilizing existing advisory boards to achieve the purposes of this section.

SEC. 5. DOE MANAGEMENT.

(a) UNDER SECRETARIES.—(1) Section 202(a) of the Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C. 7132(a)) is amended by striking "Under Secretary" and inserting in its place "Under Secretaries".

(2) Section 202(b) of the Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C. 7132(b)) is amended to read as follows—

"(b) There shall be in the Department three Under Secretaries and a General Counsel, who shall be appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall perform functions and duties the Secretary prescribes. The Under Secretaries shall be compensated at the rate for level III of the Executive Schedule under section 5314 of title 5, United States Code, and the General Counsel shall be compensated at the rate provided for level IV of the Executive Schedule under section 5315 of title 5, United States Code."

(b) ASSISTANT SECRETARIES.—Section 203(a) of the Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C. 7133(a)) is amended by striking "eight Assistant Secretaries" and inserting in its place "eleven Assistant Secretaries".

SEC. 6. RECOMMENDATIONS REGARDING THE ESTABLISHMENT OF AN OFFICE OF TECHNOLOGY RESEARCH.

Within 180 days of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall transmit to Congress the Secretary's recommendations for the establishment of an office within the Department to support generic, precompetitive technology research considered critical for the future economic competitiveness of the United States. The recommendations shall address the organization of such an office, the scope of responsibility of such an office, and the appropriate funding level for such an office.

SEC. 7. CAREER PATH PROGRAM.

The Department of Energy Organization Act (42 U.S.C. 7101 et seq.) is amended:

(a) by inserting after section 625 the following new section:

"LABORATORY CAREER PATH PROGRAM.

"SEC. 626. (a) The Secretary shall establish a career path program under which the Secretary shall recruit employees of departmental laboratories to serve in positions in the Department.

"(b)(1) The post-Federal employment restrictions in section 27 of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act, and section 207 of title 18, United States Code, shall not apply to any employee recruited as part of the career path program while that person is employed at a departmental laboratory.

"(2) The Secretary shall exercise the waiver authorities of section 208(b) of title 18, United States Code, and section 602(c) of this Act to the fullest extent in order to facilitate the recruitment of individuals for the career path program, and such waiver authorities shall be available for this purpose.

"(3) The Secretary shall promulgate rules determining the extent to which section 27 of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act shall apply to negotiations or agreements regarding future employment between a career path employee recruited under subsection (a) and a Department contractor who operates a departmental laboratory.

"(4) In each case in which, after service in a position in the Department, a career path employee proposes to enter a position in a departmental laboratory, the Secretary, in consultation with the Director of the Office of Government Ethics, shall conduct an assessment of the duties anticipated in the new position in the laboratory. Based on this assessment, the Secretary shall impose such terms, conditions, or limitations on the activities of that employee in the new position in the departmental laboratory as the Secretary determines are necessary and appropriate to ensure in the context of laboratory service that the Government receives the integrity of service that the post-Federal employment restrictions referenced in this section are intended to achieve. Any individual who violates any term, condition, or limitation so imposed by the Secretary shall be subject to a civil penalty as assessed by the Secretary, not to exceed $10,000 for each violation." and

(b) in section 608(d) (42 U.S.C. 7218(d)) by striking "title" and inserting "part".

SEC. 8. INTERPRETATION.

Nothing in this Act limits the use of existing technology transfer mechanisms available under other applicable law. The authority to enter into partnerships established pursuant to this Act supplements and does not supplant those existing technology transfer mechanisms.

SECTION BY SECTION ANALYSIS

SECTION 1. establishes the short title, the "Department of Energy Laboratory Technology Partnership Act of 1992".

SEC. 2. establishes the findings of Congress, the purposes of the Act and contains the definitions of terms used in the Act.

The Congress finds that the Department of Energy has developed excellent scientific and technical capabilities at its laboratories. These laboratories should be used to help the United States to develop technologies critical to national security and scientific and technological competitiveness.

It is the purpose of this Act to foster new partnerships involving Department of Energy laboratories and educational institutions, industry, and other Federal agencies; to reduce the risk in long-term investments in technology development; and to better coordinate the research and development activities of departmental laboratories in support of technologies critical to the United States.

SEC. 3. establishes the Department of Energy Partnership Program. Departmental laboratories are authorized to enter into partnerships under any existing legal authority. The Secretary of Energy is to ensure that departmental laboratories enter into partnerships between industry, educational institutions and other federal agencies in such areas as energy efficiency, energy supply, high-performance computing, the environment, human health, advanced manufacturing, advanced materials, transportation, and space.

Industrial partnerships are required to meet certain criteria such as having research objectives jointly established by industry and the laboratories; protecting intellectual property rights; providing greater accessibility to industry to the laboratories; being cost-shared; and developing commercially valuable technologies. University partnerships are required to provide access to the user facilities at departmental laboratories.

The Secretary is directed to establish Secretary of Energy Partnerships. These partnerships are to be established by the Secretary from proposals submitted to the Secretary that best meet certain selection criteria. The criteria include such factors as the potential for commercial benefits, the potential for the transfer of technology, the level of financial commitment of industry participants and the extent to which the partnership would carry out activities relevant to the Department's missions.

Partnerships that would be given preference under the Stevenson-Wylder Technology Innovation Act of 1980 are given preference under this Act.

The Secretary is encouraged to establish partnerships involving minority colleges or universities and business entities.

The Secretary is to provide support for the education and training of personnel needed for future research and development in the areas of technology established by the Act.

The Secretary is to prepare and publish a management plan outlining the implementation of the Act. Among other things, the management plan is to establish the goals and priorities for the partnerships and establish coordination mechanisms. The Secretary is to develop mechanisms to evaluate the accomplishments of the partnerships and report to Congress biennially.

SEC. 4. creates the Laboratory Advisory Board. The Board consists of representatives from industry, educational institutions, Federal laboratories, and professional and technical societies. The Board is to provide the Secretary with guidance on the implementation of the Act.

SEC. 5. would create within the Department of Energy an additional two Under Secretaries and three Assistant Secretaries.

SEC. 6. directs the Secretary to recommend to Congress whether an office should be created within the Department to support generic, precompetitive technologies critical for future economic competitiveness of the United States.

SEC. 7. creates the Career Path Program. This program will allow employees of Department of Energy laboratories to work for the Department and return to departmental laboratories without violating criminal post-federal employment statutes.

SEC. 8. provides that this Act supplements and does not supplant existing technology transfer mechanisms available under other laws.

● Mr. WALLOP. Mr. President, the legislation we introduce today recognizes that there are incomparable scientific and technological capabilities lodged within the national treasures we know as the Department of Energy's laboratories. More importantly, however, the bill urges the laboratories to share their expertise with the private sector through partnerships. These partnerships will provide access to the incredible wealth of resources within the laboratories with a view to enhancing the Nation's economic competitiveness and energy security. These notions dovetail with the Administration's recently announced National Technology Initiative which has been developed to promote a better understanding of the opportunities for industry to commercialize new technological advances.

Recognizing that the laboratories should take an active role in encouraging industry and educational institutions to work together with the labs to solve the problems of the future, Senator DOMENICI took a leadership role in this area in the early 1980's when he was Chairman of the Subcommittee on Energy Research and Development. He has continued his advocacy for these programs as Ranking Republican member on the Subcommittee. The partnership concept was given added impetus last year when Senator DOMENICI introduced S. 1351, The Department of Energy Science and Technology Partnership Act. During the 2 days of hearings on that bill, there was unanimity among the witnesses about the notion that the Nation has an enormous amount to gain from these alliances between the laboratories and the private sector. Admiral Watkins, Dr. Bromley, Director of the President's Office of Science and Technology Policy, and all of the representatives from the laboratories and industry jointly proclaimed the value of the partnership concept in bringing together our laboratories, industry and educational institutions. They also agreed on the importance of explicitly giving recognition to the numerous scientific and technology areas crucial to our national security and economic competitiveness in which the laboratories have developed expertise.

The legislation we introduce today builds on the premises of S. 1351 with ideas from Senator BINGAMAN's Critical Technology bill, S. 979, and from Senators CRAIG and SEYMOUR, both of whom have taken an active role on our committee in raising the awareness of the significance of the laboratories to our future national security and economic well-being. I commend all of my colleagues on the committee who have laboratories in their States for their tireless efforts in promoting an awareness of the worth of these laboratories and in fostering legislation to take advantage of their capabilities.

The other aspects of this legislation, the Career Path Program and the increase in the number of Under Secretaries and Assistant Secretaries within the Department of Energy, are intended to provide the Secretary with additional administrative flexibility to tailor the structure of the Department in a way that will facilitate achieving the goals of the laboratory partnership program. I must note, however, that I have some reservation about the need for expanding our burgeoning bureaucracy with additional Under Secretaries and Assistant Secretaries unless it is critical to the effective management of the Department's programs. Good government does not necessarily translate into more government. The burden is on the Secretary to demonstrate the compelling need for these new positions.

I encourage Senator JOHNSTON to move this important legislation quickly through our committee so that it can be considered as soon as possible by the full Senate.

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I am delighted to be an original cosponsor of the Department of Energy Technology Partnership Act. I commend the chairman and the ranking minority member for their leadership in forging a broad bipartisan consensus on the need for action in this area.

As the Federal laboratories prepare for a rapidly changing world, it is es-essential that their future activities be focused on meeting a number of significant challenges facing this Nation. Many of these challenges are within the traditional purview of the DOE laboratories and many others can be readily addressed by the unique and extraordinary capabilities of the DOE laboratories.

It is well recognized, both nationally and internationally, that the Department of Energy does indeed possess unique and extraordinary capabilities in its laboratories. As Secretary Watkins has said so often, the DOE laboratories are the treasures—the crown jewels of the Department. They have successfully demonstrated that when tasked with clarity and urgency—as they were in the nuclear weapons and nuclear energy areas—they can be world-class producers.

Unfortunately, too often in the past the labs carried out their missions separate from the private sector. That may have been acceptable when the capabilities of the labs far exceeded those of the private sector. But today, the private sector can match the DOE laboratories in many areas of technology and have common interests in these technologies. To carry out their missions, which today are broadening into new areas such as environmental clean-up, the DOE labs must work with the private sector as never before and laboratory partnerships can and must serve as a means of leveraging the best capabilities of government and industry to serve both DOE mission needs and the competitiveness of American industry.

In the past, industry has expressed strong doubts about the relevancy of the work carried out at the Federal laboratories to meet their needs. For example, a 1988 report from the private sector Council on Competitiveness, "Gaining New Ground," stated, "Although the nation spends approximately $20 billion on the Federal labs, their current culture and direction do not adequately support technology development that strengthens national economic performance." This bill is part of an ongoing effort to resolve those doubts, an effort that commenced with the 1989 National Cooperative Technology Transfer Act.

Since that legislation became law, over 2 years ago, we have started to see change. Sandia, for example, now has over 20 Cooperative Research And Development Agreements [CRADA's] with the private sector and has over twice that many under negotiation. The Specialty Metals Consortium at Sandia National Laboratories and the Superconductivity Pilot Centers at Los Alamos are two examples where the DOE laboratories have been responsive to industry needs while strengthening their ability to carry out their own missions.

However, I am convinced that existing laboratory partnerships with industry need to be encouraged on a much broader and deeper scale than at present. We have a long way to go to make the labs more responsive to industry's needs, and to capture the interest of industry in the laboratories capabilities.

This bill is aimed at just that—fostering additional cooperation between the DOE Laboratories and the private sector by providing for the establishment of partnerships with industry, with our educational institutions and with other Federal laboratories. These would be partnerships in the strongest sense of the word. Partnerships in which industry is a true participant with respect to selection of technologies, with respect to planning technology programs, sharing risks by committing resources, and providing advice and counsel concerning the management and progress of the partnerships.

Two types of partnerships are proposed in this legislation. The first, laboratory directed partnerships, provide the directors of the DOE labs with the authority and flexibility to enter into collaborative activities with industry, academia, and other Federal labs. The second type of partnership, Secretary of Energy Partnerships, provide a mechanism in which the laboratories and their industrial partners compete for departmental funds to be used for establishing collaborative programs.

These partnerships, particularly those with industry, have the potential to represent the engine that drives the economy of this nation, and New Mexico in particular, by transforming current and emerging technological capabilities into new manufacturing opportunities.

The bill represents the culmination of activity initiated last spring, building upon S. 979, "Department of Energy Critical Technologies Act of 1991," which I was proud to have Senators JOHNSTON and DOMENICI as cosponsors, and last summer with the introduction of S. 1351, "Department of Energy Science and Technology Partnership Act," by Senator DOMENICI, and which Senator JOHNSTON and I cosponsored.

This partnership bill represents a logical and evolutionary development of these prior bills, and has a legacy of prior legislation enacted by Congress, as I previously mentioned. I refer to the National Cooperative Technology Transfer Act which Senator DOMENICI and I sponsored, and to section 3136 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1992 and 1993, which requires that the Secretary of Energy, " * * * shall ensure, to the maximum extent practicable," that R&D activities relating to dual-use critical technologies of the DOE Defense Program labs, excluding the Naval nuclear propulsion program, be carried out within the framework of partnerships with the private sector. This means that the entire DOE Defense Program budget is available for partnerships with the private sector whenever there is a mutual interest.

Yesterday, before a hearing of the Defense Industry and Technology Subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Dr. Allan Bromley, the President's Science Advisor, said:

One of the major themes of the NTI [National Technology Initiative] is the need to foster a much greater array of partnerships among all of the institutions involved in our national competitiveness: our businesses, our universities, our national laboratories, our various levels of government. The initiative is designed to act as a catalyst to combine the very real strengths apparent in each component of our R&D enterprise.

These partnerships can take many different forms: consortia such as SEMATECH or the U.S. Advanced Battery Consortium, university-industry agreements, cooperative research and development agreements between federal laboratories and the private sector, and so on. Many of the institutional barriers to establishing these partnerships were removed during the 1980s. Now we face the much more difficult task of changing the cultural barriers within these institutions so that we can take advantage of new ways of thinking.

One focus of this effort must be the personnel, expertise, and infrastructure resident in our over 700 federal laboratories. The federal government invests over $20 billion a year in these laboratories. They embrace an astonishing breadth and depth of science and technology, including some of the best science and technology to be found anywhere in the world.

Many of these laboratories were established in the immediate post-World War II period, and they originally had very specific missions and objectives. Many of these original missions were satisfied years ago, so that the laboratories are adjusting their programs to remain in close touch with evolving national needs.

One change that I have been advocating is the involvement of potential partners early in the process of planning Federal laboratory activities. Many of the labs have panels of distinguished academics and industrialists who review the scientific merit and applicability of R&D done at the lab. But these reviews usually occur after the work has been planned or undertaken. The involvement of these panels from the beginning, as the programs at the lab are being planned, would be much more effective in tying the work of the laboratories to the needs of potential users.

This bill is entirely consistent with Dr. Bromley's call for flexible arrangements between the Government labs and the private sector. It is entirely consistent with his call for the private sector to have a greater influence in the process of planning Federal lab activities at an early stage. I hope, therefore, the Johnston-Wallop bill will receive strong administration support.

There is a sense of urgency associated with the role of the DOE laboratories in this post-cold-war era. The syndicated columnist, Robert Kuttner expressed this urgency in an article in the March 30 edition of the Washington Post in the following manner—"We must either acknowledge the value of having national laboratories work with civilian industry or gradually lose this unique resource."

I believe this is an important bill which provides the DOE laboratories with additional flexibility and with a broader mandate to forge lasting partnerships with industry, our universities, and other Federal laboratories. It will facilitate achieving Secretary Watkins' stated objective of establishing 1,000 cooperative ventures between the DOE labs and the private sector by the end of this year. I hope the bill will be promptly reported by the Energy Committee, and it deserves the support of the entire Senate. ●

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, every year the United States invests approximately $33 billion in research conducted at over 700 Federal laboratories. The results of this research are incomparable and the capabilities and knowledge that reside in our labs are world renowned. Basic science research conducted by the Department of Energy alone has resulted in DOE scientists being awarded 20 Nobel Prizes.

During the 1980's, the contributions laboratories such as Los Alamos and Sandia could make outside their traditional defense mission were recognized as valuable scientific and economic resource. Congress passed legislation to facilitate the transfer of technology out of the laboratories. The Stevenson Wydler Act of 1980, the Federal Technology Transfer Act of 1986, and the National Competitive Technology Transfer Act of 1989 represent the evolution of our thinking on this matter. Today we are introducing legislation that represents another leap forward in our understanding of technology transfer.

The Department of Energy's defense laboratories are under intense pressure to meet the needs of a rapidly changing national defense mission. Today their defense technologies are being applied to confront the proliferation of nuclear weapons, the dismantlement of weapons from the former Soviet Union, and assuring the security of nuclear weapons worldwide. When Admiral Watkins testified before the Energy Committee last year during hearings on my legislation that serves as the basis of the bill being introduced today, he made one point very clear: A world in which international power is shifting from bipolar to multipolar requires that we maintain the technical strength of the DOE weapons laboratories as an important ingredient in world security.

But our experience during the 1980's has also shown that, while maintaining their defense mission, DOE laboratories can make significant contributions to our economic competitiveness. We have learned that contribution involves more than simply transferring a "widget" developed in a lab to a commercial enterprise. Now, the most promising and successful technology transfer results from partnerships between laboratories, industry, and academia.

The term "partnership" embodies what technology transfer is about today. We are no longer simply trying to get added value out of technology produced in Federal labs. We are asking our labs to bring their full range of expertise to bear in helping industry to be more competitive and in improving our educational system.

Last year, I introduced legislation, the "Department of Energy Science and Technology Partnership Act," which served as an important framework for consideration of the bill introduced today.

Previously, Congress has provided mechanisms through which the labs can work with industry and academia. Now we are directing DOE to engage in these partnerships as an integral part of the labs' missions. Whether it be in transportation, materials science, health science, computer science, or a host of other areas in which these labs lead the world, the DOE should have no doubt that the Congress wants DOE to do as much collaborative research as possible with industry and our universities.

If we have truly ended the cold war, the United States now has an opportunity that has been missing for the last 50 years. We have the opportunity to develop the real potential of our national laboratories while preserving our national security. We have the opportunity to turn our efforts in science and research toward the environment, health care, our energy needs . . . areas of research that can lead directly to a better world. A world in which people can lead better lives. ●

● Mr. CRAIG. As we introduce this legislation encouraging the Department of Energy's laboratories to join forces with the private sector in meeting the challenges of the future, I want to emphasize how important it is that, as a nation, we recognize that our economic competitiveness in the international community is central to our survival as a world leader. We have amassed a tremendous pool of scientific and technological talent within the national laboratories over the years. It would be folly to forgo the opportunity to reap the economic harvest of our investment in that pool of talent. This course will result in not only new and valuable products and services, but will ensure numerous additional employment opportunities at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory, as well as elsewhere.

This legislation validates the notion that the laboratories have a mission to share their expertise with our business and educational communities. I am strongly supportive of that concept. I want to emphasize that in my view, the laboratories should rightfully exercise every option open to them to contribute to development of technologies that will prove useful to our economic health and the well-being of our citizens. They should not be limited in that regard to only those scientific and technological areas where they have demonstrated expertise historically. Rather, they should be allowed to develop spinoff technologies that invariably come to light through their scientific endeavors. I will continue the active role I have taken in the committee to ensure that any legislation enacted will allow the maximum amount of scientific flexibility.

Mr. President, this is good legislation that will allow our national laboratories to play a vital role in our increasingly technical world. ●

By Mr. BYRD:

S. 2570. A bill to rescind certain budget authority proposed to be rescinded in special messages transmitted to the Congress by the President on April 9, 1992, in accordance with title X of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, as amended; pursuant to the order of April 11, 1986, referred jointly to the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on the Budget.

RESCISSION OF CERTAIN BUDGET AUTHORITY

● Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, today the Senate has received additional rescission requests from the President totaling $2.1 billion in budget authority. As with the rescission requests of March 10, March 20, and April 8, I can assure my colleagues that the Appropriations Committee will give serious consideration to these requests.

I send to the desk a bill which contains today's rescission request, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. MITCHELL (for himself, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. RIEGLE, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. SIMON, Mr. PELL, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. BURDICK, and Mr. GLENN):

S. 2571. A bill to amend the Social Security Act to assure universal access to long-term care in the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

LONG-TERM CARE FAMILY SECURITY ACT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues in introducing the Long-Term Care Family Security Act of 1992. This legislation is the result of a cooperative effort with Senators ROCKEFELLER and KENNEDY, and Congressmen WAXMAN and GEPHARDT, and others in the House and Senate.

In 1988, as Chairman of the Senate Finance Subcommittee on Health, I introduced the first comprehensive long-term care legislation in the Senate. Senator KENNEDY and Congressman WAXMAN also sponsored long-term care bills during the 100th Congress.

Since that time, a great deal has changed. But, the need for a comprehensive long-term care policy has not changed. The need for long-term care benefits is as critical as ever, and becoming more critical as our population ages and persons over age 85 become the fastest growing age group in our nation.

But long-term care should not be viewed as an elderly issue. The absence of a viable long-term care policy affects persons of all ages. It affects young adults who become disabled in automobile accidents. It affects the middle-aged children of the elderly who must choose between caring for a parent or putting a child through college, and it can sometimes affect children who are born with serious disabilities which require chronic home care.

This Nation must find a way to develop a rational, affordable, long-term care program to meet the needs of those Americans who cannot fully care for themselves.

Whether that assistance comes in the form of occasional respite care—so important to relieve the informal caregiver—or as a nursing home benefit for those persons unable to remain at home—care must be made available based on the needs of the patient rather than what services are reimbursable.

Developing and financing such a program will be very difficult. Our experience with the catastrophic legislation has illustrated just how careful we must be to develop and pay for expanded health care benefits in a way that is both equitable and politically acceptable to the majority of Americans.

Fortunately, medical advances have enabled us to live longer and adapt to greater levels of disability during our lifetime. But it is also a well-documented fact that the largest portion of health care is consumed during the closing years of life. So the implications for the American health care system are clear: A greater demand than ever before for acute and chronic care.

We as a nation must decide if we are willing to provide a meaningful long-term care benefit for elderly and disabled Americans—and if so what will be the limitations on those benefits and how will the burden be shared between government and private payers?

The legislation we are introducing today represents a significant step toward reaching consensus among Members of Congress about the development of a national long-term care policy. The bill does not represent the ideal policy for me or for any single sponsor.

Some will say the benefits are too limited. Others will say it costs too much. They'll both be wrong.

This legislation will provide a range of needed services to the elderly and disabled, while controlling the costs of providing that care.

This legislation differs in several significant respects from the bill I introduced in 1988. It covers persons of all ages rather than be limited to the Medicare population. It contains cost containment mechanisms which are consistent with those contained in the HealthAmerica bill. It contains a front-end nursing home benefit rather than a back-end benefit as in my original bill. And finally, it significantly increases the level of asset protection under the Medicaid component of the bill.

While the legislation differs in these respects, it remains consistent with the underlying concepts contained in my earlier legislation. It provides for a wide range of benefits based on the need of the individual rather than on what may currently be reimbursable. It requires that individuals share in the cost of the program through copayments from home and community-based care and nursing home care. It includes care management and quality assessment provisions. And, finally, it reserves a role for private long-term care insurance.

This bill also includes provisions clarifying current law tax treatment of long-term care insurance. These clarifications complement the Federal program which is not designed to address all long-term health care needs. The legislation recognizes that private long-term care insurance must play a key role in providing long-term health care protection to the Nation's elderly. That market is just now developing but its continued growth is inhibited by the uncertainty of the tax treatment of long-term care insurance benefits and premiums. Many of the provisions in this bill regarding the tax treatment of long-term care insurance are already part of current law but the clarifications provided in this legislation should stimulate the private market and encourage individuals and employers to plan now for future long-term care needs.

This bill provides a special rule with respect to contracts under which payments are made to—or on behalf of—a chronically ill individual on a per diem or other periodic basis without regard to expenses incurred during the period to which the payments relate. This special rule applies both to per diem contracts—providing a specified benefit for each day or other period for which the individual qualifies for benefits—and to service based indemnity contracts—which provide a specified benefit for qualified services rendered to the individual qualifying for benefits.

Pursuant to this special rule, payments under such contracts are to be treated as payments made with respect to qualified long-term care services. Thus, such contracts are considered to provide coverage of qualified long-term care services.

America's health care system has two large gaps—lack of affordable health insurance for up to 37 million of our citizens, and a total absence of a comprehensive long-term care program for the elderly and disabled. The Senate version of this legislation is intended to be a companion to the HealthAmerica bill a number of us introduced last year. That bill will provide access to affordable health care for all Americans.

Enactment of comprehensive long-term care legislation will be difficult. While this bill includes a number of significant cost containment provisions, intended to control the escalating cost of overall health care, the bill also expands coverage for home and community-based care and nursing home care to the elderly and disabled.

We recognize that this legislation will not be enacted this year. It will ultimately have to be phased-in over time in order to manage the cost. While the Senate version of the bill does not include specific financing mechanisms, financing of such a comprehensive new program will need to be broad-based.

Since the repeal of Medicare Catastrophic, the debate over how much the elderly are willing to pay for long-term care coverage has been heightened. Several new studies have been published in this regard. The common findings are that the elderly want long-term care coverage and are willing to pay something for it. But the question remains as to how much people are willing to pay and how comprehensive the benefits must be to garner support for a Federal long-term care program.

We will continue to pursue the answer to this question as we work to build consensus for a comprehensive long-term care policy.

I continue to believe there is an important and appropriate role for private long-term care insurance. The cost of insuring the elderly and disabled against the expenses of long-term care must be shared by the public and private sectors. Both the current and future elderly must share the responsibility of providing for themselves if the need for long-term care arises.

But, if private long-term care insurance is to play a part in protecting elderly and disabled Americans from the financial devastation of chronic illness, policies must be affordable and of good quality. It is important that the private insurance industry develop policies that are balanced in that regard.

Enactment of a comprehensive long-term care program will not be easy. But to ignore the problem because it is too difficult to solve will not make it go away. Those who will be eligible for this program are the most frail among us. They are the elderly and disabled. They need our help to live the most productive lives possible. For them, we must continue to develop a workable public policy to assure that no American—young or old—rich or poor—is denied quality care or is deprived of dignity.

I look forward to working with all who share our concern to move toward this important goal.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill that we are introducing today be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

The Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end the following new title:

"TITLE XXI—COMMUNITY CARE AND NURSING FACILITY CARE

"PART A—ENTITLEMENT TO BENEFITS

"ENTITLEMENT TO BENEFITS

"SEC. 2101. (a) ENTITLEMENT OF MODERATELY OR SEVERELY DISABLED INDIVIDUALS TO COMMUNITY CARE AND NURSING FACILITY CARE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the provisions of this title, if an eligible individual (as defined in subsection (c)) is determined under part B to be a moderately or severely disabled individual (as defined in subsection (b)(1)), the individual is entitled to have payment made on his behalf under this title—

"(A) for community care (as defined in section 2102(a)), subject to the limits established in section 2103;

"(B) for nursing facility care (as defined in section 2104(a)), subject to the limits established in section 2105; and

"(C) for long-term nursing facility care (described in paragraph (3)(B)), subject to paragraph (2), as elected by the individual.

"(2) FINANCIAL ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENT FOR LONG-TERM NURSING FACILITY CARE.—An eligible individual is entitled to benefits for long-term nursing facility care under paragraph (1)(C) only when the individual's resources (as determined under section 2132(b)) are at or below the protected resource level specified under section 2132(a).

"(3) REFERENCES TO SHORT-TERM AND LONG-TERM NURSING FACILITY CARE.—In this title—

"(A) any reference to 'short-term nursing facility care' is a reference to nursing facility care which is not long-term nursing facility care (described in subparagraph (B)) and for which an entitlement is established under paragraph (1)(B); and

"(B) any reference to 'long-term nursing facility care' is a reference to nursing facility care which is not subject to the limits established in section 2105 and which is provided to an individual who is entitled to benefits for such care consistent with paragraph (2).

"(b) DEFINITIONS RELATING TO MODERATELY OR SEVERELY DISABLED INDIVIDUALS.—In this title:

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'moderately or severely disabled individual' means—

"(A) in the case of an individual 6 years of age or older, an eligible individual who (without regard to income or employment status)—

"(i) needs substantial assistance or supervision from another individual with at least 3 activities of daily living (described in paragraph (5));

"(ii) needs substantial supervision due to cognitive or other mental impairment and needs substantial assistance or supervision from another individual with at least 1 activity of daily living or in complying with a daily drug regimen; or

"(iii) needs substantial supervision from another individual due to behaviors that are dangerous (to themselves or others), disruptive, or difficult to manage; or

"(B) in the case of an individual under 6 years of age, an eligible individual who suffers from any medically determinable physical, cognitive, or other mental impairment of comparable severity to that which would make an individual 6 years of age or older meet the requirement of clause (i), (ii), or (iii) of subparagraph (A).

"(2) COMPARABLE SEVERITY DEFINED.—In paragraph (1)(B), the term 'comparable severity' means that a child's physical, cognitive, or other mental impairment or impairments so limit the child's ability to function independently, appropriately, and effectively, in an age-appropriate manner that any impairments and limitations resulting from them are comparable to those which would disable an adult.

"(3) DETERMINATIONS OF DISABILITY.—For purposes of this title, an individual is considered to have been determined under part B to be—

"(A) a moderately or severely disabled individual if there is an affirmative certification in effect for the individual under that part;

"(B) a moderately disabled individual if there is such an affirmative certification in effect and a determination under such part that the individual has a moderate impairment; or

"(C) a severely disabled individual if there is such an affirmative certification in effect and a determination under such part that the individual has a severe impairment.

"(4) CERTIFIED INDIVIDUAL DEFINED.—The term 'certified individual' means an individual who has been determined under part B to be a moderately or severely disabled individual and, with respect to long-term nursing facility care, to be entitled to benefits for such care consistent with subsection (a)(2).

"(5) ACTIVITY OF DAILY LIVING DEFINED.—Each of the following is an activity of daily living: bathing, dressing, transferring, toileting, and eating.

"(c) ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUAL DEFINED.—In this title, the term 'eligible individual' means an individual who is—

"(1)(A) a citizen or national of the United States, (B) an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, or (C) an alien otherwise residing permanently in the United States under color of law, and

"(2) a resident of the United States.

"(d) EFFECTIVE DATE OF TITLE.—

"(1) NO BENEFITS FOR CARE PROVIDED BEFORE EFFECTIVE DATE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—No benefits are available under this part for items or services furnished before the effective date of this title.

"(B) DEFINED.—In this title, the term 'effective date of this title' means January 1, 1994.

"(2) PHASE-IN OF BENEFITS.—

"(A) FIRST EFFECTIVE YEAR.—In the case of services furnished during the 12-month period that begins on the effective date of this title—

"(i) the number of hours specified in subsections (a) and (b)(2) of section 2103 shall be 15 percent of the number of hours specified in those subsections, and

"(ii) no benefits are available under this part for nursing facility care.

"(B) SECOND EFFECTIVE YEAR.—In the case of services furnished during the 12-month period that begins 1 year after the effective date of this title—

"(i) the number of hours specified in subsections (a) and (b)(2) of section 2103 shall be 30 percent of the number of hours specified in those subsections, and

"(ii) no benefits are available under this part for nursing facility care.

"(C) THIRD EFFECTIVE YEAR.—In the case of services furnished during the 12-month period that begins 2 years after the effective date of this title—

"(i) the number of hours specified in subsections (a) and (b)(2) of section 2103 shall be 50 percent of the number of hours specified in those subsections, and

"(ii) benefits are available under this part for nursing facility care.

"(D) SUBSEQUENT EFFECTIVE YEARS.—In the case of services furnished after such 12-month period—

"(i) the number of hours specified in subsections (a) and (b)(2) of section 2103 shall be 100 percent of the number of hours specified in those subsections, and

"(ii) benefits are available under this part for nursing facility care.

"SCOPE OF COMMUNITY CARE

"SEC. 2102. (a) IN GENERAL.—In this title, the term 'community care' means items and services which are—

"(1)(A) home-based services (as defined in subsection (b)),

"(B) community-based services (as defined in subsection (c)),

"(C) respite care (as defined in subsection (d)(1)), or

"(D) hospice respite care (as defined in subsection (d)(2));

"(2) furnished to an individual by a community care agency (as defined in subsection (e)) or by others under arrangements made by the agency;

"(3) furnished under a written plan of care (for furnishing such items and services and other related items and services to such individual) which—

"(A) is established and periodically reviewed and revised by a care manager (as defined in section 2115(a)(1)),

"(B) is developed with the participation of the individual,

"(C) reflects the individual's needs identified in the assessment under section 2111 and the types of community care necessary to maintain the individual outside a nursing or other health care facility, and

"(D) takes into account the coverage levels under section 2103; and

"(4) in the case of services furnished in a small community setting or large community setting (as defined in subsection (g)(1) or (h)(1), respectively, of section 1929), furnished in a setting that meets the minimum requirements for such a setting under subsection (g)(2) or (h)(2) of such section.

"(b) HOME-BASED SERVICES DEFINED.—In this title, the term 'home-based services' means, with respect to an individual, the following items and services which are provided in a place of residence used as the individual's home (or, in the case of services described in paragraphs (3), (6), and (7), which may be provided outside the individual's residence) to the extent they are not respite care or hospice respite care (as defined in subsection (d)):

"(1) Nursing care provided by or under the supervision of a registered professional nurse.

"(2) Services of a homemaker/home health aide who has successfully completed a training and competency evaluation program that meets minimum standards established by the Secretary under section 1891(a)(3)(D).

"(3) Personal assistance services furnished by an individual who has successfully completed a training and competency evaluation program that meets minimum standards established by the Secretary.

"(4) Medical social services.

"(5) Physical, occupational, or respiratory therapy or speech-language pathology.

"(6) Medical supplies (other than drugs and biologicals), assistive technologies, and equipment that assist in the performance of activities of daily living.

"(7) Patient and caregiver (including family caregiver) education and training to develop skills necessary to permit the individual to remain in the home setting.

"(8) Such other home-based items and services as the Secretary may approve.

"(c) COMMUNITY-BASED SERVICES DEFINED.—In this title, the term 'community-based services' means the following (to the extent they are not respite care or hospice respite care, as defined in subsection (d)):

"(1) Adult day care services provided by an adult day care program that meets such standards (including the provision of at least 1 meal a day and the provision of necessary transportation) established by the Secretary.

"(2) In the case of individuals with chronic mental illness, day treatment or other partial hospitalization services, psychosocial rehabilitation services, and clinic services (whether or not furnished in a facility), but only insofar as such services are equivalent to services described in paragraph (1) and do not include individual therapy.

"(3) Such other community-based items and services as the Secretary may approve.

"(d) RESPITE CARE AND HOSPICE RESPITE CARE DEFINED.—In this title:

"(1) RESPITE CARE.—The term 'respite care' means the following:

"(A) Services of the type described in subsections (b) and (c) provided on an occasional basis for the purpose of providing relief for an unpaid, regular caregiver.

"(B) The training of family members in how to deliver effectively home-based services.

"(C) Support counseling for family caregivers.

"(2) HOSPICE RESPITE CARE.—The term 'hospice respite care' means services of the type described in subsections (b) and (c) provided for the purpose of assisting terminally ill individuals.

"(e) COMMUNITY CARE AGENCY DEFINED.—In this title, the term 'community care agency' means a public agency or private organization, or a subdivision of such an agency or organization, which has entered into a participation agreement described in section 2163(a), which meets participation standards established under section 1891, and which—

"(1) is a home health agency (as defined in section 1861(m)); or

"(2)(A) is primarily engaged in delivering, or arranging for the delivery of, homemaker/home health services and personal assistance services,

"(B) maintains clinical records on all patients,

"(C) in the case of an agency or organization in any State in which State or applicable local law provides for the licensing of agencies or organizations of this nature, (i) is licensed pursuant to such law, or (ii) is approved, by the agency of such State or locality, responsible for licensing agencies or organizations of this nature, as meeting the standards established for such licensing, and

"(D) meets such additional requirements as the Secretary may find necessary in the interest of the health and safety of individuals who are furnished services by such agency or organization or as may be necessary for the effective and efficient operation of the program under this title.

"LIMITS ON HOURS OF COMMUNITY CARE

"SEC. 2103. (a) INDIVIDUAL ENTITLEMENT BASED ON LEVEL OF IMPAIRMENT.—Subject to subsection (c) and section 2101(d)(2), coverage under this title for community care may not exceed, subject to subsection (b), in any month—

"(1) 52 hours in the case of a moderately disabled individual, or

"(2) 88 hours in the case of a severely disabled individual.

"(b) ADDITIONAL, POOLED COVERAGE FOR INDIVIDUALS WITH GREATER NEED.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the aggregate limit established under paragraph (2) consistent with guidelines established under paragraph (3) and subject to individual limits under paragraph (4), the number of hours of community care for certified individuals may be increased under this subsection (above the maximum number permitted under subsection (a)) to provide for the greater needs of the individual.

"(2) LIMIT ON AGGREGATE ADDITIONAL HOURS FOR A CARE MANAGER.—Subject to section 2101(d)(2), the total number of additional hours of community care made available under this subsection to certified individuals under the care of a care manager (as defined in section 2115(a)) may not exceed the sum of—

"(A) 13 multiplied by the average number of certified moderately disabled individuals receiving community care under the care of the manager during the month; and

"(B) 22 multiplied by the average number of certified severely disabled individuals receiving community care under the care of the manager during the month.

"(3) ALLOCATION.—

"(A) ESTABLISHMENT OF GUIDELINES.—The Secretary shall establish guidelines for the allocation of additional hours of community care under this subsection.

"(B) APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES.—Each care manager shall establish standards for the allocation of additional hours of community care under this subsection consistent with such guidelines.

"(C) DISCRETION.—Except as may be provided by a care manager under such standards (consistent with such guidelines), no individual is entitled to additional hours of community care under this subsection. An individual who is dissatisfied with a care manager's allocation of hours under this subsection may file a complaint with the assessment agency (as defined in section 2114(a)(1)) with responsibility for monitoring the care manager.

"(4) INDIVIDUAL LIMIT.—The total of the number of hours of community care provided under subsection (a), and the number of additional hours of community care provided under this subsection, with respect to an individual for a month may not exceed such level as would permit the total payment rate for such community care for the month to exceed the payment rate that would apply under this title if the individual were provided benefits for long-term nursing facility care under this title during the entire month.

"(c) ADJUSTMENT IN COMPUTATION OF HOURS OF COMMUNITY CARE TO ACCOUNT FOR VARIATION IN INTENSITY OF TYPES OF CARE.—

"(1) DIVISION OF COMMUNITY CARE BY TYPE; COMPUTATION OF WEIGHTING FACTOR FOR EACH TYPE.—Based on the relative intensity of (or payment rates under part C for) different types of community care, the Secretary shall—

"(A) assign similar community care to a type of services, and

"(B) for each such type of community care assign an appropriate weighting factor that—"(i) reflects the relative intensity of services (or payment level) of that type compared to the average mix of community care, and

"(ii) has an average value of 1.0.

"(2) ADJUSTMENT IN COMPUTING HOURS OF CARE.—In applying the limit on number of hours of community care under subsections (a) and (b), each hour of a given type of service shall be adjusted by the weighting factor (established under paragraph (1)(B)) for that type.

"(d) SPECIAL RULE FOR ITEMS.—In applying the hourly limits of the previous subsections in the case of community care that is an item (rather than a personal or professional service), the Secretary shall provide for a method for converting units of such care into hours of community care based on factors reflecting the payment level for such items compared to the payment levels for community care consisting of services.

"SCOPE OF NURSING FACILITY CARE

"SEC. 2104. (a) NURSING FACILITY CARE DEFINED.—In this title, the term 'nursing facility care' means the following items and services furnished to a resident of a nursing facility (as defined in subsection (b)) and (except as provided in paragraphs (3) and (6)) by such facility, excluding, however, any such item or service if it would not be included under section 1861(b) if furnished to an inpatient of a hospital:

"(1) Nursing care provided by or under the supervision of a registered professional nurse.

"(2) Bed and board in connection with the furnishing of such nursing care.

"(3) Physical, occupational, or respiratory therapy, or speech-language pathology, furnished by the facility or by others under arrangements with them made by the facility.

"(4) Medical social services.

"(5) Such drugs, biologicals, supplies, appliances, and equipment, furnished for use in the facility as are ordinarily furnished by such facility for the care and treatment of residents.

"(6) Medical services provided by an intern or resident-in-training of a hospital with which the facility has in effect a transfer agreement (meeting the requirements of section 1861(1)), under a teaching program of such hospital approved as provided in the last sentence of section 1861(b), and other diagnostic or therapeutic services provided by a hospital with which the facility has such an agreement in effect.

"(7) Such other services necessary to the health of the residents as are generally provided by nursing facilities.

"(b) NURSING FACILITY DEFINED.—In this title, the term 'nursing facility' means—

"(1) a skilled nursing facility (as defined in section 1819(a)), or

"(2) a facility that is a nursing facility (as defined in section 1919(a)) which meets the requirements of section 1819(b)(4)(C) (relating to required nursing care), which has entered into a participation agreement under section 2163(a). Such term does not include an intermediate care facility for the mentally retarded (as defined in section 1905(d)).

"LIMITS ON SHORT-TERM NURSING FACILITY CARE

"SEC. 2105. (a) IN GENERAL.—Coverage under this title for short-term nursing facility services under section 2101(a)(1)(B) for an individual may not exceed 180 days of nursing facility services in each of 2 episodes of care in each individual's lifetime.

"(b) EPISODE OF CARE DEFINED.—In subsection (a), the term 'episode of care' means, subject to subsection (c), a 180-day period—

"(1) which begins with the first day an individual elects to receive benefits with respect to short-term nursing facility care under this title, and

"(2) subject to subsection (d), immediately preceding which there was a period of noninstitutionalization (as defined in subsection (e)).

"(c) RELATION TO MEDICARE DAYS.—Any day in which an individual is receiving benefits with respect to extended care services under part A of title XVIII shall not be included in an episode of care.

"(d) TRANSITION.—In the case of an individual who is a resident of a nursing facility on the first date on which benefits are available under this part for nursing facility care (under section 2101(d)(2)) and who elects to receive benefits with respect to short-term nursing facility care under this title, the individual is deemed to be in an episode of care as of such date, but the number of days of benefits available under this title for the episode shall be reduced by 1 day for each day during the period ending on such first date and beginning at the end of the individual's last previous period of noninstitutionalization.

"(e) PERIOD OF NONINSTITUTIONALIZATION DEFINED.—In this section, the term 'period of noninstitutionalization' means, with respect to an individual, a period of 180 consecutive days during each of which the individual was not a resident of a nursing facility.

"PART B—ASSESSMENTS AND CERTIFICATIONS

"REQUEST FOR AND PERFORMANCE OF ASSESSMENTS

"SEC. 2111. (a) REQUESTS FOR ASSESSMENT.—Each eligible individual (as defined in section 2101(c)) (or another person on such individual's behalf) may request an assessment agency (as defined in section 2114(a)(1)) to conduct an assessment (or, if previously certified under section 2112(a), a reassessment) under this section with respect to the individual.

"(b) BENEFICIARY ASSESSMENT CHARGES.—Subject to section 2131—

"(1) INITIAL ASSESSMENT.—The charge for an initial assessment under this section shall be $25. The Secretary may, from time to time, modify the amount of such charge, but only insofar as the relative costs of conducting assessments under this section have changed over time.

"(2) SUBSEQUENT BENEFICIARY ASSESSMENT CHARGE.—The charge for a subsequent assessment (or reassessment) under this section shall be an amount, not to exceed the amount provided under paragraph (1), specified by the Secretary.

"(3) APPLICATION OF CHARGES.—Charges collected under this subsection with respect to assessments conducted by an assessment agency shall be retained by such agency and will be applied (in accordance with section 2114(e)(1)(B)) against the payments otherwise due such agency under section 2114(e)(1)(A).

"(c) PERFORMANCE OF ASSESSMENTS.—

"(1) LOCATION AND PROMPTNESS.—To the extent practicable, assessments shall be conducted on the individual in the individual's home with any primary caregiver present and shall be conducted within 14 days after the date of the request for the assessment.

"(2) TIMING OF ASSESSMENT IN RELATION TO NURSING FACILITY CARE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—To the extent practicable, assessments shall be conducted before the date an individual is admitted to a nursing facility. In no case shall payment be made under this title for nursing facility care furnished an individual earlier than 14 days before the date the individual has an assessment under this section.

"(B) TRANSITION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If an individual is a resident of a nursing facility on the first date on which benefits are available under this part for nursing facility care (under section 2101(d)(2)) and has resided in the facility for at least 180 consecutive days before such date, the individual is deemed to have had an assessment under this section (and an affirmative certification under section 2112) as of such first date.

"(ii) VALIDITY OF CERTIFICATION.—An affirmative certification shall be deemed valid for a period of 1 year beginning on such effective date.

"(iii) FINANCIAL ELIGIBILITY STILL REQUIRED.—Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as waiving the requirement of section 2101(a)(2) that an individual's resources be at or below the protected resource level in order to be entitled to benefits under this title for long-term nursing facility care.

"(3) FREQUENCY OF ASSESSMENTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in this paragraph, a request for an assessment under this section may be made at any time.

"(B) LIMITATION ON FREQUENCY.—If an individual, based on an assessment under this section, has an affirmative or negative cer-tification under section 2112(a) (and, if affirmative, a determination of degree of impairment under such section), no further assessment (or reassessment) under this section shall be valid with respect to the individual unless—

"(i) subject to subparagraph (C), it is conducted at least 3 months after the date of the previous assessment, or

"(ii) a physician certifies that there has been a significant change in the individual's condition that may affect the certification or the determination of the degree of impairment.

"(C) REASSESSMENT AT TIME OF DISCHARGE FROM NURSING FACILITY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to clause (ii), in the case of a certified individual who is discharged from a nursing facility, if the individual desires to remain eligible for benefits under this title after the date of such discharge the individual must obtain a new assessment under this section at the time of the discharge. Any previous affirmative certification under section 2112(a) shall not remain valid after the date of the discharge unless such an assessment has been conducted; and, if such assessment has been conducted, the previous certification shall not remain valid after the date of the new certification pursuant to such assessment.

"(i) EXCEPTIONS.—The Secretary may provide for such exceptions to clause (1) as may be appropriate with respect to particular circumstances or timing of discharges from nursing facilities.

"(d) ASSESSMENT TEAMS.—Each assessment under this section shall be conducted by a multidisciplinary team of such appropriately trained individuals designated by the assessment agency as may be required to evaluate properly the disability of an individual.

"(e) UNIFORM ASSESSMENT INSTRUMENT AND METHODOLOGY.—In making assessments under this section, assessment agencies shall use a standard, reproducible, uniform assessment instrument and methodology designated by the Secretary. The Secretary shall first designate such instrument and methodology by not later than 6 months before the effective date of this title.

"CERTIFICATIONS

"SEC. 2112. (a) AFFIRMATIVE OR NEGATIVE CERTIFICATION.—Based on an assessment of an eligible individual conducted under section 2111, an assessment agency shall determine and certify whether or not the individual is a moderately or severely disabled individual (as defined in section 2101(b)(1)). In this title, the terms 'affirmative certification' and 'negative certification' mean, with respect to an individual, a certification under the previous sentence that the individual is, or is not, respectively, a moderately or severely disabled individual.

"(b) CONTENTS OF AFFIRMATIVE CERTIFICATION.—If the agency makes an affirmative certification, the agency—

"(1) shall—

"(A) include in the certification a determination, consistent with the guidelines established under subsection (c)(1), as to whether the degree of impairment is moderate or severe;

"(B) specify, consistent with guidelines established under subsection (c)(2), the period (not to exceed 12 months) during which the certification will be effective and before the end of which the individual must be reassessed to continue to remain eligible for benefits under this title;

"(C) if the individual elects to receive community care under this title, provide the individual with a referral to one or more care managers (as defined in section 2115(a)) who may establish a plan of care for community care, consistent with the benefit level available under section 2103 with respect to that degree of impairment; and

"(D) if the individual is receiving community care under this title at the time of a recertification, include a review of, and instructing the care manager to make an appropriate revision of, the plan of care established with respect to such care; and

"(2) may identify (in accordance with criteria which the Secretary may establish and which are consistent with the guidelines under section 2103(b)(3)(A)) those factors (such as the availability of a primary unpaid caregiver) that might influence the selection of individuals who may need the additional hours of community care under section 2103(b) and the allocation of such additional hours of care among such individuals.

"(c) SECRETARIAL GUIDELINES.—By not later than 6 months before the effective date of this title, the Secretary shall establish—

"(1) guidelines for determining degrees of impairment under subsection (b)(1)(A), and

"(2) guidelines for specifying the period of effectiveness of affirmative certifications under subsection (b)(1)(B).

"APPEALS

"SEC. 2113. (a) IN GENERAL.—The provisions of section 1869 shall apply—

"(1) to determinations of whether an individual is entitled to benefits under this title, and

"(2) to the determination of the amount of benefits under this title, including a negative certification under section 2112 or the determination of a level of impairment under section 2112(b)(1)(A), but not including the allocation of additional hours of community care under section 2103(b).

In the same manner as they apply to such benefits under part B of title XVIII.

"(b) RESTRICTION ON COURT REVIEW.—A negative certification or a determination of a level of impairment shall not be overturned or modified by a court on the basis of the facts in any particular case unless the court finds that there is no reasonable basis for the factual determination and the certification or determination was arbitrary and capricious.

"ASSESSMENT AGENCIES

"SEC. 2114. (a) DEFINED.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In this title, the term 'assessment agency' means a nonprofit or public agency or organization, or a nonprofit or public subdivision of such an agency or organization, which the Secretary determines—

"(A) is capable of performing directly (or, with respect to conducting assessments and reviewing plans of care, directly or through contracts under subsection (d)) efficiently and effectively the duties of an assessment agency described in subsection (c);

"(B) demonstrates capability—

"(i) in conducting assessments (or contracting for the conduct of assessments),

"(ii) in reviewing the quality of community care, and

"(iii) in making determinations under part D with respect to low-income assistance and financial eligibility for long-term nursing facility care; and

"(C)(i) does not provide community care or nursing facility care and does not have a direct or indirect ownership or control interest in, or direct or indirect affiliation or relationship with, an entity that provides such care, and (ii) except as provided in paragraph (2), does not have a direct or indirect ownership or control interest in, or direct or indirect affiliation or relationship with, a care manager.

"(2) WAIVER OF RESTRICTION OF CARE MANAGERS.—At the request of an assessment agency, the Secretary may waive the restriction of paragraph (1)(C)(ii) and section 2115(a)(1)(C)(i) for the assessment agency to be (or be related to) a care manager if the Secretary is satisfied that—

"(A) there is a qualified independent entity that will review and assure the quality of the care management functions otherwise reviewed by the agency, and

"(B) the number of individuals with respect to whom the agency will make affirmative certifications is consistent with the number of such individuals the agency would make if it were not related to a care manager.

"(b) SELECTION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall, for each State, enter into a contract with an assessment agency to perform duties of such an agency with respect to residents of the State. Such a contract shall only be entered into with an agency if the Secretary determines that the agency will perform such duties in a manner consistent with the efficient and effective administration of this title. Subject to paragraph (4), the period of each such contract shall be 3 years.

"(2) BASIS FOR SELECTION.—Subject to paragraph (3), the Secretary shall select the qualified assessment agency to enter into a contract under this subsection for a State on the basis of a competitive bidding process which takes into account the costs and quality of services to be provided under the contract.

"(3) PRIORITY FOR STATE OR STATE AGENCY.—If more than one agency is qualified to enter into a contract with the Secretary under this subsection for the performance of duties in a State, priority shall be given to any such organization which is the State or an agency of the State.

"(4) TERMINATION.—The Secretary may terminate a contract with an assessment agency under this subsection, upon reasonable notice to the agency, if the Secretary determines that the agency has failed substantially to carry out its duties under the contract.

"(c) DUTIES OF ASSESSMENT AGENCIES.—

"(1) REQUIREMENTS.—Each assessment agency shall be responsible for—

"(A) conducting assessments under section 2111;

"(B) in cooperation with care managers, reviewing periodically the quality of care provided under this title;

"(C) monitoring the performance of care managers with respect to individuals certified by the agency, including receiving complaints respecting their performance; and

"(D) making determinations under part D with respect to (i) determining eligibility for low-income assistance, (ii) determining the amount of resources of individuals, (iii) verifying under section 2131(c)(6) information supplied in applications for assistance under that part, and (iv) establishing resident-specific deductibles under section 2133.

"(2) RECOMMENDATIONS.—

"(A) CARE MANAGERS.—With respect to community care, each assessment agency shall inform, and may make recommendations to, certified individuals respecting care managers that are qualified to plan and coordinate their care under this title.

"(B) NURSING FACILITIES.—With respect to nursing facility care, each assessment agency shall inform, and may make recommendations to, certified individuals respecting nursing facilities from which they may obtain covered services under this title.

"(d) CONTRACTING OUT CERTAIN FUNCTIONS.—The Secretary shall permit an assessment agency, to the extent necessary to carry out duties under this title and except as provided in subsection (a)(2), to provide for assessments through contracts with nonprofit or public organizations which do not provide community care or nursing facility care and which do not have a direct or indirect ownership or control interest in, or a direct or indirect affiliation or relationship with, an entity that provides, community care or nursing facility care or with a care manager.

"(e) PAYMENT TO ASSESSMENT AGENCIES.—

"(1) FOR ASSESSMENTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Each assessment agency shall be paid under this title, for conducting an assessment under section 2111, a per assessment payment amount in accordance with a schedule established by the Secretary. Such schedule shall take into account costs that are reasonable and related to the cost of performing such assessments.

"(B) OFFSETTING ASSESSMENT CHARGES COLLECTED.—Amounts otherwise payable to an assessment agency under this paragraph shall be reduced by the amount of assessment charges collected by the agency under section 2111(b).

"(2) FOR QUALITY REVIEW.—Each assessment agency shall be paid under this title, for reviewing the quality of care provided under this title, an amount that the Secretary determines is reasonable and related to the costs of conducting such reviews.

"(3) FOR LOW-INCOME ASSISTANCE AND ELIGIBILITY DETERMINATIONS.—Each assessment agency shall be paid under this title, for—

"(A) making determinations under part D with respect to low-income assistance under section 2131 (including verifying under section 2131(c)(6) information supplied in applications for assistance under that part),

"(B) computing resources under section 2132, and

"(C) establishing resident-specific deductibles under section 2133, an amount that the Secretary determines is reasonable and related to the costs of conducting such activities.

"CARE MANAGERS

"SEC. 2115. (a) DEFINED.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In this title, the term 'care manager' means an individual or nonprofit or public agency or organization, or a nonprofit or public subdivision of such an agency or organization, which the appropriate assessment agency determines—

"(A) is capable of performing directly, efficiently, and effectively the duties of a care manager described in subsection (c);

"(B) demonstrates capability—

"(i) in establishing and periodically reviewing and revising plans of care for community care,

"(ii) in arranging for and monitoring the provision and quality of (or, in the case described in paragraph (2), in providing) community care, and

"(iii) in allocating, in accordance with the guidelines established under section 2103(b)(3)(A), additional hours of community care under section 2103(b) among different certified individuals whose plans of care are being monitored by the individual, agency, or organization;

"(C) in the case of an agency or organization—

"(i) except as provided in section 2114(a)(2), is not designated as an assessment agency and is not an affiliate of an agency so designated.

"(ii) except as provided in subsection (b), does not provide community care or nursing facility care and does not have a direct or indirect ownership or control interest in, or direct or indirect affiliation or relationship with, an entity that provides such care, and

"(iii) if the agency or organization is in a State in which State or applicable local law provides for the licensing of care managers, (I) is licensed pursuant to such law, or (II) is approved, by the agency of the State or locality responsible for licensing care managers, as meeting the standards established for such licensing; and

"(D) in the case of an individual, is in a State in which State or applicable local law provides for the licensing of individuals as care managers and (i) is licensed pursuant to such law, or (ii) is approved, by the agency of the State or locality responsible for licensing individual care managers, as meeting the standards established for such licensing.

"(2) WAIVER OF RESTRICTION ON PROVISION OF CARE.—The Secretary may waive the restriction of paragraph (1)(C)(ii) for a care manager if the Secretary is satisfied that—

"(A) there is a qualified independent entity that will review and assure the quality of the care that is furnished by the manager (or by the entity affiliated with the manager) and that otherwise is subject to review by the manager, and

"(B) the allocation of additional hours of community care under section 2103(b) will be done in a manner that treats individuals equitably without regard to whether or not the manager (or an entity affiliated with the manager) is providing the care.

"(b) SELECTION.—

"(1) BY INDIVIDUALS.—Subject to paragraph (2), each certified individual may select the care manager who will provide care management services with respect to the individual.

"(2) RESTRICTIONS ON SELECTION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), a State may limit care managers that may be selected under paragraph (1) to—

"(i) a care manager that is a public agency or organization,

"(ii) a limited number of such managers, or

"(iii) managers that meet additional qualifications.

"(B) FREEDOM OF CHOICE.—A State may not restrict an individual's choice among the care managers that may be selected consistent with subparagraph (A).

"(3) DISQUALIFICATION.—If an assessment agency determines that a care manager has not performed (or is no longer capable of performing) directly, efficiently, and effectively the duties of a care manager described in subsection (c) or otherwise no longer meets the qualifications of such a manager, the agency, after notice to the manager, may disqualify the manager from serving as a care manager under this title until such time as the assessment agency determines that such qualifications are met.

"(c) DUTIES OF CARE MANAGERS.—Each care manager shall be responsible for—

"(1) establishing and periodically reviewing and revising plans of care for community care,

"(2) arranging for and monitoring the provision and quality of (or, in the case described in subsection (a)(2), in providing) community care and authorizing payment for care, and

"(3) allocating, in accordance with the guidelines established under section

2103(b)(3)(A), additional hours of community care under section 2103(b) among different certified individuals whose plans of care are being monitored by the care manager.

In carrying out paragraph (2), the care manager shall assure that the care is responsive to the preferences of patients in how the care is provided.

"(d) PROHIBITING CONTRACTING OUT DUTIES.—The Secretary shall not permit a care manager to contract out any of its duties.

"(e) PAYMENT TO CARE MANAGERS.—

"(1) FOR ESTABLISHING PLANS OF CARE.—Each care manager shall be paid under this title, for establishing a plan of care for a certified individual, a per capita amount in accordance with a schedule established by the Secretary.

"(2) FOR MONITORING CARE AND REVIEWING AND REVISING PLANS OF CARE.—Each care manager shall be paid under this title, for monitoring community care furnished to a certified individual and for periodically reviewing and revising the plans of care of such individuals, a monthly per capita fee in accordance with a schedule established by the Secretary.

"(3) BASIS FOR SCHEDULES.—The Secretary shall establish fee schedules under paragraphs (1) and (2) in a manner that—

"(A) does not vary the fee based on the degree of an individual's disability, and

"(B) takes into account costs that are reasonable and related to the cost of establishing plans of care or of monitoring care and reviewing and revising such plans of care, respectively.

"PART C—PAYMENT "COMMUNITY CARE

"SEC. 2121. (a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) GENERAL RULE.—Subject to the succeeding provisions of this part, there shall be paid from the Federal Long-Term Care Trust Fund (established under section 2141), in the case of each certified individual who incurs expenses for community care with respect to which benefits are payable under this title, amounts equal to—

"(A) the amount determined under a fee schedule (or other prospectively-determined reimbursement mechanism) established and annually adjusted by the Secretary under subsection (b), or

"(B) the actual charges for such care, whichever is less, reduced by the coinsurance amount established under subsection (c).

"(2) CARE MANAGER APPROVAL REQUIRED.—No payment may be made under this title for community care, furnished under a plan of care of a care manager, unless—

"(A) the provider furnishing the care has provided the care manager with a statement of the number of hours and type of community care furnished, and

"(B) the care manager has authorized payment for such care.

"(b) PROSPECTIVE PAYMENT METHODOLOGY.—

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT OF FEE SCHEDULES.—The Secretary shall establish—

"(A) a fee schedule (or other prospectively-determined reimbursement mechanism) for home-based services (as defined in section 2102(b)),

"(B) such a schedule or mechanism for community-based services (as defined in section 2102(c)), and

"(C) such a schedule or mechanism for respite care and hospice respite care (as defined in section 2102(d)), consistent with paragraphs (2) through (4).

"(2) NATIONAL SCHEDULES.—Except as adjusted under paragraph (4), the schedules or mechanisms under paragraph (1) shall provide for uniform national rates that vary among different types of services based on the skill level required in providing the services, the resources required to provide the services, or similar measure of intensity of services.

"(3) ANNUAL UPDATE.—The Secretary shall provide for an annual adjustment in the rates under such schedules or mechanisms based on the Secretary's estimate, before the beginning of the calendar year involved, of the percentage by which the cost of the mix of goods and services covered by the schedule (based on an index of appropriately weighted indicators of changes in wages and prices which are representative of such mix of goods and services) for the year will exceed the cost of such mix of goods and services for the preceding year.

"(4) ADJUSTMENT FOR DIFFERENT AREA WAGE LEVELS.—The Secretary shall adjust the proportion (as estimated by the Secretary from time to time) of payment amounts under such a schedule or mechanism which are attributable to wages and wage-related costs of services covered by the schedule or mechanism for area differences in wage levels by a factor (established by the Secretary) reflecting the relative wage level for such services in the geographic area in which the services are provided compared to the national average wage level for such services. At least every 36 months, the Secretary shall update the factor under the preceding sentence on the basis of a survey conducted by the Secretary (and updated as appropriate) of the wages and wage-related costs for different services in the United States. To the extent determined feasible by the Secretary, such survey shall measure the earnings and paid hours of employment by occupational category.

"(c) 20 PERCENT COINSURANCE.—Subject to section 2131, in the case of a community care agency (or other entity acting under an arrangement with such agency) furnishing community care under this title, the agency (or entity) shall impose a charge for the community care in an amount equal to 20 percent of—

"(1) the amount determined under the fee schedule or mechanism under subsection (b) for the care, or

"(2) the agency's or entity's charge for the care, whichever is less.

"NURSING FACILITY CARE

"SEC. 2122. (a) PAYMENT RATES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—

"(A) PER DIEM PROSPECTIVE PAYMENTS FOR ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS AND PERSONAL CARE.—Subject to the succeeding provisions of this part, there shall be paid from the Federal Long-Term Care Trust Fund (established under section 2141), in the case of each certified individual who incurs expenses for a day of nursing facility care with respect to which benefits are payable under this title, an amount equal to the sum of the following (reduced to the extent provided under subparagraph (B)):

"(i) ADMINISTRATIVE PER DIEM.—The administrative per diem rate specified under subsection (b)(1).

"(ii) PERSONAL CARE PER DIEM.—The product of—

"(I) the personal care per diem rate specified in subsection (c), and

"(II) the weighting factor for the classification of the individual (as established under subsection (d)).

“(iii) CAPITAL PER DIEM.—The capital per diem amount determined under subsection (e)(1).

“(iv) RETURN-ON-EQUITY PER DIEM.—The return-on-equity per diem amount (if applicable) specified in subsection (f).

“(B) REDUCTION FOR COINSURANCE, RESIDENT-SPECIFIC DEDUCTIBLE.—The amount otherwise payable under this paragraph to a nursing facility shall be reduced by the coinsurance or resident-specific deductible, as appropriate, required under paragraph (2).

“(2) COINSURANCE; RESIDENT-SPECIFIC DEDUCTIBLE.—

“(A) SHORT-TERM NURSING FACILITY CARE.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Subject to section 2131, a nursing facility shall impose a charge for each day of short-term nursing facility care (as defined in section 2101(a)(3)(A)) in an amount equal to 20 percent of the average per diem rate determined under clause (ii) for the geographic area in which the facility is located.

“(ii) DETERMINATION OF AVERAGE PER DIEM RATE.—For purposes of clause (i) for nursing facility care in a geographic area, the Secretary shall determine before the beginning of each year for which benefits are available under this title for nursing facility care (pursuant to section 2101(d)(2)) with respect to nursing facility care to be provided in the year, an average per diem rate based on the Secretary's estimate of the weighted average (converted into an average per diem amount) of the sums described in paragraph (1)(A) (determined without regard to any reduction under paragraph (1)(B)) for the area.

“(B) LONG-TERM NURSING FACILITY CARE.—A nursing facility shall impose charges for long-term nursing facility care in the amount of the coinsurance and resident-specific deductible specified under subsection (a)(2) and section 2133.

“(b) ADMINISTRATIVE PER DIEM RATE.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (a)(1)(A)(i), the administrative per diem rate for a facility in a State in a cost reporting period ending in a basing period (as defined in subsection (g)(2)) is equal to the sum of—

“(A) the lesser of—

“(i) the base facility administrative per diem rate (determined under paragraph (2)) for the facility, or

“(ii) the limiting administrative per diem rate (determined under paragraph (3)) for facilities in the State applicable to the period; and

“(B) the base efficiency incentive per diem amount (specified in paragraph (4)), increased (or decreased), for a cost reporting period ending after the first year of the basing period, by the percentage increase (or decrease), respectively, in the administrative marketbasket index (established under paragraph (6)) from the midpoint of the cost reporting period ending in the first year of the basing period to the midpoint of the cost reporting period involved, and adjusted to reflect area wage levels in the manner specified in paragraph (5).

“(2) BASE FACILITY ADMINISTRATIVE PER DIEM RATE.—

“(A) FIRST BASING PERIOD.—The Secretary shall determine, for each nursing facility for the first year of the basing period beginning in 1996 a base facility administrative per diem rate equal to—

“(i) the facility-specific administrative per diem described in subparagraph (C) computed for the cost reporting period which ended in 1991,

“(ii) if the cost reporting period referred to in clause (i) ended before December 31, 1991, updated by the estimated average rate of change of administrative costs of nursing facilities industry-wide in the State between the midpoint of the cost reporting period and July 1, 1991, and “(iii) further updated for 1992, 1993, 1994, 1995, and 1996 by the percentage change in the administrative marketbasket index between July 1, 1991, and July 1 of the year involved, as estimated by the Secretary before the beginning of the basing period.

For an examination of the update provided under clause (iii), see section 2125(c)(2).

“(B) SUBSEQUENT BASING PERIOD.—The Secretary shall determine, for each nursing facility for the first year of each subsequent basing period, a base facility administrative per diem rate equal to the sum of the following:

“(i) MOST RECENT COST REPORTING PERIOD.—The product of .5 and the facility-specific administrative per diem for the most recent cost reporting period ending at least 1 year before the first year of the basing period, increased by the percentage change in the administrative marketbasket index between the midpoint of that cost reporting period and July 1 of the first year of the basing period, as estimated by the Secretary before the beginning of the basing period.

“(ii) SECOND MOST RECENT COST REPORTING PERIOD.—The product of .375 and the facility-specific administrative per diem for the most recent cost reporting period ending at least 2 years before the first year of the basing period, increased by the percentage change in the administrative marketbasket index between the midpoint of that cost reporting period and July 1 of the first year of the basing period, as estimated by the Secretary before the beginning of the basing period.

“(iii) THIRD MOST RECENT COST REPORTING PERIOD.—The product of .125 and the facility-specific administrative per diem for the most recent cost reporting period ending at least 3 years before the first year of the basing period, increased by the percentage change in the administrative marketbasket index between the midpoint of that cost reporting period and July 1 of the first year of the basing period, as estimated by the Secretary before the beginning of the basing period.

“(C) FACILITY-SPECIFIC ADMINISTRATIVE PER DIEM.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—In this subsection, the ‘facility-specific administrative per diem’ for a facility for a cost reporting period is—

“(I) the facility's total administrative costs (as defined in subsection (g)(1)) for such period, divided by “(II) the total number of resident days of nursing facility care at the facility in the period, standardized by the Secretary in order to adjust for variations among facilities by area within a State in the average facility wage level.

“(ii) USE OF MEDICAID COST REPORTS FOR FIRST BASING PERIOD.—The Secretary shall determine facility-specific administrative per diems for the basing period beginning with 1996 based on cost reports filed under title XIX (with appropriate adjustments to reflect ratios of reported costs to costs that would be allowed after audit).

“(3) LIMITING ADMINISTRATIVE PER DIEM RATE.—The Secretary shall determine, for nursing facilities in each State for the first year of each basing period, a limiting administrative per diem rate equal—

“(A) in the case of the basing period beginning in 1996, to the rate corresponding to the 80th percentile (weighted by resident days) of the base facility administrative per diem rates determined under paragraph (2)(A) for facilities in the State for the first year of that basing period, or “(B) in the case of a subsequent basing period, the rate described in subparagraph (A) increased by the percentage change in the administrative marketbasket index between the midpoint of the first year of the first basing period and the midpoint of the first year of the basing period involved.

In applying such rate to any specific facility the cost reporting period of which is not a calendar year, the Secretary shall adjust the rate, using changes in the administrative marketbasket index, to reflect appropriately the difference between the midpoint of the facility's cost reporting period and July 1.

“(4) BASE EFFICIENCY INCENTIVE PER DIEM AMOUNT.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(B), the base efficiency incentive per diem amount for a facility in a State for a basing period is equal to ½ of the product, determined for the first year of the basing period, of—

(A) the ratio of (i) the facility's base facility administrative per diem rate (determined under paragraph (2)), to (ii) the limiting administrative per diem rate (determined under paragraph (3) for facilities in the State); and

(B) the amount (if any) by which (i) the limiting administrative per diem rate (determined under paragraph (3) for facilities in the State), exceeds (ii) the facility's base facility administrative per diem rate (determined under paragraph (2)).

“(5) ADJUSTMENT FOR DIFFERENT AREA WAGE LEVELS.—The Secretary shall adjust the proportion (as estimated by the Secretary from time to time) of a facility's administrative costs which are attributable to wages and wage-related costs for area differences in facility wage levels by a factor (established by the Secretary) reflecting the relative facility wage level in the geographic area of the facility compared to the State-wide average facility wage level. At least every 36 months, the Secretary shall update the factor under the preceding sentence on the basis of a survey conducted by the Secretary (and updated as appropriate) of the wages and wage-related costs of nursing facility care in States. To the extent determined feasible by the Secretary, such survey shall measure the earnings and paid hours of employment by occupational category.

“(6) ADMINISTRATIVE MARKETBASKET INDEX.—The Secretary shall establish an index which measures, through appropriately weighted indicators of wages and prices, the change in the cost of the mix of goods and services (including personnel costs but excluding nonoperating costs) comprising administrative costs of nursing facility care. In this subsection, the term ‘administrative marketbasket index’ means the index established under this paragraph.

“(c) PERSONAL CARE PER DIEM RATE.—

“(1) FORMULA.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the personal care per diem floor specified in paragraph (4), for purposes of subsection (a)(1)(A)(ii)(I) the personal care per diem rate for a facility in a State in a cost reporting period ending in a basing period is—

“(i) the lesser of the amounts specified in subparagraph (B), increased (or decreased), for a cost reporting period ending after the first year of the basing period, by the percentage increase (or decrease), respectively, in the personal care marketbasket index (established under paragraph (6)) from the midpoint of the cost reporting period ending in the first year of the basing period to the midpoint of the cost reporting period involved; or

"(ii) the facility's actual per diem personal care costs for the previous cost reporting period increased (or decreased) by the percentage income (or decrease) in the personal care marketbasket index from the midpoint of the previous cost reporting period to the midpoint of the cost reporting period involved, whichever is less, adjusted to reflect area wage levels in the manner specified in paragraph (5).

"(B) AMOUNTS.—The amounts specified in this subparagraph for a facility in a State are as follows:

"(i) The base facility personal care per diem rate (determined under paragraph (2)) for the facility.

"(ii) The limiting personal care per diem rate (determined under paragraph (3)) for facilities in the State.

"(2) BASE FACILITY PERSONAL CARE PER DIEM RATE.—The Secretary shall determine, for each nursing facility for each basing period, a base facility personal care per diem rate. Such rate shall be determined in the same manner as the Secretary determines administrative per diem rates under subsection (b)(2) (assuming that 'personal care' were substituted for 'administrative' each place it appears in such subsection).

"(3) LIMITING PERSONAL CARE PER DIEM RATE.—The Secretary shall determine, for nursing facilities in each State for the first year of each basing period, a limiting personal care per diem rate. Such rate shall be determined in the same manner as the Secretary determines a limiting administrative per diem rate under subsection (b)(3) (assuming that 'personal care' were substituted for 'administrative' each place it appears in such subsection). Such rate shall be adjusted and applied with respect to cost reporting periods of specific facilities in the manner described in such subsection.

"(4) BASE FLOOR PERSONAL CARE PER DIEM AMOUNT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (C), in no case shall the personal care per diem rate for a facility in a State under paragraph (1)(A) in a cost reporting period in a basing period be less than the base floor personal care per diem amount (specified in subparagraph (B)) increased (or decreased), for a cost reporting period ending after the first year of the basing period, by the percentage increase (or decrease), respectively, in the personal care marketbasket index from the midpoint of the cost reporting period ending in the first year of the basing period to the midpoint of the cost reporting period involved and adjusted to reflect area wage levels in the manner specified in paragraph (5).

"(B) BASE FLOOR PERSONAL CARE PER DIEM AMOUNT.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the base floor personal care per diem amount for a facility in a State for any part of a cost reporting period occurring during—

"(i) the first 12-month period in which this title is effective, is equal to—

"(I) the rate corresponding to the 20th percentile (weighted by resident days) of the base facility personal care per diem rates (determined under paragraph (2)) for all facilities in the State for portions of cost reporting periods occurring the 12-month period, or

"(II) the rate corresponding to the 20th percentile (weighted by resident days) of the base facility personal care per diem rates (determined under paragraph (2)) for all facilities in the United States for portions of cost reporting periods occurring the 12-month period, whichever is greater; or

"(ii) a succeeding 12-month period, is equal to—

"(I) the rate corresponding to the 30th percentile (weighted by resident days) of the base facility personal care per diem rates (determined under paragraph (2)) for all facilities in the State for portions of cost reporting periods occurring the 12-month period, or

"(II) the rate corresponding to the 30th percentile (weighted by resident days) of the base facility personal care per diem rates (determined under paragraph (2)) for all facilities in the United States for portions of cost reporting periods occurring the 12-month period, whichever is greater.

"(C) MUST SPEND FUNDS TO GET BASE FLOOR.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to a facility for a cost reporting period if the facility's actual per diem personal care costs for the period is less than the base floor personal care per diem amount specified in subparagraph (B).

"(5) ADJUSTMENT FOR DIFFERENT AREA WAGE LEVELS.—The Secretary shall adjust a proportion of a facility's personal care costs which are attributable to wages and wage-related costs for area differences in facility wage levels in the same manner as such an adjustment is made under subsection (b)(5).

"(6) PERSONAL CARE MARKETBASKET INDEX.—The Secretary shall establish an index which measures, through appropriately weighted indicators of wages and prices, the change in the cost of the mix of goods and services (including personnel costs but excluding nonoperating costs) comprising personal care costs (as defined in subsection (g)(4)) of nursing facility care. In this subsection, the term 'personal care marketbasket index' means the index established under this paragraph.

"(d) WEIGHTING FACTORS.—

"(1) ESTABLISHMENT OF CLASSIFICATION LEVELS.—The Secretary shall establish a classification of individuals receiving nursing facility care based on individuals' level of impairment and need for personal care services under a plan of care. The Secretary shall establish, by not later than 6 months before the effective date of this title, at least 3 classification levels under this paragraph.

"(2) WEIGHTING FACTORS.—For each such classification level, the Secretary shall assign an appropriate weighting factor which reflects the relative costs of personal care services expected to be used with respect to individuals who are classified at that level compared to individuals who are classified at other levels.

"(3) ADJUSTMENTS.—The Secretary may, from time to time, adjust the classifications and weighting factors established under this subsection to reflect changes in treatment patterns, technology, and other factors which may change the relative use of nursing facility resources.

"(e) CAPITAL PER DIEM PAYMENT AMOUNT.—

"(1) COMPUTATION.—Subject to paragraph (6), the Secretary shall determine for each nursing facility for each cost reporting period a capital per diem payment amount equal to the capital adjustment percentage (specified in paragraph (3)) for the facility multiplied by the lesser of—

"(A) the facility-specific capital per diem payment amount (specified in paragraph (2)) for the facility, or

"(B) the limiting capital per diem payment amount (determined under paragraph (4)).

Such per diem amount shall be preliminarily determined on a prospective basis, but is subject to retrospective adjustment to reflect actual costs, actual capital cost/assessed value ratios, and actual resident days of care provided.

"(2) FACILITY-SPECIFIC CAPITAL PER DIEM PAYMENT AMOUNT.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the facility-specific capital per diem payment amount for a facility is the actual costs of capital-related items (as defined in subsection (g)(3)) of the facility relating to nursing facility services, divided by the greater of—

"(A) the total number of resident days of nursing facility care provided in the period in the facility, or

"(B) the total number of resident days of nursing facility care that could have been provided in the period in the facility if the facility had an average occupancy rate of 85 percent during the period.

"(3) CAPITAL ADJUSTMENT PERCENTAGE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of paragraph (1), if the capital cost/assessed value ratio (as defined in subparagraph (B)) of a facility in a State is—

"(i) less than a ratio that corresponds to the 33rd percentile of such ratio for such nursing facilities (determined State-wide on a bed weighted basis), the capital adjustment percentage for the facility is 102 percent;

"(ii) not less than a ratio that corresponds to the 33rd percentile, but less than the 66th percentile, of such ratio for such nursing facilities (determined State-wide on a bed weighted basis), the capital adjustment percentage for the facility is 100 percent;

"(iii) not less than a ratio that corresponds to the 66th percentile, but less than the 90th percentile, of such ratio for such nursing facilities (determined State-wide on a bed weighted basis), the capital adjustment percentage for the facility is 98 percent; or

"(iv) at least equal to a ratio that corresponds to the 90th percentile of such ratio for such nursing facilities (determined State-wide on a bed weighted basis), the capital adjustment percentage for the facility is 95 percent.

"(B) CAPITAL COST/ASSESSED VALUE RATIO.—

"(1) DEFINED.—In subparagraph (A), the term 'capital cost/assessed value ratio' means, for a facility, the ratio of (I) the costs of fixed capital-related items (computed on a per bed basis) of the facility, to (II) the assessed value of such items (as determined in accordance with standards and methods specified by the Secretary).

"(ii) METHOD OF DETERMINATION.—The capital cost/assessed value ratio shall be determined in a manner that—"(I) takes into account major capital improvements of a facility in a timely manner,

"(II) provides for assessments of value of fixed capital-related items of each nursing facility not less often than every 5 years, and

"(III) provides (in the determination of percentiles of State-wide ratios) for the application of appropriate trend factors to effect valuation comparisons on an equitable basis.

"(4) LIMITING CAPITAL PER BED AMOUNT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(B), the Secretary shall determine, for nursing facilities in each State for the first year of each basing period, a limiting capital per bed amount equal to the amount corresponding to the 80th percentile (weighted by resident days) of the capital per bed ratio (as defined in subparagraph (B)) for facilities in the State for the first year of that basing period. The limiting capital per bed amount applied to any specific facility for a cost reporting period is equal to the amount determined under the previous sentence adjusted to reflect the Secretary's estimate of the average change in capital per bed ratio, for facilities in the State, between the midpoint of the year for which such amount was most recently determined and the midpoint of the cost reporting period of the facility in which the limiting amount will be applied. However, the Secretary may adjust such amount as applied to facilities in an area to reflect differences between the State-wide average cost of capital-related items and such average cost for facilities in the area.

"(B) CAPITAL PER BED RATIO DEFINED.—In subparagraph (A), the term 'capital per bed ratio' means, for a year or period, for a facility the ratio of (i) the costs of capital-related items for nursing facility services in the facility during the year or period, to (ii) the average number of licensed nursing beds in the facility during the year or period.

"(5) DETERMINATION OF CAPITAL COSTS.—
 "(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this subsection, costs for a facility for capital-related items shall be determined based on the historical costs of the items, recognizing interest, depreciation, and rent and, except as provided in subparagraph (C), not subject to adjustment as a result of the sale, transfer, or refinancing of the items (or of the corporation or other entity that owns the items).

"(B) LIMITATION ON RENT.—In no case shall costs for rent determined under subparagraph (A) for a capital-related item be greater than the interest and depreciation with respect to such item if the item were owned, rather than rented.

"(C) ADJUSTMENT OF HISTORICAL CAPITAL COSTS.—In the case of the sale, transfer, or refinancing of a capital-related item, the Secretary shall permit the depreciation and interest for the item to be adjusted to take into account the value of such item in such financial transaction, except that such adjustment may not be made more often than once every 10 years.

"(6) REDUCTION FOR INCREASE IN BED-TO-USER-RATIO.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (C), if the Secretary determines that, as of October in a year, the bed-to-user-ratio described in subparagraph (B) for the State exceeds the greater of—

"(i) such ratio for the State as of October 1991, or

"(ii) such ratio for the United States as of October 1991, the capital payment amount under this subsection, and any return-on-equity per diem amount under subsection (f), for days in the following year shall be eliminated.

"(B) BED-TO-USER-RATIO DESCRIBED.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the 'bed-to-user-ratio' described in this subparagraph, for a State or the United States for a month, is the sum, for each age-cohort (described in clause (ii)), of the ratios of—

"(I) the number of licensed nursing facility beds in the State or United States, respectively, as of the month, to

"(II) the product of the use-weighting factor for individuals in the age-cohort (as determined under clause (iii)) and the average number of thousands of individuals in the age-cohort residing in the State or United States, respectively, as of such month.

"(ii) AGE-COHORTS.—For purposes of this subparagraph, individuals within each of the following age ranges are considered to be in a separate age-cohort:

"(I) Under age 65.

"(II) Age 65 through age 70.

"(III) Age 71 through age 75.

"(IV) Age 76 through age 80.

"(V) Age 81 through age 85.

"(VI) Over age 85.

"(iii) COMPUTATION OF USE-WEIGHTING FACTOR.—The Secretary shall determine use-weighting factors for individuals in each age-cohort which reflect (using data as of October 1991) the likelihood of individuals in the cohort receiving nursing facility care in a month.

"(C) EXCEPTION IF NO INCREASE IN LICENSED BEDS.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to a State for days in a year if the number of licensed nursing facility beds in the State as of October of the previous year does not exceed such number as of October 1991.

"(f) RETURN ON EQUITY FOR FOR-PROFIT NURSING FACILITIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—With respect to a nursing facility (other than a public or nonprofit private nursing facility) that receives payment for nursing facility services under this title, subject to subsection (e)(6), for purposes of subsection (a)(1)(A)(iv) the return-on-equity per diem amount for the facility for a cost reporting period under this subsection is equal to—

"(A) the average rate of return during such period of the Federal Long-Term Care Trust Fund of the Federal share (as defined in paragraph (2)) of the equity in the facility, divided by

"(B) the total number of resident days of nursing facility care provided in the period in the facility.

"(2) FEDERAL SHARE DEFINED.—In paragraph (1), the term 'Federal share' means, with respect to a facility for a cost reporting period, the ratio of (A) the total number of resident days of nursing facility care in the facility for the period for which payment is made under this title, to (B) the total number of resident days of nursing facility care in the facility for the period.

"(3) DETERMINATION OF EQUITY.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the equity in a nursing facility shall be determined in accordance with standards established by the Secretary and consistent with rules for the adjustment of historical capital costs.

"(g) GENERAL DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

"(1) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—The term 'administrative costs' means costs of nursing facility care other than personal care costs (as defined in paragraph (4)) or costs of capital-related items.

"(2) BASING PERIOD.—The term 'basing period' means a 3-calendar-year period beginning with 1996 or beginning with each 3rd calendar year thereafter.

"(3) CAPITAL-RELATED ITEMS.—The term 'capital-related items' does not include any return on equity capital.

"(4) PERSONAL CARE COSTS.—The term 'personal care costs' means costs associated with direct resident care which the Secretary identifies as varying by needs of residents and includes costs of raw food, food preparation, and laundry services.

"CERTIFICATION FOR PAYMENT; CONDITIONS OF PAYMENT

"SEC. 2123. (a) IN GENERAL.—Payment for care under this title may be made only to providers and facilities that meet conditions of participation established under this title and only if—

"(1)(A) in the case of community care provided under the supervision of a care manager, the manager has filed written authorization for payment for such care, or, in the case of nursing facility care provided to an individual, a written request (signed by such individual, except in cases in which the Secretary finds it impracticable for the individual to do so) is filed for such payment, in such form, in such manner, and by such person or persons as the Secretary may specify, no later than the close of the period of 1 calendar year following the year in which such care is furnished (deeming any care furnished in the last 3 calendar months of any calendar year to have been furnished in the succeeding calendar year); and

"(2) an assessment agency certifies (and recertifies, where such care is furnished over a period of time, in such cases, with such frequency, and accompanied by such supporting material, appropriate to the individual involved, as may be provided by the Secretary) that—

"(A) in the case of community care or nursing facility care provided to an individual, the individual is a certified individual, and

"(B) in the case of community care provided to an individual, a plan for furnishing such care to such individual has been established and is periodically reviewed and revised by such agency and the care is provided pursuant to the plan of care.

"(b) SPECIAL PROVISIONS.—To the extent provided by the Secretary, the certification and recertification requirements of subsection (a)(2) shall be deemed satisfied where, at a later date, an assessment agency makes an affirmative certification of the kind required, but only where such certification is accompanied by such evidence as may be required by the Secretary.

"(c) INFORMATION REQUIRED.—No payment shall be made to any community care agency, nursing facility, or other person under this title unless there has been furnished such information as may be necessary in order to determine the amounts due such agency, facility, or other person under this title for the period with respect to which amounts are being paid.

"(d) FEDERAL PROVIDERS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), no payment may be made under this title to any Federal agency or facility, except an agency or facility which the Secretary determines is providing services to the public generally as a community agency or facility; and no such payment may be made to any agency, facility, or other person for any item or service which such agency, facility, or person is obligated by a law of, or a contract with, the United States to render at public expense.

"(2) EXCEPTION FOR INDIAN HEALTH SERVICES.—As provided by the Secretary, payment may be made under this title for covered services provided by facilities of the Indian Health Service in the same manner in which, pursuant to section 1880, payment under title XVIII is permitted to be made to facilities of such Service.

"USE OF CARRIERS

"SEC. 2124. The Secretary is authorized to enter into contracts with carriers (described in subsection (f) of section 1842) to perform functions under this title of the type described in such section, in the same manner as the Secretary is authorized to enter into contracts under such section. The amount of any payment made by a carrier for services provided under this title shall be based exclusively on payment methodologies provided under this title and not on those methodologies described in such section or title XVIII.

"LONG-TERM CARE PAYMENT ASSESSMENT COMMISSION

"SEC. 2125. (a) ESTABLISHMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Director of the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment (in this section referred to as the 'Director' and the 'Office' respectively) shall provide for appointment of a Long-Term Care Payment Assessment Commission (in this section referred to as the 'Commission'), to be composed of independent experts appointed by the Director. The provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointment in the competitive service, shall not apply to such appointments.

"(2) NUMBER OF MEMBERS.—The Commission shall consist of 13 individuals. Members of the Commission shall first be appointed no later than July 1, 1993, for a term of 3 years, except that the Director may provide initially for such shorter terms as will insure that (on a continuing basis) the terms of no more than 5 members expire in any one year.

"(3) COMPOSITION.—The membership of the Commission shall include (but need not be limited to) providers of community care and of nursing facility care, health care professionals, individuals skilled in the conduct and interpretation of biomedical, health services, and health economics research, and representatives of consumers and the recipients of community care and nursing facility residents.

"(b) GENERAL DUTIES.—The Commission shall—

"(1) make recommendations to the Secretary and Congress annually regarding the appropriate payment rates to be established for community care and nursing facility care under this part, and

"(2) conduct studies regarding the delivery and payment for community care and nursing facility care under this title.

"(c) CONSIDERATIONS IN MAKING RECOMMENDATIONS.—In making its recommendations under subsection (b)(1), the Commission shall examine—

"(1) the methodology used in establishing payment rates for community care;

"(2) the factor used in making year-to-year updates in payment rates (including the updates provided under section 2122(b)(2)(A)(iii));

"(3) adjustments made on the basis of location of community care agencies and nursing facilities; and

"(4) costs reports used in determining payment for nursing facility care and the consistency of definitions used in establishing allowable costs of such care.

"(d) STUDIES.—The Commission shall provide for the following studies (and reports to Congress respecting such studies):

"(1) STUDY OF ADMISSIONS.—A study of the factors influencing nursing facility admissions with respect to individuals who are entitled to benefits under this title. Such study shall include an examination of the length of the period between the date of such an individual's application for admission and the date of admission and the occupancy rate of facilities during that period. The Commission shall report to Congress by not later than January 1, 1997, on the results of such study.

"(2) STUDY OF BED-TO-USER-RATIOS.—A study of the appropriate ratio of the number of licensed nursing facility beds to the number of thousands of individuals in different age groups in the population required to provide cost effective care for moderately or severely disabled individuals. The Commission shall report to Congress by not later than January 1, 1994, on the results of such study and shall include such recommendations for changes in legislation (including section 2122(e)(6)) as may be appropriate to provide for the appropriate number of nursing facility beds.

"(3) STUDY OF PAYMENT RATES FOR NURSING FACILITY CARE.—A study, based on cost reports provided under this title, on whether the payment rates provided under section 2122 for nursing facility care reflect the costs that are necessary in the efficient delivery of needed nursing facility care. The Commission shall report to Congress by not later than January 1, 1997, on the results of such study and shall include such recommendations for changes in payment rates under such section as may be appropriate.

"(4) STUDY OF LEVELS OF IMPAIRMENT.—A study of the number of levels of impairment, and amount of services for which payment may be made for such levels, under this title, to determine whether the services and payment levels are appropriate to meet the care needs of moderately or severely disabled individuals. The Commission shall report to Congress by not later than January 1, 1997, on the results of such study and shall include such recommendations for changes in the number of (or amount of) services with respect to such levels under this title as may be appropriate.

"(e) INCORPORATION OF CERTAIN ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.—The following provisions of section 1886(e)(6) shall apply to the Commission in the same manner as they apply to the Prospective Payment Assessment Commission:

"(1) Subparagraph (C) (relating to staffing and administration).

"(2) Subparagraph (D) (relating to reimbursement for travel expenses).

"(3) Subparagraph (F) (relating to access to information).

"(4) Subparagraph (G) (relating to use of funds).

"(5) Subparagraph (H) (relating to periodic GAO audits).

"(6) Subparagraph (J) (relating to requests for appropriations).

"(f) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section. Such sums shall be payable from the Federal Long-Term Care Trust Fund.

"PART D—LOW-INCOME ASSISTANCE AND FINANCIAL ELIGIBILITY FOR LONG-TERM NURSING FACILITY SERVICES

"ASSISTANCE FOR LOW-INCOME INDIVIDUALS FOR COINSURANCE FOR COMMUNITY CARE AND SHORT-TERM NURSING FACILITY CARE AND CHARGES FOR ASSESSMENTS

"SEC. 2131. (a) INDIVIDUALS WITH INCOME BELOW THE POVERTY LEVEL.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, in the case of a certified individual whose family adjusted total income (as defined in subsection (f)(2)) does not exceed 100 percent of the official poverty line (as defined in subsection (f)(4)), the low-income assistance under this part shall consist of waiver of—

"(1) the coinsurance under section 2121(c) for the individual with respect to community care and coinsurance under section 2122(a)(2)(A) for the individual with respect to short-term nursing facility care, and

"(2) charges for assessments and reassessments under section 2111(b).

"(b) INDIVIDUALS WITH INCOME BELOW TWICE THE POVERTY LEVEL.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a certified individual whose family adjusted total income exceeds 100 percent but is less than 200 percent, of the official poverty line, the low-income assistance under this part shall consist of—

"(A) the percentage coinsurance applied under sections 2121(c) and 2122(a)(2) being reduced by the subsidy percentage multiplied by the percentage coinsurance otherwise applied, and

"(B) charges for assessments and reassessments under section 2111(b) being reduced by the subsidy percentage multiplied by the charges otherwise applicable.

"(2) SUBSIDY PERCENTAGE DEFINED.—In this subsection, the term 'subsidy percentage' means the number of percentage points (rounded to the nearest multiple of 5 percentage points) by which the family's adjusted total income (expressed as a percent of the applicable official poverty line) is less than 200 percent.

"(c) APPLICATIONS FOR ASSISTANCE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subsection (d), any individual who seeks assistance under this section (with respect to himself or herself or a family member) shall submit a written application, by person or mail, to the assessment agency which made the affirmative certification under part B.

"(2) BASIS FOR DETERMINATION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B) and subsection (d), eligibility for assistance under this part shall be based on 4 times the family adjusted total income during the 3 months preceding the month in which the application is filed.

"(B) EXCEPTIONS PROCESS.—The Secretary shall establish a process under which individuals who experience an unforeseen and significant change of income in a month may have eligibility for assistance under this part based on the family adjusted total income projected for the 3 months beginning with the month in which the application is filed, if the application of subparagraph (A) would otherwise create a significant hardship and unreasonably delay the provision of needed care.

"(C) TIMELINESS.—The assessment agency shall make a determination on an application for assistance under this part within 14 days after the date of submission of the application.

"(3) FORM AND CONTENTS.—An application for assistance under this section shall be in a form and manner specified by the Secretary and shall require the provision of information necessary to make the determinations described in paragraph (2).

"(4) FREQUENCY OF APPLICATIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—An application for assistance under this section may be filed at any time during the year and may be resubmitted (but not more frequently than once every 3 months) based upon a change of income or family composition.

"(B) NEED TO REAPPLY.—In order to remain eligible for assistance under this section, an individual must resubmit an application for assistance at the time of each reassessment under section 2111, but in no case less often than once every six months. The Secretary shall provide for notice by assessment agencies, at least 30 days (to the extent practicable) before the date of assistance under this section will otherwise terminate, reminding individuals of the requirement of this subparagraph.

"(5) TIMING OF ASSISTANCE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If an application for assistance under this part is filed during a month, assistance under this section shall be available for coinsurance for expenses incurred on or after the first day of the month.

"(B) WELFARE RECIPIENTS.—In the case of an individual with respect to whom an application for assistance is not required because of subsection (d), in applying subparagraph (A), the date of approval of assistance described in such subsection shall be considered the date of filing of an application for assistance under this section.

"(6) VERIFICATION.—In the case of an application for assistance under this section for individuals who have been certified under part B by an assessment agency, the agency shall provide for verification, on a sample basis or other basis, of the information supplied in those applications.

"(7) FILING OF APPLICATION DEFINED.—Except as provided in paragraph (5)(B), for purposes of this subsection, an application under this section is considered to be 'filed' on the date on which the complete application, including all documentation required to act on the application, has been filed with the appropriate assessment agency.

"(d) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN CASH ASSISTANCE RECIPIENTS.—In the case of a family that has been determined to be eligible for aid under part A or E of title IV or an individual who has been determined to be eligible for supplemental security income benefits under title XVI, the family or individual is deemed, without the need to file an application for assistance under this subsection, to have adjusted total income below 100 percent of the official poverty line applicable to a family of the size involved.

"(e) PENALTIES FOR INACCURATE INFORMATION.—

"(1) INTEREST FOR UNDERSTATEMENTS.—Each individual who knowingly understates income reported in an application for assistance under this section or otherwise makes a material misrepresentation of information in such an application shall be liable to the Federal Government for excess payments made based on such understatement or misrepresentation, and for interest on such excess payments at a rate specified by the Secretary.

"(2) PENALTIES FOR MISREPRESENTATION.—Each individual who knowingly misrepresents material information in an application for assistance under this section shall be liable to the Federal Government for $1,000 or, if greater, three times the excess payments made based on such misrepresentation.

"(f) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

"(1) ADJUSTED TOTAL INCOME DEFINED.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'adjusted total income' means—

"(i) adjusted gross income (as defined in section 62(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986), determined without the application of paragraphs (6) and (7) of such section and without the application of section 162(l) of such Code, plus

"(ii) the amount of social security benefits (described in section 86(d) of such Code) which is not includable in gross income under section 86 of such Code.

"(B) REDUCTION FOR EXTRAORDINARY MEDICAL EXPENSES.—The Secretary shall provide for the reduction of the adjusted total income for a family by extraordinary and disproportionate expenses for medical care (other than care for which benefits are provided under this title) for family members.

"(2) FAMILY ADJUSTED TOTAL INCOME.—The term 'family adjusted total income' means, with respect to a certified individual who—

"(A) is married or over 18 years of age, the sum of the adjusted total income for the individual and the individual's spouse (if any); or

"(B) is unmarried and under 19 years of age and—

"(i) is a resident of a nursing facility, the adjusted total income for the individual, or

"(ii) is not a resident of a nursing facility, the adjusted total income for the individual and for the individual's parents or guardians.

"(3) FAMILY SIZE.—In determining the family size to be applied under this section, with respect to a certified individual who—

"(A) is married or over 18 years of age, the family is considered to include the individual, the individual's spouse (if any), and any unmarried dependent child (or legal ward) of the individual or spouse; or

"(B) is unmarried and under 19 years of age and—

"(i) is a resident of a nursing facility, the family size is 1, or

"(ii) is not a resident of a nursing facility, the family is considered to include the individual, the individual's parent or parents (or legal guardian or guardian) with whom the individual resides, and any unmarried dependent children (or legal wards) of such a parent (or guardian).

"(4) OFFICIAL POVERTY LINE.—The term 'official poverty line' means, for an individual in a family, the official poverty line (as defined by the Office of Management and Budget, and revised annually in accordance with section 673(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981) applicable to a family of the size involved.

"RESOURCE PROTECTION FOR LONG-TERM NURSING FACILITY CARE

"SEC. 2132. (a) PROTECTED RESOURCE LEVEL.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—With respect to benefits under this title for a certified individual for long-term nursing facility care, subject to paragraph (2), the protected resource level is—

"(A) $30,000 in the case of an unmarried individual, or

"(B) $60,000 in the case of a married individual.

"(2) INDEXING DOLLAR AMOUNTS.—For care furnished during a calendar year after 1992, the dollar amounts specified in paragraph (1) shall be increased by the same percentage as the percentage increase in the consumer price index for all urban consumers (all items; U.S. city average) between September 1991 and the September before the calendar year involved.

"(b) DETERMINATION OF RESOURCES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this title, except as otherwise provided in this section, resources shall be computed in a manner specified by the Secretary, except that—

"(A) resources shall not include the home (including the land or family farm that appertains thereto), and

"(B) an individual's resources shall include the resources of the individual's spouse.

"(2) TREATMENT OF TRANSFERRED RESOURCES AND RESOURCES IN TRUSTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraphs (B) and (C) and paragraph (3), the Secretary shall include in an individual's resources—

"(i) resources of the individual disposed of for less than fair market value during or after the 5-year period ending on the date the individual (or the individual's spouse) was admitted to a nursing facility; and

"(ii) resources in a trust, or resources the control or disposition of which is governed by another written legal instrument or mechanism, if the individual (or any family member of the individual, as defined by the Secretary) may derive benefit from the resources and if the trust, instrument, or mechanism was designed, intended, or has the intended effect of removing the resources (and income therefrom) from otherwise being included in determining eligibility for (or amount of) benefits for long-term nursing facility care under this title and medical assistance under title XIX.

"(B) EXCEPTIONS.—Subparagraph (A)(i) shall not apply to—

"(i) a transfer described in subparagraph (B) of section 1917(c)(2);

"(ii) a transfer of resources if a satisfactory showing is made to the appropriate assessment agency (in accordance with any standards established by the Secretary) that (I) the individual intended to dispose of the resources either at fair market value or for other valuable consideration, or (II) the resources were transferred exclusively for a purpose other than to qualify for benefits under this title or title XIX; or

"(iii) the appropriate assessment agency determines (in accordance with criteria established by the Secretary) that the inclusion of the resource would work an undue hardship.

"(C) GRANDPARENT PROVISION.—Subparagraph (A)(ii) shall not apply to a resource transferred before October 1, 1989.

"(D) VALUATION.—

"(i) TRANSFERRED RESOURCES.—In the case of resources described in subparagraph (A)(i), the resources shall be valued at the difference between the fair market value at the time of disposal and the value of the compensation received in the transfer.

"(ii) TRUST.—In the case of resources described in subparagraph (A)(ii), the resources shall be valued, in accordance with standards established by the Secretary, based on the maximum benefit which the individual may derive.

"(3) TREATMENT OF QUALIFYING LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE POLICIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a qualifying long-term care insurance policy (as defined in subparagraph (C)) that provides benefits with respect to an individual, in applying this section the amount of the individual's resources shall be reduced by the resource value of the policy (as valued under subparagraph (B)) or the amounts paid out on the individual's behalf under the policy, whichever is greater.

"(B) DETERMINATION OF RESOURCE VALUE OF POLICY.—The Secretary shall establish standards for the valuation of qualifying long-term care insurance policies. Such standards shall provide for valuation based on the product of—

"(i) the number of months of benefits provided for long-term nursing facility care under the policy, and

"(ii) a reasonable valuation of such benefits on a monthly basis, which valuation may be based on the average monthly payment amount for long-term nursing facility care under this title in the State in which the nursing facility (in which the individual is a resident) is located monthly or such other measure as the Secretary identifies.

For purposes of this subparagraph, in the case of a lapsed policy the value of the policy shall be zero.

"(C) QUALIFYING LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE POLICY DEFINED.—In this paragraph, the term 'qualifying long-term care insurance policy' means a long-term care insurance policy that meets the standards specified in section 2186.

"(d) NO LIENS.—No lien may be imposed against the property of any individual on account of benefits paid or to be paid under this title except pursuant to the judgment of a court on account of benefits incorrectly paid on behalf of such individual.

"AMOUNT OF RESIDENT-SPECIFIC DEDUCTIBLE
"SEC. 2133. (a) APPLICATION OF COUNTABLE INCOME.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a certified individual who is a resident of a nursing facility in a month, the resident-specific deductible for nursing facility care for the month is the amount of the individual's countable income for the month (as computed under paragraph (2)), less any housing allowance permitted under subsection (b) and any amounts excluded from income under the operation of subsection (c).

"(2) DETERMINATION OF COUNTABLE INCOME.—For purposes of this section, except as otherwise provided in this section, countable income shall be computed in a manner specified by the Secretary.

"(b) 1-YEAR TRANSITIONAL HOUSING ALLOWANCE AND SPOUSAL HOUSING ALLOWANCE.—

"(1) TRANSITIONAL ALLOWANCE.—During the first 12 months during which a married or unmarried individual is receiving benefits for long-term nursing facility services under this title, the countable income of the individual shall be reduced by 30 percent (in order to provide an allowance to maintain the individual's housing during that period in case the individual may return home). In the case of an institutionalized spouse, in applying section 1924(d)(1), the reduction under this paragraph shall be made before the reduction described in subparagraph (A) of such section.

"(2) SPOUSAL ALLOWANCE.—During any subsequent month in which the individual's spouse is residing outside an institution, the countable income of the individual shall be reduced by 30 percent (in order to provide an allowance to maintain the spouse in community housing).

"(c) PROTECTION OF INCOME FOR PERSONAL NEEDS AND NONINSTITUTIONALIZED SPOUSES.—

"(1) RULES FOR TREATMENT OF INCOME.—Except as provided in this subsection and subsection (b)(1), the provisions of subsections (b) and (d) of section 1924 (relating to rules for treatment of income and protecting income for community spouse) shall apply under this title (to the determination of the income to be applied toward the costs of long-term nursing facility services) in the same manner as they apply under title XIX.

"(2) INCREASE IN PERSONAL NEED ALLOWANCE.—In applying section 1924(d)(1)(A) pursuant to paragraph (1), $100 and $200 (subject to adjustment under subsection (d)) shall be deemed to have been substituted for $30 and $60, respectively, in section 1902(q)(2).

"(3) CHANGE IN MINIMUM MONTHLY MAINTENANCE NEEDS ALLOWANCE.—In applying subsection (d) of such section pursuant to paragraph (1)—

"(A) there shall be no excess shelter allowance (specified in paragraph (3)(A)(i) and defined in paragraph (4) of such subsection),

"(B) the applicable percent (described in paragraph (3)(B) of such subsection) applied under paragraph (3)(A)(i) of such subsection is 200 percent, and

"(C) the cap on minimum monthly maintenance needs allowance (specified in paragraph (3)(C) of such subsection) and the court-ordered support exception (specified in paragraph (5) of such subsection) shall not apply.

"(4) TREATMENT OF INCOME FROM TRANSFERRED RESOURCES AND RESOURCES IN TRUSTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Secretary shall include, in an individual's income, income produced by a resource which is included as a resource under section 2132(b)(2)(A)(ii).

"(B) VALUATION.—In the case of a resource described in subparagraph (A), the income from the resource shall be valued, in accordance with standards of the Secretary, based on the maximum benefit which the individual may derive.

"(d) INDEXING DOLLAR AMOUNTS.—For services furnished during a calendar year after 1992, the amounts of $100 and $200 specified in subsection (c)(2) shall be increased by the same percentage as the percentage increase in the consumer price index for all urban consumers (all items; U.S. city average) between September 1991 and the September before the calendar year involved.

"PART E—FINANCING

"FEDERAL LONG-TERM CARE TRUST FUND

"SEC. 2141. (a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is hereby created on the books of the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as the 'Federal Long-Term Care Trust Fund' (in this section referred to as the 'Trust Fund'). The Trust Fund shall consist of such gifts and bequests as may be made as provided in section 201(i)(1) and amounts as may be deposited in, or appropriated to, such fund as provided in this title.

"(b) FUNDING.—There are hereby appropriated to the Trust Fund for each fiscal year, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, amounts equivalent to—

"(1) the amounts paid by States under section 202 of the Long-Term Care Family Security Act of 1992, and

"(2) such additional amounts, provided under section 201 of such Act, as may be required to carry out this title.

"(c) INCORPORATION OF SIMILAR TRUST FUND PROVISIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The provisions of subsections (b) through (e), (g), (h), and (i) of section 1817 shall apply to the Trust Fund and this title in the same manner as they apply to the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and to part A of title XVIII, respectively.

"(2) INCORPORATION OF BORROWING AUTHORITY.—Section 201(i) shall apply to the Trust Fund and this title in the same manner as it applies to the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and title II, respectively, except that under this paragraph—

"(A) the borrowing authority may be exercised prior to January 1996;

"(B) there shall be substituted for the OASDI trust fund ratio as of a month, the ratio of (i) the balance in the Trust Fund reduced by the outstanding amount of any loan (including interest thereon) theretofore made to such Trust Fund under this paragraph, as of the last day of the second month preceding the month, to (ii) the amount obtained by multiplying by 12 the total amount which (as estimated by the Secretary) will be paid from the Trust Fund during the month for which the ratio is to be determined (other than payments of interest on, or repayments of loans from another Trust Fund under this paragraph); and

"(C) in applying section 201(i)(3)(C) under this paragraph, references to 1987, 1989, and 1990, are deemed references to 1996, 1998, and 1999, respectively.

"(d) PROJECTED ANNUAL RATES OF INCREASE FOR BENEFITS.—In October of 1992 and October of every 5th year thereafter, for purposes of section 2186(g)(2), the Board of Trustees of the Trust Fund shall issue a report which specifies the Board's best estimate of the following:

"(1) The average annual percentage rate of increase projected for payment rates for community care under this title during the 20-year period beginning with the year following the year in which the report is made.

"(2) The average annual percentage rate of increase projected for payments rates for nursing facility care under this title during the 20-year period beginning with the year following the year in which the report is made.

Such estimates shall apply for purposes of part H to policies issued in the 5-year period beginning in the year after the year in which the report is issued.

"(e) ANNUAL INCREASE IN NURSING FACILITY COSTS.—In October of each year, for purposes of 7702B(b)(5)(D) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, the Board of Trustees of the Trust Fund shall issue a report which specifies the Board's best estimate of the annual percentage increase or decrease in the average per diem costs in nursing facilities during the year.

"PART F—(RESERVED)

"PART G—DEFINITIONS AND MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

"(RESERVED)

"SEC. 2161.

"COVERAGE STANDARDS

"SEC. 2162. (a) IN GENERAL.—No payment shall be made under this title for any expenses incurred—

"(1)(A) in the case of community care, for items and services which are not reasonable and necessary to assure that the health and functional capacity of an individual is maintained in the individual's noninstitutional residence, or

"(B) in the case of nursing facility care, for items and services which are not reasonable and necessary to assure that the health and functional capacity of an individual is maintained in the individual's institutional residence;

"(2) for items and services for which the individual furnished such items or services has no legal obligation to pay;

"(3) for items and services which are paid for directly or indirectly by a governmental entity (other than under this title), except in such cases as the Secretary may specify;

"(4) for items and services which are not provided in the United States;

"(5) for items and services which are required as a result of war, or of an act of war, occurring after the effective date of such individual's current coverage under this title; or

"(6)(A) where such expenses constitute charges imposed by the individual's spouse or parent, or

"(B) except pursuant to demonstration projects under section 2165(c), where such expenses constitute charges imposed by another immediate relative of the individual.

"(b) PAYMENT SECONDARY TO MEDICARE AND LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE POLICIES.—No payment may be made under this title with respect to any items or services furnished an individual—

"(1) to the extent that such individual is entitled (or would be entitled except for sections 1813 and 1833) to have payment made with respect to such items or services under title XVIII, or

"(2) to the extent that payment may be made with respect to such items or services under a long-term care insurance policy that meets the standards specified in section 2186.

"PROVIDER AGREEMENTS; INCORPORATION OF ADDITIONAL CONDITIONS OF PARTICIPATION

"SEC. 2163. (a) PROVIDER AGREEMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A community care agency or nursing facility is qualified to participate under this title and eligible for payments under this title only if it files with the Secretary an agreement that provides for the following:

"(A) LIMITATION ON CHARGES UNDER TITLE.—The agency or facility agrees—

"(i) not to charge, except as provided in paragraph (2), any individual or any other person for items or services for which such individual is entitled to have payment made under this title (or for which the individual would be so entitled if the agency or facility had complied with the procedural and other requirements under or pursuant to this title);

"(ii) not to charge any individual or any other person for items or services for which such individual is not entitled to have payment made under this title because payment for expenses incurred for such items or services may not be made by reason of section 2162(a)(1), but only if such individual was without fault in incurring such expenses; and

"(iii) to make adequate provision for return (or other disposition in accordance with regulations) of any moneys incorrectly collected from such individual or other person.

"(B) LIMITATION ON CHARGES FOR SERVICES NOT COVERED UNDER TITLE (ALL PAYOR RATE SCHEDULE).—

"(1) COMMUNITY CARE.—In the case of a community care agency, the agency agrees not to charge for community care for which payment may not be made under this title more than, and accept as payment in full, the amount determined under the schedule or mechanism established under section 2121(b).

"(ii) NURSING FACILITY CARE.—In the case of a nursing facility, the facility agrees—

"(I) not to charge for nursing facility care for which payment may not be made under this title more than, and to accept as payment in full, the payment rates established under section 2122 for that care, and

"(II) to report, on an annual basis in a manner specified by the Secretary, such information respecting the facility's costs relating to the provision of nursing facility care as the Secretary determines to be appropriate in order to carry out this title.

"(C) LIMITATION ON EMPLOYMENT.—The agency or facility agrees to notify promptly the Secretary of its employment of an individual who, at any time during the year preceding such employment, was employed in a managerial, accounting, auditing, or similar capacity (as determined by the Secretary) by an organization which serves as a carrier under this title with respect to the agency or facility.

"(D) RELEASE OF DATA.—The agency or facility agrees to release data with respect to patients of the agency or residents of the facility upon request to an assessment agency or care manager as may be necessary to allow the agency or manager to carry out its functions under this title.

"(E) ADVANCE DIRECTIVES.—The agency or facility agrees to comply with the requirements of section 1866(f) (relating to maintaining written policies and procedures respecting advance directives), as made applicable under paragraph (3), in the same manner as such requirements apply to home health agencies and skilled nursing facilities under title XVIII.

"(2) PERMISSIBLE CHARGES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A community care agency or nursing facility may charge an individual or other person—

"(i) the coinsurance amounts specified in section 2121(c) and 2122(a)(2)(A), with respect to community care and short-term nursing facility care, and

"(ii) with respect to long-term nursing facility care, the resident-specific deductible (specified in section 2133(a)(1)) which an individual is otherwise responsible for under this title.

"(B) ADDITIONAL REQUESTED SERVICES.—Where an agency or facility has furnished, at the request of an individual, items or services which are in excess of the items or services with respect to which payment may be made under this title, the agency or facility may also charge such individual or other person for such items or services but only if the charges do not exceed its customary charges (which customary charges may not exceed the rates provided for such services under this title). In order to apply the previous sentence, the Secretary shall promulgate regulations respecting the scope of items and services that are covered under this title.

"(3) INCORPORATION OF ENFORCEMENT AND OTHER PROVISIONS.—Subsections (b), (c)(1), (f), and (h) of section 1866 shall apply to agreements under this subsection in the same manner as they apply to agreements under such section and title XVIII.

"(b) STANDARDS FOR COMMUNITY CARE AGENCIES.—

"(1) USE OF STATE AGENCIES IN DETERMINING QUALIFICATIONS.—Sections 1863 and 1864(a) shall apply to community care agencies under this title in the same manner as they apply to home health agencies under title XVIII. In applying the previous sentence, any reference in such sections to section 1861(o) is deemed a reference to section 2102(e)(1).

"(2) CONDITIONS OF PARTICIPATION FOR COMMUNITY CARE AGENCIES; COMMUNITY CARE QUALITY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), the provisions of section 1891 shall apply to community care agencies in the same manner as they apply to home health agencies.

"(B) REFERENCES.—In applying subparagraph (A) with respect to community care agencies:

"(i) Any reference in section 1891 to a home health agency or to a home health aide is deemed a reference to a community care agency or to a homemaker/home health aide or individual providing personal assistance services (described in section 2102(b)(3)), respectively.

"(ii) Subject to clause (iii), any reference in such section to section 1861(m), section 1861(o) (or paragraph (3) thereof), section 1864 or 1864(a), or title XVIII is deemed a reference to section 2102(a), section 2102(e)(1) (or subparagraph (B) thereof), paragraph (1) of this subsection, or this title, respectively.

"(iii) Any reference in subsection (a)(1) of such section to 'this title' is deemed a reference to title XVIII and this title.

"(c) STANDARDS FOR NURSING FACILITIES.—

"(1) CONDITIONS OF PARTICIPATION FOR NURSING FACILITIES.—Except as provided in this subsection, the provisions of section 1919 shall apply to nursing facilities under this title in the same manner as they apply to nursing facilities under title XIX.

"(2) MODIFICATION OF ENFORCEMENT.—In applying section 1919 under paragraph (1)—

"(A) any reference in subsection (b)(4)(C)(i) of such section to a State is deemed a reference to the Secretary;

"(B) any reference in subsections (c)(1)(B)(iv), (c)(2)(A)(v), (c)(5), (e)(6), (g)(5)(A)(ii), and (i) of such section to title XVIII or XIX is deemed to include a reference to this title;

"(C) subsections (c)(2)(D) and (c)(7) of such section shall not apply;

"(D) subsection (e)(7) of such section shall be applied in a manner so that if the requirements of that subsection were not complied with in a State with respect to an individual in a nursing facility, the amount of the payment required of the State under section 204 of the Long-Term Care Family Security Act of 1992 shall be increased, under subsection (d) of that section, by the full Federal cost of nursing facility care provided to the individual under this title;

"(E) instead of applying subsection (g) of such section, the provisions of section 1819(g) and 1864 shall apply to nursing facility care under this title in the same manner as they apply to extended care services under title XVIII; and

"(F) subsection (h) of section 1819 shall be deemed to be substituted for subsection (h) of section 1919.

"APPLICATION OF CERTAIN FRAUD AND ABUSE PROVISIONS

"SEC. 2164. The following provisions shall apply to community care agencies and nursing facilities under this title in the same manner as they apply to home health agencies or skilled nursing facilities under title XVIII:

"(1) Section 1124 (relating to disclosure of ownership and related information).

"(2) Section 1126 (relating to disclosure by institutions, organizations, and agencies of owners and certain other individuals who have been convicted of certain offenses).

"(3) Sections 1128, 1128A, and 1128B (relating to exclusion of certain individuals and entities from participation in medicare and State health care programs, civil monetary penalties, and criminal penalties for acts involving medicare or State health care programs).

"DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS; WAIVER AUTHORITY

"SEC. 2165. (a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) AUTHORIZATION.—The Secretary may conduct such demonstration projects as may be appropriate to evaluate changes in the delivery and financing of community care and nursing facility care under this title. There are authorized to be appropriated from the Federal Long-Term Care Trust Fund such sums as may be necessary in order to carry out demonstration projects under this section.

"(2) WAIVER AUTHORITY.—The Secretary may waive such requirements of this title as may be necessary in order to conduct such projects.

"(3) REPORTS.—The Secretary shall report periodically to the Congress on demonstration projects conducted under this section and shall include in such reports recommendations for legislative changes in this title that may be appropriate.

"(4) LIMITATION ON MEDICAID DEMONSTRATION PROJECT AUTHORITY.—The Secretary shall not approve a demonstration project under section 1915 for community care for which benefits are provided under this title.

"(b) WAIVER OF REQUIREMENTS TO PERMIT CONTINUATION AND EXPANSION OF CERTAIN DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall waive such requirements of this title as may be necessary to permit—

"(A) continuation of demonstration projects in effect as of the date of the enactment of this title, including the social health maintenance demonstration projects referred to in section 2355 of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 (as amended by section 4207(b)(4)(B)(i) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990) and the On Lok and related frail elderly demonstration projects referred to in section 603(c) of the Social Security Amendments of 1983 or in section 9412(b) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986 (as amended by section 4744(a) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990), and

"(B) additional demonstration projects provided for under the succeeding provisions of this section.

Subparagraph (A) shall not be construed to apply to the state-wide Arizona demonstration project conducted under section 1115 to the extent such demonstration project provides for community care or nursing facility care.

"(2) EXPANSION OF DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.—Not later than 12 months after the date of the enactment of this title, the Secretary shall approve applications or protocols submitted under subsection (a) of section 2355 of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 for an additional 10 demonstration projects described in subsection (b) of that section. Any reference in such section to a project conducted as a result of the amendments made by a section of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 is deemed to include a reference to a project conducted as a result of the previous sentence.

"(c) DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS ON PAYMENT OF RELATIVES AS CAREGIVERS.—The Secretary shall provide for demonstration projects under which the exclusion of section 2162(a)(6)(B) is waived in order to demonstrate the efficacy and appropriateness of permitting adults who are fully qualified under this title to provide community care to be compensated for such care provided to relatives. Such projects shall specifically examine—

"(1) the effect on costs and provision of unpaid services of permitting payment for community care provided by such relatives,

"(2) whether the appropriate amount of payment in such circumstances should be based on a percentage of the payment amount otherwise permitted, and

"(3) whether payment should be limited to cases in which the relative has terminated (or forsakes) employment in order to care for the individual.

"(d) CASH EQUIVALENT DEMONSTRATION PROJECT.—The Secretary shall provide for a demonstration project, over a period of 3 years, under which a certified individual, instead of receiving benefits under this title, is paid periodically amounts based upon the level of impairment of the individual, but not to exceed the estimated actuarial value of benefits under this title to a certified individual with such level of impairment. The payments under the project may be used to pay for such benefits or for any other appropriate services and such payment shall be not subject to approval by any care manager.

SEC. 102. AMENDMENTS TO NURSING FACILITY REQUIREMENTS.

(a) NONDISCRIMINATION IN ADMISSIONS.—Sections 1819(c)(4) and 1919(c)(4)(A) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395i-3(c)(4), 1396r(c)(4)(A)) are each amended by inserting "admission," after "regarding".

(b) CLARIFICATION OF NO CHARGES FOR BASIC SERVICES.—

(1) Section 1819(c)(5)(A) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395i-3(c)(5)(A)) is amended—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of clause (i),

(B) by striking the period at the end of clause (ii) and inserting "; and", and

(C) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(iii) in the case of an individual who has an affirmative certification under part B of title XXI, not to charge, solicit, accept, or receive, in addition to any amount otherwise required to be paid under such title, any gift, money, donation, or other consideration as a precondition of admitting (or expediting the admission of) the individual to the facility or as a requirement for the individual's continued stay in the facility."

(2) Section 1919(c)(5)(A) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r(c)(5)(A)) is amended—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of clause (ii),

(B) by striking the period at the end of clause (iii) and inserting "; and", and

(C) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(iv) in the case of an individual who has an affirmative certification under part B of title XXI, not to charge, solicit, accept, or receive, in addition to any amount otherwise required to be paid under such title, any gift, money, donation, or other consideration as a precondition of admitting (or expediting the admission of) the individual to the facility or as a requirement for the individual's continued stay in the facility."

(c) NOTICE AT TIME OF DISCHARGE.—Sections 1819(c)(2)(B) and 1919(c)(2)(B) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395i-3(c)(2)(B), 1396r(c)(2)(B)) are each amended—

(1) in clause (i), by adding at the end the following:

"Before effecting a discharge of a resident who is a certified individual (within the meaning of section 2101(b)(4)), the facility must notify the assessment agency under title XXI of the impending discharge."; and

(2) in clause (iii), by adding at the end the following:

"Each such notice with respect to a discharge of a resident who is a certified individual (within the meaning of section 2101(b)(4)) shall include a statement that, in order for the individual to remain eligible for benefits under title XXI, a new reassessment must be conducted under section 2111."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsections (a) and (c) shall take effect on January 1, 1994, and the amendments made by subsection (b) shall take effect on January 1, 1996, without regard to whether regulations to implement such amendments are promulgated by such date.

SEC. 103. COORDINATION WITH MEDICAID.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) LIMITING FEDERAL FINANCIAL PARTICIPATION UNDER MEDICAID FOR SERVICES COVERED UNDER TITLE XXI.—Section 1903(l) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396b(l)) is amended—

(A) in the paragraph (10) inserted by section 4401(a)(1)(B) of Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, by striking all that follows "1927(g)" and inserting a semicolon;

(B) by redesignating the paragraph (10) added by section 4701(b)(2) as paragraph (11), by transferring and inserting it after the paragraph (10) inserted by section 4401(a)(1)(B) of Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, and by striking all that follows "with respect to hospitals or facilities" and inserting a semicolon;

(C) by transferring and inserting the paragraph (12) inserted by section 4752(a)(2) of Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 after paragraph (11), as redesignated by subparagraph (B), and by striking the period at the end and inserting a semicolon;

(D) by redesignating the paragraph (14) inserted by section 4752(e) of Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 as paragraph (13), by transferring and inserting it after paragraph (12), and by striking the period at the end and inserting a semicolon;

(E) by redesignating the paragraph (11) inserted by section 4801(e)(16)(A) of Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 as paragraph (14), by transferring and inserting it after paragraph (13), and by striking the period at the end and inserting "; or"; and

(F) by inserting after paragraph (14), as so redesignated, the following new paragraph:

"(15)(A) on or after the first day of the 12-month period that begins 2 years after the effective date of title XXI (as defined in section 2101(d)(1)(B)), with respect to nursing facility care (as defined in section 2104(a)); or
 "(B) on or after the first day of the 12-month period that begins 3 years after such effective date, with respect to—

"(i) services described in subsection (b)(3), (b)(7), (b)(8), (c), or (d) of section 2102,

"(ii) other services described in section 2102(b) provided to an individual entitled to benefits under title XXI unless the individual is determined to require such services for treatment of an acute illness under certification standards (established by the State) that are comparable to the certification standards used under title XVIII for coverage of home health services, or

"(iii) case management services for individuals entitled to benefits under title XXI."

(2) CLARIFICATION OF NONDUPLICATION OF MEDICAL ASSISTANCE WITH BENEFITS UNDER TITLE XXI.—Title XIX of such Act is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"NONDUPLICATION OF BENEFITS WITH TITLE XXI

"SEC. 1931. Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, a State is not required under its plan under section 1901(a) to provide medical assistance—

"(1) on or after the first day of the 12-month period that begins 2 years after the effective date of title XXI (as defined in section 2101(d)(1)(B)), for nursing facility care (as defined in section 2104(a)); or

"(2) on or after the first day of the 12-month period that begins 3 years after such effective date, for—

"(A) services described in subsection (b)(3), (b)(7), (b)(8), (c), or (d) of section 2102,

"(B) other services described in section 2102(b) provided to an individual entitled to benefits under title XXI unless the individual is determined to require such services for treatment of an acute illness under certification standards (established by the State) that are comparable to the certification standards used under title XVIII for coverage of home health services, or

"(C) case management services for individuals entitled to benefits under title XXI."

(b) CONTINUATION OF MEDICAID BENEFITS NOT COVERED UNDER PUBLIC HEALTH INSURANCE PLAN.—Nothing in this Act shall be construed as—

(1) changing the eligibility of individuals for medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act, or

(2) subject to the amendments made by subsection (a), changing the amount, duration, or scope of medical assistance required (or permitted) to be provided under such title.

(c) LIMITATION ON WAIVER AUTHORITY.—Section 1915(h) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396n(h)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(h)", and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) The Secretary shall not approve a demonstration project under this section which provides for medical assistance for care for which benefits are provided under title XXI."

SEC. 104. MISCELLANEOUS AMENDMENTS.

(a) CHANGES TO MEDICARE SKILLED NURSING FACILITY BENEFIT.—

(1) Section 1812(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395d(a)) is amended by striking "100 days" in subsections (a)(2)(A) and (b)(2) and inserting "20 days".

(2) Section 1813(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395e(a)) is amended by striking paragraph (3).

(b) TREATMENT OF HOSPICE PATIENTS.—Section 1812(d)(2)(A) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395d(d)(2)(A)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of clause (i),

(2) by striking the semicolon at the end of clause (ii) and inserting ", and", and

(3) by inserting after clause (ii) the following new clause:

"(iii) community care under title XXI";

(c) MISCELLANEOUS.—(1) Section 201(i)(1) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 401(i)(1)) is amended by striking "and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund" and inserting "the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund, and the Federal Long-Term Care Trust Fund".

(2) Section 1101(a)(1) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1301(a)(1)) is amended—

(A) by striking "and XIX" and inserting "XIX, and XXI", and

(B) by striking "title XIX" and inserting "titles XIX and XXI".

SEC. 105. EFFECTIVE DATE; WAIVER OF PAPERWORK REQUIREMENTS.

(a) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments (and provisions) of this title shall apply to community care and nursing facility care provided on or after January 1, 1994.

(b) WAIVER OF PAPERWORK REQUIREMENTS.—Chapter 35 of title 44, United States Code, and Executive Order 12291 shall not apply to information and regulations required for purposes of carrying out this title and the amendments made by this title.

TITLE II—FINANCING PROVISIONS

SEC. 201. PROGRESSIVE FINANCING OF PUBLIC PROGRAM.

The public program of long-term care insurance under title XXI of the Social Security Act shall be funded through one or more funding means in a manner that—

(1) is progressive in the aggregate,

(2) is sufficient, each year, over time, and in the aggregate, to cover the net costs of the program, and

(3) is not derived from any one age group of society.

SEC. 202. STATE MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT PAYMENT REQUIRED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of the Social Security Act, as a condition of payment to a State (as defined in subsection (e)(3)) under title V or XIX of such Act for a calendar quarter beginning during or after the first maintenance year (as defined in subsection (e)(2)), the State must provide (in a manner and at a time specified by the Secretary of Health and Human Services) for payment to the Federal Long-Term Care Trust Fund (established under section 2141 of such Act) of the sum of the amounts specified in subsections (b), (c), and (d) for the quarter.

(b) AMOUNT BASED ON MEDICAID PLAN EXPENDITURES FOR COVERED SERVICES.—

(1) FIRST MAINTENANCE YEAR.—Subject to paragraph (3), the amount specified in this subsection for a State for a quarter in the first maintenance year is $\frac{1}{4}$ of the amount by which the payments (net of Federal payments) made by a State under its State plan under title XIX of the Social Security Act for 1992 for medical assistance would have been reduced if the law (as amended by this Act and in effect during the first maintenance year) had been in effect during all of 1992, increased by the compounded sum of the increase in the medical care component of the consumer price index for all urban consumers (all items; U.S. city average, as published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor) for each year after 1992 and up to the year in which the quarter occurs.

(2) SUCCEEDING YEARS.—Subject to paragraph (3), the amount specified in this subsection for a State for a quarter in a year following the first maintenance year is $\frac{1}{4}$ of the amount by which the payments (net of Federal payments) made by a State under its State plan under title XIX of the Social Security Act for 1992 for medical assistance would have been reduced if the law (as amended by this Act and in effect during the year following the first maintenance year) had been in effect during all of 1992, increased by the compounded sum of the increase in the medical care component of the consumer price index for all urban consumers (all items; U.S. city average, as published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor) for each year after 1992 and up to the year in which the quarter occurs.

(3) ADJUSTMENT FOR CHANGES IN STATE MATCHING RATES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The amount specified in this subsection for a State for a quarter in a year shall be adjusted by the ratio of (i) the weighted average State matching rate (as defined in subparagraph (B)) that applied in 1992, to (ii) the weighted average State matching rate that the Secretary of Health and Human Services estimates would have applied in the year involved if this Act had not been enacted.

(B) WEIGHTED AVERAGE STATE MATCHING RATE DEFINED.—In subparagraph (A), the term "weighted average State matching rate" means, for a State, the average proportion, of the total payments for medical assistance and administrative costs for community care and nursing facility care under title XIX of the Social Security Act, that are not paid for by the Federal Government under section 1903(a) of such Act.

(c) SHARE OF EXCESS EXPENDITURES FOR LONG-TERM NURSING FACILITY CARE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount specified in this subsection, for a State for a quarter in a 12-month period (beginning at least 1 year after the end of the first maintenance year), is 1/4 of the product of—

(A) the amount by which—
(i) the expenditures under title XXI of the Social Security Act in the State in the previous 12-month period for long-term nursing facility care, exceeded

(ii) the projected long-term nursing facility care expenditure amount (as determined under paragraph (2)) for the State for such previous period; and

(B) the State matching percentage (as defined in paragraph (3)) applicable to the State for the quarter.

(2) PROJECTED EXPENDITURE AMOUNT DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, the "projected long-term nursing facility care expenditure amount" for a State for a 12-month period is—

(A) the amount of expenditures under title XXI of the Social Security Act for long-term nursing facility care for residents of the State for the first maintenance period (as projected by the Secretary), increased by

(B) the percentage change in the average per diem payment rate for nursing facility care in the State in the year (as determined under section 2122 of such Act) from the previous 12-month period to the 12-month period involved.

(3) STATE MATCHING PERCENTAGE DEFINED.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In paragraph (1)(B), the term "State matching percentage", for a State for a quarter in a fiscal year, is equal to 1 minus the Federal medical assistance percentage (as defined in section 1905(b) of the Social Security Act) applicable to the State for the quarter, if, in determining such Federal medical assistance percentage, the per capita income per aged person (as defined in subparagraph (B)) were substituted for per capita income.

(B) PER CAPITA INCOME PER AGED PERSON.—In subparagraph (A), the term "per capita income per aged person" means, for a State or the United States—

(i) the per capita income of the State or United States, respectively, multiplied by
(ii) the total population of the State or United States, respectively, and divided by
(iii) the population of individuals 65 years of age or older in the State or the United States, respectively.

In this subparagraph, the term "United States" means the continental United States (including Alaska) and Hawaii

(d) ADDITIONAL AMOUNT FOR FAILURE TO PERFORM REQUIRED PREADMISSION SCREEN AND RESIDENT REVIEW.—The amount specified in this subsection for a State is the full Federal cost under title XXI of the Social Security Act of nursing facility care provided to an individual with respect to whom the State has failed to comply with the preadmission screening and resident review requirements of section 1919(e)(7) of such Act (as incorporated under section 2163(c)(2)(D) of such Act).

(e) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) COMMUNITY CARE; NURSING FACILITY CARE; LONG-TERM NURSING FACILITY CARE.—The terms "community care", "nursing facility care", and "long-term nursing facility care" have the meanings given such terms in title XXI of the Social Security Act.

(2) FIRST MAINTENANCE YEAR.—The term "first maintenance year" means the calendar year beginning 2 years after the effective date of title XXI of the Social Security Act (as defined in section 2101(d)(1)(B) of such Act).

(3) STATE; UNITED STATES.—Except as provided in the last sentence of subsection (c)(3)(B), the terms "State" and "United States" have the meaning given such term for purposes of title XXI of the Social Security Act.

TITLE III—TREATMENT OF LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE

Subtitle A—Establishment of Standards for Long-Term Care Insurance Policies

SEC. 301. ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDARDS UNDER THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT.

Title XXI of the Social Security Act, as added by the previous provisions of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following new part:

"PART H—LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE STANDARDS

"PROMULGATION OF STANDARDS AND MODEL BENEFITS

"SEC. 2181. (a) APPLICATION OF STANDARDS.—

"(1) NAIC.—If, within 12 months after the date of the enactment of this title, the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (in this part referred to as the 'NAIC') promulgates model standards that incorporate the requirements of this part, such standards shall apply under section 2182.

"(2) DEFAULT.—If the NAIC does not promulgate the model standards under paragraph (1) by the deadline established in that subsection, the Secretary shall promulgate, within 12 months after such deadline, a regulation that provides standards that incorporate the requirements of this part and such standards shall apply under section 2182.

"(3) SUBSEQUENT REFERENCE TO STANDARDS.—In this part, the term 'Standards' means all standards established under this section that apply in a State under section 2182.

"(b) ITEMS INCLUDED IN STANDARDS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Standards promulgated under subsection (a) shall incorporate standards that specify the requirements of this part for long-term care insurance policies (as defined in section 2188(a)), for the approval of State regulatory programs, for the issuers of such policies, for the sale of such policies, for the contents of such policies, and for the disclosure of certain information.

"(2) SPECIFIC STANDARDS RELATING TO STATE REGULATORY PROGRAMS.—Such Standards shall include (with respect to State regulatory programs), the information to be required by such programs under section 2183(e)(2)(B) with respect to proposed premium increases for long-term care insurance policies.

"(3) SPECIFIC STANDARDS RELATING TO SALES OF POLICIES.—Such Standards shall include the following (with respect to the sale of long-term care insurance policies):

"(A) The training required in order for an sales agent to be certified under section 2184(a).

"(B) The information to be provided under section 2184(f)(1)(B).

"(C) The contents of outlines of coverage under section 2184(f)(2).

"(D) The manner of disclosure of financial arrangements under section 2184(h).

"(4) SPECIFIC STANDARDS RELATING TO ISSUERS.—Such Standards shall include the following (with respect to issuers of long-term care insurance policies):

"(A) The procedures for appeals of denied claims (under section 2185(c)(3)).

"(B) The additional information required to be reported by issuers under section 2185(e)(1), and the format for reporting of such information.

"(5) SPECIFIC STANDARDS RELATING TO POLICIES.—Such Standards shall include the following (with respect to long-term care insurance policies):

"(A) The uniform language and definitions and uniform format for outlines of coverage under section 2186(a).

"(B) The process for appeals of assessments under section 2186(f)(3).

"(C) The premium adjustment for those electing to modify inflation protection under section 2186(g)(3).

"(D) Methods for the allocation of premium elements and means of evaluating actuarial value to carry out section 2186(h)(3)(A).

"(E) The nonforfeiture protection to be provided under section 2186(i).

"(F) Limitations on underwriting restrictions under section 2186(j)(3).

"(6) SPECIFIC STANDARDS RELATING TO DISCLOSURE.—Such standard shall include the disclosure required of certain policies under section 2188(d).

"(c) MODEL BENEFITS.—In order to promote consumer understanding and to facilitate benefit and price comparison among long-term care policies, the NAIC is requested to establish models for benefits (including the specification of benefit levels and cost-sharing as well as the grouping of benefits) under long-term care insurance policies which are consistent with the requirements of section 2186(b).

"(d) CONSULTATION.—In establishing Standards and models of benefits under this section, the NAIC or Secretary shall provide for and consult with an advisory committee chosen by the NAIC or Secretary, respectively, and composed of—

"(1) a chairman (who is not a representative of issuers of long-term care insurance policies or providers of long-term care services);

"(2) 3 individuals who are representatives of issuers of long-term care insurance policies;

"(3) 3 individuals who are representatives of consumer groups;

"(4) 3 representatives who are representatives of providers of long-term care services; and

"(5) 3 other individuals who are not representatives of issuers of long-term care insurance policies or of providers of long-term care services and who have expertise in the delivery and financing of such services.

"(e) RELATION TO STATE LAW.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Standards established under this section preempt provisions of State law which conflict with such Standards, but nothing in this part shall be construed as preventing a State from applying standards that provide greater protection to policyholders of long-term care insurance policies.

"(2) GRANDPARENTING OF CURRENT POLICIES.—Except as a State may provide, such Standards shall not apply to policies issued before the date specified in section 2182(b).

"APPLICATION OF LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE STANDARDS

"SEC. 2182. (a) IN GENERAL.—No long-term care insurance policy (as defined in section 2188(a)) may be issued, sold, or offered for sale in a State on or after the date specified in subsection (b) unless—

"(1) the Secretary determines that—

"(A) the State has established a regulatory program that meets the requirements of section 2183, by the date specified in subsection (b), and

"(B) the policy has been approved by the State commissioner or superintendent of insurance under such program; or

"(2) in the case of a State that does not have a regulatory program approved under section 2183, the policy has been certified by the Secretary (in accordance with such procedures as the Secretary establishes by regulation) as meeting the Standards (insofar as they relate to the contents of a long-term care insurance policy).

For purposes of this subsection, the advertising or soliciting with respect to a long-term care insurance policy, directly or indirectly, shall be deemed the offering for sale of the policy.

"(b) DEADLINE FOR APPLICATION OF STANDARDS IN STATES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), the date specified in this subsection for a State is—

"(A) the date the State adopts the Standards, or

"(B) 1 year after the date the Standards are first established, whichever is earlier.

"(2) STATE REQUIRING LEGISLATION.—In the case of a State which the Secretary identifies, in consultation with the NAIC, as—

"(A) requiring State legislation (other than legislation appropriating funds) in order for the Standards to be applied, but

"(B) having a legislature which is not scheduled to meet in 1994 in a legislative session in which such legislation may be considered, the date specified in this subsection is the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first legislative session of the State legislature that begins on or after January 1, 1994. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of such session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.

"STANDARDS FOR APPROVAL OF STATE REGULATORY PROGRAMS

"SEC. 2183. (a) APPROVAL.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may not approve a State regulatory program for purposes of section 2182(a), unless the Secretary determines that the program—

"(A) provides for the application and enforcement of the Standards, and

"(B) complies with the requirements of—

"(i) subsection (b) (relating to enforcement),

"(ii) subsection (c) (relating to provision of toll-free telephone system),

"(iii) subsection (d) (relating to publication and public access to compliance information),

"(iv) subsection (e) (relating to a process for the approval of premiums), and

"(v) subsection (f) (relating to annual reports).

"(2) PERIODIC REVIEW OF STATE REGULATORY PROGRAMS.—The Secretary periodically shall review State regulatory programs to determine if they continue to meet the requirements for approval under paragraph (1). Before making a final determination that a State regulatory program no longer meets such requirements, the Secretary shall provide the State a hearing and an opportunity to adopt such a plan of correction as would permit the program to continue to meet such requirements. If the Secretary makes a final determination that the State regulatory program, after such a hearing and opportunity, fails to meet such requirements, the Secretary shall assume responsibility under section 2182(a)(2) with respect to certifying policies in the State and shall exercise full authority under section 2187 for persons and entities in the State.

"(b) ENFORCEMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The enforcement process under each State regulatory program—

"(A) shall be designed in a manner so as to secure compliance with the Standards within 30 days after the date of a finding of non-compliance with such Standards, and

"(B) shall provide for notice to the Secretary in cases where such compliance is not secured within such 30-day period.

"(2) PROCESS.—The enforcement process under each State regulatory program shall provide for—

"(A) procedures for individuals and entities to file written, signed complaints respecting alleged violations of the Standards;

"(B) responding on a timely basis to such complaints;

"(C) the investigation of—

"(i) those complaints which, on their face, have a substantial probability of validity, and

"(ii) such other alleged violations of the Standards as the program finds appropriate;

"(D) notice and opportunity for a hearing before executing sanctions; and

"(E) the imposition of appropriate sanctions (which include, in appropriate cases, the imposition of a civil money penalty) in the case of a person or entity determined to have violated the Standards.

"(c) TOLL-FREE TELEPHONE SYSTEM.—Each State regulatory program shall provide a toll-free telephone system which provides for—

"(1) a mechanism for the receipt and disposition of consumer complaints or inquiries regarding compliance with the requirements of this part, and

"(2) information to consumers about issuers that offer long-term health care policies in the area covered by the regulatory authority.

Such system shall provide for the recording of consumer complaints in accordance with a uniform methodology developed by the NAIC or the Secretary.

"(d) PUBLICATION AND PUBLIC ACCESS TO COMPLIANCE INFORMATION.—

"(1) PUBLICATION OF INFORMATION.—Each State regulatory program shall publish annually a summary—

"(A) by issuer, of (i) the types of long-term health care policies issued and (ii) the types of complaints filed concerning such policies, and

"(B) of the information reported by policy under section 2185(e).

"(2) ACCESS TO INFORMATION ON COMPLAINTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Each State regulatory program shall provide for consumer access to complaints filed with the State commissioner or superintendent of insurance with respect to long-term care insurance policies.

"(B) CONFIDENTIALITY.—The access provided under subparagraph (A) shall be limited to the extent required to protect the confidentiality of the identity of individual policyholders.

"(c) PROCESS FOR APPROVAL OF PREMIUMS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Each State regulatory program shall—

"(A) provide for a process for approving or disapproving proposed premium increases with respect to long-term care insurance policies, and

"(B) establish a policy for receipt and consideration of public comments before approving such a premium increase.

"(2) CONDITIONS FOR APPROVAL.—No such premium increase shall be approved (or deemed approved) unless the proposed increase is accompanied by an actuarial memorandum which—

"(A) includes a description of the assumptions which justify the increase,

"(B) contains such information as may be required under the Standards, and

"(C) is made available to the public.

"(f) ANNUAL REPORTS.—Each State regulatory program shall provide for annual reports to the Secretary on the implementation and enforcement of the Standards in the State.

"(g) INCREASE IN FUNDING FOR LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE, INFORMATION, COUNSELING, AND ASSISTANCE THROUGH STATE REGULATORY PROGRAMS.—In addition to amounts otherwise authorized to be appropriated, there are authorized to be appropriated, under section 4360(f) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, $20,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1993, 1994, and 1995, to fund grant programs under such section for the purpose of providing information, counseling, and assistance relating to long-term care benefits under this title and the procurement of adequate and appropriate long-term care insurance.

"STANDARDS RELATING TO SALES PRACTICES

"SEC. 2184. (a) CERTIFICATION OF TRAINING OF SALES AGENTS.—A person may not sell or offer for sale a long-term care insurance policy unless the person has been certified under the State regulatory program or by the Secretary as having received training with respect to such policies in accordance with the Standards.

"(b) DUTY OF GOOD FAITH AND FAIR DEALING.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Each person who is selling or offering for sale a long-term care insurance policy has the duty of good faith and fair dealing to the purchaser or potential purchaser of such a policy.

"(2) UNFAIR PRACTICES.—A person is considered to have violated paragraph (1) if the person engages in any of the following practices:

"(A) TWISTING.—Knowingly making any misleading representation or incomplete or fraudulent comparison of any long-term care insurance policy, issuer of such a policy, or the program under part A or low-income assistance under part D for the purpose of inducing, or tending to induce, any person to retain or effect a change with respect to a long-term care insurance policy.

"(B) HIGH PRESSURE TACTICS.—Employing any method of marketing having the effect of, or intending to, induce the purchase of long-term care insurance policy through undue pressure.

"(C) COLD LEAD ADVERTISING.—Making use directly or indirectly of any method of marketing which fails to disclose in a conspicuous manner that a purpose of the method of marketing is solicitation of insurance and that contact will be made by an insurance agent or insurance company.

"(D) ADDITIONAL PRACTICES.—Such sales practices as the Secretary may specify in regulations.

The NAIC shall periodically report to the Secretary on improper sales practices that should be treated (under subparagraph (D)) as violations of paragraph (1). Any additional unfair sales practices specified in regulations referred to in subparagraph (D) shall only apply to activities occurring after the date of promulgation of the regulations.

"(c) PROHIBITION OF COMPLETION OF MEDICAL HISTORIES.—A person who is selling or offering for sale a long-term care insurance policy may not complete the medical history portion of an application for any other individual (other than a relative of the person).

"(d) PROHIBITION OF SALE OR ISSUANCE TO MEDICAID BENEFICIARIES AND INDIVIDUALS RECEIVING LONG-TERM CARE NURSING BENEFITS UNDER PART A.—A person may not knowingly sell or issue a long-term care insurance policy to an individual who—

"(1) is eligible for medical assistance (other than only as a qualified medicare beneficiary) under title XIX, or

"(2) is a certified individual (as defined in section 2101(b)(4)).

"(e) PROHIBITION OF SALE OR ISSUANCE OF DUPLICATE POLICIES.—A person may not sell or issue a long-term care insurance policy—

"(1) knowing that the policy provides for coverage that duplicates coverage already provided in another long-term care insurance policy (unless the policy is intended to replace such other policy), or

"(2) for the benefit of an individual unless the individual (or a representative of the individual) provides a written statement to the effect that the coverage—

"(A) does not duplicate other coverage in effect under a long-term care insurance policy, or

"(B) will replace another long-term care insurance policy.

"(f) PROVISION OF OUTLINE OF COVERAGE AND OTHER INFORMATION.—

"(1) OUTLINE OF COVERAGE.—A person may not sell or offer for a sale a long-term care insurance policy for the benefit of an individual without providing to the individual (or a representative of the individual)—

"(A) an outline of coverage that includes the information required under paragraph (2); and

"(B) information (specified under the Standards) describing—

"(i) benefits available under this title,

"(ii) the right of individuals to turn down the policy in 3 days, and

"(iii) the right of individuals to cancel a policy, and receive a refund on premiums paid, within 30 days after the date the policy is issued.

In applying this paragraph in the case of a group long-term care insurance policy, the issuer of the policy is responsible for the provision of the outline and information to each certificate holder before the policy takes effect with respect to that certificate holder.

"(2) CONTENTS OF OUTLINE OF COVERAGE.—The outline of coverage for each long-term care insurance policy shall include (in accordance with the Standards) at least the following:

"(A) A description of the principal benefits and coverage under the policy and how such benefits and coverage compare to the range of potential benefits and coverage available under such policies.

"(B) A statement of the principal exclusions, reductions, and limitations contained in the policy.

"(C) A statement of the terms under which the policy (or certificate in the case of a group policy) may be continued in force or discontinued, the terms for continuation or conversion, and any reservation in the policy of a right to change premiums.

"(D) A statement that the outline of coverage is a summary only, not a contract of insurance, and that the policy (or master policy) contains the contractual provisions that govern.

"(E) A description of the terms, specified in 2185(a)(1), under which a policy may be returned and the premium refunded.

"(F) A statement of the percentage limit on annual premium increases that is provided under the policy pursuant to section 2186(h).

"(G) Information on the average costs for community care and nursing facility care in the State of residence and information on the relationship of the benefits provided under the policy to such national and State average costs.

"(H) Information (in graphic form) on the projected effect of inflation on the value of benefits provided under the policy during a period of at least 20 years.

"(I) Information on the relationship of the benefits under the policy to the benefits under part A of this title and on low-income assistance available under part D of this title.

"(J) Information on the resource value of the policy (as established under paragraph (3)(B) of section 2132(b) for purposes of that section).

"(g) OFFERING OF POLICY WITH MINIMUM BENEFITS.—A person may not sell or offer for sale a long-term care insurance policy to an individual unless the person has offered for sale to the individual a long-term care insurance policy that only provides the minimum benefits for long-term nursing facility care consistent with section 2186(b).

"(h) INFORMATION ON FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS WITH GROUPS.—A person may not sell or offer for sale a long-term care insurance policy with respect to a member of an organization with which the person (or the issuer of the policy) has a financial arrangement of any type unless the person discloses (in accordance with the Standards) the nature of the financial arrangement.

"(i) PENALTIES.—In addition to sanctions provided under State regulatory programs, any person who sells, offers for sale, or issues a long-term care insurance policy in violation of this section is subject to sanctions under section 2187.

"STANDARDS RELATING TO ISSUERS

"SEC. 2185. (a) FREE LOOK; REFUND OF PREMIUMS.—

"(1) RIGHT TO RETURN (FREE LOOK).—Each applicant for a long-term care insurance policy shall have the right to return the policy within 30 days of the date of its delivery (and to have the premium refunded) if, after examination of the policy, the applicant is not satisfied for any reason.

"(2) REFUND OF PREMIUMS.—If an application for a long-term care insurance policy is denied or an applicant returns a policy within 30 days of the date of its issuance pursuant to paragraph (1), the issuer shall refund to the applicant, not later than 30 days after the date of the denial or return, any premiums paid with respect to such a policy.

"(b) MAILING OF POLICY.—If an application for a long-term care insurance policy is approved, the issuer shall transmit to the applicant the policy of insurance not later than 30 days after the date of the approval.

"(c) CLAIMS DENIALS.—

"(1) INFORMATION ON DENIALS OF CLAIMS.—If a claim under a long-term care insurance policy is denied, the issuer shall, within 60 days of the date of a written request by the policyholder (or a representative of the policyholder)—

"(A) provide a written explanation to the individual of the reasons for the denial,

"(B) make available to the individual all information directly relating to such denial, and

"(C) inform the individual of the process established under paragraph (3) for the appeal of the claim denial.

"(2) LIMITATION ON BASIS FOR DENIAL.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—No claim under such a policy may be denied on the basis of a failure to disclose information at the time of delivery (and issuance for delivery) of the policy if the application for the policy failed to request such information.

"(B) TREATMENT OF INDIVIDUALS 75 YEARS OF AGE OR OLDER.—In the case of a policyholder who was 75 years of age or older at the time of delivery (and issuance for delivery) of a long-term care insurance policy, no claim under such a policy may be denied on the basis of a failure to disclose information at the time of delivery (and issuance for delivery) of the policy if the policyholder truthfully disclosed documentation obtained under subsection (g).

"(3) PROCESS FOR APPEAL OF DENIAL OF CLAIMS.—Each issuer of a long-term care insurance policy shall establish and maintain procedures (which meets the Standards) under which a policyholder will be granted an opportunity for a fair hearing by the issuer in any case where the amount in controversy is at least $500 when claims under the policy are denied, when such claims are not acted upon with reasonable promptness, or when the amount of such payment is in controversy.

"(d) LIMIT OF PERIOD OF CONTESTABILITY.—An issuer of a long-term care insurance policy may not cancel such a policy or deny a claim under the policy based on fraud or misrepresentation relating to the issuance of the policy unless notice of such fraud or misrepresentation is provided within 6 months after the date of the delivery (and issuance for delivery) of the policy.

"(e) REPORTING OF INFORMATION; ACCESS TO INFORMATION.—

"(1) REPORTING OF INFORMATION.—Each issuer of a long-term care insurance policy shall periodically (not less often than annually) report to the Commissioner or superintendent of insurance of each State in which the policy is sold, and shall make available to the Secretary, upon request, information respecting the following:

"(A) The long-term care insurance policies of the issuer that are in force.

"(B) The most recent premiums for such policies and the premiums imposed for such policies during the previous 5-year period.

"(C) The lapse rates, replacement rates, and rescission rates for policies (by agent). For purposes of this subparagraph, there shall not be included as a lapse of policy such a lapse due to the death of the policyholder.

"(D) The claims denied (as a percentage of claims submitted) for such policies. For purposes of this subparagraph, there shall not be included as a denied claim such a claim that is denied solely because of the failure to meet a deductible, waiting period, or exclusionary period.

"(E) The rate of appeal of denied claims (as a percentage of claims denied) for such policies.

"(F) The rate of reversal of denied claims on appeal (as a percentage of claim denials appealed) for such policies.

"(G) Such other information as is specified in the Standards.

Information under this paragraph shall be reported in a format specified in the Standards.

"(2) ACCESS TO INFORMATION.—Each such issuer shall make available to the Secretary and the Commissioner or superintendent of insurance of each State in which the policy is sold such additional information as the Secretary, Commissioner, or superintendent, may request.

"(f) PROVISION OF OUTLINE OF COVERAGE FOR RENEWALS.—Each issuer of a long-term care insurance policy shall provide, at the time of renewal of such a policy or, in the case of a policy issued through a group, the anniversary date of purchase of the policy an outline of coverage described in section 2184(f)(2) to each policyholder.

"(g) MEDICAL DOCUMENTATION FOR THE ELDERLY.—Each issuer of a long-term care insurance policy shall, with respect to an applicant who is 75 years of age or older, obtain one of the following before issuing the policy:

"(1) A report of a contemporaneous physical examination.

"(2) A contemporaneous assessment of functional capacity.

"(3) Copies of contemporaneous medical records.

The issuer shall maintain the information obtained in its files.

"(h) LIMITS ON COMPENSATION FOR SALE OF POLICIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—An issuer of a long-term care insurance policy may not provide a commission or other compensation to an agent or other representative for the sale of such a policy in an amount that exceeds 200 percent of the commission or other compensation paid for selling or servicing such a policy in the second or subsequent year.

"(2) COMPENSATION DEFINED.—In paragraph (1), the term 'compensation' includes pecuniary or nonpecuniary remuneration of any kind relating to the sale or renewal of the policy or certification, including deferred compensation, bonuses, gifts, prizes, awards, and finders fees.

"(i) PENALTIES.—In addition to sanctions provided under State regulatory programs, any issuer of a long-term care insurance policy that—

"(1) fails to make a refund in accordance with subsection (a),

"(2) fails to transmit a policy in accordance with subsection (b),

"(3) fails to provide, make available, or report information in accordance with subsections (c) and (e),

"(4) cancels a policy or denies a claim in violation of subsection (d),

"(5) fails to provide an outline of coverage in violation of subsection (f), or

"(6) issues a policy without obtaining certain information in violation of subsection (g), or

"(7) provides a commission or compensation in violation of subsection (h), is subject to sanctions under section 2187.

"STANDARDS RELATING TO POLICIES

"SEC. 2186. (a) USE OF STANDARD DEFINITIONS AND TERMINOLOGY AND UNIFORM FORMAT.—Each long-term care insurance policy shall, pursuant to the Standards—

"(1) use uniform language and definitions, and

"(2) use a uniform format for presenting the outline of coverage under such a policy.

"(b) LIMITING CONDITIONS ON BENEFITS; MINIMUM BENEFITS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A long-term care insurance policy may not—

"(A) condition or limit eligibility for benefits for a type of services to the need for or receipt of any other services;

"(B) condition or limit eligibility for any benefit on the medical necessity for such benefit;

"(C) condition or limit eligibility for benefits furnished by licensed providers on compliance with conditions which are in addition to those required for licensure under State law or required under this title; or

"(D) deny payment for any benefits on the basis that the individual is eligible for or otherwise entitled to benefits under part A.

"(2) COMMUNITY CARE.—If a long-term care insurance policy provides benefits for community care, the policy—

"(A) may not limit such benefits to services provided by registered nurses or licensed practical nurses;

"(B) may not require benefits for such services to be provided by a nurse or therapist that can be provided by a home health aide or other licensed or certified home care worker acting within the scope of the worker's licensure or certification;

"(C) may not limit such benefits to services provided by agencies or providers certified under title XVIII; and

"(D) shall provide benefits for—

"(i) home-based items and services described in paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 2102(b) in an individual's home,

"(ii) community-based items and services described in section 2102(c), and

"(iii) respite care and hospice respite care described in section 2102(d), furnished by qualified providers (as determined for purposes of part A).

"(3) NURSING FACILITY CARE.—

"(A) REQUIREMENT.—Each long-term care insurance policy shall provide that in the case of a policyholder who would be entitled to benefits under part A with respect to long-term nursing facility care but for the individual's failure to have been found to be financially eligible for such care under section 2132, benefits under the policy shall include either—

"(i) benefits for long-term nursing facility care of the type provided under part A, without regard to any coinsurance or resident-specific deductible established under sections 2122(a)(2) and 2133(a)(2), at a dollar level (for a day of nursing facility care) not less than 80 percent of the average cost of a day of nursing facility care in the State at the time of sale of the policy, increased for inflation consistent with subsection (g), or

"(ii) payment of a dollar amount equivalent to the amount provided under clause (i).

"(B) NO RESTRICTION ON COVERED FACILITIES.—To the extent to which a long-term care insurance policy provides benefits for nursing facility care, the policy shall provide such benefits with respect to all nursing facilities (as defined in section 2104(b)).

"(4) MINIMUM PERIOD OF COVERAGE.—Each long-term care insurance policy—

"(A) that provides benefits with respect to community care, shall provide benefits for such care over a period of at least 12 consecutive months, and

"(B) shall provide benefits for nursing facility care over a period of at least 48 consecutive months, or, beginning with the second year that begins after the effective date of this title (as defined in section 2101(d)(1)(B)), over a period of consecutive months that is not less than 12 months and that is a multiple of 12 months.

"(d) PROHIBITION OF DISCRIMINATION.—A long-term care insurance policy may not treat benefits under the policy in the case of an individual with Alzheimer's disease, with any related progressive degenerative dementia of an organic origin, or with any organic or inorganic mental illness differently from an individual having another medical condition for which benefits may be made available.

"(e) LIMITATION ON USE OF PREEXISTING CONDITION LIMITS.—

"(1) INITIAL ISSUANCE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), a long-term care insurance policy may not exclude or condition benefits based on a medical condition for which the policyholder received treatment or was otherwise diagnosed before the issuance of the policy.

"(B) 6-MONTH LIMIT.—A long-term care insurance policy may exclude benefits under a policy, during its first 6 months, based on a condition for which the policyholder received treatment or was otherwise diagnosed during the 6 months before the policy became effective.

"(C) REFERENCE TO MEDICAL DOCUMENTATION REQUIREMENT.—For provision requiring a medical documentation for individuals 75 years of age or older at the time of policy issuance, see section 2185(g).

"(2) REPLACEMENT POLICIES.—If a long-term care insurance policy replaces another long-term care insurance policy, the replacing policy shall waive any time periods (including waiting periods, elimination periods, and probationary periods) applicable to pre-existing conditions in the new policy for similar benefits to the extent such time was spent under the original policy.

"(f) USE OF FUNCTIONAL ASSESSMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Each long-term care insurance policy—

"(A) shall provide for eligibility for, and level of, benefits available under the policy based on an assessment of the policyholder's functional ability that—

"(i) is conducted by an assessment agency (as defined in section 2114(a)(1)), or by another qualified individual (as specified by the Secretary in regulations consistent with paragraph (2)), and

"(ii) uses the same assessment instrument and methodology as is used in making assessments under section 2111;

"(B) shall specify the level (or levels) of functional impairment required under such an assessment to obtain benefits under the policy; and

"(C) shall provide for the determination of such level based on the individual's inability to perform (without substantial assistance from another individual) because of physical, cognitive, or other mental impairment a number (or combination) of activities of daily living specified in section 2101(b)(1)(A)(i) and, in the case of individuals with cognitive or other mental impairment or under 6 years of age, based on a standard of comparable level of disability described in subparagraph (A)(ii) or (B) of section 2101(b)(1).

"(2) CONDUCT OF ASSESSMENT.—Such assessment may not be conducted by an individual—

"(A) who has a direct or indirect ownership or control interest in the issuer of the policy or an entity that provides services for which benefits are available under the long-term care insurance policy, or

"(B) who has a direct or indirect affiliation or relationship with such an issuer or entity if there is a financial incentive that is related to the results of the assessment determination.

"(3) APPEALS PROCESS.—Each long-term care insurance policy shall provide for an appeals process, meeting the Standards, for individuals who dispute the results of an assessment conducted under this subsection.

including any determination of eligibility, level of functional impairment, or level of benefits.

"(4) DEEMED ENTITLEMENT FOR REQUIRED NURSING FACILITY CARE BENEFITS IF AFFIRMATIVE CERTIFICATION IS ISSUED.—With respect to benefits for nursing facility care required to be covered under long-term care insurance policies, an individual covered under the policy is deemed to be eligible for such benefits if the individual has in effect an affirmative certification under section 2112.

"(g) INFLATION PROTECTION OPTION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—At the option of the policyholder at the time of sale of a long-term care insurance policy, the policy shall provide, at the time of each annual renewal, for a percentage increase (which is not less than the applicable percentage increase specified in paragraph (2)) in the dollar payment levels and any maximum payment limit on benefit coverage above the levels or limit in effect during the previous policy year. In applying this subsection, the increases shall be compounded annually and the policy may provide for rounding such an increase to the nearest multiple of $1 (in the case of dollar payment levels) or $100 (in the case of a maximum payment limit).

"(2) SPECIFICATION OF PERCENTAGE INCREASE.—For purposes of paragraph (1), with respect to policies issued each year, the applicable percentage increase specified in this paragraph—

"(A) with respect to benefits for community care is the average annual percentage rate of increase for payment rates for community care under this title projected, most recently before the date of issuance of the policy, under section 2141(d)(1) by the Board of Trustees of the Federal Long-Term Care Trust Fund, and

"(B) with respect to benefits for nursing facility care is the average annual percentage rate of increase for payments rates for nursing facility care under this title projected, most recently before the date of issuance of the policy, under section 2141(d)(2) by the Board of Trustees of the Federal Long-Term Care Trust Fund.

"(3) OPTION TO ADJUST POLICY FOR ACTUAL INFLATION.—At the option of the policyholder, at the time of each annual renewal, the policy may be modified to reflect a change in inflation projections, referred to in paragraph (2), with a premium adjustment as determined under the Standards.

"(h) SPECIFICATION OF LIMITS ON PREMIUM INCREASES; LIMIT ON PREMIUM INCREASES AFTER AGE 75; PREMIUMS FOR POLICY UPGRADES.—

"(1) SPECIFICATION OF LIMITS ON ANNUAL PREMIUM INCREASES.—Each long-term care insurance policy shall specify a limit on the percentage increase in premiums for a policy that may be made between one policy year and the subsequent policy year.

"(2) LIMIT ON PREMIUM INCREASE AFTER AGE 75.—Each long-term care insurance policy shall not provide for any increase in premiums for a policyholder who is 75 years of age or older other than an annual increase (of not more than 5 percent) at the beginning of each policy year.

"(3) CLASSIFICATION OF PREMIUMS FOR POLICY UPGRADES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a long-term care insurance policy issued to an individual who is provided an upgraded long-term care insurance policy by the same issuer, consistent with the Standards, the premiums charged with respect to such upgraded policy for those elements that are the same as those under the policy being replaced shall be consistent with the premiums that would be charged if the individual had purchased such upgraded policy at the time of issuance of the original (or previous) policy.

"(B) UPGRADED POLICY DEFINED.—In subparagraph (A), the term 'upgraded policy' means a policy that, in relation to a previously issued policy, has benefits with an anticipated actuarial value (for individuals within the same actuarial class or similar demographic characteristics) that is greater than the actuarial value of the previously issued policy.

"(1) NONFORFEITURE.—

"(1) PROTECTION.—

"(A) PROTECTION.—Each long-term care insurance policy shall provide such nonforfeiture protection as shall be included in the Standards. Such Standards shall provide no less protection than requiring that a policyholder, at the time of sale of a long-term care insurance policy, be offered the option of nonforfeiture protection described in subparagraph (B).

"(B) BASE NONFORFEITURE PROTECTION.—The nonforfeiture protection described in this subparagraph under a policy would provide that if the policy lapses after the policy has been in effect for at least 5 years, the policy will provide without payment of any additional premiums benefits equal to a percentage (specified under the Standards) of the benefits otherwise available at term, or an equivalent cash amount (as determined under the Standards).

"(2) ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDARDS.—The Standards may provide that the percentage or cash amount under paragraph (1)(B) must increase based upon the period of time in which the policy was in effect.

"(j) RENEWABILITY AND UPGRADES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—No long-term care insurance policy may be canceled or nonrenewed for any reason other than nonpayment of premium, material misrepresentation or fraud.

"(2) CONTINUATION AND CONVERSION RIGHTS FOR GROUP POLICIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Each group long-term care insurance policy shall provide covered individuals with a basis for continuation or conversion in accordance with this paragraph.

"(B) BASIS FOR CONTINUATION.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), a policy provides a basis for continuation of coverage if the policy maintains coverage under the existing group policy when such coverage would otherwise terminate or when benefits under such policy are reduced and which is subject only to the continued timely payment of a premium when due. A group policy which restricts provision of benefits and services to or contains incentives to use certain providers or facilities, may provide continuation benefits which are substantially equivalent to the benefits of the existing group policy.

"(C) BASIS FOR CONVERSION.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), a policy provides a basis for conversion of coverage if the policy entitles each individual—

"(i) whose coverage under the group policy would otherwise be terminated for any reason or whose benefits under the group policy would otherwise be reduced, and

"(ii) who has been continuously insured under the policy (or group policy which was replaced) for at least 6 months before the date of the termination or reduction, to issuance of a policy providing benefits identical to, substantially equivalent to, or in excess of, those of the policy being terminated (or the benefits being reduced), without evidence of insurability.

"(D) GROUP REPLACEMENT OF POLICIES.—If a group long-term care insurance policy is replaced by another long-term care insurance policy purchased by the same policyholder, the succeeding issuer shall offer coverage to all individuals covered under the old group policy on its date of termination. Coverage under the new group policy shall not result in any exclusion for preexisting conditions that would have been covered under the old group policy being replaced.

"(3) UPGRADES FOR CURRENT POLICIES.—If an issuer of a long-term care insurance policy continues to issue such a policy after the effective date specified under section 2182(b), the issuer shall permit each policyholder of such a policy as of such date to purchase a long-term care insurance policy that meets all the applicable Standards. In offering such a policy, the issuer may impose additional underwriting restrictions only for benefits not held under the previously issued policy, in accordance with the Standards.

"SECRETARIAL ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY

"SEC. 2187. (a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall exercise authority under this section—

"(1) in the case of a State which does not have a regulatory program approved under section 2183,

"(2) in the case of a State which has such an approved program, to the extent specified by the Secretary (under a look-behind program), to determine whether or not individual long-term health care policies in the State have failed to comply with the applicable requirements of this part and whether persons or entities are otherwise in compliance with the requirements of this part, and

"(3) in carrying out sections 2184(i) and 2185(i) (relating to penalties).

"(b) COMPLAINTS AND INVESTIGATIONS.—The Secretary shall establish procedures—

"(1) for individuals and entities to file written, signed complaints respecting alleged violations of the requirements of this part,

"(2) for responding on a timely basis to such complaints, and

"(3) for the investigation of—

"(A) those complaints which, on their face, have a substantial probability of validity, and

"(B) such other alleged violations of the requirements of this part as the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

In conducting investigations under this section, agents of the Secretary shall have reasonable access to examine evidence of any person or entity being investigated.

"(c) HEARINGS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Before imposing an order described in subsection (d) against a person or entity under this section for a violation of the requirements of this part, the Secretary shall provide the person or entity with notice and, upon request made within a reasonable time (of not less than 30 days, as established by the Secretary by regulation) of the date of the notice, a hearing respecting the violation.

"(2) CONDUCT OF HEARING.—Any hearing so requested shall be conducted before an administrative law judge under section 201. If no hearing is so requested, the Secretary's imposition of the order shall constitute a final and unappealable order.

"(3) AUTHORITY IN HEARINGS.—In conducting hearings under this subsection—

"(A) agents of the Secretary and administrative law judges shall have reasonable access to examine evidence of any person or entity being investigated, and

"(B) administrative law judges, may, if necessary, compel by subpoena the attendance of witnesses and the production of evidence at any designated place or hearing.

In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpoena lawfully issued under this paragraph and upon application of the Secretary, an appropriate district court of the United States may issue an order requiring compliance with such subpoena and any failure to obey such order may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

"(4) ISSUANCE OF ORDERS.—If the administrative law judge determines, upon the preponderance of the evidence received, that a person or entity named in the complaint has violated the requirements of this part, the administrative law judge shall state the findings of fact and issue and cause to be served on such person or entity an order described in subsection (d).

"(d) CEASE AND DESIST ORDER WITH CIVIL MONEY PENALTY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the succeeding provisions of this subsection, the order under this subsection—

"(A) shall require the person or entity—

"(i) to cease and desist from such violations, and

"(ii) to pay a civil penalty in an amount not to exceed $25,000 for each such violation; and

"(B) may require the person or entity to take such other remedial action as is appropriate.

The provisions of section 1128A (other than the first sentence of subsection (a) and other than subsection (b)) shall apply to a civil money penalty under this subparagraph in the same manner as such provisions apply to a penalty or proceeding under section 1128A(a).

"(2) CORRECTIONS WITHIN 30 DAYS.—No order shall be imposed under this subsection by reason of any violation if the person or entity establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary that—

"(A) such violation was due to reasonable cause and was not intentional and was not due to willful neglect, and

"(B) such violation is corrected within the 30-day period beginning on the earliest date the person or entity knew, or exercising reasonable diligence could have known, that such a violation was occurring.

"(3) WAIVER BY SECRETARY.—In the case of a violation which is due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect, the Secretary may waive part or all of the civil money penalty imposed by paragraph (1)(A)(ii) to the extent that payment of such penalty would be grossly excessive relative to the violation involved and to the need for deterrence of violations.

"(4) ADMINISTRATIVE APPELLATE REVIEW.—The decision and order of an administrative law judge shall become the final agency decision and order of the Secretary unless, within 30 days, the Secretary modifies or vacates the decision and order, in which case the decision and order of the Secretary shall become a final order under this subsection.

"(5) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—A person or entity adversely affected by a final order issued under this subsection may, within 45 days after the date the final order is issued, file a petition in the Court of Appeals for the appropriate circuit for review of the order.

"(6) ENFORCEMENT OF ORDERS.—If a person or entity fails to comply with a final order issued under this subsection against the person or entity after opportunity for judicial review under paragraph (5), the Secretary shall file a suit to seek compliance with the order in any appropriate district court of the United States. In any such suit, the validity and appropriateness of the final order shall not be subject to review.

"(7) USE OF AMOUNTS COLLECTED.—Civil money penalties collected under this subsection shall be credited to the Federal Long-Term Care Trust Fund.

"(e) ESTABLISHMENT OF TOLL-FREE TELEPHONE HOTLINE.—In the case of a State without a regulatory program approved under section 2183(a), the Secretary shall provide for the establishment of the toll-free telephone information and complaint system described in section 2183(c) in carrying out this section in the State.

"LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE POLICY DEFINED

"SEC. 2188. (a) IN GENERAL.—In this part, except as otherwise provided in this section, the term 'long-term care insurance policy' means any insurance policy, certificate, or rider advertised, marketed, offered, or designed to provide coverage for each covered individual on an expense incurred, indemnity, prepaid, or other basis, for one or more diagnostic, preventive, therapeutic, rehabilitative, maintenance or personal care services, provided in a setting other than an acute care unit of a hospital. Such term includes a group or individual annuity or life insurance policy or rider which provides directly (or which supplements) long-term care insurance described in the previous sentence.

"(b) POLICIES EXCLUDED.—Except as provided in subsections (c) and (d), in this part the term 'long-term care insurance policy' does not include any medicare supplemental policy (as defined in section 1882(g)) and any insurance which is offered primarily to provide—

"(1) basic hospital expense coverage, basic medical-surgical expense coverage, hospital confinement indemnity coverage, or major medical expense coverage,

"(2) disability income or related asset-protection coverage,

"(3) accident only coverage,

"(4) specified disease or specified accident coverage, or

"(5) limited benefit health coverage.

"(c) INCLUSION OF POLICIES MARKETED AS LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE.—In this part, the term 'long-term care insurance policy' also includes any product which is advertised, marketed, or offered as long-term care insurance.

"(d) DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS FOR CERTAIN DISABILITY INCOME POLICIES AND LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In this part, the term 'long-term care insurance policy' includes—

"(A) a policy described in subsection (b)(2) under which the eligibility or amount of benefits are based on an assessment of functional ability (based on activities of daily living or otherwise) and the amount of benefits is paid only a per diem basis, or

"(B) a life insurance policy described in paragraph (3), if the disclosure requirements of paragraph (2) are not met.

"(2) DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS.—The disclosure requirements of this paragraph for a policy are that—

"(A) the policy discloses (in a form and manner specified in the Standards) the fact that the policy is not a long-term care insurance policy;

"(B) the policy outlines how the benefits in the policy differ from the benefits required to be provided under the Standards of a long-term care insurance policy and the benefits provided under part A; and

"(C) in the case of a life-insurance policy described in subsection (c), at the time of policy delivery there is provided to the purchaser and the beneficiary a policy summary that includes—

"(i) an explanation of how the long-term care benefits interact with other components of the policy (including deductions from death benefits);

"(ii) a description of the amount and length of benefits and the guaranteed lifetime benefits (if any) for each covered individual; and

"(iii) any exclusions, reductions, and limitations on benefits of long-term care.

"(3) CERTAIN LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES.—A life insurance policy described in this paragraph is one—

"(A) which accelerates the death benefit specifically for—

"(i) one or more of the qualifying events of terminal illness,

"(ii) medical conditions requiring extraordinary medical intervention, or

"(iii) permanent institutional confinement;

"(B) which provides the option of a lump-sum payment for those benefits; or

"(C) which provides benefits based on the use of nursing facility care."

SEC. 302. ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDARDS UNDER THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201 et seq.) is amended—

(1) by redesignating title XXVII as title XXVIII;

(2) by redesignating sections 2701 through 2714 as sections 2801 through 2814, respectively; and

(3) by inserting after title XXVI the following new title:

"TITLE XXVII—LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE STANDARDS

"PROMULGATION OF STANDARDS AND MODEL BENEFITS

"SEC. 2701. (a) APPLICATION OF STANDARDS.—

"(1) NAIC.—If, within 12 months after the date of the enactment of this title, the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (in this title referred to as the 'NAIC') promulgates model standards that incorporate the requirements of this title, such standards shall apply under section 2702.

"(2) DEFAULT.—If the NAIC does not promulgate the model standards under paragraph (1) by the deadline established in that subsection, the Secretary shall promulgate, within 12 months after such deadline, a regulation that provides standards that incorporate the requirements of this title and such standards shall apply under section 2702.

"(3) SUBSEQUENT REFERENCE TO STANDARDS.—In this title, the term 'Standards' means all standards established under this section that apply in a State under section 2702.

"(b) ITEMS INCLUDED IN STANDARDS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Standards promulgated under subsection (a) shall incorporate standards that specify the requirements of this title for long-term care insurance policies (as defined in section 2708(a)), for the approval of State regulatory programs, for the issuers of such policies, for the sale of such policies, for the contents of such policies, and for the disclosure of certain information.

"(2) SPECIFIC STANDARDS RELATING TO STATE REGULATORY PROGRAMS.—Such Standards shall include (with respect to State regulatory programs), the information to be required by such programs under section 2703(e)(2)(B) with respect to proposed premium increases for long-term care insurance policies.

"(3) SPECIFIC STANDARDS RELATING TO SALES OF POLICIES.—Such Standards shall include the following (with respect to the sale of long-term care insurance policies):

"(A) The training required in order for a sales agent to be certified under section 2704(a).

"(B) The information to be provided under section 2704(f)(1)(B).

"(C) The contents of outlines of coverage under section 2704(f)(2).

"(D) The manner of disclosure of financial arrangements under section 2704(h).

"(4) SPECIFIC STANDARDS RELATING TO ISSUERS.—Such Standards shall include the following (with respect to issuers of long-term care insurance policies):

"(A) The procedures for appeals of denied claims (under section 2705(c)(3)).

"(B) The additional information required to be reported by issuers under section 2705(e)(1), and the format for reporting of such information.

"(5) SPECIFIC STANDARDS RELATING TO POLICIES.—Such Standards shall include the following (with respect to long-term care insurance policies):

"(A) The uniform language and definitions and uniform format for outlines of coverage under section 2706(a).

"(B) The process for appeals of assessments under section 2706(f)(3).

"(C) The premium adjustment for those electing to modify inflation protection under section 2706(g)(3).

"(D) Methods for the allocation of premium elements and means of evaluating actuarial value to carry out section 2706(h)(3)(A).

"(E) The nonforfeiture protection to be provided under section 2706(i).

"(F) Limitations on underwriting restrictions under section 2706(j)(3).

"(6) SPECIFIC STANDARDS RELATING TO DISCLOSURE.—Such standard shall include the disclosure required of certain policies under section 2708(d).

"(c) MODEL BENEFITS.—In order to promote consumer understanding and to facilitate benefit and price comparison among long-term care policies, the NAIC is requested to establish models for benefits (including the specification of benefit levels and cost-sharing as well as the grouping of benefits) under long-term care insurance policies which are consistent with the requirements of section 2706(b).

"(d) CONSULTATION.—In establishing Standards and models of benefits under this section, the NAIC or Secretary shall provide for and consult with an advisory committee chosen by the NAIC or Secretary, respectively, and composed of—

"(1) a chairman (who is not a representative of issuers of long-term care insurance policies or providers of long-term care services);

"(2) 3 individuals who are representatives of issuers of long-term care insurance policies;

"(3) 3 individuals who are representatives of consumer groups;

"(4) 3 representatives who are representatives of providers of long-term care services; and

"(5) 3 other individuals who are not representatives of issuers of long-term care insurance policies or of providers of long-term care services and who have expertise in the delivery and financing of such services.

"(e) RELATION TO STATE LAW.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Standards established under this section preempt provisions of State law which conflict with such Standards, but nothing in this title shall be construed as preventing a State from applying standards that provide greater protection to policyholders of long-term care insurance policies.

"(2) GRANDPARENTING OF CURRENT POLICIES.—Except as a State may provide, such Standards shall not apply to policies issued before the date specified in section 2702(b).

"APPLICATION OF LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE STANDARDS

"SEC. 2702. (a) IN GENERAL.—No long-term care insurance policy (as defined in section 2708(a)) may be issued, sold, or offered for sale in a State on or after the date specified in subsection (b) unless—

"(1) the Secretary determines that—

"(A) the State has established a regulatory program that meets the requirements of section 2703, by the date specified in subsection (b), and

"(B) the policy has been approved by the State commissioner or superintendent of insurance under such program; or

"(2) in the case of a State that does not have a regulatory program approved under section 2703, the policy has been certified by the Secretary (in accordance with such procedures as the Secretary establishes by regulation) as meeting the Standards (insofar as they relate to the contents of a long-term care insurance policy).

For purposes of this subsection, the advertising or soliciting with respect to a long-term care insurance policy, directly or indirectly, shall be deemed the offering for sale of the policy.

"(b) DEADLINE FOR APPLICATION OF STANDARDS IN STATES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), the date specified in this subsection for a State is—

"(A) the date the State adopts the Standards, or

"(B) 1 year after the date the Standards are first established, whichever is earlier.

"(2) STATE REQUIRING LEGISLATION.—In the case of a State which the Secretary identifies, in consultation with the NAIC, as—

"(A) requiring State legislation (other than legislation appropriating funds) in order for the Standards to be applied, but

"(B) having a legislature which is not scheduled to meet in 1994 in a legislative session in which such legislation may be considered, the date specified in this subsection is the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first legislative session of the State legislature that begins on or after January 1, 1994. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of such session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.

"STANDARDS FOR APPROVAL OF STATE REGULATORY PROGRAMS

"SEC. 2703. (a) APPROVAL.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may not approve a State regulatory program for purposes of section 2702(a), unless the Secretary determines that the program—

"(A) provides for the application and enforcement of the Standards, and

"(B) complies with the requirements of—

"(i) subsection (b) (relating to enforcement),

"(ii) subsection (c) (relating to provision of toll-free telephone system),

"(iii) subsection (d) (relating to publication and public access to compliance information),

"(iv) subsection (e) (relating to a process for the approval of premiums), and

"(v) subsection (f) (relating to annual reports).

"(2) PERIODIC REVIEW OF STATE REGULATORY PROGRAMS.—The Secretary periodically shall review State regulatory programs to determine if they continue to meet the requirements for approval under paragraph (1). Before making a final determination that a State regulatory program no longer meets such requirements, the Secretary shall provide the State a hearing and an opportunity to adopt such a plan of correction as would permit the program to continue to meet such requirements. If the Secretary makes a final determination that the State regulatory program, after such a hearing and opportunity, fails to meet such requirements, the Secretary shall assume responsibility under section 2702(a)(2) with respect to certifying policies in the State and shall exercise full authority under section 2707 for persons and entities in the State.

"(b) ENFORCEMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The enforcement process under each State regulatory program—

"(A) shall be designed in a manner so as to secure compliance with the Standards within 30 days after the date of a finding of non-compliance with such Standards, and

"(B) shall provide for notice to the Secretary in cases where such compliance is not secured within such 30-day period.

"(2) PROCESS.—The enforcement process under each State regulatory program shall provide for—

"(A) procedures for individuals and entities to file written, signed complaints respecting alleged violations of the Standards;

"(B) responding on a timely basis to such complaints;

"(C) the investigation of—

"(i) those complaints which, on their face, have a substantial probability of validity, and

"(ii) such other alleged violations of the Standards as the program finds appropriate;

"(D) notice and opportunity for a hearing before executing sanctions; and

"(E) the imposition of appropriate sanctions (which include, in appropriate cases, the imposition of a civil money penalty) in the case of a person or entity determined to have violated the Standards.

"(c) TOLL-FREE TELEPHONE SYSTEM.—Each State regulatory program shall provide a toll-free telephone system which provides for—

"(1) a mechanism for the receipt and disposition of consumer complaints or inquiries regarding compliance with the requirements of this title, and

"(2) information to consumers about issuers that offer long-term health care policies in the area covered by the regulatory authority.

Such system shall provide for the recording of consumer complaints in accordance with a uniform methodology developed by the NAIC or the Secretary.

"(d) PUBLICATION AND PUBLIC ACCESS TO COMPLIANCE INFORMATION.—

"(1) PUBLICATION OF INFORMATION.—Each State regulatory program shall publish annually a summary—

"(A) by issuer, of (i) the types of long-term health care policies issued and (ii) the types of complaints filed concerning such policies, and

"(B) of the information reported by policy under section 2705(e).

"(2) ACCESS TO INFORMATION ON COMPLAINTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Each State regulatory program shall provide for consumer access to complaints filed with the State commissioner or superintendent of insurance with respect to long-term care insurance policies.

"(B) CONFIDENTIALITY.—The access provided under subparagraph (A) shall be limited to the extent required to protect the confidentiality of the identity of individual policyholders.

"(e) PROCESS FOR APPROVAL OF PREMIUMS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Each State regulatory program shall—

"(A) provide for a process for approving or disapproving proposed premium increases with respect to long-term care insurance policies, and

"(B) establish a policy for receipt and consideration of public comments before approving such a premium increase.

"(2) CONDITIONS FOR APPROVAL.—No such premium increase shall be approved (or deemed approved) unless the proposed increase is accompanied by an actuarial memorandum which—

"(A) includes a description of the assumptions which justify the increase,

"(B) contains such information as may be required under the Standards, and

"(C) is made available to the public.

"(f) ANNUAL REPORTS.—Each State regulatory program shall provide for annual reports to the Secretary on the implementation and enforcement of the Standards in the State.

"(g) INCREASE IN FUNDING FOR LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE, INFORMATION, COUNSELING, AND ASSISTANCE THROUGH STATE REGULATORY PROGRAMS.—In addition to amounts otherwise authorized to be appropriated, there are authorized to be appropriated, under section 4360(f) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, $20,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1993, 1994, and 1995, to fund grant programs under such section for the purpose of providing information, counseling, and assistance relating to long-term care benefits under title XXI of the Social Security Act and the procurement of adequate and appropriate long-term care insurance.

"STANDARDS RELATING TO SALES PRACTICES

"SEC. 2704. (a) CERTIFICATION OF TRAINING OF SALES AGENTS.—A person may not sell or offer for sale a long-term care insurance policy unless the person has been certified under the State regulatory program or by the Secretary as having received training with respect to such policies in accordance with the Standards.

"(b) DUTY OF GOOD FAITH AND FAIR DEALING.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Each person who is selling or offering for sale a long-term care insurance policy has the duty of good faith and fair dealing to the purchaser or potential purchaser of such a policy.

"(2) UNFAIR PRACTICES.—A person is considered to have violated paragraph (1) if the person engages in any of the following practices:

"(A) TWISTING.—Knowingly making any misleading representation or incomplete or fraudulent comparison of any long-term care insurance policy, issuer of such a policy, or the program under part A of title XXI of the Social Security Act or low-income assistance under part D of such title for the purpose of inducing, or tending to induce, any person to retain or effect a change with respect to a long-term care insurance policy.

"(B) HIGH PRESSURE TACTICS.—Employing any method of marketing having the effect of, or intending to, induce the purchase of long-term care insurance policy through undue pressure.

"(C) COLD LEAD ADVERTISING.—Making use directly or indirectly of any method of marketing which fails to disclose in a conspicuous manner that a purpose of the method of marketing is solicitation of insurance and that contact will be made by an insurance agent or insurance company.

"(D) ADDITIONAL PRACTICES.—Such sales practices as the Secretary may specify in regulations.

The NAIC shall periodically report to the Secretary on improper sales practices that should be treated (under subparagraph (D)) as violations of paragraph (1). Any additional unfair sales practices specified in regulations referred to in subparagraph (D) shall only apply to activities occurring after the date of promulgation of the regulations.

"(c) PROHIBITION OF COMPLETION OF MEDICAL HISTORIES.—A person who is selling or offering for sale a long-term care insurance policy may not complete the medical history portion of an application for any other individual (other than a relative of the person).

"(d) PROHIBITION OF SALE OR ISSUANCE TO MEDICAID BENEFICIARIES AND INDIVIDUALS RECEIVING LONG-TERM CARE NURSING BENEFITS UNDER PART A.—A person may not knowingly sell or issue a long-term care insurance policy to an individual who—

"(1) is eligible for medical assistance (other than only as a qualified medicare beneficiary) under title XIX, or

"(2) is a certified individual (as defined in section 2101(b)(4) of the Social Security Act).

"(e) PROHIBITION OF SALE OR ISSUANCE OF DUPLICATE POLICIES.—A person may not sell or issue a long-term care insurance policy—

"(1) knowing that the policy provides for coverage that duplicates coverage already provided in another long-term care insurance policy (unless the policy is intended to replace such other policy), or

"(2) for the benefit of an individual unless the individual (or a representative of the individual) provides a written statement to the effect that the coverage—

"(A) does not duplicate other coverage in effect under a long-term care insurance policy, or

"(B) will replace another long-term care insurance policy.

"(f) PROVISION OF OUTLINE OF COVERAGE AND OTHER INFORMATION.—

"(1) OUTLINE OF COVERAGE.—A person may not sell or offer for sale a long-term care insurance policy for the benefit of an individual without providing to the individual (or a representative of the individual)—

"(A) an outline of coverage that includes the information required under paragraph (2); and

"(B) information (specified under the Standards) describing—

"(i) benefits available under title XXI of the Social Security Act,

"(ii) the right of individuals to turn down the policy in 3 days, and

"(iii) the right of individuals to cancel a policy, and receive a refund on premiums paid, within 30 days after the date the policy is issued.

In applying this paragraph in the case of a group long-term care insurance policy, the issuer of the policy is responsible for the provision of the outline and information to each certificate holder before the policy takes effect with respect to that certificate holder.

"(2) CONTENTS OF OUTLINE OF COVERAGE.—The outline of coverage for each long-term care insurance policy shall include (in accordance with the Standards) at least the following:

"(A) A description of the principal benefits and coverage under the policy and how such benefits and coverage compare to the range of potential benefits and coverage available under such policies.

"(B) A statement of the principal exclusions, reductions, and limitations contained in the policy.

"(C) A statement of the terms under which the policy (or certificate in the case of a group policy) may be continued in force or discontinued, the terms for continuation or conversion, and any reservation in the policy of a right to change premiums.

"(D) A statement that the outline of coverage is a summary only, not a contract of insurance, and that the policy (or master policy) contains the contractual provisions that govern.

"(E) A description of the terms, specified in 2705(a)(1), under which a policy may be returned and the premium refunded.

"(F) A statement of the percentage limit on annual premium increases that is provided under the policy pursuant to section 2706(h).

"(G) Information on the average costs for community care and nursing facility care in the State of residence and information on the relationship of the benefits provided under the policy to such national and State average costs.

"(H) Information (in graphic form) on the projected effect of inflation on the value of benefits provided under the policy during a period of at least 20 years.

"(I) Information on the relationship of the benefits under the policy to the benefits under part A of title XXI of the Social Security Act and on low-income assistance available under part D of such title.

"(J) Information on the resource value of the policy (as established under paragraph (3)(B) of section 2132(b) of the Social Security Act for purposes of that section).

"(g) OFFERING OF POLICY WITH MINIMUM BENEFITS.—A person may not sell or offer for sale a long-term care insurance policy to an individual unless the person has offered for sale to the individual a long-term care insurance policy that only provides the minimum benefits for long-term nursing facility care consistent with section 2706(b).

"(h) INFORMATION ON FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS WITH GROUPS.—A person may not sell or offer for sale a long-term care insurance policy with respect to a member of an organization with which the person (or the issuer of the policy) has a financial arrangement of any type unless the person discloses (in accordance with the Standards) the nature of the financial arrangement.

"(i) PENALTIES.—In addition to sanctions provided under State regulatory programs, any person who sells, offers for sale, or issues a long-term care insurance policy in violation of this section is subject to sanctions under section 2707.

"STANDARDS RELATING TO ISSUERS

"SEC. 2705. (a) FREE LOOK; REFUND OF PREMIUMS—

"(1) RIGHT TO RETURN (FREE LOOK).—Each applicant for a long-term care insurance policy shall have the right to return the policy within 30 days of the date of its delivery (and to have the premium refunded) if, after examination of the policy, the applicant is not satisfied for any reason.

"(2) REFUND OF PREMIUMS.—If an application for a long-term care insurance policy is denied or an applicant returns a policy within 30 days of the date of its issuance pursuant to paragraph (1), the issuer shall refund to the applicant, not later than 30 days after the date of the denial or return, any premiums paid with respect to such a policy.

"(b) MAILING OF POLICY.—If an application for a long-term care insurance policy is approved, the issuer shall transmit to the applicant the policy of insurance not later than 30 days after the date of the approval.

"(c) CLAIMS DENIALS.—

"(1) INFORMATION ON DENIALS OF CLAIMS.—If a claim under a long-term care insurance policy is denied, the issuer shall, within 60 days of the date of a written request by the policyholder (or a representative of the policyholder)—

"(A) provide a written explanation to the individual of the reasons for the denial,

"(B) make available to the individual all information directly relating to such denial, and

"(C) inform the individual of the process established under paragraph (3) for the appeal of the claim denial.

"(2) LIMITATION ON BASIS FOR DENIAL.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—No claim under such a policy may be denied on the basis of a failure to disclose information at the time of delivery (and issuance for delivery) of the policy if the application for the policy failed to request such information.

"(B) TREATMENT OF INDIVIDUALS 75 YEARS OF AGE OR OLDER.—In the case of a policyholder who was 75 years of age or older at the time of delivery (and issuance for delivery) of a long-term care insurance policy, no claim under such a policy may be denied on the basis of a failure to disclose information at the time of delivery (and issuance for delivery) of the policy if the policyholder truthfully disclosed documentation obtained under subsection (g).

"(3) PROCESS FOR APPEAL OF DENIAL OF CLAIMS.—Each issuer of a long-term care insurance policy shall establish and maintain procedures (which meets the Standards) under which a policyholder will be granted an opportunity for a fair hearing by the issuer in any case where the amount in controversy is at least $500 when claims under the policy are denied, when such claims are not acted upon with reasonable promptness, or when the amount of such payment is in controversy.

"(d) LIMIT OF PERIOD OF CONTESTABILITY.—An issuer of a long-term care insurance policy may not cancel such a policy or deny a claim under the policy based on fraud or misrepresentation relating to the issuance of the policy unless notice of such fraud or misrepresentation is provided within 6 months after the date of the delivery (and issuance for delivery) of the policy.

"(e) REPORTING OF INFORMATION; ACCESS TO INFORMATION.—

"(1) REPORTING OF INFORMATION.—Each issuer of a long-term care insurance policy shall periodically (not less often than annually) report to the Commissioner or superintendent of insurance of each State in which the policy is sold, and shall make available to the Secretary, upon request, information respecting the following:

"(A) The long-term care insurance policies of the issuer that are in force.

"(B) The most recent premiums for such policies and the premiums imposed for such policies during the previous 5-year period.

"(C) The lapse rates, replacement rates, and rescission rates for policies (by agent). For purposes of this subparagraph, there shall not be included as a lapse of policy such a lapse due to the death of the policyholder.

"(D) The claims denied (as a percentage of claims submitted) for such policies. For purposes of this subparagraph, there shall not be included as a denied claim such a claim that is denied solely because of the failure to meet a deductible, waiting period, or exclusionary period.

"(E) The rate of appeal of denied claims (as a percentage of claims denied) for such policies.

"(F) The rate of reversal of denied claims on appeal (as a percentage of claim denials appealed) for such policies.

"(G) Such other information as is specified in the Standards.

Information under this paragraph shall be reported in a format specified in the Standards.

"(2) ACCESS TO INFORMATION.—Each such issuer shall make available to the Secretary and the Commissioner or superintendent of insurance of each State in which the policy is sold such additional information as the Secretary, Commissioner, or superintendent, may request.

"(f) PROVISION OF OUTLINE OF COVERAGE FOR RENEWALS.—Each issuer of a long-term care insurance policy shall provide, at the time of renewal of such a policy or, in the case of a policy issued through a group, the anniversary date of purchase of the policy an outline of coverage described in section 2704(f)(2) to each policyholder.

"(g) MEDICAL DOCUMENTATION FOR THE ELDERLY.—Each issuer of a long-term care insurance policy shall, with respect to an applicant who is 75 years of age or older, obtain one of the following before issuing the policy:

"(1) A report of a contemporaneous physical examination.

"(2) A contemporaneous assessment of functional capacity.

"(3) Copies of contemporaneous medical records.

The issuer shall maintain the information obtained in its files.

"(h) LIMITS ON COMPENSATION FOR SALE OF POLICIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—An issuer of a long-term care insurance policy may not provide a commission or other compensation to an agent or other representative for the sale of such a policy in an amount that exceeds 200 percent of the commission or other compensation paid for selling or servicing such a policy in the second or subsequent year.

"(2) COMPENSATION DEFINED.—In paragraph (1), the term 'compensation' includes pecuniary or nonpecuniary remuneration of any kind relating to the sale or renewal of the policy or certification, including deferred compensation, bonuses, gifts, prizes, awards, and finders fees.

"(1) PENALTIES.—In addition to sanctions provided under State regulatory programs, any issuer of a long-term care insurance policy that—

"(1) fails to make a refund in accordance with subsection (a),

"(2) fails to transmit a policy in accordance with subsection (b),

"(3) fails to provide, make available, or report information in accordance with subsections (c) and (e),

"(4) cancels a policy or denies a claim in violation of subsection (d),

"(5) fails to provide an outline of coverage in violation of subsection (f), or

"(6) issues a policy without obtaining certain information in violation of subsection (g), or

"(7) provides a commission or compensation in violation of subsection (h), is subject to sanctions under section 2707.

"STANDARDS RELATING TO POLICIES

"SEC. 2706. (a) USE OF STANDARD DEFINITIONS AND TERMINOLOGY AND UNIFORM FORMAT.—Each long-term care insurance policy shall, pursuant to the Standards—

"(1) use uniform language and definitions, and

"(2) use a uniform format for presenting the outline of coverage under such a policy.

"(b) LIMITING CONDITIONS ON BENEFITS; MINIMUM BENEFITS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A long-term care insurance policy may not—

"(A) condition or limit eligibility for benefits for a type of services to the need for or receipt of any other services;

"(B) condition or limit eligibility for any benefit on the medical necessity for such benefit;

"(C) condition or limit eligibility for benefits furnished by licensed providers on compliance with conditions which are in addition to those required for licensure under State law or required under title XXI of the Social Security Act; or

"(D) deny payment for any benefits on the basis that the individual is eligible for or otherwise entitled to benefits under part A.

"(2) COMMUNITY CARE.—If a long-term care insurance policy provides benefits for community care, the policy—

"(A) may not limit such benefits to services provided by registered nurses or licensed practical nurses;

"(B) may not require benefits for such services to be provided by a nurse or therapist that can be provided by a home health aide or other licensed or certified home care worker acting within the scope of the worker's licensure or certification;

"(C) may not limit such benefits to services provided by agencies or providers certified under title XVIII; and

"(D) shall provide benefits for—

"(i) home-based items and services described in paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 2102(b) of the Social Security Act in an individual's home,

"(ii) community-based items and services described in section 2102(c) of such Act, and

"(iii) respite care and hospice respite care described in section 2102(d) of such Act, furnished by qualified providers (as determined for purposes of part A of title XXI of such Act).

"(3) NURSING FACILITY CARE.—

"(A) REQUIREMENT.—Each long-term care insurance policy shall provide that in the case of a policyholder who would be entitled to benefits under part A of title XXI of the Social Security Act with respect to long-term nursing facility care but for the individual's failure to have been found to be financially eligible for such care under section 2132 of such Act, benefits under the policy shall include either—

"(i) benefits for long-term nursing facility care of the type provided under such part A, without regard to any coinsurance or resident-specific deductible established under sections 2122(a)(2) and 2133(a)(2) of such Act, at a dollar level (for a day of nursing facility care) not less than 80 percent of the average cost of a day of nursing facility care in the State at the time of sale of the policy, increased for inflation consistent with subsection (g), or

"(ii) payment of a dollar amount equivalent to the amount provided under clause (i).

"(B) NO RESTRICTION ON COVERED FACILITIES.—To the extent to which a long-term care insurance policy provides benefits for nursing facility care, the policy shall provide such benefits with respect to all nursing facilities (as defined in section 2104(b) of the Social Security Act).

"(4) MINIMUM PERIOD OF COVERAGE.—Each long-term care insurance policy—

"(A) that provides benefits with respect to community care, shall provide benefits for such care over a period of at least 12 consecutive months, and

"(B) shall provide benefits for nursing facility care over a period of at least 48 consecutive months, or, beginning with the second year that begins after the effective date of title XXI of the Social Security Act (as defined in section 2101(d)(1)(B) of such Act), over a period of consecutive months that is not less than 12 months and that is a multiple of 12 months.

"(d) PROHIBITION OF DISCRIMINATION.—A long-term care insurance policy may not treat benefits under the policy in the case of an individual with Alzheimer's disease, with any related progressive degenerative dementia of an organic origin, or with any organic or inorganic mental illness differently from an individual having another medical condition for which benefits may be made available.

"(e) LIMITATION ON USE OF PREEXISTING CONDITION LIMITS.—

"(1) INITIAL ISSUANCE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), a long-term care insurance policy may not exclude or condition benefits based on a medical condition for which the policyholder received treatment or was otherwise diagnosed before the issuance of the policy.

"(B) 6-MONTH LIMIT.—A long-term care insurance policy may exclude benefits under a policy, during its first 6 months, based on a condition for which the policyholder received treatment or was otherwise diagnosed during the 6 months before the policy became effective.

"(C) REFERENCE TO MEDICAL DOCUMENTATION REQUIREMENT.—For provision requiring a medical documentation for individuals 75 years or age or older at the time of policy issuance, see section 2705(g).

"(2) REPLACEMENT POLICIES.—If a long-term care insurance policy replaces another long-term care insurance policy, the replacing policy shall waive any time periods (including waiting periods, elimination periods, and probationary periods) applicable to pre-existing conditions in the new policy for similar benefits to the extent such time was spent under the original policy.

"(f) USE OF FUNCTIONAL ASSESSMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Each long-term care insurance policy—

"(A) shall provide for eligibility for, and level of, benefits available under the policy based on an assessment of the policyholder's functional ability that—

"(i) is conducted by an assessment agency (as defined in section 2114(a)(1) of the Social Security Act), or by another qualified individual (as specified by the Secretary in regulations consistent with paragraph (2)), and

"(ii) uses the same assessment instrument and methodology as is used in making assessments under section 2111 of such Act;

"(B) shall specify the level (or levels) of functional impairment required under such an assessment to obtain benefits under the policy; and

"(C) shall provide for the determination of such level based on the individual's inability to perform (without substantial assistance from another individual) because of physical, cognitive, or other mental impairment a number (or combination) of activities of daily living specified in section

2101(b)(1)(A)(i) of the Social Security Act and, in the case of individuals with cognitive or other mental impairment or under 6 years of age, based on a standard of comparable level of disability described in subparagraph (A)(i) or (B) of section 2101(b)(1) of such Act.

"(2) CONDUCT OF ASSESSMENT.—Such assessment may not be conducted by an individual—

"(A) who has a direct or indirect ownership or control interest in the issuer of the policy or an entity that provides services for which benefits are available under the long-term care insurance policy, or

"(B) who has a direct or indirect affiliation or relationship with such an issuer or entity if there is a financial incentive that is related to the results of the assessment determination.

"(3) APPEALS PROCESS.—Each long-term care insurance policy shall provide for an appeals process, meeting the Standards, for individuals who dispute the results of an assessment conducted under this subsection, including any determination of eligibility, level of functional impairment, or level of benefits.

"(4) DEEMED ENTITLEMENT FOR REQUIRED NURSING FACILITY CARE BENEFITS IF AFFIRMATIVE CERTIFICATION IS ISSUED.—With respect to benefits for nursing facility care required to be covered under long-term care insurance policies, an individual covered under the policy is deemed to be eligible for such benefits if the individual has in effect an affirmative certification under section 2112 of the Social Security Act.

"(g) INFLATION PROTECTION OPTION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—At the option of the policyholder at the time of sale of a long-term care insurance policy, the policy shall provide, at the time of each annual renewal, for a percentage increase (which is not less than the applicable percentage increase specified in paragraph (2)) in the dollar payment levels and any maximum payment limit on benefit coverage above the levels or limit in effect during the previous policy year. In applying this subsection, the increases shall be compounded annually and the policy may provide for rounding such an increase to the nearest multiple of $1 (in the case of dollar payment levels) or $100 (in the case of a maximum payment limit).

"(2) SPECIFICATION OF PERCENTAGE INCREASE.—For purposes of paragraph (1), with respect to policies issued each year, the applicable percentage increase specified in this paragraph—

"(A) with respect to benefits for community care is the average annual percentage rate of increase for payment rates for community care under title XXI of the Social Security Act projected, most recently before the date of issuance of the policy, under section 2141(d)(1) of such title by the Board of Trustees of the Federal Long-Term Care Trust Fund, and

"(B) with respect to benefits for nursing facility care is the average annual percentage rate of increase for payments rates for nursing facility care under this title projected, most recently before the date of issuance of the policy, under section 2141(d)(2) of such title by the Board of Trustees of the Federal Long-Term Care Trust Fund.

"(3) OPTION TO ADJUST POLICY FOR ACTUAL INFLATION.—At the option of the policyholder, at the time of each annual renewal, the policy may be modified to reflect a change in inflation projections, referred to in paragraph (2), with a premium adjustment as determined under the Standards.

"(h) SPECIFICATION OF LIMITS ON PREMIUM INCREASES; LIMIT ON PREMIUM INCREASES

AFTER AGE 75; PREMIUMS FOR POLICY UPGRADES.—

"(1) SPECIFICATION OF LIMITS ON ANNUAL PREMIUM INCREASES.—Each long-term care insurance policy shall specify a limit on the percentage increase in premiums for a policy that may be made between one policy year and the subsequent policy year.

"(2) LIMIT ON PREMIUM INCREASE AFTER AGE 75.—Each long-term care insurance policy shall not provide for any increase in premiums for a policyholder who is 75 years of age or older other than an annual increase (of not more than 5 percent) at the beginning of each policy year.

"(3) CLASSIFICATION OF PREMIUMS FOR POLICY UPGRADES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a long-term care insurance policy issued to an individual who is provided an upgraded long-term care insurance policy by the same issuer, consistent with the Standards, the premiums charged with respect to such upgraded policy for those elements that are the same as those under the policy being replaced shall be consistent with the premiums that would be charged if the individual had purchased such upgraded policy at the time of issuance of the original (or previous) policy.

"(B) UPGRADED POLICY DEFINED.—In subparagraph (A), the term 'upgraded policy' means a policy that, in relation to a previously issued policy, has benefits with an anticipated actuarial value (for individuals within the same actuarial class or similar demographic characteristics) that is greater than the actuarial value of the previously issued policy.

"(i) NONFORFEITURE.—

"(1) PROTECTION.—

"(A) PROTECTION.—Each long-term care insurance policy shall provide such nonforfeiture protection as shall be included in the Standards. Such Standards shall provide no less protection than requiring that a policyholder, at the time of sale of a long-term care insurance policy, be offered the option of nonforfeiture protection described in subparagraph (B).

"(B) BASE NONFORFEITURE PROTECTION.—The nonforfeiture protection described in this subparagraph under a policy would provide that if the policy lapses after the policy has been in effect for at least 3 years, the policy will provide without payment of any additional premiums benefits equal to a percentage (specified under the Standards) of the benefits otherwise available at term, or an equivalent cash amount (as determined under the Standards).

"(2) ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDARDS.—The Standards may provide that the percentage or cash amount under paragraph (1)(B) must increase based upon the period of time in which the policy was in effect.

"(j) RENEWABILITY AND UPGRADES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—No long-term care insurance policy may be canceled or nonrenewed for any reason other than nonpayment of premium, material misrepresentation or fraud.

"(2) CONTINUATION AND CONVERSION RIGHTS FOR GROUP POLICIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Each group long-term care insurance policy shall provide covered individuals with a basis for continuation or conversion in accordance with this paragraph.

"(B) BASIS FOR CONTINUATION.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), a policy provides a basis for continuation of coverage if the policy maintains coverage under the existing group policy when such coverage would otherwise terminate or when benefits under such policy are reduced and which is subject only to the continued timely payment of a premium when due. A group policy which restricts provision of benefits and services to or contains incentives to use certain providers or facilities, may provide continuation benefits which are substantially equivalent to the benefits of the existing group policy.

“(C) BASIS FOR CONVERSION.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), a policy provides a basis for conversion of coverage if the policy entitles each individual—

“(i) whose coverage under the group policy would otherwise be terminated for any reason or whose benefits under the group policy would otherwise be reduced, and

“(ii) who has been continuously insured under the policy (or group policy which was replaced) for at least 6 months before the date of the termination or reduction, to issuance of a policy providing benefits identical to, substantially equivalent to, or in excess of, those of the policy being terminated (or the benefits being reduced), without evidence of insurability.

“(D) GROUP REPLACEMENT OF POLICIES.—If a group long-term care insurance policy is replaced by another long-term care insurance policy purchased by the same policyholder, the succeeding issuer shall offer coverage to all individuals covered under the old group policy on its date of termination. Coverage under the new group policy shall not result in any exclusion for preexisting conditions that would have been covered under the group policy being replaced.

“(3) UPGRADES FOR CURRENT POLICIES.—If an issuer of a long-term care insurance policy continues to issue such a policy after the effective date specified under section 2702(b), the issuer shall permit each policyholder of such a policy as of such date to purchase a long-term care insurance policy that meets all the applicable Standards. In offering such a policy, the issuer may impose additional underwriting restrictions only for benefits not held under the previously issued policy, in accordance with the Standards.

“SECRETARIAL ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY

“(1) in the case of a State which does not have a regulatory program approved under section 2703,

“(2) in the case of a State which has such an approved program, to the extent specified by the Secretary (under a look-behind program), to determine whether or not individual long-term health care policies in the State have failed to comply with the applicable requirements of this title and whether persons or entities are otherwise in compliance with the requirements of this title, and “(3) in carrying out sections 2704(1) and 2705(1) (relating to penalties).

“(b) COMPLAINTS AND INVESTIGATIONS.—The Secretary shall establish procedures—

“(1) for individuals and entities to file written, signed complaints respecting alleged violations of the requirements of this title,

“(2) for responding on a timely basis to such complaints, and

“(3) for the investigation of—

“(A) those complaints which, on their face, have a substantial probability of validity, and “(B) such other alleged violations of the requirements of this title as the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

In conducting investigations under this section, agents of the Secretary shall have reasonable access to examine evidence of any person or entity being investigated.

“(c) HEARINGS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Before imposing an order described in subsection (d) against a person or entity under this section for a violation of the requirements of this title, the Secretary shall provide the person or entity with notice and, upon request made within a reasonable time (of not less than 30 days, as established by the Secretary by regulation) of the date of the notice, a hearing respecting the violation.

“(2) CONDUCT OF HEARING.—Any hearing so requested shall be conducted before an administrative law judge under section 201. If no hearing is so requested, the Secretary's imposition of the order shall constitute a final and unappealable order.

“(3) AUTHORITY IN HEARINGS.—In conducting hearings under this subsection—

“(A) agents of the Secretary and administrative law judges shall have reasonable access to examine evidence of any person or entity being investigated, and

“(B) administrative law judges, may, if necessary, compel by subpoena the attendance of witnesses and the production of evidence at any designated place or hearing.

In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpoena lawfully issued under this paragraph and upon application of the Secretary, an appropriate district court of the United States may issue an order requiring compliance with such subpoena and any failure to obey such order may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

“(4) ISSUANCE OF ORDERS.—If the administrative law judge determines, upon the preponderance of the evidence received, that a person or entity named in the complaint has violated the requirements of this title, the administrative law judge shall state the findings of fact and issue and cause to be served on such person or entity an order described in subsection (d).

“(d) CEASE AND DESIST ORDER WITH CIVIL MONEY PENALTY.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the succeeding provisions of this subsection, the order under this subsection—

“(A) shall require the person or entity—

“(i) to cease and desist from such violations, and

“(ii) to pay a civil penalty in an amount not to exceed $25,000 for each such violation; and

“(B) may require the person or entity to take such other remedial action as is appropriate.

The provisions of section 1128A (other than the first sentence of subsection (a) and other than subsection (b)) shall apply to a civil money penalty under this subparagraph in the same manner as such provisions apply to a penalty or proceeding under section 1128A(a).

“(2) CORRECTIONS WITHIN 30 DAYS.—No order shall be imposed under this subsection by reason of any violation if the person or entity establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary that—

“(A) such violation was due to reasonable cause and was not intentional and was not due to willful neglect, and

“(B) such violation is corrected within the 30-day period beginning on the earliest date the person or entity knew, or exercising reasonable diligence could have known, that such a violation was occurring.

“(3) WAIVER BY SECRETARY.—In the case of a violation which is due to reasonable cause and not to willful neglect, the Secretary may waive part or all of the civil money penalty imposed by paragraph (1)(A)(ii) to the extent that payment of such penalty would be grossly excessive relative to the violation involved and to the need for deterrence of violations.

“(4) ADMINISTRATIVE APPELLATE REVIEW.—The decision and order of an administrative law judge shall become the final agency decision and order of the Secretary unless, within 30 days, the Secretary modifies or vacates the decision and order, in which case the decision and order of the Secretary shall become a final order under this subsection.

“(5) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—A person or entity adversely affected by a final order issued under this subsection may, within 45 days after the date the final order is issued, file a petition in the Court of Appeals for the appropriate circuit for review of the order.

“(6) ENFORCEMENT OF ORDERS.—If a person or entity fails to comply with a final order issued under this subsection against the person or entity after opportunity for judicial review under paragraph (5), the Secretary shall file a suit to seek compliance with the order in any appropriate district court of the United States. In any such suit, the validity and appropriateness of the final order shall not be subject to review.

“(7) USE OF AMOUNTS COLLECTED.—Civil money penalties collected under this subsection shall be credited to the Federal Long-Term Care Trust Fund.

“(e) ESTABLISHMENT OF TOLL-FREE TELEPHONE HOTLINE.—In the case of a State without a regulatory program approved under section 2703(a), the Secretary shall provide for the establishment of the toll-free telephone information and complaint system described in section 2703(c) in carrying out this section in the State.

“LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE POLICY DEFINED

“SEC. 2708. (a) IN GENERAL.—In this title, except as otherwise provided in this section, the term ‘long-term care insurance policy’ means any insurance policy, certificate, or rider advertised, marketed, offered, or designed to provide coverage for each covered individual on an expense incurred, indemnity, prepaid, or other basis, for one or more diagnostic, preventive, therapeutic, rehabilitative, maintenance or personal care services, provided in a setting other than an acute care unit of a hospital. Such term includes a group or individual annuity or life insurance policy or rider which provides directly (or which supplements) long-term care insurance described in the previous sentence.

“(b) POLICIES EXCLUDED.—Except as provided in subsections (c) and (d), in this title the term ‘long-term care insurance policy’ does not include any medicare supplemental policy (as defined in section 1882(g)) and any insurance which is offered primarily to provide—

“(1) basic hospital expense coverage, basic medical-surgical expense coverage, hospital confinement indemnity coverage, or major medical expense coverage,

“(2) disability income or related asset-protection coverage,

“(3) accident only coverage,

“(4) specified disease or specified accident coverage, or

“(5) limited benefit health coverage.

“(c) INCLUSION OF POLICIES MARKETED AS LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE.—In this title, the term ‘long-term care insurance policy’ also includes any product which is advertised, marketed, or offered as long-term care insurance.

“(d) DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS FOR CERTAIN DISABILITY INCOME POLICIES AND LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In this title, the term 'long-term care insurance policy' includes—

"(A) a policy described in subsection (b)(2) under which the eligibility or amount of benefits are based on an assessment of functional ability (based on activities of daily living or otherwise) and the amount of benefits is paid only a per diem basis, or

"(B) a life insurance policy described in paragraph (3), if the disclosure requirements of paragraph (2) are not met.

"(2) DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS.—The disclosure requirements of this paragraph for a policy are that—

"(A) the policy discloses (in a form and manner specified in the Standards) the fact that the policy is not a long-term care insurance policy;

"(B) the policy outlines how the benefits in the policy differ from the benefits required to be provided under the Standards of a long-term care insurance policy and the benefits provided under part A; and

"(C) in the case of a life-insurance policy described in subsection (c), at the time of policy delivery there is provided to the purchaser and the beneficiary a policy summary that includes—

"(i) an explanation of how the long-term care benefits interact with other components of the policy (including deductions from death benefits);

"(ii) a description of the amount and length of benefits and the guaranteed lifetime benefits (if any) for each covered individual; and

"(iii) any exclusions, reductions, and limitations on benefits of long-term care.

"(3) CERTAIN LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES.—A life insurance policy described in this paragraph is one—

"(A) which accelerates the death benefit specifically for—

"(i) one or more of the qualifying events of terminal illness,

"(ii) medical conditions requiring extraordinary medical intervention, or

"(iii) permanent institutional confinement;

"(B) which provides the option of a lump-sum payment for those benefits; or

"(C) which provides benefits based on the use of nursing facility care."

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The Public Health Service Act is further amended—

(1) in section 406(a)(2), by striking "2701" and inserting "2801";

(2) in section 465(f), by striking "2701" and inserting "2801";

(3) in section 480(a)(2), by striking "2701" and inserting "2801";

(4) in section 485(a)(2), by striking "2701" and inserting "2801";

(5) in section 497, by striking "2701" and inserting "2801";

(6) in section 505(a)(2), by striking "2701" and inserting "2801"; and

(7) in section 926(b), by striking "2711" each place it appears and inserting "2811".

SEC. 303. REPORT ON SOLVENCY PROTECTION.

Within 2 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall submit to Congress a report on standards that may be applied to assure the solvency of insurers with respect to long-term care insurance policies.

SEC. 304. WAIVER OF PAPERWORK REQUIREMENTS.

Chapter 35 of title 44, United States Code, and Executive Order 12291 shall not apply to information and regulations required for purposes of carrying out this subtitle and the amendments made by this subtitle.

Subtitle B—Clarification of Tax Treatment of Long-Term Care Services and Long-Term Care Insurance Policies

PART I—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 311. QUALIFIED LONG-TERM CARE SERVICES TREATED AS MEDICAL CARE.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Paragraph (1) of section 213(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (defining medical care) is amended by striking "or" at the end of subparagraph (B), by redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (D), and by inserting after subparagraph (B) the following new subparagraph:

"(C) for qualified long-term care services (as defined in subsection (g)), or".

(b) QUALIFIED LONG-TERM CARE SERVICES DEFINED.—Section 213 of such Code (relating to deduction for medical, dental, etc. expenses) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) QUALIFIED LONG-TERM CARE SERVICES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified long-term care services' means community care and nursing facility care (as defined for purposes of title XXI of the Social Security Act) for an individual who—

"(A) is 6 years of age or older and (i) needs substantial assistance or supervision from another individual with at least 2 activities of daily living (described in section 2101(b)(5) of such Act), (ii) needs substantial supervision due to cognitive or other mental impairment and needs substantial assistance or supervision from another individual with at least 1 activity of daily living or in complying with a daily drug regimen, or (iii) needs substantial supervision of another individual due to behaviors that are dangerous (to themselves or others), disruptive, or difficult to manage; or

"(B) is under 6 years of age and suffers from any medically determinable physical, cognitive, or other mental impairment of comparable severity to that which would make an adult meet the standard described in subparagraph (A).

"(2) CERTAIN SERVICES PROVIDED BY RELATIVES NOT INCLUDED.—The term 'qualified long-term care services' shall not include any services provided to an individual by a relative unless the relative is a physician, registered professional nurse, or other licensed health care practitioner with respect to such services. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'relative' means an individual bearing a relationship to another individual which is described in paragraphs (1) through (8) of section 152(a)."

(c) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Subparagraph (D) of section 213(d)(1) of such Code (as redesignated by subsection (a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(D) for insurance (including amounts paid as premiums under part B of title XVIII of the Social Security Act, relating to supplementary medical insurance for the aged)—

"(i) covering medical care referred to in subparagraphs (A) and (B), or

"(ii) covering medical care referred to in subparagraph (C), but only if such insurance is provided under a qualified long-term care insurance contract (as defined in section 7702B(b))."

(2) Paragraph (6) of section 213(d) of such Code is amended—

(A) by striking "subparagraphs (A) and (B)" and inserting "subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C)", and

(B) by striking "paragraph (1)(C)" in subparagraph (A) and inserting "paragraph (1)(D)".

SEC. 312. TREATMENT OF LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE OR PLANS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Chapter 79 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to definitions) is amended by inserting after section 7702A the following new section:

"SEC. 7702B. TREATMENT OF LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE OR PLANS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of this title—

"(1) a qualified long-term care insurance contract shall be treated as an accident or health insurance contract,

"(2) any plan of an employer providing coverage of qualified long-term care services shall be treated as an accident or health plan with respect to such services,

"(3) amounts received under such a contract or plan with respect to qualified long-term care services, including payments described in subsection (b)(5), shall be treated—

"(A) as amounts received for personal injuries or sickness, and

"(B) for purposes of section 105(c), as amounts received for the permanent loss of a function of the body, and

"(4) payments described in subsection (b)(5) shall be treated as payments made with respect to qualified long-term care services.

Paragraph (3)(B) shall not apply in the case of amounts attributable to (and not in excess of) deductions allowed under section 213 (relating to medical etc., expenses) for any prior taxable year and also shall not apply for purposes of section 105(f).

"(b) QUALIFIED LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE CONTRACT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this title, the term 'qualified long-term care insurance contract' means any insurance contract if—

"(A) the only insurance protection provided under such contract is coverage of qualified long-term care services, and

"(B) such contract meets the requirements of paragraphs (2), (3), and (4).

"(2) PREMIUM REQUIREMENTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of this paragraph are met with respect to a contract if such contract provides that—

"(i) premium payments may not be made earlier than the date such payments would have been made if the contract provided for level annual payments over the life of the contract (or, if shorter, 20 years), and

"(ii) all refunds of premiums, and all policyholder dividends or similar amounts, under such contract are to be applied as a reduction in future premiums or to increase future benefits.

A contract shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of clause (i) solely by reason of a provision providing for a waiver of premiums if the insured becomes an individual described in section 213(g)(1).

"(B) REFUNDS UPON DEATH OR COMPLETE SURRENDER OR CANCELLATION.—Subparagraph (A)(ii) shall not apply to any refund on the death of the insured, or on any complete surrender or cancellation of the contract, if, under the contract, the amount refunded may not exceed the amount of the premiums paid under the contract. For purposes of this title, any refund described in the preceding sentence shall be includable in gross income to the extent that any deduction or exclusion was allowed with respect to the refund.

"(3) BORROWING, PLEDGING, OR ASSIGNING PROHIBITED.—The requirements of this paragraph are met with respect to a contract if such contract provides that no money may be borrowed under such contract and that such contract (or any portion thereof) may not be assigned or pledged as collateral for a loan.

"(4) COORDINATION WITH MEDICARE.—The requirements of this paragraph are met with respect to a contract if such contract does not reimburse expenses incurred to the extent that such expenses are reimbursable under title XVIII of the Social Security Act.

"(5) PER DIEM AND OTHER PERIODIC PAYMENTS PERMITTED.—For purposes of paragraphs (3) and (4) of subsection (a), payments are described in this paragraph for any calendar year if, under the contract, such payments are made to (or on behalf of) an individual described in section 213(g)(1) on a per diem or other periodic basis without regard to the expenses incurred during the period to which the payments relate.

"(c) SPECIAL RULES FOR TAX TREATMENT OF POLICYHOLDERS.—For purposes of this title, solely with respect to the policyholder under any qualified long-term care insurance contract, such contract shall not be treated as a qualified long-term care insurance contract during any period on or after the date on which the contract (or any portion thereof) is assigned or pledged as collateral for a loan.

"(d) TREATMENT OF COVERAGE AS PART OF A LIFE INSURANCE CONTRACT.—Except as provided in regulations, in the case of coverage of qualified long-term care services provided as part of a life insurance contract, the requirements of this section shall apply as if the portion of the contract providing such coverage was a separate contract.

"(e) QUALIFIED LONG-TERM CARE SERVICES.—For purposes of this section, the term 'qualified long-term care services' has the meaning given such term by section 213(g).

"(f) SPECIAL RULES.—
 "(1) CONTINUATION COVERAGE RULES NOT TO APPLY.—The health care continuation rules contained in section 4980B (and contained in part 6 of subtitle B of title I of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 and in title II of the Public Health Service Act) shall not apply to—

"(A) qualified long-term care insurance contracts, or

"(B) plans described in subsection (a)(2).
 "(2) EMPLOYER PLANS NOT TREATED AS DEFERRED COMPENSATION PLANS.—For purposes of this title, a plan of an employer providing coverage of qualified long-term care services shall not be treated as a plan which provides for deferred compensation by reason of providing such coverage.

"(3) CONTRACTS COVERING PARENTS.—For purposes of this title, if a qualified long-term care insurance contract purchased by or provided to a taxpayer provides coverage with respect to one or more of the taxpayer's parents (or, in the case of a joint return, of either spouse), such coverage and all payments made pursuant to such coverage shall be treated in the same manner as if the parents were dependents (as defined in section 152) of the taxpayer. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'parent' includes any step-mother or step-father, and any relationship that exists by virtue of a legal adoption shall be recognized to the same extent as relationships by blood.

"(4) WELFARE BENEFIT RULES NOT TO APPLY.—For purposes of subpart D of part I of subchapter D of chapter 1 (relating to treatment of welfare benefit funds), qualified long-term care services shall not be treated as a welfare benefit or a medical benefit.

"(5) DEDUCTIBILITY.—For purposes of this title, no payment of a premium for a long-term care insurance contract shall fail to be deductible in whole or in part merely because such premium is paid pursuant to a schedule that satisfies subsection (b)(2).

"(g) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the requirements of this section, including regulations to prevent the avoidance of this section by providing qualified long-term care services under a life insurance contract."

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for chapter 79 of such Code is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 7702A the following new item:

"Sec. 7702B. Treatment of long-term care insurance or plans."

SEC. 313. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) SECTION 311.—The amendments made by section 311 shall apply to taxable years beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) SECTION 312.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by section 312 shall apply to contracts issued after the date which is 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) CONTRACTS ISSUED BEFORE EFFECTIVE DATE.—Pursuant to rules issued by the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate, a contract issued on or before the date which is 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act shall be treated as meeting the requirements of section 7702B of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as added by section 312) if such contract satisfies requirements reasonably similar to the requirements of such section 7702B.

(c) TRANSITION RULE.—If, after the date of the enactment of this Act and before January 1, 1994, a contract—

(1) which is similar to a qualified long-term care insurance contract (as defined in section 7702B of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986), and

(2) which is issued on or before January 1, 1993, is exchanged for a qualified long-term care insurance contract (as so defined), such exchange shall be treated as an exchange to which section 1035 of such Code applies.

PART II—TREATMENT OF ACCELERATED DEATH BENEFITS, DISABILITY INCOME PAYMENTS, AND CERTAIN OTHER BENEFITS

SEC. 321. TAX TREATMENT OF ACCELERATED DEATH BENEFITS, DISABILITY INCOME PAYMENTS, AND CERTAIN OTHER BENEFITS.

Section 101 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to certain death benefits) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN PRE-DEATH BENEFITS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this section, any amount paid or advanced to an individual under—

"(A) a life insurance contract on the life of an insured who is a terminally ill individual,

"(B) a policy described in section 2188(b)(2) of the Social Security Act under which the eligibility or amount of benefits are based on an assessment of functional ability (based on activities of daily living or otherwise) and the amount of benefits is paid only a per diem basis, or

"(C) a life insurance contract described in section 2188(d)(3) of the Social Security Act, shall be treated as an amount paid by reason of the death of such insured if the disclosure requirements of section 2188(d)(2) of such Act are met with respect to the contract or policy.

"(2) SPOUSAL CONSENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any payment or advance unless—

"(i) the spouse of the insured who is a qualified beneficiary consents to such payment or advance, or

"(ii) it is established that the consent required under clause (i) may not be obtained because such spouse may not be located, or because of such other circumstances as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe.

"(B) TIME FOR CONSENT.—Any consent under subparagraph (A) shall occur during the 90-day period ending on the date of the payment (or in the case of a series of periodic payments, the date of the first of such payments).

"(C) QUALIFIED BENEFICIARY.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'qualified beneficiary' means an individual who—

"(i) is the spouse of the individual on the last day of the period described in subparagraph (B), and

"(ii) at any time during the 1-year period ending on such last day, was a beneficiary under the life insurance contract.

"(3) TERMINALLY ILL INDIVIDUAL.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'terminally ill individual' means an individual who has been certified by a physician as having an illness or physical condition which can reasonably be expected to result in death in 12 months or less.

"(4) PHYSICIAN.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'physician' has the meaning given to such term by section 213(d)(4)."

SEC. 322. TAX TREATMENT OF COMPANIES ISSUING RIDERS PROVIDING QUALIFIED ACCELERATED DEATH BENEFITS, DISABILITY INCOME PAYMENTS, AND CERTAIN OTHER BENEFITS.

(a) CERTAIN BENEFIT RIDERS TREATED AS LIFE INSURANCE.—Section 818 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to other definitions and special rules) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) CERTAIN BENEFIT RIDERS TREATED AS LIFE INSURANCE.—For purposes of this part—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Any reference to a life insurance contract shall be treated as including a reference to a qualified benefit rider on such contract.

"(2) QUALIFIED BENEFIT RIDERS.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified benefit rider' means any rider or addendum on, or other provision of a life insurance contract—

"(A)(i) which provides for payments to an individual upon the insured becoming a terminally ill individual (as defined in section 101(g)(2)),

"(ii) which is described in section 2188(b)(2) of the Social Security Act and under which the eligibility or amount of benefits are based on an assessment of functional ability (based on activities of daily living or otherwise), or

"(iii) which is described in section 2188(d)(3) of the Social Security Act, and

"(B) which meets the disclosure requirements of section 2188(d)(2) of such Act.

"(3) SPOUSAL CONSENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A rider or addendum on, or other provision of, a life insurance contract shall not be treated as a qualified benefit rider unless such contract provides that—

"(i) the spouse of the insured who is a qualified beneficiary must consent to such rider, or

"(ii) it is established that the consent required under clause (i) may not be obtained because such spouse may not be located, or because of such other circumstances as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe.

"(B) TIME FOR CONSENT.—Any consent under subparagraph (A) shall occur during the 90-day period ending on the date of the payment (or in the case of a series of periodic payments, the date of the first of such payments).

"(C) QUALIFIED BENEFICIARY.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'qualified beneficiary' means an individual who—

"(i) is the spouse of the individual on the last day of the period described in subparagraph (B), and

"(ii) at any time during the 1-year period ending on such last day, was a beneficiary under the life insurance contract."

(b) DEFINITIONS OF LIFE INSURANCE AND MODIFIED ENDOWMENT CONTRACTS.—

(1) RIDER TREATED AS QUALIFIED ADDITIONAL BENEFIT.—Paragraph (5)(A) of section 7702(f) of such Code is amended by striking "or" at the end of clause (iv), by redesignating clause (v) as clause (vi), and by inserting after clause (iv) the following new clause:

"(v) any qualified benefit rider (as defined in section 818(g)(2)), or"

(2) TRANSITIONAL RULE.—For purposes of determining whether section 7702 or 7702A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 applies to any contract, the issuance of any qualified benefit rider (as defined in section 818(g)(2) of such Code (as added by this section) on a life insurance contract or of any other provision of a life insurance contract permitting benefits which may be provided by such a rider shall not be treated as a modification or material change of such contract.

SEC. 323. APPLICANTS OR RECIPIENTS UNDER PUBLIC ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS NOT TO BE REQUIRED TO MAKE ELECTION RESPECTING CERTAIN PRE-DEATH BENEFITS UNDER LIFE INSURANCE POLICIES.

Part A of title XI of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1301 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"TREATMENT OF CERTAIN PRE-DEATH BENEFITS

"SEC. 1144. (a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no individual who is an applicant for or recipient of aid or assistance under a State plan approved under title IV, X, XIV, XVI, or XIX, of assistance funded by payments under title V or XX, or of benefits under the Supplemental Security Income program established by title XVI shall—

"(1) be required, as a condition of eligibility for (or of continuing to receive) such aid, assistance, or benefits, to make an election to receive any specified pre-death benefit under a policy of life insurance, or

"(2) by reason of failure to make such an election, be denied (or suffer a reduction in the amount of) such aid, assistance, or benefits.

"(b) SPECIFIED PRE-DEATH BENEFIT.—For purposes of this section, the term 'specified pre-death benefit' means any payment made under the terms of a life insurance policy, while the insured individual is alive, as a result of—

"(1) a recalculation of the insured individual's life expectancy,

"(2) an assessment of the individual's functional ability (based on activities of daily living or otherwise), or

"(3) any circumstance for which benefits may be paid during such individual's life under a policy described in section 2188(b)(3)."

SEC. 324. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) SECTIONS 321 AND 322.—The amendments made by—

(1) section 321 shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1993, and

(2) section 322 shall apply to contracts issued before, on, or after December 31, 1993, except that any spousal consent requirement shall not apply before January 1, 1994.

(b) SECTION 323.—The amendment made by section 323 shall take effect on January 1, 1994.

TITLE IV—ADDITIONAL GRANTS AND DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

SEC. 401. ESTABLISHMENT OF GRANT PROGRAM IN PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT.

Subpart IV of part D of title III of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 255) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"COMMUNITY CARE AGENCIES

"SEC. 339A. (a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may make grants to community care agencies for the purpose of assisting such agencies in providing community care to low-income individuals.

"(b) REQUIREMENT OF AVAILABILITY OF EACH COMMUNITY CARE SERVICE.—The Secretary may not make a grant under subsection (a) unless the community care agency involved agrees to make available, directly or through contracts with other public or private nonprofit entities, each of the services described in section 2102(a) of the Social Security Act.

"(c) ELIGIBLE SERVICE AREAS.—The Secretary may not make a grant under subsection (a) unless the community care agency involved agrees to provide community care under the grant in a medically underserved area (designated under section 330(a)(4)).

"(d) MINIMUM QUALIFICATION OF GRANTEE FOR CERTAIN FISCAL YEARS.—The Secretary may not make a grant under subsection (a) after the effective date of title XXI of the Social Security Act (as defined in section 2101(d)(1)(B) of such Act), unless the community care agency involved is a community care agency with a participation agreement in effect under title XXI of the Social Security Act.

"(e) PREFERENCES IN MAKING GRANTS.—In making grants under subsection (a), the Secretary shall give preference to any community care agency that is a migrant health center or a community health center, as defined in sections 329(a) and 330(a), respectively.

"(f) LIMITATION ON IMPOSITION OF CHARGE FOR SERVICES.—The Secretary may not make a grant under subsection (a) unless the community care agency involved agrees that, if the agency will routinely impose a charge for the delivery of community care, such charge—

"(1) will be made according to a schedule of charges that is made available to the public;

"(2) will be adjusted to reflect the income and resources of the individual involved; and

"(3) will not be imposed on any individual with an income less than 100 percent of the official poverty level.

"(g) RELATIONSHIP TO SERVICES UNDER OTHER PROGRAMS.—The Secretary may not make a grant under subsection (a) unless the community care agency involved agrees that the agency will not expend the grant to pay for any community care to the extent that payment has been made, or can reasonably be expected to be made, with respect to such care—

"(1) under any State compensation program, under an insurance policy, or under any Federal or State health benefits program; or

"(2) by an entity that provides health services on a prepaid basis.

"(h) REQUIREMENT OF APPLICATION.—The Secretary may not make a grant under subsection (a) unless—

"(1) an application for the grant is submitted to the Secretary;

"(2) with respect to carrying out the purpose for which the grant is to be made, the application provides assurances of compliance satisfactory to the Secretary; and

"(3) the application otherwise is in such form, is made in such manner, and contains such agreements, assurances, and information as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out such subsection.

"(i) TEMPORARY TREATMENT AS COMMUNITY CARE AGENCY UNDER TITLE XXI.—For purposes of title XXI of the Social Security Act, an entity with a grant under subsection (a) shall be deemed to meet the requirements to be a community care agency, but only for services furnished before October 1, 1995.

"(j) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

"(1) The term 'community care' has the meaning given such term in section 2102(a) of the Social Security Act.

"(2) The term 'community care agency' means a public or nonprofit private entity that is a community care agency (within the meaning of section 2102(e) of the Social Security Act) or that will provide community care pursuant to receiving a grant under subsection (a).

"(3) The term 'official poverty level' means the official poverty line established by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and revised by the Secretary in accordance with section 673(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981.

"(k) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of carrying out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $200,000,000 for fiscal year 1994, $250,000,000 for fiscal year 1995, $300,000,000 for fiscal year 1996, and such sums as may be appropriate for fiscal years 1997 and 1998."

SEC. 402. GRANTS FOR LONG-TERM CARE SERVICES.

Title III of the Public Health Service Act is amended by adding at the end the following new part:

"PART M—LONG-TERM CARE SERVICES

"GRANTS FOR PROVIDERS OF HOME HEALTH, HOMEMAKER, AND PERSONAL ASSISTANCE SERVICES

"SEC. 399D. (a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall make grants to public or private entities to develop and conduct programs to train individuals in the provision of homemaker and home health aide services and personal assistance services for which payment may be made under title XXI of the Social Security Act.

"(2) PREFERENCES.—In awarding grants under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall give preference to entities that establish programs that are affiliated with one or more community care agencies (as defined in section 2102(e) of the Social Security Act), nursing care facilities (as defined in section 2104(a) of such Act), senior citizen centers, adult day health care centers, and other institutions providing health and social services to persons with physical, cognitive, or other mental impairments, for the purpose of providing in-service training to individuals receiving training under the program and for providing technical assistance to the agency, facility, or other institution.

"(b) PROGRAM QUALIFICATIONS.—The Secretary may not make a grant under subsection (a) for the development and conduct of a program that—

"(1) trains homemaker/home health aides unless the entity has provided the Secretary satisfactory assurances that the program will meet the minimum standards established by the Secretary under section 1891(a)(3)(A) of the Social Security Act, or

"(2) trains personal attendants unless the entity has provided the Secretary satisfactory assurances that the program will meet standards established by the Secretary, including requirements relating to areas to be covered in the program, content of the curriculum, minimum course hours, qualification of instructors, and competency evaluation.

"(c) LIMITATION ON ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—The Secretary may not make a grant under subsection (a) unless the entity agrees that not more than 10 percent of the grant will be expended for administrative expenses with respect to the grant.

"(d) REQUIREMENT OF APPLICATION.—The Secretary may not make a grant under subsection (a) unless—

"(1) an application for the grant is submitted to the Secretary;

"(2) with respect to carrying out the purpose for which the grant is to be made, the application provides assurances of compliance satisfactory to the Secretary; and

"(3) the application otherwise is in such form, is made in such manner, and contains such agreements, assurances, and information as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out such subsection.

"(e) AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1994, $20,000,000 for fiscal year 1995, $25,000,000 for fiscal year 1996, and such sums as may be appropriate for each of fiscal years 1996 and 1997."

SEC. 403. ADDITIONAL FUNDING FOR LONG-TERM CARE OMBUDSMEN PROGRAMS UNDER THE OLDER AMERICANS ACT.

(a) EXPANDING ACTIVITIES TO COVER TITLE XXI.—Section 307(a)(12)(A)(i) of the Older Americans Act of 1965 (42 U.S.C. 3027(a)(12)(A)(i)) is amended by inserting "(including nursing facilities under title XXI of the Social Security Act) or receiving community care under such title" after "long-term care facilities".

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATIONS.—Section 303(a)(2) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 3023(a)(2)) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "In addition to amounts otherwise authorized to be appropriated, there are authorized to be appropriated an additional $10,000,000 for each fiscal year to carry out section 307(a)(12)."

SEC. 404. ADDITIONAL FUNDING FOR INFORMATION AND REFERRAL SERVICES FOR PERSONS UNDER THE DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITIES ACT.

(a) EXPANDING ACTIVITIES TO COVER TITLE XXI.—Section 142(a)(2)(A)(ii) of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act (42 U.S.C. 6042(a)(2)(A)(ii)) is amended by inserting "(including the program under title XXI of the Social Security Act)" after "programs".

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATIONS.—Section 143 of such Act is amended by adding at the end the following: "In addition to the amounts authorized by the previous sentence, there are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such additional amounts as may be necessary to increase the amount of the allotments to provide for the systems to provide for information on and referral to the program established under title XXI of the Social Security Act."

SEC. 405. EXPANSION OF INFORMATION AND COUNSELING UNDER THE PROTECTION AND ADVOCACY FOR THE MENTALLY ILL ACT.

Section 105(a)(1) of the Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Individuals Act of 1986 (42 U.S.C. 10805(a)(1)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (B),

(2) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (C), and

(3) by inserting after subparagraph (C) the following new subparagraph:

"(D) provide information on and referral to programs (including the program established under title XXI of the Social Security Act) and services addressing the needs of mentally ill individuals;"

TITLE V—REVIEW OF PHARMACEUTICAL BENEFITS

SEC. 501. PHARMACEUTICAL PAYMENT ASSESSMENT AND POLICY REVIEW COMMISSION.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Director of the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment shall provide for the appointment of a Pharmaceutical Payment Assessment and Policy Review Commission (in this section referred to as the "Commission"), to be composed of individuals with expertise in the provision and financing of inpatient and outpatient drugs and biologicals. The provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service shall not apply to the appointment of members of the Commission.

(b) COMPOSITION.—(1) The Commission shall consist of 11 individuals. Members of the Commission shall first be appointed no later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, for a term of 3 years, except that the Director may provide initially for such shorter terms as will insure that (on a continuing basis) the terms of no more than 4 members expire in any one year.

(2) The membership of the Commission shall include—

(A) recognized experts in the fields of health care economics and quality assurance, medicine, pharmacology, pharmacy, pharmaceutical pricing, patent law, and prescription drug reimbursement,

(B) other health care professionals, and

(C) at least one individual who is an advocate of recipients of services from Federal government health care programs.

(c) ANNUAL REPORT.—The Commission shall submit to the Congress an annual report (by not later than January 1 of each year beginning with 1994) which shall include information and recommendations regarding national and international drug policy issues. Such report shall include, if appropriate, information concerning the following:

(1) Trends and changes in prices, and cost containment mechanisms, for prescription and nonprescription drugs in inpatient and outpatient settings in the United States.

(2) Trends and changes in prices for prescription drugs in other industrialized nations.

(3) The scope of coverage, reimbursement, and financing under Federal health care programs, and other programs that directly provide or receive Federal funds to provide coverage for or reimbursement of prescription drugs.

(4) The availability and affordability of prescription drugs for various population groups in the United States, and the accessibility and affordability of public and private insurance programs for prescription drugs for such population groups.

(5) Changes in the level and nature of use of prescription drugs by recipients of benefits under Federally-funded health care programs, taking into account the impact of such changes on aggregate expenditures under such programs.

(6) Suggestions to make prescription drugs more affordable and cost-effective for third-party insurers, including State-based pharmaceutical assistance and general assistance programs.

(7) Evaluation of technologies available for efficient third-party prescription drug program administration, including electronic claims management and payment technologies.

(8) Methods of providing reimbursement under Federal health care programs to providers for drug products and pharmacists' services.

(9) Evaluation of the use and efficiency of all Federal tax credits and subsidies given to the pharmaceutical industry for various purposes, including the research and development tax credit and the tax credit allowed under section 936 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(10) Evaluation of the impact on total health care expenditures in other industrialized nations of switching prescription drugs to non-prescription status, and the role of various health professionals in the distribution of such non-prescription drugs.

(d) SPECIAL REPORTS.—The Commission shall submit to the Congress special reports as requested by the Congress.

(e) ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.—Section 1845(c)(1) of the Social Security Act shall apply to the Commission in the same manner as it applies to the Physician Payment Review Commission.

(f) APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There are appropriated equally from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund an amount determined under paragraph (2) for each fiscal year to carry out the purposes of this section.

(2) AMOUNT DETERMINED.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the amount determined under this paragraph is—

(i) for fiscal year 1993, $3,000,000, and

(ii) for each fiscal year beginning after fiscal year 1993, the dollar amount under this subparagraph for the previous fiscal year, increased by the administrative adjustment under subparagraph (B).

(B) ADMINISTRATIVE ADJUSTMENT.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the administrative adjustment for any fiscal year is the percentage increase in the consumer price index for all urban consumers (all items; U.S. city average) for the previous year.

SEC. 502. ESTABLISHMENT OF LONG-TERM CARE PHARMACEUTICAL BENEFITS DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall establish no fewer than 10 demonstration projects to assess the impact on cost, quality of care, and access to prescription drugs and pharmaceutical services of developing a prescription drug benefit for individuals that are receiving benefits for long-term care under title XXI of the Social Security Act.

(b) DESIGN.—The demonstration projects shall use various eligibility criteria, delivery mechanisms, and program designs, including eligibility based on inability to perform certain activities of daily living, total annual expenses for prescription drugs, and certification for benefits under such title.

(c) ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE.—The Secretary shall establish a Long-Term Care Prescription Drug Use Review Committee, which shall consist of physicians, pharmacists, and other health care professionals knowledgeable in the use of chronic medications in special populations, including the elderly. The Committee shall advise the Secretary regarding the demonstration projects under this section and shall be responsible for—

(1) overseeing the development and implementation of demonstration projects under this section,

(2) educating practitioners regarding trends in the prescribing and dispensing of prescription drug products to individuals in need of long-term care services,

(3) developing appropriate criteria for drug utilization for chronic medications,

(4) establishing a retrospective drug use review program for the projects, and

(5) evaluating and reporting on the relative efficacy of currently-available pharmaceutical and biological products (and new products) for chronic medical conditions, and making recommendations for the appropriate use of these products.

(d) REIMBURSEMENT FOR MEDICATION MANAGEMENT.—In no less than 5 of the demonstration projects, the Secretary shall provide for a separate payment to pharmacists for providing ongoing drug utilization management (including medication management and regimen review) to insure that prescriptions are appropriate, medically necessary, and unlikely to result in adverse medical results.

(e) DURATION OF PROJECTS.—The projects under this section shall be conducted for a period of 5 fiscal years, except that the Secretary may terminate a project before the end of such period if the Secretary determines that the project is not in compliance with the terms of the application approved by the Secretary.

(f) REQUIREMENT OF APPLICATION.—The Secretary may not make a grant for a demonstration project under subsection (a) unless—

(1) an application for the grant is submitted to the Secretary;

(2) with respect to carrying out the purpose for which the grant is to be made, the application provides assurances of compliance satisfactory to the Secretary; and

(3) the application otherwise is in such form, is made in such manner, and contains such agreements, assurances, and information as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out such subsection.

(g) EVALUATION AND REPORT.—The Secretary shall fund an independent evaluation of the demonstration projects under this section and shall report to Congress on the results of the evaluation by not later than 5 years after the date of the enactment of this Act. The report shall include recommendations on the most cost effective benefit design to provide pharmaceuticals and pharmaceutical services to individuals receiving services under title XXI of the Social Security Act.

(h) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated equally from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Supplemental Medical Insurance Trust Fund $100,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1993 through 1997 to carry out the demonstration projects established under this section.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I am very pleased and proud to be introducing the Long-Term Care Family Security Act of 1992, along with Senate Majority Leader MITCHELL and my other highly distinguished Senate colleagues. In 1989, Congress called upon the Pepper Commission to recommend legislation that would ensure all Americans coverage for health care and long-term care. As Chairman of that Commission, I worked with other elected leaders to make hard choices and to build a consensus on the direction to take to achieve these critical goals. The introduction of this bill is the final step of laying out the Commission's blueprint for developing a national system of health and long-term care protection. It is truly time to enable all Americans to have peace of mind in the face of long-term care needs.

I also want to note the significance of the support for this bill. Joined together in offering this bold plan includes some of the most recognized leaders in health care, in seniors' issues, and other vital concerns facing our country. While some of the original cosponsors have offered long-term care plans of their own in the past, today we collectively offer this bill as a common plan of action that we intend to pursue.

And in the House of Representatives, Congressman HENRY WAXMAN and Majority Leader RICHARD GEPHARDT are spearheading the introduction of companion legislation. Personally, I am especially grateful for the role that Congressman WAXMAN has played over the years in drawing the public's attention to the long-term care crisis and forging pragmatic, responsive solutions. He is a true leader in this field, and Americans of every age are fortunate that he continues to forge ahead on behalf of their day-to-day concerns and priorities. I know that all of the cosponsors of this legislation share the fervent hope that this bill will take a bold leap toward passage of a long-term care system that Americans want and so desperately need.

The lack of protection against the need for long-term care is one of the most widespread health-related problems in America today. Between 9 and 11 million Americans of all ages are chronically disabled and must depend on others for help in the basic tasks of daily living. Yet, there is very little in place to help individuals and their families cope with their disabilities. Because most citizens cannot afford paid care at home, the burden falls onto family members at great economic, physical, and emotional cost.

With the aging of our citizens and the majority of disability in the elderly, our future needs for long-term care will expand dramatically. Between now and 2030, the size of the elderly population is expected to double. The number of persons age 85 and older will increase almost fivefold, from 2.5 million to as many as 12 million. If current rates of disability persist, the number of elderly disabled persons will increase from 6 million to 13.8 million, and the number requiring institutional care will increase from 1.5 million to 5.3 million. Clearly, a comprehensive strategy is needed to protect these vulnerable citizens.

As Chairman of the Pepper Commission, I worked hard with other members to develop a program that would guarantee all Americans financial security in the face of long-term care needs. Our solution, the Long-Term Care Family Security Act of 1992, achieves this goal through a limited social insurance approach that avoids the development of the two-tiered system that exists today in our health care delivery system.

NEED FOR LONG-TERM CARE

Long-term care refers to a wide variety of medical and personal services needed by individuals who have lost some capacity for self-care because of a chronic illness or condition. These services range from skilled treatment and management of chronic diseases to assistance with basic activities of daily living [ADLs] such as eating, bathing, dressing, transferring and toileting and instrumental activities of daily living [IADLs] such as meal preparation and housekeeping. Services can be provided in an individual's home or community, or in an institution.

Of the 9 million to 11 million Americans who require help, two-thirds are elderly and the remaining one-third are under age 65. These people are physically and/or cognitively impaired as a result of congenital diseases, trauma or chronic physical and mental conditions. Currently, approximately 2.3 million Americans—1.8 million elderly and 500,000 under age 65—need substantial support because of three or more ADL limitations or cognitive impairment. In addition, another 1.6 million Americans—1.3 million elderly and 0.3 million under age 65—live in nursing homes or other institutions.

The need for long-term care can be a financial, as well as physical and emotional, catastrophe for individuals and their families. Unlike major medical expenses, most Americans lack adequate public or private insurance coverage to limit the financial burden. Less than 10 percent of Americans have public or private coverage, and public coverage has focused on institutional care.

The cost of long-term care is beyond the resources of most Americans. The average cost of nursing home care exceeds $2,500 per month. After private resources for nursing home care have been exhausted, Medicaid serves as the payer of last resort. In 1990, Medicaid paid about half of the roughly $50 billion spent on nursing home care. Medicare, which only covers short stays for individuals who need daily skilled nursing care or rehabilitative services, provided less than 2 percent of nursing home revenues.

Private insurers are now beginning to market policies to protect against the cost of long-term care. Currently, almost 2 million policies are in effect. Although there are increasing efforts by States to develop standards for issuers, sales practices and policy content, current consumer protections vary from State to State. Mechanisms to ensure compliance with standards are often inadequate, so that reports of unscrupulous sales practices are frequent.

Families provide the bulk of long-term care received by disabled persons living in the community. Public programs provide only limited support for home and community based care, and private long-term care insurance for noninstitutional care is just emerging. Almost three-fourths of noninstitutionalized disabled elderly receiving long-term care rely solely on family members or other unpaid helpers. Over 7 million Americans—three-fourths female—provide unpaid long-term care to disabled elder relatives, friends or neighbors, and many more provide similar assistance to nonelderly disabled persons. In addition to the direct financial costs associated with providing care, many of these individuals bear opportunity costs from foregone employment. Decreasing fertility rates, delayed childbearing patterns, and increasing female labor force participation rates lead to uncertainty about the number of family members—daughters in particular—who will be able to provide long-term care in the future.

Medicare pays for home health care only for persons needing skilled nursing care on an intermittent basis, or physical or speech therapy. Unless a beneficiary needs skilled care or therapy, it does not reimburse for less skilled, nonmedical services such as a homemaker—the very services disabled persons are most likely to need.

Medicaid allows States to cover medically oriented home health care. There is a limited optional personal care program and a limited home and community based care waiver program as well. Other Federal programs supported through the Older Americans Act, title XX, and the Rehabilitation Act, and State and local governments finance some home and community based care. In 1985, 850,000 disabled persons of all ages were served by these programs.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE PEPPER COMMISSION

The Pepper Commission recommended developing an integrated public program that would meet the diverse needs of severely disabled people and support private insurance for those seeking broader protection. The following nine specific recommendations are the blueprint of this act:

1. Social insurance for home and community based care and for short term nursing home care, for all Americans, regardless of income;

2. For people with long nursing home stays, a floor of protection against impoverishment—protection of assets, income for spouses, home maintenance, and an allowance for personal needs;

3. Measures to promote long-term care insurance, subject to Federal and State oversight;

4. To qualify for benefits, individuals need to meet one of three disability criteria: (a) assistance with 3 ADLs (b) supervision because of cognitive impairment (c) supervision because of behavior that is dangerous, disruptive, or difficult to manage;

5. Home care services, developed and overseen by case managers, should include: personal care, homemaker/chore services, shopping and other support services, day care, respite care, and training of family care givers, as well as skilled nursing and rehabilitative care;

6. The social insurance portion of the program should be fully financed by the Federal Government, while the long nursing home stay is a shared financial responsibility of the Federal Government and States. Using Federal guidelines and standards, the States will administer the plan;

7. The Federal Government will establish provider payment mechanisms and determine appropriate rates. Case managers allocate services and monitor delivery of services within a budget set by the Federal Government;

8. The plan should be put into place incrementally over several years;

9. Federally funded research and development programs should be aimed at preventing, delaying, and dealing with long-term illnesses and disabilities.

SUMMARY OF LONG-TERM CARE FAMILY PROTECTION ACT

Modeled on the Pepper Commission recommendations, our plan achieves universal coverage for long-term care for disabled persons of all ages. A public program provides protection for home and community based care and short-term nursing facility stays, without regard to income. The public program also provides a floor of income and asset protection for long stays in nursing homes. All benefits are subject to cost containment and quality assurance mechanisms. Private long-term care insurance policies for additional benefits are made eligible for favorable tax treatment if they meet Federal consumer protection requirements.

PUBLIC PROGRAM

Eligibility

All persons are eligible for either home and community-based or nursing facility care (regardless of their age, income or employment status) if they demonstrate any of the following:

Need for human assistance (including supervision) with three or more activities of daily living [ADLs] (bathing, dressing, transferring, toileting and eating);

Need substantial supervision due to cognitive or mental impairment and have at least one ADL limitation or require assistance managing their medications;

Need substantial supervision due to behaviors that are dangerous (to themselves or others), disruptive, or difficult to manage.

All persons who demonstrate any of the above needs and require long nursing facility stays are eligible for benefits when their incomes and assets reach protected levels.

BENEFITS

Home and Community-Based Care

Full range of home-care services (including skilled and unskilled services, personal assistance, and equipment to assist with ADLs); community-based services (including adult day care); and respite care services are available.

Benefits vary with degree of impairment:

Eligible persons with limitations in fewer than four ADLs ("moderately disabled") are entitled to 52 hours of service per month;

Eligible persons with limitations in four or more ADLs ("severely disabled") are entitled to 88 hours of service per month.

Additional hours may be made available to individuals with greater needs from pooled benefit hours (13 hours per month allotted to pool for each moderately disabled person; 22 hours per month allotted to pool for each severely disabled person).

Benefits are subject to 20 percent cost-sharing requirements, adjusted by sliding-scale for low-income assistance.

Short-Term Nursing Facility Care

Coverage is available for two episodes of up to 6 months of nursing facility care.

Benefits are subject to 20 percent cost-sharing requirements, adjusted for sliding-scale low-income assistance.

Long-Term Nursing Facility Care

Asset protection is provided (in addition to the value of homes) in amounts up to $30,000 for individuals; $60,000 for couples.

Income for spouses, home maintenance, and personal needs is also protected.

PAYMENT AND COST CONTAINMENT

Payment rates for homes and community-based services are federally determined and are based on a fee schedule or prospective payment system developed by the Secretary.

Payment rates for nursing facilities are based on a specified prospective payment system, adjusted for severity of residents' impairments ("case-mix" system).

Payment rates for all types of services apply not only to services covered by the LTC Plan, but to any services delivered by participating providers ("all-payer" system).

Expenditures for home and community-based services may not exceed costs of entitlement hours, plus pooled benefit hours.

Supply of nursing facility beds is limited to current bed-to-user ratio in a State or the national average ratio, whichever is greater.

A Long-term Care Payment Assessment Commission is established to review and recommend to the Congress and the Secretary appropriate policy regarding rates, methods, and adjustments for payment for all services.

A Pharmaceutical Payment Assessment Commission is established to examine prescription drug costs and to explore issues relating to coverage of prescription drugs under government health care programs.

ADMINISTRATION AND QUALITY ASSURANCE

Designated assessment agency in each State determines functional and financial eligibility for benefits, and ensures specified quality of care standards.

Certified care managers, in cooperation with individual beneficiaries, develop plans of care for home and community-based services; arrange for, and oversee quality of, service delivery; and manage payment for services consistent with the limitations on expenditures.

Subject to Federal requirements, states certify and license care managers and providers.

Nursing home reform standards [OBRA '87] are unchanged.

RELATION OF PRIVATE INSURANCE TO THE PUBLIC PLAN

Private long-term care insurance remains available for persons seeking protection of assets above the level specified in the LTC Plan; for additional home care services; for cost-sharing requirements under the LTC Plan; and for service needs associated with impairment levels less than those specified under the LTC Plan.

Purchase of private long-term care insurance ensures protection of assets above the levels specified under the LTC Plan equivalent to the amount of insurance purchased.

STANDARDS

The National Association of Insurance Commissioners [NAIC] or, in its absence, the Secretary, is required to develop standards for State programs to regulate long-term care insurance policies; and for the insurers, sales practices, and content of such policies.

Standards for insurers include provision for examination of policy ("free look") and full refund; explanation of benefits relative to the LTC Plan; information on experience with claims denials; and limitations on agent compensation.

Standards for sales practices include requirements for agent certification and consumer education; prohibitions against unfair tactics, including "twisting," cold lead advertising, and high pressure techniques; and prohibitions against specified sales, including sales of duplicate policies and sales to Medicaid recipients.

Standards for policy content include coverage for a minimum benefit protection for long nursing facility stays; optional development of standardized policies; protection against inflation, forfeiture, and use of pre-existing condition limits and premium increases; and guarantees of renewability, continuation, conversion, and upgrade rights.

ENFORCEMENT

States are required to establish mechanisms to secure compliance with specified standards, including the imposition of sanctions such as civil monetary penalties.

Secretary is required to establish mechanisms to ensure presence and operation of effective State regulatory programs ("look behind" authority).

TAX CLARIFICATIONS

Private long-term care insurance policies are provided the same preferred tax treatment as non-wage replacement disability insurance.

Expenditures for long-term care services are provided the same preferred tax treatment as medical expenditures.

RELATION TO OTHER FEDERAL PROGRAMS

Medicare remains primary payer for persons eligible for Medicare benefits.

Medicare benefits remain unchanged, except coverage for skilled nursing facility care is limited to 20 days.

Medicaid long-term care benefits are replaced by the LTC Plan, except for intermediate care facility services for the mentally retarded ["ICFs/MR"].

Long-term care programs supported through the Older Americans Act and Title XX remain unchanged, except for enhanced financing for the Ombudsman Program under the Older Americans Act.

IMPACT ON DISABLED AMERICANS

3.1 million severely disabled Americans over age 65 are eligible for benefits.

800,000 severely disabled Americans under age 65 are eligible for benefits.

COST AND FINANCING

Preliminary CBO cost estimate for Public Program for first full year of implementation is $45 billion ($25 billion for home and community-based care; $20 billion for nursing facility care).

Home and community-based care and short-term nursing facility benefits are fully federally financed.

States are required to maintain current levels of financial commitment under Medicaid for population groups and long-term care services covered by the LTC Plan (indexed for increases in the medical CPI).

At full implementation, Federal and State governments share costs for increases in the costs of the long-term nursing facility benefit in excess of the increase in the nursing facility market basket.

PHASE-IN SCHEDULE

Year 1: Development and publication of implementing regulations.

Year 2: Provision of limited number of hours of home and community-based care.

Year 3: Provision of additional hours of home and community-based care.

Year 4: Full provision of nursing facility care.

Year 5: Full provision of home and community-based care.

Mr. President, with this long explanation of this major legislation, I conclude my remarks. I urge all of my colleagues to join us as cosponsors and to press forward in bringing about the security and protection that Americans are painfully aware they lack.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, today marks another major step toward the goal of accessible and affordable health care and long-term care for all Americans. Our HealthAmerica legislation will reform the Nation's health care system by dealing with the key problems of inadequate access and sharply rising costs.

The Long-Term Care Family Security Act we are introducing today deals with the other major aspect of the Nation's worsening health crisis—protecting elderly and disabled Americans against the staggering costs of long-term care.

Today, 3 million elderly Americans need home care or nursing home care. They are unable to perform two or more of the five basic activities of daily living without assistance—bathing, eating, dressing, using the bathroom, or moving from a bed to a wheelchair. As many as a million younger citizens are similarly disabled.

The need for assistance is already great today, and as Americans live longer, the need will be even greater. According to the Brookings Institute, 35 to 50 percent of today's senior citizens will enter a nursing home at some point in their lives. Almost half of all American families have been touched—and often touched hard—by the need for long-term care.

Long-term care is not just a crisis for persons with disabilities. It is a major burden for their families as well. Few sons and daughters are prepared—either financially or emotionally—to take on the heavy responsibility of providing long-term care for their parents who need it, whether that care is provided in a nursing home or in their own home.

How much longer will this Nation stand silent, while sons or daughters live lives of unbearable desperation in an uncaring society—and are sometimes driven over the edge and forced to abandon an 82-year-old father at a dog racing track, with a name pinned to his shirt. We're not talking about Paddington bear—this is happening to real families facing real hardships that no family should have to endure.

Protection against the inexcusable high cost of long-term care is the urgent unfinished business of Social Security and Medicare. This is not just an ordinary bill. It is also a "peace of mind" bill for millions of families struggling to make ends meet and care for their loved ones.

In a sense, the challenge we face today is as old as civilization. As the poet Pindar in ancient Greece wrote, "A graceful and honorable old age is the childhood of immortality." And 2,000 years later, we still have not found a way to secure it. I hope with this effort we begin today, we will finally succeed.

There are certain features of the legislation we are introducing today that deserve special emphasis.

First. This bill, together with HealthAmerica, is a comprehensive response to the health care crisis. Enactment of HealthAmerica will ensure coverage for acute care hospital and medical services for all Americans. Passage of the Long-Term Care Family Security Act will ensure against the costs of long-term care for persons with temporary or permanent disabilities.

Second. The coverage of home and community based care and nursing home care in the bill will apply to persons of all ages. Eligibility for benefits would be based on a person's level of impairment, and will not be restricted to any age group.

In addition, the legislation guarantees a strong citizen and consumer role in the development of care plans, and emphasizes flexibility in the kinds of services covered and the actual delivery of these services.

Third. The proposal has a role for private insurance, under strict standards to see that policies provide adequate coverage and consumer protection is provided.

Studies by the Brookings Institute have shown, however, that private long-term care insurance cannot possibly reach all the elderly who need help. The reason is obvious. Private insurance that is not sold on a group basis inevitably skims off the cheapest clients and dumps the heaviest burdens on government.

Society is already paying for long-term care, but in harsh and irrational ways. Medicaid now contributes more than $20 billion a year for nursing home care—almost half the national total. But these public dollars are available only after persons have been forced to pauperize themselves, and that impoverishment is unacceptable.

A main source of rising costs in long-term care is that such care is often not provided in the most cost-effective setting. Too many patients stay in hospitals too long, because insurance fails to cover nursing home care. Too many citizens with disabilities are forced into nursing homes permanently because home care is not feasible or available. The result is higher costs for the Nation, and a lower quality of life for those who need help the most.

My mother will be 102 in July. My family has been fortunate in being able to afford the best in home care for her, as we did for my father for many years after his stroke. Decent long-term care should be available to every family that needs it. America must no longer turn its back on the millions of citizens who deserve this kind of help.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my esteemed colleagues, Senators MITCHELL, ROCKEFELLER, KENNEDY, RIEGLE, ADAMS, BURDICK, GLENN, MIKULSKI, PELL, and SIMON in introducing the Long-Term Care Family Security Act of 1992. Long-term care has all too frequently been overlooked in most discussions on health care reform, and I am pleased that we are bringing it back into the debate.

At the outset, I would like all my colleagues to know that the long-term care issue would not be receiving the attention it so desperately needs and deserves without the tireless leadership of our majority leader, GEORGE MITCHELL, the former Chairman of the Pepper Commission, JAY ROCKEFELLER, the chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, TED KENNEDY, the House majority leader, RICHARD GEPHARDT, and chairman of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, HENRY WAXMAN. As chairman of the Special Committee on Aging, I know that there are millions of Americans around the Nation who are extremely grateful for the work and commitment that this significant legislation represents.

The bill we are introducing, which would provide universal coverage for long-term care for disabled persons of all ages, is based on the recommendations of the Pepper Commission. During our deliberations on the Commission, we focused much needed attention on the great unmet need across this Nation for long-term care. Today, the American public is finally seeing our recommendations being translated into legislation.

Just how great is the need for long-term care? Between 9 million and 11 million Americans of all ages need some type of long-term care. Two-thirds of them are elderly, and the other third are under age 65. Most of these people are living at home, being cared for by families and friends. And while most caregivers consider their responsibilities a labor of love, it can be an enormous burden. For many people, there is little or no relief in sight, either because of financial constraints or the unavailability of care in the community. Access to affordable home and community-based long-term care is almost nonexistent for most people. Nursing home care is more readily available for those who cannot be cared for at home, but at a cost of over $30,000 per year, it does not take long for most people to spend their life savings—and become eligible for Medicaid.

In February, I held a field hearing in Fort Smith, AR on the issues of long-term care and prescription drugs. What we witnessed was a powerful illustration of the enormous interest and need for these services. Hundreds of people packed into a small auditorium to share their frustrations and make their moving appeals for help.

The hearing's witnesses talked about how important their caregiving responsibilities were to them, but how much better their lives would be if they could just get a little bit of help in the home. Many asked why, if their loved one became so ill that nursing home care was the only alternative, did they have to spend all of the money they had worked so hard to save so that they could become eligible for Medicaid. Everyone wanted to know just what the Congress planned to do about this problem. I am happy to report back to the people in Arkansas and around the Nation that today we are taking a step in the right direction.

The Long-Term Care Family Security Act provides for a 5-year, carefully phased-in package of long-term care benefits. Consistent with the Pepper Commission's recommendations, which received bipartisan support on an 11-to-4 vote, the initiative represents a public-private partnership aimed at addressing as many needs as possible.

Specifically, the bill incorporates a broad range of home- and community-based care for the chronically ill. Short-term nursing home stays of up to 6 months are also covered. For those with longer stays, assets up to $30,000 for single persons and up to $60,000 for couples are protected, so that people do not have to impoverish themselves in order to become eligible for assistance. Significantly, this package of benefits is subjected to strict, cost-containment provisions.

Mr. President, we often forget that the primary long-term care expense for many of our elderly Americans is paying for prescription drugs. While the average American under 65 only takes about 4 to 5 prescriptions a year, the average elderly American over 65 takes about 15 to 16 medications each year, year after year. Up to 7 of every 10 prescriptions filled for elderly patients are to treat chronic, long-term medical conditions, such as high blood pressure, heart problems, glaucoma, diabetes, and an array of other conditions that afflict our elderly. Therefore, there can be no question that prescription drug costs represent a truly burdensome long-term care expense. For this reason, I am particularly pleased that this bill includes the establishment of a Prescription Drug Policy and Payment Assessment Commission.

We know all too well that after over 12 years of unrelenting and unjustified drug manufacturer price increases, many of our elderly go without their medications. That is because for three of four elderly, paying for their prescription drugs is their highest out-of-pocket medical cost. As chairman of the Senate Aging Committee, this situation is unacceptable. The Prescription Drug Commission will be charged with determining mechanisms to make prescription drugs more accessible and affordable to our elderly populations and to all citizens. I hope that this Commission will help this Congress develop strong, effective mechanisms to contain the escalating costs of medications as we consider reforming our health care system.

The legislation also establishes demonstration projects to determine the most effective and efficient mechanism to eventually provide drug benefits under the long-term care program we are proposing today. Once we have effective drug cost containment in place, we can begin to talk about bringing back a drug benefit for the elderly, without being forced to pay for unnecessary drug manufacturer price increases and excessive profits. Other industrialized nations have found a way to provide comprehensive drug benefits to their elderly at reasonable costs. If they can do it, so can we.

Also of great importance are the provisions in this legislation that strengthen and encourage the development of a responsive, private long-term care insurance market. To achieve this goal, the bill we are introducing today incorporates important consumer protections that makes important strides toward assuring that Americans can have confidence in the private long-term care insurance products they are purchasing. To assist the further expansion of the private long-term care insurance market, the bill also provides tax clarifications that have been requested by the insurance industry. As a sponsor of similar legislation that I have previously introduced, I am pleased about most of these provisions and look forward to working with interested parties to ensure that any movement in this area is even more responsive to the legitimate needs of consumers, insurers, agents, regulators, health care providers, and others.

Mr. President, whether our legislative effort today to address the long-term care challenge facing our Nation is the right response has yet to be answered. I submit, however, we will not know for sure until we start the process moving. Up to now, the silence has been deafening.

I doubt that anyone associated with this bill will make the claim that this legislation is perfect. I certainly will not. I still have great concerns about this bill's costs, the lack of stronger provisions related to the containment of prescription drug costs, and the bill's current provisions related to the private long-term care insurance market. Despite my concerns, I believe it is essential that we do not continue to ignore the long-term care issue. We must start the process toward progress.

I look forward to working with my colleagues in the Congress, the administration, State and local governments, consumers and their representatives, insurers, regulators, agents, and the health care provider community in making this an even stronger, more viable initiative. I urge all my colleagues to join us in this effort.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, last summer, some of my colleagues and I introduced HealthAmerica, a comprehensive health care reform proposal which addresses the access and cost containment problems that plague our health care system. We are also equally concerned about the challenges our elderly and disabled population face in their daily lives, and felt that these should be addressed through separate, comprehensive legislation.

Today, I join my colleagues, Senators MITCHELL, ROCKEFELLER, KENNEDY, and PRYOR, and other Members, in introducing legislation to create a national long-term care program. The elderly and disabled in this country should be protected against the high cost of long-term care and should not have to impoverish themselves or their families in order to get help.

LONG-TERM CARE IN MICHIGAN

Almost all of us have personal knowledge of the devastating financial and emotional effect that caring for an elderly or disabled relative or friend has on families and communities. I've included accounts from Michigan residents of some recent cases that illustrate the effect that providing long-term care has on families.

Robert and Virginia Moore, of Ada, MI, have a personal assistant who comes to their home for 4 hours each day to help Mrs. Moore care for her husband, who is completely paralyzed. Having a personal assistant means that Mr. Moore can stay at home, and the Moore's can lead a fairly normal life. They get help paying for part of the assistant's fee from a community agency, but they pay a large amount out of their own pocket. When Mrs. Moore became ill a few years ago, Mr. Moore had to enter a nursing home until she was well. Despite the hard work Mrs. Moore puts into care for her husband, and despite the fact that getting home care help has cost them almost their whole life savings, their family is committed to keeping Mr. Moore at home instead of in a nursing home.

Under this bill, the Moore's would get the regular home and community care they need without forcing them to pay substantial amounts out of their own pocket. It would provide short-term nursing home stays—like Mr. Moore needed while Mrs. Moore was ill—without forcing them to pay. Had home care provisions like the ones in this bill been available when Mrs. Moore was ill, he could have avoided staying in a nursing home.

Kathleen and Harold McCarthy are in their seventies, and they live in Cannonsburg, MI. For 19½ years, Kathleen has been caring for Harold in their home. He has Parkinson's disease, and has also had heart valve replacements and bypass surgery. Harold could be a candidate for a nursing home, but his family wants to keep him at home. To help Kathleen, they applied for home care, and were on a waiting list for 1½ years before they received services. Now, they have someone who comes into their home twice a week and provides bath service and helps Kathleen with other things like moving her husband, dressing him, and feeding him.

Under the legislation we are introducing today, they would not have to wait for the critical and cost-saving home care they so desperately needed.

Mary and Stone Brown are from Battle Creek, MI. Mr. Brown is in his eighties and has Parkinson's disease. Mrs. Brown would be unable to take care of her husband by herself in their home. He has been in a nursing home for the past 2 years. The Brown's had to spend their $35,000 life savings on nursing home care before they qualified for nursing home care under Medicaid.

Under the bill we are introducing today they would not have to spend down their life savings in order to receive the needed nursing home care services.

Arnora and Richard Brown, from Battle Creek, MI, are 50 and 60 years old, respectively. Both of them are disabled: Richard is a stroke victim and Arnora suffers from postpolio syndrome. They don't want to have to go to a nursing home, and fortunately have been able to stay at home with the help of home and community services. They currently have a visiting nurse, physical and occupational therapy, bathing services for Richard, and chore services. The Brown's need more services to be able to live, and are on the verge of being put in a nursing home.

Under the bill we are introducing, the Brown's would receive the support they need to complement what they are receiving now so that they may continue to live at home.

NEED FOR COMPREHENSIVE REFORM

Our goal with this important legislation is to provide a comprehensive strategy for long-term care reform which incorporates the roles of both the public and private sector, and allows individuals flexibility to best meet their own needs by building on the existing support they get from their family and community.

My own State of Michigan ranks eighth among all States in the number of people over 65 years old. Michigan has over 1 million residents who are 65 and over, and more than 100,000 of these are over 85. The Lansing State Journal reported that 1.5 million residents of the State of Michigan have disabilities. These statistics illustrate how many people will need long-term care. Yet few people are planning for these needs by buying long-term care insurance because private insurance policies are often limited and expensive. Government funding for long-term care through the Medicaid Program is primarily limited to nursing home care, and people must spend down their assets to near-poverty just to qualify.

LEGISLATION MEETS KEY GOALS FOR REFORM

Over the past several years, I have held numerous hearings in Michigan and written to over 400 groups to solicit suggestions for long-term care reform. Listening to their concerns has made it clear to me that any long-term care strategy must address the following issues: financial protection against the high cost of long-term care; expansion of the range of services covered, including home health care, nursing home care, respite and hospice care, and other social support services, while building on existing family and community support; and methods to ensure that costs are controlled in the long run.

This legislation meets all of these goals. It allows people of all ages who are disabled access to affordable home and community based care and short-term nursing home care, regardless of their income. It also protects individuals and their families from the high cost of long-term nursing home stays by providing a generous safety net for their assets and income.

This legislation also maintains a role for private insurance and encourages companies to develop affordable policies. It incorporates some of the private long-term care insurance safeguards included in a bill introduced by myself and Senators DASCHLE and PRYOR. These reforms, similar to those in the Medigap supplemental insurance market, will protect seniors who purchase private policies and ensure that those policies meet their needs.

More and more people in this country will incur tremendous long-term care costs. The anticipated increases in the number of people needing these services underscores the need for a sound and efficient long-term care system. That is why we must act now to implement the Long-Term Care Family Security Act. It will provide the combination of home and community based services and nursing home care that will give people the highest quality of life possible and not subject them to impoverishment. It will enable elderly people, and the millions of chronically disabled, to meet their long-term care needs.

I commend the majority leader, GEORGE MITCHELL, for his strong leadership and his commitment to comprehensive health and long-term care reform. In addition, Senators ROCKEFELLER, KENNEDY, and PRYOR have displayed outstanding dedication to improving our health and long-term care systems. I urge my colleagues to join us in cosponsoring this important legislation to make a commitment to long-term care.

Mr. GLENN, Mr. President, it is a rare family that has not had some experience with trying to care for a parent, a spouse, a child or other family member who is disabled. Each person should think of their own family—of those who may need care and of the problems it entails. It strikes terror in the hearts of Americans to realize that they may be bankrupted in order to take care of a loved family member who needs long-term care. If you have plenty of money, it may not be a problem, but for most Ohioans and Americans long-term care is an area of growing concern.

Today it can take all of a family's resources to try and keep a loved one at home and provide the care they need because of their physical or mental disabilities. Families often become impoverished trying to provide in-home and community-based care for disabled members; and nursing home care, paid for by Medicaid, becomes the only option available to them. In some cases, nursing home care is appropriate, but the decision to place someone in a nursing home should not be made because there are no other alternatives available.

The Long-Term Care Security Act of 1992, which I am pleased to cosponsor, is an important starting point in determining the best way to provide and finance long-term care services for elderly and disabled Americans. It will heighten the public dialog and help us find a resolution to this major challenge. And it will help develop a consensus on how to pay for long-term care services. For we cannot kid ourselves, the costs are high and we do not have a way to finance them at this time.

S. 2571, the Long-Term Care Security Act of 1992 establishes a program of home- and community-based care and short-term nursing home care for all elderly and disabled Americans; and it provides increased asset and income protection for people needing long-term nursing home care and their spouses. In addition, it sets standards for private long-term care insurance policies and makes these policies eligible for favorable tax treatment if they meet Federal consumer protection requirements.

I am pleased that this legislation provides assistance for family caregivers, because family caregivers play such an important role in providing long-term care for older and disabled Americans. Services such as respite care and training help prevent caregiver "burnout," and in turn help prevent the otherwise unnecessary institutionalization of the elderly and disabled.

Long-term health care for the elderly and disabled has been an issue of great interest and concern to me for many years, especially as a member of the Senate Special Committee on Aging. There is virtually no protection available, short of Medicaid, for the elderly and disabled who need long-term care either in their homes or in nursing homes. This is an important issue that must be addressed during our debate on health care reform.

I commend Senate Majority Leader GEORGE MITCHELL and Senator JAY ROCKEFELLER, who headed the Pepper Commission, for their leadership in developing a comprehensive long-term care proposal. The legislation we are introducing today will go a long way in helping us meet the long-term care challenge presented by our growing elderly population and by the disabled of all ages. It will give disabled Americans and their families the option of having their needs met at home without the fear of bankruptcy.

Mr. ADAMS, Mr. President, the American people need, want, and deserve long-term care coverage. That's why I am pleased to cosponsor Senator MITCHELL and Senator ROCKEFELLER's Long-Term Care Security Act of 1992. I also commend Representatives WAXMAN and GEPHARDT on their companion bill. Long-term care is an issue of utmost importance. It is essential that it be a part of our overall health care reform.

Few chronically ill and disabled Americans have access to affordable or adequate long-term care services. For most, the real issue is the extraordinary cost of long-term care. Medicare provides home health care only if the individual is home bound and has a skilled nursing need. Few people who are living at home meet these requirements. And, if they do, the coverage is only available for a limited period of time.

A long stay in a nursing home is possible for most Americans only after they have become impoverished. Even a relatively short stay in a nursing home can endanger the assets an individual or a family has worked a lifetime to build.

A recent Congressional Research Service survey, that I requested, demonstrated that budgetary problems are causing a number of States to pull back from their commitment to long-term care. The States cannot carry the load. Federal action in long-term care is essential.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Aging, I held two hearings on long-term care in the past year as well as a hearing on Alzheimer's disease and its long-term care implications. These hearings underscored the fact that long-term care is a major concern of many Americans. In response to these hearings, I improved the long-term care related provisions in my Older Americans Act reauthorization legislation, which is now approaching final action by the Congress.

I also introduced S. 2193, the Long-Term Home Care Act, which focuses on providing home and community-based services to chronically ill and disabled individuals. The home and community-based services provided in the legislation being introduced today are very similar to those in my bill. When I introduced S. 2193, I spoke about the need for comprehensive legislation that includes nursing home care. The bill being introduced today provides such coverage.

There are some areas of the bill, however, about which I am especially concerned. The first involves the number of hours of home and community-based service to which an eligible recipient is entitled. The bill provides up to 13 hours of care a week to an individual needing assistance with three activities of daily living. These activities include eating, bathing, toileting, dressing, and transferring. Many such individuals, for instance disabled individuals who need attendant care, need many more than 13 hours of service a week. I am concerned that the American people will perceive this as a limited amount of care and not rally behind this bill. I realize that the bill takes a step to address this problem by allowing pooled benefits hours that can be allocated as needed. However, more is needed and we must work to address this need.

Next, this bill's provisions that address regulation of private long-term care insurance are not adequate. Consumers must be assured the strongest possible protection when they purchase long-term care insurance. The provisions in this legislation do not provide strong enough protection. I support Senator KENNEDY'S S. 2141, the Long-Term Care Insurance Improvement and Accountability Act, which is the right way to go in long-term care insurance protection. I will work to strengthen the consumer protection provisions in the legislation being introduced today.

Another concern relates to the eligibility requirements. The eligibility for home and community-based care should be impairment with two daily activities, as in my bill, rather than three as in this legislation. Also, the quality assurance mechanisms that I laid out in my bill are needed to ensure the quality of long-term care services. In addition, I think we need to bite the bullet and include a financing mechanism for this bill, as I have done in S. 2193.

I commend Senators MITCHELL and ROCKEFELLER and Representatives WAXMAN and GEPHARDT for their work in this area. I am pleased that this bill is based on the fine work of our friend and colleague, the late Claude Pepper. Although this legislation does not address all of the long-term care needs, and more needs to be done, it certainly represents a major commitment to ensure comprehensive long-term care for all Americans who need it.

By Mr. BUMPERS (for himself, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. PRYOR, and Mr. SYMMS):

S. 2572. A bill to authorize an exchange of lands in the States of Arkansas and Idaho; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

ARKANSAS-IDAHO LAND EXCHANGE ACT

• Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Arkansas-Idaho Land Exchange Act of 1992. I am pleased to have Senators CRAIG, PRYOR, and SYMMS join me as original cosponsors of this legislation.

The Potlatch Corp., a diversified forest products company located in Arkansas, Idaho, and Minnesota, has offered to convey to the United States land from among 56,000 acres of bottomland hardwoods located in Arkansas in exchange for an equal value of approximately 18,500 acres of public land in Idaho. This land exchange will provide significant environmental benefit by protecting rare wetlands in Arkansas without adding to the budget deficit.

ARKANSAS LANDS

The Arkansas lands to be transferred are within the Cache River and White River Basins and have been designated a "wetland of international importance" under the convention on Wetlands of International Importance—the Ramsar Convention—1 of only 10 such areas in the United States. These lands will be added to the existing Cache River and White River National Wildlife Refuges.

Mr. President, it is essential that we protect this environmentally sensitive area. These river basins provide wintering habitat for approximately 10 percent of the Mississippi flyway mallard population and are also important habitat for wood ducks. A number of threatened or endangered species are located in these river basins including: the bald eagle, least tern, fat pocket-book pearly mussel, and pond berry. In addition, there are populations of native wildlife and rare animals, such as the black bear. Many species of migrant songbirds nest in the Potlatch bottomland hardwoods.

Upon the completion of the land exchange, the Arkansas lands will be managed by the Fish and Wildlife Service to conserve and enhance their wetland and fish and wildlife values. These areas will be removed from sustained timber production and other development.

IDAHO LANDS

According to the Fish and Wildlife Service, the Idaho lands to be conveyed to Potlatch do not contain fish, wildlife, or wetlands of similar value. No threatened or endangered species are resident. These lands would be managed by Potlatch for long-term sustained timber production. Some of the lands are scattered pockets within larger blocks of mixed Federal and private ownership. Federal management of these scattered tracts is difficult.

In addition, Potlatch will convey 280 acres of its land in the Lolo Creek Management Area and 680 acres within the Grandmother Mountain Wilderness Study Area in Idaho to the Bureau of Land Management [BLM]. This 680 acres and another 4,000 acres of BLM land within the Grandmother Mountain Wilderness Study Area will then be transferred to the Forest Service.

In order to reduce management problems related to scattered tracts of Federal lands, the BLM will transfer an additional 4,346 acres of land to the Forest Service which will in turn transfer an equal value of its land in other scattered tracts in the same area to the BLM. These areas will be included in the land transferred to Potlatch.

Mr. President, this bill would result in a wonderful addition for Arkansas, for Idaho, and for the entire country. It was drafted by and has the support of the administration. I look forward to working with my colleagues in enacting this important legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter of transmittal from the Department of Interior, a section-by-section analysis, and a copy of the legislation appear in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

S. 2572

Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be referred to as the "Arkansas-Idaho Land Exchange Act of 1992."

SEC. 2. FINDINGS, PURPOSE, AND DEFINITIONS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress hereby finds that—

(1) The Potlatch Corporation has offered an exchange of lands, under which it would receive 18,500 acres of scattered tracts of public land in the State of Idaho in return for conveying to the United States lands of an equal value from among approximately 56,000 acres of undisturbed bottomland hardwoods owned by Potlatch in the State of Arkansas.

(2) The lands to be selected by the United States are surrounded by Federal and State lands on the Cache and White Rivers which are designated as a "Wetland of International Importance" under the Convention on Wetlands of International Importance (commonly known as the Ramsar Convention), one of only ten areas in the United States so designated.

(3) Acquisition of these lands by the United States will remove the lands from sustained timber production and other development in the heart of this critical wetland ecosystem.

(4) These lands, if acquired, will qualify for inclusion in the Wetland of International Importance.

(5) The lands offered to the United States are outstanding fish and wildlife habitat.

(6) The lands the United States would convey to Potlatch do not contain comparable fish, wildlife or wetland values.

(7) Potlatch would also convey to the United States lands in Idaho with important recreational and fisheries value.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this Act to provide for an exchange of lands that will provide environmental and economic benefits to the States of Arkansas and Idaho, and the Nation.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this Act.—

(1) The term "Potlatch" means the Potlatch Corporation, chartered in the State of Delaware.

(2) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

(3) The terms "land" and "lands" mean both the surface and subsurface estates whenever both estates are owned by the United States or Potlatch.

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION OF EXCHANGE.

(a) INTER-AGENCY LAND TRANSFERS.—(1)(A) Notwithstanding the provisions of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, the Secretary shall transfer to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture for inclusion within the National Forest System approximately 8,346 acres of public land, as identified upon a map entitled "Arkansas-Idaho Land Exchange—Idaho Lands", dated April 1992 and available for inspection in appropriate offices of the Secretary.

(B) Subsequent to the exchange provided in subsection (d), the Secretary shall transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture for inclusion in the National Forest System jurisdiction over the approximately 680 acres of land designated for post-exchange transfer in the map referenced in subparagraph (A).

(2) Within six months of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall transfer to the Secretary, for conveyance to Potlatch pursuant to section 3(d) of this Act, jurisdiction over an amount of land within the National Forest System that is approximately equal in value to those lands transferred to him pursuant to paragraph (1) and that is located within the area depicted upon the map referenced in such paragraph.

(b) FEDERAL LANDS TO BE CONVEYED.—The lands to be conveyed to Potlatch shall consist of approximately 10,265 acres of public land in the State of Idaho, as depicted for transfer to Potlatch in the map referenced in subsection (a)(1) of this section, and all lands transferred to the Secretary pursuant to subsection (a)(2).

(c) PRIVATE LAND TO BE ACQUIRED.—(1) The Secretary is authorized and directed to select for acquisition by exchange lands equal in value to those lands identified in subsection (b), less the value of the lands identified in paragraph (2) of this subsection, from among approximately 56,000 acres of land in the State of Arkansas owned by Potlatch, as identified upon a map entitled "Arkansas-Idaho Land Exchange—Arkansas Selection Area," dated April 1992 and available for inspection in appropriate offices of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service.

(2) The Secretary shall acquire from Potlatch through the exchange provided in subsection (d) approximately 920 acres of Potlatch lands in Idaho, as identified for transfer to the Bureau of Land Management in the map referenced in subsection (a)(1) of this section.

(d) EXCHANGE OF LANDS.—Notwithstanding the provisions of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, as amended (43 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.), the Secretary is authorized and directed to convey to Potlatch in accordance with the provisions of the Fish and Wildlife Act of 1956 (16 U.S.C. 742 et seq.) and subject to valid existing rights, those lands identified pursuant to subsection (b) at such time as Potlatch conveys to the United States clear title, in accordance with the Department of Justice standards for the preparation of title evidence in land acquisitions by the United States, to the lands selected pursuant to subsection (c)(1) and those lands identified in subsection (c)(2).

(e) GENERAL PROVISIONS.—(1) DETERMINATIONS OF VALUE AND CLEAR TITLE.—The Secretary shall utilize applicable existing authorities in determining the value of the lands to be exchanged and the validity of the title(s) to the Potlatch lands, including the Uniform Relocation Assistance and Real Property Acquisition Policies Act of 1970, as amended (42 U.S.C. 4601 et seq.) and in accordance with the standards of the Department of Justice referred to in section 3(d) of this Act.

(2) MAPS CONTROLLING.—To ensure the management benefits of consolidating isolated tracts of land, any conflict between the acreage figures cited and the maps referenced in the Act shall be resolved in favor of the maps.

(3) CANCELLATION.—Prior to implementation of the exchange provided for in subsection (d) of this section, if Potlatch notifies the Secretary in writing that it no longer intends to complete the exchange, the lands referenced in subsection (a) of this section shall revert to their status as of the date of enactment of this Act, and shall be managed in accordance with the management plans in effect for those areas at the date of the reversion.

(4) FINAL MAPS.—Within 6 months of the conclusion of the exchange provided for in subsection (d) of this section, the Secretary shall transmit to the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources and the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works maps accurately depicting the lands transferred and conveyed pursuant to this Act, and the acreages of such transfers and conveyances.

SEC. 4. USE OF ACQUIRED LANDS.

(a) NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE SYSTEM.—(1) The Secretary shall add to the lands described in section 3(c)(1) to the Cache River and White River National Wildlife Refuges, as depicted upon the map described in such section. The Secretary shall manage such lands in accordance with the provisions of the National Wildlife Refuge System Administration Act, as amended (16 U.S.C. 668dd-668ee).

(b) PUBLIC LANDS.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph 2 of this subsection in the lands described in section 3(c)(2) shall be public lands, as defined in section 103(e) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, as amended (43 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.), and shall be managed in accordance with the provisions of that Act.

(2) The Secretary shall transfer the lands described in section 3(a)(1)(B) as provided in that subparagraph.●

By Mr. MCCAIN (for himself and Mr. STEVENS) (by request):

S. 2573. a bill to provide for the continued improvement and expansion of the Nation's airport and airways, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

AVIATION SAFETY AND CAPACITY EXPANSION ACT AMENDMENTS

● Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, today I am pleased to introduce, by request, the administration's proposal for reauthorization of the Federal Aviation Administration. The Aviation Safety and Capacity Expansion Act Amendments of 1992 are directed toward assuring the safe, efficient operation of our Nation's aviation system.

I look forward to working with the administration and my colleagues on the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation to move legislation in this area. While I do not specifically endorse all of the provisions in the administration's legislation, I congratulate the Secretary of Transportation, Andrew Card, for his work in putting this bill together.

It is my earnest desire that, along with reauthorizing the Federal Aviation Administration this year, Congress can also pass legislation that addresses the anticompetitive environment in the airline industry today. It is critical that Congress move before we are left with a monopoly of just three airlines.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this bill appear in the RECORD, along with a section-by-section analysis and a letter from the Secretary of Transportation to the President of the Senate.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2573

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—AVIATION SAFETY AND CAPACITY EXPANSION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1992

SECTION 101. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Aviation Safety and Capacity Expansion Act Amendments of 1992".

SEC. 102. AIRPORT ACCESS THROUGH INTERMODAL PROJECTS.

Section 503(a)(2) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, as amended (49 U.S.C. App. 2202(a)(2)), is amended by adding a new subparagraph (F) to read as follows:

"(F) Any off-airport project, or portion thereof, which the Secretary determines directly improves access of passengers and freight to airports, and which is related to an airport layout plan approved by the Secretary and consistent with an area-wide transportation plan. Only funds authorized by section 507(a)(1) or 507(a)(2) of this title may be used for this purpose, and fees may not be imposed under section 1113(e) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended, for this purpose."

SEC. 103. AIRPORT IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM.

Section 505 of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 [49 U.S.C. App. 2204], is amended:

(1) In subsection (a), by striking the word "and" which appears immediately before "$13,916,700,000" and inserting the following immediately after the phrase "October 1, 1992":

"$, 15,816,700,000 for fiscal years ending before October 1, 1993, $17,716,700,000 for fiscal years ending before October 1, 1994, and $19,616,700,000 for fiscal years ending before October 1, 1995."; and

(2) In subsection (b), by striking "September 30, 1992" and inserting "September 30, 1995" in lieu thereof.

SEC. 104. AIRWAY IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM.

Section 506(a) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 2205(a)], is amended by:

(1) Striking the remainder of the sentence after "Trust Fund" and adding the following in lieu thereof:

"$, 2,700,000,000 for fiscal years ending before October 1, 1993, $5,600,000,000 for the fiscal years ending before October 1, 1994, and $8,400,000,000 for the fiscal years ending before October 1, 1995."; and

(2) Striking subsection (a)(2) and inserting in lieu thereof a new subsection (a)(2) to read as follows:

"(2) CAPITAL INVESTMENT PLAN AUGMENTATION AUTHORIZATION.—If the Federal Aviation Administrator determines that it is necessary to augment or substantially modify elements of the Federal Aviation Administration Capital Investment Plan, including, but not limited to, a determination that it is necessary to establish more than 23 Area Control Facilities, there are authorized to be appropriated from the Trust Fund for fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1993, aggregate amounts not to exceed $100,000,000, and for the fiscal years beginning after September 30, 1994, $200,000,000. Amounts appropriated under the authorization in this subsection shall remain available until expended."

SEC. 105. RESEARCH, ENGINEERING, AND DEVELOPMENT, AND DEMONSTRATIONS.

Section 506(b) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 2205(b)], is amended by:

(1) Striking everything after the term "Trust Fund" in paragraph (2) and inserting the following in lieu thereof:

"for fiscal years ending before October 1, 1993, aggregate amounts not to exceed $230,000,000 for the fiscal years ending before October 1, 1994, $483,000,000, and for the fiscal years ending before October 1, 1995, $761,000,000"; and

(2) Striking paragraphs (3) and (4) and renumbering paragraph (5) as paragraph (3).

SEC. 106. OTHER EXPENSES.

Section 506 of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 2205], is amended by striking subsection (c) and inserting the following new subsection (c) in lieu thereof:

"(c) Other Expenses.—The balance of the moneys available in the Trust Fund may be appropriated for costs incurred by the Federal Aviation Administration in operating and maintaining the aviation system in a safe and efficient manner. The total of amounts made available and appropriated from the Trust Fund for purposes specified in sections 505 and 506 of this Act in each fiscal year shall equal 85 percent of the total amount made available and appropriated to the Federal Aviation Administration for all purposes in that fiscal year, except for liquidating cash for aircraft loan guarantees."

SEC. 107. WEATHER SERVICES.

Section 506(d) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 2205(d)], is amended by striking the second sentence and inserting the following in lieu thereof:

"Expenditures for the purposes of carrying out this subsection shall be limited to $35,596,000 for fiscal year 1993, $37,800,000 for fiscal year 1994, and $39,000,000 for fiscal year 1995."

SEC. 108. NOISE SET-ASIDE.

Section 508(d) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 2207(d)(2)], is amended by substituting "12.5 percent" for "10 percent" and by adding the following proviso at the end thereof:

"Provided However, that not less than 2.5 percent of the funds designated by this section shall be made available on a priority basis to sponsors of primary airports and to contiguous political jurisdictions at locations where the Federal Aviation Administrator determines that compatible land use control measures have been adopted."

SEC. 109. MILITARY AIRPORT PROGRAM.

(a) Section 508(d)(5) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 2207(d)(5)], is amended by striking the phrase "1.5 percent" and substituting in lieu thereof the phrase "2.0 percent".

(b) Section 508(f)(1) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 2207(f)(1)], is amended by striking the number "8" and substituting in lieu thereof the number "25", and by striking the second sentence.

(c) Section 508(f)(5) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 2207(f)(5)], is amended by redesignating it as section 508(f)(5)(A) and adding a new section 508(f)(5)(B) to read as follows:

"(B) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 513(c)(1), not to exceed $6,000,000, in the aggregate, of the sums to be distributed at the discretion of the Secretary under section 507(c) for any three continuous fiscal years may be used by the sponsor of a current or former military airport designated by the Secretary under this subsection for construction, improvement, or repair of surface parking lots, fuel farms, and utilities."

SEC. 110. INTEGRATED URBAN TRANSPORTATION PLANNING.

Section 508 of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 2207], is amended by adding a new paragraph (g) to read as follows:

"(g) Not less than one-half of one percent of the funds made available by section 507(a)(1) of this title to an airport sponsor, which is located in a metropolitan area with a population in excess of one million persons, shall be used by an airport sponsor to support aviation-related planning activities of the metropolitan planning organization. Provided However, that the required contribution to a metropolitan planning organization shall not exceed $100,000 in a fiscal year, and, in the case of a metropolitan planning area served by more than one airport receiving funds under section 507(a)(1), the proportionate share of each airport shall be relative to the amount made available to it pursuant to section 507(a)(1)."

SEC. 111. DISADVANTAGED BUSINESS ENTERPRISE.

(a) Section 511(a)(17) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 2210(a)(17)], is amended by

(1) Inserting after the phrase "or other consumer products" the phrase "or which provide ground transportation, baggage carts, automobile rentals or other consumer services"; and

(2) Adding at the end thereof the following: "Air carriers, in their normal passenger or freight-carrying capacities, and other businesses that conduct an aeronautical activity at the airport shall not be included in the goal for the participation of small business concerns specified by this section. The Secretary may determine that a portion of the business conducted with management contractors or other firms may count toward the goal specified by this section."

(b) Section 505(d)(2)(A) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 2204(d)(2)(A)], is amended to add an inflation adjustment by deleting "$14,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$16,015,000".

SEC. 112. MAXIMUM OBLIGATION OF THE UNITED STATES.

Section 512(b) of the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 2211(b)], is amended by deleting the period at the end of paragraph (3) and adding the following in lieu thereof:

"except that, for fiscal year 1993 and thereafter, the maximum obligation of the United States may be increased for an airport, other than a primary airport, by an amount not to exceed 50 percent of the total increase in allowable project costs attributable to an acquisition of land or interests in land, based on current credible appraisals or a court award in a condemnation proceeding."

SEC. 113. STATE BLOCK GRANT PROGRAM.

The Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 2201 et seq.], is amended by repealing the current Section 534 and adding a new Section 534 to read as follows:

"SEC. 534. STATE BLOCK GRANT PROGRAM."

"(a) Subject to the requirements of subsection (c), States may administer block grants of funds made available under section 507(a)(3) for projects at general aviation airports, other than relievers and those designated under section 508(f).

"(b) Subject to the requirements of subsection (c), States which have demonstrated an ability to administer block grants for general aviation airports for a period of not less than one year may administer block grants for reliever and nonprimary commercial service airports, and allowances for the small airport fund, cargo entitlements, noise set-asides, and other discretionary funds related to such nonprimary airports.

"(c) The Secretary may approve an application submitted by a State only if the Secretary determines that the State—

"(1) has an agency or organization capable of intergovernmental project coordination and administering effectively any block grant made under this section;

"(2) uses a satisfactory airport system planning process which addresses airport development and land use controls in political jurisdictions adjacent to airports and has agreed to satisfy airport planning responsibilities of the Secretary under section 511(a)(15) of this title;

"(3) uses a capital improvement programming process acceptable to the Secretary;

"(4) has agreed to comply with Federal procedural and other standard requirements for administering any such block grant, including airport sponsor compliance with grant assurances; and

"(5) has agreed to provide the Secretary with such program information as the Secretary may require.

"Before determining that any planning process is satisfactory or any programming process is acceptable, the Secretary shall ensure that such process provides for meeting critical safety and security needs and that the programming process ensures that the needs of the national airport system will be addressed in deciding to which projects funds will be provided.

"(d) When the Secretary approves a block grant application pursuant to subsection (b), the offer shall, upon request of the State, provide for obligation of allowances to the State pursuant to sections 507 and 508 of this title for the current and next fiscal years.

"(e) As a condition precedent to approval of a block grant application submitted by a State under this section, the Secretary shall receive assurances, in writing, that the State will assume Federal environmental protection responsibilities as determined by the Secretary.

"(f) Subject to requirements established by the Secretary, the Secretary shall conduct reviews of the programs established by this section.

"(g) Subject to requirements established by the Secretary, not more than one percent of the funds apportioned to a State may be used to defray a State's program administration costs, except that, if one percent of the apportioned funds administered by a State is less than $75,000, $75,000 shall be available to defray such costs of administration.

"(h) The Secretary may establish such guidelines and requirements as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this section."

TITLE II—FEDERAL AVIATION ACT OF 1958 AMENDMENTS

SEC. 201. PROCUREMENT REFORM.

Section 303 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 1344] is amended by:

(1) Adding a new subsection (g) to read as follows:

"(g) LIMITED SOURCES OF PROCUREMENT.—The Administrator is authorized to exercise the procurement authority of section 2304 of title 10, United States Code, in the same manner and under the same circumstances as the agencies listed in section 2303(a) of title 10, United States Code.";

(2) Adding a new subsection (h) to read as follows:

"(h) CONTRACT TOWER PROGRAM.—The administrator may enter into a contract on a sole source basis with a State or political subdivision thereof for the purpose of permitting such State or political subdivision to operate an airport traffic control tower classified no higher than a Level I VFR Tower by the Administrator. Any such contract shall require that the State or political subdivision comply with all applicable safety regulations in its operation of the facility and with applicable competition requirements in the subcontracting of any work to be performed under the contract, and the Administrator shall satisfy himself that the State or political subdivision has the capability to comply with these requirements."

SEC. 202. AVIATION SECURITY TRAINING.

Section 316(c) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended [49 U.S.C. 1357] is amended by redesignating section 316(c) as section 316(c)(1) and adding a new subsection (2) to read as follows:

"(2) At the discretion of the Administrator, reimbursement may be made for travel, transportation, and subsistence expenses for the training of non-federal domestic and foreign security personnel whose services will contribute significantly to carrying out civil aviation security programs under this section."

SEC. 203. MILITARY CONTROLLER TRANSITION PROGRAM.

(a) This section may be cited as the "Military Air Traffic Controller Transition Act of 1992".

(b) Title III of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 1341 et seq.], is amended by adding a new section 322 to read as follows:

"SEC. 322. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law and without regard to maximum entry age provisions which would otherwise apply to original appointment as an air traffic controller in the Federal Aviation Administration, the Administrator may appoint in the excepted service retired military air traffic controllers of the United States Armed Forces, who have not attained the age of 46, to air traffic controller positions in such auxiliary flight service stations and at terminal air traffic control facilities designated as Level 1 or Level 2 by the Administrator.

"(b) Retired military air traffic controllers appointed by the Administrator to such air traffic controller positions, as authorized in subsection (a), shall:

"(1) meet such qualifications, including length and type of air traffic control experience, as the Administrator establishes;

"(2) be eligible for such benefits and, except as provided in paragraph (5), entitled to such tenure and appeal rights as are available to other retired military personnel serving in the excepted service of the Federal Government;

"(3) be eligible to serve only at such facilities and in such positions as identified in section (a), except that the Administrator may permit, in his discretion, individuals appointed to such facilities to continue to serve at such facilities if those facilities are upgraded;

"(4) not be entitled to use such service in an excepted appointment with the Federal Aviation Administration as a basis for securing a competitive appointment as an air traffic controller in the Federal service;

"(5) not be considered as air traffic controllers for the purposes of subchapter III of chapter 83 or chapter 84 of title 5, United States Code; and

"(6) be separated from the service on the last day of the month in which they attain 56 years of age.

"(c) The Administrator may prescribe such administrative guidelines and regulations as he determines necessary to implement the provisions of this section.

"(d) For purposes of this section "air traffic controller" has the meaning set forth in section 2109 of title 5 of the United States Code."

SEC. 204. AIRPORT CERTIFICATION.

Section 612(a) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 1432(a)], is amended by deleting the phrase "more than 30 seats" and by inserting in lieu thereof the phrase "ten or more passenger seats".

SEC. 205. CIVIL PENALTY ASSESSMENT PROGRAM.

(a) Section 609 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 1429], is amended in subsections (a) and (c)(3):

(1) By adding the phrase ", but shall be bound by the Federal Aviation Administration's interpretations of its regulations and the statutes it administers, unless it is shown that the interpretations are arbitrary, capricious, or otherwise not in accordance with the law" immediately following the phrase "In the conduct of its hearings the Board shall not be bound by findings of fact of the Administrator" in subsection (a) and immediately following the phrase "In the conduct of its hearings, the National Transportation Safety Board shall not be bound by findings of fact of the Administrator" in subsection (c)(3); and

(2) By adding the phrase "Administrator or the" immediately after the word "The" where it first appears in the last sentence.

(b) Section 1006 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 1486], is amended:

(1) In subsection (a) by adding the phrase "the Administrator, in the case of an order of the Board, or by" immediately following the phrase "filed within sixty days after the entry of such order, by"; and

(2) In subsection (e) by adding the phrase "and the Federal Aviation Administration's interpretations of its regulations or the statutes it administers, unless determined to be arbitrary, capricious, or otherwise not in accordance with the law," immediately after the phrase "the findings of fact by the Board or the Administrator, if supported by substantial evidence."

(c) Section 905 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 1475], is amended by:

(1) Striking the word "DEMONSTRATION" in the heading;

(2) Striking the phrase "(1) which involves an amount in excess of $50,000;" in subsection (c);

(3) Renumbering "(2)", "(3)" and "(4)" in subsection (c) as "(1)", "(2)", and "(3)", respectively; and

(4) Striking subsections (d)(3) and (d)(4).
(d) Section 304(d) of the Independent Safety Board Act of 1974, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 1902(d)], is amended by adding the phrase "the Federal Aviation Administrator or by" immediately following the phrase "filed within sixty days after the entry of such order, by".

SEC. 206. SANITARY LANDFILL NOTIFICATION.

Section 1101(a) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 1501(a)], is amended by:

(1) Inserting after the phrase "of the construction or alteration," the phrase "or the establishment or expansion,";

(2) Inserting after the phrase "or of the proposed construction or alteration," the phrase "or of the proposed establishment or expansion,"; and

(3) Inserting the phrase "or sanitary landfill" after the word "structure".

SEC. 207. AVIATION INSURANCE.

Section 1312 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 1542], is amended by deleting the date "September 30, 1992" and inserting in lieu thereof the date "September 30, 2002".

SEC. 208. CREDIT FOR FEES OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES.

Section 313(f)(4) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958, as amended [49 U.S.C. App. 1354(f)(4)], is amended by adding the phrase "or as a charge permitted by section 334 of title 49, United States Code," immediately after the word "subsection".

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE AVIATION SAFETY AND CAPACITY EXPANSION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1992

TITLE I

SEC. 101. This section provides that this Act may be cited as "The Aviation Safety and Capacity Expansion Act Amendments of 1992."

SEC. 102. This section expands AIP eligibility to include projects or portions of projects off the airport property that directly improve access to airports. Entitlement funds, but not discretionary funds or passenger facility charges, would be available for this purpose and all projects would have to be adequately related to the airport layout plan and be consistent with the area-wide transportation plan.

SEC. 103. This section extends contract authority through Fiscal Year 1995 for airport improvement grants and provides authorization levels for such grants.

SEC. 104. This section provides new authorizations for the FAA's Facilities and Equipment (F&E) program through Fiscal Year 1995. This section also establishes a new authorization in the event that it is necessary for the FAA to augment or substantially modify elements of its Capital Investment Plan, including the possible need to establish more than the currently-planned 23 Area Control Facilities.

SEC. 105. This section provides new authorizations for the FAA's Research, Engineering, and Development (R,E,&D) program through Fiscal Year 1995.

SEC. 106. This section restates the purposes for which the Trust Fund may be used and establishes that 85 percent of the FAA's total budget, which is made available and appropriated in a particular fiscal year, shall be funded from the Airport and Airway Trust Fund.

SEC. 107. This section establishes the amounts authorized from the Airport and Airway Trust Fund for the provision of aviation weather services by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

SEC. 108. This section increases the noise set-aside from 10 percent to 12.5 percent to further reduce the environmental effect of airports on surrounding communities. The additional 2.5 percent would go by priority to those airports with noncompatible development.

SEC. 109. This section expands the scope of the Military Airports Program from eight airports to up to 25 airports, increases the funding for such airports from "at least 1.5 percent" to "at least 2.0 percent" of AIP funds and adds parking lots, fuel farms and utilities as eligible projects as long as no more than $6 million is obligated per airport for these purposes over any three-year period.

SEC. 110. This section requires airport sponsors in metropolitan areas with over one million persons to support the urban transportation planning process by using a percentage of AIP entitlement funds up to a maximum obligation of $100,000. If two or more airports serve the same metropolitan area, their shared obligation of not to exceed $100,000 to the metropolitan planning organization shall be funded on a proportional basis, with each airport contributing a share based on the relative amount available to it in entitlement funds.

SEC. 111. This section resolves an unintended ambiguity of the 1987 legislation on disadvantaged business enterprise goals that appeared to narrow the then-existing program under Part 23 of title 49, and addresses management contracts and suppliers for the first time. The existing $14,000,000 ceiling for participation would be adjusted for inflation in the same manner that Congress used for the similar ceiling in surface transportation programs in the "Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act of 1991."

SEC. 112. This section authorizes up to a 50 percent increase in AIP funding for land acquisition costs for a nonprimary airport based on either a credible appraisal or a court award in a condemnation proceeding.

SEC. 113. This section amends the State Block Grant Pilot Program to allow all States to participate in a block grant program, with up to one percent of funds administered to be used for administrative costs. Initially, any State can take over responsibility for general aviation airports after meeting specified criteria. If a State successfully manages the program, it may seek FAA approval after one year to assume responsibility for reliever and small commercial service airports.

TITLE II—FEDERAL AVIATION ACT OF 1958 AMENDMENTS

SEC. 201. This section would authorize limited competition in FAA procurements when unique supplies or services are available from only a limited number of sources, consistent with current Coast Guard, NASA, and Department of Defense authority. The section also provides authority for sole source contracts with States or political subdivisions for the operation of Level 1 VFR air traffic control towers.

SEC. 202. This section would authorize the reimbursement of travel and per diem expenses of non-federal domestic and international personnel to undertake FAA civil aviation security training.

SEC. 203. This section would establish a program for hiring in the excepted service retired military air traffic controllers to work as FAA air traffic controllers in Level 1 and 2 terminal facilities and auxiliary Flight Service Stations.

SEC. 204. This section would expand the airports certificated by the FAA to include commuter airports serving scheduled air carriers with aircraft designed for 10 or more seats because of the safety benefits that accrue from having crash, fire and rescue equipment.

SEC. 205. This section would make permanent the FAA's Civil Penalty Assessment Program, and would remove the $50,000 ceiling for civil penalty cases that can be administratively heard before Administrative Law Judges. It would also provide for statutory deference to FAA of its interpretations of its regulations and statutes by the National Transportation Safety Board and the courts of appeal, and for an FAA right of appeal of adverse decisions of the NTSB, as called for by the Administrative Conference of the United States.

SEC. 206. This section would require persons to notify the FAA in order to establish or expand a sanitary landfill operation in the vicinity of an airport. Sanitary landfills attract large numbers of birds. When located in close proximity to an airport, a landfill site can result in an unsafe condition for aircraft operations because of the increased risk of bird strike incidents.

SEC. 207. This section would extend the Aviation Insurance Program through September 30, 2002.

SEC. 208. This section would authorize the FAA to retain and use fees collected for airman and repair station certification activities outside the United States. Such authority is currently provided through annual appropriations acts.

THE SECRETARY OF TRANSPORTATION,
Washington, DC, March 4, 1992.

HON. DAN QUAYLE,
President of the Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Enclosed for introduction and referral to the appropriate committee is a draft bill entitled "The Aviation Safety and Capacity Expansion Act Amendments of 1992."

The Federal Aviation Administration's (FAA) mission is to ensure the safety and efficiency of the nation's airspace, to promote civil aviation and a national system of airports, and to develop and operate a common system of air traffic control and air navigation for both civilian and military aircraft. The enclosed legislation will combine increased levels of overall spending for FAA programs with a series of program improvements that emphasize capacity expansion, to give the FAA needed tools to continue to fulfill its mandate.

This proposal advances many important tenets of our National Transportation Policy: investment in infrastructure, improved intermodal connections, greater reliance on user fees, stronger partnerships with state, local and private entities, improvement of technology, and sensitivity to the environment.

Our proposal seeks more than $15 billion over the next three years for capital and research projects and is designed to build upon the major programs authorized in the 1982-1990 timeframe to provide system-wide capacity growth. The proposal significantly increases funding for the FAA's comprehensive plan for modernizing and improving air traffic control and airway facilities to increase safety, efficiency, and capacity. The Capital Investment Plan constitutes a multi-year, complex combination of projects to modernize and expand the air traffic system, including the Advanced Automation System and the Voice Switching and Control System. A total of $8.6 billion is sought to support these programs.

The proposal also addresses the system's need for capacity through the Airport Improvement Program (AIP). In addition to seeking nearly $6 billion, the program would be improved in a number of significant ways. The successful program established in 1990 to convert former military air bases to civilian and joint use would be expanded to provide further capacity enhancement. AIP entitlement funds would be available for intermodal projects that directly improve access to airports. This is consistent with the principles of the NTP and is important to a number of airports where capacity is constrained by access to the airport.

In 1987, Congress authorized a pilot State Block Grant Program to let a limited number of states administer AIP funds that are apportioned to them for smaller airports. Based on the success of that program in states with adequate capabilities, we propose to expand the Block Grant Program to allow all states to participate once minimum standards have been met. The existing 10% set-aside for noise planning and mitigation would be increased to 12.5% to reduce further the environmental effect of airports on the surrounding communities. The new 2.5% would be designated on a priority basis for airports with compatible land-use controls in surrounding jurisdictions.

The proposal seeks more than $750 million for Research, Engineering, and Development over the three years of the bill to plan for the next generation air traffic control system fully exploit satellite technology, and increase levels of automation. We recognize that R&D investments can be some of the best investments made with public funds.

In conjunction with our proposal to increase FAA's capital and research funding over the next three years by 25% compared to the amounts made available over the past three years, we propose to finance 85% of FAA's budget from the Airport and Airway Trust Fund. This funding is consistent with civil use of the system.

An important element of this proposal is to improve further the procurement process relied upon by the FAA to achieve its mission. Accordingly, we seek the authority to undertake procurements with a limited number of sources when unique supplies or services are available from only a limited group of sources.

Our proposal contains many other important program improvements for the FAA. Among them are extension of the airport certification program to airports regularly served by smaller commercial aircraft, consistent with General Accounting Office recommendations; extension of the "war risk" aviation insurance program heavily relied on in Desert Shield/Desert Storm; making permanent the FAA's discretionary authority to reimburse some expenses of non-federal personnel attending FAA aviation security courses; opening up special excepted service appointments to retired military air traffic controllers who may be affected by defense cutbacks, and a permanent extension and modification of the civil penalty assessment program.

The proposed changes to current law are explained in the enclosed section-by-section analysis.

The FAA continues to excel in assuring the safe, efficient operation of our nation's aviation system, and it needs the resources to continue this work. Enactment of the enclosed proposal will provide the FAA with the means to meet the aviation challenges of today and tomorrow. I look forward to working with Congress to achieve our common objective.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that the enactment of this legislative proposal would be in accord with the program of the President.

Sincerely,

ANDREW H. CARD, JR. ●

● Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I join my colleagues in introducing the Aviation Safety and Capacity Expansion Act Amendments of 1992, which would reauthorize funding for the Federal Aviation Administration through 1995.

This legislation is of particular importance to Alaskans. The FAA serves a critical role in our State.

Alaska's transportation needs are unique. With one-fifth the land mass of the entire United States, we have only 12,000 miles of road—many of those unpaved. Roads do not connect our coastal communities with one another or with our interior. Only one road, the 50-year-old Alaska Highway, goes beyond the borders of our State into neighboring Canada.

More than 70 percent of our communities can be reached only by air. There isn't even a road into Juneau, our State capital. This means that mail, and even food, is delivered to most rural communities exclusively by air.

Because of this lack of roads, Alaska is vitally dependent on air transport. We have more pilots, private planes, and commuter aircraft per capita than any other State.

The FAA reauthorization bill proposes $14.8 billion over 3 years for the FAA's three capital programs: The Airport Improvement Program; facilities and equipment; and research engineering and development. This amounts to a funding increase of 25 percent over the past 3 years.

I want to congratulate the FAA, and our new Secretary of Transportation Andy Card, on preparing this bill.

However, I have concerns about a number of provisions, most significantly those dealing with the Civil Penalty Demonstration Program. Those provisions will have to be examined closely.

A greater concern, and one not addressed in this bill, is the overall state of the aviation industry in this country.

Over the past few years, the Nation has witnessed an unprecedented number of airline bankruptcies. Five airlines now control nearly 80 percent of the U.S. market. This situation poses a grave threat to America's rural communities.

The special needs of rural America are currently being met by a dwindling number of regional carriers. Yet, these carriers continue to be denied access to domestic and foreign markets crucial to their survival. Such a situation is unacceptable.

Senators MCCAIN and DANFORTH have joined other Members in introducing the Airline Competition Enhancement Act of 1992.

I believe this bill begins to address some of the concerns I have raised. But I also believe that more needs to be done. We in Congress cannot simply allow the regional air carriers to die off one by one. It cannot be allowed.

I look forward to working with Senators FORD and MCCAIN, not only on this important reauthorization bill, but also on additional legislation which will ensure that the needs of rural America will not be forgotten. ●

By Mr. D'AMATO:

S. 2574. A bill to reduce until January 1, 1995, the duty on certain watch glasses; to the Committee on Finance.

REDUCTION OF DUTY ON WATCH GLASSES

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to amend the the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States by reducing until January 1, 1995, the duty on certain watch glasses. My colleague, Congressman HORTON, is introducing companion legislation in the House.

This bill will simply clarify the Tariff Schedule for fancy shaped watch glasses by adjusting the tariffs placed on these glasses to the level of the tariffs placed on round glasses.

Having different tariff schedules for these types of crystals is neither necessary nor practical. The extra time and work entailed for invoices and customs forms by customs agents when determining whether a watch crystal is round or shaped is burdensome and costly.

The enactment of this duty reduction would make the tariffs on watch crystals the same, regardless of the design, configuration, or curvature of the crystal. Further, this reduction would lower costs to consumers by reducing manufacturing costs.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2574

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. WATCH GLASSES OTHER THAN ROUND WATCH GLASSES.

Subchapter II of chapter 99 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule of the United States is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new heading:

"9902.70.16 Watch glasses other than round watch glasses (provided for in subheading 7015.90.20) 4.9%	No change	No change	On or be- fore 12/ 31/94".

SEC. 2. APPLICABILITY.

The amendment made by section 1 applies with respect to articles entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after the 15th day after the date of the enactment of this Act. ●

By Mr. CRANSTON:

S. 2575. A bill to amend chapter 74 of title 38, United States Code, to revise certain pay authorities that apply to nurses and other health care professionals, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS NURSE PAY AMENDMENTS

● Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I have introduced today the proposed "Department of Veterans Affairs Nurse Pay Amendments of 1992." I am pleased that committee members DENNIS DECONCINI, DANIEL K. AKAKA, and THOMAS A. DASCHLE have joined me in introducing this measure.

The purpose of this legislation is to improve the Department of Veterans Affairs Nurse Pay Act of 1990, Public Law 101-366, so as to further the act's goal of providing VA with the tools necessary to establish appropriate locally competitive salary rates for registered nurses [RN's] and certified registered nurse anesthetists [CRNA's] and for certain other health-care personnel for whom VA may see a need to implement a system of locally competitive wages. In addition to the nurse pay provisions, the legislation contains provisions which would extend or make permanent VA's authority to carry out various health-care programs and health professional education programs.

SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS

Mr. President, I would first like to summarize the provisions of the bill.

NURSE PAY AMENDMENTS

This legislation contains amendments to the Department of Veterans Affairs Nurse Pay Act of 1990 that would enhance VA's ability to establish rates of pay that are sufficient for every VA health-care facility to recruit and retain appropriate numbers of highly qualified employees in covered positions. Specifically, these provisions would:

First, replace the current four-grade nurse pay schedule with a schedule of five grades, designated nurse I through nurse V.

Second, authorize the Secretary to establish and adjust the rates of basic pay for employees in covered positions at the Veterans Memorial Medical Center in the Philippines and the VA Medical Center in San Juan, PR, and its satellite facilities in order to provide rates of pay necessary to recruit and retain sufficient numbers of employees at those facilities.

Third, authorize the Secretary to permit the director of a VA health-care facility, in conducting a survey to establish locally competitive rates of pay for covered positions, to use data on beginning rates of compensation for employees in comparable positions at non-VA facilities in comparable, but not geographically coterminous, labor-market areas, if the director can demonstrate that sufficient data cannot be obtained within the local labor-market area to establish competitive salaries.

Fourth, authorize the director of a VA health-care facility to use, in accordance with regulations of the Secretary, data on compensation received by CRNA's employed by firms that provide anesthesia services on a contract basis within the local labor-market area, if the director can demonstrate that data on salaries paid to CRNA's employed by health-care facilities in that area are not sufficient to establish competitive salary rates.

Fifth, require the director of a VA health-care facility to survey the minimum rates of pay actually paid to—rather than established for—employees in covered positions by non-VA facilities in the local labor-market area.

Sixth, authorize the Secretary to increase the rate of basic pay paid to an employee in a covered position who transfers, upon the request of the Secretary, to a comparable position at a VA health-care facility at which the rate of pay for the position is lower than that paid by the VA facility at which the employee was previously employed.

Seventh, require VA to include information about the use of this transferred-employee pay authority in the annual report to Congress on the implementation of the VA Nurse Pay Act of 1990.

MISCELLANEOUS HEALTH-CARE, HEALTH-CARE PERSONNEL, AND EDUCATION PROVISIONS

The legislation also contains provisions that would extend or make permanent certain expiring VA authorities, as follows:

First, make permanent VA's authority to waive the restrictions on receipt of military retirement pay where a waiver is necessary for VA to meet special or emergency RN needs resulting from a critical shortage of well-qualified candidates.

Second, make permanent VA's authority to furnish respite care to veterans who are eligible to receive VA hospital, nursing home, or domiciliary care.

Third, extend for 4 years and 3 months, through December 31, 1996, VA's authority to contract with the Veterans Memorial Medical Center in the Philippines to furnish care to certain U.S. veterans.

Fourth, make permanent VA's authority to carry out the Department of Veterans Affairs Health Professional Scholarship Program.

Fifth, make permanent VA's authority to make grants to States for the construction or renovation of State veterans homes.

BACKGROUND

Mr. President, as the largest health-care system in the United States, employing over 35,000 nurses, VA experiences to a magnified degree the difficulties our Nation's health-care facilities face in nurse recruitment and retention. These difficulties are caused by a number of factors including a dramatic decline in enrollment in nursing schools during the 1980's, increasing use of complicated technology which requires advanced training, and increasing administrative burdens on nurses resulting from cutbacks in clerical personnel. Recent increases in nursing school enrollment and the ongoing recession have combined to mitigate VA's RN recruitment and retention difficulties but by no means have eliminated them.

Once VA's nurse recruitment and retention difficulties became apparent in the late 1980's, the House and Senate Committees on Veterans' Affairs began working on legislation to improve VA's ability to recruit and retain adequate numbers of highly qualified RN's and CRNA's. Those efforts culminated in the enactment of the Department of Veterans Affairs Nurse Pay Act of 1990, Public Law 101-366, on August 15, 1990. The act replaced VA's national salary schedule for RN's and CRNA's with a locality-pay system under which salaries for RN's and CRNA's at each VA health-care facility are established in relation to salaries and other benefits provided to RN's and CRNA's by non-VA health-care facilities in the same local labor-market area and authorizes VA to establish locality pay systems for certain additional health-care occupations.

Overall, the act appears to be a success. Since its implementation in April 1991, recruitment and retention of RN's and CRNA's has improved significantly at many VA health-care facilities. As is often the case with new endeavors, however, some problems persist. For example, officials at individual VA health-care facilities made a number of serious errors in conducting surveys of salaries paid by non-VA facilities in their local labor-market areas prior to the effective date of the new salary rates. Many of these errors have been corrected and VA officials believe that the second round of local labor-market surveys—conducted in December 1991—generally yielded more accurate results. However, certain widespread complaints about the survey process appeared to be attributable to VA's implementing regulations or the legislation rather than human error. In addition, hundreds of RN's and CRNA's have called the committee or written to me to express concerns regarding certain of the act's provisions. Many of my colleagues have also received complaints from RN's and CRNA's employed by VA health-care facilities in their States.

As part of my efforts to address these concerns, the committee staff, at my request, met with members and staff of organizations representing VA RN's and CRNA's, including the Nurses Organization of Veterans Affairs, the Association of VA Nurse Anesthetists, the American Association of Nurse Anesthetists, and the American Nurses Association. I also wrote to VA Secretary Edward J. Derwinski to request his views in response to complaints from individual RN's and CRNA's. In general, the Secretary and other VA officials have been quite responsive to inquiries from myself and other Members and I greatly appreciate their efforts.

Sensing a need for a comprehensive, objective analysis of VA's efforts to implement the act, the committee's ranking Republican member, Senator SPECTER, and I wrote to the Comptroller General on October 29, 1991, to request that GAO evaluate VA's implementation of the act. Also, late last summer, Secretary Derwinski established a task force composed of nursing service and personnel officials and representatives from VA health-care facilities to review the implementation of the act and formulate recommendations for its improvement. GAO evaluators presented their preliminary findings to the committee in mid-February and expect to complete a final report later this year. On January 30, 1992, I received from Secretary Derwinski a list of the VA task force's suggestions for improving the legislation and VA's implementing regulations. I understand that VA officials are presently evaluating these suggestions to determine what further action VA will take or propose.

FINDINGS AND POSSIBLE ADMINISTRATIVE SOLUTIONS

Mr. President, the preliminary findings of both GAO and the VA Nurse

Pay Task Force confirm many of the RN's and CRNA's complaints and suggest that improvements need to be made in both the legislation and VA's implementing regulations.

For example, with respect to VA regulations, GAO found that VA did not fully utilize Bureau of Labor Statistics methods for surveying salaries paid to employees in covered positions at non-VA health-care facilities in a VA facility's local labor-market area. In addition, a lack of central office guidance regarding RN and CRNA participation in data collection led to wide variations in their participation. At some VA health-care facilities, RN's and CRNA's had little or no opportunity to consult with personnel administrators regarding the survey process. Lack of RN and CRNA participation at these facilities appears to have contributed to the collection of inaccurate data on salaries paid by non-VA health-care facilities and, hence, to the detriment of the act's goals, the establishment of inadequate salary rates.

Mr. President, I am quite concerned about the problems RN's and CRNA's are experiencing with the survey process. However, I note that, in the main, these problems are regulatory rather than legislative in nature and, thus, are not addressed directly in the legislation I am introducing today. Rather, I am continuing to work with VA officials and organizations representing VA RN's and CRNA's to address these problems, and I look forward to their resolution.

LEGISLATIVE RELIEF

Mr. President, the legislation I am introducing today would mandate several important changes in the act in order to improve VA's ability to establish locally competitive salary rates and reduce the salary compression experienced by RN's in the intermediate and senior grades under the current system. With respect to the compression problem, about which numerous concerns have been expressed, the legislation would replace the current four-grade RN salary schedule with a five-grade schedule. An additional grade for RN positions would establish additional coordinates within the nurse salary matrix and should, therefore, enable VA to make more equitable distinctions in rates of compensation paid to an extensive range of clinical and supervisory nurses. For example, a separate grade could be created for assistant chief nurse and nurse supervisor positions. It is my intent that, in implementing the new grade, VA would revise the qualification standards for the various grade for RN's in order to alleviate the pay-compression problems for affected categories of RN's.

Other provisions of this legislation address complaints I have received regarding the survey process. For example, many CRNA's have criticized the act for providing for VA to survey only salaries paid by non-VA health-care facilities in local labor-market areas. These CRNA's have pointed out that many non-VA health-care facilities do not employ CRNA's but instead procure their services through arrangements with firms that provide anesthesia services on a contract basis. In local labor-market areas in which the majority of non-VA health-care facilities employ CRNA's through contracts with these firms, anesthesia contractors compete directly with VA facilities for CRNA's. To address this concern, the bill would give VA the authority to survey compensation paid to CRNA's by anesthesia contractors in those local labor-market areas.

Two other provisions of the proposed legislation would provide VA with additional tools for establishing more appropriate, locally competitive salary rates for all employees in covered positions. Directors of VA health-care facilities would be authorized to use data on beginning salary rates for employees in comparable positions at non-VA facilities in comparable, but not geographically coterminous, labor-market areas, if they can demonstrate that sufficient data cannot be obtained from non-VA facilities within the local labor-market area to establish competitive rates. This provision would be of considerable use to directors of VA health-care facilities in local, labor-market areas in which few non-VA facilities are located or in which no non-VA facilities employ personnel in certain covered positions.

Another provision would require the director of a VA health-care facility to survey the minimum rates of pay actually paid, commonly referred to as "transaction rates," to employees in covered positions by non-VA facilities in the local, labor-market area in which the VA facility is located. The act requires VA to survey the minimum rates of pay established for corresponding positions. However, many non-VA facilities routinely negotiate starting salaries for individual employees that are significantly higher than the established minimum rates of pay for the positions these employees occupy. Because data on transaction rates more accurately reflect salaries paid to employees in covered positions by non-VA health-care facilities, use of such data should improve VA's ability to establish locally competitive salary rates.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, I plan for the committee to consider this legislation at a hearing in May. At that hearing, I also expect that the committee will receive testimony from GAO based on its study of the implementation of the 1990 act. I look forward to working with the Ranking Republican Member of our committee, Senator ARLEN SPECTER, and other members of the committee in the development of this legislation.

RN's and CRNA's play very important roles in the furnishing of VA health-care services and we must do all we can to ensure that VA has the tools it requires to recruit and retain highly qualified individuals for these positions.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

S. 2575

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE TO TITLE 38.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Department of Veterans Affairs Nurse Pay Amendments of 1992".

(b) REFERENCES TO TITLE 38.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

SEC. 2. REVISION TO NURSE PAY GRADE SCHEDULE.

(a) REVISION.—Section 7404(b)(1) is amended in the matter relating to "NURSE SCHEDULE" by striking out "Director grade." and all that follows through "Entry grade." and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Nurse V.
"Nurse IV.
"Nurse III.
"Nurse II.
"Nurse I."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 7451(b) of such title is amended by striking out "four" and inserting in lieu thereof "five".

SEC. 3. PERMANENT AUTHORITY TO WAIVE CERTAIN LIMITATIONS APPLICABLE TO RECEIPT OF RETIREMENT PAY BY NURSES.

Section 7426(c) is amended by striking out the second sentence.

SEC. 4. AUTHORITY TO ESTABLISH SPECIAL RATES OF PAY FOR EMPLOYEES OF FACILITIES LOCATED OUTSIDE THE CONTIGUOUS UNITED STATES, ALASKA, AND HAWAII.

Section 7451(a)(3) is amended—

(1) by striking out "(3) The rates" and inserting in lieu thereof "(3)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the rates"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(B) Under such regulations as the Secretary shall prescribe, the Secretary shall establish and adjust the rates of basic pay for covered positions at the following health-care facilities in order to provide rates that enable the Secretary to recruit and retain sufficient numbers of health-care personnel in such positions at such facilities:

"(i) The Veterans Memorial Medical Center in the Republic of the Philippines.

"(ii) Department of Veterans Affairs health-care facilities located outside the contiguous States, Alaska, and Hawaii."

SEC. 5. AUTHORITY TO CARRY OUT CERTAIN SURVEYS OF LABOR MARKETS IN DETERMINING RATES OF COMPENSATION OF HEALTH CARE PROFESSIONALS.

Section 7451(d)(3) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subparagraph (C) and (D) as subparagraphs (E) and (F), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subparagraph (B) the following new subparagraphs (C) and (D):

“(C) In the event that the director of a Department health-care facility who conducts a survey of beginning rates of compensation for corresponding health-care professionals in the labor-market area of the facility under subparagraph (B) determines (under regulations prescribed by the Secretary) that the size or composition of the labor-market area provides information that is not sufficient to permit the adjustments referred to in that subparagraph for the applicable covered positions, the director may conduct a survey of such rates of compensation in other comparable labor-market areas (as so determined). Any survey under this subparagraph shall be conducted in accordance with the provisions of subparagraph (B).

“(D) In the event that the director of a Department health-care facility who conducts a survey of beginning rates of compensation for certified registered nurse anesthetists in the labor-market area of the facility under subparagraph (B), and, if appropriate, a survey of such rates of compensation for such nurse anesthetists in comparable labor-market areas under subparagraph (C), determines (under regulations prescribed by the Secretary) that neither of the survey methods described in such subparagraphs is sufficient to permit the adjustments referred to in subparagraph (B) for such nurse anesthetists employed by the facility, the director may use data on the compensation paid to such nurse anesthetists under contracts with entities that provide anesthesia services through such nurse anesthetists in the labor-market area.”

SEC. 6. REVISION OF BASIS FOR CALCULATION OF COMPENSATION OF CORRESPONDING HEALTH CARE POSITIONS.

Section 7451(d)(6)(A)(i) is amended by striking out “established” and inserting in lieu thereof “paid”.

SEC. 7. ADJUSTMENT IN GRADE OR STEP OF CERTAIN HEALTH-CARE PROFESSIONALS WHO TRANSFER TO OTHER DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS FACILITIES.

(a) AUTHORITY TO ADJUST.—Subsection (e) of section 7452 is amended—

(1) by striking out “(e) An employee” and inserting in lieu thereof “(e)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), an employee”; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph (2):

“(2) The Secretary may establish for an employee referred to in paragraph (1) who transfers (upon the request of the Secretary) to that facility a rate of basic pay that is higher than the rate of basic pay otherwise paid by that facility to an employee of that grade and step if the Secretary determines that such rate of pay is necessary to recruit the employee for employment in that facility. Whenever the Secretary exercises the authority under the preceding sentence relating to the rate of basic pay of a transferred employee, the Secretary shall, in the next annual report required under section 7451(g) of this title, provide justification for doing so.”

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 7451(g) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(9) The justification required by section 7452(e)(2) of this title.”

SEC. 8. PERMANENT AUTHORITY TO FURNISH RESPITE CARE.

Section 1720B is amended by striking out subsection (c).

SEC. 9. EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY TO ENTER INTO CONTRACTS WITH RESPECT TO THE VETERANS MEMORIAL MEDICAL CENTER IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Section 1732(a) is amended in the matter above paragraph (1) by striking out “September 30, 1992,” and inserting in lieu thereof “December 31, 1996.”

SEC. 10. PERMANENT AUTHORITY TO CARRY OUT HEALTH PROFESSIONAL SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM.

(a) PERMANENT AUTHORITY.—Subchapter II of chapter 76 is amended by striking out section 7618.

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter 76 is amended by striking out the item relating to section 7618.

SEC. 11. PERMANENT AUTHORITY TO MAKE GRANTS TO STATES RELATING TO STATE HOMES.

Section 8133(a) is amended in the first sentence by striking out “through September 30, 1992,” and inserting in lieu thereof a period.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. SIMON:

S. 2576. A bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to direct the Federal Communications Commission to establish an ethnic and minority affairs section; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

ETHNIC AND MINORITY AFFAIRS CLEARINGHOUSE ACT

• Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, since the beginning of the electronic media age, America has struggled with the portrayals of minorities and those of different ethnic backgrounds on television, cable and the radio. Vast segments of America's diverse population have either been unrepresented, underrepresented or inaccurately represented. This is not healthy for our multicultural society.

Complaints made to the Federal Communications Commission [FCC] about offensive portrayals go into the general pool and are lost. No tracking mechanism currently exists to document complaints about negative stereotyping, inappropriate comments and other unacceptable actions. This makes it impossible to develop an accurate sense of the extent and source of the problem.

I believe this tracking problem is easily corrected with a minimum of bureaucracy. Today, I am introducing legislation that is the companion to a bill already introduced in the House by Representative ELIOT ENGEL. I applaud his leadership in this area.

The legislation would create a department within the FCC to collect, analyze, and prepare information on the portrayal of ethnic and minority groups in the media. This information would then be made available upon request and without charge. The bill additionally calls for an annual conference to focus attention on the image of ethnic and minority groups in the media. The FCC would be required to prepare an annual report detailing the activities of the ethnic and minority affairs office, including a compilation of all complaints, grievances, and opinions.

According to a former director of the FCC Office of Congressional and Public Affairs, the goals of this legislation can be accomplished through the creation of a newly created branch chief, and a secretary and with assistance from existing division staff. A computer system and program are already in place in the Consumer Assistance and Small Business Division of the Office of Public Affairs. It is my understanding that, because this office already handles similar functions for religious broadcasting, the addition of the ethnic and minority concerns should not be burdensome.

I believe this information is necessary in order for us to begin eliminating ethnic and minority stereotypes in the media. There is no question of the impact the media has on our society; we therefore, need to be particularly vigilant. This tracking system will aid organizations in directing efforts at the center of the problem instead of around the edges.

As has been said many times before: Information is power. The information gained through the statistic gathering will take us one step further down the road of eradicating bigotry. We must show the American people that the Federal Government cares. I urge my colleagues to move quickly and enact this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of the bill be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2576

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Ethnic and Minority Affairs Clearinghouse Act of 1992”.

SEC. 2. ESTABLISHMENT OF ETHNIC AND MINORITY AFFAIRS SECTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 5 of the Communications Act of 1934 is amended by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

“(e)(1) There shall be established within the Commission an ethnic and minority affairs section. Such ethnic and minority affairs section shall—

“(A) establish a clearinghouse for complaints, grievances, and opinions relating to radio, television, and cable television broadcast programming and their depiction of ethnic and minority groups;

“(B) collect, analyze, and prepare information from public and private agencies relating to the portrayal of ethnic and minority groups by radio, television, and cable television broadcast programming, and furnish such information, upon request and without charge, to public and private agencies that serve the needs and interests of such groups;

“(C) conduct an annual conference which shall be designed to focus public attention upon the images of ethnic and minority groups depicted by radio, television, and cable television broadcast programming, discuss the impact which these images have on such groups, and encourage the participation of such individuals and public and private organizations that serve the interests of such groups; and

"(D) prepare and transmit to Congress an annual report which details the activities of the ethnic and minority affairs section, including a compilation of all complaints, grievances, and opinions filed under paragraph (1).

"(2) The chairman of the Commission shall establish an advisory committee to assist the ethnic and minority affairs section in implementing the annual conference pursuant to paragraph (1)(C).

"(3) The committee shall be composed of 15 members chosen from among radio and television broadcasters and program producers, educators, representatives from the mental health community, and leaders from ethnic and minority communities."

(b) TIME LIMIT.—The Commission shall establish the ethnic and minority affairs section referred to in subsection (a) not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated $200,000 for each of the fiscal years 1993, 1994, 1995, and 1996 for carrying out the amendments made by this Act.♦

By Mr. GARN (for himself and Mr. HATCH):

S. 2577. A bill to provide for the exchange of certain Federal lands within the State of Utah, between the State of Utah and the Secretary of the Interior; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

UTAH FEDERAL LANDS EXCHANGE

Mr. GARN. Mr. President, I am pleased to rise today to introduce legislation to redress an unfortunate circumstance in my State. That circumstance results from conditions placed upon the State of Utah by the Federal Government at the time it entered the Union in 1896. I appreciate Senator Hatch for joining me in this effort to help the people of Utah. I am especially grateful to Governor Norm Bangertter for his tireless efforts to build support for this proposal at home.

Stated simply, at the time of statehood, the Congress granted Utah four one-square-mile land sections " * * * for the support of the common schools * * * " A quick glance at a Utah State map reveals a blue pox of hodgepodge State inholdings within Federal lands. This configuration is inefficient, cumbersome and deprives the school system of Utah tens, if not hundreds of millions of dollars. If properly managed, the income generating capability of these lands would significantly reduce the tax burden of every person in the State.

Today, Mr. President, this checkerboard scheme has the effect of giving management decision power over these school sections to the managers of these Federal lands which surrounds them.

For example, when the U.S. Forest Service or the Bureau of Land Management decide certain lands containing developable coal or other resources are better suited for other purposes, then, despite the wishes of the State, the Federal land manager can effectively veto those wishes. As a result of this dilemma, in 1991, State lands generated less than 2 percent of Utah's school budget. Two percent. The 98-percent difference is made up by the people paying inordinately high property taxes.

Utah spends more on education as a percent of the total State budget than any other State, Mr. President. Yet per capita expenditures on students is the lowest of the lowest of the fifty States. You may ask how can this be? Well, it's really very simple. The people of Utah have more kids per family than any other State. We don't complain about the kids because they represent our future. But it is no longer possible to sit idly by while the Federal Government's land management policies actively deprive Utah's State school trust lands of their revenue producing potential. Parents, teachers and administrators in PTAs throughout Utah are telling their elected representatives to fix the problem, obtain Utah's fair share of its legacy. Our legislation aims to do just that.

The bill we are introducing involves the exchange of State lands located within certain National Forests in Utah for Federal mineral interests in other Forest Service lands in Utah. It also includes an exchange of State lands located within units of the National Park System and the Navajo and Goshute Indian Reservations and adjacent Bureau of Land Management lands. In short, the effect of this legislation would be to remove the State inholdings from within each of these areas in exchange for revenue producing lands or royalties for the benefit of the State school trust.

Mr. President, Governor Norm Bangertter has recommended these proposals to generate revenues for Utah's school system. In 1896, the Congress specifically set aside these lands for that purpose. Now, 96 years later, the taxpaying parents of Utah's schoolchildren are demanding of their Representatives in Congress that this Statehood promise be carried out. Senator HATCH and I are confident that our colleagues will give this proposal a fair hearing. All we ask is that Utahans be allowed to benefit from their own lands. We ask for no hand out. We simply want what has been taken away from us de facto by the Federal land management agencies, whose objectives often differ from the legal mandate of the State to provide for the education of its children. Mr. President, I hope the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee will hold hearings on this initiative very soon.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, when Utah gained its statehood, it was given one-ninth of all acres in the State for the support of the public schools. Out of every 36 square mile township, Utah was given 4 sections. Unfortunately, much of that land now lies in the middle of Indian reservations, Forest Service units, National Parks, Monuments, Recreation areas, and land managed by the Bureau of Land Management. These lands, referred to as inholdings, are scattered throughout the State in remote, inaccessible areas.

The isolated nature of these sections has made it impossible for the State to control the management or economic development of its land, and as a result, the Utah school trust fund has been deprived of much needed revenues.

The revenues from school trust lands sales, mineral leases, and mineral royalties goes into a permanent account. Interest earnings from that account go into the State's annual education budget. At the end of 1991, Utah's permanent school trust fund contained $44 million. When compared to its other school trust fund neighbors of Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, New Mexico, and Wyoming, Utah is far behind. Colorado's trust fund, which is the next smallest, is over $200 million. New Mexico has over $2.5 billion in its trust fund.

This bill will provide a process to exchange Utah's inholdings for Federal lands and part of the royalties the Federal Government receives from mineral leases in Utah. I believe this exchange would be beneficial to both the Federal Government and the State of Utah. The Federal Government would gain ownership of lands of great scenic value while the State would be able to better manage its school lands and generate revenues that are desperately needed by Utah school districts.

Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleague in introducing this legislation and I look forward to working with him in an effort to pass this bill that is so vital to Utah.

By Mr. LIEBERMAN (for himself, Mr. DODD, Mr. BRYAN, and Mr. LEVIN):

S. 2578. A bill to prohibit the receipt of advance fees by unregulated loan brokers; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

ADVANCE FEE LOAN SCAM PREVENTION ACT

♦ Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I am pleased today to be joined by Senators DODD, BRYAN, and LEVIN in introducing the "Advance-Fee Loan Scam Prevention Act of 1992." Congressman Schumer is also introducing a companion measure. This bill combats a type of scam being perpetrated by the bottom feeders of our society, who are preying upon people's desperation during hard times. The Governmental Affairs Committee's Ad Hoc Subcommittee on Consumer and Environmental Affairs, which I chair, held a hearing to examine this problem this past December. What we learned proves that when the going gets tough, the swindlers get going.

These schemes are devilishly simple. The perpetrator takes out an ad in the paper advertising his or her ability to help people secure a loan. When the consumer, who is usually down on his luck and being hounded by creditors, calls, he or she is told that to get a loan they must pay a "processing" or "good faith" fee of anywhere from $100 to $100,000. The con artist then takes the money and runs. To add insult to injury, some of these con artists are even using "300" numbers to bilk even more money from the desperate. During my investigation, I received a letter from one woman who paid $50 just for the initial, 3-minute call to a 900 number in response to an ad promising easy credit cards.

I also learned that you can't even defend yourself by asking good questions. One loan broker shut down by Connecticut Attorney General Richard Blumenthal told potential victims:

—He was a member of the Greater Hartford Chamber of Commerce—he wasn't;

—His fees for services were refundable—most weren't;

—He guaranteed he would procure loans of from $1,000 to $10,000—he didn't;

—Loans would come within 14 days—they didn't.

The recession has turned America into a lucrative hunting ground for these scams. Boiler rooms around the country are humming with activity, taking calls from desperate people in need of a loan. The Better Business Bureau has estimated that financially strapped consumers and small businesses are losing a million dollars or more each month to loan broker con artists. That's a million dollars a month that could otherwise be used to help people and businesses stay afloat and ride out the recession. It's a million dollars a month that is not helping to fuel our recovery.

At our hearing, we heard testimony about what States are doing successfully to combat advance-fee loan scams. The State of Florida last year passed a law to prohibit unregulated loan brokers from charging advance fees, and making violations of that law a felony. As a result, Florida has seen an 85 percent drop in the number of boiler rooms operating within its borders. Other States, including my own State of Connecticut, have moved to follow Florida's lead. A bill, modelled on the Florida law, has cleared committee and is now awaiting action in the Connecticut Senate.

But these actions by the States cannot fully address this problem. Many of these loan scammers are sophisticated, and deliberately operate across State lines in order to attempt to frustrate State law enforcement efforts. Indeed, last December 38 States asked the Federal Trade Commission to facilitate a comprehensive, nationwide strategy to eradicate advance fee loan schemes.

This bill complements that effort. In this bill, we would prohibit unregulated loan brokers from charging fees before closing a loan. An unregulated loan broker who violates this law would be subject to criminal penalties of up to 5 years in prison, fines and civil forfeiture of all ill-gotten gains. This bill also gives the FTC the power to seek refunds for consumers, damages and civil penalties of up to $10,000 from violators. Federal law enforcement officers will have a powerful tool that they can bring to bear especially to stop interstate advance fee loan fraud. Of course, this bill does not preempt State efforts to combat this problem.

Mr. President, it is my hope that we can move this bill quickly through Congress. Every day we delay is another day that people are being ripped off. I intend to work to try to pass this bill this year.

I request unanimous consent that a copy of the bill and a summary of the bill be reprinted in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

SUMMARY OF ADVANCE-FEE LOAN SCAM PREVENTION ACT OF 1992 INTRODUCED BY SENATORS LIEBERMAN, DODD, BRYAN, AND LEVIN, AND BY CONGRESSMAN SCHUMER

This bill will protect consumers against unregulated con artists who hold themselves out as loan brokers, but who rarely, if ever, actually secure a loan for consumers. These con artists usually set up a boiler room operation with an 800 or 900 number and place advertisements in the newspaper encouraging consumers to call if they need a loan. When the consumer calls, they are usually told that they must pay a fee in advance. Once the fee is paid, the consumer is lulled until the broker disappears. These scams are purposefully perpetrated across State lines in order to hinder State law enforcement. The Council of Better Business Bureaus has estimated that consumers are losing $1 million a month to these scams.

The bill prohibits any loan broker who is not regulated by the Federal Government or by the State where the consumer is located from charging any fees to the consumer in advance of closing. The bill specifically exempts banks, savings and loans, credit unions, mortgage banks, and servicers approved by Fannie Mae [FNMA] or Freddie Mac [FHLMC], and others, such as consumer finance companies, real estate agents, attorneys, and loan brokers who are licensed and regulated or supervised by the Federal Government or the State where the consumer is located. Application fees charged by auto dealers and sellers of consumer goods are also not affected by this bill.

The bill does not prohibit bona fide unregulated loan brokers from collecting fees for services provided. The bill only requires that these fees be collected at or after closing of a loan, because of the tremendous amount of fraud being perpetrated now.

Violations of this bill are felonies. Violations carry penalties of up to 5 years in prison, fines, and civil forfeiture.

The Federal Trade Commission is also authorized to enforce this act. The bill allows the FTC to recover refunds for consumers, damages, and civil penalties of up to $10,000 per violation.

This bill is modeled after successful State legislation. After Florida passed a similar bill, the number of boiler rooms in Florida dropped 85 percent. The Florida law and other similar State laws, however, cannot adequately protect consumers against loan brokers located out of State.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2578

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This act may be cited as the "Advance Fee Loan Scam Prevention Act of 1992".

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act—

(1) LOAN BROKER.—The term "loan broker"—

(A) means any person who—

(i) offers to find for any individual, consumer credit;

(ii) for, or in expectation of, a consideration, assists or advises an individual on obtaining, or attempting to obtain, consumer credit; or

(iii) acts or purports to act for, or on behalf of, a loan broker for the purpose of soliciting individuals interested in obtaining consumer credit; and

(B) does not include—

(i) any insured depository institution (as defined in section 3(c)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act), any insured credit union (as defined in section 101(7) of the Federal Credit Union Act), or any depository institution which is eligible for deposit insurance under the Federal Deposit Insurance Act or the Federal Credit Union Act and has deposit insurance coverage provided by any State;

(ii) any lender approved by the Federal Housing Administration, Farmers Home Administration, or Department of Veterans Affairs;

(iii) any seller or servicer of mortgages approved by the Federal National Mortgage Association or the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation; or

(iv) any consumer finance company, retail installment sales company, securities broker or dealer, real estate broker or real estate salesperson, attorney, credit card company, installment loan licensee, mortgage broker or lender, or insurance company if such person is—

(I) licensed by and subject to regulation or supervision by any agency of the United States or by the State in which the person seeking to utilize the services of the loan broker resides; and

(II) is acting within the scope of that license or regulation.

(2) ADVANCE FEE.—The term "advance fee"—

(A) means any fee (including any advance payment of interest or other fees for any extension of consumer credit) which is assessed or collected by a loan broker from any person seeking the consumer credit before the extension of such credit; and

(B) does not include—

(i) any amount that the loan broker can demonstrate is collected solely for the purpose of payment to unaffiliated, third party vendors for actual expenses incurred and payable before the extension of any consumer credit; or

(ii) any application fee or other charge assessed or collected—

(I) by a retail seller of property that is primarily for personal, family, or household purposes or automobiles; and

(II) in connection with a consumer credit transaction in which a purchase money security interest arising under an installment sales contract (or any equivalent consensual security interest) is created or retained against any such property or automobile being sold by the retail seller to the person seeking the extension of credit.

(3) CONSUMER; CREDIT.—The terms "consumer" and "credit" have the meanings given to such terms in section 103 of the Truth in Lending Act.

SEC. 3. PROHIBITION ON ADVANCE FEES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—No loan broker may receive an advance fee in connection with—

(1) arranging or attempting to arrange consumer credit;

(2) offering to find for any individual consumer credit; or

(3) advising any individual as to how to obtain consumer credit.

(b) PROHIBITION ON FALSE OR MISLEADING REPRESENTATIONS.—No loan broker may—

(1) make or use any false or misleading representations or omit any material fact in the offer or sale of the service of a loan broker; or

(2) engage, directly or indirectly, in any act that operates or would operate as fraud or deception upon any person in connection with the offer or sale of the services of a loan broker, notwithstanding the absence of reliance by the person to whom the loan broker's services are offered or sold.

SEC. 4. ENFORCEMENT BY THE FTC.

Any violation of section 3 of this Act shall—

(1) be treated as a violation of a rule of the Federal Trade Commission issued pursuant to section 18(a)(1)(B) of the Federal Trade Commission Act; and

(2) be subject to enforcement by the Federal Trade Commission under the enforcement and penalty provisions applicable to violations of such rules.

SEC. 5. CRIMINAL PENALTY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Whoever knowingly violates section 3 shall be fined under title 18, United States Code, imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

(b) CIVIL FORFEITURE.—Section 981(a)(1)(C) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking "title or a violation" and inserting "title, a violation"; and

(2) by inserting ", or a violation of section 5(a) of the Advance Fee Loan Scam Prevention Act of 1992" before the period.

(c) NONMAILABLE MATTER.—For purposes of section 3005(a) of title 39, United States Code, a violation of section 3 by any person shall constitute prima facie evidence that such person is engaged in conducting a scheme or device for obtaining money or property through the mail by means of false representations.●

● Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the legislation introduced by Senator LIEBERMAN to eliminate one of the most disagreeable types of consumer abuses: advance fee loan scams.

The economic pressures of the current recession have created fertile ground for this type of consumer scam. At the same time individuals and small businesses across the country are struggling to make ends meet, they are falling prey to these costly scams.

The scams are fairly simple. In most cases, the scam starts with a classified advertisement promising easy availability of unsecured loans, regardless of employment status or past credit history. The victim calls the loan broker, who takes some basic information, and tells the victims that their loans have been approved. Before receiving the funds, however, the victim needs to send the broker a fee—typically several hundred dollars. As you probably expect, the victim rarely hears from the loan broker again.

These scams are being run all over the country, and the amount of money involved is enormous. The Better Business Bureau has estimated that it received over 300,000 complaints about advance fee loan scams in 1991 alone.

Just a few days ago, New York officials indicted three men on charges of running an advance fee loan scam. State attorney general Robert Abrams charged that the scheme involved more than $900,000 stolen from more than 3,500 loan seekers.

Advertisements for these scams are not hard to find. In today's Washington Times, I found the following classified ad:

BORROW CASH UNSECURED
$2,500 TO $25,000 UNSECURED

A member of my staff called the 800 number listed, and asked how to apply for a loan. What followed was a picture perfect script for an advance fee loan scam. My staff was told that he had called a loan broker service, whose review department would find a loan for $5,000 at a 12-percent interest rate. My staff person mentioned that he had experienced some credit problems, and that the banks had turned him down for a loan. The loan broker advised him that bad credit is not a problem. At the end of the conversation, the loan broker mentioned the fee—$299, due within 24 hours after the loan was approved. The fee had to be received by the broker before the loan could be released.

While I cannot say for certain that this "loan broker" is not legitimate, it certainly appears that the odds are good that consumers who pay the $299 fee will never receive their loan, or hear from the "loan broker" again.

A similar classified ad appeared in the Washington Times on both March 1 and February 1. While the promise was the same, "$5,000 to $25,000 UNSE-CURED," the 800 numbers were different. To no great surprise to me, the 800 number advertised in February and March has been disconnected. In fact, of four ads appearing in the Washington Times on February 1 promising easy credit to individuals, three advertisers can no longer be reached at the 800 numbers listed in the advertisements. From the March 1 Washington Times, none of three easy credit advertisers could be reached at the numbers provided.

These scams have been around for years—in fact, in 1977, while I was serving in the Nevada legislature, we passed a statute prohibiting advance fees for loans. The State of Nevada, like many other States, has been vigorously investigating and prosecuting these scams, but there are limits to what the States can do without a Federal statute.

One particularly egregious example has recently been uncovered by the State of Nevada's Financial Institutions Division. On February 14 of this year, the State closed down an advance loan fee scam being operated in Carson City under the name of the "Agape Christian Church." Apparently, this operation is identical to another operation, "Our Father's Congregation," that was shut down in a number of States last year.

Nevada officials estimate that between October 25, 1991 and February 14, 1992, the leader of the Agape Christian Church in Carson City, who referred to himself as a "regional disciple," sent out over 75,000 mail solicitations promising interest free loans. The solicitations were sent to vulnerable individuals gathered from various mailing lists purchased by the scam operators.

The original solicitation promised information about the interest free loans for $29. Consumers who responded were provided a 50-page book describing the purported church's activities, and outlining how the interest free loans could be obtained. Individuals interested in obtaining loans were required to pay an up front fee of $300 for every $100,000 of loan being applied for. Following the initial fee, victims were told they needed to make various types of contributions to the church over the course of a year before the loan could be granted. Often, the total contributions and fees demanded exceeded 20 percent of the value of the loan. According to Nevada officials, no loans were ever granted.

The State of Nevada did its best to fight off this scam. As I mentioned above, Nevada does have a criminal statute banning advance fee loans. These scam operators, however, were careful—they did not solicit business in the State of Nevada. As far as Nevada officials can tell, all of the victims were from outside the State.

The State did issue a cease and desist order on October 25, on the grounds that church officials were not licensed to provide loans. The church continued to mail solicitations from Carson City, but had the stolen funds mailed to an office in the State of Washington—out of the reach of Nevada officials.

In the end, the scam artist's greed was his downfall. Nevada investigators discovered that while the funds were mailed to Washington, the leader of the scam wanted to deposit the checks himself, so the checks were sent to him in Carson City. The State of Nevada was able to close down the operation, and is currently attempting to recover any assets of the church. The State has seized one bank account with a $41,000 balance, and has identified several other accounts held by the church. The "regional disciple," however, has filed for bankruptcy, and it is unclear if Nevada will ever be able to recover any of the stolen money. In addition, the State has not yet been able to file any criminal charges against the operator of the scam.

The State is engaged in several other innovative methods of putting these criminals out of business. For example, the State has been purchasing classified advertisements in some newspapers where the advance fee loan scams ads appear. The State's advertisement advises consumers that the advertisements offering easy credit are likely advance fee loan scams, and that individuals should contact the State before sending any money to these operations.

The States are making an effort to eliminate these scams, but the limits to their jurisdiction make it difficult to make any real progress. Several years ago, Florida was one of the most popular States to run advance fee loan scams. Florida then passed a tough advance fee loan scam law, and many of the Florida operations have disappeared. At the same time, however, it appears that the number of scams operating out of Georgia has increased. Faced with government action in Florida, scam operators have simply moved to Georgia.

The Federal Trade Commission has recognized the growing prevalence of these scams, and has been working with the FBI, Secret Service, U.S. Postal Service inspectors, and the State law enforcement and regulatory agencies to increase the sharing of information between the agencies, and to increase consumer awareness of the scams.

In spite of all these efforts, the advance fee loan scam problem continues to grow. Senator LIEBERMAN's bill, which establishes both civil and criminal penalties for operating these scams, will be extremely effective in putting these operations out of business.

Mr. President, I commend Senator LIEBERMAN for the work he has done in preparing this legislation, and I am hopeful that we can pass the bill in the current session of Congress.

I ask unanimous consent that the attached statement be inserted into the record as if read following Senator LIEBERMAN's statement on the introduction of legislation to prohibit advance fees for loans.●

By Mr. LAUTENBERG (for himself and Mr. JEFFORDS):

S. 2579. A bill to improve battery recycling and disposal; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

DRY CELL BATTERY MANAGEMENT ACT

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. Presiding, I rise today to introduce the Dry Cell Battery Management Act of 1992. I am pleased that my colleague from Vermont, Senator JEFFORDS, is cosponsoring this bill.

The Dry Cell Battery Management Act will reduce the amount of mercury used in disposable batteries and will mandate the recycling or proper disposal of used mercuric oxide and rechargeable dry cell batteries containing cadmium and lead. This bill, together with S. 730, the Reduction of Metals in Packaging Act which I introduced last year, will play an important role in reducing the amounts of toxic heavy metals entering our air, water, and soil.

These toxic metals threaten human health. They have been linked to cancer, decreased motor function, memory loss, brain function disorders, kidney, liver and lung disease, damage to the nervous system, and death. They also can pollute drinking water supplies, and poison marine organisms. EPA has identified mercury, cadmium, and lead as 3 of the 17 high priority toxic chemicals on which EPA is focusing pollution reduction efforts because of their toxicity. It is imperative that we reduce the amount of these metals going to our landfills and incinerators where they can be released into the environment.

Mr. President, Americans use approximately 2.5 billion dry cell batteries each year. While this accounts for less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the 180 million tons of garbage we generate each year, dry cell batteries are significant sources of mercury, cadmium, and lead in our solid waste stream today. Dry cell batteries in landfills can break down over time to release their toxic contents and contaminate our water resources. In incinerators, the combustion of dry cell batteries containing toxic metals leads to elevated toxic air emissions, and increases the concentrations of toxic metals in the resulting fly and bottom ash.

Various States including California, Michigan, Minnesota, New York, Connecticut, Vermont, Oregon, and my home State of New Jersey have passed laws either to regulate certain types of dry cell batteries, or to study their disposal.

Mr. President, there's little question that toxic metals can be dangerous.

Unlike many organic toxic substances, toxic metals do not break down into less harmful constituents. Instead, toxic metals such as lead, mercury, and cadmium persist in the environment, where they can be taken up into human, plant, and animal tissues.

Lead, which is used in the electrodes of sealed lead rechargeable batteries, has been classified as a probable human carcinogen by EPA. It has been shown to retard physical and mental development in children, leading one expert to call childhood lead poisoning "the most serious pediatric problem in the United States." But children are not the only ones at risk. Elevated lead exposures also have been linked to high blood pressure and central nervous system and kidney disorders in adults. And EPA says that lead is highly toxic to aquatic life.

Cadmium, which is used in the electrodes of rechargeable nickel-cadmium batteries, can cause kidney and liver damage. And EPA has said that exposure to high levels of airborne cadmium can result in pulmonary edema and even death, while chronic low-level exposure can result in fibrosis of the lung and lung cancer.

In 1976, EPA banned mercury in pesticide applications, after finding that mercury exposure can cause significant damage to the nervous system and kidneys. Mercury also has been linked to decreased motor functions and muscle reflexes, memory loss, headaches, and brain function disorders. And when mercury enters the aquatic environment, it can form methyl mercury which is extremely toxic to both humans and wildlife.

Mr. President, dry cell batteries fall into two major categories. The first are primary batteries—which include the familiar disposable alkaline manganese and zinc carbon types used in flash lights, toys, radios, and similar products. Primary batteries do not rely, in most cases, on toxic metals in their electrodes. Instead, most primary batteries incorporate relatively small amounts of heavy metals to suppress the unwanted formation of gases and to extend battery life.

The exception among primary batteries is mercuric oxide batteries, which are the only primary batteries in significant demand which incorporate toxic metals in their electrodes. Mercuric oxide batteries are unique in that they provide relatively constant voltage over the life of the battery, whereas the voltage from regular primary batteries tends to decrease over time. A substantial amount of medical, military, law enforcement and other equipment, including some papers and hearing aids, require this constant voltage to operate. Although alternative technologies currently are under development, the transition time is expected to be several years or more.

The other type of batteries are the secondary or rechargeable batteries, which include nickel cadmium and sealed lead rechargeable batteries. These batteries often are marketed separately, with rechargers, for the same uses as primary batteries. Alternatively, rechargeable batteries often are permanent installed into a variety of portable rechargeable tools and appliances, such as drills, flashlights, and hand-held vacuums.

Because of technological constraints, secondary batteries rely on toxic metals in their electrodes, and therefore contain much higher levels of heavy metals than do regular primary batteries. Currently, rechargeable batteries occupy only about 8 percent of the total dry cell battery market—which is about 350,000 batteries a year, but with technological improvements, they are expected to make-up roughly 20 percent of the market within the next decade. Because rechargeables can be re-used for several years, they are relatively less raw materials than disposable batteries, and thus reduce the environmental costs of extracting virgin metals. And Consumer Reports magazine has said, "[i]n the long run, . . . rechargeables are far more economical [to the consumer] than disposables," and that "for now, . . . rechargeable nickel cadmium cells represent the "greenest" [consumer] choice." That's why my bill supports the continued use of rechargeable batteries while at the same time ensuring that they are recycled or properly disposed at the end of their useful life.

Mr. President, both primary and secondary batteries contain toxic heavy metals. However, they incorporate them for different reasons and in different amounts, and that is why my bill will treat them differently within a two-pronged Federal regulatory framework.

The first part of this framework will reduce toxic metals at the source, by prohibiting the sale of alkaline manganese, zinc carbon and consumer mercuric-oxide batteries with mercury concentrations exceeding levels established in the bill. By July 1, 1994, it will be illegal to sell consumer mercuric oxide batteries and by January 1, 1996, it will be illegal to sell most batteries which have had mercury intentionally added to them.

The five companies responsible for most of primary battery sales in the United States—Eveready, Duracell, Rayovac, Panasonic and Kodak—have already begun to reduce their mercury concentrations in line with this schedule, and I commend these companies for their efforts. This part of the bill would focus on those manufacturers who have not yet committed to these reductions.

The second part of this framework would prohibit the improper disposal of mercuric oxide and rechargeable batteries containing cadmium or lead. These batteries pose a special challenge because current technology does not allow for the toxic metal concentrations in these batteries to be reduced. Yet at the same time, these batteries serve many valuable applications and consumer and environmental benefits.

Therefore, my bill will require the manufacturers of these batteries, along with the manufacturers of products containing or using rechargeable batteries, to submit plans to the EPA within 18 months of enactment, detailing the specific mechanisms and funding sources necessary to keep these batteries out of the municipal solid waste stream. These plans must provide either for the collection and recycling of used mercuric oxide and rechargeable batteries, which is the preferable option, or the collection and disposal of these batteries in hazardous waste landfills. Three years after the bill's enactment, no one will be able to sell a mercuric oxide or rechargeable battery or a rechargeable consumer product unless the manufacturer has an approved battery management plan. EPA would be required to ensure that the plans are being implemented adequately. The disposal of these batteries in municipal landfills or through incineration by any person would be prohibited.

The bills contains a number of other elements designed to aid recycling efforts. As of July 1, 1993, rechargeable consumer products must be manufactured in a manner in which the rechargeable battery can be removable easily from the product or is contained in a battery pack separate from the product. Mercuric oxide and rechargeable batteries and rechargeable consumer products containing cadmium and lead must contain labels advising consumers to recycle or properly dispose of the battery. Manufacturers must report annually on the levels of battery recycling. Manufacturers would be prohibited from refusing to accept spent batteries from their direct customers or municipal solid waste authorities. State solid waste plans must identify efforts to collect these batteries. EPA would be required to establish a battery information dissemination program. And the bill provides for the uniform coding of dry cell batteries to facilitate the manual or automated separation of dry cell batteries.

Most importantly, the bill changes existing law regarding the handling of these batteries. EPA classifies spent mercuric oxide and rechargeable batteries containing cadmium or lead as hazardous and subjects them to hazardous waste regulations. This deters the recycling of these batteries without providing commensurate environmental benefits.

My bill would address this problem by legislatively exempting the collection, storage and disposal of dry cell batteries from the hazardous waste requirements if the batteries are to be recycled. The bill will not exempt these batteries if they are destined for disposal in a hazardous waste landfill.

EPA has already established precedent in this area, by excluding the wet cell lead acid batteries used in automobiles from hazardous waste requirements.

Finally, the bill would give EPA the authority to promulgate rules regulating the sale of other dry cell batteries if they are found to pose a threat to human health or the environment. Penalties are established for violations of the Act. And State battery programs like the one in New Jersey would not be preempted except for the coding and labeling of batteries, consumer products and their packages.

This bill will benefit States like New Jersey which have dry cell battery programs. The bill will further State efforts by: First, requiring the coding of batteries to facilitate separation and recycling of batteries; second, removing the hazardous waste restrictions from collection, transportation and storage of dry cell batteries; and third, establishing a large, consistent supply of mercuric oxide and rechargeable batteries with cadmium and lead which will stimulate the growth of a domestic recycling industry.

Mr. President, toxic heavy metals are a bane to our environment, our wildlife and our people. This bill will provide effective ways to reduce exposure to these dangerous metals.

I want to commend the dry cell battery industry which has worked constructively in the development of this legislation.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this important bill. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill, together with letters of support from Portable Rechargeable Battery Association and the Eveready Battery Company, be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2579

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Dry Cell Battery Management Act of 1992".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) On the basis of available scientific and medical evidence, exposure to toxic metals, including mercury, cadmium, and lead, is of significant concern to human health and the environment.

(2) The presence of toxic metals in certain dry cell batteries is of significant concern, in light of the substantial quantity of used dry cell batteries discarded annually, and the potential environmental and health consequences associated with such disposal.

(3) It is in the public interest to reduce or eliminate the quantity and toxicity of metals in dry cell batteries, to recycle or properly dispose of dry cell batteries which contain toxic metals, and to educate the public concerning the collection, recycling and proper disposal of such batteries.

(4) It is in the public interest to require each State to include dry cell battery management provisions in the laws of the State that best protect human health and the environment in solid waste management plans developed in accordance with the Solid Waste Disposal Act.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

For the purposes of this Act:

(1) The term "Administrator" means the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency.

(2) The term "battery pack" means any combination of dry cell batteries containing one or more rechargeable batteries generally assembled for a particular application and that commonly has wire leads, terminals and dielectric housing.

(3) The term "consumer mercuric-oxide battery" means any button-shaped or coin-shaped mercuric oxide battery that is purchased at retail by a consumer for personal or household use, and includes batteries used in hearing aids.

(4) The term "dry cell battery" means any type of enclosed device or sealed container consisting of one or more voltaic or galvanic cells, electrically connected to produce electric energy, composed of lead, lithium, manganese, mercury, mercuric oxide, silver oxide, cadmium, zinc, copper or other metals, or any combination thereof, of any shape (including button, coin, cylindrical, rectangular, and other), and of a liquid starved or gel electrolyte, weighing 25 pounds or less, that is designed for commercial, industrial, medical, institutional, or household use. Such term shall include any alkaline manganese, lithium, mercuric oxide, silver oxide, zinc-air or zinc-carbon battery, or any rechargeable battery.

(5) The term "easily removable", with respect to a battery or battery pack, means that the battery or the battery pack is either detachable or readily removable from a consumer product by a consumer with the use of common household tools.

(6) The term "lithium battery" means any dry cell battery consisting of lithium and other chemicals, of any shape (including button, coin, cylindrical, rectangular, or other).

(7) The term "manufacturer" means any person who affixes a brand name or private label on a dry cell battery, battery pack, or rechargeable consumer products with non-removable batteries.

(8) The term "mercuric-oxide battery" means a dry cell battery that uses a mercuric oxide electrode, of any shape (including button, coin, cylindrical, rectangular, or other) that is designed or sold for commercial, industrial, medical, military, or institutional use. Such term shall not include consumer mercuric-oxide batteries.

(9) The term "rechargeable battery" means any dry cell battery containing a cadmium or lead electrode, or any combination thereof, of any shape (including button, coin, cylindrical, rectangular, or other) that is designed for reuse, and is capable of being recharged after repeated uses. Such term shall not include any dry cell battery that is used as the principle power source for transportation, including automobiles, motorcycles and boats.

(10) The term "rechargeable consumer product" means any product, including any lap-top computer or cordless electric tool or appliance, containing a rechargeable battery as its primary energy supply, and that is purchased at retail and commonly used for personal or household purposes. Such term shall not include any product that uses a rechargeable battery as a backup power source for memory or program instruction storage, timekeeping, or any similar purpose that requires constant electrical flow in order to function if the primary energy supply fails or waivers momentarily.

(11) The term "recycle" or "recycling" means any process by which dry cell batteries are collected, diverted from a waste stream, separated by battery chemistry, and processed to reclaim useful materials that are used as either raw material or product. Such term shall not include the combustion of waste for purposes of energy recovery or volume reduction or land disposal of any kind.

(12) The term "silver-oxide battery" means any dry cell battery, of any shape (including button, coin, cylindrical, rectangular, or other) using a silver oxide electrode commonly used in wrist watches and other electrical appliances.

(13) The term "zinc-air battery" means any dry cell battery, of any shape (including button, coin, cylindrical, rectangular, or other), consisting of zinc and potassium hydroxide, that is used in hearing aids, photographic equipment, and electrical appliances.

(14) The term "zinc-carbon battery" means any dry cell battery, of any shape (including button, coin, cylindrical, rectangular, or other), that uses zinc and manganese dioxide in its electrodes and that is commonly used in household and commercial applications.

SEC. 4. LIMITATIONS ON THE SALE OF CERTAIN DRY CELL BATTERIES CONTAINING MERCURY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) ALKALINE MANGANESE BATTERY.—No person shall sell, offer for sale, or offer for promotional purposes any alkaline manganese battery with a mercury content that was intentionally introduced, and that exceeds the applicable mercury concentration level under paragraph (2) or (3).

(2) OTHER THAN BUTTON- OR COIN-SHAPED.—(A) For any alkaline manganese battery that is not a button-shaped or coin-shaped battery, and that is manufactured on or after January 1, 1993, the applicable mercury concentration level is 250 parts per million by weight.

(B) For any alkaline manganese battery described in subparagraph (A) that is manufactured on or after January 1, 1996, the applicable mercury concentration level is 1 part per million by weight.

(3) BUTTON- OR COIN-SHAPED.—For any button-shaped or coin-shaped alkaline manganese battery manufactured on or after January 1, 1993, the applicable mercury concentration level is 25 milligrams of mercury per battery.

(b) ZINC CARBON.—No person shall sell, offer for sale, or offer for promotional purposes any zinc carbon battery manufactured on or after January 1, 1993, that contains any mercury that was intentionally introduced into the battery at a mercury concentration level greater than 1 part per million by weight.

(c) CONSUMER MERCURIC-OXIDE BATTERIES.—No person may sell, offer for sale, or offer for promotional purposes, any consumer mercuric-oxide battery on or after January 1, 1994.

(d) MERCURIC-OXIDE BATTERIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—No person may sell, offer for sale, or offer for promotional purposes, any mercuric-oxide battery on or after July 1, 1993, unless such person complies with the labeling requirements of paragraph (2).

(2) CONTENT.—Each mercuric-oxide battery shall include a label on the battery that contains—

(A) the statement: "CONTAINS MERCURY, MUST BE RECYCLED OR DISPOSED OF PROPERLY"; and

(B) the symbol: "Hg" (the chemical symbol for mercury).

SEC. 5. LIMITATIONS ON THE SALE OF RECHARGEABLE CONSUMER PRODUCTS.

(a) PROHIBITION.—On or after July 1, 1993, no person shall manufacture any rechargeable consumer product unless—

(1) the rechargeable battery—

(A) is easily removable from the rechargeable consumer product; or

(B) is contained in a battery pack that is separate from the product and is easily removable from the product;

(2) the rechargeable battery, battery pack, or rechargeable consumer product with non-removable battery has a brand name affixed to it;

(3) the rechargeable consumer product, the package containing the product, and the rechargeable battery are labeled in accordance with subsection (b) of this section; and

(4) the instruction manual for the rechargeable consumer product includes such information explaining methods to ensure the proper recycling or disposal of the used rechargeable batteries as required under this Act.

(b) LABELING.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Each rechargeable battery, rechargeable consumer product, battery pack containing one or more rechargeable batteries, and the package for each such product, manufactured after July 1, 1993, shall—

(A) be labeled in a manner that is visible to consumers;

(B) include the standard abbreviation for the chemical composition of the battery or battery pack; and

(C) inform consumers that rechargeable batteries when no longer reusable must be collected, recycled, or disposed in an environmentally sound manner (as required under this Act).

(2) REQUIREMENTS FOR LABELING VISIBLE TO CONSUMERS.—(A) Labeling visible to consumers prior to purchase shall appear on—

(i) each rechargeable consumer product or the package containing the rechargeable consumer product;

(ii) each rechargeable battery or battery pack sold separately from a rechargeable consumer product, or the package containing the rechargeable battery or battery pack; and

(iii) each retail display advertising or offering for sale any rechargeable battery or battery pack.

(B) Labeling visible to consumers at the time of recycling or disposal shall appear on—

(i) each rechargeable consumer product not containing an easily removable rechargeable battery or battery pack;

(ii) each rechargeable battery or battery pack easily removable from a rechargeable consumer product; and

(iii) each rechargeable battery or battery pack sold separately from a rechargeable consumer product.

(3) CONTENT.—The labeling required under paragraph (1) shall include one of the following statements (whichever is applicable), printed in capital letters:

(A) "CONTAINS NICKEL-CADMIUM RECHARGEABLE BATTERY. MUST BE RECYCLED OR DISPOSED OF PROPERLY."

(B) "CONTAINS SEALED LEAD RECHARGEABLE BATTERY. MUST BE RECYCLED OR DISPOSED OF PROPERLY."

(C) "NICKEL-CADMIUM RECHARGEABLE BATTERY. MUST BE RECYCLED OR DISPOSED OF PROPERLY."

(D) "SEALED LEAD BATTERY. MUST BE RECYCLED OR DISPOSED OF PROPERLY."

(c) EXEMPTIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—With respect to any rechargeable consumer product, any person may submit an application to the Administrator for an exemption from the requirements of subsection (a) in accordance with the procedures under paragraph (2) of this subsection and in accordance with regulations that the Administrator shall promulgate. The application shall include the following information:

(A) A statement of the specific basis for the request for the exemption.

(B) The name, business address, and telephone number of the applicant.

(2) GRANTING OF EXEMPTION.—Within 30 days after the receipt of an application under paragraph (1), the Administrator shall approve or deny the application. Upon approval of the application the Administrator shall grant an exemption to the applicant. The exemption shall be issued for a period of time that the Administrator determines to be appropriate, except that such period shall not exceed 2 years. The Administrator shall grant an exemption on the basis of evidence supplied to the Administrator that—

(A) the redesign of the rechargeable consumer product to comply with the requirements of this section would result in significant danger to public health and safety and the environment; or

(B) the rechargeable consumer product cannot reasonably be redesigned and manufactured to comply with the requirements of this section prior to the expiration of the period of the exemption (or, as the case may be, the renewal period).

(3) RENEWAL OF EXEMPTION.—A person granted an exemption may apply for a renewal of the exemption in accordance with the requirements and procedures described in paragraph (2). The Administrator may grant a renewal of an exemption to apply for a period of not more than 24 months after the date of granting of the renewal. Upon the expiration of the renewal, an additional renewal may be granted in accordance with the requirements and procedures described in paragraph (2). In addition to making the determinations under subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (2), in order to grant a renewal under this paragraph, the Administrator must make a determination that there is no feasible or practical alternative or substitute for the rechargeable consumer product that is the subject of the renewal application.

SEC. 6. RESTRICTIONS ON THE SALE OF MERCURIC OXIDE BATTERIES AND RECHARGEABLE BATTERIES.

(a) PROHIBITION.—Beginning on the day after the date that is 36 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, no person shall sell, offer for sale, or offer for promotional purposes—

(1) any mercuric-oxide battery;

(2) any rechargeable battery; or

(3) any rechargeable consumer product with nonremovable batteries, unless the manufacturer of the battery or product has in effect a battery management plan, approved pursuant to section 7 of this Act, which covers such battery or product.

(b) LIABILITY FOR COSTS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, each manufacturer of a mercuric-oxide battery or rechargeable battery shall be liable for the costs related to the environmentally sound collection, transportation, and recycling or proper disposal of each mercuric-oxide or rechargeable battery produced by the manufacturer and sold in the United States incurred pursuant to a battery management plan approved pursuant to section 97 of this Act.

SEC. 7. BATTERY MANAGEMENT PLANS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) REGULATIONS.—Not later than 18 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Administrator, with the advice and counsel of a Battery Management Plan Advisory Committee (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Advisory Committee") established pursuant to section 17 of this Act, shall promulgate regulations setting forth the requirements for battery management plans.

(2) PREPARATION.—Before the Administrator promulgates the regulations under paragraph (1), the Administrator, in consultation with the Advisory Committee, shall review, evaluate and compare existing battery management and collection systems, including those used in various States of this Nation, the European Community, and other major industrialized nations, and the Administrator and the Advisory Committee shall consult with the States, manufacturers, and the public to determine the most cost effective and efficient means for battery management. The Advisory Committee shall make recommendations to the Administrator upon completion of its activities under this paragraph before the Administrator promulgates the regulations under paragraph (1).

(3) BATTERY MANAGEMENT PLANS.—Not later than 30 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, each manufacturer of mercuric-oxide or rechargeable batteries or rechargeable consumer products with nonremovable batteries sold or offered for sale or promotional purposes in the United States, shall prepare and submit 1 or more written battery management plans to the Administrator for the batteries or products described in this paragraph manufactured by such manufacturer.

(4) REQUIREMENTS FOR PLANS.—The battery management plans described in paragraph (1) shall provide for environmentally sound collection, transportation, and recycling or disposal, upon termination of use, of each mercuric oxide or rechargeable battery or rechargeable consumer product with nonremovable batteries produced by the manufacturer, and shall meet the requirements of subsection (b).

(5) PROHIBITED METHODS OF DISPOSAL UNDER A PLAN.—No plan described in paragraph (1) may provide for disposal of any mercuric-oxide or rechargeable battery or battery contained in a rechargeable consumer product—

(A) by incineration for the purpose of reducing waste volume or generating energy; or

(B) in a solid waste disposal facility other than a solid waste disposal facility that is the subject of a permit issued in accordance with subpart C of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (42 U.S.C. 6921 et seq.).

(6) GROUP PLAN.—Two or more manufacturers subject to the requirements of this section, or an organization or association representing such manufacturer, may submit, with respect to any specific mercuric-oxide or rechargeable battery or rechargeable consumer product with nonremovable batteries manufactured by the manufacturers, one or more group plans that meet the requirements of this section, in lieu of submitting individual plans.

(b) CONTENT OF BATTERY MANAGEMENT PLAN, ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Each battery management plan described in subsection (a)(1) shall include the following:

(A) A description of the systems to be used for the collection, transportation, and recycling, or disposal of used mercuric-oxide or rechargeable batteries and rechargeable consumer products with nonremovable batteries.

(B) A commitment of financial resources by the manufacturer for the costs of implementing the plan.

(C) A strategy for informing consumers by providing the following information on any store display or advertisement that promotes the sale or use of any mercuric-oxide or rechargeable battery or rechargeable consumer product produced by the manufacturer that:

(i) The battery must be recycled or disposed of properly.

(ii) A convenient mechanism is available to the consumer for the collection, transportation, and recycling, or disposal of the battery upon termination of use.

(2) ADDITIONAL INFORMATION.—The Administrator shall, by not later than 45 days after the receipt of a plan submitted by a manufacturer, request such information as the Administrator considers necessary to review the plan. If the Administrator does not make a request under this paragraph during the 45-day period, the plan shall be deemed completed. If the Administrator makes a request under this paragraph, the plan shall be deemed completed upon receipt by the Administrator of the information requested.

(3) PLAN APPROVAL.—(A) The Administrator, in consultation with the heads of State solid waste management programs, shall approve or deny a plan submitted under this section that has been deemed completed pursuant to paragraph (2), by not later than the date that is 180 days after the date of receipt of the completed plan.

(B) If the Administrator fails to act on a completed plan within the 180-day period described in subparagraph (A), the completed plan shall be deemed approved.

(C) The Administrator shall approve the plan if the plan meets the requirements of paragraph (1) of this subsection and the Administrator determines that the plan incorporates a convenient, economically feasible, and environmentally sound method for the collection, transportation, recycling or disposal of mercuric-oxide or rechargeable batteries and rechargeable consumer products.

(4) PLAN MODIFICATION.—After a plan has been approved, the sponsor of a plan may submit a modification of the plan to the Administrator. The review and approval of a modified plan shall be conducted in the same manner as for the review and approval of a plan under this section, except that the Administrator shall by regulation establish abbreviated review periods for modification. In order to establish an abbreviated review period, the Administrator must determine that the modification to the plan is not significant.

(5) PERIODIC REVIEW.—(A) The Administrator shall review each approved plan by not later than 36 months after the date of the approval of the plan under paragraph (3), and at least every 36 months thereafter.

(B)(i) If, upon completion of a review under subparagraph (A), the Administrator determines that a plan no longer incorporates a convenient, economically feasible, and environmentally sound method for the collection, transportation, and recycling or disposal of mercuric-oxide or rechargeable batteries, or rechargeable consumer products with nonremovable batteries or the plan is not being implemented adequately, the Administrator shall issue a written finding, and require the manufacturer to submit a modified plan to remedy the problems identified in the finding.

(ii) During the period of time beginning on the date of issuance of a request by the Administrator for a revision of a plan and the approval by the Administrator of a modified plan, the plan reviewed by the Administrator under subsection (A) shall remain in effect.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, and annually thereafter, each manufacturer that produces any mercuric-oxide or rechargeable battery shall submit a written report to the Administrator concerning the recovery, recycling, and reclamation rates for all mercuric-oxide and rechargeable batteries and rechargeable consumer products with nonremovable batteries produced by the manufacturer. In lieu of submitting an individual report, the manufacturer may submit a group report with one or more manufacturers of such batteries and products.

(d) REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—For the purposes of carrying out the collection and recycling requirements of this section, with respect to used dry cell batteries the requirements relating to spent lead-acid batteries being reclaimed, described in subpart G of part 266 of title 40, Code of Federal Regulations (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this Act), shall apply (in the same manner as for spent lead-acid batteries) to any person who generates, transports, or collects any used mercuric-oxide or rechargeable batteries, or who stores, but does not reclaim any such batteries.

(2) FACILITY OWNERS OR OPERATORS.—For the purposes of carrying out the collection and recycling requirements of this section with respect to used dry cell batteries, the requirements relating to spent lead-acid batteries being reclaimed described in subpart G of part 266 of title 40, Code of Federal Regulations (as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this Act), shall apply (in the same manner as for spent lead-acid batteries) to any owner or operator of a facility that stores used mercuric-oxide or rechargeable batteries before reclaiming such batteries.

(3) REGULATIONS.—The Administrator may promulgate regulations establishing such additional requirements on the collection, transportation, or storage of mercuric-oxide or rechargeable batteries as are necessary to protect public health and safety and the environment.

SEC. 8. PROHIBITION RELATING TO FAILURE TO CARRY OUT REVERSE DISTRIBUTION.

No manufacturer of rechargeable batteries, battery packs, or rechargeable consumer products may refuse (or otherwise fail to accept) from any direct customer or municipal solid waste collection authority spent rechargeable batteries, battery packs, and rechargeable consumer products with nonremovable batteries sold by the manufacturer.

SEC. 9. PROHIBITION RELATING TO THE DISPOSAL OF USED MERCURIC-OXIDE OR RECHARGEABLE BATTERIES OR RECHARGEABLE CONSUMER PRODUCT WITH NONREMOVABLE BATTERIES.

No person shall recycle or dispose of any used mercuric-oxide battery or rechargeable battery or rechargeable consumer product with nonremovable batteries in a manner that is inconsistent with section 6, 7 or 8 of this Act (including any regulation promulgated to carry out any such section).

SEC. 10. STATE SOLID WASTE MANAGEMENT PLANS.

The Administrator shall require, by regulation, that each State solid waste management plan developed pursuant to subtitle D of the Solid Waste Disposal Act (42 U.S.C. 6941 et seq.) shall, in addition to meeting the minimum requirements under section 4003 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 6943), ensure compliance with this Act (including any regulation promulgated pursuant to this Act). Each such State plan shall provide for a program to collect from consumers and institutions used mercuric-oxide and rechargeable batteries and rechargeable consumer products with nonremovable batteries.

SEC. 11. ADDITIONAL AUTHORITY.

If the Administrator issues a written determination that the continued disposal into the solid waste stream of any dry cell battery (including any used lithium, silver-oxide, zinc-air, alkaline-manganese, nickel-metal hydride or zinc-carbon battery) poses a threat to the environment or public health and safety, the Administrator may issue regulations that establish appropriate activities that any manufacturer of the battery must carry out to reduce the level of risk associated with the disposal of the battery.

SEC. 12. INFORMATION DISSEMINATION.

The Administrator shall, in consultation with representatives of appropriate industries and groups, establish an outreach program to provide information to the public concerning the proper handling and disposal of used mercuric-oxide and rechargeable batteries and rechargeable consumer products with nonremovable batteries.

SEC. 13. PENALTIES.

Any person who violates a provision of this Act (other than a State acting pursuant to section 9) shall be subject to a civil penalty in an amount not less than $1,000 per day for each such violation. Each day of violation shall constitute a separate offense.

SEC. 14. CODING.

(a) IDENTIFICATION OF DRY CELL BATTERY.—Not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator, in consultation with State solid waste officials and battery manufacturers, shall issue regulations to require manufacturers of dry cell batteries manufactured or offered for sale in the United States to encode such batteries for the purposes of identifying the brand name and electrode type. The code shall facilitate manual or automated separation of rechargeable consumer products and rechargeable batteries or battery packs. Such code may include color codes or machine-readable bar codes. In preparing battery coding regulations, the Administrator shall review, evaluate and compare battery coding systems in use by various manufacturers, the States, and major industrialized nations, and shall adopt the coding system that will best facilitate international battery recycling and disposal efforts. Such regulations shall apply to dry cell batteries manufactured on or after July 1, 1994.

(b) BUTTON AND COIN CELL BATTERY EXCEPTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Dry cell batteries which resemble buttons and coins in size and shape shall be exempt from the coding regulations issued under subsection (a), except that consumer mercuric-oxide batteries shall be encoded with a plus sign (“+”) inside a circle.

(2) EXCEPTION.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1), if the Administrator determines that the coding of a button or coin battery described in paragraph (1) would not interfere with the electrical conductivity between cell terminals or the electrical contacts in devices with respect to which the cells are used with the battery mechanism of consumer product, and would not cause unfavorable reactions or effects in the battery powered product the Administrator shall, by regulation, require the coding of such battery pursuant to this section.

(c) UNIFORMITY.—No State or political subdivision thereof may enforce any requirement of a State or local law applicable to the coding of any dry cell battery after July 1, 1994, unless such requirement is identical to a provision of this Act.

SEC. 15. INFORMATION GATHERING AND ACCESS.

(a) ACTION AUTHORIZED.—Any officer, employee, or representative of the Administrator is authorized to take action under subsection (b) or (c), or both, at any facility or other place or property where entry is necessary to determine compliance with, or to enforce this Act.

(b) ACCESS TO INFORMATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Any officer, employee, or representative of the Administrator may require any person who has (or any person whom such officer, employee, or representative has reason to believe may have) information relevant to the implementation of this Act to furnish, upon reasonable request, information or documents pertaining to such matter. In addition, upon reasonable notice, such person either—

(A) shall grant any such officer, employee, or representative access during regular business hours to such facility or location to inspect and copy all documents and records relevant to such matters; or

(B) shall copy and furnish to the officer, employee, or representative all such documents or records, at the option and expense of such person.

(2) CONFIDENTIALITY.—The Administrator shall maintain the confidentiality of documents and records that contain proprietary information.

(c) INSPECTION AND SAMPLES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Any officer, employee, or representative described in subsection (a) is authorized to inspect and obtain samples from any facility (or other location) described in subsection (a). Any such officer, employee, or representative is authorized to inspect and obtain samples of any materials maintained at such facility or location. Each such inspection shall be completed with reasonable promptness.

(2) SAMPLES.—If the officer, employee, or representative obtains samples pursuant to paragraph (1), before leaving the premises of the facility (or other location) such officer, employee, or representative shall give to the owner or operator of such facility (or other location) a receipt that describes the sample obtained and, if requested, a portion of each sample. A copy of the results of any analysis made of such samples shall be furnished promptly to the owner or operator of the facility (or other location).

(d) COMPLIANCE ORDERS.—

(1) ISSUANCE.—If consent is not granted regarding any request made by an officer, employee or representative under subsection (b) or (c), the Administrator may issue an order to direct compliance with the request. The order may be issued after such notice and opportunity for consultation as is reasonably appropriate under the circumstances.

(2) COMPLIANCE.—The Administrator may request the Attorney General to commence a civil action to compel compliance with a request or order described in paragraph (1). In any case where there is a reasonable basis to believe there may be a violation of this Act, the court shall—

(A) in the case of interference with entry or inspection, enjoin such interference, or direct compliance with any order issued by the Administrator to prohibit interference with entry or inspection (unless under the circumstances of the case, the demand for entry or inspection is arbitrary and capricious, an abuse of discretion, or does not otherwise meet the requirements of applicable laws); or

(B) in the case an order or request for any information or document, enjoin interference with such request or order (unless under the circumstances of the case the demand for information or documents is arbitrary and capricious, an abuse of discretion, or does not otherwise meet the requirements of applicable laws).

(e) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION RELATING TO PREEMPTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to preclude the Administrator or a State from securing access or obtaining information in any lawful manner that is not described in this section.

SEC. 16. PREEMPTION.

Except as provided in section 14 of this Act, and in any provision of this Act relating to the labeling of any mercuric-oxide or rechargeable battery, battery pack, or rechargeable consumer product or package containing such product or package, nothing in this Act shall be construed so as to prohibit a State from enacting and enforcing a standard or requirement relating to dry cell batteries that is more stringent than a standard or requirement established or promulgated under this Act.

SEC. 17. ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

(a) BATTERY MANAGEMENT PLAN ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Administrator shall establish a Battery Management Advisory Committee (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Advisory Committee").

(2) MEMBERSHIP.—The Advisory Committee shall consist of 11 members. The members of the Committee shall include representatives of State and local governments, national environmental organizations, and organizations representing dry cell battery manufacturers and the battery recycling industry.

(3) VACANCIES.—Any vacancy on the Committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

(4) CHAIRMAN.—A Chairman shall be selected by the Administrator from among the members of the Advisory Committee.

(5) COMPENSATION.—(A) Each member of the Committee, who is not an officer or employee of the Federal Government, shall be compensated at a rate equal to the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay prescribed for level IV of the Executive Schedule under section 5316 of title 5, United States Code, for each day (including travel time) during which such member is engaged in the performance of the duties of the Committee. All members of the Committee who are officers or employees of the United States shall serve without compensation in addition to that received for their services as officers or employees of the United States.

(B) The members of the Committee shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, at rates authorized for employees of agencies under subchapter I of chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code, while away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Committee.

(6) DUTIES OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—The Committee shall advise the Administrator concerning the development of regulations for the preparation and management of battery plans pursuant to section 7(a) of this Act, and shall advise the Administrator concerning any other matter that the Administrator determines to be appropriate.

(7) MEETINGS.—The Advisory Committee shall meet at the call of the Chairman.

(8) STAFF.—The Administrator shall provide such staff as may be necessary to enable the Advisory Committee to perform its duties.

(9) TERMINATION.—The Advisory Committee shall terminate on January 1, 1998.

(b) AUTHORIZATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated $100,000 to carry out the provisions of this section.

SEC. 18. REPORT TO THE CONGRESS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 36 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, after opportunity for public comment, the Administrator shall submit a report to the Congress that documents the implementation of this Act, and makes such recommendations as the Administrator determines to be appropriate.

(b) CONTENTS OF REPORT.—The report described in subsection (a) shall include the following:

(1) A review of any activities carried out by States in response to this Act, including any administrative actions taken to protect public health and safety and the environment with respect to the collection, transportation, and recycling or disposal of dry cell batteries.

(2) An estimate, for the period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, and ending on the date of preparation of the report, of any reduction in the number of dry cell batteries (particularly mercuric-oxide and rechargeable batteries) entering the solid waste stream for disposal in incinerators and municipal solid waste landfills.

(3) An estimate of further reductions that will occur.

(4) A review of the recycling and reclamation rates for mercuric-oxide and rechargeable batteries and rechargeable consumer products with nonremovable batteries and recommendations for improving such rates.

(5) An analysis of costs associated with implementation of dry cell management plans and recommendations as to how such costs can be reduced.

SEC. 19. CONFORMING AMENDMENT.

Section 11 of the Fair Packaging and Labeling Act (15 U.S.C. 1460) is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of subsection (b);

(2) by striking the period at the end of subsection (c) and inserting ", or"; and

(3) by adding at the end of the section the following new subsection:

"(d) The Dry Cell Battery Management Act of 1992."

SEC. 20. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the Environmental Protection Agency such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act.

EVEREADY BATTERY COMPANY, INC.,

April 9, 1992.

Hon. FRANK R. LAUTENBERG,
U.S. Senate, Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LAUTENBERG: I understand that you intend to introduce today your bill, the Dry Cell Battery Management Act of 1992.

Eveready Battery Company is the world's largest manufacturer of dry cell battery products, including the Eveready and Energizer brand products.

Eveready Battery Company, through the Dry Battery Section of the National Electrical Manufacturers Association (NEMA), has worked closely with Mr. Ric Erdheim of your staff to hammer out the details of this bill in order to ensure a workable and effective program. The bill contains several environmentally important provisions, as you know, including (a) the reduction or elimination of mercury from alkaline manganese and zinc carbon batteries and (b) collection of mercuric oxide, nickel cadmium and sealed lead batteries.

Based on our discussions with Mr. Erdheim, Eveready supports this legislation. I must emphasize that we have not seen the final language of the legislation, and we must review it carefully and in detail before giving a final endorsement. It will take a period of time to complete the careful review that is needed, and we will provide you more detailed comments at that time.

Again, Eveready has been pleased to work with you and your staff to develop this legislation, and based upon our understanding of the discussions we have had about the proposal, we support it. Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

TERRY N. TELZROW,
Manager, Product Safety and Standards.

PORTABLE RECHARGEABLE
BATTERY ASSOCIATION,

April 9, 1992.

Hon. FRANK R. LAUTENBERG,
Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR LAUTENBERG: I am Chairman of the Legislative Committee of the Portable Rechargeable Battery Association (PRBA). The PRBA membership includes approximately 100 major manufacturers of rechargeable batteries and products powered by rechargeable batteries. The five members of PRBA who manufacture the rechargeable cells that are combined into batteries which power rechargeable products—Gates Energy Products, Panasonic, Saft, Sanyo and Varta—produce ninety percent of the world's rechargeable cells. These cells utilize nickel-cadmium and lead-acid technologies.

I understand that your legislation on batteries may be introduced today in the Senate. On behalf of PRBA, my colleagues and I have worked with your staff since the inception of your proposed legislation, and we very much appreciate their positive attitude.

From a vantage of working in many states on battery legislation, we believe that your bill will greatly facilitate the direction of battery legislation across the United States. This legislation will help keep batteries out of the municipal solid waste stream by recycling these batteries.

My Committee and I fully support your bill as presented to us today, and fully believe that the Board of Directors of the PRBA will ratify our voice of support given your bill on behalf of the PRBA. The Board will vote on this Tuesday. I fully expect to provide you with a letter of support from the PRBA Board at that time, and I look forward to working with the PRBA member companies, with the various states and with environmental groups to assure passage of this important legislation.

Sincerely,

ROBERT L. GUYER,
Chairman, PRBA Legislative Committee.

• Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I want to applaud my colleague from New Jersey for the bill he and I are introducing today. Before proceeding with my statement, I want to commend my colleague's staff for the many, many hours spent developing and negotiating this proposal with both the battery manufacturers and environmentalists. My colleague's efforts were instrumental in the bringing this issue to light in the current RCRA debate.

I would also like to commend my constituents. Last year, Mr. President, the Vermont legislature enacted a dry cell battery recycling law requiring manufacturers to take back old dry cell batteries. This law resulted from the efforts of many Vermonters, including the residents of Randolph, VT. Dry cell batteries can contain mercury, cadmium, and nickel. If disposed in a landfill, these toxic heavy metals can leach into ground water. If burned in an incinerator, the metals can end up in the air we breathe or as particulates which can contaminate lands miles away from the incinerator. Keeping batteries out of the waste stream can eliminate a major source of these metals in solid waste. I applaud my constituents, such as Mitch Harness, Karen O'Dato, Frank Reed, and Michael Bender, for their foresight in recognizing the need to remove batteries from the waste stream.

Over the past year, my office has been in contact with both Randolph and more frequently, the Central Vermont Planning Commission; two of the leaders in battery recycling. One of the problems associated with battery recycling is that when collected, the old batteries can be classified as a hazardous waste. This classification can significantly impede the handling of old batteries. For example, when shipped back for recycling, a hazardous waste transporter would be required. The costs of transportation increase significantly. I do not believe it necessary to consider dry cell batteries a hazardous waste if they are being returned for recycling. This bill addresses this important Vermont concern by allowing batteries to be shipped as a nonhazardous waste. A similar exemption already exists for old lead acid batteries which are clearly, in my mind, more a potential risk than a dry cell battery.

I believe this issue should be considered in the current RCRA debate. If RCRA does not pass this year, however, I hope the Environment and Public Works Committee will move this legislation independently. This legislation should not be delayed because of concern over more controversial issues.

Last, I hope to further encourage battery recycling by asking EPA to fund or cooperate in funding pilot-scale or larger battery recycling facility. It is my understanding that the Scandinavians have developed exciting technology that allows the metals to be recycled. I believe demonstrating this technology in our country could greatly enhance recycling.

In closing, Mr. President, I would again like to recognize the efforts of my colleague from New Jersey. I would also like to thank my colleague in the House, Representative SANDERS, for his decision to join our efforts in increasing the recycling of dry cell batteries. •

By Mr. DECONCINI:

S. 2605. A bill to amend title 35, U.S. Code, to harmonize the U.S. patent system with foreign patent systems; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PATENT SYSTEM HARMONIZATION ACT

• Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I rise to introduce legislation to encourage healthy debate on the complex and far-reaching issue of patent harmonization. Representatives HUGHES and MOORHEAD are introducing the companion version of this legislation in the House.

One of the most significant international developments involving intellectual property laws has been the recent heightened global interest in harmonizing certain aspects of national patent laws. The goal of these efforts is to facilitate protection of inventions in several countries by establishing uniform procedures and standards for protection.

For years the United States has been involved in negotiations with other countries in an effort to harmonize their respective patent laws. Our Patent Office has been engaged in harmonization discussions in the trilateral arrangements with the Japanese Patent Office and the European Patent Office. More importantly, there have been a series of meetings over the years specifically convened on this topic by the World Intellectual Property Organization [WIPO].

Harmonizing is not a simple process. It would require substantive changes to the patent laws of each participating country to conform to any treaty. Harmonization would lead to the most significant change in U.S. patent law since the Patent Act of 1836. Thus, it is my view that such drastic changes to fundamental aspects of our patent system should be examined and considered in Congress and not in a backroom meeting in Brussels or Geneva.

* Denotes Assoc.

The most important change to our system through an harmonization agreement would be to transform our patent system from a first-to-invent to a first-to-file system. This legislation would implement that change. It has been asserted that implementation of a first-to-file system is necessary in order for the United States to obtain beneficial concessions from other countries in the harmonization negotiations.

Under a first-to-invent system, the right to a patent resides with the inventor determined to be the first inventor to make the invention in the United States. Under the first-to-file system, the right to patent resides with the first inventor to file, not necessarily the first to make the invention.

Presently, the United States is the only industrialized country with a first-to-invent system. The first-to-invent system has been used by the United States for 200 years. It is based on the notion that it is more fair and appropriate to award a patent to the first inventor. Abandoning a first-to-invent for a first-to-file system has been a very contentious issue that has yet to develop a widespread consensus.

This legislation would also establish prior user rights for those who use an invention before it is patented by another person, if the user acted in good faith in establishing these prior user rights. This change is needed as a result of the change to first-to-file and it would provide equitable treatment for those who are using an invention but are not the first-to-file.

This legislation would require the Patent Office to open patent applications for public inspection 18 months after they are filed. Currently, the United States keeps a patent application confidential while it is pending before the Patent Office. With early publication, technological progress will be accelerated through disclosure and potential patent conflicts will be more apparent.

The Patent Harmonization Act will offer the opportunity for inventors to request an accelerated search and examination. This bill would also change the patent term from 17 years of date the patent is issued to 20 years from the date of filing. Measuring a patent term from filing date would prevent the issuing of a patent many years after a given industry adopts the technology covered by the patent.

Undoubtedly, many benefits would flow from the international harmonization of the diverse patent laws of the major patent granting countries. A global economy now exists. As the world leader in innovation and cutting-edge technology, U.S. inventors and companies would finally obtain effective patent protection in other countries.

However, harmonization might also entail some burdens. The patent practices of inventors and companies would be substantially altered by a harmonization treaty. Some claim that independent inventors will lose the incentive to invent because they cannot beat large entities in a race to file at the Patent Office. Universities fear prior user rights will undermine the presumption of a patent's validity.

These are all legitimate concerns that deserve to be addressed. And it is Congress' duty to examine and weigh these benefits and burdens before the administration enters into any harmonization agreement.

Congress must determine if changing our patent system is in the best interest of the United States. By introducing this legislation today, we can begin to debate the changes a harmonization treaty would exact on our domestic patent laws.

Mr. President, I see the introduction of this legislation as the beginning of a long and thorough process. I look forward to hearing the views of the administration, the patent community, industry and the public on this legislation. As chairmen of the subcommittees having jurisdiction on patents, Representative HUGHES and I have scheduled a joint hearing to examine this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2605

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Patent System Harmonization Act of 1992".

(b) REFERENCE.—Except as expressly provided otherwise, whenever in this Act a section or other provision is amended or repealed, such amendment or repeal shall be considered to be made to that section or other provision of title 35, United States Code.

SEC. 2. FEES.

Section 41(a)(1) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(C) The fees due on filing an application that are required by this paragraph may be paid by an applicant in 2 parts, with the 1st part to be paid at the time of filing in the amount of $150. The balance shall be paid, if at all, to initiate search and examination and shall be calculated based upon the claims then pending in the application."

SEC. 3. FIRST TO FILE PROVISIONS.

(a) CONDITIONS FOR PATENTABILITY.—(1) Chapter 10 is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§ 106. Conditions for patentability; first to file, novelty, nonobviousness, senior priority, and right to patent

"(a) IN GENERAL.—An applicant shall be entitled to a patent unless—

"(1) the subject matter was disclosed in the prior art, which for the purposes of this section means that such subject matter was publicly known or publicly used in the United States, or patented or described in a publication in the United States or in a foreign country, before the filing date or priority date of the application for patent,

"(2) though the subject matter is not identically disclosed or described in the prior art, the differences between the subject matter of the claim and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the application for patent for the invention was filed to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which such subject matter pertains, except that patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made,

"(3) the subject matter is described in an application for patent of another applicant that has been previously filed in the United States and has been opened to public inspection under section 122, or

"(4) the subject matter—

"(A) was derived from an inventor not named in the application for patent, except that subject matter representing an obvious variant developed by an inventor not named in the application shall not preclude patentability under this subparagraph if such subject matter and the claimed subject matter were, at the time the application for patent is filed, owned by the same person or subject to an obligation of assignment to the same person, or

"(B) was on sale in the United States more than one year before the filing date of the application for patent.

"(b) GRACE PERIOD.—Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), subject matter disclosed in the prior art not more than one year preceding the filing date or priority date of the application for patent shall not affect novelty or nonobviousness under this section whenever it results from a disclosure of information obtained directly or indirectly from an inventor named in the application."

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 10 is amended by adding at the end the following:

"106. Conditions for patentability; first to file novelty, nonobviousness, senior priority, and right to patent."

(b) INFRINGEMENT.—(1) Chapter 28 is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§ 273. Rights based on prior use

"(a) IN GENERAL.—A person shall not be liable as an infringer under a patent granted to another with respect to any subject matter claimed in the patent that such person has, acting in good faith, commercially used or commercially sold in the United States, or has made effective and serious preparation therefor in the United States, before the filing date or priority date of the application for patent.

"(b) QUALIFICATIONS.—(1) The rights based on prior use under this section are personal and shall not be subject to assignment or transfer to any other person or persons except in connection with the assignment or transfer of the entire business or enterprise to which the rights relate:

"(2) A person shall be deemed to have acted in good faith in establishing rights under this section if the subject matter has not been derived from the inventor."

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 28 is amended by adding at the end the following:

"273. Rights based on prior use."

SEC. 4. APPLICATION FOR PATENT.

(a) BENEFIT OF EARLIER APPLICATION WITHIN 1 YEAR; RIGHT OF PRIORITY.—Section 119 is amended to read as follows:

“§ 119. Benefit of earlier application within 1 year; right of priority

“(a) PRIORITY RIGHT IN PRIOR APPLICATIONS.—An application for patent for an invention filed in the United States by an applicant who has, or whose legal representatives, agents, or assigns have, previously regularly filed an application for a patent for the same invention in the United States or a foreign country, if such foreign country affords similar privileges in the case of applications filed in the United States or to citizens of the United States, shall be given the same effect as a regularly filed application for patent in the United States filed on the date of the prior application, if—

“(1) the application for patent is made within 1 year after the date of the prior application;

“(2) the prior application contains the information with respect to the invention that is required by the first paragraph of section 112; and

“(3) a claim of priority under this section is made within 16 months after the date of the prior application.

“(b) REQUIREMENTS FOR PRIOR APPLICATIONS FILED IN A FOREIGN COUNTRY.—If the prior application is filed in a foreign country, an application shall not be entitled to the right of priority under this section unless a certified copy of the original foreign application, specification, and drawings upon which the claim is based is filed in the United States before the patent is granted. Such certification shall be made by the patent office of the foreign country in which the prior application was filed and shall specify the date of the prior application and of the filing of the specification and drawings. The Commissioner may require the filing of the certified copy before the patent is granted at any time not earlier than 4 months after the filing date in the United States, may require an English translation of the papers filed, and may require such other information as the Commissioner considers necessary.

“(c) REQUIREMENTS FOR PRIOR APPLICATIONS FILED IN THE UNITED STATES.—If the prior application is filed in the United States, a specific reference to the prior application contained in the application for patent shall be treated as the claim for a right of priority with respect to such prior application if all other requirements for priority that are set forth in this section are met.

“(d) SUBSEQUENTLY FILED APPLICATIONS.—The right provided in this section may be based upon a subsequent regularly filed application in the same country instead of the application that is filed first in that country, if any application filed prior to such subsequent application—

“(1) has been withdrawn, abandoned, or otherwise disposed of, has not been opened to public inspection, and has not left any priority rights outstanding under this title, and

“(2) has not served, and does not thereafter serve, as a basis for claiming a right of priority under this section.

“(e) RIGHTS REGARDING INVENTOR'S CERTIFICATE.—Applications for inventors' certificates filed in a foreign country in which the Stockholm Revision of the Paris Convention is in effect and in which applicants have a right to apply, at their discretion, either for a patent or for an inventor's certificate, shall be treated in the United States in the same manner and have the same effect for purposes of the right of priority under this section as applications for patents, subject to the same conditions and requirements of this section as apply to such applications.”.

(b) BENEFIT OF EARLIER FILING IN THE UNITED STATES.—Section 120 is amended to read as follows:

“§ 120. Benefit of earlier filing date in the United States

“(a) OTHER PRIORITY RIGHTS.—An application for patent for an invention with respect to which the information that is required by the first paragraph of section 112 is contained in an application previously filed in the United States shall have the same effect, as to such invention, as though filed on the date of the prior application, if the application for patent—

“(1) is filed before the patenting or abandonment of or termination of proceedings on the first application or on an application similarly entitled to the benefit of the filing date of the first application;

“(2) contains as filed, or is amended to contain, a specific reference to the earlier filed application;

“(3) is filed identifying one or more inventors identified in the previously filed application or is filed by the same applicant for patent as in the previously filed application; and

“(4) is not entitled to assert a right of priority in the previously filed application under section 119.

“(b) AMENDMENTS REGARDING PRIOR APPLICATIONS.—An application for patent may be amended to contain a specific reference to an earlier filed application only if such amendment is made within 16 months after the filing date of the application to which such reference is made.”.

(c) DIVISIONAL APPLICATIONS.—Section 121 is amended by striking the fourth sentence.

(d) OPENING OF APPLICATIONS.—Section 122 is amended to read as follows:

“§ 122. Opening of patent applications; confidential status

“(a) CONFIDENTIALITY.—Applications for patents shall be kept in confidence by the Patent and Trademark Office and no information concerning such applications may be disclosed without authority of the applicant or owner, except as necessary to carry out the provisions of any Act of Congress, as expressly provided in this section, or in such special circumstances as may be determined by the Commissioner.

“(b) PUBLICATION.—The Commissioner shall publish patent specifications and claims promptly at or following the time provided in this section for the opening to public inspection of the application for patent.

“(c) OPENING OF APPLICATIONS.—Beginning 18 months after the filing date of an application for patent, taking into account all claims for priority or benefit of prior applications, such application for patent shall be open to public inspection and copies shall be made available to the public under such procedures as may be determined by the Commissioner.

“(d) OPENING OF APPLICATIONS BY REQUEST.—In any case in which an applicant requests that his or her application for patent be opened to public inspection, the application shall be open to public inspection as of the date of the applicant's request.

“(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this section.”.

(e) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 11 is amended—

(1) by striking the item relating to section 119 and inserting the following:

“119. Benefit of earlier application within 1 year; right of priority.”; and

(2) by striking the item relating to section 122 and inserting the following:

“122. Opening of patent applications; confidential status.”.

SEC. 5. SEARCH AND EXAMINATION.

(a) SEARCH AND EXAMINATION.—Chapter 12 is amended by adding at the end the following:

“§ 136. Search and examination

“A search and examination with respect to an application for patent shall commence upon payment by the applicant of the balance of the fees under section 41(a)(1)(C). Such payment shall be made within 18 months after the earliest filing date of the application in the United States.

“§ 137. Request for accelerated search and examination

“(a) REQUEST AND FEE.—Upon request accompanied by payment of the regular fee for search and examination and a special fee which the Commissioner shall prescribe at not more than 25 percent of the fee for search and examination, an application for patent shall receive an accelerated search and examination.

“(b) COMPLETION OF SEARCH AND EXAMINATION.—Upon the request of the applicant, the accelerated search and examination under this section, including any appeal to the Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences, shall be completed with special dispatch if—

“(1) the request is made not less than 17 months before the date on which the application would be opened to public inspection under section 122 if still pending at such time;

“(2) the applicant responds to any official action under section 132 within the period for response provided under section 133, and no extension of time has been granted for such response; and

“(3) the applicant meets such other requirements for expediting prosecution as the Commissioner may impose by regulation.”.

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 12 is amended by adding at the end the following:

“136. Search and examination.

“137. Accelerated search and examination.”.

SEC. 6. ISSUE OF PATENT.

(a) CONTENTS AND TERM OF PATENT.—Section 154 is amended to read as follows:

“§ 154. Contents and term of patent

“(a) CONTENTS AND TERM.—Every patent shall contain a short title of the invention and a grant to the patentee, and his or her heirs or assigns, for a term beginning on the date on which the patent is issued and ending on a date 20 years from the date on which the application for patent is filed in the United States, excluding any claims of priority under section 119 or 365 and subject to the payment of the fees provided in this title—

“(1) of the right to exclude others from making, using, or selling the invention throughout the United States or importing the invention into the United States, and,

“(2) if the invention is a process, of the right to exclude others from using or selling throughout the United States or importing into the United States products made by that process, referring to the specification for the particulars of the invention. A copy of the specification and drawings shall be annexed to the patent and be a part of the patent.

“(b) PATENTS BASED ON PRIOR PUBLICATION.—If a patent is granted based on an application published under section 122(c) before the patent is granted, and to the extent the patent claims are substantially identical with the claims in the published application, the grant to the patentee shall additionally include the right to obtain a reasonable royalty from any other person who, during the period before the grant—

“(1) makes, uses, or sells the claimed invention in the United States, or imports the claimed invention into the United States, or

“(2) if the claimed invention is a process, uses or sells throughout the United States or imports into the United States products made by that process, if the person had actual knowledge of the published application.”.

(b) EXTENSION OF PATENT TERM.—Chapter 14 is amended by inserting after section 155A the following:

“§ 155B. Extension of patent term in the case of secrecy orders

“Notwithstanding the provisions of section 154, the term of a patent granted on an application which was ordered to be kept secret under section 181 shall be extended for the number of years equal to the number of full years during which such order was in effect, but in no case more than 30 years from the date on which the application is filed, or from the priority date of the application. In any such case, the Commissioner shall issue a certificate of extension, setting forth the period of extension, together with the grant of the patent.”.

(c) STATUTORY INVENTION REGISTRATION.—Section 157, and the item relating to section 157 in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 14, are repealed.

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 14 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 155A the following:

“155B. Extension of patent term in the case of secrecy orders.”

SEC. 7. DESIGN PATENTS.

Section 173 is amended by striking “fourteen years” and inserting “17 years from the date on which the application is filed in the United States, calculated in the manner provided in section 154(a).”.

SEC. 8. INTERNATIONAL STAGE.

Section 365 is amended—

(1) in subsection (a) by striking “which designated at least one country other than the United States”; and

(2) in subsection (b)—

(A) by striking “of the first paragraph”; and

(B) by striking “designating at least one country other than the United States”.

SEC. 9. NATIONAL STAGE.

Section 373, and the item relating to section 373 in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 37, are repealed.

SEC. 10. TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.

(a) APPLICATION FOR PATENT.—Section 111 is amended—

(1) by amending the section catchline to read as follows:

“§ 111. Application for patent”;

(2) in the second sentence by striking “an oath” and inserting “a request”; and

(3) by striking “oath” each subsequent place it appears and inserting “request”.

(b) JOINT INVENTORS.—Section 116 is amended in the first paragraph by striking “and each make the required oath”.

(c) COMMENCEMENT OF NATIONAL STAGE.—Section 371 is amended—

(1) in subsection (c) by striking paragraph (4) and redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (4); and

(2) in subsection (d)—

(A) in the first sentence—

(i) by striking “, the translation” and inserting “and the translation”; and

(ii) by striking “, and the oath or declaration referred to in subsection (c)(4) of this section”; and

(B) in the fourth sentence by striking “or the oath or declaration referred to in subsection (c)(4) of this section”.

(d) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The item relating to section 116 in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 111 is amended to read as follows:

“116. Inventors.”.

SEC. 11. EFFECTIVE DATE AND APPLICABILITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall take effect 6 months after the date on which the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks certifies to the Congress that an agreement among at least Japan, the countries of the European Patent Convention that are members of the European Community, and the United States has been executed and will come into effect on or before the expiration of such 6-month period, providing for the substantial harmonization of the laws relating to patent filing and examination procedures and patentability standards among such countries, including the doctrine of equivalence.

(b) PROVISIONS SUPERSEDED.—On the effective date set forth in subsection (a), the provisions of sections 102, 103, and 104 of title 35, United States Code, are superseded with respect to all patents and applications for patents containing one or more claims entitled to an effective filing date that is on or after such effective date.●

S. 2606. A bill to further clarify authorities and duties of the Secretary of Agriculture in issuing ski area permits on National Forest System lands; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

SKI AREA PERMIT ISSUANCE ON NATIONAL FOREST SYSTEM LANDS

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. President, Senator LEAHY, Senator SEYMOUR, and I are today introducing legislation to simplify the formula under which ski areas pay rental fees to the United States for the use of national forest lands.

Nationwide, there are 132 ski areas on national forest land occupying 90,000 acres, or a mere one-twentieth of 1 percent of the National Forest System. For this use, the ski industry paid an estimated $15 million in rental fees in 1991.

Skiing is by far the largest industry on Colorado's western slope, and contributes in excess of $2.5 billion annually to the State's economy. Statewide, it is the largest component of the tourism industry. Skiing generates an estimated 66,000 jobs, approximately 8,000 of which are employees of the ski area themselves. Due to high retail sales, the industry is especially profitable to State and local tax coffers, raising in excess $110 million per year to these accounts.

But as the employment figures show, the ski areas themselves enjoy only a small part of the economic activity skiing helps generate. Colorado Ski Country USA, our statewide ski trade group, has estimated that ski areas on the average receive only about 10-15 cents of the average out-of-State ski vacationer's dollar. Far larger amounts are spent for airfare, lodging and meals. And although ski area lifts, snowmaking, and trail grooming give the outward impression of a very large and profitable business, ski mountain operations on the whole are a problematical business whose success is heavily dependent on the weather, the national economy and other factors beyond its control. It is a risky business.

The industry estimates one-third of ski areas lose money in many years, one-third are marginally profitable, and one-third make a modest return on investment. This marginal profitability estimate is supported by a 1989 University of Colorado study which indicated that ski area profits before taxes represent only 3.5 percent of gross revenues. In the same year, 1989, ski industry figures show that, on the average, 2.89 percent of revenues were paid to the Forest Service in fees. In other words, the ski areas paid the Forest Service fees equivalent to 80 percent of their profits for that year.

Further, by almost any definition, ski areas, although highly visible nationally, are what the government classifies as small businesses. The nation's largest ski area, Vail in Colorado, had 1990 gross revenues of approximately $60 million. Most of Colorado's other “large” and well-known areas have gross revenues in the $20-$30 million range.

I note these facts, because although the ski industry pays relatively large fees to the United States as compared to other users, it is not a large and profitable industry per se. Rather its contribution and significance to the economy is largely generated by the communities and related services that evolve around it. Our ski areas are an incredible success in terms of creating economic opportunity on our national forests, but most of the ski area itself is only the beginning.

The legislation I am introducing today is largely driven by confusing and ill-advised trends in how the fees the Forest Service charge ski areas are being calculated. These changes run counter to common sense policy, and they threaten the very positive economic effects which our ski areas have had on their communities.

From the outset, we want to make it clear that this new fee proposal is intended to return at least the same rental dollars to the U.S. Treasury as the current system. It will also guarantee increasing revenues in the future by pegging fees to gross receipts. This will be fair to both ski areas and the United States, because as ski area revenues grow, so will the return to public for the use of Federal land.

Why, then, change the way these fees are calculated? The reason for our proposed change in the fee system is threefold.

First and foremost, the existing system has become too complex and subject to interpretation and dispute. The existing system is encompassed in some 40 pages of the Forest Service manual and handbook, as supplemented from time to time by interim directives. Its provisions are so overly broad and vague that it is interpreted differently by forest rangers, supervisors and auditors, and in some cases longstanding rulings and policies approved at one level of the Forest Service are overruled by auditors or supervisors at another level. In addition, policies are unevenly enforced from region to region and some ski areas are finding themselves retroactively billed for utilizing past procedures that they and their local Forest Service personnel thought were proper. Such back-billing can be extremely troublesome to an area, especially smaller areas which often operate on the margin of profitability.

The bottom line is that it should not require 40 pages for the Forest Service to figure out what rent to charge a ski area permittee. But the sad part is that the current system appears to become more like the complex Internal Revenue Code with every passing year. Our bill will change that, and reduce the fee calculation to a simple formula based on gross revenue from clearly defined sources. This simplification will greatly reduce bookkeeping and administrative tasks for both the Forest Service and the ski areas and make business planning simpler. Predictability of costs is important in any business, and especially in an industry where weather and other factors can play havoc with revenues.

The second reason for our proposed new system is that it will clearly limit ski area rental fees to activities located on Forest Service land. This is necessary because in recent years the Forest Service has been assessing fees against hotels, restaurants, ski shops and other activities located entirely on private lands, outside of the national forests.

The theory for this off-site assessment is that "but for" the ski area permit on the national forest land, there would be no ski area, and hence no hotels, restaurants or ski shops on the nearby private lands.

Several examples of this are ongoing in Colorado ski areas, and I think they illustrate how illogical and counter-productive this theory really is.

In Telluride, the ski area pays fees on the gross receipts of a ski shop located on private land in the town of Telluride. Why? Because the building is owned by the ski area president, and the Forest Service sees a "but for" relationship.

In Steamboat Springs, the revenue of several shops and restaurants located in buildings owned by the ski area on private land are included in the ski areas' assessed revenue, even though the shops and restaurants are leased to private operators, completely independent of the ski area.

At the Winter Park ski area, the Forest Service has indicated it will assess fees against any ski-related businesses which may be built on land which the ski area is seeking to acquire from the Forest Service in a land exchange. That would mean that even after the ski area pays fair market value for the land it acquires, it will also pay fees to the Forest Service for the businesses operating there. It is very hard to see how the Government can sell land and then charge a rental fee on lands it no longer owns.

In my view, these and dozens of other efforts to tax private lands for the use of nearby Federal lands is unprecedented and unwise. In late January, after several months of discussion with Colorado Ski Country USA aimed at simplifying the current system, the Forest Service circulated a new draft proposal under which ski areas would be required to pay fees on many activities on private land to the extent the national forest ski permit contributes to the private land revenue. This principle of contribution theory is not only unfair but unworkable, as our State's ski areas contribute to virtually every economic activity in our State.

Should the Forest Service get a cut of Hewlett-Packard's Colorado revenues because that company's officers and employees like to ski, and might have taken the opportunity to ski into consideration when they decided to locate facilities in our State?

No, of course not. But is that so different from the Forest Service saying it should take part of the airline tickets sold by a travel agency affiliated with a ski area? The Forest Service is doing that.

A fee system which takes a cut to activities surrounding a ski area sends all the wrong signals. It says there is no advantage in operating businesses on private land—which puts more pressure on the forests' lands. It penalizes positive economic activity—it creates disincentives to entrepreneurs who want to create jobs in ski country. And, lastly, it has no basis in common sense or the law.

This bill rejects the principle of charging a ski area for the benefits it gives to other businesses off Forest Service lands. It proposes the only fair system. Fees for ski area use of Forest Service land will be limited to those uses and activities which are located on the national forest.

The final reason for introducing our proposal is to shift some of the fee responsibility from smaller, less profitable ski areas to the larger areas. The smaller areas comprise the majority of the 132 areas located on national forest land. While these areas are not a major component of the $15 million paid to the Treasury, they are the ones who have the most difficult time surviving. Most are what we would recognize as local or community ski areas. These areas tend to be located where snowfall is less predictable and where local economics do not permit the heavy investment required for snowmaking to overcome weather adversity. The sad fact is that, since 1985, approximately 40 such small areas have gone out of business, with the resultant loss of opportunity for local residents to enjoy the sport of skiing in their community.

Our bill does two things for these smaller areas. First, it would slightly lower their fees in most cases. Second, and perhaps more important, it would greatly reduce bookkeeping and auditing costs by making the fee formula simpler. The latter provision is particularly important, because some small areas indicate they now spend more in bookkeeping and auditing fees to private consultants than they pay in actual rental fees to the Forest Service. Something is wrong where the cost of calculating the fee is more than the fee itself.

The modest revenue shortfall to the Treasury that would result from giving the small areas a break under our bill would be offset nationwide by modest, and in some cases, substantial, increases in the fees paid by the larger sized areas, most of which are located in Colorado and California. The Senators from Colorado and California would normally be reluctant to increase fees to their own ski areas, but we note that our ski areas unanimously support our proposal, and are willing to take the hit because they feel the simplicity and predictability of the new system will be beneficial to everyone in the long run. A great deal of ski area and Forest Service time and money is currently wasted haggling, appealing, and litigating over the ambiguities of the existing system * * * and most of the arguments involve items which comprise a small fraction of the overall revenue stream to the United States. Everyone appears to agree that simplification is in order, and that is precisely what our bill will achieve.

Before closing, there is one other matter which our bill addresses. It withdraws lands within ski area boundaries from the operation of the mining and mineral leasing laws. This is desirable to avoid conflicts between skiing and mining activities which have evolved at some areas—and to forestall the abuse of the mining laws by pseudo-miners who stake a claim not to mine, but to extort money from a ski area, or from the Government. The Forest Service should have completed withdrawals of all ski areas years ago. This will ensure that this issue is taken care of.

In summary, our bill is mainly about paperwork reduction and fee simplification. We are not seeking to give the ski industry a break in the fees they pay. Indeed, our formula will ensure increasing revenues in the future. Rather, we are seeking to give both the industry and the Forest Service a break from what is becoming a completely unworkable and increasingly complex fee payment system. Calculating rent for the use of national forest land need not be complex, and by linking the fee directly to gross revenue, as our new formula does, the task can be made simple.

I hope that my colleagues will support this bill, and that we can quickly enact it into law.●

● Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise today in support of Senator WIRTH's bill to clarify the authorities under which the USDA Forest Service issues ski area permits on national forests.

The purpose of this legislation is to provide a simpler method of calculating ski area fees for using our national forests. In simplifying this process, the Forest Service and individual ski areas will have a clear concise formula that can be uniformly implemented across the Nation.

Currently, some confusion exists about what ski area revenues should, or should not, be included in calculating payments. The new formula will clarify this problem by providing a predictable, simple, and long term formula from which ski areas can make long-term decisions. In this way the new formula should also reduce paperwork and other administrative costs to both the Forest Service and ski areas.

I do have one concern that must be addressed before this bill moves forward. The bill—as introduced—includes final fee calculations based on multiplying a ski area's adjusted gross revenues by a percentage figure based on that area's revenues. The legislation includes for different percentages for four different revenue brackets. In authorizing these figures we must be sure that this new fee structure will return the same amount of revenues to the general treasury as the old structure does. Unfortunately, there is currently a difference of opinion on whether the bill actually does so.

I expect these differences to be worked out shortly because the parties have agreed to sit down and work out a formula that is revenue neutral and fair to the ski area industry. I also expect for the results of this analysis to be built into this legislation before it moves through committee. Failure to do so will force me to rethink my position on this bill.

I commend Senator WIRTH for his leadership role on this issue and look forward to this legislation moving swiftly through Congress.●

● Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, I rise today with the distinguished Senator from Colorado, Mr. WIRTH, to introduce legislation to reform the current ski area permitting system on U.S. Forest Service [USFS] lands.

The ski industry in America is an industry in transition. It is estimated that in my home State of California alone, there are 1.5 million individuals—about 5 percent of the population—who consider themselves avid skiers. The arrival of the second baby-boom and the increasing numbers of physically active middle-aged and senior citizens will fuel a demand that could eclipse anything the industry has experienced to date. In the Lake Tahoe basin alone, the USFS projects a growth rate of 2 to 2.3 percent a year through the year 2030.

As the ski industry prepares to meet these new challenges, it must also face a litany of environmental and economic challenges that threaten to erode a financial return that is marginal at best. For example, the University of Colorado's "Economic Analysis of North American Ski Areas," published in 1989, found that over the decade of the 1980's, the rate of return, or pretax profit of operating a ski area, has dropped by one-third—from a national average of about 5 percent to 3.5 percent. This is among the lowest profit margins in private enterprises.

The ski industry creates an enormous economic benefit, however, to ancillary businesses and is frequently the primary employer in many mountain communities. In California, for example, for every dollar spent on lift tickets, vacationing skiers spend an average of $4 for lodging, meals, transportation and entertainment.

There are 132 ski areas that occupy 90,000 acres of Forest Service land. The ski companies that manage these areas pay about $15 million for the right to use these lands—a fee that is far higher on a per acre basis than that paid by most other lessees and users of National Forest lands. Thirty-three of these areas are located in California.

To determine the fees owned by these ski areas, the USFS uses a formula known as the graduated rate fee system [GRFS]. This system is found in the Forest Service manual and handbook and embodies hundreds of complicated definitions, interpretations, rulings and policies. Accounting under this system is extremely complex. This complexity has led to increasing conflicts between ski areas and the Forest Service as to what items, facilities or concepts should be included as assessable revenue.

The legislation the Senator from Colorado and I are offering today institutes a ski area permit fee which returns fair-market value to the United States while providing permittees with a simple, consistent, predictable and equitable fee formula. This formula eases the administrative and book-keeping costs currently shouldered by the ski areas and makes the process much simpler for the Forest Service to administer and enforce.

This bill establishes a simple formula for calculating the applicant's adjusted gross revenue [AGR]. Once the AGR is calculated, the following percentages determine the permit fees:

First, 1.5 percent for AGR below $3 million;

Second, 2.5 percent for AGR between $3 million and $15 million;

Third, 2.75 percent for AGR between $15 million and $50 million; and Fourth, 4.5 percent for AGR that exceeds $50 million.

This system is both simple and fair. Large profitable ski areas pay more than their small marginal counterparts. The formula also assures that income to the Treasury increases as profits for ski areas rise.

Mr. President, I would like to commend my distinguished colleague from Colorado for his leadership on this important issue.●

By Mr. JOHNSTON (for himself, Mr. BUMPERS, and Mr. PRYOR):

S. 2607. A bill to authorize regional integrated resource planning by registered holding companies and their regulators, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

REGIONAL INTEGRATED RESOURCE PLANNING AUTHORIZATION

● Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I am today introducing with Senators BUMPERS, and PRYOR a bill affecting the regulation and planning of registered electric utility holding company systems. At the outset, I commend the senior senator from Arkansas, Senator BUMPERS, for his efforts in helping to craft the proposal. Over the years he has been tireless on behalf of Arkansas electric consumers and has played a key role in moving Entergy Corporation—the registered holding company in our region—as well as the Arkansas Public Service Commission [PSC] and the city of New Orleans toward agreement on this proposal.

Senator BUMPERS raised the issue dealt with by this bill during consideration by the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of our national energy security legislation last May. Unfortunately, negotiations had not then evolved sufficiently to produce a legislative product. When the energy bill was being debated on the Senate floor, Senator BUMPERS graciously agreed not to offer this proposal as a floor amendment because he and I agreed that it required the full measure of legislative consideration. Instead, he, Senator PRYOR and I engaged in a colloquy underscoring the importance of addressing problems in the resource planning of registered holding companies. I agreed to help champion the bill and schedule it for hearing. Within the next few days I will announce a hearing date before the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. President, this bill deals with the question of how state utility commissions regulate operating subsidiaries of registered holding company systems in the wake of the Supreme Court's 1988 decision in Mississippi Power & Light Co. v. Mississippi ex rel. Moore. In that case, the Court ruled that a State commission carrying out its retail rate-making function could not question the prudence of a FERC-approved allocation of capacity purchases among affiliates of a registered holding company system.

State and Federal regulators and utilities debate the wisdom of this decision. State regulators feel strongly that the decision makes it very difficult for them to regulate resource planning by operating subsidiaries of holding companies. FERC has no clear authority in this area either because section 201 of the Federal Power Act prohibits FERC from exercising jurisdiction over generating units.

This proposal resolves the problem by giving clear planning authority to states. It proposes alternative ways to secure a regional integrated resource plan for a registered holding company system. First, it authorizes the creation of a regional board composed of State regulators that could unanimously agree to a regional integrated resource plan. Failing that, each State could adopt a State plan which, if consistent with all other State plans within the region, would become the regional plan. Finally, any State or the holding company could petition FERC to agree to a proposed plan. Once finalized by one of these methods, a plan would be binding upon the holding company, State commissions and the FERC. In his remarks, Senator BUMPERS will describe the proposal in more detail.

Mr. President, I commend Entergy, the Arkansas PSC and especially the City Council of New Orleans for their herculean efforts in reaching an agreeable compromise on this legislative proposal. It is unprecedented for a registered company and its regulators to come to grips with such an extraordinarily contentious issue, and it shows a high degree of good faith and dedication on all sides.

Yet, most of the proponents of this proposal would probably admit that it is not a perfect one. Rationalizing Federal and State regulation of utilities is a complicated undertaking, and it is especially complex in the area of regulation of registered holding company systems. So reasonable compromises may be necessary. I am hopeful that other registered holding companies and State regulators will play a helpful role in crafting a final legislative product. In any case, I intend the introduction of this bill to send a signal that our effort to resolve the problems posed by the Mississippi decision is a serious one. It is time for interested parties to come to the table.

I look forward to working with our cosponsors, State and Federal regulators, and registered holding companies toward a resolution of these important and complex issues.

• Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce along with Senators JOHNSTON and PRYOR a bill which deals with an issue of utmost importance to the electric customers in my State and other States served by registered holding companies.

Before I explain this proposal for the benefit of my colleagues, Mr. President, I want to commend the Arkansas Public Service Commission, the city of New Orleans and Entergy Corp. for their efforts in crafting this proposal. The issues addressed are complex ones, and they worked long and hard to come to an unprecedented agreement on this proposed legislation.

BACKGROUND

By way of background, in May of last year the Arkansas Commission and Entergy told me they believed they could negotiate a proposal that would establish a legal framework for least cost planning by registered holding company systems.

As they conceptualized it, the proposal would allow State regulators to reach agreement on a regional integrated resource plan which would make decisions with respect to the building of new generating facilities, the costs and allocation of such facilities, and the implementation of conservation and demand side measures. Once finalized, the plan would be binding upon the State commissions, the registered company, and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. FERC could not second guess the provisions of the plan and would be prohibited for example, from reallocating the costs of a generating unit allocated by the plan. In other words, Mr. President, there would be no future FERC decisions like Grand Gulf, where FERC reallocated the costs of a $3.5 billion nuclear facility, increasing Arkansas' share from 0 percent up to 36 percent.

Every Member of this body knows of my longstanding interest in this issue. And so I strongly encouraged these efforts, Mr. President, and was pleased when the Arkansas Commission and Entergy, joined by the city of New Orleans, asked me to champion this proposal as an amendment to the national energy strategy legislation. The proposal wasn't everything they wanted. There was give and take on both sides. It was a compromise. But of fundamental importance, the proposal would give to State regulators the authority they do not now have and allow them to ensure that registered holding company systems provide electric service at the lowest possible cost.

Mr. JOHNSTON, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, and I ultimately agreed that this proposal would proceed as a freestanding bill rather than as an amendment to S. 2166, the National Energy Security Act. On February 6, during pendency of that legislation, Senator PRYOR and I engaged the chairman in a colloquy understanding the importance of this regional planning proposal, and I am particularly pleased that Senator JOHNSTON is an original cosponsor of the bill.

NEED FOR LEGISLATION

The Supreme Court in its 1988 decision in Mississippi Power & Light ruled that in the case of an allocation of capacity purchases among affiliated companies of a registered holding company system, a State commission could not later question the prudence of the FERC-ordered purchases.

How is least cost planning, or integrated resource planning, conducted on a registered system? After Mississippi Power & Light, no regulatory body has clear authority to regulate resource planning by a registered holding company system. State commissions regulating registered subsidiaries lack clear authority. FERC does not have clear authority either, because section 201 of the Federal Power Act denies FERC authority over generating units.

Thus, Mr. President, State regulators or registered holding companies are between a rock and a hard place: They are subject to FERC preemption. Yet they cannot plan and make it stick.

SUMMARY OF THE LEGISLATION

Our bill gives clear planning authority to State regulators and provides alternative ways by which the adoption of a regional integrated resource plan can be achieved. The five fundamental elements of the legislation can be summarized as follows:

First, the heart of the proposal is its broad definition of a regional integrated resource plan. The plan must evaluate a full range of resources and actions—conservation, construction of facilities, power purchases, renewable energy—and select the set of resources and actions "which will meet expected future demand of the customers of the operating subsidiaries for electricity at the lowest systemwide cost, balancing the interests of shareholders and such customers."

Second, there are three paths to a plan:

The first path involves the creation of a regional board, composed of at least one member from each regulatory jurisdiction. The board has 12 months to agree unanimously on the terms of a plan, which is then filed with FERC. FERC has no authority to change the plan.

Under the second path, where each affected State has in place a State plan, and the plans are consistent with one another, FERC is authorized to approve the combination of plans as a regional integrated resource plan. This is an exemption from the regional board process of the first path.

Under the third path, a State or the registered company may petition FERC for approval of a plan. The company, and any affected State, may propose a plan. FERC has 18 months to choose among the plans submitted and to adopt a just and reasonable plan that is not likely to minimize projected system costs. The formation of a regional board during the pendency of the FERC proceeding will preempt the proceeding for 1 year, during which time the board may agree to a plan.

Third, a final plan adopted under one of the three paths is binding on FERC, the States and the registered company. Company action inconsistent with the plan can be challenged before the regional board or FERC. Inconsistent State commission action may be challenged in U.S. District Court. Inconsistent FERC action may be challenged under existing section 313 of the Federal Power Act.

Fourth, the plan must permit the recovery of all costs associated with purchase power contracts or facilities in operation which have been included in retail rates prior to the adoption of the plan.

And fifth, any person who is aggrieved by the adoption of a regional integrated resource plan may seek review under existing section 313 of the Federal Power Act.

BENEFITS OF REGIONAL INTEGRATED RESOURCE PLANNING LEGISLATION

Mr. President, I think everyone introducing this bill today would agree that the legislation is not perfect. Changes most likely will be needed to simplify the process. However, I am committed to developing a consensus behind the necessary changes and enacting regional integrated resource planning legislation this year.

Who benefits from such legislation, Mr. President? The answer is everyone.

Customers of registered holding companies benefit because a regional integrated resource plan must meet customer demand at the lowest cost. That is the essence of least cost planning. The mix of resources chosen by the plan must meet this standard. There is no such requirement in current law. In addition, customers in States like Arkansas gain the assurance that FERC won't force them to pay for a share of generating units and resources greater than that share set out in the plan.

State commissions that regulate the operating subsidiaries of registered companies benefit because they may exercise authority denied them by the Mississippi Power & Light decision, and the plan cannot be overturned by FERC just because a majority of FERC commissioners would have preferred a different one. FERC could not reallocate generating units and other resources set out in the plan. State regulators also gain an increased assurance that their approval of resource acquisitions will not be undone by the actions of fellow regulators in neighboring states which are part of the same integrated system.

Registered companies benefit because they get planning certainty they do not now have. They gain a form of preapproval that enhances the likelihood that their operating utilities will recover prudent resource investments. As I have said many times, once the plan is adopted it is binding on the world. Planning will reduce risks for both customers and shareholders.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, regional integrated resource planning legislation is sorely needed. It has broad support among state regulators.

I commend this legislation to my colleagues, and look forward to Hearings on the proposal in the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. I believe that we can enact this proposal in the 102d Congress.●

By Mr. EXON (for himself, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. BURNS, Mr. LOTT, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. SIMON, and Mr. BRADLEY):

S. 2608. A bill to authorize appropriations for the National Railroad Passenger Corporation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

AMTRAK AUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1992

● Mr. EXON. Mr. President, as chairman of the Surface Transportation Subcommittee, I am pleased to be joined by the chairman of the full Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, Senator HOLLINGS, in support of the legislation we are introducing today, the Amtrak Authorization Act of 1992. Other cosponsors of this bill include Senators KASTEN, BURNS, LOTT, ADAMS, SIMON, and BRADLEY.

Last year, the National Railroad Passenger Corporation, or Amtrak, marked its 20th anniversary as the Nation's intercity passenger railroad. Amtrak has made great strides since 1971—passenger-miles traveled are up, system route-miles have increased, and passenger service and safety have improved through new equipment, infrastructure, and employee dedication.

Today, Amtrak constitutes a vital part of our national transportation system. Amtrak serves my home state of Nebraska with stops in Omaha, Lincoln, Hastings, Holdrege, and McCook. As Amtrak moves closer toward its proclaimed goal of self-sufficiency, we should view continuing Federal support for Amtrak as an investment in our Nation's mobility. That investment is crucial to ensuring a vital and viable rail transportation alternative to our highway and aviation modes. However, we also must be mindful that Federal resources are very limited due to the federal budget deficit—I believe that this bill strikes a fair balance of these considerations.

S. 2608, the legislation I am introducing with my cosponsors, provides a 3-year authorization for Amtrak at levels which will continue the current core system while permitting new State-supported service where feasible. The bill authorizes operating expenses for the Amtrak core system of $331 million for each of the fiscal years [FY] 1993, 1994 and 1995. New State-supported services are authorized separately, at levels of $5 million for fiscal year 1993, $7 million for fiscal year 1994, and $10 million for fiscal year 1995. The bill also authorizes Amtrak capital expenditures of $300 million for each of the fiscal years 1993, 1994, and 1995. Mandatory payments for Amtrak's contribution for railroad retirement benefits and railroad unemployment insurance obligations required by law above the cost attributable to Amtrak employees are authorized at $146 million for fiscal year 1993 and such sums as may be necessary in fiscal year 1994 and fiscal year 1995.

In addition to providing for appropriate authorizations for Amtrak for the next three fiscal years, S. 2608 also includes a number of provisions intended to address certain managerial and financial issues, sharpen Amtrak's overall mandate, and improve rail passenger service and safety. For example, the bill would require that one member of the Amtrak Board of Directors—of the two appointed by the preferred stockholders—be qualified to represent the interest of rail passengers. The bill also would amend the Rail Passenger Service Act to create a new position of Chief Executive Officer, who would represent the corporation on the Board of Directors.

Two other provisions in the bill would further facilitate managerial and financial improvements in Amtrak's operation. One section would eliminate Amtrak's need annually to amend the corporate bylaws to authorize issuance of preferred stock to the Federal Government. Such stock is issued each year in an amount equal to newly appropriated Federal support. A second section in the bill would revise current statutory restrictions to permit Amtrak to participate in conventional sale/leaseback equipment transactions, lowering financing and transaction costs to Amtrak.

In order to permit Amtrak greater flexibility in structuring its operations, S. 2608 would permit Amtrak to discontinue, modify or adjust certain rail commuter services operated pursuant to section 403(d) of the Rail Passenger Service Act. If, after October 1993, specific rail commuter service exceeds in any previous 6-month period the average loss per passenger mile for comparable Amtrak services, Amtrak may elect to discontinue, modify or adjust the service not less than 60 days after the expiration of a public comment period of at least 30 days. In view of Federal budget deficits, Federal funds for Amtrak service are limited. We must ensure that Amtrak has flexibility to use its limited funds effectively in a fiscally responsible manner.

S. 2608 also would require Amtrak to channel resources into planning for the future introduction of high-speed rail passenger service in intercity corridors across the United States by developing an overall strategic plan for new technology demonstration. The bill further mandates that Amtrak must encourage efforts by State and regional partnerships, study groups, private sector representatives, and other entities seeking to advance high-speed rail service through equipment upgrades and incremental improvements to existing facilities used by Amtrak outside the Northeast corridor. By September 30, 1993, Amtrak would be required to report to Congress detailing Amtrak's efforts under this section and proposing further activities in support of high-speed rail service outside the Northeast corridor. This report also would summarize the high-speed rail technology demonstration plan required by the bill, including the goals of the demonstration plan, locations for technology demonstration, and a schedule for implementation.

To make further improvements in the safety of rail passenger service, S. 2608 would require Amtrak to make recommendations by September 30, 1993, and periodically thereafter, to the Secretary of Transportation in connection with the at-grade crossing elimination program adopted pursuant to the 1991 surface transportation reauthorization legislation. In addition, the bill would require the Secretary, in consultation with the States along the mainline of the Northeast corridor, to develop a plan for the elimination of all highway at-grade crossings along the Northeast corridor mainline by December 31, 1997, except where such elimination would be impracticable or unnecessary. Amtrak would be required to pay 20 percent of the cost of all at-grade crossings eliminated under this section.

In order to improve the emergency training and response of Amtrak on-board service and operating personnel, S. 2608 would require Amtrak, together with representatives from each of the on-board service employee and operating crafts and unions, to form a task force to consider recommendations for improving emergency training and performance of on-board crew members. The section includes specific matters for the task force to address, such as whether first-aid and cardiopulmonary resuscitation instruction should be mandatory for all Amtrak train crew members, and mandates a report to Congress on the findings and recommendations of the task force no later than June 1, 1993.

Considered in its entirety, the Amtrak Authorization Act of 1992 represents a vital step forward for rail passenger service, safety, and future improvements. The bill provides a firm foundation for Amtrak's continued progress. I look forward to working with the bill's cosponsors and my distinguished colleagues to ensure the swift passage of this meritorious legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill I am introducing be printed in the RECORD. •

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2608

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Amtrak Authorization Act of 1992".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 2. Section 601 of the Rail Passenger Service Act (45 U.S.C. 601) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 601. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"(a) GENERAL CAPITAL EXPENDITURES.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary for the benefit of the Corporation for making capital expenditures under this Act $300,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1993, 1994, and 1995.

"(b) OPERATING EXPENSES.—

"(1) CORE SYSTEM.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary for the benefit of the Corporation for operating expenses $331,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1993, 1994, and 1995. Of the amounts appropriated under this paragraph, not more than 5 percent for each fiscal year shall be used for the payment of operating expenses under section 403(b) of this Act for service in operation as of September 30, 1992.

"(2) NEW STATE-SUPPORTED SERVICE.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary for the benefit of the Corporation for operating expenses under section 403(b) of this Act and for other additional services commencing after September 30, 1992—

"(A) $5,000,000 for fiscal year 1993; and

"(B) $7,000,000 for fiscal year 1994; and

"(C) $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1995.

The expenditure by the Corporation of funds appropriated for operating expenses under section 403(b) of this Act for service commencing after September 30, 1992, shall not be considered to be an operating expense for purposes of calculating the revenue-to-operating expense ratio of the Corporation.

"(c) MANDATORY PAYMENTS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary

$146,000,000 for fiscal year 1993, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 1994 and 1995, for the payment of—

"(1) tax liabilities under section 3221 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 due in such fiscal years in excess of amounts needed to fund benefits for individuals who retire from the Corporation and for their beneficiaries;

"(2) obligations of the Corporation under section 8(a) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act (45 U.S.C. 358(a)) due in such fiscal years in excess of its obligations calculated on an experience-rated basis; and

"(3) obligations of the Corporation due under section 3321 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

Funds appropriated under this subsection shall not be considered a Federal subsidy of the Corporation.

"(d) ADMINISTRATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Funds appropriated pursuant to this section shall be made available to the Secretary during the fiscal year for which appropriated, except that appropriations for capital acquisitions and improvements may be made in an appropriations act for a fiscal year preceding the fiscal year in which the appropriation is to be available for obligation. Funds appropriated are authorized to remain available until expended. Appropriated sums shall be paid by the Secretary to the Corporation for expenditure by it in accordance with the Secretary's budget request as approved or modified by Congress at the time of appropriation. Payments by the Secretary to the Corporation of appropriated funds shall be made no more frequently than every 90 days, unless the Corporation, for good cause, requests more frequent payment before the expiration of any 90-day period."

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

SEC. 3. Section 303(a)(1)(E) of the Rail Passenger Service Act (45 U.S.C. 543(a)(1)(E)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "One of such members shall be specially qualified to represent the interests of rail passengers and shall be selected from a list of three qualified individuals recommended by the National Association of Railroad Passengers."

CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER

SEC. 4. Section 303 of the Rail Passenger Service Act (45 U.S.C. 543) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) in paragraph (1)(B), by striking "President" and inserting in lieu thereof "chief executive officer"; and

(B) in paragraph (4), by striking "President" and inserting in lieu thereof "chief executive officer"; and

(2) in subsection (d), by striking "President" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "chief executive officer".

AUTHORIZATION OF PREFERRED STOCK

SEC. 5. Section 304(c) of the Rail Passenger Service Act (45 U.S.C. 544(c)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4) No amendment to the articles of incorporation of the Corporation shall be required for the issuance of the preferred stock required to be issued pursuant to this subsection."

PROPERTY FINANCING

SEC. 6. Section 306(n) of the Rail Passenger Service Act (45 U.S.C. 546(n)) is amended to read as follows:

"(n) Neither the Corporation, nor any railroad subsidiary of the Corporation, nor any lessee or lessor of the Corporation or of any such railroad subsidiary shall be required to pay any additional taxes as a consequence of its expenditure of funds to acquire or improve real property, equipment, facilities, or right-of-way materials or structures used directly or indirectly in the provision of rail passenger service. For purposes of this subsection, 'additional taxes' means taxes or fees (1) on the acquisition, improvement, ownership, or operation of personal property by the Corporation, any railroad subsidiary of the Corporation, or any lessee or lessor of the Corporation or of any such railroad subsidiary; and (2) on real property other than taxes or fees on the acquisition of real property, or on the value of real property which is not attributable to improvements made, or the operation of such improvements, by the Corporation, any railroad subsidiary of the Corporation, or any lessor or lessee of the Corporation or of any such railroad subsidiary."

DISCONTINUANCE, MODIFICATION, OR ALTERATION OF CERTAIN RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE

SEC. 7. Section 403(d) of the Rail Passenger Service Act (45 U.S.C. 563(d)) is amended by striking the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following new sentences: "On any date on or after October 1, 1993, if such service during the previous 6-month period has a loss that exceeds the average loss per passenger mile for service over short-distance routes operated by the Corporation, the Corporation may elect to consider discontinuance, modification, or adjustment of such service. If such election is made, the Corporation shall solicit public comment on alternatives to discontinuance, modification, or adjustment of such service. The public comment period shall be at least 30 days. Within 60 days after the expiration of that comment period, the Corporation may discontinue, modify, or adjust such service so that the applicable criterion is met."

HIGH-SPEED RAIL TECHNOLOGY DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM

SEC. 8. Title VIII of the Rail Passenger Service Act (45 U.S.C. 642 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 811. HIGH-SPEED RAIL TECHNOLOGY DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.

"(a) PLAN.—The Corporation shall develop a plan for the demonstration of new technologies in rail passenger equipment. Such plan shall provide that—

"(1) any new equipment procured by the Corporation that may significantly increase train speeds over existing rail facilities shall be demonstrated, to the extent practicable, throughout the national intercity rail passenger system; and

"(2) the Corporation shall, in order to facilitate the Corporation's efforts to increase train speeds, take steps to establish cooperative arrangements with eligible applicants that intend to propose technology demonstrations for financial assistance under section 309(b)(2) of title 49, United States Code.

"(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—The Corporation shall, not later than September 30, 1993, transmit to the Congress a report summarizing the plan developed under subsection (a) of this section, including its goals, locations for technology demonstration, and a schedule for implementation of the plan."

HIGH-SPEED RAIL CORRIDOR DEVELOPMENT

SEC. 9. Title VIII of the Rail Passenger Service Act (45 U.S.C. 642 et seq.), as amended by this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 812. HIGH-SPEED RAIL CORRIDOR DEVELOPMENT.

"(a) ENCOURAGEMENT AND ASSISTANCE.—The Corporation shall actively encourage efforts by State and regional partnerships, study groups, private sector representatives, and other entities whose objective is to advance high-speed rail service through equipment upgrades and incremental infrastructure improvements on existing railroad facilities utilized by the Corporation outside the Northeast Corridor. To the maximum extent feasible through appropriate allocation of existing resources, the Corporation shall offer planning assistance, marketing analysis and support, engineering expertise, and other assistance to such entities in pursuit of this objective.

"(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—The Corporation shall report to Congress, in connection with the report required under section 811 of this Act, detailing the Corporation's efforts under this section and proposing further activities in support of high-speed rail service outside the Northeast Corridor."

SAFETY IMPROVEMENTS

SEC. 10. Title VIII of the Rail Passenger Service Act (45 U.S.C. 642 et seq.), as amended by this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 813. RAIL AT-GRADE CROSSINGS.

"(a) RECOMMENDATIONS.—The Corporation shall, by June 30, 1993, and periodically thereafter, make recommendations to the Secretary for the elimination of hazards of highway at-grade crossings under section 104(d) of title 23, United States Code.

"(b) ELIMINATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, in consultation with the States along the main line of the Northeast Corridor, shall develop a plan by September 30, 1993, for the elimination of all highway at-grade crossings of such main line by December 31, 1997.

"(2) EXCEPTIONS.—The plan developed under paragraph (1) of this subsection may provide that the elimination of a highway at-grade crossing need not be required if eliminating such crossing is impracticable or unnecessary and the use of the crossing will be consistent with such conditions as the Secretary considers appropriate to ensure safety.

"(3) FUNDING.—The Corporation shall pay 20 percent of the cost of the elimination of each highway at-grade crossing pursuant to the plan developed under paragraph (1) of this subsection."

EMERGENCY TRAINING AND RESPONSE

SEC. 11. Title VIII of the Rail Passenger Service Act (45 U.S.C. 642 et seq.), as amended by this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 814. EMERGENCY TRAINING AND RESPONSE.

"(a) TASK FORCE.—The Corporation, together with representatives from each of the on-board service and operating employee crafts and unions, shall form a task force to consider recommendations for improving emergency training and performance of on-board service and operating crew members.

"(b) MATTERS TO BE CONSIDERED.—The task force formed under subsection (a) of this section shall consider, at a minimum—

"(1) whether the Corporation's emergency training and drill program as presently constituted is adequate, and if not, in what ways it can be augmented or improved;

"(2) whether medical first-aid training, including cardiopulmonary resuscitation, should be required for all on-board crew members;

"(3) whether the Corporation's requirements with respect to employee responsibilities for passenger evacuation, emergency communications, crew coordination, and disaster response should be revised; and

(4) whether Federal certification of the Corporation's emergency training program and evacuation procedures, and certification of the emergency performance of on-board crew members, are warranted.

In considering the issue described in paragraphs (1) through (4), the task force shall address relevant prior recommendations and findings by the National Transportation Safety Board.

"(c) REPORT.—Not later than June 1, 1993, the task force shall report to Congress on its findings in subsection (b) of this section, together with a summary of actions implemented to date and recommendations for future action."

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Today we are introducing legislation to help assure the long-term viability of our national rail passenger system, Amtrak, which celebrated the 20th anniversary of its operation last year.

During a hearing in February, the Surface Transportation Subcommittee reviewed carefully Amtrak's record to determine whether changes in Amtrak's mission and self-concept were appropriate. In this regard, we first reviewed what operating and capital needs must be met to ensure the long-term viability of Amtrak's present system. We also addressed the concern that insufficient capital funding in the past may have prevented Amtrak from investing in equipment and facility improvements necessary for its future viability.

I am pleased to join Senator EXON, Chairman of the Surface Transportation Subcommittee, and other Senators in cosponsoring the Amtrak Authorization Act of 1992. This bill is structured to provide Amtrak with an authorization of funds for operating expenses and for capital expenditures sufficient to maintain the current network of service. In order to provide Amtrak with greater flexibility to promote expansion in areas where ridership potential can be documented, the bill includes a separate authorization for new State-supported and other services. It also includes provisions directing Amtrak to report to Congress regarding high-speed rail technology and corridor development.

An additional provision included in the bill, which I strongly support, calls for the formation of a task force comprised of representatives from Amtrak and each of the onboard service employee and operating crafts to consider recommendations for improving emergency training and performance of on-board crew members. My concern regarding whether Amtrak is providing sufficient emergency training for these employees stems, in part, from questions raised in the aftermath of the Amtrak accident that occurred in Lugoff, SC, last summer about the inadequate response to those injured in that accident. This task force should provide the needed examination in this area.

This legislation is important for the future of rail passenger service, and I urge my colleagues to join in supporting it.●

● Mr. SIMON. I am proud to join my friends and colleagues, Senator HOLLINGS and Senator EXON, as a cosponsor of the Amtrak Authorization Act of 1992. This bill not only represents a new direction for Amtrak, but it is good for the whole Nation by bringing us closer to having a modern national rail passenger system for the future.

When I introduced a bill last year to separate roads from high speed rail systems, I counted proposals for over 22 systems among 22 States for high speed passenger rail with or without steel wheels and many others who simply want conventional service now.

In the Midwest, my own State of Illinois has joined Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and now New York to plan and promote modern interconnected rail passenger service. This bill will also help service on east coast, the west coast, and along the southern tier of States as well.

The bill will help promote state-of-the-art high speed rail technology such as the tilt train, the gas turbine engine, and electrification of railroads. We can take these off the shelf now and fit them to the needs and pocketbooks of our own States and communities using part of our 130,000-mile rail system already in place. Rail technology can readily be converted into new jobs in both the manufacturing and steel producing sectors and in many related services.

This bill puts a consumer member on the Amtrak Board for the first time, and I cannot think of a more dedicated or better qualified organization to recommend that member than the National Association of Railroad Passengers. Time and time again we have counted on their leadership and support to lead us into the next step of Amtrak service or help us prevent the worst passenger train wreck of all: The administration's call for crippling cuts in Amtrak's budgets.

Up to now, I have been talking about the many people in States that are calling for Amtrak service, but we also know that good downtown to downtown intermodal passenger rail service helps all of us by conserving oil and saving the air as well. Not only are railroads a cleaner way to move more people with much less energy; but they also save miles of unnecessary automobile travel when homes, businesses, and services can remain around stations where we can live, work, shop, go to the doctor, consult our local mayor and go to a movie in the same place.

This bill will further the program I sponsored last year to separate roads and rails now part of the new Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act. No high speed passenger rail proposal should go forward until we eliminate the risk of collisions between trains, cars, and trucks at level crossings.●

By Mr. WOFFORD (for himself, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. SIMON, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. DIXON, and Mr. DURENBERGER):

S. 2609. A bill to direct the Comptroller General, in consultation with the Small Business Administration, to conduct a survey to obtain data on the experiences of business firms, and especially the experiences of small business concerns, in obtaining surety bonds from corporate surety companies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Small Business.

SMALL BUSINESS ACCESS TO SURETY BONDING SURVEY ACT

● Mr. WOFFORD. Mr. President, today I am introducing, on behalf of myself and Senators MIKULSKI, CRANSTON, KASTEN, BURDICK, SIMON, DECONCINI, DIXON and DURENBERGER, the Small Business Access to Surety Bonding Survey Act of 1992. This legislation will help determine whether there is improper discrimination in the surety bond market.

Surety bonds, which guarantee the performance of a contractor's or subcontractor's work, are often necessary for contractors to get business. For instance, surety bonds are required to bid on all Federal construction in excess of $25,000 and all federally assisted construction projects in excess of $100,000, most State and local government projects, and increasing numbers of private projects.

Small businesses have consistently asserted that the businesses decisions of corporate surety firms too frequently impede the development of emerging small businesses, especially those owned by women and minorities. However, only limited surveys regarding access to bonding for small businesses have been conducted to verify these assertions.

The Small Business Access to Surety Bonding Survey Act will require the Comptroller General in consultation with the Small Business Administration, to conduct a survey of business firms, especially those owned by women and minorities, to determine their experiences in obtaining surety bonding from corporate surety firms. The bill establishes a base line of questions to be included in a questionnaire to be sent to such firms in order to ensure a comprehensive review. Finally, the Comptroller General will be required to submit a report on its findings to the House and Senate Small Business Committees within 18 months of enactment.

The Small Business Access to Surety Bonding Survey Act will be part of the Women's Economic Equity Act, which will be introduced by Senator CRANSTON. Representative ELEANOR HOLMES NORTON introduced a companion measure in the House, which currently has the support of the American Subcontractors Association, the Small Business Legislative Council, Women Construction Owners and Executives, National Minorities Contractors Association and U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation to determine whether an injustice exists in the marketplace.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of this legislation be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2609

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Small Business Access to Surety Bonding Survey Act of 1992".

SEC. 2. SURVEY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Comptroller General, in consultation with the Small Business Administration, shall conduct a comprehensive survey of business firms, including using a questionnaire described in subsection (b), to obtain data on the experiences of such firms, and especially the experiences of small business concerns, in obtaining surety bonds from corporate surety firms.

(b) CONTENT OF SURVEY QUESTIONNAIRE.—The questionnaire used by the Comptroller General to conduct the survey under subsection (a) shall include such questions as the Comptroller General considers appropriate. To ensure a comprehensive review, such questions shall include questions to obtain information from a business firm on—

(1) the frequency with which the firm was requested to provide a corporate surety bond in fiscal year 1992;

(2) whether the frequency with which the firm was requested to provide a corporate surety bond increased or decreased in fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992 and the reason for any increase or decrease, if known;

(3) the frequency with which the firm provided a corporate surety bond in fiscal year 1992;

(4) whether the frequency with which the firm provided a corporate surety bond increased or decreased in fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992 and the reason for any increase or decrease, if known;

(5) the average size of corporate surety bonds provided by the firm in fiscal year 1992;

(6) whether the average size of the corporate surety bonds provided by the firm increased or decreased during fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992 and the reason for any increase or decrease, if known;

(7) the dollar amount of the largest corporate surety bond provided by the firm in fiscal year 1992;

(8) whether the dollar amount of the largest corporate surety bond provided by the firm increased or decreased in fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992 and the reason for any increase or decrease, if known;

(9) the dollar amount of work performed by the firm by type of construction owner, including the Federal Government, State and local governments, other public entities, and private entities, in each of fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992;

(10) the dollar amount of such work bonded by a corporate surety company for the firm by type of construction owner, including construction owners referred to in paragraph (9), for each of fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992;

(11) whether the firm purchased its corporate surety bonds through an insurance agent or directly from a surety company;

(12) the means used by the firm to identify its source for the purchase of corporate surety bonds;

(13) the average corporate surety bond premium (expressed as a percentage of contract amount) paid by the firm in fiscal year 1992;

(14) any increase or decrease in the average corporate surety bond premium (expressed as a percentage of the contract amount) paid by the firm in fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992 and the reason for any increase or decrease, if known;

(15) whether or not the underwriting requirements (including state of accounts receivable, financial procedures, need for personal indemnification, and requirements for collateral) changed in fiscal year 1990, 1991, or 1992;

(16) the nature of any changes in underwriting requirements experienced by the firm in fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992 and the reason for any such changes, if known;

(17) whether or not the source of surety bonds (a surety agent or company) provided reasons for such changes in underwriting requirements and whether these reasons were provided orally or in writing;

(18) whether or not the bonding capacity (total dollar amount and number of bonds) for the firm changed in fiscal year 1990, 1991, or 1992;

(19) whether or not the source of surety bonds (a surety agent or company) provided reasons for any changes in bonding capacity and whether these reasons were provided orally or in writing;

(20) the services provided and advice given by the firm's source of corporate surety bonds in fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992;

(21) whether or not the firm obtained a corporate surety bond with the assistance of a Federal program (such as the surety bond guarantee program of the Small Business Administration and the bonding assistance program of the Department of Transportation) or a State or local program in fiscal year 1990, 1991, or 1992;

(22) whether or not the firm used any alternative to corporate surety bonds (such as individual surety bonds, letters of credit, certificates of deposit, and government securities) in fiscal year 1990, 1991, or 1992;

(23) if the firm has not provided any corporate surety bonds in fiscal year 1990, 1991, or 1992, the reasons the firm has not done so;

(24) the number of times the firm has had an application for a corporate surety bond denied in fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992, and the reason for any such denial, if known;

(25) whether or not the proposed source for the corporate surety bond (a surety agent or company) provided the reasons for its denial of that application and whether that explanation was provided orally or in writing;

(26) the length of time the firm has been in business;

(27) the approximate annual sales volume of the firm in fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992;

(28) the net worth (total assets less total liabilities) of the firm at the close of the firm's most recent fiscal year;

(29) the working capital (current assets less current liabilities) of the firm at the close of the firm's most recent fiscal year;

(30) the average age of the firm's accounts receivable (the average number of days required to collect payments due);

(31) whether the firm made a profit in fiscal year 1990, 1991, or 1992; and

(32) the 4-digit standard industrial classification in which the firm performs the majority of its work.

(c) FIRMS TO BE SURVEYED.—The Comptroller General shall develop a statistically valid sample of business firms from the most recent list of construction firms maintained by the Dun and Bradstreet Company (identified as the "DUN Market Identifier" file) for which data regarding sales is available.

SEC. 3. REPORT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General, in consultation with the Small Business Administration shall conduct an assessment of the data obtained in the survey conducted pursuant to section 2 and submit to the Committees on Small Business of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the results of such assessment.

(b) CONTENTS OF THE REPORT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The report required by subsection (a) shall contain—

(A) a summary of responses of business firms to the survey conducted pursuant to section 2; and

(B) a description of any trends found by the Comptroller General in such responses.

(2) INFORMATION ON SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS.—In presenting summaries of responses and descriptions of trends pursuant to paragraph (1), the Comptroller General shall provide specific information on the responses and trends of small business concerns, small business concerns owned and controlled by women, and small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals.

SEC. 4. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "fiscal year" means the fiscal year of the business firm being surveyed;

(2) the term "small business concern" has the same meaning as in section 3 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632);

(3) the term "small business concern owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals" has the same meaning as in section 8(d)(3)(C) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)(3)(C)); and

(4) the term "small business concern owned and controlled by women" has the same meaning as in section 127(d) of the Small Business Administration Reauthorization and Amendment Act of 1988 (15 U.S.C. 637 note).

By Mr. METZENBAUM (for himself, Mr. BROWN, and Mr. SIMON):

S. 2610. A bill to amend the antitrust laws to provide a cause of action for persons injured in U.S. commerce by unfair foreign competition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INTERNATIONAL FAIR COMPETITION ACT

• Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I am today introducing a bill to amend existing antitrust laws to safeguard our free markets from anticompetitive conduct originating overseas. I am concerned that foreign companies selling their products in the U.S. market enjoy an unfair advantage over American competitors. Because these foreign companies operate in markets that are closed to competition, they are able to exploit their market power abroad to injure U.S. businesses.

Mr. President, it is obvious to me that American industry is under attack from anticompetitive behavior initiated from abroad. At a time when our economy is on the rocks, we cannot tolerate this abuse of our free and open competitive markets.

Our markets are the most competitive in the world thanks to our strong antitrust laws. Some argue that our antitrust laws put our own industries at a disadvantage when competing against industries from other countries where there are weak competition laws. These critics suggest that we should weaken our antitrust laws in response. This would be a mistake. Strong antitrust laws make for strong competitors both here and abroad.

However, it is only fair that we apply our own strong antitrust laws, to all who choose to sell in our markets. For too long, we have relied on only our trade laws to protect American business from unfair competition. The trade laws have proven inadequate to the task. It is now time that we add competition laws—the key underpinning of our free market system—to our arsenal.

Let me explain the problem using Japan as an example. Many United States companies complain that Japan engages in unfair trade practices. Often that charge is leveled by those who are being beaten by better products and better competitors. But in other cases the Japanese are winning these market battles because they play by different rules. There has been much talk of Japanese cartels and kieretsus. These business arrangements are tolerated in Japan because Japan does not have strong antitrust laws that prevent the abuse of dominant market positions. In addition to lack of adequate price competition among Japanese companies, other market abuses have resulted in Japan being able to keep American, European, and other competitors out of their markets. Because the Japanese market is isolated from real competition both at home and from abroad, Japanese consumers often pay far too high a price for their products.

Now some may ask why we would care if Japanese consumers pay too much for their purchases. That's their problem, right? Even I might agree if that was the end of the story.

But closed markets in Japan can create big problems in the United States. Because of anticompetitive practices that would not be tolerated in the United States, some Japanese companies operate in real or de facto cartels that charge Japanese consumers super high prices. These prices, born of lack of competition, finance below cost sales to the United States which ravage U.S. industries.

This scenario does not require a conspiracy to predate the market or destroy U.S. industry. It requires only that Japanese companies, insulated from real price competition, use their ill-gotten domestic profits to subsidize their below cost sales in the United States. The result is that Japanese industry is able to compete; ruinously compete, in the United States market. That is the primary reason we no longer have a domestic television industry in this country.

Here is what happened. In the early 1960's television industry cartels in Japan made a concerted and successful effort to take over our television industry. These cartels in Japan kept prices very high to Japanese consumers. In fact, Japanese consumers apparently are still the victims of such efforts. The Wall Street Journal reported on March 26, 1992, that four of Japan's leading electronics companies are being investigated in Japan for "illegally propping up domestic prices of television sets, portable video cameras, and other popular home electronics products."

These high prices had two effects. First, they subsidized below cost sales in the United States by allowing the Japanese manufacturers to recoup their fixed costs in the Japanese market. Furthermore, these high prices also lowered demand in Japan and resulted in tremendous excess capacity which was sent to the United States at depressed prices.

This flood of below cost televisions made it very difficult for American manufacturers to compete on price. The result was television manufacturing in the United States became unprofitable. Today there is no domestic television industry in the United States nor is there a video cassette recorder industry, or a compact disc player industry. In fact, virtually all consumer electronics sold in this country are imported from abroad. Similar stories can be told about our steel industry, our textile industry, and our semiconductor industry and soon may be told about our auto industry.

I am not complaining about fair competition, where a superior product made more efficiently wins the day. I am concerned about products imported into this country at below cost because the manufacturers abroad do not have open and free competition in their own markets. We must demand that those who benefit from our strong competition laws play by those same rules when they compete in the United States.

There are currently two other efforts to deal with this problem. However, neither is likely to be effective soon enough to save key sectors of U.S. industry from ruin. The structural impediments initiative [SII] between the United States and Japan is making only modest progress in promoting the adoption and effective enforcement of antitrust laws in Japan. When Jim Rill, the antitrust chief at DOJ, testified on this subject on March 13, 1992, it became clear to me that the SII talks will not fix the problem in our lifetime or, more importantly, the lifetime of our threatened industries.

Nor will the administration's effort to enforce our antitrust laws abroad bear much fruit. Attorney General Barr wants to apply our antitrust laws to anticompetitive behavior that occurs in Japan. Comity principles and problems of proof make success unlikely as both former Presidents Carter's and Reagan's antitrust chiefs have said in the press recently. What I propose will focus on the effects in the United States of anticompetitive behavior abroad.

The laws currently on the books will not solve the problem either. The 1916 Antidumping Act should, in theory, prohibit such behavior. But the 1916 act is outdated and virtually never used.

The 1916 act is an antitrust statute which prohibits anticompetitive price discrimination between two comparable products where an imported product is sold at a lower price in the United States than in the exporting country.

The 1916 act is not a viable remedy because of its intent requirement. The anticompetitive behavior which I have described above follows from efforts by foreign industry to cartelize their home markets, but does not necessarily show an intent to hurt U.S. industry. That is just a necessary effect when the foreign home market lacks effective competition and permits an industry to earn super high profits. I therefore have proposed removing the intent requirement from the 1916 act. Because this intent requirement is tied to criminal provisions in the 1916 act, the legislation I am proposing would also remove the criminal provisions in existing law and rely solely on a civil remedy.

Removing intent from the required elements of a substantive violation would conform the language of the act to the language of other antitrust laws, which define a violation in terms of the effects of the challenged anticompetitive conduct and not in terms of its intent.

I should note that this is not the first time that Congress has considered reinvigorating the 1916 act. In the 96th, 97th, and 98th Congresses efforts were made to amend the 1916 act to reinvigorate it. Those efforts also involved deleting the requirement of a specific intent to destroy a domestic industry and the dropping of the criminal provisions. These previous efforts received much criticism because the proposed revisions created a treble damage remedy for dumping.

These criticisms reflected the fact that the pricing test used in the previous proposal was essentially the same as those used in antidumping proceedings: That is, a comparison between the foreign market value of the product and the U.S. price of a comparable article.

What I propose today is a significant departure from previous proposals on several fronts. First, the bill I am introducing today requires a showing of below cost pricing. My bill includes a test which is grounded in antitrust law rather than trade law. This test is more difficult to meet than the current 1916 act test which requires that the price in the United States be less than the sale price for a comparable product in the offending company's home market. Under my proposal a defendant must be pricing its product in the United States below total average production costs. This would not be possible unless a significantly higher price was being charged in the home market. No company could price at below cost in all its markets and still survive.

This new pricing test is not the only hurdle. A potential plaintiff must show not only: First, below cost pricing; second, common and systematic importation at below cost; third, injury to U.S. commerce; and fourth, that the foreign country's market for such articles is substantially closed to effective competition.

This last test is critical. U.S. antitrust authorities are unlikely, given the bounds of comity, to succeed in enforcing our antitrust laws in foreign countries—those countries will choose for themselves what competition law they will have. But where there is no effective competition law, or where such a law is not enforced, our markets should not be imperiled. The bill I introduce today, therefore, requires that the Federal Trade Commission issue guidelines setting forth standards for evaluating whether the market abroad lacks effective competition.

The FTC would likely look to whether there are significant barriers to entry to the home market, whether that market tends to be highly concentrated and whether there is real price competition in the home market. Lack of these critical competition signposts indicates that competition is not thriving and explains why a company is able to price below its costs in the U.S. market.

This remedy is not discriminatory. Any industry which engages in production in the United States—whether American or foreign transplant—is unaffected because the law applies only to imports. Industries within the United States will still be subject to domestic price discrimination laws under the Robinson-Patman Act.

Industries which import will be treated similarly to domestic industry in that they will now be subject to price discrimination laws as well. The legislation, therefore, does not discriminatorily deny national treatment, it only denies more favorable treatment currently accorded to imported articles.

The remedy I propose is not a trade remedy, it is an antitrust remedy. It focuses on below cost pricing that occurs in the U.S. market combined with lack of effective competition in the home market. Neither of these tests are elements of antidumping. Where these elements are met and a U.S. industry suffers injury, a cause of action will lie. It is my hope that this bill will inspire foreign markets to open up to robust competition; the kind we enjoy in the United States. Such competition will benefit the consumers of the home country and will make competition in our markets more fair.

I look forward to a time when the global market place operates under strong competition laws. It is unfair for companies based in countries which do not foster free and open competition to enjoy the benefits of markets which do. This legislation recognizes the problem and will bring fairness and strong competition to international markets for the benefit of the world's consumers and our own.●

● Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, American industry today does not need Government handouts and protection from foreign competition. What American industry does need is a device to promote a level international playing field which provides true competition and open markets.

American consumers have benefited greatly from the effect of American antitrust laws which have promoted competition among domestic producers. The time has come to extend those basic tenets of fair competition to the international arena where American markets are also affected.

Without a long term approach to promoting international competition we will not achieve the level playing field upon which American industry may continue to compete and continue to grow.

The result will be that America will ultimately have less jobs, fewer consumers to protect and less powerful tools with which to protect them.

Application of domestic antitrust laws to foreign anticompetitive behavior having an effect on U.S. markets is one potential solution which the Senate should consider.

It is for these reasons that I am pleased to cosponsor Senator METZENBAUM's International Fair Competition Act. It represents an important step in focusing the debate on fair international competition.

Simply stated, Senator METZENBAUM's bill gives American manufacturers a cause of action against a foreign manufacturer who sells articles in the United States at less than the average total cost where the effect is to injure U.S. industry or lessen competition in the market for those articles.

But I wish to stress that the cause of action exists only where the foreign producer's home market for those articles lacks effective price competition or is substantially closed to effective competition from imports.

The bill is therefore addressed to situations like that encountered in the well-known Matsushita case. It is not protectionist legislation. It seeks to promote open and fair international price competition and open markets.

There are other worthwhile proposals which the Senate should strongly consider. Senator GRASSLEY has introduced S. 2352. While this bill takes a different approach, it is intended to address the same concerns and deserves the Senate's serious consideration.

It is my understanding that Senator METZENBAUM intends to expeditiously hold hearings on this and other proposals to extend the application of American antitrust statutes to foreign anticompetitive activity having an effect in the U.S. market. I look forward to those hearings.

I recognize that American manufacturers are not of one mind with respect to these proposals. There are companies which rely on the availability of quality low-cost components produced by foreign manufacturers. Before acting on any proposal, we must ensure that the concerns of these manufacturers are fully considered.

I look forward to the hearings and to full and open debate on these issues.●

By Mr. SIMON (for himself and Mr. DIXON):

S. 2611. A bill to amend chapter 93 of title 31, United States Code, to provide additional requirements for a surety corporation to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to provide for equal access to surety bonding, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EQUAL SURETY BOND OPPORTUNITY ACT

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce the Equal Surety Bond Opportunity Requirements Act with my distinguished colleague Senator ALAN DIXON. This bill is designed to ensure that small and emerging construction firms, especially those owned by women and minorities, are treated fairly in the surety bonding process.

Surety bonds, while classified as a line of insurance, are really a form of credit. Surety firms guarantee the owner or prime contractor the financial fitness and capacity of a contractor or subcontractor to complete their project. If the subcontractor or contractor fails to complete the obligations of the project, the surety firm steps in to fulfill the contract. However, unlike insurance policies, surety firms expect the loss or expense to be paid back.

Women and minority contractors face serious problems in obtaining the surety bonds that are required to bid on most Federal, State, and local government projects. Construction firms must have surety bonds to bid on all Federal construction work in excess of $25,000 and all federally assisted construction projects in excess of $100,000. An increasing number of private construction contracts are also requiring contractors to be bonded.

Construction companies that are denied access to surety bonding are essentially denied the opportunity to bid on the majority of Federal, State, and local government construction projects and many private construction projects. Access to surety bonding is essential to the livelihood of construction companies. For women- and minority-owned construction companies that already face obstacles in obtaining capital, difficulties in obtaining bonding further threaten their survival.

The principal source of surety bonding, the for-profit corporate surety firm, determines eligibility of a contractor based on unspecified underwriting standards. Surety firms look at a variety of factors in making their determination of whether a construction company should receive bonding. They base their decisions on what they loosely call the three C's: cash, capacity to do work, and character. The personal character of a contractor can be evaluated in a very subjective manner—one that can often result in discrimination.

Through discussions with members of the Women Construction Owners and Executives [WCOE] and the National Association of Minority Contractors [NAMC], I have learned of practices that are discriminatory. One woman contractor from the Chicago area could not get bonding after her divorce. Her ex-husband, however, who was convicted of bid-rigging, was able to get bonding from the same surety firm that denied her application. When a woman who owns a financially sound construction company cannot get bonding after a divorce, but the ex-husband, a convicted felon, can—something is very wrong.

An Illinois minority subcontractor who never had problems getting bonding for subcontracting jobs suddenly developed a bonding problem when he went to bid on a relatively small, $80,000 contract as a prime contractor. The surety firm did not have problems bonding the minority subcontractor as long as there was a prime contractor over him. The assumption was that the prime contractor could make sure the minority contractor got his job done. However, once the minority contractor bid for a project as a prime contractor, independent of anybody, the surety firm refused to bond the contractor. This minority contractor never had any problems finishing a project. This contractor had a proven record yet could not get bonding because the surety firm did not trust him.

According to WCOE and the National Association of Minority Contractors, bonding has been denied simply for not being married, being a woman, or being a minority. These are not acceptable reasons for rejecting a bond applicant. Other women and minority contractors have been rejected without any oral or written explanation of why their application was denied.

The American Subcontractors Association [ASA] has appealed to the Treasury Department, which maintains a list of federally approved surety firms for use on Federal projects, to solve these problems administratively. I have a copy of the ASA petition to the Treasury Department, which is dated February 16, 1990 and two follow-up requests dated August 16, 1990, and September 27, 1990. The National Association of Minority Contractors also petitioned the Treasury Department to make it unlawful for a Treasury-approved surety to discriminate. I ask that these letters be included in the RECORD. Unfortunately, these steps have not met with any results, not even a response from the Treasury Department. It is doubtful that any affirmative action is likely given the lack of a response by the Treasury Department.

The ASA's petition urges the Treasury Department to make it unlawful for a Treasury-approved surety to discriminate against the applicant on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, or marital status; requires a surety to notify an applicant of his/her status, and entitles a denied applicant to receive a written statement of the reasons for denial.

My simple bill, which is modeled after the Equal Credit Opportunity Act and includes the substance of the ASA petition prohibits surety firms from discriminating on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, marital status, sexual orientation, or age. The ability to contract should be the sole determination of whether a contractor is considered eligible for a bond.

The bill also prohibits discrimination against an applicant for obtaining a bond through an individual surety or a special program designed to help small and emerging firms obtain surety bonding, or because an applicant has exercised his or her right under this Act.

The U.S. Treasury Department maintains a list of surety firms that have been approved for use on Federal contracts. Under my bill, surety firms that seek to be included on the Treasury-approved list are required, upon request, to provide denied applicants with a full written disclosure of the reasons for their denial.

A written explanation will give construction firms the opportunity to take appropriate corrective action—an opportunity now available to all prospective small business Federal contractors when denied by an agency contracting officer. The written explanation should also limit the denial of bonding for other than legitimate reasons.

Specifically, the bill requires surety firms or its agent, upon request, to notify a contractor of the status of his/her application within 30 days of receipt of a completed application. Contractors who have been rejected have the right to receive a written explanation of why they were rejected in a fixed amount of time.

The Surety Bond Opportunity Act will soon be included in the women's Economic Equity Act, an omnibus bill aimed at promoting the economic well-being of American women and their families.

This bill is necessary in order for women- and minority-owned business to gain equal footing in the contracting business. The bill will establish a measure of fairness and discipline into the bonding business. This bill ensures that surety firms comply with the same nondiscrimination laws that bind banks and other lending institutions. If a surety firm is in compliance with these laws, it has nothing to fear from this legislation. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this very important, very simple piece of legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of my bill be included at this point in the RECORD, along with the full text of the letters to which I referred.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2611

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Equal Surety Bond Opportunity Act of 1992".

SEC. 2. ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS REGARDING APPROVAL OF SURETIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—A company may not be approved as a surety by the Secretary of the Treasury under section 9304 of chapter 93 of title 31, United States Code, or provide any surety bond pursuant to such section unless such company maintains full compliance with the requirements of section 9310 of title 31, United States Code.

(b) REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO ENFORCEABILITY.—

(1) SIGNED STATEMENT OF COMPLIANCE WITH APPLICATION.—Section 9305(a) of title 31, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (1);

(B) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting "; and"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) a statement of compliance with section 9310 which is signed under penalty of perjury by the president and the secretary of the corporation."

(2) COMPLIANCE AS A CONDITION FOR APPROVAL OF APPLICATION.—Section 9305(b) of title 31, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (2);

(B) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting "; and"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4) the corporation is in full compliance with section 9310."

(3) SIGNED STATEMENT OF COMPLIANCE WITH QUARTERLY REPORTS.—Section 9305(c) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by inserting "and a statement of compliance with section 9310," before "signed and sworn".

(4) ENFORCEMENT AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.—Section 9305(d) of title 31, United States Code, is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1), by striking "9304 or 9306" and inserting "9304, 9306, or 9310"; and

(B) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (2);

(C) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (3) and inserting "; and"; and

(D) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4) may, after the end of the 1-year period beginning on the effective date of any revocation under paragraph (1) of the authority of a surety corporation for noncompliance with section 9310, reauthorize such corporation to provide surety bonds under section 9304."

(5) REVOCATION FOR FAILURE TO PAY CERTAIN JUDGMENTS.—Section 9305(e) of title 31, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (1);

(B) by redesignating paragraph (2) as paragraph (3); and

(C) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph:

"(2) the corporation does not pay a final judgment or order against the corporation for noncompliance with section 9310, or fails to comply with any order under that section; and"

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 9304(a)(3) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by striking "9305 and 9306" and inserting "9305, 9306, and 9310".

SEC. 3. INFORMATION FOR BOND APPLICANTS AND NONDISCRIMINATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 93 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 9310. INFORMATION FOR BOND APPLICANTS; NONDISCRIMINATION.

"(a) REASONS FOR ADVERSE ACTION; PROCEDURE APPLICABLE.—

"(1) NOTICE REQUIRED.—Not later than 30 days after receipt of a completed application for a bond, any surety under section 9304 of title 31, United States Code, shall notify the applicant of its action on the application.

"(2) STATEMENT OF REASONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Each applicant against whom adverse action is taken shall be entitled to a statement of reasons for such action from the surety.

"(B) ACCEPTABLE FORMS OF STATEMENT.—A surety satisfies the requirement established under subparagraph (A)—

"(i) by providing a statement of reasons in writing as a matter of course to applicants against whom adverse action is taken; or

"(ii) by giving written notification of adverse action which discloses—

"(I) the applicant's right to a statement of reasons not later than 30 days after receipt by the surety of a request made not later than 60 days after such notification; and

"(II) the identity of the person or office from which such statement may be obtained.

"(C) ORAL STATEMENT PERMITTED.—Such statement may be given orally if the written notification advises the applicant of the applicant's right to have the statement of reasons confirmed in writing upon written request.

"(3) SPECIFICITY OF REASONS.—A statement of reasons meets the requirements of this section only if it contains specific reasons for the adverse action taken.

"(4) APPLICABILITY IN CASE OF THIRD PARTY APPLICATIONS.—In the case of a request to a surety by a third party to issue a bond directly or indirectly to an applicant, the notification and statement of reasons required by this section may be made directly by such surety, or indirectly through the third party, if the identity of the surety is disclosed to the applicant.

"(5) APPLICABILITY IN CASE OF SURETIES WHICH ACCEPT FEW APPLICATIONS.—The requirements of paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) may be satisfied by verbal statements or notifications in the case of any surety who did not act on more than 100 applications during the calendar year in which the adverse action is taken.

"(b) NONDISCRIMINATION.—

"(1) ACTIVITIES.—It shall be unlawful for any surety to discriminate against any applicant, with respect to any aspect of a surety bond transaction—

"(A) on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, marital status, disability, or age (if the applicant has the capacity to contract);

"(B) because the applicant has in good faith exercised any right under this chapter;

"(C) because the applicant previously obtained a bond through an individual or personal surety; or

"(D) because the applicant previously obtained a bond through—

"(i) any bonding assistance program expressly authorized by law;

"(ii) any bonding assistance program administered by a nonprofit organization for its members or an economically disadvantaged class of persons; or

"(iii) any special purpose bonding program offered by a profitmaking organization to meet special needs.

"(2) ACTIVITIES NOT CONSTITUTING DISCRIMINATION.—It shall not constitute discrimination for purposes of this section for a surety—

"(A) to make an inquiry of marital status if such inquiry is for the purpose of ascertaining the surety's rights and remedies applicable to the granting of a bond and not to discriminate in a determination of bondability;

"(B) to make an inquiry of the applicant's age if such inquiry is for the purpose of determining the amount and probable continuance of bondability; or

"(C) to make an inquiry as to where the applicant has previously obtained a bond, in order to determine bonding history, or other pertinent element of bondability, except that an applicant may not be assigned a negative factor or value because such applicant previously obtained a bond through—

"(i) an individual or personal surety;

"(ii) a bonding assistance program expressly authorized by law;

"(iii) any bonding program administered by a nonprofit organization for its members or an economically disadvantaged class of persons; or

"(iv) any special purpose bonding program offered by a profitmaking organization to meet special needs.

"(3) ADDITIONAL ACTIVITIES NOT CONSTITUTING DISCRIMINATION.—It is not a violation of this section for a surety to refuse to issue a bond pursuant to—

"(A) any bonding assistance program authorized by law for an economically disadvantaged class of persons;

"(B) any bonding assistance program administered by a nonprofit organization for its members or an economically disadvantaged class of persons; or

"(C) any special purpose bonding program offered by a profitmaking organization to meet special needs, if such refusal is required by or made pursuant to such program."

(b) DEFINITION OF ADVERSE ACTION.—Section 9301 of title 31, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (1) and inserting a semicolon;

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) 'adverse action'—

"(A) means a denial of a bond, a change in the terms of an existing bonding arrangement, or a refusal to issue a bond in the amount or on substantially the terms requested; and

"(B) does not include any refusal to issue an additional bond under an existing bonding arrangement where the applicant is in default, or where such additional bond would exceed a previously established bonding limit."

SEC. 4. CIVIL PENALTIES.

Section 9308 of title 31, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in the first sentence by striking "A surety corporation" and inserting the following:

"(a) LIABILITY TO THE UNITED STATES.—A surety corporation";

(2) in the second sentence by striking "A civil action" and inserting the following:

"(c) JURISDICTION.—A civil action";

(3) in the third sentence by striking "A penalty imposed" and inserting the following:

"(d) EFFECT OF PENALTIES ON CONTRACTS.—A penalty imposed"; and

(4) by inserting the following before subsection (c) (as designated by paragraph (2)):

"(b) LIABILITY FOR DISCRIMINATORY ACTION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Any surety corporation that fails to comply with section 9310(b) shall be liable to the aggrieved applicant for—

"(A) any actual damage sustained by such applicant (individually or as a member of a class); and

"(B) in the case of any successful action under this subsection, the costs of the action, together with reasonable attorney's fees, as determined by the court.

"(2) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED.—In determining the amount of any damages under paragraph (1), the factors considered by the court shall include—

"(A) the amount of any actual damages awardable under paragraph (1);

"(B) the frequency and persistence of the failures by the surety to comply with the requirements of section 9310;

"(C) the number of persons adversely affected by the failure of the surety to comply with such requirements; and

"(D) the extent to which such failure was intentional."

SEC. 5. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall issue such proposed regulations as may be necessary to carry out this Act not later than 270 days after the date of its enactment. The final regulations shall become effective not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 6. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall become effective on the earlier of—

- (1) the effective date of the final regulations promulgated pursuant to section 5; or
- (2) the end of the 1-year period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act.

AMERICAN SUBCONTRACTORS ASSOCIATION, INC.,

Alexandria, VA, August 16, 1990.

Commissioner WILLIAM E. DOUGLAS, Financial Management Service, U.S. Department of the Treasury, Liberty Center, Washington, DC.

DEAR COMMISSIONER DOUGLAS: Six months ago, on February 16, 1990, the American Subcontractors Association submitted to you a petition for proposed rulemaking pursuant to the Administrative Procedures Act (5 U.S.C. Sec. 553(e)). That petition made specific recommendations concerning amendment to Part 223 of the Code of Federal Regulations, governing "Surety Companies Doing Business with the United States." A copy of that petition for rulemaking is attached.

Would you please give us an indication of when ASA can expect a formal response to its petition. We note that the APA (5 U.S.C. Sec. 555(e)) requires that agencies conclude matters submitted to them within a reasonable amount of time.

We will look forward to your prompt response.

Sincerely,

E. COLETTE NELSON,

Vice President of Government Relations.

AMERICAN SUBCONTRACTORS ASSOCIATION, INC.,

Alexandria, VA, September 27, 1990.

Ms. TERRY BOYER,

Manager, Surety Bonds Branch, Financial Management Service, U.S. Department of the Treasury, Liberty Center, Washington, DC.

DEAR TERRY: Last week, representatives of the American Subcontractors Association met with representatives of The Surety Association of America and the National Association of Surety Bond Producers. During the meeting, SAA President Lloyd Provost expressed concern about the petition of rulemaking that ASA submitted to Commissioner Douglas on February 16, 1990. Mr. Provost said that SAA had reviewed the petition, a copy of which he had obtained from your office, and is opposed to its consideration.

While we do not question your right to provide Mr. Provost with a copy of the ASA petition or even to discuss it with him, we are concerned that such discussions have been undertaken when we have not been able to get a response to our letters on the subject. Indeed, recently, my phone calls have not been returned.

I have been informed by a staff member in the Office of Federal Procurement Policy that "Treasury is opposed to the ASA proposal." We would hope that Treasury's opposition does not result in the denial of any response at all.

Terry, I urge you to take steps to formally respond to the ASA petition of rulemaking dated February 16, 1990 (copy enclosed). If there is anything that ASA can do to help expedite consideration of this petition, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely yours,

E. COLETTE NELSON,

Vice President of Government Relations.

AMERICAN SUBCONTRACTORS
ASSOCIATION, INC.,

Alexandria, VA, February 16, 1990.

Commissioner WILLIAM E. DOUGLAS,
Financial Management Service,
U.S. Department of the Treasury, Liberty Center, Washington, DC.

DEAR COMMISSIONER DOUGLAS: (1) Pursuant to Section 553(e) of the Administrative Procedures Act, the American Subcontractors Association (ASA) petitions for a rulemaking to amend part 223 of the Code of Federal Regulations, governing "Surety Companies Doing Business With the United States." ASA petitions that the regulation be amended to:

Make it unlawful for a Treasury-approved surety to discriminate against any applicant on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin or sex or marital status;

Require such a surety or its agent to notify an applicant for a bond of the action on an application within a time period designated by the applicant if that time is considered reasonable or a longer period that comports with prevailing industry practice; and

Entitle an applicant for a bond whose application has been denied, to receive, upon request, a written statement of reasons for such action from such surety or its agent.

(2) ASA is a national association with more than 8,000 member firms in nearly every construction specialty trade. In addition, ASA represents 20 national associations of specialty trade contractors with members of their own (See Attachment A). Many ASA members serve as prime contractors on federal construction. Thus, ASA has a real and direct interest in any law or regulation that impacts the ability of construction contractor to do business with the federal government.

(3) The 1935 Miller Act requires federal construction contractors with contracts over $25,000 to provide performance and payment bonds. The Federal Acquisition Regulation provides that if a prime contractor provides a corporate surety bond, the surety company providing that bond must be listed in Department Circular No. 570, "Companies Holding Certificates of Authority as Acceptable Sureties on Federal Bonds and as Acceptable Reinsuring Companies."

In the Miller Act, Congress essentially delegated to the surety industry the responsibility for determining whether a construction contractor is qualified to perform a given federal contract. That is, a surety, in practical terms, has assumed the responsibility for "prequalifying" a construction contractor on behalf of the federal contracting agency. Thus, ASA believes that a surety approved by the Treasury Department to provide bonds on federal contracts should undertake this responsibility with the same care, diligence, priorities and policies of the federal government.

(4) Congress repeatedly has stated that it is the policy of the United States to assure that small businesses and small disadvantaged businesses are given every opportunity to compete for federal procurement dollars. Indeed, there are many programs that give small businesses and small disadvantaged businesses a preference in the bidding process for federal contracts.

Yet, complaints about the surety bond process are particularly prevalent from minority-owned and woman-owned businesses. Many of the owners of these firms believe that the reason for their denial of a bond is race or sex discrimination. Yet, it can be acknowledged that because of historical patterns, minority and woman-owned firms are more likely to be small and relatively new. These are just the type of firms to which many surety companies are reluctant to provide bonds. In addition, because of government preference programs, minority- and woman-owned firms are more likely to be participating in government procurement for which they must provide bonds.

The extent of any discrimination specifically against minority and woman-owned businesses may be difficult to prove. But whether such discrimination actually exists or not, surety companies providing bonds for federal procurement should be specifically prohibited from discriminating on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, or sex or marital status.

(5) Small businesses selling goods or services, including construction, to the federal government have the right to appeal a contracting officer's finding of "non-responsibility." This appeals process is provided by the Small Business Administration pursuant to Section 8(b)(7) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(b)(7)). Under the Certificate of Competency Program, a small business concern found to be otherwise eligible for award which is found to be non-responsible by an agency contracting officer must have such a non-responsibility determination referred to the SBA. Upon application by the small business concern, SBA will review the qualifications of the small business concern to determine if it is a responsible source (41 U.S.C. 403(7)). If SBA finds the prospective contractor is capable of performing the contract in question, it awards the contractor a "Certificate of Competency." The federal contracting officer must accept this COC as confirmation of the contractor's responsibility and must make the award. A recent General Accounting Office Report (RCED-86-120BR) suggests that SBA's COC Program is successful because it permits small business concerns to understand and correct the deficiencies giving rise to the agency's initial non-responsibility determination. A finding of the Report is that COC's reflect the ability of small business concerns to affect necessary corrective action and are not merely "second-guessing" of the facts by SBA.

Construction contractors have no opportunity to appeal the finding of a surety that it is "non-responsible"—that is, it is not qualified to perform a contract on which it has chosen to bid. Indeed, the contractor may not even be told the reason why it was not granted a bond by the surety or its agent.

In 1988, a representative of The Surety Association of America stated before a House subcommittee that:

"* * * being declined does not mean the contractor will be unable to get a bond in the future. The contractor is always free to take steps to fix whatever weaknesses are causing the bond availability problem. Except for serious character problems most weaknesses are curable if the contractor is willing to make the necessary effort." (Statement of Dennis E. Wine, Vice President, The Surety Association of America, to the Subcommittee on Commerce, Consumer Protection and Competitiveness of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, June 29, 1988.)

This is true, but only if the contractor is aware of what the surety perceives are its weaknesses.

The ASA recommended amendment to Treasury's regulations would provide a construction contractor denied a bond during the surety's prequalification process with the opportunity to make the changes in its firm necessary to allow it to perform the federal contract—an opportunity now provided to all prospective small business federal contractors when determined non-responsible by an agency contracting officer.

(6) ASA has received increasing numbers of reports from contractors who say they are qualified to perform a given contract but are unable to obtain a bond for the contract. While it is impossible for ASA to judge the qualifications of each of these contractors, they tend to have one thing in common: they are small firms that seldom need to provide bonds or need to provide bonds in only small amounts. Again, these are just the type of firms for which many surety companies are less than eager to provide surety bonds.

Certainly, it is a market decision for a surety company to determine that it does not want to bond certain types of contractors, whether that decision is based on the size of the contractor or the specialty trade of the contractor. However, when Congress passed the 1935 Miller Act—for practical purposes, establishing the surety industry in the United States—it did not require that bonds be provided only by large contractors or by general contractors; it provided that all construction contractors, regardless of size or trade, provide a bond if the federal contract is over $10,000 (later raised to $25,000). A surety company that has been approved to provide bonds on federal procurement should provide bonds to any contractor qualified to perform a specific federal contract—not just those who conveniently fit the surety's marketing niche or provide the largest premium income.

The amendment to the Treasury regulations proposed by ASA would help assure that the companies approved by Treasury recognize the seriousness of the responsibilities delegated to them by Congress under the Miller Act.

(7) Pursuant to Section 555(b) of the Administrative Procedures Act, we look forward to a prompt resolution of this petition for rulemaking and publication of a Notice of Proposed Rulemaking incorporating these essential modifications into the existing regulations.

If there is anything that ASA can do to help expedite your consideration of this petition, please do not hesitate to contact us.

Sincerely yours,

E. COLETTE NELSON,
Vice President, Government Relations.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MINORITY CONTRACTORS,
Washington, DC, June 6, 1990.

Commissioner WILLIAM E. DOUGLAS,
Financial Management Service, U.S. Department of the Treasury, Washington, DC.

DEAR COMMISSIONER DOUGLAS: (1) Pursuant to Section 553 (e) of the Administrative Procedures Act, the National Association of Minority Contractors (NAMC) petitions for a rulemaking to amend Part 223 of the Code of Federal Regulations, governing "Surety Companies Doing Business with the United States." NAMC petitions that the regulation be amended to:

Make it unlawful for a Treasury-approved surety to discriminate against any applicant on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin or sex or marital status;

Require each Treasury-approved surety to maintain records on and report to Treasury the following:

The number of federal contracts on which it provides bonds;

The total dollar amount of bonds it provides on federal contracts;

The percentage of bonds it provides on federal construction as a total of the firm's surety business;

The number of federally-funded contracts on which it provides bonds;

The total dollar amount of bonds it provides on federally-funded contracts;

The percentage of bonds it provides on federally-funded contracts as a total of the firm's surety business;

The total number of bonds it provides to minority-owned firms;

The total dollar amount of bonds it provides to minority-owned firms; and

The percentage of bonds it provides to minority-owned firms as a total of the firm's surety business;

Requires a Treasury-approved surety who shows a consistent pattern or failure to underwrite bonds for minority-owned firms to establish an outreach program to minority-owned firms; and Require Treasury to remove from the Treasury list any surety firm that fails to demonstrate a good faith effort to underwrite bonds for minority-owned firms.

(2) The National Association of Minority Contractors (NAMC) established in 1969, to address the needs and concerns of minority construction contractors. It is currently the only national organization representing the interests of the more than 60,000 minority-owned construction firms in America.

NAMC's main function is the providing of managerial and other specialized training of minority contractors in order to increase their competitive viability in the construction marketplace. In conjunction with such function, NAMC also identifies public and private sector procurement opportunities for minority contractors. All of this is for naught if minority contractors are precluded from obtaining surety bonds. Thus, NAMC has a more than urgent interest in this matter.

(3) The 1935 Miller Act requires federal construction contractors with contracts over $25,000 to provide performance and payment bonds. The Federal Acquisition Regulation provides that if a prime contractor provides a corporate surety bond, the surety bond company providing that bond must be listed in Department Circular No. 570, "Companies Holding Certificates of Authority as Acceptable Sureties on Federal Bonds and as Acceptable Reinsuring Companies."

In the Miller Act, Congress essentially delegated to the surety industry the responsibility for determining whether a construction contractor is qualified to perform a given federal contract. That is, a surety, in practical terms, has assumed the responsibility for "prequalifying" a construction contractor on behalf of the federal contracting agency. Thus, NAMC believes that a surety approved by the Treasury Department to provide bonds on federal contracts should undertake this responsibility with the same care, diligence, priorities and policies of the federal government.

(4) Congress repeatedly has stated that it is the policy of the United States to assure that small businesses and small disadvantaged businesses are given every opportunity to compete for federal procurement dollars. Indeed, there are many programs that set goals for the participation of small disadvantaged businesses in the procurement of federal contracts.

Complaints about the surety bond process are particularly prevalent from minority-owned businesses. Many of the owners of these firms believe that the reason for their denial of a bond is race discrimination. Yet, it can be acknowledged that because of historical patterns, minority-owned firms are more likely to be small and relatively new. These are just the type of firms to which many surety companies are reluctant to provide bonds. In addition, because of government preference programs, minority-owned firms are more likely to be participating in government procurement for which they must provide bonds. It must also be pointed out that even larger, more established minority construction contractors complain of on-going racial discrimination in the surety bond application process.

The extent of any discrimination specifically against minority-owned businesses may be difficult to prove. But whether such discrimination actually exists or not, surety companies providing bonds for federal procurement should be specifically prohibited from discriminating on the basis of race.

(5) One of the principal roles of the surety is to "prequalify" contractors for work on federal construction. In their "prequalification" role, a surety may deal with a minority-owned firm before the federal government does. Indeed, a minority-owned firm may never have the opportunity to approach a government contracting agency unless it first can obtain the bond. As a result, a federal agency with a goal for minority participation may never reach that goal if surety companies determine that most minority contractors are not qualified to perform such federal contracts.

The amendment to the regulation proposed by NAMC would provide information to the federal government about the number of minority-owned firms being "prequalified" by Treasury-approved surety firms. It thus would provide them with the information necessary to determine if there are a sufficient number of minority-owned firms available to meet their goals—or whether additional effort is needed to identify and develop such firms.

(6) NAMC, like other construction associations, has received increasing numbers of reports from contractors who say they are qualified to perform a given contract but are unable to obtain a * * *

By Mr. DOMENICI (for himself and Mr. SPECTER):

S. 2612. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide short-term economic growth incentives which would create a million new jobs, in 1992, and for no other purpose; to the Committee on Finance.

HIGH VALUE ECONOMIC GROWTH ACT

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am going to introduce tonight what I choose to call a high-value economic growth act. I will introduce it for myself and Senator SPECTER. In due course, I will circulate it and see if we cannot get the President of the United States interested in this high-value economic package.

Essentially it is a very simple proposition, to add some stimulus to the economy instead of letting all the work that has been done in the last 4 or 5 months go by the boards. This bill does five things. It includes the passive loss provisions that the President sent up, the 15-percent investment tax allowance, first-time home buyer credit, penalty-free withdrawal for home buyers and automobile purchasers, and incentives for pension funds' investment in real estate.

I believe, while the economy is recovering, we ought to do whatever we can to move it along. I think this package would have no controversy. I think the President could accept it. Congress could accept it. And we all would have accomplished something positive rather than leave our people and the economy without any stimulus because we have been unable to agree on a larger package.

The bill I send to the desk includes a passive loss provision, a 15-percent investment tax allowance, a first time home buyer credit, a penalty free withdrawal for homebuying and automobile purchases and incentives for pension funds to invest in real estate.

The President, in his State of the Union asked Congress to enact a package of short-term investment provisions with the aim of increasing the Nation's good, encouraging economic growth and jobs. He asked us to do what is right.

My bill is what the economy needs now. It provides investment incentives to spur economic growth.

Each of these provisions meets a very high test: They create jobs; reduce the cost of capital; reduce the cost of labor; and act as investment incentives for the here and now to pull us out of the recession. This is my definition of what a high-value economic growth package should be and do.

These provisions would be effective, limited and short term.

The bill is not a middle-income tax cut. It is not a Tax Code simplification proposal. It is not a tax equity proposal. It is not a grab bag of proposals for various members and their constituents. It is an economic growth package for all Americans.

Its single purpose is by design. When there is an important job to do, define the objective—the one objective, and do it well.

If we enacted this short-term package the American public would say, "for once Congress came through."

Two of the five provisions in the bill are the same as the President's. These include the $5,000 first-time home buyer credit and the provisions to encourage pension funds to invest in real estate.

The other three provisions are variations of the President's proposals and reflect the input of many tax experts who have offered advice since the State of the Union.

It does not rely on any gimmicks to pay for it.

The passive loss provision included in this package was authored by Senator PACKWOOD. It essentially provides the same incentives for real estate professionals to retain ownership of commercial and other property as the Boren bill S. 1257, which has 44 cosponsors in the Senate.

The penalty free withdrawal from IRA's for first time home buyers and automobile purchasers is based on S. 1984 which Senator SPECTER and I introduced.

The investment tax allowance is the additional 15-percent depreciation for productivity enhancing equipment proposed by the President. This provision will promote capital investment, modernization and a more rapid recovery by providing a temporary acceleration of depreciation deductions.

In order to make all of the revenue numbers add up, I have had to provide that an investor would receive the 15-percent ITA on his/her 1993 tax return for investments made in 1992.

This bill costs $12.5 billion over 5 years and is paid for by a combination of offsets, many of which were recommended by the President. These include extending certain customs fees and collection efforts that were scheduled to expire. The offset package also includes the FCC spectrum auction and several tax changes proposed by the President.

The first-time home buyer credit, the penalty free withdrawal for first time home buyers and automobile purchasers and the investment tax allowance are temporary—by design. They are intended to accelerate investment and job creation in the economy now.

The first-time home buyer credit is a jobs creating policy. The National Association of Homebuilders has estimated that the credit would create 415,000 additional jobs in 1992.

The passive loss provision, and the pension investment provisions are more long term. But they go to the core of what experts believe is the unique but uncertain factor in this recession—the free fall in real estate values.

Within 25 percent of the GNP related to real estate, it only makes sense to focus our attention on this big sector of the economy that is ailing.

FIRST-TIME HOME BUYER CREDIT

The President was correct in focusing on the first-time home buyer for tax relief and economic stimulus. It is a good macroeconomic policy for the country because it provides jobs, and good microeconomic policy for middle-class families because it helps them achieve homeownership—something they want and need.

Homebuilding has traditionally lead us into recessions and it has consistently led us out of them. And first-time home buying is a significant part of that activity. More than one-third of the 4.5 million home sales in a typical year involve first-time home purchases.

Promoting home ownership gives families a real sense of accomplishment and of moving up, as well as obtaining a piece of the good life for the family.

Building those homes provides good jobs, not only in construction, but in manufacturing, sales, and service of a wide range of consumer products from air-conditioners, zig-zag sewing machines, and Zenith home entertainment centers.

It has been estimated that 708,000 home buyers would be helped by the credit in the first year, 1.2 million by the end of the second.

The National Association of Homebuilders has estimated that the President's credit would stimulate 215,000 housing starts and create 415,000 additional jobs in 1992.

INVESTMENT TAX ALLOWANCE

Investment in equipment is the single most important factor in economic growth and development according to Prof. J. Bradford De Long and Lawrence Summers, both of Harvard University and the National Bureau of Economic Research. They authored a recent growth rate study of various nations and their equipment investment patterns practices and policies. Their conclusion is echoed by a wide range of experts.

The ITA provision should encourage firms to invest in technologically innovative equipment crucial for U.S. economic strength. Examples of eligible equipment include computers, new machine tools, telephone switching equipment, small engine blocks, and instrumentation for research. It would also apply to investments as fundamental as a livestock fence—all are investments to make America more productive.

We need this type of incentive.

Arthur Anderson's 1990 study on alternative tax incentives for capital investment in the United States and five of its major international competitors concluded that the United States now ranks next to last in terms of the present value of cost recovery allowances among its competitors: Canada, Japan, Singapore, South Korea, and West Germany.

In contrast, under pre-1986 law, the United States ranked second internationally.

We need to do something long term, but for now, a step in the right direction is to enact the 15-percent investment tax allowance.

It has been estimated that this 15-percent investment allowance is equal to a 5-percent investment tax credit.

PENALTY FREE IRA WITHDRAWAL

This provision is intended as a consumer confidence booster. It frees up trapped savings.

With the favorable interest rates it is an opportunity to help families get access to the needed down payment for a first-time home.

Down payments are the biggest obstacle to home ownership. By allowing parents and grandparents penalty free withdrawals they can help out.

Consumers will feel that their economic situation is improved, have more cash available. They will feel more in control of their financial affairs.

Everyone agrees that what the economy needs now is more consumption. This provision encourages investment in a home or automobile. And the consumption will come for private, not public, savings.

This provision has a unique feature. It allows the borrower to either pay the tax over four years or replenish the IRA or pension account.

PASSIVE LOSS PROVISIONS

Under current tax law, the passive loss rules are a disincentive for real estate professionals to hold on to and maintain commercial real estate. While other small businessmen can almost always take a tax deduction for out-of-pocket, necessary business expenses, real estate professionals often can not because of the passive loss rules in the Tax Code.

Denying a tax deduction for out-of-pocket costs is a disincentive for owners to continue to make mortgage payments on money-losing properties.

Reforming the passive loss rules will also encourage owners of unprofitable commercial real estate to hold on to it and maintain it, rather than abandoning it to the financial institutions who hold the mortgages. This will help bring the supply and demand of for sale properties more into balance.

A less glutted market will permit the RTC to sell its properties for a higher price, saving taxpayers' money.

If there are fewer defaults, there will be more credit available to small businesses that want to expand and create more jobs.

ENCOURAGING PENSIONS TO INVEST IN REAL ESTATE

The stabilization of the real estate values is an important precondition for economic growth.

The pension provisions make it easier for this vast pool of capital to invest in real estate.

NEW MEXICO IMPACT

I want to talk about the impact this bill would have on my State.

The first-time home buyer credit will create 2,067 jobs in my State this year.

For each $1 of new construction, the earnings of households in New Mexico are estimated to grow by approximately 65 cents. Both construction workers and other employees benefit, and the tax base of the State is increased.

CONCLUSION

This is a high value package. It is about the right amount of stimulus that we need for the economy right now. It is also about as much as we can afford to pay for.

It heeds the advice of the economists who urged Congress not to over do it on the fiscal policy.

Frankly, Mr. President, between all the politics, and budget process and procedural hurdles, there is very little time left for enacting good policy.

Enacting this bill would give us an opportunity to do the right thing.

I hope my colleagues will cosponsor this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and a section-by-section description be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2612

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS; AMENDMENT OF 1986 CODE.

this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

TITLE I—ECONOMIC GROWTH INCENTIVES

SEC. 101. CREDIT FOR FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart A of part IV of chapter 1 is amended by inserting after section 22 the following new section:

"SEC. 23. PURCHASE OF PRINCIPAL RESIDENCE BY FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYER.

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—If an individual who is a first-time homebuyer purchases a principal residence (within the meaning of section 1034), there shall be allowed to such individual as a credit against the tax imposed by this subtitle an amount equal to 10 percent of the purchase price of the principal residence.

"(b) LIMITATIONS.—

"(1) MAXIMUM CREDIT.—The credit allowed under subsection (a) shall not exceed $5,000.

"(2) LIMITATION TO ONE RESIDENCE.—The credit under this section shall be allowed with respect to only one residence of the taxpayer.

"(3) MARRIED INDIVIDUALS FILING JOINTLY.—In the case of a husband and wife who file a joint return under section 6013, the credit under this section is allowable only if both the husband and wife are first-time homebuyers, and the amount specified under paragraph (1) shall apply to the joint return.

"(4) OTHER TAXPAYERS.—In the case of individuals to whom paragraph (3) does not apply who together purchase the same new principal residence for use as their principal residence, the credit under this section is allowable only if each of the individuals is a first-time homebuyer, and the sum of the amount of credit allowed to such individuals shall not exceed the lesser of $5,000 or 10 percent of the total purchase price of the residence. The amount of any credit allowable under this section shall be apportioned among such individuals under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary.

"(5) APPLICATION WITH OTHER CREDITS.—The credit allowed by subsection (a) shall not exceed the amount of the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year, reduced by the sum of any other credits allowable under this chapter.

"(c) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) PURCHASE PRICE.—The term 'purchase price' means the adjusted basis of the principal residence on the date of the acquisition thereof.

"(2) FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYER.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'first-time homebuyer' means any individual if such individual has not had a present ownership interest in any residence (including an interest in a housing cooperative) at any time within the 36-month period ending on the date of acquisition of the residence on which the credit allowed under subsection (a) is to be claimed. An interest in a partnership, S corporation, or trust that owns an interest in a residence is not considered an interest in a residence for purposes of this paragraph except as may be provided in regulations.

"(B) CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), an individual is not a first-time homebuyer on the date of purchase of a residence if on that date the running of any period of time specified in section 1034 is suspended under subsection (h) or (k) of section 1034 with respect to that individual.

"(3) SPECIAL RULES FOR CERTAIN ACQUISITIONS.—No credit is allowable under this section if—

"(A) the residence is acquired from a person whose relationship to the person acquiring it would result in the disallowance of losses under section 267 or 707(b), or

"(B) the basis of the residence in the hands of the person acquiring it is determined—

"(i) in whole or in part by reference to the adjusted basis of such residence in the hands of the person from whom it is acquired, or

"(ii) under section 1014(a) (relating to property acquired from a decedent).

"(d) RECAPTURE FOR CERTAIN DISPOSITIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3), if the taxpayer disposes of property with respect to the purchase of which a credit was allowed under subsection (a) at any time within 36 months after the date the taxpayer acquired the property as his principal residence, then the tax imposed under this chapter for the taxable year in which the disposition occurs is increased by an amount equal to the amount allowed as a credit for the purchase of such property.

"(2) ACQUISITION OF NEW RESIDENCE.—If, in connection with a disposition described in paragraph (1) and within the applicable period prescribed in section 1034, the taxpayer purchases a new principal residence, then the provisions of paragraph (1) shall not apply and the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year in which the new principal residence is purchased is increased to the extent the amount of the credit that could be claimed under this section on the purchase of the new residence (determined without regard to subsection (e)) is less than the amount of credit claimed by the taxpayer under this section.

"(3) DEATH OF OWNER; CASUALTY LOSS; INVOLUNTARY CONVERSION; ETC.—The provisions of paragraph (1) do not apply to—

"(A) a disposition of a residence made on account of the death of any individual having a legal or equitable interest therein occurring during the 36-month period to which reference is made under paragraph (1),

"(B) a disposition of the old residence if it is substantially or completely destroyed by a casualty described in section 165(c)(3) or compulsorily or involuntarily converted (within the meaning of section 1033(a)), or

"(C) a disposition pursuant to a settlement in a divorce or legal separation proceeding where the residence is sold or the other spouse retains the residence as a principal residence.

"(e) PROPERTY TO WHICH SECTION APPLIES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The provisions of this section apply to a principal residence if—

"(A) the taxpayer acquires the residence on or after February 1, 1992, and before January 1, 1993, or

"(B) the taxpayer enters into, on or after February 1, 1992, and before January 1, 1993, a binding contract to acquire the residence, and acquires and occupies the residence before July 1, 1993."

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart A of part IV of chapter 1 is amended by inserting after section 22 the following new item:

"Sec. 23. Purchase of principal residence by first-time homebuyer."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section are effective on August 1, 1992.

SEC. 102. SPECIAL DEPRECIATION ALLOWANCE FOR CERTAIN EQUIPMENT ACQUIRED IN 1992.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 168 (relating to accelerated cost recovery system) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(j) SPECIAL ALLOWANCE FOR CERTAIN EQUIPMENT ACQUIRED IN 1992.—

“(1) ADDITIONAL ALLOWANCE.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), in the case of any qualified equipment—

“(A) the depreciation deduction provided by section 167(a) for the taxable year in which such equipment is placed in service shall include an allowance equal to 15 percent of the adjusted basis of the qualified equipment, and

“(B) the adjusted basis of the qualified equipment shall be reduced by the amount of such deduction (without regard to paragraph (2)) before computing the amount otherwise allowable as a depreciation deduction under this chapter for such taxable year and any subsequent taxable year.

“(2) MAXIMUM FIRST-YEAR DEDUCTION.—Of the aggregate deduction allowable under paragraph (1)—

“(A) 0 percent shall be allowed for the taxable year in which the property is placed in service, and “(B) 100 percent shall be allowed for the succeeding taxable year.

“(3) QUALIFIED EQUIPMENT.—For purposes of this subsection—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘qualified equipment’ means property to which this section applies—

“(i) which is section 1245 property (within the meaning of section 1245(a)(3)), “(ii) the original use of which commences with the taxpayer on or after February 1, 1992, “(iii) which is—

“(I) acquired by the taxpayer on or after February 1, 1992, and before January 1, 1993, but only if no written binding contract for the acquisition was in effect before February 1, 1992, or

“(II) acquired by the taxpayer pursuant to a written binding contract which was entered into on or after February 1, 1992, and before January 1, 1993, and “(iv) which is placed in service by the taxpayer before July 1, 1993.

“(B) EXCEPTIONS.—

“(i) ALTERNATIVE DEPRECIATION PROPERTY.—The term ‘qualified equipment’ shall not include any property to which the alternative depreciation system under subsection (g) applies, determined—

“(I) without regard to paragraph (7) of subsection (g) (relating to election to have system apply), and “(II) after application of section 280F(b) (relating to listed property with limited business use).

“(ii) ELECTION OUT.—If a taxpayer makes an election under this clause with respect to any class of property for any taxable year, this subsection shall not apply to all property in such class placed in service during such taxable year.

“(C) SPECIAL RULES RELATING TO ORIGINAL USE.—

“(i) SELF-CONSTRUCTED PROPERTY.—In the case of a taxpayer manufacturing, constructing, or producing property for the taxpayer's own use, the requirements of clause (iii) of subparagraph (A) shall be treated as met if the taxpayer begins manufacturing, constructing, or producing the property on and after February 1, 1992, and before January 1, 1993.

“(ii) SALE-LEASEBACKS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A)(ii), if property—

“(I) is originally placed in service on or after February 1, 1992, by a person, and “(II) is sold and leased back by such person within 3 months after the date such property was originally placed in service, such property shall be treated as originally placed in service not earlier than the date on which such property is used under the lease-back referred to in subclause (II).

“(D) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 280F.—For purposes of section 280F—

“(i) AUTOMOBILES.—In the case of a passenger automobile (as defined in section 280F(d)(5)) which is qualified equipment, the Secretary shall increase the limitation under section 280F(a)(1)(A)(i), and decrease each other limitation under subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 280F(a)(1), to appropriately reflect the amount of the deduction allowable under paragraph (1).

“(ii) LISTED PROPERTY.—The deduction allowable under paragraph (1) shall be taken into account in computing any recapture amount under section 280F(b)(2).”

(b) ALLOWANCE AGAINST ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 56(a)(1)(A) (relating to depreciation adjustment for alternative minimum tax) is amended by adding at the end the following new clause:

“(iii) ADDITIONAL ALLOWANCE FOR EQUIPMENT ACQUIRED IN 1992.—The deduction under section 168(j) shall be allowed.”

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Clause (i) of section 56(a)(1)(A) is amended by inserting “(or (iii))” after “(ii)”.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to property placed in service on or after February 1, 1992, in taxable years ending on or after such date.

SEC. 103. PENALTY-FREE WITHDRAWALS FROM PENSION PLANS THROUGH 1992.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any qualified withdrawal—

(1) no additional tax shall be imposed under section 72(t)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 with respect to such qualified withdrawal, and

(2) except as provided in subsection (b), any amount includible in gross income by reason of such qualified withdrawal (determined without regard to this section) shall be includible ratably over the 4-taxable year period beginning with the taxable year in which such qualified withdrawal occurs.

(b) ELECTION TO RECONTRIBUTE TO PLAN.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount required to be included in gross income for any taxable year under subsection (a)(2) shall be reduced by any designated retribution.

(2) DESIGNATED RETRIBUTION.—For purposes of paragraph (1), a designated retribution is any contribution to any plan described in subsection (c)(1)(B)—

(A) which the taxpayer designates (in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe) as in lieu of all (or any portion of) any amount required to be included in gross income under subsection (a)(2) for a taxable year, and

(B) which is made not later than the due date (without extensions) for such taxable year.

(3) NO DEDUCTION ALLOWED FOR RECONTRIBUTION, ETC.—For purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, a designated retribution shall not be treated as a contribution for any taxable year.

(c) QUALIFIED WITHDRAWAL.—For purposes of this section—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The term “qualified withdrawal” means any payment or distribution—

(A) which is made to an individual during 1992,

(B) which is made from—

(i) an individual retirement plan (as defined in section 7701(a)(37) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) established for the benefit of the individual, or

(ii) amounts attributable to employer contributions made on behalf of the individual pursuant to elective deferrals described in section 402(g)(3) (A) or (C) or 501(c)(18)(D)(iii) of such Code, and

(C) which is used by the individual for a qualified acquisition not later than the earlier of—

(i) the date which is 6 months after the date of such payment or distribution, or

(ii) the date on which the individual files the individual's income tax return for the taxable year in which such payment or distribution occurs.

(2) QUALIFIED ACQUISITION.—The term “qualified acquisition” means—

(A) the payment of qualified acquisition costs with respect to a principal residence of a first-time homebuyer who is the taxpayer or the child or grandchild of the taxpayer, or

(B) the purchase of a new passenger automobile.

(3) DOLLAR LIMITATION.—The aggregate amount which may be treated as qualified withdrawals under paragraph (1) with respect to all plans and amounts of an individual described in paragraph (1)(B) shall not exceed $10,000.

(4) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this subsection—

(A) QUALIFIED ACQUISITION COSTS.—The term “qualified acquisition costs” means the costs of acquiring, constructing, or reconstructing a residence. Such term includes any usual or reasonable settlement, financing, or other closing costs associated with such qualified acquisition costs.

(B) FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYER; OTHER DEFINITIONS.—

(i) FIRST-TIME HOMEBUYER.—The term “first-time homebuyer” means any individual if such individual (and if married, such individual's spouse) had no present ownership interest in a principal residence during the 2-year period ending on the date of acquisition of the principal residence to which this paragraph applies.

(ii) PRINCIPAL RESIDENCE.—The term “principal residence” has the same meaning as when used in section 1034.

(iii) DATE OF ACQUISITION.—The term “date of acquisition” means the date—

(I) on which a binding contract to acquire the principal residence to which this subsection applies is entered into, or

(II) on which construction or reconstruction of such a principal residence is commenced.

(C) SPECIAL RULE WHERE DELAY IN ACQUISITION.—If—

(i) any amount is paid or distributed from an individual retirement plan to an individual for purposes of being used as provided in paragraph (1), and

(ii) by reason of a delay in the acquisition of the residence, the requirements of paragraph (1) cannot be met, the amount so paid or distributed may be paid into an individual retirement plan as provided in section 408(d)(3)(A)(i) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 without regard to section 408(d)(3)(B) of such Code, and, if so paid into such other plan, such amount shall not be taken into account in determining whether section 408(d)(3)(A)(i) of such Code applies to any other amount.

(D) DISTRIBUTION RULES.—Any qualified withdrawal shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of sections 401(k)(2)(B)(i) or 403(b)(1) of such Code.

(d) ORDERING RULES FOR INCOME TAX PURPOSES.—For purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986—

(1) all plans and amounts described in subsection (c)(1)(B) with respect to an individual shall be treated as one plan, and

(2) qualified withdrawals from such plan shall be treated as made—

(A) first from amounts which are includible in gross income of the individual when distributed to such individual, and

(B) then from amounts not so includible.

SEC. 104. PASSIVE LOSS EQUITY FOR REAL ESTATE PROFESSIONALS.

(a) RENTAL REAL ESTATE ACTIVITIES OF PERSONS IN REAL PROPERTY BUSINESS NOT AUTOMATICALLY TREATED AS PASSIVE ACTIVITIES.—Section 469(c) (defining passive activity) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

“(7) RULES FOR TAXPAYERS IN REAL PROPERTY BUSINESS TO END DISCRIMINATION.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—If this paragraph applies to any taxpayer for a taxable year—

“(i) paragraph (2) shall not apply to any rental real estate activity of such taxpayer for such taxable year, and “(ii) this section shall be applied as if each interest of the taxpayer in rental real estate were a separate activity.

Notwithstanding clause (ii), a taxpayer may elect to treat all interests in rental real estate as one activity.

“(B) TAXPAYERS TO WHOM PARAGRAPH APPLIES.—This paragraph shall apply to a taxpayer for a taxable year if more than one-half of the personal services performed in trades or businesses by the taxpayer during such taxable year are performed in real property trades or businesses in which the taxpayer materially participates.

“(C) SPECIAL RULES FOR SUBPARAGRAPH (B).—

“(i) CLOSELY HELD C CORPORATIONS.—In the case of a closely held C corporation, the requirements of subparagraph (B) shall be treated as met for any taxable year if more than 50 percent of the gross receipts of such corporation for such taxable year are derived from real property trades or businesses in which the corporation materially participates.

“(ii) PERSONAL SERVICES AS AN EMPLOYEE.—For purposes of subparagraph (B), personal services performed as an employee (other than as an owner-employee) shall not be treated as performed in real property trades or businesses.”

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 469(c)(2) is amended by striking “The” and inserting “Except as provided in paragraph (7), the”.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after February 1, 1992.

SEC. 105. REAL PROPERTY ACQUIRED BY A QUALIFIED ORGANIZATION.

(a) INTERESTS IN MORTGAGES.—The last sentence of subparagraph (B) of section 514(c)(9) is hereby transferred to subparagraph (A) of section 514(c)(9) and added at the end thereof.

(b) MODIFICATIONS OF EXCEPTIONS.—Paragraph (9) of section 514(c) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

“(G) SPECIAL RULES FOR PURPOSES OF THE EXCEPTIONS.—For purposes of subparagraph (B), except as otherwise provided by regulations, the following additional rules apply—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—

“(I) For purposes of clauses (iii) and (iv) of subparagraph (B), a lease to a person described in clause (iii) or (iv) shall be disregarded if no more than 10 percent of the leasable floor space in a building is covered by the lease and if the lease is on commercially reasonable terms.

“(II) Clause (v) of subparagraph (B) shall not apply to the extent the financing is commercially reasonable and is on substantially the same terms as loans involving unrelated persons; for this purpose, standards for determining a commercially reasonable interest rate shall be provided by the Secretary.

“(ii) QUALIFYING SALES OUT OF FORECLOSURE BY FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS.—In the case of a qualifying sale out of foreclosure by a financial institution, clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (B) shall not apply. For this purpose, a ‘qualifying sale out of foreclosure by a financial institution’ exists where—

“(I) a qualified organization acquires real property from a person (a ‘financial institution’) described in section 581 or 591(a) (including a person in receivership) and the financial institution acquired the property pursuant to a bid at foreclosure or by operation of an agreement or of process of law after a default on indebtedness which the property secured (‘foreclosure’), and the financial institution treats any income realized from the sale or exchange of the property as ordinary income,

“(II) the amount of the financing provided by the financial institution does not exceed the amount of the financial institution’s outstanding indebtedness (determined without regard to accrued but unpaid interest) with respect to the property at the time of foreclosure,

“(III) the financing provided by the financial institution is commercially reasonable and is on substantially the same terms as loans between unrelated persons for sales of foreclosed property (for this purpose, standards for determining a commercially reasonable interest rate shall be provided by the Secretary), and

“(IV) the amount payable pursuant to the financing that is determined by reference to the revenue, income, or profits derived from the property (‘participation feature’) does not exceed 25 percent of the principal amount of the financing provided by the financial institution, and the participation feature is payable no later than the earlier of satisfaction of the financing or disposition of the property.”

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to debt-financed acquisitions of real estate made on or after February 1, 1992.

SEC. 106. SPECIAL RULES FOR INVESTMENTS IN PARTNERSHIPS.

(a) MODIFICATION TO ANTI-ABUSE RULES.—Paragraph (9) of section 514(c) (as amended by section 131 of this Act) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

“(H) PARTNERSHIPS NOT INVOLVING TAX AVOIDANCE.—

“(i) DE MINIMIS RULE FOR CERTAIN LARGE PARTNERSHIPS.—The provisions of subparagraph (B) shall not apply to an investment in a partnership having at least 250 partners if—

“(I) investments in the partnership are organized into units that are marketed primarily to individuals expected to be taxed at the maximum rate prescribed for individuals under section 1,

“(II) at least 50 percent of each class of interests is owned by such individuals,

“(III) the partners that are qualified organizations owning interests in a class participate on substantially the same terms as other partners owning interests in that class, and “(IV) the principal purpose of partnership allocations is not tax avoidance.

“(ii) EXCEPTION WHERE TAXABLE PERSONS OWN A SIGNIFICANT PERCENTAGE.—In the case of any partnership, other than a partnership to which clause (i) applies, in which persons who are expected (under the regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary), at the time the partnership is formed, to pay tax at the maximum rate prescribed in section 1 or 11 (whichever is applicable) throughout the term of the partnership own at least a 25-percent interest, the provisions of subparagraph (B) shall not apply if the partnership satisfies the requirements of subparagraph (E).”

(b) PUBLICLY TRADED PARTNERSHIPS; UNRELATED BUSINESS INCOME FROM PARTNERSHIPS.—Subsection (c) of section 512 is amended by striking paragraph (2) (relating to publicly traded partnerships), by redesignating paragraph (3) as paragraph (2), and by striking “paragraph (1) or (2)” in paragraph (2) (as so redesignated) and inserting “paragraph (1)”.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to partnership interests acquired on or after February 1, 1992.

TITLE II—REVENUE OFFSETS

Subtitle A—General Provisions

SEC. 201. ELIMINATION OF THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS ON COLLECTION OF GUARANTEED STUDENT LOANS.

Section 3(c) of the Higher Education Technical Amendments of 1991 (Public Law 102-26) is amended by striking out “that are brought before November 15, 1992”.

SEC. 202. INCREASED BASE TAX RATE ON OZONE-DEPLETING CHEMICALS AND EXPANSION OF LIST OF TAXED CHEMICALS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 4681(b) (relating to amount of tax) is amended to read as follows:

“(B) BASE TAX AMOUNT.—The base tax amount for purposes of subparagraph (A) with respect to any sale or use during a calendar year before 1996 with respect to any ozone-depleting chemical is the amount determined under the following table for such calendar year:

Calendar year:	Base Tax Amount:
1992	$1.85
1993	$2.75
1994	$3.65
1995	$4.55.”

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Rates retained for chemical used in rigid foam insulation.—The table in subparagraph (B) of section 4682(g)(2) (relating to chemicals used in rigid foam insulation) is amended—

(A) by striking “15” and inserting “13.5”, and

(B) by striking “10” and inserting “9.6”.

(2) FLOOR STOCK TAXES.—

(a) Subparagraph (C) of section 4682(h)(2) (relating to other tax-increase dates) is amended by striking “1993, and 1994” and inserting “1993, 1994, and 1995, and July 1, 1992”.

(b) Paragraph (3) of section 4682(h) (relating to due date) is amended—

(i) by inserting “or July 1” after “January 1”, and

(ii) by inserting “or December 31, respectively,” after “June 30”.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable chemicals sold or used on or after July 1, 1992.

SEC. 203. MARK TO MARKET INVENTORY METHOD FOR SECURITIES DEALERS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subpart D of part II of subchapter E of chapter 1 (relating to inventories) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

“SEC. 475. MARK TO MARKET INVENTORY METHOD FOR DEALERS IN SECURITIES.

“(a) GENERAL RULE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this subpart, the following rules shall apply to securities held by a dealer in securities:

“(1) Any security which is inventory in the hands of the dealer shall be included in inventory at fair market value.

“(2) In the case of any security which is not inventory in the hands of the dealer and which is held at the close of any taxable year—

“(A) the dealer shall recognize gain or loss as if such security were sold for its fair market value on the last business day of such taxable year, and “(B) any gain or loss shall be taken into account for such taxable year.

Proper adjustment shall be made in the amount of any gain or loss subsequently realized for gain or loss taken into account under the preceding sentence. The Secretary may provide by regulations for the application of this paragraph at times other than the times provided in this paragraph.

“(b) EXCEPTIONS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to—“(A) any security held for investment,

“(B) any security described in subsection (c)(2)(C) which is originated or acquired by the taxpayer in the ordinary course of a trade or business of the taxpayer and which is not held for sale, and

“(C) any hedge with respect to—

“(i) a security to which subsection (a) does not apply, or “(ii) a position or a liability which is not a security in the hands of the taxpayer.

Subparagraph (C) shall not apply to any security held by a person in its capacity as a dealer in securities.

“(2) IDENTIFICATION REQUIRED.—Any security shall not be treated as described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of paragraph (1), as the case may be, unless such security is clearly identified in the dealer's records as being described in such subparagraph before the close of the day on which it was acquired, originated, or entered into (or such other time as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe).

“(3) SECURITIES SUBSEQUENTLY NOT EXEMPT.—If a security ceases to be described in paragraph (1) at any time after it was identified as such under paragraph (2), this section shall apply to such security as of the time such cessation occurs.

“(4) SPECIAL RULE FOR PROPERTY HELD FOR INVESTMENT.—To the extent provided in regulations, subparagraph (A) of paragraph (1) shall not apply to any security described in subparagraph (D) or (E) of subsection (c)(2) which is held by a dealer in such securities.

“(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

“(1) DEALER IN SECURITIES DEFINED.—The term ‘dealer in securities’ means a taxpayer who—

“(A) regularly purchases securities from or sells securities to customers in the ordinary course of a trade or business; or

“(B) regularly offers to enter into, assume, offset, assign or otherwise terminate positions in securities with customers in the ordinary course of a trade or business.

“(2) SECURITY DEFINED.—The term ‘security’ means any—

“(A) share of stock in a corporation;

“(B) partnership or beneficial ownership interest in a widely held or publicly traded partnership or trust;

“(C) note, bond, debenture, or other evidence of indebtedness;

“(D) any interest rate, currency, or equity notional principal contract;

“(E) evidence of an interest in, or a derivative financial instrument in, any security described in subparagraph (A), (B), (C), or (D), or any currency, including any option, forward contract, short position, and any similar financial instrument in such a security (but not including any contract to which section 1256(a) applies); and “(F) position which—

“(i) is not a security described in subparagraph (A), (B), (C), (D), or (E), “(ii) is a hedge with respect to such a security, and

“(iii) is clearly identified in the dealer's records as being described in this subparagraph before the close of the day on which it was acquired or entered into (or such other time as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe).

“(3) HEDGE.—The term ‘hedge’ includes any position which reduces the dealer's risk of interest rate or price changes or currency fluctuations.

“(d) SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

“(1) CERTAIN RULES NOT TO APPLY.—The rules of sections 263(g) and 263A shall not apply to securities to which subsection (a) applies.

“(2) IMPROPER IDENTIFICATION.—If a taxpayer—

“(A) identifies any security or position under subsection (b)(2) as being described in such subsection and such security or position is not so described, or

“(B) fails under subsection (c)(2)(F)(iii) to identify a security or position which is described in such subsection at the time such identification is required, the provisions of subsection (a) shall apply to such security or position, except that any loss under this section prior to the disposition of the security shall be recognized only to the extent of gain previously recognized under this section with respect to such security.

“(e) REGULATORY AUTHORITY.—The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section, including rules—

“(1) to prevent the use of year-end transfers, related parties, or other arrangements to avoid the provisions of this section, and

“(2) to provide for the application of this section to hedges which do not hedge a specific security, position, or liability.”

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Paragraph (1) of section 988(d) is amended—

(A) by striking “section 1256” and inserting “section 475 or 1256”, and

(B) by striking “1092 and 1256” and inserting “475, 1092, and 1256”.

(2) The table of sections for subpart D of part II of subchapter E of chapter 1 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

“Sec. 475. Mark to market inventory method for dealers in securities.”

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to all taxable years ending on or after December 31, 1993.

(2) CHANGE IN METHOD OF ACCOUNTING.—In the case of any taxpayer required by this section to change its method of accounting for any taxable year—

(A) such change shall be treated as initiated by the taxpayer,

(B) such change shall be treated as made with the consent of the Secretary, and

(C) the net amount of the adjustments required to be taken into account by the taxpayer under section 481 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall be taken into account ratably over the 10-taxable year period beginning with the first taxable year ending on or after December 31, 1993.

SEC. 204. DISALLOWANCE OF INTEREST ON CERTAIN OVERPAYMENTS OF TAX.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsection (e) of section 6611 is amended to read as follows:

“(e) DISALLOWANCE OF INTEREST ON CERTAIN OVERPAYMENTS.—

“(1) REFUNDS WITHIN 45 DAYS AFTER RETURN IS FILED.—If any payment of tax imposed by this title is refunded within 45 days after the last day prescribed for filing the return of such tax (determined without regard to any extension of time for filing the return) or, in the case of a return filed after such last date, is refunded within 45 days after the date the return is filed, no interest shall be allowed under subsection (a) on such overpayment.

“(2) REFUNDS AFTER CLAIM FOR CREDIT OR REFUND.—If—

“(A) the taxpayer files a claim for a credit or refund for any overpayment of tax imposed by this title, and

“(B) such overpayment is refunded within 45 days after such claim is filed, no interest shall be allowed on such overpayment from the date the claim is filed until the day the refund is made.

“(3) IRS INITIATED ADJUSTMENTS.—Notwithstanding any other provision, if an adjustment, initiated by or on behalf of the Secretary, results in a refund or credit of an overpayment, interest on such overpayment shall be computed by subtracting 45 days from the number of days interest would otherwise be allowed with respect to such overpayment.”

(b) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) Paragraph (1) of section 6611(e) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as amended by subsection (a)) shall apply in the case of returns the due date for which (determined without regard to extensions) is on or after July 1, 1992.

(2) Paragraph (2) of section 6611(e) of such Code (as so amended) shall apply in the case of claims for credit or refund of any overpayment filed on or after July 1, 1992 regardless of the taxable period to which such refund relates.

(3) Paragraph (3) of section 6611(e) of such Code (as so amended) shall apply in the case of any refund paid on or after July 1, 1992 regardless of the taxable period to which such refund relates.

Subtitle B—Electromagnetic Spectrum Function

SEC 211. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the “Emerging Telecommunications Technologies Act of 1992”.

SEC. 212. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) spectrum is a valuable natural resource;

(2) it is in the national interest that this resource be used more efficiently;

(3) the spectrum below 6 gigahertz (GHz) is becoming increasingly congested, and, as a result entities that develop innovative new spectrum-based services are finding it difficult to bring these services to the marketplace;

(4) scarcity of assignable frequencies can and will—

(A) impede the development and commercialization of new spectrum-based products and services;

(B) reduce the capacity and efficiency of the United States telecommunications system; and

(C) adversely affect the productive capacity and international competitiveness of the United States economy;

(5) the United States Government presently lacks explicit authority to use excess radiocommunications capacity to satisfy non-United States Government requirements;

(6) more efficient use of the spectrum can provide the resources for increased economic returns;

(7) many commercial users derive significant economic benefits from their spectrum licenses, both through the income they earn from their use of the spectrum and the returns they realize upon transfer of their licenses to third parties; but under current procedures, the United States public does not sufficiently share in their benefits;

(8) many United States Government functions and responsibilities depend heavily on the use of the radio spectrum, involve unique applications, and are performed in the broad national and public interest;

(9) competitive bidding for spectrum can yield significant benefits for the United States economy by increasing the efficiency of spectrum allocations, assignment, and use; and for United States taxpayers by producing substantial revenues for the United States Treasury; and

(10) the Secretary, the President, and the Commission should be directed to take appropriate steps to foster the more efficient use of this valuable national resource, including the reallocation of a target amount of 200 megahertz (MHz) of spectrum from United States Government use under section 305 of the Communications Act to non-United States Government use pursuant to other provisions of the Communications Act and the implementation of competitive bidding procedures by the Commission for some new assignments of the spectrum.

SEC. 213. NATIONAL SPECTRUM PLANNING.

(a) PLANNING ACTIVITIES.—The Secretary and the Chairman of the Commission shall, at least twice each year, conduct joint spectrum planning meetings with respect to the following issues—

(1) future spectrum needs;

(2) the spectrum allocation actions necessary to accommodate those needs, including consideration of innovation and marketplace developments that may affect the relative efficiencies of different portions of the spectrum; and

(3) actions necessary to promote the efficient use of the spectrum, including proven spectrum management techniques to promote increased shared use of the spectrum as a means of increasing non-United States Government access; and innovation in spectrum utilization including means of providing incentives for spectrum users to develop innovative services and technologies.

(b) REPORTS.—The Secretary and the Chairman of the Commission shall submit a joint annual report to the President on the joint spectrum planning meetings conducted under subsection (a) and any recommendations for action developed in such meetings.

(c) OPEN PROCESS.—The Secretary and the Commission will conduct an open process under this section to ensure the full consideration and exchange of views among any interested entities, including all private, public, commercial, and governmental interests.

SEC. 214. IDENTIFICATION OF REALLOCABLE FREQUENCIES.

(a) IDENTIFICATION REQUIRED.—The Secretary shall prepare and submit to the President the reports required by subsection (d) to identify bands of frequencies that—

(1) are allocated on a primary basis for United States Government use and eligible for licensing pursuant to section 305(a) of the Communications Act;

(2) are not required for the present or identifiable future needs of the United States Government;

(3) can feasibly be made available during the next 15 years after enactment of this title for use under the provisions of the Communications Act for non-United States Government users;

(4) will not result in costs to the Federal Government that are excessive in relation to the benefits that may be obtained from the potential non-United States Government uses; and

(5) are likely to have significant value for non-United States Government uses under the Communications Act.

(b) AMOUNT OF SPECTRUM RECOMMENDED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall recommend as a goal for reallocation, for use by non-United States Government stations, bands of frequencies constituting a target amount of 200 MHz, that are located below 6 GHz, and that meet the criteria specified in paragraphs (1) through (5) of subsection (a). If the Secretary identifies (as meeting such criteria) bands of frequencies totalling more than 200 MHz, the Secretary shall identify and recommend for reallocation those bands (totalling not less than 200 MHz) that are likely to have the greatest potential for non-United States Government uses under the Communications Act.

(2) MIXED USES PERMITTED TO BE COUNTED.—Bands of frequencies which the Secretary recommends be partially retained for use by United States Government stations, but which are also recommended to be reallocated and made available under the Communications Act for use by non-United States Government stations, may be counted toward the target 200 MHz of spectrum required by paragraph (1) of this subsection, except that—

(A) the bands of frequencies counted under this paragraph may not count toward more than one-half of the amount targeted by paragraph (1) of this subsection;

(B) a band of frequencies may not be counted under this paragraph unless the assignments of the band to United States Government stations under section 305 of the Communications Act are limited by geographic area, by time, or by other means so as to guarantee that the potential use to be made by which United States Government stations is substantially less (as measured by geographic area, time, or otherwise) than the potential United States Government use to be made; and

(C) the operational sharing permitted under this paragraph shall be subject to procedures which the Commission and the Department of Commerce shall establish and implement to ensure against harmful interference.

(c) CRITERIA FOR IDENTIFICATION.—

(1) NEEDS OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT.—In determining whether a band of frequencies meets the criteria specified in subsection (a)(2), the Secretary shall—

(A) consider whether the band of frequencies is used to provide a communications service that is or could be available from a commercial provider;

(B) seek to promote—

(i) the maximum practicable reliance on commercially available substitutes;

(ii) the sharing of frequencies (as permitted under subsection (b)(2));

(iii) the development and use of new communications technologies; and

(iv) the use of nonradiating communications systems where practicable;

(C) seek to avoid—

(i) serious degradation of United States Government services and operations;

(ii) excessive costs to the United States Government and civilian users of such Government services; and

(iii) identification of any bands for reallocation that are likely to be subject to substitution for the reasons specified in section 405(b)(2)(A) through (C); and

(D) exempt power marketing administrations and the Tennessee Valley Authority from any reallocation procedures.

(2) FEASIBILITY OF USE.—In determining whether a frequency band meets the criteria specified in subsection (a)(3), the Secretary shall—

(A) assume such frequencies will be assigned by the Commission under section 303 of the Communications Act over the course of fifteen years after the enactment of this title;

(B) assume reasonable rates of scientific progress and growth of demand for telecommunications services;

(C) determine the extent to which the reallocation or reassignment will relieve actual or potential scarcity of frequencies available for non-United States Government use;

(D) seek to include frequencies which can be used to stimulate the development of new technologies; and

(E) consider the cost to reestablish United States Government services displaced by the reallocation of spectrum during the fifteen year period.

(3) COSTS TO THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT.—In determining whether a frequency band meets the criteria specified in subsection (a)(4), the Secretary shall consider—

(A) the costs to the United States Government of reaccommodating its services in order to make spectrum available for non-United States Government use, including the incremental costs directly attributable to the loss of the use of the frequency band; and

(B) the benefits that could be obtained from reallocating such spectrum to non-United States Government users, including the value of such spectrum in promoting—

(i) the delivery of improved service to the public;

(ii) the introduction of new services; and

(iii) the development of new communications technologies.

(4) NON-UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT USE.—In determining whether a band of frequencies meets the criteria specified in subsection (a)(5), the Secretary shall consider—

(A) the extent to which equipment is commercially available that is capable of utilizing the band; and

(B) the proximity of frequencies that are already assigned for non-United States Government use.

(d) PROCEDURE FOR IDENTIFICATION OF REALLOCABLE BANDS OF FREQUENCIES.—

(1) SUBMISSION OF REPORTS TO THE PRESIDENT TO IDENTIFY AN INITIAL 50 MHz TO BE MADE AVAILABLE IMMEDIATELY FOR REALLOCATION, AND TO PROVIDE PRELIMINARY AND FINAL REPORTS ON ADDITIONAL FREQUENCIES TO BE REALLOCATED.—

(A) Within 3 months after the date of the enactment of this title, the Secretary shall prepare and submit to the President a report which specifically identifies an initial 50 MHz of spectrum that are located below 3 GHz, to be made available for reallocation to the Federal Communications Commission upon issuance of this report, and to be distributed by the Commission pursuant to competitive bidding procedures.

(B) The Department of Commerce shall make available to the Federal Communications Commission 50 MHz as identified in subparagraph (A) of electromagnetic spectrum for allocation of land-mobile or land-mobile-satellite services. Notwithstanding section 553 of the Administrative Procedure Act and title III of the Communications Act, the Federal Communications Commission shall allocate such spectrum and conduct competitive bidding procedures to complete the assignment of such spectrum in a manner which ensures that the proceeds from such bidding are received by the Federal Government no later than September 30, 1992. From such proceeds, Federal agencies displaced by this transfer of the electromagnetic spectrum to the Federal Communications Commission shall be reimbursed for reasonable costs directly attributable to such displacement. The Department of Commerce shall determine the amount of, and arrange for, such reimbursement. Amounts to agencies shall be available subject to appropriation Acts.

(C) Within 12 months after the date of the enactment of this title, the Secretary shall prepare and submit to the President a preliminary report to identify reallocable bands of frequencies meeting the criteria established by this section.

(D) Within 24 months after the date of enactment of this title, the Secretary shall prepare and submit to the President a final report which identifies the target 200 MHz for reallocation (which shall encompass the initial 50 MHz previously designated under subparagraph (A)).

(E) The President shall publish the reports required by this section in the Federal Register.

(2) CONVENING OF PRIVATE SECTOR ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—Not later than 12 months after the enactment of this title, the Secretary shall convene a private sector advisory committee to—

(A) review the bands of frequencies identified in the preliminary report required by paragraph (1)(C);

(B) advise the Secretary with respect to—
(i) the bands of frequencies which should be included in the final report required by paragraph (1)(D); and

(ii) the effective dates which should be established under subsection (e) with respect to such frequencies;

(C) receives public comment on the Secretary's preliminary and final reports under this subsection; and

(D) prepare and submit the report required by paragraph (4).

The private sector advisory committee shall meet at least quarterly until each of the actions required by section 405(a) have taken place.

(3) COMPOSITION OF COMMITTEE; CHAIRMAN.—The private sector adviser committee shall include—

(A) the Chairman of the Commission, and the Secretary, or their designated representatives, and two other representatives from two different United States Government agencies that are spectrum users, other than the Department of Commerce, as such agencies may be designated by the Secretary; and

(B) Persons who are representative of—
(i) manufacturers of spectrum-dependent telecommunications equipment;
(ii) commercial users;
(iii) other users of the electromagnetic spectrum; and

(iv) other interested members of the public who are knowledgeable about the uses of the electromagnetic spectrum to be chosen by the Secretary.

A majority of the members of the committee shall be members described in subparagraph (B), and one of such members shall be designated as chairman by the Secretary.

(4) RECOMMENDATIONS ON SPECTRUM ALLOCATION PROCEDURES.—The private sector advisory committee shall, not later than 12 months after its formation, submit to the Secretary, the Commission, the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation of the Senate, such recommendations as the committee considers appropriate for the reform of the process of allocating the electromagnetic spectrum between United States Government users and non-United States Government users, and any dissenting views thereon.

(e) TIMETABLE FOR REALLOCATION AND LIMITATION.—The Secretary shall, as part of the final report required by subsection (d)(1)(D), include a timetable for the effective dates by which the President shall, within 15 years after enactment of this title, withdraw or limit assignments on frequencies specified in the report. The recommended effective dates shall—

(1) permit the earliest possible reallocation of the frequency bands, taking into account the requirements of section 406(a);

(2) be based on the useful remaining life of equipment that has been purchased or contracted for to operate on identified frequencies;

(3) be based on the need to coordinate frequency use with other nations; and

(4) avoid the imposition of incremental costs on the United States Government directly attributable to the loss of the use of frequencies or the changing to different frequencies that are excessive in relation to the benefits that may be obtained from non-United States Government uses of the reassigned frequencies.

SEC. 215. WITHDRAWAL OF ASSIGNMENT TO UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT STATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The President shall—

(1) within 3 months after receipt of the Secretary's report under section 404(d)(1)(A), withdraw or limit the assignment to a United States Government station of any frequency on the initial 50 MHz which that report recommends for immediate reallocation;

(2) with respect to other frequencies recommended for reallocation by the Secretary's report in section 404(d)(1)(D), by the effective dates recommended pursuant to section 404(e) (except as provided in subsection (b)(4) of this section), withdraw or limit the assignment to a United States Government station of any frequency which that report recommends be reallocated or available for mixed use on such effective dates;

(3) assign or reassign other frequencies to United States Government stations as necessary to adjust to such withdrawal or limitation of assignments; and

(4) publish in the Federal Register a notice and description of the actions taken under this subsection.

(b) EXCEPTIONS.—

(1) AUTHORITY TO SUBSTITUTE.—If the President determines that a circumstance described in section 405(b)(2) exists, the President—

(A) may, within 1 month after receipt of the Secretary's report under section 404(d)(1)(A), and within 6 months after receipt of the Secretary's report under section 404(d)(1)(D), substitute an alternative frequency or band of frequencies for the frequency or band that is subject to such determination and withdraw (or limit) the assignment of that alternative frequency or band in the manner required by subsection (a); and

(B) shall publish in the Federal Register a statement of the reasons for taking the action described in subparagraph (A).

(2) GROUNDS FOR SUBSTITUTION.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the following circumstances are described in this paragraph:

(A) the reassignment would seriously jeopardize the national security interests of the United States;

(B) the frequency proposed for reassignment is uniquely suited to meeting important United States Governmental needs;

(C) the reassignment would seriously jeopardize public health or safety; or

(D) the reassignment will result in incremental costs to the United States Government that are excessive in relation to the benefits that may be obtained from non-United States Government uses of the reassigned frequency.

(3) CRITERIA FOR SUBSTITUTED FREQUENCIES.—For purposes of paragraph (1), a frequency may not be substituted for a frequency identified by the final report of the Secretary under section 404(d)(1)(D) unless the substituted frequency also meets each of the criteria specified by section 404(a).

(4) DELAYS IN IMPLEMENTATION.—If the President determines that any action cannot be completed by the effective dates recommended by the Secretary pursuant to section 404(e), or that such an action by such date would result in a frequency being unused as a consequence of the Commission's plan under section 406, the President may—

(A) withdraw or limit the assignment to United States Government stations on a later date that is consistent with such plan, by providing notice to that effect in the Federal Register, including the reason that withdrawal at a later date is required; or

(B) substitute alternative frequencies pursuant to the provisions of this subsection.

(c) COSTS OF WITHDRAWING FREQUENCIES ASSIGNED TO THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT; APPROPRIATIONS AUTHORIZED.—Any United States Government licensee, or non-United States Government entity operating on behalf of a United States Government licensee, that is displaced from a frequency pursuant to this section may be reimbursed not more than the incremental costs it incurs, in such amounts as provided in advance in appropriation Acts, that are directly attributable to the loss of the use of the frequency pursuant to this section. The estimates of these costs shall be prepared by the affected agency, in consultation with the Department of Commerce.

(d) There are authorized to be appropriated to the affected licensee agencies such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

SEC. 216. DISTRIBUTION OF FREQUENCIES BY THE COMMISSION.

(a) PLANS SUBMITTED.—

(1) With respect to the initial 50 MHz to be reallocated from United States Government to non-United States Government use under section 404(d)(1)(A), not later than 6 months after enactment of this title, the Commission shall complete a public notice and comment proceeding regarding the allocation of this spectrum and shall form a plan to assign such spectrum pursuant to competitive bidding procedures, pursuant to section 408, during fiscal years 1994 through 1996.

(2) With respect to the remaining spectrum to be reallocated from United States Government to non-United States Government use under section 404(e), not later than 2 years after issuance of the report required by section 404(d)(1)(D), the Commission shall complete a public notice and comment proceeding; and the Commission shall, after consultation with the Secretary, prepare and submit to the President a plan for the distribution under the Communications Act of the frequency bands reallocated pursuant to the requirements of this title. Such plan shall—

(A) not propose the immediate distribution of all such frequencies, but, taking into account the timetable recommended by the Secretary pursuant to section 404(e), shall propose—

(i) gradually to distribute the frequencies remaining, after making the reservation required by subparagraph (ii), over the course of a 10-year period beginning on the date of submission of such plan; and

(ii) to reserve a significant portion of such frequencies for distribution beginning after the end of such 10-year period;

(B) contain appropriate provisions to ensure—

(i) the availability of frequencies for new technologies and services in accordance with the policies of section 7 of the Communications Act (47 U.S.C. 157); and

(ii) the availability of frequencies to stimulate the development of such technologies; and

(C) not prevent the Commission from allocating bands of frequencies for specific uses in future rulemaking proceedings.

(b) AMENDMENT TO THE COMMUNICATIONS ACT.—Section 303 of the Communications Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

“(u) Have authority to assign the frequencies reallocated from United States Government use to non-United States Government use pursuant to the Emerging Telecommunications Technologies Act of 1991, except that any such assignment shall expressly be made subject to the right of the President to reclaim such frequencies under the provisions of section 407 of the Emerging Telecommunications Technologies Act of 1991.”

SEC. 217. AUTHORITY TO RECLAIM REASSIGNED FREQUENCIES.

(a) AUTHORITY OF PRESIDENT.—The President may reclaim reallocated frequencies for reassignment to United States Government stations in accordance with this section.

(b) PROCEDURE FOR RECLAIMING FREQUENCIES.—

(1) UNASSIGNED FREQUENCIES.—If the frequencies to be reclaimed have not been assigned by the Commission, the President may reclaim them based on the grounds described in section 405(b)(2).

(2) ASSIGNED FREQUENCIES.—If the frequencies to be reclaimed have been assigned by the Commission, the President may reclaim them based on the grounds described in section 405(b)(2), except that the notification required by section 405(b)(1) shall include—

(A) a timetable to accommodate an orderly transition for licensees to obtain new frequencies and equipment necessary for their utilization; and

(B) an estimate of the cost of displacing the licensees.

(c) COSTS OF RECLAIMING FREQUENCIES.—Any non-United States Government licensee that is displaced from a frequency pursuant to this section shall be reimbursed the incremental costs it incurs that are directly attributable to the loss of the use of the frequency pursuant to this section.

(d) EFFECT ON OTHER LAW.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to limit or otherwise affect the authority of the President under section 706 of the Communications Act (47 U.S.C. 606).

SEC. 218. COMPETITIVE BIDDING.

(a) COMPETITIVE BIDDING AUTHORIZED.—Section 309 of the Communications Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

“(j)(1)(A) The Commission shall use competitive bidding for awarding all initial licenses or new construction permits, including licenses and permits for spectrum reallocated for non-United States Government use pursuant to the Emerging Telecommunications Technologies Act of 1991, subject to the exclusions listed in paragraph (2).

“(B) The Commission shall require potential bidders to file a first-stage application indicating an intent to participate in the competitive bidding process and containing such other information as the Commission finds necessary. After conducting the bidding, the Commission shall require the winning bidder to submit a second-stage application. Upon determining that such application is acceptable for filing and that the applicant is qualified pursuant to subparagraph (C), the Commission shall grant a permit or license.

“(C) No construction permit or license shall be granted to an applicant selected pursuant to subparagraph (B) unless the Commission determines that such applicant is qualified pursuant to section 308(b) and subsection (a) of this section, on the basis of the information contained in the first- and second-stage applications submitted under subparagraph (B).

“(D) Each participant in the competitive bidding process is subject to the schedule of changes contained in section 8 of this Act.

“(E) The Commission shall have the authority in awarding construction permits or licenses under competitive bidding procedures to (i) define the geographic and frequency limitations and technical requirements, if any, of such permits or licenses; (ii) establish minimum acceptable competitive bids; and (iii) establish other appropriate conditions on such permits and licenses that will serve the public interest.

“(F) The Commission, in designing the competitive bidding procedures under this subsection, shall study and include procedures—

(i) to ensure bidding access for small and rural companies,

(ii) if appropriate, to extend the holding period for winning bidders awarded permits or licenses, and

(iii) to expand review and enforcement requirements to ensure that winning bidders continue to meet their obligations under this Act.

“(G) The Commission shall, within 6 months after enactment of the Emerging Telecommunications Technologies Act of 1991, following public notice and comment proceedings, adopt rules establishing competitive bidding procedures under this subsection, including the method of bidding and the basis for payment (such as flat fees, fixed or variable royalties, combinations of flat fees and royalties, or other reasonable forms of payment); and a plan for applying such competitive bidding procedures to the initial 50 MHz reallocated from United States Government to non-United States Government use under section 404(d)(1)(A) of the Emerging Telecommunications Technologies Act of 1991, to be distributed during the fiscal years 1994 through 1996.

“(2) Competitive bidding shall not apply to—

“(A) license renewals;

“(B) the United States Government and State or local government entities;

“(C) amateur operator services, over-the-air terrestrial radio and television broadcast services, public safety services, and radio astronomy services;

“(D) private radio end-user licenses, such as Specialized Mobile Radio Service (SMRS), maritime, and aeronautical end-user licenses;

“(E) any license grant to a non-United States Government licensee being moved from its current frequency assignment to a different one by the Commission in order to implement the goals and objectives underlying the Emerging Telecommunications Technologies Act of 1991;

“(F) any other service, class of services, or assignments that the Commission determines, after conducting public comment and notice proceedings, should be exempt from competitive bidding because of public interest factors warranting an exemption; and “(G) small businesses, as defined in section 3(a)(1) of the Small Business Act.

“(3) In implementing this subsection, the Commission shall ensure that current and future rural telecommunications needs are met and that existing rural licensees and their subscribers are not adversely affected.

“(4) Monies received from competitive bidding pursuant to this subsection shall be deposited in the general fund of the United States Treasury.”

(b) RANDOM SELECTION NOT TO APPLY WHEN COMPETITIVE BIDDING REQUIRED.—Section 309(i)(1) of the Communications Act is amended by striking the period after the word “selection” and inserting “, except in instances where competitive bidding procedures are required under subsection (j).”

(c) SPECTRUM ALLOCATION DECISIONS.—Section 303 of the Communications Act is amended by adding the following new subsection:

“(v) In making spectrum allocation decisions among services that are subject to competitive bidding, the Commission is authorized to consider as one factor among others taken into account in making its determination, the relative economic values and other public interest benefits of the proposed uses as reflected in the potential revenues that would be collected under its competitive bidding procedures.”

SEC. 219. DEFINITIONS.

(a) REVISION.—Section 3732(c)(1)(C)(ii) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking out "resale," and inserting in lieu thereof "resale (including losses sustained on the resale of the property)."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1991.

SEC. 226. APPLICATION OF MEDICARE PART B LIMITS TO FEHBP ENROLLEE AGE 65 OR OLDER.

(a) FEDERAL EMPLOYEES HEALTH BENEFITS PROGRAM.—Subsection 8904(b) of title 5, United States Code, is amended:

(1) by amending paragraph (1) to read as follows:

"(b)(1)(A) A plan, other than a prepayment plan described in section 8903(4) of this title, may not provide benefits under this chapter, in the case of any individual enrolled in the plan who is not an employee and who is age 65 or older, to the extent that—"(i) a benefit claim involves a charge by a health care provider for a type of service or medical item which is covered for purposes of benefit payments under both this chapter and title XVIII of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395–1395ccc) relating to medicare hospital and supplementary medical insurance, and

"(ii) benefits otherwise payable under such provisions of law in the case of such individual would exceed applicable limitations on hospital and physician charges established for medicare purposes under sections 1886 and 1848 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ww and 1395w-4), respectively.

"(B)(i) For purposes of this subsection, hospitals, physicians, and other suppliers of medical and health services who have in force participation agreements with the Secretary of Health and Human Services consistent with sections 1842(h) and 1866 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(h) and 1395cc), whereby the participating provider accepts medicare benefits in full payment of charges for covered items and services after applicable patient copayments under sections 1813, 1833 and 1866(a)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395e, 1395f, and 1395cc(a)(2)) have been satisfied, shall accept equivalent benefit payments and enrollee copayments under this chapter as full payment for any item or service described under subparagraph (A) which is furnished to an individual who is enrolled under this chapter and is not covered for purposes of benefit payments applicable to such item or service under provisions of title XVIII of the Social Security Act.

"(ii) Physicians and other health care suppliers who are nonparticipating physicians, as defined by section 1842(i)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(i)(2)) for purposes of services furnished to medicare beneficiaries, may not bill in excess of the limiting charge prescribed under section 1848(g) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w-4(g)) when providing services described under subparagraph (A) to an individual who is enrolled under this chapter and is not covered for purposes of benefit payments applicable to those services under provisions of title XVIII of the Social Security Act.

"(iii) The Office of Personnel Management shall notify the Secretary of Health and Human Services if a hospital, physician, or other supplier of medical services is found to knowingly and willfully violate this subsection and the Secretary shall invoke appropriate sanctions in accordance with subsections 1128A(a)(2), 1848(g)(8), and 1866(b)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1320a-7a(a)(2), 1395w-4(g)(8), and 1395cc(b)(2)) and applicable regulations."; and

(2) by amending paragraph (3)(B) to read as follows:

"(B) For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'medicare program information' includes—

"(i) the limitations on hospital charges established for medicare purposes under section 1886 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ww) and the identity of hospitals which have in force agreements with the Secretary of Health and Human Services consistent with section 1866 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395cc); and

"(ii) the annual fee schedule amounts for services of participating physicians and 'limiting charge' information for nonparticipating physicians established for medicare purposes under section 1848 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w-4) and the identity of physicians and suppliers who have in force participation agreements with the Secretary consistent with subsection 1842(h) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(h))."

(b) MEDICARE AGREEMENTS WITH INSTITUTIONAL PROVIDERS.—Section 1866(a)(1) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395cc(a)(1)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (P);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (Q) and inserting ", and"; and

(3) by inserting after subparagraph (Q) the following new paragraph:

"(R) to accept as payment in full the amounts that would be payable under this part (including the amounts of any coinsurance and deductibles required of individuals entitled to have payment made on their behalf) for an item or service which the provider normally furnishes to patients (or others furnish under arrangement with the provider) and which is furnished to an individual who has attained age 65, is ineligible to receive benefits under this part, and is enrolled, other than as an employee, under a health benefits plan described in paragraphs (1) through (3) of section 8903 and section 8903a of title 5, United States Code, if such item or service is of a type that is covered under both this title and chapter 89 of title 5, United States Code."

(c) MEDICARE PARTICIPATING PHYSICIANS AND SUPPLIERS.—Section 1842(h)(1) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(h)(1)) is amended, after the second sentence, by inserting the following new sentence: "Such agreement shall provide, for any year beginning with 1993, that the physician or supplier will accept as payment in full the amounts that would be payable under this part (plus the amounts of any coinsurance or deductibles required of individuals on whose behalf payments are made under this title) for an item or service furnished during such year to an individual who has attained age 65, is ineligible to receive benefits under this part, and is enrolled, other than as an employee, under a health benefits plan described in paragraphs (1) through (3) of section 8903 and section 8903a of title 5, United States Code, if such item or service is of a type that is covered under both this part and chapter 89 of title 5, United States Code."

(d) MEDICARE ACTUAL CHARGE LIMITATION FOR NONPARTICIPATING PHYSICIANS.—Section 1848(g) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w-4(g)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraph:

"(8) LIMITATION OF ACTUAL CHARGES FOR ENROLLEES OF THE FEDERAL EMPLOYEES HEALTH BENEFITS PROGRAM.—(A) A nonparticipating physician shall not impose an actual charge in excess of the limiting charge defined in paragraph (2) for items and services furnished after 1992 in any case involving—

"(i) an individual who has attained age 65, is ineligible to receive benefits under this part, and is enrolled, other than as an employee, under a health benefits plan described in paragraphs (1) through (3) or section 8903 or section 8903a of title 5, United States Code; and

"(ii) an item or service of a type that is covered for benefits under both this part and chapter 89 of title 5, United States Code.

"(B) If a person knowingly and willfully bills for physicians' services in violation of subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall apply sanctions against the person in accordance with section 1842(j)(2)."

(e) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to health care provider charges for items and services furnished to individuals enrolled in plans under chapter 89 of title 5, United States Code, in contract years beginning after December 31, 1992.

(2) The amendment made by subsection (b) applies to agreements for periods after 1991.

DESCRIPTION OF PROVISIONS IN DOMENICI HIGH VALUE ECONOMIC GROWTH ACT

$5,000 non-refundable credit for first-time homebuyers.

Purpose: The tax credit would assist first-time homebuyers. Stimulates the housing industry in 1992.

Helps 1.2 million homebuyers, provides 415,000 jobs.

10 percent credit, $5,000 maximum.

One-half of the credit allowed in 1992 and one-half in 1993.

Applicable to existing and new construction.

Effective date: Closing on or after February 1, 1992, and for all binding contracts entered into before December 31, 1992, and closed by June 30, 1993.

Genealogy of the legislative language: The President's proposal.

INVESTMENT TAX ALLOWANCE

Purpose: To promote capital investment, modernization and a more rapid recovery by providing a temporary acceleration of depreciation deductions.

Eligibility: For equipment acquired on or after February 1, 1992 and before January 1, 1993, if the equipment is placed in service before July 1, 1993.

Other specific provisions:

Provides a 15 percent investment tax allowance equal to 15 percent of the purchase price of the productivity enhancing equipment.

Examples of eligible investments include machinery, computers, machine tools, a livestock fence, a wind tunnel in a research facility.

The 15 percent investment allowance would be taken on 1993 tax returns.

Genealogy of the legislative language:

President's proposal modified to meet all Budget Act points of order.

Penalty-free withdrawals from pension plans during 1992 for first-time homebuyers and automobile purchasers.

Purpose: Allowing homebuyers, parents and grandparents of homebuyers a penalty free withdrawal from IRAs would help with down payments or automobile purchases.

Eligibility:

First time homebuyers.

Anyone buying an automobile.

Other specific provisions:

Allows up to $10,000 in penalty free withdrawals from IRAs, 401(k)s and other pensions by individuals, parents and grandparents to be used for:

Tax consequences or repayment options:

The IRA or pension account owner can replenish his/her account and avoid any tax consequences if the repayments equal at least one-quarter of the amount originally withdrawn.

Alternatively, regular income tax due can be paid over a four-year period.

Effective date: Withdrawals made between February 1, 1992 and December 31, 1992.

Genealogy of the legislative language:

S. 1984, the Domenici-Specter bill as modified. President proposed a similar provision.

Real property acquired by pension funds and other qualified organizations.

Purpose: Removes overly broad restrictions on pension funds investing in real estate to increase number of potential investors in real estate and attracted needed capital.

Genealogy of the legislative language: The President's language included in the Finance Committee bill.

PASSIVE LOSS REFORM

Purpose: Encourages people to retain ownership, rather than default on money losing, declining valued properties.

Strengthen our financial institutions and make more credit available to small businesses wanting to create new jobs.

Eligibility: All real estate professionals actively involved.

Repeals the irrebuttable presumption that real estate rental activities, are per se passive regardless of the taxpayer's participation.

Allows real estate activities to be treated like other trade or business activities.

Genealogy of the legislative language:

S. 2120's passive loss provision, sponsored by Senator Packwood. Accomplishes the same objectives as S. 1257, the Boren bill with 44 cosponsors.

DOMENICI HIGH VALUE ECONOMIC GROWTH ACT POSSIBLE OFFSETS

1. Eliminate sunset provisions on collection efforts for defaulted student loans:

Current law mandates that the federal government or the guarantee agencies for student loans attempt collection for at least six years, and that the IRS be limited to ten years during which a defaulted loan can be collected through the federal income tax offset program. The Higher Education Technical Amendments of 1991 suspended state and federal statutes of limitations for actions brought against federal student loan defaulters before November 15, 1992. This proposal would allow the continuation of collection efforts on all defaulted loans indefinitely. Recommended in President's budget.

2. Increase Excise Tax on Ozone Depleting Chemicals:

On February 11, 1992, President Bush announced that the U.S. will unilaterally accelerate the phaseout of substances that deplete the Earth's ozone layer. The President noted that the tax on ozone depleting chemicals has helped the U.S. achieve a more rapid reduction in the use of such chemicals. The amendment increases the base tax rate and applies the same base tax rate to both initially listed chemicals and newly listed chemicals. Provision contained in House-passed and Senate Finance-reported tax bills; provision supported by the White House.

3. Conform Book and Tax Accounting for Securities Inventories:

The amendment would require securities dealers to compute their taxable income by marking their inventories of securities to market, as they already do when preparing financial statements in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles. Recommended in President's budget.

4. Expansion of 45-Day Interest Free Period:

Interest is paid by the government on a refund arising from an income tax return if the refund is issued more than 45 days after the later of the due date for the return or the date the return is filed. No interest is paid on income tax refunds if they are issued within 45 days. There is no 45-day processing rule for refunds of other taxes such as employment, excise, and estate gift taxes or for refunds arising from amended returns or for claims of refunds. The amendment would provide a 45-day interest-free period in which the IRS may process refunds of any type of tax overpayment, provided the refund arises from an original return. Provision contained in Senate Finance-reported tax bill.

5. FCC Spectrum Auction:

The amendment proposes to transfer government users of the radio spectrum to private sector users. The assignment of the licenses would be done by competitive bidding and the receipts would be deposited in the Treasury. The amendment exempts broadcasters, small business, Tennessee Valley Authority and the Power Marketing Association from the reallocation and auction process. Recommended in President's budget.

6. Extend the Termination of Civil Service Lump Sum Pension Payment:

In accordance with the provisions of OBRA, lump sum payments offered under the alternative form of annuity provision are suspended until fiscal year 1996, with the exception of certain categories of retirees. The lump sum option had allowed retirees to withdraw the sum of their own retirement contributions to CSRS during the first two years of retirement, then have their monthly annuity reduced by an actuarially equivalent amount based on life expectancy. This proposal would permanently eliminate the lump sum option. Recommended in President's budget.

7. Extend Reconciliation Fees on Patents:

OBRA increased patent surcharge fees by 69 percent through FY 1995, establishing a special fund at the Treasury for the patent surcharge fee. This proposal would extend these fees beyond FY 1995. Recommended in President's budget.

8. Extend U.S. Customs User Fees Due to Expire in FY 1996:

The two primary customs user fees—passenger processing fees, and merchandising fees—were established in 1985, and extended by OBRA of 1990 through September 30, 1995. This proposal would extend existing user fees into the out years. Recommended in President's budget.

9. Access to Tax Information by the Department of Veterans Affairs:

The IRS and Social Security Administration is permitted to disclose self-employment and certain other tax information to the DVA to assist in determining eligibility for, and establishing correct benefit amounts under certain needs-based pension and other programs.

The disclosure provision is scheduled to expire September 30, 1992. The amendment would extend this disclosure provision for six years, through September 30, 1998. Recommended in President's budget.

10. Decrease Foreclosed Property Acquisition by Veterans Housing Administration:

Proposal makes a revision to the formula used to determine cost effectiveness of the VA acquiring and reselling foreclosed property. By evaluating expected losses on the resale of foreclosed property, the VHA will reduce the number of property acquisitions that are not cost-effective. Recommended in President's budget.

11. Apply Medicare Part B Payment Limits to Federal Employees Health Benefits:

Proposal would extend the payment limits that apply under Medicare Part B to services provided to FEHB enrollees age 65 and over who do not have Medicare coverage. Under Medicare, physicians are paid based on a fee schedule and can only charge beneficiaries a specified amount above what Medicare will pay. Physicians getting reimbursed through the FEHB program for non-Medicare patients over age 65 are not constrained in what they can attempt to charge. This proposal would have the effect of lowering the cost of FEHB retiree health coverage. Savings would accrue to both the government and to FEHB beneficiaries in the form of lower premiums. Recommended in President's budget.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join the distinguished Senator from New Mexico on this important legislative proposal. There is no doubt about the fact of gridlock here in Washington. There is gridlock between the President and the Congress. The President submitted an economic recovery package to the Congress which was rejected. And the Congress in turn submitted an economic recovery package to the President which was vetoed.

My travels through my State show a tremendous amount of anger at this gridlock and the failure on the part of Washington to do anything about an economic recovery.

What Senator DOMENICI and I are proposing tonight is to take five points which have been agreed upon by both sides. It is my sense that unless Washington acts on the economic recovery, to put millions of Americans back to work, we are soon going to find there will be 537 people in Washington out of work—100 U.S. Senators, 435 House Members, and the President and the Vice President.

Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague Senator DOMENICI, the distinguished ranking Republican of the Senate Budget Committee, in introducing an economic recovery program which includes the common elements of the economic recovery program proposed by President Bush and the economic recovery program passed by the U.S. Senate.

No one denies that America faces a serious recession. No one denies that there is a gridlock between the Republican and Democratic parties on the issue of an economic recovery program. No one denies that there is gridlock between the Executive and congressional branches of the U.S. Government on the issue of an economic recovery program.

In order to move ahead promptly with as far-reaching a program as possible, I urge the President and the Congress to move swiftly to enact the portions of the economic recovery program which have been advanced by the President and the Senate. My travels through Pennsylvania's 67 counties have convinced me that action is demanded by an angry citizenry, and action is needed for the millions of Americans who are unemployed and underemployed.

There is enormous dissatisfaction in America with the gridlock between the political parties and between the executive and legislative branches and the public bickering in Washington, DC.

Unless constructive action is taken by both political parties and the executive/legislative branches, 537 Washington officeholders are in jeopardy of being ousted: 100 Members of the U.S. Senate, 435 Members of the U.S. House of Representatives, and the President and the Vice President of the United States.

Mr. President, it is not a perfect approach to take the commonly agreed upon provisions of the President's proposals and the Senate's proposals; but it is, I believe, as far as we can go at the present time and it is vastly preferable to no action at all.

In my judgment, we should enact a reduction in the capital gains tax. Unfortunately, that is not possible given the present opposition. As my colleagues will recall, during the 101st Congress the House of Representatives passed a capital gains tax cut and last year there were 56 votes in the Senate for that tax cut, which was insufficient for cloture. That is an issue, however, which can and will be presented to the American people for their decision this November.

In the immediate term, however, we must attack the recession. The American people should not have to wait for Washington's political gridlock to become unlocked before some constructive action is taken. That is why I am joining in introducing legislation comprised largely of the provisions that both sides agree will spur an economic recovery.

The principal components of this legislation to cause the recovery include: (i) The $5,000 first-time homebuyer tax credit, proposed by the President and modified by the Senate, which is estimated to stimulate approximately 215,000 housing starts and 415,000 new jobs in 1992; (ii) the Specter/Domenici penalty-free IRA withdrawal proposal for middle-income purchasers of homes and new automobiles, included in the Senate tax bill and estimated to create between $40 billion and $120 billion in increased spending in 1992; (iii) the President's 15 percent investment tax allowance proposal, which would promote capital investment, modernization, and more rapid cost recovery; (iv) passive loss liberalization for real estate professionals intended to help stabilize the real estate market; and (v) liberalization of the debt-financed income rules to facilitate investment in real estate by pension funds, also intended to stabilize real estate market values.

The first two provisions of this legislation, the $5,000 first-time homebuyers tax credit and the penalty-free IRA withdrawals, would assist tremendously the homebuilding and automobile industries, the two industries that traditionally have led this country out of recessions. Under the credit for first-time homebuyers, a taxpayer would be entitled to a credit equal to 10 percent of the purchase price of the home up to a maximum of $5,000. This provision differs slightly from the President's proposal in that it is not limited to new construction; the provision would also be available to first-time homebuyers buying older homes. According to the National Association of Home Builders, this provision would stimulate 215,000 housing starts and 415,000 additional jobs in 1992.

Similarly, Mr. President, the penalty-free IRA withdrawal provision would assist the homebuilding industry. It would also assist the automobile industry. This provision would permit individuals with incomes under $75,000—$100,000 for married couples filing jointly—to withdraw penalty-free up to $10,000 from an IRA, 401(k) or Keogh plan, provided that the funds are expended on new automobiles or first-time home purchases within 6 months from withdrawal. The tax on such withdrawal would be due over the succeeding 4 years. However, in each year that the tax is due, taxpayers would have the option to either pay the tax on one-fourth of the withdrawal or re-contribute to their account one-fourth of the withdrawal and avoid such tax. By its terms, the provision would sunset on December 31, 1992.

Mr. President, when Senator DOMENICI and I offered this provision as an amendment to the Senate tax bill, the Joint Committee on Taxation had estimated the cost of this measure as negligible; that is, costing less than $1 million, over 5 years. The country's return on this investment would be great. I have received consumer spending estimates based on this provision ranging from approximately $40 billion—from the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System Chairman Alan Greenspan—to well over $120 billion, according to the results of a consumer poll conducted by Interpublic Group of Companies, Inc., in New York. This poll was conducted back in December 1991. Ninety days later, March 1992, Interpublic conducted a second poll refining its questions on S. 984, the predecessor bill, and the results were even more encouraging. As stated by Mr. Philip Geier, chairman and CEO of Interpublic, in a letter to me dated April 3, 1992—which letter, I am informed, was also mailed to each member of the Senate Finance Committee and House Ways and Means Committee:

Bottom line is that [this] proposal would free up $32 billion from retirement plan savings to help get our economy moving. When multipliers are included, the money Americans would use to complete their purchases results in a total of $153 billion—home purchase $116 billion; new car purchases $29 billion; home improvement $8 billion dollars that would move into our economy * * *

Findings in the March 1992 survey make it very conclusive. This is a plan which Americans believe in. A plan from which they and our nation's economy will benefit. Clearly this proposal has a powerful triggering effect. It comes at a time when the effect of lowered interest rates is being blunted by the more restrictive consumer lending policies of our financial institutions. This proposal allows responsible access to funds. These will go to responsible investment. Economic activity will be triggered, jobs ensured and created. It provides a stimulus we need right now.

The investment tax allowance is another provision on which there is much agreement between the political parties as well as Congress and the President on its utility and benefit to the economy. Under this provision, productivity enhancing equipment such as machinery, computers, and machine tools, purchased on or after February 1, 1992, and before January 1, 1993, and placed in service before July 1, 1993, would be eligible for a 15-percent additional depreciation allowance in the first year after the property was placed in service. Many believe, and I do not disagree, that this temporary acceleration of depreciation would promote capital investments by businesses, and when coupled with the consumer investments I have already mentioned, would have a very positive effect on our economy.

Passive loss reform and facilitating pension fund investment in real estate will further this effect. Again, Mr. President, the President, the Senate, and the House agree that these reforms will help our economy. The passive loss provision of the bill we are introducing repeals the irrebuttable presumption that real estate rental activities are per se passive activities regardless of the taxpayer's participation. Thus, it allows real estate activities to be treated like other trade or business activities.

The present passive loss rules prevent real estate professionals from deducting necessary business expenses. This, in turn, exacerbates cash-flow problems they may have with their properties, and is a significant contributing factor in their losing their properties to lenders who hold mortgages on those properties. Reforming the passive loss rules as we propose will encourage these property owners to hold and maintain their property rather than default and relinquish it to their lenders. Fewer defaults will also facilitate the availability of credit and, in turn, further our economic recovery.

That recovery will also be facilitated by enabling pension funds to invest in real estate. Pension funds are a major source of investment capital in real estate. Making these funds available for investment will assist in the stabilization of real estate values, which is necessary for economic growth. This provision was proposed by the President in his economic recovery plan, and both Houses of the Democratic-controlled Congress have agreed that this provision is important to our economic recovery.

Finally, Mr. President, there are several other provisions that I would like to see legislated, which would also boost our economy. Among such provisions are the extenders, presently scheduled to expire on June 30, 1992. There should be no extended disagreement on the necessity for these well-accepted provisions. Congress and the President already recognize the importance of the R&D tax credit, low-income housing tax credit, mortgage revenue and small issue industrial development bond programs, and the targeted jobs tax credit, among others, to our economy and have heretofore agreed that they should be extended.

I am hopeful that we can repeal the so-called luxury tax, which has turned out to be a job buster in my State. We should also repeal the ACE depreciation adjustment under the alternative minimum tax, requested by the President and agreed to by Congress, which among other things provides a disincentive to capital investment. Certainly, Mr. President, in the current economic climate, we should encourage, not discourage, capital investment.

But, notwithstanding the virtues of enacting these other provisions, this is a carefully crafted bill that can be enacted now and that will encourage economic growth and create jobs.

Mr. President, I submit that it is incumbent upon the Congress and the President to act on the economy and to act now. The bill we have introduced avoids the intensely partisan issues that have prevented the enactment and signing of economic recovery legislation to date. It is a bill that we all agree will help our Nation. Therefore, I call on my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter dated April 3, 1992, from Mr. Philip H. Geier of Interpublic Group of Companies, Inc., which sets forth a detailed survey showing that there would be a substantial infusion of consumer purchasing power with one of the points put forward by Senator DECONCINI and myself on the use of IRA's to stimulate consumer purchasing power.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE INTERPUBLIC GROUP OF COMPANIES, INC.,

New York, NY, April 3, 1992.

Hon. ARLEN SPECTER,
Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPECTER: In December 1991 we commissioned a consumer survey—a national probability sample of 1,000 adults—to learn how Americans would respond to the Specter/Domenici proposal S-1984. We described the proposal to these people, in consumer language. We told them the Senate proposal would permit them to withdraw up to $10,000 from their IRA's or 401K's without penalty if they used the monies to either buy a new car, make a home improvement or buy a new home within the next six months.

The results were very encouraging. Fully one out of every three households in the country said they'd like to take advantage of this Senate proposal . . . 31 million households said they would act on this proposal . . . if it were passed.

Ninety days later, we conducted a second round of research. This time we beefed up the questionnaire to make sure those Americans who said they would act on this Senate proposal were, in fact, qualified to act on the proposal.

The results of the second round of research are even more encouraging. Among the 26 million families that qualify . . . those who say they have an IRA, a 401K, or a Keough plan and a household income of no more than $100K (75K for single heads) . . . fully 40%, that is 10.5 million families, say they will take advantage of the Senate proposal to buy a new car, van or truck, make a home improvement or buy a new home.

We also asked everybody we interviewed, regardless of whether they qualify or don't qualify, whether they thought this proposal would be good for the economy.

Sixty-nine percent of all American families think the Senate proposal will have a positive impact on our economy. That is 65,000,000 families favor seeing this proposal passed. Even more impressive is the fact that 74% of America's middle-class families (HH income from $25K to $50K) believe the Senate proposal will stimulate our economy.

Both rounds of research say that Americans . . . those qualified and those who wish they were, are very much in favor of seeing this Senate proposal passed. Not once but twice they told us they would use their own funds to get our economy moving.

The proposal is powerful. It stimulates people to spend money; their own money. It motivates people to take action and buy a new home, make a home improvement or buy a new car. The research shows there are 10,500,000 qualified families who would withdraw money from their IRA's, their 401K, or their Keough plan to make these investments.

Nearly 50% of these qualified families, (5,000,000) were motivated to invest in these properties solely by the Senate proposal. That is 5 million families did not intend to buy a new car, a new home or do any home improvements before this Senate proposal made it possible for them to consider taking these actions within the next six months.

These 5 million families say they will withdraw $32 billion dollars to invest: 2.1 million families investing $14 billion for new cars; 1.2 million families investing $10 billion for new homes and 1.6 million families investing $8 billion in home improvements.

But that's not all. The $24 billion for new homes and new cars is "seed money". It needs to be multiplied by the money they would take from their savings or borrow from banks to complete their purchases. (We're making the conservative assumption that the money they withdraw to spend on home improvement is their total investment.)

The average cost of a "new" home last year was $95,000. The money they would "borrow" from their plans (on average $7,900) needs to be multiplied by about 11 to equal the balance of the down payment (assuming 20%) and mortgage requirements to complete the purchase cost of a new home. That alone is an additional $106 billion dollars that would flow from lending institutions to support these intentions.

The average cost of a new car, van or truck last year was $13,500. In the survey new car buyers "borrowed" $6,450 (on average) from their plans. The additional funds from savings or a bank loan needed to complete the purchase is $7,050. The multiplier is 1.1. Therefore, the "seed money" this Senate proposal would put into the economy generates an additional $15 billion dollars in economic activity.

Bottom line is that the Senate proposal would free up $32 billion from retirement plan savings to help get our economy moving. When multipliers are included the money Americans would use to complete their purchases results in a total of $153 billion . . . home purchase $116 billion; new car purchase $29 billion; home improvement $8 billion dollars that would move into our economy.

And 75% of these qualified Americans say they will return the money they borrow from their plans within the time frame required to avoid paying any penalties or additional taxes.

As I indicated, the findings were encouraging when we initially surveyed the issue in December 1991.

Findings in the March 1992 survey make it very conclusive. This is a plan which Americans believe in. A plan from which they and our nation's economy will benefit. Clearly this proposal has a powerful triggering effect. It comes at a time when the effect of lowered interest rates is being blunted by the more restrictive consumer lending policies of our financial institutions. This proposal allows responsible access to funds. These will go to responsible investment. Economic activity will be triggered, jobs ensured and created. It provides a stimulus we need right now.

I urge you to make this opportunity available to our citizens. There is no doubt of their response and there can be little doubt concerning its positive and immediate economic impact.

With regards,

PHILIP H. GEIER, Jr.

S.J. Res. 292. Joint resolution to provide for the issuance of a commemorative postage stamp in honor of American prisoners of war and Americans missing in action; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

COMMEMORATIVE STAMP IN HONOR OF PRISONERS OF WAR AND AMERICANS MISSING IN ACTION

• Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, on behalf of Mr. KERRY, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. HELMS, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. BOREN, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. RUDMAN, Mr. REID, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. WARNER, Mr. DIXON, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. INOUE, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. BYRD, Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. LOTT, Mr. MACK, Mr. GARN, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. SEYMOUR, Mr. FOWLER, Mr. MCCAIN, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. DOLE, Mr. GORTON, Mr. COHEN, Mr. HATCH, Mr. BOND, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. SIMPSON, Mr. ROTH, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. KOHL, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. BURNS, Mr. MOYNIHAN and Mr. WOFFORD, I am today introducing a joint resolution to provide for the issuance of a commemorative postage stamp to honor American prisoners of war and Americans missing in action.

Mr. President, in building our great Nation, American soldiers have made different types of sacrifices in defense of American ideals. A great number of memorials and monuments honor Americans who lost their lives in battle—and it is only appropriate that this should be so. But I believe that American prisoners of war and Americans missing in action should also be commemorated.

The President has declared the POW/MIA issue to be of highest national priority. A postage stamp is a way for family members, friends, and other Americans who care deeply about the POW/MIA issue to honor these Americans, and, at the same time, to generate public awareness.

There are over 88,000 U.S. service personnel still missing from World War II, Korea, Vietnam, and other conflicts. The fate of these brave men and women has justifiably stirred the attention of the American public, and their fate will remain an issue until the American public is satisfied that this Government has done everything that it can reasonably do to find these lost warriors. By enhancing this public awareness, a POW/MIA stamp will assist us in keeping this issue on the front burner.

There are over a dozen proposals in Congress providing for the issuance of commemorative postage stamps, and each has its own merits. But surely no one is more deserving of this honor than our POW's and MIA's.

Mr. President, for the thousands of Americans who still ponder the whereabouts of their loved ones, a commemorative stamp is not only a token of appreciation for the sacrifices made by these great Americans, but will serve as a constant reminder that there may still be individuals in some remote part of the world, scared and alone, but not forgotten. ●

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 108—RELATIVE TO THE KURDS IN NORTHERN IRAQ

Mr. MACK submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 108

Whereas the Government of Iraq brutally suppressed a Kurdish uprising in February and March 1991, forcing hundreds of thousands of Kurds to flee across the border into Turkey;

Whereas this sudden, massive refugee flow into Turkey resulted in shortfalls of shelter, food, medicine, and potable water that placed thousands of Kurdish lives at risk;

Whereas the best solution to this humanitarian crisis was to encourage the Kurds to return to their homes in northern Iraq by creating a security zone in northern Iraq in which the United States guaranteed that they would not be attacked by Iraqi aircraft or other forces;

Whereas in response to the extraordinary humanitarian need of the Kurds, the United States took the lead in organizing Operation Provide Comfort, in which the United States and other forces undertook a major relief effort for the Kurds both within Turkey and in the designated security zone in northern Iraq;

Whereas in June 1991 the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees took over the prime responsibility for all relief operations in northern Iraq;

Whereas the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees still maintains a large presence in northern Iraq, including over a thousand civilians involved in relief activities as well as hundreds of United Nations guards;

Whereas the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is currently negotiating with the United Nations Children's Fund and other United Nations organizations to take over the functions being performed in northern Iraq by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees;

Whereas the memorandum of understanding between Iraq and the United Nations which authorizes the United Nations presence expires in June 1992;

Whereas the severe shortages of food within the security zone as a result of the Iraqi blockade of northern Iraq make a continued international relief effort essential in order to prevent famine among the Kurdish population;

Whereas the courageous decision of the Government of Turkey to permit the stationing of United States military forces in southern Turkey, despite the possibility of Iraqi retaliation against Turkey, was essential to the success of Operation Provide Comfort;

Whereas Operation Provide Comfort is still necessary in order to deter Iraqi attacks against the Kurdish population in the security zone in northern Iraq;

Whereas the agreement between the United States and Turkey that permits the stationing of United States military forces in southern Turkey expires in June 1992; and

Whereas if this agreement is not extended and if Operation Provide Comfort is terminated, it is extremely likely that Iraqi forces will attack the security zone, resulting in substantial loss of lives and possibly generating another massive wave of Kurdish refugees into Turkey: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the United States should seek Turkish permission to extend beyond June 1992 the agreement that permits the stationing of United States military forces in southern Turkey for purposes of Operation Provide Comfort;

(2) the Government of Turkey, whose continued commitment to Operation Provide Comfort is essential if the operation is to be continued, should respond positively to a United States request to extend that agreement;

(3) the United Nations presence in northern Iraq should be extended; and

(4) the United States and the international community should attach priority to persuading the Government of Iraq to lift the economic boycott of northern Iraq.

• Mr. MACK. Mr. President, I am gravely concerned about the potential of attacks against the Kurdish peoples of northern Iraq should the United Nations withdraw its forces in June 1992, upon the expiration of the current agreement with the Government of Turkey.

I encourage the administration to maintain the United States' commitment to protecting the Kurds through Operation Provide Comfort as long as necessary. There is ample evidence that Saddam Hussein is prepared to move swiftly against these innocent people should our commitment waiver, including recent reports that Iraqi air defense batteries have begun tracking allied flights within the security zone, and their fighters have begun flying training missions for the first time since Saddam's surrender at the end of Operation Desert Storm.

I recognize that no congressional action is required to extend the commitment of American forces to Operation Provide Comfort. I simply wish to convey, in the strongest possible terms, my recommendation we take all steps required to do so.

To that end, I rise to introduce this resolution, and encourage my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to take a stand on behalf of the Kurdish people of Iraq and support this vital effort.●

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 109—PROVIDING FOR A CONDITIONAL RECESS OR ADJOURNMENT OF THE SENATE AND AN ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE

Mr. FORD (for Mr. MITCHELL) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. CON. RES. 109

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That when the Senate recesses or adjourns at the close of business on Friday, April 10, 1992, or Saturday,

April 11, 1992, pursuant to a motion made by the Majority Leader, or his designee, in accordance with this resolution, it stand recessed or adjourned until 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday, April 28, 1992, or until 12 o'clock noon on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this resolution, whichever occurs first; and that when the House of Representatives adjourns on the legislative day of Thursday, April 9, 1992, pursuant to a motion made by the Majority Leader, or his designee, in accordance with this resolution, it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday, April 28, 1992, or until 12 o'clock noon on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this resolution, whichever occurs first.

SEC. 2. The Majority Leader of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, acting jointly after consultation with the Minority Leader of the Senate and the Minority Leader of the House shall notify the Members of the Senate and the House, respectively, to reassemble whenever, in their opinion, the public interest shall warrant it.

SENATE RESOLUTION 284—COMMENDING THE BLUE DEVILS OF DUKE UNIVERSITY FOR WINNING THE 1992 NCAA MEN'S BASKETBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

Mr. SANFORD (for himself and Mr. HELMS) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 284

Whereas the Duke University Blue Devils' men's basketball team has had another outstanding season;

Whereas the Duke Blue Devils maintained the nation's Number One ranking from the beginning of the season to the end;

Whereas the Duke Blue Devils, in compiling a 34-2 record, won the 1992 Atlantic Coast Conference Regular Season Championship;

Whereas the Duke Blue Devils also won the 1992 Atlantic Coast Conference Tournament Championship;

Whereas the Duke Blue Devils reached the NCAA Final Four for the fifth consecutive year;

Whereas Duke Coach Mike Krzyzewski now holds the highest NCAA Tournament winning percentage among all coaches with 15 or more wins in the tournament with a 33-7 record;

Whereas Duke Coach Mike Krzyzewski received the 1992 Naismith Award as men's college basketball Coach of the Year;

Whereas the Duke University Blue Devils won the 1992 NCAA men's basketball championship; and

Whereas the Duke Blue Devils are the first team in 19 years to win consecutive NCAA men's basketball championships: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, that the Senate commends the Blue Devils of Duke University for winning the 1992 National Collegiate Athletic Association Men's Basketball Championship.

SENATE RESOLUTION 285—RELATIVE TO SANCTIONS AGAINST LIBYA

Mr. LIEBERMAN (for himself, Mr. KERRY, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. HATCH, and Mr. D'AMATO) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 285

Whereas 441 people were murdered as the result of terrorist attacks against Pan Am flight 103 in 1988 and UTA flight 772 in 1989;

Whereas these attacks killed nationals from more than 30 countries;

Whereas Libya has engaged in repeated terrorist actions, either by its own nationals or through proxy terrorist organizations, against not only Western nations, but those of the Third World;

Whereas the United Nations Security Council has called on Libya to cooperate fully with the United States, Britain, and France in the investigation and prosecution of those responsible for the attacks on Pan Am flight 103 and UTA flight 772 and to cease all support for terrorism;

Whereas the United Nations Security Council adopted Resolution 731 on January 21, 1992, calling for Libyan cooperation and, after weeks of fruitless negotiations, the United Nations Security Council adopted Resolution 748 on March 31, 1992;

Whereas United Nations Security Council Resolution 748 mandated sanctions against Libya, including an end to all air service and arms sales to Libya and a significant reduction in the Libyan diplomatic presence abroad; and

Whereas United Nations Security Council Resolution 748 represents the first time that the United Nations has adopted sanctions against a country carrying out terrorist attacks, thereby demonstrating the world community's opposition to such assaults on international security: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) Libya should—

(A) comply with all provisions of United Nations Security Council Resolution 748 and release to the United States or the United Kingdom for trial the two Libyan suspects in the bombing of Pan Am flight 103;

(B) cooperate with the French judicial investigation into the bombing of UTA flight 772;

(C) compensate the families of the victims of those aircraft bombings; and

(D) cease support for terrorism;

(2) the United States and United Nations Security Council should consider additional measures against Libya if it does not fully cooperate with the United Nations Security Council Resolutions;

(3) all countries should adhere to the United Nations sanctions against Libya, as embodied in United Nations Security Council Resolution 748;

(4) the United States Government, the United Nations Security Council, and other nations should work together to ensure that the sanctions are adhered to;

(5) the United States, through the Congress and the executive branch of Government, and other nations should consider additional measures against violators of the United Nations sanctions; and

(6) all United States nationals who are contributing to the Libyan economy should leave Libya promptly, and Congress and the executive branch of Government should work together to increase penalties against those United States individuals who choose to remain in Libya in defiance of United States law.

• Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, today I am joining Senator LIEBERMAN in introducing a resolution calling for international compliance with the sanctions against Libya approved by the U.N. Security Council.

I was proud to have served as a member of the President's Commission on Aviation Security and Terrorism. As my colleagues know, that Commission was formed to look into the circumstances surrounding the bombing of Pan Am 103, and to make recommendations on improvements to security.

A major recommendation of the Commission was what we called national will. In summary, we were talking about the will to resist terrorism; to fight terrorism; and to cut off terrorism at its source.

The sanctions approved by the United Nations take an important step forward in demonstrating that we and the majority of the world have that will.

U.N. Resolution 748 called on Libya to turn over indicted suspects in the bombing of Pan Am 103 to the United States or Great Britain for trial. It was a call for justice. Unfortunately, Libya has so far ignored that call.

In the event that Libya doesn't comply by April 15, the U.N. resolution calls for sanctions against Libya. The message is simple. If Libya is going to stay in the business of terrorism, the world community isn't going to do business with Libya.

The resolution that we are introducing today supports the U.N.'s actions. Further, it calls on the United States and other nations to consider additional measures—stronger measures—if Libya continues to refuse to cooperate.

It is essential that state sponsors of terrorism understand that the United States and other countries will not tolerate terrorism, and will do what's necessary to stop it.

Mr. President, we and other nations will continue to be victimized by terrorism as long as we allow ourselves to be victims. By insisting that Libya comply with the U.N. resolution, and having the will to act decisively if it doesn't, we can strike out at terrorism.

The United Nations has shown that it is finally willing to take a stand against terrorism. I hope that the international community has the will to back up that position.

I urge my colleagues to join us in supporting this resolution.●

● Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, while terrorism is ultimately the weapon of the cowardly, it still represents one of the major security threats of our era. This is particularly true of the airline industry. Two decades ago, the airline industry was plagued by a series of hijackings. Thanks to new security measures, hijackings were reduced significantly. But terrorists then switched to high explosives, and succeeded in destroying an Air India aircraft in 1985, killing four people on TWA 840 in 1986, blowing up Pan Am 103 in 1988 and the French aircraft, UTA 772, over Niger in 1989. More than 600 people were killed by these attacks.

It is heartening, therefore, that the United Nations has finally gone on record in condemning Libyan responsibility for the attacks on Pan Am 103 and on French UTA flight 772. The Security Council voted 10 to 0 to apply sanctions. Five nations, India, Zimbabwe, Cape Verde, Morocco, and China, abstained because of a misguided sense of Third World solidarity.

The U.N. Security Council Resolution 748, which was passed on March 31, requires that all nations end air service, arms sales and the sale of aircraft and military spare parts to Libya until it agrees to the following conditions:

Turns over for trial the two Libyan intelligence agents, who were indicated for the attack on Pan Am 103;

Cooperates with French authorities in their investigation into the attack of UTA flight 772, whose victims included Americans;

Compensates the families of the victims; and Ends all support for terrorism.

Libya's involvement in terrorism goes back to the early 1970's, when Qadhafi publicly offered to help publicly international organizations and dispatched terrorists to Italy to shoot down an Israeli airliner. During the 1980's, Libyan agents, among other operations, killed a Libyan dissident in the United States and killed three individuals, including two United States servicemen, in the La Belle Disco bombing in April 1986.

Libya's support for terrorism has extended to non-Libyan terrorists, such as the Japanese Red army and the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-general command, which have been guilty of attacking United States targets. Libya also harbors one of the most murderous terrorist organizations in the world, the Abu Nidal Organization. Among ANO's reprehensible actions are the machinegun massacres at the Rome and Vienna airports in 1985 and on a Greek tourist boat in 1988. These operations have earned Qadhafi the opprobrium of the world.

I am introducing today a Senate resolution in support of the U.N. resolution and its accompanying sanctions. The Senate resolution also expresses the sense of the Senate that the United States and the United Nations should consider additional measures against Libya if it does not fully cooperate with the U.N. Security Council Resolution. The international community chose not to boycott Libyan oil, but a boycott, some believe, would have represented a decisive blow against Qadhafi's regime. This option, which was used against Iraq, should be studied.

Additional sanctions should also include measures against violators of the U.N. sanctions. Any country or company that tries to skirt the embargo should be made to pay a price through financial penalties or denial of access to the U.S. market. Finally, the several hundred United States nationals who still work in the Libyan oil industry, in defiance of existing United States law, should be prosecuted if they remain.

Mr. President, the U.N. resolution will help to deter future terrorist attacks and may offer some small solace to the families, some of whom I have met, who lost loved ones in these vicious attacks. The Senate resolution also puts the Senate on record as condemning these cowardly acts and expressing its willingness to consider additional measures.

The U.N. resolve—and the promise of sterner measures—should demonstrate to other terrorists and their sponsors that they will continue to be treated as international pariahs if they continue in their ways.●

SENATE RESOLUTION 286—PROVIDING FOR PAYMENT OF FEES FOR SERVICES OF THE ATTENDING PHYSICIAN AND USE OF SENATE HEALTH AND FITNESS FACILITIES

Mr. FORD (for himself and Mr. STEVENS) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 286

Resolved, That (a) the Committee on Rules and Administration shall promulgate regulations—

(1) pertaining to the services provided by the Attending Physician and the operation and use of the Senate health and fitness facilities; and

(2) requiring the payment of fees for services received from the Attending Physician and for the use of the Senate health and fitness facilities pursuant to such regulations.

(b) The Secretary of the Senate is authorized to withhold fees from the salary of an individual authorized by such regulations to receive such services from the Attending Physician and to use the Senate health and fitness facilities.

(c) The Secretary of the Senate shall remit all fees required by subsection (a)(2) that are collected pursuant to subsection (b) or by direct payment to the General Fund of the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts unless otherwise provided by law.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET

BROWN (AND DOMENICI) AMENDMENT NO. 1764

Mr. BROWN (for himself and Mr. DOMENICI) proposed an amendment to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 106) setting forth the congressional budget for the United States Government for fiscal years 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, and 1997, as follows:

At the appropriate place in the resolution, insert the following:

SEC. . SENSE OF THE SENATE THAT CERTAIN GOVERNMENT SUBSIDIES SHOULD NOT GO TO THOSE WHO ARE NOT IN NEED AND THAT A STUDY SHOULD BE CONDUCTED TO IDENTIFY SUCH SUBSIDIES.

(a) FINDING.—The United States Government needs an accurate understanding of the subsidies it pays to those who are not in need.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that, as part of the effort to reduce the federal budget deficit and to set spending priorities, subsidies should not be paid to those who are not in need and that a study should be conducted, as provided in paragraph (c), to identify such subsidies.

(c) STUDY OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT MANDATORY SPENDING BY INCOME CATEGORIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Director of the Office of Management and Budget, and concurrently the Director of the Congressional Budget Office, in consultation with the Bureau of the Census and the Internal Revenue Service (both of which would provide statistical data) and other Executive Branch departments and agencies, should prepare an estimate by agency and account of the dollar value (as measured by outlays) of assistance payments from United States Government mandatory spending programs under current law and regulations to recipients by income category for the current and five succeeding fiscal years.

(2) METHODOLOGY.—The study described in paragraph (c), to establish appropriate income categories, shall use for individuals the sum of the individual's adjusted gross income plus any United States Government assistance payment not already included in such adjusted gross income and shall use for persons other than individuals the sum of the person's taxable income plus any such payment not already included in such taxable income.

(3) DEFINITIONS.—

(A) The term "assistance payments from United States Government mandatory spending programs" means any payment, including payments-in-kind and loans, made by the United States Government directly, indirectly, or through payment to another on the individual's or person's behalf from the mandatory spending programs. The term does not mean payments of Social Security benefits.

(B) The term "recipients" means the individuals or persons on whose behalf the assistance payments are made.

(4) REPORTING.—The study described in subsection (c) of paragraph (1) shall be submitted to the Congress, and updated annually, as part of the Budget Message of the President.

BRADLEY (AND OTHERS)

REID (AND DASCHLE) AMENDMENT
NO. 1771

Mr. REID (for himself and Mr. DASCHLE) proposed an amendment to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 106), supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place in the resolution add the following new section:

"SEC. . PROGRAM BUDGET EVALUATION.

(a) FINDINGS.—

(1) The current national debt stands at $3.1 trillion;

(2) The federal deficit for fiscal year 1993 is projected to add another $350 billion to that debt; and

(3) It is crucial to the well being of future generations of Americans that federal deficits be eliminated and the national debt reduced;

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—

It is the Sense of the Senate that prior to the commencement of the 104th Congress, each authorizing committee of the Senate should conduct a comprehensive reexamination and evaluation of existing programs under its jurisdiction which result in the expenditure of federal dollars, and report its findings to the Senate.

Such committee reports should consider the following matters:

(1) an identification of the objectives intended for the program and the problem it was intended to address.

(2) an identification of any trends, developments, and emerging conditions which are likely to affect the future nature and extent of the problems or needs which the program is intended to address.

(3) an identification of any other program having potentially conflicting or duplicative objectives.

(4) a statement of the number and types of beneficiaries or persons served by the program.

(5) an assessment of the effectiveness of the program and the degrees to which the original objectives of the program or group of programs have been achieved.

(6) an assessment of the cost effectiveness of the program.

(7) an assessment of the relative merits of alternative methods which could be considered to achieve the purposes of the program."

FOWLER (AND OTHERS)

RIEGLE AMENDMENT NO. 1773

Mr. SASSER (for Mr. RIEGLE) proposed an amendment to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 106), supra, as follows:

At the end of the resolution, add the following new section:

SEC. . SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING INCREASING PRODUCTIVITY.

(a) FINDING.—The Senate finds that—
(1) failure to meet the challenge of international economic competitiveness would seriously jeopardize our national security, standard of living, and quality of life in the coming decades; and

(2) increased productivity is the key to meeting the challenge and regaining the competitive edge the United States economy enjoyed in the past.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that funds should be allocated to allow this Nation to commit to an increase in productivity and international competitiveness through a program of long-term strategic investment in—

(1) the development of its human resources;

(2) the physical infrastructure that supports economic activity;

(3) the development and commercialization of technology; and

(4) productive plants and equipment.

INCREASE IN ACREAGE LIMIT FOR ASSATEAGUE ISLAND

BUMPERS AMENDMENT NO. 1774

Mr. FORD (for Mr. BUMPERS) proposed an amendment to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1254) to increase the authorized acreage limit for the Assateague Island National Seashore on the Maryland mainland, and for other purposes, as follows:

On page 2, line 23, through page 3, line 8, strike subsection (c) in its entirety and insert in lieu thereof the following:

“(C) The Secretary is authorized to enter into cooperative agreements with local, State, and Federal agencies and with educational institutions and nonprofit entities to coordinate research designed to ensure full protection of the natural and cultural resources of the seashore, consistent with the purposes for which the seashore was established, and other applicable law. The Secretary is also authorized to provide technical assistance to local, State, and Federal agencies and to educational institutions and nonprofit entities in order to further such purposes. The Secretary shall submit a report every two years to the Congress on the results of the coordinated research program authorized by this section and plans to implement the recommendations arising from such research.”

OMNIBUS NUCLEAR PROLIFERATION CONTROL ACT

PELL (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 1775

Mr. FORD (for Mr. PELL, for himself, Mr. HELMS, and Mr. GLENN) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 1128) to impose sanctions against foreign persons and United States persons that assist foreign countries in acquiring a nuclear explosive device or unsafeguarded special nuclear material, and for other purposes, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Omnibus Nuclear Proliferation Control Act of 1992”.

SEC. 2. IMPOSITION OF SANCTIONS.

(a) DETERMINATION BY THE PRESIDENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b)(2), the President shall impose the applicable sanctions described in subsection (c) if the President determines that a foreign person or a United States person, on or after the date of the enactment of this section, has materially and with requisite knowledge contributed—

(A) through the export from the United States of any goods or technology that are subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, or

(B) through the export from any other country of any goods or technology that would be, if they were exported from the United States, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to the efforts by any individual, group, or non-nuclear-weapon state to acquire unsafeguarded special nuclear material or to use, develop, produce, stockpile, or otherwise acquire any nuclear explosive device, whether or not the goods or technology is specifically designed or modified for that purpose.

(2) PERSONS AGAINST WHICH SANCTIONS ARE TO BE IMPOSED.—Sanctions shall be imposed pursuant to paragraph (1) on—

(A) the foreign person or United States person with respect to which the President makes the determination described in that paragraph;

(B) any successor entity to that foreign person or United States person;

(C) any foreign person or United States person that is a parent or subsidiary of that person if that parent or subsidiary materially and with requisite knowledge assisted in the activities which were the basis of that determination; and

(D) any foreign person or United States person that is an affiliate of that person if that affiliate materially and with requisite knowledge assisted in the activities which were the basis of that determination and if that affiliate is controlled in fact by that foreign person.

(3) OTHER SANCTIONS AVAILABLE.—The sanctions which may be imposed for activities described in this subsection are in addition to any other sanction which may be imposed for the same activities under any other provision of law.

(4) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this subsection, the term “requisite knowledge” includes situations in which a person “knows”, as “knowing” is defined in section 104 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act of 1977 (15 U.S.C. 78dd-2) or has “reason to know” the effect of such person’s actions.

(b) CONSULTATION WITH AND ACTIONS BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENT OF JURISDICTION.—

(1) CONSULTATIONS.—If the President makes the determinations described in subsection (a)(1) with respect to a foreign person, the Congress urges the President to initiate consultations immediately with the government with primary jurisdiction over that foreign person with respect to the imposition of sanctions pursuant to this section.

(2) ACTIONS BY GOVERNMENT OF JURISDICTION.—In order to pursue such consultations with that government, the President may delay imposition of sanctions pursuant to this section for up to 90 days. Following these consultations, the President shall impose sanctions unless the President determines and certifies to the Congress that that government has taken specific and effective actions, including appropriate penalties, to terminate the involvement of the foreign person in the activities described in subsection (a)(1). The President may delay the imposition of sanctions for up to an additional 90 days if the President determines and certifies to the Congress that that government is in the process of taking the actions described in the previous sentence.

(3) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 90 days after making a determination under subsection (a)(1), the President shall submit to the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives a report on the status of consultations with the appropriate government under this subsection, and the basis for any determination under paragraph (2) of this subsection that such government has taken specific corrective actions.

(c) SANCTIONS.—

(1) DESCRIPTION OF SANCTIONS.—The sanctions to be imposed pursuant to subsection (a)(1) are, except as provided in paragraph (3) of this subsection, that the United States Government shall not procure, or enter into any contract for the procurement of, any goods or services from any person described in subsection (a)(2).

(2) DESCRIPTION OF SANCTIONS ON UNITED STATES PERSONS.—The United States Government shall not procure, or enter into any contract for the procurement of, any goods or services from the United States person or any parent, subsidiary, affiliate, or successor entity thereof, as described in subsection (a)(2).

(3) EXCEPTIONS.—The President shall not be required to apply or maintain sanctions under this section—

(A) in the case of procurement of defense articles or defense services—

(i) under existing contracts or subcontracts, including the exercise of options for production quantities to satisfy United States operational military requirements;

(ii) if the President determines that the person or other entity to which the sanctions would otherwise be applied is a sole source supplier of the defense articles or services, that the defense articles or services are essential, and that alternative sources are not readily or reasonably available; or

(iii) if the President determines that such articles or services are essential to the national security under defense coproduction agreements;

(B) to products or services provided under contracts entered into before the date on which the President publishes his intention to impose sanctions;

(C) to—

(i) spare parts which are essential to United States products or production,

(ii) component parts, but not finished products, essential to United States products or production, or

(iii) routine servicing and maintenance of products, to the extent that alternative sources are not readily or reasonably available;

(D) to information and technology essential to United States products or production; or

(E) to medical or other humanitarian items.

(d) TERMINATION OF SANCTIONS.—The sanctions imposed pursuant to this section shall apply for a period of at least 12 months following the imposition of sanctions and shall cease to apply thereafter only if the President determines and certifies to the Congress that—

(1) reliable information indicates that the foreign person or United States person with respect to which the determination was made under subsection (a)(1) has ceased to aid or abet any individual, group, or non-nuclear-weapon state in its efforts to acquire unsafeguarded special nuclear material or any nuclear explosive device, as described in that subsection; and

(2) the President has received reliable assurances from the foreign person or United States person, as the case may be, that such person will not, in the future, aid or abet any individual, group, or non-nuclear-weapon state in its efforts to acquire unsafeguarded special nuclear material or any nuclear explosive device, as described in subsection (a)(1).

(e) WAIVER.—

(1) CRITERION FOR WAIVER.—The President may waive the application of any sanction imposed on any person pursuant to this section, after the end of the 12-month period beginning on the date on which that sanction was imposed on that person, if the President determines and certifies to the Congress that the continued imposition of the sanction would have a serious adverse effect on vital United States interests.

(2) NOTIFICATION OF AND REPORT TO CONGRESS.—If the President decides to exercise the waiver authority provided in paragraph (1), the President shall so notify the Congress not less than 20 days before the waiver takes effect. Such notification shall include a report fully articulating the rationale and circumstances which led the President to exercise the waiver authority.

(f) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this section—

(1) the term "foreign person" means—

(A) an individual who is not a citizen of the United States or an alien admitted for permanent residence to the United States; or

(B) a corporation, partnership, or other entity which is created or organized under the laws of a foreign country or which has its principal place of business outside the United States; and

(2) the term "United States person" means—

(A) an individual who is a citizen of the United States or an alien admitted for permanent residence to the United States; or

(B) a corporation, partnership, or other entity which is not a foreign person.

SEC. 3. ROLE OF INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS.

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall instruct the United States executive director to each of the international financial institutions described in section 701(a) of the International Financial Institutions Act (22 U.S.C. 262d(a)) to use the voice and vote of the United States to oppose any direct or indirect use of the institution's funds to promote the acquisition of unsafeguarded special nuclear material or the development, stockpiling, or use of any nuclear explosive device by any non-nuclear-weapon state.

(b) DUTIES OF UNITED STATES EXECUTIVE DIRECTORS.—Section 701(b)(3) of the International Financial Institutions Act (22 U.S.C. 262d(b)(3)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) whether the recipient country—

"(A) is seeking to acquire unsafeguarded special nuclear material (as defined in section 11(6) of the Omnibus Nuclear Proliferation Control Act of 1992) or a nuclear explosive device (as defined in section 11(3) of that Act);

"(B) is not a State Party to the Treaty on Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons; or

"(C) has detonated a nuclear explosive device; and"

SEC. 4. AMENDMENTS TO THE INTERNATIONAL EMERGENCY ECONOMIC POWERS ACT AND THE FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1991.

(a) BASIS FOR DECLARATION OF NATIONAL EMERGENCY.—Section 202 of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act (50 U.S.C. 1701) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) For the purpose of this section, the term 'any unusual and extraordinary threat' includes any international event that the President determines may involve the detonation by a non-nuclear-weapon state of a nuclear explosive device (as defined in section 11(3) of the Omnibus Nuclear Proliferation Control Act of 1992) or an action or activity that substantially contributes to the likelihood of the proliferation or detonation of such devices, including the acquisition by a non-nuclear-weapon state of unsafeguarded special nuclear material (as defined in section 11(6) of that Act)."

(b) SANCTIONS ON FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS.—The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Improvement Act of 1991 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE VI—SANCTIONS ON FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

"SEC. 601. PRESIDENTIAL DETERMINATION.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The prohibitions in section 603 shall be imposed on a financial institution if the President determines that such financial institution, on or after the date of the enactment of this section, has materially and with requisite knowledge contributed, through provision of financing or other services, to the efforts by any individual, group, or non-nuclear-weapon state to acquire unsafeguarded special nuclear material or to use, develop, produce, stockpile, or otherwise acquire any nuclear explosive device as these standards and terms are defined and would be applied under section 2 of the Omnibus Nuclear Proliferation Control Act of 1992.

"(b) PRESIDENTIAL ORDER.—Whenever the President makes a determination under subsection (a) with respect to a financial institution, the President shall issue an order specifying a date within 180 days of such determination on which the prohibitions in section 603 shall begin to apply to such institution.

"SEC. 602. ADDITIONAL ENTITIES AGAINST WHICH SANCTIONS ARE TO BE IMPOSED.

"The prohibitions described in section 603 shall also be imposed, pursuant to section 601, on—

"(1) any successor entity to the financial institution with respect to which the President makes such determination;

"(2) any foreign person or United States person that is a parent or subsidiary of such financial institution if that parent or subsidiary materially and with requisite knowledge assisted in the activities which were the basis of such determination; and

"(3) any foreign person or United States person that is an affiliate of such financial institution if that affiliate materially and with requisite knowledge assisted in the activities which were the basis of such determination and if that affiliate is controlled in fact by such financial institution.

"SEC. 603. PROHIBITIONS.

"The following prohibitions shall apply to a financial institution subject to a determination described in section 601 and to related entities described in section 602:

"(1) BAN ON DEALINGS IN GOVERNMENT FINANCE.—

"(A) DESIGNATION AS PRIMARY DEALER.—Neither the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System nor the Federal Reserve Bank of New York may designate, or permit the continuation of any prior designation of, such financial institution as a primary dealer in United States Government debt instruments.

"(B) GOVERNMENT FUNDS.—Such financial institution shall not serve as agent of the United States Government or serve as depository for United States Government funds.

"(2) RESTRICTIONS ON OPERATIONS.—Such financial institution shall not, directly or indirectly—

"(A) commence any line of business in the United States in which it was not engaged as of the date of the determination; or

"(B) conduct business from any location in the United States at which it did not conduct business as of the date of the determination.

"SEC. 604. CONDITIONS AND TERMINATION OF SANCTIONS.

"The same requirements for consultation with the foreign government of jurisdiction, where appropriate, and for termination of sanctions shall apply under this title as are provided in subsections (b) and (d), respectively, of section 2 of the Omnibus Nuclear Proliferation Control Act of 1992.

"SEC. 605. WAIVER.

"The President may waive the imposition of any prohibition imposed on any financial institution or other person pursuant to section 601 or 602 if the President determines and certifies to the Congress that the imposition of such prohibition would have a serious adverse effect on the safety and soundness of the domestic or international financial system or on domestic or international payments systems.

"SEC. 606. DEFINITIONS.

"As used in this title—

"(1) the term 'financial institution' includes—

"(A) a depository institution, including a branch or agency of a foreign bank;

"(B) a securities firm, including a broker or dealer;

"(C) an insurance company, including an agency or underwriter;

"(D) any other company that provides financial services; or

"(E) any subsidiary thereof; and

"(2) the term 'requisite knowledge' includes situations in which a person 'knows', as 'knowing' is defined in section 104 of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act of 1977 (15 U.S.C. 78dd-2) or has 'reason to know' the effect of such person's actions."

SEC. 5. EXPORT-IMPORT BANK.

Section 2(b)(4) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 (12 U.S.C. 635(b)(4)) is amended by inserting after "device" the following: "(as defined in section 11(3) of the Omnibus Nuclear Proliferation Control Act of 1992), or that any country has willfully aided or abetted any such non-nuclear-weapon state (as defined in section 11(4) of that Act) to acquire a nuclear explosive device or to acquire unsafeguarded special nuclear material (as defined in section 11(6) of that Act)."

SEC. 6. ELIGIBILITY FOR ASSISTANCE.

(a) AMENDMENTS TO THE ARMS EXPORT CONTROL ACT.—(1) The Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C. 2751 et seq.) is amended—

(A) in section 3 of such act, by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

“(f) No sales or leases shall be made to any country that the President has determined is in material breach of its commitments to the United States under international treaties or agreements concerning the non-proliferation of nuclear explosive devices (as defined in section 11(3) of the Omnibus Nuclear Proliferation Control Act of 1992) and unsafeguarded special nuclear material.”; and

(B) in section 40(d) of such Act, by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: “For the purposes of this subsection, such acts shall include all activities that the Secretary determines willfully aid or abet the international proliferation of nuclear explosive devices to individuals or groups or willfully aid or abet an individual or groups in acquiring unsafeguarded special nuclear material (as defined in section 11(6) of that Act).”.

(2) Section 47 of such Act is amended—

(A) by striking out “and” at the end of paragraph (7);

(B) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (8) and inserting in lieu thereof “; and”;

(C) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

“(9) ‘nuclear explosive device’ has the same meaning given to that term by section 11(3) of the Omnibus Nuclear Proliferation Control Act of 1992.”.

(b) AMENDMENTS TO THE FOREIGN ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1961.—

(1) Section 670(a)(2) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2429a(a)(2)) is amended in the first sentence—

(A) by inserting “in any fiscal year” after “President”; and

(B) by inserting “during that fiscal year” after “certifies in writing”.

(2) Section 670 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2429a(a)) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

“(d) As used in this section, the term ‘nuclear explosive device’ has the same meaning given to that term by section 11(3) of the Omnibus Nuclear Proliferation Control Act of 1992.”.

(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, Presidential Determination No. 82-7 of February 10, 1982, made pursuant to section 670(a)(2) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, shall have no force or effect with respect to any grounds for the prohibition of assistance under section 670(a)(1) of such Act arising on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

(4) Section 620E(d) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2375(d)) is amended to read as follows:

“(d) The President may waive the prohibitions of section 669 of this act with respect to any grounds for the prohibition of assistance under that section arising before the date of enactment of the Omnibus Nuclear Proliferation Control Act of 1992 to provide assistance to Pakistan if he determines that to do so is in the national interest of the United States.”.

SEC. 7. ADDITIONAL AMENDMENTS TO THE FOREIGN ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1961.

(a) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—Section 670(b) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2429a(b)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) as paragraphs (3), (4), and (5), respectively;

(2) in paragraph (3)(A) (as so redesignated), by striking “paragraph (3)” and inserting “paragraph (4)”; and

(3) in paragraph (4) (as so redesignated) by striking “paragraph (2)” and inserting “paragraph (3)”.

(b) ADDITIONAL SANCTIONS.—Section 670(b)(1) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2429a) is amended to read as follows:

“(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraphs (3), (4), and (5), in the event that any country, after the date of enactment of the Omnibus Nuclear Proliferation Control Act of 1992—

“(A) transfers to a non-nuclear-weapon state—

“(i) a nuclear explosive device, or

“(ii) design information or components known by the transferor to be necessary for the recipient’s completion of a nuclear explosive device,

“(B) is a non-nuclear-weapon state—

“(i) receives a nuclear explosive device,

“(ii) receives design information or components necessary for the completion of a nuclear explosive device, or

“(iii) detonates a nuclear explosive device,

“(C) transfers to a non-nuclear-weapon state any design information or component (other than described in subparagraph (A)(ii)) which is determined by the President to be important to, and known by the transferring country to be intended by the recipient state for use in, the development or manufacture of any nuclear explosive device, or

“(D) is a non-nuclear-weapon state and has sought and received any design information or component (other than described in subparagraph (B)(ii)) which is determined by the President to be important to, and intended by the recipient state for use in, the development or manufacture of any nuclear explosive device, the President shall forthwith impose sanctions against that country, including, as a minimum, those sanctions specified in paragraph (2).

“(2) The sanctions referred to in paragraph (1) are as follows:

“(A) FOREIGN ASSISTANCE.—The United States Government shall terminate assistance to that country under this Act, except for urgent humanitarian assistance or food or other agricultural commodities.

“(B) ARMS SALES.—The United States Government shall terminate—

“(i) sales to that country under the Arms Export Control Act of any defense articles, defense services, or design and construction services, and “(ii) licenses for the export to that country of any item on the United States Munitions List.

“(C) ARMS SALES FINANCING.—The United States Government shall terminate all foreign military financing for that country under the Arms Export Control Act.

“(D) DENIAL OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

CREDIT OR OTHER FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.—The

United States Government shall deny to that country any credit, credit guarantees, or other financial assistance by any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States Government, including the Export-Import Bank of the United States, except that the sanction of this subparagraph shall not apply to any transaction subject to the reporting requirements of title V of the National Security Act of 1947 (relating to congressional oversight of intelligence activities).

“(E) MULTILATERAL DEVELOPMENT BANK ASSISTANCE.—The United States Government shall oppose, in accordance with section 701 of the International Financial Institutions Act (22 U.S.C. 262d), the extension of any loan or financial or technical assistance to that country by international financial institutions.

“(F) BANK LOANS.—The United States Government shall prohibit any United States bank from making any loan or providing any credit to the government of that country, except for loans or credits for the purpose of purchasing food or other agricultural commodities.

“(G) EXPORT PROHIBITION.—The authorities of section 6 of the Export Administration Act of 1979 shall be used to prohibit exports to that country of any goods and technology (excluding food and other agricultural commodities), except that such prohibition shall not apply to any transaction subject to the reporting requirements of title V of the National Security Act of 1947 (relating to congressional oversight of intelligence activities).”.

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 670(b) of such Act (22 U.S.C. 2429a(b)) is further amended—

(1) in paragraph (3)(A) (as redesignated)—

(A) by striking “furnish assistance which would otherwise be prohibited” and inserting in lieu thereof “delay the imposition of sanctions which would otherwise be required”; and

(B) by striking “termination of assistance” and inserting in lieu thereof “imposition of sanctions”;

(2) in paragraph (4) (as redesignated), by striking “termination of such assistance” and inserting in lieu thereof “imposition of such sanctions”;

(3) by redesignating paragraph (5) (as redesignated by subsection (a)) as paragraph (6); and

(4) by inserting after paragraph (4) (as redesignated) the following:

“(5) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the sanctions which are required to be imposed against a country under paragraph (1)(C) or (1)(D) shall not apply if the President determines and certifies in writing to the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives that the application of such sanctions against such country would have a serious adverse effect on vital United States interests. The President shall transmit with such certification a statement setting forth the specific reasons therefor.”.

SEC. 8. REWARD.

Section 36(a) of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 (22 U.S.C. 2708(a)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (1) through (3) as subparagraphs (A) through (C);

(2) by inserting “(1)” immediately after “(a)”; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following:

“(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘act of international terrorism’ includes any act substantially contributing to the acquisition of unsafeguarded special nuclear material (as defined in section 11(6) of the Omnibus Nuclear Proliferation Control Act of 1991) or any nuclear explosive device (as defined in section 11(3) of that Act) by an individual, group, or non-nuclear-weapon state, as defined in section 11(4) of that Act.”.

SEC. 9. REPORTS.

(a) CONTENT OF ACDA ANNUAL REPORT.—Section 52 of the Arms Control and Disarmament Act (22 U.S.C. 2592) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a) IN GENERAL.—" after "SEC. 52.";

(2) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (4);

(3) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (5) and inserting in lieu thereof "and";

(4) by adding at the end of paragraph (5) the following new paragraph:

"(6) a section of the report shall deal with any material noncompliance by foreign governments with their commitments to the United States with respect to the prevention of the spread of nuclear explosive devices by non-nuclear-weapon states or the acquisition by such states of unsafeguarded special nuclear material (as defined in section 11(6) of the Omnibus Nuclear Proliferation Control Act of 1992), including—

"(A) a net assessment of the aggregate military significance of all such violations;

"(B) a statement of the compliance policy of the United States with respect to violations of those commitments; and

"(C) what actions, if any, the President has taken or proposes to take to bring any nation committing such a violation into compliance with its commitments.";

(5) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(b) REPORTING CONSECUTIVE NONCOMPLIANCE.—If the President in consecutive reports submitted to Congress under this section reports that any designated nation is not in full compliance with its nonproliferation commitments to the United States, then the President shall include in the second such report an assessment of what actions are necessary to compensate for such violations."

(b) REPORTING ON DEMARCHES.—(1) It is the sense of Congress that the Department of State should, in the course of implementing its reporting responsibilities under section 602(c) of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act of 1978, include a summary of demarches that the United States has issued or received from foreign governments with respect to activities which are of significance from the proliferation standpoint.

(2) For purposes of this section, the term "demarche" means any official communication by one government to another, by written or oral means, intended by the originating government to express—

(A) a concern over a past, present, or possible future action or activity of the recipient government, or of a person within the jurisdiction of that government, contributing to the global spread of unsafeguarded special nuclear material or of nuclear explosive devices;

(B) a request for the recipient government to counter such action or activity; or

(C) both the concern and request described in subparagraphs (A) and (B).

SEC. 10. TECHNICAL CORRECTION.

Section 133(b) of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2160c) is amended by striking out "20 kilograms" and inserting in lieu thereof "5 kilograms".

SEC. 11. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "goods and technology" includes nuclear materials and equipment and sensitive nuclear technology (as defined in section 4 of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act of 1978), all export items designated by the President pursuant to section 309(c) of such Act, and all technical assistance requiring authorization under section 57b. of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954;

(2) the term "IAEA safeguards" means the safeguards set forth in an agreement between a country and the International Atomic Energy Agency, as authorized by Article III(A)(5) of the Statute of the International Atomic Energy Agency;

(3) the term "nuclear explosive device" means any device that is designed to produce an instantaneous release of an amount of nuclear energy from special nuclear material that is greater than the amount of energy that would be released from the detonation of one pound of trinitrotoluene (TNT);

(4) the term "non-nuclear-weapon state" means any country which is not a nuclear-weapon state, as defined by Article IX (3) of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, signed at Washington, London, and Moscow on July 1, 1968;

(5) the term "special nuclear material" has the meaning given to that term by section 11aa of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2014aa); and

(6) the term "unsafeguarded special nuclear material" means special nuclear material which is held in violation of IAEA safeguards or not subject to IAEA safeguards (excluding any quantity of material that could, if it were exported from the United States, be exported under a general license issued by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission).

MERCED RIVER WILD AND SCENIC RIVERS ACT

JOHNSTON AMENDMENT NO. 1776

Mr. FORD (for Mr. JOHNSTON) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 2431) to amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act by designating a segment of the Lower Merced River in California as a component of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System, as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert:

SECTION 1. DESIGNATION OF THE LOWER MERCED RIVER FOR INCLUSION IN THE WILD AND SCENIC RIVERS SYSTEM.

Section 3(a)(62) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 127(a)(62)) is hereby amended—

(1) by striking "The main stem" and inserting in lieu thereof, "(A) The main stem";

(2) by striking "paragraph" whenever it appears and inserting in lieu there "subparagraph"; and

(3) by adding the following new subparagraph at the end thereof:

"(B)(i) The main stem from a point 300 feet upstream of the confluence with Bear Creek downstream to the normal maximum operating pool water surface level of Lake McClure (elevation 867 feet mean sea level) consisting of approximately 8 miles, as generally depicted on the map entitled 'Merced Wild and Scenic River', dated April, 1990. The Secretary of the Interior shall administer the segment as recreational, from a point 300 feet upstream of the confluence with Bear Creek downstream to a point 300 feet west of the boundary of the Mountain King Mine, and as wild, from a point 300 feet west of the boundary of the Mountain King Mine to the normal maximum operating pool water surface level of Lake McClure. The requirements of subsection (b) of this section shall be fulfilled by the Secretary of the Interior through appropriate revisions to the Sierra Management Framework Plan for the Sierra Planning Area of the Folsom Resource Area, Bakersfield District, Bureau of Land Management. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this subparagraph.

"(ii) To the extent permitted by, and in a manner consistent with section 7 of this Act (16 U.S.C. 1278), and in accordance with other applicable law, the Secretary of the Interior shall permit the construction and operation of such pumping facilities and associated pipelines as identified in the Bureau of Land Management right-of-way application CACA 26084, filed by the Mariposa County Water Agency on November 7, 1989, and known as the 'Saxon Creek Project', to assure an adequate supply of water from the Merced River to Mariposa County.

"(C) With respect to the segments of the main stem of the Merced River and the South Fork Merced River designated as recreational or scenic pursuant to this paragraph or by the appropriate agency pursuant to subsection (b), the minerals to Federal lands which constitute the bed or bank or are situated within one-quarter mile of the bank are hereby withdrawn, subject to valid existing rights, from all forms of appropriation under the mining laws and from operation of the mineral leasing laws including, in both cases, amendments thereto."

SEC. 2. STUDY OF THE NORTH FORK OF THE MERCED RIVER.

Section 5(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act, as amended, (16 U.S.C. 1276(a)), is further amended by adding the following new paragraph at the end thereof:

"() NORTH FORK MERCED, CALIFORNIA.—The segment from its headwaters to its confluence with the Merced River, by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior."

SEC. 3. NEW EXCHEQUER PROJECT.

The designation of the river segments referred to in section 1 of this Act as components of the Wild and Scenic Rivers System shall not affect the continued operation and maintenance of the New Exchequer Project (Project No. 2179) as licensed by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (including flood control operations) or the Commission's authority to relicense such project within the project boundaries set forth in the license on the date of enactment of this Act: Provided, That if the Commission relicenses such project, the normal maximum operating pool water surface level authorized in the project's license shall not exceed elevation 867.0 feet mean sea level.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

PERMANENT SUBCOMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATIONS

Mr. NUNN, Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public that the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the Committee on Governmental Affairs, will hold hearings on "Efforts to Combat Fraud and Abuse in the Insurance Industry: Part 5."

These hearings will take place on Wednesday, April 29, and Thursday, April 30, 1992, at 9:30 a.m. in room 342 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building. For further information, please contact Eleanore Hill of the subcommittee staff at 224-3721.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. INOUE, Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Select Committee on Indian Affairs will be holding a markup on Friday, April 9, 1992, beginning at 9:30 a.m., in 485 Russell Senate Office Building on S. 1607, the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reserved Water Rights Settlement Act of 1991.

Those wishing additional information should contact the Select Committee on Indian Affairs at 224-2251.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

SUBCOMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH AND GENERAL LEGISLATION

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry Subcommittee on Agricultural Research and General Legislation be allowed to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, April 9, 1992, at 9:30 a.m., to hold a hearing on U.S.-EC Trade Dispute Over Meat Imports.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Governmental Affairs Committee be authorized to meet on Thursday, April 9, 1992, at 9:30 a.m., for a hearing on the subject: "Radiological Contamination in the United States."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE, SCIENCE AND TRANSPORTATION

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on April 9, 1992, at 9:30 a.m., on Global Change Research: Global Warming and the Biosphere.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON STRATEGIC FORCES AND NUCLEAR DETERRENCE

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Strategic Forces and Nuclear Deterrence of the Committee on Armed Services be authorized to meet on Thursday, April 9, 1992, at 2 p.m., in open session, to receive testimony on the allocation of fiscal year 1992 funds for the strategic defense initiative [SDI] and the fiscal year 1993 budget request for SDI, in review of the Missile Defense Act of 1991, the amended defense authorization request for fiscal year 1993, and the future years defense plan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, April 9, at 10 a.m. to hold a hearing on legislation authorizing assistance to the former Soviet Union.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON EUROPEAN AFFAIRS

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on European Affairs of the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, April 9, at 2 p.m. to hold a hearing on "U.S. Assistance to the New Independent States: Recommendations From U.S. Business and Agriculture."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs would like to request unanimous consent to hold a hearing on homeless veterans legislation and oversight on April 9, 1992, at 10 a.m. in room 418 of the Russell Building.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to hold a business meeting during the session of the Senate on Thursday, April 9, 1992 at 6 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TRIBUTE TO CHILD CARE PROVIDERS

• Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today, on Child Care Worthy Wages Day, to pay tribute to the child-care providers of America in recognition of their important service to the children of our Nation. This also is the Week of the Young Child—a time to reflect on what our children mean to us and what we want for them in life. So it is appropriate to honor today those individuals who are helping to shape our children's future.

The care and nurturing that children receive in their earliest years is a critical determinant of future health and success. As a nation, we are beginning to understand the important linkage between the investment we make in our youngest citizens and the future productivity of our Nation.

Ten million children in America are in partial or full-day child care. That number is expected to increase in the future. Thus, for a significant portion of the day, child-care providers have responsibility for the safety, health, development, and education of our future workers and leaders. These providers play a significant role in helping the Nation achieve its first national education goal of seeing that every child goes to school ready to learn by the year 2000.

Many parents are struggling financially to pay for quality child care. Those who work in the child-care profession often must face a financial struggle, as well. The average annual wage for a child-care provider is about $11,000, a 25-percent decrease in real wages from 15 years ago. Even the child-care workers who fulfill State or federally mandated education and training requirements earn between one-third and one-half of what comparably educated workers in other fields earn. Child-care providers generally do not receive health or retirement benefits. It is not surprising, then, that the turnover rate among child-care providers is now at 40 percent. And yet, continuity of quality staff and low staff turnover rates are significant components of quality child care.

There are so many child-care providers throughout the Nation who are dedicated to nurturing and teaching our children. They have touched many lives in a positive way by helping to provide a strong foundation to our youth. These are individuals who are serving our Nation, not in the traditional sense of the phrase, but in an equally important way. They are a critical part of any formula for investing in our youth.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to the child-care providers of America who are serving in spite of the profession's low wages and lack of benefits. Ten million of this country's youngest citizens and their families are counting on them. •

NOTICE OF DETERMINATION BY THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON ETHICS UNDER RULE 35, PARAGRAPH 4, PERMITTING ACCEPTANCE OF A GIFT OF EDUCATIONAL TRAVEL FROM A FOREIGN ORGANIZATION

• Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, it is required by paragraph 4 of rule 35 that I place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD notices of Senate employees who participate in programs, the principal objective of which is educational, sponsored by a foreign government or a foreign educational or charitable organization involving travel to a foreign country paid for by that foreign government or organization.

The select committee received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Robert N. Mottice, a member of the staff of Senator MACK, to participate in a program in Hong Kong, sponsored by the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, from April 12-18, 1992.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Mottice in this program, at the expense of the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Mark Ashby, a member of the staff of Senator BREAUX, to participate in a program in Hong Kong, sponsored by the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, from April 12-18, 1992.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Ashby in this program, at the expense of the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Karen Robb, a member of the staff of Senator DECONCINI, to participate in a program in Hong Kong, sponsored by the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, from April 12-18, 1992.

The committee has determined that participation by Ms. Robb in this program, at the expense of the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Charles Pickering, a member of the staff of Senator LOTT, to participate in a program in Hong Kong, sponsored by the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, from April 12-18, 1992.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Pickering in this program, at the expense of the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee received a request for a determination under rule 35 for John K. Veroneau, a member of the staff of Senator COHEN, to participate in a program in Hong Kong, sponsored by the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, from April 12-18, 1992.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Veroneau in this program, at the expense of the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Sam Spina, a member of the staff of Senator GORTON, to participate in a program in Hong Kong, sponsored by the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, from April 12-18, 1992.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Spina in this program, at the expense of the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Christopher McLean, a member of the staff of Senator EXON, to participate in a program in Hong Kong, sponsored by the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, from April 12-18, 1992.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. McLean in this program, at the expense of the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Phyllis G. Hallmon, a member of the staff of Senator SHELBY, to participate in a program in Hong Kong, sponsored by the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, from April 12-18, 1992.

The committee has determined that participation by Ms. Hallmon in this program, at the expense of the Hong Kong General Chamber of Commerce, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Susan Aheron Magill, a member of the staff of Senator WARNER, to participate in a program in Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, and Syria, sponsored by the United States-Arab Chamber of Commerce, the National Council on United States-Arab Relations, domestic organizations and the Saudi Chambers of Commerce and Industry, a private foreign organization, from April 16-26, 1992.

The committee has determined that participation by Ms. Magill in this program, at the expense of the United States-Arab Chamber of Commerce, the National Council on United States-Arab Relations, and the Saudi Chambers of Commerce and Industry is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Danielle M. Pletka, a member of the staff of Senator HELMS, to participate in a program in the Middle East, sponsored by the United States-Arab Chambers of Commerce, the National Council on United States-Arab Relations, and the Council of Saudi Chambers of Commerce from April 16-26, 1992.

The committee has determined that participation by Ms. Pletka in this program, at the expense of the National Council on United States-Arab Relations and the Council of Saudi Chambers of Commerce, is in the interest of the Senate and the United States.●

BUDGET SCOREKEEPING REPORT

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate the budget scorekeeping report prepared by the Congressional Budget Office under section 308(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended. This report serves as the scorekeeping report for the purposes of section 605(b) and section 311 of the Budget Act.

This report shows that current level spending exceeds the budget resolution by $6.5 billion in budget authority and by $6.1 billion in outlays. Current level is $2.9 billion above the revenue floor in 1992 and $0.7 billion below the revenue floor over the 5 years, 1992-96. Since my last report, the Congress has cleared and the President has signed a joint resolution making further continuing appropriations for fiscal year 1992 (Public Law 102-266), changing the current level estimates of budget authority and outlays.

The current estimate of the deficit for purposes of calculating the maximum deficit amount is $354.2 billion, $3 billion above the maximum deficit amount for 1992 of $351.2 billion.

The report follows:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, April 7, 1992.

Hon. JIM SASSER,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The attached report shows the effects of Congressional action on the budget for fiscal year 1992 and is current through April 23, 1992. The estimates of budget authority, outlays, and revenues are consistent with the technical and economic assumptions of the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget (H. Con. Res. 121). This report is submitted under Section 308(b) and in aid of Section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended, and meets the requirements for Senate scorekeeping of Section 5 of S. Con. Res. 32, the 1986 First Concurrent Resolution on the Budget.

Since my last report, dated March 31, 1992, the Congress has cleared and the President has signed a joint resolution making further continuing appropriations for fiscal year 1992 (P.L. 102-266), changing the current level estimates of budget authority and outlays. This bill provides full year funding for foreign aid programs previously funded in P.L. 102-145 that expired March 31, 1992, and emergency funding for the Small Business Administration disaster loans program.

Sincerely,
ROBERT D. REISCHAUER,
Director.

AUDIT OF CONTRACTOR ACCOUNTING PRACTICE CHANGES FOR C-17 ENGINEERING COSTS

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, several weeks ago I placed in the RECORD the sanitized version of Department of Defense Office of Inspector General's report: "Audit of Contractor Accounting Practice Changes for C-17 Engineering Costs."

I say sanitized, because, on the cover of the report, the following appears: "This special version of the report has been revised to omit contractor sensitive data." At the time, I ventured the guess that the omissions covered more than company secrets. Press reports indicated that the real matter being protected by classification was a conscious Air Force plan to bail out financially troubled McDonnell Douglas.

Let me say now, having had an opportunity to review a Defense Week article entitled "Excerpts From Censored Report on C-17 Program," that my deepest suspicions have been confirmed. It is not contractor sensitive data that was excised, it was details on the manipulation of the acquisition system by the Air Force to provide McDonnell Douglas with extraordinary financial support.

I ask that this story, as well as "DOD Weighed 'Extraordinary Relief' for McDonnell" and "C-17 Flying Again After More Leaks Plugged" from Defense Week and "Pentagon To Study Contractors' Finances Amid Doubts of Defense Industry's Health," and "Pentagon Set Bailout Plan for McDonnell" from the Wall Street Journal, be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

[From Defense Week, Apr. 6, 1992]

EXCERPTS FROM CENSORED REPORT ON C-17 PROGRAM

The following are the uncensored portions of the Feb. 13 IG report, which was obtained by Defense Week. The report was provided by a government source who felt the entire story behind the audit should be made public.

The sentences in boldface were deleted in the public version because they were considered to be "contractor confidential or proprietary."

"Decisions Affecting Contract Financing:"
The contractor's request and the Air Force's subsequent approval to reallocate C-17 development costs to production appeared to be part of an over-all plan to provide additional financing to McDonnell Douglas Corp., of which Douglas Aircraft Co. is a part. This plan was documented in a briefing on the results of a review of the McDonnell Douglas Corporation contract performance problems, financial condition, and actions that could be taken to fix these problems.

Three options could be implemented within DOD and three options required external approval. The internal DOD options included reallocation of cost, unusual progress payments and advance payment. The external DOD options included funds transferred and reprogramming to increase available contract funding and extraordinary financial relief under public law 85-804. Many of the options were pursued in some form.

"Program Payment Financing:"
In addition to the accounting practice change, other actions were taken that inappropriately provided financing to the contractor. We found particularly disturbing an Oct. 1, 1990 memorandum by the Government Principal Administrative Contracting Officer at Douglas directing the payment of the September progress payment [for $81 million], PPR No. 97. The memorandum indicated that senior Air Force officials, based on information from the Chairman of the Board and CEO of McDonnell Douglas, had stressed the need for approval of the progress payment based on urgent and pressing financial need at McDonnell Douglas and potential adverse impact to the C-17 program.

Page 18

We concluded that the basis of contractor financial need was used to unjustifiably authorize the payment for PPR No. 97 without instituting the loss ratio. The application of the loss ratio did not occur with this or prior progress payments although the FAR [Federal Acquisition Regulation] requires immediate unilateral action in circumstances such as overpayments or unsatisfactory contractor performance.

Page 19

In this case, the provisions of the FAR were not properly applied, resulting in additional contracting financing.

The FAR also states that the contracting officer shall avoid any undue risk of monetary loss to the government through contract financing. We believe that concern over contractor financial need motivated approval of the progress payment without proper approval consideration of the contract loss position. We strongly disagree that the government should have proceeded with production related progress payments based on a contractor EAC [Estimate At Completion] that was seriously in doubt, especially given that the contractor's financial condition had already been determined to be weak.

DOD WEIGHED "EXTRAORDINARY RELIEF" FOR MCDONNELL

(By Tony Capaccio and Eric Rosenberg)

The Air Force harbored such doubt about the No. 1 defense contractor's ability to complete the C-17 transport contract that it considered invoking a seldom used federal law to rescue the company from desperate financial straits in 1990 and early 1991.

The provision in question is Public Law 85-804. Known in legal circles as the so-called "extraordinary contractual relief law," it was used in its most celebrated applications to bail out Lockheed Corp. in 1971 with $623 million and three major shipbuilders in 1978 with $564 million.

Invoking 85-804 as a final resort was one of six options developed by a multi-agency financial review team. The results were provided to the Pentagon in early October 1990 as part of an overview of the C-17 and the health of McDonnell Douglas Corp., according to unpublicized findings in a Feb. 13 Inspector General report on the C-17.

Mention of 85-804 was excised by the Pentagon from the IG's publicly released version of the report. In the many news stories that have arisen in recent weeks, none has disclosed that the bailout law was under consideration. Defense Week obtained the uncensored IG report, which was stamped "contractor confidential."

"The internal DOD options included reallocation of cost, unusual progress payments and advance payment," said a previously confidential section of the report. "The external DOD options included funds transferred and reprogramming to increase available contract funding and extraordinary financial relief under Public Law 85-804. Many of the options were pursued in some form."

According to a Pentagon statement to Defense Week, the Air Force pursued two of the options. The first was an uncontroversial reprogram of funds for the C-17.

The second was an accounting change that shifted engineering costs from development to production. This prematurely and—the IG report said—improperly freed up $148 million. The reallocation was reversed in November "based on a detailed review of the nature of the costs," the Pentagon said. "Neither the original reallocation nor its subsequent reversal resulted in increased costs to the government."

The Pentagon statement downplayed the significance of the bailout options. They "reflected an action that could be taken on the C-17 contract in the event that circumstances on the contract justified action."

Addressing 85-804, the statement said the review team did not propose that any specific relief be granted under the act. "Consideration never went beyond the 'on-paper' stage. Its use was presented strictly as a hypothetical. Senior levels of the DoD did not pursue this during the September-October 1990 time frame."

Since McDonnell Douglas never requested that the law be invoked, "this was not pursued," the Pentagon said. Company spokesman Michael Burch echoed this sentiment. "These were options the Pentagon came up with on their own."

The Pentagon statement notwithstanding, that the bailout law was even considered underscores what had been alluded to in previous congressional hearings: Pentagon officials feared the aerospace giant was mired in such terrible financial trouble it might go belly up.

The Air Force's consideration of 85-804 also is a significant bit of data in a mosaic of quiet, behind-the-scenes actions—only now coming to light—to help its biggest contractor through a rough and tumble period.

A snapshot of the firm's financial condition in late 1990 and early 1991 shows why jittery Pentagon officials were weighing an extraordinary relief package as the firm was under attack on all fronts.

Socked with poor cash flow, it was teetering under record breaking debt, with nearly $2 billion in projected overruns on military jet programs.

During the third quarter of 1990, McDonnell Douglas' cash flow hit the negative $35 million mark. Compounding the squeeze was slow commercial sales and the prospect of absorbing huge overruns—running upwards of $900 million on the C-17 transport and approximately $100 million on the T-45 trainer. To top it all off, $500 million owed the IRS in deferred taxes was coming due.

In addition, 1991 didn't start off promising either as debt topped record levels and was nearly equal to equity. The Navy canceled the A-12 bomber because of projected overruns of over $1 billion, for which its partner, the General Dynamics Corp., took a total writedown of $724 million by 1991.

McDonnell, on the other hand, only reported a 1990 loss of $350 million. According to some financial analysts, McDonnell would have been close to the ceiling on loan agreements with creditors if it had taken an equal writedown.

Some financial analysts said the firm has turned the corner because of a major reorganization and cost-cutting effort. One crucial turnaround occurred by the end of last year when the firm cut debt from a high of $3.3 billion to $2.3 billion, the lowest level since 1989.

George Shapiro, an analyst with Salomon Brothers in New York, wrote in an assessment of the firm's 1991 public 10K filing that debt likely will be further reduced by $80 million this year as cash flow probably improves by December.

Still, the company isn't out of the woods yet. "With the weak cash flow in the first half and increased concern about the weakening outlook for MD80 deliveries, we think the stock will remain relatively weak," Shapiro wrote.

The Pentagon in its statement was upbeat about the company's improvement: "At this time, we do not question McDonnell Douglas's ability to perform on DoD contracts."

C-17 FLYING AGAIN AFTER MORE LEAKS PLUGGED

The C-17 transport resumed flights tests last Thursday after 24 days of repairs to mend a third round of fuel leaks, the Air Force said last week.

Air Force officials attribute the leaks to the aftermath of much inefficient, out-of-position assembly work performed on the first C-17 aircraft, the T-1 test model, at the Douglas Aircraft Co., Long Beach, Calif., plant.

The latest leaks had sprung up despite a complicated resealing operation within T-1's wings. The plane thus far has been down 76 days for fuel leak repairs since its flight tests started in mid-September.

Gen. Hansford Johnson, commander of the U.S. Transportation Command, failed to mention the leak problem during overly upbeat March 13 testimony before the Senate Armed Services Committee.

"The aircraft is flying well," said Johnson three days after the C-17 had been grounded for the third time. "The test flights are going well. . . . The Douglas Aircraft Co. seems to have its problems behind it."

When asked to square Johnson's statements with the down time associated with the fuel leaks, a TRANSCOM spokesman said: "Fuel leaks are not uncommon on large aircraft at this stage of maturity. The C-17 flight test program is still well ahead of that of any large military aircraft. From a customer's point of view MAC [Military Airlift Command] is satisfied that the C-17's fuel leaks are not a serious problem."

PENTAGON TO STUDY CONTRACTORS' FINANCES AMID DOUBTS OF DEFENSE INDUSTRY'S HEALTH

(By Andy Pasztor)

WASHINGTON.—Concerns about the health of the nation's defense industry have prompted the Pentagon to launch unprecedented, high-level reviews of the financial condition of its top 20 contractors.

The extensive financial assessments, which haven't yet been announced, are designed to assess overall cash flow, profitability, and long-term management goals of the companies—including the contribution of their non-defense businesses.

The initiative partly reflects Pentagon worries about the anticipated industry shakeout expected from shrinking defense budgets. But the financial analyses also are a reaction to severe cash-flow problems that began in 1990 at McDonnell Douglas Corp. They coincide with a report by the Defense Department's inspector general contending that the Pentagon devised a secret plan to provide hundreds of millions of dollars in unusual payments and other financial relief to McDonnell, the Pentagon's largest contractor.

The strongly worded inspector general's report, some details of which were reported first by the Los Angeles Times, concludes that Pentagon officials two years ago conceived a plan to help bail out McDonnell Douglas. The February report, portions of which remain confidential, says the officials then "pursued in some form" various options to funnel extraordinary assistance to the company's beleaguered C-17 transport. The plan was designed to "fix" the company's cash-flow problems by relying on inflated progress payments, accounting changes and other methods the inspector general now believes resulted in "significant noncompliance" with federal laws and contracting regulations.

Since last summer, congressional investigators have alleged that large improper payments were booked on the C-17 program. Pentagon auditors months ago acknowledged that McDonnell Douglas received a $220 million windfall from premature progress payments and unwarranted shifting of costs between development and production accounts.

But the latest inspector general's report—and documents collected recently by congressional investigators—indicates that the bailout effort was more extensive than previously thought and that pressure from the company was fierce. At one point, McDonnell Douglas Chairman John McDonnell even threatened to halt work on the C-17, one of the Pentagon's most important and widely-supported projects.

During one conversation in late 1990, according to a person familiar with the issue, Mr. McDonnell warned senior Pentagon acquisition officials that the contractor "might be forced to stop work" altogether on the C-17 unless the government lifted its suspension on progress payments and complied with the contractor's demand for immediate payment.

The documents show that Air Force brass a few days later leaned on contracting officials to resume payments "in light of the urgent and pressing financing need" of the contractor.

In December 1990, when the Air Force accepted the first C-17, it described the aircraft's condition as "assembly complete." But congressional investigators contend that the aircraft was only about 81% finished and didn't even have all of its internal fuel system installed.

House Government Operations Committee Chairman John Conyers (D., Mich.) said lawmakers are determined to "find out who in the Department of Defense conceived, ordered and executed" the bailout plan. "They have got to make a clean breast of this misadventure."

Senior Pentagon officials have maintained that the company didn't benefit from any bailout. Just last month, Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams insisted that any improper payments resulted entirely from accounting errors.

McDonnell Douglas previously acknowledged asking for an extraordinary $1 billion advance on major defense contracts. But Chief Financial Officer Herbert Lanese yesterday said the company "got no special help"—either in advance payments or other forms. Mr. Lanese said all of the payments and accounting changes involving the C-17 were legitimate and approved by government auditors.

Army Lt. Gen. Charles Henry, who is supervising the financial studies of the industry, confirmed in a recent interview that McDonnell Douglas was in such poor financial shape in mid-1990 that senior Pentagon officials effectively assumed the role of consultants to help the giant contractor draft a rescue plan. By identifying corporatewide problem areas—including an inability to compute overhead on defense contracts properly, poor inventory controls and various production deficiencies—Pentagon troubleshooters prodded company managers to put in place a long-term plan "that will make them absolutely competitive" in both defense and commercial work, Gen. Henry said.

Even McDonnell Douglas's harshest critics concede that the company, after huddling with high-level delegations from the Pentagon in 1990 and 1991, took a variety of cost-cutting steps, including significant layoffs and other overhead reductions.

Now, the Pentagon is setting up formal procedures for conducting detailed financial analyses of other contractors that may be in trouble, and for conferring with management on recommended solutions.

Financial reviews of the overall condition of the top defense contractors will help determine future Pentagon contract awards, according to Gen. Henry. "I will be able to pick up the telephone," he said, and for the first time obtain independent, timely assessments of the overall "corporate health" of the Pentagon's leading suppliers.

Final details of the review procedures are being worked out. The Pentagon intends to announce the effort after it has notified the affected companies of its plans.

PENTAGON SET BAILOUT PLAN FOR MCDONNELL

(By Andy Pasztor)

WASHINGTON.—Shortly after providing McDonnell Douglas Corp. unusual financial assistance on the C-17 transport plane in late 1990, the Pentagon authorized a second, more ambitious bailout plan involving the company's other major programs.

The later plan, which hasn't been disclosed until now, was approved by Deputy Defense Secretary Donald Atwood in the winter of 1991, as the company's ability to borrow additional funds dried up, according to a government official.

Concerns about the giant contractor's worsening cash squeeze, these persons said, prompted Mr. Atwood to approve an open-ended plan calling for extraordinarily large progress payments on various weapons programs. The number of contracts and the total amount of assistance would depend on McDonnell Douglas's future cash requirements.

The broader plan never kicked into action. By the time Mr. Atwood gave the green light, government officials said, McDonnell Douglas was in the midst of a corporate-wide campaign to reduce payroll and other costs. That effort improved the company's overall cash position.

The company acknowledged that such a sweeping financial aid package was discussed, and in an interview yesterday, Pentagon spokesman Pete Williams confirmed that the government "explored making higher-than-normal progress payments" on various McDonnell Douglas programs. But Mr. Williams maintained that "what we considered doing was not a bailout" because no advance payments were contemplated and the company would have been required to reduce prices on the affected contracts. During a press briefing earlier in the day, Mr. Williams also insisted that efforts to help the C-17 didn't amount to a bailout plan.

The Defense Department's inspector general has concluded that Pentagon officials tried to "fix" the company's cash problems by paying inflated progress payments and mingling development and production accounts for the C-17. The office is expected soon to release a report criticizing the Air Force for declaring the first C-17 "assembly complete" in December 1990 and paying the company accordingly.

Meanwhile, congressional investigators have collected new information showing a pattern of lax enforcement of C-17 contract requirements by the military over the years. The Air Force, according to one internal Pentagon document, penalized McDonnell Douglas only $2,700 for using in the plane's main landing gear "understrength" bearings that "must be replaced after 10 landings if certain loads are exceeded." The same undated document indicates that the Air Force withheld only $2,000 in payments to the contractor after two sections of the C-17's wings failed to meet structural strength requirements.

Other documents being scrutinized by congressional committees and the Pentagon's inspector general are filled with references to dozens of "contract deficiencies" related to the C-17's performance, durability and safety. A year ago, for example, before the first four-engine transport began test flights, Air Force contracting officials said that certain parts failed to meet Air Force standards, thrust reversers failed to perform properly in ground tests, simulations showed that the C-17 "cannot meet cross-wind landing requirements," and some engine parts weren't "tested to the required shock and vibration levels."

Air Force officials had no comment, but in the past they have said the plane is performing better than expected in flight tests.

The previously undisclosed 1991 bailout plan, more than anything else the Pentagon has done to help McDonnell Douglas, is likely to create political headaches for the Bush administration.

The fact that the plan was approved by Mr. Atwood, the Defense Department's second-ranking official, indicates the high level of Pentagon concern about the condition of McDonnell, the Pentagon's largest contractor, a year ago. Officials said they believed the plan was discussed with Defense Secretary Dick Cheney.

The broader bailout plan—whose existence was confirmed in the past few days by several persons familiar with the original discussions—appears to go against the administration's oft-stated public rejection of any federal "industrial policy" to pick corporate winners and losers. Congressional critics of the Pentagon, furious that they weren't consulted about the issue, are complaining that the Pentagon sidestepped the law and violated its own regulations by rushing to the aid of the No. 1 weapons maker.

Congressional committees previously disclosed that McDonnell Douglas Chairman John McDonnell in January 1991 asked for as much as $1 billion in advance payments on nine projects, including the C-17. Air Force efforts to offer the company limited help by focusing on the C-17 were reported first by Defense Week, an industry newsletter, and then detailed by the Los Angeles Times earlier this week.

But now, congressional investigators are likely to focus on the role of Secretary Cheney, Mr. Atwood and their top aides in devising a bailout plan potentially affecting many other programs. In the broader plan, officials said, Mr. Atwood authorized as much as 100% progress payments on the F-15, F/A-18 and several other major McDonnell Douglas contracts. Defense firms typically get about 85% in progress payments, and the government pays the balance when the work is completed. The change could have meant hundreds of millions of dollars in accelerated payments for McDonnell Douglas.

Herbert Lanese, the company's chief financial officer, confirmed in an interview Monday that accelerated progress payments were discussed with the Pentagon as a potential "backstop" at the height of the company's credit crunch. McDonnell Douglas, according to Mr. Lanese, told Pentagon officials: "We're not asking for it, but we're asking for you to consider it." McDonnell Douglas withdrew its request for financial help in early April 1991, according to both company and government officials.●

COSPONSORSHIP OF S. 2489, THE NATIONAL QUALITY COMMIT-MENT AWARD ACT OF 1992

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to add my name as a cosponsor of S. 2489, the National Quality Commitment Award Act of 1992, which was recently introduced by Senator DOMENICI.

The National Quality Commitment Award Act is a bill to promote and recognize the teaching of quality programs at our Nation's institutes of higher education. This is an important goal and one I strongly support. U.S. industry has recognized that the adoption of quality programs among the Nation's manufacturing and service enterprises is a critical component of future competitiveness. Many of America's best companies today are in the process of adopting quality programs. The Nation's very best companies have systems in place, and the success of these companies speaks for the importance of the effort. The Nation's highest award for quality, the Malcolm Baldrige Quality Award, has gained steadily in prominence since it was established, and today is the standard by which private sector quality programs are judged.

More and more companies are developing quality programs and looking to the Baldrige Award for guidance. It is apparent that, if this is to continue, future corporate engineers and managers need a solid grounding in the principles of quality management. However, a gap exists today between the needs of industry and the skills provided in our Nation's institutes of higher education. We need to do a better job of providing training to our college students in quality management, including important areas such as statistical process control, value analyses, and continuous process improvement. This legislation is designed to do just that.

Mr. President, I have one reservation about this bill as introduced. S. 2489 would provide cash awards to institutions deserving of recognition. My concern is that the Baldrige Award, the Nation's highest quality award, does not offer cash awards to the winners. As I understand it, this was a conscious decision by the drafters of the award program, based on a concept that is central the quality programs: quality pays for itself. While I strongly support the intention to provide national recognition to the best quality education programs in the country, I have reservations about the appropriateness of cash awards. I believe that my concern will be thoroughly investigated by the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Technology, and I am ready to stand by and support whatever the committee feels is appropriate in this instance.●

WILMINGTON NATIVE VAL WHIT-ING, MEMBER OF NCAA CHAM-PION WOMEN'S BASKETBALL TEAM

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize the tremendous achievements of one young woman from my home State of Delaware, Miss

Val Whiting. This past weekend, Val played in her third NCAA women's basketball championship. Val, who plays center, helped carry her Stanford University teammates to victory. This young woman gave a performance that would make Michael Jordan proud.

For anyone who may have missed the chance to see one of the Nation's top women athletes clinch her second NCAA title in her third NCAA tournament, I'd like to briefly review the statistics. Val scored 16 points shooting 4 for 10 from the field and 8 for 9 from the free-throw line while pulling down 13 rebounds. This all came 1 day after a 28-point performance against the University of Virginia.

In Delaware, we have long been aware of this young woman's talent. She is a former all-State player and Ursuline Academy standout. Now, once again in her junior year, she is in the national spotlight, and in my opinion, Mr. President, no one could be more deserving. Congratulations to all the Stanford Cardinals, and especially Delaware's favorite, Val Whiting.●

SOCIETY OF CRITICAL CARE MEDICINE

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, as discussion on health care reform takes place here in the Senate and around the country, I would like to just take a minute to note that the Society of Critical Care Medicine recently came to Washington, DC, to hold its first legislative conference.

The Society of Critical Care Medicine, and its president, Frank B. Cerra, M.D. from the State of Minnesota, held its first meeting on February 2-4, 1992. On February 3, 1992 I was honored to deliver a keynote address on health care policy reform.

This 6,000-member society of health care professionals coordinates and delivers critical care services, usually in intensive care units, to patients with life-threatening illnesses following trauma, infection, or the occurrence of a complication after surgery. These problems affect one in five American families; and thanks to this dedicated group of physicians, over 95 percent of the patients survive.

The members of this society are interested in maintaining and preserving a coordinated care delivery system. Their interest and enthusiasm is most welcomed. I strongly encourage them to continue to provide information on critical care needs and to stay involved in the legislative process.●

WESTCHESTER COUNTY WOMAN'S REPUBLICAN CLUB "WOMAN OF THE YEAR"

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure that I rise today to congratulate one of my constituents, Edna M. Sullivan, who is being recognized by the Westchester County Women's Republican Club as their "Woman of the Year."

Mrs. Sullivan has been an active Republican for over 20 years and has worked as manager of the office of her son, Assemblyman Peter M. Sullivan, for the past 15 years. She is a member of the White Plains Republican Club and is an invaluable member of the Westchester County Women's Republican Club, where she is leaned upon heavily for her expertise.

Edna's political energies are paralleled only by her tremendous dedication to the local community. She is an original founder of the Westchester Homemakers Council, serving as vice president and assisting with the council's agenda. She was also vice president of the Armonk Homemakers Community Unit.

Mrs. Sullivan was also a member of the original Home Bureau, which eventually became the Westchester Cooperative Extension. She was a member of the board of directors of COED, an acronym for Cooperative Opportunity for the Economically Disadvantaged. Through the COED Program, she helped develop exhibits for the annual Afro-American Cultural Society fairs. A former director of the White Plains Woman's Club, her impressive list of community involvement also includes volunteer work with the PTA and YWCA.

The many contributions that Mrs. Sullivan has made to New York are nothing short of inspiring. Edna, I congratulate you for this great honor and wish to thank you for your enthusiasm in making the State of New York a better place to be. I wish you more successes in all of your future endeavors.●

THE PLIGHT OF SYRIAN JEWS

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, recently I received a letter from the members of the Des Moines Jewish Community Relations Council. This letter drew my attention to a very important time in the Jewish calendar. Last month, the holiday of Purim was observed, and we are coming upon the holiday of Passover. Purim marks an occasion when the very existence of the Jewish people was threatened. And Passover recalls the redemption of the Jewish people from slavery. In the spirit of these holidays, I want to voice my concern for the flagrant human rights violations of Syria, particularly the hostage-like state of the 4,000 members of the Jewish community in Syria.

For many years, Jews have been prohibited from leaving Syria without posting a substantial monetary deposit and leaving behind family members as assurance for their return. In addition to the prohibitions which severely restrict their emigration and travel abroad, Syrian Jews have limited mobility inside Syria and must live in concentrated areas, much like ghettos. Jews who have sought to leave the country, despite these restrictions, have been subject to extreme reprisals. In 1974, four young Jewish women were brutally murdered while trying to escape from Syria. Their mutilated bodies were dumped outside their family's homes in Damascus. Two Jewish brothers, Eli and Selim Swed, who were tortured and held in isolation without charge from November 1987 to April 1990, were only recently charged with visiting Israel. On June 11, 1991, in closed proceedings and without legal counsel they were sentenced to an additional 3 years in prison. These are not isolated acts of repression against the Syrian Jewish community.

The Syrian secret police engage in 24-hour-a-day surveillance of the Jewish quarter and keep a file on every Jewish person, closely monitoring all contacts and contacts between Jews and foreigners. Mail is read and phones are tapped. Furthermore, Syrian Jews enjoy only limited employment and educational opportunities. Similar to the culturally repressive practices inherent in the former so-called Bantu educational system in South Africa, instruction in Hebrew, as a language, oral or written, is absolutely prohibited.

At this historic time when the United States has entered into dialog with President Assad of Syria about peace in the Middle East, I call on President Assad to show Syria's good faith in the family of peaceful nations by the full observance of human rights for Syrian Jews. The first step toward peace by all parties in the Middle East should be the observance of human rights.●

IN RECOGNITION OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA EDISON AND KNOTT'S BERRY FARM

● Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of the partnership formed by Southern California Edison and Knott's Berry Farm to provide a unique educational attraction which will encourage and motivate young future inventors.

This attraction, the Thomas A. Edison Inventors Workshop, is part of a distinctive student educational outreach program called Adventures in Education which was established by Knott's Berry Farm. Southern California Edison, also a strong corporate leader in support of education, designed and built the attraction for the Camp Snoopy theme area using volunteer employees and retirees.

This attraction was designed to provide millions of visitors to Knott's Berry Farm the opportunity to learn about electricity, magnetism, electrical safety, and energy conservation in a fun and exciting manner. This exhibit showcases artifacts and inventions used by Thomas A. Edison in his experiments, and is the only exhibit in the State of California to have such historic memorabilia on public display.

Education should be the No. 1 priority of this Nation because the youth of today are America's future leaders. Without quality educational programs, such as the Thomas A. Edison Inventors Workshop, our youth will not thoroughly understand and, therefore, succeed. I ask my colleagues to join me in extending highest commendations to both Southern California Edison and Knott's Berry Farm for their efforts to encourage and educate our most precious resource—the children of America.●

SPRING AND MOTORCYCLING

● Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, as the weather continues to warm, over 30,000 registered Kentucky motorcyclists will take to our roads and highways. As every motorcycle enthusiast knows, spring marks the beginning of a new riding season.

Although I am not a motorcyclist myself, several members of my staff participate in this sport. On more than one occasion, I have heard them remark that too few automobile drivers seem to notice the increased number of motorcyclists on the road. On more than one occasion, I have heard of their close calls with inattentive car drivers.

The facts appear to bolster my staff's comments and close calls. A study by the University of Southern California found that three-quarters of the motorcycle accidents examined involved a motorcycle colliding with another vehicle. It is extremely disturbing that in two-thirds of these accidents, the other vehicle violated the motorcyclists' right of way.

As I have done in the past, I come to the floor today to offer two suggestions to make the roads safer for everyone. The first is for automobile and truck drivers: Please be alert for motorcyclists. Check your mirrors and look over your shoulder before changing lanes. When you make a left turn, be sure no motorcyclists are in oncoming traffic.

My second suggestion is for the benefit of motorcyclists: Remember to think safety. Dress appropriately for the road and anticipate the potential hazards of traffic. Above all, ride sober—alcohol and motorcycling is a deadly mixture.

Mr. President, let us work together to make this a safe riding season for everyone.●

CHILD CARE WORTHY WAGES DAY

● Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am proud to be a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 274 to declare April 9 Child Care Worthy Wages Day. Last year, child care staff in Seattle marched for better wages and more respect for their important work. They are marching again today, again with the support of parents, because they still do not receive the compensation and respect they deserve.

The work of child care staff is difficult. It is not babysitting. It is not simple or intuitive. Most early childhood staff have degrees in early childhood education or related disciplines. Despite their accomplishments, they lack professional recognition and accessible continuing education.

I have introduced legislation that will enable States to create comprehensive, cohesive systems of specialized pre-service and in-service training for early childhood staff that will be matched to a career ladder. This legislation is now part of the Senate's higher education reauthorization bill.

Now more than ever we must ensure high quality child care in settings ranging from family care and center-based care to school-based care. This will help us meet the first national education goal: School readiness for all American children. The ability to reach this goal depends on dedicated, well-educated, and well-trained early childhood staff.

We do not presently offer any incentives, monetary or otherwise, for individuals to enter the field of early childhood care or to stay in the profession. Let us consider a few statistics. Over 10 million children are in partial or full day care today, and the numbers are expected to increase. Yet the people who care for children, our Nation's most important resource for the future, earn an average of $11,000 a year for full-time, specialized work. That is roughly the poverty level for a family of two. It is a national shame. As a result, the turnover rate among staff is nearly 41 percent.

We must find ways to boost child care wages higher and at the same time make child care affordable for families. I fully support the child care and development block grant, but I believe more needs to be done by the private sector as well to ensure accessible and high quality child care for all children and professional respect and compensation for individuals who care for them.●

TRIBUTE TO CAL TURNER, JR.

● Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize an outstanding Kentucky businessman, Cal Turner, Jr. As chairman of Dollar General Corp., Mr. Turner carries on the tradition his grandfather began building 52 years ago with J.L. Turner and Son Wholesale.

The first Dollar General Store opened in Springfield, KY, in 1955. The company has been a rich part of the State's retail climate ever since. There are now 142 stores throughout the Commonwealth, located primarily in rural areas. In addition, the largest of the retailer's own distribution centers and administrative offices are located in Scottsville, KY. The company employs about 1,300 people statewide.

Cal Turner, Jr. says the secret to Dollar General's success is keeping things simple. The store is a no-frills retailer which targets lower income customers. Mr. Turner says his father and grandfather taught him to "first be in touch with fundamental living requirements, then add other things." That formula has apparently worked for Dollar General and the Turners. While many retailers were struggling with poor economic conditions, Dollar General Corp. ended the fiscal year with a record $754.4 million in sales, an increase of 16 percent. Yearly profits rose 47 percent to $21.5 million.

Mr. Turner says his secret to success is "nothing but remembering what my father and grandfather had been taught in the hills of Tennessee and Kentucky." Cal Turner, Jr., apparently learned his trade well, as Dollar General Corp. continues to flourish.

Mr. President, I commend Mr. Turner and others at Dollar General for the many successes of that company. I ask that the following article from the Lexington Herald-Leader be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Lexington Herald-Leader, Apr. 6, 1992]

BARGAIN-BASEMENT IMAGE BRINGS GOOD FORTUNE

(By Phil West)

NASHVILLE.—Learning the secrets of success is as simple as understanding the difference between a mule and a man, Dollar General founder J.L. Turner once explained.

"A mule's smarter than a man," he said. "He'll always return to his stall. But a man thinks he can go on to other things."

Forgetting the urge to wander—just concentrating on the everyday—has proven fruitful for Turner's 23-state empire of low-end retail stores. While most retailers grappled with the recession, Dollar General Corp. was ringing up a record $754.4 million in sales in the fiscal year ended Jan. 31, up 16 percent. Yearly profits rose 47 percent to $21.5 million.

"By any measure you can look at they had a great year," said Anne Carlisle, an analyst at Equitable Securities in Nashville.

"We're staying in our stalls, thank you," said Cal Turner Jr., company chairman and grandson of the founder.

The no-frills retailer, which competes with the likes of Wal-Mart and K mart, sells items like toothpaste, toilet paper and laundry detergent stacked on shelves or in bins at its 1,535 stores. The most expensive item is winter coats that cost about $35.

Dollar General targets a narrowly defined market: Its average customer is a working-class, 25- to 45-year-old woman earning less than $25,000 a year.

"We consider ourselves to have lower-income customers than anybody else in the business," said Turner, 52. It means "our customers are the smartest shoppers in the world," he said.

Other discount retailers have used a similar formula for success.

Family Dollar Stores Inc., which has about 1,800 stores in 29 states, appeals to the same customers. The company, based in Charlotte, N.C., boosted sales more than 20 percent in the last six months.

Some smaller regional discounters also have done well.

But not all downscale retailers are flourishing. McCrory Corp., known for its five-and-dime stores, recently filed for federal bankruptcy protection from its creditors. Part of McCrory's problem is it lacks the narrow focus that has helped Dollar General and Family Dollar thrive.

Dollar General does not honor credit cards and accepts checks for only the amount of purchase. Most of its stores are in towns with 12,000 to 15,000 people.

It does offer some of the cheapest items around. Simple signs lure customers into stores that might offer Levi's jeans for as low as $15. Four pairs of men's tube socks sell for $3. Bath towels are three for $5.

All items are sold in even-dollar amounts. "The even-dollar has zing with the customer. It has operating simplicity," Turner said.

Simplicity is the key to the chain that began 52 years ago with the slogan, "Nothing over $1."

J.L. Turner had spent 10 years on the road as a wholesale grocery salesman before he and son Cal Turner Sr. put up $5,000 each to found J.L. Turner and Son Wholesale. The two sold $65,000 worth of goods in their first year.

The company evolved by 1955 into Dollar General, and went public in 1968. Its stock, traded over the counter, has recently sold for about $26 a share, up from $10 at this time last year.

But simplicity remains the company's trademark.

"It's nothing but remembering what my father and grandfather had been taught in the hills of Tennessee and Kentucky," Turner said. "First, be in stock with fundamental living requirements, then add other things."

But "other things"—such as contact lens solutions and automatic dishwashing detergents—don't sell well with the retailer's customers. Company sales figures show Dollar General customers don't wear contact lenses, and they wash dishes by hand.

Dollar General also has benefited from management changes, friendlier store clerks and a smoother distribution system, he said.

In 1988, the company stream-lined the distribution system so store managers could operate on a two-week delivery cycle.

Turner also thinks the recession drove some customers to his no-frills stores.

But stockholders are feeling pretty good about now. Dollar General just declared a 5-for-4 stock split, and analysts predict it will produce earnings of $1.20 a share this fiscal year compared with $1.02 last year.

"For all of fiscal '93, Dollar General expects to exceed analysts' projections of $1.20 by 5 to 7 cents. I'd say Dollar General is very conservative about putting numbers out there they can't reach," Carlisle said. •

TRIBUTE TO BILL ORINSKI, 1992 ARIZONA SMALL BUSINESSMAN OF THE YEAR

• Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to a remarkable businessman from my home State of Arizona, Mr. William G. Orinski, who is being honored as the Arizona Small Businessman of the Year for 1992.

Mr. Orinski, through his determination, creativity, and tireless energy, has transformed a one-person consulting effort into a $9 million manufacturing organization in just 7 years.

Vanguard Automation, Inc., designs and manufactures custom robotics and hard automated assembly systems used by companies across the Nation. Vanguard manufactures the only automated machine currently capable of completely assembling computer head suspension assemblies for ultra-high-density drives.

As the president and founder of Vanguard Automation, Bill has served as a model employer. He has been a mentor and a friend to the more than 70 employees of his company. Always committed to developing the most of his employees' talents, he has implemented a strong policy of promoting from within and provides a generous tuition assistance program for those who wish to further their education.

Bill's concern for others is also illustrated by his service to the community of Oro Valley. In addition to his personal involvement in numerous civic and business organizations, Vanguard has sponsored numerous events for the Arthritis Foundation and has established a charity fund for future projects.

The town of Oro Valley is proud of Bill Orinski. He serves as an example of how much our country's small business owners contribute, not only to the economy, but to the communities in which they live and work. I want to congratulate Bill, his wife, and three daughters. Being recognized as Arizona's Small Businessman of the Year is a most distinguished honor and I am pleased to recognize his efforts here today. •

BEST WISHES TO THE SAN DIEGO MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS WALKATHON

• Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of the volunteers who participated on Saturday, April 4, in the annual Bumble Bee Super Cities Walk for Multiple Sclerosis in San Diego.

This was the fourth annual Bumble Bee Super Cities Walk in San Diego. There are approximately 30 MS walks taking place in California, and more than 225 all across the country.

The San Diego Area chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society had nearly 5,000 participants and volunteers to support efforts to raise funds to help find a cure for MS, a disease of the central nervous system that affects nearly 300,000 Americans.

The San Diego walk featured 5-, 10-, and 15-mile routes throughout historic downtown San Diego and along the scenic Embarcadero of San Diego Bay.

Please join me in sending our best wishes for supporting a worthwhile cause to the San Diego citizens walking for MS on Saturday, April 4. •

THE COST OF CAMPAIGN FINANCE "REFORM"

• Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, last week, Senate and House conferees reported out the conference report on S. 3, the Congressional Campaign Spending Limit and Election Reform Act of 1992.

The Senate had passed S. 3 on May 23, 1991, by rollcall vote of 56 to 42, and the House had passed its version of the bill on November 25 by rollcall vote of 273 to 156.

The Senate is expected to take up the conference report soon after the Easter recess.

The House has wrestled with the conference report this week. On Wednesday the House recommitted the conference report so that the conferees could fix a provision dealing with mail sent under the frank. Earlier today, by rollcall vote of 259 to 165, the House passed the conference report, after defeating another motion to recommit.

Unfortunately, but not surprisingly, the conference report contains spending limits and subsidies to politicians. It also contains different election rules for the Senate and the House. Of special interest in this regard are the different rules governing contributions from political action committees or PAC's.

The President has promised to veto any campaign finance reform bill that looks like this conference report. Last spring, in a letter to Senator McCONNELL, the President wrote:

Spending limits * * * would disadvantage challengers and thereby entrench incumbents further. Ironically, spending limits tend to favor powerful special interests over individuals, because these interests would retain the financial and organizational resources to work around the limits. Therefore, I intend to veto any campaign finance "reform" legislation which features spending limits or taxpayer financing of congressional campaigns.

Further, I am deeply opposed to campaign reform legislation that proposes different rules concerning political action committees for the Senate and House. We must not further balkanize ethics and election reform. * * * 137 Cong. Rec. S6271 (daily ed. May 22, 1991).

Even if the President were to sign this conference report—and I am confident that he will not—the act would not become effective until its costs are covered by some further piece of legislation. Section 902 is the provision that delays implementation of the act until the Democrats can figure out how to pay for these subsidies to politicians without causing a revolution among the taxpayers. This conference report is, therefore, something in the nature of an authorization bill awaiting an appropriations bill.

Because there is no mechanism to cover its costs, the conference report's friends are going to say that it does not include taxpayer subsidies. That claim will be technically true but misleading and irrelevant. This conference report authorizes the taking of taxpayers' dollars to pay for the election and reelection campaigns of Members of the Senate and the House. If this authorization becomes law, all that will be necessary to move the money is a paragraph or two in a tax bill.

A large majority of Republicans in both Houses have firmly opposed tax subsidies for politicians in Congress. For example, on last year's key rollcall votes in the Senate—votes Nos. 68, 76, and 83—Republicans cast 127 votes against taxpayer subsidies and Democrats cast 4 votes against taxpayer subsidies. On those 3 votes, no Republican Senator voted for taxpayer subsidies for Senate campaigns.

Republicans have philosophical and practical objections to taxpayer subsidies for Senate and House elections. Then, too, there is the cost, which is plenty. The Republican Policy Committee has just completed an estimate of the costs of S. 3 that shows that total costs and public and private sector subsidies will total about $300 million for the 1994 elections. I will ask that the Policy Committee's cost estimate be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, even if spending limits and taxpayer subsidies were good ideas, which they are not, this year and every other year for the foreseeable future—in which the Federal deficit will equal hundreds of billions of dollars—would be a terrible year in which to give hundreds of millions of dollars to candidates for the Senate and House. We cannot afford it. If Congress is going to insist on authorizing a new program that will cost taxpayers and private industry $300 million in 1993 and 1994 let us authorize a program that will help American workers. Better yet, let us stop authorizing programs that the country doesn't need, that the American people do not want, and that contribute to the idea that Members of Congress are primarily concerned with giving benefits to themselves.

S. 3 is a bad idea. Worse, it is an idea that is both expensive and bad. Gratefully, we have a President who is not going to let it become law.

I ask that the Policy Committee's cost estimate be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

[U.S. Senate Republican Policy Committee,
Apr. 9, 1992]

S. 3 WILL COST $300 MILLION IN 1994

The Senate is expected to take up the conference report on S. 3, the "Congressional Campaign Spending Limit and Election Reform Act of 1992," shortly after returning from the Easter recess. The House passed the conference report on April 9 by roll call vote of 259-to-165 (19 Republicans, 239 Democrats, and one Independent voted yea; 145 Republicans and 20 Democrat voted no). Should the bill appear on the President's desk, a veto is expected.

The Republican Policy Committee estimates that the conference report will cost about $300 million for the 1994 elections. At $300 million, subsidies provided by taxpayers would reach about $250 million and subsidies provided directly by broadcasters would reach about $50 million.

This $300 million estimate is about midway between our low estimate of $245 million and our high estimate of nearly $364 million. We made four estimates, two for the Senate and two for the House, and in each case we assumed either that both major party candidates would participate in the funding scheme or that only one major party candidate would participate. Our estimates, which appear in detail later in this paper, are summarized in Table 1.

As noted, the $300 million estimate is in about the middle of the range. Actual spending may be higher or lower.

Making estimates is, of course, an inexact science. Our estimates (and everyone else's) depend entirely on the assumptions which underlie the numbers. We have attempted to set out all of our relevant assumptions so that the reader may judge the reasonableness of our numbers. In addition to setting out the major assumptions, we believe our estimates have three major strengths:

First, we include the costs imposed directly on the private sector. S. 3 requires broadcasters to sell time to eligible Senate candidates at 50 percent of an already-reduced rate. When a bill requires an industry to sell its product to Senate candidates at one-half the going rate, we refuse to count that cost as a nullity merely because it does not fall on a government account.

Second, we have included an estimated cost of minor party participation in Senate races. We acknowledge that these estimates are based on assumptions that are little more than educated guesses. However, S. 3 provides strong incentives for participation by candidates or minor parties and costs will indeed be incurred. Our estimates will prove to be a great deal closer to the mark than nothingness—which is the typical way these minor party costs are handled.

Third, we have used conservative assumptions. We have not used minimum assumptions, which generally would be zero, but we have used modest assumptions. For example, we assume a five percent independent expenditure amount. Perhaps time will prove that our assumption is high, but five percent is a conservative assumption in a campaign environment in which direct spending will be capped.

In our conservatism, we have not calculated three costs that will be attributable to House races. We have not estimated the cost of subsidies to minor party candidates in House races. We have not estimated the cost of the "triple match" subsidy which is given to an eligible candidate when his non-participating opponent contributes large sums of money to his own campaign. [Sec. 121-"603(e)(3)."] And, we have not estimated the cost of the $50,000 subsidy for House candidates in closely contested primary elections. [Sec. 121-"604(f)."]

The rough cost of subsidizing Senate and House races over a six-year (Senate) election cycle can be obtained by multiplying the 1994 costs by three. The actual cost of subsidies for the Senate will vary from election to election because elections featuring large States are more expensive.

Benefits under S. 3 are indexed and will increase with the rate of inflation.

Costs in the House of Representatives were calculated on the basis of 440 elections, not 435. There are 435 Representatives in the House, four delegates, and one resident commissioner. All are eligible for subsidies.

Our estimates and everyone else's depend first on participation rates. Those rates may be speculated on, see, e.g., the helpful CBO Cost Estimate on H.R. 3750, H. Rpt. No. 102-340, pt. 1, 102d Cong., 1st Sess. 62-66 (1991), but they cannot be known ahead of time. Increased participation rates do not necessarily increase costs: Because of the excess expenditure amount which goes to eligible candidates who run against noneligible candidates, a race may actually impose greater costs on the Federal treasury if one candidate does not participate in the funding scheme.

We estimate that additional administrative costs will equal $2 million per year. This is the number the Federal Election Commission furnished to the Congressional Budget Office and we have adopted it. We will be amazed if the FEC, which will spend about $18 million this year, can administer S. 3 with only an additional $2 million per year.

Additional details on our estimates may be found in the notes that follow the numbers.

Section 902 of the conference report is a clever attempt to provide "political cover" for supporters of this conference report. This conference report is designed to extend subsidies to politicians while section 902 says, "Not quite yet."

Subsection (a) of section 902 provides, "The provisions of this Act (other than this section) shall not be effective until the estimated costs under section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 have been offset by the enactment of subsequent legislation effectuating this Act." (Subsection (b) provides, "It is the sense of the Congress that subsequent legislation effectuating this Act shall not provide for general revenue increases, reduce expenditures for any existing Federal program, or increase the Federal budget deficit.") Section 902 is like the misdirection used by a magician: While the magician is working on lifting the wallet from his victim's pocket, the victim is staring intently at the magician's other hand and trying to figure out where the pigeon came from.

S. 3's whole purpose is to provide subsidies to candidates running for Congress and section 902 cannot possibly disguise that fact.

NOTES ON SENATE ESTIMATES

Minor Parties: In an attempt to assign some responsible cost estimate to the provisions granting benefits to minor parties, we assumed that there will be one or more eligible minor party candidates in large States. For the 1994 Senate races, we assumed there will be three minor party candidates in California, two minor party candidates in New York, and one minor party candidate in each of Florida, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Texas. We made no attempt to estimate the participation rates of minor party candidates in House races.

General Election Expenditure Limit (GEEL): Under S. 3's provisions for Senate elections, each State has a GEEL that is based on its population. The GEEL formula is in Sec. 101-502(b). No GEEL appears in this document, but the GEELs for the relevant States were used in computing the costs of the voter communication voucher, the excess expenditure amount, and the independent expenditure amount.

Voter Communication Voucher: The voter communication voucher is equal to 20 per cent of the GEEL for a major party candidate and 10 per cent of the GEEL for a minor party candidate. [Sec. 101-503(c).]

Excess Expenditure Amount: The excess expenditure amount is given to an eligible candidate to meet the "excess" spending of a noneligible opponent. It is doled out on a sliding scale according to the amount raised by the noneligible candidate. [Sec. 101-503(b).] We have assumed that the noneligible major party opponent will raise or spend more than 133 1/3 per cent of the GEEL but less than 166 2/3 per cent of the GEEL. In that case, the eligible major party candidate receives a subsidy equal to two-thirds of the GEEL. Therefore, our column for major parties shows an amount equal to two-thirds of the GEEL. A separate formula applies to minor party candidates. [Sec. 101-503(b)(3)(B).] We assume the cost of the subsidy for minor party candidates will be 20 per cent of the GEEL. The Act allows minor party candidates to receive an excess expenditure amount equal to 50 per cent of the GEEL. When all candidates are eligible, no candidate qualifies for the excess expenditure amount.

Independent Expenditure Amount: The independent expenditure amount is given to an eligible candidate to counter independent expenditures that are made for his opponent or against him. [Sec. 101-503(b)(2) & sec. 133.] For both major party and minor party candidates we assume an independent expenditure amount equal to five percent of the GEEL.

Special Mailing Rates: S. 3 allows eligible Senate candidates to mail at a reduced rate the number of pieces of mail that is equal to the voting age population (VAP) in the State. [Sec. 101-503(a)(2) & sec. 132.] The special postage rate is the third-class rate applicable for nonprofit organizations. The subsidy per piece of mail is estimated to be 6.7 cents. See, United States Postal Service, "Memorandum of Postal Provisions of Campaign Reform Bills" (March 30, 1992) (mimeo) (regular, presort, bulk rate of 16.5 cents per piece minus third-class, nonprofit rate of 9.8 cents per piece equals a subsidy of 6.7 cents per piece). We then simply multiplied the subsidy by the VAP for the relevant States. We were surprised to see that, because of the sizes of the States in which we assumed minor party participation, the mail subsidy for the 12 minor party candidates is estimated to be greater than for the 34 major party candidates.

Subsidy Provided by the Private Sector: During the general election period, S. 3 requires broadcasters to sell eligible Senate candidates broadcast time at no more than 50 percent of "the lowest charge of the station for the same amount of time for the same period on the same date." [Sec. 131 & sec. 101-503(a)(1).] In short, Congress tells broadcasters that they must offer the lowest unit rate and then it tells them that eligible Senate candidates must be given one-half of that rate during the final weeks of the campaign. Broadcasters will, therefore, provide a subsidy equal to whatever candidates spend. We assume that major party Senate candidates will spend 50 percent of the GEEL on purchases of broadcast time. This is a modest assumption inasmuch as voter communication vouchers worth 20 percent of the GEEL can be spent only on purchases of broadcast time. We assume that minor party candidates will spend 20 percent of their GEELs on purchases of broadcast time.

NOTES ON HOUSE ESTIMATES

Matching Funds: Eligible House candidates are entitled to receive up to $200,000 to match relatively small contributions from individuals. [Sec. 121-604(a).] We have simply multiplied $200,000 by 440 House races (and then doubled that number if two candidates are eligible). CBO has pointed out that things are not quite that simple. H. Rpt. 101-340, pt. 1, 102d Cong., 1st Sess. 62-66 (1991). We agree, of course; nothing is ever that simple.

Independent Expenditure Amount: Under S. 3, the general (although flexible) cap on spending for a House race is $600,000. Sec. 121-601(a). A House candidate is entitled to a subsidy to match independent expenditures above $10,000. Sec. 121-604(b). We assume independent expenditures equal to the trigger amount plus five percent of the general limit in each of the 440 races.

Special Mailing Rates: S. 3 allows eligible House candidates to mail at reduced rate the number of pieces of mail that is equal to the voting age population (VAP) in the district. Sec. 132. The special postage rate is the third-class rate applicable for nonprofit organizations. The subsidy per piece of mail is estimated to be 6.7 cents. See, United States Postal Service, "Memorandum of Postal Provisions of Campaign Reform Bills" (Mar. 30, 1992) (mimeo) (regular, presort, bulk rate of 16.5 cents per piece minus third-class, nonprofit rate of 9.8 cents per piece equals a subsidy of 6.7 cents per piece). We then simply multiplied the subsidy by the VAP for the 440 districts, i.e. the voting age population of the entire country. ●

EXPERIMENTAL PROGRAM TO STIMULATE COMPETITIVE RESEARCH

● Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I rise today to comment on an article in last week's Washington Post, "In Defense of Pork-Barrel Science," by Daniel Greenberg, editor and publisher of Science & Government Report and a close observer of research funding.

Mr. Greenberg makes an important point about federally funded research and development. Namely, that Federal support for scientific research currently goes to a relatively small number of universities in a few States.

In fact, huge disparities exist. As Mr. Greenberg notes, 5 States receive almost 50 percent of all Federal research dollars. These States, plus 5 more, have virtually monopolized national R&D spending for over 15 years. By contrast, a group of 18 States, plus Puerto Rico, received only 2 percent of all Federal research funds and less than 6 percent of such funds going to universities. Incredible as it may seem, in 1988, these States together received less support than each of the top 5 States.

The current concentration of Federal science dollars is not in our national interest. By limiting the resources available to talented scientists, this concentration restricts the diversity of scientific activities across the country.

This, in turn, contributes to the future lack of skilled scientists and low overall level of science literacy by limiting educational opportunities in States without major research universities. Over 75 percent of all students attend colleges in their home States. Our students, and ultimately our country, would be better served by a system that encourages broader distribution of Federal R&D funding.

Mr. Greenberg makes another important observation: The current system hinders economic growth in States lacking good laboratories and trained manpower—States like West Virginia that typically have high unemployment, low per capita incomes, and weak science education programs. It favors the haves over the have nots, and perpetuates imbalance rather than encouraging greater competition.

I know about such problems through personal experience.

Over the past few years, I have spent time trying to attract advanced materials manufacturers to West Virginia. Studies show that advanced materials manufacturing is expected to reap billions of dollars over the next decade.

West Virginia—it seemed to me, with its abundance of raw materials and strong chemical and glass industry—was a natural for the advanced materials industry. Yet, each and every business I approached about doing advanced materials manufacturing in West Virginia had the same response, "What kind of research are your State universities doing in this area?"

In some sense, we have a classic chicken and egg problem.

But no matter how you look at it, States like West Virginia need a strong research base to retain and attract top quality faculty members, to train young people, and to attract high-tech industry. Unfortunately, West Virginia, like so many States underrepresented in science and engineering research, lacks the resources at the State level to tackle this problem on its own.

In 1989, I authored legislation to continue a little known, but very worthwhile, program at the National Science Foundation called the Experimental Program to Stimulate Competitive Research [EPSCoR].

The purpose of EPSCoR is to build up the research and development infrastructure of States that are presently excluded from the lion's share of Federal R&D dollars. The program provides an infusion of funds which present a tremendous opportunity to States to target research areas like advanced materials that may lead to future economic development.

Participating States must compete for research funding through the peer review process, and, through a matching fund requirement, must show their commitment to improving their institutions' research and development infrastructures.

The NSF-EPSCoR Program has been shown to work. Over 50 percent of the West Virginia faculty who received EPSCoR funding in 1980 went on to successfully compete for more Federal dollars. Largely as a result of EPSCoR, Alabama achieved important development in superconductivity, Maine has become one of the national leaders in coastal ecology, and the University of South Carolina's chemistry department was selected as one of the six most improved in the Nation. Success stories in the other EPSCoR States abound.

As Mr. Greenberg notes, many approaches have been used to broaden the distribution of Federal research funding, including earmarks, set-asides, and block grants. However, each of these strategies has faults. And, ultimately, no amount of pork-barrelling or entitlements can create what we really need—a system in which every State has a strong science program and the capacity to compete for research funding.

The EPSCoR program, with its emphasis on peer review and cost sharing, addresses the problem in a balanced and effective manner. This year, as we look for ways to make America more competitive, I urge my colleagues to support forward-thinking programs like EPSCoR. Our students, industries, and national interest depend on it.

Mr. President, I ask that a copy of Mr. Greenberg's article be included in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

The article follows:

IN DEFENSE OF PORK-BARREL SCIENCE

[From the Washington Post, Mar. 31, 1992]

(By Daniel S. Greenberg)

To a chorus of denunciations from the chieftains of the research establishment, the scientific pork barrel rolled last year on Capitol Hill to a record high of 492 projects billed at $810 million. It's rolling again this year, and, egged on by distressed academicians, the White House and various legislators, small and mighty, have vowed countermeasures. Poised for the task, among others, is a congressional coalition gathered under the banner of "Porkbusters."

But since money is the goal in science's tango with government, why the consternation?

The reason is that the pork-barrel route for laboratories and research eludes the control of an elaborate system that has concentrated federal science money in relatively few parts of this big country. Pork-barrel appropriations, also referred to as "earmarks," are the product of an alternative method of dishing out federal money for research.

The political zest for another way naturally arises from the striking maldistribution of federal research funds in an era in which thriving laboratories often serve as magnets for industry and business. The imbalances show up clearly in the latest numbers reported by the National Science Foundation, keeper of research statistics.

Five states accounted for nearly half of the $140 billion spent on research and development in 1989—California, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey and New York. Approximately 50 percent of the money came from federal agencies, the rest from industry, reflecting the fact that governmental and industrial R&D tend to cluster.

Two-thirds of national R&D spending is concentrated in those states plus five others: Illinois, Maryland, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Texas. The top 10 spots have gone unchanged since at least 1975. The main reason for the stability is that in the orthodox system, federal R&D money is awarded competitively—which means that those already equipped to do research have a big edge over those trying to break into the business.

Federal science and money for universities is only a small slice of the grand national total of R&D spending, about $14 billion in 1989. But it's influential money, since it's the mainstay of basic research, which is especially prestigious in the scientific culture. And here, too, the distribution of funds is tightly concentrated.

Of the nation's 3,400 institutions of higher learning, perhaps 300 take part in serious scientific research, if only in one department on campus. In 1989, 20 universities received 32 percent of Washington's funds for academic science; 50 universities accounted for 58 percent; and the top 100 took 82 percent of the science funds. Some of these academic winners play both sides of the street, winning funds in the competitive system while also prodding their congressmen for special appropriations.

With the connivance of cooperative chairman, pork-barrel appropriations are usually slipped into money bills without having gone through committee hearings. They also do not have the collaboration, or even the knowledge, of the research agencies that will have to put up the money.

The standard complaint is that they're rogue appropriations, dished up to satisfy a particular locality or university without having undergone "peer" review, the sacred sifting process of the scientific establishment. Furthermore, the outraged critics contend, projects financed by earmarks disrupt scientific planning and priorities and consume funds that were carefully allotted to other projects.

Some earmarks have been ridiculed as absurd, among them a crackpot, multi-million-dollar scheme in Alaska to tap power from aurora borealis. But in fact most pork-barrel appropriations for research arise from qualified professional aspirations to build a laboratory that will enable a school to compete for grant money.

Quite a few of today's highly regarded research centers were long ago conceived in the pork barrel. And quite a few wastrel projects in the federal research inventory, including the faltering multi-billion-dollar Strategic Defense Initiative, are plastered with approving peer review reports.

Accounting for only 6 or 7 percent of today's federal support for serious research, pork-barrel science is no menace to the established system. It's another way of financing science—and often with good results. ●

THE TRUTH-IN-BUDGETING ACT

● Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, last week I along with 12 of my colleagues introduced the Truth-in-Budgeting Act. The goal of my legislation is simple but very necessary.

Currently, our budget is like a shell game. The Social Security surpluses are used to mask the true size of the deficit. We are all alarmed that the deficit has reached staggering proportions. But does the public know that the deficit is at least $413 billion for fiscal year 1993, not the $350 billion figure that is so often cited?

Currently, the money spent and the taxes received by Social Security shows up in many parts of the budget. The money that is brought into the trust fund is placed in three different parts of the budget.

First, Social Security taxes are placed in the revenue section of the budget;

Second, the interest the Social Security trust fund receives is subtracted from total interest payments the interest function of the budget—so the general fund payments for this interest do not show up in the bottom line of the interest section of the budget; and Third, finally, the contributions the Government makes as an employer show up in an obscure category called undistributed offsetting receipts.

The result of this way of portraying the Social Security trust fund is at best confusion, at worst misrepresentation. Our seniors have been told that Social Security is a budget buster. And when you go to the Federal budget to see if that's true, it's virtually impossible to find the answer. When you see the huge outlays from the trust fund, but don't see the money coming in, it's easy to draw the wrong conclusion. The truth is that there is a surplus in the Social Security trust fund. All my bill does is make this clear in the budget. It does so by including all the money coming into the Social Security trust fund and the money being spent out of the trust fund in the same place in the budget.

Mr. President, we need to be honest with the American public about the size of our obligations to today's seniors, today's workers, and tomorrow's seniors. During the last few months we have seen the American people's confidence in Congress and the operations of the Federal Government deteriorate. When the Social Security Program was in a crisis in 1983, we rescued it by increasing payroll taxes. We could only have increased those taxes with a mandate from the American public that the payroll taxes only be used for the dedicated purpose—Social Security benefits.

Let's not further undermine the public's confidence in Government by using the Social Security surpluses to mask the true size of the deficit.

My proposal merely shows the Social Security trust fund for what it is; a self-sustaining program that generates more revenue than it spends. The Truth-in-Budgeting Act would:

First, give the American public a better understanding of how the Federal Government spends their hard-earned tax dollars; and Second, enhance the current budget debate by demonstrating the financial integrity of the Social Security trust fund and other mandatory trust funds.

I encourage my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this important piece of legislation.●

LAKE SUPERIOR STATE UNIVERSITY

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, While much of the sporting world was focused on Minneapolis this past week, site of the NCCA division 1 basketball playoffs, an equally exciting showdown was occurring in Albany, NY the NCAA division 1 ice hockey championship.

Lake Superior State University [LSSU] from Sault Ste. Marie, MI, claimed the prize, reaching the final matchup by first winning the central Collegiate Hockey Association playoff championship over archrival University of Michigan. They next bested Alaska-Anchorage, the University of Minnesota, and Michigan State University before suiting up against that perennial NCAA powerhouse, the University of Wisconsin, last Saturday night. The Lakers, LSSU's sports moniker, prevailed 5 to 3 in a hard fought battle which wasn't decided until late in the third period.

A school with a student body of only 3,200, Lake Superior took on the goliaths of college hockey and, for the second time in 5 years, brought home the national championship. It was a classic example of a team in a rebuilding year truly pulling together as a unit, setting its sights high and reaching the top.

Fully two-thirds of the Laker team are freshmen and sophomores, with only 4 true seniors of the 27 players in uniform. The players of this remarkable team are Dan Angelelli, Mark Astley, Mike Bachusz, Steve Barnes, Clayton Beddoes, Paul Constantin, Vincent Faucher, David Gartshore, David Gilbert, Tim Hanley, John Hendry, Dean Hulett, Blaine Lacher, Darrin Madeley, Kurt Miller, Sandy Moger, Mike Morin, Jay Ness, Jim Peters, Brian Rolston, Michael Smith, Wayne Strachan, Jason Trzcinski, Rob Valicevic, Jason Welch, Darren Wetherill, and Brad Willner.

They played a tight-checking defense taught by second-year head coach Jeff Jackson, who is ably assisted by Ron Rolston, Paul Pooley, graduate assistant Terry Hossack, and volunteers Anthony Palumbo and Doug Laprade.

Mr. President, it is most refreshing in these difficult times to see a small university team strive to be the best and achieve that goal, with a victorious coach who unabashedly tells the national TV audience, "This one's for my mom." Lake Superior State University has shown that you do not have to be from a big school or a big town to be the best.

Whenever my visits to the Soo coincide with a Lakers hockey game, I make it a point to go, and I have always been impressed by the skill and determination of these young men. But I have never been prouder of them than I am today. Go Lakers!●

AMERICAN MILITARY WOMEN PRISONERS OF WAR

● Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, on March 18, 1992, I was honored to attend the gala salute to all United States of America Military Women Prisoners of War.

Since 1864, when Dr. Mary Walker was taken as a prisoner of war during the Civil War, there have been 99 American military women who have given the utmost in dedication and service to our country as prisoners of war. Fourteen of the women honored were actually able to attend this special event. One of those being honored was Dorothy Arnold of Topeka, KS, who was held as a POW in the Philippines during World War II.

As we currently debate what the role of women should be in the military, we often forget that many women have not only served our country during wartime but have also sacrificed and survived the ultimate test of service—being a POW.

I would like to submit for the RECORD, the keynote address given by Navy Capt. Giles R. Norrington, himself a POW in Vietnam. His address was a very poignant and personal honor to the American military women POW's and one that enriched my understanding and appreciation for all of the men and women who have dedicated their lives in service to our country.

The address follows:

GILES NORRINGTON'S SPEECH—SALUTE TO WOMEN POW'S

Tonight is a piece of history.

Tonight we honor a number of women who served their Nation in the most difficult imaginable circumstances—but, in a larger sense, we honor all women who have gone into harm's way and in so doing became a part of the inexorable flow of history. Being caught in the swift and turbulent flow of history is a bit like whitewater rafting on a river of many forks—we are not sure of where we are going—but the trip certainly is exciting!

Dear sisters, haven't we had an exciting trip!

Each of the women we honor tonight—and I—were caught up in the flow of swift, turbulent—and terrible—events which we did not want. Somehow, we survived—and we thrived—and, finally, we thrived. We grew as human beings in most inhuman circumstances.

We were shaped by the history of which we were a part. As Dr. Martin Luther King explained, "We do not make history—we are made by it."

In some ways, we are footnotes in the history books—and in some cases our passing was not even observed—but that diminishes in no way the richness of our human qualities—our grit—our determination—our humanity toward those with whom we strived—and our courage.

Heroism is a fleeting thing. It is tough to get your arms around what it is and how it works.

Two of our Presidents had thoughts on the subject—John F. Kennedy—excuse the pun—captured our situations nicely when he responded to a reporter who call him a hero. He said, "It was not heroism—it was involuntary—they sank my boat!"

Well, it may have been involuntary for these incredible women, but—most emphatically—it also was heroism. Many of you survived the incredibly violent campaigns in the Philippines. Gen. Douglas MacArthur said of those who fought in the campaigns, "They fought hard, those savage soldiers—like wounded wolves at bay. They were filthy—and they were lousy—and they stunk—and I loved them all."

And among their number were some of the remarkably courageous women who are among our number tonight—and I love them all! The courage, endurance and steadfastness of this remarkable group of human beings is the stuff of legends. They were then—and they are now—American heroes.

Ronald Reagan said of heroes, that they "aren't braver than others—they are just brave for about 5 minutes longer." Well, those heroes were brave for a lot more than 5 minutes longer!

They were thrust by circumstance into a situation not of their own choosing, and they made the best of their situations. They grew as human beings and they distinguished themselves as human beings—and as Americans.

They knew that they were standing in harm's way, but that did not deter them. As Gen. Alfred Gray, formerly commandant of the Marine Corps, said of himself, "I go where the thunder is." Our comrades went where the thunder was—and they discovered there the verity of another of General Gray's observations, "There is no such thing as a crowded battlefield—battlefields are very lonely places."

How lonely it must have been when they realized that their freedom was at an end—how lonely it must have been as they faced the soldiers into whose hands their very lives had been delivered—as prisoners of war in the broadest and most brutal war in human history. I doubt they realized at that point that their captivity would not last for days or even months—but for years. How lonely their battlefield.

And yet, they did survive—and then they strived—and finally they thrived—as human beings and as Americans. And in the final analysis, weren't they amazing Americans! Tonight, I will share with you some of my own experiences—it was a very different war and mine was a very different role—but I believe that you will agree that ours was very much a shared experience.

Our involvement as a Nation in Vietnam was open to questions from every quarter. Still, in the face of all of the turbulence and doubt at home, literally millions of brave, frightened American men and women served with devotion to the constitutional ideal. We had been called—and by God we would serve!

In describing our role in Vietnam, President Lyndon Johnson observed, "We did not choose to be the guardian of the gate—but there is no one else."

As I flew my combat reconnaissance flights over North Vietnam, I did not think of myself as a guardian of the gate—I just wanted to complete each mission so that those who flew our fighters and bombers could find the targets and destroy them. American lives, and those of our Vietnamese allies, were at stake, and I meant to go into the thunder to weaken the enemy arrayed against them.

For 21 missions I was successful—I made it back. Then my luck ran out—I was hit by the golden B.B.—the bullet that gets you no matter what you are doing right!

I was shot from the sky, wounded and very afraid for my life. To put it quite honestly, I did not feel at all like Tom Cruise in "Top Gun"—I was scared.

For nearly an hour I evaded capture—then an already bad day took a turn for the worse—I was captured by an armed farm boy. The youngster could not have been more than 17 or so and he was quite small—but he also was armed—and that put him at a real advantage.

As I looked into his eyes, I realized that he probably was almost as afraid of me as I was of him—but he still was armed, and that kept him at an advantage.

My days of fighting for freedom were over—at least my days of flying and fighting for freedom.

I did not know it at the time, but I still had many battles ahead of me—all that had changed was the venue. I was a prisoner of war.

My brave sisters here tonight understand at the roots of their souls that no three words ring with such somber resonance as those three: prisoner—of—war—P.O.W.

Dear God—how miserable the existence—how lonely the new battlefield into which I had been thrust! I felt abandoned, alone and very uncertain.

The terror of the next few weeks, with a 300-mile truck trip to Hanoi, interrogation and torture at the hands of skilled and determined inquisitors did little to foster in my breast any feelings of heroism.

I came face to face with myself in those dreary circumstances, and I found myself to be quite human—subject to failure and to fear. But I was not alone.

It took a very long time for me to establish contact with other American P.O.W.'s, but the effort was worth it. I learned that each of us had reached the point of breaking, and that our resources had been drained by the terror and the torture—but each of us had done the best we could—and little else could be asked of us. We survived—and we also strived—now we had to learn to thrive.

And thrive we did—during the 1,775 days of my captivity, I had more good days than bad—and I laughed more times than I wept. We learned to accept the little blessings as though they were big ones—sunny days, summer thunder showers and hot bowls of soup—all of these things were magnified by the desolation of our situation. But when your desolate situation is the only one you have, you learn to make the best of it.

We talked endlessly of our lives, our families, our adventures—especially our amorous adventures—and of our hopes and dreams for the future. Even though we did not know when our torment would end, we never lost the hope that it would end. We learned to be brothers to one another—but, far more importantly, we learned to be mothers to one another—nurturing, accepting, patient, sympathetic and tolerant. For a group of battle-hardened fighter and bomber pilots, this was no small thing. We had to unlearn all of the macho garbage we had learned over a lifetime—and the new skills we had to learn did not always come easily. Nonetheless, our emotional survival resided in learning those skills—and we were determined to survive—in every sense of the word!

We had no access to paper or pen, but we learned—we memorized poems and stories, we learned new languages, we studied mathematics, and, in one case, we even learned the theory of sailboating! Can you imagine learning to sail—without a boat—and without enough water to drink—much less sail a boat!

As my sister P.O.W.'s know, when you have time on your hands, anything is possible! We discovered the truth in Susan Brownell Anthony's observation on her 86th birthday, "Failure is impossible!"

We learned in the crucible first to survive—and then we learned to strive—and, finally, we learned to nurture the seeds of human growth in the barren soil of captivity—we learned how to thrive!

When we returned to freedom, we were treated as heroes. Indeed, there were heroes among us—there were those whose acts of determined resistance to the enemy's efforts at exploitation were legendary—the stuff of sagas. For the most part though, we were ordinary people thrust into extraordinary circumstances. And once there, we did the best we could with what we had—and, as it turns out, we did mighty well!

As American prisoners of war, we were a part of a very distinguished company of men and women whose fates were like our own. We are very proud of our service to our Nation—and we are very proud to have had the opportunity to serve among the giants who preceded us—people such as the Americans whose service we honor by this glorious salute—the American women who went to the thunder, and who served with dignity, courage and unshakable steadfastness.

It is a sad commentary on our society that their service has been rendered invisible to many of our history books. They boldly went where few men dared to go—and they revealed themselves to be monumentally courageous—as few men have done! Well, their service may have been overlooked by some—but it certainly has not been overlooked by the women and men gathered here tonight!

The times are changing, to be sure. In some ways, our society is only just now catching up with the pioneers who sit in this room. Our Nation is taking note of the leaders among us who, by accident of birth, happen to have been born female. Our Nation is taking note of the energy, the wit, the wisdom, the genius, the grit and the courage of the women among us. Susan B. Anthony noted over 130 years ago that, "the abolitionists have yet to learn the ABC of women's rights." Amen!

We still have a lot to learn about real equality, to be sure—but with the sheer guts of women such of our sisters here tonight, we will succeed.

Each of them learned what Susan B. Anthony taught us over a century ago: "Woman must learn not to depend upon the protection of man, but must be taught to protect herself."

Our sisters learned that—and the strength, resourcefulness and steadfastness that they discovered was mighty! In the most difficult circumstances imaginable, our sisters survived, and they strived, and, finally, they thrived!

I am honored to have served in circumstances similar to yours. You are, after all, vital proof of Susan B. Anthony's birthday observation: "Failure is impossible!"

SENATOR CRANSTON WRITES ON DEMOCRACY AND DEMOCRATIC INSTITUTIONS FOR ITAR-TASS

• Mr. WOFFORD. Mr. President, as the Congress debates the merits of assisting the 12 new countries formed by the disintegration of the Soviet Union, I am pleased to report that one of our colleagues has taken it upon himself to do so personally.

This February, Senator CRANSTON began writing a free weekly column on democracy and democratic institutions for the main Russian news agency, ITAR-Tass. In these articles he addresses such issues as the role of intelligence services in post-cold war democracies and civil-military relations in democratic regimes.

During his 23 years in the Senate, Senator CRANSTON has made the improvement of United States-Soviet relations a cornerstone of his foreign policy concerns. These articles are the latest of his efforts to improve understanding between what used to be our two nations, and what now has become our 13 nations.

With the collapse of the Soviet empire the people of the Commonwealth of Independent States look to the United States for advice and assistance to rebuild their political and economic systems peacefully and democratically. I commend Senator CRANSTON for sharing the wisdom of his many years of public service with people who are experiencing freedom for the first time, and for taking the initiative to provide personally some of the assistance they so desperately need.

Mr. President, I ask that these first three of Senator CRANSTON'S articles be inserted in the RECORD at this time.

The articles follow:

WHO GUARDS THE GUARDS: CIVIL-MILITARY RELATIONS IN A DEMOCRATIC REGIME

(By Senator Alan Cranston)

Since the democracy was born in ancient Athens centuries ago, political thinkers have pondered the question, "Quis custodiet ipsos custodes?"—who will guard the guards?

The issue of civilian-military relations is one of the most vital policy questions facing the elected leadership of any country, providing as they do a look into the very chamber of the heart of democracy.

In newly-emerging democracies, the issue of civilian control of the military is often the single most important change that must take place. It is also very important in nations whose armed forces have historically been subordinated to the dictates of a single political party.

Without a doubt, the success and prestige of the American military, and that of many other democracies, has been immeasurably advanced by their unquestioned subordination to civilian political authority and their strict adherence to a mission of national defense of territory and sovereignty.

I believe that the American model, in particular, has an important array of lessons in the proper management of civil-military relations.

In the United States, there is a clear and unequivocal direction provided by civilian political leaders of the military structure and forces. This leadership is not a sometimes thing; many politicians make mastery of the intricacies of military issues a prime objective once they reach Washington, and sometimes before.

The control of the military budget by Congress provides essential oversight by elected officials responsible to the People.

This control over the purse strings has allowed an important check on military autonomy even in time of huge military build-ups. It is an ultimate safeguard of our democracy, ensuring as it does that military policies initiated by the Executive Branch (the president and his representatives, the Secretary of Defense) are debated and, if need be, changed to represent the views of our citizens.

Another important lesson is the existence of close interaction and contact between civilians and military, and between our four armed services, throughout the military command and control structure.

This system of joint command, in which civilians play an important role, reduces the potential for institutional rivalries, and promotions are based—in part—on an officer's ability to operate in an environment of inter-service cooperation.

A fourth aspect is that literally hundreds of privately funded, civilian-run nongovernmental agencies (NGOs) help to inform and shape defense policy.

As a legislator, I frequently reach outside the world of official briefings and Congressional hearings to better understand the complexities of a problem or the advantages—and disadvantages—of a particular approach.

In Washington, the NGOs constitute a virtual "Fourth Branch" of our Executive-Legislative-Judicial triad, helping to inform policymakers and educate the public.

Finally, the American military, which has no law enforcement role except in extreme and unusual circumstances, has therefore remained at the margins of partisan politics.

In a democracy, the armed forces are non-deliberative, which means they can contribute to policy formulation but must not take part in political party activity. This rule has been key to keeping the U.S. military as a respected and professional force throughout our more than 200-year history.

In many emerging democracies, the corps of civilian managers that forms an integral part of military management does not exist, or is tainted by its service to undemocratic parties of the ancient regime.

To all those who seek to strengthen their nation's democratic future, the issue of civil-military relations pose an important immediate challenge. Democratic control over the military cannot be established without empowering civilian managers in defense and security issues, and without circumscribing the role of the armed forces to that of national defense.

In a democracy, the answer to the question, "Who guards the guards?" the answer is easy—the People do.

WHERE DEMILITARIZATION ENHANCES SECURITY: THE COSTA RICAN EXAMPLE

(By Senator Alan Cranston)

I urge the leaders and all the people of the new EurAsian republics in the former Soviet Union who are constructing their new societies to consider the unique, remarkable and wonderful example set by a small country in strife-torn Central America—Costa Rica.

Costa Rica has found that it can get along magnificently without maintaining any army at all.

Costa Rica, nestled amid the war-torn nations of El Salvador, Guatemala, and Nicaragua, provides a useful study of a nation whose political and economic development has been strengthened by its decision to demilitarize.

It has been said that the one thing worse than an army of the unemployed, is an unemployed army—an army that is still in uniform but has no justification for its existence.

In today's world of scarce capital and oversized militaries this truism takes on a critical importance, particularly in new and emerging democracies.

In many of these nations, the primary threat to democratic governance and economic development is the large, and largely useless, standing militaries—the legacy of the Cold War and bipolar superpower struggle.

Because Costa Rica's expenditures on security are relatively small, resources have been freed for other projects that create more jobs and other socially beneficial works. Today Costa Ricans have the longest life expectancy (74 years), the lowest infant mortality (less than 19 per thousand) and the highest caloric consumption per capita in Central America.

They have a truly great education system because they are able to devote strong financial support to their schools—paying teachers well and keeping classes small. They have a relatively prosperous economy—with high living standards—because they invest their resources in civilian production rather than wasting it on military weapons and forces that they don't need. (In comparison, in the period 1972-1988, Costa Rica's neighbors diverted significant resources to their armed forces—Guatemala 1.9 percent of GNP, Nicaragua 9.5 percent, Honduras 3.6 and Panama, 1.4 percent.)

Since 1949, in the aftermath of a brief civil war, the Costa Rican constitution has forbidden the creation of an army, a statute that has reassured its neighbors that it has no designs on their territory. Even during Central America's fratricidal wars in the 1980s, Costa Rica owned no tanks, artillery, warships or helicopter gunships.

In eliminating their military, Costa Ricans also reaffirmed their willingness to play international good citizens, relying on diplomacy and the rule of law to maintain their country's sovereignty and independence.

A signatory to all major human rights treaties and accords, Costa Rica is an active participant in international and regional forums as a voice for moderation, multilateral arbitration and peaceful change.

Because of this, Costa Ricans feel confident that in the (unlikely) event of external aggression, they could count on the active support of international bodies, such as the United Nations and the Organization of American States.

By demilitarizing their country, Costa Ricans have rid themselves of an institution that, in practically every other Latin American nation, and in many other countries around the world, has at one time or another destabilized or threatened democracy.

What is more, because of the absence of an army the political environment is conducive to seek changes through negotiations and compromise, rather than knocking on the barracks' door seeking support.

The fact that Costa Rica does not have an army does not mean it is defenseless. Internal security is carried out exclusively by a 12,000-man national police force. Firmly under civilian control, the police provide Costa Ricans with a level of security unmatched in neighboring Nicaragua, Honduras, El Salvador and Guatemala.

Other recent democracies have sometimes confused the essential distinction between internal security and national defense, and have given an important role in the former to the military.

This tendency to militarize internal security however, has invariably led to politicized armed forces—they are forced to take part in internal conflicts—and demoralized police, who find their institutions subordinated to the military and often run by officers with little knowledge of, or talent for, police work.

In the United States, which has for several decades shouldered global military burdens, this separation of police and military missions is enshrined in the principle of posse comitatus, the Latin for "the force of the country," which prohibits our own military from an internal security role except in the most extraordinary circumstances.

Demilitarization is not the only pillar upon which Costa Rican democracy rests.

The fact that all major political figures and parties accept the rules of the game and respect the rule of law provides important support for this experiment in democratic rule in a harsh environment. Other institutions and practices—such as a free press and competitive multiparty environment—are also of vital importance.

Yet, for many countries in the world today, demilitarization offers the best hope for healthy economic growth and the security of its citizens.

Costa Rica provides an example worth bearing in mind. I think it would be wonderful if some of the new Republics in the former Soviet Union would decide to emulate Costa Rica and get along without military forces.

At least two and hopefully three of the republics that had nuclear weapons on their soil are in the process of getting rid of them, and the fourth, Russia, is drastically reducing its nuclear arsenal.

Why not simply get rid of all weapons, nuclear and conventional?

Or, why not at least greatly reduce weapons and forces. That is what my country, the United States, is now doing as a first step toward a saner and safer more prosperous nation and world.

I am one of those advocating, along with many others, the deepest and swiftest possible reductions in the U.S. military structure.

If we could only start competing in building-down and eliminating military forces, rather than building them up, how much better off we would all be!

THE ROLE OF INTELLIGENCE SERVICES IN POST-COLD WAR DEMOCRACIES

(By Senator Alan Cranston)

A call by U.S. Central Intelligence Agency Director Robert Gates in late February for a new era of "openness" at the CIA is perhaps the most palpable indication of the winds of glasnost and perestroika stirring throughout the inner recesses of the secret world of intelligence.

In the United States, the end of the Cold War has brought a new and exacting set of challenges to the American intelligence community. The CIA and the "intelligence community" as a whole now face a world in which the "enemy" is more elusive.

As intelligence agencies are shifting their focus, they are going through a process of self-examination, and at the prodding of Congress are being forced to reexamine broader policy issues that get at the very essence of how we have defined and provided for our nation's intelligence requirements.

Although there is much that may not be relevant about the American experience to the former Soviet republics and the emerging democracies of Eastern Europe, there are strengths to our system that policymakers in emerging democracies should consider as they restructure their own intelligence agencies.

Civilian control of the intelligence agencies is the hallmark of the American experience. Holding the intelligence agencies accountable to our civilian political leadership has been one of the main policy battles of the last several decades in my country. Because intelligence is by definition a world of secrets and confidences, oversight of those who collect it has been as much an art as a science.

In 1976, the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence was created to ensure greater oversight of the intelligence community, even though it does not itself have the ability to prohibit the actions of any intelligence agency. Nor do the agencies have to reveal the identities of key contacts in other countries.

These safeguards imposed by Congress have sometimes led to complaints by intelligence professionals that interfering politicians are "looking over their shoulders."

Most people agree, however, that the committee's work has provided important public support and input into the workings of what has been described as a "secular priesthood." Even during the Cold War, intelligence agencies advised the committee of their actions and budgets.

In the 1970s, after a set of revelations in the media and elsewhere caused Americans to become concerned about encroachments on their freedom, or on the rights of foreign governments, by our intelligence establishment, several reforms were enacted. Particularly worrisome was the fact that some agencies prohibited by law from spying on Americans were in fact conducting internal surveillance on some of our citizens.

These reforms and the existence of a strong judiciary protect individual citizens from the long arm of the intelligence apparatus. The separation of internal and external security serves as a further protection of the rights of American citizens. Placing internal security in the hands of a domestic law enforcement agency, for the sole purpose of policing criminal activity, as defined by law, has ensured that our intelligence apparatus has not evolved into a secret police, preying on its own people for political purposes.

In the final analysis, the most powerful check the American people have on the clandestine intelligence agencies is the power of the purse. Congress controls the intelligence community's budget, perhaps the most important safeguard in a democratic system. Agencies which engage in wrongdoing know there exists the possibility that their budgets may be cut.

Congress is demanding that intelligence issues receive more public scrutiny than ever before—that policies be debated even as secrets are protected. Although it is unlikely that the entire intelligence budget will be released to the public, there is increasing pressure to reveal the aggregate amount of money spent on intelligence. I favor that and so does the Chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, Senator David Boren.

Shrinking federal budgets have compelled America's intelligence community to define vital interests in need of protection. Agencies without a set of clear and convincing priorities are those likely to lose public support and, just as importantly, public resources. Each expenditure on the intelligence "product" will be measured on the basis of the purpose it is meant to serve as well as its cost.

This process of reassessment is relatively new to intelligence professionals. U.S. intelligence agencies have emerged during the last century in an evolutionary process. In that time, the complex intelligence bureaucracy has become increasingly difficult to manage, but has been marked by a spirit of competition among agencies—a rivalry meant to offer intelligence consumers (i.e. policymakers) a clearly defined set of assumptions from which to make decisions.

For policymakers in emerging democracies facing the daunting task of beginning anew, it is helpful to establish clear goals and objectives for a nation's intelligence agencies at the outset. Determining intelligence needs should shape the intelligence agencies and provide them with a sense of direction for the future. Only then, once these goals have been agreed upon, is it possible to move forward and create a system of checks and balances to protect the democratic nation state and the underlying democratic principles the intelligence agencies are ultimately designed to serve. ●

THE JOB TRAINING AND BASIC SKILLS ACT OF 1992

● Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I would like to take a moment to lend my support to the passage of S. 2055, the Job Training and Basic Skills Act of 1992. As the Nation moves into the 21st century, we are becoming more and more aware that we must be prepared to compete economically on a global scale. The United States has been the economic superpower of the world since the end of World War II, however, I am now concerned that this position is on the verge of collapse.

In order to remain at the pinnacle of the world economy, we must commit ourselves to enhancing and improving the skills, education, and training of our national work force. America's choice is simple, we must choose between high skills or low wages. The Job Training Partnership Act sheds light on our decision; it has been one of the key elements which allows our citizenry to not only become self-sufficient and productive members of society, but also to learn new skills and become better trained.

During the 9 years that the JTPA programs have been offered in Oregon, over 20,000 adults, youth, and dislocated workers have been served. This figure far exceeds Oregon's goal of serving 14,000 individuals in that same period. I am keenly aware that this program has made an immeasurable difference in literally thousands of people's lives in my State alone.

I am also encouraged that the Workforce Quality Council in Oregon is in the process of creating the best educated and trained people in America. Oregon's Workforce Quality Council has begun to guide the strategies for more than 50 different agencies, boards, and commissions that have been involved in work force training and development. A 13-member subcommittee within the council, called the State Job Training Coordinating Committee is now responsible for guiding JTPA's efforts by making sure that each Oregonian we serve receives the best possible assistance.

Mr. President, last week I introduced legislation, S. 2491, entitled the Endangered Species Employment Transition Assistance Act of 1992 which would amend title III of the JTPA. I would like to tell my colleagues that this bill does not change the Endangered Species Act in any way. I had planned to offer this legislation as an amendment to the pending bill, in an effort to put a human face on the impacts of the Endangered Species Act. However, the Labor Committee has assured me that they will hold a hearing on this legislation in May. I have, therefore, withdrawn my amendment. I would like to thank Senators KENNEDY, SIMON, and their outstanding staff members, for their assistance and support in this matter. I would also like to commend the efforts of Secretary Martin and her staff in recognizing the critical labor situation in the Pacific Northwest due to the listing of the northern spotted owl under the Endangered Species Act.

My bill will provide job search allowances and extended monetary or needs-based payments to people who are displaced from their jobs due to the compliance restrictions of the Endangered Species Act if they are enrolled in a qualified educational or retraining program. S. 2491 addresses the fact that many of the training and educational programs that the JTPA offers take from 1 to 2 years to complete. Unfortunately, unemployment insurance only lasts 26 weeks barring any emergency extensions. Thus the unemployed worker has no assistance to keep financially afloat after their unemployment insurance runs out forcing many workers to conclude their retraining programs early. My legislation will provide some additional resources for these capable individuals.

Mr. President, I intend to return to this floor at some point in the future to discuss S. 2491 or similar legislation. I believe we have an appropriate and necessary role in recognizing the human impacts of Federal regulatory decisions.●

NOMINATION OF DAVID A. BROCK TO THE STATE JUSTICE INSTITUTE

● Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, it gives me great pleasure to speak on behalf of the nomination of David A. Brock to be a member of the board of directors of the State Justice Institute.

One of the Nation's preeminent jurists, David Brock was raised in New Hampshire and educated at Dartmouth College and the University of Michigan Law School, where he received his LL.B. degree.

He has served as a commissioned officer in the U.S. Marine Corps, rising to the rank of captain in the U.S. Marine Corps Reserve.

David Brock has served as an associate in the law firm of Devine, Millimet, McDonough, Stahl & Branch and a partner in Perkins & Brock. He has served as U.S. attorney for the District of New Hampshire, special counsel to the Governor, legal counsel to the Governor, and associate justice of the New Hampshire Supreme Court.

Since 1986, David Brock has served as the chief justice of the New Hampshire Supreme Court. His professional and civic activities are almost too numerous to mention, but include service to most of the major court-related committees, commissions, and institutes in the State of New Hampshire.

In short, the president has been well-advised in nominating David Brock to the State Justice Institute, and I urge his rapid confirmation.●

POW/MIA COMMEMORATIVE POSTAGE STAMP

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to join my distinguished colleague, Mr. SMITH, as an original cosponsor of legislation calling on the Postmaster General to issue a commemorative postage stamp in honor of American prisoners of war and Americans missing in action.

More than 88,000 United States service personnel are still listed as missing from World War II, Korea, Vietnam, and other conflicts. We must do everything possible to ensure that these Americans are not forgotten, and that every reasonable step is taken to find and fully account for our POW/MIA's.

Congress and the President have made it clear that the resolution of the POW/MIA issue is a matter of the highest national priority. But nothing has done more to keep this issue alive than the unwavering dedication of friends, family members, and concerned Americans who simply refuse to abandon the cause of our missing service men and women. The issuance of a POW/MIA stamp will both honor these missing Americans, and enhance the public awareness and concern that is so vital to bringing this issue to a satisfactory resolution.

Mr. President, I commend my colleague from New Hampshire for his leadership on this issue, and urge each of my colleagues to cosponsor his resolution and support its enactment.●

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY LABORATORY TECHNOLOGY PARTNERSHIP ACT

● Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, I rise today as a sponsor of the Department of Energy Laboratory Technology Partnership Act. I would like to take this opportunity to praise Senators WALLOP, DOMENICI, CRAIG, JOHNSTON, and BINGAMAN for their leadership on this issue.

I believe the collective genius that resides in the Department of Energy's laboratories can be tapped to enhance our position as the world's leader in basic research and further our preeminence in technology development.

This legislation takes a giant leap toward increasing the role of the laboratories in this process. It gives a clear mandate to the labs to work with the private sector and jointly develop technologies that will ultimately increase our wealth of products and services and benefit our Nation's economic well-being.

California is fortunate to be the home of such prominent National Laboratories as Lawrence Berkeley and Lawrence Livermore. I am gratified that my position on the Energy and Natural Resources Committee has enabled me to take an active role in crafting this bill. I look forward to committee markup and the opportunity to further refine this important legislation.●

KIDNEY FOUNDATION HONORS TWO

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to two of my constituents who are being honored by the National Kidney Foundation of New York/New Jersey next month for their continued support of the foundation. Lewis Burrows, M.D., is receiving the Lester Hoeng Award for his utmost devotion to the Kidney Foundation. Mrs. Iris Feldman is receiving the Woman of the Year Award for her commitment and support of the foundation.

The National Kidney Foundation has been a leader in the continual fight against kidney, urologic, and hypertensive diseases. The progress made by the foundation's research has brought comfort and hope to the lives of many Americans.

Lewis Burrows, M.D., is the director of renal transplantation at the Sinai Hospital and professor of surgery at the Mount Sinai School of Medicine. Mrs. Iris Feldman is an active participant in the fundraising activities at the Mount Sinai Hospital, is also active in the United Jewish Appeal, and is a member of the social action committee of Temple Beth El of Great Neck, NY. She is active in the synagogue's voter registration program and one of the founders of the Russian Resettlement Program.

Today, I would like to recognize these two individuals for their outstanding contributions to the National Kidney Foundation. For it is due to the multifarious efforts of people like Dr. Lewis Burrows and Mrs. Iris Feldman that advancements are continually made in medical research.●

TRIBUTE TO CURTIS SYKES

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Curtis Henry Sykes of North Little Rock, AR. Curtis Sykes was the originator of an idea that led to the Commission For Black History in Arkansas.

Mr. Sykes took his idea to his State senator, Jerry Jewell, and was to work tirelessly to see his idea become law. His enthusiasm and effort are proof that a good idea coupled with hard work can be brought to fruition.

Curtis Sykes was born and raised during the Depression in North Little Rock. He graduated from Jones High School in North Little Rock and then studied at Dunbar Junior College, Arkansas Baptist College, received a bachelor of science degree from Bishop College, a master of arts in education degree from Texas College and a master of science in education from Harding College. He did postgraduate work at Henderson State University, University of Central Arkansas, the University of Iowa, the University of Arkansas, George Peabody College, and the University of Wisconsin.

Curtis has spent his life educating young people, serving as principal in five different elementary and intermediate schools in the Little Rock School District.

In addition to a stint in the U.S. Army as a sergeant, Curtis has been active in his community as well. He serves as treasurer of the Arkansas Chapter of the NAACP, chairman of the board of the Young YMCA, president of Alpha Phi Alpha, and is a board member of COPE of Central Arkansas, Headstart of Pulaski County, the North Little Rock History Commission, and the NLR Parks and Recreation Commission.

He is also member of the Urban League, Phi Delta Kappa, Prince Hall Masons, NEA, and AEA. Sykes is a trustee and Sunday school teacher at King Solomon Baptist Church in North Little Rock.

Mr. President, this gentleman is a tireless contributor to his community. His idea to establish a Commission for Black History in Arkansas will insure that young blacks in my State will have a better understanding, knowledge, and appreciation of the important role that blacks have played in Arkansas' history.

I commend Curtis Sykes for a life of achievement and service to his fellow man and point to him as living proof that the Government can take an individual's idea and make it a reality.●

U.N. CONFERENCE ON ENVIRONMENT AND DEVELOPMENT

● Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I want to take a moment to explain my support for the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts, Senate Concurrent Resolution 89. This resolution expresses the sense of the Senate that the United States play a strong and active role at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development [UNCED]. It directs our country to develop international agreements on a wide range of global environmental issues, while taking into account their effect on American jobs and competitiveness.

Consistent with the old maxim there's no free lunch, environmental protection comes at a price. The United States and the world must take steps to mitigate the possibility of global climate change carefully calculated to produce the greatest environmental benefits with the least economic impact. We must focus our limited economic resources on addressing the most pressing environmental risks, not those which are unclear or remote.

In particular, the United States must continue to take a cautious approach before committing to binding agreements on carbon dioxide stabilization. Given the scientific uncertainties and enormous costs in jobs and competitiveness that such targets and timetables could exact, the U.S. position is prudent. It reflects an understanding that our Nation's energy mix is, in the near term, dependent on coal-burning utilities, much more so than other developed nations. To commit ourselves to targets and timetables for carbon dioxide stabilization, without a complete understanding of the magnitude of its effect on global climate change, is a solution in search of a clearly defined problem. The United States has been harshly criticized for not committing to targets and timetables. However, the United States has proposed a plan for voluntary stabilization that would be revisited when more facts are known about global climate change.

I am troubled by critics of the administration who insist we should shackle our economy's energy use and determine later whether carbon dioxide emissions present substantial risks of potential climate change. I am also concerned that in this election year the U.S. position at this very important conference could be undermined by partisan politics back home.

For these reasons, I amended Senator KERRY's original resolution in the Foreign Relations Committee to clarify that the United States should not commit to any measures which would have an adverse impact on American industry, or result in a long-term loss of American jobs. Based on risk assessment, holding off on targets and timetables is the most reasonable approach to ensuring that the nations of the world are able to pool their limited resources to address the most pressing global environmental problems.

Senator KERRY's resolution expresses the duality of the Earth summit. It is an enormous opportunity to come to grips with international environmental issues. But no one should delude themselves to think that the UNCED Conference will be just about the environment. It's about geopolitics. It's about competitiveness. It's about money. The Kerry resolution recognizes these parameters in advocating an active role for the United States in addressing global environmental concerns in a reasonable, cost-effective manner.

In conclusion, I supported the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts because the Earth summit will not take place in a political and economic vacuum. Senate Concurrent Resolution 89 reflects these realities.●

COMMENDING MRS. MARGARET ULLRICH AND MRS. JENNIFER KEY

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, may I take a moment of the Senate's time to acknowledge a milestone that has recently taken place on my staff. I wish to recognize and thank Mrs. Margaret Ullrich and Mrs. Jennifer Key of my Washington, DC office on the occasion of their 15th year of service to the U.S. Senate.

As constituent services system operators, Margaret and Jennifer have played a vital role in expediting my correspondence with the citizens of New York State. It is estimated that in the span of their service, they have assisted in my corresponding with over 2 million of my constituents. This kind of dedication and devotion to the people of New York State is most noteworthy. And I do so with much appreciation.

With heartfelt thanks to Margaret and Jennifer for their many contributions, I sincerely hope they will continue to grace us with their service in the years to come.●

CONGRESSIONAL FAILURE TO RE-AUTHORIZE FUNDING FOR THE RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION

● Mr. SEYMOUR. Mr. President, I rise to address the failure of the House of Representatives to remove the April 1 restriction on the use of funds appropriated for the Resolution Trust Corporation [RTC]. Congressional inaction will completely shut down the sales of insolvent savings institutions and adversely impact other aspects of the RTC's operations.

The failure by the House of Representatives to remove the deadline for spending $25 billion in funds already authorized means added costs and more unnecessary delay in completion of this important task.

The cutoff will adversely impact future asset sales activities, halt all new contract awards, delay performance of services under existing contracts, slow down the planned downsizing of the RTC, and halt all efforts to sell insolvent S&L's.

In my home State of California, as of March 31st, 1,847,000 depositor accounts have so far been saved by the RTC, totalling $29 billion. People ask where the money Congress has voted for the savings and loan cleanup has gone. It has gone to save depositors—in California alone, almost 2 million of them.

But more remains to be done. Unfortunately the RTC has not yet finished the huge job of cleaning up insolvent S&L's. As of March 31st another 360,000 California depositor accounts were in thrifts that had been placed in conservatorship, and these accounts totaled about $5 billion. These thrifts are waiting to be closed with loss funds that the Senate has voted to provide, but the House has not.

These and other thrifts in conservatorship are simply being operated at loss until funds are made available by congressional action. The loss, I understand, has been estimated by the RTC's chief executive officer, Mr. Albert V. Casey, at about $2.8 million a day on a quarterly basis, and this loss began to accrue on April 1. Every day of inaction by the House means more taxpayer money lost.

Mr. Casey has said the S&L sales program will require a minimum of 30 days to restart when funding is resumed. The cost of a 3-month delay to the taxpayers is about $200 to $250 million.

In addition, the delay will adversely affect other RTC activities designed to ensure the agency meets the 1996 deadline established by Congress for going out of business. In particular, the downsizing of the RTC now underway will have to be delayed because staff expected to be freed up from the conservatorship and S&L sales program will have to be retained for the restart of the resolution process.

Congressional inaction means additional taxpayer money—plain and simple. Many people have been wondering, and rightly so, how Congress has allowed the Federal budget to become so out of whack. Well, if you add up all of the times Congress has acted to make a tough, but right decision rather than pander to the political winds, you will begin to understand. Fortunately, when the American people begin to comprehend Congress' failure to act in their best interest, they won't be as understanding.●

TRIBUTE TO ALAN COLEMAN ARIZONAN AND PATRIOT

● Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask the Senate's indulgence that I may pay tribute to a great Arizonan, a true American, and a real patriot. Mr. Alan Coleman, a Sun City, AZ, resident, is such a person.

An appropriate way to describe Alan Coleman's dedication to his country is by reading the American's Creed, written by William Page, and adopted by the House of Representatives in 1918. Mr. President, the American's Creed states:

I believe in the United States of America as a Government of the people, by the people, for the people; whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic, a sovereign Nation of many sovereign States; a perfect Union one and inseparable; established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes. I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it, to support its Constitution, to obey its laws, to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies.

Mr. President, my friend, Alan Coleman, has lived the American Creed.

He has worked tirelessly for our Nation, and for Arizona. Mr. President, we owe a debt of gratitude to this Alan Coleman for all his hard work and devotion. I hope he will continue in his efforts.●

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 109—PROVIDING FOR A CONDITIONAL ADJOURNMENT OF THE CONGRESS

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator MITCHELL, I send a concurrent resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 109) providing for a conditional recess or adjournment of the Senate from Friday, April 10, 1992, or Saturday, April 11, 1992, until Tuesday, April 28, 1992, and an adjournment of the House on the legislative day of Thursday, April 9, 1992, until Tuesday, April 28, 1992.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 109) was agreed to, as follows:

S. CON. RES. 109

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That when the Senate recesses or adjourns at the close of business on Friday, April 10, 1992, or Saturday, April 11, 1992, pursuant to a motion made by the Majority Leader, or his designee, in accordance with this resolution, it stand recessed or adjourned until 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday, April 28, 1992, or until 12 o'clock noon on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this resolution, whichever occurs first; and that when the House of Representatives adjourns on the legislative day of Thursday, April 9, 1992, pursuant to a motion made by the Majority Leader, or his designee, in accordance with this resolution, it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday, April 28, 1992, or until 12 o'clock noon on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this resolution, whichever occurs first.

SEC. 2. The Majority Leader of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, acting jointly after consultation with the Minority Leader of the Senate and the Minority Leader of the House, shall notify the Members of the Senate and the House, respectively, to reassemble whenever, in their opinion, the public interest shall warrant it.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF FEES

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 286, submitted earlier today by myself and Mr. STEVENS; that the resolution be agreed to, and the motion to reconsider laid upon the table.

Further, that a statement be placed in the RECORD at the appropriate place.

Mr. DURENBERGER. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, this resolution directs the Committee on Rules and Administration to promulgate regulations governing the use of the Senate health and fitness facilities and services provided by the Office of the Attending Physician. The resolution also provides for the establishment of fees for use of these facilities and services and authorizes the Secretary of the Senate to provide for payment of fees from participants, including payroll deductions.

This resolution will establish the framework for implementing the policy on these activities announced last week by the Senate leadership.

The resolution (S. Res. 286) as agreed to, is as follows:

Resolved, That (a) the Committee on Rules and Administration shall promulgate regulations—

(1) pertaining to the services provided by the Attending Physician and the operation and use of the Senate health and fitness facilities; and

(2) requiring the payment of fees for services received from the Attending Physician and for the use of the Senate health and fitness facilities pursuant to such regulations.

(b) The Secretary of the Senate is authorized to withhold fees from the salary of an individual authorized by such regulations to receive such services from the Attending Physician and to use the Senate health and fitness facilities.

(c) The Secretary of the Senate shall remit all fees required by subsection (a)(2) that are collected pursuant to subsection (b) or by direct payment to the General Fund of the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts unless otherwise provided by law.

EXTENSION OF DEADLINE

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the deadline in Public Law 102-166, section 303(b)(4) for the appointment of the Director of the Office of Senate Fair Employment Practices by the President pro tempore, upon the recommendation of the majority leader in consultation with the minority leaders, be extended through May 1, 1992; and that the Director's appointment take effect within 30 days following that person's appointment, as agreed to by the President pro tempore, upon the recommendation of the majority leader in consultation with the minority leader.

Mr. DURENBERGER. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INCREASE IN ACREAGE LIMIT FOR ASSATEAGUE ISLAND

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 1254.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 1254) entitled "An Act to increase the authorized acreage limit for the Assateague Island National Seashore on the Maryland mainland, and for other purposes," do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

SECTION 1. INCREASE IN ACREAGE LIMIT FOR ASSATEAGUE ISLAND.

The Act entitled "An Act to provide for the establishment of the Assateague Island National Seashore in the States of Maryland and Virginia, and for other purposes", approved September 21, 1965 (16 U.S.C. 459f-1), is amended as follows:

(1) Amend the second sentence of subsection (a) of section 2 to read as follows: "The Secretary is authorized to include within the boundaries of the seashore, not to exceed 112 acres of land or interests therein on the mainland in Worcester County, Maryland."

(2) Amend the last sentence of subsection (a) of section 2 to read as follows: "Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any Federal property located within the boundaries of the seashore may, with the concurrence of the agency having custody thereof, be transferred without consideration to the administrative jurisdiction of the Secretary for purposes of the seashore."

(3) Add the following at the end of subsection (b) of section 2: "Notwithstanding the acreage limitation set forth in this Act, the Secretary is authorized to accept the donation of a scenic easement covering the parcel of land adjacent to the seashore and known as the 'Woodcock Property'."

(4) Amend the first sentence of subsection (b) of section 2 to read as follows: "When acquiring lands by exchange, the Secretary may accept title to any non-Federal property within the boundaries of the seashore and convey to the grantor of such property any federally owned property under the jurisdiction of the Secretary which the Secretary classifies suitable for exchange or other disposal, and which is located in Maryland or Virginia."

(5) Amend section 6 by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(c) The Secretary is authorized and directed to enter into cooperative agreements with local, State, and Federal agencies and with educational institutions and nonprofit entities to coordinate research designed to maximize protection for the seashore's natural and cultural resources and to implement the recommendations arising from such research, consistent with the purposes of the seashore. The Secretary is also authorized to provide technical assistance to local, State, and Federal agencies and to educational institutions and nonprofit entities in order to further such purposes."

AMENDMENT NO. 1774

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment with an amendment on behalf of Senator BUMPERS, which I now send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. FORD, for Mr. BUMPERS, proposes an amendment numbered 1774.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, line 23, through page 3, line 8, strike subsection (c) in its entirety and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(c) The Secretary is authorized to enter into cooperative agreements with local, State, and Federal agencies and with educational institutions and nonprofit entities to coordinate research designed to ensure full protection of the natural and cultural resources of the seashore, consistent with the purposes for which the seashore was established, and other applicable law. The Secretary is also authorized to provide technical assistance to local, State, and Federal agencies and to educational institutions and nonprofit entities in order to further such purposes. The Secretary shall submit a report every two years to the Congress on the results of the coordinated research program authorized by this section and plans to implement the recommendations arising from such research."

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise today to urge final approval of S. 1254, to expand the boundaries of Assateague Island National Seashore. The purpose of this legislation, which I developed and sponsored with Senator MIKULSKI and which has broad support in our congressional delegation, is to preserve and protect the National Seashore for the benefit of future generations.

S. 1254 authorizes the National Park Service to acquire a 96-acre parcel of a 320-acre private estate immediately adjacent to the National Seashore headquarters and planned Barrier Island Visitors' Center. The owner of the property, Mrs. Elizabeth Woodcock, is recently deceased, and her heirs are interested in selling the estate.

I am deeply concerned that the sale and development of this property would threaten the integrity of the National Seashore. First, it would result in a serious visual intrusion for the seashore and the planned Barrier Island Visitor Center. Second, I am concerned that development along the water would seriously threaten the area's water quality, habitat, and wildlife. The ecosystem of Assateague Island and its coastal bays is extremely fragile, and increased development would negatively impact on the park and its resources.

My bill was first approved by the Senate in October 1991 and sent to the House for consideration. Earlier this year, the measure was considered by the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, which made three changes to the bill—a technical correction; a provision allowing the National Park Service to accept, by donation, a conservation easement over the remainder of the Woodcock property; and a provision to improve the Seashore's Cooperative Research Program. I want to commend the distinguished chairman of the House Interior Subcommittee on National Parks and Public Lands, Mr. VENTO, for his constructive additions to the legislation.

The bill was approved by the full House on March 24 and returned to the Senate for final disposition. The chairman and ranking minority member of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Subcommittee on Public Lands, Senators BUMPERS and WALLOP, have proposed some further clarifying language to the House-passed measure regarding the Cooperative Research Program, and I would like to acknowledge and express my appreciation for the work of the committee and committee staff on this legislation.

Mr. President, S. 1254 will provide additional protection for Assateague and help insure the integrity of the National Seashore. It is supported by the National Park Service, the State of Maryland, the county commissioners of Worcester County, the Committee to Preserve Assateague Island, and the Worcester County Citizens Coalition. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting final passage of the legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DURENBERGER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

OMNIBUS NUCLEAR PROLIFERATION CONTROL ACT OF 1992

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar 348, S. 1128, the Omnibus Nuclear Proliferation Control Act of 1992.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follow:

A bill [S. 1128] to impose sanctions against foreign persons and United States persons that assist foreign countries in acquiring a nuclear explosive device, or unsafeguarded special nuclear material, and for other purposes.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, with amendments; as follows:

(The parts of the bill intended to be stricken are shown in boldface brackets and the parts of the bill intended to be inserted are shown in italics.)

S. 1128

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Omnibus Nuclear Proliferation Control Act of 1991".

SEC. 2. IMPOSITION OF SANCTIONS

(a) DETERMINATION BY THE PRESIDENT—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b)(2), the President shall impose the applicable sanctions described in subsection (c) if the President determines that a foreign person or a United States person, on or after the date of the enactment of this section, has knowingly and materially contributed—

(A) through the export from the United States of any goods or technology that are subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, or

(B) through the export from any other country of any goods or technology that would be, if they were United States goods or technology, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to the efforts by any individual, group, or non-nuclear-weapon state to acquire unsafeguarded special nuclear material or to use, develop, produce, stockpile, or otherwise acquire any nuclear explosive device, whether or not the goods or technology is specifically designed or modified for that purpose.

(2) PERSONS AGAINST WHICH SANCTIONS ARE TO BE IMPOSED.—Within 180 days of a Presidential determination (except as provided in subsection (b)), sanctions shall be imposed pursuant to paragraph (1) on—

(A) the foreign person or United States person with respect to which the President makes the determination described in that paragraph;

(B) any successor entity to that foreign person or United States person;

(C) any foreign person or United States person that is a parent or subsidiary of that person if that parent or subsidiary knowingly assisted in the activities which were the basis of that determination; and

(D) any foreign person or United States person that is an affiliate of that person if that affiliate knowingly assisted in the activities which were the basis of that determination and if that affiliate is controlled in fact by that foreign person.

(3) OTHER SANCTIONS AVAILABLE.—The sanctions which may be imposed for activities described in this subsection are in addition to any other sanction which may be imposed for the same activities under any other provision of law.

(4) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this subsection, the term "knowingly" includes having reason to know.

(b) CONSULTATION WITH AND ACTIONS BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENT OF JURISDICTION.—

(1) CONSULTATIONS.—If the President makes the determinations described in subsection (a)(1) with respect to a foreign person, the Congress urges the President to initiate consultations immediately with the government with primary jurisdiction over the foreign person with respect to the imposition of sanctions pursuant to this section.

(2) ACTIONS BY GOVERNMENT OF JURISDICTION.—In order to pursue such consultations with that government, the President may delay imposition of sanctions pursuant to this section for the full 180-day period permitted by subsection (a)(2). Following these consultations, the President shall impose sanctions unless the President determines and certifies to the Congress that that government has taken specific and effective actions, including appropriate penalties, to terminate the involvement of the foreign person in the activities described in subsection (a)(1). The President may delay the imposition of sanctions for up to an additional 90 days if the President determines and certifies to the Congress that that government is in the process of taking the actions described in the previous sentence.

(3) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 90 days after making a determination under subsection (a)(1), the President shall submit to the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives a report on the status of consultations with the appropriate government under this subsection, and the basis for any determination under paragraph (2) of this subsection that such government has taken specific corrective actions.

(c) SANCTIONS.—

(1) DESCRIPTION OF SANCTIONS ON FOREIGN PERSONS.—The sanctions to be imposed on a foreign person pursuant to subsection (a)(1) are, except as provided in paragraph (3) of this subsection, the following:

(A) PROCUREMENT SANCTION.—The United States Government shall not procure, or enter into any contract for the procurement of, any goods or services from the foreign person or any parent, subsidiary, affiliate, or successor entity thereof, as described in subsection (a)(2).

(B) IMPORT SANCTIONS.—The importation into the United States of products produced by any foreign person or any parent, subsidiary, affiliate, or successor entity thereof, as described in subsection (a)(2), shall be prohibited.

(2) DESCRIPTION OF SANCTIONS ON UNITED STATES PERSONS.—The United States Government shall not procure, or enter into any contract for the procurement of, any goods or services from the United States person or any parent, subsidiary, affiliate, or successor entity thereof, as described in subsection (a)(2).

(3) EXCEPTIONS.—The President shall not be required to apply or maintain sanctions under this section—

(A) in the case of procurement of defense articles or defense services—

(i) under existing contracts or subcontracts, including the exercise of options for production quantities to satisfy United States operational military requirements;
