

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE FOR 1992

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 19, 1993

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, it has been my custom to submit a statement of financial disclosure every year in which I have served in the House of Representatives. While the law now dictates that Members of Congress submit financial disclosure statements in May of each year, I also continue to file this more detailed family financial report as I have since 1971. In this way, my constituents are kept fully and completely informed concerning my financial status and that of my family.

RETIREMENT OF FATHER
CLARENCE RYAN

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 19, 1993

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, on June 23, a great member of the Fourth Congressional District retired from a distinguished career in the service of God and fellow man. Father Clarence Ryan has relinquished his duties at the Immaculate Conception Church in Lexington in order to focus his energy on daily physical rehabilitation to complete recovery from a stroke endured last summer.

Father Ryan, convinced as a child to enter seminary school by a parish priest, was ordained in 1956 and has served in Missouri towns such as Liberty, Maryville, Gallatian, and Harrisonville.

He came to Lexington in 1981 and has touched the lives of many in this community. To show gratitude to this outstanding citizen a reception was held in his honor June 27, at Dibbin's Hall, Lexington, MO.

Even though he faces tough challenges ahead, Father Ryan still continues living by his timeless advice to others. He says, "Don't take anything too seriously." * * * There are two sides to every story; one certainly is serious, but always remember that there is another side."

I wish my good friend the very best in years to come.

THE OPPORTUNITY TO BE BOLD
AND INNOVATIVE IS FADING FAST

HON. MATTHEW G. MARTINEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, July 19, 1993

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, the longer we debate, the longer the frustration among constituents and some Members of Congress and across the Nation continues to build. I want to take a few minutes today to discuss something that I have shared with the President, his staff, and some of his appointees. There is an opportunity for this administration to take bold innovative action working with local public and private groups and citizens, to begin to address the most pressing needs of our inner cities.

In my view, and it is a view shared by many of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, no problem in this country is more dangerous to the future well being of our country and our young people than the problem of poverty and hopelessness that exists in the inner cities and poor rural areas of this country.

How can we reverse this malaise—by creating economic opportunities—by putting people to work. To quote someone from another arena, "it is the economy—stupid."

This House has taken up the 1994 appropriation to fund the Labor, Education and Health and Human Services Departments. That appropriation will exceed $263 billion. There are two portions of that appropriation—one that represents an investment in the future and one that represents a payment for the past.

Because of job losses and lack of job creation in the past, one portion of the appropriation goes to provide part of the safety net that the poor and unemployed have come to rely upon so much for their basic necessities. Those funds, while critical to the lives of these men, women and children, represent an unrecoverable outflow of Federal resources.

I support these appropriations because, without that safety net we would have people starving and homeless to a far greater extent than we now experience.

My long-term hope, of course, is that we can take effective action to lessen the need for these outflows, or at least stem the rising tide of that need. That will only come about when the other part of the appropriation, the investment, pays real dividends in putting people to work—getting them off the treadmill of welfare and unemployment insurance payments, and puts them back as productive members of society. That can only happen if we can put these people to work in productive jobs.

The unemployment figures for Los Angeles County approach 10 percent. In some sections of that county, and among some populations within the county, those figures range above 50 percent of the potentially productive work force. Any action that the Federal Government can take or assist others to take in reducing that percentage will mean real growth in the county's stagnating economy and a reversal of those expensive needs faced by local, State and Federal offices in the county—including social services, police, graffiti control, the court system, the school, et cetera.

There are, I am told, 125 separate programs administered by the Federal Government to help unemployed and underemployed persons find and keep jobs. The employment service maintains a number of placement sites around the country that are designed to put people in touch with jobs. I am told that the service has a record of placing one in six of the people it processes. And yet, that figure may be misleading, because, while some State employment services do a very credible job of outreach to unemployed and to employers alike to match those two elements, other local offices do not.

Yet we know that there are jobs out there. Most of those jobs are filled through informal mechanisms—word of mouth advertising. As one who had a small business for a number of years before I entered this career, I can attest to the fact that I was more likely to fill a job because of a referral of the applicant by someone I knew than I was to contact the employment service to find candidates.

So, for the long-term unemployed and for those in the inner city who are just beginning to enter the job market, knowing where the jobs are and accessing those hiring new workers can be the most difficult hurdle to finding a job. For those whose long-term careers have suddenly come to an end, or those who do not understand what their capabilities are and how to market those skills, the second hurdle is to know where to look for a job that fits well.

I believe that the Labor Department is beginning to face those issues and I am told that they will be presenting new program proposals that will be designed to overcome those hurdles.

Yet, the problem is with us now and has been with us for a decade. We cannot wait until those new programs are designed, refined, and digested by the Congress, embodied in authorizing and appropriations legislation and implemented by the Department. We need action now.

Steps, regardless of how small, can and must be taken now. I believe that we have an opportunity to test some of the theories that the Labor Department is considering as part of its developing plan. That is represented by a proposal of the Industry Education Council of California that was initially presented to the Department of Labor last November. That proposal is a 3-year pilot program, at a cost of $2.6 million per year, that would involve three specific types of activities to put hard core unemployed into the active and productive labor market. It includes: First, a free weekly news paper listing jobs not generally listed at employment centers or in the regular news outlets. That paper would appear in the barrios and neighborhoods, would be user friendly and would contain, in addition to the job listings, information on job training and counseling sessions, advertisements for job fairs, and other information useful to those looking for jobs; second, accessible counseling centers to help people analyze their job skills, discuss how to prepare resumes and job applications, how to interview, and where to go to receive job training and assistance; and third, periodic job fairs, under the sponsorship of local and national corporate sponsors, where people who are looking for workers can be put in touch with people looking for work in one central location.

The Industry Education Council of California is a nonprofit locally based organization headquartered in Sacramento, CA. It is comprised of representatives from some of the largest corporations, unions, local government officials, media and social service agencies in the State. It has spent a year developing this program proposal, and over 6 months attempting to get the State and Federal governments to join in this experiment. The Rebuild LA Organization, national veterans organizations and over 30 media outlets in Los Angeles County are ready to go with this project. Even Gov. Pete Wilson sent a letter of support to the Department of Labor on behalf of the project.

Secretary Reich informed me on July 1, 1993, that the Labor Department would agree to share funding if private sources and the State of California would agree to cofund the program. Of course, the private sector has agreed, to a far greater extent than necessary, to its share of the total costs of the program. The cash cost of the program, for production of newspapers and other materials, printing, delivery et cetera and the costs of job fairs and training. Thus, the projected Federal and State cost for this project is $2.6 million, with $1.3 million coming from the Secretary of Labor and $1.3 million coming from State of California pass through funding. Secretary Reich has advised me that the State has the funds in hand in that $8.4 million of funds for the relief of Los Angeles remains unspent.

The ball is now in Governor Wilson's court, and I should point out that he has already proven that he only cares about looking good—not about doing good for the people of Los Angeles. He signed the letter to Secretary Reich. Then, when his legislature sent him a bill to fund this project, did he—the supporter of the project—sign on the dotted line? He did not. He line-item vetoed the expenditure—not because it was not needed but because it would lessen his flexibility. His flexibility to do what—to continue to do nothing while California's unemployment, driven almost totally by unemployment in Los Angeles, goes up and up every month. His flexibility to continue to wax poetic about how much he cares about the plight of the unemployed while continuing to bluff the voters and ignore those solutions that are real and that will work.

Well—Governor Wilson, your bluff has been called and I, for one, hope you recognize that action can be taken, should be taken, and will be remembered.

Because the State and local governments and the Labor Department have been somewhat slow in reacting to this proposal, I am prepared to introduce legislation that would authorize its funding and to work with fellow Members to see that funds are made available for this as a pilot demonstration, using a small part of the $35 million included in the Labor Department's pilots and demonstrations appropriation. Twenty-eight Members of the California delegation in the House, evenly divided between Republicans and Democrats, have advised the Secretary of Labor of the worthiness and need for funding this proposal.

I have looked into the potential cost benefit of this project. Even if those people who find jobs through this program find them at a level of $7 per hour, which is at the low end range of earnings in Los Angeles County for permanent full time employment, the program only needs to find jobs for 2,400 people to pay for itself in 1 year—considering just the amount of tax revenues generated by those employees. This does not take into account the savings in AFDC, unemployment compensation, Medicaid, WIC, or other Federal or State funded welfare. Nor does it take into account the opportunity gains that accrue from less crime or violence, or other direct and indirect results of long-term unemployment.

I recommend to each of my colleagues that you learn more about this program and how it can be replicated throughout your congressional districts. Once you have had a chance to do that, I suggest you contact appropriate administration officials and seek answers as to when it will be funded and consider cosponsoring my bill.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS
